House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Thursday, January 14, 1937

SECOND SESSION—EIGHTEENTH PARLIAMENT—OPENING

The parliament which had been prorogued from time to time to the 14th day of January, 1937, met this day at Ottawa, for the dispatch of business.

The house met at three o'clock, the Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary, announcing that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate chamber at three p.m. on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major A. R. Thompson, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

VACANCIES

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess I received communications from several members, notifying me that the following vacancies had occurred in the representation, viz:

Of Fizalam William Perras, member for the electoral district of Wright, by decease;

Of Hon. Peter John Veniot, member for the electoral district of Gloucester, by decease;

Of Edgar Rodolphe Eugene Chevrier, member for the electoral district of Ottawa East, consequent upon the acceptance of an office of emolument under the crown.

I accordingly issued my several warrants to the chief electoral officer to make out new writs of election for the said electoral districts, respectively.

NEW MEMBERS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that the clerk of the house has received from the chief electoral officer certificates of the election and return of the following members, viz:

Of Hon. Simon Fraser Tolmie, for the electoral district of Victoria (B.C.).

Of Rodolphe Leduc, for the electoral district of Wright.

Of Clarence Joseph Veniot, for the electoral district of Gloucester.

Of Joseph Albert Pinard, for the electoral district of Ottawa East.

NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Rodolphe Leduc, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Wright, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. Fernand Rinfret.

Clarence Joseph Veniot, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Gloucester, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. J. E. Michaud.

Joseph Albert Pinard, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Ottawa East, introduced by Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Hon. J. C. Elliott.

Hon. Simon Fraser Tolmie, member for the electoral district of Victoria (B.C.), introduced by Right Hon. Sir George Perley and Hon. H. A. Stewart.

ABDICATION OF KING EDWARD VIII

MESSAGE FROM HIS FORMER MAJESTY DATED DECEMBER 10, 1936, AND INSTRUMENT OF ABDICATION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received from His Excellency the Governor General a message from His former Majesty, King Edward VIII, dated December 10, 1936, and the instrument of abdication of Edward VIII, of the same date.

The message communicates His former Majesty's final and irrevocable decision to renounce the throne to which he succeeded on the death of his father, and sets forth the instrument of abdication executed by King Edward VIII on that day. Originals of the instrument of abdication and of the message, each signed in His former Majesty's own hand, were forwarded by command of King Edward VIII, by letter, from Buckingham palace, on December 10, 1936, to His Excellency the Governor General.

The text of the instrument of abdication and of His former Majesty's message were communicated by cable to His Excellency the Governor General on the morning of December the 10th, 1936, and immediately communicated by His Excellency to his ministers.

The originals of the message and of the instrument of abdication are under my hand at the moment. It is my intention, unless hon. members of either the Senate or the Commons should otherwise direct, to have them deposited for safe custody in the office of the Privy Council.

I place in your hands, Mr. Speaker, to be read to hon. members and to be retained among the records of this house, a photostatic copy of each of these documents.

Mr. SPEAKER: The documents are as follows:

Instrument of Abdication

I, Edward the Eighth, of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Emperor of India, do hereby declare my irrevocable determination to renounce the throne for myself and for my descendants, and my desire that effect should be given to this instrument of abdication immediately.

In token whereof I have hereunto set my hand this tenth day of December, nineteen hundred and thirty six, in the presence of the witnesses whose signatures are subscribed.

EDWARD R. I.

After long and anxious consideration, I have determined to renounce the throne to which I succeeded on the death of my father, and I am now communicating this, my final and irrevocable decision. Realizing as I do the gravity of this step, I can only hope that I shall have the understanding of my peoples in the decision I have taken and the reasons which have led me to take it. I will not enter now into my private feelings, but I would beg that it should be remembered that the burden which constantly rests upon the shoulders of a sovereign is so heavy that it can only be borne in circumstances different from those in which I now find myself. I conceive that I am not overlooking the duty that rests on me to place in the forefront the public interest, when I declare that I am conscious that I can no longer discharge this heavy task with efficiency or with satisfaction to myself.

I have accordingly this morning executed an instrument of abdication in the terms following:—

"I, Edward VIII, of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Emperor of India, do hereby declare my irrevocable determination to renounce the throne for myself and for my descendants, and my desire that effect should be given to this instrument of abdication immediately.

In token whereof I have hereunto set my hand this tenth day of December, nineteen hundred and thirty-six, in the presence of the witnesses whose signatures are subscribed.

(Signed) Edward R. I."

My execution of this instrument has been witnessed by my three brothers, Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of York, the Duke of Gloucester and the Duke of Kent.

I deeply appreciate the spirit which has actuated the appeals which have been made to me to take a different decision, and I have, before reaching my final determination, most fully pondered over them. But my mind is made up. Moreover, further delay cannot but be most injurious to the peoples whom I have tried to serve as Prince of Wales and as king and whose future happiness and prosperity are the constant wish of my heart.

I take my leave of them in the confident hope that the course which I have thought it right to follow is that which is best for the stability of the throne and empire and the happiness of my peoples. I am deeply sensible of the consideration which they have always extended to me both before and after my accession to the throne and which I know they will extend in full measure to my successor.

I am most anxious that there should be no delay of any kind in giving effect to the instrument which I have executed and that all necessary steps should be taken immediately to secure that my lawful successor, my brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of York, should ascend the throne.

Edward R.I.

10th December, 1936.

ALTERATION IN THE LAW TOUCHING THE SUCCESSION TO THE THRONE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 1, respecting alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

It affords me much pleasure to meet you at the commencement of another session of parliament.

The people of Canada, in common with the peoples of the other parts of the British commonwealth of nations, learned with deep concern of the decision of His Majesty King Edward the Eighth to renounce the throne for himself and his descendants. In accordance with the Statute of Westminster, steps were immediately taken to set forth the request and consent of Canada to the enactment of legislation by the parliament at Westminster for the purpose of giving effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication and providing for the succession to the throne. In accordance with the same statute, the assent of the parliament of Canada will be sought to the alteration in the law touching the succession.

You will be invited to adopt a resolution expressive of the loyalty of the members of both houses of parliament to His Majesty King George the Sixth.

His Majesty has been graciously pleased to set the twelfth of May as the date for his coronation. Provision will be recommended for the appropriate representation of Canada at the coronation ceremonies.

An imperial conference will be held in London, beginning in May of this year, for the consideration of questions of interest to the various members of the British commonwealth.

The international situation continues to give much ground for anxiety. The September assembly of the League of Nations gave earnest consideration to the bearing of recent developments upon the activities of the league, and a committee was appointed, on which Canada is represented, to consider the question of the application of the principles of the covenant.

Happily, international relations on this continent, and conditions in Canada, present a striking contrast to those of many other countries.

The visit of the President of the United States to Canada in July last was a much appreciated expression of international friendliness and good-will.

The year just closed has witnessed a steady improvement in conditions throughout Canada, and has borne testimony to the beneficial effects of the fiscal policies of the administration, and of other methods employed to achieve national recovery. A very definite restoration of confidence is in itself an augury of the continuance of recovery.

A marked increase in trade and commerce has been accompanied by a noticeable improvement in the general economic position. Outstanding features of this improvement have been an expansion of markets, a revival of industry, an increase in employment, ascending government revenues, and upward trends in wages and prices. In the primary industries improvement has been especially noteworthy.

There has been a pronounced increase in the volume of farm products exported. It is the intention of the government to continue a vigorous promotion of the sale of agricultural products at home and abroad.

The government's efforts to expand Canada's trade have been unremitting. Since the last session of parliament ministers of the crown have visited Great Britain and other countries, to participate personally in the negotiation of trade agreements. At the present time, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is on the way to Australia and New Zealand to discuss the revision of existing agreements.

You will be pleased to learn that an agreement in principle has been reached between His Majesty's governments in the United Kingdom and Canada with respect to a new trade agreement. The agreement itself will be submitted for your approval during the present session.

With the assistance and cooperation of the National Employment Commission, progress has been made in coping with unemployment and relief. Relief camps were closed on July 1. A registration of unemployed persons on relief has been completed. Dominion-provincial agreements have been entered into respecting a farm employment plan, under the terms of which work has been provided for thousands of single homeless men. A home improvement plan has been put into operation. Despite these measures, however, and the substantial increase of employment, the provision for large numbers still on relief remains a foremost problem.

Measures will be taken, in cooperation with the provinces, to assist in the establishment of unemployed young people.

A comprehensive program to meet the serious conditions created by widespread and intense drought in western Canada was adopted during the summer months.

The amalgamation and consolidation of certain branches of the public service, for which provision was made at the last session, have been effected. The board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways have been appointed and have entered upon their duties. Through the purchase of stock and the appointment of directors, authorized by parliament, the government has assumed a predominant interest in the ownership, and an effective control of the Bank of Canada.

Measures will be introduced to provide for the establishment of a trans-Canada air service; to extend the authority of the board of railway commissioners, and to revise the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. Among other proposed legislative enactments to which your attention will be invited, will be bills to facilitate the making of loans for the repair and improvement of rural and urban homes; to amend and consolidate the acts which relate to combines in trade and industry, and to provide for pensions to the blind at a lower age than seventy years. A measure will also be submitted with respect to the discharge, in any coin or currency which is legal tender, of debt payments at present required to be made in gold or gold coin.

Members of the House of Commons:

The public accounts of the last fiscal year and the estimates for the coming year will be submitted for your consideration.

Honourable Members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

In again inviting your careful consideration of the important matters which will engage your attention, I pray that Divine Providence may guide and bless your deliberations.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both houses of parliament be taken into consideration on Monday next, and that this order have precedence over all other business, except the introduction of bills, until disposed of.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee consisting of Messrs. Casselman, Gray, Mackenzie (Vancouver), Power and Woodsworth, be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house, under standing order 63.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an approved minute of council appointing the Honourable T. A. Crerar, Minister of Mines and Resources, the Honourable Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, the Honourable Charles A. Dunning, Minister of Finance, and the Honourable W. D. Euler, Minister of Trade and Commerce, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 145 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, intituled An Act Respecting the House of Commons.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to lay before the house the report of the joint librarians of parliament.

ACCESSION OF KING GEORGE VI

NOTICE OF ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY CONVEYING GREETINGS AND ASSURANCES OF LOYALTY AND SUPPORT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the leave of the house to move that to-morrow the house take into consideration a resolution to extend the greetings of its members to His Majesty King George VI upon His Majesty's accession to the throne, and to convey to His Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen the assurance of their loyalty and support, and that standing order 45 with respect to notices be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister is aware, forty-eight hours' notice is necessary before a motion of this kind may be introduced. At page 117 of Beauchesne's Rules and Forms, I read:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the order paper,—

And so on. That clearly refers to a matter of this kind. This was recognized by the Prime Minister himself a year ago under similar circumstances, when he said on the opening day of the session:

As hon. members know, the rules of the house require forty-eight hours' notice of any resolution.

If this were a minor matter I would not raise objection, but it is a very important one. Only this afternoon the Prime Minister introduced a bill providing for alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne. That is a very important bill, and we are all fully aware of the extraordinary circumstances under which this legislation is being introduced. As a matter of fact, the legislation is intended to be retroactive because already we have an accomplished fact.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister ought not to press a motion of this kind. It is very undesirable indeed that questions relative to procedure and criticisms of the policy of the government should be mixed up with an address to His Majesty, and yet that must inevitably result if the Prime Minister insists upon introducing this matter at this time. The debate on the bill which the Prime Minister has introduced would be lacking in reality if an address to His Majesty were presented before the bill is proceeded with. Personally I am of the opinion that the government has already taken steps which it should not have taken. Even within the last few days we have had a notification from the clerk that no member shall be permitted to take his seat without first taking an oath or declaration of allegiance to the crown, but if parliament has the right to go on, members have the right to take their seats in this house; and it would seem now that here is an attempt to take one more step by which the members of the house shall be deprived of their right fully to express themselves.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the bill which the Prime Minister has introduced should be discussed and should be passed before there is an address to His Majesty. If the government insists on presenting an address to-morrow we shall have to take the opportunity to discuss the matter at that time. In the meantime I must protest against this suggested abrogation of the rules of the house. The rule is there. The Prime Minister will not go so far, I think, as to set aside an accepted rule of this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend that I have been very careful to observe the rule with respect to notice, because I prefaced my remarks by asking for the unanimous consent of the house to move to-morrow the resolution to which I referred. My hon. friend is quite within his rights in raising the objection that he does, but I hope he will not press it, for a reason which I shall mention to him.

He has referred to the bill which I introduced respecting an alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne as being retroactive. I may say to him that it is not retroactive in any of its clauses. It relates to the succession to the throne as it applies to the future, not to the past; therefore on that point my hon. friend may be assured that there could be nothing in the discussion of the measure here which because of any retroactive features would occasion embarrassment. Moreover, when this bill does proceed to its second reading there will be ample opportunity for my hon. friend and any other hon. members of the house to discuss any and all matters relating to the succession in so far as they may desire so to do. There will be no attempt, I can assure my hon. friend, to curb the discussion in any way.

The purpose of the resolution which I have asked the house to consent to allow me to move to-morrow is simply to give this house the earliest possible opportunity of extending to the new king the greetings which all hon. members are anxious to extend, and to express to His Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen their feelings of loyalty and support. I know that my hon. friend will wish to join with all other hon. members in that resolution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: At the proper time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend, with respect to the proper time, that when we have regard to the great responsibilities that rest upon His Majesty King George VI, I think the proper time to assure him of our loyalty and support is at the earliest possible moment. If my hon. friend continues to press his objection it will simply mean that instead of the resolution being moved to-morrow it will have to stand as a notice and come up later on. I had thought that to-morrow the house might pay the tributes that are customary to those of our number who in the interval of the recess have passed away, and that we might also adopt the resolution for an address to His Majesty King George VI, the terms of which I think my hon. friend will heartily approve.

I shall not press the matter further if my hon. friend still objects to giving unanimous consent, because he is entirely within his rights in so doing. I am sure, however, that hon. members would appreciate his withdrawing his objection and allowing the resolution to be proceeded with to-morrow, and I hope he will do so.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS AND CORRESPONDENCE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table of the house two photostat copies of a message from His former Majesty King Edward VIII, dated December 10, 1936, and the instrument of abdication of King Edward of the same date; two copies of the order in council of December 10, 1936, P.C. 3144, setting forth the request for the consent of Canada to the enactment of legislation by the parliament at Westminster providing for alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne; also two certified copies of the proclamation of accession of His Majesty King George VI as recorded by the Registrar General of Canada.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Is it the intention of the government to lay on the table of the house copies of all communications in any way relating to the abdication of His Majesty King Edward VIII, including copies of all cables, letters and other correspondence between the Canadian government, or any member thereof, and the governments of Great Britain and the other dominions, or any member thereof?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say to my right hon. friend who is leading the opposition that it is my intention to make to the house at an early day a statement with respect to matters pertaining to the abdication of His former Majesty King Edward VIII, and to the accession of His Majesty King George VI.

I have inquired of His Majesty's government of the United Kingdom as to whether the correspondence which took place at that time had been tabled at Westminster, and I have been informed by the Prime Minister that it was thought inadvisable to reopen the question by placing on the table the correspondence to which my right hon. friend has referred. I have communicated with the other dominions of the British commonwealth of nations and have received from Australia a communication in which the Prime Minister states that he did not think it in the public interest to disclose the correspondence which had taken place, but that he had made a statement to his house which he believes was regarded as satisfactory in reference to the abdication.

The parliament of New Zealand does not meet for some months to come, and it is impossible to say what will be done there. I have not yet received a reply either from South Africa or from the Irish Free State. I do not believe, however, that correspondence has been asked for or presented to the parliaments of either of these countries.

May I say that when I make the statement I have referred to, if hon. members have questions which they would like to ask of myself or of other members of the government we shall do our best to reply to them, and perhaps the house might then consider whether it would wish to have more in the way of correspondence. I believe that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has given notice to the clerk that he would like to have papers produced, and that notice would afford an opportunity, if no other were afforded, to discuss the matter were it thought advisable to consider it then. For the present, however, I have no further documents to lay on the table of the house in reference to the matter.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 4.40 p.m.

Friday, January 15, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED MEMBERS

THE LATE FIZALAM WILLIAM PERRAS—THE LATE HON. PETER JOHN VENIOT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Since parliament prorogued on June 23 last two hon. members who were with us in this house, at the last session, have been taken from us by the hand of death. Both occupied seats on this side of the house. Before entering upon the business of the session, it is fitting that a word should be said with respect to the double loss we have sustained.

Parliament had prorogued but a few days when word was received that Mr. Perras, the member for Wright county, had passed away. I must confess that his death came as a great shock to me personally, as indeed it must have to all hon. members, because only an evening or two before the prorogation of parliament we were seated together at this desk, after the house had discontinued its sitting, discussing the welfare of one of his constituents. The solicitude which Mr. Perras felt for those who applied to him for help was characteristic of the man. It explains, in large manner, the hold he had on the affections of the people of his constituency.

Mr. Perras was born in Hull, Quebec, in 1876. He received his early education in a primary school of Hull and was a graduate of Ottawa university. His business and political interests were for the most part identified with the county of Wright, his native county. For a time he was mayor of the municipality of Gracefield, where he subsequently resided, and was warden of the county.

Mr. Perras was elected to parliament as the member for Wright in 1925 and was returned at the general elections of 1926, 1930 and 1935, each time with an increased majority. In this house Mr. Perras did not take much part in political discussions, though when he spoke he was equally fluent in the French or the English language. He took a considerable part in the work of the committees, and he enjoyed close friendships with members on all sides of the house. Few members have been more zealous in the manner in which they have sought to serve the interests of their constituents, and it is not surprising the electors of Wright county gave to their representative the increasing measure of confidence which Mr. Perras enjoyed. I know that members of the Liberal party will greatly deplore his loss, for both in and out of parliament he was a loyal advocate of the party's principles. To me he was always a loyal supporter and a true friend. May I say that, irrespective of party, I am sure his passing will be deeply felt by hon. members generally.

Only a few days had elapsed after Mr. Perras' death when word was received of the death of the Hon. Peter Veniot, a former colleague in the government, and one who was a very close personal friend. Mr. Veniot's death cannot be said to have been altogether unexpected. All will recall how during the last session, despite great pain at times, suffering as he did from a malady which was incurable, and which he must have known to be so, he continued to keep his place at his desk and to participate in the debates in this house. He did so until, no longer able to bear the strain, he was removed to a hospital in Montreal, and subsequently to his home in Bathurst, where very soon he had to give up all thought of further activity in public affairs. His courage was a very part of him, and was nowhere better exemplified than in the brave and patient manner in which he faced death. It was on July 6 that at the age of 72 Mr. Veniot passed away in his home at Bathurst, New Brunswick, the town which for some forty years had been the centre of his personal, business and political activities.

I hardly need to review Mr. Veniot's public career. It was a distinguished career well known to hon. members of this house and scarcely less so to citizens of Canada generally; for he had been a minister in the government of his province—Minister of Public Works—and also premier of the province of New Brunswick; and for some years he was Postmaster General in the government of Canada. It might, however, be well to recall that Mr. Veniot was for the most part a self-educated and self-made man. He was one of the few remaining members of parliament whose birth anteceded the date of confederation, he having been born at Richibucto in 1863. His early education was obtained at the Pictou Academy, Nova Scotia. His first association with public affairs came as owner and editor of an Acadian weekly newspaper in the maritimes. He was elected to the New Brunswick legislature in 1894. After a few years in the legislature he became collector of customs at Bathurst, which position he occupied for a little over ten years. It was in 1917 that he became Minister of Public Works in the government of New Brunswick, and from that time on until the end of his life he was continuously in the legislature or parliament.

Mr. Veniot's personal characteristics will be much in the minds of all who are present here. Outstanding, as I have already said, was his courage and, born of deep conviction, the fearlessness with which at all times he was prepared to express his views. He belonged to the old school of political fighters who rather enjoy the rough and tumble of politics. He was one of the most vigorous in party contests. At times he was given to striking hard blows, but he was always equally prepared to receive them. He did not, however, cherish bitter feelings towards his opponents. As an administrator he was most industrious and efficient. He worked tirelessly in whatever office he held.

With Mr. Veniot I personally enjoyed a very close association, and I confess that his passing has left a blank in my life. When it came to the formation of the present ministry, a year or two ago, it was a source of disappointment both to him and to myself that we were each obliged to recognize that having passed the age of three score years and ten, with health somewhat impaired, it seemed inadvisable for him, either in his own interest or in that of the public, again to attempt to assume the onerous responsibilities of a portfolio. However, his disappointment in that regard served only to bring out the finer side of his nature. I am sure that all my followers will agree that in the assiduous manner in which he continued to fight its battles no member of the party could have been more chivalrous to the party as a whole. Certainly I can say that no supporter was ever more loyal to his leader to the end of his days than was Peter Veniot. It was these qualities of true worth which so greatly endeared him to all his colleagues.

As I think of how Mr. Veniot's name will be remembered in this country, I feel that it will always be associated with the qualities of industry, of integrity, and of fidelity. It is very much to his credit that throughout a life of public service which extended over almost half a century he gave almost all of his time to public affairs, often at considerable sacrifice of his own private interests. As the best of all legacies he bequeathed to his family an honoured name, and to his country an honourable tradition of public service. Perhaps as fine a tribute as any that could be paid his memory was that expressed by the people of Gloucester, whose interests in the legislature and in parliament he had served for so long a time, when being called upon to choose a successor they selected Doctor Veniot, his eldest son, one of six sons, and returned him to this House of Commons by acclamation.

May I say to Doctor Veniot, knowing his father as I did, I am sure that nothing could have meant more to his father or could mean more to his father's memory than to have one of his sons, and in particular his eldest son, continue unbroken the tradition of public service which has come to be associated with the name he bears.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): On behalf of the opposition and those who sit around me I wish to join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in expressing regret at the death of these two friends of ours who have passed away since the last session, and I also wish to express the sympathy of the opposition with the government in the loss of two of their loyal supporters.

As a matter of fact the life of a member of parliament is a pretty strenuous one, more so than that of an ordinary individual, and that is the reason why we find every year there are those who in the interval between sessions have passed away and whose memory we wish to honour by some words of appreciation.

Mr. Perras, as member for Wright, was born across the river in Hull. He lived most of his life at Gracefield up the Gatineau river, and one thing I had in common with him was the fact that he was in the lumber business, which, long ago, before I entered public life, was also my work. Mr. Perras was mayor of Gracefield for many years, and I believe was successful in carrying out the work of that office. He was also warden of the county, and we all know the responsibilities which that office entails.

I did not know Mr. Perras very well, but some of my relatives lived next door to him in this city and they described him to me as a good neighbour. I do not know how one can say anything better about a man than that those who lived beside him considered him a good neighbour. He died a comparatively young man, at the age of only sixty. He was a regular attendant at the sessions of this house. It is quite true, as the Prime Minister has said, that he did not take very much part in debate, but he was careful in his work and diligent in looking after the wants of his constituents, and he has left behind him a name of which his relatives may well be proud.

Mr. Veniot was an older man in point of years, and one who, as the Prime Minister has said, had given much of his life to public service. According to the records he first started some sixty years ago, as secretary of the school board. He became a member of the provincial legislature, afterwards premier of his own province, eventually a member of this house, and he was appointed by the Liberal administration in 1926 as Postmaster General of Canada. In other words, Mr. Veniot's career was a distinguished one, and I join with everything the Prime Minister has said in that regard and in the expression of sympathy to the family he has left behind.

Mr. Veniot was a very worthy representative of the Acadian race, and when he was in his prime he was a doughty fighter, an opponent strenuous in debate. During the last year or two he had not been well, but I feel sure, although I never heard him on the platform, that in elections he must have been an effective debater. At the same time Mr. Veniot was of a very kindly disposition; I always found him so. When he had his political armour off he was a cheery, pleasant man to meet and to do business with. I think we may take a pattern from Mr. Veniot's life. There is no position which is not open to anyone with the ability and the energy to take advantage of the opportunities afforded in this country. My opinion has always been that we cannot expect democracy, such as we know it, with universal suffrage, to survive unless everyone is willing to render public service according to his means, his ability and his position. I do not care whether it be for municipal purposes, in connection with charitable organizations, or in either the dominion or the provincial field; some service everyone ought to render, and I have always felt it to be the duty of everyone, in whatever position he may happen to be placed, to do what he can for the general community.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we all regret very much the death of these two gentlemen, and I would say here that this House of Commons is the poorer for their passing. I join with the Prime Minister in requesting, sir, that you express to their families the sympathy of this house in the great loss they have sustained.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): I should like to express on behalf of the social credit members our endorsation of the words of sympathy which have been expressed. We were not in the house long enough to learn to know these gentlemen, but what we have heard has led us to believe that they were men of outstanding character, devoted to the public service. We rejoice therefore in the record of their lives and wish to join with the members of the older parties in extending to their memories honour and to their bereaved ones our sincere sympathy.

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I would be failing in my duty, and almost a filial duty, if I did not second the laudatory remarks which have just been uttered with regard to one of our colleagues, the late Hon. Peter Veniot, former minister and representative of the province of New Brunswick in the dominion government.

Besides his relatives and those very close to him, nobody of this present generation has perhaps been more intimately connected with the late Hon. Mr. Veniot than I happened to be during the last twenty-five years. In 1912, I had the honour of being chosen to assist him in his capacity of organizer of the political party to which we both had pledged our allegiance, in New Brunswick. In 1917, I sat with him in the New Brunswick legislature; in 1921, I became his colleague in the government of that province; from 1923 to 1925, I served under him in the same government; in 1934, again I became his colleague in the House of Commons, and finally, in 1935, I succeeded him in the dominion government as the representative of the province of New Brunswick.

A few moments ago, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said that the main characteristic of that worthy colleague of ours was his courage, and if I take the liberty of making these few remarks in my own language which was also the mother tongue of the late Mr. Veniot, it is in order to point out the spirit with which he made it his duty to regain that very French language which was his own, in spite of his environment and the fact that he had to acquire his primary education in a province where he could not learn the French language.

At the age of twenty-one years Hon. Mr. Veniot, who wished to devote himself to the social and economic re-establishment of his Acadian compatriots, realized that it was necessary for him to recover his mother tongue, and although he was compelled to fight for a living and to learn a trade, he devoted himself to the study of the French language and learned it sufficiently well to become the undisputed leader of his Acadian fellow citizens during the last forty years of his life.

Hon. Mr. Veniot was a patriot in the fullest acceptation of the word; he was truly a Canadian. He had the honour of being prime minister of his province and during the few years that he led the government of New Brunswick it may be said that the impression which he made on public affairs in that province was all to his credit. He promoted primary education, he organized technical schools, he initiated the Workmen's Compensation Act, and also legislation with regard to health, roads, hydro electric services, in a word everything that could make for the economic and social revival of those whom he was leading. He had a firm will, and his conception of duty did not stop at sacrifice. He well deserves to have his memory honoured by his own Acadian compatriots as well as by his fellow citizens in Canada, that larger homeland which he considered as his own.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it a great privilege to associate myself with those, who a few moments ago, spoke so highly of him, and to say how much we owe to that great Canadian who will surely rank some time in the future among the men who have done much for their country.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is almost unnecessary to say that hon. members in this section of the house desire to join with other hon. members in paying our respects to the memory of those who have passed from us, and expressing our sympathy with the immediate friends and relatives.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ACCESSION OF KING GEORGE VI—DEBATE ON SPECIAL ORDER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, may I say a word with reference to the appearance on the order paper of the special order in the following terms:

> That an humble address be presented to His Majesty King George VI, extending the greetings of the members of this house upon His Majesty's accession to the throne, and conveying to His Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen the assurance of their loyalty and support.

Hon. members will recall that yesterday when I asked for unanimous consent to proceed with the resolution to-day the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) took exception to my so doing. After what I said in reply to the hon. member I thought he had agreed to allow the motion to be made, but he told me after adjournment last night that you, Mr. Speaker, had misunderstood his intention in the matter, and that in reality he intended to press his objection. I mentioned to the member for Winnipeg North Centre that I thought hon. members generally believed he had consented to the order being proceeded with. Moreover I drew his attention to the fact that if we did not proceed to-day with the resolution we could not deal with it until after the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne has taken place, because of the house having agreed to give it precedence on Monday. I pointed out, further, that if the resolution were not proceeded with until after we had discussed the bill respecting the law touching the succession, it might be some time before it could be adopted. I expressed to him the hope that he would not offer further objection. He has stated to me frankly that he has no desire to delay the motion, but that he feels the point he has raised is one which should be strongly taken; that in bringing forward a resolution expressing loyalty to the new king before disposing of a bill respecting succession the government is not proceeding logically.

My hon. friend has said to me that while agreeable to our proceeding this afternoon, he may nevertheless find it necessary to say something to the government by way of criticism of its action in having consented to the enactment by the parliament of Westminster of the abdication bill. If on this resolution the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre should desire to exercise some latitude in criticizing the government—while he may not wish to refrain from criticizing the government, I believe he does not desire particularly to do so on this resolution—I am sure the house will be tolerant of his attitude in view of an understanding reached between the hon. member and myself last night, subject of course to the approval of all hon. members, which would permit consideration of the resolution this afternoon.

ACCESSION OF KING GEORGE VI

ADDRESS TO HIS MAJESTY CONVEYING GREETINGS AND ASSURANCES OF LOYALTY AND SUPPORT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Majesty King George VI, extending the greetings of the members of this house upon His Majesty's accession to the throne, and conveying to His Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen the assurance of their loyalty and support.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising is to ask hon. members to unite in a resolution of confidence and good will to our new king upon his accession to the throne, and to express our loyalty and support to His Majesty King George VI and Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth.

It is not my intention this afternoon to say anything about the circumstances which led to the accession to the throne of King George VI, beyond saying that they are without precedent in British history. May I point out, however, that they serve to reveal clearly the double foundation on which, throughout the British commonwealth of nations, rests the essential relationship of the crown and the people, namely, on the part of the crown, consecration to all that is highest and best in the well being of a people, and on the part of the people, loyalty to the crown, as a symbol of the sum and substance of all that is most cherished in the collective life of a nation or a people. In words of unmistakable sincerity, His Majesty King George VI has given assurance of his desire and of the desire of the queen to consecrate their lives for all time to the service of the people.

I can not do better than to read to this house the message sent by King George VI to the two houses of parliament at Westminster a day or two after His Majesty's accession to the throne. The message, under the signature "George R.I.," is as follows:

I have succeeded to the throne in circumstances which are without precedent and at a moment of great personal distress, but I am resolved to do my duty and I am sustained by the knowledge that I am supported by widespread good will, and sympathy from all my subjects, here, and throughout the world.

It will be my constant endeavour, with God's help and supported by my dear wife, to uphold the honour of the realm, and promote the happiness of my peoples.

This gracious message, which was presented to parliament on December 14, was supplemented by another message which was broadcast, to the empire, at the early dawn of the new year. The king's new year greeting to his peoples in all parts of the empire was in these words:

In this first New Year's day of my reign I send all the peoples of the empire my warmest wishes for their welfare and happiness.

In succeeding to the throne, I follow a father who had won for himself an abiding place in the hearts of his peoples, and a brother whose brilliant qualities gave promise of another historic reign. His reign was cut short in circumstances upon which, from their very sadness, none of us would wish to dwell.

I realize the full responsibilities of my noble heritage. I shoulder them with all the more confidence in the knowledge that the Queen, and my mother, Queen Mary, are at my side.

Throughout my life it will be my constant endeavour to strengthen the foundations of mutual trust and affection, on which relations between the sovereign and people of the British Empire so happily rest. I ask your help toward fulfilment of this purpose, and I know that I do not ask in vain.

In this deeply moving message, and from what we know in other ways of the character of our new king, we are able to discern in him one

> Who comprehends his trust and to the same > Keeps faithful with a singleness of aim.

There could be no surer guarantee of the extent to which King George VI may be expected to meet the great responsibilities of his reign than the reverence which he has for the memory of his father, his determination to follow in his father's footsteps, of whom it may truly be said there never was a better king, and the similarity, in many particulars, of their dispositions and lives.

It is remarkable that in so many ways their lives have been so alike. King George V, like King George VI was a second son. The early part of the life of each was spent in association with the navy; and both came to the throne in circumstances which were wholly unexpected. As I have said, in disposition the present king is very like his father, and those qualities which made his father beloved by his people will equally make the present king beloved by them as well. There is that quality of natural simplicity and dislike of what is ostentatious, the desire to be unobtrusive in his ways, the enjoyment of the simple and wholesome things of life; the love of home; the joys of country life; a dignified tradition of comradeship and human understanding, and a fine sense of duty and obligation.

Like his father the present king has been singularly fortunate in his happy family life. The lives of King George VI, of his queen and of their children, are almost as familiar to all in this country as they are to the people of England.

In sharing the great responsibilities of the throne, Queen Elizabeth, herself a descendant of early Scottish kings, promises to be to King George VI all that Queen Mary was to King George V. Already Queen Elizabeth and the little Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, have won an abiding place in the hearts of the people.

In one further particular His Majesty is greatly blessed. He continues to enjoy the loving tenderness and sure guidance of a mother to whom he has been greatly devoted, and who, I believe, among women is the most honoured and most beloved in the world to-day.

It is well, Mr. Speaker, that all these things are so because never before has a king ascended the throne at a time as critical in the affairs of the world as the present. Never before has there been thrust on a pair of young shoulders responsibilities wider and weightier than those which rest upon the shoulders of the present king.

Our new king has given us his assurance, in no uncertain terms, that he will seek to do his part. Already he has accepted his responsibilities in a dignified and courageous manner. It remains for us to give our assurance that in the great work of government we will do our part. Therefore I am glad to be able to avail myself of this, the earliest opportunity, to bring forward in this house a resolution expressive of our confidence, our good will, our loyalty and our support. It will, I know, meet with the unanimous acceptance of members of this house. In presenting the resolution I am proud to be joined by my right hon. friend, the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Sir George Perley).

I beg to move, seconded by Sir George Perley:

That an humble address be presented to His Majesty the King in the following words:

To The King's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, the members of the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, desire respectfully to extend our greetings upon Your Majesty's accession to the throne, and to convey to Your Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen, the assurance of our united loyalty and support.

Your Majesty's gracious New Year's message, sending warmest wishes for the welfare and happiness of your peoples, and dedicating yourself and the queen to their service, has been deeply appreciated by Your Majesty's subjects in Canada in common with those of other parts of the British Empire. We believe that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, Your Majesty will be vouchsafed guidance and strength to meet the responsibilities of your noble heritage, and to fulfil your purpose to strengthen the foundations of mutual trust and affection between the sovereign and his people.

We pray that, amid the confusions of the world, and the uncertainties of the times, Your Majesty's throne may be established in righteousness; that Your Majesty's counsellors may be endowed with wisdom; and that all endeavours of Your Majesty's reign may be directed to the well-governing of your peoples, the preservation of freedom, and the advancement of unity and peace.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, nothing could give me greater pleasure than the honour of seconding a resolution of this kind, an address of loyalty to His Majesty, King George VI. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has moved the resolution in felicitous terms and we associate ourselves with his expressions of loyalty and devotion to the crown. From his earliest years the present king, as Prince Albert, was brought up and trained with the idea in mind that he might some day succeed to the throne, and he was taught the duty and privilege of service. At the outbreak of the great war he was serving in the Royal Navy, and he was present at the battle of Jutland. While still a young man he began to take part in public functions as a member of the royal family. My position as High Commissioner for Canada gave me the privilege of meeting Prince Albert several times during our stay in London, and I formed a high opinion of his ability and his keen sense of duty.

I was present officially when he was given the freedom of the city of London at the historic Guild Hall, where he made his first public speech of any importance. We were also at Westminster Abbey when the prince as Duke of York married the charming Scotch girl, and it was a delight to witness the popular enthusiasm on that occasion.

Since that time both the duke and the duchess have carried out the many duties that fall to the lot of members of the royal family in such a way that they have endeared themselves to everyone and have given an example of happy family life such as we all admire and respect.

With this background His Majesty comes to the throne well qualified by training and heredity to bear his heavy burden. He is endowed with wisdom and understanding, and is thoroughly conversant with the constitutional form of government of the British Empire or the British commonwealth of nations of which we are all so proud. We are a free people, and a great and very real democracy under a constitutional monarch. British subjects in every part of the world have shown conclusively that they are devoted to the crown under all circumstances. In many ways His Majesty is like his beloved father, King George V, and I believe that under his wise guidance and with the support of his charming consort the prestige of the monarchy and the proud loyalty of the people for their king will be increased as the years roll on.

To quote from the final words of the present resolution, we pray "that all endeavours of Your Majesty's reign may be directed to the well-governing of your peoples, the preservation of freedom, and the advancement of unity and peace."

We on this side join whole-heartedly in extending to His Majesty and to Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth our respectful greetings and our assurance of loyalty and support. May I add the sincere wish that their majesties may be blessed with long life, happiness and prosperity. "God save the King."

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I highly appreciate the privilege which is mine of seconding the resolution moved by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and of tendering to His Majesty King George VI, on the memorable occasion of his accession to the throne, the respect and good wishes of my French speaking fellow-citizens.

It has been said by a foreign observer that the association of the nations of the Commonwealth has just given to the world, which has witnessed the downfall of so many empires and the disappearance of so many historic institutions, a great and comforting spectacle that of all its peoples uniting in a common sentiment of loyalty to the crown, in which they respect the symbol of their unity and of their glorious past.

Now that we have achieved the astonishing political progress of conciliating monarchy and democracy, the sovereign no longer directly exercises power, but he continues to be its living emblem.

The United Kingdom and the Dominions, conscious of the providential mission which is theirs of working for the maintenance of stability, order and peace throughout the world, have, in admirable unison, recognized in the proclamation of their new monarch a guarantee of their continuity and of the safeguard of the best British traditions. The Duke of York's striking physical and moral resemblance to his father has been noted with satisfaction in recent years. Schooled like him in the hard and wholesome discipline of a sailor's life, he is moreover endowed with the high moral qualities and absolute devotion to duty that earned for George V the loyalty and affection of his subjects.

After serving his country in the navy and in the air force during the war, our monarch has devoted himself in times of peace to the study of social and industrial questions and to the establishment of closer bonds between social classes. All those who have had the privilege of knowing his distinguished personality, of appreciating the simple and manly dignity of his character, are sure that he fully realizes his responsibilities and that he will scrupulously abide by the rules and duties of constitutional monarchy.

Indeed, in his first official statement to the privy council, the King affirmed his intention strictly to respect the principles of our form of government and his resolve to consecrate himself, before and above all else, to the welfare of his subjects.

May I be permitted to express to the King the assurance of our loyalty and of our wish to see him devote himself to the good government of his people and to the preservation of liberty and of peace.

We wish also to give expression to our respect for Her Majesty the Queen who, by her noble qualities of heart and mind, seems naturally destined to second the devotion of her royal husband.

In conclusion, I wish to recall the words of the official proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada and to repeat that we beseech "God by whom all kings and queens do reign to bless the Royal Prince George the Sixth with long and happy years to reign over us."

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to voice any objection to the words of the address, but as I intimated yesterday I protest against the government introducing an address at this stage of the proceedings. King George VI may be king de facto, but as I see the matter he is not king de jure until this parliament enacts appropriate legislation.

I am really not concerned as to what person occupies the throne, but I am concerned with maintaining the rights of parliament, and it is strange that I should have to take this attitude especially with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his seat. It is undoubtedly regrettable that matters of procedure and criticisms of government policy should be mixed up with a formal address to His Majesty, but as I suggested yesterday the Prime Minister might have avoided this by deferring his motion. The bill which the Prime Minister has introduced should in my judgment have preceded this address; otherwise the debate on that bill loses all reality. The Prime Minister stated yesterday that the bill referred particularly to the question of succession in the future, but surely when King Edward VIII was placed by Mr. Baldwin in the position where he had to make an important choice, and he chose abdication—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I interrupt my hon. friend? I do not think he intends to misrepresent Mr. Baldwin's position, but I have no understanding that Mr. Baldwin placed the former king in any such position. All that I have heard, and all that I have read of dispatches, would indicate that His former Majesty had himself asked certain questions of Mr. Baldwin which Mr. Baldwin answered. I do not think that in any way did Mr. Baldwin seek to embarrass His former Majesty.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I refer to Mr. Baldwin's speech in the House of Commons at Westminster:

> I saw the king on Monday, November 16, and I began by giving him my view of a possible marriage. I told him that I did not think that a particular marriage was one that would receive the approbation of the country. That marriage would have involved the lady becoming queen. I did tell His Majesty once that I might be a remnant of the old Victorians, but that my worst enemy would not say of me that I did not know what the reaction of the English people would be to any particular course of action, and I told him that so far as they went I was certain that that would be impracticable. . . .
> Then His Majesty said to me—I have his permission to state this—that he wanted to tell me something that he had long wanted to tell me. He said: "I am going to marry Mrs. Simpson, and I am prepared to go."

It is to that statement I refer.

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That statement you will find in Mr. Baldwin's speech in the House of Commons.

Mr. DUPUIS: But in what publication?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I just happen to be quoting from a number of documents that are included in the January issue of the Nineteenth Century magazine.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I think I am quite in order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I imagine the document he is quoting from is not the full text or he would probably have given it. I think the Hansard of the House of Commons at Westminster will show that prior to the part my hon. friend has just read Mr. Baldwin had said that His Majesty had raised this question with Mr. Baldwin first, asking Mr. Baldwin what in his opinion would be the result of an endeavour to have parliament enact a morganatic marriage act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My point, Mr. Speaker, is this, that when the king was placed in that position, or found himself in that position, the succession was at that time altered. That is all I want to emphasize at this time.

It seems to me that we as members should not have been required to take the oath of allegiance before taking our seats in this house and voting on this question. The other day we received a note from the clerk of the house—I have no doubt he had been instructed by the government—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that the government has not sought to instruct the clerk, but I believe the clerk has tried to perform his duty as he believed it should be performed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The note said that an hon. member cannot sit in the house until he has taken and subscribed to the oath as required by the British North America Act. We had already taken the oath a year ago and already have seats in parliament. If on the demise of the throne parliament can carry on, I submit that so also can a member retain his seat. But I have no desire to make a scene, and further than that I do not think the matter is of sufficient importance—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —for me to take the action that Mr. Bradlaugh did in England a good many years ago.

I would point out that this house has a very slight knowledge of what actually took place in Great Britain. We have had to depend very largely upon newspaper accounts and radio messages. I have a notice on the order paper asking for the production of papers relative to the abdication of King Edward VIII. These should be before the house, I submit, before the bill is discussed, and the bill should be passed before the address is moved. It is true that the Prime Minister has not absolutely refused to bring down the papers, but he said yesterday that he had consulted with Mr. Baldwin and is consulting with the prime ministers of other dominions to see what they are going to do. I hope the time will come before very long when the Prime Minister of Canada will decide these matters on their merits—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that correspondence is two-sided, and one is not at liberty, where correspondence is confidential, to bring down correspondence unless he has the consent of the other party to the correspondence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I submit that when matters of great concern are at stake the members of parliament ought not to be expected to act without an intelligent knowledge of the grounds on which action is to be taken. I have no desire in this matter to do any muck-raking, but the people of this country have the right to know the fundamental facts of the case. Why all this haste and secrecy? Was Mr. Baldwin's action, after all, caused by pressure from the dominions? Whose statement are we to accept, that of Mr. Baldwin or that of our own Prime Minister? I think such questions are important.

I have here a cartoon by Low which represents a procession secretly in the dead of night in which the throne and the demised crown are being transferred under a policy of "hush," "silence" and "mystery," while the press and public opinion have been gagged. It seems to me that our Prime Minister is quite willing to join in that procession.

The government have introduced this bill. If the action of the government on December 10 was constitutional, surely further legislation is unnecessary. Within a few hours of the Prime Minister's statement of December 10 I wired him saying—

As a member of parliament pledged to loyalty to King Edward VIII—

As we all were at that time.

—I protest against the usurpation by the cabinet of the powers of parliament.

That, I believe, was before the order in council was passed.

There are two questions that persist in my mind. First, why should our Prime Minister, in connivance with Mr. Baldwin, be in a position to absolve me and other members from our declaration of loyalty to King Edward VIII; and, second, why should the Liberal party be in a position to decide who is to be king of the Canadian people? I am not indulging in captious criticism; I am simply trying to emphasize the importance of the precedent which has been and is being set. The Prime Minister relies, I suppose, upon a fait accompli, but in bringing this about he has deliberately set aside an important statute and acted contrary to a constitutional convention. Doubtless the Prime Minister was in a difficult position, I concede that; but the cost of pleasing the British government has been altogether too great.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to interrupt, but I must take exception to my hon. friend's statement. There was no question of trying to please the British government. When we come to the measure itself I think I shall be able to show the house that the government's action in every particular complied with the Statute of Westminster and was satisfactory.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I can only use my own judgment, but it seems to me that this action has made the Statute of Westminster a farce. While in Winnipeg the Native Sons were celebrating the anniversary of the passing of the Westminster act, a Liberal prime minister of Canada was lending himself to rubber-stamping a decision of the government of the United Kingdom. Further, so far as Canada is concerned we have once more gone back to government by order in council, thus setting a most dangerous precedent. If the Prime Minister can choose our king he can declare war or commit this country to any policy of less importance than the selection of the head of the state.

It seems to me that the Prime Minister has rather shifted his ground from the position taken in the public statement he gave to the Canadian people a few weeks ago. The Prime Minister explains his position with what Mr. Baldwin might call "appalling frankness." He refers to the Westminster act, from which I read the pertinent paragraph:

> And whereas it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British commonwealth of nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

In his statement to the public the Prime Minister admits that—

> The action involved in giving effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication constitutes such an alteration.

That is, an alteration in the law touching the succession, which is something that has already been done. If the Prime Minister is correct in the statement he made yesterday, that the bill is not retroactive, then it should be—decidedly it should be, because we cannot pass over a complete change in the occupancy of the throne, putting down one king and setting up another, and assume that parliament has no particular concern with such a proceeding. The Prime Minister attempts to distinguish between "the legal standpoint" and the preservation of the constitutional convention. In maintaining the first he quotes from section 4 of the Statute of Westminster, which deals with procedure:

> No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

I understand that some lawyers are prepared to say that what is contained in the preamble does not control the various sections; but this preamble is of a very special nature in that it embodies very clearly and definitely a statement of constitutional convention, a convention concerning which the Expert conference of 1929 said:

> Such conventions take their place among the constitutional principles and doctrines which are in practice regarded as binding and sacred whatever the powers of parliament may in theory be.

In so far as this section refers to any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne, it is clear that this can be done only by the action of the dominion parliament.

The Prime Minister, however, leaves this attempted but rather nebulous distinction of legal and constitutional and hastens to emphasize the practical aspects of the case. He pointed out in his public statement that the time element enters in. Well, who created the imperative crisis—the king, or Mr. Baldwin, or Mrs. Wallis Simpson, or the American gossips? Surely if the king of the United Kingdom can be distinguished for legal purposes from the King of Canada then the recognition of the King of the United Kingdom as king of Canada can wait until there is time to call parliament. If the selection of the king of Canada is of such minor importance, the question arises: Why a king at all?

Parliament is now in session; it might have been considered that the very first step would be to discuss and settle this matter. Instead of that we are asked to pass a resolution of loyalty to the king. Surely this is not the proper time to introduce an address of that kind; let us do it at the proper time—after the bill is passed.

What is the Prime Minister's conception of keeping a statute? In his address to the public he stated that he will have it—> —asserted and safeguarded to the greatest practicable extent—

Mark that.

> —consistent with all the circumstances of time and space—

Plenty of latitude there.

> —and with the imperative, practical necessities—

"Practical" again, and the practicability to be judged by Liberal standards.

> —which confronted the government on this unprecedented occasion.

Surely that kind of interpretation could drive a coach and four through any statute!

I would ask the Prime Minister why he adopts one attitude towards the Statute of Westminster, which was put on the statute book only five years ago, and such a different attitude towards the British North America Act, which was put on the statute book seventy years ago. Such an unprecedented situation, declares the Prime Minister, "was not contemplated" when the Statute of Westminster "was drawn and enacted." I ask him, was unemployment on an unprecedented scale contemplated when the British North America Act was drawn and enacted? Was depression on an unprecedented scale contemplated when the British North America Act was drawn and enacted? Were debt burdens, dominion, provincial, municipal and private on an unprecedented scale contemplated when the British North America Act was drawn and enacted? Were great accumulations of wealth and arbitrary powers of control by the holders thereof on an unprecedented scale contemplated when the British North America Act was drawn and enacted?

Then why does not the Prime Minister recognize the time element in connection with such matters? Why does not the Prime Minister carry out the provisions of the British North America Act "to the greatest practicable extent consistent with all the circumstances of time and space and with the imperative practical necessities" which confront his government and all governments in these rapidly changing days? It looks to me as if the present Prime Minister is prepared to carry out statutes only when it suits him, and that government by orders in council seems to him to be quite justifiable when a Liberal government is in office.

I do not intend to discuss the matter at any greater length on this occasion; it is not in order to say anything with respect to the terms of the bill. What further I have to say will be reserved until the bill is under discussion. At this time I wish merely to lodge a protest against the action of the government in what seems to me to be an effort to railroad through a matter of great importance.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the Statute of Westminster provide for a king for Canada other than the king of the United Kingdom?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, but it does definitely provide that there shall be no new king nor shall anything be done touching the succession without the consent of the governments of the dominions.

Mr. POULIOT: If it is the government it is not the parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The parliaments, of course I should have said.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Scarcely a year ago it was my privilege to express devotion to His former Majesty King Edward VIII. To him British peoples everywhere had given warm and spontaneous love and great hopes were entertained for our future under him. His passing is now a mournful memory. After all, however, the British union of peoples is greater than any man. Men may come and go, but the British race must go on. Let us then turn from the past to the future. King George VI has merited our admiration and our loyalty. When I remember the tireless pains with which he has mastered his handicaps I am confident that under God he will be able to overcome, with us, the grave difficulties which everywhere beset our way. I take pleasure then in joining with my colleagues in this parliament in saying, "God save the King."

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we should sing the national anthem.

The members rose and joined in singing the national anthem.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 4.30 p.m.

Monday, January 18, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

PRECIOUS METALS MARKING ACT

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 2, to amend the Precious Metals Marking Act, 1928.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT, 1932

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 3, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. DUNNING: The amendment is a minor one, affecting small companies incorporated by the provinces in relation to the deposits which they are called upon to make with the superintendent of insurance.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 4, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. ROGERS: It is the intention of the amendment to settle some confusion which has arisen as to the jurisdiction of a police or stipendiary magistrate to hear cases under the Weights and Measures Act. It has been deemed advisable to add to subsection (b) of section 82 the words underlined in section 1 of the bill:

a police magistrate, a stipendiary magistrate, or any person having the power or authority of two or more justices of the peace, having jurisdiction in such district, county or place.

The amendment is in the exact words of the interpretation section of the criminal code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MILITIA PENSION ACT

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Minister of National Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 5, to amend the Militia Pension Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The intention of the amendment is to withdraw section 32 of the act and enact a new section 41 so that payments of arrears shall be made in monthly instalments, the previous custom of making payments in lump sums in advance being eliminated.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (Wellington North): moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 6, to amend the criminal code (death penalty).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CUBAN DUTY ON SEED POTATOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I should like to direct a question to the acting Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Rogers) respecting the recent duty of $10 per barrel imposed by the Cuban government upon Canadian certified seed potatoes. This duty, as the government realizes, is absolutely prohibitive and is a serious blow to the exporters of seed potatoes in the maritimes. I should like to know whether the government has made any representations to the Cuban government with the object of having the duty either removed or lowered.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): I had not received notice of my hon. friend's intention to ask this question. I shall be glad to secure the information if possible and give it to him at the earliest opportunity.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. N. A. MCLARTY AND SECONDED BY MR. C. J. VENIOT

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Mr. N. A. McLARTY (Essex West) moved:

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, to offer the humble thanks of this house to His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both houses of parliament: namely,—

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Baron Tweedsmuir of Elsfield, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Member of the Order of the Companions of Honour, Governor General and Commander in Chief of the Dominion of Canada.

May it Please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of parliament.

He said: The speech from the throne, sir, quite naturally makes reference to the advent of His Majesty to the throne of the British commonwealth of nations. May I add to these words, so expressive of our deep and abiding loyalty, a few words indicative of our good wishes to our sovereign lord King George VI and to Her gracious Majesty the Queen. May they long be spared to occupy with dignity and grace the throne of this the greatest of all commonwealths since the world began.

I feel, sir, that our thoughts with respect to the monarchy have been most aptly expressed by His Excellency, who two years ago said:

In the last two hundred years, while the throne has lost in definable powers it has gained in significance. It is not only higher than any other human estate but of a different kind from any other, for it is the mystical indivisible centre of national union. It is the point around which coheres the nation's sense of a continuing personality. In any deep stirring of heart, the people turn from the mechanism of government, which is their own handiwork and their servant, to that ancient abiding thing behind the government, which they feel to be a symbol of their best achievement and their future hope.

I should like at this time to express to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) my appreciation of the honour which he has conferred upon me in asking me to move this resolution this afternoon. I should like also to assure him and his colleagues that the good people of the constituency of Essex West, which I have the honour to represent, regard it as a definite recognition of the importance of that industrial portion of Canada.

This is the second occasion on which we have been honoured by an address from His Excellency. At the time of the last address he had been but recently appointed. We knew him, but we knew him much in the same way as he was known wherever the English language is spoken. Since that time he has visited most parts of Canada and has become acquainted with our people. His intellectual curiosity in every activity that comes within its sweep, is, in the height and swiftness of its quality, peculiarly his own. It has already applied itself to the sympathetic understanding of the problems and possibilities of nearly every one of the varied expressions of Canadian effort between the two great seas. It might be fairly said that Peter now knows the lobster industry; John S. Blenkiron could now operate a mine; Andrew Amos could drive a harvester; Dick Hannay could now ride the logs down the river, trap a wolf, put out a forest fire or run a paper mill; and Jacqueline Armine, with her staunch understanding and her reassuring smile, could help any troubled Canadian Adam to see his way through.

I believe I but express the unanimous opinion of this house when I say that the closer that acquaintanceship has become the more His Excellency and his gracious lady have risen in the esteem of the people of Canada.

I deem it a very special privilege to have the opportunity of being the first to welcome back to this country the right hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Bennett). It is a matter of congratulation not to him alone, or to this house alone, but to Canada, that he returns with his health fully restored and his accustomed force and vigour unabated. Since His Excellency prorogued this house last June the right hon. gentleman has, shall I say, surrounded the globe.

I believe it might be fairly said of him, as it was once said of the great Ulysses:

> Much have I seen and known, cities of men,
> Manners, climates, councils, governments;
> Myself not least but honoured of them all.

May I suggest, sir, that it is a matter for gratification, in which the right hon. gentleman will share, that under the influence and direction of a wise and benign government Canada is rapidly returning to prosperity.

In moving this resolution this afternoon I feel that I have a simpler and more congenial as well as an easier task than fell to the lot of those who have moved similar motions for some years past. I am inclined to think that when they referred to the progress and prosperity of the country they must have felt that they were discussing something hoped for but unseen. There is ample evidence on all sides to-day that we are emerging from the forest of depression. It would be unfair to suggest that the pathway is not obstructed by some entangling underbrush, but at least we have left the forest behind us.

The fact of this returning prosperity is evidenced everywhere. The prices of our primary products are constantly and consistently rising; the basic industry of agriculture, apart from those exigencies of nature which neither man nor government can control, is in a better position to be operated profitably than at any time during the last six years. The pulp and paper industry is producing at an unprecedented rate, and while the price of that commodity has not responded to the general upturn in demand, that can be expected within a reasonable time. The fishing industry is enjoying a better year than it has had for some time. The lumbering industry is pulsating with new life. The mining industry has in the last year contributed more to our national wealth than in any other year in our history. The manufacturing industry, the largest single contributor to our national wealth, contributed last year over $1,400,000,000, the largest since 1929.

And, sir, I believe that the stimulation of our international trade has been the greatest contributory factor in this general uptrend of economic conditions. No matter how critical anyone may be of this government, he will at least admit that they have gone about the business of stimulating that trade with great enthusiasm and high ability. Since their coming into office they have concluded the trade agreement with the United States, they have concluded an agreement with Japan, they have completed a temporary agreement with Germany, they have secured a cancellation of the Soviet order of 1931 prohibiting imports from this country and the chartering of Canadian vessels. It was announced in the speech from the throne that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is now in active negotiations with our sister commonwealths of New Zealand and Australia, and I believe it will be welcome news to this house that negotiations have reached a point where the definite principles underlying the trade agreement with the United Kingdom have been settled and the agreement will be laid before us for consideration before the present session is concluded.

I believe it is no exaggeration to say that never before in the history of Canada has there been such an intensive and well directed drive for the stimulation of our international trade as that made since this government took office.

What has been the result? The figures are so well known to members of this house that I hesitate to repeat them. But briefly, in the first eleven months of 1936 our imports grew from $511,000,000 to $582,000,000, an increase of 13·8 per cent. In the same period our exports grew from $759,000,000 to $928,000,000, an increase of 22·3 per cent, and the highest since 1929.

Now, sir, we shall be reminded that there has been a general upturn in world economic conditions and international trade, and that independently of and apart from anything this government might have done there would inevitably have been an improvement in our trade. There is some point in that argument. But would it not be equally reasonable to suggest that the realization of other countries as well that prosperity can best be brought about, not by damming up, but by opening the channels of trade, had something to do with that general economic upturn?

And, sir, the matter is not so easily disposed of by simply attributing it to a general economic uptrend. It will not be assumed that any international trade treaty will in one year, much less one month, do all the good that its proponents may claim or all the harm that its opponents may prophesy.

But Canada has two agreements which have now been in operation slightly over a year. At the last session of parliament it was announced that an amicable agreement had been arrived at with Japan. At the time it was suggested that the Canadian market would be flooded with Japanese goods. But what has happened? Our exports to Japan have increased by 33 per cent, and in addition our favourable trade balance with Japan has increased from $10,470,000 in 1935 to $13,990,000 in 1936.

The situation in regard to the Canada-United States trade agreement cannot be analyzed quite so simply. In a general way the articles which we export to the United States may be divided into four classes: (1) items not affected by the agreement; (2) items bound free of duty; (3) items bound at a low rate of duty; (4) items subject to the reduction provided in the agreement. To those who suggest that the action of governments has little influence on trade, that as the wind bloweth where it listeth, so trade floweth where it listeth, an analysis of the figures in those four classes is illuminating.

Dealing with each class separately, our exports of items not affected by the agreement increased by only 1·2 per cent. Our exports of items bound free of duty increased by 18·3 per cent. Our exports of items bound at a low rate of duty increased 21·9 per cent, and our exports of items subject to reduction in the rate of duty increased 62·3 per cent. Bearing in mind the wide relative variation in our exports as between articles not affected by the agreement and those on which the reduction was secured, can anyone suggest that the results of that agreement during its first year of operation have not been beneficent?

Then there is another matter arising out of the agreement with the United States. The house will remember that one of the terms of the agreement provided that under certain definite regulations tourists visiting one country from another would be permitted to bring back $100 worth of goods free of duty. At that time apprehension was felt that our imports under this item would be so substantial that, especially at border points, they might be ruinous to the retail trade. In my own constituency, separated as it is from the United States by only a narrow river, and with splendid transriver facilities, that apprehension was necessarily present. But it has been found so far that the fear of harm which might result was greatly exaggerated. And when it is remembered that in the last year 2,700,000 tourists crossed into Canada at the port of Windsor alone, any loss that may have been sustained has I suggest been amply recouped by the increase in the tourist trade.

But, sir, there are two features of our economic uptrend that give cause for apprehension. The first is the condition of the building and construction industry. While there was a slight uptrend in that industry last year, namely three per cent, the amount of that increase is inconsiderable when we remember the severe and precipitous decline which that industry had sustained. It is remarkable that with the general upturn in all our major industries the building and construction industry alone has remained quiescent, like a painted ship upon a painted ocean.

There is another fact that must be clearly faced. While industry has been definitely improving, and while employment is definitely on the increase, the reduction in the number of unemployed and the number on relief has not been anything like proportionate. It is easy to explain this in a casual way by suggesting that a certain proportion of the unemployed are unemployable, or that a certain number come to an employable age each year. That is quite true, but that is not an ephemeral condition; it is continuous, and must be faced as a definite fact in our economic life.

And, sir, it is to the solution of these two questions that the national employment commission, appointed last May, has been directing its efforts and its energy.

In his address His Excellency refers to the work which has been undertaken as the result of the appointment of that commission. While the powers of that body are advisory it has obviously become an arm of the government in dealing with the most serious difficulty that still faces the government, that of employment. The personnel of the commission was announced last May, less than eight months ago. It was representative not only of the various geographical areas of Canada but also of the different branches of our industry. I believe the members were wisely and well chosen. It would be invidious to mention names, I know, but I would like to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) upon securing the services of Mr. Arthur B. Purvis as chairman of that commission.

In ability and energy Mr. Purvis is unsurpassed in Canada. The sincerity of his purpose is testified to by the fact that, at his own request, his salary was fixed at $1 per year. The company of which he is head I believe has come as close as, if not closer than, any other company in Canada in reaching that goal of making labour and capital co-partners in a common enterprise.

The commission, sir, has already recommended the farm employment plan, and the speech from the throne forecasts that another plan will be presented shortly which, with the cooperation of the provinces, will provide for the establishment of unemployed young people. It has been studying and in due course doubtless will make representations in connection with a long range program calculated to obviate the recurrence of the conditions which we have experienced in the last few years.

As an immediate aid to the building industry it has recommended—and the government has accepted its recommendation—the home improvement plan. That plan, as every member of this house knows, provides that to the extent of $50,000,000 the government will guarantee the lending institutions against loss, to the extent of 15 per cent, where the loans are made for the purpose of enabling the repair, improvement and rehabilitation of homes. It is directed primarily to putting men back to work and to assisting the building trades.

The recommendation of the commission to the government probably was preceded by an investigation as to how a somewhat similar plan, adopted in the United States, had operated. To those who think that a very small stimulus would result from this measure, the results secured in the republic to the south are illuminating. There in June of 1934 President Roosevelt signed what is known as part 1 of the Federal Housing Act, providing for loans for purposes similar to those contemplated under the home improvement plan. In the United States that plan became operative about October of the same year. Up to the end of last month loans had been made under that plan in the United States to the number of 1,326,000, to an aggregate amount in excess of $500,000,000. But, sir, that does not tell the whole story, for there were people who papered and painted and modernized and improved their homes for no other reason than that their neighbours were doing the same thing. The estimate made by the bankers' association of the United States, as to the private investment in repairs, improvements and rehabilitation of homes, was an additional amount of $1,750,000,000.

There were three very definite results of the experiment in the United States. I have referred first to the stimulation given private investment which makes the plan much wider and more effective than the mere announcement of loans totalling $50,000,000 would indicate. The ratio of stimulation in the United States is estimated at three and a half to one.

Another feature is the large percentage of money which finds its way to labour. The estimate of competent American authorities has been that eighty-five per cent of the money so spent finds its way to labour.

The third point, sir, is that it is continuous in its operation. It is not a plan that operates for only a month, six months or a year. May I quote from the bulletin of the federal housing administration, issued in July last, which sums up this idea in the following language:

> Gradually developing from the influence of economic improvement it intensifies and sustains the improvement that caused it.

It can be readily seen, sir, that if the plan operates in Canada as well as it has operated in the United States, bearing in mind also the fact that we enjoy a much lower discount rate under this plan than they have in the United States, it will give a definite and effective stimulus to the building industry.

The commission was kind enough to recommend, and the government was good enough to accept the recommendation, that in the first instance this plan should be put into operation in Essex county. That was appreciated, sir, not only by the members from Essex county but by all those who saw in that gesture definite evidence of the government's desire to help the progress and prosperity of that important part of Canada.

Behind it all is this thought, that added confidence is given by the fact that the government has expressed its willingness to guarantee, even to a limited amount, loans for the purpose of repairing and modernizing the homes of its citizens. After all, sir, one of the primary functions of government is to promote the morale of the people.

There is one other matter mentioned in the speech from the throne which, because of its high humanitarian aspects, I believe will receive the unanimous approval not only of this house but of all the citizens of this country. I refer, sir, to the promised legislation to provide for pensions for the blind at a lower age than seventy years.

I have referred with pride to distinguished men in high places who, by doing their duty well, have helped this country through. May I, from my place here and at this time, pay my highest tribute to the undaunted spirit of the people of Canada, which is triumphing over all resistance—the hundreds of instances of industries carrying on for years at a loss to maintain their employees so that eventually all might survive; the thousands upon thousands of employees who divided their working hours with others and who, when their earnings were down, took barely a living wage so that things might carry on: the all too many tragic thousands who earnestly sought and are still earnestly seeking the opportunity to labour and to earn—I trust their seeking will be over long before the term of this parliament is run; the myriads of persons on the land who, at shrunken prices and with failing yields, in the face of drought and disaster, re-sowed their fields each spring and each spring looked hopefully once more to the skies to send the rain, all with a fortitude quite unsurpassed in any land in times of peace.

It is this stoutness of the heart, this determined integrity of the mind, this "ils ne passeront pas" of the soul, that will conquer all.

> The rains may beat us and the great mists blind us,
> The lightning rend the pine tree on the hill;
> Yet are we strong and yet shall the morning find us
> Children of tempest, all unshaken still.

Mr. J. C. VENIOT (Gloucester) (Translation): The house will doubtless understand the emotion I feel in undertaking the task I have had the honour of being entrusted with. Indeed, I could not but be deeply moved by the recollections of mingled joy and sadness evoked by the words of praise uttered Friday last by the right hon. the Prime Minister and many other hon. colleagues in speaking of the man who was at once my predecessor my father and my closest friend. For these kind and touching words of praise and sympathy I am profoundly grateful. I also thank from the bottom of my heart my honourable colleagues for the most cordial reception extended to me from all sides, without distinction of political parties.

The house will readily understand the delicate position of a member who, after listening to the funeral oration of his distinguished predecessor, is, two days later, called upon to speak for the first time in this parliament the threshold of which he has crossed by passing the tomb of his father, and who every day realizes more and more how serious an undertaking it is to try to replace the man who has just been so highly praised.

I am conscious that I shall never be blessed with the great mental capacity, the experience or the political judgment of the late member for Gloucester, but I shall at least have in common with him my devotion to the service of my country and my fidelity to the party he has so well served for half a century.

It was no doubt in order to pay a last tribute to the man for whom we mourn together that I was chosen to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. It was also to pay homage to the electors of the county of Gloucester who, ever since the election of my venerable friend Senator Onésiphore Turgeon, have for thirty-six years, without interruption, sent Liberal representatives to the parliament of Canada and who, I hope, will long continue this fine tradition. But it was likewise to do honour to the 200,000 Acadians of the maritime provinces who bear living testimony to the tenacity and vitality of our race, and of which 137,000 are residents of New Brunswick, forming one-third of its population, with 34,000 in my own beautiful county of Gloucester.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to delay by a long speech the more important business of the house. Too frequently have I heard deplored, and with some right, I think, the useless prolonging of certain debates, such as the one we listened to Friday afternoon on the oath of allegiance to the King, to allow myself to fall into the same error at this time when a short session is desired. Indeed it is the wish of the government and, I venture to say, of the entire deputation, as well as of the Canadian people, to have the session end in time to permit our delegates to take part as they should in the grandiose ceremonies that will attend the coronation of our new sovereign.

The Canadian people join the British Empire in rejoicing at the happy solution of the recent constitutional crisis which ended in the accession to the throne of England of His Majesty George VI. Calm and dignified, fortunate in his family life both as a husband and as the father of charming princesses, he brings to the monarchy the security and dignity that marked the reign of the beloved king George V. Therefore, the Canadian people hasten to express to the new king their loyalty and profound respect. And the British Empire, disturbed by the uncertainty of the first days of December last, continues its march through the centuries with its customary impassibility and proud demeanour, as if nothing had happened.

Mr. Speaker, I have not sufficient knowledge of international affairs or of diplomacy to appreciate at its true value the remarkable speech delivered before the League of Nations last autumn by the right honourable the Prime Minister, but I well remember the anxiety shown in many parts of Canada regarding the attitude to be taken by the Canadian delegation at Geneva on the question of the participation or abstention of Canada in the event of war. The proud declaration of the Prime Minister on this occasion, proclaiming the complete independence of Canada in the event of war, even should England be involved, and his definite statement that Canada would never declare war without the formal consent of the federal parliament have reassured all true Canadians.

However great the admiration, the confidence and the sympathy we owe to England, the duty of every citizen of Canada, of whatever racial extraction, is to show himself a true Canadian by seeking first to protect the honour, the liberty, the peace and the future of Canada. By so doing, we will not be abandoning British ideals nor prejudicing the cause of England. And the manner in which our prime minister cleared up the question of Canada's sovereignty, to the satisfaction of all Canadians worthy of the name, revealed him as an enlightened leader and a statesman of the first rank.

Among all the nations of the world, Canada has made the greatest economic progress during the last twelve months. Its volume of trade has passed the billion dollar mark for the first time since 1929, and Canada holds fourth place among the exporting countries of the world. With the exception of the drought areas, every part of Canada shows an improved situation. Economists and financial commentators and especially the presidents of our banking institutions, in their annual reports, are practically unanimous in stating that this rapid improvement is largely due to the wise policies of the present government, which advocates moderate tariffs in order to promote trade with all the nations of the world. The last commercial agreement concluded with the United States has given most excellent results and is held largely responsible for the enormous business improvement registered in 1936, the figures of which are known to all. These results demonstrate once more the superiority of the tariff policies of the Liberal party and the ill effects of the policies of extreme protection that have always characterized Conservative administrations in Canada as well as in other countries.

In his address, delivered last week, to the shareholders of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Sir John Aird made some observations that are of interest to this house. He said: "I urge world-wide tariff revision" and he added: "This country should be thankful for a partial return to less restricted trade and exchange policies. I shall not qualify my former expressions against trade restrictions because of their depressing effect upon business. But now I urge world-wide tariff revision for two other reasons, namely, to protect the consuming masses against possible sharp increases in living costs, and to prevent the large governmental expenditures still necessary for public relief from mounting so high as to nullify efforts to achieve budgetary balance."

No one, I venture to say, will accuse Sir John Aird of being a pillar of the Liberal party or of being unduly inclined to praise the present administration.

The economic prosperity of Canada fundamentally depends upon the extent of our foreign trade. With a population of only ten million spread over half a continent, we are incapable of absorbing, ourselves alone, all our natural products and the products of our manufactures. We need outside markets, especially in the United States, who are our natural customers. High tariff barriers tend to stifle our commercial expansion. Every page of the commercial history of America shows that every excessive raise in the tariff, on either side of the international boundary, has caused us economic embarrassment and often disaster. Striking examples of this are found in the Fordney-McCumber and Hawley-Smoot tariffs, as well as the economic nationalism practised by the last administration. With the exception of the period of the great war, Canada's business barometer has always pointed upward during Liberal administrations and downward under Conservative governments. One of the best illustrations of this fact is to be found in the operations of all the Canadian railways since confederation. Car-loadings do not lie. A former official of the Intercolonial Railway, who has been observing them over the last sixty years, has noted that their curve has always moved in a contrary direction to tariffs, being high under Liberal administrations, with low or moderate tariffs, and low when tariffs are high.

The voters of Canada understood this quite well in 1935 when they gave to the Right Hon. Mackenzie King an unprecedented mandate to bring back prosperity to the country.

Our volume of trade with overseas countries, while not as great as with the United States, is most gratifying. Our treaty with Japan continues to be beneficial to Canada and the government, in spite of the dire prophecies uttered last year by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), still exists and has so far escaped the humiliation to which it was said to be doomed. On the contrary, this humiliation fell upon our textile industry whose voracity at the expense of the Canadian people was fully established. The definitive conclusion of the trade agreement mentioned in the speech from the throne, the approval of the treaty with Germany, the negotiations actually in progress with Australia and several other countries, promise well for the coming fiscal year.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we look forward to this new year with so much confidence; that is why the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) foresees for the near future not only a balanced budget, but a series of ample surpluses, as in the prosperous years from 1921 to 1929.

(Text) I have so many friends, Mr. Speaker, from coast to coast, especially in my own native province, friends both in and out of the medical profession, who speak the language of Shakespeare, that I consider I should be remiss in my duties of friendship and esteem were I not to say at least a few words in the language through which these friendships were born and nurtured. May I avail myself of this opportunity of conveying my deepest gratitude to hon. members of this house, without distinction of party affiliations, for the many kind words they have said with reference to my late father. I am particularly indebted to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and members of his cabinet for the many kindnesses to my father during his last illness and for the honour paid to him by their presence at his obsequies in July last. The county of Gloucester will long remember the visit of the Prime Minister and his colleagues for the purpose of accompanying to his last resting place a man who had served the interests of the county for half a century.

I cannot abstain from paying a special tribute to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Bennett) for his touching mark of esteem in a personal letter he wrote to my late sire two weeks before he passed to the great beyond, and for the personal references to him made later in public addresses. All this shows the estimable humaneness of the man who is the distinguished leader of a great party. These written and spoken words of a political opponent glorify the membership of this House of Commons, and so long as such amenities of good fellowship exist among its legislators, the Dominion of Canada need never fear for its future destiny.

The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. McLarty) has covered so well the ground upon which rests the speech from the throne that there remains very little for me to add to complete the picture. However, there is one matter about which I should like to make a few remarks; I refer to the question of unemployment and direct relief.

While the government is to be congratulated on the excellent work which has been done by the national employment commission since its inception, nevertheless, in spite of a marked improvement in economic conditions throughout the whole country, unemployment continues to be Canada's major problem. We must ask ourselves the reason for this surprising paradox of unemployment in the face of such rapid economic progress. No matter how laudable was the intention of those who initiated direct relief as a means of helping the unemployed on this continent in 1930, direct relief is to-day considered by the leaders of thought in Canada, and especially in New Brunswick, where we are making use of every endeavour to bring direct relief to an end, as one of the greatest economic and psychological fallacies of the century. It may have had its place, as a strictly temporary emergency measure, at the beginning of the depression period, when so many thousands of our people were thrown suddenly out of employment, but its continuation as a state-supported form of charity, as the subsidizing of idleness, without asking any return in the shape of human endeavour, is sapping the morals, the vitality and the finances of the country, because of the destructive principle that it fosters in supporting idleness, whether forced or voluntary, as opposed to the natural law of compensation, of work and production.

Mind in action through creative, constructive thinking, is the greatest force in the world. Work, production, whether in the intellectual or material field, is mind's greatest manifestation, the basic principle of all human success and economic progress, one of the fundamental laws of the universe; and idleness, whether voluntary or forced, is the bane of humanity and the ruin of economic structure. The man who thinks in terms of work or production forges ahead; he who thinks in terms of idleness stagnates, rusts and deteriorates.

Horace Greeley aptly said:

> The darkest hour in any man's life is when he sits down to plan how to get money without earning it.

Commenting on this statement, the editor of one of America's largest magazines adds:

> And the darkest hour in the life of any government is when it plans to pay him on these terms. The curse of the dole laid the ancient Roman empire in ruins. The dole then, as to-day, was a soporific that prolonged the disease instead of curing it. The dole then, as now, was never expected to lift a man out of the dole class, but rather to maintain him in a state of permanent pauperism.

In 1930 the British and the Canadian medical associations held a joint convention at Winnipeg. Lord Dawson, the king's physician, and one of our distinguished guests, was asked his opinion on the dole in England as a relief measure for unemployment. He expressed himself as follows:

> The dole was the greatest calamity that hit England since the world war. It made of our labourers liars, perjurers, thieves and lazy men, from which state of demoralization it will take England a generation to recover.

It was the consideration and recognition of the basic principles just mentioned that prompted my home town of Bathurst in 1933 to discontinue direct relief or the dole as a means of taking care of its so-called unemployed; and the government of New Brunswick at the present time, inspired by its leader, Premier Dysart, and members of the cabinet, is putting forth all its efforts to suppress direct relief and the dole as rapidly as possible. I said "so-called" unemployed a minute ago; for we in Bathurst discovered that direct relief was being made a racket, and that fully ninety per cent of those who were asking for assistance were not entitled to it, twelve hundred out of a population of 3,360 of our people being on direct relief. On the first of May of that year we voted out direct relief and adopted the slogan "no work, no bread" from the town of Bathurst; if any unemployed asking for assistance refused to work, we refused to give him bread at the expense of the taxpayer. We separated ourselves from both provincial and federal governments as far as direct relief funds were concerned. In order to overcome the objection to using direct relief funds for the payment of wages, we carried on by ourselves, out of our own resources, giving our people work such as shovelling snow, hauling gravel —anything so long as we made them work, paying them twenty cents an hour for ten hours a day five or six days a week. Our relief problem ceased overnight, so to speak. We saved ten thousand dollars a year for the town of Bathurst, and an equal sum for each of the provincial and federal governments. Our insistence on some return, some personal effort, some show of good will from all who asked for assistance, instead of allowing them to wallow in idleness, soon reduced our municipal relief load to the near zero mark, because the unemployed man was forced to reason the matter out for himself in this way: "If the town forces me to work forty odd hours a week anyway, I might as well work on my own hook and do better for myself." Henceforth our men found ways and means of standing on their own feet and becoming self-supporting. Since that time, we have not had a single man on relief. We have only the ordinary indigents, the maimed and sick that we always have had and always will have with us.

I do not mean to imply that every municipality in Canada can achieve the same results with the same methods, but I do contend—and there is no getting away from this psychological fact—that to-day, with the dole in existence, you cannot get the ordinary labourer to look for work, let alone do an honest day's work, so long as he knows that the dole dangles in front of his nose, so long as he can get his sustenance by the mere extending of his hand. If our governing bodies expect to pull out of this morass of unemployment, our only hope lies in getting people back to work consciousness, compelling them to give some personal return for the assistance they receive, by cutting out this panhandling, this racketeering, this subsidizing of idleness, this sponging on the public treasury, on which so many persons have existed dishonestly for the last five or six years.

Hon. members of this house know that in every district where direct relief exists there are vultures preying on the misery of the people; there are owners or managers of business institutions fostering the direct relief idea because they have waxed fat on it, because they tripled or substantially increased their annual cash receipts. These men are no better than brigands, who must be fought in every possible way, but chiefly by the endeavour to promote the principle of "work for living," by the preaching of the gospel of "work for bread and sustenance," regardless of the source from which the work is obtained.

It is towards this goal, no doubt, that the national employment commission is directing its best effort. It has already accomplished very much through its home improvement plan, through its farm employment plan, through its classification of the unemployed into various categories. But there remains one final step to take, and that is to abolish the greatest enemy of true labour by suppressing as far as possible direct relief, state supported charity, the subsidizing of idleness, and to replace it by instilling into the minds of our people work consciousness instead of dole consciousness. This we must do before we can correct the astonishing paradox of prosperity almost equal to that of 1929 running parallel with unemployment of still alarming proportions.

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, it affords me great pleasure to second the motion of my hon. colleague from Essex West (Mr. McLarty) for an address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It is not difficult to discharge the formal duty that devolves upon one holding my position, namely, to congratulate the mover (Mr. McLarty) and the seconder (Mr. Veniot) of the address which, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed shall be presented to His Excellency. The speech of the hon. member for West Essex (Mr. McLarty) does him infinite credit, and to me it is a matter of some satisfaction to know that he was at one time a member of the profession in the province in which we both resided. The relations between himself and all other members practising there were friendly, as one would expect, and he carried on the practice of his profession on the very high level which one might anticipate from the speech to which we have listened to-day. I thank him for his kindly references to myself and join with, I am sure, every member of this house in congratulating the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) upon the speech which he has just delivered. It indicates a mind that is carefully considering the great problems that surround us, the solution of which we have not yet learned nor yet found. It was a speech which we should expect from one who has so long been engaged in the practice of the healing art. I too have some pride in the hon. gentleman's speech inasmuch as we are natives of the same province; there is a saying among those who are sometimes not able adequately to judge, that if anyone is from New Brunswick or from Dalhousie university he has a warm place in my heart.

The speech from the throne apparently does not contemplate a lengthy session. The duties that devolve upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in connection with the coronation and the imperial conference are such that, I take it, he is anxious, while doing full justice to every demand that may be made upon him and his government by the country, to be able at the same time to discharge the very serious and onerous responsibilities that rest upon him by virtue of his position; and so far as we may be able to do so, we will endeavour to expedite the business of this house in order that the first minister, who will represent, on the occasions to which I refer, not a party but the whole of Canada, may be relieved of worry as to whether he will be able to attend, and, through prompt and efficient dispatch of business, may be able to represent us at that time.

It is fitting that the speech from the throne should in its very first paragraph direct attention to the changes that have taken place during the last few weeks. I am sure that the speech from the throne adequately expresses the views of every Canadian with respect to the deep concern with which we learned that Edward VIII had renounced the throne of his fathers. It will serve no good purpose to discuss that matter now. I can only read the words of His Majesty King George VI in his New Year's message:

> In succeeding to the throne I follow a father who had won for himself an abiding place in the hearts of his peoples, and a brother whose brilliant qualities gave promise of another historic reign. His reign was cut short in circumstances upon which, from their very sadness, none of us would wish to dwell.

I think, however, that if one were to ask me what words that I have read during these weeks more nearly express what I conceive to be the attitude of the late king toward the the problems with which he had to deal, those words would be found in this quotation from Othello:

> I have done the state some service, and they know't;—
> No more of that.—I pray you, in your letters,
> When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
> Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,
> Nor set down aught in malice: then must you speak
> Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well.

Our duties as subjects of His Majesty the new king cannot, I conceive, be more clearly expressed than in the language which His Majesty used both on the occasion of his accession to the throne and in his New Year's address. In acceding to the throne he said:

I meet you to-day in circumstances which are without parallel in the history of our country. Now that the duties of sovereignty have fallen to me I declare to you my adherence to the strict principles of constitutional government and my resolve to work before all else for the welfare of the British commonwealth of nations.

With my wife as helpmeet by my side I take up the heavy task which lies before me. In it I look for all the support of all my peoples.

But more significant are the words used in his New Year's message:

Throughout my life it will be my constant endeavour to strengthen the foundations of mutual trust and affection, on which relations between the sovereign and people of the British Empire so happily rest. I ask your help toward the fulfilment of this purpose, and I know that I do not ask in vain. . . . My wife and I dedicate ourselves for all time to your service and we pray that God may give us guidance and strength to follow the path that lies before us.

Mr. Speaker, is it too much to say that each of us as a Canadian, each citizen of this vast empire, in whatever part he may find himself, should dedicate himself to the service of his country even as the king and queen have dedicated themselves for all time to the service of their peoples. With that I leave the subject, for I am conscious that there must be and will be an earnest desire and effort on the part of all to render to the state, in these troublesome times, such service as will accord with the declaration of His Majesty.

I cannot, however, permit this matter to pass without making at least one observation that arises out of certain discussions which have taken place, both in and out of this house. Respectfully I suggest that the statute dealing with the succession has not been altered. I have no hesitation in saying that had I occupied the position which the Prime Minister now occupies I should have taken exactly the course he took in dealing with the problem which he had to meet.

I think it might be well to look at the language of the statute before we conclude too hastily that there has been any change in the law affecting the succession. The statute is short, and in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the position which I suggest is the sound one I may perhaps read it:

Whereas His Majesty by his royal message of the 10th day of December in this present year has been pleased to declare that he is irrevocably determined to renounce the throne for himself and his descendants and has for that purpose executed the instrument of abdication set out in the schedule to this act and has signified his desire that effect thereto should be given immediately.

And whereas, following upon the communication to his dominions of His Majesty's said declaration and desire, the Dominion of Canada, pursuant to the provisions of section four of the Statute of Westminster, 1931, has requested and consented to the enactment of this act, and the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand and the Union of South Africa have assented to (the enactment of this act).

Be it therefore enacted by the king's most excellent majesty by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and the commons in this present parliament assembled and by the authority of the same as follows:—

1.(1) Immediately upon the royal assent being signified to this act, the instrument of abdication executed by His present Majesty on the 10th day of December, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-six, set out in the schedule to this act, shall have effect and thereupon His Majesty shall cease to be king and there shall be a demise of the crown—

This is the part to which attention should be directed:

—and accordingly a member of the royal family next in succession to the throne shall succeed thereto and to all the rights, privileges and dignities thereunto belonging.

(2) His Majesty, his issue, if any, and descendants of that issue, shall not, after His Majesty's abdication, have any right title or interest to or in the succession to the throne, and section one of the act of settlement shall be construed accordingly.

Not modified, but construed.

(3) The Royal Marriages Act of 1772 shall not apply to His Majesty after his abdication nor to the issue, if any, of His Majesty or descendants of that issue.

Now, having read that statute, I think it is only necessary to direct the attention of the house to the fact that it constituted an acceptance of the resignation of office by His Majesty the late king. We call it in technical parlance his abdication, but we had no precedent for abdications and as to the implications of them, and the statute, in order that there might be no doubt in the matter declared that there was a demise of the crown. The king was dead.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear; that is right.

Mr. BENNETT: The king was dead. And from that there followed, not a new law of succession, not a new method, but the application of the provisions of the act of settlement by which the Duke of York, being then heir to the throne by the death of the then king, succeeded as George VI. That is the position.

Then, further, the statute merely declares that it should be thus construed. That is all. That is, not having any former precedent, except in the case of James, in which parliament declared that he had abdicated—whether or not he had was a nice question, but at least they declared that he had—leaving that for the moment, parliament then said: We will construe the act of settlement, because the king has made himself dead, as though it were a demise of the crown.

The next section merely gives effect to the first section. The king is no longer a royal personage and no longer requires any consent by parliament to his marriage. That is all there is about that. And the last section deals with the question of himself and his descendants, because England at one time had some difficulties about pretenders, and in order to obviate any difficulty of that kind the statute makes it perfectly clear that that question should not arise.

There is also the question as to the method by which Canada made known its views upon the matter. The Statute of Westminster provides that no act passed by the parliament at Westminster shall have effect in this dominion without the request and assent of the dominion. That merely means the executive of this country in the absence of any provision to the contrary. So far as the government of the day is concerned, it staked its life upon the action which it took, and under our system of constitutional government, with the administration commanding as it does a majority in the House of Commons, the question becomes nothing but a matter of recording the will of that majority upon the records of this house. The question which arose in South Africa and Australia and New Zealand is entirely different. Section 4 does not apply to those dominions except under certain conditions to which attention need not now be directed, namely, by their acceptance of them. South Africa did accept them, I think, in 1934, and so far as Australia and New Zealand and Newfoundland are concerned, they no longer have any application. The statute itself is clear upon that point. Section 10, subsection 3, states that the dominions to which this section applies are the commonwealths of Australia, New Zealand and Newfoundland, and the first part of the section declares that none of the following sections, that is, sections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, shall extend to a dominion to which this section applies as part of the law of that dominion unless adopted. The question whether parliament should antecedently express its opinion is one which I think cannot be successfully raised, having regard to the issue which had to be determined. When the statute was framed in the form in which it is it was done for the purpose of meeting an emergency which might arise, just as an emergency arose in this case. If this parliament should take an opposite view to that taken by the executive it would of course mean the resignation of the government and an application to the parliament at Westminster to enact a statute which would repeal the provision to which effect had been given by an executive which did not command the support of a majority of the house. I think that is all I can usefully say on the matter, although there may be more that could be said.

The question that arises as to the international situation, which naturally engages the attention of every thoughtful man, is certainly one which you would expect to be dealt with immediately after the reference to the change in the succession to the throne. That the international situation is an unhappy one goes without saying. I saw the other day, from a source which is usually accurate, a statement that the moneys expended for armaments and munitions in 1936, together with the commitments made for that year, which will be afterwards expended, amount to the almost incredible figure of three thousand million pounds. I had no means of checking the accuracy of the statement, but it appeared in a responsible journal as an estimate coming from a usually responsible source. That in itself indicates how serious the situation is. Happily we are not menaced by it as many countries are. Those who have travelled in Europe realize the difficulties there are in crossing boundaries, in connection with the enforcement of customs and other laws at frontiers, in connection with passports and so on. Perhaps those who live in Europe little appreciate what it means to live on this continent; sometimes they express the view that it is impossible for them to understand the conditions under which we live as compared with their own.

I for one, however, do not despair because there has been a breakdown in the instrument that was forged by the wit and wisdom of men, relatively, so few years ago, to preserve the peace of the world and, if possible, to prevent another world war. The League of Nations has failed. No one doubts that. Its failure has filled the hearts of many with great sorrow, but the fact that an institution set up by human hands fails is no reason why the wit and wisdom of men should not upon its ruins build a successful league of nations to effect and impose, by their own act, collective security. A few weeks ago in Sydney, Australia, addressing an organization there, I said that from our failure in the past we should now proceed to success in the future, and that nothing is a greater incentive to success than failure, properly understood.

I wonder sometimes if we do take time to look back to 1919 and 1920. I have little doubt that the Dominion of Canada would not have been a member of the League of Nations, that Great Britain would not have been a member of the League of Nations, had it not been that the league was largely promoted by the United States of America. We ought to face that fact. It was the President of the United States who asked Colonel House to prepare the first draft of the league covenant, and those of you who have looked through the last Life of General Smuts will see, in the appendix, the part that he took in the modification of the original draft.

That covenant, dealing with the League of Nations, as it was ultimately incorporated in the Treaty of Versailles, was so incorporated at the instance of the United States of America, and it must not be forgotten that when this great western republic became a party to the League of Nations it was with the greatest joy and satisfaction that the old countries, England and France, and the newer republics on the American continent, as well as those countries in various parts of the world that were not republics, such as Australia, New Zealand and Canada, viewed this as the first great world effort to obtain collective security. And it must not be forgotten that the first assembly of the League of Nations was called and opened by the president of the United States of America.

When the United States senate rejected the Treaty of Versailles, and with it the covenant, of course you had a new condition, and the league itself had to face a situation such as no new organization, the machinery of which had just been set in motion, ever had to face before. If it has failed it has failed gloriously with respect to many matters, because in the interim, unsupported, as I have said, by those who, more than anyone else, were responsible for giving it birth in the first instance, it managed to discharge such duties as it did discharge. Therefore I think there is no reason why on some reorganized plan the world might not still declare its determination that there should be peace amongst the democracies of Christendom, and we might still be able, by effecting collective security, to ensure the peaceful development of the nations of the world. I believe so. I have not yet become so great a pessimist as to believe that the league, which for a period of sixteen years, handicapped as it was from its very inception, has been able to do what it has done, may not now be able under the conditions that obtain throughout the world to forge an instrument for collective security that will enable men to devote their time, energies and incomes to the peaceful development of their countries. And, Mr. Speaker, I do still believe in a league of nations for that end. I never was one of those who warmly applauded the League of Nations after the United States defeated the peace treaties and the league covenants. I confess at once that to me it was a matter of the gravest concern, and I felt that it would be extremely doubtful whether the league could hope to function successfully. But England and France held on, with most of the other nations of the world. Germany came and went; Japan left; some of the nations of South America left, but the league still endeavoured to function, within a very limited area.

I believe that the committee now dealing with the matter, on which committee Canada is represented, with the support of Canadians and other members of the British commonwealth of nations, believing as they do in national security brought about through collective effort and cooperation, may be able to set up some instrument so that men will be devising not methods and means of destruction but rather methods and means looking to the peaceful development of their respective countries.

I am one of those who, out of office, rejoice in the prosperity of our country. I should say to my hon. friends from Essex West and Gloucester that the prosperity of Canada, like that of other nations of the world, is a prosperity which began in 1934 and which continued during that year. It improved in 1935 and greatly improved in 1936, but relatively the improvement in 1935 over that of 1934 was not substantially different from the improvement in 1936 over that of 1935. The statistical references indicate that Canada's position is one of the foremost, though not by any means the first, and that we have kept pace with the other nations of the world in the improvement that is everywhere apparent. Our trade has expanded. To the extent to which we have made it easier for other countries to sell goods in Canada, imports from abroad thus have been stimulated by governmental activity. To the extent to which other countries have made it possible for our goods to find markets there, the action of other governments has contributed to the end in question. But it is idle to say that the action of any government is responsible for the conditions that prevail. I rejoice that they do prevail. They prevail in New Zealand; they prevail in Australia; they prevail to an amazing extent in South Africa, far beyond the situation in this country. They extend to Great Britain, to a much greater extent than in Canada, largely because of the fabrication of munitions and armaments.

The fact that this is so and that there has been a general improvement in international trade as well as a general improvement in world conditions is a matter for satisfaction to me and those who sit on this side of the house as much as it is to those who sit on the other side, but I think they will find on analysis that the amount of improvement that can be made directly referable to any particular legislation is extremely limited. There will be ample opportunity on other occasions to discuss these matters in detail, so I will defer the discussion until then, but I think if my hon. friends will take the trouble to analyze the figures they will find my statement to be correct. I am not unmindful of the fact, for instance, that from 1921 until 1930, during the regime of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government, this country enjoyed a prosperity that was ever increasing during those years, and yet during that period of time 934,000 people left Canada for the United States of America. There is the record. That in itself is some indication of the undesirability of endeavouring to generalize too greatly upon premises which I think are faulty.

The general improvement of conditions, for instance, would not be attributable to the trade agreement between Russia and Canada. Since that trade agreement was made Russia has bought 5,000 bushels of wheat. The record is not compiled in so far as Germany is concerned, but the German treaty itself is a negation of all the rules that have prevailed with respect to international trade. We might as well be fair about it; it is an experiment. The experiment may succeed; I hope it does, but it is a barter experiment. It is an experiment by which it is declared—and I have heard the most eminent economists in public declare how unsound it is—that every dollar which is expended in buying German goods will be utilized in buying Canadian products, 35 per cent being used for the purpose of acquiring wheat. Now that is an ideal sort of view, but it involves the necessity on the part of Canadians first of all to buy a substantial quantity of goods from Germany. If they do not want them, they will not buy them. And if by buying them, Canadians displace their own goods, then you are put into the position referred to by the hon. member for Gloucester, of injuring a number of your own people. The treaty with Germany is obviously an experiment, as one can see by reading the documents, and provision is made for its termination. That provision is of such a nature as indicates that the treaty may not work satisfactorily, and if it does not, then within as short a time as possible it can be terminated by cancellation.

There was a trade treaty with Germany before the late government left office. There was one with Poland and there were treaties with other countries of the world. There was not one with the United States.

The statement that the hon. member for Essex West has made is one that will not bear analysis. Whisky for instance, constituted some $8,000,000 of the increase in exports. That is an extraordinary item. The large exports of newsprint that took place during the fall were attributable to the tremendous amount of printers' ink which was used on paper during a presidential campaign, and to the increased quantity of paper used in advertising consequent upon the distribution of moneys which increased the purchasing power of the people. The analysis of the matter might be carried on with great particularity, but I do not conceive this to be the moment to do so. I can only say again that it is well for hon. members to recall that the present position did not arise from zero in the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite. All they have done is to pursue the course that their predecessors followed with respect to many great matters of policy.

The revenues of this country, for instance, have increased some $48,000,000, I think, for the nine months ended December last. I read that in the paper the other day. But the largest item is from sales tax, which was increased 33⅓ per cent by this government last session, an increase of from six to eight per cent, and if that did not increase the revenue it woud be a sad reflection upon the intelligence of those who made that change. It was intended to create revenue, and it did, and this parliament is responsible for increasing the rate from six to eight per cent.

May I go a step further? You have an increased revenue from income tax amounting for the last nine months to something like $18,000,000. But on what income was it collected? Upon the income of 1935, not the income of 1936, and surely the hon. member for Essex West would not attribute the increased collection of income tax to what took place between October and December with respect to the incomes of the citizens of Canada. It is true that the calendar year and the fiscal year of many of our enterprises are not the same, but the fact is that the income tax collected, which is some $18,000,000 more than it was for the same period of the previous year, was collected on the income of individuals and corporations and companies prior to the year 1936, although in some instances there may be an overlapping into 1936 because the fiscal year and the calendar year are not the same.

Mr. DUNNING: There was a higher rate.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a substantially higher rate.

Mr. DUNNING: On corporations.

Mr. BENNETT: But the taxation on individuals was not at a higher rate. There was an increased rate, as the hon. gentleman has said, on corporations, and therefore it might be expected that there would be an increased revenue. That, I think, is fairly clearly understood.

But when I come to another matter in the speech from the throne I find it a little difficult quite to appreciate the attitude of the government. Speaking of the wheat stored I have only a few questions to propound at the moment because ample opportunity will be afforded later to deal with that matter. But I would ask: What power has the governor in council to change a statute unless it be given the power by the statute itself? The statute said that a fixed price should be provided for wheat in order that there should be two buyers, in order that it should be possible for the trade to function as such, and if the producers did not see fit to sell to the trade they could sell to the wheat board. If they sold to the board they had two chances. They could get payment of the fixed price immediately, and then they could get a certificate that would enable them to participate in the future increase in price obtained for the crop. But I read the record and I find that instead of the board simply fixing the price, which the board did, the governor in council imposed a condition for which it had no authority. What was the price fixed? Eighty-seven and one-half cents? No. They said: There is no duty upon the government to agree to any price. Of course, there was not, no duty to agree to "a" price, but to agree to some price there was a duty. Under the statute it is the duty of the crown to do so and so, and the crown is presumed to do that which under the statute it is empowered to do. Under the statute that we had there was a provision that the board should fix a price for grain with the approval of the governor in council. Section 8 (a) reads:

It shall be the duty of the board to fix a price to be paid to the producers for wheat delivered to the board as by this act provided, subject to the approval of the governor in council.

The board is further empowered by section 7:

(a) to receive and take delivery of wheat for marketing as offered by producers thereof.

And by paragraph (e) of the same section:

to pay to producers delivering wheat at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon such fixed price per bushel, according to grade or quality or place of delivery, as may be determined by the board with the approval of the governor in council; and to issue to such producers when such wheat is purchased certificates indicating the number of bushels purchased, the grade, quality and the price, which certificates shall entitle producers named therein to share in the equitable distribution of the surplus, if any, of the operations of the board during the crop year.

That is the law. Now what did the government do? The government took a very simple view. They simply said: We will provide that the board is not to enter the market until the price goes below 90 cents. Where did they get the authority for that?

The late government had to deal with the matter in 1935. The first price suggested by the then board was much higher than 87½ cents. The governor in council did not agree. Finally the price suggested at 87½ cents per bushel was the price approved by the governor in council. They proposed a much higher price, but the government of the day said: We cannot accept that price. The government of the day were bound to accept some price. They could not dodge their responsibilities by amending the law to say that the board would not go into the market until the price of wheat fell below 90 cents. The press statement made was as follows:

The effect of the decision which was reached Thursday at a meeting of the cabinet will be that the wheat board will not have any of this year's crop unless the price falls below 90 cents when it will step in and support the market by buying from the farmers all the wheat offered at 87½ cents. In the meantime farmers wishing to sell, will do so on the open market.

The statute passed by this parliament was not repealed although an attempt was made when we were in committee to have it provided that the statute should die after a certain period of time. We took the view then, as we are doing now, that as the statute was for the well-being of the western farmer and the whole class of wheat producers, it should only cease being in effect when repealed. It has not been repealed to this day. During the season just ended the farmer has had no opportunity to sell his wheat to the board unless the price dropped below 90 cents. That was not the purpose of the statute. The purpose was exactly the opposite; it was to afford the farmer an opportunity to sell. He was to be given a market to which he could go and take his chance upon the price rising. There were many farmers who believed that the market would rise and they would have liked to sell their crop to the board. They were denied that privilege unless the price of wheat dropped below 90 cents. If wheat went up they could not participate except by holding their wheat, whereas the statute provided that a second method should be provided in addition to the open market. The statute stated that the board should buy all the wheat offered at a fixed price and issue certificates which would enable the farmer to participate in a rise in the market.

Compare the price the board got for its wheat with the price of wheat to-day. This is not the time to go into this matter in detail, but I ask this question: Would any intelligent body of shareholders accept such a statement from their directors? Hon. members may ask: What were the conditions? Every man must have realized those conditions. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Euler) must have known what were the conditions. We find that the world's net exports of wheat, as supplied by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome and by our own bureau, amounted last year to only 514,283,000 bushels. The year before the total was 526,326,000 bushels odd; the year before, 542,699,000 bushels and the year before, 616,830,000 bushels. Last year I pointed out in this house that there was a partial failure of the crop in the Argentine. Let us look at the export figures for the Argentine. They are:

1928-29	221,627,000
1929-30	150,599,000
1930-31	124,107,000
1931-32	140,293,000
1932-33	132,044,000
1933-34	146,719,000
1935-36	69,419,000

Those figures must have been known to everyone interested. Notwithstanding these facts, the government of this country prevented the farmers from selling their crops to the board unless the price dropped below 90 cents. This was done at a time when the exports from the Argentine had dropped to 69,000,000 bushels. Do you mean to tell me, sir, that any reasonable body of shareholders would excuse a board of directors for actions such as that?

Then I turn to another item, that with reference to the United States of America. What were they doing in that country? In 1928-29, they sold 145,000,000 bushels; in 1929-30, 138,000,000 bushels; in 1930-31, 109,000,000 bushels and in 1933-34, 25,000,000 bushels. They had no wheat to sell last year or the year before. Other countries were in about the same position so far as exports were concerned. Notwithstanding these facts the government of this country deprived the farmers of western Canada of the right to sell their wheat to the board. What right had they to do that? That is question number one.

Show me their power. They have repealed the statute by order in council, but what would have happened if we had done that? All the books on public finance and all the safeguards that have been achieved since the time of Caesar would have been referred to in order to show that we were wrecking the British constitution. There you have it. I leave it to the government to explain why the market that was provided by statute was not made available to the farmers of western Canada. This statute was to enable them to get a minimum price and thereafter to share in the rising market which everyone knew was coming. There was a limitation of the quantities available for export from the producing countries in the world and yet our farmers were deprived of that market by order in council. I should like to know why.

It is somewhat gratifying to see the methods which have been indulged in by the government during recent months. Does the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) remember that we pointed out to him that he might have to have money? He had made no provision for that. Does the Prime Minister remember his references to distinguished economists and financiers who pointed out that there should be no distribution of moneys except by appropriation of parliament? Does he remember how the vials of wrath were poured out upon the heads of those who sat upon the treasury benches of that day because they had provided that with the will of parliament they could take from the consolidated fund for relief purposes such moneys as might be necessary? How has it been done by the Minister of Labour? How has it been done by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning)? I was not present last week, but I should like to know if there have been laid upon the table the orders in council which provided for the royal warrants that have been issued to deal with a situation which has arisen in this country. We told him that he would have to have similar authority, but no, perish the thought, the institutions of the country would be wrecked; there must be an appropriation! The government reappropriated all the moneys that had been provided for public works and buildings. The Minister of Labour came down and reamended his own statute in order to make it work. We still pointed out to him where he would end up. Now we have royal warrants for expenditures.

If they had stopped there it would not be so bad, but they did not. They have had recourse to very many other orders in council in order to achieve their ends. I name this too because it affects vitally a great principle. If the government of the day were sincere when they were in opposition during the long days and weeks they held up parliament and declared that this pernicious principle should not be embodied in a statute, why have they had recourse to the methods I have mentioned for the purpose of achieving the ends I have suggested? But it did not end there.

The speech from the throne states that they have made another trade agreement. In principle they have made one with Great Britain. If this story had been taken down on a dictagraph and transcribed it would make very nasty reading. The Prime Minister will perhaps recall that in the days long since passed he declared in this very city, when stating the platform of his party, that the British preferential tariff would be fifty per cent of the Dunning budget rates. The Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) looks up and recalls when he led the remnant of a third party in western Canada and clamoured loud and long and vigorously for a fifty per cent British preference. Have they got it? Is that the principle accepted? It is not very sound parliamentary practice to refer to a matter in the speech from the throne as being settled in principle when hon. gentlemen opposite are not able to give us any information with respect to its finality. But I apprehend that that time will not be far distant, and then we shall have an opportunity of testing in the light of known facts the professions made by the hon. gentleman when they were in opposition. Oh what a change, my countrymen, there will be!

[Mr. Bennett.]

There is one matter, however, Mr. Speaker, that I feel I would be derelict in my duty if I did not refer to—the advantageous effects of the trade agreement with the United States. There never was any difference of opinion, provided the benefits were not overborne by the disadvantages. I wonder if hon. gentlemen opposite can realize how different this country is from other parts of the British dominions. Our geographical position has imposed upon us certain invisible influences that cannot be weighed in their value in relation to the national life of this country; the wireless operations, the close contact of newspapers and—I repeat what I said last session—the influence of magazines. We endeavoured for two reasons to lessen the distribution in this country of magazines from the United States. I shall not do more than merely refer to those reasons. One was for the purpose of being fair to the Canadian producer of manufactured products, and the other was that we should develop a national spirit. I am one of those who, unfortunately perhaps, believed that Canadians had a mission to develop a very distinctive civilization on the northern half of this continent. I believed that we were the interpreters of great conceptions of citizenship, of high regard for what one might call the elementary rules of justice and of obedience, of discipline and of loyalty, and that the opportunity offered to us was unique. I pointed out at the last session, as I have done in previous sessions, that the effect of the legislation which was passed by this parliament giving effect to the United States trade agreement was to increase the distribution of American magazines, of the type to which I referred, in Canada about 100,000 more than it was at their high circulation in 1930. That has happened in six months. The agreement came into force on January 1, and between then and now—it is not a year—the last figures, according to the National Bureau of Circulation, placed the distribution in this country in the vicinity of a million and three quarters of these magazines per month, per fortnight, or weekly, as they may be issued. What is the effect upon the national life of this country? Let hon. members ask themselves. In Canada we have only 11,000,000 people, endeavouring to create a distinctive personality among the peoples of the world. I need not mention the unfairness of this distribution of American magazines to our industrial life, because it imposes at once upon the Canadian reader, when he looks at our price standards, the view that he is being unfairly treated by the people to whom he pays a higher price; and no one need be told, for everyone will understand who gives time and pause to think, that the very essence of mass production involves the cheapening of the products in the country where the mass production is carried on. That is the effect of the trade agreement with the United States.

I mentioned the British trade agreement. I have only one hope to express to the Minister of Finance and his Prime Minister; I hope that when he found the same prime minister, Mr. Baldwin, who attended at Ottawa, and the same chancellor of the exchequer, in the person of Mr. Chamberlain, he assured them once more in dealing with them that they were the "same old Tory conspirators." "Tory conspiracy" is what the Prime Minister called the conference when we dealt with the matter in 1932. I wonder if the same men have now ceased to be Tory conspirators. There seems to be some doubt as to what is meant by the words "Tory conspiracy." If you look up Hansard you will find that the Prime Minister of to-day denounced the Ottawa agreements as being the work of Tory conspirators. I merely remind him that the same gentlemen still hold office in the United Kingdom and I hope the Minister of Finance found his pathway easier by reminding them that they were Tory conspirators.

One word more, to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). It would be unfair to take up the time of this house now in a detailed discussion of matters that must be discussed very carefully as the days go by. One of the first questions I asked when I came back to this country was as to the number on relief, and I found it was approximately a million. I have it in the press, in a report made by a competent and thoroughly responsible official, that the number receiving relief is six to eight per cent more outside the drought area than it was a year ago, and when the drought area registered its maximum it made the figures approximately twelve per cent more than last year.

Mr. ROGERS: That is including the drought area.

Mr. BENNETT: I say, after including the drought area it will be twelve per cent, based on present figures, over last year. I am only taking the figures from this report.

The public memory is notoriously short, and Hansard has a habit of enduring. I ask the Minister of Labour to read in Hansard from 1930 to 1935 only the speeches of his own party, and then to tell this house and the country what explanation he can give as to the number of those receiving relief being a million. Of course we do not expect wonders to be worked in a single day, and the age of miracles, as some one has said, is past. But surely anyone reading these speeches had the right to expect, nay to demand, that there would be a great falling off in this number. O how they used to flaunt these figures! What sweet morsels they were under their tongues! They used to rejoice that this number had not been reduced. Well, Mr. Speaker, we shall all await with much interest the Minister of Labour's explanation.

Mr. ROGERS: I will give it.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, I have no doubt at all about that. But even he, with his profoundly mathematical and philosophic mind, will have some difficulty, I think, in demonstrating that two and two do not still make four. The figures are not of my making. I wish they were not what they are. But, reading the literature upon the subject as created in this parliament by those who now occupy the treasury benches, and comparing it with this record, is it any wonder that some of the hon. gentlemen's colleagues laugh quietly to themselves and think of the past as something they would forget.

Mr. HANSON: You must give them time.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought hon. gentlemen would ask for time. But when it was suggested by the late government that improvement would be gradual, we were told that time was made for slaves and that the only thing which was required was a change of government when this relief problem would at once vanish into thin air and the unemployed would be as dew before the morning sun. Well, I shall listen with interest to the explanation which the hon. gentleman has promised. I hope it will not be visionary, and I hope it will not consist of eulogies of men who work for nothing and devise plans that involve vast expenditures.

Where is this taxpayer about whom we heard so much in the last five years? Where is this forgotten man, the taxpayer? I remember so clearly the profound concern of the then leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister, for the overburdened taxpayer of this country. I remember his hopes for that forgotten man the consumer. Where is the consumers' league?

An hon. MEMBER: He is at the end of the row.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes. I remember all that, and now I shall listen indeed with gratitude and interest to the explanation of the Minister of Labour. I am sure it will do justice to his imagination if it is an explanation, but he must not do violence to facts.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, none of us does not feel a sense of great apprehension about the drought situation in western Canada. In August last I saw a farmer who told me that for five successive years he had had no crop. As to just what the effect upon our country of these succeeding droughts may be I shall not hazard an opinion, but I know that abroad there is apparently a conviction, at any rate there is a doubt as to whether that drought area, in parts, should be an agricultural country at all. That feeling is becoming very well marked in quarters where I wish it were not, and anything that can be done to bring about an amelioration of that condition will have the earnest support and assistance of those who sit to the left of Mr. Speaker.

I was interested in hearing the record of the government's giant efforts in the last year to solve the railway problem. I remember reading in a press notice that that super-superman, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), had been labouring incessantly, twenty-five hours out of every twenty-four, giving his undivided attention to every problem that affects the well-being of the state and that he had found a solution for many of these problems. Well, we anxiously await their disclosure to this interested house. I know this, that in the money centres of the world the railway problem is regarded as the one most serious in the life of this country, and it may be that our superman, working long over hours, has been able to find a solution. If so, he will have the gratitude of all well-thinking Canadians. But if he is going to bring about a solution by reducing the capital structure to a point that does not represent the money which the Canadian people have put into the enterprise, or if he is going to try to make people believe that $47,000,000 pays the obligations, as he did in his speech the other day, then he will be woefully mistaken, and his solution of the problem will leave the country cold. I can tell him that with great certainty.

Of course, in the selection of these boards to which reference is made, no consideration was given to the political affiliation or views of those who were appointed. I have it on the strength of one of these articles that the Minister of Transport himself is hardly conscious of his political views, and so desirous is he of being a just and upright judge in Israel that he finds it difficult from day to day to determine what his political views may be. Let us hope, however, that the appointments as made were made in a moment of absent-mindedness of that high mantle that had fallen upon his shoulders, and at a moment when he had ceased to be that delightful non-partisan judge that his eulogists would have us believe that he was.

Of course, we had to have something with reference to the bank. What has been done in dealing with the bank I leave it to the government's own supporters to say. But if anything was ever futile in this world it was to increase the capital of the bank by $5,000,000 and try to make it earn 4¼ per cent when the going interest rate on the bonds, in which investments are made so largely, was much less. I shall have something to say about reserve banks. The Reserve Bank of Australia has contributed $25,000,000 to the revenues of that country.

There is only one word more. We shall await the measures and see what they are, with respect to the questions of air service and the railway commission and its extended powers. I remind the government, however, that on more than one occasion efforts have been made to extend the powers of railway commissioners, and for some strange reason it has been found difficult to do so and to come within the provisions of the law. I looked in vain in the trans-Canada air service, for any allusion to those very laudable wishes of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). I had expected to read that he had provided adequate aircraft at least to protect the neutrality of Canada but I find, looking through the speech from the throne, that we are going to have a trans-Canada air service and are going to provide for that. There is, however, nothing for the protection of the neutrality of this country if there should be a war. Those hon. members who are familiar with the history of the world will remember that on one occasion, when the United States was a very young country, with a population scarcely that of Canada, France endeavoured to compel her to buy her neutrality; and those who remember those coins of the United States will recall the words, "Millions for defence, not one cent for tribute." That was the answer of a small and scattered population when an effort was made to induce them to buy the neutrality which they had declared. Sometimes I think, when I hear the observations of some of my friends, they little realize what the maintenance of neutrality means. We are not equipped to maintain neutrality, even that fine neutrality of mind of the Minister of Transport; we cannot have even anything such as that. But we are to have a trans-Canada airway, and doubtless at the appropriate time the Minister of National Defence will be able to make a supplementary statement indicating the extent to which this may be available for the protection of neutrality.

The last measure referred to is one of the most dangerous that can possibly be considered by this parliament. To introduce legislation that will compel people abroad who hold our securities payable in a certain manner to be satisfied with the tender of pieces of paper is a matter which calls for the most careful consideration. I am sure the Minister of Finance has no misunderstanding or misapprehension of the grave implications of such legislation, apart altogether from our capacity to enact it, when dealing with securities that are held outside the dominion. I can only await the legislation in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, during the last few months there has been increasing evidence of the attacks that are being made upon the democratic form of government. In a great many quarters democracy is being attacked as it never has been before. The contention is being urged that the condition that prevails in this house by which the government, with forty-six per cent of the votes cast at the election, should have so vast a number of supporters, is the negation of the sound principles of democratic government. I do not know whether that can be remedied by any means that we can use, but certainly in Australia compulsory voting has had a beneficial effect. I know the attacks on our democratic form of government are increasing. I know, if we persist in believing, with regard to the question of appointments, that a man has to be a defeated candidate to be eligible for office at any time, we shall have grave difficulty. I know there has never been a time since this dominion came into being in 1867 when there was greater reason for every hon. member of the house, and the government in particular, to realize that it is not a question of party as such that must be considered, but that if we are to maintain government of the people, by the people and for the people, what must be considered is the well-being of the people regardless of the effect it may have upon the political fortunes of those who for the moment are entrusted with power. I say that seriously. It is no good, after pandering to prejudices and appealing to passion, to hope that in the end you will do other than destroy the very democracy that we are endeavouring to sustain. And the expenditure of public moneys on a large scale, a very large scale, putting into the hands of the people money to the extent of millions of dollars, can in the long run have but one effect. You have only to read the history of France to appreciate and understand that.

As far as we are concerned any measures which the government may submit to this house for parliamentary sanction and approval, which have for their end the improvement and strengthening of democracy and the removal of the conditions to which the hon. member for Gloucester referred in that very thoughtful summary of conditions which he gave us—although I could point out to him that the use of the word "dole" is not quite appropriate with respect to conditions as they now exist in England—anything which will assist in the accomplishment of that end—and I speak for those, few in number but representing nearly as many voters as the great numbers of the government yonder—we will gladly and proudly support. As Canadians we are anxious to do our best to preserve the integrity of our country and to maintain our democratic institutions.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased indeed that my first word this afternoon should be one of welcome to my right hon. friend on his return to Canada and particularly to his place in this House of Commons from his journey around the world. I extend this welcome to him, if Your Honour will permit me so to do, on behalf of all hon. members in this house. We are glad to see that he has returned obviously much benefited in health, and equally obviously greatly benefited in spirits. I sincerely hope that the improvement which is so evident to-day in his outlook upon affairs generally will long continue. Personally I cannot imagine any more certain evidence of the country's progress in the past year than that my right hon. friend has been able to recognize it so completely in the short time since his return to Canada.

I wish also to thank my right hon. friend for the note of cooperation with which he began his remarks and with which he closed them. He said frequently when he was on this side of the house that the government needed the cooperation of the opposition on great public measures, and I thank him for keeping that thought in mind and offering to support us to the extent of his power on measures which merit general approval.

The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) referred to the fact that the coronation ceremonies, which come in the month of May, to be followed by an imperial conference, have contributed to the obligations of the administration, and will necessitate, if we are not to have a continuation of the present session in the summer or fall months, a degree of cooperative action on the part of all parties in the house. May I say that the government have in mind the desire of hon. members to conclude this session before the coronation ceremonies if possible, and we will endeavour to bring forward our measures, particularly those likely to be of most concern to hon. members, at as early a date in the session as possible. We will do everything we can to expedite the business of parliament, but I should like hon. members to understand that our desire to expedite the business of parliament must not be considered in any way as a willingness to give to the business of the country other than the fullest attention which necessity may require. If as I said we cannot get through with the work of the session in a satisfactory way by the end of April, parliament will adjourn, to meet later in the year after the coronation of King George VI and the imperial conference; not another session of parliament; but a continuation of the present session. I believe, however, that with the cooperation of all it should be possible to carry through the work of the present session satisfactorily and in time to enable us to prorogue before that historic event.

May I say to my right hon. friend that the government desire to extend to him an invitation to be a member of the delegation of this parliament which will attend the coronation ceremonies. I hope that the right hon. leader of the opposition may find it possible to accept this invitation and so honour parliament by becoming a member of the delegation which will represent Canada at His Majesty's coronation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend has spoken of the abdication of his former majesty King Edward VIII. He said that he felt that the matter was closed and should not be reopened. In those remarks my right hon. friend, I am happy to say, reechoed what I myself expressed in this house last week. However, I did give to parliament an assurance that I would make a statement at an early opportunity with reference to the abdication, and perhaps it might avoid further references during the course of this debate and later in the session were I to take advantage of this occasion, which is an appropriate one, seeing that the address refers to the abdication, to make the statement I have in mind.

With respect to the abdication of the former king, there are two issues which it is well to keep separate and distinct. The first issue has to do with the events which led up to the king's decision to abdicate, including the question of such advice, if any, as may have been tendered to His Majesty. The other issue is the constitutional and legal propriety of the course followed by the government of Canada to give effect to the king's decision and with respect to the matter of the succession.

As to the first of these issues, may I say at once that Mr. Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain, made a very full and very moving statement to the parliament at Westminster on December 10 with reference to the events, as known to himself more than to any other person, which occasioned the action taken by His former Majesty King Edward VIII. I hope it will not be necessary for me to do more than direct the attention of hon members of this house to the fact that no one in the British parliament, of any party in either house, questioned the absolute sincerity and integrity of Mr. Baldwin's utterances.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I, moreover, add that His former Majesty, on the first occasion that he had, as he himself said, of speaking on his own behalf without any constitutional restraint, stated in a broadcast which he made to the entire world, that he had always been treated with full consideration by the ministers of the crown and in particular by Mr. Baldwin, the prime minister, and that at no time had there been anything in the nature of a constitutional difference between him and them, or between him and parliament; that the decision he had made was entirely his and his alone. He emphasized that at no time had there been any conflict between himself and his ministers.

I think the matter might well be left at that point. I confess I would leave it there immediately were it not for the fact that some remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) may have given rise to some misunderstanding in the public mind or may have created some suspicion. I think his remarks, in so far as they might have that effect, should be replied to at this time. What I have further to say will be said largely with that object in view.

Let me make clear first of all that so far as the government of Canada is concerned—and I refer now to the statement of my hon. friend that there had been connivance between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain, or between myself and Mr. Baldwin with regard to the king's abdication—the first communication received by myself or the government from Mr. Baldwin came after Mr. Baldwin had had three conferences with His former Majesty. Mr. Baldwin has told of one of these conferences which came about at his own instance, in which he spoke to His Majesty as a counsellor and friend. He then referred to three other conferences which he had with the former king, each of which was at the request of His Majesty. At the first of these conferences the king had intimated to Mr. Baldwin that he intended to marry Mrs. Simpson; that he realized that she could not be queen, and that he was "prepared to go." I believe that was the expression used. Mr. Baldwin stated that naturally he was greatly surprised at any such thought in His Majesty's mind and so expressed himself, and said he would require time to think the matter over.

The next interview came when the king himself again sent for Mr. Baldwin. At that interview the king raised a new question, which was as to whether in Mr. Baldwin's opinion the parliament at Westminster would enact a law which would permit him to marry the lady to whom he had referred, she however not to have the position of queen but to live with him at Buckingham Palace as his wife, to take no part in affairs of state, he on his part and she also agreeing that as far as any issue of the marriage was concerned, such issue should be barred from succession to the throne. Again Mr. Baldwin expressed surprise at the matter concerning which his view had been asked. He stated that he would need time to consider the question and pointed out to His Majesty that in considering the question further it would be necessary for him to put the matter formally before the whole cabinet and communicate with the governments of the several dominions since the governments of the dominions were concerned equally with the government of Great Britain in anything which might affect the crown. His Majesty recognized this to be so, and Mr. Baldwin left His Majesty after the interview with the understanding that it was His Majesty's wish that the dominions would be communicated with.

As I have said, it was after these interviews that the first communication came from Mr. Baldwin to myself, from Mr. Baldwin as Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to myself as Prime Minister of Canada, with an intimation that a similar communication was being sent to the prime ministers of the different dominions of the British commonwealth. Mr. Baldwin asked in the communication he sent me whether I would inform him as to what I thought would be the opinion of the people of Canada with respect to the two matters to which I have referred, first the marriage of the king to Mrs. Simpson, she becoming queen, and, second, the marriage of the king to Mrs. Simpson, she not to become queen, but to be the king's wife as described. Mr. Baldwin said that he wished to have this information from the different dominions in order that their views might serve as a guide to him in giving further consideration to the matter.

I replied to Mr. Baldwin's communication, giving it as my view that the people of Canada would not approve of either arrangement.

Some hon. MEMBERS, hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Shortly after that communication had been sent, our government was formally advised that His Majesty the king was considering abdication. We were told that His Majesty had asked as to the British government's view with regard to the question of a morganatic marriage, or rather I should say had asked the Prime Minister what he believed, having had an opportunity to consult his colleagues, would be the view of the British government and of the British parliament with respect to the enactment of a morganatic marriage act. Mr. Baldwin replied that his inquiries had gone far enough to show that neither the governments of the dominions nor the United Kingdom government would take the responsibility of introducing any such measure. The king stated that he was not surprised that it was so, and apparently no further reference was made to the matter.

The point I wish to make clear here—and I am stating these matters as they came in correspondence to me; all have been publicly stated in Mr. Baldwin's remarks to the British house—is this, that no advice was tendered to the sovereign except in relation to this one question which I have mentioned, nor was advice sought in any other particular. An intimation was received from the Prime Minister of Great Britain to the effect that possibly the different dominions might wish of their own accord to tender advice to His Majesty. There had been reports in our newspapers, dispatches from the old country —and they were alluded to by my hon. friend the other day—to the effect that Canada was initiating or insisting upon action in this matter. Just why some people in the old country find it necessary continually to seek to have it appear that Canada is the country that is pressing for certain things, I am unable to understand.

When I read these cables, I had very much in mind what happened some months ago when we were told by a section of the press of the old country that it was Canada's proposal that there should be sanctions imposed against Italy of a character that theretofore had not been imposed, that Canada was insisting in these matters. I thought it advisable very promptly to remove any misconception of that kind with respect to the existing situation, and accordingly I issued the following statement to the press on December 4. I believe hon. members will agree that throughout this entire matter I have preserved in so far as it was possible, holding the position I do, as discreet a silence as could be observed, and when I broke it I did so only to prevent erroneous impressions gaining ground which it might be impossible for us later on to overtake. The following is the statement I issued to the press:

There is one thing I should like to say about many of the cabled communications which have appeared in our press. It is quite wrong to allege that in the existing situation any proceeding or course of action in Great Britain has been at the instance of or upon the insistence of the dominions, and of Canada in particular, as distinguished from the United Kingdom. I can, of course, speak with knowledge and authority only in so far as Canada is concerned, but I believe what I am saying will be found to be equally true of all the self-governing dominions.

There is and has been on the part of the Prime Minister and government of the United Kingdom full recognition of the fact that the several dominions are vitally interested in all that pertains to the crown. As a consequence, there is, and has been, consultation between the several governments. The initiative has necessarily been with the British government. It has been taken, however, with due regard to the collective concern and responsibility of the several governments of the British commonwealth.

I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that in replying to Mr. Baldwin's first communication I did so entirely on my own. In that particular my attitude was similar to that of Mr. Baldwin himself in relation to his colleagues. He intimated to the House of Commons at Westminster that having regard to the character of the conversations held and the critical situation involved he had thought it advisable to deal with the matter himself in the first instance before having it come into the arena of general discussion and into the light of publicity, the occasion for which he had hoped might never arise. However, when the matter once came before the British cabinet, and I was so advised by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, I immediately communicated to my colleagues the opinion that I had given to Mr. Baldwin. We considered at that moment if we should advise His Majesty on our own as was done by some of the other dominions. My colleagues shared in its entirety the view which I had expressed in my communication to the Prime Minister of Great Britain and authorized me in communicating further with the Prime Minister to say that he might convey to His Majesty the view which I had personally expressed as the view of the entire cabinet; that it expressed our united opinion of how the situation would be viewed by parliament and by the country.

The one question upon which we really had to express an opinion was whether or not we could as a government undertake the responsibility of introducing to this parliament a bill to make possible a morganatic marriage. We felt that no government in Canada would for one moment think of assuming that responsibility any more than in any of the other dominions of the British Empire or in the United Kingdom itself. Nor did we believe that if such a measure were introduced it would get the support even of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

May I say that we took one further step. When it became publicly known that the issue had narrowed down to the one point to which I have referred, where His Majesty had himself to choose between two loyalties and decide which of the two he would choose, we as advisers to His Majesty on behalf of the Canadian people felt that we should send a communication to him which would let him know, without any question, what in our opinion was the right thing for His Majesty to do. Accordingly, after conferences with my colleagues in the cabinet, on December 8, I called on His Excellency the Governor General, His Majesty's representative, and asked His Excellency if he would communicate to His Majesty an expression of opinion from the government of Canada in relation to the situation which His Majesty was considering. This opinion was communicated at once by His Excellency and was received by His Majesty before a final decision was made. What I asked His Excellency to communicate as a direct message to the king from his Canadian ministers by myself as Prime minister was as follows:

> My colleagues and I desire to have Your Majesty made aware of the deep sympathy we feel for you in the momentous decision which, at the present time, you are being called upon to make.
> There is no doubt in our minds that a recognition by Your Majesty of what as king is owing by you to the throne and to Your Majesty's subjects in all parts of the British commonwealth should, regardless of whatever the personal sacrifice may be, be permitted to outweigh all other considerations.

A formal acknowledgment of that particular communication was not received from His former Majesty, but hon. members will recall that in His Majesty's communication to his several governments advising them of his decision to renounce the throne, he expressed his appreciation of the appeals which had been made to him to take a different decision. He emphasized as well that the decision was entirely his own.

The former king made one further statement, and it is one which I think we should all have in mind. He said he hoped he might have the understanding of his peoples and he asked his peoples to believe that the decision he had taken was that which he believed was best for the stability of the throne and empire and the happiness of his peoples. I believe that His Majesty in those words spoke sincerely, and that in making the decision he did he took it, as he has said, from the standpoint of what, as he knew the situation himself, he believed would be most in the interests of the throne and of his peoples. That, however, is an individual opinion, and each must form his own opinion. May I add that I hope none of us will be too quick to judge any man's actions, and least of all the actions of one who has carried the burden which the former King Edward bore for so many years.

I do not want this matter to pass in this parliament any more than Mr. Baldwin wished it to pass in the British parliament without saying that so far as Canada is concerned the decision taken by His Majesty is one which the people of Canada received with a feeling of the deepest sadness. We shall always remember the impression formed of His former Majesty when he visited this country as Prince of Wales. We shall always remember the way in which he shouldered the duties of kingship during the short period of his reign, and above all we shall never forget the gracious manner in which he accepted the invitation of the war veterans of Canada to proceed to Europe to unveil the monument at Vimy in memory of those who had lost their lives in the Great war. It is of interest that this should have been the only official occasion in the reign of His former Majesty on which he visited the continent of Europe.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I have said about all that needs to be said with respect to the circumstances which led up to the king's abdication and this country's part in relation thereto. I have given parliament what I have given to-day in order that this house, the other house, and the country should know of Canada's part in the matter. I cannot think of anything in the correspondence which I have kept back which would be at all pertinent. I have tried to give everything of significance. I believe the statement I have made will clear the minds of the public of this country of any doubt, if there should happen to be any, with respect to the wisdom of the part which this government took in relation to what preceded the actual abdication of the king.

In connection with this whole matter there was necessarily a great deal of correspondence, as correspondence took place, not only with Great Britain but with the governments of the other dominions of the British commonwealth. When it became apparent that there was a possibility, then a probability, and, finally, a certainty of the king's abdication, it became necessary for all governments to consider very carefully what their action would be with respect to the enactment of a measure or measures to give effect to the instrument of abdication and with respect to questions which might arise pertaining to the succession.

May I point out two considerations which it seems to me are necessary to be kept in mind at all times by all the governments of the British commonwealth when dealing with questions which may affect the commonwealth as a whole. On the one hand, there is the importance of laying emphasis upon national autonomy and, on the other, the equal importance of laying emphasis upon imperial unity. These two must be regarded as inseparable if the British commonwealth is to hold together. There are times when it is necessary to emphasize strongly the position of our national autonomy; there are other times when it is equally desirable that the need of unity between all parts of the British Empire should be strongly stressed. If there ever was a time in British history when it was of importance that the unity of the British Empire should be demonstrated to all the other nations of the world, it was when a question affecting the crown itself was under consideration. Our government, in its every action, kept before it the importance of preserving everything that was essential to national autonomy, but equal emphasis was placed upon a unity which was never felt more strongly than at this particular period.

What this incident has served to reveal is that because of our British parliamentary institutions there is a bond as between the different parts of the commonwealth, the strength of which, perhaps, the world has never previously known. As a result of that bond, as a result of the understanding which one part of the empire has of matters which are of concern to other parts, it has been possible for the United Kingdom and all the dominions to take the concerted action which has met with general approval in the parliaments of all.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had been speaking on matters pertaining to the abdication of the former king. I pointed out that there were really two issues: one, the events which led up to the abdication, in connection with which it was important to consider what advice had been tendered to His former Majesty; the other issue being the propriety of the procedure from a legal and constitutional point of view adopted by this Canadian government at the time of the change of sovereigns. I had completed all that I wished to say on the first issue. I shall now have a word or two to say with regard to the second.

In considering the action of the government it is necessary for the house to understand just when it was that the government was advised of the final decision of the former king to abdicate. Perhaps hon. members will be interested in knowing that the first definite word we received came very late on the evening of Wednesday, December 9. At that time we were informed that on the following day His Majesty intended to execute an instrument of abdication renouncing the throne for himself and his successors and that legislation would immediately thereafter be introduced in the British house giving effect to the abdication and barring from succession to the throne any issue of King Edward. It was early on the morning of the day following, Thursday, December 10, that we received the actual word from Buckingham Palace that the king had executed an instrument of abdication and had communicated his intention to renounce the throne for himself and his descendants. That word was sent from Buckingham Palace to His Excellency the Governor General by cable. It was immediately communicated by His Excellency to his ministers. Subsequently that information was sent by mail also from His Majesty the king. Both the instrument of abdication and the communication were signed in His Majesty's own hand. Both of these documents were read to hon. members of the house on the day of the opening. Perhaps I should make it clear that His Majesty sent the original of the abdication and the original of his communication announcing his intention, not only to both houses of parliament at Westminster, but to each of the governments of the self-governing dominions. The documents which came to Canada are now in the safe custody of the privy council.

Immediately after receiving this authoritative information, the cabinet, which had been summoned to meet anticipating the receipt of both communications, considered an order in council which was submitted to His Excellency for approval and which set forth the reasons why the government thought it well to proceed in the manner it did, namely to request and to consent to the enactment by the British government of an act which came to be known as His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act, 1936.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the right hon. gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not wish to interrupt, but the right hon. gentleman said that he would allow questions if doubt arose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, certainly.

Mr. CAHAN: Did this dominion by any other instrument or document request and consent to the enactment of the act dealing with the abdication? Was that request and consent conveyed through any other instrument or document than the order in council to which the right hon. gentleman refers?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it was not. Naturally, in preparing for any possible emergency, every possibility was considered, and the British government were advised the day before that in the event of the king abdicating they might expect a communication along certain lines, lines which I am about to indicate. The only official communication which was sent is the one that I am about to read. I think it had better be placed in its entirety on Hansard because it sets forth all of the important stages and also the reasons which governed in the matter of the government's action.

Certified to be a true copy of a minute of the committee privy council approved by His Excellency the Governor General on 10th December, 1936.

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated 10th December, 1936, from the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs submitted, with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice, as follows:

1. That His Majesty the king through His Majesty's representative in Canada has, this tenth day of December, 1936, informed His Majesty's government in Canada that he has this day duly executed an instrument of abdication, a copy of which is hereunto annexed;

2. That His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom have communicated their intention to introduce immediately legislation in the parliament at Westminster in order to give effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication and to provide for the succession to the throne, the said legislation to be based upon a draft bill, a copy of which is hereunto annexed;

3. That the Statute of Westminster, 1931, provides in the second recital of the preamble as follows:

> And whereas, it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act, that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British commonwealth of nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom,

> (4) No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend or be deemed to extend to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

4. That in order to ensure that the requirements of the fourth section of the statute are satisfied, it is necessary to provide for the request and consent of Canada to the enactment of the proposed legislation; and, in order to insure compliance with the constitutional convention expressed in the second recital to the preamble hereinbefore set forth, it is necessary to make provision for securing the assent of the parliament of Canada thereto;

5. That, by proclamation dated the thirtieth day of November, 1936, the parliament of Canada has been summoned to meet on the 14th day of January, 1937;

6. That it is impossible so to expedite the assembling of the parliament of Canada as to enable appropriate parliamentary action to be taken prior to or contemporaneously with the enactment of the proposed legislation by the parliament at Westminster.

The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Minister of Justice, advise—

(a) That the enactment of legislation by the parliament of Westminster, following upon the voluntary abdication of His Majesty the king, providing for the validation thereof, the consequential demise of the crown, the succession of the heir presumptive and revision of the laws relating to the succession to the throne, and declaring that Canada has requested and consented to such enactment, be hereby approved;

(b) That the proposed legislation, in so far as it extends to Canada, shall conform as nearly as may be to the annexed draft bill;

(c) That the legislation, enacted as aforesaid, shall be submitted to the parliament of Canada, immediately after the opening of the next session, so as to enable the parliament of Canada to take appropriate action pursuant to the provisions of the statute of Westminster;

(d) That His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom shall be informed accordingly.

All of which is respectfully submitted for Your Excellency's approval.

E. J. Lemaire,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

There is attached to the order in council copy of the instrument of abdication and a copy of a bill to give effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication and for purposes connected therewith, which was entitled, an act to be cited as His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act, 1936.

As I have said, that order in council was passed on the morning of December 10, and immediately communicated by cable to His Majesty's government in Great Britain. The cable was received before the bill to which it refers was introduced in the British house. As I have already mentioned, His Majesty's instrument of abdication was executed on the morning of the tenth, and the bill was introduced and received first reading in the British house later on in the day. It passed its second and third readings on the day following and also passed the House of Lords and was assented to on the afternoon of December 11, at which time King George VI immediately succeeded to the throne.

What I wish to point out immediately is this. Our government had, as I have said, no definite assurance that His Majesty King Edward VIII had finally and definitely decided to renounce the throne for himself and his successors until word came from Buckingham Palace itself in the manner I have indicated. Had the government called parliament together before receiving that definite word, it would have been equivalent to an assumption on the part of the government that the king was going to abdicate. It was, I believe, the wish of all parties at that time that His Majesty should not abdicate. I have given to the house this afternoon the advice —if hon. members wish so to term it—which the Canadian government tendered His Majesty while he was considering his final decision, it expressed the hope that His Majesty would see his way to take the course which was obviously the one which the peoples of the commonwealth hoped he would take. So that until the very end, one might say, or within a day at the most of the abdication, it was not possible for the government to be certain that King Edward VIII had reached an irrevocable decision.

Might I direct attention also to this fact, that had parliament been specially summoned several days would necessarily have elapsed before parliament could have met. Parliament had already been summoned for regular session by His Excellency; we knew that parliament would be meeting on the fourteenth day of this month. It would have taken at least six or eight days for members to gather together here after any summons had been sent out prior to the abdication of the king. Every hon. member of the house has the right to expect that he will receive sufficient notice and have sufficient time to be in his place in the house when important business is being transacted. I believe this house would have censured the government had we not afforded an opportunity sufficient for all hon. members to be in their seats if it had been thought essential to call parliament together for any purpose whatsoever. I wish to make quite clear that it was in every way impossible to have had parliament here in time to pass any legislation prior to the time at which King Edward abdicated, or simultaneously, shall I say, with that of the British parliament—absolutely impossible.

I do submit, Mr. Speaker, that in matters of this kind the government must take the course which it believes will commend itself to members of parliament generally. I am sure that the hon. members of this house would not have welcomed any summons to be here within a limited number of days—any summons that had been sent out immediately prior to the abdication of the king—in order to consider what should be done with respect to the abdication and the accession of the new sovereign. In this matter the cabinet was governed by circumstances of time and space in reference to which all matters have to be considered, and in addition to that it was governed by the common sense of the situation. But may I point out that, quite apart from all that, as the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said this afternoon, there was nothing that this parliament could have done to have prevented the succession of King George VI to the throne once King Edward VIII had abdicated. The minute King Edward VIII abdicated there was a demise of the crown. And upon the demise of the crown the next in order of succession comes to the throne. The next in succession was the present King George VI.

A demise of the crown may take place in one of two ways, either by the death of the sovereign or by abdication. Heretofore in British history abdication has not been thought of except, as my right hon. friend mentioned this afternoon, in one case. Then it was an afterthought rather than a forethought, and it was not believed that anything of the kind would occur again. The demise of the crown occurred the moment King Edward abdicated—and there is nothing to prevent a king abdicating. No parliament can prevent a king abdicating; that is his right and his privilege, and when he abdicates there is a demise of the crown.

Mr. CAHAN: Must not the act of abdication be accepted by parliament?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; I am glad my hon. friend has asked that question.

Mr. CAHAN: The authorities I find seem to indicate it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg to differ with my hon. friend. My understanding is—and I have also looked up authorities—that there is nothing to prevent a king abdicating. If he desires to renounce the throne and abdicate there is nothing that parliament can do about it. Parliament may pass acts galore, but it cannot alter the fact that the king has left the throne, and another king has succeeded the moment he has abdicated.

Mr. BENNETT: I think my right hon. friend will reconsider that in a moment, for this reason: His Majesty King Edward VIII assented to the bill that accepted the abdication. If the throne became vacant by the mere abdication he was no longer king. After he had executed the instrument he was no longer king, but he was king until he assented to the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is quite true as regards what happened in this case, but if he had abdicated and gone away and had not waited to assent to the bill it could not have been suggested that he was still king.

Mr. CAHAN: There would have been an act declaring that he had abdicated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the fact of abdication rests with the king himself.

Mr. CAHAN: The initiation of it, yes; but if he had left England, then parliament would have had to deal with the situation and pass an act in order to create a demise of the crown. There is no demise on the mere signing of abdication.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The authorities I have consulted on the matter all indicate that demise may take place in one of two ways, either by the death of the sovereign or by abdication.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, when accepted by parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is quite sufficient for me, and that is all I wish to convey to my hon. friend—that the abdication of the sovereign was what in effect created the demise of the crown. The fact that parliament subsequently agreed to the abdication is quite a secondary consideration.

Mr. CAHAN: Oh, no; it is equally essential as the signing of the abdication.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, assuming it is equally essential, it could not have altered the situation one whit so far as this parliament is concerned, unless my hon. friend is going to suggest that we might have held up the abdication for a week by waiting until the members were summoned. Perhaps that is the point he has in mind.

Mr. CAHAN: I will make my point at the proper time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This government sought to meet the wishes of King Edward in his communication, namely, that effect might be given to the abdication as quickly as possible and that his brother might succeed to the throne without delay, so that there might be as little disturbance as possible politically throughout the country. And that was the wish which the British government sought to carry out. My hon. friend may be contending that we might have waited for a week or two and not assented to the abdication until parliament could have been brought together here.

Mr. CAHAN: I am suggesting no more than I stated, that the act of signing the document of abdication did not effect an abdication until that was accepted by parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, I will not contend further with my hon. friend on the point. It is a very minor one so far as the issue that I am discussing now is concerned, no matter which way it is decided. The real question at issue at the moment is whether the present government adopted a proper procedure in requesting and consenting to the act which was passed by the British parliament, rather than refusing to take that course and summoning our own parliament to deal with the matter by legislation. If we had adopted the latter course there would meanwhile have been uncertainty, confusion and doubt as to the legality of executive and judicial acts. We would have been inconveniencing every hon. member of this house; we would have been adopting what I think hon. members and the country generally would have regarded as an absurd course, losing altogether the spirit of the constitution and accepting some letter, straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. But more than that, I would like to know what hon. gentlemen opposite would have had to say about a government which found it necessary at that critical time in the history of the British commonwealth of nations to make Canada's apparent separation from the other members of the commonwealth so marked to all the world. That was the real alternative; that is what we would have been getting in the way of criticism to-day if we had waited for a week for Canada's parliament to assemble and act. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have been saying: When you had the Statute of Westminster before you, and when it contained a clause which gave you all the power needed to have a new sovereign become the King of Canada the moment he became King of the United Kingdom, and you did not take it, what possible explanation is there other than that you are seeking in some way separation from the rest of the empire? That is what we would have heard.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the right hon. gentleman suggest that in view of the relations which exist between Canada and the United Kingdom there could be a King of Canada apart from the King of the United Kingdom? If so, I wish most emphatically to dissent from that suggestion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am saying what hon. members opposite would have said.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, you might leave them to say it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some afternoon we might have a pleasant debate on that one question. But I certainly do not want to raise it at the moment.

Mr. CAHAN: But the right hon. gentleman might make his argument without suggesting what other people would say, until they say it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The trouble is my hon. friend interrupts so often that I almost forget the argument.

May I draw the attention of hon. members to the clause in the Statute of Westminster under which action was taken? I have already read it in the order in council, but I think hon. members ought to observe how clear and emphatic it is. After what the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has already pointed out, it should hardly be necessary for me to repeat it. But it may serve the purpose of helping to remove doubt if I remind the house that he and I are agreed on the propriety of the course pursued under this section. I shall read to the house the clause as it appears in the act:

4. No act of the parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

Hon. members will notice that the language used is, not that the government has consented, or parliament has consented, but that that dominion has requested and consented to the enactment thereof. I am reading from a collection of British dominion papers in The World's Classics edited with introduction and notes by Arthur Berriedale Keith, he being an outstanding authority on Constitutional matters. I read from this particular document because, opposite the word "dominion" there is an asterisk which directs attention to a footnote, and the note is as follows:

The necessity of parliamentary requests was negated by dominion representatives. See parliamentary debates 260, page 279.

The fact is that at the time this particular statute was being considered at Westminster it was moved in amendment that instead of the word "dominion" there should be substituted the word "parliament." But the mover of that amendment was told by the minister in charge of the bill that at the wish of the dominions themselves the word "parliament" should not be inserted, and that the word "dominion" should be left as it was, in order, as the right hon. leader of the opposition has pointed out this afternoon, that in the event of some emergency necessitating action by the government rather than parliament it would be possible for the government to act.

Now let me quote from the debate in the United Kingdom parliament, Parliamentary Debates, vol. 260, page 279:

[Mr. Cahan.]

(Parliament of the United Kingdom not to legislate for dominion except by consent.)

Sir J. Withers: I beg to move, in page 3, line 8, after the second word "that," to insert the words "the parliament of."

If my amendment is accepted the clause will read:

"No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that the parliament of that dominion has requested and consented to the enactment thereof."

This amendment, to a certain extent, is a drafting amendment. The parliament of each dominion is always referred to as the authority for testing the opinion of that particular dominion, and, therefore, to make the clause read properly, the words I have suggested ought to be inserted.

Mr. J. H. Thomas: —

Mr. Thomas was secretary for the dominions at that time.

—If I had only to consult my own personal wishes I should be quite willing to accept this amendment, but the clause was drafted in its present form at the request of the dominions themselves. The government were indifferent on this point, but the real answer is that as far as the government was concerned we did not care which method was adopted, but what is now proposed was put in at the request of the dominions.

Amendment negatived.

I think perhaps my right hon. friend may have been present at conferences where the matter was discussed, and among others may have given reasons why in his opinion it was better to allow the word "dominion" to stand rather than insert the word "government" or "parliament."

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To meet possible emergencies. But may I draw the attention of the house to a further reason, which appears in the statute itself, for believing that it was not the intention by the use of the word "dominion" to imply parliament, but rather to leave it optional with the government. That reason appears from subsection 3, clause 9, which relates to Australia. It reads as follows:

In the application of this act to the Commonwealth of Australia the request and consent referred to in section 4 shall mean the request and consent of the parliament and government of the commonwealth.

Now if by "dominion" had been meant the parliament, the Australians would not have asked to have placed in the statute the section which I have just read, which says that notwithstanding what is said in section 4 with respect to any dominion, the request and consent of the parliament must be required, as well as that of the government of the commonwealth.

Mr. BENNETT: That was done at the instance of Sir James Latham, now the chief justice, then the attorney general. We discussed it the other evening.

Mr. CAHAN: And Australia has never accepted section 4?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; Australia has not accepted section 4. I shall not go into the action of the other dominions; if it is desired that can be discussed when we come to take up the bill to which a first reading has already been given. But I think what I have said will make it perfectly clear that the government was acting entirely within the provisions of the statute when by order in council it communicated its request and consent, and secured the insertion of "the request and consent of" Canada in the preamble of the abdication bill, thereby making the provisions of that act applicable also to our dominion when the statute was enacted.

That, I think concludes about all I need to say on the question of the propriety of the procedure. However, I should like to add that I think some word of appreciation should be expressed in this parliament of the service which was rendered to Canada at the time, and to all other parts of the British commonwealth of nations, as well as to the United Kingdom, by the Prime Minister at Westminster, the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin. I do not think it is possible to speak in too high praise of the sympathetic and sagacious manner in which Mr. Baldwin dealt throughout with one of the most difficult situations with which any prime minister could possibly be faced, and his action, being of the character it was, has placed the entire commonwealth under deep obligation to him.

I should like also to say a word of appreciation of the services which were rendered to our government at the time of this crisis, so called, by the dominion's office in London and by Sir Frances Floud, the high commissioner of the United Kingdom in Ottawa and the members of his staff. Most of the communications from the Prime Minister of Great Britain came to our government from the Dominion's office and nearly all communications from the governments of other self-governing dominions of the commonwealth came through the dominion's office. All reached us through the high commissioner for the United Kingdom resident in Ottawa. Throughout the entire period covered by the correspondence the high commissioner's staff was on duty night and day. I cannot imagine work being more promptly and efficiently performed in every detail than was the case with the work as carried out in this matter by the Dominions office in London and by the high commissioner and the members of his staff in Ottawa.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come back to other subjects mentioned in the address. May I immediately extend my very hearty congratulations, as the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has already done, to the mover and the seconder of the address. This was not a maiden speech for the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. McLarty); we have heard him in this parliament before. Those of us who have had that privilege expected that we would receive from him this afternoon an address of high merit in the manner of its delivery, its matter, its composition and in other particulars. In that we have not been disappointed, but rather, may I say, greatly delighted. A day or two ago I mentioned to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) and to the house something of the loss we felt this house had suffered in the passing of his distinguished father. After having heard the hon. member for Gloucester this afternoon. I feel sure all will congratulate him on what he has brought to the house in the way of debating ability, and other talents.

In reviewing the speech from the throne this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. leader of the opposition, seeking to account for the economic recovery which is so noticeable even to him, undertook to say that he thought it was due in large part to the government pursuing the course of its predecessors. That was the most amazing statement I have ever heard, even from my right hon. friend. Pursuing the course of its predecessors? What was the course of its predecessors, for example, with respect to tariffs in the matter of trade? My right hon. friend went on the theory that the higher tariffs were raised the more trade would increase. He believed that if you had embargoes you would help along good will between nations and assist in the development of international trade; at least that is what I assume from his actions.

The present administration, when it came into office, instead of seeking to pursue the policies of my right hon. friend began to reverse them as rapidly as possible. When, on coming into office, we were confronted with a cessation of trade with Japan because of some industrial or commercial war with the Japanese upon which my right hon. friend had entered, we very soon found a way to reach an agreement which did away with the cutting off of trade between Japan and Canada and brought about a rapid and extremely valuable increase of trade which has meant much to thousands of men who were unemployed in British Columbia, and which has aided employment in other parts of Canada as well. Then instead of pursuing my right hon. friend's policies and placing embargoes against other countries, we succeeded in having the embargo against Russia removed, thereby making clear our desire to further friendly relations with every other country in the world, Russia being the only country against which we had found this extreme form of discrimination.

What about pursuing my right hon. friend's course with respect to reciprocity? For three years in this country my right hon. friend told us that reciprocity with the United States was a good thing, that it ought to come about and that it would come about, but it never came about under any of his policies. It would not have come about yet if my right hon. friend had been returned to office. We, however, immediately took up the question of effecting a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States, and we brought into existence a trade which has been of great mutual benefit to both the United States and Canada. Just in passing may I say a word as to the effect to that agreement in one particular only, namely, the items in the United States tariff that were reduced under the United States-Canada agreement. In the first eleven months of 1935 the exports from Canada to the United States amounted to $32,698,966. Last year in the corresponding period they amounted to $53,086,653, or an increase of 62·3 per cent. That was only with respect to those commodities which entered the United States under a lower rate of duty, as a result of the agreement.

What about wheat? My right hon. friend's policy with respect to wheat was to hold wheat and not sell it. As a result this country was getting such a quantity of wheat in storage that the surplus was creating a problem of itself. This government entered upon a policy of selling wheat, and as a result of that policy a great burden of contractual obligation has been lifted off the shoulders of the nation and the farmers of western Canada have profited immensely in ways they previously had but little reason to expect.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

During recess I took time to make a note or two on the difference between the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite and ourselves in respect of trade. We on this side of the house believe that recovery is bound up with the restoration of international trade. Our policies have been based upon this conviction and have sought to secure, on the basis of reciprocity, the reduction of tariffs and the removal of restrictions which have choked and encumbered our trade with the world. The trade agreement with the United States of America, the ending of the tariff war with Japan, the simultaneous lifting of the embargoes which had brought trade with the U.S.S.R. to a standstill and the negotiation of additional trade agreements, of which some will be ready for submission to this house very shortly, have, each in some degree, helped to assure a wider market for Canadian products. I should mention also the agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom, which has been concluded in principle and which will be shortly signed and presented to parliament at this session. We believe that this agreement also will serve further to increase the trade between Great Britain and Canada.

Not less important than the visible and conspicuous reductions in the rates of duty applicable to imported goods, which have been consolidated in trade agreements, has been the elimination of the arbitrary and often invisible interference of governmental agencies in the normal course of trade. We have cancelled scores of arbitrary valuations, limited the scope of the application of dumping duty to the protection of legitimate and substantial domestic interests, and set up machinery for the impartial, judicial review of departmental decisions in these matters. The steps that we have taken do more than establish the direction of our course and the character of our goal; they mark ground gained.

At this stage we cannot submit more than an interim report—work in progress and ahead of us is more important than the work yet accomplished. Nevertheless, in insisting on the vital necessity for Canada of attaining our final objectives we must not underestimate the record of positive achievement during the past fifteen months to which I have briefly referred. In that period, Canada can invite comparison with any other country in the world in the number and magnitude of tariff reductions. Our contribution to the collective responsibility of the nations for restoring freedom of world trade is being fully and honourably met. We are doing our part and, in collaboration with the United Kingdom and the United States and other like-minded peoples, we hope that we can continue the efforts so auspiciously begun.

I have referred freely to the notes which I have because of the importance of the statement which I have just made in what I believe is its international bearings. At this time of all times in the history of the world some governments should lead in elimination of those restrictions which have been making for economic nationalism in the past, and, through economic nationalism, for war. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if to-day the countries of the world are threatened as they have been for many months past, and indeed for a year or two past, with grave international strife, it is due more to the tariff walls which have been put up as between different nations and the restrictions imposed upon trade as between different countries than to any other single cause. We who are members of the Liberal party of Canada, since we came into office, have done our utmost, having due regard for the position of the country, the needs of industry and other like considerations, by the lowering of tariffs and the removal of other restrictions to promote trade and to show to the nations of the world with no exception whatever our desire and our willingness to further international trade and, with it, international good will and international peace.

My right hon. friend has also referred this afternoon to the government's action with respect to the sale of wheat, and he has asked by what authority we took the step we did. May I say to him that before taking action in the matter we conferred with the chairman of the wheat board, and we also took counsel with the law officers of the crown, and the law officers of the crown assured us that in taking the step we eventually did we would be entirely within the law which governs in this matter. I am not going to enter into a legal argument with my right hon. friend at this moment, but I am giving him the facts with respect to the government's action as taken at the time it was.

The government carried out its statutory obligation, which was to approve or disapprove the recommendation of the board with respect to fixing a price. The duty of the board was to fix a price, and the government's to give such approval as it saw fit. It was quite within the province of the government to attach a provision if it so desired. The machinery of the act has been preserved and is ready to function in the event of emergency conditions returning. The main purpose of the act, if I mistake not, was to help solve the existing wheat problem.

Now what are the facts, for after all the merit of any course of action is best judged by the results. During my right hon. friend's term of office it was found necessary to fix a minimum price of 87½ cents for wheat. Since the present administration took the action to which my right hon. friend now takes exception, wheat has never dropped below 94 cents, and it has gone up as high as 128 cents. I think the farmers of this country will view the actions of the respective administrations by the prices which they have been able to get for their grain as being perhaps the most effective of all indices.

Mr. BENNETT: But they did not get it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend also took exception to governor general's warrants having been issued in connection with drought relief purposes, and asked how it was possible that this administration, which had taken such exception to steps of the kind in the past, could have itself entered upon a course of governor general's warrants. May I say to my right hon. friend that the course taken by the administration was taken in accordance with the statute which governs governor general's warrants and is in accordance with the course which, when I was sitting where he is sitting to-day, I urged upon him as the proper course to take as opposed to proceeding under blank cheque legislation. I told him repeatedly that as against payments by blank cheque authority, of which there was no proper control by parliament, this house would prefer, where an emergency existed, if appropriations were inadequate to have the government resort to governor general's warrants, notification to be given to parliament immediately after it assembled as to the use to which the warrants had been put. Let me read the section of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, which deals with the use of governor general's warrants. It is chapter 27 of the Revised Statutes, 1931, section 25 (1):

> If, when parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair or renewal thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure, not foreseen or provided for by parliament, is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then upon the report of the minister that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the governor in council may order a special warrant to be prepared, to be signed by the governor general for the issue of the amount estimated to be required, which shall be placed by the minister to a special account, against which cheques may issue from time to time, in the usual form, as they are required.

If ever there was an occasion where the necessity was urgent, and where it had been impossible to foresee the emergency, it was the one alluded to by my right hon. friend. May I quote to him what I urged upon him repeatedly with respect to the use of governor general's warrants? I quote from the Hansard of 1933, March 3, page 2679. Speaking of the use of governor general's warrants to meet emergency relief purposes, I said:

> In dealing with questions of great emergency especially where human life is at stake, this House of Commons of Canada has never taken exception to a ministry taking the one course which it can constitutionally take in cases where an appropriation has not been made or is inadequate, of asking for a governor general's warrant to meet a particularly emergent situation until parliament can be brought together. I made it very clear at the beginning of the special session in 1930, that, if the ministry found difficulty in estimating what would be required for the purpose of meeting some very critical situation in the matter of relief, and, if it should be necessary, before parliament could be brought together, that a certain expenditure should be made by governor general's warrants on account of the urgency of the human need involved, those of us who sit on this side of the house would take no exception to that particular course, provided that, in the first instance, parliament had been given the control it should have.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have effectively answered my right hon. friend as to the use of governor general's warrants in the case to which he has referred.

In the course of his remarks the leader of the opposition referred to the League of Nations, and with what my right hon. friend said in that connection, as indeed with much else of what he said to-day, I am in entire accord. I agree with my right hon. friend when he says that Canada would not have entered the League of Nations had she not believed that the league was likely to be universal in its membership, and in particular had she not believed that the United States would also be a member of the league. I shall not at the moment attempt to discuss League of Nations' matters. I may say that at an early stage of the session opportunity will be afforded for the discussion of international affairs when we are taking up the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. However, I should like to reiterate in further part what the right hon. leader of the opposition has said. Because there has been a failure on the part of the league with respect to some matters for which it was formed, that is no reason why every effort should not be made by the different countries to remedy what defects there may be in the constitution of the league and to change the application of the covenant in such ways as may be necessary to bring about the universality of membership upon which the league was originally intended to be based and without which it is very doubtful if it can be made the success which the nations hoped it would be.

I do not know that there is anything further that need be said in reply to my right hon. friend, except perhaps a word on the subject of relief. It is quite true that unfortunately the numbers on relief are not diminishing as rapidly as they should. In all countries it has been found that the numbers on relief lag considerably; that they do not show the improvement which it might be expected they would show due to a betterment of conditions as discoverable in increased employment or lessening of unemployment. I think in this country we may take considerable satisfaction out of the fact that the numbers of unemployed are considerably less than they have been and that the numbers employed are greater than for many years. This being so and with recovery taking the strides it is at the present time, it is reasonable to expect that the numbers on relief will rapidly diminish.

The numbers on relief have become what they are largely because of the length of time for which many people held out before taking relief. May I say to my right hon. friend that if at the beginning of his administration he had appointed a commission to take charge of the whole question of relief instead of seeking to have the matter taken care of by a single minister of the crown, with the assistance of his colleagues, I believe that the whole unemployment problem would be vastly different from what it is at the present time. May I say to him further that if under the guise of assistance to the unemployed he had not spent money recklessly right and left, as he did, for all kinds of purposes we would not to-day have the problem of vast expenditures to deal with which we have. I might add that time is required to offset the ill-effects of wrong policies, and to give right policies a chance to disclose results.

The truth of the matter is that for some years past a great many people have been kept employed not in private enterprise, or in ways which relate themselves to the general business and industry of the country but by public money spent by the government for all kinds of purposes whether profitable or not. When wasteful expenditures are no longer being made, naturally the number of those on relief who have profited by them come to be somewhat larger than they otherwise would be. We have, however, every reason to hope that under the direction of the national employment commission, which has been giving its expert study and guidance to this question, combined with the measures which have been introduced already and which will be introduced later on by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), this most serious problem with which the country has been faced for so many years will rapidly disappear.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to express to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) our great satisfaction at seeing him back in the house. I should like to express also our appreciation of the fine addresses of the mover (Mr. McLarty) and the seconder (Mr. Veniot) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I should like to commend the composers of the speech from the throne. There are in it two things that appeal particularly to us. First, there is the provision for the payment of pensions to the blind. That is highly commendable and very much to the credit of the administration. Second, one passage in the speech reads:

> A measure will also be submitted with respect to the discharge, in any coin or currency which is legal tender, of debt payments at present required to be made in gold or gold coin.

The leader of the opposition has pointed out a possible danger in that passage, but it seems to me that it is a step in the right direction. I feel encouraged because of it.

Without the desire to criticize in any way, I should like to take a little time in discussing the question of unemployment and relief. This problem has been brought out clearly by all the speakers who have preceded me. It is a grave problem, but nobody seems to know just exactly what is the cause and nobody seems to be able to give a cure. It seems to me that instead of bandying recriminations back and forth across the floor of the house, we should all get together as a group of earnest and interested members of parliament to see if by pooling our wisdom knowledge and ideas we cannot arrive at a solution of this problem.

I repeat that I am not criticizing the government as I think they have done exceedingly well, all things being considered. Yet I believe it would prove interesting to hon. members if some excerpts from a report which was made recently were brought to their attention. I have before me a pamphlet entitled The Relief Outlook in Canada, Winter 1936-37, issued by the Canadian Welfare Council on December 28, 1936. This report contains certain passages which certainly are not very comforting reading. For example, at the bottom of page four, I find these words:

> As it is, quite apart from drought relief, the loads look as though they would stand (as at the first of December) at a figure representing six per cent to eight per cent increase over comparable 1935 totals.

I assume that this is an official statement of the relief situation in Canada. Again, on page five, we find these words:

> With the business index in Canada showing an improvement of more than fifty per cent from 1933; and with employment up about thirty per cent, there can be only grave realization that we are not breaking the line of national relief totals when these show only about eighteen per cent to twenty per cent reduction over those at the corresponding period in the depth of the depression.

I believe that there is a cause for this relief situation which has not been touched upon so far. There are plenty of people in this house, and plenty of people in this country, who are inclined to scoff at those who undertake to point out that there has been passing over the world during the last decade or so, probably during the last twenty-five years, a great change which has developed largely because of the coming in of the machine and a consequent actual decrease in the amount of wages and salaries and dividends which are going into the hands of the consumers. The consequence is that there actually is being produced among the people, though not among the rich men, of course, or among the bankers, an actual shortage of purchasing power, with the result that it is becoming increasingly difficult to put people to work at profitable labour. This condition is destined apparently to increase in its severity and to bring about more and more unsatisfactory conditions requiring more and more artificial treatment until some fundamental change is made in the way of dealing with social problems in the modern world. Knowing full well that there are plenty of people prepared to criticize, yet I humbly and earnestly submit for the consideration of this house that here is a problem which must be met and solved and which will not be solved by anything which has thus far been presented as a solution of the difficulty.

To go on with some other facts concerning the relief situation: I believe it would be interesting to the members of the house to have two or three more excerpts from this fine summary showing the condition in the various provinces. I notice a tendency to think that the western provinces are the only ones which are suffering. For reasons which I shall take occasion to bring out as we go on, there is more suffering in the three prairie provinces; the reasons are good and sufficient ones though they are not commonly known.

I turn now to page 2 and read an excerpt dealing with the situation in British Columbia, the first of the provinces referred to:

But the spring and summer reductions in relief totals, though continuing into the autumn, have not shown any drop for the whole province fully commensurate with its undoubted recovery, and October and early November returns indicate an upward movement again, which will probably mean that the winter load will not be very far below 1934-35.

I come to a passage dealing with Quebec, on the same page:

The whole province of Quebec seems to have experienced a fairly consistent increase in relief recipients, possibly because of special relief works projects this summer which stimulated a demand for employment and upon the termination of which there was a fairly automatic movement to seek relief. The city of Montreal, where a heavy relief works program is in process, is nevertheless experiencing a recent upward movement on to relief, especially marked in the case of single men, many of whom are transients. The city of Quebec is still showing the effects of the much lighter cargoes going through its ports, while there seems to have been also some slight increase in industrial workers seeking relief.

There is a tendency among a good many people to think that people who are not at work are people who do not want work. The whole tenor of that passage I have read regarding Quebec would seem to give an entirely different impression.

I turn now to Nova Scotia, which is dealt with on page 3, and read these words:

Relief is still comparable with conditions in part of 1934, however, for the province as a whole.

Now, New Brunswick:

Direct relief need has not terminated with the cessation of direct relief, but remains comparable in these larger communities at least to the 1934 load.

I view with some concern those words which I read first:

Direct relief need has not terminated with the cessation of direct relief.

That need, I fear, we are going to find out, with great resultant suffering in this dominion if we are not very careful in the matter of handling relief.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

We go on down the page and come to this passage:

The movement of our wheat to foreign markets has benefited many communities through the stimulation of transportation and shipping, but it is well not to build too much on this, since short crops at home and abroad rather than recapture of the foreign market explain the situation.

I do not desire to minimize in any way the credit which the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has taken for this sale of wheat. I come from a wheat producing country. I will not say just what we out there think about some of these measures regarding wheat; at least I will not say it at the present time. While the administration is entitled to all the credit which is due them, and I freely grant that credit, I warn all the members of this house that we must not close our eyes and fancy that things are getting better faster than they are, and perhaps overlook serious defects in the situation which we ought rather to meet bravely and courageously and intelligently.

I turn to page 4 and read these words:

Much of this activity—

Referring to mining.

—is soundly founded but it is well to remember that fundamentally the situation is not changed to the degree that present activity would suggest. Heavy rearmament is affecting the demand, and different currency policies are making profitable the development of low grade ore beds. It may not be well to place too great reliance on programs in which some elements may not be permanent.

We are seeking a way out of the situation in which we find ourselves. We must make allowances for such temporary conditions as the rearmament program throughout the world, and for such things as crop failures, as was so well pointed out this afternoon by the right hon. leader of the opposition. While such things have temporarily relieved the situation, it is, I believe, our duty to Canada as members of this parliament not to go too far in comforting ourselves on this account. We must be looking to what will happen when these temporary conditions, which are to-day's palliatives, shall have passed from us, and we should be laying plans for coping with the situation which at that time will arise.

I go down a little further on page 4 and read this regarding Winnipeg:

Winnipeg, because of the transfer of heads of families from direct relief to relief works, has not moved sharply upward as might otherwise have been anticipated.

This casts a certain amount of cold water, does it not, upon the enthusiasm we might develop from looking at Winnipeg.

Turning to page 5, I find some other facts thoroughly worthy of the attention of the house:

Many firms all across Canada have had employees listed as employed on short time; others have had large numbers on supplementary lists. These, most of them,—how one does not know—have kept off relief lists. The employment statistics show their return to work but this does not affect relief totals.

There are a number of other things like that which we should be watching very carefully. Many people of my acquaintance, rather than go on relief, are suffering to a degree which is absolutely shameful for people to suffer in this dominion. They are depriving themselves in ways which are not in the best interests of this country. If there is any way in which such conditions can be avoided, it is unquestionably our duty to find it.

Again, I note this statement:

Many plants have put in labour saving devices as part of a depression overhaul; for instance, the introduction of the dial phone and of electric refrigeration have moved apace in recent years. These throw more people out of employment as others move in from relief lists.

I find another passage which I believe is of great importance:

The normal balance between new workers and the retirement of old workers is all "out of kilter" because with many of the latter who have been on part time, laid off, or lost their jobs, savings have gone and they must work years longer for maintenance alone.

In my opinion a very wise and discerning remark was made a moment ago when it was pointed out that a great many people who have struggled and deprived themselves, living on the slender resources which they had saved up during years of toil, thus being enabled to keep off relief, now find that those resources are exhausted and they must consequently go on relief. Unfortunately they are going on relief exactly at the time when people are becoming impatient of relief and are more and more offensive to those seeking it, who really after all have been honourable in refraining from taking relief for some considerable time and therefore deserve much more considerate attention than they are receiving.

There are a good many other points in this review which I think every hon. member should read and seriously consider. I shall not read them all, because I do not like to burden the house, but there is a passage at the bottom of page 7 which I should like to draw to the attention of the house before closing this part of my remarks. It reads:

Also, as costs mount and the relief loads do not diminish in an obviously improved economic situation, there is a growing impatience everywhere, and an enlarging lack of sympathy with the unemployed because of the general impression that many will not seek or take work. This is true of some proportion of those whom careless, mass handling of the problem has encouraged in dependency. It is not true of the greater number of formerly self-supporting workers who ask only the opportunity of employment to demonstrate their willingness to take it.

Perhaps that is sufficient on this aspect of the situation. It surely gives us a gloomy picture and one that there is not much reason to gloat over. I regret this condition as deeply as any other hon. member, and all I wish to do is to unite with all others in an earnest endeavour to find out what the trouble is and what the solution should be. This report of decrease in relief allowances which has got into the press—whether it should have got there I do not know—has caused a great deal of anxiety to us in the west. Our relief costs are actually increasing in Alberta, and, I believe, in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. There are people who are inclined to say that the western provinces are always causing trouble; that they are a burden to the rest of the country, and all that sort of thing. I should like to say a word or two in defence of the western provinces, and if some of the people from the eastern provinces who have been having a great deal to say about the burden which the west entails upon them will only listen to some of these things, I believe they will revise their opinions and be more careful about what they have to say in the future. In the first place, there are many people who do not realize that the western provinces have been very much discriminated against for a long time. In the depression the west suffered perhaps more than any other part of the dominion. Premier Bracken is reported as having said that the western provinces lost $450,000,000 of purchasing power a year during the depression years. This was largely because they were primary producers and it was impossible for the dominion, by any kind of management, to protect their prices. The result was that while the price of shoes, for example, and the prices of foodstuffs generally maintained a fairly high level, the prices of wheat, cattle and pork, wool and various other products which the farmers had to sell had fallen. That resulted in a very serious loss in the western provinces, and those provinces have been struggling under this handicap all these years.

There is something else which is of importance. I read the other day statements of which really, I think, the writer should be ashamed. He spoke of one of the western provinces coming down here for a certain amount of money, and he said: "That money they are asking for is Canadian money. We Canadian taxpayers have paid that money and that province has no right to come and get it." It would be good for the intellectual development of that writer to take particular notice of the figures which I am about to give to the house. These figures I have taken from some findings which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) made when he was engaged in an investigation in eastern Canada. They are only estimates, but I believe that they are sufficiently accurate for our enlightenment. He finds that, in the incidence of the tariff in Canada, the increase in prices which the people of Manitoba were paying in the year ended March 31, 1931—increases as a result of the tariff—amounted to $29,185,740. The benefit to the producers of Manitoba as a result of those tariffs was only $19,910,971. The loss, then, to the people of Manitoba; in other words, the money which the people of Manitoba contributed to the dominion over and above the benefit they received was $9,274,769. Saskatchewan is faced with a still more serious problem. Her price increase owing to the tariff was $29,228,285 and the only benefit she derived was $3,275,850. The result is that Saskatchewan, in the year ended March 31, 1931, contributed to the dominion treasury, over and above what she obtained as a benefit from the tariff, $25,952,335. How many years that had been going on, and how many years since then a similar drain has existed, is a question which all hon. members must consider seriously. Alberta's price increase was $27,909,396. The benefit to her producers was $8,211,148. The result is that Alberta contributed to the funds of the dominion, over and above the benefit she gained, $19,698,248 in that year, and she has continued to contribute similar amounts since that time. When it can be shown that Alberta has received in return something comparable to that amount, then people will be in a position to talk against Alberta's request for the assistance she needs in a dire way at the present time.

Now let us come to the people of Quebec and Ontario. And before I quote the figures with respect to these two provinces I wish to assure hon. members that I have no desire whatsoever to say anything that would create ill-feeling between the east and the west. We admire and love the east; we are interested in the east and have no wish to cause disunion. But when injustice is borne by any section of the country and continues throughout a long period of years, and when the people who are profiting from that injustice are apparently unaware of its existence and in fact talk in such a way as to be altogether offensive, then it is high time that those who are being offensive should be informed and should begin to hold their peace. The price increase, so far as Quebec is concerned, was $101,171,562. The benefit to Quebec producers was $132,867,447. In other words, where the three other provinces lost huge sums of money, the people of Quebec, as a result of the tariff, gained the sum of $31,685,885. Now Quebec really ought, under those circumstances, to be able to take care of its relief problems a little better.

Ontario during the same period had a price increase of $168,732,723, but she gained as profit from the tariff, $220,722,484. In other words the gain which Ontario had as a result of the tariff was $51,989,761. Now, when people in two provinces have been benefited to that extent, it thoroughly behooves them to be very careful what they say regarding their suffering neighbours out in the west who have not been by any means so fortunate. So much for the tariff increase.

Now there is another injustice of which I believe a good many people are not aware. I am going to speak for a minute or two directly for my own province, not mentioning the others. There is in the Dominion of Canada a freight rate structure that makes Alberta pay both going and coming. She is being discriminated against as is no other province in this dominion. That ought to be taken into consideration. There are plenty of people who sneer about the Progressive government which the people of Alberta have put into power. I wager that if the people of some of these eastern provinces were suffering as much as Alberta is they would not be as calm as Alberta has been. The thing we want to do is to find what is the cause of all this, and to remove that cause as far as is humanly possible. Surely there is something that can be done. I read this from an editorial in a western paper, and not a Social Credit paper:

> This province (Alberta) as a matter of fact is at the apex of the general freight rate structure of Canada.

I have not time to go into details, but they bear tremendously on the relief problem in those provinces. Someone is suffering for all that. And it does not matter how desirous they are of working or how careful they are in their living or how economical they are or how anxious to keep off relief, they are in the grip of circumstances which are an absolute disgrace to this dominion.

There are some other things which I wish to consider. I will not now spend any more time on the discrimination; I may at another time say something further on that for the enlightenment of the house. I fancy the reason these things are tolerated is only that we do not know about them. I did not know about these things until I looked them up, and I cannot blame people who have never had them brought to their attention. It is our business to bring them to the attention of hon. members, and we do so in a spirit of good fellowship and straightforward honesty, asking that redress be given to us so that we may live. That is all. You see why I said a moment ago that the matter is exceedingly serious. It is positively appalling to the three prairie provinces to have anything said regarding a decrease in their relief appropriation. We are going to recover much more slowly than the other provinces, largely because of the terrible drain that is upon us. But to decrease the appropriation for relief for Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan in proportion to the decrease for Ontario and Quebec, judging from the figures I have brought forward, is to visit upon the three prairie provinces the most shameful discrimination. There should be a greater relief apportionment for those three provinces because of the additional burden that they have to carry. I submit that in all earnestness, and with a desire to cooperate, not in any spirit of criticism or complaining or fault-finding, because that is not the attitude which we in Alberta or we western people take. We come of sires who were pioneers, and pioneers do not come around seeking hand-outs. All we want is something like a decent chance to carry on, and we will carry on.

Now the question may be raised, and I fancy I hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) saying to himself: Yes, but where is the money coming from? Now, I have nothing but the deepest sympathy for any administration which is in power in this country. They face a trying task, one which requires the best judgment that the whole people of Canada can bring to bear upon the situation. There are more reasons than one why that is the case. It may be very difficult under the present structure to see how the money is to be found. I am going to make a suggestion which I know will be received with scorn in many places, but I am going to keep on making this suggestion over and over again, and I say to hon. members: If I can quote to you great authorities on economics, men who should know what they are talking about, and can show that these men favour the ideas which I bring before this house, then I submit that you would be unwise if you did not give close attention to these ideas.

I am going to suggest that the Dominion of Canada has the authority, according to the British North America Act, to create new money. There are many people who will at once say: Oh, that will cause inflation. Now it may be that it will not cause inflation. It is certain that the money can be got in that way, without either taxation or borrowing, and if it is possible so to get money and so to help us to solve our problems, then it is the bounden duty of every hon. member to give that proposal the most careful consideration. In closing my remarks I should like to read to the house a statement from a book by Professor Irving Fisher, professor of economics at Yale university. This book was published in 1935. Its title is "100% Money." Now, I would say that the considered opinions of a man like that are worthy of the attention of any man in this house. This man contends that state money is sound money. On page 175 of his book I read these words:

> A 100 per cent system using paper money or credit of the currency commission would be just as effective as a 100 per cent system using gold, as well as less troublesome and clumsy; for, as stated, convertibility into bearer money is the sort of convertibility which is wanted in our modern world—not convertibility into gold ornaments.

It is not at all difficult to see the stand that man has taken, and any man who wishes to consider this matter with great care and earnestness and honesty will find it greatly to his advantage to read "100% Money" carefully. It shows that I am not altogether crazy when I submit that state money is a feasible suggestion, which ought to be considered.

At page 188 I find this:

> The currency commission should be independent like the supreme court so that the purchasing power of our dollar may be kept stable despite banking operations.

There are many people who say: Oh, we will not put the money into the hands of politicians. Fisher shows the way around that objection. He says: Just as you have the administration of justice in this land in the hands of men who are independent of politics, so you can put your money affairs into the hands of a group of men who are independent of politics and are held responsible for the efficiency and honesty with which they administer the monetary concerns of the nation. I suggest, then, as a possible way out of the difficulty we have in the matter of getting money, that we consider earnestly the question of issuing state money and defraying some of our expenses with that.

The matter must be handled with wisdom. For those people who say that such money will cause inflation let me use an illustration. When you are in a dry area the first and all important thing is to get water. Having plenty of water someone who does not know how to use it will pour too much water on the land, flood the land and kill the crops or wash them out. The skilled irrigator does not do that. He takes the water and uses it as it should be used, in a scientific manner. The reason we have such fear of inflation as soon as the government begins to deal with money is that we are afraid the government will not be wise in its use of this money when it gets it. Why should that be? If we can learn how to handle everything else scientifically, why can we not learn how to handle our money scientifically? There is no reason at all why inflation should result any more than water flowing down an irrigation ditch should cause a flood.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up any more of the time of the house to-night. I have outlined in a measure the seriousness of the relief situation, and I very much fear that we are not going to find a solution of this problem until we learn some way or another of financing consumption, of getting money and distributing it among those who are unable to get jobs. I hope we may be able to put all men at work; I rather fancy that if we manage things just right we may be able to do so, but certainly we are not likely to bring about that result by the means we are using at the present time. We may increase our trade as much as we like, but if many men cannot get jobs we are not helping them very much.

Having considered the seriousness of the relief question and having offered what we are ready to present as a solution, I commend this proposal to the serious consideration of this house.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the others who have spoken in complimenting the mover (Mr. McLarty) and the seconder (Mr. Veniot) of the address. I regret, however, that the seconder, in his maiden speech, took occasion to criticise—unfairly, I think—those unfortunate people who are unemployed and on relief. If the conditions which he alleges exist among them actually do exist, then let us face the fact squarely that after six or seven years of unemployment a man who has reached the age of forty-five or fifty has become unfitted to work again. If the abuses to which the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) referred this afternoon do exist, then I am going to submit on behalf of those people that we must accept some responsibility for that condition. However, undoubtedly we shall have other opportunities to discuss the problem of unemployment, and we can go into this question at that time.

For a moment I should like to turn to the speech from the throne itself. I must say that I do not see in the legislative programme foreshadowed by the speech very much which offers hope to the Canadian people. I am glad, however, that the government is going to bring down for the consideration of this house suggestions in relation to the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. Whatever the outcome, I think that discussion will serve a very good purpose. I am also glad to note that pensions for the blind at a lower age than seventy years are to be introduced. Of course I do not know at what age those pensions will commence, but for my part I should like to see them graduated at least according to physical disability, right from the earliest age until death. I believe that the blind child should be given more assistance by the state than ordinarily can be given through our regular educational channels; indeed I think some consideration should be given to both the sustenance and the education of the blind child.

Much satisfaction has been expressed already, and I have no doubt more satisfaction will be expressed in the course of the next day or so, by speakers on the government side of the house in regard to the improvement in the economic situation in the Dominion of Canada. There are those, of course, who attribute this improvement to a change of government, when I believe deeper thought would show them that such is hardly the case. No doubt the trade agreement with the United States of America and commerical agreements with other nations have been steps in the right direction, since they make for greater freedom of exchange as between nations. Unfortunately, however, increases in Canada's commercial returns are symptomatic rather of international disease than of international health.

There are two main factors which have contributed to the so-called improved condition. First, there was the impetus given to war preparedness by increasing unfriendliness between the nations of the world and the terrible civil war in Spain. In the second place, as far as we in Canada are concerned, there has been the influence of the short crops of cereals over wide areas of the earth, creating a demand for wheat, which became a commodity asset of tremendous importance in Canada's economic structure. Almost overnight, one might say, our accumulated carryover, of which we heard so much during the last session of parliament, became an asset of vital importance to the world instead of the depressing factor which a more or less crazy economic system made it in the years when it was being accumulated.

The tragedy of the situation at the present time is this, that neither the farmers who produced the wheat nor the Canadian people who carried it through the depths of the agricultural depression have received the maximum benefit to which they were properly entitled. For this, obscured though it be at the moment by rising prices, the selling policy of the present government is in no small measure responsible. Defence of that policy is being made throughout the country and is based upon the assertion that neither the government nor the wheat board could have foreseen the shortage created by the north American drought, and that it was essential to get rid of the accumulated surplus.

When parliament prorogued late in June it was becoming evident that drought was in the making. I motored back to western Canada, and when I passed through North Dakota I saw the crop burning almost hour by hour. When I got back into my own province and my own constituency, in those first days of July, I saw a crop with splendid promise withering visibly before my eyes; yet in that month of July, when it was perfectly evident that, owing to the condition which was developing throughout the whole of the north American wheat belt, wheat must go higher and become an asset of tremendous value, the Canadian Wheat Board sold a record amount of wheat. The amount sold during the month of July, according to the bureau of statistics, reached the enormous figure of 62,302,891 bushels. These sales, might I add, cannot be said to have been made to ultimate consumers. I believe—and my guess in this connection is just as good as that of anybody else—that a great deal of the wheat passed into the hands of various speculative interests, and while we are told that this removed the depressing carryover, it did not in reality remove that carryover at all. All it did was to change the ownership of the wheat that was carried over; that was all. Therefore, in view of the situation in North America and the world grain position, the setting of the minimum price at 87½ cents a bushel on August 27, with the proviso that the board's operations in relation to the 1936 crop would not begin unless and until the price of wheat fell to 90 cents for No. 1 northern at Fort William, was a distinct disappointment to all our western producers, and I say that knowing that many of the farmers who supported the government which to-day occupies the seats of power in this dominion were just as much disappointed, if not more so, than those who voted against the government.

Subsequent events have shown that the organized farmers of Saskatchewan, in asking for a price of $1.15 a bushel, were not unreasonable. The government and the wheat board together, in my opinion, again deprived the western growers and the people of Canada from reaping the benefit both of the carryover and the world situation. This meant serious losses not only to the farmers but to all those who are dependent on the farmers—the country storekeeper, the doctor, the implement agent, the school teacher, all those whose livelihood depends upon the ability of the farmer to meet his obligations.

Let me remind this house—and I have said this before—that one of the difficulties in western Canada, and indeed perhaps in no small measure the cause of the fundamental economic situation there, is that the farmer, year in and year out, has never received the cost of production of this principal product, wheat. Our university in Saskatchewan states that the average cost over a period of years of producing a bushel of wheat on all types of land in the province is between $1.03 and $1.04 a bushel. If we bear that in mind, it can be readily understood why there was such universal disappointment when the price was set at 87½ cents. This, too, was done on August 27. Now this year we had an unusually early harvest, and a great deal of the crop had already been delivered to the elevators and was in the bins and sold by August 27. Yet, in spite of that, the wheat pools and the western growers endeavoured unsuccessfully to get the government to reconsider its decision.

When at that time the pools asked the government to set the minimum price at one dollar a bushel I do not think they were at all excessive in their requests. By the government's decision providing that delivery would not be taken by the board unless the price of wheat fell to 90 cents, the wheat board was practically eliminated so far as the 1936 crop went, and the western grower was placed very much at the mercy of those great speculative interests which we believe operate in all the grain markets of the world. I submit that existing conditions, in a world of realities, a world of quotas and tariffs and subsidies, demand that we should give our growers protection for their principal commodity, and this is the opinion not only of people who are opposed to the government but of its supporters also.

On April 1 of last year, for example, the Saskatchewan legislature, which is overwhelmingly controlled by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, adopted a resolution unanimously requesting the continuance of the wheat board and the setting of a minimum price based upon the cost of production. True, a great western paper which is also closely allied with hon. gentlemen opposite stated on August 31 last that no one so far as could be learned was prepared to explain successfully why the cost of production should be the basis of the government fixed price. But surely the serious plight of the western farmer is an ample and sensible explanation of that request. For years he has been disposing of his product at less than the cost of production. If his cost of production is one dollar a bushel and he sells his wheat for 60 cents a bushel, then he has a deficit of 40 cents a bushel, and that deficit must be made up somehow, somewhere, some time. If he has other resources, the deficit is made up from those resources. If he has no other resources, then the deficit is made up by a lower standard of living, by working excessively long hours or from the labour of his wife and family, or from his hired help; finally it is made up out of the equity that he has established in his land, his implements and other resources, and so eventually he passes out. In other words, the deficit represents the exploitation of the producing group by the balance of society. Of course, this sort of policy is a very short-sighted one because the farmer is a part of a great economic machine upon which the manufacturer, the storekeeper, the railroader, the implement company, the banks, the artisans and the labourers all finally depend. Unless all parts of this machine operate smoothly there is disequilibrium in society, a disequilibrium that must lead eventually to social upheaval and to revolution if it is not corrected. Surely that is an entirely sensible reason why at least the cost of production should be the basis of setting a minimum price not only for wheat but for other primary commodities.

If other reasons were needed, all one has to do is to turn to the price spreads investigation or to the recent probe into the textile industry, where the prices have been set, not directly of course, but indirectly, by tariff protection, for which the farmer and the rest of society must pay. Remove this protection; take over and control these monopolies if you will, and then, perhaps, the costs of production on our farms will drop and standards of living will rise. As long as you compel the farmer to buy in a protected or monopolistic market, you must not be surprised if he in return makes modest demands for protected prices for his products.

To what extent western producers have been exploited by protective tariffs under successive governments, Liberal, Conservative and Union, was shown clearly by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) in the figures which have been referred to already and which he presented several years ago before the maritimes commission. May I just repeat some of these figures? He gave the effect of protection for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, as an exaction from the three prairie provinces of nearly $56,000,000. The figure for Manitoba was $9,274,000; for Saskatchewan, $25,952,000, and for Alberta, $19,658,000. These were the exactions due to protective tariffs. The cost of the stabilization activities of the late wheat board and the annual cost of relief in the drought areas are a mere bagatelle in comparison.

I would point out to my hon. friends from eastern industrial centres, both Liberal and Conservative, that an elementary sense of justice demands the granting to our farmers of an adequate price for their products. This is surely a sensible reason why the costs of production should be the basis of fixed prices. Of course, I am not forgetful of the fact that all that has just been said could apply with equal force to other primary commodities. It is sometimes said that we from western Canada are constantly bringing before this house the grievances of the prairie provinces. We are quite aware that the conditions which prevail on the prairies can be duplicated in other parts of Canada. During the recess some of us were able to visit other parts of Canada and we know there is similar distress and there are similar problems among the fruit growers of British Columbia, the farmers and market gardeners of Ontario, the dairymen of Quebec, the fisher folk of the Gaspé peninsula and the maritime coasts, and the workers in industry everywhere. All classes of the community suffer from the same economic conditions which exist to-day in Canada.

We have tremendous distress in the west among our children and our teachers. Perhaps I may be pardoned if I speak for a moment on behalf of these teachers. For twenty-four years I taught in western Canada. I was president of the Canadian Teachers' Federation and I was its secretary for several years. I feel that it is not only a privilege to bring the problems of these people before the house, but more or less an obligation. I am emboldened to do this because of the fact that the teachers of Saskatchewan not very long ago presented a memorial to the government. This memorandum stated quite correctly that the education of its future citizens should be a matter of profound concern to the state. It argued also, again I think correctly, that an enlightened citizenship is the best safeguard of democracy. This memorandum shows how in wide areas of Saskatchewan grasshoppers, drought, soil erosion, frost and depressed conditions generally have made it impossible for local school districts to maintain their educational services as they ought to be maintained.

But for the self-sacrifice of literally hundreds of teachers, schools would have been closed long ago. Their salaries have been reduced again and again. The average reduction in the salaries of rural school teachers in Saskatchewan amounts to sixty per cent. These teachers are receiving only forty per cent of their former schedule. In that province 4,853 teachers signed contracts last year for less than $500 per year. Of that number, 2,419 signed contracts for $400 or less per year. Only a portion of these pitifully small salaries were paid. At the end of 1935, the last record available, the arrears of salaries to the rural teachers of Saskatchewan amounted to over $1,000,000. There are cases of teachers receiving as little as $25 for a term's work. The average net wage in the drought area of Saskatchewan was $10 per month.

Canadian citizens were shocked at the revelations in connection with wages paid by, and working conditions in, certain industries as brought out by the mass buying probe. How much more would Canadian citizens be shocked to realize that persons engaged in a great public service in Saskatchewan are suffering from conditions even worse than those found to exist in certain industries? We heard condemnation this afternoon of those who have allowed these conditions to exist in industry, and yet we have here a great public service where two-thirds of those engaged in it are living below a standard which would not be tolerated even in many of the depressed areas of the world. I have authenticated data showing that teachers have been unable to purchase clothes and that some have been living in cabooses or school basements. The case of a married man with a family was checked up and given to me; I have the name of this man. He has been receiving $20 per month; his groceries, rent and milk cost him $19.50 per month. Not many groceries could be purchased out of that amount. He has fifty cents per month with which to buy clothing and fuel and to pay for health services and so on. There are cases of teachers who are receiving less than $100 for a whole year. Is it any wonder that teachers have been forced to apply for relief while still actively engaged in their work?

This parliament cannot escape all responsibility. I am informed that the interest on the school lands fund, which forms a portion of the revenue of that province, was recently reduced from five per cent to four per cent, thereby reducing the amount available for education. The whole system of organizing and financing education in small semi-autonomous and self-supporting units is inadequate and out of date. The time has come to realize that in the interests of democracy and of progress education must be recognized more largely as a matter of fundamental national concern. But apart entirely from these considerations I believe that the Canadian people would wish this parliament to take steps to ensure that the children in the drought-stricken area of the west shall receive an adequate education under such conditions as will guarantee health and opportunity. Let us remember that present conditions are not going to pass away overnight. One good crop at reasonably good prices will not meet the needs of education and of the agricultural industry to which I have referred. That is why I have been so insistent ever since I have been here that intelligent plans for the rehabilitation of agriculture should form a major task of this house.

Apart from drought problems, to which, I am glad to see, the government is giving some attention, the question of future production and future marketing loom large in the farmer's mind. I know there is a disposition to view with satisfaction the recent rise in wheat prices and there let the matter rest. But in that way future disaster lies. Apart from the fact that under the very best conditions, over a long period, the farmers, the local business men and the public bodies dependent upon both of them cannot liquidate their present debts, there is the question of permanent and remunerative markets to consider. What are the prospects, not in the immediate future, but in the course of the next five or ten years? Has this government any long range policy to place before this parliament? That is a question which should be answered in the affirmative and the policy placed clearly before the house and the country. It is all very well to say that European peoples will compel their governments to lower their tariffs to a point where Canadian, Australian and Argentine farmers will be permitted to market their wheat at adequate prices. There is no real evidence that European governments are going to take steps which would further impoverish their peasant populations. Fear of agrarian uprising to supplement industrial discontent leading to revolution precludes such a possibility. True, during the present crop year certain European nations have imported more than for several years, but only to the extent to which threats of war and short crops impel them to do so. Nor must we forget that in their impoverished condition, aggravated as it has been by the need of raw material, they must restrict their foreign purchases to the extent of their exports.

Like other industrialized and over-capitalized nations, we want to export but to restrict our imports in the interest of a highly protected industrialism. Temporary relief we are enjoying, but it is temporary, and the higher prices in which we are rejoicing are liable to lead us into a new wheat crisis rather than out of a wheat crisis. Higher prices will tempt unorganized individual farmers to sow more wheat because they fail to realize that in the exporting countries we have a potential grain producing plant far in excess of the world's present effective consumptive possibilities. The terrible drought of 1936, following as it did several years of other droughts of more or less intensity, obscures this defect in our agricultural position. Canada as a great producer of exportable grain must face the implications of increased productivity of European countries. Who has not noted that in Great Britain they are already considering ways and means of increasing their production of wheat during the coming year? Add to that increased European productivity a declining European birthrate and what is the outlook?

We are told sometimes, of course, that a rising standard of living will solve these problems. But we find this, that up to a certain level large quantities of wheat are consumed; when the standard of living rises above that level the consumption of wheat grows less. More meat is used; more vegetables, more salads, more fruits, more of foods other than basic cereals are used. A few years ago—very recently too—we were told that Japan was a great potential market for Canadian grain. Japan is now developing the plains of Manchukuo; and moreover, the coming of the soya bean has provided a new food for the eastern peoples. Even in our own country, this great wheat producing land, you can pick up advertisements of bread made with flour derived from the soya bean. Nor must we rely upon the progress of civilization in Asia. Over northern Asia stretches a great nation with vast plains and a highly mechanized agricultural industry; and if new demands come from Asia, Asia in a few years will be able to supply those demands.

Hence the position of Canadian agriculture is a question not wholly of markets, of what we would like, of what we would think, of wider and freer markets—much as I would like to see them in the immediate future—but of intelligent planning to meet the condition which is coming, I believe, after this brief period of higher prices, because the drought condition and consequent grain scarcity will not last forever; we may be quite sure of that.

I know that in saying some of these things I have been running counter to some opinions held by hon. gentlemen opposite. But while I wish to see intelligent, immediate, and quick progress, I do not want to see this country drift towards economic chaos and social upheaval. I want quick progress, but I believe in evolution rather than revolution, and another agricultural crisis, accompanied by the inevitable industrial crisis, would produce a chaotic condition from which we might emerge as some European countries emerged from their crises, with democratic institutions gone, and standards of life greatly lowered. Another crisis such as we have witnessed since 1929 would, I submit, shake our institutions to their foundations and perchance destroy our democracy, at least temporarily. It seems to me that now, when conditions are said to be on the upgrade, we should make preparations to meet the inevitable reaction. That is the opportunity lying before this present parliament of Canada. I wonder if we are going to seize it while there is yet time.

I close with the thought with which I began, that although it may be contended that there has lately been almost phenomenal improvement in certain Canadian industries—and if war comes, those industries may prosper still more—yet, after such a war, we shall suffer more intensely because of the increased production encouraged by war activity. On the other hand war may not come—and I hope that the nations of the world will get together and agree to keep peace and to disarm—so that the putting into effect of a disarmament program would close many of the markets that we now have. For in relying on potential war industries and prices we are leaning on a broken reed; and as I see it this parliament should lay plans so that we may discover and remove the cause of unemployment, and deal intelligently with agriculture, in order that we may be in a position not only to rehabilitate our farmers in the drought and distressed areas, but to relieve them of their tremendous obligations and burdens of debt, and assist them generally in the days that are to come.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): Complying with the suggestion made this afternoon to cut short this session and get through in time for coronation, I do not intend to take up very much of the time of the house on this occasion. I do, however, want to make a few remarks and at a later date I shall return to the subjects which I am going to touch on at this time.

Since the opening of parliament I have read over the speech from the throne three or four or five times and have been unable so far to get very much out of it. I was glad to learn that trade agreements are being made, but I would suggest that before we export very much of our products the wants of the Canadian people should first be taken care of. That is one of the jobs that we are here to look after.

Following up some of the resolutions brought before parliament at the session a year ago, we find that the government intends to bring down legislation to pay pensions to the blind at an age under seventy years. I am very glad to see that this measure is to be brought in because I believe it is long overdue. However, we believe that it is better late than never and we hope that this legislation will be brought down in the very near future. I also read that there is a marked increase in trade and commerce, accompanied by a noticeable improvement in the general economic situation. I do not know what particular basic industries this applies to, but I do not believe it applies to agriculture. Perhaps it refers to industries that have fattened at the expense of the agriculturists of the country. I notice also that there has been a pronounced increase in the volume of farm products exported, and that it is the intention of the government to continue the vigorous promotion of the sale of agricultural products at home and abroad. I am not at all surprised at this; I think it very clearly verifies the statement of the head of the wheat board that that board's job was to get rid of wheat. We must all agree that the board succeeded in getting rid of the grain, but we must also agree that this was done at a terrible cost to the taxpayers of Canada, and particularly those who produced that grain.

Believing that the first duty of a government is to see to the prosperity and happiness of its people, I am now bound to take advantage of this first possible opportunity to condemn the action of the government in getting rid of our wheat board. This legislation was brought down in 1935. Resolutions from several organizations throughout the country have been presented to the government, petitions have been signed by thousands of growers in the west, many boards of trade and several other organizations to keep that marketing board in operation. But we find that the intelligence of the people of Canada has been slammed by this action of the government in disposing of that board. I do not agree that the price of 87½ cents set by that board was sufficient, but that was better than nothing, because those who delivered grain to the wheat board were given certificates by which they collected any profit that was gained at a later date. Now, in spite of these resolutions and petitions to which I have referred, the government has seen fit to drain these profits away from the producers and to throw them into the laps of the gamblers on the Winnipeg grain exchange. I do not think this is good business, and if the matter had been handled by a board of efficient men working in the interests of the producers, who are certainly entitled to have something to say about the sale of their grain, and working also in the interests of Canada as a whole, I believe that instead of a deficit of something like $11,800,000 there would have been a large sum of money to distribute to the producers who delivered that wheat to the board. Instead of that we have perhaps thirty cents a bushel clear profit turned over to somebody who did not turn a hand in the production of that grain. In my opinion that is not good business, because I believe that the farmers and other people in the west have been sufficiently gypped in the past in connection with wheat. I am referring now to the settlement of the 1930 wheat pool payment. In that case we were gypped 4·2 cents a bushel on the average price of grain in 1930, and I believe that we were gypped as high as fifty per cent of the amount we received from these wheat pool payments, in the amount of interest we paid on debts which should have been paid with the money that was tied up in this wheat and held by both our governments. Five years after we were entitled to our payment we got it, and, as I said before, at least fifty per cent of that amount was consumed in interest.

Figures have been put out by the dominion government showing that in 1932 the average cost of growing wheat was 95 cents a bushel. That 95 cents does not include approximately 19 cents for freight and handling charges, which would mean a gross payment of $1.14 at Fort William. That, I believe, is based upon an average of approximately sixteen bushels per acre. This year, instead of getting sixteen bushels per acre, there are thousands of farmers who did not get two bushels per acre, and in a good many cases we find that thousands of acres have been left without a binder being brought in. So when the government tells us that we are making profits on this year's grain and that our basic industry is improving, it is a statement that needs to be revised.

I listened last session to one member of the medical profession who sat to my right; this afternoon I listened to another who sat opposite. If his talk had not been so far from the truth I think I might have enjoyed it. I have to take very strong exception to the statement of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) in regard to those on relief and unemployed. The hon. member said this afternoon that if our governing bodies expect to pull out of this morass of unemployment, our only hope lies in getting people back to work-consciousness, compelling them to give some personal return for the assistance they receive, by cutting out this panhandling, this racketeering, this subsidizing of idleness, this sponging on the public treasury on which so many persons have existed dishonestly for the last five or six years. As a representative of the down and out people as well as a few of the other class I take very strong exception to those words "dishonestly for the last five or six years." If that had been directed somewhere else I might not have objected, but in connection with those poor down and out people on the relief roll I must stand up and have that statement withdrawn. If it is proven, then let us get busy and correct it. It is up to someone to remedy that condition. Ninety per cent of those on relief to whom I have talked would work and make a good job of it if only they were given something to do and some remuneration for that work.

We are told that the government is doing quite a lot by putting men on the farms. They are sending men out on the farms at $5 a month. I think it is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians to have in operation a system that will send anybody out at a wage of $5 a month. If our present system is not capable of giving people a decent living then it is time to change that system, and if those in office cannot tell how to change it they should get out and let others in who will at least see that our people get enough to eat, enough to wear and a decent house to live in.

Mr. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is the desire of the house to take a vote this evening, and I do not intend to delay the vote. I should, however, like to make a few brief remarks relative to the speech from the throne, and I assure the house that if they will bear with me I shall try to be very brief.

Since the last session of this parliament many events of marked importance have taken place both in Canada and abroad. Those outside Canada have been the cause of much concern to us and have made us wonder whether another great conflict was not in course of preparation. In Europe the political atmosphere is clouded with uncertainty. Recent events in Spain, the verbal dual between Germany and Russia, the ever-increasing exigencies of dictatorship countries, have rendered the situation perplexing and embarrassing, and the consequences at the present time are very grave. The clash, should it come, seems likely to be one between classes, infinitely more serious than that between nations. In the international realm this country has moved with great caution. The attitude adopted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) at Geneva, should, I believe, commend itself to the vast majority of the citizens of this country. The action of the several cabinet ministers in seeking to open up trade channels with the great countries of Europe has received nation-wide recognition. The idea of getting away from economic isolation has done much not only in preparing the way for peace but also in preparing the way for recovery toward which we are rapidly progressing.

Internally Canada's position, while still a serious one, and while still faced with major issues, indicates that we are fast emerging from the depression. We cannot but breathe a sigh of relief in scanning the figures of our export trade. With reference to this it is only fair to say that in the relatively short time this government has been in office it has guided the destiny of the nation safely and well. That it may continue to do so, and may pilot the ship of state safely into port, is the hope of all those who have at heart the interests of their country.

There has been marked recovery in agriculture. The cheese industry particularly has been active. Never since 1930 have cheese prices reached the level which they did in 1936, the average yearly price per pound for that year being approximately 13 cents; the exact figure was 12·76. The value of cheese exports for 1936 exceeded the figure for 1935 by over $4,000,000. It is remarkable to note that the greater part of this increase in exports went to the United Kingdom, and the remainder to the United States of America. It is also interesting to note that there was exported to the United States in 1935 only $77,289 worth of cheese, whereas in 1936 there went to that country one and a half million dollars worth. It is also important to note that the total production of cheese in Canada during the twelve months just ended increased by 17·8 per cent. This is only one branch of agriculture, and it is worthy of note that this has been achieved without the intervention of the bonus. The farmer, as hon. members know, has had very difficult times in the recent past and we should be generous to him, because in times of difficulty, in times of economic strain, it is toward the farmer that we look very often for assistance. Therefore, when recovery and its forces are in the offing we should be generous with him.

The expansion in our export trade has been striking, as has been pointed out by one of the speakers this afternoon. The total exports for last year amounted to over $928,000,000, which is an increase of 22·6 per cent over 1935. For the twelve months' period, when the figures are known, they will doubtless be well over the billion dollar mark. The total favourable trade balance for the eleven months amounted to over $346,000,000, and while this is not a record it has been exceeded on only two previous occasions. The trade treaty with the United States is responsible in no small measure for the substantial increase in our export trade.

The national housing policy recommended by the employment commission and adopted by the government has already done much in reducing the number of unemployed. We can look to the future with confidence.

The county of Stormont, which I have the honour of representing in this house, apart from being the most beautiful in this dominion, is typical of the country in which we live. It is partly industrial and partly agricultural. Ethnically it is not unlike many of the great constituencies of this country, because in Stormont there live side by side descendants of the two great civilizations, the English and the French, which have contributed so much toward the development of this country. And what is more, these people live in perfect harmony. Of this there could be no greater proof than that the constituency, although in the majority English speaking, has seen fit to send to this house as its representative a citizen of French origin. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the English speaking element of my constituency would wish me at this juncture to address myself to the house in the French language.

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish respectfully to salute in my mother tongue, which is also yours, the French-Canadian element of my constituency. This element is composed mostly of workingmen and farmers, and in thinking of them I am reminded of the words of Longfellow in his immortal Evangeline:

Men whose lives glided on like rivers that water the woodland; darkened by shadows of earth but reflecting an image of Heaven.

Today the working masses are suffering; in nearly every country in the world they are the victims of individualism with its doctrine, its utilitarianism and its unrestricted competition which has degenerated in economic dictatorship, and the people are ready to believe that the only remedy to their evils lies in a complete overthrow of the social order. It is necessary to prove to those who suffer and are embittered against society that the remedy does not reside in the destruction of the existing order, but in its reform, for otherwise it will be impossible effectively to defend society against the assault of revolutionary forces.

If, Mr. Speaker, the forces of recovery are in the ascendant in some phases of the nation's activities, there is one phase in which those forces seem to be entirely lacking. That is in the relationship between capital and labour. The underlying causes of the depression are numerous. There is one, however, which stands out among all the rest, and that is the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few. There is another outstanding cause, if I may so say; that is, the abnormal relationship which presently obtains between capital and labour. There may be signs of recovery in the offing, but recovery in the true sense must benefit all classes of society, the poor as well as the rich, the feeble as well as the strong, the farmer and the wage earner as well as the high salaried director. In order to have stability in recovery there must be a more equitable distribution of wealth.

With the permission of the house, sir, as briefly as possible I should like to outline what I believe to be the true relationship which should exist between capital and labour and which should bring to the working classes of this country a fairer share of the comforts of life to which they are justly entitled. Capital is the money, plant and machinery of the manufacturer, called the capitalist or employer, while labour is the work done or services rendered by the employee for the employer. Both of these great agencies are essential factors in the community, and neither can do much without the other. Both together produce what society needs. Then there is another all important factor, sir, and that is the community itself. Among these three great factors there should exist the closest cooperation and harmony. To some extent, perhaps, there should be a degree of partnership, and the three should work together for the common good.

Unfortunately, however, such is not the case. When industries establish themselves in a community many advantages are held out to them. They are given fixed assessments over a period of years, cheap water power and very often transportation facilities. In return for these advantages industries agree to erect certain plant and machinery and to employ large numbers of men. On their part there is also an implied obligation to employ these men under fair working conditions and to pay them just and equitable wages. There is also an obligation to employ them in such a manner that their health will not be injuriously affected. Many industries, however, have little or no regard for implied obligations. Some of them pay much more attention to their machinery than they do to the men who operate it. The result is that in some communities, instead of having the harmony and cooperation which should exist between the forces of capital and labour, there is a cleavage, and we have two groups each opposing the other, to the great detriment of the community.

The relationship of capital and labour is brought about by means of the contract of labour. The contract of labour is the leasing or hiring not of a material thing but of the services of an individual, that is, of a human being, and it is impossible to separate the individual from his work. The contract of labour embodies two obligations: first, that of paying for the services rendered according to their value and, second, that of making use of the object leased or hired according to its nature. The contract of labour might be likened to the leasehold of premises. In the leasehold of premises the tenant takes upon himself the obligation not only of paying rent but also of making use of the premises during the currency of the term in a fair and reasonable manner, and of giving up the premises at the end of the term in the same condition as they were at the beginning, reasonable wear and tear excepted. So in the contract of labour the employer agrees not only to pay a fair and reasonable wage to the employee but also not to abuse his services, so that when he has completed his work his health will not have been injuriously affected.

Unfortunately, sir, in many instances these obligations on the part of the industries are not respected. In numerous cases men and women are paid wages which are not only unfair and unjust but which are a disgrace to those who pay them. Furthermore, oftentimes men and women are made to work under conditions which are not only injurious to their health but, on account of the speed up and stretch out systems, tax their physical capacity to such an extent that their nervous system thereby becomes affected, and sooner or later they must give up their work and seek employment elsewhere. The reason for this unfair advantage being taken of the working classes is that in our day the manufacturer has become so powerful that he can dictate his terms and conditions to the labourer, who must accept them or very often do without work. Such a condition should not be allowed to exist, and in my humble opinion there should be state intervention.

I should like to go a step further and outline what I understand by a fair and reasonable wage. The general rule, sir, is that the employer should give the employee a wage or salary according to the value of his work, and in order to determine the value of a man's work it is necessary to consider its nature. Why does man work? Is it simply to chase away the blues, to form his character or to develop his muscular strength? To some extent, yes, but it is chiefly and mainly to earn a living. That is the reason man works; that is the object and end of man's work. Employer and employee may, if they so desire, bargain for a fixed wage, but over and above their bargain there stands the law of natural justice, more ancient and more sacred than all other laws, which stipulates that the wage paid by the employer to the employee should be a reasonable wage that will allow the employee to live respectably. This means that the wage should be sufficient to allow him to support and maintatin his family, pay his rent take an honest recreation from time to time and allow him to put something to one side for the day of sickness and difficulties. It is a known fact that wages in some industries are such that it is impossible for a man to maintain his family let alone pay rent and enjoy some of the ordinary comforts of life to which he is justly entitled.

During the depression, Mr. Speaker, many corporations pay and are still paying enormous salaries to their directors and hand out huge dividends to their shareholders, but they fail and are still failing to pay to their employees a just and equitable wage. I said a moment ago that I thought there should be state intervention, but I believe that first of all the problem is one which should be settled by the manufacturers because they are primarily responsible. It is they who have created the problem, and they should help to solve it. If they were to give to the solution of this problem but a fraction of the time they devote to their own affairs I believe they could solve it. Unfortunately, however, they seem to be concerned only in what will help them to advance their own interests, and when the state is asked to intervene, and says that it will intervene, the manufacturers object strenuously on the ground that there must be free and open competition, and on the further ground that wages must be fixed according to the law of supply and demand. They maintain the right to give the employee the wage which they can get him to accept. On the other hand they maintain the right to form huge monopolies, such as those of coal, gasoline, milk, meats, bread and other commodities, and when once these are established they sell to the consumer at the highest possible prices. They want the right to amass huge fortunes and still pay ridiculously low wages. If the employees threaten to organize, the manufacturers object, and yet they belong to the strongest price organizations of the world.

The time has come, to my mind, when there should be state intervention. There should be legislation governing the hours of work in each day and the days of work in each week. There should be minimum wage laws for men. There should be legislation governing the conditions under which men and women have to work. True, these are all matters outside the jurisdiction of this house unless, of course, the privy council should otherwise decree, but this house holds in its hand a powerful weapon with which it might strike, and that is the tariff. Many industries are in need of a protective tariff. There are some which could not carry on without it. I believe that every legitimate industry should be protected, but upon the distinct understanding that it will pass on to its employees in the way of better wages and better working conditions the benefits of this tariff so ardently sought.

At the turn of the century, Mr. Speaker, economic conditions in industry had a tendency in practically every nation to divide society into two groups; on the one hand, a minority of rich people holding power and wealth in their hands and enjoying all the benefits which modern invention could offer; on the other hand, a vast majority of working people enduring great hardships and attempting to extricate themselves from this condition as best they could. By the minority this condition was accepted as the result of the economic laws and as a condition which had always existed to a certain degree. The majority, however, refused to submit themselves to this condition, which was intolerable, and many of them thought that the only solution lay in a complete downfall of the social order.

As I sat in this house during the last session, Mr. Speaker, I heard reechoed on many occasions in this chamber the words, "democracy is on trial." There is no greater truism than that statement. But sometimes I wonder what is being done to save democracy. It is being attacked on all sides. It has committed many errors. It has been guilty of many crimes, and it is badly in need of reform. Many theories have been advanced to supplant it, and among them are communism and fascism, but these are remedies worse than the evil. Both are incompatible with the traditions and institutions of this country, and if those theories were to prevail there can be no doubt that complete chaos would follow in this country.

The solution, in my humble opinion, lies in reform and in a return to those two virtues of justice and charity, virtues as old as the day is long but which with the dawn of a new era seem to have been relegated to the past. If those institutions which hold in their hands power and wealth were to abandon their ideas of individualism and egotism and to mete out more in the way of justice and more in the way of charity, I believe that equilibrium in society would soon be restored. I believe, too, that the forces of capital and labour would take in society the positions they were meant to take, that of cooperating one with the other, of a harmonious relationship, of working together for the common good of all.

There is one other class in society which, I believe, deserves the condemnation of this house, and that is the group of agitators who have been at work within recent months with the object of creating excitement among the working classes, and with the object of confusing the working people for their own subversive ends. To use the words of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) in his New Year's eve message to Canada, "I believe that an intelligent public opinion will sooner or later condemn these agitators."

It must be a source of gratification to this government, Mr. Speaker, to know that the forces of recovery are again in the ascendant. But this time let us have recovery in the true sense of the word; let us have recovery which will benefit all classes of society, from the most humble citizen of the realm to the most powerful. In that way those forces which seek the downfall of the social order will soon disappear, and we in Canada will march on toward higher and better things.

Motion (Mr. McLarty) agreed to.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the address be engrossed and transmitted to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of the house as are of the honourable the privy council.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That this house will, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of a supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That this house will, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into a committee to consider of the ways and means for raising the supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Motion agreed to.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1937-38

Hon. CHARLES A DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the message of His Excellency the Governor General, together with the estimates presented this day, be referred to the committee of supply.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think there would be some question as to whether we can refer estimates to a committee which does not exist. This committee will not exist until to-morrow, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is going to set it up.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the same question was raised a year ago.

Mr. BENNETT: But in a different form.

Mr. DUNNING: If my recollection serves me well, it was decided then that once the house had determined to set up the committee, it was in fact in effect and the estimates could be referred to it. Authorities were quoted on that occasion.

Mr. BENNETT: The notice of motion was that Mr. Dunning would on Tuesday next move to set up the committee of ways and means and that he would move the house into supply. It is all right, but I just direct attention to it.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Tuesday, January 19, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 7, to amend the Dominion Franchise Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. RINFRET: The purpose of the amendment is to postpone the revision of the existing list for one year. It is similar to the one adopted last year.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HARBOURS AND PIERS ACT

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act to substitute the Minister of Transport for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; to except from the operation of the act harbours under the management of the national harbours board; to confer on the minister power of appointment of officers, clerks and employees; to deal with the collection and disposition of tolls and dues and to charge certain expenses against such tolls and dues.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SPANISH CIVIL WAR

ENLISTMENT IN CANADA FOR MILITARY SERVICE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. B. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister

(Mr. Mackenzie King) regarding the enlistment of Canadian volunteers in the Spanish civil war. The question is this: Is it the intention of the government to support the British policy of banning the recruiting of Canadian volunteers for the civil war in Spain?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend was kind enough to give me advance notice of this question. I shall give him at the moment an answer which will perhaps serve the immediate purpose, but the subject is a large one and there may be something more to be said with respect to it later on.

In view of recent developments, the question whether any special action should be taken regarding control of enlistment in Canada for military service in foreign countries has been under examination. Canada is not included in the twenty-seven countries, all European states, which are represented on the non-intervention committee organized to deal with the Spanish situation, and which has made recommendations to the governments represented thereon for the prohibition of the substantial enlistment on both sides in the Spanish conflict which has taken place from European centres. The question, however, will continue to be given consideration.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): When the orders of the day were called yesterday a question was addressed to me by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) respecting the admission of Canadian certified seed potatoes into the Cuban market. I find that the information which would answer this question is somewhat technical and does not lend itself to an oral reply. If the hon. member would be willing to place his question on the order paper, I think that would be a more satisfactory means of affording the information desired.

DEATH OF INDIAN BOYS

INQUIRY AND STATEMENT OF MINISTER AS TO FATALITY ON FRASER LAKE, BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I wish to ask the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs whether he will make a statement to parliament with reference to the death of the four small Indian boys who were found dead on the ice of Fraser lake in northern British Columbia on the morning of January 2. The circumstances under which these boys died have been commented on in the press throughout Canada and I think that, inasmuch as they were wards of Canada, parliament is entitled to a statement from the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice this morning that he intended to ask this question. May I correct him on one point. There is no longer a superintendent general of indian affairs, since that office was merged with the Department of Mines and Resources.

The information we have at the present time with respect to the sad occurrence to which the hon. member refers is very briefly as follows: On New Year's Day, January 1, four small Indian boys, ranging in age from seven to nine years, left the Indian school at Lejac in northern British Columbia, on the main line of the Canadian National Railways, for home, and were frozen to death. An inquest was held a few days later. As far as the facts are disclosed by the report of the coroner's inquest, and also the report of the Indian agent for the district, they appear to be as follows: On January 1, which was of course a holiday, these youngsters asked in the morning or some time later in the day if they might be allowed to visit their parents some seven miles distant across Fraser lake. Permission was refused by the school authorities for the reason that the distance was so great. The boys were present at four o'clock in the afternoon when refreshments were served to the Indian children. At six o'clock they were reported absent from attendance at the evening meal by the Sister Superior. Apparently that report did not reach the principal of the school until nine thirty, according to the information we have. In the meantime these youngsters had left to travel seven miles to their home. The weather was rather severe at that time, and as hon. members will know, since this district is in the neighbourhood of the 50th parallel of latitude, the evening falls early there. They probably did not leave the school until dusk or approaching dusk. The principal assumed that they had gone home. Now here there comes a conflict in the reports. In a letter which the principal of the school sent to his superior in Winnipeg he stated that there were a number of Indian families visiting at the school on this day, the parents of these children not being among them, and they surmised that the youngsters had gone back to the reservation with one of these families. Unhappily this turned out not to be correct.

The bodies were not discovered until the next day. The following forenoon, or about noon, the school authorities dispatched a sleigh to bring the youngsters back to the school. When the homes of the parents were reached it was discovered that the boys had not arrived; search was instituted and in a short time the bodies were discovered on the ice of Fraser lake.

An inquest was held on January 4, and the school was exonerated from any blame. It may be of interest to the house, because the occurrence is a very sad one, if I give the finding of the inquest. After stating that death was due to exhaustion and consequent freezing, the jury reported:

> We, the jury, feel that such circumstance was unavoidable in view of the evidence in this case.
> We feel, however, that more definite action by the school authorities might or should have been taken the night upon which the disappearance took place.
> Further, it is our opinion that more co-operation between the authorities and the parents of the children would in future help to lessen the danger in the future of any repetition of such an incident.
> Also that excessive corporal discipline, if practised, should be limited and that better understanding would exist between pupils and disciplinarians if the latter were English-speaking.

There is no evidence that there was any corporal punishment. It is true that a report appeared in some of the western papers that the youngsters had received corporal punishment as a result of which they had left the school. I think that is unlikely, especially in view of the fact that they left on a holiday when the ordinary school was not in session and when apparently they were having the festivities usually associated with New Year's Day. We have not yet received, although we have wired for it, a copy of the evidence taken at the inquest. In fact I am not sure the evidence was reported verbatim, and I am unable at the moment to inform the house on that point. But if it was reported verbatim the report will be received in due course and will be studied. In the meantime I am giving consideration to the matter of recommending to my colleagues that an inquiry into all the relevant facts be made by a judge. But before reaching a final decision on that I prefer to wait and study the evidence taken at the inquest if it is available.

[Mr. Crerar.]

ABDICATION OF KING EDWARD VIII

ALTERATION IN THE LAW TOUCHING THE SUCCESSION TO THE THRONE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 1, respecting alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to secure the assent of the parliament of Canada to the alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne set forth in the act of parliament of the United Kingdom intituled, His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act, 1936. The United Kingdom Act is printed as schedule two to the bill, which is now before the house.

It may perhaps serve to limit discussion and to make clear exactly what is intended by the provisions of His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act if I read to the house what was said at Westminster by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom on the second reading of the bill, and also what was said in the House of Lords by the Lord Privy Seal, who was in charge of the measure in the House of Lords.

As hon. members will recall, the abdication bill was introduced in the commons at Westminster on December 10 and received its first reading on that day. The second reading took place on the morning of December 11. Speaking on the second reading, the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin said:

> The provisions of this bill require very few words of explanation from me at this stage. It is a matter which of course concerns the dominions and their constitutions just as it concerns us. As the house will see, four dominions—Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa—have desired to be associated with this bill. As regards the Irish Free State, I received a message from Mr. de Valera yesterday telling me that he proposed to call his parliament together to-day to pass legislation dealing with the situation in the Irish Free State. The legal and constitutional position is somewhat complex, and any points with regard to that which anyone desires to raise would more properly be dealt with at a later stage.
> The bill gives effect to his majesty's abdication, and provides that His Royal Highness the Duke of York shall succeed to the throne in the same way and with the same results as if the previous reign had ended in the ordinary course. It is necessary to have an act of parliament because the succession to the throne is governed by the Act of Settlement, which makes no provision for an abdication or for a succession consequent upon an abdication. It is also necessary expressly to amend that act by eliminating his majesty and his issue and descendants from the succession. This is affected by subsections (1) and (2) of clause 1.
> Subsection (3) deals with the Royal Marriage Act, of 1772. This act provides, in effect, that no descendants of George II, other than the issue of princesses married into foreign families, shall be capable of contracting a marriage without the consent of the king, with the proviso that where that consent is refused in the case of such a descendant above the age of 25, he may give notice to the Privy Council, and the marriage may take place after twelve months unless within that period both Houses of Parliament have expressly declared their disapproval of the marriage. The act was passed merely to provide a measure of control over the marriages of those who might succeed to the throne or whose descendants might succeed. It would be clearly wrong that the provisions of the act should apply to his majesty and his descendants, who, on the passing of this act, will cease to have any right in the succession.

Those were Mr. Baldwin's words on the second reading. Viscount Halifax, Lord Privy Seal, spoke as follows in the House of Lords on the second reading:

The bill itself is a plain and simple and short one. Your lordships will observe that in the second paragraph of the preamble the bill records the consent of the Dominion of Canada and the assent of the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa to it. The preamble is drawn in rather complicated form consequent upon the statutory form of the Statute of Westminster, and the preamble represents the result of protracted consultations with the governments of the dominions, and as it stands, carries the full agreement of all the dominions that are mentioned in it.

Clause 1 gives effect to his majesty's declaration of abdication and makes the necessary provision to that end. I might perhaps particularly call your lordships' attention to the words in subsection (1), "and there shall be a demise of the crown." The purpose of those words is to make it clear that the passing of the crown by other than death does in fact constitute a demise of the crown in order that what I may call the machinery of the state shall continue without interruption.

I believe that up till a certain date in our history that was not so—various remedial measures to avoid such interruption have from time to time been passed, and these remedial measures have always talked about demise. Therefore it is important to secure the remedial effect of those measures for the continuation without interruption of the matters to which they referred by employing that phrase in this bill.

Subsection 2 makes it plain that the necessary alteration of the Act of Settlement follows the surrender by his majesty, on his behalf and of his descendants, in the succession to the crown, and, lastly that that having been done and his descendants being thereby excluded from the line of succession, subsection 3 makes it plain—as indeed would be no doubt considered appropriate—that the Royal Marriages Act no longer applies to any such issue.

I might supplement what is set forth in these two statements by adding that the title to the crown was vested by the Act of Settlement of 1701 in the heirs of the body of Sophia, Electress of Hanover and granddaughter of James I. This provision involved the crown descending, with certain exceptions, as if it were real property, under the law of inheritance of the United Kingdom before 1926, when this branch of the property law was altered. Power remained in the king in parliament to alter the succession. Until 1931 this power to alter the succession was vested solely in the parliament of the United Kingdom. In that year formal recognition was given to the fact that the succession to the throne was a matter of direct and deep concern to all the members of the British commonwealth of nations. That recognition is set forth in the Statute of Westminster, both in section 4, which was read repeatedly yesterday, and in the preamble. Let me re-read section 4 of the Statute of Westminster:

(4) No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend or be deemed to extend to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

As the parliament of the United Kingdom could not, under the terms of the Statute of Westminster, pass an abdication act which would extend or be deemed to extend to Canada unless the dominion had requested such legislation in advance and consented thereto, steps were taken in the most expeditious and appropriate manner to convey that request and consent and to secure their expression in the United Kingdom Act. Steps are now being taken to secure the assent of the parliament of Canada necessary to the alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne.

I need not repeat what was said yesterday with respect to the manner in which this dominion signified the request and consent of Canada to the enactment of the abdication act. I wish, however, to answer, if I may, a point which was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) on a previous day, when he inquired whether it was not a fact, if the action of the government on December 10 was constitutional, that further legislation was unnecessary.

My reply to that question is, certainly not. The action of December 10 was designed to secure immediate legal effect to the change. The present legislation is designed to carry out the constitutional convention expressed in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster. Let me read the constitutional convention as it appears there. Of course the preamble, as hon. members know, is not an operative part of the statute; nevertheless whatever appears in the preamble is of special significance in relation to the purposes of this statute itself. The constitutional convention is set forth as follows:

And whereas, it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act, that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British commonwealth of nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

The act which has been passed by the British government does alter the law touching the succession to the throne, and it is for that reason we are now asking the assent to its provisions of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: In what regard does it alter the law?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the particular which I have just quoted in what I read from the statement of the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: The succession to the throne is still the same as it was under the Act of Settlement; the Duke of York succeeded.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But the children of Edward will be barred.

Mr. BENNETT: There are none.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There have been days, as I think my right hon. friend said yesterday, when there were pretenders to the throne, and it might be advisable to provide in advance that no pretender who might arise in future should be able to cite his right to the succession by virtue of no change having been made in the law touching on the succession at the time George VI succeeded Edward VIII. It was necessary expressly to amend the act of settlement by eliminating the former King Edward VIII and his issue and descendants from the succession.

May I mention another reason why it is advisable that this parliament should give its assent to the alteration in the law respecting the succession. The British North America Act, the written part of our constitution, repeatedly makes specific reference to the crown and the position the crown holds with respect to legislation in our parliament and in the legislatures of the several provinces. The preamble reads:

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Whereas the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have expressed their desire to be federally united into one dominion under the crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom—

I direct the attention of the house to the fact that the reference there is to the crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Similarly section 2 contains the following words:

2. The provisions of this act referring to Her Majesty the Queen extend also to the heirs and successors of her majesty, kings and queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

And in other sections of the act—section 9, for example—executive government and authority of and for Canada is hereby declared to continue and be vested in the queen. I might mention sections 17, 55, 56, 57 and 91, all of which have reference to the queen and her successors. I shall leave it to my hon. colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to deal with the legal aspects of the matter. I hope I have explained, in a manner which will permit debate to proceed intelligently, the purpose and significance of the measure and why it is introduced at this time.

Before concluding may I address a few remarks to my hon. friend, the member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). Last night he and I spoke with reference to the relation of parliament to abdication, and I thought at the time and saw, when reading Hansard later, that we were speaking at cross purposes. I had in mind the right of a sovereign to abdicate. My hon. friend was emphasizing the necessity of parliament acting with respect to abdication. I thought he was pointing out that the sovereign could not abdicate unless parliament permitted him so to do. If that was his point of view I must maintain the position I took at the time, namely that parliament cannot prevent a sovereign from abdicating if he wishes to abdicate. I grant that action by parliament is essential to validate the position of the successor where a sovereign has abdicated or been deposed, and it was for this reason the parliament at Westminster took the action it did when Edward VIII executed an instrument of abdication, and asked parliament to give effect to it.

I had in mind at the time of speaking one or two authorities on the subject. In this connection I should like to quote a paragraph from an article by Mr. J. A. Spender, which appeared in the January Fortnightly under the heading King and People. I believe hon.

members will agree that few if any persons are more qualified than Mr. Spender from a wide knowledge and close study of parliament and its proceedings to speak with authority upon the position of the sovereign in relation to parliament and the people. In this article at page 7 Mr. Spender says:

> Learned lawyers suggested all manner of difficulties in the Statute of Westminster when the question of the King's abdication arose. It has never been questioned that abdication is within the discretion of the sovereign. It was a favourite device of Queen Victoria's to hint at this possibility when displeased with her ministers. She had this remedy, she reminded them in 1871, if they would insist on keeping parliament sitting interminably and compelling her to remain in England until it was prorogued. Taking from the Lords their power to alter or reject measures, she told Campbell-Bannerman when he was minister in attendance at Balmoral in 1894, was something which "might be obtained from a president, not from her." The question at this point was not whether the sovereign has the right to withdraw, but what measures would be necessary to validate the position of his successor and to bar the succession to any children of the former king.
> There was no difficulty about this in the British parliament, but corresponding legislation was necessary in all the dominion parliaments, and it was asked with some apprehension, would they all accept the Duke of York, might not some of them seize the opportunity to advance republican ideas, and if one of them dissented, would not the validity of the succession be open to question by all under a strict interpretation of the Statute of Westminster?
> The event dissipated all these fears and alarms. The commonwealth parliaments acted in unison with Great Britain and with remarkable unanimity and promptness.

This quotation, I trust, will serve to make clear what I was seeking to assert with respect to a sovereign's right to abdicate, and the function of parliament with respect thereto.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the authorities—or alleged authorities—which are quoted, and particularly with reference to the observations of Mr. Spender, may I say that I regard Mr. Spender's article as a popular interpretation of the difficulties which arose in England by reason of the king signing his letter of abdication, rather than an expert opinion upon the constitutional difficulties therein involved.

At the outset I desire without reservation whatsoever to acknowledge the validity and sufficiency of the act of parliament of the United Kingdom enacted on December 11 last, and entitled His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act, 1936, which received the assent of His former Majesty King Edward VIII. There can be no doubt about that, and I will not find it necessary to repeat this observation in the argument I am about to make. That is fundamental. The act known as His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act was enacted by a parliament having paramount jurisdiction and authority, and its validity cannot be questioned. Therefore I say that there is no doubt whatever, and that no doubt can arise as to the status of our present king, George VI. His Majesty has succeeded to the throne, and to all the rights, privileges and dignities thereunto belonging.

I desire nevertheless to consider the act of the parliament of the United Kingdom and the measure before us in the light of the grave constitutional precedents which have been established thereby. Upon the former king assenting to the act in question, there was a demise of the crown. I suggest, still, that there was no demise of the crown until that act passed and was assented to. It is not necessary for us to split verbal subtleties over the matter. Upon the demise of the crown, the act expressly provided for the succession of our present king, George VI. Furthermore it provided a few details in connection with the demise and the exclusion of any possible heirs of the former king. I shall repeat the provisions:

> (1) Immediately upon the royal assent being signified to this act, the instrument of abdication executed by His present Majesty on the 10th day of December, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-six, set out in the schedule to this act, shall have effect and thereupon His Majesty shall cease to be king and there shall be a demise of the crown, and accordingly a member of the royal family next in succession to the throne shall succeed thereto and to all the rights, privileges and dignities thereunto belonging.

That act was passed by a supreme parliament. Notwithstanding the provisions of the Statute of Westminster, in so far as those provisions may not have been in accord with the act passed on December 11, that latest act was valid.

A proclamation was then made that the new king had ascended the throne. The ordinary formalities were complied with in the streets of London and in the public places of that city. Thereupon an instrument was signed by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and also I think by the Secretary of State of Canada, which declared to the people of Canada that King George VI had succeeded to the throne. It was provided, and properly so, by whoever had jurisdiction in the matter, that every member of this house should subscribe to the oath of allegiance to the new king before taking his seat in the house.

The king mentioned in the British North America Act, which has not been amended, is the king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. I suggest that there can be no division of the throne. At times I read in the papers of the king as the king of Canada, which may be a popular style of reference. I saw also what I thought was a rather silly and grotesque statement by a newspaper in one of the maritime provinces to the effect that for the first time the king was being recognized as the king of certain provinces in this dominion. The king is the king of the different provinces, in a sense; the king is the king of the city of Ottawa; the king is the king of the county of Wright, but only because these different localities with certain geographical descriptions are included in the Dominion of Canada, in the commonwealth of nations and with the possessions and territories of the crown throughout the British Empire.

There is but one king and no matter what action was taken by the government of Canada it could not effectively destroy the legal fact that the proclamation of George VI as king in London under a statute of the imperial parliament constituted him as king with all the attributes and qualities which are mentioned in the British North America Act. In fact we had to consider this whole question in a statute passed in 1934 with reference to the oaths of allegiance, after the Statute of Westminster had been duly enacted in 1931. Chapter 21 of the statutes of 1934 provided that except in the case of the oath to be given under the provisions of the Naturalization Act, which is provided for by a special statute in accordance with another imperial statute dealing with naturalization, and excepting the oath prescribed for members of parliament by the British North America Act, which this parliament could not amend or modify, the oath of allegiance to be administered in Canada on all occasions shall be the following:

> I, A.B., do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to His Majesty King George the Fifth, his heirs and successors according to law. So help me God.

Then follows another provision:

> (2) Where in the said oath of allegiance the name of His present Majesty is expressed, the name of the king or queen of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas, for the time being, shall be substituted from time to time.

Clearly admitting that there could be no separate king for Canada, and clearly admitting that in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, which we all recognize, the king of the United Kingdom is and will continue to be the king mentioned and described in the British North America Act, 1867, which establishes the Canadian constitution. The king of the United Kingdom is "His Majesty" who is a constituent part of all legislation passed by the parliament of Canada.

I am not dealing with the provisions of other dominion constitutions because they are somewhat different. There was a distinct provision in the Union of South Africa Act of 1909, and again in the act of 1934. My impression, which is that of one who is not acquainted with their law and constitution beyond reading from time to time the provisions thereof, is that the Union of South Africa has declared that the king of the United Kingdom shall be deemed to be the king of South Africa under its constitution. Certain reservations have been made which just suggest the possibility that South Africa might change its allegiance by secession. Similar suggestions have come from the Irish Free State from time to time, but none of these have any validity except as hypothetical cases suggested for the purposes of political discussion.

When an abdication has taken place which is recognized by a statute applying to every part of the king's dominions, colonies and possessions, why should we at this stage take the novel and ineffective course of providing by statute that this king, who has been proclaimed in Canada as elsewhere throughout the empire, should be deemed by an act of the parliament of Canada to be the king of the United Kingdom and of all parts of the empire? I should like to suggest that the drafting of the bill to confirm the abdication act was perhaps hurriedly done. But the "whereases" provided in the preamble to that act are not binding provisions of the statute, and have no legal effect in construing the enacting clauses themselves.

I notice that in a statement which was given to the public by the Prime Minister on December 10 last he said:

> Following upon the receipt this morning of the expression of the king's declaration and desire, an order of his excellency the governor general in council was approved, embodying the necessary request and consent to the enactment of the appropriate legislation as regards Canada by the parliament of the United Kingdom, and the government of the United Kingdom was advised accordingly.

He then proceeds to deal with the Statute of Westminster, and says:

> The statute as a whole does apply to Canada, which is therefore guaranteed under section 4 that no legislation of the United Kingdom parliament can apply to Canada unless Canada has expressly requested such application in advance, and consented to its terms.

The order in council of December last, as the Prime Minister stated last evening, is the only document by which Canada requested and consented to the proposed act of the imperial parliament. The newspapers state that the meeting of council was convened at 9.30 in the morning. I assume that some time must have elapsed for so momentous a decision to be given by the members of His Excellency's council, but 9.30 in the morning in Ottawa is 2.30 in the afternoon at Westminster. About three o'clock at Westminster the bill was introduced in the parliament of Great Britain. So that any criticism I make of the order in council and of the statute which is alleged to have been passed in consequence of that order in council is softened and modified somewhat by the fact that these hon. gentlemen meeting at 9.30 in the morning, had only a half an hour in which to approve and finally carry through the order in council dealing with so momentous a matter, and then have it embodied in the form of a cable addressed to the government at Westminster.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I explained yesterday that the government had very carefully considered all possibilities and had given the utmost time and thought to what it might be necessary to do in what necessarily would be a very short time. The fact that council met formally between 9 and 9.30 to pass the order in council does not mean that the order in council had not been very carefully considered and very carefully drafted a day or two days before it was approved.

Mr. CAHAN: I was trying to excuse the right hon. gentleman, as one who, with his colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), introduced that draft order to council, because on its face it seems to be one of the most hopelessly confused examples of draftsmanship that has ever come to my knowledge among the records of the privy council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is only my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. CAHAN: That is my opinion, and I am stating it frankly.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We have had my hon. friend's views on other legislation before.

Mr. CAHAN: Let us deal with the Statute of Westminster. The Statute of Westminster was not drafted with such expedition as was the Act of Abdication or the order in council upon which it was assumed to be based. The Statute of Westminster was approved at an imperial conference, which reported upon the operation of the dominion legislation in 1929, and the provisions of the proposed statute, so far as they refer to Canada in that recommendation and report of 1929, signed by the present Minister of Justice, were accepted and approved at a later date by resolution of a provincial conference held at Ottawa in 1931. In the meantime the imperial conference of 1930 had met and approved of the recitals to the proposed Statute of Westminster, but the prime minister of that day, the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), suggested that before final assent should be given to the provisions of that statute they should be considered by the representatives of the provinces of Canada. The result was that a provincial conference was convened in Ottawa early in 1931; on June 30, 1931, a joint resolution of both houses of parliament was approved by the Commons, and on July 6, 1931, that same joint resolution approving of the terms of the statute was passed by the Senate of Canada. It appears in the volume of our statutes for 1931.

The Statute of Westminster was subsequently enacted in December 1931. My right hon. friend the prime minister in his address stated that some significance was attributable to the fact that in respect of the request and consent of the dominions, it was not stated in section 4 of the Statute of Westminster that that should be the request and consent of the parliament of Canada; and by reason of the fact that the parliament of Canada was not mentioned he assumed, as he often makes assumptions, that the government of Canada could act in requesting and consenting that imperial legislation should apply to the Dominion of Canada in a special way, as provided under section 4 of the Statute of Westminster.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's leader made the same assumption.

Mr. CAHAN: I did not catch it if he did, but even if he did, if it came up for discussion my leader is always open to hear discussion of legal points, and I have known him as well as eminent men on the bench to reverse their preliminary opinions after hearing a full discussion.

Where, I would like to know, does the dominion government get authority for any order in council except through a Canadian statute? Has it not been declared time and time again by the competent courts of Canada that an order in council passed and approved by His Excellency the Governor in Council is valid and legally effective only when there is found supporting statutory authority for the passing of that order in council? This is not the United States of America. There, by their constitution, the president is made the chief executive of the republic, with vast powers vested in him, the like of which are not known outside of one of the modern states—fascist or nazi or communist. We have lived so long in proximity to the United States and the Prime Minister has considered American legislation and American methods to such an extent that he evidently loses sight of the fact that this country is not a part of the United States of America, and that the United States constitution does not apply to Canada. In this country no order in council is effective unless it has the authority of a Canadian statute behind it to render it valid and effective. In the conference of the premiers of the dominion that was the issue we were considering; we considered it time and again, studying the possible effect of those clauses of the proposed Statute of Westminster which would have effect within the confines of Canada. As I remember, it was distinctly said that the request and consent of the Dominion of Canada inevitably and necessarily meant one of two things: either that that request and consent should be made by parliament, as we were discussing it then, in the way in which parliament has always made similar requests and consents, by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada; or that it must be made, if made by a government, in virtue of some statutory authority enacted by the parliament of Canada, expressly vesting in the government the right by order in council to transmit such request and consent.

The right hon. gentleman and those associated with him have presumed without any such statutory authority, by an order in council passed by the governor in council alone, to request and consent to imperial legislation, and to secure that imperial legislation passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom should extend to Canada as part of its fundamental law. This action by order in council had never entered the mind of any sane man who attended either of those conferences at which I was present. It never was discussed; it never was suggested. What does it mean? And it is to this that I wish to call attention, because the action of the government, in requesting the passing of this Declaration of Abdication act, establishes a precedent of most momentous import to the whole people of Canada. It implies that a government in Canada, simply because it deems it politic to do so, without statutory authority from the parliament of Canada—with no more authority than the three tailors of Tooley Street had to enact imperial legislation—may propose that legislation intimately concerning and affecting Canada, passed by the United Kingdom, shall apply as part of the law of Canada and become effective and be recognized necessarily by all the courts of Canada without the Commons consenting, and without the Senate of Canada consenting. What does that signify?

The right hon. gentleman says that if the Commons of Canada does not approve of the arbitrary action which has been taken, then it can vote to turn out the government and put another government in office. That is the reply he makes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; it was my hon. friend's leader who said that.

Mr. CAHAN: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, yes.

Mr. CAHAN: You said it first.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Surely the hon. gentleman does not think that I would be able to get ahead of his leader to that extent.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not trying to get ahead of anyone. I did not understand him to say so. But what does it mean? It means that the Commons of parliament has supreme authority and is in a position to exclude the Senate from legislative action in respect of important measures affecting the life and property of the people of this country. That is what it means. It means a violation of the express provisions of our own British North America Act, that legislation shall be enacted by the two houses of parliament, and that they alone can grant authority to the government. They alone have authority to enact and apply legislation to the whole dominion.

Now this order in council is a precedent. In my lifetime, which is short, it may not cause grave difficulties in Canada. It may not do so within a year or two, but I am convinced as I stand here to-night, with eternity in front of me, that the time will come when that precedent will be regarded by the people of the country as a whole as a most violent disruption or attempt to disrupt the whole constitution of Canada as at present expressed in our British North America acts, and as expressed in the complementary legislation which parliament has passed by virtue of the authority of those acts.

I have an entirely different theory. I may be wrong, but I doubt whether section 4 of the Statute of Westminster applied to this condition at all. I doubt whether it applied to the abdication of King Edward VIII. I doubt whether legislation should have been passed under that section, because, no constituted parliament or government of any dominion had the legislative jurisdiction to deal with an act of abdication. We are circumscribed within the four corners of the British North America Act. Do you find there any authority for the parliament or Canada to change the succession or to deal with the accession of a new king, or to exclude a former king and the heirs of his body from the succession? Do you find that anywhere in the British North America Act? That is one of the subjects which have never been vested by the imperial parliament in any dominion of the commonwealth. It never was vested in Canada. Therefore, when we dealt with that matter, the imperial parliament was unwilling and regarded it as imprudent to divest itself of its exclusive authority to deal by legislation with such matters.

The right hon. gentleman read the provision:

> . . . that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

That was not placed in one of the enacting clauses of the Statute of Westminster and in the deliberations of the several imperial conferences attention was directed to that fact. The Minister of Justice has subscribed his name to at least two reports which I remember, in which it is expressly stated that the placing of such a clause in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster was a mere convention, that it simply stated expressly what were the conventions then existing which had grown out of the use and custom of the United Kingdom in its relations to the dominions and others. And it was said that if that clause were inserted in the statute as one of its enacting clauses of the Statute of Westminster it would effect such rigidity as would render it almost inapplicable to cases of exigency and crisis which might hereafter arise. Therefore that clause was placed in the preamble where it has no effective legal binding authority or obligation.

But in dealing with that clause the various conferences or parliaments considering the matter never suggested that the assent of the government of this dominion might be required. It was not left open to the suggestion that following some precedent of some despotic country the government or the despotic head of that government, without statutory authority from its parliament, could deal with such an important matter without consulting the popular assembly if such existed. But this preamble has no legal or binding authority; it is inserted by way of advice as to the constitutional procedure that should be followed. It says:

> And whereas it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be—

It does not say it is.

> —it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent—

Of whom? Of the governor general in council? Of the Minister of Justice? Of the Prime Minister? No. It expressly states:

> —shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

Yet the right hon. gentleman goes to another section and says that because the words "Dominion of Canada" are there mentioned it is left perfectly free for the governor in council without statutory authority to assume that position and to fulfil that definite requirement of constitutional custom and procedure.

I have taken a good deal of time. I have a number of authorities; I do not intend to cite them, but when this matter was before the imperial conference of 1930, at which Canada was represented by the present leader of the opposition, it was made clear on page 18 of the British report—I have not the Canadian report at hand—as follows:

> To this end it seemed desirable to place on record the view that the sections of the statute relating to the Colonial Laws Validity Act should be so drafted as not to extend to Canada unless the statute was enacted in response to such requests as are appropriate to an amendment of the British North America Act. It also seemed desirable to place on record the view that the sections should not subsequently be extended to Canada except by an act of the parliament of the United Kingdom enacted in response to such requests as are appropriate to an amendment of the British North America Act.

That paragraph clearly indicates the nature of the request which was to be made by or on behalf of Canada in order that an imperial enactment might hereafter extend to Canada as a part of the law of Canada.

Now I ask the right hon. gentleman what is the real significance of this bill which he proposes to enact? The bill contains certain recitals by way of preamble, and then goes on to say:

1. The alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne set forth in the act of the parliament of the United Kingdom intituled "His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act 1936" is hereby assented to.

What is the recital? The recital is:

Now, therefore, His Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada enacts as follows:

Who is "His Majesty"? His Majesty King George VI, if you please. He is the king to whom we owe allegiance. It in fact recites:

Now therefore His Majesty King George VI, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows.

It proceeds to enact a ratification, or purports to enact a ratification, of the abdication of his predecessor, which was already ratified and confirmed only with the assent of his predecessor; it ratifies and enacts that his own succession to the throne is confirmed and made regular, and that the heirs of the body of the late king shall no longer be entitled to assume the office of sovereign of the empire. And that we, the parliament of Canada duly assembled should now pretend to enact such a statute as that with the consent of his present majesty, appears to me to be the most ridiculous suggestion that I have heard in my time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend a question: Did I understand him to say that King George VI succeeded to the throne only with the assent of King Edward VIII and that such assent was essential to King George VI's succession to the throne?

Mr. CAHAN: I say he did succeed to the throne by an act assented to by the former King Edward VIII; there is no doubt about that. And until King Edward VIII had given his assent to the abdication act, King Edward VIII remained king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is just the point I want to bring out. Suppose King Edward VIII, instead of waiting after he had signed the instrument of abdication, had left England and gone to the South Pole, and had refused to take any further part in legislation. Does my hon. friend still say that his assent would have been necessary in order to effect a demise of the crown?

Mr. CAHAN: We have one precedent for what the right hon. gentleman has stated; it is clear, and I need not go into it. There was a king, King James II, who did not formally abdicate but who left the kingdom, went abroad and took up his residence there. The parliament of Great Britain enacted a bill known as a declaration of rights; in fact I think there were two declaration of rights dealing with the matter, the final one being dated February 16, 1689, declaring that James had abdicated and that the throne was vacant.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but James did not—

Mr. CAHAN: Wait a moment. In defiance of the law and of the constitution that then existed, he had abandoned the throne, had fled to a foreign country although he had not signed an act of abdication. The parliament which was summoned declared that his acts were equivalent to an abdication and should be regarded as a formal abdication. Parliament declared that the throne was vacant, and proceeded to provide that the succession should be through William and Mary and their heirs failing, to the heirs of the body of Anne, and failing them to the heirs of the body of William.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They validated the position of James II's successor.

Mr. CAHAN: I disagree with the words; rather than validating his abdication they practically expelled him from the throne.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said they validated the position of his successor as king.

Mr. CAHAN: That was involved, but I do not quite see how that applies to this case. This succession is established. King George VI is king. The succession remains to the heirs of his body, and the descendants of King Edward VIII are precluded from claiming the throne. There is not one scintilla of legal enactment required to perfect it, yet we are asked or we invite the new king to go through the farcical action of assenting to a Canadian act ratifying the abdication of his brother, his own accession to the throne and certain other results that flow therefrom. What is necessary, rather, is to find some formula whereby the precedents established on this occasion by my right hon. friend may be limited for all time to this particular incident.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Oh, oh.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, it is easy to laugh, but I think it is more serious than that. What have we done? The statute passed in England asserts in its preamble that this dominion—I am not referring to the others—has requested and consented to the enactment of this abdication act, and the imperial statute is based upon that preamble. It was Mark Twain, I think, who wrote a story about a boy who declared, "It is so because my father says it is so, and if my father says it is so it is so even if it ain't so." That is about the position in which we are placed.

Whether the government of Great Britain were fully advised as to the confusing contents of the order in council that was passed, or whether it was simply stated to them by cable that Canada requested and consented to this enactment, I do not know. I do not agree at all with the contention of the right hon. gentleman that whatever correspondence passed should not be brought down by him in parliament, on the ground which he stated, that these were communications between two parties. That may be so, but the communications which are relevant and material were the communications sent by the right hon. gentleman for the purpose of procuring an act of the parliament of Great Britain. They are not exempt from production by reason of the fact—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The order in council covers that; it is all set forth there.

Mr. CAHAN: No request and consent is contained in the order in council. All that is contained in the order in council is approval of the imperial parliament making a misstatement in a preamble to an imperial act.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The order in council is all there was.

Mr. CAHAN: If that is all there was it is clear that this order in council does not contain an express request and consent. The right hon. gentleman had many precedents available. Time and again this parliament, by joint resolution, has approved of addresses to his majesty requesting and consenting that certain legislation should be enacted applicable to this country. I remember that on two or three occasions—as the Minister of Justice must recall, although I have not the record before me—we passed joint resolutions containing requests and consents of that kind. For instance, I believe we did it in connection with parliament's request for extraterritorial jurisdiction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend arguing that we should have waited and called parliament?

Mr. CAHAN: I am not saying my right hon. friend should have waited for parliament, but he seems always to have in his mind that he should have followed the precedent set by Australia. I have information before me which would indicate Australia was so well advised of what was impending—I do not know whether they were better advised than my right hon. friend—that on December 4 a special summons was issued for a special session of parliament on December 10.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend think we should have done that?

Mr. CAHAN: The right hon. gentleman says he was so taken up, he had so much to do, that he had not time to consider or to deal with the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, he did not say anything of the kind at any time or in any place.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, that is pretty nearly what he said; I cannot bear in mind the absolute details of it. Here is a long statement in which the Prime Minister of Canada states that so far as Canada is concerned parliament has been called to meet on January 14, and that it could not be summoned in special session before definite action was taken by His Majesty which would require the consideration of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite true.

Mr. CAHAN: That is true, yes; but there are other considerations. The preamble to the Statute of Westminster is not a binding legal document; it is only a suggestion as to the constitutional procedure which should be adopted in ordinary times when there are no emergencies. But the right hon. gentleman declares there was an emergency. He knows what took place; I do not know. It was perfectly clear that section 4 of the Statute of Westminster did not necessarily refer to a statute such as the Abdication Act which alone was within the competency and jurisdiction of the imperial parliament. Why did he not make it clear that it was impossible to follow the constitutional procedure or convention, recited in the preamble of that statute and that he did not object to the Abdication Act as an emergency measure? Instead of that, as a precedent for all future time, we have an imperial parliament declaring that Canada did request and consent, whereas as a matter of fact one may look within the four corners of the order in council and fail to see any request or consent in accord with the precedents hitherto established in Canada. All we find is that the governor in council met and approved of an act being submitted to the parliament of the United Kingdom reciting a preamble in which were stated certain alleged facts which were not quite in accordance with the true facts or in accordance with the constitutional practice which had hitherto prevailed in Canada.

I believe this bill is unnecessary; it is futile, and it can have no effect but to cover up a condition which hon. gentlemen opposite appear more or less anxious to conceal. At this date, if hon. members opposite had wished to have the position regularized, so far as it is possible to regularize it, it would have been quite sufficient to have introduced a joint resolution of the House of Commons and the Senate approving of the government acting in an emergency to the extent to which they did, so as to make it clear that its action by order in council formed no general precedent for the future enactment and application to Canada of imperial legislation.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I confess I have followed with some difficulty the observations of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). Although he speaks always with a great display of learning, I am not at all sure—and I believe other hon. members must be in the same position—that at the conclusion of his observations the real position he is taking was quite clear.

First of all he contends that the act of the imperial parliament, His Majesty's Declaration of Abdication Act, was all that was necessary, but on the other hand he criticizes the government for having resorted to an order in council expressing to the imperial parliament the request and consent of Canada to the passage of the act, instead of having done so by way of parliamentary enactment. I suggest the two positions are contradictory, and at least one of them should be abandoned by the hon. member. When the Statute of Westminster was enacted fears were expressed in many quarters, both in Canada and outside of it, as to the dangers which might arise in times of crisis because of the lack of unity which would be the result of the enactment. Fortunately events which have taken place have shown those fears to be groundless. There has never been greater unity throughout the British commonwealth than was displayed in the month of December last. After the crisis had passed the London Times used this language:

> The past few days have provided a searching test under which the free association of the British commonwealth has demonstrated a fundamental unity exceeding anything which could have been guaranteed by the most rigid paper constitution.

My hon. friend has referred to the British North America Act, and I agree with him when he says that strictly speaking, from the legal point of view, at the moment the present king came to the throne he became our sovereign. I would invite the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) to the fact that the British North America Act is still the constitution of Canada. Section 7 of the Statute of Westminster specially enacts that nothing in that act may have the effect of repealing or amending the British North America Act. By the wording of section 2 of the British North America Act the king of the United Kingdom is our sovereign. The section is as follows:

> 2. The provisions of this act referring to Her Majesty the Queen extend also to the heirs and successors of Her Majesty, kings and queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The crown is interwoven through many of the sections, and so long as the British North America Act is not repealed—it was thought by Canada that it should not be repealed or even amended until there was some consent on the part of the various parties to the agreement of confederation—those sections of the act apply to us in the strictly legal viewpoint.

Mr. BENNETT: The implication is that they might be amended by another act of the imperial parliament, namely, the Statute of Westminster.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, by implication, and to that extent it does apply to Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was wrong when he said the other day that the Statute of Westminster does not mean anything. If there had been no Statute of Westminster he would not have been able to speak on the law of succession to the throne. That would have been none of the business of the Canadian parliament. My hon. friend would have been deprived of the opportunity of making the eloquent address he made the other day, as well as the one which I am sure he is going to make to-day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We can speak about it, but we cannot do anything else.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): At any rate my hon. friend is taking advantage of the privilege to speak about it. My hon. friend differs from the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George; he runs too fast, while the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is stuck in motionless immobility. He sticks to the British North America Act, and he considers that nothing has been changed by the enactment of the Statute of Westminster. Under the Statute of Westminster anything that concerns the crown is the concern of all the members of the commonwealth. That is the constitutional convention embodied in the preamble. It means something, notwithstanding what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has said.

Mr. BENNETT: With my hon. friend's permission, may I direct his attention to the fact that it only purports to be a statement of existing constitutional practice, which makes it still stronger.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That makes my argument all the stronger. The Statute of Westminster was enacted following the imperial conference of 1926 which appointed a committee of dominion representatives to consider and study the legislation of the various dominions and of the United Kingdom. The imperial conference of 1930 gave effect to the proposals of the committee of dominion representatives. I should like to direct attention to the report of the conference on the operation of dominion legislation, 1929, paragraphs 56, 59, 60 and 61. These paragraphs deal with the effect of conventions in British constitutional law, and they read:

56. The association of constitutional conventions with law has long been familiar in the history of the British commonwealth; it has been characteristic of political development both in the domestic government of these communities and in their relations with each other; it has permeated both executive and legislative power. It has provided a means of harmonizing relations where a purely legal solution of practical problems was impossible, would have impaired free development, or would have failed to catch the spirit which gives life to institutions. Such conventions take their place among the constitutional principles and doctrines which are in practice regarded as binding and sacred whatever the powers of parliaments may in theory be.

59. As, however, these freely associated members are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it is clear that the laws relating to the succession to the throne and the royal style and titles are matters of equal concern to all.

60. We think that appropriate recognition would be given to this position by means of a convention similar to that which has in recent years controlled the theoretically unfettered powers of the parliament of the United Kingdom to legislate upon these matters. Such a constitutional convention would be in accord with and would not derogate from and is not intended in any way to derogate from the principles stated by the imperial conference of 1926 as underlying the position and mutual relations of the members of the British commonwealth of nations. We therefore recommend that this convention should be formally put on record in the following terms:

Then follows the recommendation. Paragraph 61 follows:

61. We recommend that the statement of principles set out in the three preceding paragraphs be placed on record in the proceedings of the next imperial conference, and that the constitutional convention itself in the form which we have suggested should appear as a formal recital or preamble in the proposed act to be passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom.

This constitutional convention which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George brushes aside with much levity, has been considered to be binding upon all those who have had anything to do with it since the Statute of Westminster was enacted. My hon. friend may say that the procedure adopted by this government was childish, frivolous and ridiculous—I forgive him for those words; but it was not considered so by the law officers of the crown in Canada or by the law officers in the United Kingdom who were jealous in attempting to reconcile this constitutional convention with the legality of the proposed statute. It was not considered so by the law officers in the governments of the other commonwealth nations. My hon. friend stands in splendid isolation as far as this opinion is concerned. I think we can rely upon the view of the gentlemen to whom I have referred.

One part of the imperial statute gave effect to the abdication of the then king and provided for the accession to the throne of the lawful successor and heir to the succession, the Duke of York, but there was also a provision in the statute which was in effect an alteration of the law of succession, as provided for in the Act of Settlement.

Subsection 2 of section 1 of the act bars His Majesty and his issue, if any, and descendants of such issue, from any right of succession to the throne, and provides that section 1 of the Act of Settlement shall be construed accordingly.

Mr. BENNETT: That is merely declaratory if the statute is complete in describing the demise of the crown.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No.

Mr. BENNETT: It must be.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, because I am afraid that under the Act of Settlement, and it was so considered by the authorities in Great Britain, if the former King Edward happened to contract a marriage and had children by that marriage, his children would have had a serious claim to the succession.

Mr. BENNETT: Not children born after the demise.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is a debatable question, I agree, but my right hon. friend will agree that in a situation like the one that existed—

Mr. BENNETT: It is sound to make the declaration.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): —precautions had to be taken. These were two different things. The recital in the preamble, upon which the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George bases his whole contention, mentions that it is according to the present practice under the new constitutional situation that any alteration in the law of succession should be assented to by the parliaments of the dominions. But the only alteration is the one I have just mentioned. I agree with my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that the giving effect to the abdication and making the road free for the accession of the next in line, the Duke of York, did not constitute an alteration in the law of succession, not at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister repeat that? I want to be sure about that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I say that I agree with the leader of the opposition that giving effect to the abdication of his former majesty by the imperial parliament and clearing the road for the accession of the next in line, the Duke of York, under the statutes as they then existed did not constitute an alteration in the law of succession. What constitutes an alteration in the succession law is, in my opinion, the provision in subsection 2 of section 1 of this bill, which precludes the possible children of His former Majesty Edward VIII from having any claim to the throne of England. That was an alteration, and that was the only part of the law that comes under the recital in the preamble of the Statute of Westminster. We are acting within the four corners of that act by asking parliament to assent to this alteration in the succession act.

My hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George states that our assent to that part of the imperial act providing for giving effect to the abdication and the accession of King George VI should have been given by way of parliamentary legislation, not by order in council. The position in that respect has been very well explained both by the Prime Minister and by the leader of the opposition.

The third recital of the Statute of Westminster reads as follows:

> And whereas it is in accord with the established constitutional position that no law hereafter made by the parliament of the United Kingdom shall extend to any of the said dominions as part of the law of that dominion otherwise than at the request and with the consent of that dominion:

This new convention in that recital was adopted for the purpose of reconciling the existence of the legal power in the parliament of the United Kingdom to legislate for the dominions, which legal power undoubtedly exists, with the now established constitutional position, namely, equality of status between the United Kingdom and the dominions. But there is a difference between the convention embodied in recital number three and the convention embodied in recital number two. There it was regarded as a practical consideration affecting the drafting and interpretation of statutes; it was thought desirable that the principle should be expressed in the enacting part of the act, and that gave birth to section 4. Section 4 of the Statute of Westminster reads:

> No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

Well, the difference of opinion between the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and myself, the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition—and here I disagree with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre—is that the term "dominion" as it is used in the second last line of section 4 of the Statute of Westminster clearly applies to the government, and not to the parliament of the dominion. There are many reasons for that. In other parts of the Westminster act, whenever it was the intention that the parliament of a dominion should act, it was so expressly declared. As was stated yesterday, in the section referring to the Commonwealth of Australia it is specifically provided that:

> The request and consent referred to in section 4 shall mean the request and consent of the parliament and government of the commonwealth.

If section 4 meant the request and consent of the parliament of the dominion, why should the statute, three sections later, refer to the parliament, when it comes to the Commonwealth of Australia? What the leader of the opposition said yesterday with respect to this matter is quite right. When the resolution to concur in the Statute of Westminster was discussed in the parliament of the commonwealth, Mr. Latham, now Sir J. G. Latham—

Mr. BENNETT: The Chief Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I had the privilege of meeting him at the conference of 1926, and when this matter was under discussion in the parliament of the commonwealth he took the position that the word "dominion" there meant the government. Here is what Mr. Latham said:

> What is meant by "that dominion"? Generally it means, in practice, the executive government of the dominion. I propose to ask the house to amend that provision by requiring that the request and consent shall be made and given by the parliament and by the government. We are asked to do something very remarkable.

Further he says:

> For the word "dominion" I am proposing to insert the words "parliament and government." The object of my amendment is that, instead of the request being from a dominion, it should be from the parliament and the government of a dominion.

I consulted the reports of the debates in the commonwealth and I saw that Mr. Latham's amendment was not agreed to by the then government—the Scullin government—but they accepted another amendment along the same lines, moved by Mr. Lyons; and it is that amendment, then adopted by the parliament of the commonwealth, that has been inserted in the Westminster act, to make a special provision and disposition as far as the Commonwealth of Australia is concerned. And later, when the Westminster bill was before the British House of Commons, Sir James Withers moved:

> That section 4 be amended by inserting, after the second word "that", in line 5, the words "the parliament of". But upon Mr. J. H. Thomas, Secretary for the Dominions, explaining that the clause was drafted in its present form at the request of the dominions themselves, the amendment was negatived.

There is therefore no doubt that the intention was that it should be the government of the dominion.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have only forty minutes. I did not interrupt my hon. friend.

Mr. CAHAN: It was not in the clause as submitted to the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): If the Speaker will allow me extra time I shall be glad to answer the question.

Mr. CAHAN: The clauses dealing with Australia and Australia's procedure were not included with the clauses submitted to the Dominion of Canada or the government of Canada at the time. Only those clauses were submitted to the Dominion of Canada which referred to action by the Dominion of Canada, and so, at the time that the clause with reference to Canada was approved, there was no way of comparing the two or noting the difference.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Does not my hon. friend think that as a member of the government at the time, if he thought it should be the parliament instead of the government, he might have moved and tried to get the change that Mr. Latham succeeded in getting in Australia?

Mr. CAHAN: It was perfectly clear without that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is not the opinion of everyone else.

Mr. CAHAN: It was the opinion of the conference that dealt with it.

Mr. POULIOT: Is St. Lawrence-St. George dissatisfied with our king?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I agree that the idea underlying the placing of the section as it is with regard to Canada and the other dominions, which did not ask for a special exemption from this provision, was to meet occasions such as the one that confronted us in the month of December—occasions of emergency when it was necessary, in spite of what is being said to the contrary, to act speedily. And the result shows the marvellous elasticity of the British constitution, which always meets emergencies as they arise and deals with matters in such a way that the common sense of statesmen in a time of crisis prevails over the precision of a distinguished lawyer. We were at a time when the situation was a disturbing factor in Canada as well as in Great Britain and in every other nation of the commonwealth, and I believe that even my hon. friend will admit that a prompt decision then was a service rendered to the nation. Indeed, every British citizen, in Canada and elsewhere, was hoping, and expressing the hope in very clear language, that this crisis would come to an end as speedily as possible. Well, then, I repeat, the elasticity of the British constitution worked, and it resulted in a decision that satisfied everybody in Canada except those who cannot be satisfied with anything the government does. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, I am afraid, is among those. I must say that his famous telegram, of which he spoke the other day did not raise in Canada the disturbance which was expected. Everybody everywhere expressed the hope that we would deal with this matter immediately and without confusion.

If the constitutional convention, which is enacted in section 4, requiring the assent and request of the dominion, means anything—and it does mean something—it means that everything that is of concern to all the members of the commonwealth should be dealt with by all the members of the commonwealth. If we had to do anything it had to be done immediately or there would have been chaos in Canada. Even with what was done, I was constantly receiving telephone messages, even from distinguished judicial authorities, asking what should be done—whether they should hold court, whether there was still a king, and so on. My hon. friend laughs, but they were not all so sure of their ground as he is, and they were afraid of what might be the outcome of procrastination and further delay. The whole matter was settled by the government interpreting, correctly as I believe, the feelings of the population of Canada; and after all that is what is meant by the Westminster act in providing that the assent of the dominions shall be given. It means the assent of the people of a dominion, and the will of the people was clearly manifested. I claim that it was legal and more than legal; it was sensible. With all due respect to my hon. friend, I must say, when he uses the words "absurd," and "ridiculous," and "frivolous," that we would have done the absurd thing if we had done what he suggests.

My hon. friend ridiculed the argument that if a wrong has been done in any way parliament has the remedy in its hands. That is quite true. There is nothing extraordinary in that contention. Parliament has always the remedy in its hands, and parliament is satisfied with the way in which this matter has been settled. My hon. friend has tried to convince his leader and in my turn I hope to convince him; I hope he will see that we could not have acted otherwise in the circumstances.

The present bill, as I have said, is necessary because of the alteration in the law of succession, which is quite a different thing. Subsection 2 of section 1, according to my view, changes the law of succession by depriving of the throne the possible children and heirs of Edward. In the event of marriage there is, as I said, no retroactivity needed, because there is no child, no marriage even, at the present time.

May I now just sum up my contention on these two points. Upon the abdication of Edward VIII it became necessary because of the attendant circumstances for the parliament of the United Kingdom to enact legislation for two main purposes: first, to make the abdication and the accession of George VI effective; second, to alter the law touching the succession to the throne. In so far as the contemplated legislation would relate to the abdication and succession it would extend at once to the dominion as part of the law of that dominion, and would consequently require the previous request and consent of the dominion to the enactment thereof, in accordance with section 4 of the Statute of Westminster. In so far as the legislation would operate to alter the law touching the succession to the throne, the assent of the dominion parliament is required in accordance with the constitutional convention set out in the second recital to the Statute of Westminster, but such assent could be given within any reasonable time thereafter, as it would not be a condition precedent to the enactment of the legislation but merely a convention limiting its operation in the dominion. With regard to the former the government took the action which was required under section 4, which admittedly does not require the assent of parliament. With regard to the latter the government now asks the assent of parliament to the alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne, so as to give effect to the convention. Inasmuch as such alteration can operate in the future only in the event of there being issue of the Duke of Windsor, it is not necessary that such assent should have any retroactive effect.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to conclude these remarks by a word or two as to the importance of the throne in the British constitution. It is the bond. When His Majesty's Abdication Act was discussed in the British House of Commons a socialist member, Mr. Stephen, supporting an amendment to the effect that the throne should be done away with and we should have a republic, said—I have his words here—that it was a fallacy to claim that the dominions are bound to the empire by the British throne, that there was no bond between the various parts of the commonwealth embodied in the throne, but that the only bond was economic necessity, and this would last even if a republic were instituted in the United Kingdom. I am pleased that when the vote was recorded in the British House of Commons the amendment was rejected by a vote of 403 to 5. Mr. Stephen certainly did not interpret correctly the feelings of the dominions. I have been a long time in public life in Canada; I have been in this parliament I am ashamed to say how many years, and I think I know pretty well the sentiments of Canadians as a whole. I have had relations with public men in the other dominions. I desire to say to-day that the British throne is the cement, the bond that unites all of us, and if it should disappear and be replaced by some other form, as suggested by this gentleman, I am afraid that the end of the British Empire would be in sight and that Canada would soon not be part of the British commonwealth of nations. That is the great and the consoling lesson which comes to us as an outcome of all these troubles, which caused concern to many people throughout the commonwealth and even throughout the world. But we are proud to say at the end that the action which has been taken, the sentiments which have been expressed, the feeling of all British citizens throughout the world, have been such that we have demonstrated not only to everyone in our own dominions but to all the world the granite strength of the British constitution enshrined as it is in the British throne.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): This is obviously rather a field day for the constitutional lawyers. Neither by training nor by temperament am I fitted to enter upon the purely legal aspects of this case. But since the vast majority of the people of Canada are not constitutional lawyers perhaps I may be permitted to say a few words with regard to some other aspects of the matter.

I confess that as I have listened to the discussion so far I have not been very greatly enlightened, but indeed somewhat confused. We have had brought before us a great many legal and metaphysical subtleties. Whether the crown is unitary or divisible and multiple I do not quite know. I would say this, that as a Canadian I believe that Canada ought to be able to have something to say with regard to who is to rule over Canada. Whatever that may mean as to the throne being divisible or unitary, let the lawyers argue. Again I confess that even the genial Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) did not altogether clear up my difficulties with regard to the distinction between legal and constitutional. Possibly it is because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has not had as long and formal training in law as have some of the others who have spoken, that I could not follow his argument, but I thought that he mixed the two on occasions, even when he was trying to make the distinction clear. Again that may be merely because I cannot clearly follow a strictly legal argument.

I feel the same way when we are told that the preamble to the Statute of Westminster does not constitute an operative part of the statute. As I said the other day, it seems to me that whatever may be true ordinarily, in this particular case at least the preamble occupies a very important place, since it lays down a constitutional convention. It would appear to me, with only a layman's outlook, that it ought to have a real place in the statute if we invoke the statute at all, concerning the desirability of which there seems to be some question.

Again, we heard the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) talking about the demise of the crown. I think I had better read his statement. He said:

> We call it in technical parlance his abdication, but we had no precedent for abdications and as to the implications of them, and the statute, in order that there might be no difficulty, in that section declared that there was a demise of the crown. The king was dead.
> Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East): Hear, hear; that is right.
> Mr. Bennett: The king was dead. And from that there followed—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My "hear, hear" applied to the part concerning the demise of the crown.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister took that interpretation, did he?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It applied to the demise of the crown; that is what I meant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The right hon. leader of the opposition interpreted the phrase in the sense that the king was dead, and if a demise of the crown does not mean that I do not know just what it does mean. Well, really, speaking again as a layman, if the king is dead I do not quite see why we should worry so much about barring the king's issue. My hon. friend beside me suggests that he might have a posthumous child, but that does not alter my argument. In this as in many other instances we are just tied up with mere legal subtleties, forgetting realities altogether.

In the same way the leader of the opposition says that this statute must be construed in a certain way but it is not altered. Well, if that is true and if that kind of interpretation is going to guide us, I am afraid that the ordinary people among us are not going to get a great deal of enlightenment. The Minister of Justice was perhaps rather hard on the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), when he said he was stuck in motionless immobility. I think that was his phrase. I did feel, however, that the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George had not advanced a great deal beyond colonial days, and was not giving anything like sufficient importance to the passing of the Statute of Westminster and the position which Canada has occupied ever since the war. I did agree very heartily with him, however, that statutory authority is necessary if orders in council are to have validity. Further it seemed to me that he was quite correct when he said that this bill and the discussions on it were very largely farcical. After listening to hon. members on both sides of the house who have spoken so far, I am inclined to believe that the statement I made on Friday last still stands.

In the first place let me say that there has been no opportunity for us to move that the correspondence should be brought down. The Prime Minister has not absolutely refused to do this, as my motion has not come before the house, but the right hon. gentleman intimated that he thought to do so would be very undesirable. I would point out that the Prime Minister has himself quoted certain documents and referred to others. According to the rules of the house I believe these should be laid upon the table. Let me say further that the bill which is before us, touching the succession to the throne, really cannot be discussed intelligently without the house being in possession of all the facts. I think that is clear. We are asked to pass an important piece of legislation supplementing, if you like, the legislation passed in Great Britain; validating, if that is the correct word to use, the order in council passed a few weeks ago; yet we do not have the facts of the case fully before us. Surely these facts cannot be said to be in any real sense confidential. It is true that they are of a somewhat intimate nature, and I have no desire whatever to create any further scandal than already has been created, but at the same time this house is not able to say in advance whether the government was justified in the position it took.

It is all very well for the government to come now and tell us that from the information it had at its disposal it was quite justified. I do not think that is quite good enough. I do not think the Prime Minister himself is following the best traditions of this house when he asks us to take his own, unsupported word with regard to what has taken place. If the leader of the opposition was correct in the statement he made yesterday, undoubtedly in any case the proceedings of this house lack all reality. He said:

> So far as the government of the day is concerned, it staked its life upon the action which it took, and under our system of constitutional government, with the administration commanding as it does a majority in the House of Commons, the question becomes nothing but a matter of recording the will of that majority upon the records of this house.

If the government is so sure of its majority; if parliament has fallen so low that the government can absolutely count upon the backing of every one of its members, I say it is not a very good outlook for democracy. The Minister of Justice has referred to the confusion that might have arisen if the cabinet had not taken action. That is nothing to the confusion that might arise if this house showed some independence and did not endorse what has been done by the government.

In spite of his large majority the Prime Minister seems very anxious to obtain any support he can get. Yesterday he very gladly accepted the backing offered by the leader of the opposition, though technically the position of the leader of the opposition differed very widely from the position the Prime Minister himself holds. The leader of the opposition said that the statute dealing with the succession had not been altered. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice agrees with that, but I know that a short time ago the Prime Minister did not agree. That is what he said in his statement to the public on December 10. First he quoted a clause from the Statute of Westminster:

> —any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

After that quotation he said:

> Questions arise as to the procedure required to carry out this provision of the Statute of Westminster, which were not contemplated when it was drawn and enacted—

Then he makes this explicit statement:

The action involved in giving effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication constitutes such an alteration.

I do not think the Minister of Justice admits that to-day, but that is what the Prime Minister said in his message to the public. I repeat his words:

The action involved in giving effect to His Majesty's instrument of abdication constitutes such an alteration.

To-day the Minister of Justice is trying to make us believe that all we in this parliament have to sanction is the question of the succession, as it may affect any possible children of the king. However, at the time he gave the public interview the Prime Minister was clearly of the impression that the very fact that one king took the place of another involved an alteration in the succession. Following that the Prime Minister said that it was necessary for parliament "to take appropriate action to give its assent to the alteration in the succession." Evidently he had in mind the alteration in the succession caused by the abdication and by the accession of King George VI.

I should like to learn the exact meaning of the word "request." In his statement to the public the Prime Minister said this:

The use of these words, "request and consent," does not of course refer to the initiation of any part of the proceedings other than the inclusion of Canada in the contemplated legislation. They embody the safeguarding words expressly provided in the Statute of Westminster.

That is rather curious. Let me read what appears in schedule two of the act of the parliament of the United Kingdom:

And whereas, following upon the communication to his dominions of His Majesty's said declaration and desire, the Dominion of Canada pursuant to the provisions of section four of the Statute of Westminster, 1931, has requested and consented to the enactment of this act, and the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand and the Union of South Africa have assented thereto.

I should like to know why it is sufficient for the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand and the Union of South Africa to consent, while it seems to be necessary for the Dominion of Canada to "request" as well as to "consent." I can scarcely believe that in a document of so great importance the words could be loosely used; they must have some real meaning. In view of the statement the Prime Minister made to the public a few weeks ago, and in view of his evident desire to escape any great responsibility in the circumstances, I should like to know what "request" really means. That particular word was not touched upon by the Minister of Justice.

I hold in my hand a document I received a few days ago, copies of which I believe were sent to the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition. It comes from Doctor W. P. M. Kennedy and is an advance copy of an editorial headed "Canada and the Abdication Act," which is to appear in the University of Toronto Law Journal. On this technical point I venture to quote a footnote to one of the paragraphs:

It will be noticed that Canada alone invoked section 4 and apparently that Canada as distinct from South Africa and of course as distinct from Australia and New Zealand (to which the statute does not apply), "requested" the abdication act as well as assented to it.

In the text of the article Doctor Kennedy states:

It is, however, interesting to note that for Australia, if and when that statute operates for Australia, the statute contemplates, on special Australian request, that the "request and consent" necessary under section 4 will mean those "of the parliament and government of Australia." Does the absence of any similar rule for Canada in section 4 mean in proper circumstances, such as a change in the British North America Act, that "request and consent" may come through Canadian order in council?

I suggest that is a question which should be answered to-day. May I now return to the imperial enactment, and point out that in it there is no mention whatever of the Irish Free State. In the Statute of Westminster the word "dominions" is given this meaning:

1. In this act the expression "dominion" means any of the following dominions, that is to say, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, the Irish Free State and Newfoundland.

That is the meaning of it. And, if I may be permitted to read it again, the preamble of the Statute of Westminster states:

. . . that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

So far as the Irish Free State is concerned we have had no such assent.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Oh, yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Oh, no. The Irish Free State did not consent to the abdication act; it passed one of its own acts. That is different. The British act applies everywhere, and the Irish Free State is not exempt. Section 4 is very specific, and in order that the situation may be clear in our minds I shall read it again:

> No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

The Irish Free State did not do so. Just what the situation is in Ireland with regard to the king, I do not know. It is a question I would leave to the constitutional lawyers.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The Irish Free State have a constitution of their own; the British North America Act does not apply to Ireland.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not talking about their act but about an Imperial act. The minister must not try to sidetrack me in that way. Section 4 is very explicit, and I suggest that the meaning of the word "dominion" is no less clear.

I do not intend to go into the complicated question of all that took place, or the alternative the government may have had. I know there are difficulties, no matter which way one looks at the matter. I would point out, however, that for several months there has been an extended series of articles appearing in the United States press. Undoubtedly expressions of opinion from the United States had an immense effect upon Mr. Baldwin, because he stated that he had received a stream of letters from the United States and Canada. I should like to know from whom those Canadian letters came. They could not very well have come from private individuals, because such letters would not have had such great influence upon Mr. Baldwin. We do not yet know who wrote officially from this country. We do not know that; we have not been told. Yet apparently they had a great deal of influence upon Mr. Baldwin.

Further, in the United Kingdom a certain measure of censorship was imposed and United States journals were not allowed to circulate freely. Why? That question has never been satisfactorily answered. Since the affair has been over we have had a great variety of explanations circulated in the United Kingdom, but we in this country have no means of judging just how true some of those assertions may be. We would be able to judge a little more correctly if we had the papers before us. Certain articles have been given wide circulation in Canada. One paper, published in Ottawa, suggested the other day, I think rightly, that these are the things which tend to undermine the monarchy. I would go further and say that they tend to undermine confidence in our democratic institutions.

Personally I have never been convinced that the affair of Mrs. Simpson was a sufficient motive for the action taken by Mr. Baldwin. I have never been able to convince myself of that. If my suspicion is correct, I cannot feel very happy that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and our government should have fallen in line with the action taken by Mr. Baldwin and his government. So far we have had no possible way of knowing just where the truth lies.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the government of this country could prevent the king from resigning?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, but I do say that because of Mr. Baldwin's stand—apparently that stand was endorsed by the Prime Minister of this country—the king was put into a position where he was almost forced to go.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Again this is a matter upon which, without the documents being before us, we can have only the very vaguest of ideas.

Mr. BENNETT: We have his word for it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We have his word for it!

An hon. MEMBER: That should be enough.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An hon. member suggests that that should be enough, but anyone who knows what goes on during a long series of negotiations realizes how much such statements may mean if they are taken without regard to the circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thought I had made clear to my hon. friend and other hon. members that the first communication this government had from Mr. Baldwin on this matter was after the third interview Mr. Baldwin had had with His Majesty the King. The first interview was at Mr. Baldwin's instance; the next two interviews were held at the instance of His Majesty. It was only after the second of these later interviews that Mr. Baldwin communicated with me asking me my opinion, in order that he might be guided in his consideration of the matter with which he had to deal. Surely this will make clear how much there has been in the way of correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is probably better then that we did not get into this game earlier.

An hon. MEMBER: Game?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; that is what I call it. It has been very decidedly a game and unless the papers are brought down we cannot tell how far we are involved. May I repeat, we have the right in this parliament, when discussing a matter of this kind, to have all the relevant facts before us. As I said the other day, I am not so much concerned with who occupies the throne as I am with what part Canada played in the abdication. It seems to me that the decision on what is undoubtedly a most important matter ought not to have been left entirely in the hands of the government. They say, "What could we do?" Well, they could have called parliament. That might have led to a little confusion, but in actual practice I do not think it would have been very great. They might have given a provisional assent. If parliament has any worth while part to play, any assent should have been provisional. That was not done.

I am afraid that if a government can take such action without protest, it will be able to follow the same procedure in connection with other matters. If I have a correct understanding of what was done, the statute itself was very largely set aside. As I say, I do not understand all the implications of the distinction between a statute and a constitutional convention, but if either a statute or a constitutional convention was set aside, it seems to me that it might be very easy for a government in the future to proceed along much the same lines in a great matter such as war or some other national emergency. I regret that with such stalwart defenders of parliamentary rights as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice in the house, it should devolve upon a humble private member to attempt to stand up for the rights of parliament. I feel sure that had the leader of the opposition been Prime Minister and taken the action which was taken, and which he says he himself would have taken, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice would be doing what I am doing to-day, only more forcibly and eloquently.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I commend the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) for the stand which they have taken in this matter. The other day on the train I met a United States citizen who told me how marvellous he thought the British countries were when a king could go and another one come in and the wheels of government continue to turn smoothly. He told me that he thought that was something which could not be done in many countries of the world.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has said that he does not understand the distinction between constitutional and legal matters. The best explanation of that lack of understanding is that there is no distinction. Probably he never heard about constitutional law. We have to adopt legislation which has been passed at Westminster ratifying the abdication of the former king. I agree with those who say that that abdication had no legal effect until the king had sanctioned the bill which was passed by parliament. The Prime Minister has pointed out that the king had a perfect right to abdicate. That abdication was made valid by his sanction of the bill, his last act as King of the United Kingdom.

I do not intend to speak at any great length on this matter, but I should like, sir, to direct your attention to one point. Every member of this house has taken an oath of allegiance to the new king. As I understand it, this matter could have been discussed before, but the fact is that we are now confronted with a fait accompli. King George VI is our king, and no one can change that. Even though the Statute of Westminster did not exist, there would still be the same king. We have taken an oath of allegiance to him; therefore why say any more about it? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said that all hon. members and all the people throughout the country are not constitutional lawyers. I admit that, but we are all British subjects, and we must act accordingly and pass this bill as soon as possible without talking any more about it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I would not have had anything to say on this, but in view of what has been said this afternoon I think I should make a few observations. It is now almost six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): But for the observations that were made during the progress of the debate this afternoon I should not have intervened at this time, but I think it well that certain matters, the accuracy of which can be determined, should be disposed of by reference to the record, and that there should be no misapprehension of the conditions under which the action taken by the government was taken—not because I am in any sense endeavouring to support the government, for it is quite capable of doing that itself, but because this is a matter which concerns not governments but parliament and the people of this country. From that angle I speak, not as the leader of a party nor yet in defence of the action taken by the government, but rather as a citizen of this country who is interested in seeing that there should not be placed upon the record statements which are wholly inaccurate with respect to what occurred prior to the action that was taken. For it would be indeed a strange anomaly if we in this parliament should, even by our silence, suggest censure of those who are members of another parliament; and I think we would resent their being critical of our actions when they had not before them the facts upon which we had proceeded. The suggestion that the Prime Minister of Great Britain acted in any other than a becoming manner is one which, I think, should not be heard in this parliament. I may be wrong in that view, but that is my present conviction with respect to the matter.

That there is room for acute differences of opinion with respect to some phases of this matter is, of course, beyond question. The learned argument to which we listened this afternoon with so much interest, presented by the distinguished constitutionalist who represents St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), and the view in the opposite sense expressed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) indicate how differences of opinion may arise with respect to matters of this kind. But, after all, there are certain fundamental matters which, I think, we must consider.

First, it was a condition and not a theory that confronted us when this situation arose; and it is of no use to assume that the British people—and when I use that term I include Canadians as well—are concerned about theories when the application of common sense to conditions will bring about a solution that is at once in the interests of the country and in harmony with a reasonable interpretation of the statutes under which we operate.

In the first place, without any action at all on our part, our present king became our sovereign. The constitution of this country is partly written and partly unwritten. It is written in so far as the British North America Act is concerned, but one of the sections of that act provides that certain rights, privileges and prerogatives which appertain and belong to sovereignty may be exercised and do belong as of right to the representative of His Majesty in this country. About that I shall say something further in a moment. Our written constitution provides that the crown, in which is vested the executive power of the country, shall as of right devolve upon the successors of Her late Majesty, Queen Victoria. When she departed this life her son ruled in her stead and was king of Canada because of the provisions of the British North America Act, and when his son succeeded to the throne there was no necessity of legislation being enacted; for by virtue of his birth, he being the eldest surviving son of the deceased sovereign, he became King Emperor of the British Empire. Likewise, when the late King George V of happy memory departed this life, his son, the Prince of Wales, succeeded to the throne; and by his accession, there being no time when the throne is vacant, he became King Emperor of the British Empire. Therefore, so far as we were concerned, no action on our part was required and none was taken except the proclamation to indicate to all the people of our country that a change had come about in the sovereignty. So far as we were concerned, I submit, the former King Edward VIII succeeded to the throne by due process of law under the provisions of the Act of Settlement of 1700 and the provisions of our written constitution, namely, the British North America Act. That was the position at that moment. When he indicated that he desired to abdicate, I think there can be no question as to the soundness of the observations made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that it was his right to abdicate if he saw fit to lay down the burden. But the mere act of signing the abdication did not in itself complete his abdication. I think that is all it is necessary to say on that point, for it will be recalled that when he did transmit to parliament, through his prime minister, the instrument of abdication, the last paragraph of it read:

> I am most anxious that there should be no delay of any kind in giving effect to the instrument which I have executed and that all necessary steps should be taken immediately to secure that my lawful successor, my brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of York, should ascend the throne.

I submit that that single paragraph is a complete epitome of the whole situation, namely, an instrument of abdication executed by the sovereign, which is the resignation of an office, if we were to use the terminology that would apply in the case of a private individual relinquishing an office. Under the provisions of our law, for instance, with respect to the resignation of members, with respect to resignations from governments, the acceptance of them is what constitutes the completion of the transaction. So with respect to the instrument of abdication which was executed by the sovereign; it did not become effective until such time, as indicated in the last paragraph of his letter to parliament, as such further steps were taken as might be necessary to make the abdication effective.

In the Act of Settlement there are no provisions with respect to abdications. Without going into the matter in detail, may I say that what happened in 1688 has been variously estimated—and I use the word "variously" deliberately—by historians in accordance with their general attitude of mind as they approached the question. Was there an abdication or did the conduct constitute an abdication? These were questions which at that time were much canvassed and discussed. Sufficient for our purpose it is to say that there was an abdication in law; that is, the throne became vacant by reason of the action taken by the then holder of the crown. That constituted an abdication; and in 1688-89 legislation was passed with respect to the devolution of the crown and as to the successor of James II. There being, therefore, no law applicable to the subject it became necessary that action should be taken by parliament to accept this instrument of abdication as a final and irrevocable relinquishment of the king-emperorship by the then holder thereof. The act of parliament was not necessary for the purpose of providing for the devolution of the crown in the event of there being a vacancy. It was only necessary, if at all, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, for another purpose entirely. The result was that parliament, urged to prompt action on December 10, took the action with which we are now all familiar and which I shall not take the time to refer to again. The statute has been read and re-read. But in my judgment the essential thing to remember is that the statute, by what we sometimes refer to as a legal fiction, provided for the abdication of the sovereign, namely, by a declaration that that instrument of abdication constituted a vacancy of the throne and amounted to the demise of the sovereign. It so declares in terms. In other words, as I said yesterday, the king was dead.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I interrupt?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can there be such a thing as a vacancy of the throne, and is it true that the king dies? Is not the maxim "the king never dies," and is it not the fact that the throne remains, the crown remains? There may be a demise of the crown but the crown remains. It is merely transferred.

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman perhaps was not in his seat at the moment when I spoke about that before. The theory of our law is, "The king is dead; long live the king." That is the expression.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what we say when the royal person holding the position of king dies and another royal person succeeds to the throne. But is the theory not that the king never dies?

Mr. BENNETT: No. The king himself of course dies but the kingship continues. That is the real distinction. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was fearful that I should indulge in hair-splitting arguments and I am endeavouring to free what I have to say from any suggestion of that sort. I desire to make it clear that parliament, dealing for the second time with the question of the abdication of a ruling sovereign, had to devise ways and means of dealing with it. They could not and did not say: We accept the abdication, but they said: The action taken, followed by our acceptance of it in the manner we have provided, namely, by declaring that this constitutes a demise of the crown, enables the incidents that follow the death of a sovereign immediately to ensue. And the very moment that the reigning sovereign affixed his signature, gave his approval, to that statute, he as king was dead. He still survived, and may long live, I hope, as an individual, but as king he was dead. He had ceased to occupy the office. There had been a demise of the crown.

The demise of the crown brought about an immediate result. That is what I take it the right hon. Prime Minister means. The immediate result was that the person entitled by law under the Act of Settlement to do so at once succeeded to the crown. The old practice was—it has a very interesting history, but I shall not burden the house with history—that a few members, as many members as possible of the old sovereign's privy council, together with as many gentlemen of quality as could be assembled, met together, and at once, in order that no one else might take such action, made a declaration that so and so "is our lawful sovereign lord and king and is of right entitled to the throne and crown." That declaration was made, it will be recalled, some few hours—or I think a Sunday intervened, to be exact—after this statute had become law. Now the operation of law had nothing to do with the act of the parties. By the operation of law our present sovereign became our king under the Act of Settlement. There was no change in the succession there was merely an acceptance of it. What is more, the statute itself so declares. The important thing to keep in mind is that parliament's action was limited to declaring that in consequence of the instrument which had been executed by the then king and which after much opposition on the part of the government and the people was accepted, because the king would not withdraw it—he maintained that he could not; it was irrevocable; he would not change his mind—the king was dead. The individual still lives. And on the death of that king his successor was, as pointed out by the former king in his letter to the parliament of Great Britain, his brother the Duke of York. The former king's own language being very clear on that point, although it is not binding at all, indicates that he had a clear appreciation of what the situation was. He said that all necessary steps should be taken immediately "to secure that my lawful successor, my brother the Duke of York, should ascend the throne."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not like to interrupt my right hon. friend, but I cannot see where he finds ground for his statement that parliament declared that the king was dead. Parliament may have declared a demise of the crown, but a demise of the crown is not the same thing as a decease of the sovereign.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly the same. It may not serve any useful purpose to discuss these matters technically, as was said this afternoon; my effort is to avoid that, but the language of the statute is this:

> Immediately upon the royal assent being signified to this act the instrument of abdication executed by His present Majesty on the tenth day of December, 1936, set out in the schedule to this act, shall have effect, and thereupon His Majesty shall cease to be king and there shall be a demise of the crown, and accordingly the member of the royal family then next in succession to the throne shall succeed thereto and to all the rights, privileges and dignities thereunto belonging.

[Mr. Bennett.]

There cannot be anything clearer than that as indicating that as far as the king himself was concerned he was dead. The moment that document which he executed was accepted by parliament, he was dead in his kingship, in the same way as on the resignation of a prime minister he ceases to be prime minister the moment his resignation is accepted. He is still the individual, but the office he held has passed to another. So the king no longer was king. His office had passed from him because parliament had accepted his renunciation of the throne, which technically we call the acceptance of his abdication. I think there is no difficulty with respect to that. But the discussion indicates what chances there are for different views with respect to matters of this kind.

The only question then that remains for consideration is the simple single one as to what action should be taken by the Dominion of Canada in order to meet the situation. I humbly submit that there was no change in the succession. I shall not argue that, because the Minister of Justice holds the other view. But certainly the Act of Settlement has not been modified or changed. Inasmuch as it would be impossible either that one who had ceased legally to occupy the throne, and who might thereafter have issue, should sit on the throne himself, or that his issue should, the action that was taken by the parliament at Westminster was action which we lawyers sometimes speak of as being taken "out of abundant precaution," as the minister said this afternoon. I shall not use the Latin phrase which is used to express it. But what happended was that parliament, for the reasons which I pointed out yesterday and shall not repeat, took steps to make it abundantly clear that the implication of law should also be fortified and strengthened by a definite and deliberate statement in a statute of the realm. That is the position.

Now why was it necessary as far as we were concerned to take any action?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I may be permitted to interrupt again—I hope my right hon. friend will not feel that I am interrupting to embarrass him in any way—

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —but simply to bring out the truth of the matter, which he as well as all of us are interested in bringing out. Does my right hon. friend disagree with the Prime Minister of England, who said in the House of Commons at Westminster:

It is necessary to have an act of parliament because the succession to the throne is governed by the Act of Settlement, which makes no provision for an abdication or for a succession consequent upon an abdication. It is also necessary expressly to amend that act by eliminating His Majesty, and his issue and descendants from the succession.

Mr. BENNETT: I have already dealt with the first question, Mr. Speaker, and answered it twice. So far as the second question is concerned, I merely say that if the logic of the statute is to be accepted, namely that there was a demise of the crown, it follows that, the sovereign being unmarried, he had lost his right and that any issue he might have had also lost their right. But out of a desire to render it clear beyond peradventure, so that there should be no doubt in the future and that no pretender could set up a claim, parliament enacted the statute which it did. For had parliament been dealing with the matter in the sense in which it has been suggested it should, it would have amended the Act of Settlement. It did not amend the Act of Settlement; it makes it perfectly clear that the Act of Settlement is not amended. On the contrary you are merely to place a construction upon that act providing for a demise of the crown where previously no such provision existed. That is the language of the statute itself.

However, Mr. Speaker, the important matter which we have to consider is what action the Dominion of Canada should have taken at that moment. I said the other day, and I repeat, that I entirely approve the action taken by the government and that I would have taken the same action had I been in the position of the Prime Minister. I would not have taken it in the same way. I thought it undesirable to go further into that matter the other day, and but for this debate I would not have discussed the matter at all. I would not have taken the action in the manner in which it was taken by the government. I think on investigation and inquiry it will be found that it was not necessary to take the action by order in council. I do not think order in council was the appropriate method by which it should have been done. I shall not do more than say that, because I realize that there is much force in what was said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that under different circumstances it would have provoked acrimonious discussion and very great opposition had a government of which I was head taken a step such as that. I only say that on investigation I think, sir, it will be found that the method employed is open to grave censure. I shall leave the matter at that, because I do not intend to traverse a field that can have no fruitful result; for by the method employed the necessary action was taken. That is all that need be said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would my right hon. friend mind telling the house what method he would have adopted?

Mr. BENNETT: He has not the slightest intention of doing so. He is going a very long way now in supporting the view which he thinks was necessary in the interests of the country as well as the unity of the empire, in supporting the action taken by the government in bringing about the result it did, but the methods employed were, I believe, not methods that were sound, constitutionally or otherwise. I do not think there is any answer to certain statements which were made this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George as to the methods employed, but that need not be discussed at the moment. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that the action taken by the government made it abundantly clear that the government desired to associate itself with the British government, and requested that the government at Westminster should indeed speak for us as well as for themselves as far as the operation of the statute was concerned; and they did so.

Of course, sir, differences of time made many difficulties. The position of the government was extremely difficult. The bill was introduced on the afternoon of December 10, and of course in this country it was not the same hour as it was at Westminster. But the action taken by the government brought about the appropriate result. That is the important thing to remember, and I agree with what has been said here so frequently during the course of the debate, that not only was the welfare of the Canadian people to be considered, but we had to bear in mind our own position with respect to the future if we did not take that action. Here we would be in the position so appropriately pointed out this afternoon by the Minister of Justice. Here we would be with a king, under the British North America Act, he being king of this country as much as he was king of any part of his realm, he being a successor to Queen Victoria within the terms of that statute. That is clear. If we had called parliament it is perfectly apparent that by so doing we would have placed ourselves in an anomalous position, and I think one might say that a somewhat harsher word would better describe our position.

I happened to be far removed from this section of the country at that particular time, and it is not unfair to say that many people in the world were waiting to see civil disturbances within the British Empire. It is not unfair to say that there were many who believed that this organization of which we speak as the British commonwealth of nations could not survive the strain. It was, therefore, of the utmost importance—and I associate myself with what was said by the Prime Minister in that regard—that there should be no apparent weakening of this great institution which we have built up through the ages; that its power to function should be apparent to all the world, and that it should function without question by the voice of a united people speaking for every part of the great self-governing dominions.

Reference has been made to conditions in Ireland, but it will be found on investigation that the ultimate action taken by the parliament of the Irish Free State was not at variance with the general principle that has been asserted in this house. Therefore I think it is quite appropriate that we should enact this legislation in view of the fact that we desire also to remove any possible doubt that may exist, if there is any—and in my judgment there would be very little—as to the condition that might arise in the event of His late Majesty marrying and having issue. Inasmuch as that contingency is one which always must be contemplated, the action taken out of abundant precaution will make it quite clear that in no part of the king's dominions, whether it be in that part of it over which the parliament of Great Britain has complete jurisdiction or those parts over which that parliament has divested itself of jurisdiction, can there be any possibility of an assertion on the part either of the late king or of his descendants of a claim to the throne of his fathers.

I think that is about all that can be usefully said in that regard. But there was one observation made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that, I believe, should not go unchallenged. It had to do with the action which was taken by the Canadian government, and to which I referred a few moments ago. As I have said, I have no intention of defending the action taken by the government. That is not my duty; hon. gentlemen opposite are quite well able to do it themselves. But in his speech in the British House of Commons Mr. Baldwin did not use the language which my hon. friend attributed to him. These were his words:

> There were two things that disquieted me at that moment. There was coming to my office a vast volume of correspondence, mainly at that time from British subjects and American citizens of British origin in the United States of America, from some of the dominions, and from this country, all expressng perturbation and uneasiness at what was then appearing in the American press.

That is a vastly different matter from assuming that Mr. Baldwin said he was receiving a great deal of correspondence from the Dominion of Canada. What he said was that he was receiving a large volume of correspondence from British subjects and American citizens of British origin in the United States, and from some of the dominions. He did not say it was Canada, and I think it is appropriate to point that out, for the inference, if any, to be drawn from my distinguished friend's observations would be that there might be some people who were acting in an official capacity—and he used the word "official"—or quasi official, who were sending letters with respect to this matter to the Prime Minister of England. He made such reference in his speech and I am quoting his words.

There is just one other point made by the hon. member which I think should be cleared up and which is as to whether appropriate action was taken to give His late Majesty the most ample opportunity to consider what course he would pursue. All that one need do is to look at the letter he sent to parliament, the first sentence of which reads in this way:

> After long and anxious consideration I have determined to renounce the throne to which I succeeded on the death of my father, and I am now communicating this my final and irrevocable decision. Realizing as I do the gravity of this step, I can only hope that I shall have the understanding of my people in the decision I have taken and the reasons which have led me to take it.

Had it ended there, the answer to the hon. member would be almost complete. But it did not end there, for when that letter was received, instead of at once acting upon it or going to parliament and making it clear that this was an irrevocable decision, the government passed a minute which they then asked the Prime Minister to communicate to His Majesty. They passed a very careful minute in order that there might be no misunderstanding with respect to the matter. That minute impressed upon the then sovereign the desirability of considering his position, in order that there might be no question as to his having the fullest possible opportunity of considering what action should be taken. His answer is a matter of record. He said perfectly clearly that he regretted he could not change his mind. The letter that Mr. Baldwin sent to His late Majesty was in these words:

Mr. Baldwin, with his humble duty to the king.

This morning Mr. Baldwin reported to the cabinet his interview with Your Majesty yesterday, and informed his colleagues that Your Majesty then communicated to him informally your firm and definite intention to renounce the throne.

The cabinet received this statement of Your Majesty's intention with profound regret, and wished Mr. Baldwin to convey to Your Majesty immediately the unanimous feeling of Your Majesty's servants.

Ministers are reluctant to believe that Your Majesty's resolve is irrevocable, and still venture to hope that before Your Majesty pronounces any formal decision Your Majesty may be pleased to reconsider an intention which must so deeply distress and so vitally affect all Your Majesty's subjects.

Mr. Baldwin is at once communicating with the dominion Prime Ministers for the purpose of letting them know that Your Majesty has now made to him the informal intimation of Your Majesty's intention.

Then Mr. Baldwin stated that the following reply had been received from His Majesty the night before:

The king has received the Prime Minister's letter of the 9th December, 1936, informing him of the views of the cabinet.

His Majesty has given the matter his further consideration, but regrets that he is unable to alter his decision.

There the matter ends, and I think it cannot possibly be suggested that the government here or the government in Great Britain did in any sense endeavour either to expedite or to hurry forward the answer His Majesty would give as to the course of action he should pursue, but left to his sole and unfettered discretion the determination of the issue he had himself raised.

For, as the Prime Minister pointed out, although Mr. Baldwin was very careful to indicate that he had intended to ask for audience with the king, before he had done so on either of the two occasions when he saw him after the matter was first broached the king had anticipated his action by asking Mr. Baldwin to come to see him.

I mention these points because I am sure the hon. member would not desire that there should be left by innuendo or veiled suggestion in the minds of the Canadian people the thought that either in Great Britain or in this dominion there were any who were endeavouring to expedite the action of His late Majesty the king in departing from the throne of his fathers. I think that is abundantly clear from the extracts I have read. In view of the differences of opinion that have been apparent among lawyers and others, I believe we can proceed to enact this legislation out of abundant precaution—to use the language of the books—in order that there may be no question as to indicating what our course should be, and so that there may be a direct statement upon the statute books of this country.

The action taken by the parliament at Westminster in pursuance of the action which was taken by the government here was such as was calculated to be in the interest not only of the Canadian people as a whole and individually, but of the world at large, particularly all those parts of it comprised within the area which we call the British Empire. For the world itself, as well as the empire, was concerned in the preservation of peace and the maintenance of law and order over that great area of the world's surface.

One other word might be added, and it is this: Not only was such action desirable and necessary in the interests of the people of the British Empire and of the world at large, but it was necessary that it should be taken without delay. For, if the foremost dominion were to delay, then the effect that many expected to follow would indeed have followed. I believe there is no doubt with respect to that. I can only commend the government for taking the action it did take, regretting only that it was taken in the manner in which it was. That, however, is another matter altogether, and need not enter into this discussion. The sure and certain result of delayed action would have been inimical to the peace, happiness and prosperity of the Canadian people; of that I think there is no doubt, even as in other parts of the king's dominions those responsible for the administration felt that similar results would follow if assent were not given to the legislation that was enacted.

I have spoken at greater length than I had intended, because certain questions which were asked had the effect of diverting my attention from the bare statement of facts I had intended to make. I desire to repeat, however, that in a great crisis, by prompt action we have avoided uncertainty and disquietude. We have given to the world, including the British dominions and Great Britain, an example of the operation of a constitution partly rigid and written, and partly the development of constitutional practice through all the years. It is well also to remember that the preamble, which after all is not part of the enacting clauses of the bill but can be turned to for certain purposes only, was worded deliberately in a certain way because it was desired in the preamble to make known that the constitutional practice discussed in the old chamber at the time of the death of the late Queen Victoria and later, which involved the great self-governing dominions, was such that they could not have a voice in the succession at the moment because that was fixed by the rigid word of the written constitution and by the Act of Settlement. But in those incidents which arose out of the operation of the constitution it was intended that their voice should be heard; that they should be consulted, and that parliament itself should deal with such changes as might be made, always on the assumption that the action taken in all cases would be the same. It could not be otherwise, notwithstanding what has been said with respect to the Irish Free State, that matter having been settled in substantially the same way but by a different method.

It would be indeed an anomaly if we were in one breath to contend that we were part of the British Empire, and then, in the next, to say that we could take ourselves out of the empire. We are part of it regardless of any action we may take. We are part of it by reason of the British North America Act, the accepted method of amending which is safeguarded under the Statute of Westminster. Those provisions were inserted in the Statute of Westminster because of the action taken by the then premiers of Ontario and Quebec, who were fearful that certain changes might be made because of the operation of the act in its broad and general terms. A meeting was held here in Ottawa, the results of which will be found in the archives of the Department of External Affairs, initialled by the representatives of every province of confederation. Those results are responsible for the provisions with respect to the constitution which are contained in the Statute of Westminster.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize for trespassing so long upon the time of the house in connection with this matter. I had already expressed my views about it, but I felt that some reply should be made to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre before the bill was given its second reading. He misunderstood my suggestion with respect to the majority of the right hon. gentleman. What I said, and what I repeat, applies to every government where you have representative institutions. The government of the day is formed and operates on the assumption that it has at all times a majority of the members of the House of Commons supporting it. It is on that assumption that the executive from time to time arrive at decisions, having a clear understanding that they have behind them the support of the majority of the House of Commons. That is responsible government. That is the result of representative institutions.

Just as Disraeli, without parliamentary authority, provided for the purchase of the Suez canal shares and subsequently had his action confirmed by parliament and the money provided—he had been able to secure a loan for the purpose before parliamentary action was taken—so now we are about to confirm by statutory legislation certain necessary action that was taken. If the government had not behind it the support of the majority of its members it would never have passed the order in council in question, but with sure and certain knowledge that under our representative institutions it could at all times command that support, because that is the basis upon which our institutions operate, the government took the action it did. We are here, without a dissenting voice, I hope, to give that action the approval which its importance demands and which I feel sure will remove any doubt which may arise in the mind of anyone as to the necessity for its being enacted.

Mr. R. E. FINN (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take up only a moment or two of the time of the house. When I was a member of the government of Nova Scotia under the late revered Hon. George H. Murray, the former King Edward VIII visited that province and was entertained at Halifax by the government. Afterwards in 1916 I had the honour of attending a banquet in the city of London tendered to him and presided over by the present hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley), who was then overseas minister. On his right sat the then Prince of Wales and on his left the present king, the former Duke of York.

I think that under all the circumstances we should be reserved in any statements that we make. If congratulations are in order, I should like to congratulate the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) upon concurring with the government in the action taken. This action was taken so that the solidification and unification of the British Empire would not be imperilled. It has been stated that there was a difference in time between here and London, and the fact is that the government of Canada had perhaps only a half hour or an hour in which to act. They acted wisely and they acted well when they passed the order in council. The Statute of Westminster provides that the request and consent of the commonwealth of nations must be obtained when action of this kind is taken by the government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

This afternoon the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) referred to the preamble of the Statute of Westminster, but in doing that he did what many lawyers sometimes do in court. Sometimes a lawyer will read a certain portion of a judgment and leave out sentences which do not bear out the view which he is trying to impress upon the court. I propose to read that part of the preamble which the hon. member did not read. The preamble reads:

> And whereas it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act that, inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British commonwealth of nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another—

The balance of the preamble not read by the hon. member continues:

> —that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

There was no alteration whatever in the succession because that is settled by the British North America Act which has not been amended and which cannot be amended. Section 7 of the Statute of Westminster reads:

> Nothing in this act shall be deemed to apply to the repeal, amendment or alteration of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1930, or any order, rule or regulation made thereunder.

The British North America Act, which is our constitution provides under section 2:

> The provisions of this act referring to Her Majesty the Queen extend also to the heirs and successors of Her Majesty, kings and queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Then we come to section 4 of the Statute of Westminster, and what does it provide? It provides:

> No act of parliament of the United Kingdom passed after the commencement of this act shall extend, or be deemed to extend, to a dominion as part of the law of that dominion, unless it is expressly declared in that act that that dominion has requested, and consented to, the enactment thereof.

And it became necessary, in what was perhaps the greatest crisis in the history of the British Empire, for the government of Canada by order in council to request and consent to the enactment of the legislation that was passed by the parliament at Westminster and assented to by His former Majesty King Edward VIII, enabling the Duke of York to become our present King, George VI.

I am not going to deal for one moment with what happened in the British House of Commons or with the events or motives of the Baldwin government that led up to the final result. All I have to say in that regard is, as hon. gentlemen on all sides of this house know, that the British House of Commons voted almost unanimously, irrespective of party, Liberal and Conservative, representatives of labour and other members of different views, for the enactment of that legislation which made George VI our present king. Only five members of the British House of Commons voted against it.

I should also like to say, Mr. Speaker, that it was not only right but a gracious act on the part of the right hon. leader of the opposition to take the position that he did in concurring in the action which the government took at that time, in order to help save what is the finest entity in the world to-day, the British Empire, which stands out as a bulwark against all sorts of destructive doctrines and misunderstandings throughout the world to-day.

I was surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George this afternoon. He comes from my own province of Nova Scotia, from my own city of Halifax, and when he spoke of that great country to the south of us I was reminded of that day not very long ago in the history of this young Canada of ours when the present president of the United States visited this country and delivered an eloquent and human address in both languages in the historic city of Quebec. I had the honour and pleasure of hearing him. I saw him step forward on the arm of his son and wave his hand to us as to a friendly neighbour. I wonder what he will think when he reads the words of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George with reference to that country, which is truly a friendly neighbour of ours, and particularly so under its present president who in recent months received an almost unanimous verdict from the people of his country. My hon. friend's remarks may leave on the minds of some unthinking people in this country—and by unthinking I mean simply those who perhaps, through lack of educational opportunities or lack of time, have not developed themselves sufficiently to differentiate—a viewpoint that is not real, that is not manly, that is certainly not utopian, a viewpoint such as will never bring nations together as Canada and the United States have been brought together, separated as they are only by an imaginary boundary line.

It is my earnest hope and desire that the Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Mackenzie King) will supplement his highly successful efforts of last year by a further trade treaty with the United States, opening to us a wider and a larger market in that great country of 125,000,000 people, and at the same time develop a greater market for our products within the British Empire.

My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition has just recently returned from a tour of the empire, around the world by the empire trade route. He has had opportunities such as few in this house have had of visiting different parts of the world. Excluding England and parts of Europe I may say that I have had the opportunity of visiting two of the far countries visited by my right hon. friend, South Africa and Australia, and I say that the contribution of the right hon. gentleman to-day and yesterday in this house and on this issue—and he has a mind not only brilliant but active, one such as I would be proud to have—has brought about in this house a unanimity on the succession bill that will tell the world where the British Empire stands to-day.

We do not forget His former Majesty King Edward VIII, or his twenty-five years as Prince of Wales, when he visited and did much to build up and make great many parts of the empire, nor do we forget how well he carried out his duties as king until finally he relinquished his task. Let it not be forgotten that in the end it was of his own volition that he made the choice he did; it was not left for parliament to decide, nor was it left to any other part of the empire. It was left to the king's own heart and to his own secret thoughts to decide. And, finally, under his own hand and signature there came that document by which he, the king, abdicated his throne:

> I, Edward VIII of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the seas, King and Emperor of India, do hereby declare my irrevocable determination to renounce the throne for myself and for my descendants and my desire that effect should be given to this instrument of abdication immediately.
> In token whereof I have hereunto set my hand this tenth day of December, nineteen hundred and thirty-six, in the presence of the witnesses whose signatures are subscribed.
> (Signed) Edward R.I.

[Mr. Finn.]

And who are the witnesses? His three brothers: the present king, the Duke of Gloucester and the Duke of Kent. I ask, Mr. Speaker, what course was open to the parliament of Great Britain and to the British commonwealth of nations but to accept that word as honestly expressing His former Majesty's irrevocable decision to abdicate? And when the legislation became law with his royal assent he passed from the scene of kingship to the dukedom of Windsor. I say, sir, that no one with a heart could fail to be touched when His former Majesty left Belvedere, when he said good-bye to his gracious mother, the former queen, to his brothers, one his successor George VI. He then got into his car and drove away to the quay and boarded the "Fury." As he looked up at the heavens and beheld the stars there scintillating, what were his thoughts as he left the shores of his native land? Let us not forget sympathy, kindness, good will, appreciation. I say, congratulations to the Prime Minister and the government, congratulations to the leader of the opposition and his followers and to every hon. gentleman who leads a party in this house and who to-night will support the bill that has been brought down by the Prime Minister to carry on that great process of unification which will declare to the world that we are a unit, that we mean to stand as a unit, and that what we stand for is liberty, justice and life under the highest and noblest form of democracy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

European war pensions, naval, militia, and air forces after the war, $41,500,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would make a statement.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): As the committee knows, this is the most important item in the estimates of the Department of Pensions. It covers the payment of pensions to those who were injured during the great war. Pensions are paid to disabled ex-members of the Canadian expeditionary force and their dependants numbering—and I am quoting the figures somewhat inaccurately—something like 253,000 people. Pensions are payable also to members of the active militia who since August 4, 1914, have incurred disabilities, and to the dependants of those who died in military service. The item also covers the reinstatement of pensioners who have commuted their pensions. It gives gratuities to pensioners who have less than five per cent disability. It also provides for certain supplementary pensions payable to Canadian citizens, that is to say, people who were resident in Canada but who, during the war, served in the British army. It also provides certain additional pensions under certain conditions to ex-members of the Belgian, French and Italian forces. Arrangements have also been made with the Dominion of New Zealand whereby certain members of the New Zealand expeditionary force who are entitled to pension under their own law, whilst residing in Canada receive their allowances or pensions from the Canadian government, which afterwards recovers the amount from the sister dominion. It provides also for burial grants to pensioners who die having no means for the payment of their funeral expenses. And it covers payments to members of the permanent force who have been injured subsequent to August 4, 1914.

It is somewhat hazardous for a minister to make any statement of what the future will bring. I well recollect that some fifteen years ago the then Minister of Pensions stated that the peak of pensions had been reached. At that time the pension bill was something under $20,000,000. To-day I have the honour to ask the committee for $41,500,000. But I have reason to believe that in so far as pensions are concerned—and I wish it to be well understood that I am speaking only of pensions, that is, payments made to those who incurred disability on service—I believe that we have about reached the peak. I may say in passing that there are other expenditures which are being and which will be made on behalf of veterans of the great war that are bound to increase as the years go by. For instance, the war veterans' allowances, which are paid to those who are assumed to have a disability but who cannot establish through the courts which have been set up by our legislation that their disability is due to the war, are now being paid to the extent of $4,200,000.

Mr. BENNETT: That is another item in the estimates?

Mr. POWER: Yes, but I want to make it plain that while I am saying that perhaps the peak of pensions as such has been or is about to be reached, the highest total annual payment made by the people of Canada to ex-soldiers will not be reached for some years to come. As a matter of fact in war veterans' allowances alone we are asking the committee to grant this year an additional $800,000, and that will gradually mount up until war veterans' allowance payments will reach the total of something like $13,000,000 in, I think, 1957.

Mr. BENNETT: As the minister has mentioned that, would he say how that sum is arrived at? Or he can reserve that until the item itself is up.

Mr. POWER: When the War Veterans' Allowance Act was introduced certain computations were made, and so far they have proven fairly correct. If they continue to operate in the same manner, and there is no further legislation making the provisions more generous, we have reason to hope that by 1957 the total of $13,000,000 for war veterans' allowances will be about the peak.

As far as pensions are concerned, the peak was in 1931-32, when the amount actually expended was $46,795,039.

Mr. BENNETT: The number of pensioners has been increasing since then, but the amount expended is less?

Mr. POWER: The number of pensioners has increased. As a matter of fact in the past six months as compared with last year it has increased by something like 220. The number of pensioners who were actually receiving pension on September 30, 1936, was 97,865, of whom 79,467 were disability pensioners and 18,054 were dependent pensioners.

Mr. BENNETT: Including widows and children.

Mr. POWER: And the amount paid to September of this year was $20,776,000.

The reason for hoping that there will be some diminution is that we believe that as a result of the action of the committee set up last year the applicants who are really entitled to pension will have a greater opportunity of bringing their cases before the tribunal, whereas those who have been what might be called chronic pension chasers will have less opportunity. So that for one thing the expense of administration should decrease. As is well known to the committee, the judicial set-up has through the years become somewhat more complicated than perhaps it should be, and I say that knowing full well that I must bear my own share of the responsibility of having asked for it in this house. Let us hope that within a very short time the arrears of pension cases will be caught up with. In fact I am informed by the chairman of the pension commission that by March 31 of this year we shall no longer have any arrears of pension cases. That, I think, will lead to considerable economy. Then, as a result of legislation passed in 1933, children born to pensioners after May 1, 1933, I think, are not longer entitled to pension. The number now going off pension is quite considerable. We find, for instance, that in February of 1937 the number who reach the age at which they will no longer be entitled to pension, that is, sixteen years, normally, is 1,029. In all, 11,475 will be cut off pension during 1937.

Mr. BENNETT: That is included in the 20,000 dependents the hon. gentleman mentioned?

Mr. POWER: Exactly. During 1938 there will be 10,518 cut off; during 1939 there will be 10,189, and from then on the number goes down very rapidly. Then, of course, there is the mortality. The average age of pensioners at the present time is forty-eight years and nine months.

Mr. BENNETT: That is other than dependents?

Mr. POWER: Yes, disability pensioners.

Mr. PELLETIER: What does the minister mean when he says they will be cut off after those years?

Mr. POWER: Under the pension legislation children of pensioners receive an allowance up to the age of sixteen normally, seventeen for girls. Under certain circumstances, if in the discretion of the tribunal it is considered reasonable they are allowed to carry on until the age of twenty-one, but there is no such thing as permanent pension for children of pensioners. Their allowance continues only until such time as they are supposed to have finished their education or until they are assumed to be able to earn a living.

The pensioners themselves are dying off at a fairly rapid rate. I would assume that at the present time there are just about as many pensioners who die off as there are new ones who come on. During the year 1935-36, for instance, there were 1,040 disability pensioners who died, and 553 main dependents. By that I do not mean children; I mean wives. That makes a total of 1,593 who no longer draw pensions on account of their decease. That figure has been rising, not very rapidly but fairly gradually, since 1928, when the figure was 1,014. In 1931-32 it rose to 1,333, and the highest figure is that I have just mentioned, 1,593.

[Mr. Power.]

So there is some ground for belief that we have reached the peak in pensions. I want it to be very clearly understood by the committee, however, that this does not mean to say that we have reached the peak of expenditure on behalf of returned soldiers in Canada. As they grow older, as more and more of them come on the war veterans' allowances, under the statute they must be looked after. As more and more become unable to cope with the ordinary competition of civilian life they will have to be looked after, somehow or another. Personally I have never cared to think of opening old soldiers' homes in this country. I do not think the Canadian people want them; I do not think the old soldiers themselves want them, but I am bound to say to the committee that the time will come when some measure or another will have to be taken to look after those who gave good service to the country at the front and who are unable to look after themselves otherwise.

Mr. McIVOR: I should like to express the appreciation of a family in Fort William. A returned man was stricken with an incurable disease and confined to the general hospital in Winnipeg. His parents, who were around eighty years of age, desired to have their son come home and spend his last days in Fort William. I got in touch with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) by mail; he got in touch with the pensions department, and in less than five days this returned man was in the McKellar hospital in Fort William. Since then he has answered the last roll call, and on behalf of his parents I would express to the Minister of Pensions and those assisting him their deep appreciation. I think this shows that this department has some heart, and I hope the department will continue to show it, so that any man who has served overseas may obtain that which will satisfy him when his body and mind are weakening.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister whether he has yet had a report from the War Veterans' Assistance Commission which was appointed last year? I ask that question for this reason. That commission has travelled across this country and has heard representations of many different kinds. I think several of these items which will come up to-night should stand over until we have had at least an interim report from that commission. The committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems which sat last year brought in a recommendation in these terms:

To ensure that the progress of the commission's activities, both in connection with its surveys and application of approved projects, be made known to the government, your committee would also recommend that the commission be required to submit from time to time interim reports on matters arising out of the act.

The act which was passed provided, in section 12:

The minister may from time to time require the commission to submit a report on the progress of projects and other matters arising out of this act, and the commission shall, before the expiry of the term of office of the commissioners, submit a final report to the minister in such form and with such details as the minister may direct—

So far as I know as yet there has been no report, and I would ask the minister whether he has required the commission to make one. They have been sitting now for several months, and even an interim report would help this committee a great deal in dealing with these items. Surely they are not to be passed before we have had the advantage of seeing an interim report by the commission.

Mr. POWER: I should like to explain to my hon. friend that the item under discussion deals solely with pensioners, that is, those who have acquired a claim on the government because of disabilities incurred on service. I am not for a moment raising a point of order, but whether an interim report or a complete and final report has been received from the War Veterans' Assistance Commission will not in any way affect the present item. But I may say to my hon. friend, for his own information, that the commission has been from coast to coast in Canada; it has been in touch with those interested in the problems of returned soldiers in almost every large centre in the country, and it has made certain reports which I shall be prepared to table within the next day or so. But those reports will have no effect whatsoever on the question under discussion. My hon. friend will remember that really the duty of the War Veterans' Assistance Commission was to ascertain approximately the number of ex-service men throughout Canada who were unemployed and what possible means could be found to obtain employment for them.

Mr. BENNETT: The work of that commission may, however, affect the total expenditure on returned soldiers.

Mr. POWER: I have no objection to saying that I am not prepared to bring down the documents to-night, but I should be able to do so within a day or so. Committees have been established in almost every city of any size in Canada. Some of the most reputable business men and others interested in returned soldiers have agreed to act on these committees. Certain recommendations have come to us, for instance one dealing with a corps of commissionaires. The recommendation has been approved by the department and will be tabled within a day or so. Another recommendation dealing with a community centre in one section of the country has also been approved. But I think my hon. friend will agree that to say that there is any general panacea for settling unemployment among returned soldiers at the present time would be almost ridiculous. We must handle the situation as best we can in each locality, with the help of the best minds available who have agreed to help us, and that is what we are doing. I do not expect the final report of the commission for some time to come. They have been barely able to classify the reports which they have received. I may say this, that 33,000 returned soldiers filed replies to the questionnaires, which, I take it, means that there are 33,000 returned soldiers out of employment. How many of these are pensioners at the present time and receive a small allowance and relief I am unable to say, because the figures have not been placed before me. But there will be no information disclosed by that committee which will have any great effect on the vote now before us for European war pensions, because most of those who are to be dealt with by the committee will be people who obviously have no claim for pensions, and are not claiming for them. The very large proportion are persons who are asking that they be given some kind of dole or gratuity because they served in the army. So far no government in Canada has been willing to accept the principle that service alone shall entitle a person to payment or to treatment different from that accorded to any other section of the community.

Claims and representations of which I know unofficially have been made to the committee to the effect that because an ex-soldier who is in receipt of a pension gets a minimum relief of $18.75, that, therefore, an ex-Imperial soldier who came into Canada in 1928 or 1929 and who is in receipt of $12 or $13 from his municipality should receive the same amount of money. If that claim is made it will possibly be placed very energetically and strenuously before parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: Claiming the dominion should pay $6.75?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is the old claim.

Mr. POWER: I am giving an extreme case. I want that understood. A large number of ex-Imperial troops came to Canada after 1924. Prior to 1924 we had treated them on exactly the same basis as the Canadian soldier. A large number of them were men who commuted or sold their pensions. That is to say they are not in receipt of one dollar from their own government. However, owing to the fact that the legislation of that day provided that if they were here before 1924 they should be placed on the same basis as Canadian soldiers, we pay them the full amount of $18.75 if single men, and running up to $60 or $70 and even to $80 if they are married men, depending upon the number of children they have.

Mr. BENNETT: Notwithstanding the fact that they have already had one pension?

Mr. POWER: Yes, as my right hon. friend has pointed out, notwithstanding the fact that they have already received a pension from their own government, which pension they have commuted. The claim now being made upon us, which is in fact urged in hundreds of cases, is that those who came here since 1924 should be placed in exactly the same position. I do not know whether I speak for the government or not, but certainly I speak for myself when I say that I would not be prepared to recommend to this committee that we assume the obligation of any other government.

Mr. BENNETT: Unless there is a reciprocal arrangement. We have that with New Zealand.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps this is not the time to say so, but I did make representations along those lines and I was told very frankly, perhaps too frankly, that the British government considered that they should make no distinction among their pensioners. If their pensioners in England were to be treated in such a way, there was no particular reason why they should treat their pensioners in Canada in another way. Whether this parliament or the people of Canada wish to take in everyone who has served in any army of the British Empire and immediately put him on some kind of dole or relief, making a distinction between him and the ordinary average civilian which should not exist unless he has been wounded, or unless he has some war disability, is for parliament or the people to say. If that condition arises, then the whole policy of various governments since the war will have to be revised.

As I have said, so far we have taken into consideration those who have incurred disability. We have presumed disabilities for those who were burned out. We have gone to the length of making certain payments to those who have a fairly strong claim on this small country, and I doubt very much, when all the facts are placed before it, whether parliament will be willing to adopt the principle of immediately saying that anyone who wore a uniform in any part of the British Empire—and if we take the British Empire we may as well include the allies—will immediately be placed on some special kind of dole or some special kind of pension which will distinguish him from his fellow citizens.

So far no legitimate soldiers' organization has urged anything in this connection, and I doubt very much whether for some time to come they will urge it. I repeat, however, that in spite of that something will have to be done for those who are no longer able to obtain employment. I doubt very much whether we shall do it by a system of general hand-outs, such as I have just indicated, but something certainly will have to be done. It will be the duty of this parliament to work out the problem in a manner satisfactory to the Canadian people.

Mr. GREEN: In his speech I believe the minister has clearly shown that there are many different angles to the returned soldier problem. To-night, at the beginning of a session we are asked to pass by far the biggest and most important item in the minister's estimates. Yet this is but a part of the whole picture. We have honorary local committees, composed of first class men, in different centres across Canada appointed to help the War Veterans' Assistance Commission, and I suggest that before we are asked to pass the item we should have a report from the commission. I would ask that the minister permit the item to stand until we have had an interim report. He indicated that he could get such a report in a day or two, and if that is so I suggest that we be given a few days to consider it and that the item be placed aside at this time, without all this hurry.

Mr. POWER: I think that within fifteen or twenty minutes I could get for the hon. member the names of the members of those committees set up in the different cities. I have not such information with me, but I believe I could get it on short notice. With the exception of the one I have mentioned requesting that money be provided to create a corps of commissionaires, and another that a community centre be established in a certain section of the country, that is about the only report we have. As yet, no general plan has been laid down by the War Veterans' Assistance Commission, and without having discussed the matter with them at length may I say I doubt whether they will have any general plans to lay before the government. In any event, the item we have before us has nothing to do with that matter. I have no objection to holding up one item in the estimates or, in fact, any two or three of them, but why block all the estimates in order to obtain a report which may or may not be valuable?

Mr. GREEN: The minister has many other items with which this report would not be concerned. He has indicated that there are several thousand small pensioners included in the list of 33,000 from whom information has been received. Surely we are entitled to have an interim report from the commission concerning these pensioners before we are asked to pass the present item.

Mr. MacNEIL: May I remind the minister that there are many members of the committee who wish to discuss the problems now under review by the War Veterans' Assistance Commission in the light of their findings and the evidence they have surveyed. In the estimates of last year provision was made for $500,000 to finance the War Veterans' Assistance Commission and authority was given by statute for the commission to institute various projects, subject to approval by the governor general in council. No such vote appears in the estimates of this year and we are anxious to hear from the minister as to what opportunity will be given to discuss this particular problem.

Mr. POWER: I have some hope that there will be an item in the estimates. I am quite willing to give an undertaking to my hon. friend that ample opportunity will be afforded to the members of the committee to discuss anything concerning the department under any vote. If the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) is scared by this item of $41,000,000 and would prefer me to take up another item, I have not the slightest objection. I took up this large item in order that members of the committee who were interested in these problems would have a chance to discuss them. I may say that in so far as I am concerned no point of order will be raised even if the discussion ranges from hospital supplies to distressed seamen.

Mr. GREEN: Our difficulty is that we have not the information which the minister has. I think we should have it and also have an opportunity to digest it before we are asked to pass this item.

Mr. POWER: Do I understand that my hon. friend does not want to pass any item?

Mr. GREEN: I think items 191, 193, 198 and 200 should be allowed to stand as they are the ones with which the report of the commission will deal.

Mr. POWER: I shall be very glad to do that. I am willing to give an undertaking that any matter may be discussed under any item.

Mr. GREEN: I think the minister knows from our conduct in the special committee last year that we are only too glad to help him out, but I think we should have the fullest possible information before these items are passed.

Mr. WILTON: In what position would an imperial veteran be who was a Canadian resident, who was drawing a small British pension and who had served with the Canadian forces in South Africa? Would he be in a special class or would he be on a par with the Canadian soldier?

Mr. POWER: If he came here prior to the South African war his pension would be at the Canadian rate; if he came after the war he would be treated as an imperial pensioner.

Mr. WILTON: Is that covered by a regulation?

Mr. POWER: Section 47A reads:

> The pensions which are now being paid by Great Britain for disabilities or deaths which occurred during the South African war to or in respect of members of the Canadian contingents which served in that war shall hereafter be supplemented during the continuance of the residence in Canada of the recipients of such pensions by such additional pensions as will make the total of the two pensions received by them equal to the pension that would have been awarded if they had been disabled or had died in the military service of Canada during the war.

Mr. GREEN: Do I understand that the minister will file a report of the commission within the next few days?

Mr. POWER: Within a week.

Item stands.

Salaries—staff, $3,517,600.

Mr. LENNARD: What does the increase of $52,600 in this vote represent?

Mr. POWER: There has been a suggestion that the public health department should be somewhat enlarged and this increase will cover the necessary salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: I think this item would require a good deal of elaboration before it is passed. I believe the minister would be the first to say that much more explanation than has yet been given would be needed to satisfy him in days not so long past.

Mr. POWER: I would, were I sitting where my right hon. friend is.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it would be well to give us more details. These estimates came down only yesterday and hon. members who have interested themselves in this particular branch of the service have had little or no time to consider them. The minister has the details before him and perhaps he would make a statement which could be spread upon the pages of Hansard and be available to hon. members who might want to discuss these matters. During the time I was absent I took the trouble to look into the matter of estimates and the detailed reports furnished to the parliaments of Australia and New Zealand. I was amazed at the amount of detail furnished in those countries in connection with estimates. I brought the particulars away with me and they may be of interest to some hon. members to whom I shall be glad to show them. In the sense of particulars, the method of dealing with the budget is entirely different in those countries. This item involves a very large sum of money; it covers salaries of staff and surely there should be upon Hansard the particulars which I have no doubt the minister has beside him. We should know the number of people stationed at different points and the salaries they are receiving. I do not think this is an unfair thing to ask. It is what the minister himself would have asked under similar circumstances.

Mr. POWER: I realize the force of the argument of my right hon. friend and I appreciate that these estimates were placed before hon. members only this morning. They have had but little time to go into them. In connection with this item, with the exception of a new field into which it is proposed to enter, the salaries are approximately the same as they have been for many years past.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they included in the details of civil government?

Mr. POWER: No. I think my right hon. friend will agree with me that the nomenclature "civil government salaries" is somewhat out of date. I never knew what it meant.

[Mr. Lennard.]

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with that.

Mr. POWER: As far as I have been able to gather from those who are more familiar with parliamentary procedure than I am, that referred to civil government in the old days as against what I would call popular government.

Mr. BENNETT: It was vox populi against vox dei.

Mr. POWER: They are what I would call the common, everyday salaries that the ordinary civil servant receives. It is proposed to enlarge the sphere of the activities of the department in connection with child and maternal hygiene, and also to increase laboratory facilities. It is proposed to go into what is known as public health engineering, to increase the staff which deals with epidemiology and to make a further study of industrial hygiene. It is proposed to go in for more publicity and health education. All this may or may not mean a thing to hon. members; I know it meant very little to me a year ago. However, I had an opportunity last June or July to meet the ministers of health of the various provinces of Canada. I think six ministers were here personally, and the provinces were also represented by their deputy ministers. A thorough general discussion of public health in Canada took place, and as a layman I am sorry to say that I found the doctors were not in very substantial agreement on any particular subject. I asked them, for instance: What would you do if I had a million dollars more granted to me than I have at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT: They would suspect the hon. gentleman.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend must be more familiar with them than he is with me.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite agree.

Mr. POWER: I am surprised at the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. DUNNING: I am more than surprised; I am shocked.

Mr. POWER: In reply to my question, one said that he would like an additional grant made to his department so that he could carry on more medical work generally. Another thought it would be a great idea if we went in for a further study of cancer, and another thought a further study of heart disease should be made. Another believed that what we call in Quebec sanitary units should be further extended, and so on and so forth. So frankly I came to the conclusion that if we had a million dollars more, what would happen would be that each province would ask for its share, and the federal Department of Health would not be one cent's worth better off.

So, after considerable discussion with the officers of the department we agreed upon a program for enlarging our present study of child and maternal welfare. It will also give us an opportunity, not to overlap provincial work on industrial hygiene, but of doing what a great many provincial ministers of health asked us to do, of making studies which they require. For instance, there has arisen in this country and in the republic to the south of us a great demand for a further knowledge of silicosis. So far that has been looked after entirely by the provinces, and I know that Ontario in particular has specialized in its studies of that particular disease, and has been, I understand, fairly successful. But if a certain amount further were granted it would be possible for the federal department to give what the doctors are fond of calling "leadership in health" in respect to certain industrial diseases which are common to all the provinces.

There has also been made the suggestion that there should be more publicity and health education undertaken by the department itself. I notice that my right hon. friend shakes his head.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not shaking it in negation.

Mr. POWER: After listening to my right hon. friend last year, when he was discussing the grants made to the different associations whose concern is in the promotion of health throughout the country, I was almost convinced that perhaps it would be better for the department to carry on a great deal of that work itself. I am not yet firmly convinced one way or the other, but I do believe that in the hands of the department, publicity and health education would be a great boon to Canada, rather than leaving that work to individual associations throughout the country whose activities are controlled largely by their own particular interpretation of the purposes for which grants were extended.

The provinces, when consulted, requested that they have available with us consultants on industrial hygiene, child and maternal welfare, epidemiology, and so on and so forth, and it is for that reason that these increases are being asked for this year.

I hope the committee will give us an opportunity of bringing back this Department of Health to the status which it was originally intended to have, that of the leading Department of Health in the Dominion of Canada. At the present time, owing to financial circumstances, the depression and one thing and another, the Department of Health is simply, if I may speak in military terms, a skeleton corps, and if we are to do something that will be of benefit to the country as a whole I think the department should be strengthened.

The positions covered by these increases will be one chief of child and maternal hygiene, $5,000; and staff, $4,260; epidemiological, one chief, $5,000, and staff, $5,400; industrial hygiene, one chief, $5,000, and staff, $1,800; publicity and health education, $11,980; one sanitary engineer will be added to our staff In order to explain the term "sanitary engineer," he is a person who makes tests of drinking water used on trains and boats plying between Canada and the United States to make sure that it is safe for human consumption. It is an international convention long ago entered into between the United States and Canada. There will also be an assistant chief, laboratory of hygiene; one senior bacteriologist, one senior laboratory assistant, and one laboratory assistant, making a total of $51,580.

Mr. STEWART: I notice in the press that recently there was a conference of provincial premiers in Ottawa, and the premier of at least one province, Ontario, proposed that there should be a consolidation of the health services of the provinces with that of the dominion. He held out, and continues to hold out, the hope to the people of the province that there will be a substantial saving in the expenditure of the province and that the work will in that way be better done. I would ask the minister if any progress has been made along that line, if anything of that kind is under consideration, if any steps have been taken in the direction of the dominion Department of Health taking over in any large measure any of the health services now being performed by the provinces, and generally whether anything has been done that leads in the direction of, shall I say, dispensing with a duplication of services, or of bringing about a consolidation of services to prevent overlapping, or of effecting a decrease in expenditure on the part of the provinces in respect to public health.

Mr. POWER: My attention was also drawn to the observations made by the premier of one province with respect to health, but I may say that at the present time there is no duplication in health services.

Mr. STEWART: He said that there was.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps he knows, but after careful inquiry made in our department we have found that nowhere is there any duplication of work—

Mr. BENNETT: It depends upon what you mean by work.

Mr. POWER: —or expenditure.

Mr. BENNETT: There is duplication of activities.

Mr. STEWART: There is said to be a duplication of services, or activities or organizations.

Mr. POWER: My information is that in no way do we overlap the work that is done by the provinces in any of these matters. So far as health is concerned we are almost purely a consultant body, and that is what we should be. It should not be our duty to carry on the work, for instance, of mental hospitals for ordinary civilian mental patients, and we do not do it. Under the statutes we must look after quarantine and the sanitary services to which I referred a moment ago, that is, the inspection of drinking water on public carriers, on railways, on boats, and so on. We must look after distressed seamen. We have a pure food and drugs act and a patent medicine act which it is our duty to administer, and in none of these, so far as I am aware, do we overlap the provincial authority.

Mr. STEWART: As disease is no respecter of provincial or international boundaries, what are the activities in connection with epidemics such as smallpox or any contagious diseases? Is there any overlapping there?

Mr. POWER: So far as the federal department is concerned, my hon. friend will understand that we cannot very well quarantine a province. We can quarantine vessels coming from a foreign country, but it would be extremely difficult and I should not like to undertake to quarantine vessels going from Ontario to Quebec. Federally speaking, I can hardly conceive of any great sphere of activity on our part in the way of preventing epidemics, unless any epidemic became of such a nature as to be a matter of national importance and urgency and the work had to be taken over by the national government.

Mr. McCANN: It is surprising to me, as one who has been engaged in public health activities in this province for a period of twenty-five years, to see any display of levity with reference to the expansion of the health activities of the federal government. I remember reading a short time ago that the leader of the opposition, in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne twenty-five years ago, suggested that a federal department of health should be established in Canada. Such a department was established shortly after that time and for a few years I believe there was considerable interest in the matters to which it devoted its attention. During a succession of years following the federal department of health came to be known to the people of Canada more because of its inactivity than because of anything it had ever done. It is, therefore, a matter of congratulation to the present minister that he contemplates at this time expanding the Department of Health.

The medical profession throughout the country, and particularly those who are engaged in public health matters, look to the federal department for leadership, but they have not been getting it under either Liberal or Conservative administration throughout the last decade. It is little wonder that the ministers of health of the several provinces come to the federal government and ask for an appropriation for work to be carried on in those provinces when that work should be done by the federal government itself through its Department of Health. I wonder whether it is the policy of the minister to carry on these new activities through departments which he will inaugurate and have directly under his supervision, or whether he intends to make grants to voluntary agencies who have been more or less doing that work.

Canada owes to the voluntary agencies who have been doing public health work a great debt of gratitude. They have been doing pioneer work in public health, aided by very meagre grants from the federal department. The department of child welfare received last year, I believe, a grant of $13,000. For some reason or another that department, which was formerly carried on under a trained medical man at its head, was transferred to an agency presided over by a lay person. The work in maternal welfare and public health education has fallen down very materially, and the best evidence of that is shown right in the city of Ottawa, which has the highest infant mortality rate of any city in the dominion. Here, under the very shadow of parliament hill, where the people should be given leadership in public health education and in maternal and child welfare, there is a mortality rate which leads the whole country. That is a reflection upon the Department of Health as far as health education goes. The department and the government, it is true, have given recognition at times to men who have done something in the sphere of preventive medicine. We make a grant annually to Sir Frederick Banting in recognition of his discovery. Could not something be done to stimulate research in Canada along preventive medical lines? Could we not have a department of national medical research just as we have a department of scientific research? I believe that if we had such a department many of the ills to which the people of Canada are heirs would be coped with successfully, and not only would that accrue to the health of the people, but we would reap the economic benefit as we went along.

Does the committee realize that at any time in Canada there are 180,000 people on the sick list, and that the economic loss to the country is in the neighbourhood of $300,000,000 per annum? Yet what are we doing about it? So far as the federal government is concerned practically nothing is being done. Nothing is being done by the Department of Health in connection with research in cancer, in diabetes, in heart disease, all of which are leading causes of death and disability. I believe it was Disraeli who said that the health of the nation should be the prime concern of any minister, and that holds good to-day just as it did in Disraeli's time. Health is wealth; and if the Department of Health has as its first consideration, as it should have, the health of the nation, then it will extend its activities a great deal further even than is proposed under this additional set-up. I must commend the minister for at least taking a step forward in the direction of preventive medicine.

Mr. WALSH: I should not like to detract one iota from the remarks which have just been made, but at the same time I feel that this additional item is adding an extra burden to the already over-burdened ratepayer in Canada. We have health work actively carried on in our schools and school districts. We have health work of the same nature as suggested by the minister carried on by private agencies. We have active health work, as suggested by the minister in connection with this item, carried on by the various municipalities throughout Canada. We have in each and every province of this dominion a department of health actively carrying on aggressive educational work. Over and above that we have a Department of Health in connection with the dominion government. There is a considerable degree of overlapping despite what has been said previously in this committee. There is overlapping not only as between federal and other agencies, but as between the various agencies which exist in the different provinces.

I cannot agree to the passing of this item without registering a protest, for I feel that it is in the estimates for the sole purpose of providing more, and more lucrative, positions for friends and those kindly disposed towards the present government. I do not like to make a suggestion of that kind, particularly in connection with a department presided over by so genial and congenial a minister as we have at the present time, but at the same time I should be remiss in my duty to my electors and to the taxpayers of Canada if I did not voice a sentiment that immediately arose in my mind when I saw this additional item in the estimates. I may be wrong; I may be stating a thought which does not exist in the minister's mind, but it does exist in mine. If this work were not carried on in the provinces and the various municipalities I would certainly agree to this addition. If the minister could give us some assurance that at this conference which was held with the provincial representatives they had agreed to curtail their activities and in that way lessen the burden of expense on the provinces in order to have that work done by the dominion government more effectively than it can be done by the provinces, by all means let us agree to this increase. But sufficient work has been carried on in this field. There is too much overlapping. We should do away with the overlapping and overexpenditure as a result of it, before we increase an item of this kind. I should like to have some assurance from the minister that that is in prospect, so that the taxpayers of this country will recognize that we in this parliament are not adding $52,000 to the amount of money required to be collected without some compensation, or some elimination of overlapping and resultant overexpenditure. The Canadian people are already overtaxed, and I feel that every minister should make it his purpose, if at all possible commensurate with the work required to be done, to reduce taxation, to lessen the burden thereof, so that the people of Canada will feel that the government are at any rate striving to make a step in the direction of lightening their burden during these rather distressful times.

Mr. POWER: I am quite willing to give my hon. friend the assurance that as far as the federal department is concerned there is no intention of undertaking any service which is now being carried on by any provincial department. And I can assure him further that my understanding with the provincial ministers of health was that they wished the federal department to go into this field because they themselves could not afford to do so. It is a new field entirely.

Mr. WALSH: Would the minister state exactly what is that new field which is covered by this particular item of $52,000?

Mr. POWER: Such provinces as the three prairie provinces, and possibly the maritimes, would like certain services made available by this government because they cannot afford to carry them on at present; I refer to such matters as child and maternal welfare, epidemiology, industrial hygiene and public health education. The larger provinces, such as Quebec and Ontario, carry on certain of these services, I think, but we shall not be establishing anything in the way of a new branch which will overlap work done by the provinces or cause any extra expenditure of money.

Mr. WALSH: According to the statement of the minister then, there will be a certain amount of overlapping in connection with Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. POWER: No; we shall be doing different work.

Mr. WALSH: My understanding was that the federal department was going to do work which is being done in Ontario and Quebec but not in the smaller provinces.

Mr. POWER: Ontario and Quebec possibly may not need these services which we are proposing to establish; they may have the facilities to carry them on themselves, and I have no doubt they have the necessary funds. But they have no objection to our carrying them on and having consultants to be of assistance to the other provinces. I hardly think it likely that Saskatchewan would feel able to go to Quebec and Ontario with the same assurance that it could go to a federal department to consult about or ask for assistance for work which can be done by that province.

Mr. WALSH: I should like to have heard from the minister a statement something like this; that as a result of this conference the provinces have agreed to discontinue work in such and such fields, and consequent upon that I am asking for an extra grant of $52,000. We have sitting in this committee at the present time the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley). No doubt he could tell us how difficult it is to collect a sufficient amount of taxes even to approach a balanced budget. And he could relate many instances of the difficulties he experienced during the past year in attempting to collect taxes to meet our expenditures. We should try to make his work lighter, as well as bearing in mind the unfortunate taxpayers. I should like to have a definite assurance from the minister that that is the case; that the provincial authorities are actually withdrawing from a certain field and that we can thus hope for lessened expenditure in that department as far as the provincial governments are concerned. Then the taxpayers of Canada as a whole will see that their taxes are not actually being increased by this increased expenditure.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to make a few observations about this matter, especially in view of the statement just made by the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann). It is quite true that some twenty-five years ago I advocated the establishment of the Department of National Health. It is equally true that I still believe it has a distinctive and responsible work to discharge.

But health is a little different from almost any other branch of governmental endeavour. Primarily we have the advantage of all the work that is done, for instance, by the Rockefeller Institute, by the great Carnegie foundations and by all the other countries in the world. That becomes available at once to the people of the Dominion of Canada, and our poverty stands in the way of our carrying on research work to anything like the degree to which that work is carried on in other countries. A moment ago the minister mentioned the expenditure of a sum of money for the purpose of further investigating a disease which arises out of the working of quartz—silicosis. Down in South Africa I had occasion to look into that for a very special reason. There they are carrying on gold mining operations at a depth of from eight thousand to ten thousand feet. Johannesburg itself is six thousand feet above sea level, and the loss of life which came about through the inroads of this disease was such that action had to be taken. Already they have devised methods by which they have entirely eliminated the risk, by dampening the faces of the working areas, so that they are no longer threatened with any disease from that cause. They, of course, compelled the great enterprises that were carrying on these operations to contribute very largely in order to attain this end.

All that information is available to us without the necessity of setting up a department. We can get it without difficulty. It is quite true, as the minister says, that there is reluctance on the part of people to apply to other governments for information, but on the other hand there is always an avowed willingness on the part of the governments of the British Empire to communicate with one another. It will be remembered that not long ago an attempt was made to bring about a correlation of the activities of the various countries that comprise the commonwealth in order that information might be readily available to the peoples of the different countries. In this country we have no difficulty in obtaining the benefit of the tremendous amount of work that is done in the United States by the great enterprises and research bureaus to which I have referred.

Let us be fair when we talk about the federal department. Doctors have frequently said that the federal department has been a failure, but the federal Department of Health never came into being, as the minister said a moment ago, for the purpose of carrying on work in connection with mental hygiene or problems of that sort. It was rather to be a clearing house through which the information obtained in world wide activity might be made available to the various provinces to assist them in discharging their constitutional functions. If difficulties have arisen by reason of impoverishment and lack of revenue to enable the provinces to carry on this work, then another situation entirely arises which is absolutely foreign to the matter we now have under consideration.

Let us take this as a practical question; let us start with the schools. Who provides medical attention in the schools now? I wonder if it is realized that in almost every part of Canada, certainly in every province so far as I know, provision is made for medical inspection and services for the children who attend the schools. In the cities and towns that is well provided for. In the rural municipalities the situation is much more difficult, and just how to get over the difficulty is a matter that, to my knowledge, has engaged the attention of the provincial authorities in some of the remote communities for a very, very long time. But you do not suggest that the federal government should give leadership with respect to a matter of that kind. It would be idle to say that the Department of Health in Canada should take from the provincial departments of health and the municipalities control over all these matters. What would be the result? A moment ago the minister referred to Ontario. I recall investigating for my own information the situation in that province in connection, for instance, with the dental clinic. There was travelling over that province a dental clinic looking after the teeth of school children. In New Brunswick the Red Cross clinic was travelling over the province giving free dental service to those who required it. I was one of the executive officers of that organization at the time, and I was amazed at the condition of the teeth of the children as indicated by the reports which were made by that travelling clinic. The other day in New Zealand I saw twenty-five or thirty children around the age of twelve or thirteen going into a clinic in the city of Wellington for the purpose of having their teeth examined and "stopped" as they call it there, consequent upon decay. That work was being carried on under a centralized government. In that country they have a million and a half people and everything rests with the central authority. But if you say to some of the provinces—I will not name them, because I fancy they are fairly well known; I have had experience, and I speak in the light of that experience—that you are prepared to take over that work, they will tell you they do not want the federal government meddling in their purely local and domestic matters. That has been the attitude in regard to provincial rights in this dominion. Is it suggested that the federal department should undertake duties of that kind? I think the minister has already answered that question; he does not suggest it for a moment. On the contrary, as I understand him he thinks the department does not exist for that purpose at all.

We are starting with the children. You have the clinic in the school; you have the health of the child being carefully looked after. Then you go into the great realm of contagious and infectious diseases. Under our constitution the quarantining, the putting up of notices, the making of investigations—I am leaving out for the moment ships and sailors—rest entirely with the provinces. They carry on that work. Is it suggested that the federal government should undertake that class of work? I think not.

Then you go a step further; you have the great voluntary organizations to which the minister referred a moment ago, and by the movement of my head, perhaps consequent upon a long voyage, I did not intend to negative in any sense the suggestion that the minister was making; quite the contrary. We have the great voluntary organizations such as the Victorian Order of Nurses. I fancy everyone of us makes contributions to that order every year, and it carries on a very, very excellent work. Then you have the Red Cross hospitals in outlying sections, that are looking after the people in those areas. Then you have many of the provinces developing what are called municipal hospitals, through unions of municipalities, which care for the people within those areas. The difficulties, of course, lie in the matter of cost. In these days of impoverishment they have not the money with which to maintain hospitals, and they are not provided with funds for the purpose of paying the dues which may accrue when their people may have to go to other hospitals.

Then you have introduced into the subject matter another factor which owes its origin to one of the great insurance companies of the world. That company conceived the idea of extending the length of human life, believing that by doing so through the care of their policyholders they would secure additional funds in the way of premiums for two, three, four, five, six, eight or ten years. Those additional funds would become available as part of their capital with which to meet claims under their policies, and they believed that by utilizing a portion of their moneys they would be able to find a balance on the right side if the portion was thus used for the purpose of ensuring the health of their policyholders. That has developed to a tremendous extent. Free medical examination of the policyholders has been provided. In the policy of at least one company of which I know, with some fifty million policies outstanding, there is a provision which authorizes the agent of the company to visit the home, and there is a travelling nurse who from week to week goes from home to home of the policyholders for the purpose of endeavouring to improve the health of the people.

Those are voluntary organizations. Add to them the great national organizations carrying on research work. The hon. member for Renfrew South says that the federal government should give a lead with respect to, let us say, cancer research. Well, Mr. Chairman, when you think of the enormous sums of money being spent annually in the British Empire in connection with research work, and the opportunities that are afforded Canadian research workers in those laboratories to give the best that is in them, the question of setting up here a laboratory for the purpose of research work in cancer is one which I think the minister would consider worthy of very careful consideration, before taking action in connection with it.

Mr. POWER: There is the matter of duplication.

Mr. BENNETT: Precisely; because it is the kind of effort the results of which are immediately made available to all. That was the reason why a British Empire cancer research bureau was set up, the idea being that in one particular line of research the work might be carried on in New Zealand, in another it might be carried on in Canada, and in another in Australia. The centralized effort would be at some spot such as London, or some other place which might be selected for the purpose.

Mr. POWER: The bureau even made grants to Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact the minister knows what has been done in some countries. I saw certain research workers in Dunedin, New Zealand, carrying on research work in connection with one phase of the work. I happen to know something of the work which is being done in London in correlating and coordinating these various activities. I do not think the hon. member will suggest that the Dominion of Canada should endeavour to utilize the taxpayers' money to set up a great research bureau, especially in view of the munificent—I use the word deliberately—the munificent gifts of some Canadians in connection with British Empire cancer research. I believe one citizen in the city of Montreal gave a hundred thousand dollars in that cause.

At the jubilee of His late Majesty we in Canada endeavoured to create a cancer research fund. The response to it was not as generous as might have been expected, but the province of Saskatchewan, where there was suffering from crop failure, subscribed small contributions extending over wide areas, and the total was large, having regard to their condition. The fund is not large at the moment; I believe it is only a few hundred thousand dollars. What is a few hundred thousand dollars in a work of that kind? It is nothing. When we think of the vast sums that are available in the Rockefeller Institute or the Carnegie foundation or in some other of the foundations, the vast sums which have been set aside and endowed for this purpose, I think we must agree that at this time it is not quite fair to suggest that the federal Department of Health is lacking in leadership simply because it does not establish a great research bureau for cancer or other research work. Having regard to these difficulties, and the willingness of our citizens to make contributions to every work, wherever it may be possible, I do not think that duty rests upon the taxpayers of Canada.

Then we come into the realm of infectious and contagious diseases. The provinces are carrying on a good work in that connection. I say to the minister that I still believe he can accomplish more good work by educational process under the direction of the government itself than through these organizations. Much, of course, may be said for them, but it is a fact that the organizations which receive these sums of money by way of grants in aid must necessarily use a great part of the money to maintain their organizations and to pay salaries.

The extent to which the work of the department may be extended is one which each minister will have to settle for himself. The minister in the late government made provision whereby he would bring together a meeting of nurses and doctors, various members of hospital boards, government officials and others interested in health, to try to arrive at a point where a national policy under the control of the minister might function, if one may use that word with respect to a policy. That must be done without in any sense impinging upon the activities of the provinces. That is the problem to which the minister has given his attention. He says: I am going to have another sanitary engineer; I will pay $5,000 in salaries, and a few hundred dollars for a few clerks. That would be sound, if it were based upon the assumption that it would not be impinging upon the work carried on by the provincial authorities.

In other words the ministry of health as I conceive it, and as I have always conceived it, is primarily one for the dissemination of knowledge, and one which may assist in the work which may be carried on for the purpose of eradicating disease. In other words it must assist preventive medicine. One of the finest addresses in recent years on the question of preventive medicine was delivered by the late Lord Moulton at Leeds university. The question of preventive medicine he there discussed is one which has engaged the attention of public men during all these years. I for one will entirely support the minister in any effort he may make to assist preventive medicine, but the assistance of preventive medicine, as a policy, must be carried into effect without impinging upon the work being done by the provinces in that connection. We cannot get into the field of the work the provinces are doing; I have in mind dental work and work in connection with infectious diseases.

In the question of research we must realize the problem is one of our ability to provide facilities, having regard to the fact that knowledge acquired in one part of our world is in a very short time available in other parts. For instance, Sir Frederick Banting did not sell his discovery; he made it available, and as a result we find insulin available in all parts of the world for the purpose of accomplishing the ends for which it is used. The research work carried on by a private individual resulted in a great discovery. The Connaught laboratories in Toronto are carrying on a good work in vaccines and serums. A short time ago I visited a laboratory outside Pretoria in which the same work is being carried on on a large scale. The large amount of money that is being spent is not altogether for the relief of humans, but has some connection with the matter of food and that of veterinary services. All the knowledge obtained in Germany, in France and in Canada was lying in the laboratory I visited, available to all concerned. Having regard to the knowledge available to Canadians I do not think we can be blamed for not giving leadership, such as is so frequently suggested should be given by the Department of National Health. We have not embarked upon an extensive scheme of that kind. Unless the situation is entirely changed through the surrender of control by the provinces, I believe the federal department can carry on its work only as a disseminator of knowledge obtained through world effort for the purpose of coping with and preventing disease.

I was abused for my views when I was in office, and perhaps I shall be abused for what I say to-night, but I still believe the minister can utilize the machinery of government to disseminate knowledge and to bring it home to the minds of the people of Canada much more readily than by taking a sum of money and handing it over to a particular person. That is my conviction. I may be all wrong, but that is my view with respect to it, and I shall support the minister in any effort he may make in that connection.

The welfare work to which the hon. member for Renfrew South referred is entrusted to an organization under lay leadership. It is quite true that that was done by arrangement and agreement between the government and the organization which is supported by the contributions of insurance companies and other institutions. There is also the aid given by this government. So far as my observations lead me to conclude anything, that work was well done and was deserving of the confidence of the government and the people of this country.

However, do not let us believe that the Department of National Health has not done anything. That department has endeavoured to do at least three things. First, it has to do with the activities and responsibilities which rest entirely with the federal government. Second, it has endeavoured to foster such efforts on the part of the provinces as will assist them to the utmost in carrying on their campaign in connection with preventive medicine and enable them to cope with disease. Third, it has made efforts toward publicity and toward making known to the people the necessity for hygiene, good air, cleanliness and all these matters that have to do with public health. I think within the financial limits at its disposal this department has accomplished a great deal.

In England the department of public health can deal with these matters because there is no provincial jurisdiction. They do it, but they do not impinge upon the work carried on by the cities and towns. They only lay down the broad principles upon which the work is to be carried on. Wherever you have a unitary system of government, such as there is in New Zealand and other parts of the world, it is very simple for the central power to carry on its health operations. However, where you have a federal union in which jurisdiction is not only held but exercised by provinces or states, in order to deal with these problems there must be a surrender of those powers to the central government before that government can undertake expenditures. Otherwise there would be a duplication of the work and the citizens of the country would be called upon to pay twice for the same services. I think that is axiomatic.

That is the difficulty I have always experienced in dealing with the matter. Unless the provinces have changed their minds during the last few months, they are not willing or prepared to surrender their jurisdiction to the federal power even though the federal power were willing to undertake this work in its entirety, which I do not think any federal government is anxious to do. The very nature of the work lends itself to local administration much better than it does to centralized authority in a country such as this.

I think the minister is to be commended for his efforts to accomplish the purposes he has referred to this evening. I notice the usual grants are being made this year, so the matter need not be further discussed at this moment. Apparently he has concluded that he should stick to the old custom and because of long precedent support the private enterprises which are carrying on this work. However, I think this work could be better carried on either by the provinces or by the dominion. I have not seen anything in what I have read—I have not had the opportunity to read everything—which would indicate that the provinces are willing to surrender their jurisdiction in order that this work might be carried on by the dominion. Until that happens, the federal power must necessarily be exercised to the best of its ability. While there may be lacking that spectacular leadership to which reference has been made, it must be remembered that we are but 11,000,000 people. But we are the heirs to all the knowledge that has been accumulated and is being secured by varying investigations and researches in various countries.

Mr. POWER: I am going to propose that this item be allowed to stand, but before doing so may I express my gratification at the great interest shown by hon. members in these estimates. May I say to my right hon. friend that it would not take very much to bring us both into agreement with everything he has said this evening, even with such observations as he has made as may be considered critical of the work of the department.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

International Institute of Agriculture, $12,000

Mr. DUNNING: It is our desire to have two departments go into supply. As hon. members know, unless a department has gone into supply for the first time on Tuesday it is not possible to go into supply during the balance of the week. By having two departments in supply we may be able to continue with it later on in the week.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this the usual grant to the Rome institute?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): This is the usual grant to the international institute at Rome. It is the same as it was last year.

Item agreed to.

Contributions to empire bureaux, $21,535.

Mr. BENNETT: This item is an illustration of the point I was endeavouring to make a moment ago. The knowledge and experience of these various organizations are made available to us. We make a small constribution for the purpose of ensuring that any results arrived at will be available for Canada.

Item agreed to.

Advisory committee on agricultural services, $5,000.

Mr. STEWART: Is this the same amount as was voted last year?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: Will the minister explain how the $5,000 was spent last year?

Mr. GARDINER: This vote is to finance committees which will work cooperatively with the provinces in carrying out certain investigations having to do with agriculture.

Mr. STEWART: Are any reports of the activities of this committee available? If so, where are they to be found? In the meantime could the minister give us more details of the expenditure?

Mr. GARDINER: There are no formal reports of the investigations. Meetings were held of the national committee on barley to investigate the different types of barley that might be grown for different purposes, to encourage the spread of certain types of seed and to facilitate the marketing of barley. Those investigations are carried on with different organizations in the provinces. Discussions take place, and the information is available to those who take part in the discussions and is also made available to others, but no detailed report is made in connection with it.

Mr. STEWART: That is all theoretical. What we would like to know is how this money was spent last year and who received it.

Mr. GARDINER: I shall get the details for the next sitting.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Dunning the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

FARM IMPROVEMENT AND EMPLOYMENT PLAN

Mr. STEWART:

1. Has a farm employment scheme for the relief of single unemployed men been adopted?
2. If so, what is the monthly compensation payable: (a) to the employee, in cash or otherwise; (b) to the employer?
3. What portion of the compensation is payable by: (a) the dominion; (b) the province; (c) the farmer?
4. What provinces have entered into an agreement for the adoption of this scheme?
5. What amount has been paid to each province by the dominion during the current fiscal year to January 1, 1937, under such agreements?

Mr. ROGERS:

1, 2, 3 and 4. Agreements were tabled January 15, setting forth the arrangements entered into between the dominion government and the governments of the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, respecting the farm improvement and employment plan.

5. Nil.

FEDERAL HOUSING ACT—LOANS TO MONTREAL MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. MALLETTE:

1. What loans have been made to date under the Federal Housing Act, 1935, in the municipalities of Montreal?
2. How many loans and what amount in each municipality?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Up to January 15, 1937, 211 loans amounting to $2,071,670 were made under the Dominion Housing Act in the municipalities of Montreal, (i.e. the municipalities on the island of Montreal).

2. Municipality	No of Loans	Amount

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—LOAN STATISTICS

Mr. MALLETTE:

1. What number of loans were made under the Farm Loan Act, during the year 1936, in each of the provinces?
2. What was the total amount of such loans in each of the provinces?

Mr. DUNNING:

The following answers are furnished by the Canadian Farm Loan Board:

1 and 2. 1st April, 1936—31st December, 1936.

	Approved		Disbursed
	No.	Amount	No.	Amount
B.C.	54	$ 103,150	53	$ 104,573

MOOSE VALLEY—KIPLING, SASK., MAIL SERVICE

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Was contract for carrying mail between Moose Valley and Kipling advertised or tenders invited?
2. Who held this contract in 1934-35?
3. What amount was paid to the above for this service?
4. Has the contract been terminated? If so, when?
5. Has a new appointment been made? If so, who has been appointed?
6. How many applications were there?
7. What tenders, if any, were submitted, and what were the amounts of same?
8. What remuneration is being paid to the present mail carrier?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. No.
2. James Farrell.
3. $124 per annum.
4. Contract expired 31st December, 1936.
5. Yes. George L. Taylor.
6. Tenders were not invited. The expenditure involved in this case is under $200 per annum and section 73 of the Post Office Act empowers the Postmaster General in such case to make a new contract without the invitation of tenders.
7. Answered by No. 6.
8. $124 per annum.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—BROME-MISSISQUOI

Mr. GOSSELIN:

1. How many farmers of Brome-Missisquoi, in the year 1936, have applied for a loan under the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act and amendments thereto?
2. In how many cases were loans granted and actually made?
3. What is the total amount of the loans?

Mr. DUNNING: The following answer is furnished by the Canadian Farm Loan Board:

The records of the Canadian Farm Loan Board are not kept by constituencies and the information asked for is not now available.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—MONTREAL TO OTTAWA SECTION

Mr. LALONDE:

1. Since July 1, 1936, has the government of the province of Quebec recommended to the dominion government that the location of the trans-Canada highway from Montreal to Ottawa be changed to serve the actual line of highway No. 8 from Grenville to Hull?
2. If so, what is the date of the recommendation?
3. What was the reply of the government of Canada?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. No.
2. and 3. See reply to No. 1.

[Mr. Dunning.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PURCHASE OF DESTROYERS

Mr. BERTRAND (Prescott):

1. During the year 1936, did the dominion government purchase two destroyers for national defence purposes?
2. If so, how was the purchase of these destroyers authorized?
3. What price was paid for each of them?
4. To what service will these two vessels be assigned?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): In 1928, the government of the United Kingdom lent H.M.C. ships "Champlain" and "Vancouver" to the Canadian government; since that time, these ships have formed part of the Royal Canadian Navy. The government of the United Kingdom decided that these ships, by reason of age and deterioration, were to be rendered ineffective as ships of war, as of December 31, 1936, in accordance with the terms of the London Naval Treaty of 1930. H.M.C. ships "Champlain" and "Vancouver" have been demilitarized and, it is expected, will shortly be disposed of in Canada on behalf of the government of the United Kingdom.

It being necessary to replace "Champlain" and "Vancouver," the problem received very careful consideration, and, on ascertaining that it would take too long to build ships in Canada or elsewhere, negotiations towards finding replacements from the Royal Navy were commenced in 1936.

The price finally agreed upon is $1,000,000 per ship, including armament and stores. The replacements will be named H.M.C. ships "Fraser" and "St. Laurent," and will be commissioned in the Royal Canadian Navy within the next few weeks.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—LOANS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. REID:

1. Since the inception of the Canadian Farm Loan Board, how many applications for loans have been made in the province of British Columbia?
2. How many loans have been granted in the said province?
3. What is the total amount of money involved in the loans made?
4. How many loans have been made to those resident in the lower Fraser Valley, the interior, northern British Columbia, and Vancouver island?

Mr. DUNNING: The following answers are furnished by the Canadian Farm Loan Board:

To December 31, 1936:

1. Applications received, 2,756.
2. Number of loans approved, 682; amount, $1,752,800.

3. Number of loans disbursed, 666; amount, $1,715,860.

4. The records of the Canadian Farm Loan Board are not kept by local districts and the information asked for is not now available.

CANADIAN MILITIA REGIMENTS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many regiments are there in the Canadian militia?

2. In such regiments: (a) how many lieutenant-colonels are there; (b) how many honorary lieutenant-colonels are there?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

Arm of Service	Permanent Active Militia	Non-Permanent Active Militia	Total
Cavalry	2	20	22
Infantry	3	89	92
Total			114

2. (a) The respective authorized peace establishments provide for each regiment to have a lieutenant-colonel as commanding officer, who may receive pay for that rank. Grant of such rank is subject to the officer concerned obtaining necessary qualifications prescribed by the regulations. The total number at present appointed is ninety-two (92), including six (6) supernumerary (see note below). The remainder are yet to be appointed under the re-organization.

(b) Each regiment may, under the regulations, have appointed thereto one (1) honorary lieutenant-colonel, who does not receive pay and allowances. The total number at present appointed is fifty-three (53), including one (1) supernumerary (see note below).

Note: The reorganization of the non-permanent active militia has, in certain instances, where two regiments have amalgamated, entailed one of the former lieutenant-colonels commanding, and also honorary lieutenant-colonels, to be carried supernumerary, as a temporary measure, pending absorption or disposal.

EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES, 1935 AND 1936

Mr. STEWART:

1. What is the total value of Canadian exports to the United States in each of the years 1935 and 1936?

2. What is the total value of Canadian exports to the United States in each of the years 1935 and 1936 in respect to which no tariff changes were made by the Canada-United States agreement dated November 15, 1935?

Mr. ROGERS:

See statement below:

Domestic Exports from Canada to the United States

MILITARY SERVICE ACT, 1917

Mr. BRUNELLE:

1. Is the Conscription Act, 1917, still in force?

2. If not, when, and how was it declared inoperative?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. The Conscription Act 1917, which is cited as "The Military Service Act 1917", is not still in force.

2. This act is spent and ceased to be in force after demobilization, following the conclusion of the war and the completion and fulfilment of the consequential provisions of the act. It was noted as being spent in the Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, vol. V.

PACIFIC COAST HALIBUT FISHERIES

Mr. REID:

1. Has the attention of the government been drawn to press dispatches that fishing boats from foreign countries might invade the halibut grounds off the coast of British Columbia, which grounds are being protected under the International Halibut Treaty of 1924, signed by the United States and Canada?

2. If so, have any inquiries or representations been made in connection with this proposed invasion of these protected halibut grounds, either to the United States, Great Britain or any other countries?

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the proposed operation on the Pacific coast, off the Canadian coast, of mother ships from both Britain and the orient, which would catch both halibut and salmon in large quantities, with none of the conservation restrictions imposed on Canadian citizens?

2. If so, has the government taken any steps to deal with the situation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, as these two questions are similar, they may be answered at the one time.

The government are aware of the situation to which these questions refer and have been actively in touch with it for some time. They attach the highest importance to the conservation of these great Pacific fisheries and to the maintenance of the protective measures for halibut fishery which have been gradually developed through many years' cooperation with the United States by treaty and joint administrative action. They look with anxiety upon any activities which might threaten the object of these measures. The matter has been under discussion with other governments concerned for a considerable time, and the government are considering what further representations and action are open to them.

HOUSING SCHEME LOANS

Mr. REID:

1. How many loans have been made under the housing scheme in the various provinces up to December 31, 1936?

2. What is the total amount of money involved in the loans so made?

3. What are the names of the various loan companies cooperating with the government in regard to the housing scheme in the various provinces?

4. How many British Columbia companies are cooperating with the government in connection with the housing scheme in the province of British Columbia?

Mr. DUNNING:

4. No companies incorporated under the laws of British Columbia are cooperating with the government in making loans under the Dominion Housing Act in the province of British Columbia.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—LOANS TO SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. FLEMING:

1. What is the total number of loans granted in the province of Saskatchewan, from October 14, 1935, to January 18, 1937, under the Canadian Farm Loan Act?
2. What is the largest individual loan that has been granted?
3. How many loans have been granted in the electoral district of Humboldt?
4. What is the total amount of the said loans in the Humboldt electoral district?

Mr. DUNNING: The following answers are furnished by the Canadian Farm Loan Board:

1. October 14, 1935, to December 31, 1936: Approved and disbursed or in process of disbursement, first mortgage, number 1,882, amount $3,550,550; second mortgage, number 1,163, amount, $702,275; total, $4,252,825.

2. $5,000 on first mortgage; $6,000 on first and second mortgage.

3 and 4. The records of the Canadian Farm Loan Board are not kept by electoral districts and the informtaion asked for is not now available.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. FLEMING:

1. How many cases have the present board of review under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act dealt with in the province of Saskatchewan?
2. How many cases have they heard so far?
3. What is the total amount of debts that the present board of review have reduced since they came into office?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Cases referred to present Saskatchewan board of review from date of appointment, August 17, 1936, to January 16, 1937—828.
2. 310.
3. Debts reviewed, $2,554,031. Reductions effected, $1,139,770.

NATIONAL REVENUE—$100 EXEMPTION REGULATION

Mr. ISNOR:

In connection with Item 703 (b): "Goods valued at not more than a hundred dollars included in the baggage accompanying residents of Canada returning from abroad after an absence from Canada of not less than forty-eight hours, and acquired by them for personal or household use, etc."

1. Has this section been enforced in regard to children, irrespective of age?
2. Have any amendments been considered by the Minister of National Revenue?
3. Has action been taken as suggested under date of May 27, 1936, when this item was under discussion, to fix the age limit at sixteen?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. No.
2. No amendments have been considered, pending review in the light of experience gained after the item has been in actual operation over a period of a year.
3. Under regulations prescribed by the minister and published in departmental memorandum dated June 9, 1936, the exemption from duty provided in tariff item 703 (b) is not granted to any person under the age of fourteen years.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PREFERENCE FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Have those who were on active service overseas, or on the high-seas on a man-of-war, or in the armies or navy of an ally of His Majesty during the Great war, been accorded a preference in the civil service examinations of Canada?
2. If so, since when and how many of such candidates have secured, under this preference, positions in the Canadian civil service?
3. Have any allied countries of His Majesty during the Great war, accorded a similar preference to Canadian candidates for the civil service of those countries?
4. If so, what countries, and since when?

CANADIAN MILITIA—HONORARY LIEUTENANT-COLONELS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What are the names and addresses of the honorary lieutenant-colonels of the Canadian militia?
2. (a) On what date was each of them appointed; (b) for what record of military services, and (c) upon whose recommendation?
3. What are their functions?
4. What formalities are required for the appointment of an honorary lieutenant-colonel?
5. Are they supplied with uniforms and arms by the state?
6. If so, with what uniforms and what arms, and what is the annual cost for each individual?
7. Are the honorary lieutenant-colonels required to pay a tax, or any contribution or honorarium to the state in such capacity?
8. If so, is same paid before or after their appointment has been published in the Canada Gazette, and how much?
9. What do the honorary lieutenant-colonels cost the country?
10. In their capacity as such, how much do they pay to the state?
11. What services have the honorary lieutenant-colonels, as such, rendered to the state to date?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ABDICATION OF KING EDWARD VIII—CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, cablegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada or any Canadian official and the Prime Minister of Great Britain or any official or representative of the British government or crown, regarding the proposed marriage and abdication of His former Majesty, King Edward VIII, or the succession to the throne, and accession of His Majesty King George VI. Also a copy of all orders in council relative to the above matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I have already placed on the table of the house much of the information asked for in the motion. In addition I have given the house a detailed statement of what there was in the way of correspondence, and I do not believe it would be in the public interest to table any more documents. May I point out to the hon. member that no similar request has been made in the British House of Commons, nor have the parliaments of any other of the self-governing dominions with which I have been in touch thought it necessary or advisable to table the correspondence. The correspondence was not a one-sided matter concerning only this government, but concerned all other governments of the empire, and for these reasons I suggest the motion should not be passed. I hope the hon. member will not press it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

POSTAL SERVICE—HOURS OF LABOUR

Mr. HEAPS:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents, concerning the changes in regulations respecting hours of labour and working conditions in the dominion postal service.

FALHER, ALTA., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. PELLETIER:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, affidavits, evidence, correspondence and other documents, dated during the past eighteen months, concerning the dismissal of the former postmaster at Falher, Alberta.

PUBLIC HEALTH

PROPOSED CONTROL OF ATHLETICS AND PHYSICAL AND RECREATIONAL TRAINING

Mr. H. J. PLAXTON (Trinity) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, in the interests of public health there should be established a ministry of sports.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since giving notice of this resolution I have revised my opinion as to its wording, to the extent that if the resolution were to propose that the control of athletics and of physical training in this country be a branch only of, say, the Department of Pensions and National Health, my general purposes would be served. I am not seeking an amendment to the resolution as it now stands, however, for the reason that such an amendment would not alter or affect the general purport of my remarks.

For reasons which I shall submit, Mr. Speaker, I consider that the time is ripe for this government to consider the advisability of assuming control of athletics and physical and recreational training in this country on a national basis consistent with the constitutional authority therefor, and otherwise to cooperate with the provincial governments in a like scheme. Obviously the matter of a nation's health is of the greatest importance, and this question has commanded the attention of some of the leading countries in Europe and Asia. In France there is actually a ministry of sports. In Czechoslovakia there is a highly organized branch of the government which for some years past has been devoted to a national scheme of physical training, and I assume it is more than general knowledge that similar systems are in force in Germany, Russia and Japan. What is more significant still, however, and what I think will be of greater interest to the members of this house, is the fact that in the speech from the throne at the recent opening of the British house this very subject was given special prominence. I happened to be present at debates in both houses when the matter was debated extensively, or, if I may so describe it, when the nation's ill health was discussed at some length. Logically enough, the subject was closely identified with athletics and physical training in all its branches.

I mention this because it is my considered opinion that Great Britain and the other European countries which I have just named are keeping pace with the fast changing conditions in the world's economic and social life by adopting legislation such as is proposed by this resolution. Further, it is my opinion that it is high time for this government to consider the adoption of some national scheme of physical training for the people of this country.

Let us examine our local situation as it exists in Canada to-day. It is true that as Canadians we are a people who have been reared with an athletic background. Two of our Canadian games—I refer to hockey and lacrosse—are now international in their scope and are played in most of the leading countries of Europe. That this is so to my mind indicates two things. One is the active world interest that is now displayed in physical training; the second is the sporting atmosphere in which we Canadians have been reared. I mention that for this reason, that any scheme which contemplates the improvement of the health of the people of this country on a national basis necessarily must be associated with athletics in all its branches, and to that extent, consistent again with the constitutional authority that may exist, we must assume control of athletics in this country.

This brings me to a consideration of our local problem with regard to amateur sports. In Canada to-day the control of amateur sports has been appropriated by groups or associations, self-constituted in their authority, which generally speaking owe allegiance to no one, and which within the confines of their particular sports are virtually dictators, even as to the locality in which the sports may be carried on. The result, I submit, is chaotic if we are to look for any attempt on the part of those associations to cooperate not only between themselves but with the public and the governments of this country. Likewise it may be said of amateurism that several of the prominent gate-producing games—that is, games which the public pay money to see—have developed into something of a racket as far as the contestants and the managements are concerned. I must add, however, that the situation in this regard is not too alarming, and that it could be cleaned up by legislation such as is proposed by this resolution. But I must reaffirm this statement, that any scheme for improving the health of the people on a national basis, involving physical and recreational training, necessarily involves a control of athletics. I can qualify that statement by saying I would not contemplate the exercise of such control with respect to particular sports except in so far as it may be deemed necessary to the furtherance of the general scheme.

There is one phase of amateurism with regard to which I must make some comment. I refer to Olympic games and other international contests. One has only to recall the lamentable showing of our Olympic representatives at the games last year, and particularly the fiasco involving our hockey team, with all the well deserved, well merited unfavourable criticism that the games inspired, to realize the force of my remarks. Consider the methods by which the contestants were chosen, the sectionalism displayed in that connection, the action of those in charge both in Canada and abroad, the almost total failure of our representatives to win anything, and finally, the crowning blow, the losing of our hockey title—and all this, mind you, at a considerable cost to the taxpayers of this country. Need I say more, sir, to convince hon. members of this house that the time is long past when any athlete or group of athletes who presume to represent Canada in Canada's name should be permitted to do so in any international contest without proper supervision and control by someone responsible to this government.

In opposition to this proposal someone may bring up that old catch word "regimentation." In that connection I may say that in our provincial system of education one finds the perfect example of regimentation. The cry may be raised: "Do not regiment the young people of this country into a measure of physical fitness." Well, I submit that argument is untenable and inconsistent, and I will leave it at that. Others may advance as an argument the catch word "cannon fodder." They seem to feel that there is in this proposal a sinister attempt to establish a scheme to permit peace time military training of the young men of this country. My answer to that is that if the question of the defence of this country should ever arise, it would be preferable to have an army in the highest state of physical fitness rather than one of which the reverse is true. Likewise, is it reasonable to say that because we are training the young men of this country to a high standard of physical fitness they are necessarily being trained for war or will necessarily go to war?

Finally the problem boils down to one of the nation's health. I do not intend to burden the house with facts and figures in that connection. Some people may say, we are a healthy race; why worry? Perhaps that is so, but let me point to a startling discovery which the British authorities made in recent months. I find in a long editorial which I clipped from the London Times of November 12 last dealing with the nation's physique a few statements which I think will be of interest to the house. The opening paragraph reads:

> The policy of improving the nation's physique, as foreshadowed in the king's speech, seems to have captured the popular imagination to a remarkable degree. Both houses of parliament have made it one of the main features of the first debates of the new session, and many authoritative correspondents in these columns have made constructive suggestions for perfecting a project of which they all approve.

Then further down:

> The second fact brought out in debates and in correspondence is the existence of a general agreement that the present standard of the national physique is far from satisfactory.

And a third statement is:

In the case of the city slum some fifty years of partisan pondering failed to effect the cure which five years of united national effort is now certain to provide. In the case of the body slum it is natural that success should come more slowly; but it will come beyond a doubt if it is fostered by the same spirit.

Yes, we might be shocked if we saw a true picture of this country's condition as far as health is concerned. One need only look at the hundreds of hospitals and sanatoria full to the roof to make us apprehensive of the true condition. Then we must also realize that thousands of our fellow Canadians during the last six or seven years have been obliged to live on relief and in idleness. That situation to my own personal knowledge, particularly in urban centres, has induced considerable ill health amongst those unfortunates.

In the final analysis however the situation can be summed up by stating that whatever the present conditions may be in regard to the health of the nation, they can be improved vastly by the adoption of a national scheme of physical training, rather than continuing the haphazard state of things which now prevails.

I have not attempted to exhaust this subject. The resolution in its present form is perhaps not a practicable one, but I hope I have dealt with the matter at sufficient length to commend its general principle to the earnest and serious consideration of the house.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I desire in joining in the debate on this resolution first to comment on the qualifications, which I think must be obvious to all in the house, of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) to deal with matters of sport. They are well known to all who come from that section of Ontario, or for that matter, anywhere in the Dominion of Canada.

I congratulate the proposer of this resolution not only upon having brought to the attention of the house the matter of public health and sport, but also upon the experience and knowledge which he has with relation thereto.

As the hon. member who proposed the resolution so aptly said, two of the great international sports with which Canada is particularly identified are hockey and lacrosse. Lacrosse, we all know, has been regarded for many years as Canada's national game. When William Perkins Bull, K.C., the historian of the county of Peel, wrote a year or more ago a delightful volume entitled From Rattlesnake Hunt to Hockey, he referred to the town of Brampton, the county town of Peel, as the cradle and nursery of that great game. It is therefore with particular pleasure that I take part in this debate. In addition I might point out that the county of Peel has the same name as the great Cumberland huntsman John Peel, whose name is familiar in poetry and song.

In the year 1914 the lacrosse club of Brampton took a forward step in going to Vancouver to challenge and do battle with the Vancouver lacrosse team for the championship of the world. Defeated by a narrow margin then, they challenged again in 1930 and defeated the New Westminster club, winning the highest honours in the world of lacrosse. Since that time of course a change has occurred in that great game; instead of having a twelve-man game we now have box lacrosse. That perhaps is not nationally so well known, but in my county night after night throughout the spring, summer and fall, large numbers of Peel people are not only spectators of the game but actually participate in it. Many in the house will recall the great battles which have taken place in the past between the Brampton Excelsiors and teams from Orangeville, Weston, St. Catharines and towns in the vicinity of Toronto and elsewhere. These are things which come back to the memories of many hon. members, and bring to our attention the importance of this sport in our national life. I would also be remiss if, bearing the name of Graydon, I did not make some mention of the old Toronto Tecumsehs, who in years gone by, with the Nationals of Montreal and the Torontos, staged so many great battles for the lacrosse crown of that time.

In considering the many types of physical training and the advancements which have been made in methods of fostering the health of our citizens, we should not forget to mention the great work being done throughout the dominion by the Young Men's Christian Association. That organization is doing an effective job in promoting better health and providing facilities for exercise and recreation for our young people. I think the government should encourage such organizations.

The service clubs are not far behind in the promotion of good health. In our own town of Brampton the Lions Club has done splendid work in a centre where there has always been much activity in connection with sports. This summer they were able to finance a swimming pool which will be constructed in the Swinburne memorial park.

The hon. member for Trinity has referred to the importance of the health of our people and I suggest to the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power) that the matter of medical examination is also very important. As was stated in the debate last night, a number of insurance companies are already conducting intensive surveys among their policyholders in this connection. I would not be living to-day were it not for the fact that when I was much younger I had a medical examination which revealed a weakness which after some time was successfully corrected. For that reason, among others, I have a special interest in this matter. The hon. member for Trinity has suggested the systematic training of our people, but I would consider it no less important that we should have as well a proper inventory of our resources of physical health.

If the Minister of Pensions and National Health will give careful and studied attention to the matter which has been brought up this afternoon I feel sure that more of our people will be given the opportunity and encouragement to play at healthful sport from time to time. I can speak from personal experience of the need of such a move, because I am one of those who do not take sufficient exercise. To-day we do not seem to have the time to exercise. There is the keen competition in business and the fact that we use our cars so much. Some will almost use a car to go from Wellington street to the Peace Tower. Such practices are devastating to our individual constitutions and have an adverse effect upon our national life. In certain centres of this dominion we find many thousands of people watching no more than twenty men put on a performance in one of our national games. That would not be so bad if we could or would walk to see the games, but sometimes we simply sit in our living room and listen to the radio and get no exercise at all. These are things that should be brought to the attention of the people of Canada, because they have a very important bearing upon our national well-being. As the hon. member for Trinity has said, we are a hardy people and with our healthful climate there is no reason why we should not hold a very high place in every sport that is played.

I am glad to note that the hon. member has not carried out his original proposal that a ministry of sports should be established. I do not think the present position of the taxpayers of Canada would permit that move being taken at this time. I think the hon. member's motion has been worth while even if it does nothing more than draw the attention of the government and the people of Canada to a very important matter with respect to our national health. If the very impressionable Minister of Pensions and National Health is able to work out something whereby he can provide additional facilities and encouragement along this line, we shall at least have made an auspicious start in a work which I believe to be most important to the people of Canada.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate because I am still a youth. I have played at most of the games that are played in Canada, and I have received great benefits from such participation. I congratulate the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) upon bringing this matter before parliament. Anything that concerns the use of leisure time is of great importance to our citizens. We have an eight hour day in organized labour and I expect that that will soon be cut down to a six hour or perhaps a four hour day. We are then faced with the question of whether this leisure time will be spent in places of a questionable nature or out in the open air.

I should like to quote a great athlete of days long gone by. St. Paul said that it is absolutely necessary for us to keep our bodies in shape. Many of our youths are taking part in athletics. I should like to give an instance of some junior hockey players in that noted centre of sport, Fort William. Two players, Bill Grant and "Fire" Parsons were coming home from a hockey game. They were on their way to have lunch when they found a pocketbook containing $81 in cash, some cheques and other things. Instead of going to have their lunch these two young men walked to the other end of the city to give the owner back his money. That sort of thing on the part of our youth is nothing less than heroism. Many of our boys get their names into the papers for other reasons, but when they show themselves to be absolutely honest it gives great promise and hope for the future of our youth. I happen to be the chaplain of that team and I am happy to be able to report that there is not a smoker on the team.

The benefits which come from outdoor sports are quite evident. Last year when I urged the leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to assist us in having a little recreation, both of these old time athletes stated their willingness to do the best they could. I feel sure that the mover of this resolution is going to have splendid support. We must remember that those who take part in games learn to keep their tempers; they learn to have definite aims, and they learn to come back when they are beaten.

I think the resolution in its present form is well worthy of consideration. Our athletes should be placed in a position where those of them who are not able to buy a hockey stick or a pair of skates should be assisted and encouraged. Many of us are limited in our means but our country is not limited, and I believe that one of the outstanding arguments in favour of this motion is the necessity, now that we have so much leisure on our hands, of training our youth in sports and physical exercise, and as well our middle-aged and some of our older people who need to work off fat into bone and muscle and brain energy.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) has brought up this question. He has not brought it up in exactly the way he first proposed, and as was announced in the sporting press of the country. His first proposal was that we should have an athletic commission with jurisdiction over amateur and professional sport all over Canada. That was announced in the press, and it was not favoured by the sporting editors of the country inasmuch as this parliament would have no jurisdiction, property and civil rights being a matter for the provinces.

The hon. member for Trinity is an active sportsman. He was a member of the Varsity hockey team that went out to Vancouver and brought back the Allan cup in 1927 and was a splendid type of sportsman. When he came to me and talked this matter over early last session, because I had a motion before the house with respect to national health and physical welfare, I told him that I would gladly give way to him because I knew he was a sportsman. But he did not have the right idea about this question at that time. We talked the matter over and he told me that he would bring it up in a bill last session. It was not on the present lines and had no relation to health.

Last year I drew to the attention of the house the friction over sending Olympic teams to the old country, which was causing a great deal of international discord. At that time a big row was in progress over sending our hockey team from Moncton over to the Olympic games. It was a very fine team, and because I considered that the maritimes got a very raw deal from the hockey authorities I brought the matter before the house. Let me give the house a few of the headlines that appeared in the press at that time:

British and U.S. officials engage in heated argument—Olympic committee finally lifts ban on Canadian players on English team at request of Canada. Dominion and old country will meet to-morrow.

This is another heading:

C.A.H.A. president, E. A. Gilroy, charges overseas hockey is "racket"—Dissension revolving around the eligibility of two English hockey players is renewed with mounting bitterness, and four European teams are ready to protest England's victories because of Foster and Archer. Second gold medal to Germany.

Again:

Canada ready quit Olympic hockey games. Claim play-off system will put team at disadvantage. New bombshell hits tournament.

Maple leaf squad will withdraw unless rule is rescinded.

These are all headlines on dispatches from the front. This is another one:

Olympic boys very peeved. Hand out blasts against officials in charge of team.

Such were the dispatches that came from the Olympic hockey games last year, and undoubtedly it caused a great deal of friction in the old country and in the British Empire.

As I said, the hon. member for Trinity wanted, first of all, to have an athletic commission with jurisdiction over amateur and professional sport all over Canada, but that would not have been within the jurisdiction of this parliament. I urged upon this house last year that it would be far better to stay out of the Olympic games because there was nothing but rows before our teams went over, rows when they got over there, and rows when they returned. It caused a great deal of international bitterness, and it would have been far better for us to eliminate the Olympics and stick to the British Empire games. There is, in my opinion, very little sport for sport's sake in the Olympic games.

I had a resolution on the order paper of March 31 of 1936 reading as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, a select or other committee of the house should be appointed to consider and report on making recreation and sport a national branch of government, and of the state under the Minister of Health, to not only promote national health and the physical welfare of the people, but also with a view to the upbuilding of a more healthy race, to aid them to better meet the many social changes of the age, and to promote good citizenship, in conjunction with provincial and municipal authority.

Subsequently, after the hon. member for Trinity came to me and talked the matter over, I told him that it would be all right with me for him to take over this matter and bring it before the house. As far as the resolution now before the house goes, it refers, and quite properly, to health, and in that connection I wish to quote from two eminent authorities. Lord Dawson of Penn recently warned the students of Guy's Hospital Medical School of our progress towards national suicide. He said:

> The problem of rearing a fit race transcends in importance all other domestic questions. By the improvement of medical knowledge and by the quickening of the public conscience, we have cut down the death-rate and thereby enabled to survive many unfit people whom in the old days nature eliminated. This bad stock is a dead-weight on the nation. These people are passengers in the national omnibus, and if they propagate, which they do not hesitate to do, the damage they inflict is carried on to future generations. No policy which aims at raising the national physique can succeed if it does not take cognizance of these biological facts.
> Our piecemeal social policy has no coherent purpose, and is too much shaped by expediency. There is not behind it the study of scientific law and biological facts on which alone the health of a people can be founded. Falling death-rates are only matters for congratulation in proportion as they denote the preservation of people healthy enough to enjoy life and effective enough to be sound workers and sound players.

That was from the king's physician. This is what Lord Horder, one of the most eminent physicians in the world, says as to the necessity of health:

> A national stock-taking shows some unpalatable facts. In this country, one in 120 persons is feeble-minded, one in 200 is insane, one in 10 is too dull or too sickly to be absorbed into industry. The expense of educating and caring for these inefficients is enormous, but more serious is the fact that the future stock is being recruited from them.

The writer of the article from which I am quoting goes on to say in the English Review, December, 1936:

> We were warned also in 1934 by Sir George Newman, then Chief Medical Officer to the Board of Education, who wrote in his annual report on the health of the school-child: "The exceptional saving of infant life since 1910 has added to the population thousands of young children who under different circumstances would not have survived. If we are saving as many physically and mentally enfeebled children, it is obvious that we must anticipate a heavy burden of defective children in the schools at five years of age. . . . When we come to observe 100 children of the age of twelve years in an average elementary school, we shall find that 75 per cent of them reveal more or less serious defects."

The writer of the article goes on to say:

> These terrible words, coming from men who command the greatest respect and authority, must force us, unless we are consciously and deliberately bent on national decay, to revise not merely our ideas about the so-called social services but the very foundations of our morality.

These are the opinions of two of the most eminent medical men in the world.

While I shall speak for only five or six minutes longer, I want to take time to pay tribute to our Minister of National Health (Mr. Power). He is an old sportsman; he commanded a Toronto company at the front, and he is respected in that city by the rank and file of soldiers and sportsmen. He is also an old hockey player. Like the hon. member for Trinity, I have every confidence that the minister will take up this matter of public importance and others which deserve careful consideration by this house.

Anglo-Saxons are a sporting race. As has been said, on the green fields of Eton Waterloo was won; and the first duty of a government is to look after the health, peace, prosperity and welfare of its people. In the motherland, Mr. Speaker, they take part in sport the way you used to do. One might say that everybody there is a sportsman. The men, women and children of England have been born and bred in a love of outdoor life, though it may be only walking, or cross country riding, or some similar exercise. They are not content to be mere spectators. The whole British Empire has followed their example, with the result that it has commanded the admiration and respect of the world. To-day England is recovering because of the health of her people, fostered by their love of sport; she is leading the world in many ways, such as in balanced budgets, in tariffs, in recreational schemes, in reconstruction, and to promote recovery, she has also a housing policy, which, as the Minister of National Health mentioned last night, is a most important matter, related to public health.

A country does not belong solely to those who live in it to-day; it is an inheritance from the past; it is a possession for the present, and a trust for the future. As far as our country is concerned I would pay tribute to the Ontario high school, public school and separate school coaching teachers in sport who are taking care of the children after hours, doing volunteer work to develop the physique of our future citizens. I was sorry to see cadet training abolished, because it had a great influence on public health; it led to respect for authority, discipline and manliness; it was, as I see it, not a military organization, but a means of physical development. Many of our people are beneficiaries of that system; it has the support of reliable medical authority, and it has done good work in Ontario.

When I was on the board of education there was a considerable need of public playgrounds in Toronto. We got an intercollegiate union formed of the public schools and the high schools. When I became controller there was hardly a civic playground in Toronto except Moss Park and the Osler playground. We took over those two playgrounds and we made the work part of the parks department. The public parks then were run largely on the principle of "keep off the grass" and that sort of thing; thousands of dollars were spent, and nobody could play in some of the parks. That system was changed. The greatest asset of such a department, as I see it, is the recreational feature, not only for the sake of the school children but also for use for playing games after working hours, in connection with daylight saving, in industrial districts.

This is a work in which the press could help if it would, but of late years three-fourths of the space in the newspapers has been devoted to professional sport. After all, the amateur plays the game for the love of it, to win it if he can in a fair way before the eyes of all men. I am not opposed to professional sport if it is well conducted. I believe that it is the duty of this parliament—because there is concurrent jurisdiction between the dominion and the provinces in connection with education, health and many other matters—to do something, through the Minister of National Health, along the lines of this resolution. The late Doctor Hastings, a great medical officer who became known over the whole of North America through his battle for public health, was very strongly of that opinion. I hope that before long the federal Minister of National Health will put into effect a policy of making grants for this purpose. I would not give these grants to the provinces, because they would put it into their pockets for provincial purposes. These grants should be paid to the boards of education, the high school, separate school and public school boards and municipalities of the country, through a federal commission or subcommittee appointed by the minister, with the object of developing the physical condition of the youth of the land by direct federal aid. Military training is practically abolished, even from our city schools in Toronto. We have a great many doctors on the Toronto board of education. Some are distinguished medical men and dentists, but others are rather like honorary colonels; they are doctors of all kinds, doctors of theology, music, law and pedagogy; in fact anybody who is a trustee and cannot call himself a doctor had better qualify by the next meeting. However, we have a most progressive board of education of good men in Toronto, one second to none in the dominion. They give a great deal of time voluntarily to their work, but I may add that while I did not agree with their action in abolishing the cadet training, they are doing the finest work in education.

I have said that the press in the sporting pages could help, but for the last few years it has paid very little attention to amateur sport. You do not see much about university and high school participation in sports, but you can read pages of stuff about "pro" sport in its various forms. I am not opposed to professional sport when properly conducted; the public believe in it, and it has come to be a necessity. But I do contend that we should have a national policy of recreation and games, not only in respect of playgrounds, as I have indicated, but also to promote a national parks system that will develop our outdoor life as the British people are doing in the British isles. The government owns large tracts of land. It has practically no federal park in Ontario, which can be linked up to Trent lake, Simcoe, Georgian bay, Muskoka and right to the Lake of Bays and Algonquin park. The dominion owns a great deal of land, and a fine people's playground for the province could be created; it would benefit the hospitals and help develop the youth of the land. A similar scheme could be adopted in all the other provinces.

In conclusion, as regards these Olympic games, I am not in favour of any more grants to them, for I think they do more harm than good. There are too many governing bodies in sport, and too many concerned with it who are not connected with any club at all. Olympic games are held each five years; then they subside, and you hear nothing about them until another comes along.

Where is our national game, lacrosse, to-day? It can revive itself; it does not need any reviving. It is a sport that used to be followed in the schools, and is yet played in Toronto.

With regard to cricket, a great deal of good was done by the visit to the old country of the Canadian team, and the credit is due to a former member of this house. The game of cricket is one of the few remaining games which at this time has not been professionalized.

I suggest that a committee of the house might collect information along public health lines, and might consult with boards of education, boards of health and other provincial bodies in an effort to find out what should be done. There can be no doubt that in the years to come the physical development of our youth will be one of our most important problems. That point is brought out by Lord Dawson of Penn and Lord Horder.

A few days ago I was reading an article written by a German educationist. I believe the gentleman in question has written a book which is available in the library, English Review, December, 1936, new book review. In his observations he referred to the decadence of the British race. He says that one Englishman is an idiot, two are a football game and three are the British Empire. Another German author has said that where there is one Englishman, there is the British Empire. We have to take our hats off to old John Bull, and must respect the way he plays the game. We know he plays it for the love of it, and before the eyes of all men.

When I was a member of the board of health for the city of Toronto, Doctor Hastings came into the life of our city, and it was at that time we made our playgrounds the finest on the continent. We know that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and especially is that true among the youth of our land.

The youth of Canada are a credit to the country, notwithstanding the depression and the hard times through which the fathers who are sending them to school have had to pass. Many of those fathers have had to sacrifice some of the necessities of life in order to be able to send their children to school. The parents of the children in our schools are among the finest sportsmen in the dominion, and I hope the time is not far distant when Canada may have a proper national health department,—not a skeleton department locked up in a cupboard like Old Mother Hubbard's. I am not for one moment reflecting on the splendid deputy and assisting officers in the minister's department. I have known them all my life and have reason to believe that they are able physicians and educated men who stand most high in ability in their profession. Nevertheless I should like to see these officers supported in a national department which would be a real department of health and which would consider different methods of bringing about better health among our people. We realize that this is one of the most important problems we have to face as a people.

I suggest the minister might well consider the matter which has been placed before him by the hon. member for Trinity. A committee could be appointed to go into the matter of national public health, and should be instructed to develop a proper public health department. We know this work has been left on the shoulders of the municipalities. The city of Toronto has developed a great department which has cost the taxpayers a large sum of money, but the results have been excellent. When the department was originated we had none of the modern means of preserving public health, such as those to which the minister referred last night. Milk has to be inspected, and special precautions are necessary in connection with food and other matters. Although the officers who preceded Doctor Hastings were all most excellent men, with the help they got, yet it was Doctor Hastings who developed the modern health department of Toronto and expanded it. As the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said last night, much of the health research work is now done by the universities, private philanthropists and municipalities. But the municipalities will have to place the burden on real estate, and real estate can stand the burden no longer.

Life is not worth living unless there is health. No matter how much money a person has, he is poor unless he has health. To-day the government is spending $2,000,000 on the health of animals, but only $500,000 on the health in Canada of ten million individuals. I say the municipality must be relieved of some of the real estate burdens. If we are to develop the hardy race to which reference was made by the two gentlemen to whom I have referred, we must have help from parliament given to the municipalities in connection with public health.

Last night we heard a good speech from the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann), and with his observations I fully agree. Out of all the moneys that are being collected through taxation, do hon. members know how much the city of Toronto will receive? Well, from the main estimates we are to have $17,000 to be spent on the eastern gap, and a few extra dollars for revolving doors and other repairs on the post office, or a total of $20,000. That is what the city of Toronto, in which there are Liberals as well as Conservatives, is to receive, and the federal government get $90,000,000 in revenue from that city.

In Toronto we maintain a first class life saving station, and at times we have to send our crews as far as Georgian bay and other outlaying sections, all at the expense of the Toronto taxpayer. In the time of Doctor Hastings we were able to make progress in health measures because there was a city income tax, as an exclusive field from 1867 to the municipalities. Then the dominion authorities came into the field. Public health costs money, and I say the municipalities and real estate cannot carry the burden any longer. Boards of education cannot do it. We must have some support from the federal department of health.

The minister, I believe, would do well if he could see his way clear to read into the resolution what was suggested last March in something I had placed on the order paper. I believe a committee of this house or of both houses should consider the matter of national public health in all its phases, as it has been done in England. Many of our families have been seriously injured by the depression, and because of it some are on relief. Despite their difficulties, however, we must admire the way our industrial workers have carried on in sending their children to the high schools of Toronto. I believe parliament would be doing them a good turn if it were to appoint such a committee as I suggested last March.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I shall require only a few moments to place before the house the views of the group to which I belong. First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) upon bringing this matter to the attention of parliament. It is an old saying that the battle of Waterloo was won on the playgrounds of England. It is true that many of the battles of life are won on our playgrounds.

I am intensely interested in sport, and I should like hon. members to understand that anything I may say is not said because of a lack of appreciation of sport but rather because of a recognition of the part sport, in conjunction with other factors, must play in the building of our national life. First of all may I say I am glad the mover changed the motion so as not to ask for a ministry of sport. In the amended motion he asks only that the Department of Pensions and National Health shall incorporate the ideas he has put forth into its work of enhancing the health of our people.

There are two points I suggest we ought to bear in mind: First, to a great extent the matter of health and the development of sport and recreation is in the provincial field, and the physical training mentioned by the mover is carried on chiefly by the provincial education and health departments. Further, to a great extent sport is supervised by provincial athletic organizations. To set up now a national body that would tend to overlap would be simply to infringe upon another field. Of course the Department of National Defence sets aside a certain amount of money for cadet training. If the government would consider the feasibility of spending that money for the development of athletic clubs I for one believe it would go further in promoting the general health of our people than it goes as we are now spending it. I do not think a sports ministry, or even to have the Department of Pensions and National Health handle a national program, would be feasible. I believe the question of sports is largely a provincial matter, and one that should be handled by the provincial departments of education and health.

I do think there may be a place for a commission on cultural development, which might seek to promulgate national drama, national musical festivals and some type of national recreation. But when we come to consider the feasibility of spending a sum of money on a sports ministry, or even a sub-department of sports under the minister of health, it seems to me there are one or two other things that should be considered also, not because sport is less important but because there are some other things that are far more important. I grant you, Mr. Speaker, that sport and recreation do make for healthy bodies, but there are other things that are more important than recreation. Some of them are preventive dentistry; the proper care of children, particularly infants, and a proper program of mental and physical hygiene. At the present time in Canada we have an alarmingly high rate of mental and social disease. We have an alarmingly high infant mortality rate and very high maternity death rate. We lag far behind New Zealand, Australia and the Scandinavian countries in combating these things. Granting that some part of this situation is due to the fact that we are such an isolated people and that we are not as accessible to doctors and hospitals as are the people in more congested countries, the fact remains that it is futile for us to talk about setting up a sports ministry when at the present time we are unable to provide medical service for large sections of our people, and while we are unable to give proper maternity care or proper pre-natal and post-natal care to thousands of children born in this country. In the province of Saskatchewan a survey was made of several municipalities, in which it was found that thirty-eight per cent of the children in the rural schools had permanent teeth in a state of decay. Last night it was said that this is a task belonging to the provincial governments. I would agree with the last speaker, who said that the provincial governments and the municipalities can no longer carry that load.

This is what it means: At the present time our health program is very spasmodic. Here you have two municipalities side by side. Through no fault of the residents of those municipalities the financial situation of both is very different. In one municipality they are in a position to take care of the children in their rural schools who need dental care or who require their tonsils removed; that work is done for a lump sum. That has been done in a number of well fixed municipalities in Saskatchewan. But in other municipalities whose credit is not so good and where the tax collections have been low, that cannot be done. If we have any money to spend for a sports ministry; if we have any money to spend in looking after the health of the people of Canada, let us spend it in setting up dental clinics, baby clinics and maternity clinics to look after the health of our people.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that any money so spent would be the best investment this parliament ever made. Preventive medicine in any form is not a wasteful extravagance; it is an investment, and a good one. A few years ago it was my privilege to present a brief concerning certain areas in Saskatchewan and to make a study of subnormal families. Without wearying the house let me give just one instance dealing with twelve subnormal families living in one particular locality which, within one generation, produced over two hundred offspring, 178 of whom are still living. Thirty-six per cent of them never reached grade six in school. Thirty-eight per cent suffered from social disease and forty-six per cent live either in penal or in mental institutions. Where formerly there were twelve families living on public charity to-day forty-eight families are living on public charity. The cost of supporting these people has increased fourfold in twenty-five years to say nothing of the moral and physical effect on the remainder of the community as a result of social disease, which they spread very largely.

Any money that may be spent in meeting a problem such as this will be money well invested. In the province of Ontario we have a splendid example of what happens when you have proper medical care applied to children. The Dionne quintuplets have become the wards of the Ontario government—I assume in view of the fact that the premier of this province has no issue of his own. The care given them has resulted, despite the initial handicaps, in the raising of five healthy and pretty children. That same care is the birthright of every child born in the Dominion of Canada, whether it be born in a rich home or in a shack on the prairies.

While we in this group therefore are much in favour of recreation and sport in any shape or form, the position we take is that any money this government can afford to spend ought to be spent in looking after our people and in the promotion of preventive medicine.

Mr. R. A. PELLETIER (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take part in this debate for two reasons. At the outset may I say that I have listened very carefully to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas), which caused me to look at the resolution once more. I find that the resolution suggests that in the interests of public health a ministry of sports should be established.

I do not believe it is the intention of the mover of this resolution to minimize the value of public health in Canada. Rather by this resolution he attempts to say that, through sports, at least a part of the problem of our national health may be solved. The resolution does not preclude any other attempts being made, through preventive medicine, dental clinics and so on, to meet other branches of the same problem. This is simply advanced as one way to deal with one part of the question. However, I desire to associate myself with the mover of this resolution, because I believe in it in principle. I cannot say that I agree that a ministry of sports should be set up, but I believe the problem is of national importance and for that reason I associate myself with the principle of the resolution.

A second reason why I speak to this motion is that whenever competitive sport is mentioned we naturally think of champions, and, speaking of champions, I come from a province which has produced the greatest champions Canada has ever had, namely the Edmonton Grads. That team needs no introduction in Canada. They are an organization of young ladies known in connection with basketball the world over. Ever since they first won the world's basketball championship they have retained it throughout the years and met all comers, teams from Canada, the United States and Europe, and carried Canada's name to glory wherever they have been. I mention this example because I believe that no debate on sports in this house would be complete without some mention being made of that team. If we inquire into the reasons for their success we shall find that it is largely due to the systematic methods adopted by their coach. Ever since Percy Page took charge he has been able to turn out champions and keep them champions, something that has never happened before in Canadian sports history. If Canada should decide to supervise in somewhat the same manner but perhaps on a larger and more extensive scale the activities of various sporting organizations, I am sure she would have reason to be proud of the champions she could turn out.

In conclusion may I state once more the views of our group. In principle we agree that there should be some supervision over Canadian sports. We also agree with the hon. member for Weyburn when he says that there are many other improvements to be effected in Canada before making such an attempt as this. The resolution is simply one means of promoting public health and does not preclude any other endeavour of that sort which might be made.

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): Perhaps I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to say a very few words. Representing as I do the county of Wentworth and part of the city of Hamilton, and coming from a district which has always been held in rather high regard in the realm of amateur sport in this country, regardless of the fact that the Hamilton Tigers went down to defeat this fall before the Ottawa Rough Riders, and our Dundas Intermediates were defeated by the hon. member for Lambton West's Intermediates—coming as I say from that district I feel bound to express my appreciation of what amateur sport has done and is doing for the youth of this country. I know of no better influence for good in any community than clean, well regulated amateur sport. I am pleased to support more or less the views of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton). I could not have supported a ministry of sports, but I do congratulate him upon bringing this matter before the house, and I feel it should have the sympathetic consideration of all hon. members.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I desire to thank the mover of the resolution (Mr. Plaxton) for having brought this very important matter to the attention of the people of Canada. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind that sport, not so much on account of the physical development which results from it as on account of the spirit and mentality which it develops, is of much value to the people of Canada. I am somewhat at a loss, however, to know just what is meant by the terms of the resolution. If the hon. gentleman means physical culture in schools, if he means that we should establish a ministry or commission of sports such as they have in Europe, whereby the children are taught physical culture—and perhaps he will not take it amiss if I say are trained to become cannon fodder—then I do not think he is speaking the mind of the people of this country. If on the other hand he means by sports what I shall describe as competitive field sports, such as hockey, football, lacrosse and so on. then I doubt very much whether any nation reared and strengthened on individual effort as Canada has been from the time of our pioneer forefathers, requires any governmental or governing body to teach the youth of this country whether they should or should not play hockey, football or lacrosse.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POWER: As far as I am concerned I believe the hon. member has served a very useful purpose in bringing this matter to the attention of the house and the public. Owing to certain unfortunate occurrences at the last Olympic games an agitation arose to the effect that there should be in Canada some body to decide who should be an amateur and who should be a professional. In my youth, long before I knew anything about this house, I took part in the sports of the day, and in those days there was a definition of amateur and professional. In Canada for a certain period of time those who accepted money for their prowess in athletics were permitted to play with and against those who did not so accept money, as is the case in England to-day in cricket. I think any of my hon. friends who turn to the sports pages in the English papers will see that in the county games Mr. Smith is mentioned, and A. B. Jones, which indicates that one is an amateur and the other a professional.

Mr. DUNNING: On the same team.

Mr. POWER: On the same team. They are allowed to play with or against one another. I am not quite so sure of the facts —perhaps my friend the Minister of Finance will correct me—but I think the same system obtains in soccer.

Mr. DUNNING: In rugby.

Mr. POWER: Whether that is a good system or not I am not prepared to say. But I doubt very much whether it would be in the interests of Canada to say there shall be a minister—who after all originally was a politician—who shall decide whether or not three members of a team from western Canada sending a challenge in football are professionals. As the person upon whom this task would probably fall, I must say that I would very much like somebody else to undertake it.

Perhaps in this country we have neglected the physical side of education, possibly to our detriment. In so far as my knowledge of constitutional history goes, I understand that this matter would not be within the purview of the federal government. At the present time we have such organizations as the boy scouts and the cadet movements which are carrying on work conducive to the better physical development of the youth of our country. As far as field sports are concerned, as I said, I would not want to be the minister connected therewith. I would not want to be the man who had to choose the referees in the play-offs for the Stanley cup games; I would not want to have to judge horse racing or to see that wrestling matches were not framed in advance. I would not want to be obliged to listen to the tales of prowess related after the nineteenth hole in golf. I feel that the time will come, as it has come in other countries, where the appropriate authority—I do not think this would be the federal authority—will see to it that our children are trained in such a way as to make them strong and healthy in future life and a credit to their race and country. We used to call it physical torture when I was a youth.

The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) was kind enough to give me notice of this resolution. I know he spent a great deal of time in preparing his remarks and he even took the trouble to propose a bill. No one in this house has brought more credit to Canada through athletic feats than has the hon. member for Trinity. As a matter of what I would call practical politics or practical administration, I do not think a ministry of sports could be established, whether it were intended for the development of physical culture or for the development of field sports. If my hon. friend will listen to the advice of one who has been somewhat longer in the house than he has, he will withdraw his resolution. He has attained the object which I know he hoped to attain, that of drawing the attention of the people to the fact that the time has come when we must develop our children into healthy men and women.

Mr. H. E. WILTON (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words to what has been said already. I am strongly in favour of anything that will benefit the youth of Canada, representing as I do a city which has produced more amateur champions, both Canadian and world wide, in proportion to its size than any other city in Canada. One of the problems which faces the civic authorities of Hamilton is that of the provision of finances to maintain the public playgrounds. The medical health officer of Hamilton—I believe the same applies to the medical health officers of many other cities—has gone on record as saying that the civic controlled playgrounds are of great advantage in improving the morals and health of the youth of the city. I believe Hamilton was one of the first cities to provide public playgrounds; it led the way in this as it has led the way in many other things. I could give the house a list of thirty or forty outstanding things which have tended to make the world a better place and which had their inception in the city of Hamilton. This city is of so much importance and is so jealously regarded that for some reason it was left out of the official book issued last year by the publicity department at Ottawa and distributed throughout the United States.

Reverting to the matter of playgrounds: a couple of years ago the municipality of Hamilton found itself forced to close some of the playgrounds because of a shortage of funds. It was realized that this would be detrimental to the youth of Hamilton, but it had to be done in the interests of the taxpayers. While I cannot see eye to eye with the mover of the resolution (Mr. Plaxton) when he states that a ministry of sports should be established, I do feel that the government should endeavour to give some financial assistance to municipalities which are conducting public playgrounds. The government would then be doing something which would be greatly in the interests of the health of the youth of Canada.

Mr. VITAL MALLETTE (Jacques-Cartier): Mr. Speaker, like other members of the house, I am grateful to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Plaxton) for introducing this resolution and I feel I would be remiss in my duty to my constituency if I did not make a statement on this occasion.

Every hon. member who has spoken so far has told the house of the number of champions in their respective home towns. We have so many in my county that we take that as a matter of course and keep no record. It is not my intention to spread on the pages of Hansard the names of these ladies and gentlemen who have performed so creditably in the past.

In the county of Jacques-Cartier I think we have more golf clubs to the square mile than in any other part of Canada. There is the Royal Montreal Golf Club, the Beaconsfield Golf Club, the Marlborough Golf Club, the Beaurepaire Golf Club, the Senneville Golf Club, Elm Ridge Golf Club, Summerlea Golf Club, Grove Hill Golf Club and the Meadowbrook Golf Club, and so on and so forth. If the government were to take over the direction of sports, well, Mr. Speaker, I have enough trouble with patronage as it is without having to put in recommendations for caretakers, for professionals, and perhaps for chamber-maids.

Like the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), and the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), when I was young, much younger than now, naturally I used to go in for sports. I was interested in hockey and lacrosse, and when I got older I did what the hon. member for Fort William advised this house to do, I joined a curling club. Not only did I play the game on the ice but I even had something to do with the management of the club, until at last I rose to occupy the very high position of president of the Pointe Claire Curling Club, which is a member of the Canadian branch of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club, an aggregation comprising over 3,300 amateurs in curling in the eastern part of Canada. After a while they elected me president of the Canadian branch of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club. I was informed by the representative of the branch at Montreal that he had written to the secretary of the club in Scotland to tell him that since the foundation of the branch in Montreal in 1852 I was the first French-Canadian to be elected to such high office. This was very satisfactory, but my pride was lowered by the fact that the secretary after five weeks had not answered that communication, and I said that the probable explanation was that he had not yet recovered from the shock.

We have also in Jacques-Cartier race tracks, yacht clubs, boat clubs, canoe clubs, polo clubs, baseball clubs, hockey clubs, in fact, every kind of sport.

I do hope that the government will keep away from sports as much as possible. I know the trouble I would have in my own county well enough not to wish to see members representing other metropolitan counties in similar trouble.

As regards public skating rinks, playgrounds and that kind of thing, in most of the small towns we have them to-day. They are there, and they are provided by the municipal authorities. We did not have such conveniences a generation ago, and where we did have them, it was the boys of those days who had to provide them through their own work and out of their own little savings. But to-day, every time a group wants something it goes to the municipal council, and public moneys must be expended to provide these things. Once you go to the municipal councils, the next move will be to the legislature, and then to the federal government, and if the government undertook to go into this kind of thing we would be asked for grants of all kinds. So I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Trinity will withdraw his resolution. I have just one word to say in appreciation of it, and that is, if the government does go in for controlling sports, that they may take steps to control beauty contests in case another one is held on this hill this year.

Mr. PLAXTON: In view, Mr. Speaker, of the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power), with which I agree, I would ask leave to withdraw my motion.

Motion withdrawn.

PURCHASING POWER

PROPOSED CREATION AND ISSUE OF NATIONAL CREDIT FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian government should consider the advisability of beginning this year to issue purchasing power, and to use that purchasing power for the improvement of the economic condition of the Canadian people.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss this very vital question I should like to read to the house an excerpt from the introduction to Professor Irving Fisher's book 100% Money, written by Robert H. Hemphill, former credit manager for the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta. In this introduction, among other things he says:

If your personal difficulty and that of all the people you know or know of is lack of money, is it not obvious that the central national difficulty is but the aggregate of the difficulties of all its citizens, that the scarcity of money is our paramount national problem.

Perhaps I should say something about that before going into my discussion, inasmuch as I know that there are a good many people in this dominion who are trying to draw the attention of the people of Canada from this question of money, and who are saying there never was more money in the dominion than there is to-day. I grant that fully; but that money is to-day in the hands of men who propose to keep it, and so the ordinary people of Canada are unable to get at it by any means at their command.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I should like to define for the house the term purchasing power. There are two kinds of money. Perhaps a good many people have not come to realize this. There is first what may be called pocket-book money, which consists of coins and bills which you can get hold of—tangible money. This is created generally by governments and by certain banks. Then there is what is known as cheque-book money, or what we might call such. This money is bank credit, and it is created by certain banks. It is really figures in a book. It is utterly intangible, but it is as good as gold, that is, it performs all the functions of any kind of money that can be conceived of, even if that money were pure gold itself. And it is made by the flourish of a fountain pen. I know there will be some who will hasten to challenge that statement, but before they rush in where wiser men may fear to tread may I suggest that they read with considerable care H. D. Macleod's book, Elements of Banking, and especially read page 157. This will show quite clearly that as long ago as 1885 it was fully recognized that there were two distinct kinds of money, that the bankers' cheque-book money is created by the flourish of a fountain pen and is destroyed by the same process; and therein lies a tremendous percentage of the trouble that is to-day afflicting the world. There may be those who will smile at this now, but within twenty years everyone in this dominion who knows anything will recognize it fully and will realize that it is a primary condition to which we should be giving our attention, and for this reason if for no other, that from ninety-five to ninety-seven percent of all the business done in the world to-day, and especially in the Anglo-Saxon world, is done, not with money which you can hold in your hand, but with money represented by figures in a book, transferable by cheque, existing only on the books of the bank. This resolution calls for figures-in-a-book money, for credit, for cheque-book money. A certain amount of pocket-book money also could be issued.

There will be those who will rise and point with gusto to the German mark and to the greenbacks as examples of the colossal failure of this kind of money. Before we waste any time on this sort of thing, let me warn those people that the kind of money I am advocating has not been used, so far as I have learned, by any government up to the present time. The money I refer to is this credit money or cheque-book money, and the proposal is that the government of the dominion prepare itself, by establishing the necessary machinery and passing the necessary laws, to issue this kind of money and use it. What might easily cause inflation of the regular pocket-book money might be far from having the same effect with cheque-book money, which is figures in a book. At the same time I cannot see that the issue of a certain additional amount of actual pocket-book money could do any harm.

There are a number of urgent reasons why we should begin to issue such money as this. In the first place we are gravely concerned with the national debt. How Canada's national debt can ever be paid off I think we can safely challenge and defy any man in the dominion to-day to show. That debt is increasing, and if we have another war, or if we have to make elaborate preparations for one, our debt can easily assume overwhelming proportions. At the same time that we are worrying about our debt and the paying off of that debt—which we should be worrying about—there are arising in this country from one end to the other demands that more and more consideration shall be given by the government to supporting, financially, various sections of the population. We are to-day about to consider the question of pensions for the blind. Everyone agrees that that is a right principle. Everyone admits that the blind should be supported to such an extent that they can exist comfortably. How much of a burden that will impose upon the dominion government perhaps we should all hesitate to compute. At the same time we are beginning to feel that those who have fought life's battles and who have attained the age of fifty-five or sixty should be allowed to retire to a well-earned rest; and in our economic and industrial conditions to-day the employers are rapidly getting to the point where they force men to take a rest. There are certain industries which have no use for men over forty or forty-five years of age, especially if they are seeking employment for the first time. The problem is not an imaginary one; it is real, and it must be dealt with. How are we going to find the money for the support of such people? As sure as we are in this house, the demand for such support is going to increase.

Besides, as was brought out last night, we must face increasing demands for the support of our burnt-out soldiers; and everyone in this dominion who has a heart realizes that that demand ought to be met, so that the men who fought the battles of this country in the last terrible conflict shall not be obliged to walk down the street as the most shabbily dressed and the most hopeless people in the community. We are being called on constantly, as we have had indicated here to-day, for grants of various kinds. For example, who is there who will argue to-day that the state ought not to consider seriously the question of state medicine and state dental care and state hospitalization? Everyone feels that these things ought to become a reality. Where is the money to come from? And, there are great public works which should be attended to. Our hills are becoming denuded of the virgin forests upon which we depended for the water supply to fill our lakes and supply our rivers. In Alberta this year, and in the west generally, when the drought was upon us, many and many a community was very much at a loss to know what to do to assure itself of a water supply, and that largely because the timber had been removed from the hills which should have been a natural reservoir supplying the streams to give water to those communities. That condition is getting worse. It has been mentioned several times in this parliament.

There should be a reforestation program in this country, but where is the money coming from? Then, everyone realizes that our parks need more and more attention. There is the matter of relief for the unemployed. As far as I can see, this demand will be persistent and perpetual as long as we continue as a nation. Also there is relief for the underpaid. There are some men and some newspapers in this land who sneer because, they say, certain people are receiving more while on relief than they could get if they were working, with the result that some are leaving their work and going on relief. Can you blame them? I do not know of any community in this nation that is giving men more by way of relief than they feel they ought to have; and I maintain that if there are any industries in this country that are giving their employees less than they ought to have, it is a reflection upon this parliament. The indications are that before long something must be done either to force those industries to pay men a living wage or to aid them in supplementing the wages which the men are receiving. How we are to avoid such alarming labour disturbances as are taking place in the United States unless something like that is introduced, I will challenge any man in this dominion to show.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Further than that, the taxation burden, as has already been mentioned several times, has risen to a point at which it can no longer be borne. Something must be done, yet our need for money is more urgent than ever. Can anyone see a way out of that difficulty? There is also the national debt, of which we have been speaking. Some day we must pay that off; we should be starting now. Could we not use the national purchasing power, if we can learn how to use it, so that repayment will not cause any disastrous results? Can we not use it in purchasing the gold which we are producing in this country, the nickel we are producing, and a great number of other commodities, and, with them, help to pay off the national debt? We must find some way of paying it off. How can we do it under the present system?

There is another matter which to my mind is important. Men who are studying these subjects carefully are beginning to learn a great deal about the relation between money in circulation in a country and the income which the people in that country can earn. Robert H. Hemphill, whom I quoted a while ago, has made this statement, that it has been discovered in the United States that for every three dollars which the people of the United States earn as wages, salaries or dividends, there absolutely must be in circulation in that country one dollar. This thing is receiving a scientific approach; men are learning that certain monetary laws must be regarded. If at the present time we cannot devise a method of getting money into circulation by means which we have thus far used, then unquestionably we must find some other way of getting that money into circulation. There is simply no use in our closing our eyes to that fact.

Then, in addition there is the matter of increasing our production. Production increases according to the amount of money we have in circulation. That is a fact which some people may not realize, but one which is nevertheless true. At the present time banks cannot give enough money to increase production as we would have it increased.

Mr. ROGERS: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes, provided it is not taken off my forty minutes.

Mr. ROGERS: I should like to understand clearly whether the hon. member recognizes a distinct connection between production and purchasing power.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: Then would he kindly explain that connection?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wonder if the minister would mind raising the question a little later in my speech, if I do not deal with it by that time.

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am pleased the minister has asked the question. I wish to deal with it, because there is no doubt that those factors are vitally bound up. In order to increase production of a hundred acres of wheat or a hundred sheep under present circumstances a man must be in a position to borrow money, unless he happens to have it in his own account. If he has it, then when he invests the money in the sheep he looks upon that money as a debt which, together with interest, must be paid back to him, so that it may pay him to invest money in the sheep rather than put the sum into the bank. If he cannot get the money and the interest back, he will not invest the money. So in a very real way it might be said that every dollar we are using to-day goes out into circulation as a debt.

There will be those who may challenge my statement, and when they do I shall be pleased to answer them, because I have plenty of authority with which to meet the challenge. Our money is all debt. As one notable authority I quote Robert H. Hemphill, a man who I presume ought to know a good deal about these things, as he holds the position of manager of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta. These are his words as they appear in a foreword to Irving Fisher's book 100% Money:

> If all bank loans were paid no one would have a bank deposit,—

In the press of Canada and in after-dinner speeches we hear a great deal about deposits. May I say the people of our country must learn much more about the nature of deposits. I repeat the quotation:

> If all bank loans were paid no one would have a bank deposit, and there would not be a dollar of currency or coin in circulation.
> This is a staggering thought. We are completely dependent on the commercial banks. Someone has to borrow every dollar we have in circulation, cash or credit. If the banks create ample synthetic money we are prosperous; if not, we starve. We are absolutely without a permanent monetary system. When one gets a complete grasp upon this picture, the tragic absurdity of our helpless position is almost incredible. But there it is.

Why cannot the banks issue enough money? Simply because the banker cannot issue money unless he has a borrower; of the borrowers presenting themselves to banks for loans only a few can be trusted by the banker, and most of those whom the banker can trust will not trust themselves. The result is that they do not borrow. There is enough evidence to prove that beyond the shadow of a doubt.

There will be those who will say there is more money on deposit in the banks to-day than there was in 1929. Yes, that is true; but what is that money on deposit? The money on deposit is largely loans which the bankers have advanced to governments. That is an important point to remember. The money in question is not therefore out in circulation as we might be led to believe; it is already tied up.

More and more of bank loans are being advanced to governments and consequently are not in circulation. This is a very serious matter. Then, money must be in circulation to decrease unemployment. If money is not in circulation, men are not able to get it and are therefore unable to buy the goods industry produces. As a result, industries are not in a position to run full time; consequently they are unable to employ men full time. If we are to get employment for our people we must find some way of getting them back to work, and we cannot get them back to work until we can create payment for our goods.

It is said that we will do that through international trade. Perhaps—but the best thinkers I find have not much faith in international trade as a solution for all our problems. The cause of the depression is financial, although many people will doubt that statement. I repeat that beyond all question the cause of the depression is financial, and money must be put into circulation to bring us out of it. If we had some means of producing national money we could increase our defence without inflicting undue burden upon Canada. This country can produce practically everything necessary to equip itself with almost any degree of defence it may wish. Why can we not produce the goods and equip ourselves for defence measures?

Then, there is a still more serious matter to consider—and again there will be hon. members in the house who will challenge what I am about to say. I am positive, so far as I have been able to get information, that there is no successful answer to the statement that the government of Canada and of virtually every modern country is controlled by financial institutions. Consequently democracy is passing away. Yesterday the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) talked about the way in which democracy has failed. I believe I have indicated one good and sufficient reason why it is failing, and unless we can change this matter of the control of money I say democracy will continue to fail. There is a reason why Germany has gone fascist; there is a reason why Italy has done likewise; there is a reason why Russia has gone communist.

Then, having established the need for such money, if we can find a way in which to get it, the next question is this: Is such money feasible? Is it practicable to have national money, and particularly national credit? There are three main questions which arise in discussing this matter. First, could Canada have the power to create national money? I believe we need not discuss that question, but we shall at a later time glance at it from two or three aspects. Second, should national money be sound money? The expression "sound money" has gone back and forth from one end of this country to the other, and we are led to ask ourselves: What is sound money?

An hon. MEMBER: Alberta money.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Somebody is waking up. What should be sound money? Should national money be sound? I shall not have time to discuss these questions at sufficient length, but in them I say there is a tremendous amount about which most people have not yet even begun to think. The next question is this: Would it cause inflation? During the remainder of the time at my disposal I should like to discuss these three aspects of the matters relating to national money. Can Canada constitutionally create it; should such money be sound money, and would it cause inflation?

In the first place, has Canada the necessary power? Yes, she has. The British North America Act guarantees such power to Canada. If I am correctly informed, acts of 1914 and of 1923 passed in this house specifically gave the government power and authority to create money, a power which for some strange reason has not been exercised, so far as our records show. It has not been exercised fully, we will say. It appears now that the power to create our national money is being manipulated away from us. I should be very glad to be convinced that that is not so. And it is charged that this is being achieved, this manipulation, through our bank acts, through the Bank of Canada Act and through the power and influence of international finance working through the press of this land.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I can say immediately that that statement is utterly and completely without foundation. I do not understand that my hon. friend is taking responsibility for it; he is merely quoting what someone said somewhere, and it is quite completely without foundation.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Very good. The minister will remember that I said it was charged, and we will deal with the matter more as the days go by, because the evidence we have will take a whole lot of explaining away.

Mr. DUNNING: Present it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is not time yet.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Do not make your charges, then.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I did not make the charge; I said it was charged. I will leave the statement just as I made it.

Now I go on. The next point is: Is national money sound? First, why not? What is the backing which stands behind any bank money if it is not the guarantee of the Dominion of Canada, and if the credit of the dominion is sufficient backing for bank money why should it not be sufficient backing for dominion money if that money is correctly managed? Let us use a simple illustration. If you, any one of you, were put in charge of the economic affairs of an island as large and as rich as Ontario, could you have any money in your island? This brings up the question that was raised by my hon. friend a moment ago. If the island teemed with fruit, with metals and with all manner of desirable things which men use both directly and to create the things they need, again I ask: Could you have money whether or not you had gold?

Mr. ROGERS: Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt once more? Suppose the island teemed with purchasing power as he has described it, and there was no production, would conditions be satisfactory in that island?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Not by any means, but we will answer that question further as we go forward.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The laugh will be on the other side of the faces before long, too. All right; think of an island like Ontario, filled with natural riches. Could that island have money? If the government of the island created money, what would be the backing of that money? For those who are so exceedingly smart over there let me suggest that they go and get Sir Norman Angell's series of articles which appeared in the Financial Post last year. Read them through with a great deal of care; turn to page 19 and read this little illustration, and see what you get out of it. I am going to retell it now. He says a sailor landed on a certain island with a block of gold. He wanted to use the gold in order to buy certain goods for his own use, but at the time he did not see how he could use the gold. So he went to a missionary and confided the gold to his keeping, saying, "As soon as you get a chance, take my gold to the old country and have it minted. Meanwhile I will write orders against it." So the sailor wrote orders and passed them to the natives in return for the goods which the natives gave him. In due time the natives were passing a great quantity of these orders around the island, and accepting them as face value as money. But, Sir Norman Angell says, the gold never did go to the old country; it never was minted into coin, but the system continued to function just the same, and the gold might just as well have been a piece of lead. When hon. gentlemen opposite get through explaining that it will be plenty of time to sneer. Until they can explain it, however, they would be wise not to reveal their ignorance; until they can explain that away it might be just as well to keep right on studying.

Now, the question is, what was the backing of the money when it was in circulation in the island?

Mr. LAWSON: The intrinsic value of the gold block.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But the block was never minted.

Mr. LAWSON: It did not have to be minted to have intrinsic value.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Remember, this is all on page 19 of Sir Norman Angell's article. Go and read the pamphlet.

Mr. LAWSON: But I have read it, and I am trying to get my hon. friend to explain to my satisfaction that there is no intrinsic value behind this credit which he is going to set up.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Very good, but you will find that the backing of that money was the goods and services, the producing and consuming power of that island, the exchanges, as Sir Norman Angell says. It will take a good deal of laughing to explain that away.

Mr. DUNNING: Sir Norman Angell did not say that.

Mr. LAWSON: Nor anything like it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Get the pamphlet; read page 19, and we will see. At any rate, this is an illustration.

What is the backing of money? That is the question. The backing of money is the goods and services, the producing and consuming power of a country; in other words, the need of the country for the money. What do authorities say about it? In 1936 Senator Owen wrote an article which completely supports that stand; in 1936 Reginald McKenna made a statement completely supporting that stand, as far as I can see. On January 30, 1936, he is credited with having uttered these words:

> Additional currency, however, can now be furnished by the authorities, if they choose to exercise their powers, without reference to the central bank's holdings of gold. Thus the nineteenth century, which brought into general use a means of payment hitherto scarcely known outside London—

He is referring there to the power of creating credit and transferring it by cheque.

> —brought also the machinery whereby it could be subjected to intelligent control.

In his 100% Money, Irving Fisher supports the same idea time and again. Then G. D. H. Cole, eminent Oxford economist, has written the following words in his Principles of Economic Planning, at page 213:

> Whenever the need arises to increase the supply of money, I am suggesting that the increase ought to be made, not in the form of increased loan credits to either producers or consumers, but of non-repayable presents of purchasing power to all the citizens, save to the extent to which the state decides to use the money itself for public purposes.

And at page 217 we find these words:

> It does seem to me undeniable that the state, by creating new money without thereby creating new debt, can come near to bringing about the full use of the available productive resources, and can, by recurrent infusions of additional money, keep those resources in use.

Those who talk about the dangers of inflation must remember that they are challenging the words of a man who stands very high in the economic life of Great Britain. Here is another quotation, from page 208:

> Let the state, it is urged, create more purchasing power, and more production will speedily follow.

This will answer the question proposed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). Again:

> I do not dispute this. I agree that, if the state makes a present of new money to consumers—not a credit advance, repayable later on, but a present—the effect will be to stimulate additional production.

There are many more statements that I could read. The question is, What is the backing of money? There are books written to show that the gold standard has broken down, that the backing of money is no longer gold, and the wisest men know it is not. Nor is the backing any other metal. It is the goods and services, and the producing and consuming power of the community, and the credit and confidence the people have—

Mr. DUNNING: Confidence, that is it. All the rest can be left out.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Quite so. Now the question is, How are you going to produce that confidence?

Mr. DUNNING: That is it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What Angell calls exchanges. May I read a passage from Senator Owen?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Who is he?

Mr. BLACKMORE: He is the chairman of the monetary reform committee of the United States. I am sorry the hon. member does not know. He says:

There is no mystery in what makes the value of money,—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): These are nearly all foreign authorities. The hon. member passes over those of his own province.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If you would leave the province alone it might do better. The value of money depends absolutely upon the supply of money in relation to the demand for money, entirely regardless of the value of gold content.

Mr. ROGERS: What creates the demand for money?

Mr. BLACKMORE: The desire of the people to produce, motivated by their desire to consume, operating through effective demand.

Then the next point, Would such money cause inflation? First, what is inflation? We say ordinarily that inflation means a fall in the purchasing power of a dollar or rise in the price of commodities in terms of that dollar. You will all agree with that, I think. But another definition of inflation we cannot allow. It is the definition which has been used by a great many propagandists throughout the country, who contend that any kind of money created by anybody but a banker is inflation. This is an absolute lie.

The next question is, What is the cause of inflation? The main cause of inflation is having too much money in circulation actually among the people for the goods and services that are available. That is the test. More money gradually introduced into circulation will cause more production, as was brought out a few minutes ago in Senator Owen's article, giving more backing for more money Our ability to produce goods and services is almost unlimited. Of that there is no question, otherwise why all the unemployment and all the half-time work? What do the authorities say about this matter? Let me read a passage from Paul Einzig's book World Finance Since 1914, published in 1935, page 17:

The more advanced definitions—

That is of inflation.

—duly allow for any change in the volume of real wealth. Thus if the volume of currency and credit increases, and the production of real wealth increases in the same proportion, then there is no reason why the expansion of currency and credit should produce an inflationary effect, even if it affects the spending power of the community. It is only if the increase of currency and credit is in excess of the additional production of real wealth that it is defined as being of inflationary character.

That, I think admits of no successful contradiction.

The next question is, What about our present system? Our present system is the system that causes inflation, and the people who cause the inflation are the very ones who are everlastingly telling us that the government issue of money would cause inflation. You will find that in the platforms of both the Democratic and Republican parties in the United States, and the same thing applies to us, that it is the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit that causes the trouble. Anyone who wants a good discussion of this should read Irving Fisher's 100% Money, after which I will talk with him privately. For the United States Professor Fisher uses these figures, and I think corresponding figures can be found for Canada. In the United States in 1926 there were four billions of pocketbook money in circulation, and twenty-two billions of cheque book money. Between 1926 and 1929 the amount of pocketbook money remained the same, but the cheque book money increased from twenty-two to twenty-three billions, and Professor Fisher says definitely that that increase of one billion of cheque book money caused the inflation and the subsequent collapse which resulted in this disastrous depression. In 1933 there were five billions of pocketbook money, because President Hoover, in an attempt to change the situation had introduced one billion more, but there were only fifteen billions of cheque book money. And that is what caused the depression and is continuing it.

Now may I read a passage which is rather enlightening, from Professor Fisher's book "100% Money", page 6 of his summary:

> An essential part of this depression has been the shrinkage from the 23 to the 15 billions in cheque book money, that is, the wiping-out of 8 billions of dollars of the nation's chief circulating medium which we all need as a common highway for business.
> This loss, or destruction, of 8 billions of cheque book money has been realized by few and seldom mentioned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member's time is up.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think I have four minutes more, owing to the interruptions, have I not? May I have another minute to make up for the interruptions?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It continues.

> There would have been big newspaper headlines if 8 thousand miles out of 23 thousand miles of railway had been destroyed. Yet such a disaster would have been a small one compared with the destruction of 8 billions out of 23 billions of our main monetary highway. That destruction of 8 billion dollars of what the public counted on as their money was the chief sinister fact in the depression from which followed the two chief tragedies, unemployment and bankruptcies.

If that writer knows what he is talking about can there be any question as to the cause of the depression?

In closing I submit that inasmuch as the present system presents to us only despair and failure, inasmuch as there is grave need of new money without debt and without taxation, inasmuch as the thoughts of a great many progressive men are leading them to the conclusion that national money is the way out, inasmuch as national money is sound and constitutional and safe, or could be, and could be and should be abundant, inasmuch as the national credit has never been tried and consequently no one knows whether it would cause inflation or not, and inasmuch as national credit ought to work, for 97 per cent of business is now done on credit, I urge the government to consider very seriously the matter of the creation of new purchasing power.

Mr. R. J. DEACHMAN (Huron North): Speaking in the house a few days ago the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) made an appeal to the members for sympathy in regard to conditions existing in western Canada. I am quite sure that appeal will be met almost without being made. We in the House of Commons to-day owe a great debt to the people of western Canada. I would point out that at the present moment there are five political groups in this house. Every one of the leaders of these distinct groups represents a constituency in western Canada. In addition to that we have three provincial ex-premiers. Surely, as far as western Canada is concerned we have sufficient leading in the dominion at the present time. What we need, in order to accomplish the desired end, is just a little more light. I appeal to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and to his friends, to give us a clearer explanation of what they really intend to do. I listened to my hon. friend this afternoon as closely as I could. He told us of the things that ought to be done, but he did not utter a single word of detail.

He asks for an increase of purchasing power. Purchasing power is something which must be created, not given, if a nation is going to prosper. My hon. friend talks about an island. I do not like his island, it is too large. It is almost as large as the province of Ontario and it does not suit my purpose at the moment. Will hon. members permit me to take them to another island, a nice productive island, large enough to accommodate every hon. member in the house and perhaps some of those who assist us in the work we do here? This is a fertile island and all that is required to bring forth fruit is labour. I ask my hon. friend a question, the answer to which can come during the session from him or from some other member of his group: What will be the purchasing power of my hon. friend when he is settled upon that island? What will be his purchasing power at the end of his first year upon the island? I tell the house what I think his answer will be. His purchasing power will be measured exactly by his production.

Every hon. member on that island will bring to the market place the products which he has produced. His capacity to buy or to purchase the goods which others have produced will be determined by the volume and value of the products which he brings to the market place. In time a price system will evolve which will establish the relative price relationships between different products. Not everyone will produce grain or fruit. Perhaps some will make speeches. Some will be civil servants and perhaps we may have a governor on that island. It may be desirable to have some music. I would be willing to make a contribution in order that the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) might be present. I submit that the purchasing power of that island will depend upon production and there is no other way in which you can increase it.

Then the hon. member for Lethbridge comes upon the scene and says, "We ought to increase the purchasing power." How can you do it? You can do it only by taking from some who have produced and giving it to others. There may be some increase in consuming power through exchange with the other islands which surround you, but the ultimate standard of living on that island will depend upon the productive power of the island and upon the exchanges which take place with the other surrounding islands. I ask my hon. friend to think over this matter very carefully.

I ask my hon. friend and his friends to change, in their imaginations, this island into the province of Alberta. Exactly the same conditions prevail. Will it make any difference how often you change your government in the province of Alberta? Will it help you if you bring out money with stamps on the back of it? Will it help you if you put in a double or triple system of currency? Is there any means by which your consumptive power can be increased except by production, plus favourable exchange? I think my hon. friends ought to give an answer to that question. If they do not give an answer, then I think they ought to try to present to us what they deem to be an answer. We should be given an opportunity to examine it.

I read the platform of the Aberhart party —I cannot call it the social credit party because it certainly is not that—in the papers a few days ago. Its planks have been brought up again by the hon. member for Lethbridge. What does he say? He says that we should have an issue of debt free money. I should like to know what constitutes debt free money. If I am a farmer in Alberta and want to borrow $500 with which to purchase twenty steers at $25 each in order that I may feed them on my land, can I, under the system proposed by my hon. friend, go to the government and ask for $500? When that is done, can I say to myself that I hold in my hand $500 which I have received from the Alberta government and which will purchase for me twenty steers? Can I say that I have no obligation to pay that back and that I have no obligation to pay interest upon it? If that be true, the government of Alberta could give me the twenty steers. It could give me machinery and equipment to any amount, and there would be no interest to pay. Houdini on the stage took rabbits out of his hat—Houdini could not make his living by selling the rabbits. Yet that is the proposal made by my hon. friend.

I do not want to continue the argument to any great length, but I warn my hon. friend that I shall stay here as long as he and Mr. Aberhart survive. I only want him and those who support him to tell us how they will increase purchasing power. I want to know what he will do about debt free money. I want to know how long he will continue to issue debt free money. I want him to face the simplest of simple problems. If that could be done in Alberta, would it follow that the government of that province could buy control of the Royalite oil wells by the use of debt free money? I want to know if they could buy control of Noranda mines. I want to know if they could buy up the obligations of another province and live upon the interest. Is there any limitation to this scheme which they propose? Can it be continued indefinitely, or is it to be limited to just such things as we witnessed last summer when for a brief time they issued a few dollars of script money. The only thing they got out of it was a headache, plus the price they received for a few souvenirs that were sold. It is not a difficult question that I ask. I simply ask that these gentlemen tell us how it can be done. You cannot prove it by citing the most learned authority, by quoting Norman Angell or anyone else. You must put this system to the test, and unless that can be done it is useless. They have been trying to do it for a long time in Alberta, but so far they have not succeeded. If my hon. friend were given that marvellous gift which he says the bankers hold, would he stop at the paltry $18,000,000 which the banks of Canada earned last year? Any organization with such limitless possibilities for creating wealth could make the Count of Monte Cristo look like a piker? The government of Alberta has been trying these things and all they have left at the present time is the little sheet of paper which I hold in my hand—the outline of things they propose to do in the future. What do we ask for? We ask for a simple plan and a simple statement of fact. You cannot in this world get something for nothing without taking that something away from somebody else—if you can will you tell us how it is to be done.

Mr. WILLIAM HAYHURST (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to support this resolution of my leader (Mr. Blackmore). The interest which the discussion has provoked in this house is an indication of the very deep concern taken in this vital question all over this dominion. The people of this country at least are recognizing that something must be done to alleviate conditions as they have developed in Canada and other countries.

Our good friend from Huron North (Mr. Deachman) says that you cannot get something for nothing, but surely he does not mean that. Why, some of the best things in life are something for nothing. The rain that falls upon our land, the sunshine that ripens the crop these are something for nothing, and they are vital to production. We in this part of the house hope in our time to disprove some of the fallacies which have been enunciated by the hon. member for Huron North. It is singular that he should still preach the doctrine that production must accompany purchasing power. If he had farmed in western Canada, as most of us here have done, where we produce large quantities of wheat and other cereals, potatoes and other products, he would know that the man who grows a ton of potatoes does not produce the money that will purchase them. We produce goods in enormous quantities, and usually at a loss. If I may be pardoned for making a personal reference, last fall I shipped ten head of pure bred shorthorn cattle, weighing on the average 200 pounds each, and all they brought in the Edmonton market was $6 each, or $3 a hundred pounds. Will anyone in this house say that a man can produce beef at that rate? Beef is one of the real assets of this country, and we cannot continue to produce at that rate when we have no control whatsoever of the value of money. The yield does not furnish the proper equivalent for me to buy my requirements in clothing and food, and that is due to the tremendous cost of production of that real wealth.

The hon. member for Huron North mentioned that wonderful island of his.

Mr. DUNNING: No, your island.

Mr. HAYHURST: I will give you the story of another island, where this question of money was considered, and I am going to quote an authority, Mr. A. DeV. Leigh, who is secretary of the London Chamber of Commerce. He has written the story of an island, and I am going to quote it because it illustrates some of the ideas that have been expressed by the hon. member for Huron North:

It is said that on a certain coast long ago shark's teeth were used for money. These answered the purpose all right and the industries of this primitive people were carried on very well with this currency. For years the country was prosperous, but storms ravished a nearby coast along which they had caught their supply of sharks. The storms destroyed the sharks and for a number of years no more could be procured. Money grew scarce in the island; industry languished, and the people became reduced to penury, all because of the scarcity of shark's teeth.

Then sharks became available once more, shark's teeth became plentiful, and the people had money. They went to work again, industry recovered, and the inhabitants of the island regained their former state of comfort. This situation recurred several times in the course of a long period of years, the plight of the people becoming worse each time of scarcity, yet no remedy was found.

A visitor to these shores during one of those seasons of depression was astounded at what he saw—people starving in a land where food was plentiful, for want of shark's teeth. He pointed out to them how ludicrous their attitude was in the eyes of a stranger, and they came to see that another standard than shark's teeth could be used without destroying any of the wealth of the country. At last they understood that the material of which money was made mattered little and that another medium than shark's teeth could be used and the integrity of the money would remain; that it was the relation of their medium of exchange to production which really mattered. Money is for the purpose of exchanging goods so its relation to the production of the country should be sound—

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. HAYHURST: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) says "hear, hear," to that. It goes on:

—and any other foundation for money is essentially unsound.

I hope that the discussion which this resolution is provoking in the house will be of value to all the members, and I sincerely hope that many members of the cabinet will take part in the discussion.

I think it was the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) who asked the question: What is the relationship between production and purchasing power? That question probably has not yet been answered. The difficulty, as we see it, is that those who are in control of money do not issue money based upon real wealth but issue it upon some mystical standard, whether it is called the gold standard or by some other name, rather than upon the productive capacity of the country.

What we ask in this resolution is that the government should take power to create its own money based upon its own credit. In our judgment there are two great errors in our existing economic system. First, incomes are inevitably lower than prices. Second, the government taxes us to pay interest on its credit, instead of creating its own capital money and income money. The amount of money that is paid out as income and is available to buy retail goods for consumption, as distinguished from capital money, can only be used through industry producing new goods, and in turn income money is required to buy those products of industry. The amount of income money thus distributed to the community in a given period of normal trade is less than the total sale prices of all the retail goods finished and put on the market in that period. That is one reason why all retail goods cannot be sold and a million and more producers at times are put out of work, and that is the reason why we pass through periods of depression such as we have been passing through in the last few years, and from which, through the manipulation of currency or credit control, we may escape into another period of more or less so-called prosperity. No dealing out of words can supersede realities, nor can it save the unemployed men from feeling the pinch and the degradation. The fact is there, whatever words we may use. The accumulation of capital in the form of reserves of industrial companies cannot be spent on buying consumption goods, so however huge the balance may be there is no solution to the poverty problem until that balance has been spent on incomes.

In time of war it seems that any nation is able to produce all the money it requires to make armaments. Shells are not sold, but destroyed, so that definitely brings us a little boom, because money is put into circulation for goods which are not bought in a retail market. But alas, the government borrows the money instead of creating it, and when this spurt of armament making is over it will have to collect income money in the form of taxes out of our meagre incomes in order to pay the interest on the sinking fund. More will have to be borrowed in order to help us pay our taxes. Again economists will note the inevitable slump and explain it by spots on the sun instead of advising the government to make new money for whatever expenses are necessary.

There should be no need to tax us to final hopeless poverty, if the money is not borrowed from outside the community. The trouble to-day is that we give too much prestige to our money market, which is a poor substitute for our great industries. I ask this question: Which is greater, a nation of usurers, money lenders and barterers, or a nation of producers which can provide all its steel and engineering and electrical equipment? I should judge that a nation of producers is more important than a nation of traders or usurers. As I see it, the fact is that to-day we are using a money system which has been outlived; which was perfectly satisfactory, perhaps, for an age of scarcity, but which, through the technological improvements of modern industry, has not kept pace with the times. The technological improvements of to-day have changed our entire outlook on life. This afternoon we listened to some speeches about sports. Shakespeare used these words:

> If all the year were playing holidays,
> To sport would be as tedious as to work.

To-day the engineers of the world have changed our productive capacity to such an extent that leisure and sport and play will become much more prevalent, because the "grinding necessity" of labour is no longer a necessity. In the production of all goods less economic energy is required, but it should be our object not to restrict and destroy goods, but rather to distribute them, for the object of production should be consumption.

How strange that a young country such as Canada should deliberately stop the admission of desirable elements from abroad solely because they cannot present clear and convincing evidence that they have adequate means of supporting themselves for an indefinite period after their arrival. It happens that my constituency is very largely Ukrainian, and in representing them I had the honour last year of going to the immigration department to endeavour to arrange for the admission from the Ukraine of a number of the sons and daughters of families here who had been separated by immigration officials from their relatives. But it was impossible to get any favourable answer, because we could not prove that if these people came to Canada they would be employed or would have enough money to keep them for some indefinite period of time Thus it is that the monetary conceptions of our government and many of our people are placed in the forefront of their thinking and are more important to them than the real asset of the people of this great dominion. What the dominion lacks more than anything else is people; we have tremendous resources and yet we have the unemployed. People ask: Where is the money coming from to put these unemployed to work? We contend that the money should be issued in proportion to the productive capacity of the men; and if, as someone has said, gold has intrinsic value, it and other metals, as well as wheat and other commodities, could be used for the issuance of credit or money.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, January 21, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

POWERS OF COMMITTEES

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the select standing committees of this house shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Is the wheat board functioning as required by statute?
2. Are members of said board actively engaged in the activities of the said board?
3. What salary or emolument was paid to each member of the board during the year 1935?
4. Are said salaries or emoluments still being paid?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Board appointed August 14, 1935.

John I. McFarland, Chief Commissioner, August 14, 1935 to December 3, 1935, at rate of $18,000 per year.

D. L. Smith, Assistant Chief Commissioner, August 14, 1935 to December 3, 1935, at rate of $17,000 per year.

H. C. Grant, Commissioner, August 14, 1935 to December 3, 1935, at rate of $15,000 per year.

Board appointed December 3, 1935.

J. R. Murray, Chief Commissioner, December 3, to December 31, 1935, at rate of $18,000 per year.

G. H. McIvor, Assistant Chief Commissioner, December 3, to December 31, 1935, at rate of $15,000 per year.

Dean A. M. Shaw, Commissioner, December 3, to December 31, 1935, at rate of $15,000 per year.

4. Yes. To members of the board appointed December 3, 1935.

MAJOR B. D. C. TREAT

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did Major B. D. C. Treat, M.C., of Surrey, England, spend some time in the Department of National Defence in Ottawa, and, if so, how long?

2. When did he arrive in Ottawa?

3. At whose invitation did he come?

4. Is he still here?

5. If not: (a) when did he leave, and (b) will he come back?

6. If so, when will he come back?

7. What was he doing in England before coming here?

8. Previous to his coming here, did he visit other parts of the British Empire, and, if so: (a) in what capacity, and (b) where?

9. Since his arrival in this country, what has he been doing?

10. Does he receive any salary, compensation, bonus, gratuity or pay of any kind?

11. If so, by whom is it paid?

12. Does he receive any travelling allowances; if so, how much, and by whom is it paid?

13. Are there other officers from England in the Department of National Defence?

14. If so, how many are there; since when, and at whose request have they come?

15. With respect to such officers: (a) what salary, compensation, bonus, gratuity or pay of any kind is paid to them; (b) what travelling expenses are each of them allowed, and (c) by whom are these paid?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Yes, on loan, 20 days.

2. October 3, 1936.

3. Department of National Defence.

4. No.

5. (a) December 15, 1936; (b) Not expected.

6. See 5 (b).

7. From February 16, 1933, to December 31, 1935, officially listed as Major Instructor in Gunnery, Coast Artillery School, Shoeburyness, England; otherwise unknown.

8. Not known, but it is presumed that he did not.

9. Advising on coast defences.

10. Pay of his rank from date of embarkation for Canada to date of his disembarkation in England.

11. Department of National Defence.

12. (a) Actual travelling expenses; (b) $448.86; (c) Department of National Defence.

13. Yes.

14. Ten officers as follows:

Naval Service.—One commissioned gunner since February 24, 1935; one commander since July 30, 1936.

Both these officers have been loaned to the Royal Canadian Navy at the request of the Department of National Defence.

Militia Service.—One captain and brevet major since April 1, 1935; one captain since October 28, 1935; One captain since October 1, 1936; one captain since November 28, 1936; one lieutenant since October 30, 1936.

Air Service.—Three flight lieutenants since April 2, 1935.

The Army and Air Force officers are on exchange for a two year period, and are replaced in the British Service by a Canadian officer in each case.

So far as concerns the Militia Service, the policy of interchange of officers between the Defence Forces of the Dominions and the United Kingdom was affirmed at the Imperial Conference of 1907.

In regard to the Air Service, an interchange agreement was arranged at the Imperial Conference in 1923, and subsequently ratified by Order in Council (P.C. 1424) dated September 2, 1925.

15. (a) The two Naval officers on loan receive the pay and allowances authorized for officers of similar rank in the Royal Canadian Navy, viz., commander, $16.85 per diem, commissioned gunner, $6.25 per diem.

The Army and Air Force officers on exchange receive the ordinary pay and allowance of the rank or appointment held by them in their own service, at the rates and under the regulations governing that service. If, however, they are employed by Canada in an appointment other than that which they hold in their own service and for which additional pay would be provided were the appointment held in that service, they receive the additional pay attached to that appointment at British rates.

(b) All officers receive transportation and travelling expenses to and from Canada, and for all journeys duly authorized while serving in Canada.

(c) Naval officers on loan:

Their pay and allowances and all transportation and travelling expenses are paid by the Department of National Defence.

Army and Air Force officers on exchange:

Their ordinary pay and allowances are paid by the British government. The additional pay, if any, for an appointment is paid by the Department of National Defence. At the present time no officer is receiving such additional pay. Transportation and travelling expenses to and from Canada are paid by the British government, and the transportation and travelling expenses while serving in Canada are paid by the Department of National Defence.

Similarly, in the cases of Canadian exchange officers serving with the British forces, the Department of National Defence pays the ordinary pay and allowances and their transportation and travelling expenses to and from Canada, and the British government pays the additional pay, if any, for an appointment and their transportation and travelling expenses while serving with the British forces.

TWEEDSMUIR, SASK., POSTMASTER

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Who was the postmaster at Tweedsmuir, Saskatchewan, during 1936?
2. Who is the present appointee?
3. Was the former postmaster a returned soldier?
4. How long has the new appointee been a British subject?
5. Is he a returned soldier?
6. Did the former postmaster offer to move his building to a new site if desired?
7. Were residents circularized regarding the location of the post office?
8. If so, who supplied a list to which the said questionnaire was sent?
9. How many residents requested a change in the location of the post office building?
10. How many desired retention of the services of the present postmaster?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. Robert K. Hamilton.
2. A. L. Jacobsen in a temporary capacity.
3. Yes.
4. No information.
5. No record.
6. No, Mrs. Hamilton, wife of the postmaster, expressed the willingness to do so. The question of postmaster's ability to obtain suitable site entered into this.
7. Yes, by the local district superintendent of postal service.
8. The former postmaster, R. K. Hamilton.
9 and 10. Thirty-six were satisfied with the present location and postmaster, thirty-six desired a change, and of these thirty-six, no less than thirty were so insistent on a change that they refused to patronize the Tweedsmuir office.

In the interest of harmony, a change was considered essential and was carried out on the recommendation of the district superintendent of postal service.

SYLVAN LAKE, ALTA.—BREAKWATER

Mr. POOLE:

Will a breakwater be built at Sylvan Lake, Alberta, this year?

Mr. CARDIN: The proposal is under consideration.

INSPECTION OF CANADIAN PASSENGER BOATS

Mr. WILTON:

1. To what extent are Canadian boats which are licensed for passenger service, inspected before being put into service each season?
2. How many inspectors are engaged by the government for this work, and to what extent do they inspect passenger service boats before allowing them to be put into service?
3. Is it a fact that passenger boats plying in Canadian waters with a carrying capacity of one thousand passengers have only lifeboat equipment for less than two hundred people?

Mr. HOWE:

1. (a) The boilers and machinery are opened out for inspection annually.

(b) The hull as far as can be seen without the ship being taken out of the water is inspected annually, as is the lifesaving and other equipment.

(c) Where a ship is one plying in salt water, the bottom of the ship, the rudder and sea connections are examined with the ship in drydock annually.

(d) Where a ship is one plying in fresh water, the bottom of the ship, the rudder and sea connections are examined with the ship in dock every second year or every fourth year, according to the nature of the waters in which the ship is employed.

(e) The tailshafts are drawn for inspection at periodic intervals varying from two to four years, according to the arrangement of the shaft and the waters in which the ship is employed.

2. The organization of the steamship inspection service provides for thirty-two steamship inspectors.

The extent to which passenger vessels are inspected is given in answer to question No. 1.

3. A passenger boat with a carrying capacity of 1,000 passengers might have lifeboat equipment for less than 200 persons. She would, however, have other equipment in the way of buoyant apparatus or life rafts, which, with the boats, would provide for a certain percentage of the total complement, ranging from 100 per cent to 40 per cent, according to whether the vessel were employed in open waters or sheltered waters. Every ship is required to carry a lifejacket for each person on board.

BURLINGTON CHANNEL INSPECTORS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Who are the inspectors for the government of the dredging of Burlington channel and of the reconstruction of South Pier, Burlington channel?
2. Were these appointments made by the Civil Service Commission?
3. If so, where did they try their examinations, and when?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. (a) W. H. Caldwell, W. S. Costie. (b) W. H. Caldwell.
2. No, appointments made under authority of provisions of item 425 of special supplementary estimates, 1936-37, page 16.
3. Answered by No. 2.

WILLOW COVE, ONT., POST OFFICE

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Upon whose suggestion was Willow Cove post office, Ontario, so named?
2. Were the residents of that district consulted in the matter?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. J. T. Easterbrook, the incoming postmaster.
2. No information. No objections received by department.

WASHINGTON TEXTILE CONFERENCE

Mr. LENNARD:

Will the government have representation at a conference to be held at Washington, D.C., during the first week of April, 1937, of governments, employers and workers of all countries that are textile producers?

Mr. ROGERS: The question of Canadian representation is presently receiving consideration.

LETTER CARRIER SERVICE

Mr. LENNARD:

1. What is the population or yearly postal revenue required in a town or city, before postal delivery service can be incurred?
2. What was the postal revenue of the town of Dundas, Ontario, during the year 1936?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. The main factors governing the inauguration of letter carrier service are: (a) population to be served; (b) postal revenue collected; (c) density of population; (d) postal accommodation for carrying on business; (e) time of arrival of mails; (f) local improvements, such as, sidewalks, receptacles for the receipt of mails, labelling of streets, numbering of houses, etc.

There is no hard and fast rule as regards postal revenue collected or population to be served. The department does endeavour to restrict the inauguration of letter carrier delivery to points where the revenue is approximately $30,000 and the population 10,000.

There are, however, cases where due to the exigencies of the service, letter carrier delivery has been established at points where these limits have not been met.

2. $16,478.40 (fiscal year, 1935-36).

KINISTINO INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. FLEMING:

1. How many Indians are there in the Kinistino reserve No. 91?
2. What arrangements have the Department of Indian Affairs made for the education of the Indians of this reserve?
3. Who is the medical officer for the reserve?
4. What was the remuneration in fees that he received in the last year?
5. How far does the medical officer live from the reserve?
6. What report did the medical officer make of the health of the Indians on the Kinistino reserve?
7. What was the total amount of machinery that was purchased in 1935, 1936 and 1937?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. 109.
2. The Indian children are eligible for placement in residential schools near the reserve.
3. Dr. L. W. Brigham, Brooksby, Sask.
4. $479.50.
5. 36 miles.
6. Usual diseases, with special reference to tuberculosis, venereal disease and measles. Births—Treaty year May 1935 to May 1936, 3; deaths in same period, 4.
7.

1935	$165.00
1936	24.89
1937	——
	$189.89

GRANTS TO FAIRS, QUEBEC

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. Does the federal Department of Agriculture make grants to agricultural fairs in the province of Quebec?
2. If so, what fairs have received grants?
3. What is the amount of the grant given to each of these fairs during the year 1936?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Yes.

2.

REGINA RIOTS, 1935

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. What was the total cost of the dominion and provincial authorities in connection with the inquiry into the Regina riots during the year 1935?

2. What was the total cost to the dominion authorities in this connection?

3. What are the names of those who were employed by the dominion government in connection with this inquiry?

4. What payments were made to each of the said counsel: (a) during the fiscal year 1934-1935; (b) during the current fiscal year?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, of course I canot give any reply as to the cost to the provincial authorities. As to the other part of the question, I will have the answer ready to-morrow.

Question stands.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT*

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle):

Will the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, be repealed during the present session?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Speaker, in its present form this does not appear to be a proper question. I believe it is a well established rule that the government of the day reserves to itself the time for making any declaration as to policy.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

DENTAL SERVICES TO INDIANS, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. BARBER:

1. What was the cost of dental services to Indians in the province of British Columbia during each of the calendar years 1934, 1935, and 1936?

2. What was the cost of this service in each of the Indian residential schools of British Columbia for each of the said years?

3. What is the name and address of the dentist or dentists employed for this service in each residential school, during each of the said three years?

4. What is the tariff of fees allowed?

5. Has a dental survey been made of any or all of these schools?

6. If so, what was the result of the survey?

7. Will this service be supplemented?

8. Has any change been made in dental services to the Indians in British Columbia by the present government?

9. Are local dentists given this work?

10. If not, what dentists will be employed to carry out this service throughout the province of British Columbia, and where do they reside?

11. Will the same tariff of fees be continued or will a per diem allowance with expenses be substituted?

BANFF NATIONAL PARK APPROPRIATION

Mr. BLACKMORE:

1. What is the total amount of the appropriation allotted by the dominion to be expended in the Banff national park for the financial year ending March 31, 1936? (This is not to include any sums specially allocated for public works projects or payments for relief employment, but merely the ordinary annual appropriation.)

2. What were the total receipts from all sources from the Banff national park during the financial year ending March 31, 1936? (This is to cover all payments by both residents and tourists, including such items as ground rents, sewer and water rates, car licences, hot springs receipts, camping permits, and in fact, all moneys paid into the park offices at Banff.)

3. What was the total amount of appropriation for the year ending March 31, 1936, which was expended in wages of government employees other than office staff and permanent employees, such as game wardens in this park? (This is merely the total monthly pay rolls made out for Banff.)

4. What is the total amount of the appropriation for office salaries for the parks branch in Banff, during the year ending March 31, 1936?

Mr. CRERAR: Return tabled herewith.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. MALLETE:

What sums were paid to each of the provinces in connection with the trans-Canada highway during the year 1936?

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. LAPOINTE (Matapedia-Matane):

1. Who are the customs, excise, and income tax commissioners in the Department of National Revenue?
2. What are their salaries?
3. Are they bilingual?
4. (a) How many officers of that department receive a salary above $2,000; (b) what are their names, and (c) which are bilingual?
5. (a) How many officers of said department receive less than $2,000, and (b) how many are bilingual?

LOAN OF $85,000,000

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). I notice advertisements in this morning's papers for an issue of government bonds to the amount of $85,000,000. Is the minister prepared to make a statement touching the matter, or to give any information in relation to it?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to advise me of his question, and I have a statement prepared in the matter which I believe should be made to the house.

The $85,000,000 dominion government loan which is advertised in the morning papers is being offered for the purpose of redeeming the $89,787,000 five per cent war loan bonds which mature on March 1 next. The new issue will take the form of $30,000,000 seven-year 2¼ per cent bonds dated January 15, 1937, and maturing January 15, 1944, priced to the public at 99½ and accrued interest, to yield approximately 2·327 per cent; and $55,000,000 thirty-year 3 per cent bonds dated January 15, 1937, and maturing January 15, 1967, priced to the public at 98 and accrued interest, to yield approximately 3·10 per cent. The seven-year bonds are redeemable at par as a whole at the option of the government on or after January 15, 1943, upon thirty days' notice, and the thirty-year bonds are redeemable in whole or in part at the option of the government on any interest payment date upon sixty days' notice at the following prices:

On or prior to January 15, 1942, at 105; thereafter to and including January 15, 1947, at 104; thereafter
to and including January 15, 1952 at 103; thereafter
to and including January 15, 1957 at 102; thereafter to and including January 15, 1962 at 101; and thereafter at par.

In keeping with our general policy, it was considered advisable to make it possible for the dominion to call the thirty-year bonds at any time during the life of the bonds.

The war loan bonds which mature on March 1, and which are to be paid off out of the proceeds of this issue, together with a certain amount of cash from the dominion treasury, are payable in New York and Canada, and it is believed that a very large percentage of the bonds are now held in the United States. As a Canadian offering would have necessitated a very difficult, if not an impossible, exchange transfer problem, the new bonds are being offered in the United States and will be payable in legal tender currency of the United States. The new issue has been registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Washington, under the United States Securities Act of 1933, the registration statement having become effective to-day.

The new issue is being offered by an underwriting syndicate under the leadership of Morgan Stanley and Company and consisting of thirty-nine other underwriting houses including a number of Canadian investment dealers.

It will be recalled that the 5 per cent war loan bonds which are being retired by the new issue represent one of the two remaining tax-free issues of the dominion government. The other tax-free issue is the $236,209,800 5½ per cent victory loan which matures on December 1 next, and which we intend to refund by means of an issue payable in Canada only. We expect, therefore that the year 1937 will see the last of Canada's tax-free bond issues which were floated during the war period.

The rates obtained on the new issue in New York represent, I believe, the lowest rates ever obtained for a Canadian bond offering of comparable maturities in that market. It will be apparent that the new offering will result in a substantial saving to the dominion treasury, not only because of the reduction of nearly $2,000,000 in annual interest charges, but also because of the increase in income tax revenue as a result of the elimination of the tax-free feature.

The house will be interested to know that reports from New York this morning indicate that the sale of the issue is proceeding very satisfactorily.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister has failed to indicate the price to the underwriters.

Mr. DUNNING: I have that information. The price received by the government for the seven-year bonds was 98¼, or a yield basis of 2·525, and the price received by the government for the thirty-year bonds was 96, or a yield basis of 3·21.

CANADA—UNITED KINGDOM TRADE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, not as a matter of curiosity but because there seems to be a great deal of uncertainty in business circles regarding the matter, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) when we may expect to have tabled the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreement. Perhaps, too, he could inform us whether or not, under circumstances of which he only would have knowledge, it is probable that the agreement will be made available before the presentation of the budget. The matter has been brought to my attention recently in several ways, and I promised to ask a question in order to permit a public statement by the minister.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course the question is a perfectly proper one, but it is rather difficult to give a complete answer. As was indicated in the speech from the throne, while in principle an agreement has been reached, the detailed drafting is now proceeding, and definite arrangements between the two governments have yet to be made with respect to the precise date upon which the agreement can be finally executed and made available. I appreciate the reasons advanced by my right hon. friend for expediting the matter as much as possible, namely business uncertainty resulting from the expectation of changes. The government is considering the matter of whether or not the agreement will precede or form part of the budget.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the important matter about which I wished to ask. I thank the minister.

PURCHASING POWER

PROPOSED CREATION AND ISSUE OF NATIONAL CREDIT FOR IMPROVEMENT OF ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

The house resumed from Wednesday, January 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blackmore:

That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian government should consider the advisability of beginning this year to issue purchasing power, and to use that purchasing power for the improvement of the economic condition of the Canadian people.

Mr. WILLIAM HAYHURST (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege on this occasion to take part in this vital and important debate. Yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) said that Houdini on the stage took rabbits out of a hat, but Houdini could not make a living by selling rabbits. In this kind of language he attempts to suggest that our proposals involving a new economic system are based upon juggling tactics. There is Houdini-like juggling taking place to-day, but it is done by the financiers. They juggle money to please themselves, irrespective of the productive capacity of the nation. Houdini made his living by fooling the public; to-day the financial wizards make their living by doing likewise. They take the profit out of the medium we call money and credit, a medium which should not be based upon a profit motive, but which should be the blood stream of human society. The arguments of yesterday seemed to me to fail because they did not recognize that money should be the servant of mankind and not its master. To-day we are worshipping the golden calf almost as effectively as it was worshipped in days of old.

For instance, the price of gold has been fixed at a certain point. We know that to-day gold is worth around $35 per ounce. It is thus made profitable for the gold producers to take great chances in finding new fields. Gold is a metal of intrinsic worth and value, but it should not have such a tremendous importance in our monetary system. If the price of gold can be fixed at $35 per ounce, why should not the price of wheat, of beef, or of other necessities of life be fixed at an equal standard of value? We sell wheat at twenty cents per bushel and at $1.20 per bushel, which on the face of it is an utter absurdity. Some of my hon. friends no doubt think that this wheat must be exported and sold on a market which will depress the price according to the export value of the wheat. Under the new economics we recognize that wheat and other commodities are as valuable as gold, nickel, platinum, copper or any other metal. These commodities should have an intrinsic value and worth, and the productive capacity of mankind should not be drastically curtailed by financiers who feel that the piling up of goods is necessarily an extravagance on the part of the people. We cannot build a superstructure on a rotten foundation. We feel that the new economic problem we are facing to-day is something which has been built upon our capital structure. In our anxiety to make the world safe for democracy it is a matter of real urgency that we do not tip the baby out with the bath water.

We realize the capitalism as it exists to-day can be made to operate both ways, for the good of mankind or for the destruction of mankind. Some people are advocating the discarding of capitalism, but I believe that that is moving too fast. Democracy must be made safe for the individual. Yesterday the hon. member for Huron North was suggesting that we might purchase the Royalite oil wells in Alberta or the Noranda mines in Quebec. That is not the principle of social credit. The principle of social credit is to give back to the people and to the government the absolute control of money, credit and currency. These should be taken away from private individuals, from the banking system as it exists to-day. We are not advocating the ownership of any productive machinery because we believe that if the capitalistic system were made to work for the welfare of mankind it would be quite capable of producing wealth in abundance.

Some people say that we should be niggardly and save in order to buy more bonds with which our country would be put more into debt. I think we might as well attempt to save acorns instead of planting them to grow into great oaks. The capitalistic system of to-day is capable of producing wealth in abundance, therefore we feel that a new economic or monetary system should be established to take care of that tremendous production, irrespective of booms and depressions. This new system would take care of the welfare of all our people, not only those who are blind or who were wounded overseas in the great war. Everyone would be taken care of irrespective of class and position in life. The people are the basis of the wealth of a nation.

We feel that we should creep before we walk. We are not out to destroy capitalism. We are not communists, neither are we followers of the nazi doctrine. We believe in an economic democracy, but we contend that money should be controlled by the people. Many questions are asked as to whether sufficient can be produced in this country. I am reminded of the proverb, "consistency, thou art a jewel." I feel that at all times we should be consistent. It is a wrong management of money that restricts production. If we save up or regiment our men to be soldiers and then deliberately sabotage not only the national wealth but man power through international rivalries brought about by the continual struggle for markets and credits abroad, then I say that civilization is doomed.

I feel that we should establish in our minds a wealth creating philosophy as opposed to a debt creating philosophy. Our country is not poor except in terms of money. There is not another country in the world more richly endowed by nature than Canada. Yet here in Canada we find thousands of people who believe in the so-called orthodox economics of scarcity, when in fact the productive capacity of the country is capable of supplying all the needs of her citizens. Many have said that inflation will ruin our nation, but a study of the situation proves that it is deflation rather than inflation that is the cause of untold poverty, distress and suffering. We do not wish for inflation. A shower is better than a flood.

Some say that this creative money would pile up and never be cancelled. It is an extraordinary thing that the same people never complain of a system under which debt piles up and is never cancelled. At the present time we have a debt economics, but if our money represented the produced wealth of the country we would have a wealth economics, which would in time balance or distribute our debt. There was an old saying of the pioneers on this great North American continent: We raise more grain to feed more hogs to get more money to buy more land to raise more grain to feed more hogs to get more money to buy more land, and so on. It is ridiculous to think that such are the actual conditions in Canada to-day. Here we are consuming less in order to increase our ability to produce more in order to consume less in order to increase our ability to produce more. Surely the old philosophy of tightening one's belt should not prevail in the civilized world to-day when mankind by advancement in technological skill is now able to produce wealth in abundance. Imagine telling people to-day to tighten their belts, to increase their capacity to produce more by consuming less. It is an absolute necessity that purchasing power should be put into the hands of the consumers in order that the consuming capacity will more nearly equal the productive capacity of mankind.

We have struggled for our liberty in this great empire of ours. We have struggled for the liberty of the individual, and we are no longer slaves. We and our ancestors have fought in order that we may be free men. Our ancestors have struggled in the past and we have continued to struggle for political liberty, for political enfranchisement, for the right to vote. We have won these privileges, and the result is that to-day most of our people have the right to vote, except in the province of Quebec, across the river from here, where they still recognize women as in the same class as the insane and the Indians and have not yet seen the necessity of giving women the vote as persons.

We have struggled for our political freedom and we hold it dear. We have fought for our individual freedom and enjoy that freedom to-day. But we are now facing a greater fight than ever. We are facing a fight for financial freedom and economic liberty. We are now asking that the government exercise the power which they have to create their own credits and take away that power from those who exercise it to-day, further that the government issue those credits free of interest and free of the profit motive. As I said at the outset, money and credit are the blood-stream of society, and if the profit motive is allowed to stay in this great blood-stream of society, civilization itself will fall.

It has been suggested by some that we should be hard, that we should train and discipline our people to be soldiers. They tell us to go back to the old days of the pioneers who ploughed and sowed and reaped, using their own muscular energy and earning their living by the sweat of their brow. But, Mr. Speaker, I say that we shall not see such conditions again. You remember Longfellow's description of the village blacksmith:

> The smith, a mighty man is he,
> With large and sinewy hands.

In how many villages in Canada do you find the smith to-day? His day is past, and it is impossible for us to think of going back to the days of the pioneers and using their ancient methods. To-day is the day of farm machinery, of technological advancement and great productive capacity; the methods of the old pioneering days are gone forever. The scientific and inventive genius of man has solved our production problem by devising better methods, and we feel that the financial system should now reflect our greater productive capacity.

Before I close I should like to give a quotation from Professor Irving Fisher's book, from which my leader quoted yesterday, "100% Money." Mr. Hemphill, in his introduction, says:

> Our statesmen have consistently declined to study this question and provide a sound monetary system, an adequate permanent currency, scientifically calculated to expand consistently with our increasing population and our increasing ability to produce.
> Somehow, the intelligent public of this nation must learn the fundamentals of this question. We can no longer depend upon our banking system to furnish all the money we have to do business with. The principal reason this depression continues is that the banks are not lending, and as a result, the money with which to expand business does not exist. It is so simple that business men largely overlook this fundamental situation and continue to search for some economic "fourth dimension" to explain our distressing situation, but there is no mysterious force defeating our efforts to exchange goods and services. We haven't the money nor any substitute in circulation, and that is the essence of the story.
> In Professor Fisher's book, he presents in lucid detail the operation of this erratic banking-monetary system, and the obvious remedy. It is the most important subject intelligent persons can investigate and reflect upon. It is so important that our present civilization may collapse unless it is widely understood and the defects remedied very soon.
> It is your problem and mine.

There are probably many, sir, in this new era upon which we have entered who blindly refuse to recognize that great truth. We must remember that if evolution is not allowed to proceed in an orderly way, if it is dammed up first at one point and then at another, the same forces that make for evolutionary progress will likely blast a way by revolutionary methods. And so, Mr. Speaker, we hope that the House of Commons and the people of Canada will give earnest consideration to these new questions which are facing them. The main question before us to-day is who is to control the future monetary policy of this country, and shall not the profit motive be taken away and the credit of the nation be used for the welfare of the people of the country!

Mr. T. J. O'NEILL (Kamloops): In rising to speak to this resolution I may say that I am not an advocate of Mr. Aberhart or of Mr. Douglas, nor am I a supporter of social credit. But I do not believe that this resolution is social credit. I have long been of the opinion that some kind of monetary reform is overdue. I am a Liberal, but not because I believe that Liberalism is a cure for all our troubles. Nor do I believe that party government is a cure-all. It is my view that if democracy is to survive we must have party government, but I hold that if the principles of the Liberal party are complied with we shall be able to bring about the monetary and other reforms that are required.

The problem of unemployment is, in my opinion, nearly as acute to-day as it was when this government came into power. It is without question the outstanding problem of the times, and it is very closely allied with that of credit. Prior to the election, in fact prior to the nomination, I held practically the same views as regards monetary reform that I hold to-day, and I expressed those views not only in the Liberal party but in public. With the abundant evidence that there is on all sides of poverty and distress, I see every reason for continuing to believe in the soundness of that viewpoint. When anyone to-day dares to voice an opinion that does not coincide with that of advocates of the present so-called sound money system, he is immediately held up to the most belittling ridicule and the most withering sarcasm. I regret that during this debate there has not been shown a little more of the Liberal principle of toleration.

To illustrate the point I am trying to make: during the year 1930 it seemed advisable to the then government that a loan should be floated for the purpose of refunding. I have no intention at this time of criticizing the government of that day, because I believe that any other government would have done the same thing under this system. They required a loan of some hundred million dollars for the purpose of refunding. Not being very sure of the feeling of the people at that time, the premiers of the nine different provinces, together with the then acting prime minister, went on the radio as supersalesmen, so to speak, to sell this bond issue to the people of Canada, and without exception, I believe, one of the points they stressed was the wonderful opportunity for a safe investment that that loan presented to our people. It was safe, they said, for the reason that it was backed not only by the government but by all the natural resources of this wonderful dominion. The point is that if it is necessary to put up the natural resources of the country as collateral security to guarantee a loan, why does the bank not belong to the people? Why is it necessary to pay a tribute to some private individual in order that we may be able to use something that belongs to us?—because in the last analysis what we are using is the public credit.

[Mr. O'Neill.]

I am just as thoroughly convinced as I was prior to the election that if we continue to pile up obligations for public purposes as we are now doing, it cannot but inevitably result in the total collapse of our present financial structure, with all the chaos, misery and privation that will follow such an event. On the other hand if we change the system to one of public ownership of the right to issue currency and credit, I see no reason why there should be any repudiation of the just responsibilities that we have assumed. I believe those responsibilities can all be met, but they cannot be met if we continue to finance as we are doing at the present time.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): I notice that this resolution states:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian government should consider the advisability of beginning this year to issue purchasing power, and to use that purchasing power for the improvement of the economic condition of the Canadian people.

In rising to support the motion I do so with certain qualifications. In the first place I should like to make it quite plain that, so far as I understand social credit, either of the Aberhart or of the Douglas variety, the resolution is not either one of the two. It proposes the use of national credit rather than any system of social credit. I compliment the leader of the social credit party on being broadminded enough to bring forward a proposal which I feel is in line with Liberal policy, rather than a straightforward proposal of definite social credit according to either Aberhart or Douglas.

One of the things I would quarrel with in the wording of the resolution is the suggestion that the government should consider the advisability of "beginning" this year to issue purchasing power. I have spoken in the house on this question on several occasions and indicated that in my opinion we have done this very thing more than once in the past. I shall refer to the occasions when I think we have done that very thing, and if I support the resolution it is because I think there will be no harm in giving some study to a further understanding of some of the things we have done in the past with no evil results of any kind so far as I can see. You may say, when have we ever issued purchasing power without somebody giving value for it? The first occasion that will occur to those who know anything about the dominion is that up to 1913 we issued thirty million dollars' worth of dominion notes which were legal tender in this country against a gold reserve of one-quarter of that amount. In other words, with gold worth roughly a little over seven millions, we issued and used as a government thirty million dollars' worth of money; that is, we put out that much purchasing power and placed it in the hands of the people. Shortly after the outbreak of war we raised that amount from thirty to fifty millions, and, on a gold basis of one-quarter of fifty million dollars, were actually putting out purchasing power for the use of the government to the extent of three-fourths of that fifty million dollars, with nothing whatever behind it except the law itself and without employing means of taxation or otherwise to raise the money. I am favourable to a study of extending that principle as far as it is safe to do so without upsetting or jeopardizing our present democratic system, the so-called capitalist system.

Another occasion on which we made use of this system was when during the great war we issued $16,000,000 worth of our legal tender against dominion railway securities. As the railways had done many times in the past, they came to Ottawa wanting the government, as I suppose, to guarantee another bond issue. The government of that day thought that they would try an experiment, and instead of guaranteeing a bond issue and making themselves liable to pay interest on it, they said to the railways, "You deposit your bonds with us and we will print $16,000,000 worth of money and lend it to you." I asked certain questions in the House of Commons last session in regard to this matter. First, I asked:

> Have the railway obligations or securities against which $16,000,000 of dominion notes were issued pursuant to authority contained in "An Act respecting the issue of Dominion notes," Statutes of Canada, 1915, Chap. 4, been paid?

The answer was "no." So that the money is still owing the government of the country. Next I asked:

> If so, when were they paid?

The reply was that this was answered by No. 1. Next:

> How much interest, if any, has been paid on said securities to date?

The answer was:

> Interest paid by the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company on advances secured by the obligations referred to amounted to $2,327,945.23.

The next question was:

> To whom was such interest paid?

The answer was that it was paid to the Receiver General of Canada. Now that is a different story altogether from many of the other things that have had to be told in this house. Instead of the country having to pay interest on railway financing, we find that the government itself lent money to the railways—money that cost it nothing except the cost of printing—and on which it has collected to date over $2,000,000. Nothing bad has happened in consequence of that; and if instead of paying interest we can collect interest, I ask every hon. member in this house, why should we be afraid to investigate further the possibility of extending such a system of carrying on the affairs of the country?

Not only at this time did we finance the railways to the extent of $16,000,000, but at the same time the government gave itself $10,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on business. In other words, the government made an issue of $16,000,000 against railway securities and $10,000,000 just on its own securities and it has used that money without resorting to taxation to get it or borrowing and having to pay interest on it.

There is another instance of the issue by the government of this country of purchasing power without first falling back upon taxation or borrowing to get it. I would refer the house to the emergency issue, during the war, against British treasury bills of $50,000,000 for the purpose of buying goods in Canada required by the British government. That was issued solely against British treasury bills. I do not know what rate of interest these British treasury bills carried, but I assume that they carried some rate of interest. These bills were finally paid off in 1927 and, I assume, they were paid off both as to principal and with whatever interest they bore at the time. In other words, we issued $50,000,000 of purchasing power, we stimulated Canadian industry when we did so, and at the same time we collected not only that $50,000,000 but interest on the money. If that is not good business, then I must admit that there is something wrong with my reasoning in the matter.

Let us take another instance in which this policy was followed. We find that under the Finance Act the same method was adopted. The government issued to the banks printed money against dominion government bonds; and any one who will read the Canadian Macmillan report can find the statement as to the amount issued from time to time by the dominion government of money against which the only security that was pledged consisted of dominion government bonds and the guarantee of the banks who pledged them. There was no gold behind it, and there was no limit to the amount of money that could be issued under the Finance Act. They could have issued billions of dollars had they seen fit. Under the Finance Act in July, 1933, the government of Canada had in issue $48,000,000 worth of good legal currency against the bonds of the country and they were collecting interest from the banks on that issue of currency—again, very good business and something which it would do us no harm to study.

As a further instance of the issue of purchasing power, may I point out that under the last administration there was a change in the Dominion Notes Act which came into force on June 30, 1934. We provided that the backing of our dominion notes should be twenty-five per cent gold, and on the basis of that amount of gold the last administration, led by the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), increased the dominion notes printed by the dominion government by $53,000,000. I well remember following the discussion of this matter in the press at that time. This money was being used to pay ordinary expenses of government, and many believe that if the government issues money it is a dangerous thing, but that the banks can inflate and expand credit to any extent and no harm is done. Such were wondering what was going to happen to the public financial structure when, as I say, the government led by the present leader of the opposition was so bold as to issue this flood of new money. Well, what happened? Nothing of any distressing consequence. One of the things that happened was that by the end of the following year bank deposits in Canada had risen by $250,000,000. That is to say, there was that much more money to do business with in Canada. Had that policy been followed carefully I think we would have come out of the depression much sooner. I make bold to say that had the leader of the opposition had the courage of his apparent convictions at that time, had he followed that policy instead of the advice of some of his friends in the cabinet, perhaps we would have come out of the depression to a greater extent under his administration than we actually did.

Let us take another example of the issuing of purchasing power by an institution of our own creation. I refer to the Bank of Canada. We have provided by statute that the Bank of Canada may go and buy a dollar's worth of gold and, on the strength of that, issue four dollars' worth of Bank of Canada bills which are legal tender. In other words, it can take one million dollars' worth of gold and with it provide itself with four million dollars' worth of purchasing power. It may be said that this is not of any advantage to the government of the country. I contend that under the Bank of Canada Act, if that policy were followed to a sane extent, of course, any profits it made therefrom over and above running expenses and dividends on shares would came back to the government of the country. The only quarrel I have with the Bank of Canada is that it is not making use of its power. According to the last statement of the Bank of Canada it had on hand, in round figures, $179,000,000 worth of gold. On the strength of that it could have issued roughly $716,000,000 worth of legal tender and still have been within what is recognized all over the world as the safe limit. According to the last statement of the bank it actually had in issue $134,000,000 worth of notes. In other words with the gold the Bank of Canada has on hand at the present time it could issue $582,000,000 of new money and have that money amply secured according to the best judgment of the nations when last they considered the matter in conference.

The question any ordinary layman will ask is this: Why keep the gold and make no use of it in a country such as Canada, while at the same time you are forced to borrow money internally with which to do internal work and redeem internal debt? I suggest that if that $582,000,000 were issued by the bank and loaned to this dominion to pay on its debt a large sum of money would be saved in interest alone. According to the last Canada Year Book the average interest rate on dominion indebtedness was 4·136 per cent. That would not be quite so high to-day, but for purposes of calculation if we say the rate is 4 per cent, the saving to this country would be $23,000,000 in interest alone.

The question we must ask ourselves is this: If we can do that and keep within the limits of sound finance, why do we not do it? The answer always given is, "If we put out that much legal tender and increased our cash reserves to that extent, with the tendency that has grown up on the part of the banks to lend to the extent of ten times the amount of the cash reserves in the country, it would mean a tremendous inflation of credit." The first thing I should like to say in that connection is this: I do not say this amount should be issued all at once. I say we should start and go far enough to bring about some inflation of credit in order to put our young people to work, to develop our great natural resources and to provide some of the things this country needs. An inflation of credit for that purpose would do no harm.

I am reminded of what Germany has done during the last three years. According to the ideas of the orthodox economist Germany wiped out the savings of her people by her policy of uncontrolled inflation, which destroyed the value of her monetary unit. That was not a case of the controlled issue of currency; it was a deliberate issuance of money until the value of that currency was destroyed. The question that strikes one is this: Where is Germany borrowing the money to-day with which to do the vast amount of internal work that is being carried on there, when under that hypothesis the savings of her people were wiped out? Someone in this house may say, "Oh, but Germany wants credit from foreign nations." Germany does want credit with which to buy abroad. Because of her vast armament program she cannot possibly produce and export enough goods to pay for the things she needs to carry on that program, but so far as the internal development of Germany is concerned, she does not want to borrow money from anyone externally. Germany is using every bit of her natural resources to the very limit, as she is using her labour power, her people. It is all very well for us to say that they are not making as great a success of it as we might. I say that Canada, with her tremendous resources, with a population just as able and intelligent as the people of Germany, might well embark on a policy of expansion which would put our unemployed to work. When Germany can embark upon a policy of rearmament which has cost four billions dollars; when Germany can build military roads some of which cost over a hundred thousand dollars a mile to construct; when Germany is making such full use of all her resources, largely I suggest by the use of national credit, I say to this House of Commons that, with our great natural resources, we have no right to say that we will not even consider the possibility of embarking on a policy of expansion, peaceful of course, on a similar basis of use of national credit.

We live in a world of land hungry nations, Mr. Speaker. On the one hand we have countries such as Germany using every ounce of their natural resources, while on the other hand we are not making use of our young unemployed people to develop our great natural resources. In past years we have permitted our young men and women to drift away to the United States, and we are afraid to have people come to our land in order to help develop this great empty country of ours for fear of aggravating the unemployment situation. Our forefathers pioneered this country and placed it in our hands, but we, by refusing to develop it, are fairly tempting the attack of some more powerful nation that thinks it can make better use of our resources than we are making. That is one of the things that we, representing the Canadian people, have to bear in mind. If as a Canadian people we are not prepared to make use of the natural resources that providence placed within our borders for the benefit not only of ourselves but of all those who wish to come to our shores, and we feel we should properly admit then we are courting the risk of having these lands wrenched away from us some time in the future—perhaps distant—when the pressure of population becomes much greater in some of the overcrowded countries.

Those who simply say that what we have had in the past is good enough, so that we need not examine any new idea, are not being fair to the people who in the past took chances in order to found this land of ours. If there is a sign that this credit inflation is going further than it should, it will be very easy to stop. Under the law at the present time the chartered banks must deposit with the Bank of Canada five per cent of the amount of their deposits. If, when we put out more currency—which does not cost us anything and which bears no interest—we find that the banks are going too far in their policy of credit inflation, we can give the government power to require the banks to deposit more of their own deposits with the Bank of Canada than five per cent. That would cut down such inflation. Let the government take over in that way the absolute power over the issuance of credit by the banks in this country. This will be much more effective than the power we have given it of buying and selling bills. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is a possibility of using over $500,000,000 worth of money without a cent of cost to the country, and that we could easily control any tendency to over-inflation that might result. Take again the example of Germany. That country came through a terrible war, into which it put all its resources, and in which it was beaten. It came through a revolution, but it has reestablished itself to on amazing extent largely by the use of national credit. Surely with the experts we have in our government, they could see to it that if we made use of this power it would not be abused by the banks or by anyone else. At any rate I have that much confidence in the leaders of Canadian banking and finance.

The next case to which I should like to refer, Mr. Speaker, is this: The time we used our national credit when the present leader of the opposition was in power. He borrowed $35,000,000 from the banks on treasury bills and had the banks take those bills to the Minister of Finance, who had printed and who issued against those bills $35,000,000 worth of new money, under the provisions of the Finance Act. In that case we actually paid the banks four per cent interest, and the Minister of Finance charged the banks three per cent interest, so as a result that $35,000,000 cost us one per cent. That was an example of the use of national credit. I have never heard of any harm resulting from that action, and if any harm did come from it I should like to hear about it from responsible people. If no harm has come from it, why should it not be used more extensively?—of course now through the Bank of Canada.

We have authorized the banks to issue purchasing power, by virtue of the powers already given them. I have heard doubts expressed by some people as to whether or not the banks actually issue or create purchasing power. I have before me the first report of the Bank of Canada, and at page 9 I find the following:

Adding to the deposit figure $40,497,965 in Bank of Canada notes, which the banks held in their tills, we find the total cash reserves at December 31, 1935, were $222,133,998, equal to approximately ten per cent of the chartered bank's deposit liabilities in Canada.

Incidentally I am sometimes told that in a system of governmental finance the use of national credit would depend upon the confidence of the people. I submit the people of Canada have just as much confidence in the integrity and solvency of the Dominion of Canada as they have in any bank in Canada. I submit further that the working of our present system depends upon the confidence of the people in the banking system of Canada, because if the deposit liabilities of the banks in Canada are to-day ten times the amount of the actual cash reserves in the country, in the event of the people suddenly asking for their money on deposit from the banks they would receive only about ten cents on the dollar. If banks in Canada can safely do business on that basis, surely the nation can do it on the same basis.

When we read the opinions of people interested in the matter we find one view in one book and another in another. I believe one can gain no great amount of profit from citing opinions of writers of books, because each writer has his own opinion and it is hard to weight the value of each writer's opinion. Possibly the opinion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is worth more than those of writers of some books.

Mr. DUNNING: I hope so.

Mr. TUCKER: What then is the use of citing such opinions to the minister? I do believe, however, that he would accept as authoritative the opinion expressed by the members of the royal commission on banking and currency in Canada which examined the question. As hon. members are well aware, the commission was composed of very eminent men. I read from page 44 of the report, because I believe the question under consideration does not receive the careful thought it should receive:

If a bank receives from some new or outside source an increase in its "cash reserves," it will in the ordinary course of events proceed to make loans or to buy securities. The public receiving the proceeds of the loans or sales will deposit in the banks all that they do not require for hand-to-hand cash. In so far as these deposits are made in other banks, cheques will be drawn on the original bank, with the effect of diminishing its reserves and increasing those of its competitors. The latter, provided their cash position be already satisfactory, will then be in a position to make additional loans and investments, if conditions warrant, and this in turn will enable the public to make further deposits. In so far as the loans and investments made by the original bank return to it as deposits, it will be in a position to make further loans or investments. Through this process of lending, investing and depositing, the increased cash reserve is distributed among the banks and the volume of loans and investments and deposits is increased by an amount several times greater than the amount of the original increase in cash reserves.

In other words if the government of Canada through the Bank of Canada lends a bank a million dollars, on the strength of that loan the bank may turn around and buy government bonds to the extent of several times that million dollars. There can be no question about that; as an authority I offer the findings of the royal commission.

Mr. DUNNING: They did not say that, though. What my hon. friend has just read does not say that.

Mr. TUCKER: I will read it again.

Mr. DUNNING: That will not help.

Mr. TUCKER: It says:

In so far as the loans and investments made by the original bank return to it as deposits,—

And they mostly do.

—it will be in a position to make further loans or investments. Through this process of lending, investing and depositing, the increased cash reserve is distributed among the banks and the volume of loans and investments and deposits—

I repeat, "loans and investments and deposits"—

—is increased by an amount several times greater than the amount of the original increase in cash reserves.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. TUCKER: That is what it says. You have for example an original increase in cash reserves from the Bank of Canada amounting to a million dollars worth of Bank of Canada notes, and by the process of being able to lend several times the amount of the original increase in cash reserves your banks can actually buy bonds to the extent of several times the amount of cash you originally supplied.

As there seems to be some doubt on the point I should like to read from the British Macmillan report, and because of a shortage of time I shall confine the quotation to a part of paragraph 74:

> The bank can carry on the process of lending, or purchasing investments, until such time as the credits created, or investments purchased, represent nine times the amount of the original deposit of £1,000 in cash.

That is a definite finding of the British Macmillan commission. Not only is the statement made in the paragraph I have quoted, but it is made again in paragraph 84 in the following terms:

> Given the maintenance of a certain cash base the banks will always in time expand their deposits to a figure of some nine or ten times that base.

In other words, given a certain cash reserve, which the government creates, the banks will in time increase their deposits, which means their loans or investments, to an amount of nine times the original base.

I have referred to the findings of the two greatest authorities to be found to-day in the British Empire. If it is not true, then I say let us have an explanation as to why it is not true. But until it is contradicted, in justice to the people who have honoured me by sending me to this house I must accept that which my intelligence dictates those authorities did say. If it can be shown the statement is not true I will rise in my place in the chamber and if I think I am wrong I shall be pleased to admit it. But the people from one end of Canada to the other are saying this to our leaders in finance and industry: You have benefited greatly by the financial system. You are the only people who did not suffer during the great depression. All other people suffered—industrialists, farmers, and everybody else. You alone did not suffer. It is not enough for you to say there is nothing in the suggestion that the financial system is devised so as to benefit you, at the expense of the other people. You have to come out in the open, explain it to us and show us it is not so. We may think it is just an accident that the financial interests of Canada make good profit just as much in good times as they do in bad, or rather almost as much in bad times as they do in good.

In this connection I cannot help but think of evidence brought out before a royal commission appointed by this government to investigate something in which this house is very much interested. I refer to the Turgeon commission on the textile industry. We found a syndicate getting together and putting $500,000 into the common shares of a Canadian textile company and another $500,000 into the preferred shares, upon which preferred shares they received seven per cent interest from the incorporation of the company. What happened in connection with the common shares? They put in $500,000 and in thirty-one years they drew out almost $15,000,000 in dividends. In other words there was an average income return of ninety-seven per cent on that money every year. There is another thing I should like to put to the members of this House of Commons. I should like to give them some of the names of that original syndicate. I mention Sir Herbert Holt, Sir Charles Gordon and Mr. H. V. Meredith. I should like to ask hon. members if they think these men put their own money into that syndicate, or if they lent one another the money from the banks they were connected with to put into the syndicate. If the latter, then they used the banking system to make $15,000,000 of clear profit. This is something to which we in this Canadian House of Commons will have to pay some attention. We see our labouring and farming people from the Atlantic to the Pacific displaying the highest of Christian virtues and the greatest fortitude under present conditions. They work a lifetime in many cases and at the end of a lifetime of work and sacrifice sometimes they see their wives and children in penury and want. They realize that the banking system of this country enables certain people to make money in the way I have mentioned. I think it is time this high court of parliament called to task some of these transgressors who are getting more out of the financial and industrial system of this country than they are entitled to. They should be called to account and it should be seen that the ordinary people of the country are better protected in the scheme of things and given a fairer share of the wealth of the country.

It was for this very purpose among others, that I take it the Liberal party was returned to power in this house. In this connection I should like to read a few words of our great leader uttered on the evening of the day of the last election. He spoke with moving eloquence and in profound sympathy for human nature and human suffering, in full appreciation of what the people expect of a government in these times, when he said:

> In the new era which dawns to-day the struggle for the rights of the people will, in the realm of economic liberty and security, be carried on as never before. Poverty and adversity, want and misery, are the enemies which liberalism will seek to banish from our land. They have lain in wait at the gate of every Canadian home during the past five years, and their menacing mien has served to destroy the souls as well as the minds and bodies of an ever-increasing number of men, women and children in our land. We take up at once, as our supreme task, the endeavour to end poverty in the midst of plenty, starvation and unnecessary suffering in a land of abundance, discontent and distress in a country more blessed by providence than any other on the face of the globe, and to gain for individual lives, and for the nation as a whole, that "health and peace and sweet content" which is the rightful heritage of all.

In taking the action I intend to take I feel I am following the noble and inspiring words of our great leader. Although I do not quite agree with the wording of this resolution, I propose to support it from my place in the House of Commons.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) will forgive me I am sure if I do not seek to traverse the ground he has covered in his very interesting speech. I imagine it is needless for me to tell the house that I do not speak to this resolution as an expert on monetary questions. I have studied some of these questions for a number of years and I have nothing but envy for those who are able to discuss them with apostolic certainty.

It seems to me that at this time we must address ourselves to the exact wording of the resolution before the house. The resolution is couched in these terms:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the Canadian government should consider the advisability of beginning this year to issue purchasing power, and to use that purchasing power for the improvement of the economic condition of the Canadian people.

As to the latter portion of the resolution I am sure there is no difference of opinion among the various groups in this house. We are all most anxious to improve the economic condition of the Canadian people. I would also say that I share the views expressed by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. O'Neill), that the existing banking and monetary system should not be sacrosanct and unchangeable. There have already been some far-reaching changes, not only in the system but in our views regarding it. Obviously as we move forward toward new social objectives we must fashion the instruments of state to meet these new objectives.

In approaching this particular question I am bound to say that I am influenced by certain principles which to my mind have been established in the experience of this country. I cannot conceive of a purchasing power in any real sense apart from the production of goods and services. In a primitive community this was self-evident. You exchanged goods and services and as goods and services were produced you increased the store of purchasing power. Therefore I cannot conceive that it lies within the power of the dominion government to issue purchasing power. It is within the power of the dominion government, or of any government, to create conditions under which the people may themselves increase purchasing power. I may say that that has been the purpose of all governments in this country, however different their policies may have been.

I was much interested a moment ago when the hon. member for Kamloops referred to the unemployment situation in British Columbia. It is within his knowledge and within the knowledge of every member of this house that within the past year there has been a very considerable improvement in the economic condition of British Columbia. That improvement was not brought about by the issue of money purchasing power; it was brought about by the creation of conditions under which the people of British Columbia were enabled to increase their purchasing power in terms of production of goods and services. As a result of several trade agreements—the trade agreement between this country and Great Britain, the trade agreement between this country and the United States, and the settlement of differences between this country and Japan—barriers were removed which theretofore had prevented the free flow of trade, and as these barriers were removed there was an expansion of trade. New markets were established; as a result there was a greater degree of industrial activity and therefore a greater production of goods and services, and the income of the people of British Columbia was increased.

Mr. BENNETT: May I interject?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not understand the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) to make the suggestion that has been attributed to him. He was advocating, as I understood him, that this country should issue currency with which to discharge obligations, and that the money thus in circulation would be additional purchasing power. That is what I gathered. It was not a question of production at all.

Mr. ROGERS: Precisely, and I have rather taken this view, that in any real sense of the term purchasing power consists of goods and services produced within the country. You may issue dominion notes, you may expand credit, you may establish titles to goods and services; but let us assume, for example, to take the case of British Columbia, that you had not had created the conditions which resulted in a stimulus of industry, but that in that province in the same period of time you had merely had an issue of dominion notes to this or that extent. Can it be suggested for one moment that the condition of the people of British Columbia, with the issue of purchasing power in terms of currency, would have been as good as it is with the additional purchasing power through the production of goods and services? That is the point, Mr. Speaker, which it does seem to me is vital in the consideration of this question. My point is that essentially the real income of a community consists of the goods and services that it produces, and we are therefore compelled in considering any question of currency inflation to determine how far such a policy is likely to go in its ultimate effect in increasing or decreasing the productive power of the country.

It so happened that following the late war I spent some time in central Europe when the countries there were in the midst of an inflationary boom. I am far from suggesting that there was not an acceleration of production through the inflation of currency, but it was temporary; it was the kind of fever that precedes total collapse, and I do not think anyone who visited those countries at that time could fail to be impressed by the very serious results which followed a policy of that kind.

As I understand this resolution, it proposes, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has just said, the issue of purchasing power in terms either of pocket-book money, as explained by the hon. member for Lethbridge or, as he termed it, cheque-book money. I am bound to say that if the cheque-book money consists of cheques issued by the dominion government to pay in legal tender, then there is no material distinction between the two so far as the effect upon the total amount of credit is concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: It must be a call on legal tender.

Mr. ROGERS: It must be a call on legal tender, and so if it is to be used for that purpose I can see no distinction. Surely that does mean that we would be inflating our currency, and the hon. member for Lethbridge surely concludes that that policy is going to result in the economic improvement of the Canadian people.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the hon. gentleman allow a question?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I just wonder if it would help the economic condition of this country if we were to spend, say, $200,000,000 on public works throughout the dominion. Does the minister think that would improve conditions?

Mr. ROGERS: I think that is a very fair question. As a matter of fact that is one of the methods by which it has been proposed at various times to inflate currency—in other words, to expand the dominion note issue in order to carry out a large dominion public works program, and I take it that this is what my hon. friend has in mind at the moment. I would agree that from such a policy you would have a temporary increase in production, and one would have to consider how far an expenditure of the kind would benefit the country in the creation of utilities which could be enjoyed by our people. But I have never been of the view that a public works program of that kind would supply a suitable remedy for unemployment. In the country to the south of us there have been large expenditures on public works, but as year has followed year the administration there has found greater difficulty in discovering public works which could be justified upon economic grounds. I have seen with my own eyes in the city of Norfolk a vast stadium and playing field established through the use of federal funds, and these, at the present time at any rate, are far beyond the needs of that particular community. I might add that they were established not essentially for the city of Norfolk but rather for a small branch of a university at that place. You cannot go on and on and on with a public works program of that kind and be assured that you are diverting a portion of the national income into useful channels. I do not believe that in that direction lies any true remedy for unemployment.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I ask another question?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If $200,000,000 could be caused to be spent by tourists in the Dominion of Canada every year, would the minister consider that that would improve the economic condition of this country?

Mr. ROGERS: Certainly. I have no hesitation whatever in answering that question in the affirmative.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Then may I ask why $200,000,000 spent every year in this country by the government would not also improve conditions?

Mr. ROGERS: As I understand my hon. friend's proposal, the $200,000,000 spent by the government on public works, would not be taken from the people by taxation, would not be raised in the way of loan, but would, so to speak, take the form of an expansion of the dominion note issue. That is nothing more or less than inflation. That is nothing more or less than adding to the total amount of credit and currency in the country, and the very fact that a government embarked on a policy of that kind could not I think fail to have an effect on the price level.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I ask another question?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): It is getting to be a cross-examination.

Mr. ROGERS: In this whole situation there is an unpredictable factor, and that is the velocity of circulation. My hon. friend I know is fully aware of that. The velocity of circulation of currency depends to a great extent upon inconstant factors that are absolutely beyond the control of government, that do not lie within the realm of policy. I am quite sure that in the province of Alberta this whole question has received some consideration, because as I read the Social Credit Manual I find it is suggested that the velocity of circulation is going to provide an additional means by which the province of Alberta may tax goods in order that they may raise sufficient to pay the social credit dividends.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask one question before the minister passes from these tendencies toward inflation? Would a loan floated in Canada or a loan floated in the United States tend towards inflation?

Mr. ROGERS: I doubt whether they would have the same effect. Much depends upon the significance that is attached to a particular policy that is undertaken. Governments have always been in the habit of borrowing money for specific purposes. But when a government departs entirely from the view that it must use money secured by loans or taxation for public purposes, and prints an addition to the dominion note issue for that purpose, I believe that it tends, rightly or wrongly, to destroy the confidence of the people in a more or less stable purchasing power of the national currency.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not for the moment on the question of confidence; I am on the question of the effect of the circulation of that much more money. I cannot quite follow the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: He has only forty minutes, and he has had ten questions.

Mr. ROGERS: I am still more concerned with another aspect of this question. The hon. member for Lethbridge did not seek to explain how this purchasing power would be issued or to whom it would be issued, and that to me is a vital question. I should perhaps correct that statement by saying that just now he has proposed as one alternative a public works program, and obviously additional dominion notes could be issued in that way. But among all the authorities quoted by my hon. friend and those who supported him yesterday, there was one conspicuous absentee; that was Mr. Aberhart, who is the recognized leader of the social credit movement in Alberta, and I do not think that I should be doing violence to the views of my hon. friends if, in seeking to find how this purchasing power was to be issued, I should refer to the Social Credit Manual, published and written by Mr. William Aberhart. I may say that this Social Credit Manual is described in these terms, "Puzzling Questions and their Answers." I have read it through from beginning to end, and I am bound to say that in some cases I am more puzzled by the answers than by the questions. I just want to quote a paragraph from this manual. It refers to basic dividends, and I quote it for the reason that apparently it supplies the means by which, in the view of Mr. Aberhart and those who think with him, there should be this issue of purchasing power to the members of the community. The proposal is in these words:

To enable each citizen to secure these bare necessities—

That is, food, clothing and shelter—

—each of them will receive a pass-book in which at the beginning of each month will be entered the basic dividend for that month, say $25. This is supposed to provide for the bare necessities of food, clothing and shelter for every bona fide citizen, whether he works or does not work, and he shall not be required to pay it back or work it out.

That to me is a great stumbling block, the thought that the community for its own good should issue purchasing power to those who are not prepared to work at all. And it does seem to me that in considering the whole question we are faced with this problem, that the issue of purchasing power indefinitely—because there is no limitation mentioned in the resolution—the issue of this purchasing power in the manner mentioned in the Social Credit Manual cannot but ultimately have the effect of curtailing production and in that way of decreasing real purchasing power. It may be said, as was said yesterday by the hon. member for Lethbridge, that the mere circulation of social dividends, or whatever you may call them, will tend to create a greater demand for consumer goods. That may be possible. But I would fear greatly the effect upon motivation to production of a free non-repayable gift, as I think my hon. friend described it yesterday, to the members of a community. That proposal does give me great doubt.

Mr. LANDERYOU: Mr. Speaker, this is not a free gift without any recovery. It has been suggested that we recover in case of redundant credit.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROGERS: I merely quoted from the Social Credit Manual, which makes it quite clear that the $25 a month is designed to provide for the bare necessities of food, clothing and shelter for every bona fide citizen whether he works or does not work, and he shall not be required to pay it back or work it out.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it again.

Mr. McNEVIN: When does that start?

Mr. ROGERS: I do not propose to detain the house longer in the consideration of this question. I do not think that we on this side have intended to show any intolerance to the views expressed by hon. members in the far corner. On the other hand there does appear to be a clear difference between us in a matter of principle. Conceivably time may prove that they are partly right and we are partly wrong. I can only say that, with what knowledge I have of the history of countries that have embarked upon the policy advocated in this resolution, I cannot support it, and I cannot believe that in the long run it would contribute to the improvement of the economic condition of the Canadian people.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): First of all I should like to say that we in this group are thoroughly in favour of the present House of Commons considering ways and means of increasing the purchasing power of the Canadian people. Neither the resolution nor the mover of the resolution (Mr. Blackmore) sets forth any specific or definite manner in which that could be done; and although the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) has just read what Mr. Aberhart had to say, the members who have so far spoken in support of this resolution have not placed that very definite interpretation upon it. Therefore I take it that members of this house who do not agree with Mr. Aberhart, who do not believe that the proposals he has made in Alberta are soundly based, nevertheless have the right and the privilege to support the resolution.

There can be no question of the necessity of finding a solution of this very evident paradox of poverty and want in the midst of real and potential plenty. If evidence were lacking, we receive it every day in the House of Commons, and in the speeches that have been made in support of this resolution much confirmatory evidence can be found. The question, as we of this group see it, is how we can meet the present need and proceed to a permanent cure, and it is from that point of view that I wish to discuss the resolution. In doing so I am speaking on behalf of this group and the movement that it represents. Unfortunately, a lack of knowledge of economics—quite understandable in a country such as the one in which we live—and a great deal of very loose thinking in connection with these matters, are leading us into all kinds of by-paths. The unemployed, the distressed farmer, the idle professional man or the bankrupt business man have put their hands into their pockets and have said, "Our trouble is that we have no money." Let us bear in mind that the basic fact of man's struggle with nature is not the fact of money but the fact of producing and using things, in other words, production and consumption. Monetary devices are means which modern men have brought into use—what for? For accounting and reckoning and delivering goods and services. It is the accountancy system within the economic structure in which we live, and many people,

I am afraid, forget this fact. They mistake the shadow of money for the substance of things, and consequently we have a tremendous emphasis placed upon that angle of our difficulty.

I think we may say that money, in a broad sense, becomes to the possessor a readily exchangeable title to goods that have been made or services that may be rendered; and since everybody under the present system does not and cannot produce, though everybody needs to consume, we have money in order that such people may obtain the things which they need to consume at given times and in given places. Hence it follows that if in our society—and I commend this particularly to my hon. friends to the left—some persons consume without producing, they must consume some things which others have produced; and to my hon. friends to the right, let me say that in a capitalist society those who live by rent, interest and profit acquire quantities of goods or titles to goods which they have not produced but which someone else has had to produce. Increase in purchasing power among the great masses of the people, which I take to be the object of this resolution, must result in proportionately lessened returns to someone, and as far as we in this group are concerned, we clearly recognize that as a fundamental fact and we make no apologies for advocating that the lessened return shall go to that group which, through its power, has been able to accumulate vast hoards and stores of wealth. We thus face that fact quite honestly and sincerely and are prepared to disagree with those who disagree with us; we shall nevertheless continue to work consistently toward that end.

A moment ago I used the word "profit." For the sake of clearing up any discussion which may arise on that point, may I say that I am using that term in a strictly narrow sense. Viewed in the narrow sense, "profit," I think, includes rent and interest and is the essential return which accrues to persons or groups of persons as a result of their ownership of the means of production. Let us bear this constantly in mind when we discuss the matter of profit. I do not mean, when I speak of profit, that further amount added to the price of goods which represents the cost of handling, the services of the man or woman handling the product, and so on. I do not include in the word, therefore, the cost of distribution. And again let me emphasize that you cannot increase the purchasing power of one group unless you take potential purchasing power from some other group. But, it may be said, production progressively increases. That may be true, but the relative truth of the statement that I have just made is, I believe, plain, and no manipulation—if I may use that word—of currency or credit can falsify that position.

To argue that a form of purchasing power that we call credit is an intangible thing is, I think, to be quite oblivious to the fact that money in any form is a title to goods and services, the fruit of someone's labour, and that such goods are quite tangible. These goods cannot be created, as is sometimes inferred at the point of a fountain pen, although they may be monetized, represented by figures, through a fountain pen; and I believe that if we could get into our minds very clearly the distinction between goods and money we should have a little less confusion in discussing this important question of finance. I am not saying that bankers cannot and do not create credit; they do. But they create it on assets that may be hypothecated to them; in other words behind the creation we have goods. It may be said, in the example given this afternoon of the government issuing notes, that this was different, that nothing was hypothecated. But I would point out that something was hypothecated. When fifteen, or twenty, or two hundred millions of new dollar titles were issued by the Dominion of Canada that meant that two hundred millions' worth of labour and natural resources would ultimately validate these titles; and somewhere in the economic process that amount would have to be accounted for.

The power we have given the bankers gives them enormous power over our economic structure. Last year we of this group sought to impress upon the house the necessity of taking that power from the bankers and so we introduced a resolution asking for the national ownership of the central Bank of Canada and the chartered banks. Nor am I denying that by the wrong use of this power great economic difficulties and dislocations may arise. They do. Scientific control of our financial system—and we are in thorough agreement with those members of the house who advocate it—undoubtedly would assist in meeting some of the difficulties that are arising. For myself I would be glad under certain circumstances to see a government embark upon a mild inflationary program, but in supporting such a program I would admit that it was such.

Mr. DUNNING: How would the hon. gentleman approach that scientifically? He mentioned a scientific approach. What scientific basis has he for the inflation?

Mr. COLDWELL: I would use the currency that I was about to issue for some useful public work, let us take housing as an example, and scientifically I would recognize that the issue of that currency in all probability would increase—

Mr. DUNNING: Science does not deal with probabilities.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, yes, it does. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that science does consider probabilities. Science usually established an hypothesis and either proves or disproves it. That is the scientific method. Having said that, I would add that in all probability the price level would be raised, and that would be a form of taxation upon the community to the extent of that inflation. I think we have to recognize that, although, as I say, I would tolerate it under certain circumstances, and I believe it would be well worth while.

Mr. GARDINER: That is, inflation is another form of taxation?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, it is another form of taxation.

Mr. DUNNING: How far would the hon. member go, scientifically?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) interrupted me a few moments ago and referred to the shortness of the time allotted to the speaker. Perhaps he might remind himself of that now.

Mr. DUNNING: I beg the pardon of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell).

Mr. COLDWELL: I would have no hesitation in answering that question. I should say I would not go very far, because I am not an inflationist, as perhaps the house will see when I proceed a little further with my remarks.

We hear a great deal about sound money, and perhaps this will answer the minister's question. In my opinion a sound monetary system implies that the total amount of all money, taking into account its velocity, shall equal the value of the goods and services, priced and to be distributed by it. The nearer you can get to that the more ideal your system will be. I may say that I am not taking that definition or that statement from any radical economist. It will be found in many of our standard works on economics.

Mr. DUNNING: That is an orthodox statement.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. Too little money, or money moving too slowly, causes a deflation. On the other hand too much money or money moving too rapidly causes inflation, and both are equally bad. I sometimes accuse gentlemen who are orthodox of being deflationists. I think in reality their frame of mind is rather toward deflation than toward stabilization; and I would call some other monetary theorists frankly inflationists, and recognise them as such. Let us bear this in mind, too, that the flow of money and even the effects of inflation are very difficult to gauge. I think President Roosevelt found that out. For three years he poured billions of dollars into circulation, and it was not until after three years had passed that he began to see those signs of recovery which he sought. Even then that recovery was based, perhaps, upon factors other than the sole monetary factor which was so greatly emphasized.

The lesson of this, it seems to me, is that in order to carry out the purpose of the motion which has been introduced, many more factors are involved and many more things need to be done than some members of the house would seem to realize, if we may judge from their discussion of this question. If we are going to achieve a balanced economy we must assume some responsibility for planning production as well as for encouraging distribution. This, probably, is the point at which we part company with our friends to the left and our friends to the right. Our friends to the left want to issue quantities of titles to goods they neither own nor control, while our friends to the right support the theory of automatic self-adjustments, which tragically enough alternate between booms and depressions. We would endeavour to progress toward an ever-expanding production of goods and services and to an ever-increasing enjoyment of them.

Bearing that in mind, Mr. Speaker, you will see why a few moments ago I spoke of balancing money, tokens if you like, with goods, because that is the only way in which we shall ever achieve anything in the nature of a balanced economic structure. In order to do that, however, we must frankly recognize that we have to institute planning and quite wide measures of economic control. We contend, of course, that though steps may be taken in that direction, this can never be achieved in its entirety under the present price and profit system, because the flow of profit tends to immobilize vast quantities of purchasing power at least temporarily. There you see the fundamental defect in our economic structure. What the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) said may be perfectly true, that enough purchasing power is issued to enable the goods produced to be consumed; yet always there is a dip, a taking out of a portion in the form of profit, in the economic sense in which I use that term, and as the concentration of industry and finance comes into fewer and fewer hands, that dip becomes a much more serious factor in the economic situation.

There we have the real difficulty that arises. It is the concentration of money in the hands of a few, who cannot spend it and who do not even find safe places in which to lend it, that causes disequilibrium. Were it not for these factors the process of production would itself distribute sufficient purchasing power, as the Minister of Labour has said. For in a properly planned economy if you did not distribute purchasing power in that way, you might distribute it subsequently by a social dividend. May I say to hon. members to my left that that is the only way in which they will ever achieve social dividends. Thus it ought to be apparent that purchasing power involves very much more than some of our friends in Alberta would seem to think.

This is an intricate economic subject. Every hon. member who attempts to debate it in an assembly of this kind must know that it is a difficult subject to place before a gathering. I believe that is one of the difficulties of present day discussions throughout the country concerning money and credit. For this reason I should like to place before the house a resolution passed at our conference held in Toronto last July. The resolution, which I believe summarizes our position, is in these words:

> The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation reiterates its policy of credit and investment control in the plainest terms.

In passing, may I observe that the matter of investment control is one to which I would like to believe the government is giving serious consideration. As I look at the stock market fluctuations from day to day I can see all the factors which operated prior to 1929. Unless an attempt is made to meet the situation we shall probably see stocks go higher than they did in that year, and the crash will be just that much greater. The following paragraphs are these:

> (1). Central Bank. We demand the complete elimination of all private ownership and control from the Bank of Canada.
> (2). Commercial Banks. Useful as it is, the Bank of Canada is not a sufficient instrument for credit control if the rest of our financial machinery is left in the hands of big business to be used for private profit. The responsibility for directing most of the country's short-term credit rests with the commercial banks. Their credit policy accentuates booms and depressions by easing credit during "prosperity" and restricting it when business declines. Their position accentuates the present trend towards monopoly in our economy through the system of interlocking directorates which prevails between banks and large scale industrial enterprises. In addition, since their one aim is private profit and not social security, they starve us of credit for housing and other welfare services because these things do not "pay." There must be public ownership and control of the whole banking and insurance system if the credit resources of the country are to be devoted to socially useful purposes. "Social credit" parties, by ignoring this essential issue, are tending to lead our people up a blind alley.
> (3). Long-Term Investment. In spite of many exposures of the abuses and rackets which go with the present methods of long-term financing of industry, the vital importance of this second great section of our financial machinery has not yet been brought home to the public. "Credit control" is empty talk unless accompanied by the control of investment. Private enterprise makes its big profits through stock-watering, promoters' rake-offs, directors' bonuses, transfers between interlocking companies, stock and bond speculation, artificial raising of the marketability of securities through the "investment trust," manipulation of commodity markets, and such practices. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation recognizes clearly that managed currency and credit provide only half a policy unless accompanied by drastic regulation of these practices.
> A Security Board, such as recommended by the Price Spreads Commission should immediately be set up. But a far more comprehensive national investment board should also be created, as called for in the Regina manifesto in 1933. Unless this form of public control is provided, capitalist "recovery" will merely lead us into another period of hectic and unplanned expansion, with national savings invested where profits are highest and quickest instead of where social advantage is greatest, which will be followed inexorably by another and deeper depression.
> (4). Finally, it is important to reiterate the policy laid down in our Regina manifesto in regard to the need for the social ownership of the means of production and related industries.

That, it seems to me, summarizes the position we have taken. Thus we realize there are many factors involved in the redistribution of goods and services implied in a resolution to increase purchasing power, such as the one we are now debating.

May I repeat that not the least of the important matters indicated is a security board, so that investments may go into proper productive chanels. Involved also would be fixed prices guaranteeing proper standards of living to our producers and adequate wages to our workers. Added to those factors would be the one which is perhaps more important at the present time, namely the opportunity to earn money. It follows that wide measures of intelligent planning must be undertaken to replace what we regard as an outworn laissez faire economy. Let me reiterate that the problem is more complex than the mere creation of credits, and must cover the very wide field of the production and distribution of goods. Under the present system it is essentially the ownership by the bank, whether outright or by hypothecation, which gives it power to control wealth, to use it, and to determine the distribution of those commodities which money is supposed to distribute.

Those people who do not own the things they need must labour to live. Either they must work, borrow or accept relief. To them existence depends upon labour, debt or dole. That, I take it, is the misfortune of our present economic situation.

If the means of production were restored to the control of society we believe that then the sum total of production could and indeed would be distributed during the process of production. If it were thought better not to do that, then any surplus accruing to the community, through community effort, could be made available in a form of subsequent social dividend. But to attempt one without the other is, in my opinion, courting economic disaster. If my view is wrong I shall be content to listen to other views. An opportunity has been provided in one of the Canadian provinces to demonstrate that my point of view is wrong, and I can assure hon. members from that province that if they succeed in demonstrating my observations this afternoon are not well founded, I shall be glad not only to admit my error but to assist them in carrying forward their experiment. If on the other hand they see that the experiment is not successful—and I submit they do—they should endeavour to work out something more nearly along the lines of economic reality.

Many will say that the point of view I have indicated involves great changes. Yes, it does, and they will come. They will not all come at once, because that would involve a tremendous and sudden dislocation. I do not believe that at the moment the best kind of progress can be made in that way. Very recent history has shown that social and economic changes imply time and steps. And so I say, on behalf of the group for whom I am speaking this afternoon, we are prepared to cooperate with any other group in this house which might not wish a fundamental change but which is ready to travel even part of the way along the road which we must eventually travel.

In conclusion may I outline some of the immediate steps which we consider to be necessary. First, the national ownership and control of the financial system. Second, the national ownership and control of monopolistic industry. Third, social security measures, including minimum wages for workers and a guaranteed minimum price for the farmer. Fourth, steeply graded income taxes with the lower brackets exempt. Fifth, progressively high death duties and inheritance taxes.

May I say that the last is a method of restoring to society as a whole the ownership of some of those things which have been taken from society by a group. I believe that this offers a painless and effective, if not a most rapid way of achieving that objective. But in imposing death duties we have no right to consider them as current revenue. We ought to consider death duties, which vary in extent from year to year, as a contribution toward the retirement of our national capital obligations.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. gentleman believes in federal death duties?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: In addition to the provincial duties?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. The next thing required is the refunding of our public debt. I am glad to see that some refunding is under consideration at lower rates of interest. I was hoping that steps might be taken and means found for refunding the different loans at still lower rates of interest. We have to deal also with the adjustment of private obligations and with the future limitation of rates of interest. It seems to me that by these methods purchasing power can be increased under the present system. There must be inaugurated a process of redistribution and eventual greater production. The house may not agree with everything advocated by our friends to my left, but if we discuss intelligently and without bias ways and means of assisting the Canadian people, not only to make more goods but to consume more goods, then this session will be justified. It is for these reasons that we intend to vote for this resolution.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) said that a man's purchasing power must be measured exactly by his production. A few years ago a federal minister of the crown was in Edmonton where he broadcast to the farmers the particulars of what his party had done for their benefit. He told them that his party did not wish to claim all the credit for the benefits they had received, that providence must be given some credit because providence had seen fit, through bad weather, to reduce production in other parts of the world. There is an instance where a man's purchasing power was not measured exactly by what he produced; his purchasing power was measured by what some one else had not produced.

I farmed for five and thirty years in western Canada. I always found that when I had a good crop, there never seemed to be any price. When there was a good price, I never seemed to have a crop. The same thing was true with regard to cattle. When people wanted to buy cattle and were willing to pay a fair price, I never seemed to have any. When cattle were cheap, of course I had some to sell. It seems to me that our problem is the producing of plenty without penalizing the producers. In other words, it is a problem of selling plenty at a profit.

The only alternative is a dictatorship, either of the right or of the left. If the producers are to be ruined by producing the plenty which science has made possible, then the only remedy is the enforcement of artificial scarcity by means of a dictatorship. The hon. member for Huron North asked us to consider an island where only barter obtained. He told us that under such circumstances production would balance consumption. We do want to dispute that, but the hon. member did not mention such things as machinery, science, savings, investments and all the rest of it, and the price system as well. If I had the time I think I could prove that under the present price system it is impossible for industry to distribute sufficient purchasing power in order that what it produces may be sold.

Money is born as a debt. When I borrow $100, I must pay back $108. Where do those eight dollars come from? I may be told that I have produced a crop of wheat, that it comes out of the wheat deal, but that is not so. I have stooked a good many thousands of acres of wheat and I have never yet found a dollar bill in any stook. You produce wheat, you do not produce money. Savings create a shortage of purchasing power. When a man saves he refrains from consuming and to that extent goods are not sold. We are told that money saved is an investment which eventually will be paid out in wages and salaries. That may be true, but when the money is paid out again in wages and salaries, it is paid out with respect to another cycle of production. We have two lots of goods and one lot of money, and it is impossible for one lot of money to buy two lots of goods.

Why is it that times of greatest prosperity, when everybody is working and production is at its full, are precisely the times when high pressure salesmen go around to sell their goods. It is then that it is found necessary to sell goods on time. It is because under our price system all costs must enter into prices; in those prices must be included costs which are not distributed, and it is for that reason it is impossible for industry to distribute the money which is necessary to buy what it produces. If, as the hon. member for Huron North says, production and consumption balance, I would like him to explain the ever-increasing debt. If industry were self-liquidating, as he says it is, how does he account for the ever-increasing debt not only in Canada but in all countries?

It is still doubted by some that the banks create money. There are still people who tell us that the banks lend simply what is lent to them. Now if 100 members of this chamber go to-morrow morning to a bank and each deposits a ten-dollar bill, there is $1,000. When they come out I go into the bank and I borrow $1,000. If it is true that I have borrowed the money which has just been deposited, then if they will go in and ask the manager where their money is, he will say, "I have lent it to Jaques." But the bankers do not say that. They say, "Of course, your money is here." So there you have $2,000, where only $1,000 existed before, and if that is not creation of money, what is it? I do not know. It is creation in the sense that I understand it.

We hear a good deal about inflation, and I should like to read for the benefit of those who have not done so what the originator of the system which we advocate says about inflation.

Mr. MARTIN: Who is that?

Mr. JAQUES: Major Douglas. He says this:

> There is almost nothing to be said for a policy of deflation as defined by the average banker, except that it provides a breathing space in which to consider what to do; the real argument against it is not that it reduces prices, but that it only does so at the expense of the producer; but a policy of inflation, that is to say a policy of increasing issues of money or credit, in such a manner that it can only reach the general public through the medium of costs, and must therefore be reflected in prices, has one thing and one thing only to be said for it at this time; that it is absolutely and mathematically certain to reduce any financial and economic system to ruins. It is in fact a capital levy of the meanest and most one-sided description since it taxes the purchasing power of those who obtained it by work, for the benefit of those who obtain it by financial manipulation.

That is the statement of Major Douglas, the originator of social credit. I know it is popular to sneer and laugh at the philosophy and economic teachings of Major Douglas.

Mr. MARTIN: Mr. Aberhart does. I believe the hon. gentleman's own provincial leader has repudiated Mr. Douglas.

Mr. JAQUES: I am not a provincial member; I happen to be a federal member.

Mr. MARTIN: Yes; I appreciate that.

Mr. JAQUES: I have nothing whatever to do with the government of Alberta. I have not been asked for, nor have I offered, any advice as to instituting social credit in Alberta. I understand this, though, that so far the government of Alberta has had all it can do, and more than it can do, to clean up the mess which was left by the policies of orthodox finance.

As I was saying, it is common to rate Major Douglas cheaply, but the bankers of England put a different value on his knowledge and ideas. When his first book was published in 1919 and it came to the knowledge of the financial controllers in Great Britain, the Bankers' Association of Great Britain subscribed $25,000,000 to keep that knowledge from the British people. That list has been published in England; I have seen the list, and everybody knows that if it was not true you could not get away with a libel like that. But it is a fact, and I have Major Douglas' word for it in this book, a copy of which can be found in the library of parliament. The sum of $25,000,000 was subscribed by the bankers to keep these teachings of Major Douglas from the world.

Mr. DUNNING: What did they do with the money? How did they spend it?

Mr. JAQUES: They subsidized the press.

Mr. DUNNING: Subsidized the press?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes, certainly.

Mr. DUNNING: Of England?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes; they bought the silence of the press. That statement has been made and printed, and no one has ever brought a legal action.

Mr. DUNNING: They bought the silence of the press?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: The silence?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes, certainly, and they succeeded in keeping out of the British press the knowledge of social credit as preached by Mr. Douglas. Anyone who has had any experience in writing on social credit knows how difficult it is even in this country to get such ideas into the metropolitan press. It is almost an impossibility.

Mr. DUNNING: I think that is a libel on the Canadian press because the hon. member's party gets more publicity than any other party.

Mr. JAQUES: I am perfectly willing to accept the risk of an action.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member cannot be sued for what he says in this house.

Mr. JAQUES: I am perfectly willing to say it outside the house; I have done so on many occasions, and so far I have not suffered any ill effects. I should like, while there is yet time, to put this to my credit on Hansard. I have not accumulated very much in my lifetime, but after studying all brands of economics as well as I could—I spent a lifetime on the farm which at least offers an opportunity to think if we can say only "gee" and "haw"—after spending thirty-five years studying practical economics, not the teaching of them but the testing of them, I came to very definite conclusions. I had certain problems to solve which I found to be insoluble, and when I retired from farming, or rather when farming retired me, I said to myself: I have worked myself into this mess, and now I shall see if I can think myself out of it. So I occupied my time in doing a little economic study. I studied all brands of economics and I could find no solution whatever, nothing except a continuation of scarcity. My problem was to find some method by which plenty could be produced without penalizing the producer, so that we could sell plenty at a profit; and I gave it up. Then one day I came upon an article by the Dean of Canterbury, Money Basis of Exchange, and—I want to put this to my credit—I read the truth there at a glance.

Mr. DUNNING: In a newspaper?

Mr. JAQUES: Yes, certainly; in a western paper, the Western Producer. I am glad to give it that advertisement. The article was not in a metropolitan newspaper, but in a western farm paper. From that time on I have read every book that Major Douglas has written. Unlike so many people, I find no difficulty in understanding him; his writings seem perfectly straightforward to me. But then I was thoroughly deflated; I had no preconceived ideas; I had given them up; I was willing to learn. I had, one might say, turned a mental somersault, so that what may appear upside down to some hon. members looks straight up to me.

I believe that Major Douglas is one of the greatest and most original thinkers of all time. It is said that he is not an economist and he cannot know anything about economics. The greatest astronomer who ever lived believed that the sun went around the earth; he never could accept the theory that the earth went around the sun. In spite of that he is justly considered the greatest astronomer of all time, because he spent his life in taking most accurate measurements of the movements of the stars, and it was through the facts that he made available that Newton was able to reduce the study of the whole solar system to an exact science and to prove mathematically, through his discovery of gravitation, that the earth goes around the sun. It is true that Douglas was not a professional economist; he was an engineer and a thinker. Newton was not an astronomer; he was a philosopher, and so is Douglas. I say that Douglas is the Newton of economics, because, as Newton discovered or established the proof that the earth goes around the sun, Douglas has provided the proof that no longer does our economic system revolve around production but that it revolves around consumption, and that if we look after consumption, production will look after itself, but the reverse process will not work, because modern science and modern productive methods have made that impossible. The replacement of labour by machine has upset the balance, so we say that if we look after consumption, production will look after itself. That is all we wish to do.

We have been called "red." I know from my own experience that the most bitter opponents we have are the communists. We have nothing whatever to do with communism: we wish to avoid either extreme: we have no use for fascism and no use for communism. We want to preserve all that is good in this system, which is the productive end of it, and we wish merely to make it possible that whatever the people care to produce they shall be enabled to consume. We say that we, the people, should be able to consume to the limits of our desires or of our abilities to produce, whichever comes first; that is all.

I should like to read one more quotation, because the hon. member for Huron North mentioned that the profits of the banks were not so great as might be supposed if our ideas were true.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the quotation from?

Mr. JAQUES: This is from Warning Democracy, by Major Douglas, a copy of which is in the parliamentary library. He has this to say:

> The complaint which is levelled at the banks is generally that they pay too large a dividend. Now curiously enough, in my opinion, almost the only thing which is not open to destructive criticism about the banks is their dividend. Their dividend goes to shareholders and is purchasing power, but their enormous concealed profits . . . do not provide purchasing power for anyone, and merely aggrandize banks as banks. But the essential point in the position of banks, which is so hard to explain, and which is grasped by so very few people, is that their true assets are not represented by anything actual at all, but are represented by the difference between a society functioning under centralized and restricted credit and a free society unfettered by financial restrictions.

We have it from the biggest banker in the British Empire that banks control the policies of the governments and hold in the hollow of their hands the destinies of the people. I do not think anyone in this chamber could successfully deny that statement. We say that that control, that monopoly of credit and money—and without money no one can live, so that, as Mr. McKenna says, those who control money control the lives and hold the destinies of the people in their hands—should be restored to the government in trust for the people.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): The resolution now under discussion, as indicated by many of the addresses to which we have listened, is that kind of omnibus resolution which may mean anything. The fact that it may mean anything is evidenced by the manner in which several hon. members, admittedly differing with the mover of the resolution and his exposition of the meaning of it, nevertheless found in it a means of conveying to the house their particular ideas with respect to what is sometimes, rather loosely I fear, called monetary reform; and they were able therefore to indicate their support of the resolution while disagreeing profoundly with the mover of it in his statement of the case in favour of it. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), for instance, in an address which was admirable so long as he discussed economics prior to embarking upon the political portion of his speech, demolished completely all of the arguments of the mover of the resolution; but he concluded his speech by saying that he would support the resolution because he favoured a mild, small, cautious dose of inflation. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) and the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. O'Neill) intimated that they would support the resolution because they frankly believe in currency and credit inflation.

I am opposed to the resolution because I believe that nothing could do Canada more harm in this year 1937 than for the idea to go abroad that this House of Commons favoured currency and credit inflation. Certainly any one reading the speeches delivered to-day in favour of the resolution could reach no other conclusion than that in varying degrees the speakers favoured some amount of inflation. Some describe it as scientific inflation, others as controlled inflation; but always inflation was the end of the road reached by various speakers. Various speakers of the social credit group recognize frankly the evils of inflation, recognize indeed that their proposals involve inflation, and they have various suggestions, just as Major Douglas has, to prevent the human suffering which inflation invariably produces.

Briefly put, the social philosophy, as explained by its advocates, proposes arbitrarily to control the price level, by that means avoiding if possible the evils which admittedly flow from uncontrolled inflation. But inasmuch as an increased price level is the major benefit claimed for inflation, I find it difficult to see how it is possible to get the benefits of an increased price level while by arbitrary means preventing the price level from rising.

I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. member for Rosthern that Canada should copy German financial and economic methods at present in force. Methods which are tolerated by a people willing to make the sacrifice of lowering their standard of living to the irreducible minimum in order to increase their military strength surely should not be advocated by those who profess to desire an improved standard of living in Canada. The hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) expressed my views when he said in concluding his remarks:

> You cannot in this world get something for nothing without taking that something away from somebody else.

I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar used words carrying almost a similar meaning. More and more as I have listened last session and this, to speeches by those who call themselves monetary reformers, I see the tendency to preach the doctrine that thrift is unsound, that the man who saves a portion of the proceeds of his labour to-day so that he may have the use of it when he can no longer work is somehow an enemy of society. The whole philosophy of social credit is opposed to thrift; it expresses itself frankly as opposed to life insurance, for instance. To me, it seems that, followed to its logical conclusion, this whole argument leads to the point where nobody need work—the state will provide; nobody need save anything—the state will provide. A sort of brain trust bureaucracy by manipulating pieces of paper will plan to give everybody what he needs from birth to death.

In his reference to the international standard of gold backing the hon. member for Rosthern mentioned twenty-five per cent. That is a correct figure except for the qualification that the twenty-five per cent is internationally agreed upon as a minimum. It is correct to say that Canada is not down to the minimum; Canada still has some leeway from the international point of view. From the domestic point of view parliament has entrusted to the Bank of Canada the function of regulating currency and credit in the public interest. Obviously information regarding the day to day discharge of this function cannot be given, but results show clearly the broad line of policy which has been followed by that bank.

I think it may be said with safety that for credit-worthy borrowers, individual, corporate, municipal, provincial and dominion, there prevail to-day in Canada lower interest rates than ever before were known in Canada's history; and I submit that an easy money policy is the best policy for Canada at the present time, however unpopular it may be to those who have money to lend. But, Mr. Speaker, our testing time will come whenever, by means of a too high price level inducing wild speculation in commodities, stocks, et cetera, it becomes desirable in the public interest for the Bank of Canada, in order to check this tendency, to exercise the credit control powers conferred upon it by parliament. That, I say, will be the testing time.

The hon. member for Rosthern desires an explanation with respect to certain instances from the past in Canada which in his view tend to prove the desirability of inflation. I have nothing to say regarding those departures made at various times under the stress of an immediate condition and involving a degree of inflation so small in relation to our total national income as to have had little provable effect either in stimulating our economic life or in producing that all but universal demand for more and more of the stimulant, which has throughout all history brought ruin and disillusionment in the train of inflation.

Reference was made to the fact that velocity of circulation is the really important factor; I forget who it was who referred to that fact. Stated in another way, it is the national income, not the amount of money in existence, which is the vital factor. The velocity of circulation, unless an inflationary expansion has taken place, is much more responsive to control in the early stages of the upward movement of a business cycle than during its downward phases or at the bottom of the depression. The total deposits of commercial banks in various countries are often as great as or even greater during a depression than in a boom period, but unfortunately their velocity of circulation is likely to be greatly reduced, as during the recent depression. I have before me some figures. For example, the average deposits in the English banks in 1929 were £1,861,000,000. At the bottom of the depression, in 1933, they were £1,813,700,000, comparatively a very slight reduction. In 1934 they were £1,911,000,000, or actually £50,000,000 greater than they were in 1929. In Canada the average deposits of the chartered banks in the spring of 1936 were about the same as in 1929, but of course their turnover in 1936 was very much less rapid than in 1929. Now mark this: The national income of Canada was about $5,690,000,000 in 1929 and only about $3,614,000,000 in 1934, although 1934 showed improvement over some of the intermediate years. This reduction of national income is about what would be expected in the light of the decrease in turnover, or, in other words, the decrease in velocity of circulation, since 1929.

What we really need is an increase in the national income. The government has been trying to effect this increase in national income by various methods. All governments are striving to increase their national incomes, meaning by that the income of all the people within the limits of the nation. For instance, we are trying to expand our markets with foreign countries through the removal, so far as possible, of restrictions on international trade. We are all trying to stimulate employment, and we are trying also to maintain the confidence of the Canadian people so that the efforts to foster employment will not be more than offset by the retarding of business activity, caused by uncertainty and fear.

The government, of course, by amending certain statutes could create for itself unlimited quantities of money. There is no doubt about the ability and capacity of this parliament to create unlimited quantities of what would be known as money. We could print paper money or, since this would be a somewhat awkward and unnecessarily expensive way of dealing with the matter, we could provide for unlimited credit in the form of deposits in the Bank of Canada. The final result of these devices would be the same; that is, the creation out of thin air, shall we say, of money which the government could spend. I think it will be generally accepted by thinking men everywhere, and particularly by those who study the experiences of the past, that the creation of money in this fashion cannot fail ultimately to reduce the value and purchasing power of the money already in circulation. If anything is written plainly on the scroll of history, surely that is.

The point I am making is this, that the creation and spending of new money on an appreciable scale cannot in any real sense be regarded as the creation of purchasing power, since its creation results ultimately in a corresponding reduction in the purchasing power of the money already outstanding. An increase in real purchasing power can come about only through an increase in the national income, and this is not achieved by the mere act of creating money. We could to-morrow change the length of the yard as a unit of measure and thus increase the number of yards of cloth in the country. We could do the same thing in the monetary field; we could change the yardstick used as the measure of value, and thereafter be able to estimate our wealth in a greater number of lower value dollars.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask if we have not already changed the value of the dollar?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, Mr. Speaker. One of the results of the great war and what followed was that tendency, that necessity on the part of practically all countries in the world. Some were slower to come to it than others; all hesitated because of what the facts of history teach with respect to it, and it was only when reasonable unanimity of approach to the problem was secured that the world commenced to rise out of the depression. To-day the relative exchange values of the British pound sterling, the American dollar and the Canadian dollar are marching along steadily. They are not subject to the wild fluctuations in relative values which affected them prior to the commencement of the upturn. I think it is correct to say that the financial statesmanship of the world, during the years from 1930 to 1933 or 1934, was much more exercised with that problem than with all other financial problems put together. It was not until, I would not say a solution was reached, but until reasonable harmony was established that it was possible for that confidence to be created upon which is based the exchange between peoples of their surplus commodities. Indeed, I shall go as far as to say that the adjustment, the management which now exists between the leading currencies of the world was an absolutely necessary preliminary to the revival of international trade; that without it I doubt the possibility of the revival measures which have been taken by various governments of various countries being at all effective.

I have little more to say, Mr. Speaker. All history teaches us the appeal which proposals of this kind have to the ears of men and women who are experiencing great hardship. There never has been in any modern country a time of hardship which did not have as a part of its phenomena a development of so-called monetary reform which always received for a time in all countries very wide support. In some countries the effort was made, with results that are written large on the pages of history, results which drove the common people of those countries further into the mire than they were ever driven by any depression. In other countries, notably the great republic to the south, the agitation for monetary inflation lasted in various forms for a long period of years. It was never successful. I would not use the term "monetary reform" because I do not regard inflation as monetary reform. I regard uncontrolled inflation as the worst kind of monetary reaction. It is destructive.

Moreover, sir, I still believe in the virtue of thrift, I still believe that a man in the full flush of his manhood has not merely the right but the duty to himself and to those who depend upon him to set aside in any manner which seems good to him a portion of the proceeds of his labour to-day in order that he and those dependent upon him may not later be dependent upon the state. To my mind the strength of the state is the strength of that spirit of independence among the individuals composing the state, and nowhere is that spirit of independence stronger than it is upon the western plains. Nowhere is it stronger; nowhere is it more pronounced; no people will respond to it more readily. To-day they are ground under the heel of climatic conditions unprecedented on this continent.

An hon. MEMBER: And what else?

Mr. DUNNING: And other conditions, too, conditions which we may be thankful are gradually, slowly but surely being remedied.

I ask the house to defeat this resolution for the reason than an acceptance of it will say to the world that this House of Commons is in favour of some form of undefined inflation of our monetary standards.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at length upon the resolution now before the house, but having heard read the careful essay by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), as representing—

Mr. DUNNING: What is that?

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I said.

Mr. DUNNING: Would my right hon. friend like to look at it?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. DUNNING: These are my notes.

Mr. BENNETT: It represented the view of the department.

Mr. DUNNING: It represents the views of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: And of the government. I can only repeat that there is every reason in the world why members who supported the Liberal party at the last election should take the view which has found expression in this house to-day. How could it be otherwise?

What was said from this side of the house during the long years in which we were endeavouring to lay the foundation to which the hon. member to-night referred? What was the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) doing? What was the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) doing? The avowed exponents of the principles of the then opposition cheered loudly and vociferously, yes, cheered day after day, as he attacked the financial policies of the then government, and declared what his party would do had they the opportunity.

I shall not content myself by making that statement, but I shall read from the considered and expressed statement of the present Minister of National Defence as it was made in this city on July 5, 1935, just before the last election.

> Canada must, Mr. Mackenzie declared, break down tariff barriers; she must even experiment with international barter if necessary. No, he does not declare for free trade; but for "freer" trade, yes.
> Incidental to the housing scheme of the present government which Mr. Mackenzie finds so distressingly half-hearted, he recalls his recent visit to Britain. There, he says, a comprehensive housing scheme promises to eliminate all the slums of London and Glasgow in the next five years.
> Ask Mr. Mackenzie where the money is coming from and he doesn't even hesitate with his millions. The government has $110,000,000 of gold now worth $118,000,000. On a 25 per cent reserve basis it can issue notes to the extent of $720,000,000 as against the paltry $259,000,000 now in circulation. Use that extra currency to retire public debt, reduce interest to 2½ per cent and you will compel money to seek industrial investment.

That was the statement made by one who is now a responsible minister of the crown, one who has made similar statements in this house, as will be shown by Hansard, and the loud and vociferous cheers of those who sat behind him in the house at that time will be recalled by every member, yes, by every member. They cheered the reading of the Macmillan report, just as it was read this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), and the reading of the Canadian Macmillan report, as it was done this afternoon. Then, amid loud and vociferous cheers, those who now are before me and who were in the house in those days declared that what should be done was to take the action as indicated in the excerpt which I have read. Is it any wonder that when financial leaders of the opposition went into their constituencies and made statements they were believed, as was said by the hon. member for Rosthern this afternoon.

I shall not again traverse the speeches of the first minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I shall not traverse what I said last session, or the statements that he made in this house in declaring what the policy of the Liberal party was. I shall not repeat the language used in those speeches which were given the house by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer). I shall not do that, because it has already been done. But the language that was used, the very words that the first minister used on those occasions, were the words which were coined, so far as the resolution is concerned, by that member himself, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

And with that slogan in their ears the Liberal party went out and sought the support of Canada. I say it lies with no good grace in the Minister of Finance to make the statements he has made here to-night when we remember the stand of the chief financial critic of the opposition of that day. He was constantly at it, with the Macmillan report in his hands, both the English one and the Canadian one, and with the approval of his leader, because many times I have sat over there and have listened to the present Minister of National Defence as he made statements analogous to the one I have just read. Hon. members will find them written on the pages of Hansard. Is it any wonder, therefore, that we find members of the Liberal party seeking support in their constituencies in the terms of the resolution now before the house? Is it any matter of surprise that they should do so, in view of the lead that was then given them? I am rising only to direct attention to that fact and to one other. Faced with the greatest difficulties known to this country, difficulties such as never have been known before—and for the first time I have heard a responsible minister opposite make reference to them; the minister made reference to them to-night in terms of the real facts—faced with conditions as difficult as they could be, or as bad as they could possibly be, the government of the day battled on. But whenever we spoke of the efforts we were endeavouring to make to deal with the situation, night after night we were met with criticism almost the same, in terms of the language used, as that offered by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) yesterday and the hon. member for Rosthern to-day.

When reference is made to the issue of $35,000,000, I say that certainly $35,000,000 were issued under the terms mentioned by the hon. member for Rosthern. He has correctly stated the circumstances in connection with this issue. At one time the conditions of this country were so serious that those responsible for its administration were fearful of what might happen from day to day. Although there is no denying that there was opposition from many sources in the country, the experiment was made. But it was not continued because the Bank of Canada was thought to be clothed with sufficient authority to cope with any condition that might arise.

The minister has stated to-night that the Bank of Canada was capable of dealing with any situation of that kind which might arise with respect to either currency or credit.

It will be recalled that following the world conference we did propose and carry through this house a measure by which it was provided that currency might be issued with twenty-five per cent metal backing up to $120,000,000. After that it was to be dollar for dollar. However, when the Bank of Canada Act was passed and in operation, there was no limitation placed upon it because in the very nature of things that reserve bank, which it is, was regarded as having sufficient powers to deal with the situation. It was satisfactory to hear the minister say to-night that that was so. It was satisfactory to those of us who laboured against such opposition in those days to hear from him the statement he made with respect to the Bank of Canada, the usefulness of which has been somewhat impaired by the tinkering which has since taken place, but which we can discuss at another time. It is desirable that the house should realize that the situation which confronted this country was one of extreme gravity, calling for prompt and effective measures if we were not to become bankrupt.

Let me say to hon. members who are present in such numbers on the opposite side to the one they then occupied, that no bank in Canada closed its doors during those days, and that no depositor who had funds in a bank wrote a cheque which was not honoured. That could not be said with respect to our great neighbour to the south. Then there was the difficulty which was encountered by the Bank of England and which, as was known to all, had upon this country repercussions, the full extent and effect of which few people have any understanding of at all.

Mr. DUNNING: And which may not be known for years.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree with the minister. The effects may not be known for years because in the very nature of things they cannot be. Those of us who had to meet the full force of them at the time—

Mr. CAHAN: On twenty-four hours' notice.

Mr. BENNETT: —less than that—did not receive very much sympathy or support from those who now occupy the treasury benches. That was the position. When we hear members of the Liberal party taking the position they do in this house, we realize that they are but giving voice to the sentiments which week in and week out, month in and month out, were made the subject matter of attacks against the then administration. More than that, when the imperial trade agreements were before this house the Liberal party as a party voted on the amendment of the then hon. member for Macleod, Mr. Coote, that the agreements would be approved if the dollar were tied to the pound. There is the record. They rose one after another, with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) leading them, and voted for that. That is what happened in this house. When we hear from the mouth of the Minister of Finance a vindication of the policies that were pursued, those of us who were associated together in those dark days rejoice that those now in office are pursuing the policies of their predecessors.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I say, the policies of their predecessors with respect to financial matters. Who but the late government initiated the policy with respect to financial administration that is now being pursued by this administration? Who commenced the policy of conversion which has saved the taxpayers of this country $16,000,000 per annum in interest charges? Who commenced the sale of short term treasury bills? The government of that day was told that it could not be done, but we said that we were going to sell them and we succeeded in doing so. The government of that day commenced a program which has been of the utmost value to this country and which is now being followed by the government of the day.

It is true that the capital of the Bank of Canada has been increased by $5,000,000. Of course that is very hopeful and helpful when it was not required. Coincident with that there is to be a reduction in the capital of the Canadian National Railways, I suppose as a sort of balance. It is a case of reducing one and increasing the other; one will offset the other. It is quite obvious—I am quite happy to be able to say so—that the whole financial policy followed by the government of the day is the policy followed by their predecessors in office. It is not the policy which they advocated in opposition. I shall not trouble to read at great length from the many speeches of that sort which will be found on Hansard. Of course I do not propose to vote for the resolution.

There were long years when we had to meet most difficult conditions, when the Australian situation was being pressed upon our attention, when conditions which arose in England were constantly being presented for our consideration and when we were told that inflation was the thing to pursue and that we should pursue it. Professor Kammener of Princeton university has been called the money doctor of the world. He is responsible for having done a great deal in connection with currency matters in many countries. In his book on money he points out that uncontrolled inflation has always led to one result. It will be observed by those who desire to read that just a single cent of United States currency was capable of acquiring the entire mortgage debt of the German Empire in the March before the war. "Easy is the descent to hell" is an old maxim.

Mr. DUNNING: Before the war?

Mr. BENNETT: In the days of inflation a single United States cent was capable of purchasing marks sufficient to equal the pre-war mortgage debt of the German Empire. When I read that I thought it was a misprint, but I found that it was correct. Professor Kammener points out the reasons why uncontrolled inflation has always led to one end. Inflation has been practised in this country and in other countries, and will probably be practised in the future in still other countries; but for some strange reason, once you start people on the road to inflation there never seems to be an end until bankruptcy and ruin are reached. That is the history of the world.

Canada is now showing signs of recovery. When I think of the revenues of to-day and compare them with what we had to endeavour to get along with in days gone by; when I think of the shrinkage in trade, not only of this country but of the whole world, and how international trade fell to one-third of what it was before the depression; when I think of the conditions under which we had to struggle, I cannot but feel, whatever it may have been necessary to do in times of strain and stress and peril, there is, so far as I can observe, no occasion or necessity for any such action at the moment. I trust that the occasion may never again arise in this country. I trust that we may be able to continue the course which we are now following. But when leaders of public thought and opinion induce their party when in opposition to believe that certain things are possible, and that because they are not done by the government certain evil results follow, they cannot when in power blame those who believed that they were listening to sound statements of the party's view when in opposition. That, I think, is clearly apparent to-night, but the fact that it is apparent is no reason why for a single moment I should do other than vote against this resolution, not only for the reasons that have been given by the minister and others, but because I have not changed the opinion which I held when responsibility was ours, nor do I think any of my colleagues have changed their opinions. However great may have been the necessity for taking action of an exceptional nature to deal with exceptional conditions, this is neither the time nor the place nor is it desirable to depart from known, sound rules that will enable us, I trust, not only to continue to revive the fortunes of this country but to make them even greater than they have ever been. That, I believe, is the earnest desire of every member of the house. The fundamental principle is that we must have soundness at least in finance. Many improvements have been and are being made from time to time throughout the world, and we in common with other nations are improving our views and our technique in the general administration of these problems, but we are not departing, I trust, from a rule which is salutary and sound, and which is fundamental to the peaceful and orderly development of our resources and the revival and improvement of our economic conditions.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in rising to close this debate I feel moved to make one observation. I am the more persuaded that the fundamental principles underlying this resolution are sound by reason of the apparently deliberate attempt by those who have spoken against the resolution to distort it. I believe before I get through I shall be able to show that those who have opposed this resolution have consistently distorted it. As one simple illustration, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has just been talking of "uncontrolled inflation." There has not been one member of this house or, so far as I know, anybody in this dominion who has advocated for one single minute uncontrolled inflation. I said the other night time and again that we do not advocate inflation at all. It is easy enough to laugh at matters that we know little about. The word inflation has two meanings: first, a rise in price of goods or a fall in the purchasing power of the dollar or other monetary unit; second—the meaning which the banking fraternity are endeavouring to impress upon the people, and which they have even succeeded in bringing into the dictionaries—that inflation means any kind of money whatsoever which the bankers do not themselves make. No one, I repeat, is advocating uncontrolled inflation, nor is anyone from this side of the house advocating inflation at all. I have enjoyed this discussion tremendously, but it is altogether too bad that the intelligent minds of this house could not have concentrated their attention on realities instead of on a great many foolish distortions.

Let me proceed now to take up some of them. In my remarks to-night I think I shall hardly do more than simply point out some of the silly things that have been said. In the first place the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman), who is rapidly gaining in this house a reputation for extravagant and radical remarks, made several statements the other night. Some of them I shall not deal with at all because they are beneath contempt. But take that remark when he said, "What will be purchasing power in that island? It will be production." Well, everyone in his senses agrees that production is purchasing power; everyone knows that. I pointed that out time and again. But the trouble is, if I raise a steer out on the Alberta range, and a man down in Toronto or some other eastern city manufactures shoes, while the steer should be purchasing power for the shoes, and the shoes purchasing power for the steer, nevertheless under the highly complex organization of society to-day, unless there is money between the two, there will never be any means whereby the steer can be purchasing power for the shoes. It is precisely as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hayhurst) pointed out the other night. He told the story of an island which had languished because it could not get shark's teeth. Did that island languish because there was not plenty of production on that island? Of course not. It was because there was no medium of exchange on the island. I shall deal with that further as I go along.

Let me say to the hon. member for Huron North, if production is purchasing power, why, then, cannot production be used as purchasing power—the coal, for example, of which we have an unlimited quantity in Alberta, and our wheat, our meat, wool, butter and all the other commodities that we produce? Why cannot we use these as purchasing power? Simply because we have at the present time no means whereby we can equitably market these goods without a medium of exchange which we call money. We should be able to buy shoes with this production, this purchasing power, but we cannot do so, and the reason is that our monetary system is not functioning as it should.

Here is another point. The hon. member for Huron North asks: "Why cannot you buy a Royalite well?" Why cannot the government buy a Royalite well when the Bank of England, simply by writing an order on itself, can buy gold and get the gold for nothing? Some people will laugh at that statement, but it is strictly true. For if the Bank of England writes a cheque upon itself for gold, and the man who presents that cheque gets Bank of England bills which cost the Bank of England nothing to print, where has the Bank of England paid anything for the gold? This idea has been gone over time and again, but I shall go over it a little more: This is a statement of the assistant under secretary of the British treasury:

> I agree with Major Douglas that banks create money and that trade depression arises from faults of the banking system in discharge of that vital function.

The Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer and chairman of the Midland bank, said:

> The amount of money in existence varies only with the action of the banks in increasing or diminishing deposits. They who control the credit of the nation, direct the policy of governments, and hold in the hollow of their hands the destiny of the people.

That should be clear enough. Why all the sidestepping? Why the silly distorting in such a childish manner? The issue is straightforward. Either that man knows what he is talking about, or he does not. If he does, then it is time we sat up and paid close attention to it. If he does not, then it is time we proved it. Major Douglas, in his Monopoly of Credit, has made this statement at page 15:

> It may be noted in passing, that this is the same thing as saying that a bank acquires securities for nothing, in the same way that a central bank, such as the Bank of England, may be said to acquire gold for nothing. In each case, of course, the institution concerned writes a draft upon itself for the sum involved, and the general public honours the draft by being willing to provide goods and services in exchange for it.

Those words are straightforward and clear and the meaning is beyond question.

Again, the hon. member for Huron North sneered about the prosperity certificates which Alberta attempted to use. I should like to know why hon. members have dragged Alberta into this debate, which is a purely dominion one.

An hon. MEMBER: The same theory.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We have not mentioned Alberta for one minute, nor have we mentioned Aberhart.

Mr. FRASER: You do not want to.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Of course we do not want to, until the proposal has been tried out. If some of the members would have sense enough to open their minds and pay attention to some of these matters we should get somewhere.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FRASER: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Surely.

Mr. FRASER: Will he kindly explain to the house why he applies the word "silly" to all statements or remarks coming from somebody else, in which he does not believe, assuming that everybody else in the house has no sense and that he has a monopoly?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I cannot remember any time having said that everything I did not agree with was silly. The hon. member for Huron North made this remark, "Give us the way. We want to know how to do it." Suppose I showed him that an automobile would work, that the automobile was a reality, that the fact was testified to by a hundred pepole; the hon. member, I suppose, would be unwilling to take the automobile unless I could show him exactly how to make it. An hon. member has asked me why I use the word "silly." If that is not evidence enough, perhaps he will get some more as we go on. Certain it is that the men who have worked this proposal out have devised currency commissions and a great number of mechanisms as a result of which it can be put into effect. The trouble is that the majority of these people who are having so much to say about it have never in their lives read a book on economics, and consequently know nothing about it. Another statement made by the hon. member for Huron North is, "You cannot increase the purchasing power of one group without taking it away from some other." When money was issued by the dominion government and was given out to certain people, did it take anything away from anybody? Of course it did not. A little thought will show that that is egregiously silly. The hon. member will soon find out why the word "silly" was used.

Of course, production is the basis of money, and where goods and services are, money ought to be, because money merely represents goods and services. The hon. member blames Alberta because of the effort she is making to establish a system which properly should be created by a sovereign country. We out in Alberta fully recognized that we should be facing grave difficulties if we undertook to put social credit into effect in that province, for the simple reason that we had not the power to legislate in regard to legal tender. I say we knew that. But we knew also, from the rate at which intelligence and understanding of this matter were developing over the dominion, that Canada would probably go down to complete ruin before anything was ever done, unless we started to do it. It is an interesting fact that the hon. member for Huron North was busying himself most industriously all through the Alberta campaign writing endless articles to show that it could not be done. Since Mr. Aberhart has been mentioned, I may say that he said, "It cannot be done inside eighteen months." He has been in office only sixteen months, and the hon. member is now trying to force Mr. Aberhart to go a little faster, notwithstanding the fact that in that time we have had two terrible crop failures, the worst failures in the history of the land. All that social credit is is a proposal for distributing goods you already have. We know perfectly well that when you are not producing the goods you cannot distribute them. But the situation we found ourselves faced with was that we could produce goods in limitless abundance but we could not distribute them, and we are getting no assistance. And that sounds perfectly right, nothing at all to laugh about.

In addition, throughout our efforts we have had an apparently secret but determined influence exerted against us, in connection with the use of the prosperity certificates, and in preparations to block the use of Alberta credit. Even with regard to the signing of the covenants and getting ready for the voluntary introduction of social credit we have had the same opposition to contend with. Talk about giving a country the right to govern itself! Talk about there being no financial influence over countries and governments! It is terrible.

I turn now to deal with one or two matters that came up the other day in debate. The hon. member for York South and I had, quite good-naturedly, a little disagreement, which I think I had better spend a minute or two to clear up. As appears in Hansard, at page 131, column 1, a little passage occurred between the two of us. I am afraid that unless we clear this matter up there will be doubt in the minds of those who read it later on as to which of us was right or whether we were both wrong.

An hon. MEMBER: You are always right.

Mr. BLACKMORE: You said it. You are learning fast. I read from Hansard:

Mr. Lawson: But I have read it, and I am trying to get my hon. friend to explain to my satisfaction that there is no intrinsic value behind this credit which he is going to set up.

Referring to the orders in the island backed by the block of gold.

Mr. Blackmore: Very good, but you will find that the backing of that money was the goods and services, the producing and consuming power of that island—

In the light of that definite and clear pronouncement, can one term the kind of opposition that the hon. member for Huron North made to my speech as anything but silly?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Going on—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have heard the hon. member once or twice use that word. In my opinion it is not proper; it is not parliamentary.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will not use it any further; I have several others just as good. To continue the quotation:

. . . the producing and consuming power of that island, the exchanges, as Sir Norman Angell says. It will take a good deal of laughing to explain that away.

Mr. Dunning: Sir Norman Angell did not say that.

I did not at that moment wish to contradict the Minister of Finance, but I did think it would probably be a good thing for this house to have that point cleared up, and therefore I have brought into the chamber on this occasion the pamphlet from which we were quoting, Your Money—Plain Facts in Plain Words by Sir Norman Angell. I believe it would be in the interests of certain hon. members to hear certain passages that appear in that book. I would quote the passage at the top of page 20 which closes the story of the sailor who issued the orders. These are the author's words:

Everybody forgets about it—

That is gold.

Everybody forgets about it since the paper is accepted without question. The gold might have been a bit of gilded lead for all the islanders knew. But it did the trick, and the sailor was wise enough not to "inflate" his currency.

That deals with the first part of it. Now may I turn to page 13 at the bottom of column 2. I fancy that the orthodox financial people in this house will be astonished to learn their great hero, Sir Norman Angell has this to say on the subject:

Now, it would make no difference to the value of Law's money that it should be "backed" by the resources of the Mississippi valley, or to the French revolutionary money that it should be a mortgage upon the national possessions—

Mark the words:

—if the money were issued in too great a quantity in relation to the exchange of goods to be effected. Both of the moneys just mentioned became utterly worthless—

These are two of the moneys to which the Minister of Finance referred in such eloquent indignation. Notice what Sir Norman Angell says about them:

Both of the moneys just mentioned became utterly worthless, although all the resources of France and the French empire did "stand back of" them.

If the quantity had been limited it would not have mattered in the least that nothing stood behind them in the material sense.

This must be hard on the hon. gentlemen who contend that there must be a backing.

So long as they were legal currency, and their quantity was limited, their value would have been maintained.

You have noticed, Mr. Speaker, how consistently hon. members who oppose this resolution have tried to bring in uncontrolled inflation. We propose nothing of the kind. Let me continue the quotation:

What wrecked them was their excessive quantity. If the effect of putting material wealth "behind" money is to limit the quantity, to cause it to bear some quantitative relation to goods, the device, of course, serves the purpose of limitation. But it is the limitation of quantity which constitutes the guarantee of its value. Ricardo saw this quite clearly when he wrote:

"There is no point more important in issuing paper money than to be fully impressed with the effects that follow from the principle of limitation of quantity. It is not necessary that paper should be payable in specie to secure its value; it is only necessary that its quantity should be regulated."

Now this truth, that the value of money depends in the last analysis, not upon the material of which it is made, or upon being "backed" by this or that commodity, but upon its quantity, opens up great possibilities for man.

What we are contending now is that this country should begin to use the possibilities which are open to us.

He is not necessarily in this vital question of money the slave of a circumstance outside his control like the discovery or the failure to make adequate discovery of gold. He can control his money, make it his servant instead of his master, if he can learn the trick, the technique.

There are several other interesting points which I could touch upon, but I suggest that hon. members read the account given in this book of what was done on another island the island of Uap of the Carolines. An interesting story is told showing that the islanders used large stones as money.

I turn now to the comments of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), who referred to the cause of inflation. I contended time and again, in the quotations I gave the other night, that when you issue money you must be sure that you have plenty of goods; but when you have plenty of goods you can have plenty of money. That point was entirely ignored by the Minister of Labour. I will ask him this question: Would you give $200,000,000 as bonuses to widows if you had it given to you as a free gift from some great financier like Ford? I think anyone would answer, yes, surely. Well, if you can give $200,000,000 as bonuses to widows would it cause inflation? No, of course not, because we know that there are enough goods and services in the dominion to absorb $200,000,000. Would you consider tourist traffic money sound? Yes, surely. Would you consider public works money sound? Yes, it is sound. The Minister of Labour said it was sound; he saw no way in which it would serve as a real solution, though nevertheless it was sound. Therefore I say it would not cause inflation.

Mr. Aberhart and the question of dividends have been dragged into this discussion. I do not see the reason for all this restless haste on the part of some hon. members. If they will wait long enough we will bring in dividends. They do not need to run ahead of us, for I fancy that we are now going as fast as they can keep up with us. They can leave the matter entirely to us.

Not more than two or three years ago men were talking about over-production; we had more goods then than we knew what to do with. To-day in Alberta you can go into the yards of many manufacturers and find stacks of goods that will never be sold. Why should there not be money to move these goods? We already have production; why not have the money that represents that production?

I am going to read a word or two more about inflation. That seems to be the thing people are determined to talk about, and so I shall quote a passage which I read yesterday and which apparently has not been noticed. It appears in World Finance Since 1914, by Paul Einzig, published in 1935.

> The more advanced definitions of inflation duly allow for any change in the volume of real wealth. Thus if the volume of currency and credit increases, and the production of real wealth increases in the same proportion, then there is no reason why the expansion of currency and credit should produce an inflationary effect, even if it affects the spending power of the community. It is only if the increase of currency and credit is in excess of the additional production of real wealth that it is defined as being of inflationary character.

The whole contention of the social credit advocates is that we are now living in an age of abundance, and what we have not at present we can produce; consequently the danger of inflation which might have prevailed in the past is now in large measure removed because of our tremendous ability to produce goods.

This is another passage which appeared in the Midland Bank Review for July and August, 1935, at page 3:

> In the circumstances now existing there need be no fear that an expansion of note circulation, even if it demands an increase in the fiduciary issue, is inflationary. In this country inflation, if it comes at all, comes not through the note issue, but through bank deposits which are the governing portion of the money supply.

Let me break in here, Mr. Speaker, to point this out: This is the danger which we face. It is inflation from bank deposits. We lift our hands in horror in this house at the thought of producing a hundred million dollars of national money, but we would not hesitate at all to allow the banks, for example, to produce four hundred million dollars of bank money. That could not cause inflation at all. You see how inconsistent this kind of thinking is. Now I continue quoting:

> Nor can expansion of the note issue be taken even as secondary evidence of inflation unless commodity prices show a strong upward movement, gathering momentum and threatening to require strong measures for its arrest. So long as a pound note buys a steady amount of goods and services there can be no inflation even though a larger population and a higher standard of living call for more and more numerous pound notes.

I believe that ought to be sufficient for all those who read with care. It is quite clear.

There are certain questions about which I believe we should talk. It is noteworthy that where money supply falls off production falls off. This has been discovered to a surprising degree in the United States, and they are quite astonished at it. They lost a tremendous amount of their national production because a great deal of their money was withdrawn. The question which naturally arises in the minds of all those thinking about this matter is why, by some means or another, the money supply could not have been kept up and thus the production kept up and used to supply the needs of the people suffering in poverty. That is the whole contention, and the chief point to be considered. In Canada to-day we have unemployment and suffering, but not because we cannot produce all the things we need. We can produce all the beef, flour, milk and cream, eggs, butter and coal that we require. I do not know how many different commodities there are; there must be scores and scores of them. We can produce them in abundance, more than we can possibly use; yet we allow people right in the presence of these goods to suffer. Only money can distribute these goods, and the problem is to get that money into circulation. The banks cannot circulate it for the simple reason that bankers cannot let out money except as loans. That is where the problem lies.

Now I come to the remarks of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). From the way this hon. gentleman spoke it appeared to me that there must be a terrible fear that someone will consume something he has not produced. Well, no one seems to be concerned about the amount consumed by those men who receive huge pensions. No one is worrying at all about that. If we had a multimillionaire in Canada whose property passed on to his children, no one would ever worry because they consumed what they had never produced. But some poor person who is out of employment, and who is unable to get a job no matter where he goes, must not use what he does not produce. Does that sound wonderfully intelligent?

There is another very important point, the concentration of money, which the hon. member also mentioned. We are aware of the concentration of money. What advantage would it be to a community if there were a million dollars in that community and all that money was in the hands of ten people, while there were thousands who needed the money? If they could not get the money out of the hands of those ten people what should they do, just stand there and starve to death? Why not have new money, as they had before these few men got the million dollars? There is the problem. How can you get the money away from the man in whose hands it is now concentrated? You have no right to confiscate that money or tax it all away. If you borrow it you must pay it back with interest, and go into debt, and then you have to keep their commandments both before and after you borrow it. What are you to do? That is the question. You are at their mercy. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar does not seem to have taken that into account at all.

There is another point that I have noticed particularly in connection with the members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation group. I have not said anything to them about it as yet, but these people appear to be tremendously worried for fear the social credit people will not be able to tell this house what they believe in. Consequently these gentlemen are bobbing up three or four times every month trying to tell this house what members of the social credit party believe in. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that social credit is completely capable of speaking for itself.

Then the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) made some statements which, I think, were probably rather ill considered. He has been extremely good natured and tolerant about this matter; he and I have had a little difference, but I feel very kindly towards hon. members opposite even though I did use the word "silly." But if my ears did not deceive me the Minister of Finance made the positive statement that social credit opposes life insurance. I cannot remember ever hearing that social credit opposed life insurance. Certainly no member in this house has said anything about that. Why make a remark of that kind to divert the attention of the people away from the real issue?

Then the Minister of Finance made the remark that our well-being depends upon our national income. The other night I quoted figures from good authorities in the United States, where men have investigated this question with great care, to show that the income of the country depends directly upon the amount of money in circulation in the country, and for every $3 of income, wages, salaries, dividends or anything else, there must be $1 in circulation. If the Minister of Finance and the government are so completely desirous of increasing the national income, it seems to be strongly suggested that they could do so by increasing the money in circulation, which apparently they are not at all disposed to do.

I maintain that national money gradually issued will not cause inflation or, in other words, a rise in prices. No evidence has been brought forward during the course of this debate to show that this result will follow. In this chamber no one has risen, in connection with any of the issues of money mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern, to say that this caused inflation, and no one can prove that it did. If anyone can do so I shall be a ready listener. If $50,000,000 or $35,000,000 were used with no dangerous results, who is to say that $35,000,000 a month for a number of months necessarily would bring about dangerous results?

In consideration of the matters I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I believe I am justified in saying once more that whereas it is legal for this country to issue national purchasing power; whereas there is no sufficient and conclusive evidence that the issue of national purchasing power would cause inflation, and whereas the need for new money is very grave in this country, for a great number of reasons, I do not hesitate to ask the members of this house to support this resolution. But before taking my seat there is one further point to which I should like to direct the attention of the house, another slight discrepancy in the remarks of the Minister of Finance. The hon. gentleman said that if this house adopted this resolution it would commit itself to the idea of inflation.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no; my hon. friend is misquoting me.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. DUNNING: I said that, in the light of the speeches which have been made in support of the resolution, the idea most certainly would go abroad that this house was favourable to inflation.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The resolution says specifically that this house should consider—

Mr. DUNNING: Consider?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Surely in a time like this, when conditions are changing so rapidly, hon. members of this house could with advantage take time to consider the question of issuing national currency.

Motion negatived, on division.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PACIFIC COAST STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES

Mr. REID:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and correspondence from January 1, 1936, to December 31, 1936, between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Department of Trade and Commerce, regarding the matter of subsidies to boats operating between the Pacific coast ports of British Columbia and the orient.

WAINWRIGHT BUFFALO PARK—DISMISSAL OF H. B. KNOX

Mr. FAIR:

For a copy of all correspondence, since April, 1936, in connection with the dismissal of H. B. Knox from the Wainwright buffalo park, in June, 1936.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

WAINWRIGHT BUFFALO PARK—DISMISSAL OF H. B. WALKER

Mr. FAIR:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents, since August, 1936, in connection with the dismissal of H. B. Walker, farm supervisor at Wainwright buffalo park.

WAINWRIGHT BUFFALO PARK—GARIEPY INQUIRY

Mr. FAIR:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence and other documents since August, 1936, in connection with the inquiry held by Mr. Gariepy at the Wainwright buffalo park, in October, 1936.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT—ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle):

For a copy of all orders in council passed pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act since October 23, 1935.

PURCHASING POWER

PROPOSAL FOR THE ADOPTION OF A NATION-WIDE SCHEME FOR FINANCING CONSUMPTION

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the time has arrived in Canada for the adoption of a definite, scientific, nation-wide scheme for financing consumption.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am moving this resolution in recognition of the fact that today we are living in a country in which in practically every sphere of industry our powers of production are greater than our powers of consumption, and in recognition of the fact that there can be no justification whatsoever for industrial stagnation and unemployment in the midst of actual demand for goods. I believe the reason lies in the fact that we are operating under a system which was evolved in a time of scarcity, one which has not been able to adapt itself to an era of potential plenty.

The major problem, as I see it, is how in a practical manner, while giving full range to individual freedom and initiative, to distribute the abundance of wealth that science has made available. I realize that perhaps many hon. members may deplore a further discussion of economics. I remember that at the last session the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) said we should stop talking economics and get down to business. I think he stated, as a matter of fact, that what we wanted was economy. We must realize, however, that acts of economy may very easily prove to be false economy, unless there is a thorough understanding of the situation.

For example, what would be the result upon the economic structure of Canada if all relief were abolished to-morrow? Entirely apart from the terrible and distressing conditions which would result to many of our people, what would be the effect upon industry? What would be the effect upon the small merchant, and especially those merchants in the distressed areas who are dependent upon the receipt of relief payments to carry on their business? What would be the effect upon employment? I am satisfied the result might put us right back into the depths of the depression. To-day I believe we are too prone to consider the cost of relief, and we do not give full consideration to the great benefits accruing to our people through the injection of this purchasing power into our system.

Coming back to the matter of getting down to business let me ask this question: What is our problem to-day? Can any person say it is just a matter of getting down to business? Let us draw a brief picture of Canada as we see it to-day. On one side of the picture we have the great productive plants working at only a small percentage of their capacity, great natural resources scarcely touched, tremendous reserves of energy and a vast surplus of unused labour. On the other side of the picture we have a vast multitude of people on the verge of starvation, the majority of them having to accept a standard of living considerably below that which they would ordinarily accept. If it is just a simple business proposition, why do we not put that unused labour to work in the factories or industries which are operating only part time, using our natural resources and our reserves of energy to produce the goods that our people are so sorely in need of? I say this: If it is just a business proposition, why do we not do as I have suggested?

The answer is that the problem is one of economics, or as Professor Soddy has described it, the riddle of the sphinx. A good example of the peculiarities of the problem may be found in a speech by the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna to the American Bankers' Association on October 5, 1922, which reads as follows:

> For over two centuries British capital, that is credit, had been lent to other countries. Year by year England produced more than she either consumed herself or could exchange for the products of other nations, and she could not obtain a market for the surplus unless she gave the purchaser a long credit. Foreign loans and foreign issues were taken up in England, and the proceeds were spent in paying for the surplus production. British factories and workshops were kept in good employment, but it was a condition of their prosperity that a part of their output should be disposed of in this way.

It is significant that, according to Mr. McKenna, England's prosperity was dependent, not upon the amount of wealth she could make available to her people, or upon the amount of wealth she could exchange for the wealth of other nations, but upon her shipping out of the country more wealth than she received in return. And the reason is obvious. It is in order that the salaries, wages and dividends paid out in the production of that wealth might be available to make up the deficiency of purchasing power which existed as between the total prices of goods available for distribution within the country, and the amount of purchasing power distributed in their production.

I would say that undoubtedly the greatest condemnation of the present system lies in the fact that it is considered good business to ship out of the country more wealth than is brought in, even though there are people within the country who are sorely in need of that wealth. While on the question of foreign trade perhaps it would be to our advantage to recall the words of Napoleon who said:

> Agriculture is the soul, the foundation of the kingdom. Industry ministers to the comfort and happiness of the population. Foreign trade is the superabundance, it allows of the due exchange of the surplus of agriculture and industry. Foreign trade, which in its results is infinitely inferior to agriculture, was an object of secondary importance in my mind. Foreign trade ought to be the servant of agriculture and home industry. These last ought never to be subordinate to foreign trade.

I believe that the majority of hon. members will agree with the soundness of that statement. And yet to-day it is not so much a question of exchanging our superabundance for that of other nations, as it is of our attempting to ship more of that superabundance out of the country than we bring back in. Foreign trade can no longer be called the servant of trade and industry; it has become the master demanding from the nation a toll in wealth for which no wealth is given in return.

Agriculture and industry may be said to have two distinct functions—to produce the necessities of life and to give us the means to purchase the same. In addition to that, a profit must be shown, which means that labour costs must be reduced to a minimum in order to meet keen competition. The point is, is it possible to meet these three requirements? In order to keep down expenses, labour costs must be reduced to the minimum and wherever possible labour saving devices installed, which means that the purchasing power of the people is less able to buy the products of industry.

Undoubtedly we have the ability to produce an abundance of wealth, but there is insufficient purchasing power to absorb same. I think it is greatly to be regretted that in many quarters an attempt is being made to retard progress by going back to out of date methods. Mr. Butler, the director of the International Labour Office, points out in the June Labour Gazette that in many European countries legal restrictions have been placed upon mechanical developments. He points out that similar action has been taken in the United States of America under the various codes. He comments upon this action as follows:

> Such measures may have some temporary result, but technological unemployment cannot be combated by preserving antiquated methods by artificial means. The real problem is to ensure that the economies in wages effected by mechanical improvements do not reduce the volume of available consuming power.

For generations past we have been endeavouring, by the use of scientific inventions, to increase the productivity of man until to-day we have become so successful that we are able to produce an abundance of wealth. Are we going to be so lacking in intelligence as actually to reduce the amount of that wealth by doing away with labour saving devices and going back to the use of manual labour? Is that as far as the intelligence of man can go to-day? According to Mr. Butler, that is what is being done in Europe to a great extent. Canada has followed the same practice to a limited degree. We find in many of the labour camps that men are doing with shovels and wheelbarrows work which could be done far more quickly by modern excavators and steam shovels.

Our main argument rests upon the fact that owing to certain practices inherent within the system, industry fails to provide sufficient purchasing power to buy back its own production. I shall deal with a few of the main faults in the system as we see them. First, the present system is a debt creating one. Practically all new money emanates from our banks in the form of debt. This is an interest bearing debt and our bankers do not issue the necessary money with which to pay that interest. Therefore, the debts of the world to the banking system are increasing steadily year by year. Professor Rautenstrauch of Columbia university has pointed out that the debts of the world to the banks increased by 47 per cent in the seventeenth century, by 466 per cent in the eighteenth century, and by 12,000 per cent in the nineteenth century. In the past, in order to pay off any part of these debts it has been necessary either to incur new debts or to withdraw money from circulation, thus reducing the standard of living of the people.

For example, in the period 1929 to 1933 over $900,000,000 was drawn from circulation, resulting in a tremendous falling off in the standard of living of the people of this country. No matter from what angle we approach this subject we are bound to come to the conclusion that so long as we continue to operate under this system we are bound to have one of two things, either a steadily increasing debt or a steadily decreasing purchasing power. Of course there is a very definite limit to which the purchasing power of a country can be decreased, and then our debts are bound to increase at an even greater rate. I was discussing this matter recently with one of Canada's prominent bankers and he took exception to that statement. He said it was not necessary to incur new debts in order to meet all our maturing obligations; that there was plenty of money in existence and that we could use a certain amount of this in liquidating our debts. I asked him what would be the result on industry if money were taken from circulation and he replied that industry could borrow from the banks the necessary moneys with which to finance its production. That is just what I have pointed out, that such action is bound to be followed by an increase in debt.

The second point to which I wish to direct attention is the tremendous deficiency in purchasing power brought about by the centralization of industry. Before the machine era the profits of the individual craftsman were small, but as such they were available as purchasing power. But there has been a progressive displacing of man power by the machine, and the wages which used to go to the man now go to the owners of the machine. Owing to the centralization of industry, the profits of the machine owners have become so great that even though they explore every avenue of luxury they cannot spend their entire income. Therefore, income to that extent is not available as purchasing power. So long as we have such distressing conditions as we have to-day throughout the country, the government should take definite steps to tax these redundant credits back into circulation. I know it may be suggested that we have already a very high income tax; nevertheless until the government is prepared to issue the necessary purchasing power to balance deficiency caused by these redundant credits, the least the government can do is to tax them back into circulation. I do not for one moment suggest that such action by itself will relieve the deficiency in purchasing power. It certainly will not, but it will at least relieve to a certain extent the distress so prevalent to-day throughout Canada. An orthodox viewpoint is very often expressed similar to that of Mr. J. A. Hobson in his book entitled Rationalization and Unemployment. I should like to quote from page 17 as follows:

> As the processes of converting raw materials into finished goods whether for human consumption or for utilization in production, are carried on in a business world, money is concurrently distributed to the persons who apply their labour, ability, land, capital in the different productive processes or as profit. These payments proceed pari passu with the productive processes, and, as wages, interest, salaries, rents or profits, constitute the cost or expenses of production, on the one hand, and the "income" of the recipients on the other. If, as I urge, it is convenient to include profit among these expenses, the whole set of payments amounts to selling price.
> So regarding it, we may say this selling price has been paid away in the various expenses of production. Those who have received these payments in their money incomes possess the wherewithal to buy all the products, alike the consumable part of it and the capital goods that constitute the other part.

This argument I quite realize sounds plausible, but it altogether ignores certain fundamental truths which completely upset the conclusions arrived at by Mr. Hobson and his colleagues. Among other things it ignores the question of time, savings, and the reinvestment of savings, and as this contention has been attacked in the house in the past I should like to deal with it shortly because our whole philosophy is based to a very large degree on the understanding that industry, owing to certain practices which are inherent in the system, fails to make available sufficient purchasing power to buy back its own production.

Take the question of time. Mr. Hobson states that payments from industry equal total of prices providing you include profits among expenses. If that is the case, how can we possibly pay off debts incurred in the past to the banking system, for instance, war debts. The goods that represent these debts have long since been consumed or destroyed. The salaries and wages paid out in the production of these goods have in the majority of cases been spent and gone back to the banking system, but the debts representing these war materials are still with us and must be met out of current production. If payments by industry to-day are used to pay off these debts then the total payments from industry will not be available to meet total prices, and therefore goods to that extent will be left unsold.

Put it in another way. In order that these debts may be liquidated it will be necessary to include in the price of goods certain debt charges, made either directly or indirectly by the government through taxation. But when these debt charges are included in the price of the goods no purchasing power is distributed to balance these debt charges. Therefore, when the total amount of purchasing power distributed has been spent upon these goods, goods to that extent will be left unsold.

Some people imagine that the repayment of debts to the bank will recreate purchasing power, but as Mr. Reginald McKenna has said, every repayment of a loan cancels and destroys a deposit. Therefore it destroys purchasing power to that amount. Accordingly it is quite evident that the practice of including debt charges in the price of goods completely upsets the calculations arrived at by Mr. Hobson and his orthodox colleagues. So far as savings are concerned, the deficiency of purchasing power caused by them is so evident that I deal with it only very briefly. If, as Mr. Hobson states, the total payments equal total prices, then, when any portion of these payments is saved, goods to that extent will be left unsold. On the other hand, if savings of the past are being spent at the same rate as savings of to-day, then the two will balance each other. Nevertheless it is generally conceded that the practice of saving to-day is going ahead at an accelerated rate, and therefore a deficiency of purchasing power is caused to that degree.

The question of the reinvestment of savings, however, comes under an entirely different category. The reinvestment of savings to-day causes a permanent deficiency of purchasing power, equal to the amount of the reinvestment where it is used as working capital. For instance, taking all industries as one to make it easier to follow, suppose a total of $12,000 paid out for salaries and wages in industry was saved and then was reinvested in a shirt factory, used as working capital, paid out in salaries and wages, producing $12,000 worth of shirts, and then suppose these salaries and wages were immediately afterwards reinvested in a boot factory, paid out again in salaries and wages, which then, instead of being used to purchase the boots, were reinvested in a hat factory producing $12,000 worth of hats. You have reinvested this

$12,000 three times and caused a permanent deficiency of purchasing power equal to $36,000, because you have left behind unsold $12,000 worth of boots, $12,000 worth of shirts and $12,000 worth of goods produced in the first cycle. In support of my argument I should like to quote from a book by Professor Soddy, entitled, Wealth, Virtual Wealth and Debt. At page 251 he says:

> In general terms, the only possible way to increase the stocks of wealth in the system, whether precedent to producing a larger output or to accumulate capital in the first instance, is to by-pass money past the consumers' mart, so that it passes through the productive system twice in its circulation instead of once. This puts into the system twice the value of wealth which it takes out. But it creates debts to the individuals who give up their purchasing power, and, however we struggle with the problem, we have to arrive at the conclusion that these debts can never really be repaid.
> It is undeniable postulate that all the wealth put into the system, reckoned in terms of the costs of production, not only does not but cannot come out.

It has been stated that we are opposed to the idea of savings and the reinvestment of savings. We are not, however, opposed to these practices. We merely wish to point out the fact that the practice of saving and reinvestment of savings is bound to cause a deficiency of purchasing power. This resolution, therefore, is aimed to relieve industry of the sole responsibility of creating purchasing power. Industry, as I have already pointed out, fails to distribute sufficient purchasing power to buy back its own production. Therefore we propose that the government shall issue additional purchasing power outside the industrial system in order to balance this deficiency, and as a first step we would urge the necessity for a thorough survey of the productive capacity of Canada. It might be carried out along similar lines to that of the National Survey of Potential Productive Capacity carried out in the United States of America and financed by the federal government there.

I should like to quote from a foreword to the report of the Director of the American Survey by Mr. Stuart Chase:

> Now, with the publication of Mr. Loeb's book, we have for the first time in our economic history a concrete answer to the question. After almost a year of research by sixty technicians, financed by the federal government, the National Survey of Potential Productive Capacity has released its findings. Official publication will follow in due course. Preliminary thereto, Mr. Loeb, the director of the survey, here describes the results and gives his personal interpretation of what the figures mean. The interpretation you may accept or reject as you choose. The figures you cannot reject without subjecting the survey itself to intensive, critical analysis. As > the policy throughout has been to take the more conservative choice where choice was possible, I think you will have some difficulty in minimizing the conclusions reached. But as a taxpayer you helped to finance this study, and you have the right to whip out your slide rule and find errors if you can. I have watched it from its inception, and it looks like a reliable, conservative piece of work to me.

> The results are briefly stated. If the existing plant and man-power in the United States were fully employed in the production of honest goods and services for the consumer, the total output, valued in 1929 dollars, would be not less than $135,000,000,000, or an average per family of approximately $4,400. This estimate does not presuppose any considerable change in the physical plant, the introduction of new processes, or the modernization of old factories.

The wealth of Canada is probably just as great as that of the United States, and there is every reason to believe that in a properly balanced economy a similar standard of living might be made available to the people of Canada. We do not wish to be dogmatic in any way as to how this might be accomplished. We are satisfied however, that full cognizance will have to be taken of the facts to which I have referred. We believe that the government, once having made a survey of the productive capacity of this country, should take immediate steps to stimulate the purchasing power of the people up to the full capacity of industry to satisfy that demand, and then, as the ability of the country to produce more goods increases, to see that the ability of the people to obtain these goods should be increased to a like degree. So long as the effective purchasing power of the people is raised only up to the capacity of industry to satisfy that demand there can be no real talk of inflation.

We believe that the government should take immediate steps to control prices, to set fair wages, that is, to establish a fair relationship between prices and wages as between one industry and another, and to guarantee a minimum price based upon the cost of production for the primary producers. A deficiency of purchasing power may undoubtedly be made up in many ways, but the main essential is to guarantee a minimum standard of living to the people based upon the ability of the country to satisfy that demand. This is where we may differ, perhaps, from our socialist friends on the right. We believe that a survey will show that this dominion can produce a sufficiency of goods to give everybody a decent standard of living, without having to reduce the standard of living of any one. However, should this survey show that we have not that ability, I would immediately agree that it is only right and just that the standards of living of the rich people should be reduced in order to make it possible for the standards of living of the poor people to be increased. But when we recall the conditions of 1928 and when we remember the tremendous strides made by science since then, we have every reason to believe that we have the ability to raise the standards of living of the people of this country without having to reduce the standard of living of any one.

As a first step we would urge that action be taken to reduce the age for old age pensions, as was suggested in the last session by, I think, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) from seventy down to sixty, and probably in time it might be reduced from sixty down to fifty-five, or fifty, guaranteeing a pension of probably $50 per month. Also we should guarantee pensions to all those people who, whether because of blindness or any other form of disability, are unable to care for themselves. Then, in view of the fact that we are living in a new country in which there is a tremendous amount of work to be done, we should urge that national projects be carried out, financed by the national credit and utilizing the minimum amount of labour, that is to say, utilizing labour-saving devices wherever possible. We would advocate projects such as slum clearance with the objective of a decent house for every one; better roads, bridges, railroad crossings; reforestation, and various other useful and necessary projects. Of course we realize that there is a definite limit to the extent to which these projects can be carried out, and we propose only that they be proceeded with to the point where the purchasing power of the people will be stimulated to the full capacity of industry to satisfy it. So long as that is done there can be no real danger of inflation. Or to put it in other words, the volume of capital goods production should be sufficiently great that the salaries, wages and dividends paid out in that production are equal to the deficiency of purchasing power as between the total prices of consumption goods and the amount of effective purchasing power distributed in their production.

In closing, I would urge that first of all a thorough survey of Canada's productive capacity be made, and then a definite program be instituted to increase the effective demand of the people up to this capacity, or to a point where economic security may be gained for all, whichever comes first.

Looking to the future, as science and technological improvements increase the productivity of man, I believe that it will be possible to steadily reduce the hours of labour and supplement the incomes of the workers by a national dividend, so as once and for all to remove that ever-haunting fear of starvation and poverty from the minds of the people.

Motion (Mr. Quelch) negatived.

REDISTRIBUTION

MOTION FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY MORE EQUITABLE READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

Mr. H. E. BRUNELLE (Champlain) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient that the Representation Act, 1933, should be amended in such manner as to bring about a more equitable readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons and to effect thereby a more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts, and that a special committee be appointed to study this matter.

He said: In moving this resolution, which is seconded by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Mallette), I wish to be as brief as possible. It is also my hope to be as composed as possible when referring to the last Representation Act of 1933, and when giving some instances of the flagrant injustices committed by the late government in making that redistribution.

Every one will admit that in framing a representation act the party in power, whichever it may be, will be naturally inclined to abstain from favouring the opposite party and to adopt the course most favourable to its cause. But to be normally interested and anxious to help a party is one thing, and to be so unreasonably ambitious as to adopt a system utterly subversive of the spirit of representative institutions is quite another.

When one reads the past debates of this house, one is struck by the fact that the Conservative party is a strong believer in the motto that God helps those who help themselves. That belief became particularly apparent when the last redistribution was made. It became manifest in 1882 when a scandalous representation act was passed and it also became evident in 1892 when another representation act was put through, an act which, according to authentic reports, was simply iniquitous. Though the 1933 act was as bad as those just mentioned, I shall be charitable and simply say that it was most unfair. There was then adopted a system which every man on either side of the house should condemn, because it is apt to help or even to elect to this house any party against the will of the majority of the people. Having given some study to what was done in 1933 when the last redistribution took place, I venture to say that whoever adopts or defends such a method for the sake of party advantage surrenders every semblance of political decency, because such a method aims at destroying popular democratic government and tends to replace it by autocracy.

One may differ with another as to fiscal policies or as to monetary policies, but I am afraid that the act of 1933 went, at least in Quebec, so far beyond the limits of the most elementary justice that it is hard, if not impossible, to find in it any trace of fair play. I do not want to be looked upon as one who fights his own case. The constituency of Champlain, which I represent, was not treated any worse or any better than the other constituencies in the province, and the fingers of the manipulators of the 1933 redistribution have left their ugly mark upon my constituency just as they have done upon other constituencies in the province.

It was a man named Gerry, an ex-governor of the state of Massachusetts, who gave his name to that sort of manipulation. In 1811 he framed his state or constituency or riding —I do not know which—in such a way as to take unfair political advantage of his opponents, thereby becoming famous among those whose names appear in the rogues' gallery. Would it be going too far if I were to say that in 1933 old Gerry had some fair imitators in this House of Commons? To prove that the redistribution of 1933 was unfair and was engendered with a view to party advantage to the late government, I shall quote in a few moments certain statements of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who at that time was Prime Minister.

I have before me a map of Quebec showing the sixty-five constituencies which lie therein. I have a good knowledge of French and a fair knowledge of English, and these two languages do not afford me any expression to qualify that sort of work. A chinese puzzle is the only thing to which it can be likened. Such a division of constituencies has no sound justification. We find gerrymander on such a scale that it is hard, if not impossible, to recognize many of the old constituencies. No attention was paid to existing limits. Parishes that had been together for years and years were divided or jumbled into different counties. Some constituencies were added to and others were subtracted from, and parishes, counties and districts were cut up for the manifest purpose of softening the beds which turned out to be the tombs of the Conservative members or Conservative candidates.

[Mr. Brunelle.]

Let me give the house some examples of the way in which the constituencies were framed. I hold up to view a picture showing the limits or boundaries of the constituency of Drummond-Arthabaska, and I show the house another one indicating the limits or boundaries of the constituency of Dorchester. Was I wrong when I said that whoever adopts or defends such a method for party advantage surrenders every semblance of political decency? I believe that if the inventor of this system, Gerry, saw this work, he would turn green with envy at the ingenuity of the members of the late government. The redistribution measure of 1933 was passed in spite of the most vehement protest of the opposition and, I might add, of the press and of the people. It is indeed an unpleasant duty to describe such an act of parliament but I must denounce it as arbitrary and unjust. I claim justice for the majority of the Canadian voters, nothing more and nothing less. It is true that the injustice did not profit the late government; it is true that the end did not justify the means. But the injustice remains; the weapon is still there, and for the sake of preserving our present voting system that weapon must disappear, so that the voice of the people at election time may be heard and that their will shall be unfettered by the ingenious and cunning devices of the late government.

As I have said, the Redistribution Act of 1933 passed amid an uproar of general protest; and the then Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), when he realized that there was so much opposition to it, said that the only way to pass it was to invoke the aid of the brute majority—a very edifying statement indeed. The act came up for approval at the end of the session. Some Conservative members who had been members of the committee had given the house the impression that the bill would not pass in 1933, but they proceeded with it and in doing so were quite in conformity with the tactics adopted in 1882 and again in 1892. Did the late government try to display any trace of sincerity and fair play in passing that act? The answer will be found in a remark made by the present right hon. leader of the opposition, who was then Prime Minister. In a debate on the imperial agreements the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), said to the right hon. gentleman:

> I challenge you to go to the country on the issue of those agreements.

This was what the then Prime Minister replied:

> Wait till we pass the Representation Act.

Was that not a warning; was that not a threat that the bill was intended to be used as a weapon against the Liberals at the forthcoming election? The Representation Act of 1933 was admittedly unjust and erroneous. Almost every act following a decennial census since confederation has been amended on the ground of error, and in order to avoid injustice. For instance, the 1914 act was amended in 1915, and the boundaries of the constituencies of Nipissing, London, Quebec East, Quebec West, Jacques-Cartier, Labelle, Hull, Wright, Portage la Prairie and Springfield were altered. This was done by a Conservative government. I claim that the 1933 act was practically all in error, and a great injustice. I do not ask for a new representation act; I know the British North America Act would not permit that to be done, but I do ask that certain wrongs be righted by amending the boundaries of certain counties. An injustice is always an error, and it is the duty of this government to correct all the errors of the late government, since we have been given a mandate by the people to do so.

In 1872 Sir John A. Macdonald laid down the principle that the first object of redistribution was to retain county boundaries. In 1933 in Quebec no attention was paid to that principle. At any rate the act of 1933 in general had practically no raison d'etre in Quebec. The number of our constituencies is set at sixty-five, and surely there was no real need for changing the boundaries of all our counties in 1933. I do not contend that the number of constituencies should be increased or decreased; I know that can be done only following a census, but I think there is authority by which parliament may alter the boundaries of constituencies. Clement on Canadian Constitution says that the electoral districts may be altered at any time, and that the total number of members may be increased by the parliament of Canada providing the proportional representation of the provinces prescribed by the British North America Act is not thereby disturbed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the present composition of our constituencies is such that it might shut out of public life some outstanding men whose services are very much needed by the country; it is such that with a minority of the votes the Conservative party might have a majority of the representatives of the people. God help our country then. In the third place, it is such that, in spite of the improvements which this government may bring about in our public affairs, so tragically bungled up by the late government, the wish of the electors to acknowledge such an improvement by their votes may not be accurately expressed during an election. Proud of our record, at the expiration of our term of office we want to meet our opponents in a fair fight. We do not want, and regardless of his party allegiance no one should want, the free vote of the majority of the electors, to be detrimentally affected in its expression by the present arbitrary and false boundaries of our constituencies.

Mr. VITAL MALLETTE (Jacques Cartier) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, at the last redistribution of constituencies considerable changes were made in the territory then comprised in the riding of Jacques Cartier. In my humble opinion, these changes were not all in the best interests of the constituency. However, I do not intend at present to enumerate all the errors committed to its prejudice in this redistribution.

These details I will give to the committee requested by the present resolution, if the house grants it to us.

I may be permitted, however, to mention the case of Lachine. As regards the county of Jacques Cartier, there is no doubt that a redistribution was necessary at the time, inasmuch as the city of Verdun alone had a population of 65,000, which certainly entitled it to a representative in this house. Verdun was therefore removed from that riding, as well as the sections of Montreal known as Côte St. Paul and Ville Emard, regarding which the change was also justified. But as regards the city of Lachine, which historically belongs to the county of Jacques Cartier, the committee acted in a different manner. Lachine has a total population of about 18,000. As a result of the redistribution, some 4,500 of its 9,500 voters were placed in the constituency of Jacques Cartier and about 5,000 in the Mount Royal constituency of the city of Montreal. The redistribution has placed most of Lachine's large industrial plants, such as the Dominion Bridge Company, Limited, the Steel Company of Canada, the Dominion Wire Works, in Mount Royal, while their employees, workers and managers reside in Jacques Cartier. These people therefore have two members at their service, when they should, like the rest of the country, be satisfied with one. During the last campaign this redistribution was referred to as a second "Massacre of Lachine." Some wags went so far as to call it a caesarian operation.

These redistributions were certainly attended by lack of care. Any hon. member who wishes to verify this fact needs but to consult the proceedings of the special committee on Franchise and Election Acts at its sitting of Thursday, March 5, 1936. On page 5 they will find, in paragraph (2), concerning Jacques Cartier and Mount Royal, that the Chief Electoral Officer had to be called to render a decision on the situation of the boundary line between Jacques Cartier and Mount Royal in the village of Côte St. Luc. I have been informed also that a section of the city of Lachine lying south of the Lachine canal had been completely omitted, but that the error had been rectified later.

It therefore gives me much satisfaction to see the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle) take up this matter, and I assure the house that he has my entire support. I hope the committee will be made up as impartially as possible, as we have important matters to submit to its consideration. In the constituency of Jacques Cartier, I repeat, errors have been committed which call for rectification, and it would be only right to submit these matters to this committee, if the house will grant it to us.

Mr. HARRY LEADER (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I have very little to say on this resolution, but I believe that if irregularities occurred during the last redistribution they should be corrected either this year or next year, and not on the eve of an election when our judgment is perhaps more or less warped. Speaking for the constituency of Portage la Prairie I believe I may state safely that an old fashioned gerrymander was perpetrated. A gouge was taken out of our southern boundary. They did not take a strip from one end to the other, but simply took a gouge out of the centre and placed it in the constituency of the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) who, I believe, appreciates it very much. I am not speaking only for myself when I say that the territory should be placed back in the constituency of Portage la Prairie to which it once belonged. I am not concerned about my own political welfare, because in western Canada I do not believe boundaries mean very much. If a man is entitled to return to parliament I believe the electors of western Canada will vote for him irrespective of his political affiliations.

The population of Portage la Prairie constituency is slightly over 25,000, while that of Macdonald is in the neighbourhood of 37,000. Selkirk constituency received part of Portage la Prairie constituency, and now they have a population of 52,000, or more than twice that of my constituency. This would appear to be a glaring irregularity and does not bring about proper representation. I believe that, if the matter were put to a plebiscite, ninety per cent of the electors who were taken out of Portage la Prairie would vote to be placed back in it. I speak particularly of that part which was placed in the constituency of Macdonald, because in that instance there was a division of a community, the interests of which were common. The community was divided, and for the welfare of the constituents, to say nothing of the member in parliament, I suggest that the community as a whole should be placed in the constituency of which it once formed a part. My opinion is that the matter should be placed before an impartial committee, the judgment of which should not be warped politically. It is my opinion that a body of fair-minded members of this chamber should sit in judgment and see that the boundaries are placed where they should be, keeping in mind the welfare of the constituents.

Mr. G. W. McDONALD (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words with reference to the constituency of Souris. I endorse everything that has been said by the mover of the resolution and by the other hon. members who have spoken. The constituency of Souris is small, and any change should have been by way of enlargement. Despite that fact, the constituency was made smaller by cutting off from the northeast corner, six townships which, on the basis of the 1930 election, gave a Liberal majority of 187 and on the basis of the 1935 election one of over 300. To the constituency was added four townships to the east, making it six miles longer and taking in a piece of territory dominated by the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. That was a generous addition, particularly when we remember that the sitting member of that time enjoyed a majority of nearly 500. He was taking away 187 votes, and giving us 24.

Part of the constituency of Souris was put into the constituency of Macdonald, which was Liberal. We thought the days of gerrymandering were over. Like the mover of the resolution, I cannot help thinking that any person whose sense of fair play was so slight could not be a fit or proper person to represent any riding. I protested strenuously at the time to the Liberal members from Manitoba, and was plainly told by them that nothing could be done about it. They said: "We had better accept it, because if we do not we will get a worse deal." Surely we are not going back to those days.

I am not a member of the privileges and elections committee, or of one dealing with the franchise, but I have been asked to speak on behalf of those people who have been in the constituency for over twenty-five years and are now disfranchised. They had never had the boundaries changed, nor had they sought any change. The change was made without their consent. As I am not a member of the committee I can say only that I hope the constituency of Souris will be brought to its attention, that our boundaries will be enlarged, and that we shall get back the piece we lost.

Mr. DONALD MacLENNAN (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in support of the motion. In the 1933 revision the counties of Inverness and Richmond were joined to make the present constituency of Inverness-Richmond. This constituency is over 300 miles long. A man would need a good automobile and would have to be a tireless driver to go from one end of the constituency to the other in a single day. On the other hand, the constituency represented by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Hartigan) is so small that he can drive from the centre to the end in any direction in one hour and a half. I am not complaining about the number of people who live within a district; all I say is that it is utterly impossible for anyone to look properly after the constituency which I represent. There are more than 300 miles of shore line filled with coves and inlets, and a man would have to spend his entire time and even then would find it impossible to go over the constituency as he should.

I was very glad to hear the hon. member to my immediate right say that the boundaries of a constituency could be changed by parliament without a new census being taken. If that can be done, I think the house should pass this resolution and refer this whole matter to a committee in order that it may be studied. If nothing can be done this year, perhaps the matter may be considered at the next session. In the meantime, we would have an opportunity of looking into these matters and suggesting necessary corrections. I am not finding fault with what has been done nor am I imputing motives, but I must say that it seems almost ridiculous to have such a large constituency territorially as the one which I represent. I therefore have pleasure in supporting the motion.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the redistribution committee upon the report of which the redistribution bill was based, I consider it my duty to say something in reply to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this resolution. Under our constitution redistribution is made compulsory after the taking of a census. A census was taken in 1931 and redistribution followed.

Redistribution is always a difficult matter. No hon. gentleman who has had anything to do with it will deny that it is an extremely difficult proposition. From time to time there have been differences of opinion as to how redistribution should be made. There are those who contend that it should be made by a committee of judges and there are others who contend that it should be made by the House of Commons. For some time past the practice has been adopted, I think a fair and a reasonable one, of referring the matter of redistribution to a committee upon which all the groups in the house have representation.

After certain censuses it has been found necessary to reduce the number of seats in some of the provinces, while an increase was necessary in others. We are faced with the difficulty of maintaining the balance of representation as between the country and the towns. There are those who contend that the city representation should be much larger than that of the country, but I think that would be a negation of the principle of representation by population. However, there may be some point to that argument because of the concentration of population in the cities as compared with the rural districts. Then we have thickly populated rural districts and thinly populated rural districts. We must also consider the natural barriers such as rivers and lakes. When all these things are taken into consideration they present a difficult and almost baffling problem to any committee undertaking redistribution.

Plenty of time was devoted to the last redistribution. It was not rushed through. It was started in one session and finished in the next. I recall that the bill was, in a very large measure, the result of agreement between the parties.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART: I am going to mention the exceptions. There was not absolute agreement in Quebec, and the same applied to Saskatchewan. I believe there were two constituencies in Saskatchewan and a number in Quebec in connection with which there was not complete agreement. I remember being a member of the redistribution committee which sat ten years previously. Quebec has a fixed number of seats, sixty-five, and for years there had not been any change in the boundaries of the constituencies of that province. I remember pointing out some of these discrepancies in 1922, but I was told that as there were sixty-five seats in Quebec it really did not make any difference. It was contended that the same boundaries should continue to apply, and they did. The result was that the representation was out of balance, and still is.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It has been made worse.

Mr. STEWART: My hon. friend may think so.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I know it has.

Mr. STEWART: That was not the intention or the disposition of the committee. The hon. member who moved this resolution (Mr. Brunelle) has produced some maps. I can recall maps showing the boundaries brought about by previous redistributions which were just as grotesque and irregular as the ones he has produced. As I have said, there was a very substantial measure of agreement in this committee and when we consider the difficulties of redistribution, I think the final result was quite fair.

We are now in the year 1937, only three years away from another census. There will be a redistribution following that census, and I submit that it is not in the interests of Canada as a whole to reopen this very difficult and controversial question at this time. I am sure that if the question were reopened, any partial redistribution which might result would be subject to the same criticism as has been levelled to-night against the work of the committee of 1933. As the redistribution accomplished in 1933 was to a large extent the result of agreement after long conferences and represented a difficult bit of work—and surely those who are sitting on the opposite side of the house cannot complain of that redistribution so far as they are concerned—considering everything I think the house would be well advised to leave matters as they are. I fear that to reopen the question would not bring any better results.

Mr. W. M. RYAN (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the mover of this resolution (Mr. Brunelle) upon bringing this matter to the attention of the house. I represent the constituency of Saint John-Albert. Prior to the last election that constituency had the honour of returning two members, but when the redistribution took place, Saint John-Albert lost one member, without there being any division of the area. I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) state a moment ago that there was agreement in the redistribution committee in respect to all the provinces with the exception of Quebec.

Mr. STEWART: And Saskatchewan.

Mr. RYAN: And Saskatchewan. The city of Saint John, the metropolitan city of New Brunswick, which I have the honour to represent, is in the constituency of Saint John-Albert, and the people there felt that the last redistribution was somewhat of a slight to that constituency as it meant a reduction in the number of its members.

Mr. BENNETT: One member had to go.

Mr. RYAN: The right hon. leader of the opposition says that one member had to go, and asks how that could be adjusted. But in Manitoba, apparently, in redistributing the constituencies a division was made of certain territory, and something like that might have been done for New Brunswick. At all events Saint John-Albert was formerly represented by two members, one a minister of the crown, and another a gentleman who had been in public life for a great many years. I take it now, from the explanation which has just been given the house, that those who represented New Brunswick in the last parliament, including possibly the former minister, were agreeable to the proposal that Saint John-Albert should lose one member. If that is so, it is an explanation which we have long been seeking.

With all due respect to the hon. member for Leeds, I do trust, when this matter is brought before the committee for consideration at an early stage, as I hope it will be, that the wrong which was done to so important a constituency as Saint John-Albert will be righted and that it will be accorded the representation which it had heretofore.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the committee of this house a few years ago which was responsible for redistribution. I really cannot see that my friends of the Liberal party have any cause for complaint because I feel sure that if they had made a redistribution to suit themselves they could not have secured better results than they did in the last election.

There was very little friction on the redistribution committee. It is true there was a little behind the scenes, and a number of seats were in dispute in Quebec and Saskatchewan, but I maintain that whatever committee might be appointed by this house to effect a redistribution, if they continued to follow the same methods which we have followed in this house in the past, the same squabbles would occur as took place in the last redistribution in regard to a few seats. I say that for the simple reason that we have no definite method of creating constituencies. There is no basis of population on which constituencies are created. We have no definite method at all of creating constituencies in the Dominion of Canada, and for that reason we have chaotic conditions in the laying out of constituencies in practically every province.

Manitoba has just been mentioned. I was not satisfied with the way the seats in that province were redistributed. Can any member say why one member from Manitoba should have a seat with a population of approximately 75,000 people, and another seat almost adjoining it should have a population of only 30,000? There is no basis of equity in such a redistribution. There is no reason why one man's vote in one constituency should be more valuable than another man's vote in another constituency. In fact, the whole basis of representation in Canada represents anything but equality.

Prince Edward Island, for instance, returns four members. True, that is fixed by statute, but is there any good reason in equity why Prince Edward Island with a population of about 85,000, no larger than some of the single member constituencies in Canada, should have four seats while a constituency of 85,000 people in an industrial centre should return only one member? That cannot be defended on the basis of equity, and until such time as we have in Canada a definite understanding as to how we are going to redistribute seats we shall always be having some member from his seat in this house saying this is unfair or that is unfair. We all can understand that some hon. member may want to get rid of a little corner of his constituency and pass it on to some other constituency. That is only natural when a member has, perhaps on the boundary of his constituency, a district which has always given him an adverse vote. It is only natural that he should be anxious to get rid of that portion of his constituency.

It has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that there should be in Canada as there is in other parts of the world, some other body which should be charged with the redistribution of seats, that the task should be taken away entirely from members of parliament and handed over to some permanent body. There is some merit in a suggestion of that kind. The committee that was working last year considering the elections act—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Proportional representation.

Mr. HEAPS: We turned down proportional representation. There was only one member of that committee who tried to get the Liberal party to stand by their promise on proportional representation, and that was my humble self. I know the Liberal party has had proportional representation in its platform, but when the question came before the committee only one member of the whole committee was willing to do justice to that old principle.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I was not there.

Mr. HEAPS: I am sorry the minister was not, but the fact is that the committee turned down proportional representation, and evidently it has gone for some time.

Mr. MacNICOL: And the alternative vote.

Mr. HEAPS: Yes. So we are left with practically the same method of election that we have had for years. I am going to suggest to my hon. friends who are anxious now to have a change in the redistribution that it would be adopting a rather dangerous policy to ask for a change in the redistribution after each election. I fear it would ultimately lead to a gerrymandering of seats, which I object to very much.

From my own particular viewpoint I have no cause for complaint. I have represented the district I now represent in this parliament and on other public bodies for quite a number of years, and if they chop off a little here or a little there it makes no great difference so far as I personally am concerned. But I feel that if we are to have some permanency in the constituencies once they have been distributed, it is a bad policy to reopen the question of redistribution immediately an election has taken place. If there are to be changes in one constituency here and another one there, the whole question is opened up. I for one would like to see redistribution carried out, not from motives of local expediency but on the basis of true equity in all parts of the dominion. I admit that a good case can be made out for the contention that a rural seat should have a smaller population than an industrial centre; I am willing to concede that point. But I am opposed to the idea that in one area a rural seat should have a population of twenty or twenty-five thousand and in another section it should have a population of fifty or sixty thousand. In my opinion that is where the inequality lies.

If it is the intention of the hon. members who have supported this resolution to bring about a more equitable redistribution of population so as to have our seats as nearly equal as possible in all parts of Canada, I would be in favour of the motion. But if, on the other hand, their idea is merely to have a redistribution of two or three of their own particular seats which they think have not been fairly dealt with, I am totally opposed to the motion; and until we get some assurance from my hon. friends as to what is intended by this resolution I could not, for the time being, consent to support it.

On motion of Mr. MacNicol the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, January 22, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house will unite with them in the formation of a joint committee of both houses on the subject of the printing of parliament, and that the members of the standing committee on printing, viz., Messieurs Barry, Bertrand (Laurier), Casselman, Chevrier, Damude, Davidson, Denis, Douglas, Dussault, Elliott (Kindersley), Esling, Evans, Ferron, Fleming, Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemount), Gauthier, Green, Hansell, Hurtubise, Hushion, Jean, Kirk, Lapointe (Matapedia-Matane), Leduc, Lennard, Little, MacInnis, MacKinnon (Edmonton West), MacLean (Prince), McGregor, McIntosh, McKenzie (Lambton-Kent), McNevin (Victoria, Ont.), Marshall, Mills, Moore, Mullins, Mulock, Mutch, Pinard, Purdy, Reid, Ross (St. Paul's), Ross (Middlesex East), Rutherford, St-Père, Taylor (Nanaimo), Thompson, Tucker, Tustin, Veniot, Weir, Wilton and Winkler, will act as members on the part of this house on the said joint committee on the printing of parliament.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister)moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house has appointed the Hon. The Speaker and Messieurs Ahearn, Blackmore, Blair, Blanchette, Bothwell, Bouchard, Bradette, Brasset, Cameron (Hastings South), Cameron (Cape Breton North-Victoria), Campbell, Casselman, Duffus, Emmerson, Fournier, Grant, Green, Hamilton, Hyndman, Johnston (Lake Centre), Kuhl, Lennard, MacInnis, MacKinnon (Edmonton West), MacLennan, MacNeil, Macphail (Miss), Mallette, Martin, Mercier, Moore, Mutch, Parent (Quebec West and South), Parent (Terrebonne), Raymond, Reid, Rennie, Ross (St. Paul's), Ryan, St-Père, Spence, Walsh, Winkler and Young, a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the library of parliament, so far as the interests of the House of Commons are concerned, and to act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of a joint committee of both houses on the library.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house has appointed the Honourable the Speaker and Messieurs Barber, Bertrand (Prescott), Fafard, Fraser, Gray, Hill, Howden, Landeryou, MacInnis, MacMillan, Macphail (Miss), McLean (Simcoe East), Moore, O'neill, Purdy, Roberge, Sinclair, Spence, Taylor (Norfolk) and Tustin, a committee to assist His Honour the Speaker in the direction of the restaurant, so far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act as members of a joint committee of both houses on the restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 8, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. GARDINER: The proposed measure would not in any way affect the principle of the Dairy Industry Act. It involves three minor amendments, the first of which prevents the placing of foreign matter in milk or cream. Previously the restriction applied only to cream, and it is now intended to include both milk and cream. The second amendment has to do with an amendment which was passed last year. Because of its position in the measure of last year the penalty which applied was much too severe. As a result the section as it was passed last year is being repealed and reenacted under section 3 of the present measure. The last section of the bill refers to a number of items such as storing, packaging, handling and transporting of dairy products, which may be controlled by regulation in the department.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REVISION OF ACCOUNTING SET-UP

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for,

(a) the surrender by the Minister of Finance of certain amounts of the capital stock of the Canadian National and the Canadian Northern railway companies,

(b) the transfer and exchange of certain shares of the capital stock of the said companies,

(c) the abandonment of certain claims against the Canadian National Railway Company,

(d) the adjustment of certain accounts affecting government railways,

(e) the setting up of a securities trust corporation for the purpose of preserving the priority rights of the dominion and its protection against future contingencies in respect to potential interest and other savings, and

(f) generally for revision of the accounting set-up of the Canadian National railway system.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS

PROVISION TO ENCOURAGE REPAIR OF RURAL AND URBAN DWELLINGS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to guarantee approved lending institutions against losses which they may sustain as a result of home improvement loans made by them, to limit the liability of the government of Canada in respect of such guarantees to not exceeding fifteen per centum of the aggregate amount of home improvement loans made by any such approved lending institution and to not exceeding seven million five hundred thousand dollars.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CORONATION OF KING GEORGE VI

INVITATION TO LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION TO BE MEMBER OF CANADIAN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with I should like to say that after some little thought I have concluded that it is my duty to make a short statement in view of the debate of Monday last. During the progress of the discussion the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was good enough to extend on behalf of the government an invitation to myself to become part of the delegation attending the coronation. Frankly I had some doubt as to whether I should make any public statement, but in view of the gracious manner in which the invitation was extended I desire to express my appreciation, not only of the thought behind the action of the right hon. the Prime Minister and the government but of the very kind and courteous manner in which the Prime Minister expressed the wish of the government in that regard. I am sure he does not expect me at this moment to make any statement as to whether or not it would be possible for me to accept his generous suggestion, but I assure him that I will advise with him. In view of the terms in which the invitation was extended I felt it would be unfair to hon. members of this house if I did not express my very grateful appreciation of the action thus taken.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say to my right hon. friend that he must see for himself how pleased hon. members of this house are at his acceptance of the invitation.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not accept it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At his manner of acknowledging the government's invitation. In order to ease my right hon. friend's mind in further considering an acceptance of the invitation, I may say to him that it is the intention of the government, with the approval of hon. members, to ask the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition in the Senate to be guests of the government, and also the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate. There will be other representatives of the membership of both houses, some of whom will be selected by the Dominion of Canada branch of the British Empire Parliamentary Association. The government has thought that it would be the wish of hon. members of both houses that those whom I have mentioned should be part of the official parliamentary delegation to attend the coronation ceremonies.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT, 1932

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 3, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the necessity for this amendment arises by reason of the fact that the province of Nova Scotia defines the Insurance Act in its own legislation as being the insurance act of the Dominion of Canada. The provincial legislation provides also that no insurance company shall carry on in Nova Scotia any part of its business of insurance unless and until it is licensed under the insurance act, which would be the Dominion insurance act. Of course, any other province would have the right to take similar action at any time.

In the present law, as enacted and amended in 1932 and 1934, a proviso was dropped which permitted the treasury board to accept a lower deposit than the minimum set in the act for insurance companies. That proviso applied particularly to provincially incorporated companies doing business only within a single province, and had special reference to the small farmers' mutual fire insurance companies in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BENNETT: And elsewhere.

Mr. DUNNING: In Nova Scotia particularly. That province made necessary the taking out of a dominion licence by any company doing insurance business within its borders. The $50,000 deposit generally required is obviously too large a deposit for such companies. The old provision enabled the treasury board to set an adequate amount. It is proposed to restore the clause which was dropped in 1932 in order to permit the formation of small provincially incorporated farmers' mutual companies.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Registration of provincial companies.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a difficulty in connection with this matter, the one which brought about the dropping of the proviso. The truth is that the proviso left a tremendous discretion in the hands of the treasury board as to the amount of deposit required, but I think the words " on the report of the superintendent," indicating that his report will determine the amount of the deposit, will overcome that difficulty. The real truth is that some companies felt that the deposits should be practically nothing because they were carrying on a very small business. To give a dominion licence to a company with small capital and which had made a small deposit was not regarded as being in keeping with the general principle of the national insurance act. The difficulty to which the minister has alluded is not an imaginary but a very real one, and as long as he thinks, if he does, and I assume he does, that the safeguard is ample, namely, that the action taken by the treasury board shall be on the report of the superintendent as to the amount that shall be put up—

Mr. DUNNING: And the further qualification a little further on.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is with respect to the amount of the reserve on the business on the 31st day of December next preceding. That would apply whether the company was large or small. It is merely a question of the computation of reserves on the basis provided for by the statute.

Mr. DUNNING: But the deposit shall not be less than the reserve.

Mr. BENNETT: Deposits of all life insurance companies are dependent upon the extent of the reserve under the insurance act.

Mr. DUNNING: But not the full amount.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but they have to put up the deposit called for by the act as their insurance in force increases during the year. If the company increases its risks in force by one million dollars, for instance, it has to increase its deposit with the government. The provision here puts a limit on that, namely, that at no time shall it be less than the amount of the reserve on the business in force in such provincial company on the 31st day of December next preceding, computed according to the insurance act itself. It is probable, therefore, that the difficulty that was apprehended at the time the proviso was dropped was not a very real one, and that no evil results will follow from the adoption of this section.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to prolong the discussion, but I would point out that the additional deposit required under this subsection must be not less than the whole reserve required by law. That is, in the case of these small companies, the whole of their reserve on the business in force must be deposited. That, I think my right hon. friend will agree, is an additional precaution against abuse. As I think he knows, in practice it applies generally only to small farmers' mutual companies, which certainly in the province of Nova Scotia and elsewhere have rendered efficient and economical service.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and which do not engage in life insurance.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION FRANCHISE ACT

POSTPONEMENT FOR ONE YEAR OF REVISION OF EXISTING LISTS

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 7, to amend the Dominion Franchise Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that this bill is similar to the one we adopted last year. Its purpose is to further postpone for one year the revision of the existing list. The house discussed a bill for the same purpose last session, and I then explained that there were two reasons for doing what we are proposing to do again this year. In the first place a new electoral act is contemplated, and notice of motion has been given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) to revive the committee on elections which sat last year, to consider a new electoral act. In the second place, there is a considerable saving to be effected by postponing the revision. Although I am not in a position to give the exact figures, because it all depends upon the number of names entered on the list, the revision is likely to cost over a quarter of a million dollars for the year, and the printing of the list, if such printing were done, would add considerably to that amount. On the other hand, to prepare a list only for by-elections involves a very small cost. Last year we had three by-elections, and the preparation of the lists cost in the county of Wright, $2,589.22; in the county of Gloucester, $3,004.64, and in Ottawa East, an urban constituency, $7,606.02, or a total for the year of $13,199.88. That is all we had to expend for preparing the lists.

I would remind the house that at the express desire of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think it was a very proper stand to take, we adopted last year amendments to the Dominion Elections Act and the Dominion Franchise Act. These amendments, of course, are still in force, and will apply during the course of the year. I commend this bill to the house.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 4, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

He said: When this bill was before the house on the first reading I gave a brief explanation of its purpose. The proposed amendment is intended to correct an anomaly in legal procedure in the administration of the Weights and Measures Act. Section 82 of the act provides that proceedings shall be taken before any justice of the peace, but if the penalty exceeds fifty dollars the case must be heard by two justices of the peace. Subsection 2 of the section provides that the provisions of the criminal code relating to summary convictions shall apply to all proceedings, subject to the provisions of this act. In 1935, by chapter 48, 25-26 George V, several amendments were made to the Weights and Measures Act by which penalties for offences in several cases were greatly increased. For instance, the money fine for the use of an unjust scale by a corporation was increased to $100, and due to a phrase in subsection 2, which I read a moment ago, namely "subject to the provisions of this act," the question was raised in a prosecution against a corporation whether or not a stipendiary or police magistrate had jurisdiction to hear these offences where the money penalty was $100, although in all provincial offences and practically all offences against federal statutes a stipendiary magistrate has the same authority as two justices of the peace. Under the criminal code, by the interpretation section, a stipendiary or police magistrate has the same authority as two justices of the peace. The amendment proposed, as I have just explained, is a matter of legal procedure and is designed to attach to the Weights and Measures Act the exact words of the interpretation section of the criminal code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

MILITIA PENSION ACT

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Minister of National Defence) moved the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Militia Pension Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Time of payment of pensions and compassionate allowances.

Mr. BENNETT: There is only one question I was going to ask the minister when I read this bill. At the end of section 41 there appear these words:

> . . . and unless otherwise specified by this act shall continue during the lifetime of the recipient.

Such words do not appear in the section which is replaced by this section. Does any significance at all attach to these words?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think so. They refer to remarriage, forfeiture on conviction of certain offences, and the like.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, what is the meaning of the words "in arrear"?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is monthly after the pension is due and owing. It is the phrase agreed upon by the Department of Justice and the officers of this department.

Mr. STEWART: It is the opposite of "monthly in advance," I assume?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes.

Mr. STEWART: I assume that under this act the pension would stop at the date of death of the pensioner.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, either at death or remarriage.

Mr. STEWART: But under the act as it was before this amendment the pension was payable in advance for the whole year?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes.

Mr. STEWART: And in case of death was there any refund?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No; that is the point. There was no statutory provision for refund in case of death or remarriage.

Mr. STEWART: And under this act the pension will stop at the date of death?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

HARBOURS AND PIERS ACT

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act to substitute the Minister of Transport for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; to except from the operation of the act harbours under the management of the National Harbours Board; to confer on the minister power of appointment of officers, clerks and employees; to deal with the collection and disposition of tolls and dues and to charge certain expenses against such tolls and dues.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. HOWE: The bill contemplated by this resolution contains a number of small amendments designed to bring the Harbours and Piers Act into conformity with the practice of the department. It is now the practice of the department to deduct from the fees collected at the various ports a percentage, that is, to pay out of the fees collected at the wharf the fees of the wharfinger and such expenses for lighting and other services as may be required at the point.

Mr. BENNETT: In some cases they take them all.

Mr. HOWE: Yes; it is a percentage. That has been the practice since 1931, but it is irregular under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, which requires that all fees shall be returned to the receiver general. Another amendment has to do with the appointment of wharfingers. Since 1922, under the amendment to the Civil Service Act, they have been appointed by the minister. Before that the appointment was made by the civil service commission and prior to that by the governor in council. This measure provides that the appointment shall be by the minister as at present. The amendments are all of that type, minor things, and none of them contemplate any new practice on the part of the department.

Mr. BENNETT: Will this constitute an added personnel?

Mr. HOWE: No, no added personnel. The purpose is purely to prevent the conduct of affairs, in certain minor particulars, in an illegal manner.

Mr. CAHAN: Do I understand that the clause "to confer on the minister power of appointment of officers, clerks and employees" refers to the appointment of wharfingers only? What other classes of officers, clerks and employees are to be appointed by the minister at his own option?

Mr. HOWE: The only appointees covered by the Government Harbours and Piers Act are wharfingers and, in some instances, their assistants. There is for instance a wharf at Port Alberni where there is mechanical equipment for loading lumber, and assistants are appointed there. This covers the administration of some 950 small wharves throughout the dominion. The great difficulty in connection with appointments is not the selecting of appointees but the finding of men willing to take the job. The fees are entirely fees of office; that is to say, the wharfinger must collect revenue at the dock before he can be paid, and then he receives fees on a certain scale established in 1931. There is no provision for the payment of any wharfinger apart from the fees of office. This practice is not new in my regime; I assume it has been worked out over the years as the practical way of handling this vast number of small transactions.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to know exactly what are the duties of a wharfinger. I have received a good deal of complaint in regard to one or two small docks on the west coast. There are certain places where boats call only occasionally and where there is a wharfinger, but he does not seem to have anything to do; whereas there are adjoining wharves where there are no wharfingers, although a large number of boats call and a considerable number of passengers are taken on and off. I wish to know, first, what the wharfinger's duties are and, second, why it is that these fees are charged at certain points and not at others.

Mr. HOWE: Wharves built by the Public Works department are upon completion turned over to the Transport department for administration. The Government Harbours and Piers Act authorizes the governor in council to establish a fixed range of fees which are set out in the act and which shall be charged for the use of government property. As I say, there are about 950 of these docks, and we are able to get wharfingers to act only at about 400; in other places the business as prescribed by the act is not sufficient to provide a remuneration adequate enough to attract anyone to assume the duties of wharfinger. In some few instances the fees are considerable. There are docks where the revenue runs up to $12,000 or $15,000 a year, but there are only six of these. The total net revenue of the dominion for all docks amounts to between $90,000 and $100,000 per annum.

Mr. BENNETT: Outside the harbour commission proper.

Mr. HOWE: Yes; these are purely small docks. It is the duty of the department under this act to administer them in a definite manner as set out in the act and we do our very best to discharge that duty.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps I have not made my point clear. I am thinking of some very small points. What actually is the duty of the wharfinger at such a place? I have had complaints that he does nothing, but collects a fee, whereas at an adjoining point two or three miles along the coast there is another dock where large boats call and there is no wharfinger and no fee collected. Settlers feel that it is a hardship to pay this fee for landing when the man who is standing around does no work for it, and if they go a few miles further down they can land without paying any fee.

Mr. HOWE: The duty of the wharfinger is to collect revenues for the government. Unfortunately these docks have not always been built as a result of any careful analysis of business returns, but they have been handed over to us and we have done our best to find wharfingers for all the docks. It is our duty under the act to appoint a wharfinger to every government dock, but there is a wise provision in the act that they can be paid only from fees of office. There are docks at points where the fees of office are not sufficient to induce anyone to accept the position and in that case we are quite helpless. Where we do appoint a wharfinger his duty is to collect revenue and he retains a portion of it—perhaps all of the first collections—and a portion of the larger collections for his services in looking after the dock and attending to traffic. If there is a light on the dock he tends the light; and he reports to the department the condition of the dock and the business over the dock. In some instances it is an exceedingly small business, amounting to $5 or $10 a year, while in other cases, as I have said, it is as high as $12,000 or $15,000 a year.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Where are most passengers landed at Gibsons Landing or at Roberts Creek? Why is it that at Roberts Creek there is a wharfinger and at Gibsons Landing there is not?

Mr. HOWE: I have not in my mind the details in connection with all those docks. I suppose that in one case we have found a man who will accept the position and in the other we have not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can we have that information when the bill is before us?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I give that example because it seems to me that the minister's statement is quite contrary to the actual practice as it has been represented to me.

Mr. HOWE: I can assure the hon. gentleman that letters go out from our office every day asking men to accept these jobs.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: One other question. If at one time these appointments were made by the civil service commission why should not that practice continue?

Mr. HOWE: For the reason that though the civil service commission might advertise for wharfingers as much as they liked, unless they were a good deal more successful than we, they would get no applications. We have to beg people to take these jobs. There are only five docks in the dominion in connection with which applications have been received; everywhere else we are constantly asking members of parliament or our agents to help us find wharfingers. This is not a case of the man seeking the job.

Mr. STEWART: Is there any established scale of fees or charges or is it a matter of the individual wharf?

Mr. HOWE: The scale of fees is definitely established by governor in council.

Mr. GREEN: Will this act apply to harbours such as New Westminster and Sorel, which are not under the National Harbours Board?

Mr. HOWE: It does not apply to a harbour where a harbour authority is set up. It does not apply to New Westminster; it does apply to Sorel.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister explain whether in all instances steamships docking are charged side wharfage fees?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is the basis of the charges for steamships at these docks. There is no charge for fishermen and similar traffic. All the wharfage collected at these docks is side and top wharfage.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 9, to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grants to seed fairs, etc., also grant of $18,900 to Canadian Seed Growers' Association, $422,000.

Mr. PELLETIER: What is the explanation of the increase?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): There is an increase of $14,800. The explanation is to be found first in grants, subsidies and contributions, increased $9,071; to extend forage crops, seed distribution in the prairie provinces and provide more adequately for emergency services which frequently are necessary because of frost damage or loss of crop. Then equipment and maintenance is increased $3,161 to provide equipment for the new district office and laboratory at Vancouver. Up to this year Alberta and British Columbia have together constituted one seed branch district, but this year it is divided into two and a new office opened at Vancouver. Personal services: increase, $1,198, to provide for statutory increases and the longer employment of seasonal seed analysts because of the increasing volume of seed testing. Rents are increased $300 to provide for the rental of a sub-district office at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, where an office was formerly supplied free by the Island Seed Association. Transportation of persons has increased $1,070 to provide for additional expenses owing to increased inspection services necessary in British Columbia. Those items make the total of $14,800.

Mr. SENN: Before we proceed any further with these agriculture estimates would the minister make a statement as to the agreement arrived at between the provincial ministers of agriculture and himself at a conference which I believe was held late last year? If we are to discuss these items usefully we should know whether the activities of the federal Department of Agriculture are to be increased or curtailed. I do not know whether the minister would desire to deal with them one by one as we come to the different items or whether he would prefer to make a general statement. I think we should know what changes are proposed in the activities of the different branches of the department.

Mr. GARDINER: I had expected some time during the session, and I am prepared to do it to-morrow or at any time, to place on the table of the house the full report of the conference that took place between the provincial ministers of agriculture and myself a few weeks ago. That conference was the result of discussions which took place a year ago last December when the dominion-provincial conference was held in Ottawa. At that time we discussed very fully the matter of overlapping; it took I think about one and a half days to discuss it. After going into the details in connection with the activities of the different branches of the federal department and of the provincial departments the conclusion was that there was not any serious overlapping. There are of course inspectors of the department at Ottawa who are making inspections in connection with say the grading of dairy products, and there may be inspectors in some provinces doing the same thing. But the reason for the two sets of inspectors relates largely to the constitutional aspect, which requires the setting up of different administrations owing to the fact that civil rights are under the control of the provinces, while interprovincial and international trade is under the control of the federal authority. When certain products are exported from Canada, or moved from one province to another, we must inspect. If we go inside the province to inspect products which are produced and sold within the province we may run into constitutional difficulties. Legislation which did not take these facts fully into account has been upset in the courts. The only practical way we have found of overcoming difficulties of that kind is to have federal legislation governing inspection say of dairy products within a province, covered by similar provincial legislation, and have the provinces appoint our officials to do the same work. The same officials would be doing the work in connection with international and interprovincial trade.

We have been able to avoid a great deal of overlapping in this way. As I have said, we discussed the matter fully a year ago and as a result of a resolution passed having to do with marketing, the conference was called this year. According to the agenda presented to the conference the only subjects dealt with were matters having to do with marketing. The question of overlapping was not discussed. I assume it was considered that it had been fully discussed at the previous conference. While as chairman at the conclusion of our deliberations I threw the meeting open for full discussion, the matter now raised did not come up.

Mr. SENN: I mentioned overlapping because newspaper reports carried the suggestion that it had been discussed. The minister has explained that by concurrent legislation or by the provinces appointing men who are really federal inspectors and graders to do their work they have been able to overcome some of the constitutional difficulties. There are many graders and inspectors grading seed for the seed branch. Have any of the inspectors been appointed by a province, and if so is such province paying any proportion of the salary?

Mr. GARDINER: Probably the best way to answer the question would be to say that the constitutional difficulties which arise in connection with some matter does not necessarily arise in connection with seed. This vote is for the administration of the Seeds Act, the Feeding Stuffs Act, the Fertilizers Act, the Agricultural Pests Control Act, the Inspection and Sale Act and the Hay and Straw Inspection Act, all of which regulate the quality and control the sale of seeds, feeds, fertilizers, binder twine and hay and straw in Canada. The provinces do take certain action in connection with seed, but I do not think there is any overlapping in connection with the matters of which I have been speaking.

Mr. SENN: I do not believe the minister has fully answered my question. After all, seed is sold within the provinces; so is hay, fertilizers and every other item he has mentioned. How is it possible for inspectors to enforce their grades and, if necessary, to take civil action within the province in connection with purely provincial trade? Further, the minister has not stated whether the provinces bear any proportion of the cost of inspection.

Mr. GARDINER: No, the provinces do not bear any proportion of the cost to cover the activity of which I speak. There would be some difficulty in our entering the provinces and enforcing grades, where the action of our department was contested. There would be difficulty if the transaction were entirely within the province.

Mr. SENN: I know that inspectors go around to the different seed stores in my constituency, and all through the province of Ontario. If the seed is not up to sample, and if we are selling seed which is not in accordance with the provisions of the act, action is taken. It seems to me that up to the present time they have been successful in carrying appeals to the courts, and fines have been imposed.

Mr. GARDINER: I believe the Seeds Act does make possible the doing of things such as the hon. member has mentioned. Perhaps ninety-nine and probably one hundred per cent of our people realize that this practice has to be carried out, and there has been no contestation of the point. Something might happen, if the matter were taken to a court—I am not in a position to say that, but so far they have agreed to conform to the terms of the act, and to carry on accordingly.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister give us some idea of the conclusions which were arrived at last year by the advisory council? I believe they met during the summer and made certain changes in the regulations in connection with the grading of seed. Can the minister tell us what changes were made?

Mr. GARDINER: All the action taken by the department arising as a result of the recommendations are embodied in amendments to the Seeds Act which I shall bring down in a few days. They are quite extensive, and cover almost the whole line of activities under the Seeds Act. Those will be brought before the house for discussion when the bill is presented.

Mr. BEAUBIER: The Manitoba seed fair is usually held in conjunction with the winter fair at Brandon, but last year it was held in Winnipeg on the premises of the T. Eaton Company. I should like to know why it was moved from Brandon to Winnipeg.

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed it is a provincial fair, and we have nothing to do with the location of it. We do give a small grant to it. I am not in a position to give a reason for the change.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): What proportion of the grant is to be given to seed fairs, and how many seed fairs have we in western Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: The total amount for grants, subsidies and contributions is $84,900, but I have not before me the detailed amounts. However, if the hon. member wishes, I shall bring down the information.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): What are the requirements for a grant to a seed fair? What must the fair board do?

Mr. GARDINER: I believe the same question was asked a year ago, and at that time I placed on Hansard the information which is now in my hands. Perhaps the quickest way to give hon. members the required information would be to read it:

With a view to assisting provincial departments of agriculture in promoting the production, conditioning and distribution of superior seeds and fertilizers, subventions are made available and payable from the parliamentary vote for the seed branch in amounts and for the purposes as follow:

Total subventions available to a province

1. The total subvention available to a province within the dominion fiscal year shall not exceed the sum of twelve hundred dollars unless more than one million acres are under cultivation in field crops within the province, in which case the subvention may be increased pro rata twelve hundred dollars for each additional million acres under cultivation as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the previous year, provided that the total subvention shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars pro rata per hundred thousand of total population as shown by the latest available federal census return.

2. These subventions shall be for the purposes and in the amounts hereinafter specified, but shall not exceed one-half the total amounts paid as cash prizes or grants by the provincial departments of agriculture.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

3. $50 for seed crop competition.

Seed crop competitions have been discontinued in most of the provinces. As a seed improvement agency they are believed to be less effective than the combined seed crop and cleaned seed competition. Subventions shall not exceed $50 for each seed crop competition, the total not to exceed twenty-five per cent of the amount available to a province.

4. $200 for a combined seed crop and seed competition.

Each combined seed crop and seed competition in which the seed used must be a registered grade or grade No. 1 certified as to purity of variety, trueness to type or freedom from noxious weeds, shall be eligible for a subvention of $200.

5. $50 for a local seed fair.

Local seed fairs continue to be serviceable in a few localities and may participate in these subventions to an amount not exceeding $50 for each such seed fair.

6. $250 for district seed fairs.

District seed fairs are organized in some provinces to meet the needs of groups of counties where local seed fairs are not held, the larger fair being held at different points within the district during successive years. Subventions not exceeding $250 may be paid on account of each such district seed fair.

7. $600 for a provincial seed exhibition.

Subventions on account of each provincial seed exhibition shall not exceed $600.

8. $600 for seed cleaning machines.

The results of seed drill surveys and other investigations make clear the need for more efficient cleaning and grading of seed. This purpose may be served to best advantage by well equipped cleaning plants that may be conveniently available to farmers at reasonable charges. The total cost of efficient cleaning machines of medium capacity, for itinerant seed cleaners, not including power equipment, warehouse facilities or motor trucks should not exceed the sum of $1,200. Subventions amounting to not more than one-half the cost of such machines, but not exceeding $600 towards seed cleaning machinery at any centre, may be paid, provided that the control of the service and the charges for the use of these machines, is subject to the approval of the minister of agriculture for the province, for a period of seven years from the date of purchase.

9. $300 for machines to grind limestone or mix fertilizer.

In several important farming districts the character of the soils and of the production therefrom indicate that the use of agricultural lime and of fertilizer is of paramount importance. The cost to the farmers for lime and fertilizers may be substantially reduced if the necessary appliances for the grinding of limestone and the proper grinding and mixing of fertilizer materials are made available to organizations of farmers at convenient centres. Subventions amounting to not more than one-half the cost of such machines, but not exceeding $300, towards a machine at any centre, may be paid provided that the control of the service and the charges for the use of these machines, is subject to the approval of the minister of agriculture for the province, for a period of seven years from the date of purchase.

10. 50 cents per ton for agricultural lime freight charges.

Because there is an absence of suitable limestone in some districts where agricultural lime is needed, subventions not exceeding fifty cents per ton may be paid to cover not more than one-third of the railway freight charges on agricultural limestone provided that the minister of agriculture for the province contributes an equal amount for the same purpose.

11. The minister of agriculture for the province may utilize the total subvention for any or all of the purposes mentioned, except as provided in section three.

12. Subvention accounts should be submitted to the seed commissioner, Ottawa, through the office of the seed branch district inspector for the district in which the subvention was earned, by the minister of agriculture for the province, or his authorized representative, before the end of March each year.

These are the regulations setting forth the purposes of grants made under this particular vote.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): How many cleaning machines are in operation in Saskatchewan, and how many receive grants?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position at the moment to give the number of machines in use in the different provinces.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I understand that quite a number go round the country.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not that information available at the moment, but I can bring it down later if required.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): How many local seed fairs receive grants in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: There are 160 and some odd agricultural societies, of which about half have seed fairs. I cannot give my hon. friend the exact number that receive grants.

Mr. SENN: Must a fair be a seed fair only before it is entitled to a grant? Is the subvention paid to a fall fair at which seeds are shown?

Mr. GARDINER: If a fall fair operates a seed fair the grant is made in connection with the seed fair.

Mr. SENN: Is the lime upon which the freight is paid purchased in Canada only? Where do the machines for grinding the lime come from? Are they all purchased in Canada or are some purchased in other countries?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not certain that it is compulsory that the lime should be Canadian lime, but it happens that it is. I am not in a position to state definitely that all the machines used are of Canadian manufacture. There would probably be some doubt about that.

Mr. LENNARD: Does the minister consider it fair to the other seed merchants in the Winnipeg district to have a seed fair held on the premises of the T. Eaton Company Limited, which company is in the seed business?

Mr. GARDINER: I would not care to express an opinion with regard to action taken by the provincial government.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does this item cover subventions to seed fairs throughout Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: In so far as they are seed fairs. The subventions are paid in connection with seed fairs of all kinds.

Mr. GRAYDON: Can the minister inform the committee as to the number of junior farmer seed competitions held in Ontario last year?

Mr. GARDINER: Those are carried out under the auspices of the province. We have no detailed information.

Mr. GRAYDON: How much was disbursed by the federal authorities for these competitions in Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not that information available, but I could get it.

Mr. SENN: I have heard the Prime Minister state on different occasions that no money should be voted by this house when its expenditure was to be under the control of a province, but the minister now states that he has no information to give us because these competitions are conducted by the provinces. In other words, the money is expended by the provinces and voted without any information being given. Does the minister think that that is in accordance with the settled policy of the administration?

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to certain expenditures there have been statements made similar to that referred to by the hon. member, but in this case the practice is one which has been carried on for many years, not only in this department but in other departments of the government. It is true that the administration of these fairs is controlled by the provincial governments, but we have made full inquiry into and full inspection of all the different activities. We have satisfied ourselves that the money is being properly spent and for a good purpose, and it is only when we are so satisfied that payments are made.

Mr. SENN: The minister gave the whole amount spent. Would he state what proportion of the vote was expended under provincial inspection and management last year?

Mr. GARDINER: In every case where we contribute it is a fifty-fifty arrangement.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): What was the amount granted to the Manitoba seed fair which was held on the premises of the T. Eaton Company in Winnipeg?

Mr. GARDINER: The maximum amount they could get would come under the provincial seed exhibition, and is $600. They do not all get $600; it depends upon whether they earn it or not. I am not certain that we have this particular account in, but probably we could get the information in the office. The outside amount would be $600.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Did the department have any advice as to the change from Brandon to Winnipeg before the grant was made?

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed that we received no advice at all, that the change was made by the province without consulting us.

Mr. FAIR: I should like to bring to the attention of the committee one of the clauses of the Seed Grain Act in reference to seed grain shipped from one province to another. Under the provisions of the act the shipper of grain is bound to abide by the decision of the dominion grain inspector. If a car of grain—I have in mind at the moment a carload of oats—is found not to agree with the sample submitted to the seed branch at any point of inspection, the shipper of the grain has no right whatever under the act to have the grain resampled and inspected. The decision of the seed branch is final. Now it is quite possible for samples to get mixed at the point where they are being tested, and as the shipper has no appeal he is at a great disadvantage. I should like to see the act amended so that a retest could be made on another sample drawn from the grain that is in dispute.

Mr. GARDINER: As I said a few moments ago, it is our intention to have the act before the house very shortly for amendment, and this matter could be discussed at that time. Wherever application is made for resampling, the department, I am informed, does resample. It is not the practice to insist that only one sample shall be taken and that no resampling shall be done. Wherever application is made, resampling is done.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. FAIR: I should like to have had this information a few years ago. Under the act as it was at that time there was no chance to have the grain resampled. The decision of the seed branch was final, and I know that great injustice was done at that time to the producer of some pretty good seed grain. If the act is being amended I hope it will be amended in that respect.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think that that particular amendment is coming up, but the matter could be discussed when the act is before us, because of course the whole act will be up for consideration once the bill is in the house. What I want to say now is that while the act does provide that the decision of the seed branch shall be final—because there has to be some finality in matters of that kind; somebody has to have the final say—yet in practice I am informed that the branch does resample where there is any dispute with regard to the sample that has already been taken. They may resample, and after that, of course, the decision of the seed branch must be final.

Mr. FAIR: I quite agree that their decision should be final at some stage, but I do not believe it is commonly understood that the act as it stands allows resampling, and I think resampling should be allowed.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask the minister what is included under the term "fertilizer control"? Does this apply only to lime? And further, what amount of this appropriation is going to be used for fertilizer control?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that there are five provinces, the maritime provinces, Quebec and British Columbia, which have used lime. The other provinces, I understand, have not used lime. The subventions go to the province, and it is the province that determines the amount that shall be used for fertilizer purposes. The subvention is divided among seed, fertilizer and other activities by the province, under an agreement with the federal government.

Mr. COLDWELL: My question was really framed because of my reading of the report on the soil survey made by the university of Saskatchewan but under the auspices of the department, and I was wondering if this vote had anything to do with the provision of fertilizers for lands that have been found to be deficient in certain parts of Canada. Is that under consideration in any way by the department, and if so, could we have any idea as to what is being done?

Mr. GARDINER: I assume my hon. friend has in mind the soil survey in Saskatchewan?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. GARDINER: That soil survey was started I think about 1926. It is not a survey that was started by the federal department. At that time there were overages which had resulted from the operation of the wheat board during war time, and these overages were disposed of in this way: a certain percentage was returned to Saskatchewan, a certain percentage to Manitoba, and a certain percentage to Alberta, the three provinces from which the greater part of the grain came. In Saskatchewan, if I remember rightly, the amount returned was about a quarter of a million dollars, something over $200,000. That money was set up in a fund, and during the last ten years only the interest from that fund has been spent for the purpose of making a soil survey. The capital amount of the fund is still intact, but the interest derived from the fund has been used for this purpose. The dominion government and the university of Saskatchewan have cooperated in the making of that soil survey, and to-day all the settled sections of the province from one end to the other have been mapped and you can read on that map almost the exact quality of the soil from one end of the province to the other. The last check-up which I made was at the time of the conference we held a few weeks ago, and they are now going to show the amount of moisture that falls in these sections as well as the soil conditions. They are working out now the productivity of the soil, basing their decisions somewhat upon the moisture as well as upon the nature of the soil itself. From those maps the provincial department of agriculture, with our own department here, are at the moment trying to work out some scheme of rehabilitating, if I might use that term, the drought areas of Saskatchewan. In the present estimates there is no amount for the handling of that problem, but I expect later on in the session to bring down certain special supplementaries to provide some funds for carrying on activities in connection with rehabilitation. While the developments have not extended so far in respect of the drought areas of Alberta and Manitoba as they have in respect of the drought area of Saskatchewan, they have nevertheless gone a considerable distance, and the same activities that are carried on in Saskatchewan will be pursued in the other two provinces as well.

Mr. COLDWELL: In view of what the minister has said I am not going to follow up the matter further now. I am very glad to have that statement, and later in the session we shall have an opportunity of getting some more information.

Mr. SENN: One of the most important activities of the branch, and one that I think is too little used, is the field inspection of seed crops for registration. Perhaps the minister can tell the committee what regulations are in force in regard to that inspection, how much money is used for the work, and the location of the areas where fields are inspected for seed purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry that in the statement I have before me the information is not divided up as the hon. member has asked for it. Part of the service is provided for in the first item, "communication services," at a cost of $2,500; part of it in personal services, which is to provide largely for inspections, $215,000; and part of it in transportation of persons, $52,148. These amounts cover the other item, but some other costs are included as well as the matter of personal inspection.

Mr. SENN: I was trying to get a statement from the minister as to the regulations and what is necessary before a field can be registered in this way. It seems to me that the public are not acquainted with this service, and they might very well know more about it. If the minister would make a statement as to what is necessary and as to the usefulness of it, it would be of value to the country.

Mr. GARDINER: These regulations are all laid down by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, which is an organization outside the government itself, or outside the department. We make a grant to that association, and their regulations are subject from time to time to change. I have not at the moment a copy of the regulations under my hand, and I imagine it would take some time to go over them.

Mr. SENN: The federal Department of Agriculture, rather than the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, furnishes the certificate, does it not?

Mr. GARDINER: No. It is the seed growers' association, not the department, that gives the certificate.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Is $18,900 an increase in the grant to the seed growers' association?

Mr. GARDINER: It is the same amount as has formerly been paid.

Mr. TOLMIE: We have been expending large sums of money for many years on this seed work. Is there any definite information in the department as to the direct beneficial results that come from the work?

Mr. GARDINER: There is, of course, much information available. I am not in a position to say that there is at the moment a printed document from which the information could all be obtained, but I am quite sure that one could be provided, as the hon. member, from his familiarity with the department, will understand. Those of us who are familiar with farming generally can recite many of the benefits that have come through the grading and the registering of seed and through the work of persons who are developing from time to time better seed in the different districts of the various provinces.

Mr. TOLMIE: I was inquiring for the information just for the purpose of getting it into the pages of Hansard and in that way impressing on users of seed throughout the country a fuller realization of the benefits to be derived from the use of better seed. I am sure the hon. minister and all of us who have been associated with agriculture fully recognize that it would be very beneficial to get something definite in the way of figures, or otherwise clearly indicate those advantages. I wish also to ask whether our exports of grass seeds and clover to European countries and other places have increased or decreased in recent years.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a considerable increase. I have before me the figures in some detail; I do not think it would take too long to go over them. The export of grass seed from Canada to the United Kingdom averaged, from 1930 to 1934, 54,000 pounds a year; for 1934, it was 96,000 pounds, for 1935, 10,000 pounds, and for 1936, 389,000 pounds. The percentage of increase for 1936 over the average for the years from 1930 to 1934 was 720·4 per cent; for 1936 over 1935, it was 3,890 per cent. That is a considerable increase in percentages, but, after all, when one considers the figures the amount is not as large as one might expect it to be. To the United States the average export from 1930 to 1934 was 1,676,000 pounds, a year; for 1934, the export was 871,000 pounds; for 1935, 4,629,000 pounds, and for 1936, 4,111,000 pounds. There is a slight decrease in 1936 as compared with 1935. To other countries than the United States and the United Kingdom, the average from 1930 to 1934 was 402,000 pounds a year; for 1934 the export was 336,000 pounds; for 1935, 241,000 pounds, and for 1936, 412,000 pounds. That is a little less than double for the other countries for 1936 as compared with 1935. I think it would be best to put the table on Hansard just as it is, and if that is satisfactory to the committee it will be done. Perhaps along with that, the imports should be inserted. These show a decrease. I suggest that the figures be taken as read, and the two tables be put in.

Mr. THOMPSON: On what basis are grants made to the different seed fairs? Does a fair held in connection with an agricultural society receive the same grant as individual fairs held independently?

Mr. GARDINER: I have already read the regulations in that regard, but in answer to the second question I would say, Yes; the grants are paid if the seed fair is held in conjunction with the county fairs and meets all the conditions. If that is done the subventions are paid.

Mr. TOLMIE: Have exports of barley from Canada to the United States increased very much since the removal of prohibition and the resumption of brewing in that country? Canadian barley was in great demand at one time.

Mr. GARDINER: I have under my hand figures with regard to the imports and exports. The average export of barley from Canada to the United States by crop years from 1930 to 1934 was 200,000 bushels; in 1934, the export was 223,000 bushels; in 1935, 9,296,000 bushels; in 1936, 879,000. The amount is considerably reduced in 1936 as compared with 1935.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the principal source of sugar beet seed?

Mr. GARDINER: None of it is produced in Canada; most of it comes from European countries. We get some from Germany and some from the southern states.

Mr. SENN: Can the minister give the committee any information with regard to convictions registered under the different clauses of the act in connection with adulteration?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not that information at the moment but it can be brought down. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would put a question on the order paper.

Mr. SENN: It is not a question of knowing exactly the amount. I should like to know whether infringements of the act are falling off, whether there is a better condition in the trade in that respect, or whether there is any attempt to evade the act.

Mr. GARDINER: The number of prosecutions is very small, being not more than thirty last year, which would indicate that the trade is carrying out the intent of the act particularly well.

Mr. SENN: There are two conclusions to be drawn from that statement; one is that the trade is trying to conform to the act and the other is that the act is not being enforced. Personally I believe that the trade is trying to live up to the provisions of the act, although there are always unscrupulous dealers. The act should be rigidly enforced, because the public and honest dealers ought to be protected against those who are violating its provisions.

Mr. GARDINER: The same staff is carrying on that has been enforcing the act for some time, and it is quite active in seeing that the act is enforced. When the legislation having to do with seed control comes down, it will be found that one of the matters that we are trying to tighten up is the very one referred to.

Mr. SENN: One of the grave difficulties under this act is the inspection of hay and straw at destination. Frequently farmers or shippers send a carload of hay or straw to a central depot, and after it is on the track and in the cars it has to be disposed of quickly; otherwise there are demurrage and other charges. In the event of the man to whom the hay or straw is consigned refusing to take it, the farmer or shipper suffers severe loss, especially if the price happens to have dropped. Some protection should be given the shipper in that respect, because he is at a very great disadvantage after the hay has been removed from his own station and is lying in another depot, perhaps in Toronto or Montreal. He has no recourse if the consignee stands back and says that the hay is not up to grade. The department might very well make provision to protect the shipper in that way.

Mr. GARDINER: There is at present no compulsory grading; it is done upon request. I fancy that some difficulties from a constitutional point of view would be experienced in connection with many of these sales. But there are some cases where when trouble arises it is not reported promptly to the department. If it is reported then inspection is made and everything possible done to get over the difficulty. I am sure the hon. member will realize that there are conditions especially during the winter months, affecting the shipment of hay and other fodder in this country. Sometimes the hay or other fodder is baled with a little snow in it, and if it goes where it gets warm it suffers damage. At other times when the weather is right it will go through without any damage. It is very difficult to grade and maintain the grades of a product of that kind. But the department is doing everything possible to provide protection to shippers and purchasers.

Mr. SENN: I was not suggesting that the inspection should be made and grades established at point of shipment. I realize that there may be times when hay is shipped that should not be shipped, and when it is not up to the grade represented. I think if some action were taken by the department it might assist not only the shipper but the consignee. The department might very well consider some amendment to the act, particularly as there is, I believe, a special act dealing with hay and straw, to see that both parties are more or less protected, so far as this can be done under the constitution.

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry to say that the matter which is being discussed is not regulated by the seeds act. It is governed by the hay and straw inspection act, and it is not the intention to bring that act before the house at this session.

Mr. SENN: But I understand that any inspection which is made is made under the Seed, Feed and Fertilizer Control Act.

Mr. GARDINER: No, under the hay and straw inspection act.

Mr. SENN: But is it not done by inspectors of this division?

Mr. GARDINER: The same inspectors, but they are enforcing a different act.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Does the department contemplate making available grass seed and other coverage crops for farmers affected by soil erosion? The southern part of my constituency is bounded by the international boundary. Across the line the Americans are fighting the same problem as we are, that of drought and soil erosion. Large areas there have been sown to crested wheat grass. It is yet to be seen whether the effect will be beneficial or not. Not only has the seed been made available to the farmers there, but they have actually been financed in the operation of sowing the seed. Does the department contemplate taking any step of that kind?

Mr. GARDINER: One of the chief activities under the Prairie Farms Rehabilitation Act is doing the very thing referred to by the hon. member. We are buying grass seeds in considerable quantities and distributing them in those areas. But we do not assist in the seeding; the farmers do the seeding themselves. We advise them in regard to the seeding, and have officials of the experimental farms in the vicinity of those areas, and officials under the Prairie Farms Rehabilitation Act supervise the activities to a considerable extent. There are as well in those areas, organizations, for instance, agricultural associations, which have been formed to take in considerable districts—I think there is one just south of Weyburn extending south toward Estevan—and those organizations supervise much of the work, hold meetings from time to time and discuss the best methods to be followed in re-grassing and other activities that have to do with the re-establishment of those districts.

Perhaps we could discuss this matter better when we come to the special votes for the Prairie Farms Rehabilitation Act, which will come down later in the session.

Item agreed to.

Entomology, including investigations and inspections relating to destructive insects and pests, $407,000.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Could the minister report on the situation in the western provinces, particularly Saskatchewan, in respect to possible outbreaks of cutworms and grasshoppers this year?

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps I might read a short review I have before me of the conditions existing:

Re grasshopper situation on the Canadian Prairies, 1937

From egg surveys during the autumn of 1936, following the widespread drought of the year, the general grasshopper situation for 1937 is much more serious than that for 1936, and an increase of approximately 9,500,000 acres of infested territory was shown to be present, making a total area threatened with grasshoppers in one intensity or other of some 53,000,000 acres

Increases occurred in all categories, there being some 280 square miles increase in the "very severe" zones, 6,600 square miles increase in the "severe," 6,800 square miles increase in the "moderately infested" and 1,000 square miles increase in the "lightly infested," taking the three provinces together.

The outbreak threatened in Manitoba is extremely slight compared with former years, and it is not expected that a control campaign will be necessary.

In Saskatchewan the increase is very material both in intensity and in area, and a widespread control campaign will be necessary, particularly in the northwestern part of the province, in which heretofore severe outbreaks have not been suffered.

In Alberta the promise is, if the weather is favourable for grasshoppers over a large area, that outbreaks will be as severe as any suffered during the last five years, and a widespread control campaign will be necessitated.

The prospect is that definite organized control campaigns will be necessary throughout some 12,000 square miles—7,680,000 acres—of country.

I do not think it would be fair to read this statement without comment, because it might be taken as a pessimistic prophecy as to what the crop this year might be. Those of us who have lived in western Canada and attempted to grow crops there realize fairly well that our grasshopper infestations have not invariably started their ravages in the southeastern part of the prairie sections, usually starting in the first year in the southern sections and gradually moving northward and westward. The present movement of grasshoppers started in 1931. It has been going on ever since. As this report indicates, the most difficult infestations to handle are now up in the northwestern part of Saskatchewan and on into the northern part of Alberta. Therefore, looking back over the years it would seem that we are at the end rather than the beginning of a movement against grasshoppers. However, it is most important that people be informed as to the dangers. There is always the possibility that weather conditions may help the farmer in his fight against the grasshoppers, while on the other hand they may assist the grasshoppers. We are in no position to prophesy as to what future conditions may be.

Mr. SENN: I should like to know whether the federal department carries on investigations of methods of eradication of the corn borer. I know the government of Ontario has done something in the matter. Is there any overlapping, and what is the situation so far as the corn borer is concerned?

Mr. GARDINER: We do research work, but the actual administration is carried on under the Ontario Corn Borer Act. We try to control any movement of the pest from one province to another. I am informed that the corn borer has been on the increase in the last two years, but that the problem is not nearly as serious as it was about 1925.

Mr. TOLMIE: To what does the hon. member attribute the increase?

Mr. GARDINER: Mostly to weather conditions. Like most other pests, the corn borer thrives under certain weather conditions.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is it extending far beyond the points in Ontario where it was found a few years ago?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it is extending through eastern Ontario into Quebec, and even into the maritimes, where corn is grown.

Mr. SENN: Are any preventive measures being taken by provincial governments? I understand the federal department is doing some scouting and inspection work in some of the maritime provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: Quebec has legislation similar to that in Ontario. I understand there is no legislation in the maritimes, but there is not so much corn grown there, and no serious problem at the moment.

Mr. SENN: What is the probable loss occasioned to the farmers of Ontario or of the dominion by the infestation?

Mr. GARDINER: Speaking from memory I would say that the corn crop in the southwestern part of Ontario was at one time about 14,000,000 bushels, and the corn borer did such damage that it threatened to wipe out production in that area. The introduction of the legislation in Ontario has resulted in a successful battle against the pest, and production seems to be on the increase in that province. I believe they have the pest fairly well under control. However, weather conditions sometimes cause it to increase and at other times to decrease.

Mr. SENN: Can the corn borer be spread by the importation of corn from other countries? Is there any regulation or provision which would avoid a difficulty of that kind?

Mr. GARDINER: It can be carried in the corn, and all corn coming from any country or district in which there is any degree of infestation is under examination by the department. This is for the purpose of controlling the spread of the corn borer.

Mr. SENN: Seed corn or feed corn?

Mr. GARDINER: I am told that all corn may be under examination.

Mr. MARSHALL: In the light of the fact that the grasshopper pest is serious, does the minister think a reduction in the estimate is warranted?

Mr. GARDINER: The matter of controlling grasshoppers is handled by the provinces. We have set up a research service, and our officers assist the provinces in methods of fighting and so on. However, the actual financing is done by the provinces, so that this vote is not so much concerned with the cost of fighting the grasshopper. May I add that maps are available outlining all the infested areas, and any person interested in any particular province may secure a map which would indicate clearly such areas. Information is sent out at the same time as to how best to fight the grasshopper in the area in question.

Mr. MARSHALL: Where does the minister expect to make a saving of $8,100?

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps I would do well to read a summary of increases and decreases. The first is suballotment number four, in which the increase is $1,000. It provides for an addition to Canada's contribution for 1937-38, to the Farnham Royal Parasite Laboratory, following the recommendation of the Imperial Scientific conference recently held in London, England. The grant of £950 is increased to £1,250. Then, suballotment number six, for buildings, shows a decrease of $600, as an amount not required in the year 1937-38. In suballotment number nine for personal services there is a decrease of $5,325. In 1936-37 a supplementary vote of $15,000 provided additional money for temporary field assistants. Owing to the reduction in the main estimates now presented this sum is not available. Of course there is no limit to the amount of money one could expend in fighting pests that destroy timber in certain areas, or in fighting grasshoppers. The number of personnel to be used in such a fight is limited only by the amount of money available. There is approximately $15,000 less this year than last to do that kind of work. If we should run into serious infestations of grasshoppers or any other pest, of course we would have to find ways to meet them, and get the money through a supplementary estimate.

Mr. BARBER: Has the minister a report of the investigations which have been carried out in connection with the ravages of the pea moth, which have been very serious on the lower mainland of British Columbia?

Mr. GARDINER: The pea moth is encountered mostly in British Columbia and the maritime provinces. The method of fighting this pest which is being developed at the present time is by the bringing in of parasites. These parasites are being brought in from England, through the Farnham Royal Parasite Laboratory, to which the grant goes which was referred to a moment ago. That organization is interested in the dissemination of all this sort of knowledge and as a result of cooperation between this and other countries of the world we are able to obtain these parasites and put them to work to destroy the pea moth.

Mr. BARBER: Is the experimental work carried on at the Agassiz farm?

Mr. GARDINER: Part of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Have we made any arrangement with the American states south of Saskatchewan and Alberta in connection with locusts and grasshoppers? This matter was brought to my attention just recently in South Africa. Locusts and grasshoppers sweep down from Swaziland into the union territory and I was told that unless some arrangement was made with the adjoining countries we would be labouring in vain in trying to deal with the situation. A few years ago I was told that great numbers of these pests came up from the Dakotas and Montana and proved a great menace to our crops. At that time I think it was suggested that the two countries should cooperate. I was wondering if anything had been done.

Mr. GARDINER: There always has been considerable cooperation between the United States and Canada. I understand that there is under consideration a bill before congress to provide $2,500,000 for the fighting of grasshoppers in the central western states. There is always very close cooperation between the agriculture authorities in the United States and the department here.

Mr. BENNETT: I was wondering if any action had been taken to prevent grasshoppers or locusts going from our country into the United States, or coming from the United States into Canada. It is a question not so much of general cooperation as of the actual taking of steps to deal with the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: It is very difficult to do that. I am quite sure that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), like myself, has noticed from time to time in the west that when the grasshoppers are moving they can be seen at almost any height. Even when they are not travelling thick enough to darken the skies, as they sometimes do, they can be seen at great heights. I think it was only two years ago that an aeroplane in North Dakota to the south of the Saskatchewan boundary was forced to land because of grasshoppers. It would be really very difficult to control the movement of grasshoppers between the two countries.

Mr. BENNETT: Any action that was contemplated would have to be taken before they reached that stage of development.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it has always been recognized that the grasshoppers start in the central prairie section of the United States and move north. We have always some little warning of their approach. I am not aware of any serious movement from the north to the south, although at times there has been some movement.

Mr. BENNETT: That happened two or three summers ago.

Mr. GARDINER: There is cooperation in the methods used to fight the grasshoppers at a certain stage in their life, rather than in trying to deal with them after they start moving.

Mr. TOLMIE: Has there been any evidence in Canada of the Mexican pin worm affecting tomatoes?

Mr. GARDINER: I am told that the pin worm is a new pest of southern range. It has not as yet become established in Canada. It is under investigation by the department.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is the minister referring to the Mexican pin worm?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. It is not really a pest in the sense in which we use that term, but it is being investigated with the idea of preventing its becoming a pest.

Mr. TOLMIE: What progress has been made in protecting the spruce trees of New Brunswick and other places from the sawfly pest?

Mr. GARDINER: The fight against that pest is being carried on in the same way as the fight against the pea moth, that is by introducing parasites. Some 20,000,000 of these parasites were introduced into areas in eastern Canada last year. We have an army of 20,000,000 parasites fighting the sawfly pest.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is there any evidence that your army has been victorious?

Mr. GARDINER: These parasites feed only on the pest and we have recovered numbers of the parasite which was imported. This would indicate that the parasites are becoming established and we hope they will assist in a decrease of the sawfly pest.

Mr. TOLMIE: Do they appear to be in as good condition as when they were sent out to capture the enemy?

Mr. GRAYDON: According to the last report of the Department of Agriculture mosquito control projects would come under this item. Can the minister indicate what progress has been made in the last year in this connection?

Mr. GARDINER: All our work along these lines is advisory. We carry on research work and advise the different municipalities how mosquitoes may be destroyed. The actual work of destruction is carried on by the municipalities.

Mr. TOLMIE: Has any progress been made in connection with handling the jumping flea beetle?

Mr. GARDINER: As a result of research in the department there has been developed a nicotine dust which has given good control. I think they are found mostly in British Columbia.

Mr. BARBER: Another pest found in British Columbia is the earwig, in connection with which I believe the minister was questioned last session by the late former member for Victoria, Mr. Plunkett. Can the minister give the committee any information.

Mr. GARDINER: This pest is now being fought in exactly the same way as the other two I mentioned, that is by the introduction of parasites.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister inform us as to the method of inspecting nursery stock coming into the country? What is done with the stock when it is found to be disease infested? At what ports is the inspection carried out, particularly of stock from Europe and Asiatic countries?

Mr. GARDINER: Any one bringing nursery stock into Canada must first obtain a permit from the branch. This stock is examined at all ports of entry where such shipments are admitted. If it is found necessary to do so, the nursery stock is treated in order that there may be no danger of any pest being introduced into the country. This work is checked up as carefully as possible.

Mr. SENN: Is it possible for the inspectors to detect fungus disease of different kinds and discover insect pests on shipments of nursery stock?

Mr. GARDINER: It is very difficult to inspect nursery stock for plant diseases but it can be quite easily inspected for insect pests. The department has a knowledge of the background of the well known diseases of plants that are imported, and where these are discovered, as they sometimes are, the proper measures for dealing with them are taken.

Mr. SENN: It would seem to me to be almost impossible for the inspectors to inspect all the nursery stock that comes in at certain seasons of the year. I have seen them come in; the roots are wrapped in moss and dampened, and carload after carload of that class of goods comes in. I cannot understand how it would be possible to inspect all these cargoes at all efficiently. I would ask the minister to give us some explanation of what is done in that regard.

Mr. GARDINER: Bulbs and nursery stock of that kind are not all inspected individually, of course, but samples are taken and an inspection is made. The inspectors of the department examine millions of plants every year for parasites and insects that may be destructive of plant life, and wherever plant disease is discovered, that is dealt with as well.

Item agreed to.

Health of animals, administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,819,700.

Mr. MARSHALL: Would the minister explain the very large decrease in this item?

Mr. SENN: There is a very serious reduction in the item, which is one of the most important in the whole vote for agriculture, and I think the minister should give a very full explanation of how this reduction comes about.

Mr. GARDINER: I think hon. members will recall that last year we brought down in the main estimates approximately the same amount for this purpose as we are bringing down this year. It is very difficult at this time of the year to determine what districts it may be necessary to go into to open up what are called anti-T.B. areas, and that is where the greater part of the expenditure is made. In the supplementary estimates last year we found it necessary to ask for a further appropriation of three-quarters of a million dollars. That is included in last year's vote indicated in the estimates, and must be considered when taking account of the reduction in the vote. I am not in a position at the moment, and probably shall not be until very much later in the session, to say to what extent it will be necessary for us to be active this year in fighting T.B. in new areas, but we have provision in this vote for doing everything that has been carried on previously, with the exception of the opening up of new anti-T.B. areas, and that is entirely a question of how far with the money that is available from the treasury we can go in extending the area in which T.B. is being fought. We spent a considerable amount last year partly because of the necessity of going back over the same areas again, and also because of the fact that we took in areas like that around the city of Toronto, where there was a very considerable number of dairy cattle and where there turned out to be a very considerable number of reactors. That is probably one of the most expensive areas we would have to deal with in Canada, and as that was done last year it is just possible that we may be able to get along with less than the amount spent last year. But later in the session I may have to report to the house that more money is required.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. SENN: I agree that the work of cleaning up T.B. in these areas is very important. Would the minister tell the committee how many areas are at the present time fully restricted, with fully accredited herds, how many are under accreditation or inspection, and how many applications have been made for other areas to be taken into the scheme?

Mr. GARDINER: I have under my hand a list of the fully accredited areas. In Prince Edward Island the entire province is covered, comprising the counties of Kings, Queens and Prince. They now have a percentage of less than ·5 per cent of reactors there. In New Brunswick the following counties are accredited areas: Charlotte, Madawaska, Queens, Sunbury, York, and that comprises the whole province. In Quebec nine counties have been covered, or about half the province. In Ontario, Carleton county, Kenora district, Leeds county, Prince Edward county, Russell county, have been covered. All these I have mentioned are fully accredited areas. The whole province of Nova Scotia has been gone over once, but it is not accredited until the retests are made.

Mr. KINLEY: Does that include the island of Cape Breton?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. KINLEY: Then that is not all Nova Scotia.

Mr. GARDINER: No; I apologize to my hon. friend. I should have said the mainland. In Manitoba the accredited areas are the rural municipalities of Pembina, Portage la Prairie, Rhineland and Winchester. In Saskatchewan the accredited areas are the rural municipalities of Blucher, Cory, Lost River, Montrose, Morris, Park, Vanscoy and Warman. One of the reasons why it may be found unnecessary to spend as much money this year as last is that last year in many instances we were covering new areas with the first test. This year we shall probably be making retests in districts from which the greater number of reactors have already been cleared, and on the second test we should not have so much compensation to pay out for stock destroyed.

Mr. SENN: I also asked the minister for the number of applications from other districts.

Mr. GARDINER: New districts tested this year are six counties in New Brunswick, five in Quebec, eight in Ontario, and ten in Manitoba. I am informed that these are practically all the applications we had this year, and the applications are now pretty well up to date.

Mr. HARTIGAN: How many years is it since the first test was made in Nova Scotia?

Mr. GARDINER: It was in 1927.

Mr. HARTIGAN: That is ten years ago, and I suppose after that was done the departmental officials lapsed into their usual approximation to a Rip Van Winkle existence, because since then no further effort has been made.

As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, it has received very little attention in any line, as regards expenditures or otherwise, from the federal Department of Agriculture. There has been sold to the people of Nova Scotia, even in the cities, milk coming from barns from which certainly, in the interest of public health, it should never have been allowed to be retailed in the cities. The federal Department of Agriculture has never bothered itself to take the least interest in this matter, although it has been appealed to on various occasions to protect the health of the people. Let me give one example: Ten years have elapsed from the time of the first test being started, and the second test is not yet under way. That simply means that a great deal of money has been thrown away; the first test is practically useless. This is the type of service for which the people of Canada are paying large sums of money.

Mr. KINLEY: With regard to Nova Scotia, as the minister says the first test was made in 1927. There was considerable opposition to it, so much so that local authorities did not include the island of Cape Breton, and, as I understand the situation, the island has never been subject to the test. Tests are made in conjunction with the local government, and it is hardly fair to say that the officials here have been derelict in their duty, because it was suggested that public opinion down there was not strong for a second test, although I am told opinion is growing now in its favour.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member is right in saying that there has been some little difficulty about covering Nova Scotia. Cape Breton has never applied, and of course the counties must apply before they are brought in. The other part of Nova Scotia was established as a district, and I understand that the law does not now provide for changing a district once it has been established. The whole province is the district. I understand that the Department of Agriculture have always been willing to proceed in Nova Scotia, and I am certain that they have been willing this year, because the department has written to Nova Scotia expressing a desire to go ahead with the work in that province. So far we have not been able to make satisfactory arrangements to proceed. There has to be, in connection with this activity, as with many others, some cooperation between the province and the federal authority, and there has been some little difficulty about getting the matter carried out in Nova Scotia to the satisfaction of the county interested, the provincial government and ourselves.

Mr. KINLEY: In 1927, when the test was carried out in Nova Scotia, the price of cattle was so high that it looked like confiscation to take a farmer's cattle at the valuation established by the old regulation that had been standing for so many years. Since then the condition has become such that a farmer will get more out of the test and sometimes fare better than he will by selling the cattle, so that it is more acceptable, and I think the farmers are again becoming more interested.

Mr. GRAYDON: Would the minister give us details as to the number of cattle that were tested in the Peel county area which is under the tuberculosis restrictive regulations, since the test was begun last year; also how many reactors there have been so far to that test?

Mr. GARDINER: In Peel county, 16,106 cattle were tested. There were 2,954 reactors, or 18·34 per cent. The compensation amounted to $93,230.

Mr. GRAYDON: Could the minister give us any information as to whether the tuberculin test is to be proceeded with in the two northern townships of Caledon and Albion, in the county of Peel, which I understand have not as yet been tested?

Mr. GARDINER: At the present time those townships are not prepared to have the test. There is a petition from them, but the townships have expressed a desire not to have us proceed. I think the main reason for that is, it is a feeding district and in view of those interests they are a little bit concerned about having an interruption in the entry of feeders into that area.

Mr. McNEVIN: Has the department received a request from the southern townships in the county of Victoria?

Mr. GARDINER: Victoria, Ontario?

Mr. McNEVIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: No, not yet.

Mr. McNEVIN: In view of a remark made by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) regarding the amount of money spent on the health of animals in proportion to the amount spent on the health of the people, I think it should be pointed out, though it may be generally known, that this expenditure is made, after all, in order to protect the health of the citizens of the country and not just that of animals.

Mr. GARDINER: A very important reason why we are fighting tuberculosis in cattle is to prevent human beings from getting it. The whole matter is a health movement.

Mr. KINLEY: Is not that a debatable question?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not a medical authority, but most people contend that is the case.

Mr. DOUGLAS: On what basis is compensation given to the farmer whose stock must be destroyed because it shows an unfavourable reaction to the tuberculin test?

Mr. GARDINER: It is two-thirds of the maximum value. The maximum value for grades is $60 and for purebreds, $150, which makes the maximum one can obtain for a grade, $40, and the maximum one can obtain for a purebred, $100. The cattle are all valued.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Who evaluates the grade?

Mr. GARDINER: Our veterinary inspector.

Mr. PELLETIER: How much of this work was carried on last year in Alberta?

Mr. GARDINER: No areas in Alberta applied last year. Indeed, I understand no areas in Alberta have at any time applied for this service, and none was given last year or any previous year.

Mr. PELLETIER: In view of the large reduction in this item I am wondering whether the result will be a lessening in any way of the inspection that is kept over meats and canned food products.

Mr. GARDINER: No, there is no lessening. As a matter of fact I think the hon. member will find, by an examination of the details of the vote, that it is increased, one of the reasons being that a new plant has been opened in Edmonton. Six new plants have been opened across Canada. Under our regulations all these have to be inspected, which requires a larger, not a smaller expenditure.

Mr. LEADER: I associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Victoria, Ontario (Mr. McNevin) in protesting —rather mildly, nevertheless protesting— against the remarks we sometimes hear in this house to the effect that we grant so many hundreds of thousands, or millions of dollars —though this is rather an exaggeration— for health of animals while neglecting the health of human beings. As the minister so well pointed out, this work is undertaken for the protection of human lives even more perhaps than it is for the protection of our animal life. I do not think the government is extending the operations of this work as fast as it should.

There is another disease which, in my opinion, is a greater menace than tuberculosis not only to the live stock industry but as well perhaps to the human race. I refer now to Bang's disease. This disease is spreading at a rapid rate in Canada and is assuming considerable proportions in the United States; altogether it is regarded as extremely dangerous. I wish to read a brief passage from a pamphlet sent out by the department, Bovine Infectious Abortion or Bang's Disease of Cattle. This pamphlet points out that the disease is causing heavy financial loss to the live stock and dairy industries and is a serious factor in public health problems. It goes on to say:

> A few years ago cattle were thought to be the only susceptible animals. To-day we know that this was an erroneous view and that other lower animals are subject to infection. Nor is man immune since the causative microbe attacks him, producing a serious illness known as undulant fever and on this account bovine infectious abortion is no longer only of interest to rural and cattle raising communities. The city and town dweller must give the problem a measure of attention.

I have read this passage because I view with deep concern the decrease in this grant in connection with the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I am, however, full of hope, from the remarks made by the minister, that in a supplementary estimate to be brought down later more money will be granted to cope with this disease. The department is offering to cooperate with the farmers in the eradication of the disease. It will undertake to cooperate with breeders who are willing to sign certain documents, agreeing to adhere to the rules. That is quite proper. But although the department fully realizes the danger of the disease and is willing to cooperate towards its eradication, it has not yet come to the point where it is willing to offer compensation to the live stock man who, for the sake of his family and others as well, is ready to have his animals slaughtered when they react to the test.

The government's recommendation is that the most effective way to get rid of the disease is to test animals and, if they react, to have them slaughtered. This is a hardship to live stock owners because, without compensation, the animals slaughtered represent a total loss. I believe the day is coming when the government must assist live stock owners by means of compensation in the same way as they are being assisted now in connection with bovine tuberculosis. Some people may think, as one hon. gentleman said this afternoon, it might be more profitable to have the animals slaughtered than to rear them. That is altogether a fallacy. I have had a great many years' experience in raising live stock, and while I have suffered considerable loss from bovine tuberculosis it has never occurred to me that it was cheaper or to my advantage to have cattle react and be slaughtered rather than to carry them on; the reverse is the case.

I understand that the United States are spending huge sums on investigational work in connection with this disease. I know that they are also compensating owners whose cattle are slaughtered. In the very near future, if any real remedy is to be effected, the Canadian government must also compensate live stock owners who submit to the slaughter of their cattle. I am pointing out the danger of this disease, and it is my opinion that the government should appropriate more money for investigational work.

There are two questions which I wish to ask the minister. First, is it the intention of the government to curtail operations in connection with the work for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle? Second, has the government any intention of offering compensation to owners of live stock when their cattle are slaughtered under the Bang's test?

Mr. GARDINER: The department does not intend to let up in its fight for the eradication of tuberculosis among cattle. It is possible that what may be done this year may cost less than what was done last year owing to the fact that part of the area we are going over is one that is being retested, so that the number of animals affected will not be so great in proportion to the total number tested.

As regards Bang's disease, I can only say that it is pretty much in the position that bovine tuberculosis held some years ago. When governments first started their fight against tuberculosis among cattle, I think I am safe in saying that ninety per cent of the cattle owners were opposed to any such policy. As they acquired more and more experience in connection with it, and as more information was made available, it became a more or less popular policy to carry on that work. Governments are more or less controlled by public opinion even in connection with such a matter as the fighting of tuberculosis among cattle. The answers I have given to questions regarding certain areas wanting to come in and others not wishing to do so are a fair indication that not one hundred per cent of the people are yet convinced with regard to tuberculosis. The attempt to eradicate Bang's disease, so far as our information goes, is comparatively new. The agitation with regard to fighting the disease has been effective only within the past few years.

As regards expenditures in the United States, I understand that the authorities there took advantage of the fact that they were going out to destroy a certain number of cattle anyhow under a certain policy evolved in that country a few years ago. They were going out to destroy diseased cattle and they took advantage of that policy to go ahead with the eradication of Bang's disease. My information is that they are spending something like $10,000,000 for that purpose. We in Canada are compelled, if we wish to ship breeding cattle to the United States, to have the cattle tested at the border. When we test them and find reactors to Bang's disease, these cattle are not condemned in the sense that cattle suffering from tuberculosis are condemned; we simply mark them. My experience in the year I have been in office is that it is rather difficult to continue even marking them. At the beginning we had a mark which was a large "B" on the cheek, and anyone walking into a barn and seeing a cow with that mark would know that it had reacted to the test for Bang's disease. We have ceased to use the large "B" on the cheek and now put a small "B" on the ear. That is because public opinion has not yet developed to the point that, in many instances, the people will even stand for our marking the cattle. We shall probably have to work along in pretty much the same way in regard to Bang's disease as we previously did in connection with tuberculosis in cattle. We shall have to convince at least a fair percentage of the people that the test we make is pretty nearly infallible, and does indicate whether the animal has the disease. Having convinced them of that fact, we may be able to proceed to do some other things in connection with fighting Bang's disease that at present we cannot do. But we have no intention of ceasing the fight against Bang's disease; we intend to go on by stages as public opinion permits, and to educate public opinion with regard to the matter, limited only by the amount of money this house will vote for the purpose of fighting the disease.

Mr. LEADER: My information is that the test is not infallible at all, far from it. That is one reason why I think the government should undertake further investigation in cooperation with our neighbours to the south. It is very important that this investigational work should be carried on without cessation.

Mr. BARBER: I understand the scientists to the south have developed a serum which some veterinarians in Canada claim has proved very successful, but they complain that the department will not permit it to enter this country. They tell me that it has been tested south of the line and is working very successfully. Why the department will not permit it to enter this dominion they do not understand. Would the minister explain that?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand a vaccine is under investigation in the United States, and they are attempting to develop it, but it is still in the research stage. It will be a cure for the disease rather than merely a means of diagnosis. It has not yet been proven that that serum is successful in curing the disease. I understand it is not officially used in the United States. That may be subject to correction; there may be some states in which it is. We are conducting work along the line of diagnosis.

Mr. BARBER: Is it not the intention of the department to give that serum a trial? I understand several herds across the line have been successfully treated. When one veterinary on the lower mainland undertook to carry out an experiment on a herd in that section he was not permitted to bring the serum across the line.

Mr. GARDINER: Under the biological orders there is a general regulation which prevents bringing into Canada a serum containing any living organism. It is under that regulation that this serum is not permitted to enter this country at the present time. I do not know that I can say more than that the department is keeping the closest possible check on investigations going on in the United States, and as soon as any method is proven to be effective it will be taken advantage of in Canada.

Mr. THOMPSON: What provision has the department for supervising the sale of tubercular cattle after they have been examined and branded? We know the drovers go through the country picking up these cattle; we see them shipped off to the abattoirs, and it is stated that in many cases these diseased cattle are slaughtered and sold for human food. What supervision has the department over the slaughter and sale of these condemned animals?

Mr. GARDINER: The marked cattle spoken of are shipped only under licence to abattoirs; those abattoirs are all properly inspected, and the carcasses are properly inspected there. If it is found that the diseased parts are not detrimental to the use of the other parts of the carcass for food, probably the whole animal is not condemned. But in cases where there is any danger whatsoever the animal is condemned and no part of it is used for human food.

Mr. GRAYDON: I understand that under the United States Milk Import Act certain additional requirements have to be complied with by dairies and other shippers sending milk to that country. I should like to know in what respect those requirements differ from the ones which a dairy must comply with under the ordinary Canadian regulations.

Mr. GARDINER: The ordinary Canadian regulations are mostly municipal; they vary a great deal throughout Canada. But if it is desired to have further discussion in regard to this item I shall suggest that the committee rise.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Dunning the house adjourned at six o'clock.

Monday, January 25, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S WARRANTS

On the order for motions:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), without the necessity of a motion being made, would table at an early day copies of all orders in council authorizing governor general's warrants.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I shall be glad to do that. The only reason it has not been done as a matter of ordinary routine is that the act was amended in such a way as not to involve automatic tabling.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no necessity for doing it except in response to a motion. I merely make the suggestion to avoid the necessity of making a motion.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. WILFRID LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 10, to amend the Railway Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency): This bill is introduced to clarify the jurisdiction of the board of railway commissioners in connection with telephone tolls and services, and to fix the limits within which such tolls shall be applicable. A case was submitted to the board of railway commissioners when sitting in Quebec and the chairman, the Hon. Mr. Guthrie, declared that the board was without authority to act therein and suggested that the law be amended.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DEBT TO THE PUBLIC

Mr. ESLING:

1. What is the total indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways to the public?
2. What is the total annual interest on this indebtedness?
3. What is the total indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada?
4. (a) On what portion of the indebtedness to the consolidated revenue fund is the Canadian National Railways obligated for interest; (b) what amount, if any, of this obligation is paid annually?

Mr. HOWE:

1. $1,184,612,248.59 at December 31, 1936.
2. $49,184,622.87 (1936).
3. Of the total cash expenditures by the dominion, amounting to $1,468,611,114.00 (not including interest on loans) as shown on page 7 of the Department of Railways and Canals report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1936, the following are the amounts that may be considered as charged against the Canadian National Railways:

Loans to C.N.R. (includes loans to former privately-owned roads) on which interest is accrued but not paid	$645,527,455.83*
Investment in canadian government railways	388,880,002.78
Stores and open accounts of canadian government railways	15,748,921.60
The following amounts are in suspense:

* Interest on $645,527,455.83 accrued and unpaid, to March 31, 1936, is $536,585,117.10, as shown in Auditor General's report, Volume 1, page 161, fiscal year 1935-36.

4. (a) $645,527,455.85 C.N.R. loans (non-active).
(b) Nil.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS—EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIANS

Mr. ISNOR:

1. Has the recommendation, made by the industrial and international relations committee and passed by the House of Commons at the last session, relative to the employment of a greater number of Canadians by the Canadian national steamships, as applying particularly to the Atlantic coast, been acted upon by the said Canadian National Steamship Company?
2. If so, to what extent?
3. If not, why?

Mr. HOWE: 1. The answers supplied by the Canadian National (West Indies) steamship management are as follows:

The Canadian National steamships are employing as many Canadians as possible on board all ships, and this policy has always been in effect, and at all times preference is given Canadians who have the necessary qualifications to handle the various positions involved.

2. At the present time, the number of employees afloat is as follows:

Masters and officers, 45. (All of whom are Canadian residents and British subjects; 96 per cent are Canadian born).

Pursers' department, 24. (All of whom are British subjects).

Doctors, 7. (All of whom are British subjects, the majority being Canadians).

Engineers, 85. (All of whom are British subjects, 79 of which are domiciled in Canada and 6 in the British isles).

Plumbers and electricians, 16. (All of whom are British subjects and Canadian residents; 86 per cent of whom are Canadian-born).

Carpenters, boatswains, sailors, etc., 197. (All of whom are British subjects and Canadian residents; 97 per cent are Canadian-born).

Firemen and oilers, 138. (Twenty-six are Canadian residents, 112 West Indians; 14 are white and 124 coloured).

Stewards' department, 632. (Of this number 335 are West Indians, the balance are British subjects domiciled in Canada, 90 per cent of whom are Canadian-born).

The total number of employees affoat is 1,144.

3. Answered by No. 2.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SALE OF LAND IN HALIFAX, N.S.

Mr. ISNOR:

1. Were tenders called for during the past year by the Canadian National Railways in connection with the sale of a parcel of land situated in Halifax, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, what were the names and addresses of tenderers, and the amounts of respective tenders?

3. Was said land sold; if so, to whom, for what amount, and what are the names and addresses of purchasers?

4. Has deed been given for said land?

5. If so, to whom, and what is the date of such deed?

Mr. HOWE:

1. Yes; by public advertisement in August, 1936, for 7·174 acres, fronting on Quinpool road, Halifax, expropriated by the crown in 1913, and found not to be required for railway purposes.

2. F. J. Crooks, Halifax, N.S.	$12,500
H. V. Cleveland, Dartmouth, N.S.	12,055
Fred C. Manning, Halifax, N.S.	10,200
The Melvin S. Clarke Company, Halifax, N.S.	7,800
J. E. Rutledge, Halifax, N.S.	5,500
H. Hemming, Halifax, N.S.	5,200

3. The board of trustees of Canadian National Railways by resolution of date September 4, 1936, recommended acceptance of the highest tender, that of F. J. Crooks, at $12,500. This offer was accepted and sale authorized by order in council, P.C. 2481, of September 24, 1936.

4. Yes; by letters patent, No. 30219.

5. Norwood Realties, Limited; November 27, 1936.

[Mr. Howe.]

PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK—APPOINTMENTS

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. How are appointments made to the staff at Prince Albert National park?

2. Was one Arthur Campbell employed there?

3. Is he a British citizen?

4. Are numerous unemployed ex-service men resident in the Emma Lake district denied employment when others obtain work there? If so, why?

5. On whose recommendation is such employment given?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. The civil service commission or the minister depending on the nature of employment.

2. Yes, fourteen days from October 22nd to November 7, 1936, on telephone work and 193 hours during summer fighting fires.

3. Not known.

4. Park superintendent reports he is not aware that any ex-service men resident in Emma Lake district denied employment. Five men from Emma Lake district employed last season, of which one was ex-service man.

5. Superintendent and park engineer pass on qualifications of men employed.

DISPOSITION OF IMPERFECTLY PRINTED POSTAGE STAMPS

Mr. WILTON:

1. What disposition is made of imperfectly printed air mail and other types of postage stamps?

2. Is it true that they are offered for sale to stamp collectors in England, and not offered for sale to stamp collectors in Canada?

3. If so, why are Canadian stamp collectors not given an opportunity to purchase these stamps?

4. What is the financial income to the government annually, from the sale of imperfectly printed postage stamps?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. Stamps detected as being imperfectly printed are not accepted by the department. Wastage is destroyed at the manufacturer's plant under supervision of the Post Office Department.

Occasionally slight engraving defects in one or more stamps in a sheet of one hundred are observed by philatelists or collectors after these stamps have been sold to the public. When a number of orders are received at the department for these particular stamps, an examination is made and when the defect is discovered, the stamps are placed in the philatelic section in order that they may be available to all collectors.

2. No.

3. Answered by No. 1 and No. 2.

4. Face value.

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSINGS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. What parties share in the cost of the elimination of level crossings throughout Canada?
2. In what proportion do they share this cost?

Mr. HOWE:

1. In most cases the cost is divided among the railway grade crossing fund, the railway company, and the province or municipality.

2. There is no set proportion for sharing the cost. In the majority of cases of payments coming under the railway grade crossing fund the cost is apportioned 40 per cent to the fund, 30 per cent to the railway company, and 30 per cent to the province or municipality. However, the division of cost among the railway company and the other parties may vary. Contributions up to 100 per cent of the cost of protective works may be authorized out of funds provided under votes 417 and 420, special supplementary estimates, 1936-37. In the majority of cases these funds have contributed 70 per cent and the remainder contributed by the province or municipality, or jointly by them and the railway company concerned.

HAMILTON, ONT., CUSTOMS COLLECTOR

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Was the office of chief customs inspector for the Hamilton, Ontario, district filled in order of seniority within that district?
2. If not, why?

Mr. ILSLEY: Apparently the hon. member for Wentworth refers to the position of collector of customs and excise for the port of Hamilton.

Following the established practice, the civil service commission invited applications from the permanent employees of the department located in inspection district No. 5, division "C," and from those attached to the inspection staff with headquarters at Ottawa who wished to be considered for the collectorship at Hamilton. The various applicants were rated by departmental officers on the basis of efficiency in their respective positions and their general fitness for advancement to this higher grade. The rating on seniority was fixed by the civil service commission, but seniority is only one factor in arriving at a decision. Mr. Adam Ballentine, of the inspection staff at Ottawa since 1934 but who was formerly attached to the Hamilton port for approximately twenty-eight years, being considered the best qualified candidate, was promoted to the collectorship by the civil service commission.

WAINWRIGHT BUFFALO PARK EMPLOYEES

Mr. FAIR:

1. Who is responsible for engaging and dismissing the help at the Wainwright buffalo park?
2. Is he under the Civil Service Commission?
3. When was he appointed?
4. What is his salary?
5. Is he permitted to dismiss returned soldiers whose work has been satisfactory?
6. How many men have been dismissed since October 22, 1935?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. The civil service commission or the minister, depending on the nature of the employment.

2, 3, 4, 5. Answered by No. 1.

6. In addition to the permanent supervisory, clerical and warden staff there are a number of persons employed at Buffalo national park in positions which are exempt from the operation of the Civil Service Act. All such employment is considered temporary as the personnel changes from time to time according to the labour requirements for the park. These employees may be divided into two classes, as follows:—

(a) Those who occupy seasonal positions who are employed for varying periods each year.

The superintendent's November attendance statement shows there were ten (10) of this class of employees in November last and these same ten (10) employees were shown on the attendance return for October, 1935, during which month there were fifteen (15) of such employees. The services of five (5) were dispensed with since October 22, 1935.

(b) Those who may be classed as casual labourers employed from time to time as required for short periods.

Employees in this class were engaged and retired as and when it became necessary to do so.

DEMONSTRATION FARMS—ILLUSTRATION STATIONS

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. Does the federal Department of Agriculture establish demonstration farms?
2. If so, does the said department make a grant to the proprietor of the farm which is utilized for demonstration purposes?
3. What is the amount of the grant generally given?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. The federal Department of Agriculture does not make grants to establish demonstration farms.

The federal Department of Agriculture does operate illustration stations which involve only such areas of the farmers' property as may be required for plot work for the purpose of discovering the applicability of the results of experiments on experimental farms to other localities in that region.

2. In connection with illustration stations the federal Department of Agriculture does not make any grant to the operators.

3. For small areas ranging from 8 to 25 acres, for plot work, the rental is $5 per acre, per annum. For larger areas, for rotation and cultural trials, the rental is $1 per acre per annum.

The operator in return must conduct all operations under close supervision of the departmental supervisor, do the work accurately, maintain records, and give liberally of his time to visiting farmers. The area is used for field meetings, demonstrations and to otherwise serve the agricultural interests of the locality.

MR. GALLACHER, MEMBER OF BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. LAPOINTE (Matapedia-Matane):

1. Did Mr. Gallacher, member of the House of Commons in England, come to Canada during the last twelve months, and, if so, how long did he stay in our country?
2. What was the purpose of his visit?
3. Did the government receive any protests against his admission into Canada?
4. Is the government aware that he gave lectures or made addresses in favour of communism?
5. If so, did the government take any steps to prevent him?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. Yes. The exact length of his visit is not known.

2. Was admitted as non-immigrant. The department has no information as to the purpose of Mr. Gallacher's visit otherwise than as a visitor. It has always been the Canadian custom to extend courtesies to members of the British House of Commons or other persons in a similar position, in the same way as similar courtesies are extended to the members of the Canadian House of Commons.

3. Yes—one.

4. No.

5. Answered by number 4.

REVENUE DERIVED BY PROVINCES FROM DOMINION AND BY DOMINION FROM PROVINCES

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River):

1. How much revenue, directly and indirectly, was derived, in 1935 and 1936, by the dominion treasury from Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia, respectively?
2. How much revenue, directly and indirectly, have Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia, respectively, derived from the dominion treasury in 1935 and 1936?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, this is a question which it is impossible to answer. I have no means of securing this information accurately.

Question dropped.

WAINWRIGHT BUFFALO PARK FARM SUPERVISOR

Mr. FAIR:

1. Who is the present farm supervisor at Wainwright buffalo park?
2. What is his salary?
3. On whose recommendation was he appointed?
4. Had he any previous experience?
5. If so, how long?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. D. H. Folkins.

2. $1,800 per annum.

3. Owing to the conditions existing at the park and among the animals it was considered advisable to secure the services of a technical agriculturist and the present incumbent was chosen because he possessed these qualifications.

4 and 5. Graduate of the Vermilion School of Agriculture, also Bachelor of Scientific Agriculture, from the University of Alberta.

For over six years has taken active part in management of 2,000 acre farm and 300 head of live stock at Chauvin.

HAMILTON, ONT., FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OFFICES

Mr. LENNARD:

1. What departmental offices of the federal government in Hamilton, Ontario, are not housed in the new Federal Building, or other buildings owned by the government?
2. Where are they located?
3. What rentals are being paid for the premises they occupy?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. (a) Post Office Department (handling of mails); (b) National Defence Department (R.C.N.V.R.); (c) National Defence Department (armoury).

2. (a) Canadian National railway station; (b) 41 Stuart street; (c) 242-246 James street North.

3. (a) $3,750 per annum; (b) $1,500 per annum; (c) $2,200 per annum (lease to be terminated January 31, 1937).

MARKET GARDENING PRODUCTS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. What was the approximate value of market gardening products produced in Canada during the year 1936?
2. What percentage of this was produced by Ontario growers?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $20,000,000.

2. Approximately 50 per cent.

FRENCH VILLAGE, N.S., WHARF

Mr. BROOKS:

1. Were certain repairs made to the government wharf at French Village in the county of Halifax, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936?

2. If so, what was the (a) cost of material; (b) cost of labour?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

2. (a) $699.80; (b) $562.18.

CUBAN DUTY ON CANADIAN SEED POTATOES

Mr. BROOKS:

1. Was a duty of $10 per barrel recently imposed by the Cuban government upon Canadian certified seed potatoes entering that country?

2. If so, on what date was this duty to take effect?

3. Has the Canadian government or any department thereof made any representations to the Cuban government with the object of having the duty removed or lowered?

4. If representations were made, what was the nature of such and to what effect?

Mr. ROGERS:

(1) The Cuban tariff provides that whole potatoes, of the varieties: Bliss Triumph, Green Mountain, Irish Cobbler, Presidente (Never Rot), certified to be seed, and imported to be used exclusively for seed with formalities and guarantees established by the treasury department, are duty-free when imported from September 1 to January 31 inclusive of each year. Potatoes certified to be seed, cut in pieces, with eyes plainly visible, preserved in ashes or other substances, are duty-free all year. Potatoes from Canada which do not come within the aforementioned categories are dutiable at $10 per 100 kilogs. (220·4 pounds) gross weight, if imported between November 1 to June 30, and $8 if imported during the other months of the year. While there has been no recent change in the actual duty, a Cuban decree gazetted January 18, 1937, not to be enforced pending a further decree, proposed an alteration in the nature of the bond previously required as a guarantee that potatoes would be used for seed. The new decree called for a cash deposit or bank guarantee that the seed would be planted in Cuba within three months. The cash deposit or bank guarantee presumably contemplated the amount corresponding with the rate of duty leviable in the event of the regulations for free entry of seed potatoes not being met. A further decree gazetted January 21 removes any difficulties arising out of the decree of January 18.

(2) Answered by No. 1.

(3) Yes.

(4) A Cuban law of March 15, 1935, provides that countries which purchase from Cuba less than 25 per cent of their sales to Cuba shall be subject to the maximum tariff; if purchasing between 25 per cent and 50 per cent of their sales to Cuba, subject to the minimum tariff, increased by 25 per cent; if purchasing 50 per cent or more of their sales to Cuba, subject to the minimum tariff. In pursuance of this, Cuba as from March 10, 1936, applied her maximum tariff to Canada. except as regards some goods specially excluded from its scope, with the result that the maximum tariff rates quoted above apply to Canadian potatoes not admitted duty-free under the provision for certified seed potatoes. The maximum tariff is twice the minimum.

Representations have been made by the Canadian government to the Cuban government seeking removal of the maximum tariff on the ground that Cuban statistical returns do not give Canada credit for as large purchases of Cuban goods as are shown in Canadian statistics and also that Canada purchases Cuban goods in the United States. Negotiations are still proceeding for the conclusion of an arrangement which will remove Canadian products from liability to the Cuban maximum tariff.

PERPETUAL BOND ISSUES

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. How many "perpetual bond" issues have been negotiated by the federal government, and for what amounts?

2. What were the rates of interest, and the commissions to brokers on each?

3. What are the annual brokers' commissions for bond flotations for the years 1926 to 1936 inclusive?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. One, $55,000,000.

2. 3 per cent interest rate; commission paid to banks, brokers and dealers—three-quarters of one per cent.

3. Commissions paid to banks, brokers and dealers, fiscal year ended March 31:

1926	$1,318,500 00
1927	730,650 00
1928	....
1929	....
1930	....
1931	1,604,000 00
1932	4,559,449 53
1933	796,485 00
1934	2,602,608 02
1935	2,018,268 96
1936	3,135,476 50

C. P. FULLERTON

Mr. LEADER:

1. When was C. P. Fullerton appointed to the bench: (a) how long did he serve, and (b) what was the amount of salary received?
2. When was C. P. Fullerton appointed as chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada: (a) how long did he serve, and (b) what was the total amount of his remuneration?
3. When was C. P. Fullerton appointed chairman of the board of trustees of the Canadian National Railways, and what was the amount of his salary?
4. Did C. P. Fullerton receive a gratuity in addition to his salary as chairman of the above board; if so, what was the amount of this gratuity?
5. Is provision being made for granting a pension to C. P. Fullerton; if so, what is the amount of his pension?
6. Will the receipt of this pension preclude Mr. Fullerton from practising his profession in Canada?

Mr. HOWE:

1. July 20, 1917; (a) until August 12, 1931; (b) $7,000 per year from date of appointment until July 1, 1921, when salary was increased to $9,000.
2. August 12, 1931; (a) until December 31, 1933; (b) salary as chief commissioner was $12,500 per annum; total remuneration received was $27,617.60.
3. January 1, 1934, at $30,000 per annum.
4. Following his retirement as chairman of the board of trustees, he received a remunerative payment of $30,000 from Canadian National Railways.
5. He is entitled to a pension of $6,000 per annum as a former judge.
6. No.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD

Mr. GOSSELIN:

1. If the loan records of the Canadian Farm Loan Board at Ottawa are not kept by constituencies, or, at least, by counties where registry offices are established, are such records kept by counties at the Quebec branch office?
2. If such records in and for the province of Quebec are not kept by counties at the Quebec branch office, why are they not so kept?
3. If such records in and for the province of Quebec are not kept by counties at the Quebec branch office, is it the intention, (a) to have such records in and for the province of Quebec kept, in the future, by counties, and (b) to have them compiled by counties for at least the years 1935 and 1936?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. No.
2. Records are not required by the board in this form for the purposes of administration and the additional expense involved in maintaining such records has not accordingly been considered as warranted.

[Mr. Dunning.]

NATIONAL PARK, NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. RYAN:

1. Did the government of the province of New Brunswick notify the dominion government that a site for the establishment of a national park had been selected?
2. If so, what site has been selected?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. No. A parks officer has investigated certain sites suggested by the province for consideration but no selection has been made.
2. Answered by No. 1.

OLD AGE PENSIONS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. RYAN:

1. How many persons have qualified for old age pensions in the province of New Brunswick?
2. Of this number, how many are being paid the maximum amount of $20 per month?
3. What amount of money has the dominion government paid the province of New Brunswick under the Old Age Pensions Act?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. 9,986 (July 1 to December 31, 1936).
2. At December 31, 1936, the number receiving $20 a month was 605. Number of pensions on December pay-lists, 9,617.
3. $559,271.96.

BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

Mr. PINARD:

1. What progress has been made to date with the Book of Remembrance?
2. How many names have been inscribed therein to date?
3. What is the total number of names to be recorded?
4. Who prepared the official list of names?
5. When is it expected to complete the book?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. All materials, with the exception of leather for binding the cover of the book, have been procured and are in stock. The names of all Canadians who died whilst serving with the Canadian Expeditionary Force have been compiled. The names of Canadians who died whilst serving with the British Forces are being compiled. The illuminating of the title and dedicatory pages is well in hand, and the illumination of the name pages has been commenced.
2. 40,140 names have been inscribed by hand.
3. Approximately 66,990.
4. The Department of National Defence.
5. 31st March, 1939.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

REGINA RIOTS—COSTS OF INQUIRY

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. What was the total cost to the dominion and provincial authorities in connection with the inquiry into the Regina riots during the year 1935?

2. What was the total cost to the dominion authorities in this connection?
3. What are the names of those who were employed by the dominion government in connection with this inquiry?
4. What payments were made to each of the said counsel, (a) during the fiscal year 1934-1935; (b) during the current fiscal year?

IMMIGRATION

Mr. BERTRAND (Prescott):

1. How many immigrants have entered Canada each month from February 1, 1936, to January 1, 1937?
2. Were they all natives of the country from which they migrated to Canada?
3. What was the country of origin of each such person?

GOLD RESERVE

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River):

1. How much gold reserve is held by the dominion treasury?
2. How much currency is issued by each chartered bank?
3. How many loans are issued by each of such banks?
4. How much currency is issued by the Bank of Canada?
5. How much does it cost to operate the Bank of Canada?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in asking that this question stand as an order for return, I should like to point out that the information asked for in some of the questions is not in the possession of the government and, therefore, cannot be given. The return will be made as completely as possible.

C. P. FULLERTON

Mr. LEADER:

Was C. P. Fullerton, K.C., ever employed by the federal government, and, if so, in what capacity; (1) how long was he employed; (2) what was the amount of his remuneration?

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. RYAN:

How much money was contributed by the dominion government to the province of New Brunswick during the years 1935-1936 for (a) direct relief; (b) dominion and provincial projects to create employment?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

QUEENS COUNTY, N.B., PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all pay rolls showing money expended and to whom paid, on certain public works carried out in the parish of Cambridge, Queens county, New Brunswick: (a) on Humphries wharf; (b) on Motts wharf.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.S., PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all pay rolls showing money expended and to whom it was paid, in connection with certain public works carried out in district No. 10, Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, in the year 1936, on: (a) breakwater built at Eatonville; (b) public works at West Advocate.

MILL COVE, N.B., POSTMASTER

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all papers, affidavits, evidence, correspondence and other documents concerning the dismissal of Mr. Charles Orchard, former postmaster at Mill Cove post office, Queens county, New Brunswick, together with a statement of cost of investigation showing to whom money was paid.

FISHING BOUNTY PAYMENTS

Mr. DONNELLY (for Mr. Kinley):

For a copy of orders in council relating to the payment of fishing bounty prior to April 26, 1922, and also order in council in effect after April 26, 1922.

SHERBROOKE, QUE., ASSISTANT CUSTOMS AND EXCISE INSPECTOR

Mr. LACOMBE (for Mr. Lalonde):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents relative to the appointment by the Civil Service Commission of an assistant bilingual inspector of Customs and Excise for the district of Sherbrooke, province of Quebec, and bearing the examination number 25508.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RIVIERE DU LOUP—GASPE DISTRICT TIE CONTRACTS

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspe) moved

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between C. P. MacLaren, purchasing department, Canadian National Railways, Montreal and J. A. Romeo Lynch, Matapedia, Quebec, in connection with tie contracts granted by the Canadian National Railways in the district from Rivière du Loup to Gaspé, since 1930 to date. Also a statement showing the names and addresses of contractors and the amount of each contract.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this motion refers to correspondence between the purchasing department of the Canadian National Railways and one of its contractors. It is the practice of the government, in the case of its independently managed corporations, to ask the corporation for the information desired, and to table it if the corporation cares to give it. In this case the Canadian National Railways have followed their usual practice of refusing to give the information sought. I would say, however, that the officers of the Canadian National Railways appear during each session before the special committee on railways and shipping prepared to answer any questions relating to internal management of the railway property and the hon. member can obtain the information at that time.

Motion dropped.

SALMON TRAP NETS

DESIRABILITY OF DISCONTINUING ISSUE OF LICENCES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA WATERS

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the best interests of British Columbia would be served by the government ceasing to issue trap fishing licences in British Columbian waters.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the importance of this matter to the fishermen of British Columbia, the urgent need for immediate action, and the fact that there is an international angle to the situation is I think justification for my bringing the matter up at this time.

May I digress for a moment to suggest to the government that the business of this chamber would be expedited and the consideration of such matters as the one before us even better undertaken if we went back to the old custom when the present leader of the government was in power a number of years ago, when it was usual for the Minister of Fisheries or the chairman of the fisheries committee to move at the beginning of the session that the report of the fisheries department be referred to the committee on fisheries. In that way we would be able to bring before that committee practically any matter connected with the fishing industry without its having to be formally referred there by this house. If some member brought before the committee a grievance that found few sympathizers in the committee the matter ended there and the house was not troubled with it, but if the grievance was shown to be a substantial one the committee would bring in a report to be dealt with in the house. But the rule now is to consider nothing whatsoever in the committee that has not been referred to it by the house. That forces members who have a matter such as I have before me to bring it up here for discussion in a superficial way before members many of whom are not interested in the subject, and then perchance have it sent to the committee where the performance has to be gone through all over again. It would save the time of this house if we were allowed to discuss these matters originally, so to speak, in the committee.

Coming to the motion now before the house, I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible. There are four major methods of fishing salmon in British Columbia—trolling, gill netting, purse seining, and trapping.

Trolling, which must not be confounded with the system of trawling as practised on the Atlantic, is always done by one man in a small boat; it might be a row boat, but the great majority of them are boats from eighteen to thirty feet in length, powered with an engine, and the boat is kept moving along slowly, dragging behind it from five to seven lines with baited hooks attached to catch the fish. In that way they get the best quality of the particular kind of fish that they can fish for, and they get the best market, as principally it goes to the fresh fish market. I think it is safe to say that in that way there is a bigger return for the individual fisherman per fish than there is by any other method that we practise out there. The trolling is restricted by certain difficulties. First of all, only two or three varieties of salmon will take the hook or bait in that way. Secondly, the weather very often prevents them fishing for three or four days at a time. Thirdly, even when they are fishing they are limited, because the fish will bite at only certain hours of the day. Their gear naturally occupies a very small space; that is to say, the width of it, if they are running through a school of fish, would be only twenty or thirty feet, so there is no possible fear of the fish being depleted by means of trolling.

The next method is that of gill nets, which is very often done by the same men in the same boat at a different season of the year. They have a long net which is buoyed in an upright position by floats, and it drifts down with the current or the tide. The mesh is made of a size that when the fish endeavour to go through they will be caught by the gills, and so they are taken. The government by regulation says that the mesh shall be such that only the biggest and finest fish are taken. The length of the net is very strictly defined. They can fish only at night, —not by law, but that is the only time they can operate. There is a forty-eight hour close season each week, with power to the chief supervisor to extend it if necessary to a greater number of hours. They are allowed to put a net only so close to another—I think they must be one hundred yards apart. So it is obvious that there, too, the fish have an ample chance to escape. It is recognized that both these methods permit the salmon every opportunity to get away. The policy of the government for many years past has been to encourage this and rather to curtail fishing by means of seines of which I will speak in a minute. But of course they are conscious of the fact that certain waters under certain conditions can be fished only by means of seines.

The next method is that of purse seines. They use larger boats with a crew of as many as seven men. They have a large net, 200 fathoms long—nearly a quarter of a mile. They fish almost entirely by day. When they see signs of a school of fish they let out the net and make a wide circle, bringing the end of the net around to where it started from. Then they hastily pull the purse part of it, that is the rope at the bottom, which closes in the fish, otherwise the fish would dive and escape the net. It is something like the old-fashioned lady's coin purse that used to be used. Suppose the fish are schooled, that is gathered together, and are at the mouth of the river where they are getting ready to go up and spawn; if there were nothing to prevent it the fishermen would go right to the mouth of the river and ruin the catch in one year—certainly in two, because they take practically ninety per cent of the fish—and it would be ten or fifteen years before the run would recover. Consequently the government makes rules to prevent the seines from going within half a mile of the mouth of the river, and in some cases debar them for as far as two miles. They may take a few score or several thousand fish at one turn of the net, and they take everything that is inside the net—trout and every other kind of fish that happens to be there. Consequently the government saw fit, and properly so, to put heavy restrictions on these operations. The fishing can be done only by daylight: that is not a regulation but a fact, because they cannot fish by night. They have a forty-eight hour weekly close season imposed on them, and more if deemed necessary. They are not allowed to tie their nets to the shore, which would multiply by a hundred per cent their ability to fish, as traps do; and if they do so they are liable to a heavy penalty and their boat and gear are confiscated. They are allowed only twenty minutes from the time their net touches the water until it must be closed; if it is open beyond that time they are subject to a penalty. All this is calculated to restrict their activities and give the fish, or at least some of them, a fighting chance to escape. The length of the net is very sharply defined; so is the mesh, and the superintendent can close their operations at any time on the most summary notice; he can declare a whole area closed to seine fishing.

Now we come to traps, and that is a very different picture. There the butter is all on one side of the bread. Fish traps well located are the blue ribbon of the fishing industry. What a marshal's baton is to the soldier, or the supreme court bench to the lawyer, or the senate to the politician, so is a well established fish trap to the fishermen of the Pacific coast. Of course these paradises are hard to achieve entry into. The scripture says "many are called, but few are chosen." Perhaps I might paraphrase that by saying that many call and only a few can be chosen. However it is the one highest ambition, the blue ribbon of the industry, to get hold of a well located fish trap site. It is generally admitted, perhaps not by those who actually use it, but even by those who would like to get one, that it is a most destructive form of fishing. The owners call it "effective," which it undoubtedly is; other people call it ruinous. It takes everything and leaves nothing behind it. There is no escape. Once a fish gets within half a mile in front of one of these traps there are only two ways by which he can evade the trap. One is by climbing around it at the end, by the shore, on the land, making a portage around; the other is equally impossible, in so far as the instinct of the salmon is involved, that is to turn and go back, because the salmon are full of the homing instinct to go on to the river or the creek where they will spawn, and nothing will divert them from that. If they cannot go forward they will stay there and die, for they certainly will not go back.

The trap is built right out from shore as no other gear is. It is pegged out by a row of poles driven in the ground, and hung with a heavy net—in many cases a wire net—closely meshed so that it is impossible for the salmon to get through it. There is no limit to the length they can go out; they can go a mile if they like, provided it is convenient. When the fish come along there is a solid wall that obstructs their progress. Usually it is put at a headland, where the fish are going along hugging the corner, much as a man will do who is driving along a road and, turning to the right, naturally keeps to the right side of the road. So the fish, hugging the headland, run up against this obstacle. They try to go through it; they nose along, go, say, to the left, and run against the shore; then they turn to the opposite side, the right, and nose along, pushing, pushing, trying to get through, following their instinct. Presently they come to a nice open space, with no apparent obstruction. Naturally they go in there, thinking they are getting along, and presently they find themselves in the pot of the trap, in the centre of a maze from which there is no escape whatever. And that is the end.

These traps are "lifted," as it is called, once or twice a day. Sometimes they take ten thousand fish in a lift, and it has been known to go as high as thirty thousand. But even at ten thousand, with two lifts a day, and only four or five men being employed, is it to be wondered that there is agitation and prejudice, in these days of unemployment, among those interested in the fishing industry in British Columbia against such methods? It would take two hundred trollers to catch that number of fish. And they take everything; there is no discrimination: small, immature fish—all go into the trap. The other means of gear can fish only twelve hours on account of the weather, or between daylight and dark, and those operating them have to go out and find the fish, which may take half of their open hours, but the trap owner need only to sit tight and wait and the fish will come to him twenty-four hours of the day. The gill netting and seining have a forty-eight hour restriction per week, and so has the trap; but the others are liable to further restrictions, and the trap is not. Some years ago it was found necessary to have a complete ten days' shut-down in the middle of the season on gill netting and seining on the coast in order to encourage conservation, but it did not apply to this favoured method known as trap fishing.

I said it was effective, and so it is. So is a gun in the hands of a madman very effective. It has been said that it is cheap. Well, it is cheap—it is cheap if you care not for the conservation of fish or for the maintenance of the fishermen employed in the industry. So is an automatic shot gun cheap and effective, but you are not allowed to use one when you go duck-hunting. A machine gun would be effective against deer and bigger game, but you are not allowed to use one. Why are you not allowed to use salmon roe as bait for trout? Because it is recognized to be so effective that it would not give the trout a chance; it would not give them an even break, so to speak, and it is therefore forbidden by law.

I might mention the views of someone else, because sometimes an outsider's view is more readily accepted than the opinions of those who are interested. The salmon industry of Alaska is an enormous one, and before the last change of government it was supervised by one man, a man named O'Malley. He was a very able man, and I have a note to the effect that it was his intention to close fifty-one traps in southeastern Alaska that year. In his opinion, he said, he might find it necessary to close down the whole lot of them there. Then the government changed and a Mr. Frank Bell took over Mr. O'Malley's position. He was a man with a new angle and this is what he said:

> Fish traps for the taking of salmon were described here by Frank Bell, United States commissioner of fisheries, as the "most vicious type of gear in operation."

That is pretty plain, and that is not my idea.

> —because they are driven along the shore lines in locations where they may interrupt the runs of salmon twenty-four hours a day.
>
> "It is only a question of time until they must be eliminated entirely or regulated, so they will not be so destructive," he said.
> "I have already closed 100 of the 400 traps operating in Alaskan waters during my first year in office, and I am in favour of eliminating them all.

Further on he says:

> By giving the seine fishermen a chance, we will be giving work to hundreds who have been practically forced to the wall by the traps. Two men with a trap can catch as many fish as twenty-five men with a seine.

It is so generally admitted to be a bad thing that the dominion government have forbidden the use of traps except along the Sooke shore. An attempt was made in 1929 to open them again and a debate took place on the subject. That debate can be readily referred to if hon. members will look up Hansard of June 10, 1929. There was considerable discussion in which members from various districts took part, and all, regardless of political affiliations, and representing parties in every part of the house, made such a vigorous protest against the use of traps that the government abandoned the idea of reintroducing them, with the exception of those along the Sooke shore. I will explain why they were permitted at Sooke.

The large body of sockeye salmon going into the Fraser river come down the west coast of Vancouver island, and down the Juan de Fuca straits between British Columbia and the American side. At first they come down along the territory known as the Sooke shore and then for some reason they strike across from there to the other side of the straits and move along the American shore for a considerable distance. They do not go up the American rivers, however; they are still Fraser river fish and they go nowhere else. That is where the Americans put their traps for our fish, and the average, for the years 1933 and 1934, was 219 traps. Then what is left of our salmon come back into our territorial waters, going into the Fraser river. In the last year of which there is record, when they were running their traps—and this was the usual average—United States traps took from seventy-two to seventy-nine per cent while British Columbia fishermen took from twenty-one to twenty-eight per cent.

The Americans naturally took advantage of their geographical position, and it was therefore felt that if they were to get seventy-nine per cent of the fish it would be better to allow our fishermen to catch some by traps along the Sooke shore. For that reason the traps were allowed to remain at Sooke. Still, we did not like the idea of the Americans taking seventy-nine per cent while we got the rest, but there was nothing that we could do about it. Diplomacy failed and at last common sense sought the remedy. Our fishermen fraternized with the Americans on common ground beyond the three mile limit and said to the Americans, "If you will agitate for the abolition of traps on your side we will do the same." The Americans did so and they were more successful than we were. It was up to them to take the first step, and in the fall of 1934, by means of the initiative, they passed a law forbidding the use of traps in those waters —one of the few instances in which the principle of the initiative proved to be a good thing. The powerful vested interests which we hear so much about may be able to lobby a legislature but they cannot lobby a whole state, and the result was that the bill went through like lightning before these people knew what was happening. As soon as that was done I tried to get our traps cut out for 1935-36. The late government hesitated, waiting to see whether the Americans would really withdraw their traps, and therefore I could not get action taken either in 1935 or in 1936.

We know now what effect the withdrawal had. Two things resulted—conservation of fish and profit to our fishermen. Let me give you an illustration. I have taken the two last years before the United States gave up their traps and the next two years immediately thereafter; that is to say, the years 1933 and 1934 when they had traps as compared with 1935 and 1936 when they had not. I will not trouble the house with detailed figures; I will simply give the results. The total catch of Fraser River sockeye salmon, including what was taken by our traps at Sooke, what was caught by our fishermen in the Fraser river, and all that was taken in the American waters by seine and by traps, where traps were formerly in use, represented —in the two years when traps were not allowed on the United States side—a decrease of forty-five per cent. In other words, forty-five per cent less was taken in the years when the Americans had given up their traps than in the two years before that. It may be said that this makes for conservation at the cost of employment, which would be undesirable; but that is not so. Let us look at our side of the question.

I have a record of the fish we took in the years when they had their traps and in the years when they had no traps, and our fishermen, according to this record, took exactly twenty-six per cent more when the traps were not running on the American side, because the fish got through into our waters again. So that we find the total catch reduced by forty-five per cent, while our British Columbia fishermen and canneries got twenty-six per cent more. That is rather profitable, is it not?

We have had numerous petitions on the subject; I had one some years ago.

Mr. TOLMIE: What were the years mentioned by the hon. member?

Mr. NEILL: The years 1935 and 1936 as compared with 1933 and 1934, the two years after the traps had been abandoned as compared with the last two years during which they were in operation. Some years ago a petition was drawn up, signed by 1,500 fishermen and presented to the government of the day, asking for the abolition of traps. The government refused owing to the situation that I have outlined and which has now ceased to exist. And that is my argument. Then I have resolutions passed by the Kyuquot Trollers' Cooperative Association, one passed in June, 1935, at their annual meeting and one passed this last year. This is a very fine, energetic cooperative body, having 288 members, all owning their own boats and gear. I read the second resolution:

> Whereas the salmon traps are the most destructive fishing gear in use, by intercepting the entire shoal of salmon, not ensuring a proper escapement for spawning, and by destroying immature and yearling salmon, bottom fish and any species of fish that may run foul of their leads;
> And whereas a trap licence is an exclusive privilege to fish a certain location twenty-four hours a day;
> And whereas other types of gear are licensed to fish in waters open to all, and with frequent closed periods for conservationary purposes;
> And whereas the district of Sooke where the only traps in British Columbia now are located would afford ideal fishing grounds for seiners, thus increasing employment;
> And whereas all Puget Sound, Washington traps are now eliminated;
> Be it therefore resolved that all salmon traps be completely eliminated.

I have a similar resolution passed by the Pacific Coast Fishermen's Union, British Columbia section. They have a local in Vancouver numbering, they say, 800 fishermen, and they have locals up the east coast of the island as well. They take the same line, and I shall not repeat that portion; it is practically the same. They point out that the traps were taken out by the Americans for purpose of conserving the sockeye run, so why are they allowed to operate in British Columbia waters? A hard question to answer. And they say that if the traps are made legal again in Washington it will work a hardship on both Washington and British Columbia fishermen. Then they deal with employment. They say:

> At present the operation of traps on the west coast of Vancouver Island employs about forty workers...There are no fishermen operating in the immediate area of Sooke, where the traps are located, owing to their being unable to market their fish to the company owning the traps, who will not buy any fish from an individual fisherman, as they can get the fish from the trap much cheaper. At the present time if the traps were not operating there would be ample fish caught by fishermen to supply at least two hundred fishermen with a decent livelihood and a fair return for their work and capital investment for the year round, instead of having a few that are seasonally employed as now.

Concerning conservation they say:

> Owing to the peculiar make-up of a trap net, all sizes and species of fish are caught, from the smallest to the largest. As the canners are only interested in the salmon for canning, it is a fact that many scowloads of ground fish, herring and pilchard are taken from the trap each year and are killed in the operation of cleaning the trap. This is the case with young salmon that are too small to be canned, and all these fish are taken to deep water and dumped. This in our opinion is wanton and useless waste of our natural resources.

For these reasons they ask that fish traps be abolished. And of course I have others, I am only giving illustrations.

This is our last chance. The legislature of Washington state is now sitting and there is active propaganda of the most intensive character being waged there to have fish traps again allowed. It is inevitable that that law will be repealed and the traps allowed again if we do not let it be known very shortly that we are going to meet them half-way and play the game. Half-way is a ridiculous statement, considering that we would be cutting out four traps this year, five last year on our side, and 219 were done away with on the American side. We are only asked to do the same as they are doing. We have so much to gain and so little to lose by meeting them. Pressure is being brought to bear on that legislature, according to my information, and the strongest argument they can bring is that they made a gesture to Canada and Canada has not responded. It is not a breach of treaty; there was no bargain; it was just a gesture, but we have not responded. We recall other cases where nations made a gesture, in the way of reciprocity in tariffs or disarmament, and when the other party to whom the olive branch was held out did not respond it always resulted in resentment and in the nation making the original gesture going back to conditions more drastic than before. And so it will be here.

Another point. We are negotiating now and have been for years to make a reciprocity deal with the Americans in regard to the Fraser river, to take joint action along certain lines for the conservation of the fish. There are firebrands on both sides of the line, people who for their personal advantage are quick to make use of any passing prejudice. There are men on the other side of the line who will be quick to use this argument and say: They threw us down about the traps at Sooke; we can't trust perfidious Albion; do not make a treaty as regards the Fraser. It certainly would have a bad effect in respect to that. If we fail to act in this matter now, and the Washington legislature repeal their legislation, the blame will rest on this government or on this house.

There is one thing more, and I commend it to the notice of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie), who is British Columbia's representative in the cabinet and responsible to us in British Columbia for the cabinet. I tell him this: if we allow these traps at Sooke to be continued in spite of the fact that the Americans have done away with the traps on their side—and they were allowed only because of the traps on the American side—if we do not follow suit, if we allow the traps to stay there, in logic and reason we cannot refuse traps all over British Columbia. I have letters and correspondence and resolutions from the canners' association, asking to be allowed to have traps all over British Columbia. The government is not now in a position to say: We will draw the line and forbid traps all over except at Sooke, but will allow them at Sooke alone; because now there is no justification or excuse for having them at Sooke. Therefore if we continue to allow them at Sooke we will be asked to allow them all over British Columbia. If we do that it is not a question of throwing a few men out of employment, a dozen or a score or a hundred; it is a question of 11,000 men, because the whole fishing industry will then be carried on by means of traps. This is the point to which I want to direct the attention of the Minister of Defence. With the shadow of war hanging over us, as it is to-day and all the time, in the east and elsewhere, the minister will surely take a little comfort from the fact that he has on that Pacific coast, fronting the far east, a comparatively large number of fishermen who are loyal to Canada and who are familiar with every bay and headland in that area. They know where every rock is, every bar—bars of gravel or sand I mean; possibly they know of the other kind too. Their local knowledge is invaluable. They know where to put mines; they know how to aid our warships or obstruct those of the enemy. If this thing goes through and traps are allowed all over, those men are put out of business, and you cannot bring them back in a day or a month. What does the poet say?—

> —a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

When our day of tribulation comes it will be too late to say: We wish we had treated these fishermen in such a way that they could have maintained their position and usefulness in case of need. If we surrender to this demand for traps, and these men are wiped out, you cannot get much loyalty from a trap built of piles and wire netting. In time of war a fish trap is not of much use as a weapon either of offense or of defence. To some it may seem that I am exaggerating, or trying to be melodramatic, but it is not so. We who live on the Pacific coast know how familiar with our shores are certain powers fronting on the Pacific, and we know how desirable and urgent it is to maintain a white front line on that ocean. Therefore I urge the government, for these and many other reasons which I could mention if time permitted, to make a pronouncement immediately so that it may have its effect on the legislature sitting in Washington state and induce them to continue their ban on traps.

As I have said, we have everything to gain and so little to lose. A few men will be put out of work, yes; thirty or forty men will be put out of work, but hundreds and hundreds will get work instead. The fish must be caught; they will not be allowed to run away. Other lines of fishing will take the place of this. It will be argued, I know, and I may as well anticipate it, that there is a cannery at that point which exists solely through this type of fishing, and which would go out of existence if the traps were taken away. That is rather a curious thing. They have a privilege which is denied to every other cannery. There are some forty-eight canneries operating in British Columbia; forty-seven of them can exist without traps, but one, and one alone, says that it will go down to ruin and financial destruction if it is not permitted to retain this privilege which it has enjoyed for so many years, in fact since 1904. Is that not about long enough to have a privilege? I will admit that the argument might have been sound that since the fish were going to be taken on the American side in any case they might as well be taken on our side, but that argument does not exist any longer. Therefore it is up to us to adhere to the working fishermen, the white fishermen, rather than to a steel trap.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, with very much that has been said by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Neill) I am in hearty accord, but I think it would be unfortunate if the decision of the house were to be based upon the case as presented by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. One or two points made by the hon. member, I think, should be elucidated a little further.

For instance, the hon. member undoubtedly left the impression that traps operated in competition with the trollers. He repeatedly stated that it would take two hundred trollers operating with their boats to catch a similar number of fish, but he very unfortunately—I will put it mildly—avoided saying that trollers do not catch the same kind of fish that are caught in traps. The traps catch very largely the fish that school, the sockeye, the humpback and the pinks, whereas the trollers catch the spring salmon, chiefly steelheads and a very limited number of types that will take a bait. The sockeye salmon will not take a bait, nor will the pinks, so that these traps do not affect the trollers in that respect, that is, the traps to which the hon. member has reference, near Sooke on the west coast of Vancouver island.

Another point to keep in mind is that the discussion of 1929, to which the hon. member has referred, was in connection with the proposed introduction of traps in northern British Columbia. The subject was keenly debated at the time, and many of us took the ground that it would be perhaps unfortunate if a general policy of traps were adopted in northern British Columbia, though I am bound to say that in one or two locations, where the geographical or physical conditions were of a certain type, there was some justification for the use of traps. But that issue has been disposed of. Then we come down to the Fraser river run, which for many years has been the subject of a great deal of discussion. There is no question as to the accuracy of the hon. member's observations when he says that the large number of American traps, located as they were in the shoals along the shore immediately south of the mouth of the Fraser river, did contribute very seriously to the depletion of the fisheries of that river. Another thing we should bear in mind, however, is that the agitation a few years ago for traps in that area was for traps on the Canadian side close to the location of the American traps, and again I say that as far as that is concerned I am in entire accord with the hon. member.

I was under the impression that there was only one trap at the point to which my hon. friend has referred. The hon. gentleman says there are four. That is something that can be ascertained without difficulty; no doubt the minister will be able to say just how many traps there are. As I say, it was my impression that there was only one, operated by one of the oldest fish packing companies in British Columbia, the Todd Fisheries, on the west coast of Vancouver island, that is, in the straits and in the lower part of the west coast, a very long distance indeed from the mouth of the Fraser river. This cannery is so located that there is virtually no other type of fishing that could be resorted to in order to serve it, in that isolated spot. I assume there is the possibility of using purse seines, but my hon. friend has been just as vigorous in his denunciation of purse seines as he has been of traps, and again to a certain extent I agree with what he has said. But I think in all these matters we must look at the situation taking into consideration all the factors that are involved. If this trap, or these few traps, located at this particular place, constituted a distinct menace to the continuity of the fisheries of the Fraser river, I should not hesitate a moment to urge their withdrawal, but I am not at all persuaded that such is the case. On the other hand, as the hon. gentleman admitted, this form of fishing at this particular location has been in vogue for nearly forty years, and it is a drastic proceeding to come forward now and suggest that, because we favour the general policy, in this particular instance we should deny the company the right to operate these traps or this trap, as the case may be.

Reference has been made to Alaska, and here again, I find myself largely in accord with what the hon. member has said. It is quite true that the institution of traps became a menace to the fisheries of Alaska, but there it was a case of the wholesale construction of traps. Some four hundred of these great traps were in operation in Alaskan waters. I frankly admit that such a wholesale operation did constitute a menace to the fisheries. I share my hon. friend's views in regard to Mr. O'Malley, one of the most outstanding authorities on salmon and other fisheries on this continent for many years. Mr. O'Malley took a stand against these traps, but only in the latter days of his long term of administration. In the earlier years he did not recognize the menace, and did not do so until the multiplicity of traps, to the extent of some four hundred, had become a very serious menace. Later his successor did much to eliminate many of the traps, although I am under the impression that some two hundred are still operating in Alaskan waters.

The hon. gentlemen has stressed the international point, and I think perhaps that is the one part of his address that merits very careful consideration. I would suggest to the minister that all the facts of the case might be very carefully studied, and if one operation of this kind constitutes a threat of international discord, naturally the government must take it into consideration. But I cannot conceive of that being the case. I would not want the house to get the idea that this is a case of introducing a wedge. This operation has been carried on for forty years and it is necessary for the successful working of the cannery. The company operating this cannery is one of the oldest, one of the most reputable and in every sense one of the most admirable concerns in the province. I do not think there is anyone, no matter what his prejudices may be, who can make any criticism of the Todd company. It is controlled by an old established family in British Columbia, which has operated this business from early pioneering days down to the present time in a very humane and decent manner. I am quite confident it will be found, to use a colloquialism, that the relations of this company with labour are as sweet as those of any other company.

There does not seem to be any real argument for the elimination of the trap in this particular case. Before the minister or the government makes a final decision I would suggest that the matter be calmly and fairly considered. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, may I say that I am strongly opposed to the adoption of trap fishing in a wholesale way or the issuing of permits for new traps in other areas. I endorse the views of the hon. member in that respect, but I cannot agree with him when he applies a general discussion to an individual and particular case.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, as seconder of the motion before the house I feel it incumbent upon me to say a few words in support of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). The hon. member has covered the matter so well that very little remains to be said, but there are one or two points which I think should be emphasized still further.

First of all, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens). The hon. member stated that if he was convinced that the abolition of traps would help the fishing industry along the Fraser river, he would be in favour of their abolition. However, I think the gist of his remarks was to the effect that he could not depend upon what had been said in the house this afternoon to convince him that abolition of traps would help the industry. Whether he is willing to take the word of the member for New Westminster I do not know, but let me assure him, as one who has made a considerable study of the matter during the past year, that the operation of traps is taking away the livelihood of our fishermen. I have been told that this is a fact and by every fisherman with whom I have discussed the matter, either publicly or privately.

It is true that traps were in operation for many years by American interests in the Puget sound, but we on the Canadian side have always advocated the abolition of all traps, both on the American and Canadian sides. Since traps have been abolished by the American interests there has been a noticeable increase in the catches of all varieties of fish by the Fraser river fishermen. Those of us who have given any study at all to the matter know full well that the traps catch not only sockeye salmon but every other variety of fish that happens to enter the trap. I do not think the minister will dispute the fact that the trap at Sooke and those formerly across the line catch all varieties of fish. Many immature fish are taken in these traps, which are either placed on the market in some form or other or taken out and destroyed.

Like the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I should like to see this matter referred to the fisheries committee for discussion. I realize that it is not possible to go into every detail and aspect of the situation at this time, but I think the whole situation could be covered succinctly under three headings: first, the conservation of fish; second, the greatest good to the greatest number. In these days we are looking for increased employment and this cannot be achieved by maintaining the trap at Sooke to which the hon. member referred. I do not think we should follow the Japanese method. Japan has had no thought at all of the conservation of fish and their fishing banks along their coasts have been almost entirely depleted. They went into fishing in a ruthless manner and paid no attention whatever to the manner of catching or different ways of conserving the fish. Their one thought was for profits. I am not unmindful of what the hon. member for Kootenay East has said with reference to the particular firm that has been referred to. He tells us that it would be bad to do anything against this very reliable firm, which has been in existence for some forty years, but I would rather have heard him stress the conservation of fish and the employment of greater numbers of our fishermen. If it was thought desirable, I could place on record figures to prove the statements I have just made.

I should like to say one word with reference to something that took place last year which very much pleased the fishing industry in British Columbia as a whole—and I do this without the consent of the minister. In 1936 the minister was good enough to pay a visit to British Columbia with the object of looking into our fisheries and obtaining first hand information thereon. I think the minister has seen more of British Columbia than any other cabinet member has seen of it since confederation. It was my privilege to be with him at that time. We travelled some 1,400 miles by water, and the minister was always eager to see everything that could be seen in the time at his disposal.

It was our privilege to visit one of the traps in Alaska, located at Hidden inlet. This trap is operated by American interests, and at the time we visited it there were between 7,000 and 8,000 sockeye salmon in the trap. We witnessed the bailing or brailing out of the fish, as they call it. A boat brought a scow alongside which already contained about 60,000 sockeye salmon and into which these additional 7,000 were put. I should like to relate to the house a little incident which occurred in connection with this trap. The trap was located a considerable distance from shore and two employees of the company were set to guard it. The manager told us that they were forced to keep a patrol boat in operation to watch the men. That seemed rather strange, but he told us that as the fish were caught in such large numbers, if the two guards were not watched an attempt might be made to bribe them. He stated that it would be possible for a boat to draw alongside and take two or three thousand fish from the trap and they would not be missed at all. After some years experience they had come to the conclusion that it was harder to bribe four men than it was to bribe two. I think this illustrates also the fact that great numbers of fish are caught in traps. We in British Columbia were more than pleased with the minister's visit, and he deserves to be highly complimented upon the extensive and exhaustive study he made of the Pacific coast fisheries in 1936. I feel sure he is just as fully aware as any of us of just what the traps mean to the fisheries of the Pacific coast.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I should like to see this matter placed before the committee on fisheries where many aspects and details of the question could be gone into which have not been fully touched on here and which perhaps could not be very well discussed on the floor of the house. I also support what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has stated, that it would certainly lend weight to the arguments which could be used across the line as they can now say: The Canadians are using traps now, and we are not.

A strange state of affairs existed last year as a result of the abolition of the traps in United States waters. As is well known, there was a conflict of interests between the seine fishermen and those controlling the traps, and it was partly the agitation of the seine fishermen, I believe, that brought about the abolition of the traps in United States waters, they believing that if the traps were eliminated the seine boats would catch more fish. Last year, however, the seine boats were practically idle; the traps were not in operation, and the seine-boat men discovered that the poor results were due to the schooling up of the fish, their attention being diverted from their true course by the traps, which was what enabled the seine boat owners to catch the number of fish they did. There might well come now an agitation from the seine-boat men to replace the traps in United States waters, and we do not want them to be able to use the argument: The Canadians are using traps, and we are not. In the interests of the conservation of fish, not only sockeye but all varieties, in the interests of the greatest good to the greatest number, and for the well-being and welfare of our whole cannery industry, I am certainly in hearty accord with the motion that has been introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and I trust that the last trap fishing will be done away with.

Mr. C. G. MacNEIL (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to indicate my support of the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill).

[Mr. Reid.]

My remarks will be based on representations made to me by practically every organization of fishermen with which I have had contact, and on the expert observations of those who have studied the habits of fish and know the needs of the fishing industry in British Columbia, all of whom seem to be in unanimous support of the purpose of this resolution.

Some time ago it was indicated that the minister intended to issue no further licences for trap fishing in British Columbia, and that announcement was greeted with general approval in all quarters. Viewing the question from the standpoint of conservation, as the majority of the fishermen do, to me it would seem most advisable to discontinue the issuance of licences for trap fishing in British Columbia.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) seems to be under some misapprehension as to the species of fish that are caught in the traps. I have before me a copy of the last report of the Department of Fisheries, and it indicates that the traps catch sockeye, spring salmon, bluebacks, steelheads, cohoes, pinks and chums. I have also reason to believe that other fish, such as herring and immature salmon, are caught in the traps, and they are thrown aside.

Mr. STEVENS: I never questioned that. My point was that the class of fish that will take a trolling bait is a different class of salmon from those that will come into the trap. The sockeye, which is the main class of fish, and the pinks, will not take bait and therefore cannot be caught by troll. That is the only point I made in that respect.

Mr. MacNEIL: These fish are caught by the gill netters many thousands of whom are depending on the fishing industry for their livelihood.

I have here also the report of the experts on the migration of the adult sockeye salmon in Puget sound and the Fraser river, issued by the bureau of fisheries of the United States government. It shows that the route most commonly followed by the adult sockeye salmon proceeds from the strait of Juan de Fuca across Washington sound to the salmon banks and Whidbey island, then through Rosario strait and the southern part of the strait of Georgia, past Point Roberts to the mouth of the Fraser river. That indicates very clearly to those who are familiar with the coast that the traps which were in operation in the Sooke district were in a strategic position to intercept the movement of sockeye salmon towards the mouth of the Fraser.

Fishermen who have studied this question tell me that as the leads into the traps extend from the shore approximately one-half to three-quarters of a mile it does seriously intercept the movement of the fish. It is true that the mesh is of such a size as to permit the escape of the smaller fish, but the experts say that the fish, even though they may be able to escape through the mesh, have such habits as lead them to follow the line of mesh and either enter the mouth of the trap or wait at its entrance.

It is true that the traps are closed at certain periods each week, but it is also true that the fish following the shore line, as indicated by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, also follow the leads to the trap and lie in wait, as it were, and remain there for several days. So that even though the traps may be closed for certain periods during the week, the minute the traps are opened the fish enter, and no distinct benefit is obtained by the closing of the traps over the stipulated period.

Others inform me that the traps lure fish of different species and during the spawning season some which are livelier than others damage those less lively in their efforts to escape. At certain times of the year when the traps are lifted many fish are found seriously mutilated and damaged, and the owners of the traps are compelled to discard them. There is serious waste in that regard. Also they inform me that herring are caught—small fish which have not yet attained to their full maturity. There again the operation of the traps violates well known principles of conservation within the fishing industry.

I have another distinct objection to the traps as operated in British Columbia, and it is that the very nature of their operations has tended to constitute a monopoly. It is true, as the hon. member for Kootenay East has stated, that the firm which has enjoyed this privilege in recent years is a reputable one; nevertheless all the eight licences which are actually operated have been virtually under the control of that one firm, Todd & Sons, of Victoria. Possibly licences might be issued in the same district to other interests, but when you consider that the erection of a trap costs from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars, and that these traps can be erected only in strategic positions, now allocated to the Todd interests, it will be readily seen that there are few in the industry who would dare to compete with them. They have enjoyed this particular privilege for some time, and we have reason to believe they have reaped enormous profits from it.

It is true that some persons are employed in the canneries and the operation of the traps, but I agree with the mover and the seconder of the resolution that the number so affected is out of all proportion to the number of those whose interests are damaged to a very marked degree by the operation of these traps. Admittedly only eight licences have been issued during the year 1935-36—I believe they were continued during the last season—but in my opinion the principle is wrong. If licences may be issued for eight locations to one firm, there is no logical reason for objection to the issuance of trap licences to other interests in other locations in British Columbia. Inasmuch as traps have been abolished in American waters, under a virtual agreement, as the mover of the resolution stated, they should also be abolished in Canadian waters. It seems to me that we have arrived at the point where we might quite properly urge upon the minister that no licences for the operation of traps be issued in the future.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said on this subject, which is familiar, or fairly so, to all British Columbians. We have heard that the opening up of the traps on the American side will depend to a great extent on whether we have traps in British Columbia. As a matter of fact we have, I think, four or five traps in operation this year. I do not agree with this contention. In my opinion, when the Americans find out what the result of closing their traps really amounts to, and decide to open them, they will certainly have them wide open, quite regardless of what we on the British side of the line think about it.

It has been stated here that traps have been practically eliminated in Alaska. I know that traps were introduced there and that, as was stated by one of the previous speakers, they were operated in an extravagant way, with the result that the production of fish was jeopardized. But we should take note of the opinion of the present United States commissioner, Mr. Frank T. Bell, who has stated that he has seen no need of so drastic a step as the abolition of traps, that such action would work great hardship on the industry. Mr. Bell also states that the outcry against traps comes largely from individuals who want to avoid the effects of any competition with their own particular type or method of fishing.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) said in his opening remarks that in this trap business the butter was all on one side of the bread. I quite agree with him. If we close the traps in Canadian waters the butter will be on the other side, because the Americans will get all the fish and we won't have a chance at them at all.

It has been stated also that in traps small fish are destroyed to a great extent. At Victoria, the nearest market for the fish from the traps at Sooke, certain varieties of fish are marketed which are not suitable for canning; they are disposed of not only in Victoria but also in Vancouver and other markets near by at reasonable prices, making these valuable food fish available for all the people.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni also stated that after the American traps were closed the increase of fish in the Fraser river was very marked, particularly in the year 1936. Let it be remembered that the salmon, as they enter the strait of Juan de Fuca in search of the Fraser river, swing over to the north on the Vancouver island side, thence directly to the American side, where they are caught by American seiners and fishermen and, in the case of traps, by the trap owners. In 1936, for a reason which nobody has yet explained, although perhaps to-day I may have one to offer, the great bulk of the fish, instead of coming in by way of the strait of Juan de Fuca, swung away up north around Vancouver island and came in on the inside passage. The only solution we can find for that proceeding is the fact that they were visited during that time by the hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud).

Mr. REID: Has the hon. member any figures as to how many fish, if they went around by the north, were caught by traps in 1936 as against the year before·

Mr. TOLMIE: I am sorry I have not the figures at hand, but I assume they are easily obtainable. Of course this year, after the traps on the American side were abolished, the great bulk of the fish, coming in by way of the inside passage from Vancouver island south, were caught in the Fraser river and in Canadian waters, and naturally the catch on the American side suffered to that extent.

What is the feeling in the state of Washington about the abolition of traps? They do not feel satisfied about it. Traps were abolished owing to the very strong propaganda put out by those who were in favour of sport fishing, those who had sporting goods to sell, those who desired to encourage fishing at certain resorts. These were a strong combination, and as a result of their influence at Olympia, Washington, traps were abolished for a period on the American side. How long will they remain abolished? Hon. Clarence D. Martin, governor of the state of Washington, speaking at Olympia on January 13 at the opening of the state legislature, made this statement:

> I direct attention to an alarming and costly trend in one of our major national resources . . . the commercial fisheries. It is now obvious that the initiative is not working out as well as had been promised. Oregon and British Columbia are taking more salmon, while Washington's share is decreasing.

Again he says:

> The fisheries department will submit a program for your consideration, but I should like to make one recommendation: that we declare that the state's interest is larger than, and prior to, that of any or all of the conflicting groups or forces within the industry; and that we shall, by law or regulation, control and distribute the fishery resources as found best for the present and future benefits of the state as a whole.

After all, how many fish do we catch at Sooke? One would imagine, listening to some of the statements that have been made, that the quantity was so large as seriously to interfere with the industry in British Columbia. As a matter of fact there are areas where ordinary methods of fishing are not practicable owing to such conditions as strong currents, tides, and so on. This particular area between Sombrio Point and Beechey Head near Victoria where the traps are located is subject to swift currents and heavy tides, with the result that other forms of fishing cannot be carried on there.

I am not a fisherman but a live stock man, and I cannot discuss this subject from personal experience; but I am given this information by those who are well posted in the industry. How much fish does this much-abused company capture there? The combined catches, United States and Canadian, at Sooke last year amounted to 2·2 per cent.

Mr. NEILL: Of what?

Mr. TOLMIE: Sockeye, the great commercial fish.

Mr. NEILL: Of what catch—British Columbia and United States together?

Mr. TOLMIE: Yes; that is the percentage of the catch between the state of Washington and British Columbia. It is evident then that the Sooke traps have little effect on gill net fishing on the Fraser river, but rather more effect on the United States industry. These fish on entering the straits—and I wish to emphasize this particular point—swing up north to Vancouver island where there is opportunity to catch them by means of proper appliances, and traps are the proper appliance in these particular locations. Then they swing south to the United States and are lost to us except for those that happen to escape the American seines and nets, reaching the Fraser river a little later.

I am as much for the conservation of fish and timber in British Columbia as anyone else, and I say that if we catch too many fish by this method, so as to jeopardize the future of the fishing industry, then we should regulate the fisheries to such an extent as to obviate any such danger. It would be better to do that than to try to eliminate some particular form of fishing, wiping out a valuable industry employing a number of men, an industry that has paid out a million dollars in wages alone in eighteen years, and another business which gives employment to a number of men in the fishing season. The matter can be easily handled by regulation.

These fish are spawned in the headwaters of the Fraser river area. They proceed to sea when they are large enough and able to take care of themselves, remaining in the Pacific four years, and then they come back as the commercial fish which the fishermen endeavour to catch. Of these British Columbia spawned fish that come back into these waters the Americans capture from sixty-eight to seventy per cent, and I contend that we should take every opportunity in carrying on our Canadian business, to get as much as we possibly can of that catch by fair means.

As I said a moment ago, the Americans are not satisfied with the removal of the fish traps. They believe that their commercial catch has shrunk to a remarkable extent, and there is therefore to-day a strenuous effort on the part of fishermen on the United States side to reestablish traps in American waters. Where shall we be if we eliminate the Sooke traps first, in the hope that the Americans will not reintroduce their system, only to find that they have done so?

I do not agree with the resolution. In my opinion it is unfair to vested interests and to those who make a living out of these traps and out of the cannery, and who have established homes near these places. Not only is it unjust, but it does not touch the point we are after, namely, the conservation of fish. Let us conserve the fish by means of proper regulations such as are enforced in any other branch of industry, in any part of the Department of Agriculture, or in any other line. I think that to adopt the method suggested would be to sacrifice Canadian opportunities to the advantage of our friends to the south of the line, and therefore, being of the opinion that on the whole this is not conducive to the progress and prosperity of the British Columbia fishing industry, I must oppose the resolution.

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I think it is necessary for me to say a few words in regard to this resolution. In the first place, I regret that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud) or the chairman of the fisheries committee did not see fit to have this whole subject brought before that committee, because in my opinion there are certain aspects of the subject that could be discussed much better in committee than they can be on the floor of the house.

I am absolutely in favour of the resolution, but I wish to refer to certain conditions which, as I see them, do not warrant the government in taking any drastic action at the present time. I am speaking as one who is interested in the cannery business and who therefore knows something about the fishing industry of British Columbia. As the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) has said, the firm that has been operating in that district is an old and reputable one, and it has enjoyed a special privilege for forty years. In my opinion, if a particular firm has had a certain privilege for forty years while a large number of other canneries have not been so favoured, it is high time, if they have not benefited by that advantage which they have had, either for them to give up that privilege or for the others to share in it.

At the time the Todd company and other pioneering concerns in British Columbia began operations, it might have been necessary for the government to pass certain regulations to encourage the development of the industry. During these forty years, however, several other concerns, engaged not only in fishing but in every other branch of industry, have been carrying on without a similar privilege, and this particular firm, with its long experience, cannot expect any longer to enjoy exclusively a privilege in which others do not share. I do not think anyone doubts for a moment that the masses of the fishing population of British Columbia would benefit by the abolition of these traps. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) has said that when anywhere from ten thousand to twenty thousand fish are caught in twenty-four hours it requires two men to watch the operation and another two men to watch them; and as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has pointed out, it would take hundreds of fishermen to catch that quantity of fish by the ordinary methods. That is a point that must be considered in this time of stress when the government is trying to provide employment for those who are out of work. Anything that can be done, even in a small way, to provide more men with employment should be done, and therefore I am strongly in favour of the resolution. If it comes to a vote I shall vote for it because I know it will not be detrimental to the canning industry—I am interested in that—but will help British Columbia and its fishing population. I am disappointed that this resolution has not gone before the fisheries committee where it could be discussed more fully and explanations could be given that cannot so well be given here.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I wish to say a very few words in support of the resolution introduced and so ably supported by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I doubt if there are many hon. members from British Columbia who have been in this house a few years who have not received protests from the fishermen of that province in regard to these fish traps. On a number of occasions I have drawn the matter to the attention of the department, and I know it has come up several times in the legislature of British Columbia. To me it is altogether a matter of the conservation of the fishery resources of this dominion. We have squandered other resources to such an extent that it will take a long time to replace them, if they can ever be replaced. In British Columbia we have squandered our timber resources like drunken sailors, as the saying goes. And with our fisheries we have done pretty much the same thing.

In a well-organized society I should not consider it good policy to take more time than is necessary to catch the fish we need. We should be concerned with catching the greatest number in the least possible time. However under an economic system whereby the fruits of industry are not equitably distributed, we are driven to the expedient of trying to increase the amount of labour spent for the production of an article rather than to reduce it. In the matter of conservation of fish the strongest argument made by the mover of the resolution, and one which we have to keep continually in mind, is that not only the Dominion of Canada but the country to the south of us, is concerned and if they have abolished fish traps on the understanding that they will remain abolished provided British Columbia also pursues that policy, or if they abolished them as a gesture anticipating their abolition by British Columbia, then certainly if we do not take that course the traps will be restored by the other country, to the detriment of both. If we are to formulate policies for the conservation of the fish resources of the Pacific coast we can do so only in conjunction with and with the assistance of the government on the other side.

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): I think it is proper that I should add a few words to what has been said on this resolution. The administration and supervision and licensing of the methods of fishing in tidal waters is under the jurisdiction of the federal government exclusively, and is carried on by the Department of Fisheries.

As was well said by the mover of the resolution (Mr. Neill) there are four main methods of fishing resorted to on the British Columbia coast. There is the individual fisherman, called the troller; there is the gill netter, who sets a kind of trap—he also is an individual fisherman. There is the purse seiner who also operates a kind of trap, assisted by other men, but not in great numbers; and finally there is this method of the fixed trap or set trap, which is employed in British Columbia waters as well as United States Pacific coast waters.

The method of fishing by traps is not new. It was sanctioned by order in council of the dominion government as far back as 1894, and has been in use more or less ever since that time, but subject to restrictions for very obvious reasons which I shall try to present. The order in council of 1894 to which I refer resulted from the report of a commission appointed for the province of British Columbia, which reported also on the Georgian bay fisheries; we have its report and recommendation. I will agree that the method of fishing by traps exclusively would tend, if no regulation were imposed upon them, to exhaust the supply. I will not agree that it is the easiest and cheapest method of operating the salmon fishing industry, but from the information I have been able to gather it is the method which enables the canners to place the highest grade products on the markets of the world. For that reason many of those interested in the salmon canning industry on the Pacific coast have at different times tried to get licences to use trap nets to catch their fish. However, governments ever since 1894, and particularly since 1904, have seen to it that the proper balance is maintained between those interested in that branch of the industry and the net fishers who are really the primary producers. Rules and restrictions have been made in order not to give exclusive privileges to one class of people as against another. The gill netters and the trollers were allowed to use their methods in certain waters; purse seiners were licensed, and so were trap fishermen.

At different times, I find according to the records, applications were made by various interests in the province of British Columbia for permission to use traps as a means of securing their raw material. In some instances that was permitted on a larger scale than is the case at present. That was during the war period, when there was such a demand for the product and such a shortage of labour in that part of the country. During the war the government of the day issued temporary trap licences to those packers who had supplied the market but who could not secure the necessary labour in order to bring to the canneries by other methods or fishing the material that was required. Outside of that period, however, with a few exceptions in the north which did not continue for very long, trap fishing in British Columbia has been confined to the waters at the southwest point of Vancouver island, for the reason that the choicest variety of salmon, which as the house well knows is the sockeye, runs up from Puget sound or the strait of Juan de Fuca, in a straight line to the southern point of Vancouver island. Then it goes back to American waters in order to come in to the Fraser river. This is the course followed by the salmon on that coast, according to information which has been verified by inquiry, and I am told that the fish in those waters cannot be caught by any method other than trap fishing.

That is so for several reasons. In the first place the trollers and gill netters cannot operate successfully because of the phosphorated condition of the water. There is so much phosphorus in the water at that point that gill netting and trolling cannot be resorted to, and the waters are too swift for the operation of purse seines. That is shown by the fact that no purse seine fishing has been carried on in those waters, although there is nothing to restrict or prohibit it. This information is given to me by the officials of my department from the records of the department, and has been confirmed by those who know something of fishing in that locality.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister permit a question? Even if the fish cannot be caught in that particular area by other means, do not the traps intercept the main movement of the fish, which may be caught elsewhere in Canadian waters?

Mr. MICHAUD: I am told by the officials of the department, who have had many years of experience in the matter, that instead of being a hindrance to those who want to resort to purse seining the traps are a help to them, because they help gather the fish at certain points, where they can be caught more easily by purse seines than they could if the traps were not there. In any case we have this fact, which is not contradicted, that the purse seiners have not resorted to these waters, though there is nothing to prohibit them or restrict them in doing so. I am told by the officials of the department, who know something about those waters, that these are the facts, and that the reasons I have advanced are the reasons why fishermen do not go to these waters.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, succeeding governments since 1904 have permitted trap fishing in the waters in question. The number of licences taken out has varied, but according to the records not more than three or four, or in some years five, traps have been used in that area. It has been stated that a monopoly has been created in the hands of some individuals. That may be so, but I do not know of any other applications which have reached the department to permit the use of traps in those waters. Because of the fact that these licences have been issued, since 1904 a considerable industry has been established in the vicinity of these traps, which depends upon the traps for its operation.

Mr. NEILL: I thought a few minutes ago the minister said 1894.

Mr. MICHAUD: I said that fishing by means of traps has been sanctioned by the government since 1894. Traps have been established at the point under discussion since 1904.

The resolution states that it would be in the best interests of British Columbia, because it would be in the interests of the greater conservation of salmon, if these traps were done away with. That is a matter of opinion, and I doubt if that statement will be borne out by the facts. I am told that the quantity of non-salmonoid fish or whitefish incidentally taken in the traps is very low in comparison with the salmon caught there. These whitefish are put on the market in the city of Victoria and adjoining districts, where they are sold at lower prices than the better classes of fish, and where they are welcomed by people of moderate means who are pleased to get them.

It has been stated also that there is a large proportion of immature salmon being taken in the traps, which would not be taken otherwise, and which means that these fish are destroyed. Everyone knows that it is exceptional for immature salmon to come back to fresh water for spawning purposes. Ordinarily salmon do not return for three, four or five years. Generally speaking the fish that come back from salt to fresh water are mature fish, and it is the exception when an immature salmon returns to fresh water. These salmon are caught when they are on their way to fresh water for spawning purposes. So that from the point of view of conservation, in regard to the destruction of immature fish, I submit the records show that there is no destruction of fish to any considerable extent. If there had been such destruction I doubt whether succeeding governments since 1904 would have permitted that type of fishing to continue.

Reference has been made to the large quantities of fish taken in the traps, but I cannot agree with those who contend that the source of supply is in danger of being exhausted because of the licensing of a few traps. I have the records from 1930 to 1936.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister put those figures on Hansard?

Mr. MICHAUD: I shall give first the percentage of sockeye salmon caught in traps as compared with the total catch:

Year	Per Cent
1930	1·05
1931	0·97
1932	1·27
1933	3·41
1934	1·49
1935	1·58
1936	1·00

Mr. HANSON: Do those figures cover all the fish caught?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; they refer only to sockeye salmon. The following table gives the percentages of all varieties of salmon caught in traps as compared with the total catch:

Year	Per Cent
1930	0·44
1931	3·33
1932	1·04
1933	3·09
1934	0·55
1935	2·57

I think these figures will show that there is no danger of exhausting the source of supply by permitting trap fishing in a particular area. Another argument has been that the elimination of traps will provide more employment. This is also a matter of opinion. I should like to lay before the house certain facts which will permit hon. members to obtain the proper viewpoint on this matter. It must not be forgotten that no other method of fishing could be resorted to in the areas now fished by means of traps. I do not think it is altogether correct to assume that the elimination of traps will provide employment for more fishermen. I understand that the industry which has been built up around these traps has made a specialty of supplying a better grade of salmon to the market. This helps to raise the standard of our exports to the markets of the world where we must compete with other countries. We must remember that the bulk of our canned salmon is exported. In order to maintain our position in the markets of the world we must compete against other countries which have not the same standard of living and which do not pay the same wages as those which prevail in Canada. We have been able to maintain our position because of the high quality of product we have been able to export. The canneries operating traps play a considerable part in maintaining this standard of quality.

Reference has been made to possible international complications. The neighbouring state of Washington during the past two years has permitted the operation of a large number of traps. In 1934 there were 235 traps in operation and in 1935 there were 209. These figures compare with three and four traps on the Canadian side during the same years respectively. I have not been able to find any records which would show any relationship between the two countries in connection with the abolition or use of traps. The records show that where traps have been removed from American waters the removal has been obtained by those who resort to other methods of fishing. This has been done through the cooperation of the trollers, the gill netters and the purse seiners. I do not think the permitting of traps in Canadian waters will have any effect upon action taken in connection with American waters. The argument advanced by those in the United States who are seeking to bring back the operation of traps is that the interest of the industry is dependent upon that type of fishing. The attitude of Canada has not entered into the picture at all. I can assure the house that if representations are made that the maintenance of traps in Canadian waters will bring about any increased use of traps in American waters and thus deprive the fishermen on the Fraser river of their full share of the fish that run in those waters, the government will not close their eyes or ears to such representations.

I can also assure the house that there is no intention to depart from the policy which has been in force and adhered to in this country since 1904, to limit the issue of licences for trap fishing to the waters which I have described south of Vancouver island. It is by way of an exception that these trap licences are issued, and for the very obvious reason that no other method of fishing can be resorted to in those waters. The fish that are being caught there by traps would not otherwise be caught by Canadians, and a very high class product is being marketed by the Canadian industry by reason of its being permitted to use traps in those waters.

What would be the consequence of refusing to issue licences for trap fishing to those who have been licensed and have been operating traps for almost the last thirty-three years? There is a large capital investment, about $100,000 I am told, in those traps; there is being spent every year on every trap, in material and labour used to set up the traps, from $10,000 to $15,000, and in addition there are the wages paid to those who practise the fishing. Around that area there has grown up a community of about 300 people who are solely dependent upon the trap fishing and upon the canning factory. If licences were refused it would follow that those who are now operating the cannery would close it up, and all that community would be thrown out of employment. Many of them own their own houses; there are stores in the locality, and there is in the vicinity no other industry upon which these people could depend. So I submit, Mr. Speaker, that before adopting the resolution we must carefully consider the consequences. If we refuse to issue any more licences, we would, I repeat, be abandoning a policy which has been in force since 1904, and we would not be providing labour for any more people in British Columbia, because the fishermen could not resort to these waters to fish.

It might be advanced as an argument that the fish which is being canned in the cannery might be purchased elsewhere, from people who use other methods of fishing, but I am told, and I have the assurance of those who are operating the cannery, that they would not find it profitable to operate and maintain their very high standard of product if they used fish caught by any other method. So it is fair to assume that if we refused the licences the cannery would be closed, and those who are dependent upon the cannery for their livelihood would be thrown out of employment and deprived of the wages they now receive.

I have said that the capital investment in the traps is about $100,000. I am informed that the capital investment in the cannery, outside the traps altogether, is $150,000. There are at the cannery twenty-five permanent employees and 125 seasonal employees, who would be thrown out of employment if we refused to issue the licences. The annual pay-roll is $35,000. In addition it must be remembered that these people pay licence fees; they pay high fees to the province of British Columbia, which imposes on them a special tax. All told, in fees and licences there is a revenue of about $7,500 a year, which would be lost if the licences were refused. The loss to the province and to the dominion government would be $35,000 in income and sales taxes, and so on.

The number of men permanently employed at the traps, exclusive of the cannery is forty, with an annual payroll of $58,000. There would also be the loss to those who sell the supplies. The employees at the traps have an average length of employment of 13½ years. The company has maintained group insurance on their men, several of whom own their own homes, and if they were thrown out of employment they would be losing not only their jobs but their savings invested in their homes.

So I submit, sir, that the house should be satisfied to leave it to the government of the day to continue the policy which has been followed for almost thirty-three years, and in the issuing of licences to try to consider the greatest number of people possible, at the same time bearing in mind the necessity of maintaining the industry at the high standard which it has reached in order that it may retain its position in the markets of the world. We should also be very careful to avoid the destruction of a community which apparently would have no other resources and would have to fall back on relief or start all over again to rebuild, with no prospect of employment in sight. I trust the house and particularly the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) will be satisfied with the assurance that the number of licences in British Columbia will not be increased, and I hope hon. members will be content that this peculiar situation, which is an exception, should be maintained until it is established that these people could be reabsorbed in other industry, and until it can be demonstrated that the revenue which they have been deriving from the industry in which they are at present engaged can be derived elsewhere. I can assure the house, with regard to any international complications arising out of the fact that the government of this country permits trap fishing in that area, that we shall do our best to avoid any such complications.

Mr. BARBER: What is the objection to referring this question to the fisheries committee where we might have an opportunity of calling as witnesses those who are better informed upon the subject than members of the house?

Mr. MICHAUD: I have no objection whatever to having this matter referred to a committee.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should thank the members of the house who have supported this resolution; I assure them that in my opinion they were doing good work for the province from which they come, and I do not think the public will be remiss in remembering this when the time comes.

I am sorry that my first reference to my friend the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Tolmie) should be concerned with a difference of opinion. May I turn aside for a moment and heartily congratulate him upon his natal day and upon his reappearance in this house. I know that every one of us, irrespective of politics, is pleased to see him back here again, and I am sure I voice the wishes of all when I say that we hope he may enjoy many years of happiness, if happiness can be attained in this house, and that he may grow in grace as he has in stature.

I will, if only incoherently, so to speak, answer various objections that have been made. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) said that the fish caught in these traps were of such a kind that trollers could not catch, and I rather think he also suggested that the seiners would not do much. He also said that sockeye was the main run. For many years sockeye was the main run that was caught in these traps. But I have in my hand statistics furnished by the department which show that for the year 1936 sockeye caught—I am just quoting round numbers—were sockeye, 44,000; springs, 54,000; steelheads, 1,000, and cohoes, 36,000. So that the sockeye were not the dominant catch this last year. Springs, steelheads and cohoes are all fish that can be trolled. I am surprised to find that the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., and the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) did not take a stand in opposition to these traps, inasmuch as the traps catch so many springs, steelheads and cohoes, which are the mainstay of the tourist trade, the fishing to which we on Vancouver island look more and more to furnish a substantial revenue. There is every reason to hope that we can make Vancouver island the mecca of a tremendous number of tourists from all over the world if we facilitate their enjoyment of the fishing resources we have there. Steelheads, by the way, are not a salmon at all; they are a trout, and should not be taken in a trap. Cohoes and springs—the springs are the same class of fish—are the same variety for which, under the name of tyees, Campbell river is so noted. I have met men from all over the world who were going to Campbell river; they said that each salmon they caught cost them ten dollars, but it was worth it because of the sport afforded by these tyees, which are identical with springs, and in the right place can be taken in the same way. As regards these 36,000 cohoes, it has been discovered in the last two or three years that they will rise to a fly, and English sporting fishermen want a fish that will rise to a fly. The possibilities of developing fishing in that country are enormous, but the catches are getting less, because they are being taken in seines and traps. I think Brentwood is within the district of the hon. member for Nanaimo, so he should support this proposal with both hands and both feet, because it means the devolpment, in the spring of the year, of travel there by tourists who for the moment cannot go anywhere else and who are enormously attracted by the possibilities of catching with a fly cohoes in that neighbourhood.

The hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) spoke about its being a monopoly down there. He never said a truer word. I think the minister, when he came to that point, virtually admitted that there was a monopoly, although he suggested it was a beneficent one or one that could not well be vitiated. The hon. member for Vancouver North wondered why there were only four traps, or rather five last year and four the year before, while the number of licences taken out is eight. I will tell him—because they want to maintain a monopoly. It is ostensibly two companies, but the one washes the other one's hands. They take every valuable site—that is why they have eight licences—and pay a heavy licence fee, but operate only four or five. One would suppose that the whole of the strait of Juan de Fuca was available to these fish. But fish go exactly like a man driving a car; that is they go the nearest way. If a man is driving a car along a road and comes to a sharp turn to the right, will he not hug the righthand corner? Of course he will, and that is exactly what the fish do. That is also what these clever trap owners do. They take their reservations, their locations, out at the edge of the headland around which the fish have to go, and that is where they get them; they will take eight licences because experience has shown that there are only eight major profitable available sites there, and they will keep on paying for these eight sites although they take all they want from the operation of four traps.

While I am on the subject, the minister said there is no fishing by seines in that area and that is evidence of its not being possible to fish there, because, he says, seines can fish in the strait of Juan de Fuca. Yes, they can, but the places where the fish run, where it can be calculated they can be caught, are around these headlands, and the trap owners have their sites located there. Then the minister told us his officials had informed him that seiners liked the traps because they afford a better opportunity for them to get fish. That is a misconception. Either his officials have deceived him or they have unwittingly misrepresented the situation. Perhaps it is true as regards the state of Washington, but we are dealing with British Columbia where conditions are quite different. In Washington where traps were located, apparently the custom was to give those traps to people much as is done on our side of the line, but there was no restriction outside the actual location of the trap; seiners could go and fish within ten feet of the trap if they so wished to. The seiners on the American side found this quite useful, because the fish congregated there in their endless attempt to get through this barrier before they started going to the right or to the left, and that was the place for the seiners to make a killing. I say that was true on the American side, but it is not true on the British Columbia side, because we have a regulation restraining the seiners from operating within a certain distance—half a mile, I believe—so that the traps do not give them any advantage; they do not have the effect of holding the fish for the seines, and no one in British Columbia would suggest that a seining organization or any other fishing body would ever favour the traps.

The hon. member for Victoria, B.C., said that the United States were going to open the traps in any event because they found on their side it was profitable to do so. If that is the case, let us not give them the excuse that they do so because Canada is not playing the game. The hon. member said that it was due to propaganda that the traps on the American side were abolished. That is not so. This was done through the operation of the initiative, and people do not propagandize when there is an initiative; it is the common people rising up and demanding the enactment of the law; it is put before the people to be voted on, if I understand the situation correctly, by the people, and not by the legislature, which might be influenced by the big interests. That sort of influence cannot be exercised where there are thousands and thousands of people voting. I think it is entirely unjust to say that it was propaganda which put over that restriction; I think rather that propaganda is behind the attempt to repeal the bill. The hon. member quotes Governor Martin, who is a well known reactionary, as against the operation of the initiative. I have no doubt he is, but let us remember that the present law was put through by the vote of all those citizens who are qualified to vote; it was not a vote of the legislature.

The hon. member for Victoria, B.C., says that the Sooke catch is small; I think he himself quoted it as being two per cent of the total catch. If so, and if there are only four or five traps, why grudge the elimination of such a small quantity when we have so much to gain? We are going to have the opportunity, in return for the giving up of four or five traps on our side, of having the Americans abandon 219 traps. Is that not a good deal? Why be fussy about two per cent when we stand to gain so much?

Mr. TOLMIE: Has the hon. member any guarantee that, if the traps are eliminated in British Columbia, Washington will not reinstate the traps on their side?

Mr. NEILL: No; but the minister could very well make a statement here to the effect that it was his intention to stop them in British Columbia this year provided Washington would not reinstate traps there; and we know that in dealing with nations and people there is such a thing as quid pro quo. When Canada gave the old country a preference we expected something in return and eventually we got it. The minister said that these waters were not adapted to seines. Well, here is Kyuquot Trollers' Cooperative Association making a statement on the subject—I suppose they know what they are talking about—and this is what they say:

> Whereas the district of Sooke where the only traps in B.C. now are located would afford ideal fishing grounds for seiners thus increasing employment. . . .

That was passed on December 17, 1936. They are a well-established and thoroughly reputable body; I do not think they would make such a statement unless it could be proved, and it is capable of proof only when the traps are taken away, because they can not seine these waters when all the available fishing sites are already preempted. People have an idea that you can go into the ocean and catch fish anywhere. You can catch the odd one, but you can seine only where the fish congregate in schools, as they do around these headlands.

The minister spoke at some length and his first and last argument was that this practice has been going on for forty years. As a matter of fact the actual operation has lasted thirty-two years. But conditions vary over the years and we must change with the times. We all know, looking back over a period of less than forty years, what changes have taken place in every direction. He said that fish cannot be caught in this district otherwise than by traps. I have quoted the opinion of the association in that regard; I might say that the same opinion was expressed by the Pacific Coast Fishermen's Union, and I have the authority of Major Motherwell, the chief supervisor, that the association is mainly composed of seiners.

The minister said that the traps would help the seines. I think I have explained that. It is curious, if the traps would help the seines, why the seiners are all so deadly opposed to traps. The minister said, further, that the few traps at Sooke would not kill the industry. Undoubtedly not; the operation of four or five will not kill the industry. But I am pointing out that this is perhaps our last chance to trade four or five traps for 219 on the other side. The sentiment was voiced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson), who pointed out that if the traps at Sooke were allowed to remain and the Americans kept theirs off, the justification would be gone for continuing that privilege to them alone, and every cannery in British Columbia would be demanding it.

The minister said that it would cause more unemployment, but that this was a matter of opinion. It certainly is. I have already read the opinion of Mr. Bell, an expert in Alaska, who said:

> By giving the seine fishermen a chance, we will be giving work to hundreds who have been practically forced to the wall by the traps. Two men with a trap can catch as many fish as twenty-five men with a seine.

That is not my opinion; Mr. Bell made that statement off his own bat some time ago. The minister said that the firm which has the monopoly at Sooke puts up good packs. Undoubtedly; but is that the only cannery in British Columbia which is putting up good packs? They all do. There are companies of greater importance that put up just as good packs, and I cannot allow it to be said that this particular cannery is the only one which puts up a good pack. Moreover, the others put up a good pack without traps. Why cannot this one do the same?

The minister gave us a picture of the losses in investment that would follow the shutting down of this cannery. Who said that it would be shut down if this company did not have this long term privilege extended? Why, they did. Who said that the textile industry would shut down if the government made a deal with Japan? The textile industry did. And who opened their factory forthwith when they found their bluff called? I shall take a chance on this cannery shutting down.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) says that they are in an isolated position. They are not, for every day tugs pass the door of that cannery going with fish from the west coast to the Fraser river to be canned. Why cannot this cannery buy its fish from these tugs? The whole trouble is that these people have enjoyed a monopoly for a very long time and now they are howling because they believe there is a danger of their losing it. It is nothing but propaganda. The same thing happened in the days of St. Paul, in Ephesus I believe, when a famous attack was made against the Christian religion. Demetrius the silversmith gathered his people together and pointed out to them that they were likely to lose their business, which was the making of images of Diana. For the space of two hours—there was no forty minute rule there—they howled against St. Paul. They did not argue; they did not use logic; they simply howled, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Here we have pretty much the same sort of thing. These people are as reluctant as I should be to give up this valuable, profitable and fortune-making monopoly, and now they threaten to shut down. Not a bit of it. Talk about their investment of $20,000! Do you know that the investment of the troller association amounts to half a million dollars? Yet they are not looking for any special privilege, and there is no danger that they will discontinue operations. We need not fear this company shutting down if we take away this privilege. If forty-two or forty-eight other concerns can make a living and pay the same wages, and a good deal more for their fish than this company pays, why cannot this particular cannery do the same?

The minister said that he could see no connection between our traps being removed and the removal of the United States traps. There might not have been any connection, but we may rest assured that there will be a connection if we do not abandon our traps, because the legislature on the other side of the line is waiting to see what we are going to do, and if we do not play the game their traps will inevitably be restored.

I must say, with all due deference to the hon. gentleman, that I was disappointed at the attitude he took. I thought his mind was rather turning toward a yielding on this point, but apparently his mind is made up, and I do not know that I can do anything more than vote for the motion as it stands. At any rate my skirts will be clear and I shall have done my duty to the constituency I represent. In his closing remarks, in reply to the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber), he said that he had no objection to referring the question to the fisheries committee. Well, it is always better to get something rather than nothing at all, and if he would move to have the motion amended to that effect I would be agreeable. I cannot amend my own motion, but if he would move such an amendment, to have the matter sent to the committee, though I cannot say that I should be glad I can say that it would be better than nothing.

Mr. MICHAUD: If the hon. member will allow me, my suggestion was that he should withdraw his motion and the matter be referred to the fisheries committee.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister give that assurance?

Mr. MICHAUD: Oh, yes.

Mr. NEILL: Because, as the rule stands to-day—and I remember it being enforced last year—nothing can be debated in that committee unless sent to it by order of this house. But the minister's word is good to me. So with the consent of my seconder I shall withdraw the motion on that understanding, and I thank the minister for his courtesy.

Motion (Mr. Neill) withdrawn.

FOREIGN POLICY

PROPOSED STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES TO APPLY IN RESPECT OF WAR, THE CAUSES OF WAR, AND WAR MUNITIONS OR MATERIALS

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the foreign policy of Canada should conform to the following principles:

1. That under existing international relations, in the event of war, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be.
2. That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.
3. That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

He said: It seems to me that unsettled conditions both in Europe and Asia make it imperative that we should consider our Canadian foreign policy. The world is rapidly becoming an armed camp. We were told that the last war was fought to end war, but now it would seem that the last war might easily prove to be simply the prelude to a greater one. The government have intimated that they are bringing down proposals for increased expenditure on armaments. In past years we have been told by Ministers of National Defence that we need an army only to keep subversive elements in order. Occasionally we have been told that we need forces to protect our own shores. Now we are being told that we need a force to protect our neutrality, whatever that may mean. A great number of people believe that these increased estimates definitely foreshadow the possibility of Canada being drawn into another European war. We are being told from very influential quarter that Canada must prepare to assist in the defence of the empire. It seems to me that now is the time when we should have very clearly expressed to us what the policy of the present government is on these matters.

Canada is no longer a colony; we all recognize that. I suggest that we have not yet adopted a policy of our own but are content to tag along, following the lead of Great Britain, or, what is even more serious, try to escape responsibility for any very active policy. I am well aware that there exist great diversities of opinion in Canada with regard to this matter, but for that very reason it seems to me we should face the question now rather than wait until some critical moment when we would find how divided the country really is. I suggest that the oncoming of a war, which might mean our participation, would split this country from stem to stern. One can hardly go to the province of Quebec, or read even cursorily the French-Canadian press, without realizing that there is a very strong sentiment there against being dragged into another war. I would respectfully suggest to the French-Canadian members of this house that if that is so, their responsibility is to say so here and now. I would suggest that when increased expenditures are proposed they ought to join with some of the rest of us and ask the reason for these increased expenditures. Are they merely for our own defence or are they being made in order that we may one day participate in a European war?

I think of the situation in the west. I do not think the west is any less loyal than any other part of this country. But over fifty per cent of the people there are not of Anglo-

Saxon origin. They are interested in the welfare of Canada; they are much less interested in the adventures which may be entered upon by Great Britain in various parts of the world. Many of them came here to escape the burden of militarism, and hence perhaps are able to see things a little more clearly than those who are almost blinded by a certain emotional attachment to the motherland. I can understand the attitude of people who were born in England and whose immediate relatives are still living there, but I do not take their word as final in matters of this kind.

Let me attempt to forestall some rather unwarranted criticisms which have been made of the position which I am trying to state in this resolution. First, I say emphatically that I am not what might properly be called an isolationist. I recognize that to-day no individual can live to himself; that in our modern life every day we are dependent for necessities upon the community around us. To prepare a very modest breakfast table requires the help of workers in almost every part of the world. In our industry, our commerce, our finance, we are closely connected with every other part of the world. No man to-day can live to himself. And as with individuals so with nations. Canada cannot live to herself. A very little disturbance on the stock market in New York is apt to bring about a decided disturbance in financial circles all over the world, and may affect the standard of living of a large part of our population. No, we cannot live apart from the larger world.

Again, I do not think I need tell at least the older members of this house that I am not anti-British or un-British. In Great Britain the policies of the country are discussed fully. The Labour party there may adopt a policy differing very widely from that of some of the big industrialists. But there they consider it very desirable that all sections of the community should be heard from. That ought to be true in this country; it is the only way by which our democratic machinery can operate.

Furthermore, it seems to me that the people who believe in military preparation as a means of defence have no monopoly of patriotism. Some of us who were born in Canada and whose ancestors were born here and helped to lay the foundation of this country have just as much right to speak on the subject as have some of the individuals who differ very widely from us. I think when I undertake to express my views I am far more British in spirit than if I slavishly followed the lead of some people who live in Great Britain.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Again, I am not what might be called a do-nothing pacifist. But there are several things which I have come very firmly to believe. The first is that war settles nothing. A year or so ago Canadian Business quoted a statement by Nicholas Murray Butler, who estimated that the cost of the last war was some thirty million lives and some four hundred billion dollars. I do not know that there is any very clear statement as to what it cost Canada. The Financial Post, which is usually considered to be conservative in these matters, put it some time ago at $4,341,488,904. We lost over sixty thousand of our best men, and to-day we have some fifty thousand unemployed veterans who are not receiving the assistance they should get.

All this is but indicative of the cost in blood and treasure of the great war, and yet that great war settled no major problem. Eighteen years later instead of a kaiser we have a Hitler; instead of the assistance of Italy we have the aggressiveness of Mussolini; instead of a friendly Japan we have the oriental menace. Everywhere there is confusion, and the danger of a still greater war. I should like to ask whether there is any prospect that the "bigger and better" war of the future, to use the common phrase of the street, will settle anything.

Again, I am coming pretty firmly to the conclusion that as war settles nothing, so armaments are no insurance against war. Before the last war Germany was well prepared; yet Germany suffered very heavily. Responsible British leaders have assured us that England was never better prepared, but the last war came and the best prepared suffered the most severely. It is all very well for us to talk about fire insurance and ladders and hose, but if we live in a jerry-built town I do not think the ladders and the hose are going to make our homes safe from catastrophe. More attention must be paid to the kind of buildings if we are to have any sort of security. If we are to secure peace we must adopt policies that are constructive. We must not be content with merely a negative attitude; we must set out deliberately to discover and adopt those policies which will help to prevent war. Further than that—and this is perhaps not quite so palatable to a good many people—we must be prepared to pay the price of peace. If, when war comes, we are prepared to spend our hundreds of millions; if, even long before war comes, we are prepared to spend the millions that are set out in the estimates now before us, I suggest that we should be willing to spend a half, a quarter, even only a tenth part of that amount, if you will, in attempting to carry out some sort of policies that might lead to peace.

In the first paragraph my resolution refers to existing international relations. I do not say that this should be so under some ideal system, or with a world league functioning properly; I say that under existing international relations, in the event of war Canada should remain neutral regardless of who may be the belligerents.

Mr. ROGERS: Does that mean subject to existing international obligations?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have not taken that particular matter into account in my resolution, because no nation connected with the League of Nations has lived up to its international obligations and, as an hon. member behind me suggests, Canada has never accepted any definite military obligations. We have always refused to give pledges beforehand.

In formulating a Canadian policy consideration must be given, it seems to me, to three things: Our relationship to the league; our relationship to the empire, and the welfare of Canada itself. I submit that the league as constituted has failed. I am not talking about the league as it should be. In more recent years I have endeavoured to do all that I could for the league, because it is the only instrument we have. Sometimes it has been said that when I spoke along this line I was repudiating the league. That is not my thought, but I do urge that as far as the safety of this country or of other countries is, at the moment concerned, we must confess that the league has failed. Manchuria and Ethiopia are the most outstanding examples, as well as indications of the inherent weakness of the present set-up. The fact is that the great nations have not taken the league seriously. From 1913 to 1930, before the last great armament race, Great Britain and France increased their armaments fifty per cent. That is, while talking about the league and while contributing small amounts to it, they were not relying upon it for their security; they were going ahead steadily with their individual armament programs long before this last crisis came upon us. The United States, which of course is not in the league, trebled its armaments. While we were supposed to be relying upon this rather evasive thing called "collective security," there were increased armaments all along the line.

I urge that Canada should work for a league in which each nation would be willing to surrender its sovereignty and its individual armaments; that is, in very simple terms, the right to do as it pleases and, in the last resort, the power to enforce its own decision. That is what we do in our community life. We surrender to the courts what were once regarded as individual rights. There has been a general tendency to decry any attempt to erect the league to the position of being a super-state. I am convinced that it is only that kind of league which is going to prove worth while. Mr. Eden, according to the papers, is now advocating what is termed a tame league. Let me suggest that collective security should be more than a phrase. If we are to have collective security insured by armaments, then those armaments must be collective armaments. If we are to have collective security by other and more peaceful means, then there must be collective agreements. To those people who charge that we are giving up the league, I should like to put the question: Are you prepared to work for a league that will have teeth in it, a league that will be effective, a league to which the nations will give such allegiance that in the last analysis they will be willing to give up what the lawyers hitherto have termed our national sovereignty, and our national armaments?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When the house took recess I was suggesting that in formulating a Canadian policy consideration must be given to our relationship to the league, our relationship to the empire and, lastly, the welfare of Canada. I suggested that the league, as it is at present constituted, had failed to offer security, and I urged that we must seek to build a more effective league. At the present time, in despair of attaining security through the collective agency of the league, there seems to be a tendency to revert to various alliances, to go back to the old system, and to depend upon the strength of the empire.

What is this empire that we are called upon to defend? Generally the term "commonwealth" has been used to designate the self-governing British nations, but recently there has been a tendency to use this synonymously with the word "empire." This seems to me subtle propaganda on the part of the imperialists. For example, in the Canadian Defence Quarterly of October, 1936, an editorial review of an article in the Round Table refers to the Mediterranean policy of the commonwealth of nations. I must say that during my fifteen years in parliament I have never heard the most remote reference to a Canadian Mediterranean policy. At a recent meeting of the Imperial Parliamentary conference Sir Samuel Hoare spoke of the solidarity of the commonwealth upon the sea. He referred to Singapore as being a vital contribution to the British commonwealth. He said, "We look with confidence for the cooperation of the whole British commonwealth of nations." I rather thought we had settled that matter pretty well away back in Laurier's time. It would be strange indeed if the Liberal government of our day should succumb to the same old proposal brought forward in a somewhat camouflaged way.

Remember that the so-called self-governing nations constitute only fifteen per cent of the British Empire. What about the other eighty-five per cent? As a boy I used to read of the trial of Warren Hastings, and I then obtained a little idea of how a part of our empire had been acquired. During the Boer war I was a student in England and I remember how Lloyd George protested against the British action in the Transvaal. However, it was not until several years later that I really began to understand what imperialism meant. I can remember very distinctly visiting the army and navy museum in Whitehall. I remember seeing all the engines of war, ancient and modern. There were set out the tattered flags that had been carried by British regiments in all parts of the world. I saw blood stained garments worn by natives of almost every country in the world. I then began to understand a little more clearly the price of empire paid in human blood and human suffering.

A short time later, when returning from Egypt, I fell in with a young British engineer who told me in detail something of the progress of empire in northern Africa. He told me how the unscrupulous traders would go in and exploit the natives. The natives in desperation might murder a white man. Then an expeditionary force would be sent in. There would be reprisals and counter reprisals. A protectorate would be declared, and before very long this particular territory would be annexed as part of the British Empire. I am speaking particularly of the British Empire as I know a little more of that than I do of other empires, but the same proceeding has characterized the building up of the French empire, of the American empire and of the Japanese empire. These empires have been acquired to serve the interests of a very small part of the community which has had to spend so much upon them. As I see it, imperialism is simply capitalism in international affairs. Recently I came across an almost prophetic statement by Sir Thomas More. He said:

> Everywhere do I perceive a certain conspiracy of rich men seeking their own advantage under the name and pretext of a commonwealth.

Let me read J. A. Hobson's considered statement:

> The decades of imperialism have been prolific in wars; most of these wars have been directly motivated by aggression of white races upon lower races by forcible seizure of territory. Every one of the steps of expansion in Africa, Asia and the Pacific has been accompanied by bloodshed.

What a terrific indictment of imperialism! I think anyone who has taken the trouble to read the history of imperialism must come to some such conclusion as that. If I can prevent it, I do not intend to have my boys and my neighbours' boys sacrificed to any such system, a system which results in exploiting native races or building up fortunes for a few industrial and financial magnates and war profiteers—all under the guise of patriotism. I have nothing whatever to say against that country which we so affectionately term, "The Motherland," but I think we in Canada must be very careful lest we lend ourselves to carrying out the policies of a few great industrial and commercial and financial groups in the motherland. I am getting somewhat tired of being told that we in this country are unpatriotic because we do not jump when Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Chamberlain or someone else tells us to do so.

I suggest that if the British connection is to be maintained, Canada must have an effective voice in the policies which vitally concern her people. Canada should claim at once the right to declare war or peace. I brought this matter up last year. I suggested that Canada is said to be autonomous under the Statute of Westminster, but we are also told that when Great Britain is at war, Canada is at war. It would appear that while Canada has now full control of her own legislation, she has not full control over the executive functions of government. South Africa by her Status of Union Act and Royal Executive Functions and Seals Act sought to attain such control over her own affairs. Some one may object that if that policy is carried out it will mean independence. If that is so, then I say, by all means let us have independence. On the other hand, as one who desires to preserve the British connection, I would suggest quite seriously that it is only in so far as we in Canada have effective control over the policies which concern our people, and the other dominions have similar control, that we shall be able to maintain the British commonwealth.

I assume I still have distant cousins living in Yorkshire. They may be in a position to decide what is a good thing with regard to the foreign policy of Great Britain, but I do not think it is egotistical for me to say that I, living in Canada, have just as good a right to take my part in deciding what ought to be the foreign policy of Canada. I think that should be clearly understood. I do not propose to take any position inferior to that of my distant cousins in Yorkshire. I suggest that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) did not lose all the brains he possessed when he left the old land and should not be placed in an inferior position simply because he has come to Canada to reside. There is, then, the need of arranging our affairs in such a way that Canada shall have complete control over her foreign policy.

I should like to ask, in the next place: What should be Canada's policy, from a purely Canadian standpoint, with regard to war? Canada as a nation does not stand in any immediate danger. The United States is our only powerful neighbour, and she, I feel quite sure, will not make any military attack upon us. In fact, those who rely on military force may rest assured that the United States would resist outside aggression upon us, and that for her own sake. Some may feel that we should not be under obligations of this kind. On the other hand, let me ask: Why should we not take advantage of the position in which we find ourselves on this continent? If I live in an area of fireproof buildings, why should I not be happy in enjoying greater immunity from fire hazards?

Those who say that we ought not to be under any obligation to the United States should carry their reasoning to its logical conclusion. The United States has a population of some 120,000,000, and we a population of some 11,000,000. If we are going to be able to "talk up" to the United States, as they sometimes put it on the street, we ought to be prepared to have a national defence program at least as large as that of the United States. Surely that is an absolute absurdity. Why not, on the other hand, recognize that the people of the United States are our friends, and that we may be their friends, and be secure in that happy position?

Lest it should be considered that I am stating what is simply a personal position I should like to read to the house a resolution which was adopted last August by the national convention of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation held in the city of Toronto early in August. The following resolution on foreign policy and world peace was adopted:

The imperialist powers have betrayed the principles of the League of Nations and are feverishly preparing for another war. The situation is so serious that it is no longer possible to content ourselves with vague declarations about our devotion to peace. A clear and conscious foreign policy has become of paramount importance.

Government Policy and the People: The C.C.F. strongly condemns the secrecy with which foreign policy has been conducted by Liberals and Conservatives alike. Under Mr. King as under Mr. Bennett, it has been the practice to delay and avoid discussion of what our Department of External Affairs has been doing and of what commitments it may have undertaken. Yet upon these secret decisions may depend the lives of tens of thousands of young Canadians. Such conduct is a denial of all the democratic principles of responsible government. A C.C.F. government will take the Canadian people into its confidence on this as on other matters.

Canada and the empire: At present, Canada has not legally achieved complete control over her foreign policy because she is technically at war when Great Britain is at war. The C.C.F. therefore favours legislation similar to that recently passed in South Africa, which will remove the legal and constitutional obstacles to independent action by the Canadian parliament and government on all questions of peace and war. Such legislation will make it clear to the world that Canada is free to be neutral in any war, even in one in which the other members of the British Commonwealth are engaged.

Canada and the League of Nations: The C.C.F. reaffirms its belief that the principle causes of war in the modern world are economic competition, the struggle for raw materials and markets, and the class conflicts, which are an essential part of the capitalist system. It is evident that the most socialist countries to-day are the strongest influence for peace, whilst militarism, aggressive nationalism and war propaganda are flourishing amongst the capitalist and fascist powers. The change from capitalism to a socialist economy planned in the interest of the people will be the best protection against war.

It is, however, clear that a properly organized League of Nations can be of great help in organizing world opinion against war and in establishing a system of collective security to prevent aggression. The present league has failed because imperialist governments have used it as a screen behind which to play the old game of power politics. To be effective the league must provide machinery for the peaceful change of treaties; it must deal fearlessly with economic conflicts arising from trade rivalries and from the struggle for raw materials; it must work out in advance a clear policy for collective action against an aggressor; and its members must disarm. The C.C.F. will actively support any policy which aims at such developments in the league.

Neutrality: Until such reorganization is achieved, the C.C.F. believes that Canada should remain strictly neutral in case of war regardless of who the belligerents may be. The Canadian government should avoid all commitments in any schemes of imperial defence and should confine its defence policy to local Canadian needs.

An hon. MEMBER: Who wrote that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Somebody asks: Who wrote that? I am not quite sure who drafted the resolution, but it was passed at our convention with a very large majority.

Let me come to the second clause in my motion:

That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, to be utterly despicable to profit by the miseries of others. Canada like most other nations has imposed trade restrictions, which are always a cause of friction. Further, we have allowed certain groups of Canadians to profit out of the troubles of others, and apparently we are proposing to permit this on an even larger scale. Doctor Stephen Leacock is reported recently as having said:

Europe's preparation for war, in a cold mean business sense, helps us immensely.

Something more than a recognition that this is a cold, mean, business proposition is necessary if we are to avoid the inevitable consequences of such a policy. I venture to quote a passage from Scripture, which I think still holds good, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked." That nation which permits its citizens to profit out of the miseries and bloodshed of others, is headed for disaster and richly deserves its doom. As I said earlier in my remarks, if we want peace we must be prepared to pay the price of peace.

I come now to the third clause of my motion:

That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

As I have done before in this house, I urge a scientific approach to this problem. We have all had more or less of a scientific training, either academic or practical. If your car stalls, you do not say resignedly, God wills it; you do not pray about it; you may curse it, it is true, but you get out and try to find out what is wrong. Before a doctor prescribes he makes what he calls a diagnosis, a careful study of the case in order to discover the cause of the trouble. Ultimately the medical health officer, it appears to me, will to a large extent replace the individual practitioner. Now war, like disease, does not come simply out of thin air. It is the result of definite, ascertainable causes, and our job is to discover and to remove those causes.

What, then, are the causes of war? In the past there has been the pressure of population; there have been dynastic and religious wars, and so on. I think the cause of modern wars might be classed largely as psychological and economic. Many nations have developed a sort of megalomania, or magnified sense of their own importance, and in consequence we have "Deutchland uber Alles," "Britannia rules the waves," "Japan the child of heaven," and all that kind of thing. We learn to think and speak contemptuously of our rivals or of those whom we call "lesser breeds without the law." As long as we apply opprobrious terms and have this manner of looking at things, we are undoubtedly laying up trouble for ourselves in the future. But I submit that the economic causes of war are more fundamental. Since machine production has been adopted there has been a search for markets and for sources of raw materials. This was followed by an effort to secure fields of investment, which generally meant markets for capital goods. Markets and investments and trade routes had to be protected. The flag followed trade. Thus we see the development of that imperialism which is one of the characteristics of the last fifty years. Modern wars in a very large measure have been occasioned either by the extension of territory or by the defence of empire. According to a recent book issued by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, the western powers now control 84·6 per cent of the earth's surface. Japan has recently more than trebled her holdings. Great Britain controls nearly twenty-five per cent of the world's total population. Here, then, we have a situation that undoubtedly is fraught with danger. Let me quote Mr. Harold Butler, director of the International Labour office:

War is not caused wholly or mainly by lust for territory or booty or prestige; it is also caused by low standards of living, by the feeling of economic insecurity, by the desire for moral or social emancipation. The founders of the organization were right when they discerned an indissoluble connection between peace and social justice.

There you have it in a nutshell—we cannot have peace until we have social justice.

As I see the matter, there are two cardinal principles that should underlie Canadian foreign policy. The first is to keep out of war—

I think I could almost add "at any cost." The second is that we must seek to remove the causes of war. Let me once more quote Mr. Butler:

> No doubt the underlying causes which have brought the world once more face to face with disaster are largely to be found in the deep-seated flaws of the economic structure which were created or intolerably aggravated by the world war.

Future wars cannot be national wars. They will result from the clash of rival imperialisms and antagonistic class interests. In such wars there can be no neutrals, and it will be a fight to a finish. I ask: Is there no other way?

In closing, may I say that I do not accuse the members of this house or any other Canadian of really wanting to bring on war, but I am compelled to think that a great many rely upon armaments as a defence, even when again and again it has been shown that armaments are not effective. We as a people follow those policies that inevitably lead to war and we refuse to try out any policies that might bring peace.

Last Christmas, when peace and good will were literally in the air, or on the air, I listened on the radio to those messages of love which were going out from fathers and mothers to their sons in the far northern country. One could not but be stirred by the tones of the mothers whose voices trembled with emotion. They sent out a few words to their boys in far-off mining camps or in patrols in the Arctic. I felt that that is true Canadianism—not this talk of war, not this preparing to send those boys to Europe, but the conquest of the natural resources of our own country and the building up here of a country that is worth while. Then I listened again and I heard once more, in a round-the-world broadcast, those wonderful old Christmas carols so familiar to us all. These were coming to us from the various British dominions, and not only from them but even from Germany and other countries that we are coming to hate or to despise but that, after all, share with us a great cultural heritage. I am convinced that if we spent one-tenth of the money and effort which we would have to spend in war, in getting together now as groups and nations, to discover the road to peace, we would be able even yet to avoid that greatest of all disasters—another world war.

One other radio message to which I listened on Christmas day was the presentation of that old Christmas story of Charles Dickens, "A Christmas Carol." Some way or another old Scrooge had discovered through that series of dreams a new way of life. It may seem to us quite inconsistent that a man can give up his money and still be happy. Scrooge learned, when he ceased to be a miser, that there was a great deal more in life than he had imagined. He entered upon a real life. I could not but wish that we had in Canada to-day some Charles Dickens who could do for us in these days, in some measure, what was done a hundred years ago in Great Britain. We need someone to-day to reveal to us what are the true realities and what is the true way to peace; that we can afford to give up instead of holding on, and be none the poorer; that we can afford to regard the stranger as a friend instead of an enemy. And while I do not want to be guilty of making a mere emotional appeal, I say that we stand to-day in a position in the history of our own country and of the world when it is imperative that every thoughtful citizen should consider whether there is not yet some way in which we can avoid a war; and further that if war comes, Canada at least may not be in it.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The resolution which my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has just introduced relates to the foreign policy of Canada, and it sets forth certain principles to which my hon. friend asks that the foreign policy of Canada should conform. May I at once say to my hon. friend that I agree with him in stressing the importance of discussion in this house of Canadian foreign policy. I do not think, however, he was quite fair either to himself or to the house when he told us that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation had denounced both political parties—the old political parties so-called—for not having permitted in this house an early opportunity of discussion of foreign policy. My answer to my hon. friend is that we are now discussing foreign policy within ten days of the opening of parliament, and that at a very early stage of previous sessions, had they wished so to do, precisely the same method as he has adopted to-night was open to my hon. friend and to all other hon. members of the house to bring about a similar discussion of foreign policy. If, in previous sessions, my hon. friend has been disappointed in not having as early a discussion of foreign policy as he might have wished, he has only to thank himself for any delay or omission there may have been in the introduction of an appropriate motion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will my right hon. friend permit me? I believe that even last year the Prime Minister refused to enter into a discussion of foreign policy on the ground that it was not wise to do so at that time.

An hon. MEMBER: He adjourned the debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I recall correctly what took place last session, it was that it was considered advisable to agree upon a day for the discussion of foreign policy; that conditions in Europe at the time rendered it inadvisable to have the discussion early rather than a little later on. The house generally agreed with that view. When the time came, a full day and, I think, more than a day, was allowed for the discussion.

However, my purpose in speaking to-night is not to disagree with my hon. friend any more than I can possibly help but rather to agree with him as much as I can. There is much in the resolution which he has introduced, which, I believe, is in the right direction.

The resolution has three distinct proposals setting forth principles to which Canada's foreign policy should conform. With one of them I am in entire agreement. With another, I agree in part. With the third, I totally disagree. I believe the hon. member would have made his resolution more logical if he had dealt with its third proposal first, and reversed the order in which he discussed the other two. The resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the foreign policy of Canada should conform to the following principles:
>
> 1. That under existing international relations, in the event of war, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be.
>
> 2. That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.
> 3. That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

I submit that the last of these proposals should have been discussed first. If causes of international friction and social injustices were removed there would be no wars. There would be no occasion to discuss neutrality if there were no war. I agree entirely with my hon. friend when he says that the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice. I believe it is true that the governments of Canada, speaking generally, have had that as a primary objective. So far as opportunities have permitted, this country, speaking generally, has sought, in cooperation with other countries, to do what it could toward removing the causes of international friction. Certainly the present administration has put that objective in the forefront of all its endeavours. There never before was a time when, so far as relations with other countries are concerned, Canada's position was better than it is to-day. The policy of the good neighbour is outstanding, I believe, in the relations between the United States and Canada. So far as other countries are concerned, we have sought in every way possible to show them that it is our desire not only to trade with them, but to have the friendliest relations in all directions, and to cooperate with them as much as possible in removing their grievances as well as our own. My hon. friend will not say that the world must look to Canada alone to remove social injustice or the causes of international friction. That is work which of necessity requires cooperative effort. I believe that this country, in conjunction with the great country to the south, in the constitution of the International Joint Commission, to which are referred questions capable of creating differences between the two countries, has set the world the finest example it enjoys in the way of dealing with possible international differences. By the establishment of legations in the United States, in Japan, and in France, we have endeavoured to show our desire to conduct our relations with these nations, our nearest neighbours, in a way which would help to promote good will as between them and us.

Speaking of concrete policies, we hold very strongly, and I believe my hon. friend does also, that certain economic policies may be the cause of international friction; that, for example, high tariff barriers, which destroy trade between countries, help to create a condition of economic nationalism which is at the root of much of the unrest from which the world is suffering to-day. From the time the present administration came into office, we have done our best to remove some of these causes, and to make clear that our policies were in the direction of removing them as generally as we possibly could. I cannot recall any instances where we have imposed barriers to trade. I can mention innumerable instances in which we have removed barriers and, to that extent, created a more friendly and favourable relation between other countries and ourselves.

May I refer to two outstanding causes of friction between other nations and Canada which we found when we came into office. We had left office in 1930 with a prosperous trade between Japan and Canada, and with the best of relations existing between the two countries. When we came back into office in 1935, a trade war was being waged between Japan and Canada. Owing to disputes over the interpretation of statutes and restrictions imposed in various ways, there had come about a cessation of trade between the two countries. This trade war might have led to bitter enmity between the two countries had it been allowed to continue indefinitely. We set about immediately to remove the causes of friction. We succeeded in removing them, and from that day to this the relations between Japan and Canada have improved economically and in other ways to the mutual benefit of the two countries.

Under the previous administration Canada had placed an embargo on certain of the products of another great country, as a result of which an embargo had been placed on products going to that country from Canada. In less than a year from the time the present government came into office, we were successful in arranging for the lifting of the embargoes which had served to destroy trade between Russia and Canada. When I attended the League of Nations last fall, I had occasion to speak on the relations of Canada with other countries of the world. Fortunately I was able to say that, so far as Canada was concerned, there was not a single country in the world toward which we were exercising discrimination in the matter of our trade; that we were ready and willing to trade with any country which was prepared to trade with us. But had it not been for the removal of the embargoes which were in force when we assumed office, I should have had to make an exception to that statement, an exception which it would have been most unfortunate for me to have to make at that particular time and in that particular place. These are but instances of the general policy of the government, a part of its foreign policy based upon a determined effort to remove causes of friction wherever they may exist between other nations and ourselves.

I believe that another way in which that objective can be furthered and is being furthered by Canada, and has been furthered by all governments that have held office in Canada, is through a policy of non-interference in the domestic affairs of other countries. We have become so used to boasting of our right to govern ourselves, and of our complete autonomy in all matters of government, that it is very natural for us to adopt toward other countries the attitude that their matters of domestic concern should not be made the subject of direction on the part of other countries. That is a very important position to maintain to-day having regard to the turn of events in many countries. As the house well knows, some nations have changed their form of government and system of social organization. There are political philosophies and economic doctrines held by some nations, to which other nations strongly object. I am certain that any effort on the part of one country to dictate to other countries what their political or social systems shall be, cannot, in the long run, do anything other than make for trouble and friction. Canada has been careful not to interfere in any way with the domestic affairs of any other country. I might go on to mention numerous other instances where we have sought to avoid and to remove the causes of friction, but perhaps I have given enough to make clear what the objective of the ministry is in that particular. I cannot, on the other hand, think of any case in which the present government has created friction with other nations. That, after all, is perhaps the strongest indication of what we are seeking to do in our relations with other countries and of the success of our foreign policy.

I listened with interest to what my hon. friend said in the concluding part of his remarks about trying to improve conditions generally; his suggestion was that instead of spending money on armaments and munitions, it should be spent on social well-being and human betterment. As my hon. friend spoke, there came to my mind those lines which Longfellow wrote many years ago on the Arsenal at Springfield. As nearly as I recall them at the moment, they ran something like this:

> Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
> Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
> Given to redeem the human mind from error,
> There were no need of arsenals or forts:
>
> The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
> And every nation that should lift again
> Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
> Would wear for evermore the curse of Cain!

These words were written some years ago. They were true then. They were equally true nearly two thousand years ago. The great principles which underlie them were enunciated by the founder of Christendom almost two thousand years ago.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Never practised, though.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, that is the unfortunate part, and it is because they are not practised that we find it necessary to do some things which otherwise it would not be necessary for us to do.

My hon. friend, speaking about social conditions, referred in the earlier part of his argument to conditions in cities. He said that we would not have any need of fire engines and like apparatus or of firemen if our houses were all properly built, and if we did not have jerry-built houses. Well that is not quite true. Let us assume for the moment that we have a city with properly constructed buildings. My hon. friend has not made allowance for one thing, the thing of which we have been speaking, namely the possibility of someone whose mind is not free from error being guilty of arson, setting fire to a building, and the certainty of the fire spreading to all parts of the city unless there are firemen and fire engines and other forms of protection. That is pretty much the position the world is in to-day. There are many men and women in all countries who are just as anxious as my hon. friend not to have their sons sent to war, not to have their homes bombed, not to have their families smothered with gas. But they are trembling to-day lest those very things may come to pass. That fear is not confined to any one country; it exists more or less in every country of the world. We are fortunate in having reason to feel that we are least likely to suffer in this way. The possibility of these conditions exists because the human heart is not free from error, because the principles of Christianity, which I believe my hon. friend shares as strongly as I do, have not been practised, and men throughout the world still lack that regard for their neighbours which they ought to have, and are not prepared to extend to their fellow men the understanding, the sympathy and the love which they should extend. That is what makes it necessary for those who desire to follow the law of peace and health and work to place themselves also in a position where they may be able to resist those forces which make for destruction and death.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are we to wait until the others practise all these virtues first before we try to put them into effect?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know that I quite get the force of my hon. friend's remark. Unhappily the angels of light or of darkness do not preside exclusively over any particular country, over any particular race or any particular class; they contend for supremacy in the breast of every individual. In some breasts the angels of darkness triumph, and in others the angels of light. As long as they continue to carry on their conflict in individual lives, so long will those who are seeking the good of their fellows have to be prepared. Whether they like it or not, to protect themselves and others against the possible injury which may be wrought where the wrong forces obtain the ascendancy.

To explain the causes of the world's unrest to-day, one would have to soar into the realm of metaphysics and discuss the fundamental problem of good and evil. There can be no denying the fact that forces of evil are present in the world, fighting against the forces of good. As long as there is this conflict, those who wish to see the good triumph must take every possible means to prevent evil from gaining control.

My hon. friend referred to the estimates. He stated some were claiming they were evidence of preparation for another European war. The hon. member asked: Are these estimates for that purpose? Are they for the defence of Canada, or what are they for? I am not going to anticipate what the Minister of Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) may have to say when the estimates of his department are before this house for discussion. But I do wish to say at once that, as far as the estimates presented to parliament at this session are concerned, any increase placed there has been only and solely because of what the government believe to be necessary for the defence of Canada, and for Canada alone. The estimates have not been framed with any thought of participation in European wars. They have not been framed as a result of any combined effort or consultation with the British authorities, beyond what would obviously be in the interests of all in the matter of gaining the benefit of expert opinion where expert opinion was obviously desirable. So far as policy is concerned, I wish to make it perfectly clear that no request of any kind has come from the British government to our government with respect to a single item that appears in the estimates as they have been brought down. Whatever is there is there as a result of what this government feel is necessary in Canada to-day, Canada being part of the world as the world is to-day.

My hon. friend has referred to the United States and the detached position of that nation, and the determination of the United States not to become entangled in European or Asiatic affairs. What he said in that regard is perfectly true. But it must be obvious that at no previous time has the United States found it necessary to spend the amount of money it is spending to-day on purposes of defence. May I repeat that whatever has been done or is being proposed with respect to necessary increases and expenditure to bring Canada's defence to a more efficient standard than at present has been done with consideration for the needs of Canada and of Canada alone.

I come now to the second clause in my hon. friend's resolution—

That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.

—Here I find myself pretty much in accord with what I think my hon. friend has in mind. I share the hon. member's abhorrence of anything in the nature of profiteering. I cannot imagine a more contemptible means of seeking to make one's fortune than by doing so at the expense of the lives of others. But that is not the purport of the resolution. The resolution states that at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials. "No time" goes pretty far. That is where my hon. friend, perhaps more often than anyone else, errs in the drafting of his resolutions. He goes to too great an extreme. When he says "at no time," he simply renders it impossible to have an exception made regardless of what conditions may be.

Let us assume that there were a war; that this country unhappily were in the war, and that we had to secure munitions. Does my hon. friend say that we should not allow any Canadian citizen to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials? If he does, then all the munitions and the equipment necessary for war would have to be made under nationalized industry. Perhaps the nationalization of the entire munitions industry may be what he has in mind.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should be very glad to have it nationalized, but that is not contained in my resolution. The resolution states that no profits should be made out of it. We would not have had our great war debt to-day if there had been no profits made out of the last war.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there are to be no profits, I cannot think of any way in which industry can be carried on other than by its complete nationalization. If my hon. friend can tell me of another way, I shall be glad to learn of it. Of one thing I am perfectly sure; no manufacturer of munitions will engage in that business for the sake of charity. The choice lies between state monopoly and private industry, or partly the one and partly the other. Some years ago the League of Nations recognized that there was great danger in permitting private industry to engage too largely in the manufacture of munitions. I think the league was right in that. I think private industry, where it is engaged in the manufacture of munitions and war materials, has to be watched closely, for the very reason mentioned by my hon. friend, namely to see that excessive profits are not made.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Did not the private soldier have to risk his life for $1.10 a day?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but that does not affect the point. I am speaking now of how munitions are to be produced without profit, which is what my hon. friend says should be made a part of our foreign policy. At "no time" may mean a period when the country actually may be at war, or it may be a time when the country is not at war. Let us take conditions as they are at present. At the present time, in order to be prepared in the matter of defence, we must have a supply of small arms and of munitions of different kinds. Does my hon. friend say that it should all be manufactured under state ownership and control, which would eliminate the possibility of profits altogether? Unless he goes that far, he must concede that the only other way in which these materials can be supplied, if they are to be obtained in Canada, is through private industry. I agree with my hon. friend that we should seek most carefully to control private industry, but I cannot see how, in a system of competitive industry, you can totally eliminate the possibility of some profit being made.

Guns and shot and powder are not the only materials required for war. They are not the only materials that present a temptation in the matter of profits when war occurs. I think my hon. friend was in this house when we saw at the time of the last war what had happened with respect to the sale of horses and binoculars. Grain and foodstuffs of different kinds become in the nature of war supplies.

Mr. CAHAN: Wheat and beef and pork and cheese and potatoes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and all the rest of the necessary supplies.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: You might throw in nickel for good measure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And boots and shoes and clothing. Are all these things to be procured only under a government owned and controlled system which will not permit of profits being made? All that could result from a policy of that sort, if it were possible, would be the creation of a non-profit socialist island inside a competitive economy. But I doubt very much if we could get that far in Canada in a great many years, and, even if we did, whether it would be a good thing for the country. Even if we succeeded in bringing about the nationalization of industry to the extent that all war materials could be manufactured without profit, I am afraid that for a long time to come we would not recover what in the interval we had lost in the way of individual initiative and freedom.

As no doubt hon. members know, this question has recently been the subject of very careful study in the old country by a royal commission on the private manufacture of and trading in arms. The commission has just presented its report. As yet the report has not been either accepted or rejected. If I am not wrongly informed, however, members of all political parties served on the commission, the finding of which with respect to this matter is of interest. That finding is as follows:

> The establishment of a universal system of state monopoly of the manufacture of arms is likely to be impracticable, and in present conditions the promotion of general state monopoly should not be a part of the policy of this country.
> The abolition of the private industry in the United Kingdom and the substitution for it of a system of state monopoly may be practicable; but it is undesirable. No sufficient case has in our opinion been made out for taking so drastic a step. We believe that the reasons for maintaining the private industry outweigh those for its abolition.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask the right hon. gentleman if that report was unanimous?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My impression is that it was.

Mr. HEAPS: I have a different impression.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There may be some reservations here and there, but my impression is that with regard to the clause I have just read, there was complete agreement. The signatures of all the members named on the commission are subscribed at the conclusion of the report. However, I do not wish to argue that point. What I do say is that I believe any similar inquiry in Canada would bring about similar conclusions. Government manufacture may be desirable in regard to certain kinds of essential supplies which we require continuously. As hon. members of the house know, there is a great variety of special articles required as war supplies and equipment. It would be going much too far not to expect these to be obtained, at least in part, from private concerns which would expect to make some profit. Where, however, private industry is permitted to undertake the manufacture of munitions and war supplies, I believe there should be very strict government supervision. All contracts should contain provisions which will ensure that there will be no opportunity for other than a reasonable profit. I may tell my hon. friend that this whole matter has been given very careful consideration by the government. So far as any contracts with which we may have anything to do are concerned, every effort will be made to prevent anything in the nature of undue profits being secured by those who obtain the contracts.

Let me come to the first, and as far as I am concerned the last of the three clauses of the resolution. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the foreign policy of Canada should conform to the following principles:
> 1. That under existing international relations, in the event of war, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be.

The first objection which I have to that clause is that it binds the hands of parliament entirely. After all, we who sit in this House of Commons have been sent here as representatives of the people of Canada. They have placed their trust in us. They expect us, particularly with regard to matters of peace and war more than anything else, to exercise the wisest judgment it is possible for human beings to exercise. If my hon. friend's resolution were to carry, the hands of this parliament would be immediately tied with respect to the attitude of Canada in regard to war, regardless of what the circumstances of the war might be or of who the parties concerned might be. This is something I could not accept for a moment. Parliament must be free to decide its attitude in the light of the circumstances as they may exist at the time. Parliament acting for the people is the supreme authority in the state with respect to all matters, and certainly with respect to what is most vital to the nation, namely, the question of whether or not it shall be involved in war. The policy of the present administration is that, in deciding matters of this kind, as the representatives of the people parliament shall be the voice of the nation; parliament shall decide.

My hon. friend says that, having regard to existing international relations, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be. In other words, it does not matter in the least to my hon. friend what the circumstances of a great world conflict may be. It does not matter who is responsible for the conflict. It does not matter what the issue may be. It does not matter what other countries are involved, or what their attitude may be. It does not matter what danger there may be to Canada or the extent to which Canada's interests may be involved. It does not matter what other considerations may be involved. We are to declare now that, under all circumstances, this country will remain neutral. I do not believe that any member of this house except my hon. friend—and I doubt very much whether he actually would—would sanction this parliament tying its hands to that extent.

The question of Canada's participation in a war has been discussed many times in this parliament. Neutrality is just another aspect of the same question. Participation in war is the positive aspect, if I may put it in that way, and the question of neutrality is the negative aspect. Over and over again we have laid down the principle that so far as participation by Canada in war is concerned, it will be for our parliament to decide. Having taken that attitude with respect to participation, I think we might well take a similar attitude with respect to neutrality. It will be for this parliament to say in any given situation whether or not Canada shall remain neutral. At any rate that is the position which the present administration proposes to take.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In order that the house may be perfectly clear on that matter, may I ask this question: Suppose a crisis should arise where it would not be convenient to call parliament within a few days—it might take a week or two—am I to understand that the government would take no action committing the country to war until parliament had been called?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I recall it, the Militia Act requires that parliament must be convened within fifteen days after the militia has been placed on active service. I do not think it would be possible for the militia to be placed on active service and sent out of the country within that period of time. I do not think any government in Canada would contemplate for one moment the placing of any of the forces of this dominion on service beyond the dominion without parliament meeting in the first instance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may say so, that hardly touches the point. The Prime Minister just said that neutrality was the negative side and participation the active side of this war question. I should like to get from him a statement as to whether this country might possibly be committed to war, even though it was not committed to the actual sending of troops out of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Most certainly not. Our policy is that parliament alone can commit Canada. I cannot make that too clear. At the present time there are no commitments, so far as Canada is concerned, to participate in any war. Equally, there are no commitments of which I am aware, or of which any one else is aware, whereby we agree to remain neutral under all circumstances. The policy of the government with respect to participation and neutrality is that parliament will decide what is to be done.

I think I made the position of Canada very clear when speaking last year at Geneva. I shall quote only two paragraphs of what I said at that time. They will, I believe, remove any doubts there may be in the mind of any hon. member as to the position of the present administration. I want to make it quite clear that we will not necessarily become involved in any war into which other parts of the British Empire may enter, simply because we are part of the British Empire. It is for this parliament to decide whether or not we will participate in a war in which other parts of the British Empire may be engaged. Let me read what I said at the assembly of the League of Nations in the presence of British ministers and the representatives of other nations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before the Prime Minister goes on with that, if I might be permitted, does his statement mean that, even though the British Empire is involved, we shall remain neutral until parliament decides?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have already said that parliament will decide that question. Just how far we shall remain neutral will depend in part upon ourselves and possibly in part upon an enemy which might take it into its head to attack us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If Great Britain went to war, does the Prime Minister consider that we would remain neutral when that country was involved?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the very point I am objecting to in my hon.

friend's resolution. He wants us to say here and now that we will remain neutral no matter what the circumstances may be. My reply to him is that parliament will decide whether or not we will remain neutral. We will not be bound in advance as to what position we will take. We will in a case such as he has mentioned take into account all the circumstances which have occasioned Great Britain entering the war. We will take into account the situation in our own country. In reaching a decision parliament will consider everything that has a bearing on the question of the war.

Let me now read the statements of Canada's position which I made at Geneva. They ought surely once and for all to be an answer as to where Canada stands on this subject, so far at least as the present administration is concerned. There may be—I am not quite sure that there are not—some who will differ from the statement of policy, but it is a statement of the present administration's policy, and it is the policy which the present administration intends to follow as long as it remains in office. These quotations are from a speech delivered at the seventeenth session of the assembly at Geneva on September 29, 1936.

Mr. CAHAN: Is it published separately for distribution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I shall be glad to send my hon. friend a copy if he has not one. I thought he had one. This is the first statement:

> The nations of the British commonwealth are held together by ties of friendship, by similar political institutions, and by common attachment to democratic ideals, rather than by commitments to join together in war. The Canadian parliament reserves to itself the right to declare, in the light of the circumstances existing at the time, to what extent, if at all, Canada will participate in conflicts in which other members of the commonwealth may be engaged.

There was also the following:

> The Canadian House of Commons by unanimous resolution has made the adoption of undertakings to apply either military or economic sanctions subject to the approval of parliament.
>
> What I have said and quoted does not mean that in no circumstances would the Canadian people be prepared to share in action against an aggressor; there have been no absolute commitments either for or against participation in war or other forms of force. It does mean that any decision on the part of Canada to participate in war will have to be taken by the parliament or people of Canada in the light of all existing circumstances; circumstances of the day as they exist in Canada, as well as in the areas involved.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

I do not intend to say more on the subject to-night than to indicate what appear to be the different attitudes being assumed in Canada by various groups of people toward foreign policy and defence, particularly in relation to the question of Canada's participation in war. As far as one can gather from what has appeared in the press, and from what has been said in both houses of parliament, and by public men in different places, it would seem that there are three different positions being assumed with respect to the interrelated questions of empire defence and foreign policy. There are three schools of thought, or three different policies being asserted.

There is what I might call the imperialistic school, and I hope that those who share its view will not feel that I am misnaming it in any way, those who take the position that the British Empire is one and indivisible, and that in matters of defence there should be a common policy, which of necessity means a common foreign policy for the empire. Those who hold this view link the dominions irrevocably with the British Isles with respect to any decision which the latter may make in regard to war. That is the extreme on one side; "a thorough-going imperialism" it has been termed.

Then there is another group, the isolationist, which takes what has been referred to as the "regardless nationalism" view, a thorough-going isolation; the view that Canada should be completely severed from all contacts with countries engaged in war whether the contacts be with other parts of the British commonwealth or with other nations; that we should be an isolated country refusing in any way to be drawn into conflicts across the Pacific, across the Atlantic, or to the south of our boundary.

These are the two extreme views. It is impossible to say in how extreme a form any individual may hold either of these views. Also a point is reached where it may be difficult to say just where one opinion shades into the other, but just as there is a difference between day and night, so there is a difference between these two extremes. As between the two, there is a central moderate attitude, to which it seems to me most of the people of Canada adhere. It fills a middle area in which there is room for a diversity of views and policies having however one thing in common, that the policy must be Canadian throughout. Those holding this attitude are neither imperialistic nor isolationist in their outlook, but they are distinctly Canadian in their outlook. They believe in deciding questions relating to defence or foreign policy by reference to what is Canada's interest. Decisions must be made by Canada primarily in the interests of Canada. In considering her own welfare Canada will naturally take into account the interests of all those with whom she may be associated, but her position will be based upon what appears to be in the interest of Canada in the situation as it may present itself at the time. It is from this point of view that the present administration approaches the questions of peace and war in a world such as we live in to-day. In practice this will not mean a rigid policy expressing itself in automatic action or inaction as trouble arises, but a policy in keeping with conditions and circumstances. In so far as we come to parliament with an expression of our opinion, we will give it to parliament from the point of view that a certain course should be taken because, having regard to all the circumstances existing at the time, we believe it to be in Canada's interest it should be taken.

If I had to find words, Mr. Speaker, in which to express Canada's foreign policy, I would use those which the Apostle Paul addressed to the Romans, when he said to them, "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." Those words, applied to Canada as a nation, express our policy. There is not a phrase in that little sentence which is not significant. "If it be possible"; those words are not without their meaning. When we say that we would live at peace with all men, it may nevertheless not be possible in a world such as we are in to-day to live at peace with all men. That is the most serious circumstance with which this country and many other countries are faced at the present time. The world is not in a normal frame of mind. The world has been going through a condition of stress and strain in the last five years which has affected the mentality of men. No one can tell what terrible situation may appear on the horizon at any time. No one can say what mad act may be performed in the course of a crisis which may precipitate a great world catastrophe. God forbid that anything of the kind may come! But no man would be worthy of a place in this parliament who did not realize that there is no part of the world to-day that is not menaced with danger from without, and very few parts not menaced equally from unrest within. It is that fact which lends significance to the next phrase in the sentence I have quoted from St. Paul "as much as lieth in you." "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you"—the Apostle Paul was making clear when he used those words that he realized that within an individual—and it is equally true of a nation—there were conditions or forces which sometimes made peaceful relations with others very difficult if not next to impossible.

A government, in dealing with the affairs of a nation, and particularly with international relations, has to consider all possible situations that may arise. Any action for purposes of defence that the present administration has taken or may take will be due to the fact that, as men of affairs and as men of the world, knowing and understanding something of human nature, knowing and understanding something of the world situation as it is to-day and as it is developing, we feel it wise to recommend such action to parliament.

There is one other thing I should like to say, which has an immediate bearing upon the effect of any declaration of neutrality on the part of Canada just at this time. There are times and seasons for all things. In any action this parliament takes, we shall do well to have regard for the world situation as it is to-day and for the way in which our action may be viewed by other parts of the world. If ever there was need for unity on the part of nations and peoples who hold certain cherished ideals of freedom and liberty, that need exists to-day. We have need for unity in our own country. Nothing can do this country more injury than internal disruptions and differences. We have need for unity as between all parts of the British commonwealth of nations. I for one believe that the British commonwealth to-day is exercising a greater influence for peace than any other force in the world. For my part, instead of talking about the danger of Britain dragging us into war, I would say that I think there is not a man living in England to-day who wants war. I believe that the entire British nation—working men, professional men, public men, all classes—are determined to exercise their powers to the last degree to avert a great world catastrophe and to prevent if possible a war into which Britain may be drawn. What Britain has done to appease antagonisms in the last few years is something that the rest of the world hardly begins to appreciate. What, I wonder, would be the condition of Europe to-day if Britain had not endeavoured, as she has at every moment, to avert or circumscribe conflict? She has been the great pacifier. If, at the moment, the Spanish civil war has not grown to proportions involving the whole of Europe and possibly other parts of the world as well, too much credit cannot be given to Britain. We shall do well to keep this thought in mind as we discuss our relations with the British empire.

Let me proceed. There is more need of unity to-day than ever before, not only among the peoples of the British commonwealth, but among all the English speaking peoples of the world. There is great need of unity between the British commonwealth of nations and the United States in seeking to preserve the traditions and safeguards of freedom and of liberty upon which both great political entities are founded. Let me add that there is need to-day for unity among all those nations which cherish democratic ideals and individual freedom, and which in matters of government seek to maintain democratic institutions.

What would be the effect, regardless of who the belligerents may be, of a declaration of neutrality on the part of this parliament to-night? It would simply offer succour and support to those forces that are ready to oppose Canada, to oppose the British commonwealth of nations, to oppose the English speaking peoples, and that have their hand out against democracy and democratic institutions. In the eyes of the world it would simply be a "contracting out" of any endeavour to preserve all that we hold dearest in our national and in our individual lives.

I should like to have said something with regard to the League of Nations; I might just express one thought and close with it. I agree very largely with what my hon. friend has said to-night about the league being founded in some respects on a wrong principle. At the time the covenant was framed, the world was far too much under the war mentality. Instead of emphasis being placed upon the attainment of peace by peaceful means, friendly consultation and cooperation, too much reliance was placed upon force or the threat of force. Had it been otherwise, the world situation might be quite a different one to-day. The league has failed, in part because emphasis was placed upon the prevention of war by warlike means, rather than upon a constructive peace policy based upon the investigation and disclosure of the causes of grievances between nations, and their removal through the operation of an informed and enlightened world opinion. As my hon. friend said this afternoon, war never solved any problem. It has generally made it worse than it was before. Undoubtedly the only way in which these great problems will ultimately be solved will be by getting rid of the fundamental grievances that lie at the root of them.

I believe that the League of Nations has yet a great part to play, but it will be able to play that part effectively only when it comes to have universality of membership. A league of nations without the United States, or Germany, or Japan, with Italy neither in nor out, with Brazil out, and with other nations not prepared to live up to obligations which they had assumed, is not an institution which can maintain peace. The reason some countries never came into the league, and the reasons why others went out, or were unwilling to assume risks involved were in part because of the war obligations which the league imposed upon them, or to which they saw its obligation were certain to lead. I believe that with a revision of the covenant which will enable the league to proceed long lines which with further consultation, conciliation and mediation, we shall see develop a great institution which will serve the world well. I had that feeling very strongly at the League of Nations last year. One felt at Geneva in a very real way the absence of Germany, of Japan, of Italy, of the United States and of one or two other countries. The one thing the statesmen of Europe were seeking above all else at that time might have been found at the league, had it been formed originally on a peace basis rather than a war basis. The English, the French and others were asserting the need of a conference of the great powers of Europe. Up to the present time they have not been able to bring such a conference about. Had the league from the outset been functioning as a body for consultation, for conciliation, for mediation, those countries would have been there, and such a conference would have taken place in the natural course of events. I believe that had there been a conference among men of the character of those who were in attendance at the league, with those of the countries not represented who hold the positions of secretaries of state in foreign affairs of their respective countries good results would inevitably have followed.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Grey-Bruce): It is rather a pity that I did not speak before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), because I was all ready to tender him very hearty congratulations upon his speech at Geneva and to spend some time praising his courage and the clear-cut action which he took there. But the encircling of the circumference of opinion which he has done to-night has tempered my enthusiasm. The imperialists ought to be fairly well satisfied with the second last part of his address. At any rate it impressed me as being an assurance to them that they need not worry too much.

The thing that concerns me, all the more so after the Prime Minister's utterance just now, is this new cry of old words—the defence of democracy—even if we have to go to war about it. We fought one war to make the world safe for democracy, but we have had less democracy since than before, and now one can see the same slogan getting into current use again. Surely we ought to be able to think up something different. I saw the other day that Anthony Eden had said that we ought to have a nation fit for heroes. That is so close to "homes fit for heroes" that he should not be credited with originality. It is these recurring phrases that startle thinking people, and I believe that everyone in this house, to whichever group he may belong, is deeply concerned. We all fear another war and we fear that Canada will be dragged into it. But I really did not think we should ever be asked to go to war again on the same old slogans; I thought new ones would be devised.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) ought to be congratulated upon having, by means of this resolution, brought up the question of Canada's foreign policy. Whether we entirely agree with the resolution or not, it has served a very useful purpose, and certainly with parts of it I agree. I agree with the hon. member when he says that Canada's foreign policy has not been given any considerable place in the parliament of Canada. I have been in this house for fifteen years and Canada's foreign policy has been for the most part either too important or not important enough to be discussed; there has always seemed to be some reason why it should not be given a major place in the debates of this house. I suppose that one reason why Canada's foreign policy has been hazy, particularly in the years since the war, has been the fact that there are three distinct schools of thought in Canada. I shall not describe them by the names which the Prime Minister called them, but no doubt I mean exactly what he meant. There is the league or collectivist school; the imperialist school—whether or not that is what was called by the Prime Minister a Canadian school, I cannot be sure—and there is the North American or the Canadian or the isolationist school. If my judgment is correct, the tendency to-day is toward a thoroughly Canadian policy which recognizes more clearly than before Canada's geographical position. In my opinion the government deliberately refrained from being too specific —and I am referring not only to this government but to others—with respect to its foreign policy, because, should it come out for any one of these three schools, it would thereby offend the other two. So that more harmony was achieved by being vague than by being concrete in the enunciation of foreign policy.

Last September the Prime Minister took what I considered at the time a more heartening attitude. I did think the speech he made at Geneva was a courageous utterance. I am sure it must have been an almost terrifying performance to Geneva in later years to hear someone say what he actually thought about international affairs. At any rate, I did think the Prime Minister on that occasion said some things which very much needed saying. In this regard I am depending solely upon the reports of the press at that time. The week after the speech was made I went to the Department of External Affairs to secure a copy, but at that time they did not have one. If any copies are available, I hope to get one. As I say, therefore, I am taking my quotations from the press of that time. Some of the sentences used by the Prime Minister were these:

> "The means of solving the problems of Europe were best known," he said, "to the nations of Europe themselves, and were likely at this juncture to be more effective if applied by direct negotiation."

I thought it was quite time that someone made that statement at Geneva and I was happy to realize it had been made by the Prime Minister of Canada. In my opinion we have been thinking, far too long, of European problems as something which it was our duty to solve. The nations of Europe should set about solving their own problems; at any rate, they should not expect people who live as far away as we do from the seat of their continuous trouble to have the unabated interest in their problems that they themselves have. I felt that that was a telling sentence.

I agree entirely with this longer statement:

> Canadians—

I think he could have said North Americans with equal truth.

> Canadians viewing Europe from their own country were struck with the violent nature of the propaganda and recriminations hurled incessantly across frontiers, the endeavours to draw all countries into one or the other extremist camp, in the feverish race for rearmament, the hurrying to and fro of diplomats, the ceaseless weaving and unravelling of understandings and alliances and the consequent fear of peoples.

After discussing our neighbours and our lack of neighbours he went on to say, and this is a position which I have taken for some time:

It would be unreasonable to expect a North American state to have the same international outlook and the same conception of interest or duty as an European state facing widely different conditions.

Again he made this statement:

Perhaps it would be helpful all round if we would recognize—

I call his attention to this particularly to-night.

—that differences in policy where they exist do not represent a superior or an inferior outlook, but in the main correspond to the difference in circumstances that we face.

That, I think, needed saying at Geneva. Mr. M. H. Halton—I believe this appeared in the Toronto Daily Star—commenting on the Prime Minister's speech had this to say. There was a good deal of comment in the lobbies at Geneva over the speech and he quotes one of the British delegation as follows:

"An excellent speech," said one member of the British delegation here. "Talk all you like about the ideal of imposing peace but it won't be done. Mr. King faced realities. We know for good or ill Canada won't and can't be expected to bind herself in advance to enter a war which is none of her doing."

British opinion on the whole has two sides. They appreciate Mr. King's following Britain's lead in saying this is no time for league reform, but naturally they can't be happy at what is almost unanimously interpreted here as an isolationist tendency. The nearest of all to a unanimous view is the opinion that what Mr. King said needed saying, if it actually represented the majority opinion of Canadians.

In my opinion what the Prime Minister said at Geneva did and does represent the majority opinion of Canadians. I do not feel as happy about his speech to-night as I did over the reports of his speech delivered at Geneva.

When the war was over and the League of Nations was being born, I felt that there was hope that the league would be a real league; that all nations would belong to it; that the ideals which were enunciated at that time would dominate the league. Since then, while I still believe in the ideals of the league, I have come to feel that the great powers use the league for their own purposes; when they wish to make much of it they do and when they wish to, they slight it. That is the cause of the failure of the league, together with the injustices embodied in the treaty of Versailles.

In Canada, in the last two or three years particularly, there seems to have been a confusion—it appears to me so—which brought the imperialists and the collectivists so close together that I can scarcely distinguish between them. They wanted the same action, although they wanted it for different reasons. They both seemed to favour economic sanctions and might possibly both have favoured military sanctions. At any rate I did not find myself in recent months in agreement with either school. It grieves me to say that, because in the early days I was so enthusiastic a collectivist, and had such high hopes for the league, that if I say I have to a great degree lost confidence in its ability to render the service I expected it to render I feel in a way disloyal, not that I have changed my opinion of the ideal of the league.

Some day we shall come to the task of forming a better league, and it will take into account some things which were not sufficiently stressed before. One will be the principle of graduated responsibility. We were wrong in supposing that all parts of the world would be equally interested in a given crisis. Always the people who live closest to the place where the crisis is will be much more interested than those who live further away. That has swung me—and I say it quite frankly; I am not going to try to confuse my position in a multitude of words and sentences, I am not good anyway at hiding my thought, but I want to make my position exceedingly clear—that has swung me and I think a great many other Canadians to what I call a North American point of view. If the house likes to call it an isolationist position let it be so. One thing about Canada which we can be sure will never change is its geographical position. We cannot be sure it will not change in other respects. That geographical factor will in the long run determine Canada's foreign policy. Canada is not across the channel from Europe, so that, although we may try to deceive ourselves into believing that we think as we would if we were across the channel from Europe, actually our thinking is governed by the fact that the Atlantic lies between us and Europe. Therefore, without apology and without feeling any less loyal than anyone else in this house, feeling loyal and entirely Canadian, I say my position is a Canadian position, a North American position, and at the moment an isolationist position. Isolation, however, is only a stopgap, not a final solution. But there are many in this house who, if they would admit it, feel that what we now want to do is to cut ourselves adrift from the problems of Europe, and from being dragged into war as the solution of European problems by Great Britain. I have not and do not care to assert that I have that confidence in the ruling caste of Great Britain which the Prime Minister has just now stated that he feels. I have very little confidence in the ruling caste of Great Britain; I have no faith that they would keep us at all times in a position which is good for us. I believe the ruling caste of Great Britain will sacrifice the masses of Britain and will sacrifice Canada to their own interests. If saying that is disloyal, then I am disloyal.

Before the estimates for national defence are debated the Canadian parliament should be very sure of the reason for increasing them. Are we getting ready for an overseas conflict? The Prime Minister may not think we are, but what does our military caste, small as it is, think? How closely are they in touch with the military groups in Great Britain? We need to know the answer to these questions. Are we getting ready to defend Canada against possible enemies, I do not know who they are, but whoever they are? The kind of defence we should have depends upon the answer. If it is to defend Canada, we would need coast defences and an efficient air force. If Canada is preparing for war abroad a mobile unit to be sent swiftly overseas would more likely be required. The parliament and the people of Canada have a right to know for what purpose we are to spend the money.

Canada is very fortunate; our defence is three oceans; the Atlantic, the Arctic and the Pacific, and the United States to the south, that more than anything else. Nor do I think it is disloyal to recognize that. A glance at the map is proof. It would be foolish to pretend that we are in the same position as New Zealand or Australia or South Africa or Great Britain. When we are judging the efficiency of Canada's defence forces, it must be in relation to our position; we must think not in terms of other parts of the British commonwealth, but in Canadian terms, terms of what is good for Canada. That is loyalty in its highest terms. Surely loyalty has something to do with Canada. It is true that when we take an oath of allegiance we never mention Canada; we take no oath of allegiance to the people of Canada or of faithfulness to their best interests. But surely loyalty must touch the land of our birth, the land which is ours, and the land which I love above all others. It would be the sheerest hypocrisy for me to say that I love Great Britain as dearly as I do Canada. I do not; I love Canada more than any country in the world.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): So do we all.

Miss MACPHAIL: A lot of people do not say so. What I am saying is that we do not need to explain our loyalty. If we are doing what we think is best for Canada, that is the best thing we can do in the circumstances; we cannot expect that we shall all agree.

We hear many glowing words of praise for Sweden and Denmark. Well, possibly Sweden and Denmark are in the position in which they are to-day by reason of many things, but largely because they have kept themselves from wars for a long time. They were closer to the conflict of 1914-1918 than we were; yet they were able to maintain neutrality. Again they are sitting on top of the volcano; whether they can maintain neutrality on this occasion I do not know, but I know they still have the determination to try to. Canada would be well advised to get ready for neutrality. If we wait until the last moment to make our decision we shall not decide for neutrality, because there will be the pull of the military caste, the pull of sentimental imperial ties, there will be many things influencing us against neutrality. If, then, we are even going to consider it we should consider it now, and we should consider the price. I think the United States are acting wisely in this regard. They are preparing for neutrality. I do not know whether they can remain neutral when war comes, but I know they are getting ready to remain neutral, and that is something. That will keep them out at least a couple of weeks longer than would otherwise be possible. In Canada we ought now to be doing everything possible in preparation to maintain a neutral position. Unless we do so we shall be drawn in by forces of which we as a parliament know nothing, about which possibly the government will not know too much and of which the people of Canada have never heard.

Canada is developing a virile national spirit. I do not mean a nationalism which seeks expression for endeavouring to annex other countries, for instance, Newfoundland, the West Indies and Bermuda. I mean a nationalism which is proud of Canada, which is self-respecting, which is determined that Canada will make decisions for herself and that she will not now, as has been the case too often in the past, be unduly influenced by considerations of Great Britain, shall I say. Canada is growing up, and particularly among our younger people there is a virile Canadianism. They are not so much attached to any part of Europe, or indeed to the British commonwealth of nations, as are those of older years. This is something we have to reckon with at some time, and we might as well admit it now.

As Canada grows up, she should take part in neighbourhood conferences. I do not remember his exact words, but in speaking at Geneva I believe the Prime Minister expressed faith in regional pacts, saying that he thought they came closer to reality in linking obligations with definite contingency and direct interest. Early last December there was a neighbourhood conference of the American republics at Buenos Aires. I see no reason why Canada should not have attended that conference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I give my hon. friend the reason?

Miss MACPHAIL: Yes, indeed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We were not invited.

Miss MACPHAIL: Did you make it clear that you did not want to be invited?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; we just were not invited, that is all.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am not so sure. If Canada made it known that she wanted to be invited she would be invited.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is not the way it is done.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would not be surprised if she made it known that she did not want to be invited, though perhaps not so clearly as that. But this was a conference of the Americas, North and South, called to consider the protection of the Americas. A good neighbour takes part in neighbourhood gatherings; that was a neighbourhood gathering, and I can see nothing illogical nor, indeed, disloyal in Canada's participation in any such conference. We ought to get over our adolescent stage and become accustomed to the idea that we are an adult nation. That means that we should be able to go to Buenos Aires and take part in a conference without incurring any sort of condemnation either here or in any other part of the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Surely they will know now that they should invite us.

[Miss Macphail.]

Miss MACPHAIL: Surely the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) does not think I am quite so innocent. He cannot fool me so easily.

I come now to the last part of this resolution:

> That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

There is no way in which we can help to bring about the ideal expressed in the last part of the resolution better than by removing social injustice in Canada. If in this country we could create an ideal state which would furnish opportunities for all, we would make in that way the greatest contribution to world peace that could be made by us. To-night the Prime Minister made reference to troubles without and within nations. So far as I know, any trouble within Canada, or within most other nations, is trouble related to social injustice, trouble in connection with some having too much and others having too little. Inasmuch as Canada, together with all other nations, seeks to extend opportunities to all, peace will be strengthened.

I think now, even as early as this, we ought to say very plainly to Great Britain that Canada is not in the same frame of mind as she was in 1914; that Canada is unlikely to plunge into a European war without very careful thought, and if everyone thought as I do she would not plunge in at all. Of course it is impossible for anyone to say what the people of Canada will think once the propaganda gets going. I have seen people swayed almost overnight from a very sound position through propaganda, and one cannot say what might happen again. But I believe parliament, through its various groups, ought to express an opinion on this matter, in order that people not only in Canada but also in other parts of the British commonwealth will know something of the different schools of thought in this country.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): In rising to support this resolution, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I feel the mover (Mr. Woodsworth) has rendered a distinct service in having this question discussed. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has clarified the situation to a remarkable extent by the statement he has made to-night. The danger of war and the increased preparations for war since this house last met are marked. It seems a remarkable thing that less than twenty years ago we completed one of the greatest wars in the history of mankind; that around a hundred thousand cenotaphs people pledged that never again would there be war, and that to-day Europe should be an armed camp. It has been estimated that in Europe at the present time there are fifty per cent more men under arms than there were in 1913. Practically every nation in Europe is increasing its armaments at an amazing rate, Great Britain herself having being compelled within the last few years to resort to an extensive armament program.

It might be well to stop and ask ourselves the reason for this remarkable change since 1918 and 1919, when we really believed we had started to build "the parliament of man and the federation of the world." It can be seen quite clearly that during the past five or six years one crisis after another has arisen in international affairs, each a little harder to avoid than the one before, and in each case a compromise becoming a little more difficult to arrange, with the area within which peace was possible gradually becoming smaller. First, it was the Japanese aggression in Manchuria, which for a time looked as though it would cause a war in the Pacific. A compromise was arranged, but only by allowing Japan to retain the part of Manchuria it had occupied. Eighteen months ago another crisis arose, when Italy began to appropriate Ethiopia. Again there was every indication of a war in the Mediterranean, and again war was averted only by a compromise under which the aggressor was allowed to retain his booty.

At the present time we are in the throes of another international crisis. Evidence has been brought forward again and again to show that outside powers are actually giving military assistance to rebels in their endeavour to overthrow a properly constituted and properly elected government. In this case international war is being averted only because we are compromising. The civil war is being allowed to continue.

In view of the gathering clouds all over the world I maintain that a real service is being performed to-night by this discussion and by the fact that the Prime Minister has seen fit to make so clear a statement.

The possible foreign policies which might be adopted may be divided roughly into three classifications. I am not going to go back over the ground already covered except to say that most of us would fall into one of the three classifications. I imagine that these will cut across party lines and racial and religious differences. There are those who follow a more or less imperialistic policy which would commit Canada to war in the event of Great Britain or the League of Nations becoming involved in a war. It would mean that in the event of Great Britain or the British commonwealth of nations becoming involved, Canada would be obligated to send a military contingent across the Atlantic. I think I can agree with the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) when she says that such a course would not find favour with a large section of the Canadian people. I do not think I am alone in being delighted with the statement which the Prime Minister made at Geneva to the effect that only the parliament of Canada could declare war for Canada. I do not propose to take up time in reading his speech as he has already quoted from it. For the information of those who have been unable to obtain copies of this speech, may I say that I secured mine from the League of Nations Society. Copies can be obtained there for ten cents, and they are worth at least half that amount, if not all.

The Prime Minister's statement showed very clearly that Canada was not prepared to adopt the imperialistic position. We were not prepared to accept the position that Great Britain, the League of Nations or anyone else might precipitate Canada into a major conflict. When one considers the defence estimates which have been brought down, one wonders whether the government has decided to veer away from that original stand. I do not think it can be stated too often that Canada needs a foreign policy far more than she needs a defence policy. The Prime Minister stated to-night that these defence estimates were purely for defence purposes. They are increased over the estimates of last year, so that must mean that the need for defence has increased since that time. If the need for defence has increased since last year, we as members of parliament ought to know what potential aggressors have become more aggressive than they were last year, and against whom we are increasing our defences. Far more than we need to talk of a defence policy do we need to know what our foreign policy is and against whom we are required to increase our defences.

The second classification referred to by the Prime Minister is based upon the isolationist point of view. There are those who believe that we should refrain absolutely from making any international commitments because of the danger of such entanglements bringing us into a war. Those who are truly isolationists would refuse to utilize any type of peace machinery which would involve the use of force in any shape or form. The best example of this is the United States.

Mr. MARTIN: What about the resolution?

Mr. DOUGLAS: The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asks about the resolution. I believe he knows—I am certain the more intelligent members of the house do—that there is a decided difference between neutrality and isolation. I shall come to that in just a moment. Isolation must be based upon one of two things, either regional pacts or very strong armaments. Italy, Germany and Japan have resorted to the former, while the United States has resorted to the latter. While I have a great deal of admiration for the hon. member for Grey-Bruce who stands very bluntly for a policy of isolation, I am convinced that in the long run it could never have any great value. Hon. members refer to geography, but geography is a thing of the past. Only a short time ago Captain Mollison crossed the Atlantic in nineteen hours. Space is being obliterated. In a major world conflict a policy of isolation would be well nigh impossible, particularly for an exporting nation like Canada. Only twenty years ago the United States, a country more self-supporting than Canada, found it absolutely impossible to remain out of a world war even at a time when space was a more important factor than it is to-day. There may come a time when a policy of isolation will be forced upon us, but I am absolutely convinced that the isolationist point of view is hopeless as far as the building up of an effective world peace is concerned.

The time has come when we must either work collectively to build a world peace or be inundated in a world war. One of my complaints about the foreign policy outlined to-night by the Prime Minister is the fact that it is moving steadily and relentlessly towards a policy of isolation. For a long time I have suspected that hon. gentlemen opposite were pro-American in their trade policy, but it is becoming increasingly evident that they are also pro-American in their foreign policy.

The third classification would take in those who believe that we ought to have a system of collective action based upon collective security, with the proviso that Canada, owing to her geographical position, should be relieved of responsibility with respect to military sanctions. Such a policy would involve the acceptance of three principles. First, there would be the surrender of national sovereignty by which a nation gives up its right to decide in matters of international affairs concerning itself, but refers such matters to some international court. Also a nation would have to be willing to forego recourse to war as an instrument of national policy in settling differences.

The second principle involved in a system of collective action would be the setting up of the necessary machinery for the peaceful revision of treaties and for discussions with a view to removing the causes of war. Most of us recognize that any league organized merely for the maintenance of the status quo must inevitably fail. Machinery must be provided from time to time to revise treaties, such as the treaty of Versailles, which no statesman of any standing would seek now to defend. There must be a revision from time to time of territorial agreements. There must be recognition of such problems as the pressure of population, the need for markets and the necessity for colonies. There must be consideration of all those factors that bring nations into conflict one with another.

The third principle involved in the idea of collective action based upon collective security would be the use of force either by economic sanctions or, in the last resort, by military sanctions with a view to restricting those aggressor nations which might, in violation of their pledge, resort to force as an instrument of national policy. Canada, of course—this was put on Hansard last year and I shall not read it again—ever since 1920 has had the proviso that because of her geographical position she would not make any commitment with respect to military sanctions. But in days gone by she has made definite commitments as to economic sanctions, and I am convinced that if the nations of the world collectively were to apply economic sanctions the need for military sanctions would never arise. There has been published just recently the Memoirs of General deBono, who commanded the forces of Il Duce in Ethiopia, and the preface was written by Mussolini himself. DeBono makes the amazing statement that, had the Italians been deprived of their resources of oil at the time economic sanctions were being discussed by the League of Nations, Il Duce would have been compelled to give up his expedition in Ethiopia within three months.

Into which of these classifications does the foreign policy outlined by the government to-night fall? Personally I feel that the government is moving steadily, although perhaps not altogether conscious of it, towards an armed isolationist position. That is made evident by two things: first of all, by the attitude which was taken by the government in the Ethiopia affair, and there is no reason to go back over that, for it was dealt with in this house last year, when this government in conjunction with other governments failed to bring the full force of economic, diplomatic and financial boycott to bear on an aggressor nation.

In a statement made to this house last year, when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were up, the Prime Minister said that "collective bluffing cannot guarantee collective security." I submit that neither can collective security be guaranteed by collective duplicity, or by collective cowardice, or by collective evasion of our responsibilities, and that is exactly what took place. While peace was preserved in the Mediterranean, it was preserved at the expense of a primitive people, who, possessing only obsolete weapons, were wiped out and conquered by a country which, in violation of its pledged word, had resorted to physical force.

The second indication of the movement of the government toward isolation was contained not only in the speech by the Prime Minister to-night, but in the speech he made at Geneva. I have already said that the Prime Minister made an excellent speech in the first part of his remarks on that occasion; but in the second part, after having said that nobody except parliament could declare war for Canada, he went on to say that Canada was not prepared to commit itself to economic sanctions—it had never been asked to commit itself to military sanctions—and that we must think of the league in terms of cooperation rather than coercion. He used those terms again to-night. He said that we must have "mediation and conciliation" in the league, all of which I suggest are very fine, high-sounding phrases, but the Prime Minister overlooks entirely the fact that we are dealing with nations not all of whom are equally interested in peace. There are in Europe to-day nations which are avowed potential aggressors. One cannot talk about conciliation with a mad dog. One cannot talk about mediation with a megalomaniac who says that the idea of peace is abhorrent to him. One cannot talk about conciliation with a dictator who says: "We extend to you an olive branch which springs from eight million bayonets." A league such as is envisaged and talked about by the Prime Minister would be an international debating society that would be as effective as a ladies' aid meeting. To take the teeth out of the league, to take from the league all capacity to enforce its decisions, is to make the League of Nations null and void.

The Prime Minister, speaking on his estimates last year, said: "We are not prepared to see the league become an international war office." I do not think any person here would suggest that it should become an international war office, but it might become an international department of justice, not only judging as between nations but also having the power which a department of justice must have to ensure that its decisions shall be carried out; and that is something which the League of Nations as pictured by the Prime Minister to-night certainly does not have. In fact, I find it somewhat difficult to bring into any degree of consistency the Prime Minister's speech at Geneva and the statement he made to-night with reference to the rickety house. He said: We might build a new house, but there is always the danger of a man setting fire to it; because of that danger we must take some action against that man. Agreed, but one cannot take action against that man individually; one must take action against him by acting collectively and passing laws against the crime of arson, and by having police to apprehend the criminal and make him obey the laws of the community.

The Prime Minister spoke of angels of light and of darkness being constantly in conflict. I imagine that the medical men would think perhaps of microbes and bacteria. But we combat these things collectively, not individually, and if the forces in the world that make for war, if the aggressive forces in the world to-day are to be met, they must be met collectively by the peaceful nations of the world.

The Prime Minister spoke to-night of the need for unity between democracies, but certainly there can be no unity between democracies if Canada announces she is not prepared to pay the price of maintaining a peace system. The Prime Minister also spoke of the absence of certain countries from the meeting of the League of Nations held at Geneva last September because of the element of force in the covenant. I grant you that the United States stayed out of the league because of the military commitments contained in the covenant, but I do not think it is correct to say that Japan or Italy or Germany stayed out because of those commitments. They came in when those commitments were there. Rather let it be said that they went out of the league because they were branded as international criminals who had been condemned at the bar of international justice. To suggest that if we take the teeth out of the League of Nations they may all get together in good fellowship is like suggesting that if we rescinded all the laws in Canada, we and the criminals could fraternize and have no more hard feelings against each other.

I submit that the attitude of the government with respect to Ethiopia, the speech which the Prime Minister made last September at Geneva and the statement he made in the house to-night, indicate not a nation that is willing to enter into the responsibility of building a peace front, but a nation that is slowly and inevitably moving toward armed isolation. When the Prime Minister made his speech at Geneva, it was not very surprising that the papers of London and Paris, particularly papers that were pro-fascist, rejoiced in his statement. One of them said, "Canada leads the way out from Geneva." Another said, "Nothing but rags and tatters is left of collective security." Still another said, "The only policy left is isolation, and toward it the dominion is moving with the steady, relentless inevitability of an icecap."

In closing, I wish to submit three things that, I believe, should be incorporated in a peace policy for Canada: First, collaboration in building a collective system to cooperate with the other peace loving nations in the world with a view to building peace machinery. I am convinced that mere "mediation and conciliation," which the Prime Minister has outlined as a proposed new basis, is not enough. We must be prepared to enter into a system for building collective security arising out of collective action, and involving, if necessary, collective economic sanctions against a nation that has become an aggressor.

Second, we should insist that in such a collective system Canada shall not be deemed to be committed to military action in view of her geographical location, which makes the sending of an expeditionary force a very difficult matter, and also in view of the mixed races in Canada, which makes any wholehearted entrance into a foreign war a very dubious undertaking. It is unnecessary to say that in this country we have our friends of the French race; we have other races that have contributed to and made rich our culture right across Canada. Every day I receive letters from people who came from the older civilizations to Canada in many cases to escape from the ruthlessness of militarism, and who shrink at the very idea of being conscripted and sent back again to participate in European quarrels which were not of their making. Because of that, we in Canada should make it clearly understood that military commitments are impossible in such a collective system as far as we are concerned. We should also make it understood that because of distances, and because a blockade would make the sending of soldiers across the Atlantic a costly and risky business, Canada's contribution would be very expensive in proportion to the small amount of service that could be rendered. Further, except in matters of defence we have no potential enemies and should be asked to contribute only to economic sanctions, leaving to those located in affected areas the task of supplying, where necessary, military force.

The third thing I wish to suggest is that, as a lead toward building such a collective system, we in Canada should take steps to place the export of nickel under a national commission with a view to preventing potentially aggressive nations from securing large quantities of war material. I do not wish to infringe upon the resolution on this matter which is coming up later, but I have in my hand a statement of the exports of nickel from Canada from 1929 to the present time. It is amazing that most countries which have been the aggressor nations in the past five years have increased their imports of nickel from this country at an immense rate. The normal increase in nickel imports in most cases works out at an average of about 12 to 14 per cent per annum. I imagine that would approximate fairly closely to the expansion in the industrial and commercial life of the respective nations. But in the case of the nations which have been aggressive over the last two or three years that increase has been 300 and 400 per cent; they have actually trebled and quadrupled their imports of nickel from the Dominion of Canada. I submit that this is a serious problem. It is very little use to talk about mediation and conciliation, about building a new league on cooperation rather than coercion, when we are allowing millions of tons of nickel to go out of our country. It does not take a very fertile imagination to conceive the possibility that there are young boys living in Canada to-night, even some men who are in this chamber to-night, whose bodies will be torn to pieces by the very nickel we are now exporting.

We could begin in Canada to render a real service to the cause of peace, and the building of a really effective system of collective action, by taking steps now to restrict the sale of nickel to those nations which are using it largely for armament purposes. It would not be necessary, as the Prime Minister suggested, that we have a complete nationalization of the industry. In Saskatchewan they have a liquor commission, because the people believe that the liquor industry is such that it should not be left to the desire for profit and the greed of the private individual to exploit, with the result that no brewery is allowed to sell liquor directly to the consumer; it must be sold through the commission, in bond. The same thing could be done with reference to nickel. I ask the government to consider very seriously the feasibility this year of setting up such a commission whereby exporters and foreign importers could get nickel only through such a commission. This might mean some economic loss. The Financial Post made the statement that for the first nine months of 1936 the International Nickel company showed a profit of $23,000,000. Such an amount of profit might not be possible if a commission such as I have suggested were constituted. But I submit through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of this house that the making of a profit of $23,000,000 by the International Nickel company or any other company is relatively unimportant as compared with the task of helping to build a system of peace, and demonstrating to the nations of the world that as far as we in Canada are concerned we are prepared to pay the price of peace. I should like to see our people and our government say to the world at large: The nickel in Canada is not ours. We did not put it in the earth. It is a heritage and a trust, and we are prepared to say to the nations of the world: "So long as you want that nickel for the enhancement of human happiness rather than the destruction of human life we are prepared to sell it to you, but when you want nickel, as some nations professedly do, to destroy human bodies, to wipe out cities and to annihilate civilization, then not one ton of nickel is going to leave the shores of Canada for such purposes."

I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to give this matter serious consideration. In the last war soldiers were shot down by their own bullets; German boys at Verdun died on German wire manufactured in Germany and sent to France through Switzerland. Surely we do not want to see any war take place in which Canadian nickel, sold to some potential aggressor, will, in the years to come, be used to destroy the bodies of Canadian soldiers. I therefore ask that we consider seriously in the course of this debate the possibility of entering into a collective system to build up peace machinery for the world. We ask that Canada, in view of her position and her geographic location, shall be freed from military commitments, and that as a sign of our good faith we shall take steps even now to begin to restrict the sale of nickel, as far as possible, to purely commercial purposes.

Mr. DENTON MASSEY (Greenwood): I am sure that hon. members realize the importance and possibly far-reaching effect of this debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has brought to the attention of the house a matter in which he is vitally interested, in which indeed the people of this country are vitally interested. It so happens, as a result of circumstances over which we have little or no control, that there are wars and rumours of war, and many feel that there is danger of nation rising against nation. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not discuss the ghastly folly of war; he took that for granted, and so do I. Nor did he discuss the un-Christian character of war; that too he took for granted, and so do I. But he was concerned about policies; he was concerned about the policy that we in Canada should have to help to prevent war. He felt that Canada should have an effective voice in what concerns her. That was his language. The alleged war scare has burned deeply into his mind, and so he asks, What can, what must, what shall Canada do in case of war; and, further, what should Canada do now in these days of international unrest?

Obviously the answers to these questions must be predicated upon some knowledge of the position which Canada holds to-day as a nation among the family of nations. Let it be stated here and at once that whatever place Canada holds to-day as a nation among the family of nations was dearly bought for her, bought for her at the ghastly yet noble price paid by the Canadian corps of 1914-1918, those men who willingly gave of their best, indeed their very lives, to form a corps that General Currie so aptly called "the finest fighting force in the allied army." No nation could be ignored that had been able to maintain such a force. Canada's place as a nation was therefore bought for her in those days of war and its accompanying horror, a place which we thought we sealed and sealed proudly the day we became a signatory to the covenant of the League of Nations. Thus we had a right to a voice in world affairs. No longer could Canada be regarded as an unimportant little nation on the North American continent, composed of a handful of people living north of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude. So to-day we find ourselves, it seems to me, in a unique position; for our voice should be stronger and should carry far more weight than we ever thought it could.

We have heard references in this debate to the great size of the United States; we have heard references to-day to the comparative size of Canada. But since the United States apparently elects to speak only in whispers on the backstairs of Europe, Canada finds herself—if she would find herself—in a position to express not only her own views but those of the whole new world. And from that point of view she would be heard with respect in a world court. Yes, we could have a powerful voice in world affairs; but what is the voice of Canada? If we are absolutely frank with ourselves we are compelled to admit that to-day there is no single voice in Canada but there is a cacophony arising from within our borders. And here we are at once in the paradoxical and absurd position of having had bought for us, at a tremendous price, the right to sit in a world court and, by our own enterprise and industry in commerce, a certain strength lent to that voice; yet we are not able to determine what sound that voice should make. In fact we seem to be getting further and further away from that determination every day.

I am not an alarmist nor am I an extremist, but I do survey the present situation with extreme gravity. The possibility—and please note that I do not say the probability—of war in Europe has brought us face to face with the necessity of solving what is our greatest national problem, and of solving that problem with dispatch. Our greatest national problem is not that of unemployment; it is not the problem of agriculture; it is not the problem of youth or of any such questions which one might mention. It is the sum of these problems. And just as the whole is greater than any of its parts, so is our greatest problem greater than any one of the individual problems it embraces. The problem is the determination of a national policy for Canada. What sort of Canada do we want? Have we any great national determination as far as that is concerned? Do we want a united Canada or do we want a Canada at all? These questions must be answered if the Dominion of Canada is to develop as a nation among the family of nations. We have no national voice to-day. To travel from Halifax to Victoria is to find a virtual kaleidoscope of opinion.

To-night we have heard various schools of thought set out by those who have spoken. Perhaps I, too, may be permitted to suggest four schools of thought. It seems to me that opinion in Canada to-day may be divided into four groups. First, there is the opinion held by those who want a Canada, but a Canada essentially isolated from Europe, a Canada only for Canadians, a Canada quite prepared to let the empire and Europe mess about to their hearts' content. A second group consists of the adherents of that opinion which says: We do not want a Canada at all; no doubt the fathers of confederation did what they did in sincerity and as they thought was best for their country; but times have changed since 1867; Canada is virtually five separate states, the maritimes in the east, Quebec, Ontario, the three prairie provinces, and British Columbia in the far west; let us thank the fathers of confederation for what they attempted, and now let each part go its own way. The third group, and by no means a small one, consists of those who do not know what they want. Unfortunately this group may be the most vocal. This group talks about a dominion somewhat loosely tied together, which has some sort of defence but not too much, in which certain powers are taken away from the central government and given to the provincial governments. Yet at the same time they say there is too much government in Canada; they talk about no aid to the empire in case of conflict but are perfectly willing to take all and give nothing; in short they talk this way and the other, but really do not know what they want. In the fourth group are those who want a Dominion of Canada in fact as well as in name, a dominion which is an integral and important part of the British commonwealth of nations, ready and willing to join with that commonwealth to help enforce peace and to make peace heroic, a Dominion of Canada which is not only a British dominion but a nation of the world, a Dominion of Canada that will give support to the British commonwealth of nations in doing the job of work which there is for that commonwealth to do and to which the Prime Minister referred to-night so ably and so well. I am going to discuss these four groups not separately, but collectively in the light of what I have in essence already said, that is that Canada is at the cross-roads.

In the first place let us consider the isolationist. The isolationist as I understand him is he who demands that Canada have a complete national economy of her own; that the question of her participation in any war be not only hers to determine but that it be made clear to the nations of the world that Canada is free to be neutral in any war. I think there may be a confounding of terms in that connection. Neutrality is one thing, non-participation is another. Complete neutrality is one thing, passive belligerency is another. Would a declaration of Canadian neutrality in time of war be regarded by any warring nation, an enemy of Great Britain, as binding, so long as this dominion remains part of the empire? Even if there were no active participation, would an invasion of Canada in time of war by an enemy of Great Britain be regarded as a breach of neutrality? Let those who argue for isolation for Canada, or neutrality in case of war, remember that there is no such thing as passive belligerency. There is either complete neutrality or a state of war. And thus the only way for Canada to be regarded as a neutral country in a war in which the empire is involved is to sever her ties with the empire. This means we are no longer British. It means we are no longer able to claim all that that means and has meant, not merely from a purely sentimental point of view of traditional attachment to family or race, but from the prestige and protection which have always been such a vital part of our national position. Let the isolationist be prepared to justify all that it means for a Canadian citizen to sacrifice his British citizenship, to surrender the prestige and protection that go with it, to give up any claim on the services of an extraordinarily efficient and extensive diplomatic, naval and military organization.

In the second place, let those who argue for isolation and in the same breath plead the cause of peace, the glory of the united states of the world, remember that a united British commonwealth brings together at one fell swoop one-fifth of the people of the world, brings them together in a common cause. And what a mighty force for good is here as long as that force is for right and not for might; a force that espouses the causes of peace and justice! Therefore, let the isolationist be prepared to argue that the cause of peace is aided by the disintegration of the British Empire, and that the breaking away of the dominion from the British commonwealth of nations and the breaking up of that commonwealth, constitute a step forward rather than backward in the interests of world unity.

In the third place, is the isolationist prepared not only to admit, as Dean Corbett of McGill law school put it in an excellent article which appeared recently, that "neutrality can be bought only at the price or our common nationality," but to skate over apparently without qualms, "the moral objection to retaining, in the quality of a British subject, a claim on these services while repudiating by neutrality a reasonable share in the burdens of political association?" Assume for the sake of discussion that the isolationist and his supporters say that this moral obligation business is merely, in Kipling's language, "the flaccid tissues of long dead issues, offensive to God and man," is tawdry, maudlin and mawkish sentiment and tradition; that British citizenship has become but a catch phrase and means nothing to Canada any more; that it is just Canada for Canadians we want, and nothing else. Where does that lead us? Canada as a nation divorced from the British commonwealth of nations becomes at once a puny, faraway nation with about as much chance of being heard in a world court or in the market places of the world as any one of the dozen or more tiny states of Europe. Let an isolated Canada, a Canada divorced from the empire, be prepared to withdraw from any institution which is non-British-Canadian—for indeed any participation which we have had to date in international affairs has been as a nation within the British commonwealth of nations. The trade treaties we have made over the years—we will assume they are a benefit to Canada—must be disregarded and torn up as they were made with a British Canada. In essence, therefore, the isolationist demands that we sacrifice our external trade and bring to bear our full national powers on our internal trade.

In the fourth place let me again quote Dean Corbett:

> The only hope for isolation would seem to lie in the achievement of that complete self-sufficiency which is the Arcadia of certain ardent materialists and quack economists.

What does that mean? It means that we return at once to the primitive state in which our forefathers left us; that we tear down our industrial structure; that we once more put our hands only to the plough and the distaff, crawl into a smug parochial nationalism, and say to the land-hungry nations of the world, "Please, please, leave us alone." How long would rich, fertile Canada be left alone? Oh, but the isolationist says, "There is the United States; she will protect us." Hon. members will realize that a mother protects her daughter with no expectation of reward, but cousins do not take care of cousins on the same basis. There would be no protection without a price. Are we prepared to pay that price?

Lastly, is the isolationist prepared to assure us that the application of his policy rids us once and for all of the war menace? Divorce this dominion from the balance wheel of empire; remove from our provinces or groups of provinces our point of common allegiance, the throne of England, and just how long would Canada remain a union of nine provinces? Would the maritimes be apt to rush to the aid of British Columbia in the event of some land-starved power becoming actively greedy? Or would British Columbia be inclined to rush to the aid of the maritimes in similar circumstances? Divided states in what is now the Dominion of Canada I feel would be the inevitable result of secession.

Mr. FINN: What would Ontario do?

Mr. MASSEY: What would Ontario do but watch the crows fly by in either direction? As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, divided states within what is now the Dominion of Canada would be the inevitable result, I feel, of the application of a policy of isolation. Then, as divided states, what easy prey we would be to those nations to the right of us and to the left of us who, not unlike the guns of Balaclava, are volleying and thundering, or at least rumbling ominously for those who have ears to hear.

Let us go back to the point from which we started. Canada can have no voice in world affairs until we have determined the sort of Canada we want, or if we want a Canada at all. We have reached the cross-roads, Mr. Speaker, and now we must decide which way we want to go. I suggest that hon. members listen again to the words of Benjamin Franklin. This time he might be speaking to us, when he says, "We must all hang together or we will hang separately." Hon. members might well listen again to the voice of a great leader of another day, the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who challenged us when he said that "the twentieth century belongs to Canada." If it is a united Canada we want—and thank God I think it is—a Canada, a dominion within the British commonwealth of nations, let us tear away our thoughts and efforts from the divisions caused by crassly selfish, provincial economies and societies, and turn our common effort into one great, dominion wide, united, unselfish effort. If it is peace we want—and who does not want peace; I take second place to no hon. member in this house in a desire for peace—then let us out of this strange cacophony that now arises from within our borders tune the voice of Canada. And may we remember that it is not governments, federal, provincial or municipal, that will tune the voice of Canada to a single dulcet note. It is a public opinion, and public opinion that faces facts fearlessly rather than flirts with fiction, yes, and which faces not only facts but the ideals, the illusions and the real unrealities, that builds nations. We cannot; we must not; in the name of our fathers, the pioneers who broke the soil in this country, we dare not throw the future away for selfish, sectional parochialism. Let us give the fullest and the best of all that we hold dear to make of the phrase "Dominion of Canada" not just a picturesque imagery but a quick, real, virile, glorious reality, a Canada bound together by gold chains of national understanding, national unity, national courage, national faith and national hope. It is then, and only then, that the voice of Canada can be heard in world affairs.

Some years ago, Mr. Speaker, in the southern part of Saskatchewan, at the end of an excellent growing summer, when the wheat was high and the heads full, a three-year old child wandered from her home, and was last seen heading toward the wheat. She was not missed for some hours. Her mother realized the danger when news that the child was missing was brought to her, and at once summoned the child's father who started, with all the help available, frantically to seek his little girl. All day long he and those on the farm searched without avail. Others came and gave help, with no result. Night came. The people of the whole countryside with characteristic willingness and spontaneity joined in the search. Throughout the night they looked, using all the lanterns and other means of lighting they could find, but still without avail. The dawn of the next day found them weary and hungry, but still they carried on as the child was still missing. Nightfall came, and at last one called all the others together from every part of the farm and said, "Why do we not form a great human chain and march across these fields hand in hand? Someone is sure to find her." And they found her! It was not long before a foot touched a silent, still little body. The father was called to the spot, and as he picked up the lifeless body of his child, he looked up to heaven and cried, "Great God, why didn't we join hands before?"

Across this dominion, Mr. Speaker, from the maritimes through Quebec and Ontario, across the prairies into British Columbia, may we not have to say some day, "My God, why did we not join hands before?" The challenge to national unity is sounding now. Pray God we may answer it!

On motion of Mr. Elliott (Kindersley) the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, January 26, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

ELECTIONS AND FRANCHISE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND REPORT ON AMENDMENTS TO ELECTIONS AND FRANCHISE ACTS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to study the Dominion Elections Act, 1934, and amendments thereto and the Franchise Act, 1934, and amendments thereto, and to suggest to the house such amendments to the said acts as they deem advisable, and, furthermore, such committee shall study and make a report on the following subjects:

(a) The proportional representation system;

(b) The alternative vote in single-member constituencies;

(c) Compulsory registration of voters;

(d) Compulsory voting;

and that the said special committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses under oath and report from time to time.

That the committee shall consist of thirty members; that standing order 65 be suspended in relation thereto; and that the following be appointed members of the said committee: Messrs. Bothwell, Cameron (Cape Breton North-Victoria), Clark (York-Sunbury), Dussault, Factor, Fair, Girouard, Glen, Heaps, Jean, MacNicol, McCuaig, McIntosh, Parent (Quebec West and South), Perley (Qu'Appelle), Power, Purdy, Rickard, Robichaud, St-Père, Sinclair, Slaght, Stevens, Stewart, Stirling, Taylor (Norfolk), Turgeon, Turner, Wermenlinger, and Wood.

And, furthermore, that the minutes of the evidence and the report of the special committee appointed in the last session of parliament to study the Dominion Elections Act, 1934, and the Franchise Act, 1934, be referred to the committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is to reappoint the committee which sat during the last session and considered the various matters mentioned in the motion, and, in general, any desirable amendments to the Dominion Elections Act. The members of the committee are the same as those who served last session, and the work to be done is exactly the same. I remember that the committee tabled a preliminary report and asked that the committee should be reappointed this session to continue its work.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it occurred to me that possibly the minister might feel it would be better to provide in the final paragraph of the motion that the evidence and report submitted last session shall constitute part of the record of the committee. It was their request not that the evidence and report should be referred to them, but that what was done last year should constitute part of the records of this house. I only suggest that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have no objection.

Mr. BENNETT: The only question is whether, if someone raises a technical point, a mere reference to the committee would make the evidence and report a part of its record. But if the minister thinks it is ample I am satisfied.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS OF RIGHT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, at the last session of parliament, during the discussion of a bill respecting the National Harbours Board, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) gave assurance on behalf of the government that before the next session his department would prepare a bill to enact general legislation amending the law respecting petitions of right and providing for suits in tort against the crown. I would ask the minister, has the bill been prepared and will it be introduced during the present session?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the preliminary work has been done, and in point of fact a draft of the bill has been prepared and is ready to be submitted to the members of the government for approval, as is usually done before a bill is brought down. As far as I am concerned my intention is that the bill will be brought down this session.

TRADE WITH GERMANY

BARTER TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING EXCHANGE OF CANADIAN WHEAT FOR GERMAN MANUFACTURED GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. Reports emanating from Berlin yesterday indicate that Germany is anxious to obtain Canadian wheat in exchange for manufactured goods, including machinery. Has the government devised any plan for effecting such direct exchanges with Germany or with any other country?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member for Rosetown was kind enough to advise me yesterday of his intention to put this question to-day. In answer to that question I have obtained the following information:

The payment agreement between Canada and Germany, signed on October 22 and effective on November 15, 1936, provides that the German government "shall make available for the purchase of Canadian goods the foreign exchange accruing from German exports to Canada."

This fund of dollar exchange derived by Germany from the sale of German goods in Canada is indefinite in amount. Whatever the amount may be, 35 per cent of the total will be devoted by Germany to the purchase of Canadian wheat. For example, if Germany receives $10,000,000 during the year following November 15 from the sale of goods to Canada, the amount of dollar exchange available for the purchase of Canadian wheat should be approximately $3,500,000.

The agreement provides in addition that:

The German government during the first six months this agreement is in force may permit compensation transactions for the exchange of articles, produced or manufactured in Canada, provided that such compensation transactions shall not conflict in any manner with the basis of allocation set forth in article VI and the schedule to this agreement.

We have no knowledge of any barter transactions under this provision involving the exchange of Canadian wheat for German machinery or other German products.

EXPLANATION—MR. HAYHURST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM HAYHURST (Vegreville): I should like to make a short statement regarding my participation in the debate on Thursday last. The hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Mallette) kindly brought this matter to my attention. On page 147 of Hansard I referred to the political liberty we in Canada enjoy. In my effort to point out that we wished to preserve all that is good in our institutions and to remove all that is bad, and in referring to the benefits we had obtained from reforms in the past, I inadvertently mentioned that the great province of Quebec had not yet seen fit to give the vote to women.

Mr. POULIOT: What is good and what is bad?

Mr. HAYHURST: If my worthy questioner would study the Reform Act he would find that there are many things in it that are good. I fully recognize the part that Quebec has played in the history of this country, and I have the greatest respect for its history and its people.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Mr. HAYHURST: What I wished to say was that I may have been ungracious to the women of Quebec. I meant to imply that the finest people in this Canada of ours have not yet been given the privilege of voting.

An hon. MEMBER: They have not asked for it.

Mr. HAYHURST: But that, I suppose, is a matter for the citizens of Quebec to decide.

Mr. POULIOT: Amen.

BRITISH COLUMBIA RELIEF CAMPS

REPORTED DISCONTENT AMONG MEN ENGAGED IN FORESTRY PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. MacNEIL (Vancouver North): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) with reference to reports appearing in the Vancouver newspapers alleging serious discontent among men now engaged in forestry projects. Has the minister received information regarding these difficulties, and if so, have suitable steps been taken to investigate the causes?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): The hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. The Department of Labour is aware of the matter referred to by him, but has received no official notification of any trouble that has occurred. The works plan as it affects the single unemployed in British Columbia is being administered by the provincial government, which appears to be dealing adequately with the situation as described by my hon. friend. I expect that we shall be advised of any further developments.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): May I ask the minister a supplementary question on the same matter? In press reports from British Columbia it is stated that the minister of labour of the province has said that he will not deal with the representatives of the men affected. As the minister was very successful in negotiating an agreement during his visit to the coast last fall, would he use his good influence to arrange a discussion between the authorities there and the organization representing the men?

Mr. ROGERS: I can only say that I shall be very glad indeed to look into the matter.

STAFF AT PORT OF CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): The Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) will recall that last year I had a question on the order paper asking how many men were employed in seasonal and temporary employment at the port of Churchill. The minister was unable during the session to furnish the information. On the second last day of the session I asked him with respect to it and he promised to furnish the information during the recess. I have not yet been able to get it. Would the minister now inform me as to how many men were employed, between June 1 and December 31, 1935, on the seasonal and temporary staff at the port of Churchill; what were their names and their home addresses, and on whose recommendations they were appointed? I know the minister cannot give me this information offhand, but the question stood on the order paper most of last session and I trust he will take this as notice and let me have the information as soon as possible.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): My hon. friend will recall that he asked for the information in the form of an order for return, and I know that we furnished the information required of us. If he would put his motion on the order paper once more I assume the information could be furnished very promptly.

TEXTILE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask the government, first, when the Turgeon report on the textile industry will be ready, and second, when it is, will every member receive a copy of it?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): My information is that the final hearings have not yet been conducted by Mr. Justice Turgeon. I believe they are to occur in the very near future. Until the report is received by the government nothing further can be said about the matter.

SUPPLY—CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

STATEMENT OF MR. BENNETT ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): On more than one occasion both in and without this house I have pointed out that there are certain Canadian problems which in my opinion can be solved only by the united efforts of the various parliamentary and legislative bodies that are set up in our dominion. I have been much impressed of late with what I have read in the newspapers as to the present condition of unrest and—shall I say—evidences of something stronger than that in some sections of Canada, and I venture to-day to bring to the house a suggestion which I have thought over very carefully and which may or may not be of some value.

No one can fail to realize, for instance, that there is a sharp conflict at the present moment between legislatures and the parliament of Canada. We find some of our provinces suggesting the possession of a sovereignty which is entirely out of keeping with the general principles which have governed us heretofore. That in itself is not very serious. But the terms in which references have been made in some articles in the press are so nearly allied to references taken from the press of 1860 in the United States as to sovereign rights of the states that it makes one apprehensive as to where this may lead. This suggested exercise of sovereignty by the provinces goes further than I have ever seen it go before.

The second point to which attention might be directed is the ever-present conflict between legislatures and this parliament in the exercise of their constitutional jurisdiction. In other words, the interpretation of our constitution has become somewhat more difficult, and the exclusive powers exercised by legislatures of the provinces on the one hand and by this parliament on the other have come in conflict so frequently and so sharply with respect to national questions that I think it is time some remedy should be applied. One has only to look about and read the daily press to realize the character of the conflict. Vested with powers, plenary within their ambit, as the privy council has pointed out, the provinces have incurred obligations that are such as to have made some of them at least bankrupt. This parliament has no power of supervision, nor yet has it the right of effective criticism. I think that must be granted; for under the constitution, I repeat, the provinces in the exercise of their legislative powers have the same plenary right as this parliament has within the ambit of its jurisdiction.

Note the character of the conflicts. They have been going on, but we have never seriously endeavoured to deal with them during the seventy years of our confederation. For instance, we have the debt problem. We have a far more serious problem, that which arises out of the breach of contracts by provincial legislatures. I do not intend to indulge in party discussion of these matters. I only point out that what Lord Grey, when he was governor general of this country, pointed out as to the lack in our constitution of any effective powers to prevent the legislatures from making contracts, was a matter for the most serious consideration; and he did suggest that the provinces might consent to an amendment to the British North America Act which would embody within the provisions of our constitution one similar to that which prevails in the United States of America. Hon. members who are of the legal profession will recall the judgment of Chief Justice Marshall when dealing with that question in connection with the grant of lands in the state of Georgia and what a profound effect it had upon the life of the United States.

Take another question, the administration of justice. I have had occasion to examine the problem connected with the administration of justice in others of our self-governing dominions. Here, the parliament of Canada makes the criminal law but the administration rests with the provinces, and the result of course has not always been entirely satisfactory. With respect to the question of the administration of civil justice, it will be recalled that the provinces determine the number of judges that are to be appointed and this parliament has to provide for their appointment on the one hand and their salaries on the other; and it is a matter well known of course to all that in some of our provinces the judiciary are notoriously without work. That is the result of the operation of our present constitution.

Then there is one other power that has fallen into disuse but which was looked upon at one time as a bulwark to ensure the safety of what you might call the contractual obligations and responsibilities of those who had bargained with provincial governments. I refer to the power of disallowance. Early in our history Mr. Blake set up the theory that instead of the exercise of that power it would be preferable for the courts to determine whether or not legislation fell within the jurisdiction of the legislature or of federal power, and if it were intra vires of the legislature then it should be left to its operation. That principle was not the principle under which the power of disallowance was inserted in our constitution.

There are other matters to which attention might be directed, but I do desire to point out that there has come about an ever-insistent and increasing demand upon the federal treasury to provide money for provincial legislatures by increased subsidies and grants in order that they might expend it without any limitation or control being imposed upon that expenditure by the power that granted it to them. We have set up commissions with respect to matters affecting eastern Canada, central Canada and western Canada; and it is because on Monday last I saw the suggestion that it was thought desirable to set up a commission to deal with certain fundamental problems that affect our whole constitutional position that I venture to make the observations that I now make.

What I say is predicated upon the assumption that all the provinces are desirous of maintaining the confederation. Every now and then you read an article suggesting that the provinces would like to go back to the days of the crown colony. You sometimes read, from what I consider—not speaking in any sense disrespectfully—irresponsible sources, the suggestion that a free republic should be established in some parts of Canada. I dismiss these suggestions and I conclude that all Canadian provinces are desirous of maintaining the confederation. Once we concede that premise, the only problem that has to be considered is the nature and character of the instrument under which the various provinces carry on their legislative powers and their administrative functions and this parliament carries out its obligations as a national parliament. That instrument, of course, at the present moment is a document known as the British North America Act, a statute passed at Westminster in 1867, and which has been frequently amended. Under that act there was a distribution of legislative powers between the provinces and the dominion. It has been contended—and I do not propose to enter into that discussion to-day—that this was a contract between four provinces and that there must be unanimity between them before there can be any great modification of that instrument. I am not discussing that for the moment.

It is well known that Sir John Macdonald preferred a legislative union; you will find that in one of his letters in which he sets it out at length. For purely political reasons it was impossible to give effect to that conviction and we therefore enacted a statute that does not provide for a purely federal union, as was pointed out by Lord Haldane in connection with the famous Australian case; because in Australia they have a federal union embodying the principles of the American constitution. Only a few days ago the privy council held that the marketing act of Australia was illegal and invalid; that there was no power either in the legislature of any state or in the parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia to enact that measure; that there was a legislative area unoccupied by either the parliament at Canberra or the legislatures of the various states. The result is that an amendment to the constitution is being submitted to the people for their consideration, to authorize the jurisdiction being exercised by the federal parliament.

All this I state merely by way of introduction to the suggestion which I have to make. The British North America Act came into operation as a result of the final adoption at Quebec of certain resolutions. To the extent that there may be variation between the resolutions and the statute another question arises which it is not my purpose to discuss. But the resolutions at Quebec were arrived at after a conference, a convention, representing all shades of political thought. There met together representatives of every one of the four provinces, and they were selected not from the party in office at the moment but from the legislatures as a whole, in order that the whole question of the constitution might be raised from the level of pure partisan discussion to a broader outlook and a wider field. The result was that the Quebec resolutions could not in any sense be said to be resolutions arrived at by a party. They embodied the convictions of the responsible representatives of the four provinces.

Mr. ROGERS: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. BENNETT: I would rather the hon. gentleman did not just now. When the constitution of South Africa was being made, the conference that met, presided over by the chief justice, Lord de Villiers, was a conference in which men of all parties were represented. You have there Louis Botha, General Smuts, and others who were far removed from them in their outlook on the national problems and the method of dealing with them.

Mr. POULIOT. General Hertzog.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. Their constitution is the result of the deliberations of these great representatives of the four provinces, the Cape, Natal, the Transvaal and the Free State, just as our constitution was assumed to be prepared on the basis of the resolutions which were arrived at after much discussion and consultation between the representatives of the provinces.

May I refer now to my own experience in connection with these matters? When the provinces are represented by their premiers and some of their ministers there is always a tendency, whether you like it or not, to consider political questions from the narrow rather than the broad angle. Every interprovincial conference which has met in this country has been a political conference; therefore to talk about amendments to this rigid written document, the British North America Act, by the action of a body of men who for the moment represent merely a majority—or sometimes not that—of the electors, is in my judgment an entirely erroneous view, and cannot possibly lead to any adequate solution of the difficulties before us. Therefore I suggest that we have a constitutional convention: a conference at which the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, would be represented not merely by their premiers but by all who constitute the legislatures of the provinces—not all in number, but such as may be representative of all phases of thought within those legislatures; and the same with respect to Quebec; the same with respect to Ontario and the west. There are in western Canada many schools of political thought; would it be right or fair that there should be a determination of constitutional rights and a limitation of constitutional powers of the provinces if some of those schools of thought found no representation at the conference or convention which modified our constitution?

Then I come to this parliament. In any constitutional convention or conference there should be provision for representation of the various schools of thought represented here; the Prime Minister, his government, the opposition, gentlemen who sit to my left representing other schools of thought. We should then have a constitutional convention or conference in accordance with the general principles which governed the conference that brought into being the British North America Act, the constitution of this country. In other words, we cannot hope to succeed in the modification of our constitution by appealing merely to the partisans in the provinces or in the dominion; for that is what it means if we limit the representatives to the governments of the day. If we are to succeed we must have representatives of the whole of the legislature or parliament, in order that there may be full, free and frank discussion, and that the conclusions arrived at in the form of resolutions may be such as embody the modifications that our experience teaches should be made.

I wonder if there is any hon. member of this house who has any doubt as to the desirability of amendment of the British North America Act. I know of none. I have never talked privately to a member of this house who has not agreed that there should be some modification, some amendment. It is for that reason that I make this suggestion.

I have deliberately left out from what I have said any reference to the method to be adopted to accomplish the amendment of the of the constitution. I am not unaware of the methods followed in Australia and South Africa; they were in sharp variance with our own. That is a matter which may well be discussed, if thought desirable, at such a conference. But for the purpose that I have in mind at the moment, namely, the preservation of our institutions, I do submit that in this suggestion we have a broad basis of discussion, representation not on a narrow party basis but by all those who are leaders of—you may call them not parties, but groups, small though they may be; and that the discussion be on such a broad basis as may ensure a successful constitutional conference or convention to effect the measures of reform which in my judgment are essential to the preservation of democracy in Canada—I go just that far. For unless democracy can be as efficient as a dictatorship, it cannot survive. And it cannot be efficient in this country with these sharp conflicts between provincial jurisdiction on the one hand and federal on the other, and the many other matters to which I have referred and to which I could refer at greater length. Our desire to ensure and maintain the success of democracy on the northern part of this continent can in my judgment be made effective only by the government of the day arranging a conference which will ensure such conclusions being arrived at, after consultation and discussion, giving in here and advancing there, as will place our modern political thought, shall I say, on a constitutional basis. For certainly the tendency is everywhere to efficiency in government, and the general view is that efficiency cannot be maintained if you have in nine different areas nine different sets of laws dealing with problems that are national in their scope.

The Minister of Labour desired to ask me a question. I shall be glad now to answer if I can.

Mr. ROGERS: I did not propose to take issue with the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) but simply to correct what I assume was an inadvertence on his part when he referred to the Quebec resolutions as having actually been the basis of the British North America Act. In some provinces, as he is well aware, considerable importance is attached to the fact that the Quebec resolutions were followed by the resolutions of the Westminster conference of 1866, which actually I think are set out in Pope's Confederation Documents.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I am thoroughly familiar with that.

Mr. ROGERS: Are they not the basis of the British North America Act?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the Minister of Labour has not accurately expressed the situation. The conference at Quebec was different from the conference at Westminster. The conference at Westminster was limited in its numbers as compared with the conference at Quebec. The conference at Westminster was a conference of give and take in the final discussions that were held between the members who went there to represent Canada and the government at Westminster, just as in "Lord de Villiers and His Times" it is pointed out that he went to England after the resolutions had been arrived at in connection with the Union of South Africa, and modifications were made. Lord Crewe made modifications and changes because he thought the draftsmanship was faulty and should be improved here and there. The resolutions were finally adopted, and the Westminster conclusions were the conclusions arrived at in the hotel as from day to day the members of the delegation from Canada discussed their problems with the British government which had to put the bill through the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

Mr. CAHAN: The difficulty was to give legal expression to the resolutions.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. The draftsmanship, I believe, is said to be that of the late Lord Thring, and it has always been the subject matter of discussion. Sometimes when I read the sections I marvel at the prescience and power of that great draftsman who, out of the resolutions which were before him, created the act we now know as the British North America Act. No one would say that the men who met together at Westminster were the men who were primarily responsible for the adoption of the constitution.

Mr. ROGERS: I am not suggesting that.

Mr. BENNETT: That was done at Charlottetown and Quebec, and it will be recalled that after the Quebec resolutions were drawn up those who were responsible for them visited Upper Canada, Lower Canada and the lower provinces, and made addresses in various places. Those from the maritime provinces came up here, and you will recall many of their speeches which are contained in the records of one of the Prince Edward Island representatives, Mr. Whelan. He records their visits to Upper Canada and to Lower Canada, as it was then called, and the discussions that took place at that time.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I was rejoicing in the fact that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) was back in this country, but after listening to what I have just heard I am not sure whether he has not made a broadcast from Cape Town or Canberra, whether he has not been speaking from South Africa or Australia, or perhaps from New Zealand.

Five or six years ago, sir, when I was sitting in the corner to your left and when the Liberal party was in opposition, I denounced the policy of the then government when the prime minister acted as a sort of Santa Claus, saying to the provinces and the municipalities, "Come to me and I will give you anything." What did he do? He imposed heavy charges on the provinces and municipalities. After the speeches delivered by the right hon. gentleman during the election of 1930 people were under the impression that the government of Canada was a kind of Santa Claus, that the Bennett government would give plenty of money to every citizen, and that no Canadian would have to work after the election. He promised to take care of every unemployed person, saying, "Come unto me and I will give relief to the unemployed," who were not then unemployed but who wore buttons paid for by the Conservative organization, and who made trouble at meetings addressed by the leader of the Liberal party.

That was the story at that time, sir. Then the right hon. gentleman was creating a false impression throughout the country, leading people to believe that there were many unemployed when there were none. More than that, sir, the Indians who had been on relief for years were considered as unemployed, though the government knew very well that they could do no work. They were unemployable unemployed, but their number was added in order to give a false impression to the country. Afterwards what happened? After the right hon. gentleman had said to the country that he alone could take care of the unemployed and end the unemployment problem, he said to the provinces, "You will pay so much" and to the municipalities, "You will pay so much" and to the railways, "You will pay so much." Thus he imposed on the railways, on the municipalities and on the provinces a heavy burden of responsibility which he shared to only a small extent. As a result many provinces and municipalities are bankrupt.

I am very glad, sir, to have seen the right hon. gentleman rise in his seat this afternoon and denounce a condition which he created by his own policies from 1930 to 1935. He sees the evil now which we forecast when we were on the other side of the house. We knew what would happen, and now this government has to look after the result of the wrongdoings and shortcomings of the right hon. gentleman, in order to try to make this a country in which Canadians can live happily. That is pretty hard after the five years through which we have passed, from July 1930 to October 1935.

But, sir, I fully agree with the right hon. leader of the opposition when he says there should be an adjustment of taxation. For long enough this government has been considered a kind of Santa Claus. The municipalities go to the provincial governments; then the provincial governments come here and ask the federal government to give them money that comes from federal taxation. There is a question appearing on the order paper now which I hope will be answered in Hansard, requesting information, first, as to the revenue derived from each tax during the last five years, and second, how this money has been spent, in order to show the people that the federal government is no Santa Claus, as the right hon. leader of the Conservative party preached during the election of 1930, and as he tried to make the country believe during the years he was in power.

We must come to this, Mr. Speaker: Every Canadian citizen should know what amount he pays in municipal taxation, what amount he pays in provincial taxation and what amount he pays in federal taxation, and every municipality, every province and the federal government should spend only the money received from their own taxation. I am sure this will meet with the approval of the Canadian people. Why do we tax our people in order to give the money to the provinces, who in turn give it to the municipalities?

What is the income of the municipalities? The main part of their income is what they obtain by taxing those who own immovable property. The burden of taxation falls on those people, who are left with no purchasing power after they pay that taxation. The official gazette of each province is full of lists of immovables which are to be sold for taxes. People have no means with which to pay their taxes and their properties are sold. This creates a very acute problem, and it is time for an adjustment of taxation. My right hon. friend the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Bennett) sees that now. Why, when he was leader of the government, did he not appoint a committee of the house to study this question of taxation, a matter of the greatest importance to every one of us? It was not done. Before coming to any agreement with a province the first thing to do would be to examine the field of taxation, to see whether or not the taxpayer can be relieved to a certain extent. Then, the next duty would be to see that the municipalities have sufficient sources of income so that they may not have to lean too much on the provinces for subsidies, and that in turn the provinces may have great enough revenues, so that to make both ends meet within their own borders they will not have to lean on the federal exchequer for further subsidies.

This is very simple, in theory, but it may be more difficult to bring about the necessary adjustments. However, as a Canadian citizen I urge upon the house and country the necessity of a careful study of every field of taxation. Who shall be called to that conference? If we call every sitting member of every legislative assembly to meet to discuss the matter, where shall they meet? I say they will meet in the Tower of Babel. That is where they will meet; there would be no understanding.

I believe in the rule of the majority, although some different opinions have been expressed in this chamber; and I fully realize the importance of a modification of the British North America Act. My right hon. friend the hon. member for Calgary West has said that the British North America Act has often been amended since its original passage. That is not exact, and he knows it. The amendments are very few, and are contained in only a few pages of the annex to the statute. Every member knows that, and the right hon. gentleman opposite knows it better than anyone, because he is well posted in the law. He knows it. The amendments to the British North America Act have been only slight and minor.

If we are to study amendments regarding taxation I suggest such study should first be made by a committee of this house, such committee having been given authority to go to the bottom of the matter. There are intelligent members in every party in this chamber, and many hon. members are well qualified to make a thorough study of the matter from the federal point of view. Then, when such committee has reached a conclusion, that conclusion should be sent to every legislature in Canada, because the matter affects the provinces as well as the dominion. The report of the committee of this chamber should be sent to every province, and after having been discussed by each province it should be sent back to Ottawa. After the returns have been received, it would be proper to have a meeting of members of the House of Commons and the Senate, and duly accredited representatives of every province.

We must have order. As a boy at school I remember writing in our copy books "ordo ducit ad Deum"—order leads to God. There is no order now in the way subsidies are granted to the provinces. As soon as the right hon. the leader of the Tory party took office every province came here, as they would have come to Santa Claus, saying "We have a deficit; you Ottawa people must fill it. We cannot make both ends meet; you of the federal government must give us money to fill the gap." That is what happened, and the right hon. gentleman opposite knows it better than anybody else. I am sorry to see him smile; he should cry, because that is his own work. He knows, and every man of good faith in this chamber knows, that what I have said is true, and only since the right hon. gentleman was prime minister has there been such disorder in the finances of Canada.

It is time to have order, and such order can be achieved through the good will, experience, intelligence, devotion and earnestness of hon. members who are ready to make a careful study of this most important problem and draw the right conclusions.

After the remarks of the right hon. gentleman opposite I submit the government should first appoint a committee of this house to study through and through the matter of taxation, because the federal government is more interested than provincial, municipal or school authorities. We are more affected because of the grants or subsidies asked when finances are in a bad way either in the provinces or in the municipalities. Competent members of this chamber—and I am sure all are—should be chosen to form a committee to make a close study of the problem, and to report to the provinces and ask their views in the matter. Following that we might have a conference where representatives of provinces might be selected by the legislative bodies. We would have a final and practical report on the matter. Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say for the time being.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course we were unaware that my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) would discuss this matter to-day. I realize it is a most important one, and my remarks must necessarily be general.

I agree with the right hon. gentleman that occasionally there are queer happenings in certain parts of the dominion, and the instance he mentioned of a province claiming sovereignty is certainly one of them. I suggest however that that must not be taken too seriously. I know of happenings in another province which some of our friends in other provinces, and even elsewhere, are perhaps taking too seriously. A few days ago I was amazed to read in a review published in London references to certain speeches which have been made recently in my own province, and making unjustified comments thereon. May I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the House of Commons, that those who have indulged in such speeches do not represent the views and the mentality of the people of my province. We are attached to confederation, as are the other provinces, and certainly are opposed to having nine nations in Canada. We have one nation, the Canadian nation, of which we are proud, and we will see to it, all of us, that Canada is kept and maintained on the road to progress and prosperity.

There is no doubt that changes are required and should be made in our constitution so far as the jurisdictions of the central government and of the provinces are concerned. The fathers of confederation did a great work in 1867, but they worked in the light of conditions as they were seventy years ago. Times have changed; the problems are different; conditions to-day are not what they were seventy years ago. Changes have to be made, and the statesmen of to-day have to harmonize the constitution of Canada in its relation to the jurisdiction of the provinces so that it will conform to the conditions of to-day rather than to the conditions of 1867. But this should be done harmoniously. It is not being disloyal or unfaithful to the memory of Macdonald, Brown, Cartier and the others if we make the necessary changes that will ensure the permanency and continuance of the great work which they have done.

My right hon. friend has mentioned some of the anomalies which exist and some of the difficulties which governments have to meet almost every day in the administration of affairs both in the dominion and in the provincial jurisdiction. The great difficulty—and this has engaged the attention of the courts ever since confederation, and is still engaging it because there are references now before the privy council on certain social legislation of this parliament—the great difficulty is the harmonizing of that power in the constitution which gives to the provinces jurisdiction over property and civil rights with that other power which belongs exclusively to the federal parliament with regard to trade and commerce. Most things which concern trade and commerce apply also to property and civil rights, and it is most difficult to determine in which jurisdiction certain specific matters lie. Take the administration of justice. My right hon. friend is right in pointing to the anomalies there. The provinces enact the legislation, create tribunals, fix the number of judges who shall administer justice within their limits, and then the federal government appoints the judges, and this parliament provides for their salaries. There are other matters. Take the prison system. A prisoner is sentenced to twenty-three months in gaol; he goes to a provincial gaol. If he is sentenced to two years, he goes to a federal penitentiary. Of course all this was arbitrarily determined, and certainly some of the difficulties that have arisen are as a result of this arbitrary division of powers and jurisdiction. All these things may be revised if the constitution comes before a conference of the kind suggested by my right hon. friend.

He also mentioned the power of disallowance. This is another very difficult thing. The power of disallowance which is in the constitution has in practice become practically obsolete. The power of disallowance which existed at Westminster with regard to the legislation of this dominion exists no longer because there has been a constitutional convention which has done away with that power. There has been no such convention with regard to the power of disallowance by this dominion of provincial legislation, but in practice the provinces claim full and complete sovereignty within the limits of their legislative sphere, and it is rather difficult to exercise that power of disallowance. There are cases—I will not affirm that they exist at the present time—where it would almost seem that a province would desire that its legislation be disallowed in order to create conflict between the province and the dominion parliament and the dominion government. This renders the power of disallowance almost illusory, you may say.

With regard to financial difficulties, there are some at the present time, and they are engaging the attention of this government to a considerable extent. I can assure my right hon. friend that they have been discussed by this government almost continuously.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not suggest that they had not, you know.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, I quite realize that. These financial difficulties are so urgent and so pressing that I am afraid their solution could not await any constitutional conference, because some step must be taken in order to prevent what might be rather a danger to the whole of Canada.

As far as amendments to the British North America Act are concerned, I agree with my right hon. friend, and on various occasions in this house, wherever I happened to be sitting, I have stated that amendments to the British North America Act are necessary and should be made. I also claimed, and I have not changed my view about it, that Canada, as a self-governing dominion, should have the power which other self-governing dominions have to amend its own constitution, subject to the necessary safeguards of certain rights which cannot be ignored. I have already discussed in this parliament the question of a constitutional conference. The first public man to my knowledge who advocated a constitutional conference of the kind suggested by my right hon. friend was Sir Clifford Sifton, who very often claimed that we should have a constitution for the Dominion of Canada, and that it should be the work of a conference representing the dominion and the provinces, with the delegates chosen by the dominion and by the provinces and representing, as my right hon. friend has suggested, the various parties in the dominion and in the provinces as well. No doubt much might be said in favour of such a scheme, and the idea expressed by the leader of the opposition to-day ought to be discussed and considered not only by the members of the house but by all who are interested in these questions, and another occasion should be provided for the purpose of discussing it more fully. In a general way the matter engages the attention of public men, and more particularly of members of this house; for if you consult the order paper you will observe not less than three resolutions affecting the subject we are discussing. There is resolution No. 2 of my hon. friend the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), who suggests that a committee of the house be set up for the purpose of recommending amendments to the British North America Act. There is the resolution of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), who also asks for a committee of the house which would consider all the matters that have been referred to this afternoon. There is one by my hon. friend the member for Peace River (Mr. Pelletier) which asks the appointment of a commission to investigate problems with special regard to western Canada. Of course all this cannot be done this session, but enough has been stated to demonstrate to the house and the country that there is nothing irreverent in talking about amending the British North America Act; that although it is a fine piece of work and has served Canada well, it is not an ark of the covenant which nobody can touch without being punished as a criminal; it is a human device which may be improved, and particularly so because of the changes that have taken place in seventy years. I have no doubt that the disruptive elements to which my right hon. friend alluded will not prevail in the Dominion of Canada, but that we shall continue to be a united country which will in the future, as it has in the past, set an example to the other dominions and the rest of the world.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): While I naturally endorse and welcome the eulogy contained in the closing remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) as applied to the Dominion of Canada, I think it would be unfortunate if a matter of this tremendous import should be dismissed even with words so eloquent as those he has just uttered. This subject appeals to me not so much from the legal or constitutional standpoint as from that of the welfare of a vast proportion of the people of Canada. It would be folly for us to blind our eyes to the very serious problems with which this country is confronted. Perhaps I am putting it too strongly, but I will venture the thought that underlying all this trouble is the constant wrangle over the question of jurisdiction; at least that is seized upon continually as an excuse for inaction. People appeal to their provincial legislatures for redress of wrongs which they conceive it to be within the powers of the legislature to right. The leaders of the legislative assemblies reply that it is a subject which comes under the powers of the dominion. If I may be permitted a colloquialism or slang phrase, what is known as "passing the buck" is an expression very closely applicable to what has been going on in this country for many years.

I believe the suggestion made by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) is one that should engage our most earnest consideration at this time. It should not be treated as a matter which might well be considered some day in the future when we have more time. I do not know of any subject which could more worthily command the concentrated attention of this house than that which has just been proposed by the leader of the opposition, namely that there should be held a conference of the dominion parliament and the legislative assemblies of the various provinces, adding to that, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, outside interests that have given study to the subject, and that such conference be assembled at some time in the near future for the purpose of studying amendments to the British North America Act.

Perhaps it is fortunate for Canada that we have a written constitution. I know there are those who hold the view that a written constitution is very often a nuisance. Sometimes it is. But in times of stress and passion, when conditions are disrupted and feeling runs high, it is a fine thing to have a written constitution to hold us steadily on the track. Obviously, as the Minister of Justice has very properly admitted, the conditions of to-day are not the conditions of 1867, and there has to come a time when changes should be made. The question is, are those changes to be made sanely, after proper consideration and by properly constituted authorities, or are they to burst upon us out of the passions of the people? It is the latter that I fear. I do not think we properly apprehend the seriousness with which very many people in this country view present day conditions. Nor have we, in my opinion, a full appreciation of the utter hopelessness of the great mass of people in this country. There is a feeling of futility and hopelessness permeating the hearts and souls of hundreds of thousands. Since the last assembly of parliament I have talked to men whom I have known for years, whom I have looked upon as pretty thoughtful and sane, who have discarded hope or trust in parliaments—and they are not citizens whom we can lightly disregard. I have one hope in my heart for Canada, and that is that there may be a preservation of Canadian democracy. If we look at the world to-day, what do we see? Everywhere, in Asia and in Europe, in the two old centres of civilisation, we see an alignment in two directions: on the one hand we see government by force along communistic and socialistic lines, and on the other hand we see government by force along fascist lines. And that is becoming generally accepted and, to me, to an alarming degree; it is being accepted now that the test is between these two views, and democracy as we understand it is being pushed aside as scarcely worthy of consideration. Yet in my opinion, from my studies of history—the history of a thousand years; and if one had time one might summon the witnesses here from the pages of history—there is but one system that will protect the interests of the individual and contribute most to the happiness, the comfort and security of peoples everywhere. And that is the system of democracy.

But we are bound to admit that inherent in democracy and peculiar to it are certain weaknesses owing to the fact that there are so many who have a part or say, to a certain degree, nominally at least, in what shall be the government. There is not one central dominating intellect that determines matters. Democracy is supposed to be the composite view of the masses of the people. But there is another weakness that afflicts us far more seriously than that, and it is this. We have developed certain institutions such as the party system, and we find that the party system lends itself to domination by a system of patronage or influence. This may not sound nice, but those of us who have been allied to parties over a period of years and have had experience of the influences that are brought to bear know perfectly well that one of the things which it is most difficult to resist is what I might term the effect of malign influences that are brought to bear upon parties. By that process we weaken governments and leadership in the democratic system through the party method of administration. But the fact that these weaknesses exist is no reason why we should not bend every effort to preserve to the country the great principles of democratic government.

At the risk of being charged perhaps with stepping into a realm I am not competent to discuss, I will cite the old British North America Act—and I do not join with those who treat this document lightly or with scorn. I think it is a magnificent document; and as I read it as a layman and seek to find in its majestic phraseology an expression of the views of the men and women of that day, I can see in it, even without any amendment and in the form in which it was intended to apply, the very salvation that we are looking for. Unfortunately, however, certain parts of the act have passed through the courts and certain interpretations have been given them, and these interpretations stand as the meaning of the act. I am not going to quarrel with that; it is one of the facts with which we are confronted; but I should like as a layman to direct the attention of the house to what I conceive to be some of the salient points and principles, not embalmed perhaps but included in this sacred document.

Take the very preamble. I called attention to this two years ago, but, I admit, with very little effect at the time. The very preamble declares that the four provinces of that day had met together and decided to unite into a dominion. Under the act, as the preamble says, the provinces of Canada—that is to say, Ontario and Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—expressed their desire to be federally united in one dominion under the crown. These words thrill my heart; they conjure up before me a gathering of men from the then provinces to which reference is made, expressing one to the other a desire to unite; and I believe that the first thing we need in Canada to-day is a reaffirmation of that doctrine, that we the people of Canada, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the maritime provinces and the old and powerful provinces of Quebec and Ontario, are ready to say once again that we pledge ourselves one to another to unite in one dominion. But the sentiment that is abroad to-day—and in a moment or two I will refer to some of the causes, which I think can be removed—is not that we should unite; it is a far different sentiment and is far more widespread than many of us perhaps conceive. Some people are looking at the situation and saying, "Would it not be better for us if we were out of confederation?" I know that a strong case can be made for that conviction. I can point to at least three sections of the dominion where a strong case can be made for it, and I think it is a tragedy that that feeling should continue and should spread without a reaffirmation of the very basis of this document.

The preamble proceeds:

> And whereas such a union would conduce to the welfare of the provinces. . . .

I pause there, and I say that a union, a real and genuine union based upon the spirit of unity, will still conduce to the welfare of the provinces. And that sentiment is one which in my opinion needs reaffirmation at this time. The preamble goes on to declare that provision shall be made for the eventual admission of other parts, which, of course, was done, and these other parts were most happily brought into the union. A little further on, in the second section of the act, it is enacted that it shall be lawful for the queen to declare by proclamation that the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick:

> . . . shall form and be one dominion under the name of Canada; and on and after that day those three provinces shall form and be one dominion under that name accordingly.

I have read this in order to emphasize the spirit that underlay the organization of this great dominion, which has been so eloquently referred to and eulogized by the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Stevens.]

And now I turn to the famous sections 91 and 92. I ask my legal friends at once to acquit me of any charge of attempting a legal interpretation of this document, but there are certain practical matters referred to in these two sections which I believe express in very definite terms some of the chief problems with which we are confronted to-day. I am convinced that we ought to concentrate our attention upon these problems. There is a phrase in section 91 which because of party strife over comparatively trivial issues has been brought into disrepute, yet is of profound importance. I refer to the famous phrase, "peace, order, and good government." I ask hon. members for the moment to dismiss from their minds the partisan criticisms which have been bandied from one side to the other for many years, and to consider the spirit and language of the section:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada . . .

That was the main underlying thought of those who framed this act; and the perpetuation, shall I say, or sustaining of the great thought of unity which was expressed in the preamble was the reason for their coming together. Obviously if you are to have unity there must be peace, order and good government. There must be some authority to determine the conditions that control the relations of individual citizens one to the other, and that great principle is the principle underlying the authority of this parliament. But to-day no man can say that this parliament is supreme in that regard. Technically, nominally, constitutionally, or whatever term you prefer, it is. An hon. member earlier this afternoon asked a responsible minister of the crown whether he knew of certain disturbing actions by individuals in one section of this country in relation to the relief problem. While the minister replied that he had some knowledge of it, the question of peace, order and good government, which is the prerogative of this parliament, did not seem at that moment to be present in his mind. He expressed—very properly; I am not complaining; I just cite it as an illustration of the point—confidence in the provincial authorities to maintain peace and order and take care of the situation.

Then tabulated below that clause in the act are certain exceptions. But before I refer to only a few of those which I think are pertinent let me quote further the language of the section:

> . . . to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

Those subjects will be found set out in the next section, 92. Then we come to an enumeration of matters coming within the jurisdiction of parliament. I am going to refer to a few of them. There is the public debt—that is the dominion public debt—and property. The words "and property" are rather interesting. I am quite aware that there one immediately steps into a realm where constitutional sophists argue that you are impinging on property and civil rights.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That means public property.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, possibly. Then we go on to the next:

The regulation of trade and commerce.

And there is nothing more to qualify that. Yet during the last five or six years in particular there have been a dozen occasions when the right of regulation of trade and commerce in this country has been definitely challenged, the power and right of this parliament to legislate on it denied; and in some cases that denial has been successfully upheld in the courts. I go back, Mr. Speaker, to 1867, when this act was framed. In the minds of the framers of this act, or those who laid down the resolutions upon which it was based, the regulation of trade and commerce was intended to apply to all commerce common to the dominion. Because in section 121 of the act this phraseology is used:

All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces.

One of the problems of to-day is this: how the Dominion of Canada through this parliament is to control properly the movement of goods within Canada itself. I merely state the question, without arguing it.

Then we have the question of patents of invention and discovery. Nobody questions the right of this parliament to control patents, but I ask parliament: are we exercising that control to the extent that we should, or are we allowing certain great institutions in this country to secure control of patent rights and use them to interfere with the freedom of movement of trade within Canada?

I turn over the page and I find in section 92 what I conceive to be the cause of a great deal of our difficulty. I refer at once to subsection 10:

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes:—

And then it says:

Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

It is as clear as day that it was intended that this parliament should exercise an overriding right to declare works to be for the general benefit of Canada if it was clear that federal control of them was necessary to the happiness and well-being of the people of Canada as a whole. Here again we have what has become, in the terms applied by the minister to one of the other powers, a power which is practically obsolete, very seldom used. It was exercised constantly by this parliament when I first came here, in connection with railways. But it became more or less limited to railways, and since then has been largely abandoned.

I come now to the most important of all, that is the power or the right to incorporate companies with provincial objects. That is one of the exclusive powers of provincial legislatures. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to enter into an argument or discussion this afternoon—because I am not prepared to do so—on what was originally intended there. But I say, following the language of the Minister of Justice, that in the last seventy years vast changes have come about in our economic life, not only in Canada but throughout the world; and the power or right to incorporate a company has become a vastly different thing from what it was in 1867. May I remind the minister of this—I think I am correct in saying it—that it was not until 1854 that the incorporation of companies included the provision for limited liability. In any case that provision has in a progressive way led to a complete change in our economic structure, a change which, viewed over a period of fifty years, is nothing short of startling. We are now confronted with the question whether the country is to be dominated and ruled and controlled by a democratic institution called parliament or legislature, or whether the welfare of its people is to be dominated by great corporations which, using Kipling's phrase, are "without the law." When I say without the law I do not mean without the Companies Act or their acts of incorporation, but who seem to be beyond the ordinary laws that control the lives, the activities and the consciences of individuals. A great jurist on one occasion, when trying one of these cases, said something to the effect that a corporation had no soul and no conscience. Neither it has. That is not a reflection; these are not words of opprobrium I am using. I am simply stating a fact, something that is inescapable.

What does perturb and alarm me, Mr. Speaker, is that by the introduction of the power of incorporation, with the right of limited liability, we have introduced into Canada, as into all other countries of a similar type, a new economic principle which has gone on step by step until to-day we find that these companies are entrenched in a most extraordinarily powerful manner, affecting, as I say, the lives of countless thousands of people. So I say that the right of incorporation which was given to the provinces, and which of course is present in the dominion, raises a question that we must face, and one of the things this country needs above everything else is uniformity in company laws. If we had a conference on nothing else it would be worth while to have a conference with the provinces. By the way, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), when he held the portfolio of Secretary of State, I believe did undertake to bring about that happy condition, though I am afraid without any great success, not through any lack of effort on his part but because of the difficulties with which he was at once confronted. But it is of such profound importance that it ought to be taken under consideration forthwith.

Mr. DUNNING: There was another conference just the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member may not know that all the provinces agreed to a uniform companies act. That was done when the hon. gentleman was a member of the government.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite aware of that; I remember the conference very well, because I was there. But I do say—and I do not think it can be successfully contradicted—that the net results of that verbal agreement have amounted to next to nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: They were carried further at a conference held just the other week.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so, but when we say they were carried further, even in the fond anticipation of those who carried them further the results have not been attained, and we have not gone very far.

Mr. DUNNING: You have to get men to agree, you know.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so. I am rather trying to support the suggestion of the right hon. leader of the opposition that we should get together and try to agree. I think it was very well pointed out that whether conferences were held under the aegis of the preceding government or of this government, they were more or less political organizations. I am not saying that offensively; it is a statement of fact. The suggestion made to-day is that there should be a conference free from or apart from partisan prejudices. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance looks askance at that, but I think such a conference is possible. I believe the people of this country, if given an opportunity to express their view, would support such a conference, and I believe it could be brought about. But that does not alter what I am stating, that through the development of the incorporation of companies we have before us a problem of the first magnitude.

There are many other things to which I might refer, Mr. Speaker, but I shall not weary the house with them to-day. I wish first to support the suggestion that in this particular instance parliament might set aside any partisan prejudices that we may have—and I think we are all prone to have them—and take the necessary steps to bring about such a conference as has been proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition. The time, I think, is past due when such a conference should be held. I do urge upon the attention of the house the grave problems with which this country is confronted and the necessity of some step—and this seems to me to be a wise one—which would at least lead us towards a solution of the difficulty. And before I sit down I should like to reaffirm what I said in my opening remarks. The supreme task before the Dominion of Canada is the preservation of its democratic institutions, not in name only, not simply to be eulogized but so that they may operate as the dominating principles in our political as well as our economic life.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I say, Mr. Speaker, I regret that this all important subject has been brought up in just the manner in which it has. I am sure my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) had the best of intentions in bringing the subject before the house in the way in which he did, but I must express some surprise that he gave me no intimation whatever that it was his intention to introduce the subject to-day, and I imagine that no one else in the house had such an intimation.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not usual when it is not proposed to move an amendment, and I did not propose to do that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend gives as his explanation the fact that he did not propose to move an amendment, but I do not think that alters what I have said as to what is customary as between the leaders of parties when a great question is about to be discussed.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not my experience.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend says that was not his experience, but my recollection of my relations with him, when he was in the position which I now hold, is that whenever a question of importance was to be introduced or brought up by the opposition some notification was given in advance to the leader of the government.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to say it did not always reach me. That was the difficulty. It got lost on the way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall immediately drop any discussion between my right hon. friend and myself of an antagonistic nature, because my purpose in rising was rather to express, except as to the particular time chosen, appreciation of his having brought forward a most important suggestion which he hoped would be considered by all parties in the house.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that all hon. members of the house clearly realize that there is no more important question confronting this parliament than that of the necessary amendment of the British North America Act. There might be a possible exception in the subject this house was discussing yesterday, namely, that of Canada's participation in war, but with that exception I cannot think of a question quite so important, from the considerations and consequences involved, as one concerning the amendment of the constitution of our country. On all sides there is agreement that amendments are necessary, but the question above all others which has to be considered at the very outset is the matter of procedure; how the necessary amendments can be best effected.

That question has not come up to-day for the first time, nor has the suggestion made by my right hon. friend to-day come up for the first time. The matter was very carefully considered by a select committee of this house appointed by my right hon. friend before he went out of office, and that committee made an extensive report to the house. It might be interesting to hon. members who are here to-day but who were not in the house at that time to learn with regard to the procedure that should be adopted just what were the views of the committee which investigated the matter.

May I immediately draw attention to the fact that the suggestion my right hon. friend has just made was one that was considered by the committee. It was brought before the committee by no less a distinguished person than the clerk of this house. I have in my hand the report of the special committee on the British North America Act made in 1935; the report is dated June 19, of that year—less than two years ago. At page xii of the minutes of proceedings I find this:

> Doctor Beauchesne, K.C., C.M.G., LL.D., Clerk of the House of Commons, would have a new constitution drafted by a constituent assembly composed of delegates representing the various provinces and the dominion, made up of all classes of people. The constitution so drafted would be thereafter adopted by the dominion and the provinces, approved by the king, and the present act thereupon repealed.

Mr. BENNETT: That is vastly different from my suggestion; it has not even a similarity.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Since my right hon. friend says it is not the same, I shall read it again. I think the first part is identical.

Mr. BENNETT: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: These are the words:

> . . . would have a new constitution drafted by a constituent assembly composed of delegates representing the various provinces and the dominion, made up of all classes of people.

Mr. BENNETT: I was very careful to avoid constituent assemblies; I do not believe in them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A representative assembly.

Mr. BENNETT: That is vitally different.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At any rate it was a convention for the purpose of amending the constitution.

Mr. BENNETT: Not "amending" it—preparing a new one. That was my whole trouble.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I thank my right hon. friend for making the correction, because that is an essential point in Doctor Beauchesne's recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was suggested that we have a new constitution drafted.

I must thank my right hon. friend for having drawn my attention to the fact that it was a question of the drafting of a new constitution by a constituent assembly or, as my right hon. friend suggests, by a constitutional convention. The two may be different in some particulars, but I believe the argument with respect to the merits of the suggestion would be the same.

The point I wish to bring out is that the suggestion has received the consideration of a special committee of this chamber appointed by my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition while he was in office. Having that, among other suggestions, before them, the committee reported:

> In view of the fact that the several provinces did not feel it advisable to give the committee the benefit of their views with respect to the method of procedure to be followed in amending the constitution, the committee is of the opinion that before any decision upon the subject matter of the resolution is finally made, that the opinions of the provinces should be obtained otherwise if at all possible and for that reason recommends that a dominion-provincial conference be held as early as possible in the present year to study the subject matter of the resolution.

That brings to one's attention the importance of at least one consideration of which full account would have to be taken before any such method of procedure could be successfully adopted, and that is the attitude of the provinces towards such a suggestion.

My right hon. friend has pointed out that the provinces are becoming somewhat assertive of their sovereign powers, to use the expression which has been used previously, and I imagine they would be particularly sensitive with respect to the manner in which changes in the British North America Act might be made. Indeed one has but to look at the report to see the difficulty likely to be encountered the moment one seeks to get the approval of the provinces of any method of amending the constitution. In this connection it is interesting to note the replies made by the provinces to the committee's suggestion that they might submit statements setting forth their views as to how the constitution should be amended.

Prince Edward Island sent word that the—> . . . dominion government should formulate its plan and policy for the purposes intended and that this should be submitted to the provincial governments and afterwards discussed at a conference of representatives of the provinces and the dominion.

New Brunswick said that they would wire their views as soon as possible, but they never found it possible to wire them.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Nova Scotia replied that it was a most difficult matter, and that they felt it should be approached by a conference between representatives of the provinces and the dominion.

Quebec sent word that in a matter of such importance it was suggested a conference of the dominion and the provinces should be held.

Ontario replied:

> Province of Ontario does not desire to make any representation before your committee re British North America Act amendment as no good purpose will be served by attempting to advise dominion government at this time.

Manitoba replied:

> The government of Manitoba is of the opinion that the subject matter referred to in the resolution is one of such importance that no written submission, setting out our views in reference to it, should be made without a conference with the other provinces and the dominion government. We would be willing to attend such a conference at any time, with a view to arriving at a definite method of procedure for making amendments to the British North America Act.

Saskatchewan said:

> The question of what if any provision is to be made for amendment of the Canadian constitution from time to time is a question which ultimately must be decided by conferences between the governments of the provinces and the government of Canada with the possibility of a previous preliminary interprovincial conference. In view of this fact it would appear to be unwise for the provinces to be giving their views before a committee of the House of Commons. With due deference—

States the attorney general:

> —might I be permitted to suggest that the proper procedure is for your committee to pursue its present inquiry and to make a report to the House of Commons which I presume will either be accepted or amended or merely received without binding the government to accept the proposals of the committee. . . .

Alberta said that they considered such vital questions should be approached through an exchange of views, by interprovincial conference.

Finally, British Columbia said:

> . . . amendment of the constitution is too important a matter to be dealt with in manner suggested. It is not thought that satisfactory conclusions can be reached either federally or provincially until a conference of the provinces and the dominion is held when full discussion may be had and matters properly debated. . . .

In view of these opinions from the several provinces it is not surprising that the committee should have reported—and may I say unanimously, although composed of representatives of all parties in the house—that they expressly refrained from—

> . . . recommending any form of procedure for amendment, so as to leave the proposed conference entirely free in its study of the question, except that the committee is definitely of the opinion that minority rights agreed upon and granted under the provisions of the British North America Act should not be interfered with.

The dominion provincial conference was held, and I am afraid it did not help to disclose too obvious a method of amending the constitution. The conference was called immediately after the present administration came into office. In calling the conference we acted upon the report of the committee which had been appointed by my right hon. friend, while in office. In some matters we did succeed in securing agreement between the provinces and ourselves, but when it came to the all important question of amending the constitution, to say nothing of the creation of a new constitution, the dominion provincial conference was far from unanimous in deciding upon the best method of procedure.

The question raised by the leader of the opposition and which we are now considering is undoubtedly primarily one of procedure. There are different methods which have been considered at various times. One is the suggestion of my right hon. friend that the question should be considered by a constitutional conference composed, as he has suggested, of members of the dominion parliament and the provincial legislatures, such membership to be representative of all shades of political thought. I believe that method might be described as the ideal one. Personally, along with many others, I have long held the view that such would be the right course to pursue, and at times have so expressed myself. There has always come to the fore the question as to just how far in actual practice it might be possible to get the different provinces into the frame of mind where they would all be prepared to join the dominion in such a constitutional convention. Unless there were to come into convention in a harmonious spirit and prepared to adopt an attitude of cooperation with one another and with the federal representatives, it would be unfortunate to have such a convention called.

Mr. CAHAN: My right hon. friend suggested that that harmonious spirit would be fully engendered by the return of his party to power at the last federal election.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, and I think my hon. friend will agree the spirit is a good deal better than it was when my right hon. friend was in office.

Mr. BENNETT: It looks like it down in Ontario.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to be drawn away from the question I am discussing, of the steps which may best be taken to amend the constitution or to bring into being a new constitution. Possibly we might agree at once that in order to bring a new constitution into being something in the nature of a constituent assembly or constitutional convention alone would be the method to be adopted. As to amendments which are less comprehensive than a new constitution the question arises as to whether it would not be better to proceed in the first instance by having a representative commission consider possible amendments, with all parties in the provinces and in this parliament entitled to appear before the commission and give it the benefit of their views and opinions. That would be a commission having to do with the necessary revision of the constitution as a whole. That has been considered. I may say that since the present administration came into office its members have repeatedly discussed among themselves whether it would be advisable to propose such a step at this time. It has been felt each time that the matter has been discussed that with cases affecting jurisdiction as between the dominion and the provinces now before the judicial committee of privy council, any announcement of the intended appointment of such a commission would be premature if made before the decisions were given. It might be regarded as a prejudging of the probable decisions which would be made by the privy council.

There is a method which perhaps may commend itself even more to the judgment of hon. members than that of a commission to deal with the whole question of the relations between the dominion and the provinces, and that is special commissions to take up special phases of the question, or to consider special amendments—something less wide in its scope than a commission covering the field in general but perhaps more effective in the long run, in that attention would be concentrated more completely on questions that at the moment are the most urgent and the most pressing. In that connection there arises, for example, a consideration of financial relations as between the dominion and the provinces, the question of the relative spheres of taxation, the all-important question of social services as between the dominion and the provinces. Those interrelated questions are, I believe, as urgent as almost any that we have before us at the present time. That is where the shoe pinches as between the dominion and the provinces, and it may be that we shall find it advisable to have some immediate action taken, in whole or in part, with respect to that more limited sphere. But there again it is important to consider how such a step is likely to be viewed by the provinces as well as by the dominion. In these matters, affecting the provinces and the dominion alike, it is all-important that there should be a complete understanding that the purpose is one which is intended to serve the mutual interests of the governments of the provinces and of the federal government, and that it has no other possible objective.

I might suggest still other methods of procedure. The one I referred to a moment ago of a select committee of this house is one that has already been adopted. It was not very successful.

Mr. BENNETT: That was only on procedure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, that was on procedure, but if it was impossible to agree on procedure at the outset, I fail to see where there is much likelihood of agreement upon the actual questions which might be submitted for consideration. However, I mention these things not at all to disguise the importance of the question. I agree entirely with the right hon. leader of the opposition that we must find a way, or make it, to have the question of the revision of our constitution somehow considered. The constitutional relations of the dominions and the United Kingdom presented in itself a very large problem, the question whether or not in the course of time a new status had not been reached by the dominions. That question seemed the most difficult which it was possible for the British government and the governments of the dominions to face, but they were able to discuss these matters at imperial conferences, and out of their discussions was evolved a British statute which we have been quoting recently in this house, the Statute of Westminster, which to all intents and purposes, makes clear the relative powers of the dominion parliaments and of the parliament at Westminster, and lays down the formula with which we are all familiar, of equality of status obtaining between these respective bodies. With that great objective obtained in the manner in which it was by the governments of the British commonwealth of nations, I fail to see why we may not be able in this dominion to work out a solution of our own immediate problem as between the provinces and the dominion.

All I wish to make clear this afternoon is that the task is not as easy as by some, it may be assumed to be. To effect the desired end, it may require a step here and a step there, proceeding little by little, one step at a time, rather than attempting something that may prove after all so considerable that it will fail to get the support that it should.

I wish to add just this further word in conclusion. I believe, as my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) does, that this question is one which should be discussed free from party considerations. I believe he, too, holds the view that I am about to express, namely, that the question is so large that its discussion should not be confined to parliament. I believe it is a question which ought to be considered by those who are interested in constitutional problems, whether they are in this House of Commons or in the Senate or outside of parliament altogether. I would hope that as a result of my right hon. friend having brought the subject to the fore as he has to-day, and it having received preliminary consideration this afternoon, we would find that those who are interested in constitutional questions in the several provinces would take up this matter in a serious way, giving it the further thought and study that they may find it possible to give, and that they would give to the country the benefit of their views by communications to or articles in the press or by addresses before legal, political science or other bodies which it might be appropriate for them to address. I am inclined to feel that if a discussion of the kind should take place, and I believe it will, it would go a long way towards formulating public opinion on this all-important question. If there is one problem above another which can only be satisfactorily settled as a result of a united public opinion it certainly is that of the alteration of our constitution or the creation of a new constitution to supplant that under which thus far this country has been governed.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I and those who sit with me in this corner of the chamber feel that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has performed a distinct service by bringing this matter to the attention of the house at this time. Whether we could have had a better discussion if the various groups had been notified, I do not know; possibly a spontaneous discussion of questions of this kind may be better than a set debate, where a great deal of material may be gathered that does not contribute greatly to the light shed upon the question. Members who have sat in this house for a number of years know that we in this corner have been insistent in season and out of season in drawing to the attention of parliament the matter of dominion and provincial relations. It was, I believe, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) who moved the resolution that led up to the appointment of a committee in 1935. I believe that the discussion this afternoon has demonstrated that the people of Canada are in a better frame of mind than ever before to deal with this matter. For that reason the present government have an opportunity, such as no previous government ever had, of dealing effectively with the questions we are now discussing. They are in a much better position than the preceding government, because since 1930 tremendous changes have taken place in Canada. The preceding government and possibly the members of the present government did not realize a few years ago the import and the extent of social and economic changes which have taken place. We all realize now that we can never go back to where we were before 1930, that we are living in a new world, and that because of that fact we shall have to develop instruments of legislation and administration effectively to meet these new conditions.

What impelled me, however, to say a word now at this time was the statement made by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) with regard to the danger of communist and socialist forces displacing our democratic institutions.

Mr. STEVENS: And fascists.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not going to speak for either communists or fascists. Their representatives here, if they have any, can speak for them.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are they?

Mr. MacINNIS: Possibly my hon. friend knows better than I. But I think I can speak for socialists, because I am a socialist, and by reason of that I am here. Not only that, but I had an opportunity last summer of visiting various countries that have governments which are socialist to a more or less degree, and I did not see in those countries any danger to democracy. As a matter of fact, the only safeguard of democracy is socialism, because you can have democracy only when it is based upon an economy of equality, and it is because economic systems are not based upon equality that communism and fascism have developed their ideas of government by force. Communism as we know it to-day had its development in Russia, and every one with a knowledge of history knows there was no other means by which the working class of Russia could express itself than illegally and in such underground ways as it did express itself. That is the price which every nation must pay for repression and ignorance. I suggest to hon. members that if they want to maintain democracy they can maintain it only by allowing the people an opportunity to express ideas and by making available to them those educational institutions whereby they can secure an understanding of the fundamentals of human society and human relationships.

I visited Norway. There they have had a labour socialist government for the last year or so, working not wholly by itself but in conjunction with the farmer party. I saw there no danger to democratic institutions. I visited Denmark, where the social democratic party has been the government of the country with a clear majority in the lower house for a number of years, and this year got a majority of one in the upper house. I saw there no danger to democratic institutions. I visited Sweden, where they have had a social democratic government working in cooperation with the farmer group for the past three years, and I saw no danger there to democratic institutions. If ever I saw free peoples and democracy in operation it was in those countries. We have much to learn from them.

There came to my attention yesterday a short item in a British weekly, the New Statesman and Nation, referring to the socialist government in Sweden. It says:

> The socialist government in Sweden gets much less attention in this country than its achievements deserve. In the king's speech, delivered this week in the Riksdag, it was able to announce a new program which bears eloquent testimony to the success of its measures for coping with the economic crisis. Unemployment in Sweden has been so far reduced as now to present no more than a problem of seasonal variation in the demand for labour. Estimated revenue is up by more than ten per cent without any increase in taxation. The period of borrowing for public works is definitely over, and the government has been for some time past repaying debts incurred during the crisis. With the best economic advice at its command—for Sweden is emphatically a country where economists of advanced views have played an important part in the shaping of policy—the special crisis taxes are being maintained, and the proceeds applied to the repayment of debt. At the same time, the government is actively pursuing its program of social legislation. Its new measures include legislation dealing with child welfare and mother's pensions, as well as special grants for rural housing and an improved standard of salaries for elementary school teachers and other low paid government employees.

That is a government under a social democratic party.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a unitary government.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is a government in cooperation with the farmer group.

Mr. BENNETT: I say it is unitary. There are no provinces.

Mr. MacINNIS: I admit that, and because of that it is easier to operate than the government in this country.

Mr. MASSEY: Would the hon. member consider the definition of a socialist in Sweden the same as the definition of a socialist in Canada?

Mr. MacINNIS: Decidedly. I found no difference between my point of view and that of the socialists I met in Norway, or Denmark, or Sweden, or the British Isles, or France, or any of the other countries that I visited. There is no difference. A socialist is a person who believes in the social ownership of those things necessary for the production and distribution of the means by which we live, and their democratic operation. Briefly that is a definition of socialism.

Mr. MASSEY: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him another question? Did he find that the trend of the social democratic party in Sweden was toward social ownership?

Mr. MacINNIS: I asked that question of a man who held a very prominent position in the socialist movement, and I have no hesitation in stating in this house his reply to me. I was very anxious to learn what their program of socialization for the next few years was, and he made this statement: At the present time we are not greatly concerned with the socialization of industry; as long as industry operates without undue exploitation of either workers or consumers we are not particularly concerned about who owns industry. But note this: He stated further: Our trade unions are so strongly organized that they can prevent undue exploitation on the workers' side and our cooperative movement is so strong that it can take care of the consumers in the matter of exploitation; if at any time, however, we come to the point where the labour movement and the cooperative movement are not able to perform these functions we shall then deal with the question of the socialization of industry.

Mr. MASSEY: That is not what the hon. member said the first time.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what I said. It is merely a matter of proceeding in a particular way. Possibly my hon. friend thinks that certain ideas in which you may believe you can put into effect regardless of the circumstances and the environment in which you find yourself. No intelligent person, however, proceeds upon that assumption because that cannot possibly be done if you are to work and live within the framework of democracy.

Mr. GRANT: Does the hon. gentleman subscribe to the doctrine of socialism in Sweden, as his own doctrine of socialism?

Mr. MacINNIS: I have answered that question. I do not hesitate to say that I certainly subscribe to it if I have never subscribed to anything else.

Another point was raised by the hon. member for Kootenay East with which I agree. He emphasized—and it is well that it should be emphasized—the condition in which hundreds of thousands of people, as he said, in the various provinces find themselves at the present time. On going among these people this is what I find. They say: That cannot be done or this cannot be done under any provincial government because we have not the power. The people have lost hope entirely in parliament doing anything for them, and that hope can be restored only by parliament proving to them that something can and will be done.

I am in favour of maintaining the basis of confederation. I cannot see that a province can improve its position in any way by leaving confederation, because for every restriction or evil it might get away from it would meet half a dozen others. For that reason I believe it is folly for any province, whether it be in the east or in the west, to talk of secession.

I do not wish to take up any more time, because the present discussion anticipates one that will take place within a few days in connection with a resolution which is on the order paper. I shall content myself with these remarks, simply pointing out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that he and his government have an opportunity to do things that never before could have been done in Canada.

Mr. W. A. WALSH (Mount Royal): In rising to speak to the suggestion that has been made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), I do so merely to emphasize from my point of view the importance of it. As I listened to the Prime Minister

(Mr. Mackenzie King), one phrase in his remarks caught my attention; he said that he would find a way or make one. It gives me great encouragement to hear words of that sort, coming as they do from the Prime Minister, and I hope that statement presages a new policy under his leadership.

We have heard this afternoon a great deal in connection with the method of procedure. To me, as a layman, this matters very little so long as we accomplish the object we have in view. To-day we are not confronted with a problem any greater or more difficult to solve than that which faced the fathers of confederation during the years from 1860 to 1867. They found a way or they made one, and we in our day and generation can do something similar and bestow a like blessing on the generations that are to follow us in this dominion.

I do not wish to obtrude anything of a political nature into a debate of this kind, but I should like to make one reference to a suggestion which was made so frequently during the course of the election of October, 1935. I think it should be repeated in this house and in connection with the subject matter which is now before us for discussion. The Prime Minister and those associated with him will remember that they emphasized, not at one meeting, but continuously at all the meetings, the fact that most, if not all, of the provincial governments were of the Liberal persuasion and that it would be well for the electors of Canada to return a government of a similar complexion to hold the reins of office at Ottawa. That was emphasized, and, if we may judge by the results, to good effect. The Prime Minister always followed that statement with this suggestion, that the Conservative party could not possibly cooperate with those occupying the seats of government in the various provinces, their political complexion being what it was, whereas his party would be in a position to cooperate; that his first effort on becoming Prime Minister of Canada would be to call immediately a conference of those provinces, the governments of which were for the most part of the same political persuasion as his own party, and that out of that conference there would come a remedy for the evils and the distress brought about—so the present Prime Minister said on that occasion—by the government which had been in office during the five previous years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He hoped it would come.

Mr. WALSH: He hoped he would find a way out? Well, I would remind him that his government have been in power now for a year and a half. They have had the opportunity of many conferences with provincial representatives; yet we do not see emerging any solution of the problems with which we were confronted in 1935 and as we are confronted with in 1937. I also suggest that conditions existing in this country are not going to right themselves with a laissez faire attitude on our part. It is useless for the present government to sit back and hope that good times are going to provide a remedy for conditions which now prevail. Less than two weeks ago it was my privilege to listen to the chairman of the National Employment Commission, and on that occasion he gave utterance to a statement which has been made many times from this side of the house, that conditions which at present prevail in connection with unemployment will not be cured by good times, no matter how good they may be, in the immediate future. He felt that unemployment was a condition which would remain with us after we passed through the period of good times that now seems to be coming. We must find a solution for that problem. I have no doubt that most hon. members have had many communications from those who are in distress. I receive them especially from the younger element in this country, and in particular from my own province. If we can sit idly by and allow a pointed suggestion of this kind to be passed over lightly, in view of the conditions under which these young people are living it is time we had some radical change in our method of government and of procedure.

I emphasize this point in view of the discussion on the possibility of amendment of the British North America Act in order to make it more effective. That act was passed as a result of many conferences. It did not have its roots altogether in those conferences which immediately preceded the passing of the act. It had its roots away back in Canadian history, as far back as 1763. It had its roots in the Quebec Act of 1774, in the Constitutional Act of 1791, in the Act of Union of 1841. In all those acts, and in the British North America Act, certain guarantees were given to minorities in certain provinces of the dominion. I always voice the warning that if we contemplate any change in the British North America Act the proposal must be accompanied by the assertion that in no way will the fundamental principles underlying that act be changed.

We have in Canada nine provincial governments and a federal government. Last evening it was my privilege to speak before a gathering of retail business men, men doing business in a small way in this country, men who have known days of adversity in the past and are just emerging from such phase now and looking forward hopefully to the future. Those men are considering the problems of the day, and one of the problems which I discussed with them was that of taxation. We reached the conclusion that there was not so much to be said against taxation as such but there was something very definite to be said about the overlapping which prevails in the field of taxation. We also spoke of overlapping in other fields, in jurisdiction and in the work of various departments of government. I want to emphasize what came out of that meeting. We are overtaxed in this country, but I believe that overtaxation can be remedied by the suggestion that we have before us to-day. The problem is not so much the burden of taxation as such; it is the burden of overlapping taxation. This is due to lack of understanding of the proper division of jurisdiction in connection with governmental work. Let me take one example: We have a federal sales tax. In the city of Montreal we have a municipal sales tax. Should there be a provincial sales tax, a municipal sales tax, as well as the federal tax, or should not some adjustment be made between the federal and municipal and provincial governments in order that the federal government shall have jurisdiction in connection with sales tax and the provincial and municipal governments shall have control over other forms of taxation? Is it not time that a genuine conference was called, in a real effort to alleviate distress in this country? And one way of alleviating that distress is by removing part of the burden of taxation. I cannot understand why men of good common sense can not agree on certain principles, particularly in the field of taxation. We know the provinces have to have revenue; we know the municipalities have to have revenue, and of course the federal government has to have revenue. Revenue can be derived from certain fields. Could those fields not be satisfactorily apportioned between the province and the dominion so that their jurisdictions will be clearly defined, and overlapping entirely done away with? If that were done the people would have a much smaller burden to bear. That is one point I desire to emphasize particularly.

In closing, let me say I was happy to listen to the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens), and I was extremely happy when I heard the Prime Minister make such a bold statement, that he was going to find a way or make one. May there be more of such assertions and more power to carry them into effect.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I desire to detain the house only a very few minutes. I have perhaps attended as many conferences between the dominion and the provinces as any other hon. member. I believe I have attended, on one side or the other, all that have taken place since about 1916, except those which occurred during the last five years, and I appreciate very much the tone of the discussion to-day, because it seems to me that it goes back in spirit to that which alone made confederation possible in the first place, such a concentrated desire on the part of the Canadian people to achieve unity that they were willing to drop political differences much more acute and much more violent in their manifestation than any which prevail to-day. We speak of procedure, but we must not ignore the importance of evoking again that spirit. I believe the question of procedure would be materially reduced in its importance if only the Canadian people could become as seized of the vital importance of adjusting these difficulties in our national life and our national constitution as were their forebears during the two or three decades which preceded 1867. I know it is difficult to expect the same degree of public interest which prevailed then. In spite of the lack of easy communication; in spite of the comparative lack of freely circulating mediums in any way comparable with those which are in existence to-day, I believe that public interest occupied a larger place in the life of the individual Canadian during the two decades prior to confederation than it does to-day. In those days public affairs were a more general topic of discussion in the home. These matters we have been discussing this afternoon were generally understood by a much larger proportion of the population than is the case with the much better educated population we have to-day. There were not the diversions; there were no movies; there was no radio; there were very few theatres. Men and women tended more to have their minds occupied with really vital matters than is the case to-day. An hon. member opposite shakes his head. I agree with him that very probably there is a larger aggregate number of students of these questions to-day. I am speaking more particularly of the degree of interest on the part of the whole population.

However, Mr. Speaker, what I rose to say was this, that to the extent that the addresses to which we have listened this afternoon can contribute toward a non-partisan discussion of this matter, to that extent they will tend to increase the possibility of success in any conference which may take place, call it what you will. What happens at every dominion-provincial conference? As I say, I have been at many of them. Every government, be it Liberal, or Tory, or United Farmers of Alberta, or anything else, provincial or dominion, which attends such a conference, is conscious all the time it is there that it has an opposition back home.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: That must be so; it cannot be avoided. Also, if it is a provincial government, it knows perfectly well that if, as a provincial government, it makes at that conference any concession whatever or does anything which can be interpreted as a concession, the opposition party back home, no matter whether it be Liberal, or Tory, or Labour, or United Farmers of Alberta, or Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, will immediately raise the cry of provincial rights as against that particular provincial government.

These are the cold, hard facts with respect to every dominion-provincial conference which takes place, and I submit that these cold, hard facts are likely to continue to exist unless we can find an approach to the problem comparable with the approach which was created prior to and including the year 1867. Methods have been suggested to-day whereby that approach might be developed along lines which would prevent such considerations as oppositions back home being vital in their ability to prevent success being attained. I have no particular views as to whether such a gathering should be a constituent assembly or a constitutional conference. I should be very content to allow those who know the meaning of terms better than I do to determine the kind of gathering it should be. What I rose to speak of was the spirit which must animate this nation before any such gathering can possibly attain the objective we all have in mind.

During the past year, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has indicated, we had a dominion-provincial conference along the lines suggested by the House of Commons committee of 1935. I believe every man attending that conference really laboured conscientiously to the end that something of value to Canada might result. All were subject to the limitations to which I have been referring. Some good did result, but the great core of the problem was not grappled with effectively. It was talked about, as we have talked about it for the last twenty or twenty-five years to my knowledge. It was not really grappled with.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the difficulties, as the minister realizes, was that if the conference of last year were to succeed those attending it would have to take views exactly opposite to those they had taken for the previous five years.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not quite understand that, because the conference was composed of representatives of all governments, and I do not carry in my mind the degree to which changes in the political complexions of the provinces may have taken place within the last five years. But, however that may be, from the point of view from which I am attempting to deal with the question it would not make a bit of difference if the governments represented there were Liberal, or Conservative, or Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, or Social Credit or anything else. In the very nature of things they would have to take into account the people back home, and more particularly the opposition back home. I know that no man in practical politics would dispute that suggestion.

Out of the meeting held last year arose the suggestion that for the first time in Canada's history we might at least attempt to set up a cooperative body which, without having any powers whatever, would study means of cooperating with respect to financial and taxation problems as between the dominion and the provinces. I am quite sure that the student of history will regard it as strange that in all the time since confederation, with the divided responsibilities, the divided powers and the divided fields of taxation which exist in Canada, until now no effort has been made to form a cooperative body which would continuously study these matters and continuously endeavour to find a basis of cooperation among the different provinces themselves and between the provinces and the Dominion of Canada. An effort was made, as I say, to set up such a body.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the negation of responsible government.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely there could be a discussion and an examination by such a body of men without in any way creating, as my right hon. friend suggests, a negation of responsible government. Surely it is possible for a body of ministers representing different sovereignties to gather together from year to year in order to see how they can effectively cooperate in a common sense way in connection with common problems; yet that has not been systematically done in the whole history of our confederation.

This is a day for frankness, and I shall be frank. Sometimes I wonder if I have not made more trouble for myself and for the government of Canada than the idea is worth in having sponsored the national finance council or committee idea. When the committee met it was quite obvious that a number of members regarded it as another dominion-provincial conference—which it was not at all—at which they were privileged to stand up, one after another, and simply ask the dominion for something. There was only one approach to problem after problem: "Will the dominion give the provinces this, that or the other in a financial way?" or, "Will the dominion yield up to the provinces this, that or the other source of revenue which it now enjoys?" I do not wish it to be understood that I am blaming the provinces. Goodness knows they are finding it difficult enough to carry on their work. I mention these facts merely to illustrate the difficulties of the problem we are discussing. Without breaking the agreed-upon confidence concerning details of discussion, I might state that as chairman I said on the last day to the assembly, "Well, gentlemen, we have accomplished something—not, I am sure, as much as any of us desired—in the interests of the people we represent. I am wondering, after listening to the discussions and to the development of this and that impossibility, if it is worth while to have a national finance committee for the voluntary discussion of these matters." Man after man got up and said, "No question about it; we must continue; we must continue to try." That gave me some encouragement, especially after three or four days of disagreement not merely between the provinces and the dominion, but disagreements emphasizing the widest possible diversity of views in many matters between province and province.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: To me it was an encouragement. After that experience, difficult as it was, every provincial representative said, "By all means, we must continue to try." That, I believe, is the approach which we must all have to this problem. I do hope we are successful in recreating the spirit out of which this nation was born—a greater interest on the part of the mass of the people, not in their own particular grievances as such, but in the supreme desirability of once more accomplishing unity in confederation, and through that unity attaining the power to deal with grievances which are all too real.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. A. PELLETIER (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has brought to the attention of parliament and of Canada what I believe is at this time a very serious problem in this country, but as was pointed out by the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) this afternoon, there are on the order paper various resolutions under which this subject may be discussed at considerable length and perhaps with better preparation by all concerned. However, now that we are on the subject, it might be well to inquire why an attempt was made to bring it to the attention of the house to-day.

So far as the feeling of the people of Canada is concerned, I have no doubt that they desire—and they have so expressed themselves at various times—to bring about certain amendments to the British North America Act, but the leader of the opposition has, I believe, misconstrued their reasons for wanting this done. As was pointed out this afternoon by the Minister of Justice, provincial jurisdiction has never been questioned by the people of the various provinces; nearly always the question has been one of obtaining greater powers for the provincial governments.

Just a few days ago we heard in this house a good deal about the British Empire and its component parts, and also a great deal about the autonomy of its various units, each independent, but all allied under the one crown. It was pointed out with pride that these governments exercised great powers; that they were jealous of those powers, but that nevertheless harmony existed between them. A similar contention might be advanced so far as Canada and its provinces are concerned, for, after all, any changes sought in the British North America Act are the result of the agitation of the people in the various provinces. When we hear of such a proposal as that made to-day, and especially when the reason given in support of it is that it is for the preservation of certain institutions in view of the things that are happening in various provinces to-day, one wonders what institutions are demanding that such a conference should be held in this country at this time. That is a salient point, it appears to me, and I shall leave it at that because it is my intention to go into the matter more deeply when various other resolutions on the order paper come before the house.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, little or no headway will be made by any agreement between the provinces and the dominion until some definite attitude is taken on the principle whether more power should be granted to the provinces or whether their powers should be curtailed. Until we have adopted some principle on the question of either granting more power or curtailing the present powers of the provinces, it seems to me that it would be impossible, as was pointed out this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), for any such conference to come to an agreement. Before sitting down I would again ask why, in view of the resolutions on the order paper touching on this very subject, this matter should have been brought up in the house to-day.

Hon. J. EARL LAWSON (York South): Mr. Speaker, the gravity of the subject matter under discussion impels me to express my views in respect thereto. It is regrettable that on a subject matter such as this we should have had a political partisan address such as was made by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), in speaking to the question, pointed out that if we were to maintain this democracy, it must demonstrate its efficiency as compared with an autocracy or a dictatorship. I must confess, after listening to the speech made by the hon. member for Témiscouata, that I was somewhat doubtful of the efficiency of that part of a democracy which selected him to represent them in the House of Commons, but my faith was restored when I listened to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning).

The Minister of Justice did not tell us specifically what his views were with respect to the proposal of the hon. leader of the opposition, and if he was speaking on behalf of the government he gave us no specific statement as to their attitude or policy with respect to the matter. But as I listened to his delicacy of word and his eloquence of diction in a language which was not his mother tongue, my faith in the efficiency of democracy was greatly restored.

The Minister of Finance made the statement that this discussion would, if nothing else, engender among the people of this country a unanimity of opinion which was essential to the enactment of amendments to the British North America Act. I wonder if the Minister of Finance has failed to appreciate that there is in Canada a tremendous consensus of opinion with respect to this subject matter. In the riding I represent I polled in the last election, something over 11,000 votes; the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate polled something over 8,000; the Liberal candidate, something over 7,000, and the Reconstruction candidate, something over 4,000. But I venture to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if you took a poll of all these voters who voted in the last election, irrespective of what party they may have supported, 90 per cent of them would support the amending of the British North America Act.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) said that there was a growing feeling of futility and hopelessness among the Canadian people with respect to their parliaments. I must confess that as a member of one of their parliaments I have had a growing feeling of futility and hopelessness with respect to securing those amendments to the British North America Act which are essential if we are going to carry out in this country those social measures, sometimes called by my friends to my left, measures of social justice, which are essential to maintain this democracy. Surely dominion and provincial conferences have proven conclusively, for the reasons so well stated by the Minister of Finance, if for no other, that you cannot through that channel get that unanimity of opinion which may be required. Even in respect of the matter of uniformity of laws in the provinces how many conferences have been held, how little headway has been made! It is all very well to say that they agreed upon a uniform companies act, may I ask which of the provinces have put into effect an act that is in terms of the act of the Dominion of Canada? If we have such difficulty in obtaining uniform laws in respect of one or two branches of our civil law in the provinces, how little chance we have of getting that unanimity of opinion and view which is required if we are going to obtain amendments to the British North America Act through the channel of provincial and dominion conferences.

I should have been very happy had the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) either intimated an acceptance of the scheme proposed by my honoured leader or suggested some specific steps which the government contemplated taking toward obtaining the very necessary amendments. It is all very well to say that a committee of this house made a report in 1935, but may I ask what action has been taken in respect of that report? None. I beg pardon; I should not have said "none." Let me put it in this way—no effective action has been taken. The Prime Minister intimated this afternoon that a dominion-provincial conference was called.

Mr. DUNNING: That was the sole recommendation.

Mr. LAWSON: I quite agree, and the Prime Minister quite frankly stated to the house that he could not say that as a result of that conference any real advancement toward the ultimate goal had been obtained. Now, sir, the Prime Minister emphasized by the statement and the reiteration of it that all parties in this house, and, I infer, all parties in the legislatures of the different provinces, were favourable to an amendment, but that it was the manner of procedure which created the difficulty and the obstacle. Then, if I understood the Prime Minister correctly, he finished by saying that the government had contemplated the appointment of a commission or committee to study the whole problem, but felt that to do so while the cases with respect to the jurisdiction of the dominion or the provinces were before the privy council would be taking precipitate action. May I point out that there is no problem before the judicial committee of the privy council with respect to the method of procedure of amending the British North America Act. What is before the judicial committee of the privy council is the question whether this parliament had power to enact certain measures commonly called social or paternal legislation, such as unemployment insurance, maximum hours of labour, minimum rates of wages, and so forth. Surely, if our problem to-day of securing the amendment of the British North America Act is one of procedure only, the pending cases before the judicial committee of the privy council can in no measure constitute an obstacle in our path. No one realizes better than I the difficulties in the road of amending our constitution. No one will lend more sympathetic support than I to any really effective measure which may be taken by the government to bring about the very much desired end. But at the moment we have before this house a specific proposal from the hon. leader of the opposition, a specific proposal which, in my opinion, is worthy not merely of consideration but of support. Surely, I suggest, with that specific proposal before this parliament, it is incumbent upon the present government, if they desire to obtain the amendments necessary to vest in this parliament nation-wide powers to deal with these social measures of legislation, to accept that specific proposal or, in the alternative, to propose some other specific measures which should be taken.

In conclusion—

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAWSON: With that applause from the hon. member for Témiscouata I might be tempted to continue. I wish to impress particularly upon the Minister of Finance, in view of the expressions which he gave so eloquently to this house immediately preceding the six o'clock recess, that there is in Canada a tremendous body of public opinion in favour of amending the British North America Act, especially for the purpose of enabling the enactment of national measures dealing with social legislation and national schemes for the reduction of taxation and the eradication of the duplication of governmental services between the provinces and the dominion. If there is that preponderance of opinion which I believe there is, then I ask, How can you bring about the expression of that opinion when the Prime Minister says the matter is merely one of procedure? I can hardly agree with that statement in its entirety. In my opinion what it lacks is this: The public who have a crystallized opinion in favour of this amendment do not know where to express their opinion by pressure. When they go to a member of the legislature he says: Oh, it is something that has to be done by the dominion parliament. When they go to their member who represents them in the House of Commons, he says: Oh, it is something we cannot do without the consent of the provinces. I suggest, sir, that a constitutional conference such as that proposed by my leader would give an opportunity for that crystallized public opinion which exists in this country to make itself felt upon the representatives to that conference, be they representatives of legislatures or of this parliament, in so unmistakable a way that there would soon be brought about the desired amendment to the British North America Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Public Works): Before the different items included in these estimates are called, I desire to state, just in a word, that these estimates are what may be described as necessary for carrying on the business of the different departments. They provide for the maintenance upkeep, repairs, heating and lighting of all the public buildings which the dominion government controls. No question of policy is involved in any of these items; they are those which are necessary for properly carrying on the business of the federal government. They are items that have come before the house regularly for a number of years and with very few exceptions they are all the same. The items that are not for maintenance of service or for taking care of public buildings are for necessary works or for the completion of contracts or works already started. The first vote is for a public building at Berwick, Nova Scotia. It is a revote.

Mr. STEWART: I wish to thank the minister for his opening explanation, which may facilitate the passage of some of these items. However, I would ask him for a further statement as to the policy of the government as suggested by these estimates. The estimates of last year included a number of items for which provision had been made in the Public Works Construction Acts of 1934 and 1935, items which had been in detail passed upon and approved by this parliament, and for which the necessary moneys had been appropriated following those acts. For a reason which was explained at the time these items which had already been provided for were gathered up and included in the estimates of last year.

What I wish to point out to the minister is this: In the summary of appropriations for public works we find that in 1936 and 1937 the amount appropriated in the manner I have mentioned is $15,570,000 odd, and included in that there was a small sum of $544,000 authorized by statute. For the coming year, 1937-38, the total amount included in these estimates to be voted is $11,277,000 odd, showing a decrease of $3,754,000. I recall very well that in opposition the members of the present government strongly urged that the government should embark upon an extensive program of public works for the relief of unemployment, and I am anxious to know whether the fact that the estimates of this year amount to the figure I have mentioned, or about $3,750,000 less than the estimates of last year, indicates a reversal of policy in that direction. Have the government decided that it is advisable to reduce by this amount the appropriations for public works? Have they abandoned the contention that increased expenditures in this direction will stimulate employment, will help the construction industry and will be of general advantage? These are questions to which I think the committee would like to have some answers from the minister. Following that, possibly I may have one or two other questions to ask. In this connection, however, I would note that the estimates, as far as I have been able to observe, do not contain any items of expenditure under the head of capital; and generally we have had some items of capital expenditure in connection with public works. Does that mean that the government have abandoned any program similar to that carried on by former governments in this respect? Do they contemplate the construction in Ottawa of any public buildings which under ordinary circumstances would be charged to capital account? These are items which occur to me at the moment.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no change in policy on the part of the party now in power. We have always been of opinion that it was much better to spend money on public works or public undertakings than to give it away in the form of relief, and we are in favour of that policy to-day just as we were when in opposition. The reason why numerous items for new constructions are not included in these estimates is that the government felt that in the main estimates we should disclose to the committee what is absolutely necessary for taking care of public buildings, looking after repairs, maintenance, lighting, heating and so on, and that we should not burden the main estimates with a new list of projects and undertakings, which though they might be necessary from a certain point of view, are not essential to the proper administration of public affairs. It was with that idea in mind that we began last year by reducing to a large extent the amounts included in the main estimates apart from the necessary money to complete works already undertaken. This year we are again reducing to the very minimum the items that might be proposed to the committee for new undertakings. That is why the main estimates have been reduced to the extent indicated by my hon. friend. I am sure that he has in mind—it will probably be the next question he will ask—the question whether there are going to be any supplementary estimates. I hope there will; I hope to be in a position to convince the Minister of Finance that we should have supplementary estimates.

As regards buildings in Ottawa, generally enumerated under the head of capital expenditures, consideration was given last year to the proposal to build a supreme court house. Plans were prepared and a study was made of the site upon which such a building might be erected. I regret, however, to say that after the preliminary designs and the plans prepared in the department were gone over we were afraid that the site we had in mind would be too small to permit the erection of the heavy buildings contemplated last year and designed by the architects of the department. But the government still have in mind and are determined to build in Ottawa certainly one additional building, for housing the Supreme Court of Canada at least, and possibly the exchequer court. This question will be considered by the government when an opportunity is presented to discuss the possibility of supplementary estimates with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. STEWART: I thank the minister for his comprehensive explanation. I rather expected him to express the hope that there would be supplementary estimates. In my fairly long experience in this house I have never known a Minister of Public Works who did not have that hope. Possibly the hopes of some hon. members on his side of the chamber will be encouraged. I am sure, however, that their hopes will not all be fulfilled, unless conditions greatly differ from those the minister has outlined.

As to the capital expenditure at Ottawa, I rather expected that the item would appear in these estimates, notwithstanding that there may be a difference of opinion as to the site. Often the site of a public building is determined after provision is voted for the construction of the building. I notice that in the rotunda at the entrance to the Commons chamber is placed a very interesting model of the suggested arrangement of some of these buildings. I assume the site to which the minister refers as being controversial is shown somewhere on that model. I know that in the past the same question has caused a good deal of difficulty. The minister has my sympathy in his efforts to reconcile conflicting opinions as to the location of this building. That controversy has existed for years and is one of the factors which has delayed the construction.

Can the minister tell the committee at this stage the amounts which have been expended, say, prior to the end of 1936, under the provisions of the Public Works Construction Act of 1934 and the Supplementary Public Works Construction Act of 1935? Also could he without too much trouble, either now or at a subsequent sitting of the committee, give a list of the projects or items provided for thereby which have not yet been undertaken?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the statement I have before me the expenditure under the Public Works Construction Acts was, for the fiscal year 1934-35, $5,916,559, and for the fiscal year 1935-36, $17,878,406.52.

As to the list of projects contemplated but not yet carried out, I thank my hon. friend for giving me an opportunity of saying that I am not at the moment in a position to give him a statement, but I assure him that the projects which have been abandoned are not very numerous. Practically all of them have been carried on. I will, however, undertake to give the list.

Mr. STEWART: I assume that a number of those projects are still not completed, but to be completed.

Mr. CARDIN: They are practically all completed.

Mr. STEWART: The minister spoke of the policy of the government and its adherence to the belief that public moneys might well be expended for public works rather than in direct relief. Of course there is nothing new about that. During the term of office of the previous government public moneys were expended, in cooperation with the provinces, for public works having for their object the relief of unemployment. I notice that the present government are still continuing that policy, under the agreements made with the different provinces; that is, they are undertaking, in cooperation with the provinces, works for the relief of unemployment. But that leaves out of the program the direct expenditure of moneys on account of the dominion government for the relief of unemployment by the construction of buildings and the undertaking of public works. I do not want to press the matter too far at this stage, because I know the minister's estimates have been brought down fairly early, and the session is in its early stages. I hope the supplementary estimates will disclose something which in a measure will remedy this apparent oversight.

New Brunswick

Moncton—old post office building—improvements and repairs, $11,100.

Saint John quarantine station—Partridge island—improvements, alterations and repairs, $7,000.

Mr. BROOKS: I notice there are some improvements to be made to the old post office building at Moncton. I may say that they have a very fine new post office there, of which the citizens are proud. What use is to be made of the old post office building in that city?

Mr. CARDIN: The repairs to the old building are being made for the accommodation of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. BROOKS: I should also like an explanation with reference to "appropriations not required for 1937-38." I note that there was $44,000 unexpended last year. I assume that is for public works started but not completed.

Mr. CARDIN: No. I admit I was not very clear myself as to the meaning of those words, which are found all through the estimates. This is not my responsibility. These words are added by the Department of Finance to all the estimates for a purpose which I confess I do not understand very well. In reality they mean this: They include in what is indicated in the estimates as appropriations not required for 1937-38 all the money voted for projects which have been completed. That is why I cannot understand it. All the projects undertaken under an item of the estimates, and completed during the year are put together; officials of the Department of Finance add the amounts up and at the end of our estimates say, "Appropriations not required for 1937-38." Probably the idea is that it is not going to be necessary to revote that money or to rebuild the building which has been completed. In all fairness, however, I am quite ready to admit that there may be good reason for this item from the point of view of accounting in the Department of Finance, but I confess my complete ignorance as to the reason for it. After having had that question put to me last year by both new and old members I tried to have some light thrown upon the matter, and this is the only explanation I have been able to secure. When I look up the list of projects completed during the past year, the total voted for those buildings which have been completed, as far as I can see, is the appropriation not required. That is the only explanation I can give. It may not be very convincing or very clear, but I believe it is a fact. As I have said, there may be very good reason for doing it in this way from the point of view of the Department of Finance, but I have no other explanation to offer than the one I have given.

Mr. BROOKS: I wish to thank the minister for his very clear explanation. As I understand it, in New Brunswick we have $18,000 voted for buildings that are not completed and $44,000 for buildings that have been completed?

Mr. CARDIN: No; the $44,000 was voted in last year's estimates, and that money is not to be voted again this year. That has been spent on the projects which have been completed. The amount provided this year is $18,100, but that amount covers only two items, the Moncton post office building and the Saint John quarantine station. There may, of course, be something in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. STEWART: I really cannot help congratulating the minister upon his explanation of this item. It is different from the explanation I have always given, but I am not sure that it is not just as good or perhaps a little better. Somehow or another I thought that the money voted but not required to complete buildings, or something of that sort, was covered up in these items. However, there are many explanations, and after all it is a bookkeeping matter.

I see the amount voted for the Saint John quarantine station is $7,000, which was the amount voted last year. Under this expenditure does the minister contemplate any extension of or addition to the buildings, and would he care to say what is to be the policy of the government in connection with immigration, whether it will require any extension of the existing building, or whether this just covers repairs and maintenance?

Let me suggest also that in saying that the building at Moncton is to be made available for the purposes of the mounted police, it might be just as well to say that the building is to be devoted to the administration of justice.

Mr. CARDIN: The amount of $7,000 is required for small repairs to be undertaken to the buildings already in existence. We do not contemplate any extension of the present buildings, or any new construction. I can give the amounts estimated, if that is required.

Mr. STEWART: Not if it is only for ordinary repairs; I would not ask that.

Mr. CARDIN: It is just ordinary repairs.

Mr. RYAN: Before the item carries I should like to say in connection with the quarantine station that some very valuable work was done there last season, such as facing the wharves and other necessary repairs, and that there is a good deal more work to be done this season. I should like to ask the minister whether the department contemplates the construction of a new quarantine station at Saint John in the near future.

Mr. CARDIN: I may say that so far the question has not been considered.

Item agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally—dominion public buildings—repairs and improvements, $50,000.

Mr. BROOKS: In connection with this item, I notice that one of the most important provinces in the Dominion of Canada is not represented here at all. I refer to Prince Edward Island, which is so well represented in this house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). I should like to ask if included in this item of $50,000 there are any public works to be carried out in Prince Edward Island, and the minister might also tell us how this amount is to be expended and what work is to be done in the maritime provinces.

Mr. CARDIN: The item under consideration provides for repairs, renewals and improvements to public buildings in the maritime provinces, including Prince Edward Island. I cannot tell my hon. friend how much money was spent in Prince Edward Island last year, but the amount we are asking the committee to vote now is just for repairs and improvements to all the public buildings in the maritime provinces. There are 104 of these buildings that will be kept up from this vote of $50,000.

Mr. BROOKS: If the minister can give us the information, I should like to know just how much is being expended in each province.

Mr. CARDIN: We cannot state in advance exactly what amount is going to be spent in each province. It is an estimate; the expenditure will depend upon the necessities that arise in any province.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): I should like to ask the minister if representations were made asking for some improvements to the public building at Summerside, Prince Edward Island. There the situation is that the customs offices are up two flights of stairs. At the moment I am sitting beside the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley); he might be able to collect a little more revenue if the offices could be reached more easily. This year we asked for some improvements to the building; the engineers were asked to make an estimate, and perhaps that estimate was sent in. It was requested that the building be enlarged and that the customs offices be moved to the ground floor. If that were done, the upper part of the building could be used by the mounted police, or for some other purpose. It would be a good move if the department could see its way clear to carry out that change, and I should like to know if the minister has received any representations along that line.

Mr. CARDIN: Of course my hon. friend will understand that under this vote we cannot provide for the construction of any buildings. In these items, as I say, we are providing only for repairs and improvements to existing buildings. So far as the other question is concerned, at the moment I cannot say whether any representations have been received asking for the enlargement of the existing building, but knowing the activity of my hon. friend and how alive he is to all that concerns Prince Edward Island, I am quite sure that if the need has been suggested to him he has made representations, and I should not be surprised to find his letter in the records of the department.

Mr. FINN: Before the item is carried may I say that there is no hon. member for whom I have greater respect than for the Minister of Public Works. Although we are discussing his estimates I should like to raise a point in connection with the department headed by the Minister of Mines and Resources. A new policy seems to have been embarked upon, which in my judgment and in that of my constituents—and after all they count—

Mr. SPENCE: Count for you.

Mr. FINN: Yes, and they have done so for twenty-three years. In the immigration office at Halifax, where in former years a local caterer was employed we now have one sent from this part of the country. Local positions should be filled by local people. If everything is to be drawn from the centre and the extremities are to be forgotten, we might as well make up our minds that we are going to lose our feet; then we shall not be able to walk and shall have to go back to the cradle.

Mr. STEWART: And your head, too.

Mr. FINN: In all sincerity I hope the Minister of Mines and Resources, in conjunction with the Minister of Public Works, will look into this matter, so that the policy may be changed and that we may go back to the good old days and do the right thing by the right people. If we have not the right man in Halifax or in Nova Scotia, well and good; but if we have, we want to use him.

I intend to discuss the matter with the Minister of Mines and Resources. I do not wish to take him unawares and therefore I speak at this time through the Minister of Public Works, who is always willing to bear on his shoulders some things which, at a later time, have to be passed to the shoulders of others.

Quebec

Bedford—public building, $27,000.
Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $100,000.
Grosse Isle quarantine station—improvements, alterations and repairs, $6,000.
L'Islet—public building, $12,500.
Montreal—postal terminal building, $300,000.
Quebec citadel—improvements and maintenance, $15,000.
Ste. Anne de Beaupre—public building, $22,000.
Ste. Martine—public building, $12,000.

Mr. WALSH: What building is to be erected at Bedford?

Mr. CARDIN: A public building for postal purposes.

Mr. WALSH: Have they not a post office there at the present time? Bedford is a small place.

Mr. CARDIN: They have a post office, but no public building. I am informed that the postal service is being carried on in a rented building.

Mr. LENNARD: What building is to be erected at Ste. Anne de Beaupre?

Mr. FINN: A shrine.

Mr. LENNARD: I believe that has already been erected.

Mr. CARDIN: It is another post office.

Mr. FINN: It is not large enough.

Mr. LENNARD: What is the population of Ste. Anne de Beaupre?

Sir EUGENE FISET: It depends on the time of the year.

Mr. CARDIN: The population is 1,900.

Mr. LENNARD: That seems a heavy expenditure for a post office in a village of only 1,900 people.

Mr. CARDIN: In that locality, due to the thousands of visitors, the population increases during the summer.

Mr. SPENCE: That lasts only a couple of months.

Mr. CARDIN: More than that; it lasts nearly all summer.

Mr. SPENCE: What is the population of Bedford?

Mr. CARDIN: In 1934 it was 1,630.

Mr. SPENCE: You ought to be able to build five post offices there with $27,000.

Mr. BROOKS: This is a vote of $27,000 for a public building in a town in Quebec of only 1,630 people, while there is no vote at all for Prince Edward Island and only $18,000 for New Brunswick.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no discrimination at all in favour of Quebec. I have not under my hand any items by which I could make comparisons, but at another meeting of the committee I could indicate that public buildings have been erected at points in the maritimes having less than 1,600 population. It depends upon the importance of the locality, the prospects of development and the amount of revenue derived from the postal or customs services. It depends, too, upon other services connected with the Post Office Department. Although a place may be small, because of these services it may require a public building.

Mr. BROOKS: Is that true with respect to Bedford?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that that is practically so. Bedford is an old, small town in the eastern townships of Quebec. I believe it is a county seat where court sittings are held, and two railways pass through it.

Mr. WALSH: Recently a new industry has been opened in Bedford, which will employ upwards of two hundred people in the next year. No doubt that will add considerably to the business done in the town.

Mr. CARDIN: Without wishing to criticize, may I say I am informed that the number of public buildings in Prince Edward Island is almost as great as the number in Quebec.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister has said that the buildings are to be erected to give postal services to the communities affected. Have such buildings been requested by the Post Office Department.

Mr. CARDIN: In most cases the requests have come from that department.

Mr. SPENCE: I imagine you asked the Post Office Department to ask for it.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister any record to show that these two buildings have been requested by the Post Office Department?

Mr. CARDIN: For a long time the citizens of that locality have asked for a public building. As far back as September, 1914, a petition was signed by the residents of that locality asking for the construction of a public building there, and His Honour the Speaker in 1924 also urged the construction of such a building. I could not say that in this case there has been a recommendation from the Post Office Department.

Mr. HEAPS: Evidently there has been no request from the Post Office Department for the erection of these two buildings.

Mr. CARDIN: There is a request from the Post Office Department for the Bedford building.

Mr. HEAPS: But not for the other one. A principle is involved in this. I do not think the Department of Public Works should put up buildings for any other department unless the department concerned applies for it. Only one building under this item has been asked for by the Post Office Department, and while the amount is comparatively small, nevertheless this country seems to be dotted all over with buildings which evidently the Post Office Department is not very anxious to operate. I have in mind one building running into considerably more money than the amount involved here, which was put up by the Public Works Department for the Post Office Department, and when the building was completed the Post Office Department refused to operate it; they said they did not require the building. If we are going to operate a public utility like the post office, the buildings comprised within that utility should, I think, be entirely wtihin the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department itself. As a matter of principle, the Department of Public Works should not construct buildings for the Post Office Department unless that department has requested them. It is all right for the minister to inform the committee that away back in 1924 some hon. member requested the department to erect a public building there, and it may be all right for the minister to tell us that the citizens of a certain locality have requested his department to erect a building, but if the minister were to put up buildings simply on the request of citizens of different parts of this dominion I am afraid there would be a public building on every street corner. The time has come for this committee and parliament to deal with these matters in a logical way. I do not think the Department of Public Works is the right and proper department to erect public buildings for another department, particularly when that other department has not requested it to do so. Would the minister inform the committee what the postal revenue is in these two towns for which we are asked to erect new buildings?

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: The revenue at Ste. Anne de Beaupre for 1934-35 was $8,687, and at Bedford for the same year, $5,093.

Mr. HEAPS: What will be the annual maintenance cost for the Bedford building after it is erected?

Mr. CARDIN: Frankly, I cannot tell.

Mr. SPENCE: How many caretakers are there in it?

Mr. CARDIN: Just one.

Mr. SPENCE: There cannot be many people out of jobs there.

Mr. LOCKHART: Have not these districts like Bedford and Ste. Anne de Beaupre rural mail delivery? It is only a matter of distribution from a centre, is it not?

Mr. CARDIN: There is rural mail in those sections of Quebec, but the mail has to be taken care of in the buildings at Ste. Anne de Beaupre and Bedford before it is distributed.

Mr. LOCKHART: It is only the immediate residents who have to come to the post office for their mail.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. LOCKHART: And the department is spending $27,000 to erect a building for a post office with a revenue of $5,000?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: I notice that most of these items are revotes; this is true of the Bedford public building, for instance, and the same is true of the L'Islet public building, the Montreal postal terminal building and the Ste. Martine public building. Will the minister tell us whether contracts have been let and tenders invited for any of these buildings, and generally in what stage these undertakings are?

Mr. CARDIN: Plans are not completed for the Ste. Anne de Beaupre building, but tenders are in for the Bedford building. The vote for the Montreal postal terminal building is for completion of the building.

Mr. SPENCE: How much has the Montreal terminal building cost so far? It seems to me that a lot of money is spent on it every year.

Mr. CARDIN: The total contract is $1,594,046.

Mr. STEWART: Has the site for the Ste. Martine public building been settled? There was a difference of opinion, I remember. If the question has been settled, which site has been selected?

Mr. CARDIN: We have decided to go back to what is known as the old site, which was bought as far back as the time when the late Mr. Robb was Minister of Finance.

Mr. WALSH: In connection with the Grosse Isle quarantine station, could the minister inform us as to the number of cases detained at Grosse Isle during this past season of navigation?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not before me the information my hon. friend asks for. As he knows, these are services under the immigration branch and also the Department of National Health, and the amount of $6,000 we propose to spend for improvements and alterations is at the request of and on representations made to us by the deputy minister of National Health. It covers only repairs to the existing buildings. I thought I had some information as to the number of patients who have been treated there, but I regret to say that it has not been given to us by the Department of National Health.

Mr. WALSH: The reason I asked the question is that I understand there were no detentions at that station during this past season. I am also informed that Grosse Isle station is of very little real use at the present time owing to improved conditions of service at the city of Quebec and generally improved conditions in travel. I understand that the immigration branch has actually withdrawn the services of the Anglican priest who was regularly stationed at Grosse Isle during the navigation season, and other curtailments have been made in order to reduce expense. Yet each year we have an item going through for repairs and renovations in connection with that station. It seems to me that probably a good number of those buildings, not being in use, could be temporarily closed without doing any real harm to Grosse Isle as a possible station for detention of any cases that might arrive in the Saint Lawrence. Would the minister entertain the possibility of consulting with the immigration branch and the department of health and seeing if it might not be possible to work along those lines and save a little of the money that we usually spend there annually, not only on buildings but on the wharf and other projects in connection with that station? I am not for a moment advocating that the island be closed as a station, because I know it might be necessary some day when we run into trouble. At the same time a number of these buildings are kept open and a considerable number of people are maintained on the island from public funds. I understand that the population of the island, all in the service of the government, amounts roughly to a hundred people.

Mr. CARDIN: I feel quite sure that the observations of the hon. member will be brought to the attention of the department of health.

Mr. LENNARD: Referring again to the item of the public building for Ste. Anne de Beaupre, may I suggest to the minister that the present government are not consistent in their policy. I would refer the minister to the circumstances of the erection of the public building in the town of Burlington, Ontario. The late government appropriated $25,000 for a public building, a post office, in Burlington, but when the present government came into office they said it was too great an amount for that town, and it has been reduced to $15,000. I am quite sure that the postal revenue of the town of Burlington greatly exceeds that of Ste. Anne de Beaupre, and for that reason I protest the amount for Ste. Anne.

Mr. CARDIN: I confess that at the moment I am not in a position to make a fair comparison between the proposed public building for Ste. Anne de Beaupre and the one proposed for the town which my hon. friend has just mentioned. But I may say this is a point on which his party is in agreement with me and I am in agreement with them. The proposal for the erection of a public building at Ste. Anne de Beaupre originated with my hon. friends when they were on this side of the house, and I am quite willing to carry on their proposal. It is a very practical one. I assume they were justified in placing in the estimates the necessary amount for that public building at Ste. Anne de Beaupre. As far as Burlington is concerned I have not the facts before me; but would my hon. friend not give me the pleasure of getting credit for economizing to some extent for the public treasury by reducing the amount of the expenditure at Burlington?

Mr. LENNARD: No; I do not think that towns in Ontario should be penalized.

Mr. CARDIN: The total contract is $1,594,046.

Mr. WALSH: Before this item carries, I wish to observe that I am sorry I did not know that the Minister of Public Works was going to be in such a genial frame of mind while preparing his estimates, or I would have made sure that there would be included an item for that post office which I have been after for Montreal West. It also made me very happy to hear him speak of supplementary estimates. In connection with the public building at Ste. Martine, I believe Ste. Martine is a small parish in the county of Chateauguay. Is that right?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. The population is nearly 1,500.

Mr. WALSH: This small town of Ste. Martine, on the main highway from Montreal to Malone, seems to be in a rather flourishing condition as far as public buildings are concerned. It is getting more than its share. The provincial government erected a small agricultural college on the outskirts of the town, and now we see it coming into prominence with a public building at the expense of the dominion treasury. Personally I do not think Ste. Martine deserves such preferred treatment. It is a very small municipality and can be served to good advantage with a rural mail delivery rather than a regular post office. I do not think as much revenue will be derived from Ste. Martine as from the town of Bedford. I do not care to criticize the erection of public buildings in Quebec. I am very much in favour of the erection of public buildings, particularly near home and more particularly if they happen to be in my own constituency, and are needed; but this is one case where I am convinced that the building is not a necessity. I do not know whether it has been particularly requested or whether the previous government entertained the suggestion that it should be erected there. I only know Ste. Martine. There are no streets properly so called; there is just one long main road going through the place. The item hardly seems justified under the circumstances, particularly when I cannot get a post office erected at Montreal West, a place of 5,000 people, where the revenue would more than meet the expense of constructing a post office, and the building has been requested by the council. Possibly Ste. Martine had particular influence with the previous government; if so, it has continued that influence with the present government.

Mr. CARDIN: This is another case in which the two parties were in agreement. The proposal started with the Liberal administration and was approved by the following Conservative government, and as a third party I am continuing the policy pursued by my two predecessors. As regards the importance of the locality and the justification for a public building there, I hope the committee will allow me to express a private sentiment that has been very near to my heart for quite a number of years. From the standpoint of advantage to Canada as a whole we hear a good deal about the back-to-the-land policy and the advisability of inducing those who live in our cities to go back to the rural sections. It is only fair that we should give some little encouragement, in the way of small expenditures, to the people in these outlying districts so as to make life more interesting and agreeable to them. We are spending a good deal of money that does not help those living in the rural sections—farmers, small merchants, blacksmiths and those who are trying to make a living in the small localities throughout the country—and it is only reasonable for us to show these people some consideration and to help them as far as we can to live a happy and contented life. We ought to be a little generous to them even if it costs a little more than we might be justified in spending from a purely business point of view.

Mr. WALSH: I sympathize with the minister's remarks; I am in complete agreement with him. We are all in a generous frame of mind particularly during these trying times, and we are inclined to be generous; but I suggest that our generosity must be commensurate with our ability to pay. I suggest to the minister that if the previous government commenced this post office at Ste. Martine, the people of the county of Chateauguay did not approve because they defeated the Conservative member and returned a Liberal candidate, no doubt in protest against the spending of that money in such a small place.

Ontario

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $125,000.
Fort Erie—public building, $48,500.
Haliburton—public building, $12,000.
Kenora public building—installation of fittings, $7,000.
Kitchener—public building, $300,000.
Ottawa departmental buildings—fittings, etc., $55,000.
Powassan—public building, $16,000.
Rainy River—public building, $21,000.
Toronto postal terminal "A"—improvements, $26,000.

Mr. STEWART: I should like to have some information in regard to the item, "Kitchener, public building, $300,000," for which $100,000 was voted last year. Does the amount in the estimates of this year represent the total cost of the building? Will this be sufficient or is it an instalment of the total estimated cost?

Mr. CARDIN: This amount will cover the building and complete the whole thing.

Mr. HEAPS: I observe that there are public buildings at Fort Erie, Haliburton, Kenora and one or two other places. Are these public buildings for post office purposes?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: In how many of these cases has a request come from the Post Office Department for the erection of these buildings?

Mr. CARDIN: As regards Fort Erie, Haliburton and Powassan, the recommendation has come from the Post Office Department.

Mr. LENNARD: A great many of these items are for public buildings. Can the minister assure me that all the fittings indicated in the item are of Canadian manufacture?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: The gold fittings?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Saskatchewan

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $40,000.
Regina—instalment on purchase of armoury, $30,500.

Mr. COLDWELL: How many more instalments of $30,500 due on the Regina armouries will appear in the estimates? I have an idea that one of the reasons why the smaller towns in Saskatchewan do not receive the consideration to which they are entitled is the fact that this item appears year after year and boosts the amount for the province. How many years will this item appear in the estimates?

Mr. CARDIN: The agreement was entered into in August, 1928, and it was for twenty years.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then this amount will appear for a number of years. I wondered whether in order to remedy the disability from which Saskatchewan suffers, some other place could be found for this particular sum.

Mr. CARDIN: I may assure my hon. friend that there is nothing in connection with it to prevent reasonable and needful projects being undertaken in Saskatchewan.

Mr. COLDWELL: We shall remember that.

Item agreed to.

Alberta

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $32,000.
Olds public building — improvements and alterations, $6,000.
Peace River—public building, $38,000.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I should like to have a little further enlightenment on the manner of showing these votes, and I think I can well ask it in connection with this item of the Peace River public building. For 1936-37 there is shown $31,500, and for 1937-38, $38,000, and then under the revote there is shown $29,900. Does that mean that the sum of between $8,000 and $9,000 has already been expended in the construction of this building?

Mr. CARDIN: No. The sum of $2,500 has been spent for the site, and certain changes have been made making the building a little more expensive.

Mr. LENNARD: What is the population of Peace River, Alberta, and what were the postal revenues for last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The population in 1934 was 1,200, and the postal revenue in 1934-35 was $7,374.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The minister might well point out that the post office at Peace River serves a tremendous district.

Mr. LENNARD: But it is all rural delivery. I would again direct the attention of the minister to the reduction by this government in the amount for the public building at Burlington, Ontario. This item is a striking indication of a building being erected in a village with far less population than that of Burlington; yet the present government reduced the appropriation for Burlington just about half, to $15,000, Burlington having a population of over 2,000. I do not know what the postal revenue is, but I am sure it would be double that of Peace River, Alberta. The people of Burlington will be proud of their public building!

Mr. McDONALD (Souris): I should like to inform the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that this government is reducing the cost of post offices in other parts of the country as well as in Ontario. In the riding which I represent a post office is at present being built for the town of Melita, and in the town in which I live, Boissevain, the former government erected a post office which cost about $25,000 for a population of only 850 people, a cost just about twice what it should be.

It is not the policy of this government, so far as the riding I represent indicates it, to put up post offices costing more than from $10,000 to $12,000 where there are only 700 or 800 people. So, if my hon. friend is insinuating that the riding he represents is not being treated fairly by this government, then I would inform him that in the riding I represent they are cutting the price of post offices in two. If this country is ever to get out of the hole we must do more of that kind of thing.

Mr. LENNARD: I should like to inform the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the town of Burlington, Ontario, is not in my riding.

An hon. MEMBER: It is pretty close.

Mr. LENNARD: I invite any hon. gentlemen in the vicinity of Burlington to view the building which has been erected there, and then I should like to know their opinion of the job.

Mr. HANSON: I am not interested in Peace River or in Ontario, and I do not speak with reference to any specific riding, but I take it that this government is seeking to assist development in parts of Canada where settlers are coming in, and consequently I think this vote is quite proper. Peace River is a new country with great possibilities of development, and I compliment this government for giving those pioneers some assistance in the development of their country. Ontario as we know has been treated well in the past, and is no doubt well represented in this House of Commons, but the outlying districts, including Peace River, also require help, and I am very much in favour of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. MacKinnon) that these pioneers should receive some assistance in developing a section which in the future will be one of Canada's most productive areas.

Mr. STEWART: Might I ask the minister when the item for Peace River first appeared in the public works estimates?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot give the exact date but it was under the previous regime, under my hon. friend.

Mr. STEWART: It was under the Public Works Construction Act. I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) must have overlooked that.

Mr. HANSON: What is wrong with it? I am complimenting the government for assisting development in a part of the country which needs it.

[Mr. G. W. McDonald.]

Mr. STEWART: I just wanted to thank the hon. gentleman for the compliment to the former government which first put the item into the estimates.

Mr. HANSON: I compliment any government which tries to help the pioneers.

Mr. MARSHALL: How many buildings are under lease in Alberta; for what purposes are they leased, and what amount of money is expended on leases?

Mr. CARDIN: I am sure my hon. friend does not expect me to give an answer to his question at the moment. Later on, under another item, I may be able to give the explanation, which will cover especially what the hon. member has just mentioned. At all events, while I have not the details before me, I am quite ready at the very first opportunity to supply my hon. friend with a complete list.

Mr. MARSHALL: May I also ask the minister if the department has ever considered charging the Post Office Department rent on the buildings that have been built for that department?

Mr. CARDIN: That question was raised during the discussion of the post office estimates last year, and we have supplied the Postmaster General with the estimated value of the occupancy of the buildings which are being rented for the use of the Post Office Department. That question is being studied with a view to reaching a solution along the lines mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. MARSHALL: To what department are charged repairs to post office buildings?

Mr. CARDIN: To the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MARSHALL: May I also ask the minister if the Department of Public Works has purchased lots 39 to 42 in block 1 in connection with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police barracks at Edmonton? May I further state that the government entered into an agreement of sale in 1934. The terms were conditional. I should like to understand just what is meant by the terms being conditional, and to know whether the agreement has been consummated.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the barracks have been completed. I have not before me the details which I would require in order to answer the question of my hon. friend, but I shall be happy to supply the information.

Mr. FAIR: Is there any specific basis upon which the grants to the various provinces are based, or are they made according to the good crops there are in the various provinces or what we had the previous year? My reason for asking is that I find that last year the amount devoted to Manitoba was $105,000, while this year it is $78,500. This year for British Columbia the vote is $318,000, while last year it was $413,500, and for Alberta this year the estimate is $76,000, while last year it was $64,000. These items do not seem to be consistent, and I was wondering whether there was any specific method of arriving at the amount to be granted to each province.

Mr. CARDIN: No definite rule or principle is followed when the estimates are being prepared in connection with the expenditure in the various provinces. We are guided by the requests that are made to the department, and the requirements of each province are considered on their merits, as far as we can judge them. There is no set rule under which a certain percentage of expenditure is apportioned to one province and a certain percentage to another. It depends upon the representations made to us and the justification put forward for the expenditure.

Mr. MARSHALL: I should like to ask the minister—

The CHAIRMAN: The item has been carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CARDIN: That is all right; go on.

Mr. MARSHALL: I should like to ask the minister how many new buildings were erected in Alberta in 1936.

Mr. CARDIN: I am very sorry; that is the third question I am not at the moment in a position to answer. I have not the information before me, and neither has the deputy minister. I hope my hon. friend will not be angry if I ask him to give me a little time. I will supply all the information he requires; we shall have to have another opportunity when the estimates are under consideration, and I will give him all the information he desires on these points.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $50,000.
Kelowna—public building, $50,000.
Powell River—public building, $58,000.
Prince Rupert—public building, $150,000.
Vancouver postal station "C"—improvements and alterations for seed branch, $10,000.

Mr. NEILL: With regard to this item for Powell River, while it is not in my district I have been asked to ascertain why this building was not constructed last year, and if possible to get an assurance that the work will be carried out in the coming year.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed by the deputy minister that the Post Office Department refused to accept the building which we intended to put up there.

Mr. NEILL: The site?

Mr. CARDIN: The building itself; they thought it did not provide sufficient accommodation. That was why we decided to increase the amount by $18,000, but the building is going to be constructed this year.

Mr. DONNELLY: How big a place is Powell River?

Mr. SPENCE: I should like the minister to tell us the population of Powell River.

Mr. CARDIN: Five thousand.

Mr. SPENCE: Let us get some information about Prince Rupert. Surely the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) has not so much influence that he is worth $150,000 to this house. That is a wonderful sum of money to spend in the deadest town in British Columbia. I think it is an exorbitant amount, and it should not be spent.

Mr. CARDIN: For the information of my hon. friend I may say that in order to arrive at the amount required for that public building we have capitalized the rentals which we have been paying in the past and which we are paying at present for the different government services in Prince Rupert. The site has been given to the federal government by the provincial authorities, and it was by capitalizing the rentals which we are paying at present in Prince Rupert for accommodation for our different services that we arrived at that amount.

Mr. SPENCE: What services are going to be accommodated in that building?

Mr. CARDIN: There is the post office, the national revenue department, the government telegraph and different offices of the marine and fisheries branches.

Mr. HANSON: I am glad the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) asked that question because, representing Prince Rupert, it gives me a chance to say a few words. Prince Rupert is one of the greatest North American Pacific ports. The provincial government of British Columbia has seen fit to erect a building there costing approximately half a million dollars, realizing the strategic position of that city as far as central and northern British Columbia are concerned. The minister has explained that this building will house the post office, the customs department, the Indian branch for central British Columbia and also the fisheries branches and the lighthouse offices. I think I am not wrong in saying that this is the one important point on the central British Columbia coast as far as the development of that area is concerned.

Mr. SPENCE: What is the population?

Mr. HANSON: I am not making any rash statements. As a representative of a part of British Columbia I am trying to explain that we hold a strategic position in British North America. We have the first railway connection in that part of the country.

Mr. SPENCE: Have railways ever paid up there?

Mr. HANSON: The Department of National Defence will no doubt bring before the house some measures which may or may not be approved. So far as I am concerned, I must say that the world is in such a state of turmoil that an oriental power could come in with a rowboat manned by two men, with one additional to handle a machine gun, and they could take the whole coast. I am surprised that an hon. member from a province such as Ontario, one supposed to uphold all British traditions, one of the pioneer districts, should question any expenditure in the part of the country about which I am speaking. We are trying to convey to the committee that we form part of the dominion and that we hold a strategic position within it. I am surprised to hear any hon. member ask about our population, about our traditions or our possibilities.

I remember an occasion two years ago when in opposition I tried to suggest that in my section of the country we have room for hundreds of thousands of families. Upon that occasion one hon. member on the government side of the house said, "Where are you going to put your houses? On the sides of the hills?" I would ask the hon. member for Parkdale to visit that part of Canada and see for himself that we do not have to put our houses on the sides of the hills.

Mr. SPENCE: I have been there.

Mr. HANSON: There are four hundred miles east and west where one cannot see a mountain; there are seven hundred miles north and south where one cannot see a mountain.

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. SPENCE: Or anything else.

Mr. HANSON: Consequently it is not necessary to put houses on the sides of the hills. I notice the former Minister of National Defence, the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) is looking at me; he knows something about the matter. Hon. members who insinuate that we have no space in that part of Canada had better take a trip to our country and find out for themselves. Then they would not come back to the floor of this chamber and say there is any lack of space. Like Mae West I would say, "Come up and see me some time."

So long as British Columbia is in the Dominion of Canada, and so long as we have opportunities and possibilities for development, and the place to put hundreds of thousands of people, I think our interests should be considered. When an hon. member such as the hon. member for Parkdale asks why the government is making such an expenditure, surely he cannot know what he is talking about. We are supposed to be operating under a British constitution and the principles of British fair play.

Mr. TOLMIE: I have much pleasure in supporting what the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) has had to say with reference to the port of Prince Rupert and the tremendous area for which it is the Pacific outlet. In his section of the country are many attractions and resources. No person knows just how rich the resources are, because many miles of that section have not been scratched or prospected. I am quite sure the hon. member will agree with that statement, and even without Mae West there are attractions for hundreds of thousands of people. I could not help rising in an attempt to support what the hon. member has said. He has told the truth about that section of Canada, and no doubt he could have told much more had he had time to do so.

In the city of Victoria for many years we have been promised a public building. There has been a feeling that a public building is needed and that the present arrangements for the administration of the business of the federal government in that city are not sufficient. Two or three years ago a suitable site was purchased and plans for a building were accepted, but building has not commenced. Within the last week there has been a serious fire in the post office, destroying two floors and doing a great deal more damage to the remainder of the building. Has the minister any report on the result of the fire, and what are his intentions in the matter?

Mr. CARDIN: The information given by the hon. member is correct. Fire destroyed two floors in which the public services were housed in Victoria. Without having gone into details I am informed that there is a possibility of reconstructing the part of the building which has been destroyed. I am told that something similar happened in Ottawa through a fire which took place about twenty-five years ago, and as a result the department constructed two additional stories. I believe the same can be done in Victoria although I confess we have not yet reached any decision in the matter.

Mr. TOLMIE: I understand the minister to say that the survey of the situation is not yet complete.

Mr. CARDIN: Correct.

Yukon Territory

Dawson administration building—repairs, improvements and alterations, $25,000.

Mrs. BLACK: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say that the government is showing great wisdom in granting $25,000 to the Yukon territory. This may seem to be a large sum for the city of Dawson with only about 1,000 inhabitants. It would appear that hon. members on both sides of the house lay stress upon the fact that the number of inhabitants is of importance. Dawson loses many of her people when the working season is on as they go to the mines. The administration building houses the regular government of the territory, the post office, the telegraph office, the gold commissioner's office, the court and the council chamber; in fact all, save the mounted police, have offices there. In the territory we have had two serious floods causing an enormous amount of damage. The last one was last summer, and I was in Dawson almost immediately after the flood had subsided. The administration building was moved almost two feet from its foundation, and a great deal of damage was done to that part of the building.

For a number of years the previous member for the Yukon, my husband, tried to obtain a larger grant to repair the vaults in the administration building, and it is high time those vaults were cared for, if the government wishes to preserve valuable papers which could be lost through fire. In a country where all buildings are frame, there is naturally a heavy fire hazard, and the documents should be cared for. I wish especially to thank the minister for remembering us with this additional grant.

Might I be allowed to say just a word to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson). Ever since 1898 I have been going past his home town. When first I went into the north country the site on which Prince Rupert now stands was nothing but a barren, rocky hillside, and to-day we have there a beautiful little town growing, and feeding an area that not only is a mineral section but contains the port for one of the largest fisheries in Canada. It also feeds what will be eventually an agricultural section, because if we have any faith in this country of ours we expect the west to grow.

Mr. POULIOT: Nothing is too good for our gracious colleague from the Yukon.

Item agreed to.

Generally

Experimental farms — replacements, repairs and improvements, $100,000.
Flags for dominion buildings, $5,000.
Military buildings—repairs, fittings and additions, $25,000.
Military hospitals—repairs, improvements and alterations, $80,000.
Decorations for coronation, $65,000.
Post office equipment, $24,000.
Public buildings generally, $30,000.

Mr. NEILL: I notice that one of the items comprised in this vote is $65,000 for decorations for the coronation. I suppose that is what the name implies, decorations which in a day or two will be gone. If it happens to be a wet day they would not look very beautiful anyhow. Does the minister not think the money would be better spent, as was arranged at the time of the coronation of the late King George, in inaugurating some useful scheme? I believe, in the case of the late King George V, at his own request, a fund was subscribed for cancer research. Suppose we did something of that kind, or established playgrounds for children or homes for orphans. Does the minister not think that would be a far better indication of our respect and loyalty, than to waste the money on something which is evanescent and would at best last only a few hours? But if it were used as the basis of some such fund as I suggest, public sentiment might be aroused throughout the dominion and people would contribute more money to make it a substantial amount.

Mr. CARDIN: According to the information which has come to me, the generosity of the late King George V, in connection with the fund my hon. friend mentioned, was demonstrated on his jubilee celebration, not his coronation.

To a certain extent I would be inclined to agree with the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) but I am afraid we would disappoint a very large number of people if we did not make the necessary expenditure for the appropriate decoration of all our public buildings on the occasion of the coronation of the present king. It may be that those who share the views of my hon. friend, and my own to a certain extent, would find themselves in a very small minority as compared with those who would be anxious to show their enthusiasm and loyalty by decorating their houses and having the public buildings decorated on that occasion. It is often good to follow the example of others, and I am informed that in London one large store alone is preparing to spend $600,000 simply on decorations for the coronation to show their respect for the king. So I am afraid my hon. friend is not voicing the opinion of the majority, although he may be voicing mine to a certain extent. After all, this is a very modest sum to be spent by Canada for the decoration of our public buildings. If the money were to be spent on only one building in Ottawa there might be some justification for my hon. friend's criticism, but this is for the decoration of public buildings throughout Canada, and when one considers the number of buildings that belong to the government one can see that it means a very small amount for decorations for each building.

If it happens we have bad weather, as my hon. friend suggests, it is not likely to be bad weather everywhere throughout the dominion, and some places will undoubtedly be enjoying nice weather, so that the decorations will not be a total loss even if there is bad weather in spots. Under the circumstances I think we are justified in joining with others and putting up decorations.

Mr. NEILL: I would make two comments on the fact that a store in London is going to spend $600,000 on decorations. The first is that a large portion of that will, I should imagine, be put down to advertising. The second is that there is going to be an enormous gathering in London, which would justify the expenditure. But in which of our cities is there going to be an enormous gathering? If I understand the minister, this money will be evenly distributed for decorations on all the public buildings, and there will not be any substantial gathering at any one of them.

The minister also says that he believes I am in the minority in my view. Possibly, but I am not aware of that, and even if it were so, if he will look over the pages of history he will find that the minority has often been justified.

[Mr. Cardin.]

May I ask what particular form the decorations are going to take? Are there going to be firecrackers, flags, an electrical display, or what? I understand the decorations are not only for Ottawa, but to be evenly distributed over every public building.

Mr. CARDIN: All the public buildings in the main centres.

Mr. NEILL: Who is to be the judge of what constitutes a main centre? Is the public building at Port Alberni not just as much entitled to celebrate the occasion as any building in Montreal or Toronto, in proportion?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. If my hon. friend makes a request, I expect I can spare a few flags for him.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): What proportion of this $65,000 will be granted to the Toronto district? Toronto is our second largest city, and I would suggest that there should be something for Toronto.

Mr. CARDIN: We have not yet decided on any apportionment of this amount. We have simply made a rough estimate of what might be required for decoration of the public buildings in the most important centres in Canada, but I can assure my hon. friend that a very good share of the expenditure is going to be reserved for the great city of Toronto.

Mr. NEILL: I would point out to the minister that already he is in trouble. One man wants his share, and I want my share. Already we are approaching this matter from a petty, parochial point of view, and if that plan is followed he will have to allocate the money on the basis of so much per head, whereas if the money were used along the line I indicated, for some useful public purpose, our better instincts would be stirred and we would contribute some money of our own to help swell a fund that was started for some real practical purpose, and would not be squabbling among ourselves.

Mr. CARDIN: We could not get very far with $65,000 if we were to start on a program based upon social needs in Canada. There would not be much if the vote were divided among 245 constituencies.

Mr. NEILL: It would be a start, and would give an impetus. If he puts up $65,000 to start a worthy cause I will subscribe my little mite and other people will do the same.

Mr. CARDIN: We have to make a choice, and if we followed my hon. friend's suggestion and started on a program to meet certain social needs there might be nothing left for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. POULIOT: I have not the least objection to the vote of $65,000 for decorations for the coronation, provided it is spent only for the decoration of buildings, not of men. There should also be an amount for a very different matter. I happened to be outside this building when the Governor General's horse guards paraded for the opening, and I noticed that they were very poor riders. As they will take part in the celebration of the coronation, I suggest that there should be an item to give them lessons in riding in order that they may not be any longer a disgrace in the parades which take place around this building.

Mr. BROOKS: With reference to the item of military hospitals, are any particular hospitals being considered, or is the item a general one for repairs to military hospitals throughout Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: This amount is required for general repairs and improvements to the various military hospital buildings throughout the dominion.

Mr. BROOKS: The department has no particular hospitals in any place to which this item has specific application?

Mr. CARDIN: No, not in particular.

Item agreed to.

Rents, Repairs, Furniture, Heating, etc.

Ottawa public buildings and grounds—
Elevator attendants, $124,000.
Departments generally—char service, including $150 for firing noon gun, $489,000.
Heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $408,000.
Light and power, including roads and bridges, $204,000.
Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance, $360,000.
Rideau Hall—allowance for fuel and light, $19,000.
Rideau Hall—improvements, furniture and maintenance, $42,000.
Telephone service, $93,000.
Water, $67,000.

Mr. STEWART: I ask the minister to be good enough to adopt the usual course of leaving one item open for discussion upon any matter that may arise. I cannot think of a more comprehensive item than this one, and I suggest that he should allow it to stand and that we might deal with the next one, and so clean up public buildings.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend refers to item No. 117?

Mr. STEWART: Yes. That might well stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Item stands.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a word to say about it. It is, that if the chief justice of Canada were the governor general, and if the chief justice of each province were lieutenant governor of that province, this item would disappear and we would save a great deal of money. I make that suggestion because the chief justice of Canada is competent and duly qualified to represent His Majesty, and so are the chief justices of the provinces. The suggestion was made in the house some years ago. I renew it in order to give every member an opportunity to think it over. In these times of stress—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), but item 117 stands.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but it has not been decided yet.

The CHAIRMAN: Oh, yes.

Mr. POULIOT: I spoke before it was decided that it stood. By the way, I am through.

Item stands.

Dominion public buildings and grounds—
Dominion immigration building—repairs, improvements, additions and furniture, $10,000.
Dominion quarantine stations—maintenance and repairs, $13,000.
Fittings and furniture, $100,000.
Heating, $463,000.
Light and power, $334,000.
Rents, $1,390,000.
Salaries of caretakers, engineers, firemen, etc., $1,395,000.
Supplies for caretakers, engineers, firemen, etc., $62,500.
Water, $84,000.
Yukon public buildings—rents, repairs, fuel, light, water service and caretakers' salaries, $24,500.

Mr. STEWART: I notice that the amount of the item of rents is substantially less than that appropriated last year. I assume that is owing to the fact that we are occupying some buildings we have constructed and have been able thereby to give up some leases.

Mr. CARDIN: Exactly; that is the reason.

Mr. STEWART: Could the minister, on the item which has been allowed to stand, inform the committee of the leases which are being surrendered or given up, and also any additional leases that have been entered into recently.

Mr. CARDIN: I will do so.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protections service, $930,000.

Mr. LENNARD: Will the minister explain the increase?

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): Yes. An increase of $3,035 for fishery officers, $8,307 for service of guardians, and $60 for increased boat service.

Mr. BARBER: Is it the intention to increase the number of fishery guardians in British Columbia, and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. MICHAUD: It is not an increase in the number of officers. It represents statutory increases of officers' salaries.

Mr. BARBER: Are the services of any of the officers or guardians being dispensed with?

Mr. MICHAUD: No.

Item agreed to.

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $9,000.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Will the minister inform us what rivers are being cleared and where the building of fishways is to be done?

Mr. MICHAUD: Wherever it is needed, depending upon the obstructions that may happen to be found, especially in the spring of the year after the run of the ice or logs. If the hon. member wants a list of the rivers upon which money was expended last year, I shall enumerate them.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): It would take up too much time to give all of them. But where an advance has been made which more than doubles the cost of the work, it would seem to me that there should be something more definite in the minister's explanation.

Mr. MICHAUD: It is for the purpose of building a fishway through certain falls of a river in British Columbia called the Maggie river. The fishway is now under construction.

Mr. BARBER: Where is that?

Mr. MICHAUD: On the west coast of Vancouver island.

Mr. HANSON: Since the government has seen fit in its wisdom to abolish the salmon hatcheries on both the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts, I submit that reasonable consideration should be given the original spawning grounds in the different rivers on both the Atlantic and the Pacific. As a result of correspondence I have had with game and fish organizations I can assure the government that there is a widespread feeling that in consequence of the abolition of the hatcheries something is necessary for the preservation of the fish, and that attention should be given the original spawning grounds. I have not thought it advisable so far to bring this matter to the attention of the government, but I would urge upon the minister that he give reasonable consideration to any suggestions which may be made in connection with the original spawning grounds on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. No doubt the hatcheries were originally established to assist the spawning grounds, but since it has been decided to discontinue these hatcheries, I think it is wise for the government to consider very carefully any suggestions which come from those familiar with the subject in regard to the original spawning grounds of salmon. Years ago in certain districts trees were plentiful in the vicinity of rivers and creeks, but fire has destroyed them in many places and the trees have fallen into the water, making it practically impossible for the salmon to reach the spawning grounds. I submit that when recommendations come from reliable sources the department should take steps to clear the creeks of these obstacles which prevent the salmon from getting up to the original spawning grounds.

Mr. MICHAUD: Every precaution is being taken to protect the spawning grounds, and I shall be pleased to consider every recommendation or suggestion that may be made to the department.

Mr. TOLMIE: From present indications does it appear that the hatcheries will be permanently discontinued?

Mr. MICHAUD: Just the sockeye hatcheries. We hope it will be possible to make use of those hatcheries that have been in operation for some years for the conservation and propagation of sport fish. At present there is a joint committee of the dominion government and the government of British Columbia studying the problem, and in the meantime some of the hatcheries are being kept open for experimental purposes.

Mr. TOLMIE: In connection with sport fish?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $61,600.

Mr. BROOKS: I have noticed a good deal of favourable comment, both in the press and on the part of the public, on the minister's efforts in trying to increase the demand for fish throughout Canada, and I am sure that those efforts are commendable. In connection with conservation, a commission has been investigating the lobster fisheries on the north and west coasts of New Brunswick. Is this item to include the expenses of that investigation? I understand from reports in the newspapers that the boats used for patrol purposes are not capable of coping with the situation; that is, the boats used by those who are illegally fishing lobsters are faster than the patrol boats. Is it the intention of the department to get faster boats for that service and to see that illegal fishing is prohibited in that district? I do not think the fishermen are altogether to blame for the situation which has arisen there. For a great many years they have been suffering great hardships, as indeed they are at the present time. They have not been able to make a livelihood for very many years, nor can they make a livelihood to-day in that part of New Brunswick. I said last year—and I believe that my words then are true to-day—that the fishermen there were disappointed in the treaty we made with the United States. They expected that more provision would be made for the sale of our maritime fish in the United States. The great difficulty facing the fishermen in the maritime provinces is the question of markets. I wish to commend the minister for the efforts he has made to secure increased markets throughout the country and to encourage the people in the larger centres, particularly in central Canada, to eat more fish.

Mr. MICHAUD: In reply to the first question I would say, yes. The cost of the inquiry is to be paid, not out of this vote but out of a similar vote passed last year, because the expenditure is taking place in the present year. Second, I should hesitate to discuss the nature of the evidence which has so far been submitted to the commissioner, because it is not yet all complete. The investigation is being carried on by a royal commissioner, a judge of the supreme court, and I should prefer to wait for his report before placing any interpretation on the evidence that has been adduced before him. As regards the criticism that the government boats are not adequate, I do not believe that has been yet established, but some opinions have been given to that effect. We are satisfied that most of our men are efficient and most of our boats are of equal speed to those of the few who defy the regulations and the law. I can assure my hon. friend further that we are going to make some changes in the regulations, which changes will depend upon the report and suggestions of the commission.

Mr. hon. friend referred to the price of the fish to the fishermen. It is true that under the treaty with the United States the concessions were not as great as was expected; notwithstanding that, during the last year our exports of fish to the United States have more than doubled.

Mr. BROOKS: Is that from the maritime provinces, or from the whole of Canada? I know that from British Columbia they have increased, but I understand that from the maritime provinces they have not.

Mr. MICHAUD: Oh, yes, the total export of fish to the United States last year was 100 per cent greater, and the same ratio would apply to exports from the maritime provinces, mostly fresh fish.

Mr. hon. friend has referred to the depressed condition of the fishermen along the coast of New Brunswick, especially the lobster fishermen, whose situation we are investigating now. I may inform him that there is no duty on lobsters going into the United States, and fortunately our fishermen have enjoyed a fairly good market during the present season, although the catch was not as large as it had been in the past.

Mr. RYAN: I do not know that my question is in order in connection with this particular item but I should like to ask the minister about a licence fee imposed by the late government on the fishermen of Lorneville. I do not know whether that was done to assist in the conservation of the deep sea fish or what the object was, but I have had innumerable protests and I cannot get any explanation why there should be what I call this discrimination against the fishermen of that district. Can the minister give some information as to what revenue is produced, and what the reasons are for centering on this particular district to impose this licence fee, which is regarded as a nuisance tax? I should like to have some information which I may convey to those who are repeatedly writing me protesting against the imposition of this fee.

Mr. MICHAUD: I believe my hon. friend has reference to a nominal fee of $1 charged to those who wish to take out a fishing licence. It is simply for the purpose of administration. If there were no fee most of the people would forget to take out the licence, which the law compels them to take out. I do not believe my hon. friend is correct in stating that there is discrimination against the people of the community he mentioned, because the regulation applies to all who want to take out licences in New Brunswick, and not to those of any particular locality.

Mr. RYAN: Would the minister tell me how many licences are issued in the fishing district adjoining Lorneville?

Mr. MICHAUD: I have not the details by localities of those who have taken out licences during the past year. I have the information for the entire province. In district No. 2, salmon gill net drift licences, 192, and trap nets, 386; in district No. 3, 161 gill nets and 97 trap nets; Gaspereau licences, 137. Probably it is district No. 3 in which the place referred to by the hon. member is situated. There were 23 shad licences, or a total of 1,135 licences in district No. 3.

Mr. RYAN: I cannot say that is the district, but I would ask the minister to be kind enough to take this matter into consideration. This tax may not seem serious to some, but it is creating a hardship on the fishermen. I do not see what the department gains by imposing this licence fee. It is only a recent innovation; the fishermen carried on for years without it. I know there is considerable opposition in the department to what I am saying, but I wish the minister would take the matter into consideration. The fishermen are protesting; the country gains very little by the collection of the fee, and I assure him that in these days when the fishermen are struggling to earn a livelihood in an honest way, as they do in my part of the country, it would be appreciated if this licence fee were done away with. I ask that in all seriousness.

Mr. LEADER: As some hon. members know, I come from Manitoba, where it is generally believed that we raise wheat, cattle and other agricultural products. When I heard this discussion of the fishing industry on the Atlantic and the Pacific I was much interested, because the fishing business in my province is developing into quite a large industry. Our fresh water lakes produce the best whitefish and pickerel in the world and I just wanted to apprise members of the committee of that fact. I also wanted to tell them, as I have told the minister—and he was good enough to answer my correspondence—that the fishermen of my province suffered a major catastrophe this year. After the winter season opened and the ice was sound enough they went out and placed their nets. Then milder weather developed, with high winds; the ice was broken up, and hundreds and thousands of these fishermen lost their nets. I accompanied a delegation to Winnipeg and we appealed to the Manitoba government for aid. The appeal was also taken up with the dominion government, but they found it impossible to reimburse these fishermen for their loss. This was really too bad, because I believe since then many of those men have had to apply for relief. It seems to me that it would be a very wise action on the part of this government and our provincial government if they would take care of situations such as these, which develop perhaps only once in ten years. I just wanted to tell the minister that a major catastrophe occurred and a great hardship overtook those honest, hard working people in Manitoba. If there is in the estimates any amount that can be made available to reimburse these men in order to reestablish them for next year, I believe the officials of the department should give the matter their very earnest consideration.

Mr. MICHAUD: In reply to the hon. member and for the information of the committee may I say that the fisheries of the inland provinces do not come under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities. For that reason, and for that reason alone, I was sorry to have to turn down his request for help in the matter he has just brought to the attention of this committee.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Marine Service

Aids to navigation: maintenance and repairs to wharves, $7,500.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): This item covers the expenditure for maintenance and minor repairs to the large number of small public docks administered by this department. Major repairs to these docks are made by the Department of Public Works, but repairs costing less than $50 are made by the department as required, and this appropriation is for that purpose.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay pensions to pilots: Alphonse Asselin, John I. Irvine, Adjutor Baillergeon, J. Alphonse Lachance, Joseph Pouliot, Raoul Lachance, Phileas Lachance, Arthur Baillergeon, J. H. Talbot, Jules Asselin, Joseph Vezina, $3,300.

Mr. HOWE: This is an appropriation which goes back to 1906. At that time the pilotage district of Quebec was reorganized and the number of pilots reduced. There were far too many pilots there for efficiency, and as part of the plan to reduce the number of pilots provision was made for pensioning the then existing pilots at the age of sixty-five, with a pension of $300 per annum. The pilots are becoming less in number each year, which accounts for the reduction in the vote this year.

Mr. MARSHALL: May I ask the minister how many were retired?

Mr. HOWE: The names of the surviving pilots appear in the estimates. I think there are eleven of them left, out of a total of fifty-one.

Mr. FINN: I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question that has been brought to my attention by steamship men who are trading up the St. Lawrence river and through to the great lakes. I am told that in the great lakes these ships are required to carry two pilots, and the expense is so great that it is absolutely impossible for those engaged in the shipping business in the port of Halifax to enter into trade which carries them into the great lakes. It seems to me there should be some sound reason for requiring ships to carry two pilots, but this information comes to me from an outstanding shipping man who is directly engaged in that trade. He informs me that if that regulation is enforced he will have to retire and take his ships out of the trade between Nova Scotia and the great lakes.

Mr. HOWE: I may say that no such regulation as has been suggested by the hon. member for Halifax is in force at the moment. Some conversations have taken place with the United States about it, but at the present time the whole matter is only under discussion. No conclusions have been arrived at as yet, and I do not think anything further can be said about the matter just now.

Mr. FINN: It is as the minister says: I had forgotten that this is a question having to do with a relationship between the United States and Canada. Perhaps this is not an opportune time to discuss the matter; I accept the suggestion of the minister, but I should like an assurance from him that before this matter is dealt with hon. members will have an opportunity of discussing it further.

Mr. HOWE: In reply to my hon. friend I may say that if any such arrangement is made, I am informed that it must be by legislation, so the house will have a chance to discuss it.

Mr. FINN: I do not want to be unduly technical, but is it necessary that this should be done by legislation? May it not be done by treaty, binding both countries, which will be brought to this house only for confirmation? If that is so, I think an opportunity should be afforded hon. members to discuss this matter. It is not a question in which I am interested personally, but when steamship people in my constituency are interested and set out the facts succinctly, clearly and honestly, we should have an opportunity of dealing with this question in a preliminary way so that we shall not find ourselves in the position of having international negotiations carried on, resulting in a treaty being brought into the house as a government measure for confirmation, so that refusal to vote for it will be equal to a vote of want of confidence in the government. I do not want to place myself in that position, but I should like to be able to discuss the question in order that those who are interested might be informed as to the position and as to the possibility of a further discussion being carried on before any of these international pourparlers are concluded as between the United States and Canada in reference to this vital question of putting two pilots aboard a ship and making the charterer or owner of the ship pay for two pilots when one would be sufficient. That is the only point.

Mr. HOWE: I shall do my best to see that the hon. member has an opportunity to discuss the matter before we go too far.

Mr. FINN: I am satisfied with the minister's answer.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate allowance to recoup the Workmen's Compensation Board of British Columbia in continuation of a pension granted and to be paid by that board up to the 31st March, 1938, in the sum of $35 per month, to the widow of the late E. J. McCoskrie, who was formerly employed as port warden at Prince Rupert, B.C., and who was killed while in the performance of his duties, $420.

Mr. STEWART: How long has this item been running? I see there is a vote in 1936-37?

Mr. HOWE: It was instituted in 1930-31.

Mr. STEWART: Is it annually during the lifetime of the recipient?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, through the widow, I believe. The person in question was a port warden at Prince Rupert who was killed on duty. He was not entitled to a pension, and this is a compassionate allowance to his widow.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate allowance to John Davidson, formerly lightkeeper at Cape Mudge, B.C., $500.

Mr. STEWART: How long has this item been running?

Mr. HOWE: Since 1922-23. It has been annual since then.

Item agreed to.

Steamboat inspection, $172,625.75.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why is there an increase?

Mr. HOWE: It is for statutory and promotional increases.

Mr. FINN: Does this apply to steamboats that are receiving subsidies, or just government boats?

Mr. HOWE: Government and other boats. I find the increase is for statutory increases and promotions and that it amounts to about $1,000.

Mr. STEWART: I should have thought this would come under civil government, if they are permanent employees?

Mr. HOWE: Although I have not the exact details, I am told that this includes members of the staff who are not included in the civil government vote.

Mr. STEWART: How do statutory increases go to them?

Mr. HOWE: All members of the service receive statutory increases, whether or not they come under the civil government item.

Mr. STIRLING: In the previous year there was a decrease of $11,000, while in the present year there is an increase of a few hundred dollars.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: Either to-night or before the item passes would the minister be prepared to give particulars of the expenditure in the last year?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. They are these for the coming fiscal year:

Salaries of administrative staff, $22,050.
Salaries of steamship inspectors, tackle inspectors, clerks, $130,495.75.
Travelling and office expenses, $15,080.
Travelling expenses of customs officers, investigating complaints, expense of legal proceedings, printing, stationery and unforeseen expenses, $5,000

Mr. STEWART: How many inspectors are includued in that expenditure?

Mr. HOWE: Thirty-two will be required.

Mr. STEWART: Where are they located?

Mr. HOWE: Halifax, Saint John, Quebec, Sorel, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Midland, Collingwood, Port Arthur, Vancouver and Victoria.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. STEWART: The minister has an excellent memory and his geography is particularly good. Are these inspectors appointed by the civil service commission?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: What is the salary of an inspector?

Mr. HOWE: They range from $3,660 to $2,880. That of the senior steamship inspector is $3,660; steamship inspector, general, $2,820 to $3,360; inspector of boilers and machinery, $2,520 to $2,880; inspector of hull equipment, $2,520 to $2,880; inspector of ships' tackle, $1,260 to $1,440.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, January 27, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Who were the members of the Hamilton harbour commission during the year 1936?
2. What individual salary did they receive?
3. Are they allowed certain expenses in addition?
4. If so, what expenses did they incur individually?

Mr. HOWE:

1. D'Arcy Martin, K.C. (chairman), R. H. Yeates and A. G. Gaul until March 4th; after that date, C. V. Langs, K.C. (chairman), E. H. Corman and A. G. Gaul—the latter being the appointee of the city.

2. The salary attaching to the chairmanship is $1,500 per year, and to the other two members $1,200.

3 and 4. During 1935 the former commission paid the expenses of its members in attendance at Ottawa amounting to $578.21, which includes car allowance to Mr. Yeates of $75. In 1936 the board paid the expenses of the present board in connection with various attendances at Ottawa, $235.05. No expenses were incurred individually other than the car allowance item of $75 allowed Commissioner Yeates.

NARCOTIC DRUGS

Mr. FLEMING:

1. What is the total amount of opium, morphine and codein imported into Canada in 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936?

2. Has the Department of National Health taken any action to stop the sale of narcotic drugs?

3. Has the Department of National Health taken any action to look after drug addicts?

Mr. POWER:

1.

	Opium (lbs.)	Morphine (including Diacetyl-morphine and Ethyl-morphine) (ozs.)	Codeine (ozs.)
1932	615	4,442	17,019
1933	685	5,316	26,361
1934	458	5,476	28,915
1935	730	4,883	35,669
*1936	435	5,256	22,909

*Figures are based on import licences issued, as customs statistics are not yet available. Final figures may be somewhat lower, dependent on goods covered by licences issued late in 1936 not arriving until 1937.

2. It controls the legal sale in wholesale and retail drug stores by means of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. The illicit traffic is, with the cooperation of federal, provincial and municipal police forces, sought out and combated under both the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act and the criminal code. There were one hundred and sixty-three convictions under the former in 1935.

3. The department is constantly in communication with the medical profession in relation to individual cases of drug addicts, the responsibility for the care and treatment of which, however, comes within the provincial orbit, as do the tuberculous or the insane. Three provinces have passed legislation in the matter.

WELLAND CANAL WEED CUTTING

Mr. SENN:

What was the total cost of cutting weeds on the Welland canal feeders for each of the years 1934, 1935 and 1936?

Mr. HOWE:

Total cost of cutting weeds on Welland canal feeders during the years in question was as follows: 1934, $905.74; 1935, $1,146.08; 1936, $1,614.40.

J. J. MCCRUDEN

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. What was the total amount paid to Mr. J. J. McCruden, McTaggart, Saskatchewan, for the taking of a census, and other services?

2. Was Mr. McCruden employed on his own vocation while drawing this money from the government?

3. Did Mr. McCruden give full time service in return for the money received?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $750.

2 and 3. Do not know Mr. McCruden's vocation or hours of work, but he gave the necessary time to carrying out his duties as census commissioner.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS—DAIRY SUPPLIES

Mr. BROOKS:

1. Where does the Canadian National Steamships Company purchase the following dairy products used on route Halifax to West Indies: (a) butter; (b) cream; (c) ice cream?

2. What amount was paid for each of the above products in the year 1936?

Mr. HOWE:

1. (a) Halifax; (b) Halifax, Prince Port, N.S., and Boston, Mass.; (c) Halifax and Boston, Mass.

2. The question whether such information should be divulged is one for the consideration of the select standing committee on railways and shipping. The Canadian National Steamships management feel that it is not in the interest of the company to make such information public.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EUROPEAN WAR PENSIONS

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. How many European war pensions are being paid to Canadians?
2. How many pensions are paid to other than Canadians?
3. How many recipients of pensions are regularly employed in remunerative occupations?
4. How many receive income from other sources?
5. How many members of parliament receive war pensions?
6. What are the rates of pensions for the various ranking officers?
7. What are the rates of pension received by the various classes of pensioners, with income, wages, salaries, dividends received from other sources (classified in groups, if necessary)?
8. Are pensions assessable for income tax?

MONTREAL POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. FERLAND:

1. Did the Civil Service Commission, in 1930, establish an eligible list of candidates in Montreal for positions as postal helpers, letter carriers, clerks or mail porters?
2. Is said list still in force? If not, when was it abrogated?
3. Has the Civil Service Commission, since 1930, established another list of eligible candidates for similar positions in Montreal?
4. Has the Post Office Department, since 1930, engaged any employees, such as clerks, letter carriers, or mail porters, in Montreal, other than those appearing on the 1930 list? If so, how many?

Mr. RINFRET: Return tabled herewith.

Mr. JEAN:

1. What are the names of all the officers and employees, whether permanent or temporary, in the postal service at Montreal, during 1936?
2. What was the nature of their respective duties, and the salary of each during the course of the year?
3. What are the dates of their appointments respectively, indicating whether they were nominated by the Civil Service Commission, or the Postmaster General, or otherwise?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

WHEAT BOARD—PAPERS RESPECTING INSTRUCTION TO HANDLE ONLY AT 90 CENTS

Mr. HANSELL:

For a copy of all letters, resolutions and communications approving or disapproving the government's action instructing the wheat board to handle wheat only when the price dropped to 90 cents per bushel.

LIVELONG, SASK., POST OFFICE

Mr. NEEDHAM:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence and other documents respecting the trial in Livelong, in connection with the removal of the post office from Mr. Hicks store in Livelong, Saskatchewan. Also a statement showing the cost to the government of the said trial.

HUME, SASK., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. DOUGLAS:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents dated during the past six months, in connection with the requested resignation of R. E. Juby, postmaster at Hume, Saskatchewan.

FRENCH VILLAGE, N.S., GOVERNMENT WHARF

Mr. MASSEY (for Mr. Brooks):

For a copy of all payrolls showing money expended and to whom it was paid, on certain repairs made by the Department of Public Works to the government wharf at French Village, county of Halifax, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. MacNEIL:

For a copy of all memoranda, telegrams, correspondence, charges, evidence and other documents, from January 1, 1936, to date, in the possession of the Department of Agriculture or the office of the Prime Minister, relating to the dismissal of the following: Edward E. Jay, district seed potato inspector, botany division, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island; Edward Cairns, seed potato inspector, Prince Edward Island; Edward P. Donnelly, fruit and vegetable inspector, Prince Edward Island; Charles McLeod, fruit and vegetable inspector, Prince Edward Island. Also a statement showing the dates of appointment and dismissal and reasons assigned for dismissal in each case, along with all information received by the department which resulted in such dismissals and the name or names of the person or persons who assumed responsibility for such information.

Also a copy of any orders in council or regulations authorizing dismissal of members of the public service without investigation upon allegations of any person that such member of the said service has been guilty of active partisanship.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. GARIEPY

Mr. WILFRID GARIEPY (Three Rivers): There is an important matter which I would like to call to the attention of the government. In the city of Three Rivers, represented in the local house by the premier and attorney general of Quebec, there took place the night before last a large gathering in the form of a banquet at which the attorney general made certain charges which I find reported in the daily papers, particularly verbatim in Le Devoir of January 26, that is, yesterday. It states that in the province of Quebec—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member has any right to bring this question before the house at this stage. The orders of the day have not been called.

Mr. GARIEPY: According to the clerk, Mr. Speaker, we shall not reach the orders of the day to-day. I understand that this is the proper time—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARIEPY: In the speech in question an important charge is made against the government, a charge which I think calls for immediate attention.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order at this stage.

WORLD PEACE

PROPOSAL THAT CANADA SUGGEST TO THE UNITED STATES THE CONVENING OF A WORLD PEACE CONFERENCE

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (Winnipeg North) moved:

Whereas the nations of the world are faced with a most alarming situation which may result in a disastrous war;

And whereas, the League of Nations up to the present has not succeeded in establishing conditions conducive to a permanent and lasting peace;

And whereas, Canada on the American continent is an integral part of the British Empire and a neighbour to the American republic,

Therefore be it resolved,—That, in the opinion of this house, the government of Canada respectfully suggest to the President of the United States the desirability of convening a world conference for the securing and maintenance of peace.

He said: I think it will be within the recollection of most hon. members that in years gone by, when I have moved resolutions on private members' days, I have usually introduced resolutions dealing with what might be called purely Canadian problems. On this occasion, however, I am of opinion that the question of peace is of greater importance than the questions I have raised in previous years with respect to unemployment insurance and even old age pensions, and it is for that reason I am to-day introducing the resolution which has just been read.

In some respects this resolution is correlated with the one moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) on Monday last. Some ground which he covered on that occasion I may also traverse to-day, but I shall do so briefly. It will be observed from the terms of the resolution that it may be divided into three parts. The first refers to the imminence or danger of war; the second refers to the League of Nations, and the third deals with a proposed request by our government to the president of the United States to consider the convening of a world peace conference.

To-day the danger of war is recognized on all sides, and this has resulted in nations arming themselves as they have never done before. The tremendous burden of armaments has become a strain financially upon all nations, and not even the most sanguine among us would claim that an armed nation or a group of armed nations is any security for peace. In fact, the very reverse is more likely to be true; for if huge armies equipped with the most modern death-dealing implements of war were any guarantee of peace, then the world to-day should be in a more peaceful state than has ever been known in history. Of course, that is not so. It is time, I believe, that in the interests of peace a halt was called to the huge armament race, which must ultimately result in a clash of arms on an unparalleled scale. The amassing of armaments creates a war psychology which makes it more difficult to maintain a peace atmosphere among the nations.

War settles no problems. History has taught us that practically all wars create new problems; and in addition to that we have to consider the cost of war in both the human and the material sense, with all the sacrifices that war entails. We seem to be willing to make all sorts of sacrifices to the gods of war, but hardly any in the cause of peace. In this country we seem also to have caught the fever for greater military preparations. It would have been a very highly commendable policy on the part of the government if, instead of greater preparations and greater appropriations being made for military purposes, even a small percentage of the sums appropriated for armaments had been set apart for the purpose of finding a peaceful solution of our international problems.

We take it for granted to-day that all nations must have ministers whose sole purpose it is to see to war preparations. In my opinion it would be a very fine gesture on our part if in addition to the ministry of defence we had a ministry of peace. If only five per cent of the amount spent on war or warlike preparations were to be appropriated for such a purpose we should ultimately receive far greater benefits than can be derived from these expenditures on implements of war. War does not and never could appeal to the higher instincts of humanity. It appeals only to our baser instincts and engenders jealousies and hatreds that are difficult to eradicate for many generations. There is nothing that can be called ennobling or humanitarian in a mass slaughter of human beings. War is barbarian, and barbaric are its methods. If the world were again to engage in a mass slaughter of human beings, this would inevitably lead to chaos and what we commonly call a state of anarchy. War is a sign not of progress but of reaction, a brake on the wheels of progress. It has been claimed in some quarters that war and preparation for war are signs of regeneration of a people. In my opinion that is far from being the case. The resort to war is a sign not of regeneration but of degeneration; it is chosen only by those who have little regard for human life and no conception of what is just and right. In this day and generation we are in many respects living in the most advanced civilization the world has ever known. Must we say that in spite of the progress we have made in the arts and sciences and in culture we are helpless in regard to the preservation of peace? The whole world is crying for peace; yet we seem to be inevitably drifting toward war.

Although Canada is one of the smaller nations of the world, she has taken an important part in world affairs. Should we not, therefore, make our contribution toward creating an atmosphere of peace among the nations of the world? Should we not try to do something to banish the fear of war from our midst, and strive toward creating that much to be desired peace sentiment?

I have said that I would like to see Canada the first nation in the world to establish a ministry of peace, with sufficient funds allotted for that purpose. If such a ministry were established, I should like to see engraved over the entrance the words "Peace on earth, good will toward men." It is indeed ennobling to have these religious, historic and Christian words before us on one day in the year, but how much better would it be if we practised the principles underlying them 365 days in the year. To attain peace will entail a struggle, but is it not worth the effort? The nations of the world are looking for a lead from somewhere. Unfortunately the League of Nations has not been the success we would like it to have been. I know hindsight is usually better than foresight, but, without unduly criticizing what has been done by the league since its inception, one must come to the regrettable conclusion that it has not been the instrument for the settlement of international problems that we wished it to be and expected it would be. It did not deal firmly with the problems that confronted it; it did not grapple with those problems with real earnestness; sometimes it tried to evade them, hoping, Micawber-like, that something would turn up. Its gestures were often meaningless, and certainly lacked effectiveness. In spite of this, one must not condemn the principles underlying the league, but realize that there was lacking among its members that true spirit of cooperation which was necessary to make the league the powerful instrument so greatly needed to-day in world affairs.

A league of nations or some international body created for the purpose of considering and dealing with world problems must have behind it some effective means of making its judgment prevail. Those who are members of such a body must loyally abide by its decisions. The members cannot be a law unto themselves; they cannot be in the league when it suits them and out of the league when it suits them. Unfortunately Canada has also erred in this respect; there seems to be among some of our people a desire to be half in the league and half out. In an international body of this kind there can be no such thing as being half in and half out. We must be either in the league or out of it. As far as I am concerned I am wholeheartedly in favour of being in the league and giving full accord to its activities and recommendations.

Unfortunately during recent years this policy of halfhearted support of the league has been one of the main causes which have brought it to its present position. The covenant of the League of Nations has been flouted. There must be respect for international covenants, otherwise the respect for law disappears. During the last few years, with the disregard which has been shown by some nations for their international obligations, the law of the jungle has prevailed, driving the weak to the wall and resulting in the survival of the strong and ruthless. Might has become right. This spirit in international and human relations must change, and the law of the jungle give way to the rule of law. Smaller or weaker nations must in the league feel a sense of security, and fear of coercion by stronger nations must be banished.

It was hoped that the League of Nations would achieve this object, but unfortunately such has not been the case. One has but to go back a few years to the wanton invasion of Manchuria by Japan. While Japan was censured by the league, she is to-day to all intents and purposes in full control of that portion of Chinese territory. Then there was the Ethiopian affair, and although Italy was censured by the league, and a halfhearted form of sanctions applied, Italy to-day is in control of Ethiopia. I could also refer to the ineffectiveness of the league in connection with the Spanish situation. A non-intervention body was also created, but the terms of the covenant were not lived up to by many of the signatories. I would point out further that Spain was a member of the League of Nations and as such had a right to expect some support from the league in the unfortunate situation in which she finds herself at the present time. Had the stronger nations of the world given a more powerful lead when it was required it is quite probable that to-day Japan would not be in Manchuria or Italy in Ethiopia, and I am quite satisfied that the nations which are responsible for prolonging the civil war in Spain would have kept out of Spain, and the Spanish situation might have adjusted itself much more easily than is possible now.

In respect to Ethiopia I might refer in passing to the book mentioned in this chamber on Monday last by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas), and written by Marshal de Bono who commanded the Italian troops at the beginning of the campaign, wherein he stated that had Great Britain shown a firm hand at the outbreak of hostilities it is quite likely that Italy would have been compelled to call off her campaign. I do not believe it would have been necessary for any country to go so far as the use of force to compel either Japan or Italy to desist from aggression. Economic sanctions effectively applied would, in these days of world interdependence, have been sufficient to bring both these countries to a realization of their responsibilities to the other peoples of the world, and of their obligation to adhere to the principles of the league, of which they were both members. It is because of such ineffectiveness that the league is to-day in a more or less moribund condition. The world has drifted into a state of chaos in international affairs, and the time has come when the parliaments of the world, no matter how they are constituted, should take cognizance of the situation and see if an effort cannot be made to prevent the catastrophe which possibly lies ahead of us.

I am suggesting in this motion that our government request the president of the United States to consider the advisability of convening a world peace conference. I know how simple it is for anyone to find fault with any suggestion that might be made along this line. The easiest thing in the world is destructive criticism, but if there is anyone who anxiously desires to secure world peace and knows some better method of attaining it than by convening a proper world conference in which all nations would or could participate, then I believe we should have those opinions expressed.

The United States is both respected and feared to-day by the other nations of the world. It is feared because of its great economic strength, consisting of huge financial and natural resources. On the other hand the United States has to a certain extent kept aloof from most European problems, and it is therefore in a peculiarly favourable position to convene a conference of the nations of the world, with the strong probability that no other country could afford to ignore a call of this kind. There is in the world no other country than the Dominion of Canada that could make such a suggestion to the president of the United States with more confidence of a favourable reply. There is no need for me to refer to the good relations which have existed between the United States and Canada over the years, because that is self-evident. We are part of the American continent, and at the same time an integral part of the British Empire. There are few, if any, members of this house who wish to secede from the British Empire, and we could not withdraw from the American continent even if we would. That is the unusual position we stand in to-day—part of the new world and yet at the same time part of the old.

Our message to the old world is: Cannot some way be found whereby these rivalries, jealousies, hatreds and bitternesses may be eliminated and a new start made in the relationships as between man and man and nation and nation? In many respects we in this country are following, in our national and international policies, along identical lines with the United States. In our trade relations we have tried to make trade agreements with other nations in all parts of the world, just as the United States has done.

The foreign and domestic policies of these two countries are in many respects identical. In the United States they are doing away to a certain extent with their tariff walls, and we are reducing our tariff walls in the hope of trading with all nations. The old idea which was so prevalent in this country and in the United States in years gone by that trade was in itself a form of warfare is now perhaps being discarded. I believe that trade, instead of being looked upon as a form of warfare between nation and nation, should really be the cement which binds nation and nation together. I am one of those who believe that there should be the freest possible flow in commerce, of surplus commodities, between the various nations of the world, and that reason in itself is one of a number that I shall give in support of my contention that we are in a favourable position to make to the president of the United States the request suggested in my motion.

I would also recall to the house the rather significant statement that was made here by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on Monday last. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce, (Miss Macphail) had referred to our absence from the pan-American conference which was held last December, and the Minister of Justice gave, as a very good reason for our absence, the information that we were not invited to be present. I cannot say positively that if we had received an invitation the government would have accepted it, but perhaps I may read that meaning into the minister's statement, and if I am wrong I hope he will excuse me. At all events, he said the reason we were not there was that we had not been invited, and possibly one of the reasons why we have not had an all-embracing international conference with respect to world peace is that the president of the United States has not yet been invited to call such a conference. If I may carry the suggestion of the Minister of Justice a step further, possibly if an invitation were extended by the Dominion of Canada through its government to the president of the United States to convene a world peace conference, he might consider a suggestion of that kind in a favourable light.

I know some of my hon. friends may object to action of that kind because it might appear to some that we were drifting away from our allegiance to Great Britain and the empire and showing a strong allegiance to the United States. Personally I do not attach very much weight to such an objection. The question of peace is of such vast importance to ourselves and to all nations of the world that I do not think we ought to stand on any technicalities as to who is going to convene a world peace conference, so long as we have such a conference called under such auspices that we may hope for the most effective results.

Answering those who may object to one country asking another to take certain action along a certain line, I would quote a paragraph or two from a book called International Security, written by Phillip C. Jessup, associate professor of international law at Columbia university. Referring to the instigation of the Kellogg-Briand peace pact, this writer makes this rather significant statement:

> It will be recalled that the negotiation of the pact began with M. Briand's offer of April 6, 1927. This was a suggestion, not devoid of inspiration from a private American source, for a treaty between France and the United States.

While we have been under the impression that that treaty was really one of French inspiration, in the book written by Mr. Jessup, who I believe is a student of international affairs and in close touch with the situation, it is clearly brought out that the original inspiration for the Briand peace pact came from the United States. That was done in a private way. What I am asking in this motion is that we should do in an open way what the United States did privately just about ten years ago.

I realize full well, along with the other members of this house, how strong the feeling is in the United States that they must have nothing whatever to do with European problems. I realize, too, that there is a strong feeling of a similar kind here in Canada. The people on this continent feel that we are so far removed from the source of European conflicts that we should remain neutral, and disregard what is taking place in Europe.

In the changed world in which we live neutrality has become a difficult problem. In that respect I have a good deal of sympathy with the position outlined in this chamber on Monday last by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I realize the difficulty which may arise at some future time in defining the meaning of neutrality. It would be almost impossible at the present time to define what neutrality might be in the event of a war in Europe. Neutrality, like justice and morality, changes under changing conditions. If Great Britain were to become involved in a European war, I doubt if Canada would or even could remain neutral. That is an opinion with which some of my hon. friends may disagree. I am well aware of the strong feelings existing in many parts of Canada against this country's participation in a European war. If war should break out, would we, for instance, refuse to supply Great Britain with the every-day essential needs of life? On the other hand, would not such supplies be regarded by an enemy state as goods delivered in violation of strict neutrality.

In a time of war would not each nation make its own definition of neutrality in the same way as Great Britain has done in the present Spanish crisis. I do not wish to dwell too long on this aspect of the subject; I have emphasized it only to point out that it would be far better to avoid such difficulties. My humble opinion is that the most effective way would be by securing and maintaining a lasting peace. Metaphorically speaking, the world is becoming a smaller unit. Space and distance which at one time kept nations far apart no longer operate. That which a generation ago was termed a long distance is regarded now as only a very short journey. We turn the switch of a radio and the voice of man can be heard instantaneously around the world. Because of these vast changes isolation becomes increasingly difficult; distance and space no longer isolate us.

It will be remembered that when, during the great war, the late President Wilson ran for election to the office of President of the United States, it was with the idea of keeping the United States out of the war. He received an overwhelming mandate, but within a short time the United States entered the war—the very thing he was pledged not to permit. Further, he had behind him the wholehearted support of the American people. We on the American continents can pride ourselves on the fact that we are free of many of the prejudices and difficulties which confront the people of the old world. We congratulate ourselves upon the fact that we live in peace and in a spirit of friendship with other nations. But as one cannot isolate war, neither can one isolate peace. It is because of this conviction that I am so anxious for the new world to give a lead to the old, and to try to secure peace among the nations.

When a great crisis overtakes us we are not always moved by logic; more often we are moved by our emotions. Who knows what the position of Canada, yes, and even that of the United States, would be in the event of another war breaking out in Europe? One cannot be unmindful of the great forces which have been at work in past years attempting to create peace sentiment throughout the world. Somehow or another they have not been able to overcome other influences which unfortunately have been more powerful than the influences for peace. I fully realize the lack of success which has attended many of the efforts of the peace organizations and conferences which have been called for peace purposes. There are some who may object to the calling of another conference; they may urge that under existing circumstances this would be futile. Yet may I point out that at the conclusion of another war in Europe there would still have to be a conference among the belligerent nations seeking to call a truce and to arrange another peace. Is it not far better and more sensible to attempt to hold another conference before a war takes place than to have a forced conference after such war has ended. That being so, which nation or individual is most likely to be able to call a world conference, with a hope of success. I can think only of the United States, with the president of that country convening such a world conference.

I realize the republic to the south of us has a strong feeling against taking a hand in European affairs. To a large extent we in this country share that feeling, but I believe the earnest desire and sentiment for peace on the American continent, and the realization of the advantages and blessings peace might bring about should outweigh any feelings such as I have described. We cannot confine peace to the American continent any more than we can confine war to Europe. As I have stated previously, peace, like war, cannot be isolated.

At this point I cannot help referring to the laudable efforts which have been made by the president of the United States to secure peace on the American continents. His recent visit to the South American republics was in itself a glowing demonstration of the attitude of the president and people of the United States, and of their desire to live together in a spirit of harmony, good will and common understanding. Irrespective of the attitudes of governments, I believe among the masses of the peoples in other parts of the world there is the same desire to live in a spirit of common understanding and mutual tolerance. I believe it would not be out of place at this time briefly to quote some of the statements made by the president of the United States on the occasion of his visit to the pan-American Peace conference at Buenos Aires, indicating his attitude toward world peace.

On November 28 last, speaking at Rio de Janeiro, among other things the president made the following statement:

The friendly nations of the Americas can render no greater service to civilization itself than by maintaining both domestic and international peace and by freeing themselves forever from conflict.

All of us have learned that no real, no lasting prosperity can exist where it is secured at the expense of our neighbours—that among nations, as in our domestic relations, the principle of interdependence is paramount.

No nation can live entirely to itself. Each one of us has learned the glories of independence. Let each one of us learn the glories of interdependence. Economically, we supply each other's needs; intellectually we maintain a constant, a growing exchange of culture, of science and of thought; spiritually, the life of each can well enrich the life of all.

Any step which serves to ensure permanence of peace in any part of the world is a contribution to the peace of the world. Cooperative effort towards this end cannot be too widely extended. Peace, like justice, has become the common concern of mankind. Civilization is a common inheritance, and a common possession. It can only be maintained by common endeavour.

I think all hon. members who have listened to those words will realize the strong desire that exists in the mind of the president of the United States for the security of world peace.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend quoting the president of the United States?

Mr. HEAPS: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that is what I said.

Mr. JACOBS: Great minds move in the same direction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will find he is quoting from a statement I gave out at the time.

Mr. HEAPS: That may be the case, but I think it is a pretty good statement to make and I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will live up to it by supporting the resolution I have just submitted to the house. However, I should like to quote from what the president of the United States did say at Buenos Aires. I think the statement of the Prime Minister and that of the President are on a par. I am fully in accord with what the Prime Minister said and I hope I have done him no injustice by crediting his remarks to the president of the United States. This is the statement made by the president of the United States on December 1:

But we cannot now, especially in view of our common purpose, accept any defeatist attitude. We have learned by hard experience that peace is not to be had for the mere asking, that peace, like other great privileges, can be obtained only by hard painstaking efforts. We are here to dedicate ourselves and our countries to that work.

You who assembled to-day carry with you in your deliberations the hopes of millions of human beings in other less fortunate lands. Beyond the ocean we see continents rent asunder by old hatreds and new fanaticism. We hear the demand that injustice and inequality be corrected by resorting to the sword and not by resorting to reason and peaceful justice. We hear the cry that new markets can be achieved only through conquest. We read that the sanctity of treaties between nations is disregarded.

In either case, even though the Americans become involved in no war, we must suffer too. The madness of a great war in other parts of the world would affect us and threaten our good in a hundred ways. And the economic collapse of any nation or nations must of necessity harm our prosperity.

Can we, the republics of the new world, help the old world to avert the catastrophe which impends? Yes, I am confident that we can.

In the face of this expressed declaration by the president of the United States—also by the Prime Minister of Canada—and the detached position which the United States has maintained during recent years, its aloofness in many respects from the strife of the older world, I feel there is no one more competent to convene a world conference than the president of the United States. I know there are some, even in this chamber, who will claim that we have had many conferences which have proven unsuccessful. In answer to that, I would point out that such conferences have been limited in their scope and have not been as all embracing as the one I am suggesting. My further opinion is that we cannot get the nations of the world together too often to discuss problems face to face. Ultimately such closer contact is bound to have beneficial results, even though in the beginning they may be rather slow and disappointing and devoid of immediate benefits. A frank discussion of differences is better than no discussion at all. In a world so torn by strife and jealousies as is this one to-day, we cannot expect to make progress in this direction too rapidly. But we can keep on persevering in the hope that some day those people who are indifferent to peace problems will adopt a more decided attitude in that direction.

The objection may be raised that we as an integral part of the British Empire and as a member of the League of Nations ought not to forsake these existing allegiances. I would point out that we are not forsaking either the League of Nations or Great Britain when we request a neighbouring state to intervene in the cause of peace. Is that not the real purpose of the league? The object to be reached is of far greater consequence than a technical objection of this kind. It is generally admitted that the League of Nations has failed. It is admitted also that the policy which Great Britain has adopted during the past few years has also been void of success. The policy of Great Britain seems still to follow the antiquated lines of years gone by. Eighty years ago Lord Palmerston, then Prime Minister of Great Britain, aptly described this policy in the following words, "Great Britain has no eternal friends, no eternal enmities, but only eternal interests." In a modern world diplomacy of this sort cannot possibly succeed. We have to stand by that which we consider right and just, irrespective of what interests may be involved.

The United States has made many significant gestures toward establishing and maintaining peaceful relations with other nations. In spite of the fact that there is such a strong sentiment opposed to intervening in old world affairs, we must bear in mind that even during past years the United States has taken an active part in European and international problems. I might point out that the Dawes plan came from the United States. The Young plan for reparations also came from the United States, and more important than either of these was the Kellogg-Briand peace pact. Although that pact has not proven successful in outlawing war as a means of settling international disputes, it certainly was a worthwhile effort. This is the tenth year of its inception, and it might be an appropriate time for the nations of the world again to gather together under the auspices of the nation responsible for its origin to see if another step cannot be taken to do away with war as a means of settling international problems.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but the hon. member's time has elapsed.

Mr. HEAPS: I am sorry if I have exceeded my time limit. The courtesy of additional time has often been given to other members and I had hoped you, sir, would do unto me just as you have done unto others.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, after the quotations which the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) has made from remarks of the president and of myself, and referred to by him with such approval, it will I think be clear at the outset that, so far as the president and I are concerned, our views as to the desirability of maintaining peace, and doing all that it may be possible to have done toward that end, are wholly in accord with his own. I have referred to only three personages, but I believe what I have just said would apply with equal truth to all hon. members of all parties in this parliament.

I sometimes think that we waste time when we endeavour to have it appear that any government of Canada, let alone members of parliament, are not desirous of doing everything possible to secure, to maintain and to further peace. That unquestionably is one of the objectives which we all have in common. We cannot all agree as to the methods by which peace can be best maintained, but the fact that we cannot accept every suggestion made as to what is desirable for the maintenance of peace does not and should not imply that we are not equally at one in desiring the great objective of securing, maintaining and furthering peace. In this regard I want to take exception to the view which so frequently has been put forward, and which was put forward by my hon. friend to-day, that any preparation in the nature of defence necessarily implies some love of war and desire to get into war on the part of those taking that necessary precaution. Nothing can be more fallacious than that; and, with the world condition as critical as it is to-day, I must respectfully say I do not think any member renders a useful service to his country when he seeks to create a false impression with respect to the purpose which defence is intended to serve. What is needed to-day on the part of the citizens of this country, as of all countries, is an understanding of the very serious nature of the world situation and of the very critical position in which this country along with all other countries may be placed at any moment. My hon. friend never said anything truer in his life than when he remarked that you can no more isolate war than you can isolate peace, and when this afternoon he stressed that there was a real danger of the situation which is critical in Europe extending to this country. I think we all have to keep that in mind. With what my hon. friend has said about the hideousness of war and about the folly of war as a means of settling anything I think every hon. member will agree. But, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the question of realizing that war is so horrible and yet, as my hon. friend has said, with the world situation what it is, war may be inevitable, we only see the necessity of taking some special precaution so far as our own country is concerned to meet that situation.

May I suggest to my hon. friend and to others who feel as he does about this matter a parallel which may help to bring home the true situation? None of us has any love of disease, none of us has any love of plague, yet disease and plagues are part of a condition that is real in the world and against which steps have to be taken by nations as well as individuals. Would my hon. friend suggest that we should do away with our Department of Health and with the measures we are taking, and which are costing a great deal, to prevent the spread of disease, to prevent plague from over-running the country? Money spent for purposes of that kind is spent for purposes of security, and it is exactly the same, if the expense is wisely made, with regard to necessary outlays for defence. May I suggest another parallel which, it seems to me, is very pertinent at the moment? We have all been witnessing with feelings of the deepest sympathy the tragedy to hundreds of thousands of lives in the United States as a result of floods. Those of us who happened to be listening last night to the radio heard instructions being given by engineers as to precautions which must be immediately taken in view of what may possibly be a still greater disaster, once the Mississippi begins to overflow its banks to a greater extent than it has up to the present. Would any one say that, with a warning of that kind coming from experts, the people along the shores of the Mississippi should do nothing? Rather should they not say, "Now is the time for the state to take immediate action to prevent some terrible harm coming to innocent persons as the result of a force of nature the possible extent of which had not been foreseen but which nevertheless is now known to be real and is approaching daily in a more menacing form"? After what my hon. friend has said this afternoon he cannot deny that there are forces at work in the world to-day which are dangerous in the extreme, and he cannot deny that those forces may operate against the shores of this country, or across this country, once a world conflict comes about, should such an appalling thing happen. In those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I say that instead of trying to persuade this house or persons beyond this house that this country should not take special measures for purposes of defence, my hon. friend should be doing all in his power to show wherein, unless we take precautionary measures, we are likely to suffer in a way from which we may never recover.

I think also there is something extraordinarily contradictory in what my hon. friend said this afternoon when he spoke about the League of Nations. He and those of his group who advocate that we should be members of the League of Nations say that the league must have force behind it if it is going to effect its ends. What does that mean? It is an expression we hear from different sources. I think the hon. member (Mr. Douglas) who sits behind my hon. friend used the expression the other day that he wanted "a league that had teeth in it," a league that would be able to do something. What does that mean? It means force. And yet many in my hon. friend's group, including the member to whom I referred, take the view that Canada should be neutral no matter who the belligerents may be. That is all very well; they would have a league that relies on force, but they are quite eager to see that other nations are the ones to supply the force and that we are to continue to enjoy security and to be kept entirely out of the situation.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Would there not be economic force.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Economic force! We have had enough experience to know that economic force sooner or later means military force. We had an object lesson of that last year. May I say to my hon. friend who has just interrupted me that if he and I could control world forces there might not be trouble for anybody, because we know exactly what we would do; but surely we must all realize that forces which are not only beyond the control of individuals, but beyond the control of nations and of continents, are operating in the world to-day. The condition in Europe is not the result of a desire for war on the part of any English speaking community. It is not the result of any such desire on the part of the French republic or on the part of many other nations that I could mention. We have yet to discover that it is the desire of any nation. But the danger is there and we know that we are facing it. In those circumstances let us not begin to tell other countries what they should do until we tell them what we ourselves are prepared to do in helping to meet the emergency. When it comes to the League of Nations and its reliance upon force as the means of attaining its ends, we get right into the very situation from which my hon. friend who has moved this resolution would like to take us away altogether. Force begets force. If we are to rely for peace upon force, let us squarely face the situation and realize that we as well as other nations must be prepared to make our contribution in terms of force.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to enter to-day into a discussion of League of Nations affairs, nor do I wish to go over ground that was traversed in a previous debate. My purpose in rising this afternoon thus early in the debate is simply to point out that the specific suggestion which is made in my hon. friend's resolution constitutes the one thing about it which the government is called upon to consider. The substantive portion of the resolution reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government of Canada respectfully suggest to the president of the United States the desirability of convening a world conference for the securing and maintenance of peace.

In other words, this country is to suggest to the United States the calling of a world conference to secure and maintain peace. Now, irrespective altogether of what views we may entertain as to the effectiveness of a world conference to achieve the end in view, it must be apparent that there are great considerations of national policy that must be taken into account by any country that would enter at this time upon the calling of a world conference for such a purpose, and those considerations, it seems to me, are a matter for consideration by that country alone. It is not the business of one country to tell another what its policy should be. I think that must be apparent. It is inconceivable that the president of the United States, with the interest he has taken in world affairs, with the concern he has already shown for the maintenance of peace, has not had under his own consideration and that of his colleagues the very question my hon. friend has suggested. But whether he has or has not, that is his own affair. For us to suggest that a conference should be called would be simply to embarrass the president in the reply which it would be necessary for him to make. At most he could say that the subject was one to which he would be glad to give consideration. I am not sure that if he were considering the matter favourably a suggestion to the United States from another country would help him to attain the object he had in view.

Let me say a word with regard to world conferences. I am not sure that a world conference would achieve any good end at the present time and it might make things a great deal worse. It seems to me, our generation has gone a little mad on the question of conferences. A conference is often a very convenient way of appearing to be doing something while in reality very little may be achieved. The more I see of conferences the less patience I am coming to have with them. Certainly world conferences are not likely to be very successful in achieving the object they may be called together to attain. We have had several world conferences and I do not believe that any of them have been very successful.

But in a consideration of the calling of a world conference there are many important matters of policy which a government would have to take into account, and I mention these because they are involved in the question whether this country should ask the United States to take the step proposed. There is the matter I have already referred to, namely, the question whether in the belief of the government a world conference is likely to achieve the end for which it is called, or whether that end could not better be achieved by conferences with individual nations, taking up questions with individual nations or groups of nations primarily concerned in the matters under discussion, rather than by bringing into a discussion a large number of nations which can have only an indirect interest and whose participation might only serve to embarrass the entire situation.

But there is the further point as to whether the time is ripe for a world conference such as has been suggested. There is for example the question as to whether other nations would be prepared to go into such a world conference. That is an all important matter, and before any country would take a step as momentous as that of calling a world conference, I should think it would find it necessary to ascertain from other countries whether they would be willing to participate. If a world conference were likely to meet the end my hon. friend has in view I should be inclined to think that the League of Nations might be expected to operate more effectively to that end than some new conference which might be called, for the simple reason that the league has at hand much of the machinery necessary for such a purpose. It has already given long attention to matters that are pertinent, and if the league has found it impossible, with all its background and with all that it has in the way of actual knowledge of conditions, with experts to advise in a multitude of directions, then I question very much whether the president of the United States, beginning anew, would be able to accomplish much in the direction desired. If Germany, Japan and other countries do not wish to be in a league of nations which represents all the countries of the world, is it probable that they would immediately participate in a conference called by the president of the United States. And unless they participated in such a conference, does my hon.

friend believe that the conference would meet the present-day situation? One has only to mention these things to appreciate some of the considerations which a country must take into account in dealing with a suggestion of this sort.

I would like to mention to the house what actually was apparent to the minds of those who were at the meeting of the League of Nations last year. There the view seemed to be that the fewer the nations that got into discussions of the present world situation at that moment the better it would probably be in the end, so far as the solution of existing difficulties was concerned. What the British and the French representatives at the League of Nations were most anxious to bring about was a conference of the big powers in Europe, the powers immediately concerned. They felt that if Germany, Italy, France, Britain and Belgium could get together in a round table conference it might be possible to work out some solution of the existing difficulties. Great Britain has been working to that end for a year or more, but she has not yet succeeded in bringing those nations together in round table conference. When that is the fact, is it likely that these same powers would go into a world conference that might be called by the president of the United States? These are considerations of which a government has to take account before it accepts the responsibility of extending an invitation to another country to take action with respect to world affairs, consideration of which would have to be taken as well by the government to which the invitation was extended.

I am sympathetic with much my hon. friend has said, but his motion asks that an invitation be extended. It would have to be extended by the government of Canada. Were we to take this course suggested, I believe we would be departing from a principle which cannot be too closely observed, the principle, namely, that it is not in the interest of nations that any one country should tell other nations what they should do in matters involving great questions of national policy. An act of that kind on the part of this government would be certain to be construed as an interference in the domestic affairs of the United States, and I am sure that my hon. friend would be the last who would wish to have such an impression created.

An answer that might suggest itself to the minds of some in the United States who might be opposed would probably be that as an imperial conference is to be held in Britain within the next few months it might be well for Canada to suggest that the scope of the conference be enlarged to embrace a world gathering to deal with the world situation. Does any one suppose that if a suggestion of this kind came to this parliament we should think of passing it on to the British government? The sooner we realize that there is no panacea for world peace, and that perhaps the last of all panaceas is a world conference, the better it will be in the end for the peace of the world.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Grey-Bruce): I am glad that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) placed this resolution on the order paper, if for no other reason than that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has admitted that he has lost his confidence in conferences. So far as I can recall, in the last half-dozen or possibly ten years he has had a great deal of confidence in conferences—I am speaking of conferences with respect to national affairs—and has always been able to delay action by painting a gloomy picture of what would happen if anything were done without a conference. I was wondering who it was to whom he was directing the first part of his speech. It was a tirade, but I did not know against whom he directed it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North certainly had not said anything that would call for the first part of the Prime Minister's speech, and therefore it must have been somebody else he had in mind when he made the remarks he did. I do not think that suggesting to the United States that they call a conference would be interfering in their national affairs, any more than I think that if they had extended an invitation to Canada to attend the Buenos Aires conference that would have been interfering in Canada's national affairs.

A world conference as proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North would have one great merit; it would take the heads of the nations of Europe out of Europe and bring them to a continent which is in some degree sane. One fault with all the world conferences is that they were held in the wrong place. We should stop having conferences about world affairs in Europe. Europe has played much too large a part in determining world affairs, and if the heads of the European powers had to travel across the ocean as often as they want other people to travel across it to attend their conferences they might realize how wide that ocean is, which would be one thing gained. If the conference were called it might not accomplish much, but merely bringing the European leaders out of Europe might do some good. Then there is always the chance of the boat sinking, and that might help more than anything else. It would be a nice quiet way of getting rid of a lot of trouble. Certainly extending an imperial conference to include world powers would not start a world conference off well, because it would be too much an imperial affair from the beginning.

At least the introduction of this resolution cannot have done any harm. The speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North was good, and was beneficial to the house. The debate at any rate will suggest the idea to President Roosevelt, even though he may not care to act on it.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It is not often that I wholly agree with the observations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), but in this instance he so nearly expressed my own views that I shall make my observations exceedingly brief.

It would not only be futile to suggest to the United States the calling of a world conference, but in my judgment it would be —I shall use the harsher word, although the Prime Minister did not—impertinent to do so. I cannot think it would be anything short of that for the Dominion of Canada to suggest to the president of the United States what he should do. He has advisers; he has knowledge of world conditions; he is as deeply concerned in every matter with which this resolution deals as we are, and for eleven million people on the northern half of the American continent to suggest to the head of a state of one hundred and twenty million people that he should do something affecting world problems is in my judgment little short of impertinence.

As far as the next question is concerned I can only say that I would hardly agree with the mover of this resolution (Mr. Heaps) that the United States is at this moment exactly the country to call such a conference. The United States at the present time is spending larger sums on armaments, has to that end made commitments of more hundreds of millions of dollars, than ever before in its long history, and that notwithstanding the Kellogg-Briand pact. This is a fact which must be faced.

I can readily understand my right hon. friend making the observations he did with respect to conferences. He, like myself, had very great hopes of the Kellogg-Briand pact, but we know it was a broken reed—let us face it frankly. We all had hopes of the League of Nations. It failed because the United States ceased to be a member of it, although its former president called the first assembly. There never was an effective league of nations when the United States ceased to be a party to it. This is the real fact; let us face it squarely.

Then there is one other matter to which attention should be directed. When the right hon. gentleman was speaking about his faith in conferences he was only saying what is being said by statesmen in many parts of the world. I heard one of the most responsible British statesmen say that he felt it was useless for Great Britain to take part in further world conferences or conferences respecting matters such as are suggested should be dealt with by this resolution. I have not forgotten that a great world economic conference was called in 1933. I know one man, two men, three, who were urged by the president of the United States to expedite in every possible way the work of that conference, yet the conference had hardly met and organized before the president of the United States torpedoed it, for reasons which have never yet been made public. In his judgment conditions in the world were such that it was necessary for him to take the action he did.

I did not understand the right hon. gentleman to suggest that family conferences may not be of the greatest value. By family conferences we mean, in Canada, conferences between the provinces and the dominion, or conferences of the nations comprised in the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The disarmament conference was not a great success.

Mr BENNETT: I was going to mention that. The Washington conference on naval armaments did accomplish something, but who will say that the results were at all commensurate with our hopes and expectations? Then my friend the Minister of Justice mentioned the disarmament conference. This house knows, what he was good enough to suggest, that all the world was hopeful that all the world would proceed to disarm. But alas! see what the effect was upon the people of the little islands in the North sea that we call the British isles. Their idealism was such that under the then prime minister they endeavoured to give effect to it—indeed, did give effect to it, in a manner and to an extent unequalled by any people who ever attempted to give effect to a principle.

Mr. REID: And nearly ruined themselves.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; and to-day with feverish activity they are endeavouring to retrieve their position.

As the Prime Minister was thinking aloud this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I think he was giving expression to views which many of us hold. We all desire to attain an end, and we would all willingly make any sacrifice we could to attain it. But alas! we realize that any efforts that have been made thus far to induce all mankind to follow a course to attain that end have been fraught with disappointment. Not that I do not firmly believe that they have served a useful purpose; for the mere fact that nations have met together and discussed their problems and gained an insight into one another's difficulties, has been of the utmost value to the world. But when an hon. member suggests that Europe after all is rather insignificant in matters of this kind, we must not forget that thus far the great nations of the world which have been effective in foreign matters have been those of Europe and Asia. America has a declared policy to play no part in what she calls entangling alliances with Europe. Her freedom from responsibility with respect to European affairs and her unwillingness to participate in world movements that have for their purpose the accomplishment of the ends to which this resolution refers have had an injurious effect upon the general state of public opinion with respect to the influence of the western world upon world problems. I say that reluctantly; nevertheless it is a fact and we may as well face it.

Is any good purpose to be served by suggesting that this government, which is the people of Canada, should advise the chief executive of one hundred and twenty million people that the proper thing for them to do is to call a world conference looking to the ends of peace, when they are engaged more feverishly than ever before in their history in arming themselves, and have on many occasions declared that they have no desire to involve themselves in either responsibility or concern with respect to direct participation in world affairs? I cannot but think that the mere suggestion itself carries its own refutation, and it would be regarded as little short of impertinence by any thoughtful people. I make these observations in no spirit of criticism of the people of the United States. It is their right to do as they please, and their president reflects their views. It would be impertinent for us to tell them how to run their business, and we would regard it as highly impertinent for them to tell us how to run ours. I think that with their good sense and their extreme concern for their own well-being they will discharge their duties and functions in a manner that will not be unworthy of their history and traditions. This country would not be advancing the cause of peace or its own interests by undertaking to tell other countries how they should conduct their business, especially when we have so much of our own to attend to, the proper conducting of which merits the united effort of all of us.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, if the motion before the chair represents the best policy that the members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation can produce in this house, it amounts to nothing more or less than separatism. As I see it, the time has come when this house should look after our own domestic affairs and leave international affairs to experts, and we have very few of them in this house or out of it. Do the members of the party who introduced this resolution propose to have Canada become an adjunct of the United States in matters of foreign policy and defence? We see in this very resolution the extreme to which separatism has gone in this country since it was started a few years ago. Separatism in all its forms—that is what the motion amounts to. We, Mr. Speaker, are part and parcel of the British Empire; our foreign policy is largely defined by the motherland, yet this resolution ignores altogether the motherland and the other dominions and proposes to go to the United States looking for peace, when there is no such thing to be obtained from any league of nations. A few years ago it was Woodrow Wilson who started this League of Nations. We have now had seventeen years of peace pacts and peace agreements on four continents, and the net result of the policy of open diplomacy which Woodrow Wilson preached has been absolute failure.

This resolution, as I see it, would have us go to the United States and ask them to found a sort of new league of nations to create peace. As was said by a very great statesman, no one wants war, and in not dissimilar circumstances on the eve of the Crimean war, Stratford Canning wrote:

> The extreme desire for peace, if care be not taken, may bring on the danger of war.

And it did bring about the Crimean war. This resolution is not only separatism, but it is a pan-American resolution and ignores the fact that Canada is part and parcel of the British Empire. We have practically no defence policy of our own. I asked five or six times in this house last session what the defence policy of Canada was, and I got no answer

To-day we are dependent on the mother country for our defence on land and sea and in the air, and when resolutions such as this are introduced into parliament it is no wonder that some of the leading statesmen in the old land ask themselves if the dominions are not becoming a drag on the mother country. That is what they are becoming—a drag on the motherland.

Within the past few years we have had about a hundred peace pacts. We had a conference in Washington, and then we had the Kellogg pact, and while Secretary Kellogg was preaching peace from the housetops in one portion of the capital, the Secretary of State for War brought down a budget of several hundred million dollars for defence. That is the kind of peace policy they have over there. I say the principle of this resolution is separatism, and you can see to-day the results of separatism on the peace of the world. If we could have some respite from peace pacts for the next ten years we might possibly attain peace in the world.

In 1919 Canada signed the treaty of Versailles as a separate nation, and then a separate seat for Canada was demanded and secured at the Assembly of the League of Nations. In March, 1923, the Halibut treaty was signed at Washington by Canada as a separate nation. The imperial conference of 1923 affirmed the right of Canada to sign separate treaties. In 1924 Canada acted separately on the Dawes plan, and in that year Canada urged that the Colonial Laws Validity Act be repealed. In 1926 there was another imperial conference and the right was affirmed of each dominion to make separate and independent treaties not binding on any other country. We were given sovereign powers, and we saw the results in the Kellogg note. Separatism has gone far enough in this country. Some would abolish appeals to the privy council; others would abolish the office of lieutenant governor. Many innovations have been made during the last few years, with the result that we have nothing but a policy of separatism in this country, and this resolution, Mr. Speaker, practically says that Canada is a separate country from the mother country, like Spain or Ireland. We are bound to the mother country by ties of loyalty and affection. The governor general is also now merely a viceroy and removed from getting any advice from Downing Street.

Furthermore, the policy of the United States with regard to European affairs has already been laid down. It is against the constitution of the United States to take any part in European wars, and the senate foreign relations committee have control. The policy of their administration is non-intervention in European affairs, and if parliament passed a resolution such as this, she would simply make a laughing stock of herself in the eyes of the other dominions and of the mother country. Separatism in this country and in the other dominions is one of the things that makes it almost impossible for the motherland to have a foreign policy. As an eminent writer says in the English Review of August, 1936:

> One of the chief weaknesses of the empire to-day is the uncertainty as to the line it will take as a unit. A few years ago the prime minister of a European power said to me, "The difficulty of dealing with your country is that one never knows where the rest of your empire stands. The signature of the French Foreign Minister is binding on all the territory of France, at home and overseas; but the British Foreign Secretary cannot commit the dominions." That is perfectly true, and it is a truth that must be faced by those who greet every advance of the centrifugal forces as a step forward.

It was that state of affairs that was responsible for the Statute of Westminster. The same writer also says of South Africa, after mentioning that the representatives of the empire were not unanimous on sanctions:

> Whether the time has come to modify the statute is another matter, but in the meantime the line taken by South Africa with regard to sanctions is a warning to the government not to enter into commitments which may lead to a war in which the dominions might refuse to participate.

So we see where the policy of separatism has landed the empire.

I do not wish to speak with disrespect of the motion which the hon. member (Mr. Heaps) has introduced. No doubt he is sincere in the observations he has made. The present president of the United States has always been a friend of Canada, but for us to depend on the American people for our protection on land, on sea and in the air is another thing. I am utterly opposed to the doctrine of pan-Americanism, of which we hear so much talk in the house; I am opposed to a policy of separatism, or to one whereby we must depend on the Monroe doctrine, or any other mythical doctrine which would not affect the British Empire in time of war, or protect anyone.

There are people in Canada who believe in a policy by which we would be more closely connected with the United States. Great Britain stands before God to-day as the trustee for the peace of the world. We have more to expect from her than from any other nation. We have seen the results of peace pacts and disarmament. I say that disarmament has brought the mother country to the very brink of war in the Mediterranean. As many statesmen have said in the British House of Commons, England to-day is no longer a first class power. The disarmament policy nearly dismembered and disrupted the whole empire.

There are some in Canada who believe in the policy enunciated in the resolution. The League of Nations has been a complete failure. When we realize the way it has functioned in the last few years we must know that we can expect nothing from it so far as the securing of peace is concerned. In my opinion Canada should get out of the league altogether while the going is good, if we wish to support this kind of endeavour. We have spent about $3,000,000 on it, and it brought us to the verge of war in connection with sanctions in Italy, its dealings with Spain, and its treatment of other crises.

In an able article entitled "Whither England," by Douglas Jerrold, appearing in the English Review of July 1936, he states:

> France we have driven deliberately out of the orbit of our diplomacy into the arms of Russia.

In the article Mr. Jerrold shows what peace conferences have amounted to. We have had about a hundred of them, and now another is proposed. Mr. Jerrold continues:

> Italy we have challenged, with results wholly disastrous. To Japan we have delivered moral lectures. The Norwegians, for so long our most sincere friends in Europe, we have deeply offended by our sanctionist policy. The United States see in our shameful diplomatic defeat not a quixotic gesture in favour of the sanctity of written obligations (the only written obligation which concerns America we have repudiated), but a justification of their own policy of non-intervention in Europe.

In a few months, owing to her policy of entering into peace pacts, England lost her position of a first-class power. The ink is hardly dry on these pacts before the bargains are broken by the very nations who were signatories to them. And other side agreements behind the scenes are made secretly, the results of which would offset the terms of the original pacts.

In view of the resolution before us we may well ask: whither Canada? If the policy outlined by the mover of the resolution is to be that of Canada, then the sooner we get out of the British Empire the better. It seems to me that those in church and state who hold the views of pacifists are, unwittingly or unwillingly, doing Canada a disservice. Pacifism means a refusal to defend or protect our king or country.

Pacifism means neglecting our duty to other countries dependent upon us, and, as I say, those who preach it are unknowingly doing their country a disservice. In the past few years we have seen the result of peace folly, and, as I see it, it is the duty of government to-day to bring down a proper defence policy for Canada. We talk about the few extra dollars provided in the estimates this year for a defence policy—why, that is no defence policy at all. We receive protection from the British fleet, which protects Canada's shores. The mover of the resolution would appeal to the United States, a country which could transport hardly a single soldier to France without the protection of the British fleet. Despite the non-intervention policy of the United States, in the late war what happened? That very country, upon which we are asked to depend, had to depend upon the British fleet during the whole war period for the defence of her shores, and yet we are asked to accept them as our protector in case of future trouble.

There are some in Canada who believe that in the event of war a general election should be called. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) indicated a few nights ago that within fifteen days parliament would be called, and that a resolution would have to be passed by the House of Commons before one soldier could be sent out of Canada. Did anyone ever hear of such a policy? No doubt the next war will be fought in the air, and before we can call parliament things will be happening. Within a few hours aeroplanes travelling two hundred and fifty miles an hour will be coming towards us. They would be in the country before a general election could be called, or before we could get the ballot boxes ready. The day will never come when Mr. General Election will become commander in chief of the British forces or admiral of the British fleet. Before we could act, the air fleet of the enemy would have passed over Canada and within five or six hours would have destroyed all municipal institutions, barracks, canals, railway terminals, public utilities and parliament buildings, and injured civilian non-combatants. After doing this they could return to their base within a few hours without damage to themselves.

For fifteen or sixteen years pacifists have had their way with peace pacts and peace folly. We now see the lack of wisdom in failure to evolve a defence policy. To-day Europe is an armed camp. Against whom is Germany arming? Is she arming against Great Britain? France is arming; Italy is arming—they are all in the same position.

We see evidence of an absolute failure of the policy preached from the housetops seventeen years ago by Mr. Woodrow Wilson; we see evidence of the utter folly of his recommendations. The house would be unwise to pass the resolution proposed by the hon. member. As a matter of fact, in view of the Statute of Westminster I believe the resolution is out of order. Moreover, it does not commend itself to the wisdom or judgment of the people of Canada.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I rose before to say a few words of appreciation of the very excellent address delivered this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), but my leader, the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has expressed more felicitously than I could have done the views which I entertain.

May I add one word in regard to a suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) to the effect that Canada should enter the so-called pan-American conference and take part as a member in that conference. After living seven or eight years in Mexico I believe I know something about it, something about the central American states, something about the states of South America, something about Haiti, and something about Cuba, all of which I have visited, and I am convinced that one of the most unfortunate political manoeuvres which could be adopted by the government of Canada would be to enter as a participating member in any pan-American conference or union. We to the north of the United States have few interests in common with those states. By uniting with them in a union we would add nothing to our economic and very little to our intellectual or cultural strength. I am convinced that the idea suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North should be deprecated.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think I said that we should join with them; I was just referring to some remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe).

Mr. CAHAN: The record will show. I understood the hon. member to suggest to the Prime Minister that he had made answer on another occasion that Canada had not been invited to participate in that conference. I understood the hon. member for Winnipeg North to deprecate that statement being made, and to suggest that, if an invitation had been given, he would have been quite in favour of Canada accepting.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. HEAPS: I do not say that I would have been favourable.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not wish to take up the time of the house, except to add that if there comes a time when Canada is invited to become a member of a pan-American union or association, I trust the Prime Minister will not accept any such membership or will not send any representatives to such a conference until parliament has had an opportunity to discuss the various phases of the matter. To-day a Canadian can go to Mexico, to Central America, to South America, even to Haiti or Santo Domingo or Cuba under a Canadian passport. He is received with respect in every one of these states. The people in those countries have no feeling that Canada is a hostile neighbour. They have no suspicion that Canada is attempting to assert suzerainty or sovereignty in any degree over their political policies or their political future.

I suggest with great deference that our entering into such a union would provoke difficulty and embarrassment for any government of Canada. I do not wish to go into the matter in too great detail, but I ask hon. members to look at the map of South America and study its geographical situation. The fact is that South America is further away from us than the European states. Mexico, Central America and the Pacific coast of South America were undoubtedly settled originally by aborigines who came from over the Pacific. There were great Indian races that settled in Mexico, Central and South America, such as it then was, they developed civilizations of their own. They never succeeded in migrating in great numbers across the Andes to the Atlantic coast. We find Indian tribes settling around the south in Patagonia; and the same migration taking place in the northern part of the South American continent, but the whole wide sweep of the Atlantic coast had practically no indigenous population and was left open to settlement by European immigrants.

The Spanish came to Uruguay, or rather into the district which subsequently became Uruguay, and they came into the states which were united into Argentina. There they developed a Spanish civilization and a Spanish culture with no large admixture of indigenous races or of Indian blood. In cities like Montevideo or Buenos Aires you find a Spanish civilization. The labouring classes are mostly Italian, but you realize you are among white people. When you talk to them you realize that they have a civilization and a culture which are most admirable. But the situation is different in Brazil. The Portuguese settled that magnificent territory of theirs with negro slaves. They brought them in by the tens of thousands, and the present population is largely an ad-mixture of negro races, dominated by the Portuguese. To the north there is Venezuela. Any one who has been to Caracas will have seen an old-fashioned Spanish-American city. The dominating race is Spanish, but the great majority of the population is Indian. Colombia is a great Indian state. There is a Spanish civilization and culture in Bogota, the capital, but the population of that state is made up of Indian races. Bolivia and Paraguay are populated largely with Indian races, many of whom still live in a savage state. Peru is Indian, but Chili is not. The Spaniards who early settled in Chili wiped out the Indian races and the present population is almost pure Spanish. But there is not one democratic state among them all. They are ruled largely by military dictatorships which are changed from time to time by force of arms in times of insurrections. They look upon Canadian conditions with admiration.

If I may be permitted, I should like to relate an incident which occurred in Mexico some years ago. I knew President Diaz of Mexico quite well. One day he came out with me to see a great Canadian work that was being carried on in the valley of the Necaxa river. At that time we were building one of the largest dams in the world to develop a water fall eight times the height of Niagara. If I remember correctly, the drop in the pipes was 1,356 feet. After lunch President Diaz came out on to the verandah of a cottage on the mountain side smoking his cigarette. He laid his revolver down on a little square table in front of him just in case some trouble might arise. He looked with great astonishment at the trains running up and down the valley below carrying materials for this great dam and hydro-electro power installation. There were thousands of men at work throughout the valley. He expressed appreciation and admiration of the work. He turned to me and said, "Signor Cahan, I do like you Canadians." Rather taken aback, I asked, "Why, Your Excellency?" He puffed his cigarette for a moment or two and then he replied, "You Canadians live north of the forty-ninth parallel of latitude and we Mexicans live south of the Rio Grande. That fact alone should make for the eternal friendship of the two peoples." Thirty years ago that same feeling prevailed to my knowledge in many, if not all, of the states of Central and South America. Conditions have since undoubtedly changed as the United States have become more powerful, both economically and politically, yet despite repeated South American conferences I believe that feeling still exists in every state south of the Rio Grande.

Why should we enter hastily and without due consideration into that association of embroilment and, for us, continuous embarrassment? I trust that before this or any other government of Canada enters into the pan-American union, it will take all existing conditions into consideration and will remember that by the members of that union the Canadian government and the Canadian people are now respected and esteemed; participating in that union they would simply become embroiled in strife and difficulty. I wished to say this in reply to my hon. friend because I have heard much of late on some public platforms and read in the public press suggestions that it is the duty of Canada to assume, what the Americans are trying to escape, a sort of supervision over the political affairs of some of the so-called Latin-American states, which are not Latin, and which are American simply because that name has been given not only to North America and Central America but also to the continent of South America.

Mr. P. J. ROWE (Athabaska): I believe it was the thought in the mind of the mover of this resolution that, as the representative of a large group of people in the city of Winnipeg who always pay more of the price of war than those in whom, under our present arrangements, power and privilege are vested, he should articulate the desire for peace that is in the hearts of his constituents. Notwithstanding the attitude which has been adopted by the prime minister, perhaps technically and in a legal sense, that such a resolution may infringe upon some code or rule or custom, I am very glad, as the representative of a large body of people who owe their racial origins to an older world, to support this motion. I cannot see, from that point of view, what is wrong with the idea of calling a conference. I have in mind that there would be invited to it leaders in education, statecraft, engineering and industrial life to canvass and discuss the causes of war. It has been suggested that floods are due possibly to some supernatural intervention or to some power beyond our control. I do not wish to be irreverent, but I suggest that in the case of the Mississippi flood, and in the case of war, the causes are definitely man-made. I do not believe that war, any more than smallpox, is inevitable; it has a definitely ascertainable cause, and I propose to discuss for a few minutes what I believe that cause to be.

First, far from not wanting to have discussions or conferences, I believe that if we had had a few more conferences before the great war there would not have been any war. I have in my hand a document released by Senator Nye, arising out of the investigation a year ago of the activities of armament firms in the United States. I quote a cablegram sent by Walter Hines Page to Woodrow Wilson on March 5, 1917, from London, England:

England cannot continue her present large purchases in the United States without shipments of gold to pay for them, and she cannot maintain large shipments of gold. . . . The almost immediate danger, therefore, is that Franco-American and Anglo-American exchange will be so disturbed that orders by all the allied governments will be reduced to the lowest minimum and there will be almost a cessation of trans-Atlantic trade. This will, of course, cause a panic in the United States. . . . If we should go to war with Germany . . . all the money would be kept in our country, trade would be continued and enlarged until the war ends, and after the war Europe would continue to buy food and would buy from us also an enormous supply of things to re-equip her peace industries. We should thus reap the profit of an uninterrupted, perhaps an enlarging trade, over a number of years, and we should hold their securities in payment. . . . Perhaps our going to war is the only way in which our present preeminent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted.

I suggest that those people who were told that the American nation went into the war for idealistic reasons should consider that. According to President Wilson, speaking in St. Louis a few days before he died:

The seeds of war are sown in hot successful commercial rivalry.

He added:

Is there a man or woman or child in this audience who does not know that?

When he made that statement he had in his desk the telegram I have read, which disclosed beyond question that the reason America went into that war was for profits.

I desire also to place on record an excerpt from an article in the London Daily Herald of February 6, 1936. It is entitled "How foreign loans affect foreign policy. It pays to borrow from Great Britain." This is written by Francis Williams, then city editor of the Daily Herald. I quote:

It is one of the tragic ironies of present international politics that the Nazi government is now actively criticizing the armament program of the British cabinet, and will presumably make the coming expenditure on arms in this country an excuse for continuing and further extending its own already huge preparations for war.

In precisely the same way, of course, our own government is using German rearmament as the main reason for the huge "defence" schemes which it is now drawing up with such an air of righteous mystery.

What is not unfortunately so widely realized is that German rearmament has to no small extent been made easier by the actions of international banking interests in the city and with the approval of members of the cabinet itself.

Germany has been greatly facilitated in the financing of her armament program by the non-payment of foreign debts, for money which should have gone in redemption and interest payments on those debts has been used for the purchase abroad of the raw materials her armament industry so urgently needs.

In view of the likelihood of another renewal in the near future of the Standstill agreement which did so much to make such a state of affairs possible, an examination of the whole question of the influence of the "foreign policy" of the city on the decisions of the government of the day is of considerable interest.

It has long been recognized, of course, that the protection of this country's foreign investments has been one of the guiding principles of British foreign policy for many years; but how that principle has operated in present-day international affairs is not so generally realized. Yet it is, for instance, not perhaps a pure coincidence that the one fascist country to which the "national" government has permitted itself to show any sort of hostility is the one in which British investments are almost negligible—Italy.

Thus, while in the list of foreign stocks and bonds officially quoted in London very considerable amounts are shown as outstanding to British creditors in the cases of Germany, Austria, and other countries, the total Italian government debt here is little more than £2,000,000.

Compare this figure with the £42,000,000 which Germany owes to long-term investors in this country to-day, plus the £70,000,000 which was outstanding on short-term credits at the time of the crisis in 1931—or the £15,000,000 outstanding in the name of fascist Austria—and it is not difficult to see why official circles in this country have frequently shown so remarkably sympathetic an attitude to the dictatorships of these two countries, which, though anti-democratic, have the great virtue in the City's eyes that they recognize in principle, even if not always fully in practice, the rights of foreign moneylenders to their interest payments.

In the case of Germany, of course, there are additional reasons for the notably sympathetic attitude of the City, and particularly of the Bank of England. That attitude is one of the consequences of the recklessness of those international banking and acceptance houses in the City, which lent heavily on short-term to Germany at high rates of interest, or guaranteed very large amounts of German bills, only to find that Germany could not pay or meet her bills.

I shall not take the time to comment on this. I pass on to a brief discussion of the resolution and the possibilities attainable, in my judgment, from the calling together of the peoples of the world. I would suggest that if such a conference were called the armament racketeers and their agents and friends should be asked to stay outside. Unfortunately many of these disarmament conferences have been attended and influenced by people directly interested in the profits accruing from the manufacture of arms. I intend to deal with that more particularly in a minute.

We are faced with the necessity of a new and better beginning in world affairs. It seems to me necessary to challenge the fatalism which darkens the world with the shadows of cynicism and doubt, but we must also point a new way of hope to mankind. Believing as I do in the equal worth of all peoples and races, the common blood and destiny of mankind, the essential unity of humanity, I suggest that our quest for peace in the world should be directed to express this oneness. The choice lies between the forces of blood and death and conquest, or destructive combatancy, on the one hand, and redemption and healing, or constructive cooperation, on the other. I choose cooperation and reject combatancy.

A world organization is necessary to federate and guide the normal healthful activities of men, their peace-making, their welfare-building, their advance in knowledge and its wise use, and in general, for progress in the science of civilization, which I shall define as the art of living together comfortably in large numbers.

If we were to judge the League of Nations solely on the basis of its two most tragic failures, Ethiopia in 1936, and Manchuria in 1932-33, we would do it a grave injustice. Let us rather look over its activities from 1920 to 1936, weighing its successes as well as its failures, both political and social, in order to achieve a just balance. Beginning first with the failures, we have disarmament—the undertakings of the victors in the great war to disarm were dishonoured. The world disarmament conference lies stranded. The most colossal armaments race in history is now on—fifteen billions spent last year, at the awful cost of poverty, deprivation, malnutrition and tragically reduced living standards in Europe, as against an expenditure of four billions in 1913. The fear of war again burdens the world. Economic conflicts have multiplied. Hostile tariffs fetter world trade. Currencies are unstable. Nations are unable to buy goods which they need. Economic nationalism is rampant. Japan has dispossessed China of vast territories, and Italy has taken Ethiopia, a fellow member of the league. The cause of this weakness is that the league was founded on a self-contradictory basis. It was built in part on fear, in part on fellowship, in part on belief in armed force, in part on a hope of future tranquillity. It should never be forgotten that the league arose out of the false peace of 1919. Think for a moment of the statesmen of Versailles. It was they who moulded the league to express their ideas, half charged with retaliation, half charged with hope for a better world.

Certainly in the mind of Woodrow Wilson, and doubtless to a greater or less extent in the minds of Lloyd George, Nitti, and Clemenceau, the league was envisioned as a medium through which to express the moral voice of the nations of the world. But because these men either would not or could not face cold realities, and speak the plain truth, we had before us there, the old, old story, repeated so many times in the last ten thousand years of mankind's tribal warfare, of the victors, aided by their tribal deities, who are usually on the side of the heaviest artillery, standing over the body of a prostrate foe, dictating under duress and force, at the point of a sword held at the throat of the vanquished, a treaty so full of injustices and economic contradictions that not only could it not live out a full year, but it literally sowed the dragon's teeth which have sprung up in nazi-ism, fascism, and war, finally bringing the world again to the brink of another deluge of blood.

However, we must look at the other side for a moment, and this picture is a little brighter. Over fifty disputes between nations have been dealt with successfully, often by arbitration, so averting or stopping war. The permanent court of international justice has been created. Legal judgments, advisory opinions, and orders, handed down by the courts, have steadily extended the range of international law and practice. The league maintains the international labour organization whose activities beneficially influence industrial legislation and practice all over the world. The league organization labours to prevent the spread of epidemics, and to advance medical research, work for war refugees, racial minorities, child welfare, and against dangerous drugs and the white slave traffic. I direct attention to articles 12 to 15, 22, 23 and 24, which cover the services mentioned—these could be correctly described as "constructively cooperative." They point the way to authentic progress.

While I agree with the wording of the resolution, that the League of Nations has not so far succeeded in establishing conditions conducive to a permanent and lasting peace, I suggest that we must build with the material we have, and I am merely undertaking a survey, in order to indicate a possible way forward. I am convinced that this analysis does point the way forward. The world cannot dispense with the services of constructive cooperation. The work of the league in these respects must not only continue, but advance. Yet just because the league covenants, or sanctions, the use of force against an aggressor, and because force is always a failure, always as now the result of a previous injustice, the very existence of the league is imperilled. The world has yet apparently to learn that force and retaliation can never supplant justice and reason. Italy was promised certain territories in return for her coming into the war on the side of the allies—these promises were not kept. Italy pleaded for access to raw materials before the league in 1923—a deaf ear was turned—the result, the crime of Ethiopia. Who was to blame? Among nations as among individuals, crimes and moral diseases arise out of injustices and abnormal conditions.

The golden rule—love and respect thy neighbour and his rights as thine own—is not, and never was, a mere counsel of perfection to individuals; it is a law, as exact and inexorable as the law of gravity, and to this law, the customs and regulations of nations and individuals must be conformed—there can be no abiding peace, except it be built upon a foundation of justice. The true services of the league are in the sphere of constructive cooperation, rather than in the realm of coercion. Betterment, not armament, should be the watchword of the league. The league covenant should be revised so that it would be the helper, not the dictator, of the nations. Let us have this world conference in order that we may lay the foundations of an enduring civilization, not upon the shifting sands of unfair privileges, greed, malice and war, but upon the eternal rock of truth, justice and reason. The purpose of such a conference would be to achieve a new international settlement, to give the world the true peace which was withheld in 1919. A twofold task is involved: to grapple with the causes from which wars spring, and to strengthen the cooperative human welfare work which the league has so well begun.

Nowhere is this essential oneness, this principle of world unity, better illustrated than on the North American continent. Canada and the United States have welcomed to their shores the peoples of all the races of the world. We are richer for their cultural contributions. They have attended and graduated from our schools and universities, have freely entered our trades, industries, professions and legislative bodies. These two great nations have lived side by side in complete neighbourliness and sympathetic understanding, without a gun, a fort or a battleship on the entire four thousand mile border line, for one hundred and twenty-three years. Truly an astounding feat, unparalleled in the history of the human race.

There are two main reasons for this. First, our immigrants came to this continent to escape the military and economic bondage of the old world countries. I have talked in the west during the past twenty years with hundreds of people who came from all parts of the world, and I have yet to find among them any trace of a desire for war or hate or anything of the kind. These outbreaks are due entirely to the system under which we live, and when defence measures are advocated I refuse absolutely to agree to appropriate a dollar more until this government shall demonstrate to the world that it has made an honest and intelligent effort to ascertain the causes of war, and assures the people of the democracies and dictatorships of debt-ridden Europe, which is rapidly being engulfed in cultural degeneration and moral decay and driven to the shambles of war by the money system the ramifications of which I have referred to in these documents quoted, that it seeks to remove those causes. I say that it is the inescapable moral and legal duty of this government to investigate these questions and to extend the hand of fellowship to the peoples of the world who are suffering under dictatorships arising out of the failure of our own statesmen.

I was at the lake Couchiching convention this summer and heard Doctor Hans Simmons say there that the treaty of Versailles was the definite cause of Hitler coming into power in Germany; that the injustices and contradictions of that treaty, known at the time to the people who signed it, were a direct cause of the present situation in Europe. If, then, the cause is definitely ascertainable, and we do not make any effort to deal with that cause in conferences of the people of the world, we have forfeited our right to the respect of the people and our right to govern. If a vote could be taken among the common people of the world to-night, free from the terrorism and intimidation of dictators, political and economic, ninety-nine per cent would vote for peace. We have enough economic dictatorship in this country. Just recall the Turgeon textile inquiry, and the fact that employees in the Cornwall plant were working seventy hours a week for twenty-five cents an hour in a temperature of 120 degrees, and of course they dared not open their mouths about the conditions under which they worked. If we are going to fight for democracy, let us have economic democracy so that we may have something worth fighting for.

In calling a world conference of this kind for, in the words of the resolution, the securing and maintenance of peace, there is one thing above all that must be guarded against. No professional soldiers, armament racketeers or their friends or agents should be allowed to attend. They, and the infamous murder machine which they represent, should be told to stay outside. In 1921 a league of nation's commission which had been appointed to inquire into the problem of the private manufacture of arms came to the following conclusions: (1) that the armament firms have been active in fomenting war scares and in persuading their own countries to adopt warlike policies and increase their armaments; (2) that armament firms have attempted to bribe government officials both at home and abroad; (3) that armament firms have disseminated false reports concerning the military and naval programs of various countries in order to stimulate armament expenditure; (4) that armament firms have sought to influence public opinion through the control of newspapers in their own and foreign countries; (5) that armament firms have organized international armament rings, through which the armaments race has been accentuated by playing off one country against another; and (6) that armament firms have organized international armament trusts which have increased the price of armaments to governments. It is only natural that armament firms, with an eye to their business as merchants of death, should seek to influence disarmament and peace conferences, but not in the direction of peace. The world remembers the case of W. B. Shearer, who was paid a huge sum of money to destroy one armament conference, also that attending the disarmament conference of 1932 were the sinister figures of Charles Dumont of Schneider-Creusot, president of the Schneider-controlled Banque Franco-Japonaise, on the French delegation, and on the British delegation, Colonel A. G. C. Dawney, brother of a director of Vickers-Armstrong, and now the political supervisor of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

I suggest that invitations to attend such a conference should be sent to every nation in the world, and that each nation should be asked to send as delegates its outstanding educationists, economists, scientists, engineers and peace workers. This would make possible a scientific and realistic approach to the problem, out of which would emerge very quickly an ordered framework or plan for study, somewhat as follows.

Taking the four main causes of war, for the sake of clarity and facility in presenting these causes for study, they may be classified as economic, psychological, political, and social. The experts from all nations present at the conference would quickly find their particular work, and the economists and social scientists would organize discussion, and under the heading of the economic causes of war, study the following problems: (1) aggressive imperialism; (a) territorial, (b) economic; (2) economic rivalries for markets, energy resources and essential raw materials. Under this heading also we would have government protection of private interests abroad, without reference to the general welfare; disregard of the rights of so-called backward peoples; population pressure and inequalities of access to raw materials, customs barriers and migration barriers. Under the heading of the psychological causes of war would be found fear, the feeling of national insecurity, fear of invasion, of loss of property, of change; also suspicion, greed, lust of power, hate, revenge, jealousy and envy. Under political causes of war would be found the principle of the balance of power, secret treaties, unjust treaties, violation of treaties. Just at this point it might be well to refer again to the fact that the present situation in Germany is, in my judgment, definitely the result of unjust treaties. Arming to defend ourselves against the results of our own mistakes is palpably and demonstrably absurd. Under the heading of political causes of war we also find disregard of the rights of minorities; organization of the state for war; ineffective or obstructive political machinery.

Under the heading of the social and other contributory causes of war we would find exaggerated nationalism; competitive armaments; religious and racial antagonisms; general apathy, indifference and ignorance; war psychology created through various agencies—the press, motion pictures, text books, and home influences; social inequalities and injustices; social sanctions of war; lack of humanitarian ideals.

I think it is an indisputable fact that we live in a warlike world because each nation in the world community, particularly each modern nation, is organized upon the basis of an economic system which makes mutuality and cooperation between the nations impossible. Each nation produces more goods than it can consume. It is therefore forced to sell to other nations more goods than it is willing to buy from them. When dealing with nations as advanced industrially as itself, this policy results in tariff and currency wars, which increase the rivalry and aggravate the natural friction between nations. When dealing with more backward nations the policy means the subjugation of the less developed portions of the globe for the purpose of providing markets for the machines of the industrially advanced nations. It is this very friction, inflamed by the contributory factors of racial prejudice, fear and hate, having their roots in the manifest economic absurdities and injustices of treaties such as the treaty of Versailles, which is bringing us ever nearer the abyss.

But why do modern nations produce more goods than they can consume? For the simple reason that the workers and farmers and fishermen who produce the goods do not get enough money for their work to buy the equivalent of the goods they produce. One does not have to accept unqualifiedly the theory of labour value to see the truth of this analysis. Workers need not even secure the exact equivalent of their labour in order to keep the machines going. Some resources must be used for the enlargement and replacement of plant and for the development of the community in general.

Modern industry is a part of a very complex social process, and many factors besides the manual labour of the worker enter into the success of the process. The important fact is that the mass of the people secure comparatively so little for their labour that the markets of modern industrial nations become glutted with goods, and the glut of goods drives to imperialism on the one hand and results in depressions and unemployment on the other. This is, I sincerely believe, the major cause of all our difficulties and I am firmly convinced that a world conference of scientifically minded men and women, motivated by a firm determination to face these facts, would accomplish a great deal towards starting the world in the direction in which we all want to go.

[Mr. P. J. Rowe.]

I must repeat that, from my own point of view, until we have made some intelligent effort to investigate the causes which have brought about the present situation in the world, it is quite indefensible to start talking about defending ourselves. If we are going to defend ourselves, let us have something to defend.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that there is within us all a fighting instinct. I believe that the law of any worthy life is fundamentally the law of strife—in the realm of ideas, not in the realm of force and murder; and it is only by courageous determination to face these facts that we shall move forward to better things. Why cannot the fighting instinct which is in us all be marshalled to fight the evils which are now threatening the world? We should have the statesmen of the world marshalled to fight war. We should line up the young men of the world, not to go into a gigantic abattoir to slaughter each other at the behest of cynical old men past military age, sitting in comfortable chairs, while other people go out to their death. We should have them marshalled to fight the moral and economic diseases which trouble the world. We can think of the motherhood of the world marshalled to fight diseases of malnutrition, slum conditions, bad housing.

I say that in a conference such as is proposed we could marshal and focus world opinion upon the real problem of the unity and forward progress of the world and do something to show that we have really lived in this day and generation.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the motion of my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps), of which I am the seconder.

First of all I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is unduly sensitive over criticism of the increased expenditure for armaments in this country. As a matter of fact the member for Winnipeg North scarcely referred to the matter. All he did say, as I recall it, was that we in Canada must have caught the armament fever that was so prevalent in other parts of the world. Surely the Prime Minister must be very sensitive if he objects to a statement of that kind. Is it possible that his conscience troubles him and that he cannot justify the expenditures that are now proposed? At the moment I cannot find any other reason for his sensitiveness.

One point that was emphasized both by the Prime Minister and by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) was that it would be an impertinence on the part of this government to suggest to the government of the United States what they should do in their domestic affairs. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this resolution asks the house or the government to interfere in any way with the domestic affairs of the United States. Owing to the many failures we have seen, owing to the failure of the League of Nations and of the many efforts that have been made to bring about some form of international cooperation that would ensure to the world an enduring peace, the mover of the resolution asks that this government approach the president of the United States and ask him, because of his position, to call a world conference to discuss the question of world peace. The suggestion may not be a good one, it may not be a wise one, but certainly the resolution does not suggest that in asking the president of the United States to do such a thing we are in any way meddling with the domestic affairs of that country.

The resolution indicates that the League of Nations has failed to bring about permanent peace, and I believe all hon. members realize the truth of the assertion. I suggest we should try to find out why it has failed. Some of us believe it has failed principally because it was not so much interested in the maintenance of world peace—a world peace on a proper basis of social justice—as it was in the maintenance of the status quo. In other words, it was more intent on maintaining the advantages obtained by military force in the last war than it was in the maintenance of world peace, and it is for that reason many of us believe it failed. No doubt there were other reasons.

While many nations accepted the principle of the league, they did not accept it in spirit. The two notable league failures to which the mover of the resolution and the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Rowe) referred, namely its failure to stop Japan in Manchuria and Italy in Abyssinia, are so well known and so fresh in our minds that they deserve more attention. In my view the prestige of the league could have survived its failure in Manchuria, but its failure in Abyssinia destroyed it, or made effective work in future very difficult.

Mr. MARTIN: On its political side?

Mr. MacINNIS: I find it difficult to distinguish its political from its economic side. There may be—probably is—a difference, but if we cannot settle the world's political differences we cannot settle its economic differences. It may be the other way about, and I am not going to argue the point at this time.

The league failed in the Abyssinian affair largely because the two principal nations who could act in the circumstances, would not act because of self interest. France would not act because she was afraid of losing Italy's cooperation in the event of future aggression on the part of Germany, and Great Britain would not act because, as Sir Samuel Hoare said, she was unwilling to "risk a single ship in defence of Abyssinia."

That is not the spirit in which the league was formed. Great Britain would not be risking ships in the interests of Abyssinia; she would be risking ships in the interests of the whole system of collective security. Because the league failed to stop aggression in Abyssinia we are now faced with greater and graver dangers than we were before. I am in favour of a league of nations, but I am just as much convinced as the Prime Minister, probably more convinced than he is, that we cannot have a league without assuming certain obligations. We cannot have a system of collective security or a system which will ensure the security of the various nations in the event of attack without every nation assuming its obligations in the circumstances.

The Prime Minister accused hon. members in this part of the chamber of wanting a league of nations that had some force. He stated that there had been a suggestion of a league of nations with teeth in it, and his observation was that force begot force. If the right hon. gentleman can apply that observation to the collective force of the league of nations, then I say it is more applicable to the armaments of the nations. There is no such thing as adequate defence, because the minute one nation has adequate defence it becomes a menace to another nation, and it, in turn, must increase its armaments so that it has adequate defence against that nation which first secured adequate defence. That must be so, so long as we have the present system of alliances and balance of power. There is no way in which we can overcome the difficulty except through the acceptance of a league of nations.

It must be a league of nations or chaos, and I prefer a league of nations with the definite provision that obligations as well as security, will be involved. I am convinced we cannot have security without obligations. It would appear however that at the present time the league does not seem to be able to function.

The motion suggests that in its wisdom the government should approach the president of the United States and ask him, as the person best fitted in the circumstances, to call the nations of the world together in an effort to find a formula for peace. I do not admit that in so proceeding we would be interfering with the domestic affairs of the United States, and if we fail we have failed in a just cause. I see no reason why the government could not accept the suggestion.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I shall take this opportunity to reply to some of the observations that have been made this afternoon. It is not my intention to deal with the remarks of certain hon. members in reference to the pan-American conference, because, although that matter may have some bearing on the discussion of the resolution before the house, its importance in that connection is not, in my opinion, such as to call for extended comment at this time.

In his defence of the attitude he takes, namely that of refusing to suggest that the president of the United States call a conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) first of all stated he was rather tired of the conferences held in the past and was afraid of conferences which might be held in the future. That observation is a peculiar one when we remember it was only yesterday that the Prime Minister indicated his willingness to call another national conference in Canada. Not only was he in favour of such a conference to discuss a complicated question, but the suggestion was first made by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). Now, within a few hours after expressing themselves as being in favour of a conference in Canada, they rise in this chamber and say they are sick and tired of calling conferences.

Mr. BENNETT: I distinctly stated that I had no reference to interprovincial or family conferences, and I assume the Prime Minister meant the same thing.

Mr. HEAPS: While the right hon. gentleman makes a reservation, I still believe the principle is the same. I believe the Prime Minister said he was tired of the conferences that we had had in this country in the past, and did not know whether they were conducive of the good which it had been anticipated they would produce. I am speaking from memory, but if I am not mistaken—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say last year; I was speaking generally and in particular of world conferences.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. HEAPS: I might point out that we have had just as little success with our provincial conferences. I do not anticipate that there will be immediate results. I know of no conference in recent years in which the United States has taken a definite part, and I feel that if a conference were called by that country it would be extremely beneficial to all concerned. The last time the United States took any part in world affairs was in connection with the Kellogg-Briand peace pact. I do not think a conference was called on that occasion; it was just a matter of signatories to an agreement. The Prime Minister pointed out this afternoon, and perhaps properly so, that certain nations might not attend, but we cannot be sure of that. I do not think any nation would ignore a call for peace coming from the United States.

I realize that very laudible efforts have been made during the past years by the League of Nations to create a peace atmosphere, but unfortunately these have failed. The Prime Minister has offered no alternative to an international peace conference except the suggestion that we might have certain regional conferences to consider the matter of world peace.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope my hon. friend will not misconstrue what I said. I was not taking any exception to the United States calling a world conference if they saw fit. I was pointing out that such a step was a matter for the United States to consider; that it was not for us to make a suggestion to them.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think that has the importance which has been attached to it by both the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it is very important in international affairs.

Mr. HEAPS: It would not be meddling in the affairs of another country. We are simply suggesting that a certain proposal should be considered. As I have pointed out, we are in a different position from that of other countries in that we are a neighbour of the United States. As I understand it, the policy of the United States has been that of a good neighbour, and I believe that is the policy of the Prime Minister and his colleagues. The president of the United States could no more confine that policy to the United States and the South American republics than he could confine questions of peace and war to European nations. The Prime Minister gave an excellent illustration of the treatment of international problems by Canada and the United States when he mentioned the International Joint Commission.

I do not think there would be anything wrong in our suggesting to the United States the desirability of convening such a world conference. The Prime Minister chose a rather unhappy illustration when he referred to the present catastrophe in the United States. He referred to the control of plagues and such things by departments of health. That is just what I am asking. Our departments of health, federal and provincial, have been established with the idea of preventing such things. It is the prevention of war that I want more than anything else. Certain parts of the United States have been ravaged by floods. The country was not prepared for these floods; the methods of prevention were inadequate, but I have no doubt that the embankments which have given way will be replaced by still stronger ones. I believe we should make all the preparation we possibly can for peace. We should do everything we can to create a peace psychology among the peoples of the world. We should adopt the same procedure as is adopted by our departments of health when dealing with matters concerning the health of the people.

I do not think it could be called an impertinence on our part when we make a suggestion to the president of a friendly nation, as has been intimated by the leader of the opposition. I know very little of impertinence, but I do not think that could be considered as an impertinent action. I quoted this afternoon from a book written by a professor of law at Columbia university. The late Mr. Briand was responsible for the Kellogg-Briand pact, but the statement is made in this book that the original information came to France from American sources.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, January 28, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PROVINCIAL AIR MAIL

Mr. ISNOR:

1. What provinces are now being served by air mail?
2. What provinces are without air mail service at present?
3. Are plans under way to have air mail service between Nova Scotia and other provinces?
4. When is air mail service to be inaugurated in Nova Scotia?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.
2. Nova Scotia.
3 and 4. This matter is now under consideration.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY INVESTIGATION

Mr. TUCKER:

1. Did evidence adduced last year (1936) before the royal commission (Mr. Justice Turgeon) investigating the textile industry indicate that there has been any failure in the past to pay the full income tax properly payable by any company engaged in such industry?
2. If so, have steps been taken to enforce payment of such income tax as may have been properly payable by any such companies to the extent that same has not been paid to date?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Has the government been approached regarding the tunnelling of the Burlington channel to relieve highway traffic congestion at that point?
2. Will this work be proceeded with?
3. If so, when?

Mr. CARDIN:

1, 2 and 3. The tunnelling of the Burlington channel to relieve highway congestion at that point is a provincial project. No application has been received for the approval of this project under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

EMILE LECLAIRE—DISMISSAL

Mr. WERMENLINGER:

1. Was Emile Leclaire employed as an engineer by the harbour commission at Montreal, in 1936?
2. Was he dismissed? If so, when, for what reason, and upon whose recommendation?
3. Was he an efficient employee?
4. Who replaced him?

Mr. HOWE:

1. Yes; on mechanical force in repair shop.
2 and 3. Released from duty consequent upon certain changes in staff made in the interest of the service.
4. Joseph Simard.

BLACKFOOT RESERVE, ALTA., FARM INSTRUCTOR

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. Does the dominion government employ a farm instructor on the Blackfoot reserve, southeast of Calgary, by the name of Hugh Newell?

2. If so, how old is he?
3. What experience has he had?
4. What salary does he receive?
5. Is his appointment permanent?
6. Is he a returned soldier?
7. How did he receive his appointment?
8. By whom was he recommended?
9. Were there any other applicants for the position?
10. If so, what were their names?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. Yes.

2. 28 on October 18, 1936.

3. He was raised on an Ontario farm. For nine years he was engaged in farming in the vicinity of Gleichen. Is capable of overhauling tractors, trucks, combines or other farm machinery. Had experience in road grading, and was highly recommended by the Canadian Pacific Railway, Department of Natural Resources, for his ability to run levels and prepare land for irrigation.

4. $840 per annum, plus house, fuel and light.

5. No.

6. No.

7. By ministerial authority. The position of of Indian farming instructor is exempt from the operation of the Civil Service Act in so far as competition in appointment is concerned.

8. Inquiries were made of a number of people in the district and he was chosen because he had the qualifications mentioned.

9. No.

10. Answered by No. 9.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—QUEBEC

Mr. BRUNELLE:

In how many cases in the province of Quebec has the board of revision, under the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act, ordered a reduction of capital mortgage debts?

Mr. DUNNING: 201.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—QUEBEC

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. Does the government of the province of Quebec still pay a proportion of the rate of interest on loans granted by the federal government to the farmers of the province of Quebec, under the Farm Loan Act?

2. Until when will the federal government grant loans to the farmers of the province of Quebec concurrently with the farm loan board established by the Quebec provincial government?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Yes. Contributions on behalf of borrowers of a proportion of interest falling due on loans made by the Canadian Farm Loan Board in the province of Quebec are paid by the government of the province of Quebec under the authority of Ch. 51A, Revised Statutes of Quebec, 1925, as amended by Ch. 25, Statutes of 1935.

2. The extent of future loaning operations of the Canadian Farm Loan Board in the province of Quebec will be dependent on the necessity shown for the same.

CIVIL SERVANTS WITH SALARIES OF $125 A MONTH, AND LESS

Mr. BRADETTE:

1. How many civil servants of the federal government earn $125 per month and less?
2. How many such persons are married?
3. How many of such persons are unmarried?
4. What are the names and wages of such persons, and in what departments are they employed?
5. How many persons are presently temporarily employed, earning $125 per month and less; what are their names, their occupations and their wages?

Mr. RINFRET: I have communicated with the hon. member who put this question and he has consented to modify it. I therefore suggest that the question be dropped, to be reintroduced in a different form.

Question dropped.

UNEMPLOYED IN CANADA

Mr. POOLE:

1. What is the number of unemployed this year compared with the same time last year?
2. What is the number of men employed under the public works scheme of 1936?
3. What were the wages paid?
4. What was deducted for board, medical treatment, etc.?
5. For what length of time were these men employed?
6. How many men were laid off from the Canadian Pacific shops during the summer?
7. What was the loss in wages?
8. How many men were laid off from the Canadian National shops during the summer?
9. What was the loss in wages?
10. Were all these men reemployed, and, if so, when?
11. What has the employment commission done during the last year?
12. What recommendation has the employment commission made to eliminate unemployment?
13. What was the payment made to the provinces for relief this year, and during the same period last year?
14. What is the number of tradesmen in Canada this year, compared with the same period last year?
15. What is the number of this class unemployed?
16. What is the number of industrial trades apprentices employed by years, from 1928 to 1937?

Mr. ROGERS: This question in its present form does not admit of a satisfactory answer. I suggest that the hon. member might reframe the question and I should be very glad indeed to advise him, if he so desires, of any information that is available on the various subjects included in the question.

Question dropped.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

GRAIN INQUIRY COMMISSION

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle):

1. What are the names and addresses of: (a) the legal counsel retained, and (b) the various persons employed by the government in connection with the Turgeon wheat inquiry?
2. What amounts are being paid or agreed to be paid: (a) by way of counsel fees or expenses to each legal counsel retained, and (b) by way of remuneration and expenses to each person employed?
3. Will the report of this commission be tabled this session?

Mr. ROGERS: I believe it was indicated some days ago that this question should stand as an order for return.

REVENUES FROM FEDERAL TAXES

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What was the revenue from each federal tax during the last five fiscal years?
2. To what purposes have each of these taxes been applied?

Mr. RINFRET: Return tabled herewith.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES—GEOLOGICAL EXPLORATION PARTIES

Mr. FERLAND:

1. Did the dominion government in each of the years 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936, organize under the direction of the Department of Mines a number of geological exploration parties in Canada?
2. How many students were engaged, during the summer of each year, to take part in such geological exploration work?
3. How many French Canadian students participated each year in this work?

WHEAT DELIVERED TO WHEAT BOARD

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. What was the total of the wheat delivered to the wheat board during the fall of 1935?
2. What was the average price paid?
3. Was this wheat sold, and, if so, what was the average price?
4. Will there be any further payment on the participation certificates issued to the farmers delivering wheat at that time?
5. What was the average price the wheat board paid the farmers for feed wheat delivered to them during that period?

IMMIGRATION AND DEPORTATIONS

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. How many persons intending to settle in Canada entered Canada during 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935 and 1936?
2. How many of such persons entered by issue of special permit from minister, in each of the above years?
3. How many of such persons, enumerated in question No. 1, came from the British Isles?
4. How many persons were deported during each of the above years?
5. How many were deported to the British Isles?
6. How many of the deportations to the British Isles were because such persons had become, or were liable to become, public charges?

PENSIONS APPEAL COURT

Mr. MacNEIL:

1. How many appeals were pending consideration by the Pensions Appeal Court as at December 31, 1935, in the following categories: (a) appeals by the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?
2. How many appeals were filed with the appeal court during 1936 as follows: (a) appeals of the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?
3. How many appeals were heard by the appeal court during 1936 as follows: (a) appeals of the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from the quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?
4. How many appeals were allowed in 1936, as follows: (a) appeals of the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from the quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?
5. How many appeals were disallowed in 1936, as follows: (a) appeals of the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from the quorum pensions commission?
6. How many appeals were referred by the appeal court to the pensions commission in 1936: (a) appeals of the crown from the quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from the quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?
7. How many appeals were awaiting consideration by the appeal court as at December 31, 1936: (a) appeals of crown from quorum pensions commission; (b) appeals of applicants from quorum pensions commission; (c) other categories?

VALIDITY OF DOMINION ACTS

SUMMARY OF DECISIONS OF JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the government prepared to make any statement with regard to the decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): In view of the importance of the matter it was my intention to give to the house the information which my hon. friend has just asked for. The decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council were given this morning and have been communicated to the Department of Justice by our agent in London—in summary, of course—and they are as follows:

Section 498 (a) of the criminal code had been declared intra vires by the majority opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada; it is upheld by the Privy Council. That section stands.

The Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of Canada and by the Privy Council on an appeal by the province of Ontario. The appeal is dismissed and a cross-appeal is allowed. The supreme court answers are varied by declaring sections 18 and 19, Canada's standard, and 23 to 26, which relate to fair trade, conferences, co-operation of boards of trade and economic investigation, intra vires. The result is the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act is held to be good with the exception of section 14, relating to price and production agreements, which is severable from the rest of the act.

The Employment and Social Insurance Act was declared wholly ultra vires by the majority of the supreme court, and the privy council has also declared this act ultra vires.

With regard to the three references respecting labour legislation, namely, the Weekly Day of Rest in Industrial Undertakings Act, the Minimum Wage Act and the Limitation of Hours of Work Act, on which the Supreme Court of Canada divided equally, three judges declaring that the statutes were valid and three declaring that they were not, the privy council declared those three statutes ultra vires.

As to the Natural Products Marketing Act and amendment, the unanimous opinion of the supreme court was that the statute was ultra vires, and that is also the opinion of the privy council.

The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act had been declared intra vires by the Supreme Court of Canada, and, on an appeal by the province of British Columbia has been declared constitutional by the privy council also.

As soon as the text of these various judgments is received by the government it will be communicated to the house.

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

PRIVILEGE—MR. FINN

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT OF DOMINION BANK RESPECTING CLASS TAXATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. FINN (Halifax): I desire to call the attention of the house to a telegraphic dispatch from the city of Toronto appearing in this morning's Citizen. It is, I think, a reflection on every hon. member of this house, and particularly on the government, whether it be in power or—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FINN: The point is this: the wisdom of class taxation was questioned by C. H. Carlisle, president of the Dominion Bank in an address to the shareholders at the annual meeting:

> Excessive class taxation may be an asset to party politics as a means of securing votes—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to direct his question, if he has any, to the government. I do not think he can read a statement from a newspaper in this way.

Mr. FINN: I should like to ask the Prime Minister or the government whether their attention has been called to a telegraphic report from Toronto appearing in this morning's Ottawa Citizen of a statement made by the president of the Dominion Bank in his address to the shareholders at the annual meeting. He is reported as follows:

> "Excessive class taxation may be an asset to party politics as a means of securing votes, but it undoubtedly retards national progress and development, and brings injury to working people," said Mr. Carlisle.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that that statement is an insult to all hon. gentlemen who sit in this house, particularly the Prime Minister, whether he be Liberal, Conservative, or a representative of any other party, who is doing the best he can at much less salary than this gentleman is receiving. Therefore hon. gentlemen should not have to put up with such impertinence, which I repeat is an insult to every hon. member in this house.

SOCIAL INSURANCE COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask whether it is within the knowledge of the government that the Commissioner of Employment and Social Insurance, Mr. Roméo Beaudet, sent out Christmas greetings last December under the frank of Mr. Harrington, who resigned a year ago, which is all he did last year? And if it is within the knowledge of the government, in view of the decision rendered by the privy council will he be discharged to-day and the commission abolished?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I may say to my hon. friend that what he has just said comes as a great surprise to me. I imagine that the decision of the privy council will settle the question of Mr. Beaudet's position.

FARM IMPLEMENT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I desire to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). In view of the statement made last April, recorded on page 2127 of Hansard, to the effect that all implement firms had not then replied to the request of this house that the prices of farm implements be kept at their former level until the present investigation had been completed, I should like to ask what replies are now in the hands of the minister, and what action the government contemplates in the light of those replies.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member was kind enough to give me in advance a copy of his question, and I have had prepared copies of the letters that we have received from the three companies concerned, Massey-Harris, Cockshutt Plough and International Harvester; also an interim report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. I think in answer to the question it would be best to place this on the table of the house, and the hon. member can get it and read it.

PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. K. ESLING (Kootenay West): I should like to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) whether the members of the house will be supplied with printed copies of the 1937 tariff of the Canadian Performing Right Society as revised by the copyright appeal board, and if so when we may expect to get them.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): The tariff of the Canadian Performing Right Society as revised and approved by the copyright appeal board at their sitting last December has been published in the Canada Gazette of January 2 of this year, as required by the act. It is my intention to have the tariff reprinted in pamphlet form. I do not think it would be advisable to distribute these generally, because probably only a few members are interested in the tariff, but we will have them available in my department and they will be supplied to every hon. member who makes a request for them.

EMPIRE COTTON MILLS STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. DAMUDE (Welland): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) with respect to the strike in the Empire Cotton Mills at Welland. I understand the employees and the city council have requested a board of conciliation to deal with this matter, and I should like to know what action the government is in a position to take.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Damude) was good enough to notify me of his intention to ask this question to-day. It is quite true that the city council of Welland has requested that a board of conciliation be set up under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. It is also true that a formal board application from representatives of the strikers was received by the Department of Labour yesterday. These communications have been acknowledged. At the same time it must be pointed out that the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act applies directly only to mines and public utilities and that in other industries, such as the textile industry, boards of conciliation and investigation can be established only with the joint consent of the parties directly affected.

I may say that the officers of the Department of Labour have taken up this matter already with the president of the Empire Cotton Mills Limited, urging that the consent of the company be given to the establishment of a board, and it is anticipated that the decision of the company will be received in the course of the next two or three days.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED ABOLITION OF HANGING AS DEATH PENALTY

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (Wellington North) moved the second reading of Bill No. 6, to amend the criminal code (death penalty).

He said: Mr. Speaker, when this bill was proposed last year it was misunderstood by some hon. members, who thought I was pleading for the abolition of capital punishment.

That is not the purpose. The bill is designed to change the method of execution from hanging to execution in a lethal chamber.

This is an old problem, Mr. Speaker; it is a question that has been debated in many countries. I have before me letters from many countries in Europe, from most of the states of the union and even from South America. I do not intend to refer to those letters because I believe in many cases copies have been sent to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). Most of them approve of the change from hanging to the use of the lethal chamber. Most of the states of the United States approve; some of the attorneys general of the provinces of Canada are very anxious that the change be brought about. The only exception in Canada is Mr. Taschereau of Quebec, who still believes in hanging.

Mr. POULIOT: He practised it on himself.

Mr. BLAIR: Only two states of the union uphold hanging as a means of execution. One state, Missouri, approves of hangings being held in the market square.

The strange thing about punishment for crime, Mr. Speaker, is that the higher we rise in our state of civilization and the more intelligent humanity becomes, the greater is the number of criminals in the world; because our laws extend further and new laws are added, and the tendency is to lessen the severity of the punishment. In the reign of Henry VIII there were 72,000 people beheaded. Many of the acts we call crimes to-day were not classed as crimes at that time, and on the other hand many of the so called crimes of that day are punished with much less severity to-day.

I should like to direct attention to this point: In the time of our fathers the theory of retribution, which was the theory of Kant that everyone should be punished according to his deeds, was considered very important. In other words, there was a sort of trial balance struck, and the punishment would expiate the crime committed. That theory was upheld by the state, the church and almost every other authority. To-day the theory of retribution is not upheld by the law. We realize that if each of us was to suffer for the crimes he has committed, not one of us would be in this chamber to-day. We have learned the lesson that our crimes are too great—

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIR: Still, if an indivdual becomes a menace to the social order it must be remembered that this bill does not ask that such an individual should be allowed to remain a menace. We are not pleading for liberty for such as Red Ryan; that is far from our intention. A great mistake was made when we allowed Red Ryan to be turned loose, which cost five lives in addition to his own. That is not kindness, Mr. Speaker. A person who is dangerous to the social order must be kept where he can do no harm, and if he becomes a menace even to his guards I do not know but what his life should be sacrificed in order to save the lives of others.

The theory we would like to advance to-day is what is called the deterrent theory; that is, the idea is to prevent a similar crime being committed by either the individual concerned or by others. Punishment to-day is inflicted in order to prevent a repetition of crimes that have been committed. There is one thing I wish I could get hon. members of this house to consider, and it is this: In the investigations conducted in Great Britain and many other countries it was concluded that the certainty and rapidity of punishment was a far better deterrent than severity of punishment. That can be illustrated. If you put your finger on a hot stove you will take your finger away very quickly and will not put it there again, because the punishment has come rapidly and certainly. On the other hand, if you go out and catch cold and develop the 'flu, the punishment does not come so quickly and you will expose yourself more frequently. So it was found that rapidity and certainty of punishment had much more of a deterrent effect than severity of punishment, and it will be noted that in many countries of the world the tendency has been to lessen the severity of punishment in certain categories of crime.

At one time people used to be hanged for stealing sheep, and there were two hundred other crimes for which a person could be hanged not very many years ago. To-day we have only three, and practically speaking only one crime for which hanging may be the penalty, the crime of deliberate murder or murder during a robbery. There are many people who are extremely anxious that this law should be changed because of the effect upon the general public. Last year the sheriffs of Ontario passed a resolution, a copy of which was sent to me and, I have no doubt, also to the Minister of Justice. That resolution states:

> That in the opinion of the sheriffs of Ontario in convention assembled, the method of inflicting the death penalty in use in Canada is a relic of mediaeval days, and the advance in humanitarian civilization calls for the substitution of a more humane method.
> Furthermore, in our opinion a central place in the province should be provided for imposing the death penalty, thereby ensuring and facilitating the proper administration of justice and materially reducing the considerable cost to the public of the present gruesome method.

Then, to illustrate the point I am making may I be permitted to read from the Halifax Herald:

Here is a case where a man from another province invades a peaceful local community, murders and robs a respectable and almost helpless citizen, and sets fire to his house in the hope of concealing the crime, which he has now confessed. Notwithstanding his confession this man will still have to receive a formal trial. A jury will have to be summoned for the purpose and very considerable cost incurred, most of which will fall on the ratepayers of a municipality which has been deeply sinned against instead of sinning. But there is worse than that to follow. If the accused should be convicted, his execution will fall as an additional and most distressing burden on the officials of that municipality. This is conspicuously unfair and unjustifiable. There is no modern excuse for it. If a less sentence than that of death were imposed on this or any other criminal, the convict would at once be removed to a central penitentiary to undergo punishment. Only in the case of murder is the municipality compelled to provide for the execution of the court's sentence.

Then, one must consider the matter of convenience. It is more convenient to have a man put to death by gas than by hanging. Perhaps some people are not satisfied that gas affords an easier way of dying than hanging does. I am sure that in almost any county one has heard of people who have died from starting their cars while the garage doors remained closed. I attended six cases where the patients did not die but went into a state of unconsciousness. When they came to their senses in the doctor's office they were asked: "Why did you not shut off the spark? Why did you leave the car running?" and they said, "We didn't know we were going to sleep."

The same thing occurred to a man who fell asleep while reading beside his stove. He was rushed to the hospital and when he regained consciousness the next day and was asked why he did not move away from the stove or to an open window, he replied, "I didn't know I was being gassed." These instances indicate clearly that death from gas is brought about without the slightest degree of suffering. As further evidence of this fact we find that a committee of medical doctors of two or three of the states of the United States decided that death from gas was much easier than by any other method.

Even the Minister of Justice has said that the lethal chamber does not require the services of an expert, and that the duties can be performed by a prison guard. At the conclusion of the observation of the minister of justice in the former government, Mr. Guthrie, the present minister made these observations:

The minister said the other day, in connection with a ghastly incident relating to the hanging of a woman in Montreal, that this was under provincial jurisdiction. He is quite right as to that, but I wonder whether we should not, if we retain a capital punishment—and I am not prepared to say that we should do away with it—have a change because this is the criminal code of the country in the method of execution, so that it should be carried out only in a penitentiary and not in any district.

In other words, he would centralize the point of execution. He continued:

I believe the electric chair; or some other device, might be preferable to this remnant of old days when such things as we have read about in the papers recently are likely to happen. I just suggest to my hon. friend that the question ought to be studied, and I think it is a reform that should be brought about in this country.

Those were the remarks made in 1935 by our present Minister of Justice after reading the disgraceful results of a hanging in Montreal.

Then, one must remember that a dying person can derive no benefit from hanging, and that pain inflicted without a purpose is a sin against humanity. If you or I had a horse or a dog to destroy we would have it put to death without unnecessary suffering. Further, we must consider the friends of the person to be executed. Can we imagine the mother or the grandmother viewing the remains of a body from which the head had been completely torn? Can we imagine the feelings of the parents or friends of boys of perhaps twenty-one or twenty-two years—I call them boys—who view the bodies after they have been mutilated by a hangman's rope? Why should we punish innocent people? Why should we not eliminate such punishment? If a person is dangerous to the social order I believe his removal by the quickest and easiest method would be the most satisfactory, and would ameliorate the suffering of those he leaves behind.

Circumstances surrounding hangings are greatly exaggerated by the pictures drawn in the newspapers. I believe there should be a law to control the press in its reports of criminal proceedings. A newspaper photograph may show a criminal bidding his family a final farewell. We know that young boys throughout the country followed the exploits of the rascal Dillinger, and, believing he was a hero, wished that he might get away from the police. The more a criminal is punished the more sympathy is aroused in the minds of some people. This is another reason why I believe the condemned criminal should be disposed of quietly. After the last war Britain would have made a martyr of the German kaiser if she had put him to death. It is much better not to punish a man of that kind.

As human beings we are not able to interpret the mens rea or mental capacity of the criminal. It is difficult to know what we would do under similar circumstances. There can be no doubt that if a man is a menace to society through mental disease or hereditary weakness he should not be permitted to destroy society. Whether a man be disposed of by prison guards or by persons outside the prison walls, I must say that in his removal the less we punish him the less sympathy for him will be aroused. By disposing of a criminal quietly we would avoid much of the newspaper publicity. Often when sympathy, which sometimes is greater than the deterrent effect, is aroused, the deterrent effect is lost sight of. We should endeavour to retain the proper attitude of mind towards those who sympathize with the criminal and towards the state which is trying to do right by the social order.

Mr. H. E. WILTON (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised to note the apparent indifference of many hon. members of this house to this very important bill introduced by the hon. member for Wellington North (Mr. Blair), as evidenced by the lack of attention on the part of many hon. members on his own side of the chamber.

In rising to support this bill I do so in the belief that I am supporting a move forward which is in keeping with modern intelligence. Divine law and the law of the land say a life for a life. I am not in favour of eliminating capital punishment, but if we must put human beings to death, let us do it in a decent and humane manner. In the majority of municipalities, particularly the larger centres, a lethal chamber is provided for the killing of dogs, cats and other animals. This method of putting animals to death has been adopted because it is humane, but in the same centres when the law says that the life of a human being must be taken, he is hanged by the neck until he is dead. "Until he is dead" means from fourteen to eighteen minutes. If I should undertake to dispose of a dog by hanging, I have no doubt if I were discovered the humane society would have me in court charged with cruelty to an animal and I would be either fined or imprisoned. We are not allowed to put a dog to death by hanging, but we are allowed to put a human being to death by this cruel, barbarous and antiquated method.

When a sentence of death is pronounced on a human being, the court does not stipulate that the sentence shall be carried out "with torture." The sentence is that at a certain time the prisoner shall be taken to a certain place and hanged by the neck until he is dead. This bill suggests a lethal chamber which would provide a painless death. If the human being to be placed in the chamber was not aware of what was being done, he would never know that his life was being taken. The hon. member for Wellington North referred to one case where a hanging resulted in the complete separation of the head from the body. Such a thing is most gruesome to think of and is a disgrace to our modern civilization. Even the head hunters of Borneo would have done a neater job than that. If a painless death can be provided by a lethal chamber, why have all this unnecessary torture? When a man commits a murder, is found guilty and is sentenced to death, even though he is the most hardened criminal his life should not be taken in such a way as to add additional torture to his sentence.

I can speak with some authority on this question, because I was once placed in the unfortunate position, not of being hanged, but of having to witness a hanging. It was fourteen minutes after the trap was dropped before the man was pronounced dead. There are cases on record where from eighteen to twenty minutes have elapsed. The only opposition to the proposed change from an antiquated system of putting condemned criminals to death to one more in keeping with our present civilization is that the torturous system acts as a deterrent to the commission of crimes punishable by death. I do not agree with that. I think the thing that makes a man hesitate to commit a murder is the fact that he will lose his life. I do not think the method by which the life will be taken is in itself a deterrent. In any event, we as a civilized modern people should get away from this antiquated method of taking life.

As has been pointed out, the lethal chamber is bloodless and painless and in keeping with modern civilization. In conformity with the laws of our land and of the divine order, we must continue to take life, but let us do it in a manner that will not besmirch the good name of Canadians and of Canadian authority. Let us do it like really humane people in this modern age should do things. Let us at least discontinue a system under which we execute human beings by a method that our laws will not permit us to use in taking the life of a dog or a cat.

I congratulate the hon. member for Wellington North upon having brought this bill forward. It is a step in the right direction, and it deals with a subject that should be treated more seriously than some members appear to be treating it. I cannot believe that the members of this house will hesitate to adopt the bill.

Mr. ERNEST BERTRAND (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to what has been said on this question. I happen to have been crown prosecutor in Montreal for seventeen years, and as such I have had to conduct quite a number of murder cases. The criminal code is made to punish and to prevent crime, and if we make punishment easy and painless as the hon. member suggests, there will be more inducement to the crime of murder.

A few years ago when I was crown prosecutor in Montreal a judge of the court of sessions condemned to the whip and imprisonment those who were convicted of armed robbery, and immediately armed robberies started to decrease in that city. Later a young man who had committed an armed robbery came before the court of king's bench instead of before the court of sessions, and the presiding judge of the king's bench, commenting on the whip, said that it was an old-fashioned method and that he was absolutely against it. He left out the whip and gave a longer term of imprisonment than had been the practice of the other judge of whom I spoke. The result was that within four or five months there were ten or fifteen armed robberies in Montreal, and all the accused came before the court of king's bench, preferring a longer term of imprisonment to punishment with the whip.

If we make punishment so easy that a man who has a grudge against somebody else can say to himself, "After all, if I kill my enemy I am going to have a trial, and if it comes to the worst I shall be sent into eternity in the easiest way possible," we will create amongst murderers-to-be the sentiment that, after all, it is not so hard to be sent out of the world in the lethal chamber if they are caught and have to go.

For this simple reason, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to vote against the second reading of this bill.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill should be referred to a standing committee of the house which we should set up on many matters in relation to law reform. The committee might consist of from seven to ten members. Almost every session bills to amend the criminal code are brought in by private members, and none of them are adopted. Canada is far behind the times in law reform, not only on this question but in many other matters of great importance to the people. In the past it has been the policy of the Minister of Justice to bring down in the dying days of the session, unknown to the judges and crown attorneys and magistrates of the country, most important amendments to the criminal code. Last session a number of statutory amendments to the criminal code were brought down on the Thursday preceding the Monday or Tuesday that the house prorogued. These amendments to the criminal code should all be incorporated in one bill, and the Minister of Justice should see to it that all measures affecting the liberty of the subject, which are the most important part of the legislation of this parliament, should be brought down early in the session or sent to a standing committee on law reform. As it is, the law officers of the crown throughout the country have no opportunity of giving parliament the benefit of their opinions upon amendments to the criminal code that are brought down in the dying days of a session.

As I have said, I am strongly of the opinion that we should have a standing committee on law reform and on legal bills. We are away behind the times in this matter. Thousands of people are in prison for debt in this country to-day. Where is magna charta in Canada. Take the bill which is now before us. In the explanatory note it is pointed out that every superior court of criminal jurisdiction may at any time make rules of court, not inconsistent with any statute of Canada, which shall apply to all proceedings relating to any prosecution, and the executive has power to pass laws by way of rules and regulations for the general advantage of Canada. I do plead with the Minister of Justice that this bill be allowed to go to a committee on law reform. Thousands of people are being injured on the streets of Canada every day by the motor car. You could fill up the seats in this chamber four or five times over by the number of people killed and injured by the motor car in Toronto in a year; 3,200 last year were injured and 76 killed by the motor car. I brought down an amendment to the criminal code to deal with that matter, but nothing came of it. Such a question might very well go before a standing committee on law reform. Look at what they have done in England to lessen the number of motor car accidents.

So far as this bill is concerned, I believe that a change should be made only after the most careful inquiry by a committee on law reform. There have been some ghastly hangings in this country. A woman was practically beheaded in the city of Montreal during an execution. Many of the officers appointed to conduct these executions are in my opinion incompetent. They get their appointments in the provinces; they are very largely politicians.

Listen to Canadian radio commission programs, and you will have sudden death automatically—I know I will. Many people are in trouble to-day who were never in trouble before, brought about by the depression and unemployment. They are young offenders. In Guelph reformatory there are nearly 200 aged fifteen, 150 aged sixteen, and almost 100 aged seventeen, and these are young people many of them from families which in some cases have been in this country for seventy years or more and have never done anything wrong in their lives. Why are these young people in the reformatory? Lack of work and born in a jobless age. These young people, many of them, have been handicapped from birth; they have never had a chance, and some of them may come later under this particular bill.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice should enforce all the criminal laws of this country and all federal law, himself, and if that is not in his power then the British North America Act should be changed. Let the Minister of Justice refer to a committee on law reform not only this bill but all proposed amendments to the criminal code. Let him have the power or get the power to appoint his law officers of the crown to wield the big stick on all the big interests that have the working classes of this country by the throat.

I should like to hear from the minister why the press of this country is excluded from these executions. In Ontario and Quebec they have had that right from time immemorial. After all is said and done, the people should always have a very large interest in the carrying out of the criminal law of this country. It was so, and is one of the cardinal principles of magna charta. We have the grand jury system and the petit jury, and they are there to protect the public and enforce the law of the land.

The explanatory note to the bill points out that section 576 of the criminal code provides for the making of rules of court, and the law officers of the crown have been handicapped in the carrying out of sentences by the rules and regulations that have been made. In the province of Ontario the supreme court has authority to make rules and regulations within the criminal jurisdiction of the province. Such rules may be made at any time with the consent of a majority of the judges present at a meeting held for that purpose.

This parliament sits here and does nothing to help the poor working people out of work —and nothing to prevent crime among youthful and other offenders. There are hundreds of men in penal institutions for offences for which the depression has been responsible, because after all if you take away a man's job for years you might as well sentence him to death. If a man has been out of work for five or six years he has no prospects at all, and, I say, you might as well sentence him as deprive him of his job. But what does this parliament do? All it does is to appoint a representative of the du Pont dynasty as the head of a commission to talk about unemployment. It seems to me that instead of this bill which we have before us, parliament should be discussing a larger measure dealing with the present state of affairs as to legal reform in Canada.

There should have been a proper revision by a select committee of the house of the criminal code many years ago to meet conditions that have arisen in consequence of the various changes that have taken place in our social life. For instance, the code was passed before we had any motor cars, and before a hundred and one other difficulties which have since arisen were thought of. I suggest that there should be a standing committee of this house sitting continuously on the subject of law reform throughout the land, for that is one of the main things we need in Canada. Yet we meet here, week after week, doing nothing. We might as well go home and stay at home, because the government of Canada is not in this chamber; it is outside, an invisible government conducted by a whole lot of useless commissions. I have never known one commission to do anything worth while, and one of the most useless was the commission with a representative of the du Pont dynasty at the head.

I do not wish to oppose this motion, but I have seen some reports with respect to this particular type of gas, and it has not been a success. But talking about gas, you have only to sit here three or four sessions to get all the lethal gas you want. I suggest that if we could get home by Easter it would be a good thing for the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): I rise to support this bill because I believe it is a step in the right direction. I hold in my hand a copy of the sacred laws from which we have often heard quoted the law of a life for a life, and I notice that the same lawgiver makes it possible for one who slays his fellow man to escape penalty through the provision of cities of refuge in different places.

I know that in the history of executions, both in Canada and in the United States, the death penalty was formerly carried out in the open, but because of public curiosity and the demoralizing effect on human life, executions later came to be held in secret. I nearly witnessesd an execution once and I am thankful to say that I did not have to see it. One of the guards said that he would rather resign his position than witness another execution. We therefore punish not only the one who has committed murder, but a great many other people as well.

But let me quote from a greater lawgiver than Moses, one whom our lawyers in this house honour extremely, because the foundation of our Canadian and British jurisprudence was laid by that great lawgiver. I quote chapter 5, verses 21 and 22, of the gospel of St. Matthew:

> Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment.

I take the stand that any man who has hate in his heart has at least gone one step towards murder, and therefore he would do well to have a little sympathy with any man who in a fit of drunkenness or passion incurs the supreme penalty of the law. I support this bill wholeheartedly because I think it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): I wish to say a word in connection with this bill. It was my privilege last year, when the resolution was moved on which the bill was founded, to support that motion and under these circumstances I take it that it is incumbent upon me at least to state my position on this occasion. In the interval some occurrences that have taken place in the part of Canada from which I come have rather induced me to modify my ideas with respect to this bill. I believe that the whole thing rests upon the question whether the law wishes to punish or to destroy. When a man commits wilful murder he becomes a killer, and as I suggested on a former occasion, once a killer, unfortunately always a killer.

It seems to me that there is only one thing to do with those who are willing to destroy human life, and that is to put them out of the way, and I still believe that the sooner they are put out of the way the better for themselves and for everyone else. But that is where my point comes in. Do we wish to punish murderers, thereby giving a warning to others who might be tempted to follow suit? Do we wish the death penalty to act as a deterrent or are we merely seeking to destroy those who threaten society? I am fully satisfied in my own mind that hanging has a decidedly greater deterrent effect than destruction in an easier form, such as the lethal chamber, and for that reason, although there are some undesirable features about hanging, I have rather modified my ideas and feel now that perhaps we should not be well advised to adopt this bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): In a few words I wish to support this bill. I wish it had gone a little further and proposed the abolition of capital punishment. I think it will be recognized that many of the arguments advanced by the mover (Mr. Blair) in favour of his bill are equally valid against any form of capital punishment. In my opinion, however, we ought to be much more concerned about preventing crimes than about punishing criminals.

I take it that crimes, speaking generally, are the result of one or two causes, either bad economic and social conditions or a bad inheritance. Some of us have been very insistent on doing everything in our power to get rid of bad economic and social conditions. Some men are almost driven into crime, and it is often true that once they have started along that road there is no stopping short of even murder. There is, however, this other side; I believe some people are born with what we sometimes call criminal tendencies. They have not the ordinary inhibitions; some of them are subnormal; they cannot strictly be held responsible for what they do.

A few years ago I happened to be in charge of a government bureau of social research in the west and had occasion to make investigations into the extent of mental disease and subnormality existing in the western provinces. In that work certain conclusions were very strongly borne in upon me. One was that we have a much larger proportion of these unfortunates than most people realize. The criminal statistics show that the proportion of crimes among these people is much greater than among normal people. Yet we have so far done very little to prevent people of that class from perpetuating themselves in the community. I can recall one instance of a poor woman in Saskatchewan who had given birth to a large number of subnormal children. You could hardly say this woman was immoral; she was rather unmoral. Her mentality was not more than that of a child of six or eight years. The mounted police had to be sent out almost every year to bring in one more child to be placed in a shelter in Regina, to be for life a burden on the community. Surely something should have been done to prevent that poor creature from continuing to produce children who were bound to bring trouble to the community.

One other instance I may give, that of a judge in my own city of Winnipeg who on one occasion had before him a man from the country, a fine upstanding young farmer, but rather ignorant of city temptations, who had managed to get a young woman into trouble. The woman was in reality subnormal. I happened to have traced her record back for some twenty years to a poorhouse in England. She had cost the state tens of thousands of dollars. She had spent most of her life in public institutions, either because of the wretched diseases with which she was afflicted or because of the crimes she had committed. And this judge knew so little about that whole field of social science that he actually turned this woman over to that young farmer who promised to make her his wife. In my judgment it was one of the most criminal things that could be done. The life of this young farmer was almost ruined. Fortunately the woman had so little sense that a few months later she left him. Why should she be permitted to perpetuate her type?

I suggest that there is something in what was said by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), that while it is desirable that we effect a number of reforms in our criminal laws, to introduce them in this haphazard fashion is not the best way to do it. Surely we have reached the stage where there should be some fairly comprehensive revision of a number of our laws in view of the scientific knowledge that is now available. But as things stand I think this bill is decidedly a move in the right direction.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): May I refer to the very last words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), because they have also been used by other hon. members who have supported this bill—"a move in the right direction." I should like to know what hon. members mean by "the right direction." Is it doing away with capital punishment?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: From my standpoint, yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is a good thing that it should be known what my hon. friend had in his mind when he used those words. Capital punishment has been debated in this house on many occasions since I have been a member of it. In the old days the late Mr. Bickerdike used to introduce every session a bill to that end. But the last time the subject was debated here was a few years ago when it was introduced by Mr. Irvine, and after a protracted debate the vote was 92 to 29 in favour of retaining capital punishment in our legal structure. Therefore, so long as capital punishment is the law of this country, those whose duty it is to see that the law is carried out have to act accordingly.

As far as this bill is concerned I admit that I have much sympathy with the object the hon. member for Wellington North (Mr. Blair) has in view. Last year when he introduced a similar bill he kindly agreed to postpone the second reading in order to enable me to make some inquiries in the provinces—because after all the provinces are entrusted with the procedure and everything relating to the administration of the criminal laws; also to make inquiries in the various states of the United States in which that mode of execution has been adopted. At the end of the session my hon. friend agreed to withdraw his bill in order that those investigations could be carried on until the present session.

The mode of execution which my hon. friend's bill would substitute for the present one has been adopted by five states of the American union, first in 1924 by Nevada, and the last one to adopt it was North Carolina. The other states in which it is in force are Arizona, Colorado and Wyoming. I sent various questions to the officers in charge in those states, for the purposes of this debate. I suppose I might limit the answers to those which were given to questions 7 and 8. Question 7 was:

> What has been the experience in your state as to the degree of humaneness of this method of execution including the possibility of mistake or accident?

The answers were:

Nevada: Experience proves beyond doubt that this method is the most humane, the quickest, the cheapest.

Arizona: Although we have had only four executions to date with this method, the simplicity of it seems quite impossible for a mistake or an accident.

Colorado: From our experience we consider this the most humane method of execution yet devised. Of course, every precaution is taken to guard against possibility of mistake or accident.

Wyoming: This method is considered more humane by far than any other method ever devised, as there is no chance for accident.

North Carolina sent its answer much later, and it is this: There is some difference in opinion as to the humaneness of this method of execution but as to the possibility of mistake or accident, as stated in the answer to question 5, once the pellets and acid come into contact death is sure to follow.

Question 8 was:

What is the relative value of this method of execution as a deterrent to crime?

The answers were:

Nevada: Just as there is nothing to prove hanging is a deterrent, so there is nothing to prove "gas" a deterrent.

Arizona: I believe this question is entirely up to one's own personal opinion. It seems that every one has a different view on it. We have had a number of persons who have witnessed executions here, both by hanging and with gas, and they are equally divided as to their opinion on this subject.

Colorado: No specific answer.

Wyoming: It is considered that this method will have no more effect as a deterrent of crime than any other method of capital punishment.

North Carolina: It is impossible for me to answer this intelligently, from the number of executions we have had by electricity and the number we now have awaiting execution by gas, it would appear that neither of these methods are of great value as a deterrent to crime.

There was also a question as to the financial aspects of execution, but in a matter of this kind I do not think that point should be considered to any extent, although apparently the system is less costly than the one in force in Canada.

With a view to eliciting the views of the several provincial governments in regard to the bill, the Deputy Minister of Justice addressed a letter to the attorney general of each province requesting him to communicate the views of his government upon the subject. The answers may be summarized as follows:

Ontario: No specific answer, but the attorney general of Ontario, by letter of January 2, 1936, in transmitting to the Minister of Justice a resolution passed at the last annual meeting of the sheriffs' association of Ontario urging the substitution of a more humane method of inflicting the death penalty and the establishment of a central place in the province for this purpose, said:

Though I hate the gruesome business as heartily as you do or more so, I do not know whether Canada is yet ready to abolish the death penalty. I fancy there would be little difficulty however in inducing our people to approve some genuinely better method of ending the lives of condemned persons. Failing this, however, there seems little reason why we should not alleviate some of the grosser objections to the present method.

In saying this the attorney general of Ontario probably was expressing his own view, as he said, rather than that of the government.

Quebec: Premier Taschereau replied, and I do not know where my hon. friend from Wellington North got the information he gave the house. The information Mr. Taschereau sent to this department was as follows:

I have no opinion on this matter, and leave it entirely to the best judgment of the Minister of Justice.

Nova Scotia: Attorney General MacQuarrie answered:

It would be difficult to obtain a definite view from our government upon the subject without full information, and a copy of the bill. If it could be shown that the administration of lethal gas is a more humane way of carrying into execution capital punishment, and it is intended to establish central places for the administration of lethal gas, such as, for instance, one central place for the maritime provinces, then I would think that our government would view the proposal with favour, but at the moment this is merely my personal opinion.

I have been handed the letter from Premier Taschereau to my hon. friend from Wellington North, in which Mr. Taschereau said:

I beg to state that I have no set opinion on this matter. Hanging is perhaps not a most humane method of executing criminals, but it is after all perhaps the best deterrent and this, to a great extent, is what society has in view in instituting capital punishment.

I thank my hon. friend for sending me that letter.

Prince Edward Island: Attorney General Campbell answered:

I may say that the government of Prince Edward Island approves the proposed amendment of the criminal code by substituting for hanging the administration of lethal gas as a means of carrying into effect capital punishment.

Manitoba: Attorney General Major replied:

The views of the government of Manitoba are that if the sentence of death is to be imposed in capital cases that the method to be employed in carrying the sentence into effect should be the most humane possible.

As to whether or not the administration of lethal gas is more humane than hanging we can express no opinion.

It is noted that the honourable the Minister of Justice has caused inquiries to be made in the United States as to the experience of the several states which have adopted the use of lethal gas. If as a result of such inquiries the minister concludes that lethal gas is more humane than our present system and parliament passes the necessary amendment to the criminal code we shall, of course, put the same into effect, but we shall have to rely on the parliament of Canada determining the method.

British Columbia: Attorney General Sloan answered:

Please be advised that this is a subject upon which I am not qualified to express an opinion. The method of executing criminals is one upon which I presume medical men are competent to advise and, I am sure, if a more humane and efficient method of execution could be devised than hanging, it would meet the general approval.

Saskatchewan:

I regret to inform you that owing to lack of information and data on the subject this government is not in a position to offer its views on the matter. However, I note that you are securing full information and data as to the experience of the several states of the American union which have adopted this method of inflicting capital punishment, and if upon receipt of such information and data you would care to communicate the same to me I shall then endeavour to furnish you with the views of the government on the subject.

New Brunswick: Attorney General McNair said:

Recently this government was requested to consider a resolution passed by the Ontario Sheriffs' Association looking to a change in capital punishment which I am informed has been brought to the attention of your department.

The government of New Brunswick favours a change in the system so that all executions may be carried out at the penitentiaries.

They were also of opinion that the form of punishment should be changed from hanging to the electric chair or lethal chamber.

As to the alternative methods, they expressed no definite opinion. To my mind, the lethal chamber has some advantages.

Since these opinions were sent to the department we have received another resolution from the association of sheriffs of Ontario. The hon. member has referred to the first resolution of that body. Subsequent to the debate in this chamber last year the association held another convention and approved of the bill sponsored by the hon. member, and they have forwarded the following communication:

After the above information had been presented, the sheriffs further discussed the subject and decided that while they had done enough in advocating a change from hanging, they had still before them the question of suggesting that there be provided a central place for executions in Ontario. One of the sheriffs reported that he had visited Sing-Sing prison in New York state. It was then moved by Sheriff Lawrason, seconded by Sheriff Thuerck and agreed:

That whereas the administration of justice is within the jurisdiction of the provinces and the question of establishing a central point for the infliction of the death penalty in this province is within the powers of the provincial legislature, we recommended to the government of Ontario and to the Honourable the Attorney General that a central point be adopted and properly equipped in this province for executing the death penalty for the following, among other reasons:

(1) To relieve the residents of the county towns when the death penalty in inflicted from the morbid cloud of gloom which hangs over the community for a considerable period before and after the execution is carried out.

(2) To eliminate the evil effect upon the minds of the children of these communities of hearing the gruesome details of the execution discussed.

(3) To reduce the cost of administration of justice from the very considerable expense entailed by the present method of local executions.

(4) To avoid the great anxiety to the sheriff and other provincial officers over the search for a reliable hangman.

(5) To ensure the execution of the death penalty in an orderly and humane manner free from the bungling which sometimes happens under the present method with equipment not perfect and by inexperienced officials.

(6) That an execution in a central prison in close proximity to a large number of hardened offenders will have much more of a deterring effect, than in a county gaol with few and sometimes no prisoners there.

It was further decided that this matter of a central place for execution in Ontario should be brought to the attention of the Attorney General by a committee consisting of Sheriffs A. J. Johnston and Cane and the Secretary.

With the exception of a communication from a gentleman who had sought the opinions of people in the western provinces, these are all the communications the department has received.

Although this matter is an important one, I confess I have not been able to find a strong feeling in Canada in favour of the proposed change. The question has not been very fully discussed. When a few years ago Right Hon. Arthur Henderson was home secretary a strong delegation from various associations in Great Britain interviewed him on the question of doing away with capital punishment. On that occasion he stated that while his views might favour the request, he could not detect in Great Britain a strong current of public opinion in favour of it. That, after all, is what should influence governments in a matter of this kind.

I was anxious to hear what hon. members would have to say in connection with the bill, and I should have liked to hear a larger number of my colleagues give the house the benefit of their views. As a matter of fact the hon. members who spoke to-day are the ones who spoke last year when the subject was discussed. As I hold no definite views in the matter I should have liked to be enlightened as to the feeling in Canada as expressed by the representatives in this chamber. I have come to the conclusion that perhaps there is much to be commended in the suggestion that the matter be considered and investigated by a committee. If that is the view of the house, before the second reading of the bill I will take steps to have the subject matter of the bill—not the bill itself—investigated by a committee before any action is taken in the matter.

Public sentiment in a matter of this kind is apt to change. There can be no better illustration of that than the purport of two letters I have received from the same Canadian citizen. One was received last year, only a few months ago, protesting against capital punishment and setting forth strong views in the matter. Only a few days ago, however, after the ghastly kidnapping in the United States when a human monster coldly murdered a little boy, I received a letter from the same man saying he had changed his view and that nothing but capital punishment could meet a crime of that kind.

There can be no doubt that this is a delicate matter, and that under present conditions a most painful duty is imposed upon those who have to do with carrying out the judgments of the courts. On the other hand I have a strong feeling that by way of deterrent the present method still offers the best protection to the people of Canada. It is not at all out of vindictiveness or retribution, as has been said, that the penalty is imposed. I do not think society has that in mind when it inflicts capital punishment; it has in mind rather the protection of its own members, and without doubt it is the first duty of a country, a nation, or a government, to protect its own citizens. The deterrent factor in the present method is worthy of grave consideration. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Bertrand), who was crown prosecutor for many years, says there is no doubt that punishment has much to do with the lessening of certain crimes.

It is true that in five states of the American union the system has been changed, but I think every hon. member will agree with me when I say that Great Britain and Canada have no cause to be envious of that country as far as the administration of criminal justice is concerned. Since I have been Minister of Justice many United States lawyers and judges and other citizens of that country have expressed to me very frankly the view that they would like to see the administration of criminal justice in their country as swift, as fair and as efficient as it is in Canada. All these things should be considered by those who are studying this question in an effort to decide whether it would be in the interests of the administration of justice to make the change asked for in this bill. On the other hand, some hon. members seem to feel very strongly on this matter, and if the house is agreeable I should like to move, seconded by Mr. Elliott (Middlesex):

That this bill be not now read the second time but that in the opinion of the house the subject matter thereof should be referred to a special committee, the names of the members of such committee to be given at a later date, with instructions to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time to this house.

Motion agreed to.

REDISTRIBUTION

MOTION FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY MORE EQUITABLE READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION

The house resumed from Thursday, January 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Brunelle:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient that the Representation Act, 1933, should be amended in such manner as to bring about a more equitable readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons and to effect thereby a more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts, and that a special committee be appointed to study this matter.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on February 21 of last year the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) moved that a special committee be appointed to consider the 1934 franchise and election acts. This committee was to consider, first, the proportional representation system; second, the alternative vote; third, the compulsory registration of votes and, fourth, compulsory voting. On March 3 the names of the members of this committee were suggested and approved by the house. On March 5 the Minister of Justice moved that one more reference be made to the committee, as follows:

That the special committee appointed to study the Dominion Elections Act, 1934, and amendments thereto, and the Dominion Franchise Act, 1934, and amendments thereto, be instructed to study and make report on the methods used to effect a redistribution of electoral districts in Canada and in other countries, and to make suggestions to the house in connection therewith.

On January 26 of this year the Minister of Justice moved that the same committee be appointed, and that the matters referred last year to the committee be referred to the same committee this session. Toward the end of his remarks the minister said:

> The members of the committee are the same as those who served last session, and the work to be done is exactly the same.

In view of the motion moved by the minister on Tuesday last, I think the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle) should withdraw the resolution now before the house. The special committee appointed last session met under the very able and efficient chairmanship of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). The hon. member was not only a very efficient chairman, but a most courteous one, and I have every hope that he will be the presiding officer this session. Toward the end of the meetings of that committee last session the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) asked the chairman if redistribution was mentioned in the reference. A little later on the chairman replied:

> As to the question of redistribution, I find that the reference says: that the said committee be instructed to study and make a report of the methods used to effect a redistribution of electoral districts in Canada and other countries, and to make suggestions to the house in connection therewith.

Mr. Butcher was appointed to act as counsel for the committee last session. He proved to be very efficient and rendered a great deal of service to the committee; I hope he will be retained this session. The chairman stated that Mr. Butcher had made some little study of this matter and intended to continue it in other countries, that he would study the methods of redistribution employed there and would be in a position to give the committee a more elaborate report next year.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Is that the report of the committee of last year?

Mr. MacNICOL: The report of the committee of last year. I know Mr. Butcher will be able to render a valuable service to the committee this session, for in making a bit of a survey myself in a number of states in the American union, particularly in Wisconsin, I was told by the chief returning officer in Madison that Mr. Butcher had been there and that he had given him information along the lines he desired. It is for these reasons that I believe this motion should be withdrawn. The special committee appointed last session to deal with the matters referred to in this resolution should be permitted to make a further study of the matter.

As I read the resolution of the hon. member for Champlain, it calls for an almost general redistribution of the constituencies of Canada. That is entirely and totally out of order. The British North America Act states very specifically in section 51:

> On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time, as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

That is, after every ten years. The last census was taken in 1931, and redistribution was considered by parliament in the sessions of 1933 and 1934. Another census is only four years off, and it seems to me to be altogether out of place and out of order, and contrary to the British North America Act, for this house now to consider any question of redistributing the seats of Canada. I think that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) was quite right when he said in this house a few days ago, as reported at page 187 of Hansard:

> If there are to be changes in one constituency here and another one there, the whole question is opened up. I for one would like to see redistribution carried out, not from motives of local expediency but on the basis of true equity in all parts of the dominion.

I subscribe to those words, Mr. Speaker. Several members took part in that debate, and it was brought out very clearly that if redistribution is to be opened up again, perhaps every member of this house may ask for changes to be made in his riding. That is just what the committee in 1933-34 was up against. Many members appealed to the committee to put this village or that town or this or that township in a particular riding, and we had an example of the same thing only a few days ago when during the debate the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) said that he would very much like to have a certain town that was taken out of his riding and made part of the constituency of Macdonald put back into his riding; and the member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir), of course, would like to retain that town, since it gave him a handsome majority in the last election. Both gentlemen are government supporters. It also appeared that the member for Macdonald had a town or village that the member for Souris (Mr. McDonald) would like to have put in his riding. That is the way it goes, and if you reopen the question now, you will have throughout the country a holus-bolus attempt to violate the confederation pact by changing the redistribution that was enacted. The hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Ryan) also referred to his riding, and another member referred to the inequities of population in the different ridings. I shall deal with these two matters a little later on.

In the course of his remarks the mover of the resolution said a few things that I am sure he did not intend to say. I will deal first with his reference to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I do not think for one moment that the hon. gentleman intended to be unkind to the leader of the opposition when he said that the redistribution of 1933 was unfair and was brought about with a view to the party advantage of the late government. He said:

> I shall quote in a few moments certain statements of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who at that time was Prime Minister. . . . In a debate on the imperial agreements the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), said to the right hon. gentleman: "I challenge you to go to the country on the issue of these agreements." This was what the then Prime Minister replied: "Wait till we pass the Representation Act."

There was no relation whatever between the imperial agreements and the necessity for redistribution, and the right hon. leader of the opposition, then Prime Minister, was quite right when he intimated in effect: We will not have an election now. Perhaps it would have been much better for his party if he had had an election then, but as it was not held, no one can say whether it would have been better or worse. But certainly it would have been manifestly unfair to have an election in 1932 or 1933 on the former lay-out of the seats. Quite a number of seats in Canada had less than 19,000 inhabitants, but the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lawson) in that year represented, I believe, something between 130,000 and 136,000, and all the Toronto and Montreal seats and seats in nearly every large city represented from 50,000 to over 100,000. It is a good thing that under the circumstances the British North America Act prevented an election on the old lists.

I have made an exhaustive inquiry into this subject. I have in my desk the election acts of almost every country in the world that conducts parliamentary elections, and I say without hesitation that one of the causes of the troubles we have in Canada is the excessive population that some of us represent, and the very minimum of population that others of us represent. It is only natural that so many people in ridings with overwhelming populations should refuse to go to the polls, because they say: What is the use when it takes ten votes in this riding to equal one vote in another? I hope that when the next redistribution is undertaken, more equality—I do not say equality, but more equality—will be given in the populations that are allocated to the various ridings.

The mover of the resolution has referred to several ridings. He mentioned Drummond-Arthabaska and Dorchester, and he held up a map to illustrate his remarks. I have a whole desk full of maps here which I went to the trouble to get for myself; another gentleman has given me an envelope full of maps of the ridings of Quebec, and I frankly say that many of them look like all the animals that were in Noah's ark. I cannot understand how ridings can be carved out in the way they have been, but it is likely on account of the way the roads run in the various townships, because in the very early days in the parishes the roads may have been laid out along pioneer lines. I have the two maps of Drummond-Arthabaska here, one for the 1922 redistribution and the other for the 1934 redistribution, and I can see hardly any difference. There may be a little, but if anyone takes the trouble to look at the maps he will find that the ridings are almost identical in the two redistributions.

So far as the riding of Dorchester is concerned, apparently in the last redistribution a number of mountain peaks, or certain mountainous territory, was eliminated from the former riding of Dorchester. If you look over the redistribution carried out by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1922, you will find some very curious lay-outs too.

The mover of the resolution spoke of the redistributions of 1933 and 1882, and of the redistribution following the census of 1911. He should have investigated on the redistributions following 1901 and 1921, and he would have seen some very curiously shaped ridings in the province of Quebec. Remember, I am not in any sense in accord with anything that is manifestly unfair and I do not hold with anything that savours of gerrymandering. I agree with the hon. gentleman to that extent. He referred to some other ridings. He cannot have read the statutes of Canada of 1914 and 1915 when he mentioned those ridings. He referred to Nipissing and made the statement that the 1914 act was amended in 1915, and in that regard he was trying to set up the argument that in the past ridings throughout the country have been altered following redistribution. As far as I can ascertain from a careful research into what has taken place after every redistribution, the same procedure has been followed in every instance. In the past, if a name has been misspelled or if a piece of territory has been left out of the riding, or if some insignificant change of that sort has been found to be necessary, then bills have been introduced to rectify these errors. That is what took place in 1915. As I say, the hon. gentleman referred to Nipissing. What was the change there? A township called Hammer was spelled Hanmer, and the act provided that it should be spelled correctly. The township of Kelly was indicated in a particular range whereas it was six ranges below, and yet it remained in the riding. So that so far as Nipissing is concerned the changes of 1915 left it exactly as it had passed through the House of Commons in 1914.

With respect to Quebec East and Quebec West, the hon. member who represents the former constituency (Mr. Lapointe) knows, as do those who sit around him, that there was no change in either of these ridings in the bill of 1915. As regards Quebec East the 1914 bill provided:

> The electoral district of Quebec East which shall consist of the following wards of the city of Quebec, to wit: St. John, Jacques-Cartier, St. Roch, and Limoilou.

All that the bill of 1915 did was to state that Stadacona, which was mentioned as in the riding of Quebec West, was not in Quebec East—absolutely no change from the bill of 1914. In reference to Jacques-Cartier, the position was exactly the same in 1915 as in 1914; all that the bill of 1915 did was to clarify the situation by stating that the riding of Jacques-Cartier should be as follows:

> The electoral district of Jacques-Cartier, which shall be constituted as at present, less the town of Verdun, Outremont, any part of St. Denis ward, at present included in the said district, etc.

As regards St. Denis ward, the 1915 bill merely reaffirmed and clarified the definition of that ward, and with respect to the ridings of Labelle, Hull and Wright, they remained exactly the same as before. With regard to Labelle, Hull and Wright, the township of Southeast Buckingham had been left out of the description of any of them, and it was inserted, for the reason that the people in the township of Southeast Buckingham had a perfect right to vote. It was not mentioned in the first bill but it was inserted afterwards in 1915. It had not been indicated in any of these ridings in the 1914 bill. In the county of Wright the township of North Templeton had been left out of the description; in the bill of 1915 it was included, because it was necessary to show that it existed somewhere, and being in the riding of Wright it was included there. In reference to Portage la Prairie, Springfield and London, we found that the descriptions were not clear enough and the 1915 bill sought to clarify the situation there. The municipal boundaries had been extended, and we had the same thing in the last redistribution in connection with the ridings of Hamilton. We used what we thought was the latest map, but it turned out afterwards that the city of Hamilton had altered its boundaries, so that the description we gave of Hamilton was not correct, and the amending bill merely clarified the description of the ridings.

When, therefore, my hon. friend tries to justify his claim for a general redistribution, he is entirely out of court so far as the examples he has given are concerned, because in no single instance was any riding added to or taken from other than as I have stated; it was merely a question whether some place had been left out or some point needed clarifying with respect to the boundaries.

Since 1924 the chief returning officer has had full power to do all that was done in the bill of 1915, and after the last redistribution, where some names were misspelled or certain boundaries were not properly described, the chief returning officer himself, in writing up the descriptions for publication, did what had been provided for by the bill of 1915.

I wish now to say a word with regard to Ontario. I happened to be chairman of the Ontario committee, and I can state without hesitation that never before in the history of the province had the eighty-two seats gone through with as little objection as they did in 1934. For my part, basing my intentions on an exhaustive inquiry into election acts, I set before myself, as a member of the committee, certain principles which I determined to follow and to recommend to the other members of the committee. One of those principles was to make as few changes as possible, for I am not in accord with holus-bolus changes. The second was to follow the municipal and county boundaries as closely as this could be done, and the third was, in the case of large cities like Toronto, to divide the city north and south so that each riding would represent a cross section of the community without segregating people of any particular race, creed or colour. As is done in so many of the states of the American union, we tried to have a cross section of the people represented in parliament. In the United States they endeavour to have a cross section of the community in their congressional districts, and I was of the opinion that we should follow that principle in Ontario.

I felt that we ought to follow the quota as nearly as possible. The quota for a seat in the last redistribution was 44,217. I considered that unless we violated county boundaries, where the population was not too far from that number it would be better to adhere as nearly as possible to the quota, but in case of any county that came reasonably close to the quota it would be better to adhere to county boundaries. These are principles which were followed, and which, as far as I can ascertain, are followed in most states of the American union. I am not particularly interested to follow the United States wherever they want to lead, but the boundaries of their seats are much more unnform than ours in Canada.

What was the result in Ontario? There were thirty-two seats out of eighty-two left without any change whatever. We adhered to county boundaries completely in the case of eighteen seats. In four cases we placed two whole counties in one riding. In two cases we placed one whole county and a portion of another in one riding. There are twenty-six seats wholly within a county but not the whole of the county. Of course I am now speaking apart from Toronto and London and other large cities. Where a town or village was on a county line we determined that that town or village should not be gerrymandered from one riding to another because a member of parliament might want that town placed in his riding or out of it. We decided that the town or village should go to the county that its reeve went to, and in the case of two towns, one in North Essex and one in South Essex, towns which were formerly in Essex ridings, I communicated with the two counties and found their reeves went to Chatham in Kent, so the two towns were put into the county of Kent. I think that is sound doctrine. I believe that only in the case of one village in this province was that principle violated. I know the member will not want me to say anything about it; it was not of very great moment, and as we had carried our point all the way through to have all the towns within the county lines go to the counties their reeves went to, except that one, I think we did fairly well.

In the case of Ontario thirty seats have a population exceeding the quota; fourteen seats are within 20 per cent of the quota. In the case of some seats, perhaps half a dozen altogether out of eighty-two, nobody knows better than yourself, sir, that I was not particularly pleased with some of them. As the chairman of the committee said the other night, in the process of making a redistribution bill there is throughout the course of discussions considerable wire-pulling, you might call it, to have this town or that township in a certain riding; but on the whole I can state without fear of successful contradiction that never in the history of this province were the seats more uniformly and fairly redistributed, by and large, than they were in 1933. I qualify that in regard to two or three that I was not personally in favour of, but there has to be some give and take. As chairman for Ontario at that time I had the great pleasure of seeing the whole lay-out for this province go through almost unanimously.

As far as Canada generally is concerned, what happened? Ten ridings have less than half the quota, based upon the 1931 population. Forty-seven have less than 30,000. One hundred and fifty ridings have less than the quota; ninety-five are over the quota; sixty-three are over 50,000; nine are over 70,000; four are over 80,000, and two have double the quota, and a third almost double the quota. I am sorry to say that the last mentioned, and one of those with double the quota, are in Ontario. They were so arranged in the end for the sake of harmony, but personally I was not in accord with that.

Now as to other countries; as the committee which has been set up by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe, Quebec East) is going to consider that question, I do not think I need at this moment state what other countries are doing. I am prepared to wait until the elections and franchise committee meets, and I shall submit to that committee what other countries are doing. I trust that this question will be thoroughly gone into, as I am convinced it should be. While I believe we have in this country as good a system of voting as any in the world, the same as they have in Great Britain; while I am altogether opposed to any of those fake systems, as they are called in New Zealand, and while I am in favour of reasonable consideration to rural ridings over city ridings, I still feel that there should be a closer relationship between the number of voters in ridings in the cities and the number of voters in country ridings. I hope this will receive consideration. There should be no hiving of any population. I have no comment to make about people of any nationality, but in a city or district where there is a large body of people of one race and perhaps an equally large body of another race, I am not in accord with the hiving of either of those races so that they will be able to elect one of themselves merely because of race. I am strongly in favour of the cross section principle, letting all the people feel that they are all Canadians and that they are voting for the men who, they think, can best represent them.

I am in favour of maintaining the simple ballot. I have under my hand a ballot used in the second last presidental election in the United States. This is not a simple ballot, if the voter has to mark on it those for whom he wishes to vote. I assume there are about 200 names on this ballot. But that difficulty is got over by the use of machines. The voter is instructed to pull down a lever, by doing which he votes for every name on his party ticket on this ballot. If he wishes to "cross" his ticket, he has to take this big ballot and mark the individual names. But it is not the custom to do that; they are thoroughly educated to pull down the lever and "vote the ticket." Our own present system of voting is the simplest known, and I am strongly in favour of it and hope it will be maintained.

I am in favour of giving fair consideration to the city ridings. I believe all the Toronto seats have over 50,000, and I think the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Factor) represents a still larger population than some of the rest of us do. There should be something set up after the manner adopted in Australia, whereby there should be a settled relationship between rural ridings and city ridings so that there will be more equality, with a little preference in numbers to the rural areas and reasonable fairness to the city ridings. At present people in my city, and I am sure in the great city of Montreal, must feel like refusing to go out to vote, when they see that a riding of eighty or ninety thousand has no more power in the House of Commons than a riding of eighteen thousand. Those conditions should be changed, as they have been changed in many other countries, so far as I know.

As I am getting near the end of my time, Mr. Speaker, I would just add that in Ohio, Illinois and Wisconsin, into which I inquired thoroughly this summer, the ridings are all laid out so that as nearly as possible they are the same size, and they are within county lines. In no case do they cross the county line except in the senatorial seats. That is one thing on which the American citizen usually prides himself very greatly, namely, equal voting power, and in Canada we must get nearer to that. I could add a good deal more, but I see that my time is up and so I shall conclude by suggesting that the mover withdraw this resolution, and that whatever there is to be considered along this line should be referred to the committee which has been set up by the Minister of Justice under the very able chairmanship of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell).

Mr. W. P. MULOCK (York North): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate the mover of this resolution, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle). This is a matter of interest to many people who were formerly in the riding that I have the honour to represent in this house.

The two points involved in this question would appear to be: First, has the parliament of Canada power to deal with this subject at this time, and second, if it has that power, are there injustices which should be corrected by this parliament? I submit that the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), while he dealt with section 51 of the British North America Act, did not deal with either section 40 or section 52. I submit that section 51 deals only with proportionate representation as between the provinces, and not with electoral boundaries within provinces. In support of that contention I would refer hon. members to Clement's Canadian Constitution, third edition, page 43, line 19, which makes it very clear:

> Under section 40 the power of the dominion parliament to alter electoral districts is clearly established. Section 51 applies only to the readjustment of the representation of the provinces as between themselves, and has no reference to the boundaries of the electoral districts in each province, and it would appear therefore that the readjustment under this section is a mere matter of mathematics. The wording of section 52 bears out this construction, indicating as it does that the essential thing in the scheme of representation is the proportionate representation of the province. The electoral districts may be altered at any time (section 40), and the total number of members increased (section 52) by the parliament of Canada, "provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this act is not thereby disturbed."

Surely this would seem to be a very clear exposition of the facts in regard to that matter.

The next question is whether this change should be made by parliament at this time. We have heard from the hon. member for Champlain and the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Mallette), who produced some rather peculiarly shaped diagrams showing the boundaries of ridings in the province of Quebec. We have also heard from the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. McDonald), both from the province of Manitoba, who did not seem to be entirely satisfied. We have heard also from the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacLennan) and the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Ryan), both from the maritimes. As I listened to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart), who acted as chairman of the last committee, deal with the question the other night, when he stated that there was agreement throughout Canada except in Quebec and a few ridings in Saskatchewan, I thought it was the duty of a member from Ontario to make it quite clear that there was not perfect agreement in all the ridings of this province.

Before dealing with this subject I should like to make it quite clear that I am not asking to have any people removed from the riding of York North. I am here to ask for justice for the people of the township of Markham and the village of Stouffville, in regard to the treatment they received at the hands of the last redistribution committee. I have in my hand a diagram of the riding of York North as it existed before the last redistribution, together with a diagram of the riding as it appeared after the redistribution, and I quite understand what was meant the other night when the hon. member for Leeds said that this problem was almost baffling. When they reached the north end of my riding they were at lake Simcoe. They could not do anything there. Down the side they had Cook's bay, and they could not very well drain that. But as they worked south their troubles became less and less. Finally they added on a bit to the south, took out a part here and a jog there—which was the village of Stouffville—and so on. I might say that at the time the last redistribution took place, York North was the one really rural riding of the three York seats. Markham and Stouffville are definitely rural districts, but these people were taken out against their wishes and against their interests, and moved into a riding which is predominantly urban.

Mr. THOMPSON: Might I ask the hon. gentleman how these districts, Markham and Stouffville, voted?

Mr. MULOCK: In the old riding of York North I think the party which my hon. friend has the honour to represent in this house won one poll.

Mr. THOMPSON: And the hon. member would like those people back?

Mr. MULOCK: For the information of the hon. gentleman I may say that I had a very, very substantial majority, and I thank him for his interest.

I can show on this diagram where they took out the village of Stouffville and where Markham was before it was removed from the riding and placed in the riding of York East. I was also very much interested the other night when we were told of the great care which was exercised in this matter, and when we were assured that this redistribution was not rushed through. Why, they started it at one session and finished it at the next. They slipped in one particular at least; they disfranchised the people in the east half of Richmond Hill. They were not included in any riding, and it was not until after the committee had risen and I drew the matter to the attention of the chief electoral officer that they were added to the riding of York North.

But one might think, after listening to this exposition, that this change was perhaps not based upon population. The hon. member for Davenport was very much interested in the question of population. Just let us see how much there was in that. There were 5,596 taken out of the constituency of York North and a new part containing 5,527 people was added. When the work was completed and 11,000 people were moved, the population was reduced by sixty-nine. I should think there might be some lingering doubt in the minds of some hon. members as to whether perhaps there was not just a little consideration to party expediency when that redistribution took place.

As evidence of the views of the people in the constituency I have telegrams and if hon. members would like to hear them, with their permission I shall be only too glad to read a sample:

> In case of redistribution would strongly urge that Markham township be again placed in North York. Being essentially a rural community our interests can only be fairly represented when united in a rural constituency.

That is the point. These people are from a rural constituency, and the wish of the great majority of them is that they should be returned to a rural constituency. On their behalf I am asking only that justice be given to the people of the township of Markham and the village of Stouffville, and that, as suggested by the hon. member for Champlain, the matter be referred to a committee.

Mr. L. D. TREMBLAY (Dorchester) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have a few observations to offer with regard to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle). First, I wish to join with the previous speaker in congratulating the hon. member for his motion. While listening, a moment ago, to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), I realized that the hon. member for Champlain was perfectly right in raising this question. The resolution asks for the appointment of a committee for the single purpose of giving justice to the people of Canada. In support of that statement, I can but quote his motion which is as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient that the Representation Act, 1933, should be amended in such manner as to bring about a more equitable readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons and to effect thereby a more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts, and that a special committee be appointed to study this matter.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain thought fit, a few days ago, to point out as a crying injustice the distorted outline of the county I have the honour to represent in this house. He was perfectly right. The redistribution which must take place after each decennial census was so ordered with a view to balancing the population in the various constituencies and to enable communities about equal as to number to be represented in the house, in so far as possible. When the hon. member showed you the map of the electoral district, he did not mention the size of its population, which I know, of course, better than he does; but if you consult the report of the chief electoral officer for 1930, you will see that instead of balancing the population as between Dorchester and the adjoining counties of Bellechasse and Beauce,—liberal counties, and known as such—they accentuated the difference in number. Kindly permit me, Mr. Speaker, to quote a few figures. For instance, before the last census, the population of the electoral district of Dorchester was 29,503. The adjoining riding of Beauce had a population of 52,700. My predecessor, who evidently cared no more about the balance which he was to try to reestablish, gave the county of Beauce four parishes that belonged to the county of Dorchester, when the county of Beauce had already twice as big a population as the other one.

Well, you may say that there was perhaps some geographical reason to justify the attitude taken by the former member for Dorchester. In my opinion, there might have been three reasons: the geographical conditions, the psychological causes, and, last but not least, the political motive. As to the geographical conditions, if you will kindly look over this map of the constituency of Dorchester which I am now showing to the house, you will easily recognize a likeness to the sphinx. Look at the features, it is the sphinx. Look at the nose, the chin, everything is perfect. Facing that, there are two other parishes, St. Zacharie and St. Aurelie, which, being a part of Dorchester county for federal purposes since many years, had asked, only a few years before the general election of 1935, to be reincorporated in the county of Dorchester for provincial purposes. The municipal council, the mayor and the authorities of the parish had asked that these parishes be made a part of the county of Dorchester for both provincial and federal purposes. They readily admitted within the boundaries of Dorchester the good people of St. Aurelie and St. Zacharie, and everybody was happy. Once elected, my predecessor said: No longer will you belong to Dorchester; from now on you will be included in the constituency of Beauce for federal purposes, in spite of the fact that you have just secured, for provincial purposes, the right of being included in Dorchester. Perhaps my predecessor is an archeologist; possibly he is. This morning, as I looked over this map of the county of Dorchester, which I am now showing you, I felt that he may have been gifted with such a talent. If my predecessor had not taken off the whole area shown here, which, naturally and geographically, belonged to Dorchester, he would not have had this picture of a sphinx. There was just one reason for taking away those parishes; it was neither a geographical nor a psychological reason, because in the county council the authorities of those parishes had requested to be included in the county of Dorchester, which I have the honour of representing here, but there was Mr. Gagnon who thought they were cumbersome, not, as I say, from a geographical or psychological but, to be sure, from a political standpoint, for at the election of 1930, these parishes gave, respectively: St. Aurelie, a Liberal majority of 76, and St. Zacharie, a majority of 173, also Liberal. As a result, Mr. Gagnon requested that these parishes be included in the constituency of Beauce.

From an archaeological standpoint, the sphinx would not have been complete had not something been taken off here in order that its head might be properly delineated. There was a small parish in this first corner, the parish of Saint-Luc. It naturally belonged to the county of Dorchester, that is, to the townships of Ware and Standon; the name of the latter had to be cut in half, because one-half of the township had been included in Bellechasse. Well, my predecessor —I do not wish to insinuate that he had political or electoral motives—cut a hole here in the county, so that the head of the sphinx might be perfect. He made the drawing, he removed the small parish of Saint-Luc and had it included in the county of Bellechasse solely for his own protection. But, some might say, the people of Saint-Luc may possibly, from a psychological standpoint, have preferred to be included in Bellechasse. I say no and my colleague from Bellechasse would tell you, if he were here. I like very much the people of Saint-Luc, but the surroundings are somewhat unfamiliar to them in Bellechasse, where they have been transplanted only through the wishes of the former member for Dorchester in this house. That is easily understood; those who, to-day, are citizens of Saint-Luc, formerly belonged to Standon and Sainte-Germaine, which are within the townships of Ware and Standon. Mr. Speaker, these people attended the meeting which my opponent and I jointly held in Standon, and they were there, not as Dorchester citizens or electors—they belonged to Bellechasse at the last election—but they could not understand why, for instance, they, who were legitimate children of the county of Dorchester should have been transplanted into Bellechasse solely through the will of my omnipotent predecessor. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am giving you an explanation for this first hole that was cut into the county of Dorchester. You may say that there was perhaps another reason than the geographical conditions. But I am showing you that it is absolutely unreasonable from a psychological angle, and I have also shown that it was wholly unreasonable from the geographical standpoint. However, I agree that there is a political reason, and it is this: The small parish of St. Luc, which numbers about 150 voters, gave the Liberal party a majority of 125 votes in 1930, and again a majority of 138 votes in 1935. If you will kindly follow my argument you will see that there is another piece of antique art which I again consider as perfect. You have here the lion's tail, that is the sphinx's tail. You know that the sphinx had the head of a man and the body of a lion. They tried to draw something like a lion's tail. That is how they took away a beautiful parish of which the county of Dorchester was so proud, I mean the parish of St. Maxime de Scott. From an artistic point of view I agree that my predecessor was perfectly right; but geographically and psychologically speaking, I repeat that these people rightly belonged to Dorchester. As to voting purposes, the former member had every good reason to send them to Beauce. Again if you will consult the reports of the chief electoral officer for 1930 and 1935, you will notice that St. Maxime gave a majority of 91 to the Liberal party in 1930, and that after it had been transferred to Beauce county, it still gave the Liberal party a majority of 190, as a protest against what had been done. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to submit these facts to the house, because I feel that the motion of the hon. member for Champlain is fully justified. I admit that sometimes we may, for political reasons, allow a few small trifling injustices to slip in, but it is unworthy of a man who wishes to represent his fellow citizens in a house like this one to say, for instance, to thousands of people: Although you wish to belong to Dorchester, I am going to ship you to other counties and you will be part of them, simply because at the coming elections I want to be elected, and secure a majority for my party.

Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, I shall say a few words in English, in reply to my hon. friend from Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), although he has left the chamber.

(Text) Mr. Speaker, a short time ago the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) wanted to know if the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle) was asking for a committee to redistribute all the counties of Canada. That certainly is not the intention of the hon. member for Champlain. His motion shows that he asks this house to appoint a committee to render justice. The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, it is expedient that the Representation Act, 1933, should be amended in such manner as to bring about a more equitable readjustment—

I cannot see why any hon. member should be afraid of a motion such as this. I do not think anyone would object if the hon. member for Davenport appeared before the committee which the hon. member for Champlain suggests should be appointed, and demonstrated that such readjustment would be unjust. I think the hon. member for Champlain is perfectly right in asking for a committee to study those matters which were neglected in 1933. I ask the hon. member for Davenport to look at Hansard to-morrow morning and read the translation of the remarks I have just made in French and then tell me whether he does not believe a redistribution to be absolutely necessary in my riding in order to give justice to those whom I represent in this house.

I shall conclude by saying that I do not think any hon. member should object to the motion of the hon. member for Champlain. All he asks is that justice be given to the population of Canada. That is all that anyone who realizes his responsibilities could ask for, and I think the house should unanimously support the hon. member for Champlain.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have from time to time heard that it was the intention of the government of the day, with its large majority, to amend the Representation Act passed by this house in 1933. I do hope the government will reconsider its intention in that regard. I listened with great interest to the speeches that were made by the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution (Mr. Brunelle) and by others who supported it, and I cannot but think they have failed to appreciate just what the difficulties in this country are with respect to a redistribution of seats. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock), for instance, had an erroneous impression as to the powers of this parliament. This parliament, as he pointed out, under section 52 of the British North America Act can increase the representation of the House of Commons. But that has been done. We have settled that at 245 members. There is in the statute a provision as to sixty-five members from Quebec. The Dominion of Canada is now entitled to be represented in this house by 245 members. That is what section 52 provides for. We cannot increase the number from Quebec; we cannot diminish it; we are bound absolutely by the rule that Quebec has a fixed number of sixty-five members, and the ratio that exists between that number of sixty-five members and the population of that province means in the end that Canada is represented by 245 members in this house. Parliament has taken those steps; that cannot be changed.

But what can be changed is the boundaries of the seats. There are those who contend that this should not be done, and I think they are right because it has never been done except to correct clerical errors. Section 51 of the British North America Act provides:

> On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time, as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules.

Then follow the rules. Constitutional practice has been uniform that once parliament has completed its duty and made a redistribution, that redistribution is not amended by changing the boundaries of constituencies between that time and the date of the next redistribution. Whether that power exists there may be some doubt, but broadly and generally the rule is that parliament can always amend what it enacts, can always repeal what it has done. But there are some things parliament cannot do within the constitution, and one of them is to increase its membership beyond 245.

The resolution as it reads certainly contemplates a change being made; it asks that the act passed in 1933 be amended to bring about a more equitable readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons. There can be no change in that; that is settled at 245 members. It is settled as a matter of mathematics that Ontario has eighty-two members. It is settled that Prince Edward Island, for instance, has four, because it is provided by the constitutional amendment that its membership shall never be less than its representation in the Senate. The same applies with equal force to New Brunswick. That part of the resolution is absolutely bad, and I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will admit at once that there cannot be a more equitable redistribution of the representation in the House of Commons. Let us look at the rest of the resolution:

> —and to effect thereby a more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts.

"A more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts"—that is not very happily put, but it means that the electoral districts shall be altered; that the boundaries shall be changed. Mr. Speaker, I plead with the government not to do that. Not for a minute do I deny that the act of 1933 was not perfect. There has not been a redistribution bill passed by this parliament that has been perfect. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) knows of the long struggle that took place during part of three hot days in connection with the redistribution bill of 1933. He knows, as every member of this house who was present then knows, that there was no desire to seek party advantage, as was suggested by the mover of the resolution, because nobody could know what would be to party advantage. That is the obvious answer; nobody had any idea what advantage it might or might not be, because the population had changed. No one could determine what the new electorate might decide.

We were confronted with the situation that in the older provinces there were county boundaries; in the west there were not. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia there are county boundaries; in Quebec and Ontario there have been county boundaries since the establishment of those provinces, and one of the difficulties which has been experienced particularly with respect to the sixty-five seats in Quebec is that if you adjust the representation on a population basis you disturb the whole county system. There are a million people or thereabouts on the island of Montreal. If you divide that by 44,000 you will see at once that the island of Montreal would have about twenty-five seats, leaving forty seats for the rest of Quebec. Now I ask my hon. friend who wants to bring about this new change, what is he going to do about that? Is he going to say—and this would be the ideal condition—that one man's vote in Montreal shall have the same weight as one man's vote in some very small county that I might name?

Mr. POULIOT: Levis.

Mr. BENNETT: Levis; that is an illustration. Is a man to have the same weight to his vote in every county of the confederation? If so, then at once the island of Montreal must have about twenty-five seats, and the other forty seats in Quebec must be determined by a uniting of counties and a disturbance of conditions which have existed since confederation. Do not let us blink the thing; let us look it fairly in the eye. If the resolution is to be carried into effect it means just that. In Toronto, it is the same story; in Hamilton, the same story; in London, the same story. The city seats will have the major representation in parliament because at the moment there is a larger proportion of the population in urban than in rural centres. If those who are interested in this matter will take the trouble to look at the Hansard of that day, they will find that when a motion was made by myself to refer the redistribution to a committee, I pointed out certain elementary rules which would have to be observed. Although we had settled the basis of representation, although we knew the quota of electors entitled to a seat in this house, we at once frankly realized that if we stuck to that we would do a great injustice to rural populations and bring about such an alteration in the boundaries of counties in the older provinces as would create a disturbance that could not be quieted inside a generation.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: At six o'clock I had just pointed out that county boundaries had been respected in all redistributions which had been made in this country since confederation, and by reason of that fact great difficulties have arisen in endeavouring to provide that each vote shall have equal weight in every part of Canada.

I now propose to devote my attention to another phase of this matter. If this redistribution bill is to go to a committee it must involve the consideration of the whole 245 seats, and if the mover desires to have effect given to his contention he must be prepared to see the rural part of Quebec lose a very large part of its present representation. Equally must Ontario be prepared to see the same thing follow.

I am going to give one illustration, because this was a matter that gave me much concern in 1933. In the eastern part of Ontario we have Glengarry, Stormont, Prescott and Russell. If we were to give effect to the principle contended for by the mover of this resolution, one of these counties, if not two, would disappear, and the county of Welland, in which area there is a population of 120,000, would of course be entitled to three members. It now has one. The eastern part of Ontario, by reason of the preservation of county boundaries in Russell, Prescott, Glengarry and Stormont, now returning four members, would lose at least two.

The committee in 1933, considering these matters, were willing to deal with them in what they conceived to be a broad and generous manner, realizing that there was not equal weight attaching to every vote, and they laid down the principle, which I believe the then leader of the opposition (Mr Mackenzie King) regarded as sound, that because rural populations were smaller than urban it was desirable to lower the basis or standard of representation, in numbers, in these constituencies. In Canada there are very few rural constituencies, in fact I think none, that have a population of 44,000. If this resolution means anything it means that the rural population of Canada must be placed on the basis of one man, one vote, equality with the urban population, because the hon. member talks about absolute justice, and absolute justice means just that. It means nothing more and nothing less, involving the adjustment of representation of 245 seats, so that each man's vote shall have equal weight in every part of the country.

I recall the attitude taken by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who came into office in 1896 on a redistribution that had been made by his predecessors in office. Although he went to the country in 1900, my memory is that prior to that date he made no modification in the boundaries of constituencies, because the redistribution consequent upon the census could not be made following 1901 because the census had not been taken. Under the census of 1911 a redistribution was carried out under the government of Sir Robert Borden. At that time I was a member of the committee and I remember the difficulties we experienced before we could arrive at an agreement. Then there was the census of 1921, with the same difficulty. If we take the basis suggested by the mover of the resolution, I can point to-night to many more inequalities in the redistribution of 1921 than in the redistribution of 1933. What is more, within the sound of my voice in this house there are hon. members who, carrying their minds back, must realize that that is so. Why? Because absolute justice is impossible if you are to give the rural population the position which we have given them and if you are to consider the county boundaries as having any importance and not concede to the cities and their population the same position you accord to the others. The 1911 census was followed by a redistribution by Sir Robert Borden's government, and that was followed by a redistribution on the basis of the 1921 census. A government under the present Prime Minister effectuated that redistribution, and although there were many difficulties and differences of opinion, no one suggested that a new statute should be passed to meet the situation.

Let me recall two or three more facts before I conclude. When the committee was set up in 1932 it endeavoured to reach an agreement. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Elliott), if I remember rightly, was a member of that committee. The members of that committee were at once confronted with every one of the difficulties to which I have just alluded, and finally they arrived at what was regarded as a fair working arrangement in British Columbia. As I shall presently point out, that was agreed upon. It is quite right for any member of this house to say that the fact that a committee agrees upon something does not necessarily prove that it is correct and just; but it does indicate that the members of the committee from various sections of the house came to the conclusion, having regard to the difficulties they had to meet, that this was not an unfair arrangement with respect to British Columbia. As regards Alberta, I can readily recall the difficulties which arose in getting in the number of seats in the districts in which the population was in that province. The then member for Bow River, Mr. Garland, was very much offended at the method that had to be adopted, and the then member for Medicine Hat had to follow up the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway to get his population in.

When I was a member of the committee we had all the seats provided for but one, and it became an omnibus seat, known as Bow River, an area as large as Prince Edward Island if not larger. It was divided by rivers, the great Bow river splitting it in two. In Calgary my position as a member was made more dangerous and difficult by the redistribution. I consented to it gladly in the hope that the committee would be able to provide, in the other two seats, adjustments which might be compensatory. The result was that the committee agreed upon it, and there was no discussion in the house, except that the then member for Bow River felt that his seat was rather oddly shaped. And it was; there is no doubt about that. But having regard to the population it was almost impossible to make the adjustment otherwise.

As regards Saskatchewan, when the present member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), who was then also member for Melville, saw the proposed map he stuck his cane through it; he was so offended. As an old member of this house he contended that it was an indecent sort of thing to change the boundaries of his constituency on the basis of population. There is no doubt, strictly speaking, that if the mover of this resolution is to have effect given to his contention, that seat should not have been left as it was. But at times there is a sense of comradeship among men in this house, and the then member presented his case, thinking it was fair and right that the boundaries of his constituency should not be disturbed. He was not a young man but had served his country for many years and had been a minister of the crown, and so the committee finally agreed to leave the boundaries as he wanted them. Then my hon. friend from the Battlefords had some difficulty about his seat.

Mr. McINTOSH: North Battleford.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. He will recall the circumstances. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) contended that Prince Albert was being widely expanded by having included within it certain sections that had theretofore belonged to the constituency of Rosthern.

Mr. DUNNING: Melfort.

Mr. BENNETT: Melfort, yes; thank you. It is perhaps within the memory of some hon. members here that we did endeavour to make a compromise which would meet with general approval, and in the end the adjustments that were made were regarded as reasonably fair. I shall go no further than that.

In the Manitoba redistribution, of which the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) has complained so bitterly, the committee had great difficulty, because Portage la Prairie is a city which contains nearly half the population of Manitoba, outside Winnipeg. Should they get their representation vote for vote and thereby have half the seats, or should there be an adjustment along the lines I have indicated? In the end the general sense of the committee was that it would be unfair to do that. Portage la Prairie happens to be a community of some size. It was difficult to include in it the surrounding area, but this had to be done in order to be able to provide for the population on any reasonably proportionate basis, and county lines there and generally in western Canada have not become so important. Strange as it may sound, the committee agreed to that redistribution in Manitoba.

We come then to Ontario. I have already sketched some of the difficulties; I am not going to recall them here to-night. But if this motion carries and effect is given to it in the terms in which it is written, it will be very much to the detriment of those who sit to the right of the Speaker. That is all I can say. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock) pointed out certain conditions in connection with Markham. I wonder if he told the house where these places had been in previous distributions. No one knows better than the Postmaster General (Mr. Elliott) about the difficulties in Ontario. The difficulty of trying to balance populations becomes almost like a complicated crossword puzzle in these small communities.

I have already mentioned the position in Quebec, where we find the great island of Montreal and other city communities, such a community, for instance, as Drummondville, and a small community like Dorchester. The difficulties can hardly be overstated.

As regards the lower provinces, I was amazed at the statement made the other day by the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Ryan). New Brunswick had to lose a member on the redistribution. Saint John was a double member constituency, and on the basis of population the loss had to fall there. That is all there was about it. In the northern part of the province, if we keep in mind county divisions, there were Restigouche, Madawaska, then Gloucester, far more people than the unit of population called for. There were Northumberland, Kent, each with its quota. Kings and Queens were united as Royal; there was nothing else to do. York and Sunbury had been combined; so had Carleton and Victoria. When the hon. member suggested some ulterior agreement or understanding he surely overlooked the fact that New Brunswick had to lose a member and the only place where this could be done was the double constituency of St. John-Albert.

Mr. RYAN: I made no suggestion of ulterior motive.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, the hon. gentleman said, "We are glad to know now how this happened." That is how he started his speech. He said, "We had been wondering a long time how this was done, or consented to." If he will look at his remarks he will see that they are open to only one construction. The loss was of a then Conservative seat.

Then we come to Nova Scotia. In that province counties had to be joined together or else divided in a manner that would be very unsatisfactory to the people concerned. My hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley) knows the difficulty better than anyone else. Mr. Short, then member for Digby, found himself without a seat, and Pictou no longer was a county by itself. The situation there was one of extreme difficulty.

Mr. ILSLEY: Pictou is preserved.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The other constituency is—

Mr. ILSLEY: Colchester-Hants.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, thank you. I do not recall them as well as I used to. Then, as to Prince Edward Island, there is a constitutional limitation upon the number going below the representation in the Senate, namely four.

There is a final argument which, I think, should have some influence with the government. With all these, shall I say consents and agreements, made not because it was felt that it was absolute justice but because it was believed it was the best thing that could be done under the circumstances, the House of Commons was asked to adopt the report. If hon. members will look at the report they will find that we told the house frankly of the difficulties. The Minister of Justice felt that the province of Quebec had not been fairly redistributed, and he made a statement to that effect with respect to some counties. I confess I am not in a position to express an opinion about that, except that the general agreement arrived at was that while in places there were anomalies, nevertheless it was the best that could be done in the circumstances. Is not this the answer? When that redistribution was finally put to the house for third reading, out of 245 members, fifteen voted against it. That is not bad, is it? Fifteen remained here on May 27 to vote against that bill on its third reading. Here are their names:

Messrs. Boulanger, Casgrain, Chevrier, Deslauriers, Fafard, Ferland, Sir Eugène Fiset, Gardiner, Mackenzie King, McIntosh, McKenzie (Assiniboia), Malcolm, Motherwell, Séguin, Stewart (Edmonton West).

Some of us felt that there is such a thing as ingratitude, having regard to one name I mentioned, that of the hon. member for Melville, when it is recalled what we did in an attempt to meet his wishes, based not on anything other than what one might call the friendly consideration of men for an hon. gentleman who had been for a long time a member of legislatures and parliaments.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): How many voted for it?

Mr. BENNETT: Forty-five.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Out of 245.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; because they were satisfied, they did not see fit to come here and protest. One has only to look at the record. They were here; they heard the speech of the Minister of Justice; they need not have gone home; they could have stayed and recorded their vote against the report. Fifteen out of 245 voted against it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I say a word?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I was in the house, because I made a statement, but I am not recorded as among those voting, the reason being that I was paired with the then Minister of Justice. He was satisfied; I was not satisfied but I could not vote.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister knows that I am stating the position very moderately when I say that the interest in the matter narrowed itself down to a very few people indeed. We endeavoured to meet the views of the present Prime Minister, and I think we did it fairly well. I recall distinctly I myself took a hand at the map at the time, and the same may be said with respect to others.

I shall content myself with merely stating these facts. There can be no denial of them or of their accuracy. If we desire to have an absolutely just redistribution bill where every man's vote has equal weight, it will make a very great change in this country to the detriment of the rural population, and I think that would be unfair. I believe it is sound to depart from a fixed rule of 44,000 for each seat. I could give the populations, but I conceive that to be wholly beside the question. To do at this time what the resolution proposes would be to concede the right of this parliament to pass a new redistribution bill. I am not discussing the legal side of the matter, but I do say that the constitutional practice as crystallized by succeeding governments since confederation is that they have never endeavoured to pass a second redistribution bill. So far as any expression of opinion would constitute a guide it certainly was the view of the leaders of confederation, of Macdonald, who was alleged to have gerrymandered in 1882, I think it was, and of his successor in office, that parliament was more or less functus officio as a constitutional institution when the redistribution had been completed.

See what we are being asked to do. We are asked to say that after every election the successful party can come in and with its majority gerrymander the constituencies, if necessary, regardless of the fact that certainly not more than one redistribution bill is contemplated by constitutional practice. Parliament always has power to repeal a statute that it has passed. The British parliament is constantly asserting that right, but we are being invited to take a desperate position, one which I think the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution should think over very carefully and, I would hope, abandon; for he cannot ask us to deal with individual seats; we must deal with them all. Right here in Ontario what we did to prevent what I call racial animosities in connection with those seats will find no justification except the purpose for which that action was taken. We knew they could not be Conservative seats; there was no question about that, but rather than endanger the situation and engender strife I was advised—and the House of Commons took the view—that it was perhaps desirable to leave those small seats with members in rural communities, and let that great peninsula in western Ontario—I think Welland is the name of it—be represented by at least two members too few. I knew that was not in accordance with the theory that each vote has equal weight, but I could go over all the constituencies, indicate the population of each and point out the anomalies that exist.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that it will be found very difficult to arrive at any conclusion based upon a harmonizing of rural interests and urban claims and the maintenance of some regard for county boundaries, and even approximate any realization of the hope that each vote is to have equal weight in a redistributed country. So, although I know the government have a majority; although I know they have the power; although I know it is alleged that promises have been made, I put this to the Minister of Justice, as the chief law officer of the crown: 1. By constitutional practice has there ever been any interference with redistribution bills except for the purpose of correcting errors? 2. Have we not always had regard to county boundaries? 3. Have we not made a sharp distinction between the number of electors that should be comprised within rural areas as compared with urban areas? 4. Is it desirable, as a matter of public policy, apart from constitutional practice, because a government has come back with a large majority, to have not the minority but that majority complain that the redistribution which sent them to this house was bad? That must be a thought for consideration.

I have no suggestion in the world that this was a perfect redistribution bill. I said in the house three or four years ago that I knew its weaknesses, and I know them now. But I say to members of this house that if they set up a new committee they will find that such a committee, if it is to give effect to the motion now under discussion, will change the whole personnel of parliament; for rural populations then must find themselves grouped together without regard to county boundaries, and urban representation must be increased to a point that certainly will be offensive to the rural electors of this country.

There is just one thing I desire to say to the hon. gentleman who moved this motion. Surely he does not think, when I made the suggestion that we could not have an election until after redistribution, we had any idea as to what the redistribution should be, in dealing with the question of the Ottawa agreements. That was one isolated sentence which he took from my remarks, and I think in fairness he should not have done so. When he suggested that I pointed out that if we could not agree we would have to have recourse to brute majority to wind up the matter because we could not delay it any longer, he overlooked the fact that my one plea was that we might be able to reach an agreement and obviate the necessity of the majority enforcing its will upon the minority. Those who have read redistribution discussions in other years and who have compared them with the result of our efforts in 1933, not saying that the bill is good or bad, but with regard to the unity of the committee, I feel certain will have to conclude that the measure of success which attended their efforts was very much greater than or at least as great as that which attended the efforts of committees in previous years. In South Africa they make the redistribution by a commission. In England it is done by judges. In Canada the Liberal party was of the opinion that it might be done by a committee of the house; Sir Wilfrid Laurier was certain that it might be properly done in that way. I think if members of this new House of Commons understood the effort and the time that men devote to an effort to arrive at unity, they would realize just what is involved in a resolution of this kind.

I can only ask the government, with all the conviction of which I am capable, not to open this dangerous question on the basis of the terms of this resolution. If I were to speak politically I can only say that if the motion now before us is carried, nothing would be more beneficial to the party with which I am associated. That is, if equal weight is to be given to every vote in Canada, and justice, in the sense in which the hon. member has used that word so frequently, is to prevail, that would be the net result.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has summarized his argument by stating four points, which are the basis of his appeal to the government in this matter: First, the constitutional practice which has always been followed, that only after a census has been taken should a redistribution take place; second, respect for county boundaries; third, the question of rural and urban quotas of population, as they should be determined; and fourth—and this one is a little less serious—that it would seem unnatural on the part of those who sit on this side of the house to change a redistribution which has served to elect them.

Of course, replying to the last point first, I might say that possibly many hon. members on this side were elected not because of the redistribution but in spite of it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a very old statement.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, but it is eternally true when statements like these are made. I am pleased indeed that in his argument my right hon. friend this afternoon and this evening did not go as far as he went last year or as far as some of his followers have gone even to-day. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) said it would be a violation of the British North America Act to change the redistribution of seats as it was effected in 1934. I do not wish to repeat what was said by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle) or the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock), but I must point out that section 51 is not the only section in the British North America Act which deals with this matter. Sections 40 and 52 deal with it; section 51 merely makes it compulsory after every census to have a readjustment of the seats of the House of Commons for the various provinces.

At page 297 of Clement's Canadian Constitution I find:

> This section 51 applies only to the readjustment of the representation of the provinces as between themselves, and has no reference to the boundaries of the electoral districts in each province, and it would appear therefore that the readjustment, under this section, is a matter merely of mathematics. The wording of section 52 bears out this construction, indicating as it does that the "fixed quantity" in the scheme of representation, is the proportionate representation of the provinces. The electoral districts may be altered at any time (section 40), and the total number of members increased (section 52), by the parliament of Canada.

My right hon. friend said that Sir John A. Macdonald—

Mr. BENNETT: If it does not interfere with the minister's argument, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Very well.

Mr. BENNETT: What I was going to point out was that he does not mean that you can increase the representation at any time; his sentence might leave that meaning.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I understand that. May I quote to the house the words of an eminent statesman who was at one time Prime Minister of Canada, and possibly the most distinguished Minister of Justice the dominion has ever had. I refer to Sir John Thompson. Discussing the question of redistribution on June 2, 1892, he made the following statement, as reported at page 3262 of Hansard of that year:

> When we come to section 51, on which the hon. gentleman based his argument—

He was replying to Mr. Davies, who became Sir Louis Davies, Chief Justice of Canada.

[Mr. Bennett.]

—we come to a section which, I contend, is not a section framed for the purpose of conferring power upon this parliament to redistribute the seats, but a section compelling parliament to do it after the completion of each decennial census. Section 51 is not an enabling section, because we had the ability before; it is not a disabling section, because certainly, before we are to conclude that it takes away from us powers which are given to us by section 91, we must find express words that do so. If by section 91 of the act we have all powers given to us in relation to passing laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, we are not to interpret the act or any part of it as taking away any fraction of that power unless we find words which can receive no other interpretation. But the obvious interpretation of section 51 is that it shall be the plain duty of this parliament at the end of every decennial census to readjust the representation, and then it goes on to say "by such authority, in such manner and for such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time shall provide." If my view of section 51 is correct, that it is not a section under which we derive our general or specific power over this subject, then all ambiguity is removed, and it simply enables us to do that work which is enjoined on us and made compulsory by that section at the close of every decennial census, by some other authority, if we please, as for example, by the provincial legislatures or otherwise. But the hon. gentleman, in order to give effect to the paraphrase which he made of the section, as to settling a principle not permitting a majority to take advantage of a minority, and all that class of expressions which he used, gave, as his own argument implied, a very vague and obscure meaning of the words relating to "such authority, and in such a manner and for such time as parliament shall establish." I repeat very shortly what I have said on the construction of section 51. I contend we had the power before section 51 and outside of it altogether; that we are not to interpret section 51 as taking away from the general power or making any repugnance in the act, and that, above all, the section is not to receive that construction unless that construction is plain and necessary. But if it were intended by the parliament that passed this statute that, although we should have the power to increase the number of members of this house—and that is another point against the hon. gentleman's argument, that there is power given to increase the number of the house from time to time, provided the proportion of representation is not disturbed as laid down by the act—the question of redistribution is something we are prohibited from doing, there is not in the whole act from beginning to end a single negative provision as regards the right of this parliament to do that work. But the construction of the whole act, unless the hon. gentleman is to read into that section which applies solely to the decennial census, unless the hon. gentleman is to read into that section negative words which are not there, comes to this: That while this parliament may redistribute at the term of every parliament, or from year to year even, yet when it comes to the decennial term we have not the power to redistribute the seats at all.

I believe that so far as the power of this parliament to act is concerned, it cannot be successfully challenged. Of course I am not saying that we should proceed with it. I shall give my views in that connection.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not contend that we had not the power. I suggested that it was contrary to constitutional practice to exercise such power.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I should not call that constitutional practice. I may say it has been the practice of parliament not to do it, except to change some of the boundaries at various times.

With regard to the redistribution of 1933—and I must refer to it, because if I discuss the question of county boundaries and rural and urban representation I must come to what was done at that time, and I may say that if I were in the same mood as I was in the month of May, 1933, my words would be much stronger than they will be to-night—

Mr. BENNETT: Your office has changed.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Much water has passed under the bridge since then, and I have had a long time to cool down. I believe that if we are to keep our present method of effecting a redistribution of seats it should be done as much as possible through agreement not only in one or two provinces, but generally. I shall not speak for the other provinces, but I am sure my right hon. friend is not well aware of the situation in Quebec. He was very, very busy at the time of the redistribution, and I would excuse him for not having known every particular change that was made. But I must say that, so far as Quebec is concerned, it was an outrageous piece of legislation that was adopted by the house. My right hon. friend said that we should respect county boundaries. I am more familiar with the Quebec district than I am with other sections of the province. There are between twenty-five and twenty-six seats in this district and the boundaries had never been changed before. When it was necessary to divide a large constituency, two other constituencies were united in order that the change might be made. I might say to my right hon. friend that after 1933 only two constituencies were left with the county boundaries the same as they were before the redistribution. All the others were changed, and I may say in a manner based only upon party expediency. My right hon. friend referred to urban and rural populations and the consideration that must be given in arriving at the unit of representation.

Reference was made to the county of Levis, which is perhaps one of the most glaring instances that might be mentioned. This county had a population of 38,000. As far as I can remember, the unit of representation was 42,000. Levis should have been left as it was, but what was done? It happened that on the eastern side of the county there were two or three very strong Liberal centres. These were taken from Levis and added to Bellechasse. Bellechasse did not need these additions as it was quite strongly Liberal. On the western boundary other Liberal strongholds were taken from Levis and added to Lotbinière. This was another case of carrying coals to Newcastle, as they were not needed in that riding. The final result was that the unit of representation in Levis was reduced to 27,000.

But actually the situation is worse than this. Levis is actually an urban constituency. The principal centres in the riding are Levis, Lauzon and Etchemin. The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Tremblay) referred to what had happened in connection with his own constituency. My right hon. friend referred to this riding as "small Dorchester." This riding was made still smaller by taking certain Liberal centres away from it and putting them in Beauce. My right hon. friend says that the number of seats in the rural sections of the province will have to be reduced.

Mr. BENNETT: Not if the principle applies which I have suggested.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The number of seats allotted to the cities of Montreal and Quebec could have been left as they were, and the rural seats could have been dealt with in a reasonable and normal manner instead of being changed as they were. Take the county of Montmagny. The counties of L'Islet and Montmagny did not have sufficient population to equal the unit of representation. The boundaries of these counties should have been left alone. But there were two Liberal strongholds on the western boundary of Montmagny at Berthier and St. Francois. These were taken from Montmagny and added to Bellechasse. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) has been very lucky. On the eastern boundaries of L'Islet there were four or five very nice places from a Liberal point of view. These were taken from L'Islet and added to Kamouraska, where they were not needed at all.

The right hon. leader of the opposition stated that we must have been satisfied as only fifteen voted against it. I think the reverse is also true; there were not many who were satisfied with it as only forty-five voted in favour. I refer hon. members to page 5578 of Hansard of May 27, 1933. It will be noted that there were forty-five yeas and fifteen days. But there were eighty-five pairs mentioned. This vote was taken just before prorogation and many members had paired. I am pleased to note that my name is among the pairs, but the fact is that it was my pair who was not present.

Redistribution is a very important matter and I agree with my right hon. friend when he says that it would be unfortunate if the constituencies were changed every year. I think what I have stated makes it quite clear that there is some defect in our system. It certainly is not a fair and just system when it permits the things to be done that I have mentioned. My right hon. friend says, "Of course, you have a majority and you can do what you like." That is what he said at that time, that he had a majority and could put it through.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the way it was put. We said that we regretted that we were unable to agree and we would have to do it. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I must repeat that I was not very well pleased at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: I know that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have a very vivid memory of what happened. It has been suggested quite frequently that some new method should be devised to deal with this most important matter. It has been suggested that this should be done by some impartial court or tribunal. My right hon. friend has referred to the difference in the unit of representation in urban and rural constituencies. These main points should be fixed by parliament, but the work of arranging the seats so that the final redistribution will conform to the principles adopted by parliament should be done by a body other than a committee on which the majority would have its own way. The latter method is certainly not fair. In Australia redistribution is carried out after every census by a body of three, consisting of the chief electoral officer, the surveyor general, and another officer whose position at the moment I do not remember.

Mr. BENNETT: He is an appointee.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): An appointee of the government perhaps; I accept the statement of my right hon. friend. It was for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that last year when a similar resolution was placed on the order paper I gave notice of a motion, which I introduced later and which was adopted, to send to the committee on elections, which had then been constituted as it is now, the question of studying the various methods adopted in other countries, to investigate and make a report as to the desirability of changing our system of effecting redistribution in Canada. I still believe that this should be done first, without, however, saying that the rearrangement of the boundaries of the constituencies should not be made so that at least some glaring injustices might disappear. But that could come later. The first step I think should be for the committee on elections to make a survey and a study of the principles which should be adopted in making a redistribution in order to be fair to all parties and to all the people of Canada. As I think this is the best way to proceed, if my hon. friend the mover of the resolution consents to withdraw it, I shall give notice immediately of the same motion that was adopted last year so that the method of redistribution should first be studied by the committee on elections.

Mr. J. ETIENNE DUSSAULT (Levis) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say on the resolution that was moved the other day by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Brunelle). In 1867, the member for Levis was Mr. Blanchet, who later became Speaker of the House of Commons. He represented the constituency for more than twenty-five years. He was the grandfather of the minister who represented the Quebec district in 1933, when the redistribution took place. In 1867, at the time of confederation, Hon. Mr. Blanchet, member for Levis, gave that constituency exactly the same boundaries that it had prior to 1931. Nobody had ever suggested or even thought of changing these boundaries. In 1933, his grandson deemed that the constituency where his grandfather had been returned for twenty-five years should have entirely different limits. He decided that several parishes which were liable to vote in such a way as to hurt the Conservative candidate to any extent should be taken away, and they had to draw out new boundaries.

I would not have protested against these changes, I would have understood that a majority had a right to govern and to allot to the various constituencies the limits which could assist their election, but in the case of Levis there has been a crying injustice, against which I deem it my duty to protest. Not only did they draw out limits for the county, but they put too many of them. In order to show the house what they have done there, allow me to use the electoral map of the constituency. Here is the county of Levis such as it was redistributed. You have here, at the top, in the north, the St. Lawrence river. In the south, the part that was cut off represents parishes which were all situated in the county of Levis, and which were taken away from us. I submit that the constituency of Levis was too much reduced. Everything that you see here is actually in the county of Bellechasse. The boundaries of the county of Levis would be appropriate; Bellechasse would be south and east, Lotbiniere west and the St. Lawrence river north. And is that all? No it is not all, for there remains the lone parish of Breakeyville which is entirely outside the county. As a jig-saw puzzle, I would ask my neighbour, the hon. member from Lotbiniere (Mr. Verville) to find a place for this parish as represented by this piece of paper, anywhere and how he likes, without using this other piece of paper which represents the county of Lotbiniere. It is a hard task. You just have—I almost missed it—to add here the county of Lotbiniere, just like this, and there, Breakeyville, and you have it. Without using this piece which represents part of the county of Lotbiniere, you cannot find a place for Breakeyville in that jig-saw puzzle that is now the map of the county of Levis.

Then there is the constitutional and legal standpoint, but I wonder whether anybody has a right to introduce into a constituency a parish that is not touching it at all. You could take an island right in front of a constituency, let us say Ile aux Grues, for instance, and say: The people of Ile aux Grues will vote in Montmagny. But you say to the people of Breakeyville in the county of Bellechasse who live inland, a mile away from the county of Levis. You shall vote in the constituency of Levis. Is that legal? Yes? Very well then. But why don't you say to the people of Maisonneuve: You shall vote in Levis? It is only a matter of distance. When people are absolutely outside a county, one mile away from Levis, and when to get in there they have to go through an adjoining county, namely that of Lotbiniere, or Bellechasse, while being still voting in Levis, I wonder why they are not compelled to go through three or four counties, and be given the right to vote where it will be the most convenient for the party. In this way you can fix anybody's election, and pick the winner. During the war, votes were sought elsewhere; here, they get them in Breakeyville. Whether you get them from the Breakeyville ballot-box or from the soldiers' ballot-box, it amounts to the same thing.

How did this parish of Breakeyville, after being added to Levis, happen to be outside that county? It is because there lies between Levis and Breakeyville the parish of Saint Jean Chrysostome, which formerly belonged to the county of Levis and is now part of Bellechasse. Some might say: It is a Liberal parish, so you need not complain. It is a Liberal parish, that is true, but Saint Jean Chrysostome is still more Liberal, and that is why it was included in Bellechasse. On the electoral map it is still shown as Saint Jean Chrysostome de Levis. Why was it not left in Levis, since it is called "of Levis"?

From the standpoint of geographical conditions, and of roads, from a common sense point of view, consider the position of the Saint-Jean-Chrysostôme people. The church of that parish is exactly a mile and a half from the church of Saint-Romuald. Saint-Romuald is the chief town of the county of Lévis. The people of Saint-Jean-Chrysostôme lived a mile and a half from the chief town of their county. Now that they have been included in the county of Bellechasse, they must go to Saint-Raphaël, chief town of their new county. They must travel to Saint-Romuald then to Lévis, they must go through Lévis and Lauzon, continue to Beaumont, the first Bellechasse parish along the shore; after that, they travel inland to the chief town of the county of Bellechasse, that is Saint-Raphaël seventeen miles farther through the county. People who were living a mile and a half from the chief town of their county are now compelled to travel a distance of twenty-seven miles and a half in order to reach the chief town of their new constituency.

After listening to the address of the right honourable the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) I feel diffident in explaining to the house the case of Lévis. There has been everywhere so much suffering, so much dissatisfaction, as he said, that matters like this ought not to be brought up at a time when there is so much grumbling and wrangling; it might be the prelude to more quarrelling. If, in order to avoid quarrels, the blows must always fall on the same people, it seems to me that it is much preferable, to fight in dead earnest and not only to receive blows but to give a few in return.

I would ask that boundaries be laid out for the county of Lévis, but they should be such so as to make it possible for the people of Lévis to travel throughout the county without going through other counties, so that they may not have to go by way of the county of Bellechasse. Let all the parishes in the constituency be comprised within a continuous boundary.

After listening to what was said by the honourable members who spoke before me, I deem it my duty to state the wrongs which my constituents are suffering and to request that they be remedied.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Although I was one of the sufferers from the redistribution bill of 1933, I had not the least intention of taking part in this debate until I heard the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) make the statement—I was not paying strict attention and he will correct me if I am wrong—that the British Columbia redistribution was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. BENNETT: No; it was agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. NEILL: By all the British Columbia members?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. NEILL: Someone behind me says that it was by the members generally. In spite of that I wish to absolve completely of all blame, from my own point of view, and not speaking for anyone else, two members of the house. One is the leader of the opposition and the other is the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart). It was common gossip at the time around the corridors—and such gossip generally has some basis of truth—that the Prime Minister of that day, now leader of the opposition, had repeatedly expressed the desire that there should be a fair agreement and that there should be nothing in the nature of compulsion, and the chairman of the committee was also all that could be desired. Personally he gave me every consideration that fairness could demand. Where the mistake was made was in allowing local groups in the different provinces to dictate the terms. The main committee would have been fair, because the Conservatives in Quebec would have seen that the Liberals in British Columbia got a square deal, and vice versa. But the matter was left to local politicians, and personal prejudices came in, so that a man could get a fine chance to have his enmity, political or personal, vented without appearing to be too keen. That is where the trouble came in.

As regards the district I represent, any action that I could complain of was not in gerrymandering certain classes of voters into or out of the district. The harm that was done, the unfairness of which I complained bitterly, was that they added an enormous area to a district which it was already impossible to canvass in the course of an ordinary election. Possibly a greater wrong was done, so far undoubtedly as my district was concerned, under the franchise act, which made no provision for what I might call the transient vote, and in connection with that other section in the act which made it possible to hold an election within twenty-one days, which would have meant that eight-tenths of my district could not have been canvassed at all. To give the leader of the opposition credit, he removed the causes of both these grievances. He allowed the introduction of the absentee vote, which, while it was not carried out in the spirit in which it was initiated, did substantially redress a good deal of the injustice in that regard, and by means of the arbitrary power in fixing the date of the election he gave us more time than was usually allowed under the old act. We had, therefore, reasonable time in which to canvass the district. Consequently in that regard I have no complaint.

The suggestion, however, that the British Columbia members acquiesced in the arrangement in a sense touches my honour and I must contradict it, because I went home and told my people how I complained of the action of the legislature. I cannot afford, therefore, to have it said now that its action was in any way agreeable to me. The vote will show that I was paired against it. But it may be said that I signed an agreement, and I have no doubt the document can be produced to show that I agreed to accept this redistribution. Yes, that is so; I did sign it, and I went further than that, although it was not written in the bond. I agreed not to attack the government on the subject in the house. It will be said that I was cheerful and happy; that I acquiesced in the redistribution. Well, that depends on what is meant by acquiescence. If a footpad shoves a revolver into your spine and tells you to hand over your purse and you hand your purse over to him, it is not competent for him to say afterwards in court, "Your action was a voluntary one; I did not take the purse from you; you handed it over." That is a parallel illustration. Certainly I signed accepting the redistribution. Why? Because I was told in the most positive terms that could be conveyed to me that it was either that or take a great deal worse. Half of British Columbia was to be added to my district unless I took the portion doled out to me, and I thought it was better to take what I got than to be a martyr and have a vast area forced upon me. The British Columbia members are familiar with that phase of the matter. It was through no voluntary action on my part that I agreed to that redistribution.

The leader of the opposition predicated a great deal of his objection to the resolution on this. He said that if we adopted it, the one man, one vote idea would necessarily follow. That is to say, an equal value would be given to every man's vote.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what the resolution says.

Mr. NEILL: I cannot see that the resolution says that. It says "a more equitable readjustment"; it does not say you are going to have the same unit in the cities and in the rural districts. Ever since confederation, almost, there has been a different and smaller unit allowed for the country than for the city. I cannot see that it is at all necessary that they should be the same if this resolution is accepted.

Other reasons given by the leader of the opposition, however, have more weight. It is very questionable perhaps whether it is wise to have a redistribution in the middle of the term. That is a matter of opinion. For my part I shall be guided a good deal by the wishes of my friends from Quebec, who gave me loyal support when I was in trouble in the redistribution, and while I am not particularly keen on the matter myself I am willing to defer my judgment to theirs.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): Before this motion is dealt with I must say a few words in fairness to the people I represent, among whom this redistribution of three years ago was a burning question for the two years before the election of 1935. The constituency of Melfort is not an old one like many of those in Quebec about which we have heard to-night, but for nearly twenty-five years the base line which formed the south boundary of Prince Albert, out of which Melfort was later carved, was not changed by any government of any stripe of politics. There was a reason why the constituency should be reduced in size, namely, that the population had increased perhaps to a greater degree than in many other districts in Saskatchewan. I know it is difficult to make a redistribution satisfactory to everyone. But when one looks at the map, what was done with that constituency?

Mr. HEAPS: We cannot see it.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Well there are larger maps printed on which hon. members can see it, and it will show to greater advantage—or disadvantage. On the east side a great piece of territory sixty by five hundred and fifty miles was taken off the constituency of Melfort and added to Mackenzie. Now there was no community of interest between those two pieces of country. Heavy timber separated them. There was hardly any transportation possible by road, and transportation by rail was inconvenient because railway service was given by a new branch line on which there was no regular passenger train. For some unknown reason, however, that eastern and northeastern part of the constituency of Melfort, comprising new farming country, timber land and mining and fishing country, which had always been tributary to the area, was torn from that constituency and added to the almost purely farming constituency of Mackenzie, making it extremely difficult for the member for Mackenzie, no matter how active he might be, to get around among his people. One of the complaints of the people in that area was that almost all their community of interest was bound up with the older part of the Carrot River valley, from which many of them came. I admit that part of the constituency of Melfort might have been taken and added to some other, but there was no reason why that large territory on the east should have been taken.

Then in the southwest part, looking at this map hon. members will find another series of steps and stairways, poll separated from poll just as they happened to reflect political opinion in the election of 1930. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) used the argument a little while ago that it ill befitted those who had come back to office in spite of this redistribution to complain of it. I would say that the time to think of that was in 1933 when those who had come into office should have been reasonably satisfied as to a fair division of territory. In the southwestern part of the constituency of Melfort there were, as I say, lines drawn between polling subdivisions according to the way they voted in 1930. It will be found that within a couple of miles of four or five of the principal towns along the one main line of railway in the western part of that constituency, the territory was taken away and added to the constituency to the south. People naturally wanted to go to vote in the towns where they had been doing their business and where their connections were. To those who had been taken out of the territory in which they had been all their lives, reasons were advanced that I am not going to recount for putting them where they were put. But they were amazed and astounded to think that any government would do that to them without fair and adequate reason.

Then on the northwest side of the constituency two ranges were taken off the area of Melfort and added to Prince Albert. The people generally, who had been to some degree disfranchised because of the changing of the community of interest of which I spoke, were of opinion that if there had been a constituency inhabited mainly by Eskimos in the northern part of the same territory, the northern part of Melfort would have been put in with them.

Like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), I and the people I represent are not nearly so hot about this now as then, because much water has run under the bridge since and time has allowed our feelings to subside. But it would not be fair for me to allow this resolution to be disposed of without adding my protest, seeing that I am strongly in favour of what it calls for:

> That the Representation Act, 1933, should be amended in such manner as to bring about a more equitable readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons and to effect thereby a more just redistribution of Canada's electoral districts, and that a special committee be appointed to study this matter.

As I said, I know it is a difficult matter to be fair and just to all, but in the case of constituencies such as those I have mentioned, where the area had to be cut down on account of the increase of population, if the lines were drawn straight, commencing at one point and going through to another, then there could be no particular charge of unfairness. But when one finds the territory cut and carved, no straight lines anywhere, but lines drawn for a certain distance, then going almost to the end of the settled part of the constituency, then going straight again in another direction, it is no wonder that on all sides the people of that territory were convinced it was not fair. I might say that, regardless of politics, many supporters of the parties opposite me were about as indignant as the supporters of the party I represent. They would be satisfied if a fair division were made, and that is all I ask for.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Before this resolution is dealt with, I think it is in order for me to make a few remarks in connection with the redistribution—or I should say maldistribution—which was effected in 1933. If I remember correctly, the committee was set up in 1932 and the redistribution carried out in 1933. The resolution I think reads quite rightly. There are three main points in it. The first is equitable readjustment. Just a readjustment is required, not a general redistribution; that is plain. Second, by this readjustment a more just redistribution of certain counties and electoral districts should be effected. Third, it should be done by a committee of the house.

Before the resolution is sent to the committee, may I draw attention to the situation which at present exists in the Battlefords and North Battleford. I think the committee in 1933 was fairly well selected from the house. It represented all groups in the chamber; the committee was large in numbers, and from a parliamentary point of view the results ought to have been satisfactory. But they were not. I understand they were not satisfactory in the maritimes, not satisfactory in Ontario, not satisfactory in Quebec or British Columbia, and they certainly were not satisfactory in the middle west.

With regard to the work of the committee, Mr. Speaker, in a general way I am in accord with the view presented by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), when he referred to the matter of provincial interference. What we in Saskatchewan find fault with is the fact that practically all the steps taken by this committee in 1933 were decided by political log-rolling in the province the year before. I understand that practically all the steps were settled by a committee representing the Conservative party in Saskatchewan, which came to certain decisions with regard to that province, and it is my understanding that in regard to North Battleford and The Battlefords, these decisions were never changed by the house committee here at Ottawa. When the results became known, representations were made to these men back in Saskatchewan, but they would not budge, and because they would not budge the committee here was hopeless. So the thing went through, and a sorry situation developed.

As far as the riding of North Battleford is concerned, when I as the member for that constituency discovered the situation which confronted me in my riding, before I left Ottawa I made up my mind that I would go home and challenge the decision of this committee by giving the facts to the people. I went home, and I think perhaps I was the first member of the house to hold a primary convention of electors; I put the matter into their hands and let them decide what ought to be done. When I did that I received the nomination for my old riding of North Battleford, which had been carved up and cut to pieces to such an extent that those who made that decision figured that it would be impossible for me ever to get back into the House of Commons.

There are just one or two further points I should like to present with regard to the riding of North Battleford, and after this is done I shall be through. This is one thing that was done: The name "North Battleford" was removed from the electoral list of the dominion. That was one decision which was arrived at. The names "Battleford" and "North Battleford" are as historic as any names that will be found in western Canada; notwithstanding this the name "North Battleford" was absolutely wiped off the electoral map of Canada. For what purpose was that done? There is only one purpose for anything like that. That was a straight gerrymander, the destruction of an old, historic name, and it was done for one purpose only, to defeat the member for that riding. But, as I have said, I placed all the facts before my electors; they soon decided what to do, and the fight was on. When the election was over I was still the member for the constituency of North Battleford.

Mr. SPENCE: I thought the name was wiped out.

Mr. McINTOSH: The name was wiped out, and so were the Tories. But I want to be fair to the right hon. gentleman now leading the opposition (Mr. Bennett). When the matter was brought to his attention in the house and he found out, I think perhaps for the first time that the name "North Battleford" had been destroyed by the committee, he took action. As member for the riding I rose in my place in the house and made representations to the right hon. gentleman to have that disgrace remedied, and he was man enough to rise and move to have the name "North Battleford" retained. That is the only reason why we have that name on the electoral map of Canada to-day.

What was done in order to gerrymander the riding of North Battleford by this organization within Saskatchewan representing the Conservative party in that province? I happen to live in the city of North Battleford, where I have been in business for twenty-five years. My home is there. The city of North Battleford and about fifty polls running along the North Saskatchewan river were taken out of the riding of North Battleford and thrown into the southern portion of the province. The southern part, that is, the part south of the North Saskatchewan river, is the Battleford area which always belonged to the old town of Battleford and, as far as I can see, should still belong to it. Later, when the west became more thickly populated and development was proceeding northward, North Battleford developed as a great trading and distributing centre, and to-day it is a city of six thousand people—a business centre for the great northland beyond. Since the time North Battleford started to grow, there has been a riding of North Battleford, separate from the old riding of Battleford. When the report of this redistribution committee was brought into the house, as I have said the name "North Battleford" was destroyed, and they had no name for the riding south of the river. When the matter was brought up in the house they were going to call the southern riding by the old name of Battleford.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I drew the attention of the leader of the opposition to the fact that he could not very well call it Battleford, the old name, because following the change that had been effected the city of North Battleford was in the old Battleford constituency, and consequently it would be necessary to have that name changed to "The Battlefords". That is how the name "The Battlefords" came into existence. It is an entirely new name. The old name was "Battleford." The new name is "The Battlefords" because the two Battlefords are in the one riding, a gerrymandered one.

Just understand what has been done, Mr. Speaker. To-day we have a riding called North Battleford, and we have the city of North Battleford gerrymandered out of that riding. It is not in the riding at all. Surely that is all it is necessary to say in order to let the people of Canada form a clear-cut judgment as to what was done to North Battleford as a riding in 1933. The like of it was never duplicated in the electoral history of this dominion, and I hope it will never happen again. It was absolutely unfair. As far as I am concerned I am not afraid to go back and be reelected for the riding for which I was elected at the last election. I desire to make that clear. I am not making these remarks because there may be any political advantage for me in the change. What I am concerned with is the fact that the city in which I live, North Battleford, is out of the riding of North Battleford which I represent in this house. If you can beat that for a gerrymander I should like to have you do it.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say that this matter ought to be sent to a committee where it could be thoroughly investigated and reported upon as soon as possible. I would say also that certain boundaries—I am not going to say how many, or where—ought to be changed and that a readjustment ought to take place. The sooner that is done the better it will be for the honour of this chamber and also for the honour of those who were members of this house when this gerrymander took place four years ago.

Mr. WILFRID GARIEPY (Three Rivers) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on this resolution, and I wish to make them in French. Hansard will publish an English version for the benefit of those who do not understand our language. The hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), and the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) stated that they had cooled down since two or three years and that they had forgotten the injustice that had been done to them. It seems to me that it is not exactly the attitude which this house ought to adopt to-night. If there has been a crying injustice, it should be corrected. Democracy cannot be maintained unless the people be normally and fairly represented.

(Translation) I listened a moment ago to the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and he showed himself just as I have known him to be for the last thirty-five years, namely a better lawyer than a statesman. He found plausible excuses for the gerrymander and the establishment of rotten boroughs, so much so that I was wondering whether the claims that had been put forward had not been exaggerated. We hear the same kind of complaint from every province. The leader of the opposition, in order to draw in the Quebec votes, or to allay his own feelings or his resentment, mentioned three or four Ontario constituencies which are electing members of French origin or name; but he did not speak about Nipissing, in the same province, which has a population of over 80,000. Take Argenteuil, with a population of 16,000, compared to Drummond-Arthabaska, whose population is 52,000; Nicolet-Yamaska, with 42,000, as compared to Levis, with only 26,000. And the leader of the opposition, affecting the simplicity of a good decent boy, comes here and claims that he was acting in good faith, that he did not know they were preparing a nest in Argenteuil for one of his colleagues, and another one in Levis, and that a certain number of safe seats were created in the province of Quebec, in order to have a handful of tories in Parliament after the elections of 1935.

Insofar as I am concerned, my mind is made up, and, in rising to speak, I am thinking even of Three Rivers where they cut the old traditionally liberal county in two, by taking only the city of Three Rivers, and adding to it seven parishes that, save one, never voted otherwise than for the most avowed conservatives. They thought that in that nest the man that they since appointed as a member of the Senate could have been reelected as a conservative candidate.

Mr. Speaker, these conditions are not normal, nor fair, and the people are rightly objecting to them. The hon. Minister of Justice asked the mover of this resolution to withdraw it, and he suggested a theoretical study by a committee, according to some sensible method. But I am wondering why this resolution should not be adopted as presented. The motion does not ask for an immediate fair redistribution, but a better redistribution, along with the appointment of a special committee to investigate the question. Then, since others have shown that the gerrymander of 1933 was an abominable thing, why should we not continue making a thorough investigation of the problem, in order to see where a flagrant injustice has been done, even if we have to correct it later or not. This does not preclude consideration of the suggestion made by the hon. the Minister of Justice; it is an excellent one, in my opinion, for I feel that a non-partisan body would be much preferable for establishing the boundaries. I agree with him on that matter. But I say that it lies outside the scope of the motion as moved by the hon. member for Champlain.

I do not know about the other provinces, but in the province of Quebec we have old constituencies which are communities where bounds of fellowship have developed, where similarity of ideas prevail and where the people are used to working in cooperation. If, from year to year, these centres are cut up, if old parishes are split, one half being added to one side and one half to the other side, if our social community is broken up, the result seems to me inevitable, and I wish to emphasize it before I take my seat. We have in this house five parties; in the past there were only two. After all, gerrymandering was of little importance. A little more votes on one side or on the other side, a liberal or a conservative majority had the upper hand, but a different situation might arise in future, when we see the attorney general of the province of Quebec pointing out in public the existence of a communist party in that province which, for a consideration, is enlisting our young men for service in the Spanish civil war. It seems that a number of passports are now being distributed in a surprising way, to young people who leave our country to fight elsewhere, but who will probably return to sow germs of discord, and give rise to groups which will foment revolution. I submit that as a means of protecting ourselves against such new ideas, of maintaining our traditions, of insuring the true preservation of our people, we should see to it that our representation, which is the basis of our democracy, is better protected. That is the reason why this resolution should receive a more favourable consideration, in order that a committee may make a thorough examination of the complaints brought to its attention, so that they may not occur again in future.

Mr. O. B. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, speaking for the constituency of Kindersley I wish to say there are no complaints.

Mr. W. A. WALSH (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take the time of the house in discussing the matter because, as a new member, I am not very familiar with the ways and means adopted in working out the arrangements at present in effect. I should like to observe, however, that I believe certain injustices were done during the last redistribution. I cannot agree with many of the speeches which have been made in support of the present resolution because I am persuaded that no party as such took part in any gerrymandering. If there was any gerrymandering it was on the part of individual members then sitting in the House of Commons, and not on the part of any particular party as such.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is easily seen the hon. member was not here then.

Mr. WALSH: As the minister is aware, I am speaking from an entire lack of experience, and possibly it would be better if in the future, when redistribution is being considered, the matter be handed over to some persons who have not the knowledge of how previous redistributions were effected. As a layman, and one quite unfamiliar with redistribution methods adopted by this chamber, I would go further and suggest that before the next redistribution takes place ways and means be provided to have the matter placed in the hands of an independent body or organization which will not in any way be under the influence of any member of the House of Commons. It is only by such means or by a change in the law as it now exists that we shall get an equitable, fair and just redistribution as is advocated in the resolution we are considering.

I can see where injustice has been done to certain individuals residing within the constituency of Mount Royal, as it is at present outlined. There is a small city on the boundary line between the constituency of Mount Royal and the constituency of Jacques-Cartier. Previously this city had always been in Jacques-Cartier, but what do we find to-day? One-third of it is now in Mount Royal with the remaining two-thirds in Jacques-Cartier. The line runs down Sixth avenue along the railway track, down Thirteenth avenue, and then zigzags until it reaches nowhere. I could not explain how that line came to be drawn, but it certainly was not drawn with a view to giving the residents in that city fair representation in this house.

A similar condition prevails in the city in which I reside on the island of Montreal. This is a city of 26,000 people. Instead of running the line between the city of Outremont and the city of Montreal, they ran it down a street four streets in from the boundary. This was done in order to put one or two thousand voters into the constituency of Laurier rather than leaving them in Outremont. A new constituency was formed to be known as Outremont, and instead of putting the city of Outremont as such within that constituency, they left part of it in and part of it out.

I cannot agree with the resolution as it is presented, nor can I agree with the remarks that have been made in support of it. However, I do agree that there are certain adjustments which should be made. These adjustments could be made harmoniously by various members of this house, not to their satisfaction but to the satisfaction of their constituents. After all, they are the people who should be considered in a matter of this kind. I feel that there are many little difficulties which could be ironed out to the satisfaction of these people who now have just cause to complain. I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will make a motion later on. I hope it will not be a means of side-tracking this issue. This matter should be placed before a responsible committee, not a partisan one, which will iron out these minor difficulties.

Many of these difficulties did not show up until we had an election. They were accentuated because of the election and we see things now as we possibly could not see them prior to 1935. I assume that the committee to be proposed by the Minister of Justice will be acceptable to the hon. member who has moved this resolution. I trust it will be able to do something in the way of ironing out the difficulties and preventing some of the anomalies which now exist and apparently existed in 1932 and 1933. If this committee can devise some means of appointing an impartial body to carry out the redistribution after the next census, then and then only shall we be able to obtain some degree of satisfaction as far as the representation of the people of Canada in this house is concerned.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this motion as I was quite satisfied to let the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) express the opinion of the government on the matter. However, I feel I should say a few words. First, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh) upon the spirit in which he has approached this subject. He has pointed out that one of the peculiarities of the 1933 redistribution is the placing of part of the city of Lachine in the constituency of Mount Royal and leaving the remainder in Jacques-Cartier. I admit that there was no intention to favour the candidate in Mount Royal; it would seem to be more a favouring of the candidate in Jacques-Cartier. There are other discrepancies which could be pointed out.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has said that we cannot have an absolutely equitable adjustment between rural and urban seats. I share his views when he says that the population in rural seats must be smaller than that in city seats. One complaint about the redistribution of 1933 is that there is a distinct disparity as between different urban seats as well as between different rural seats. In connection with the city of Montreal I am somewhat like the Minister of Justice, I can look back at everything with a smile. But there was a very serious complaint at that time. The population in the urban seats seemed to be based upon their location. Those seats which were Conservative by tradition did not have more than 30,000 population, while the strong Liberal seats in the eastern part of the city contained 45,000, 48,000 and so on. I had the privilege of having the top score of 55,000 electors to whom I had to submit my case.

We see the same discrepancies in the rural constituencies around Montreal. For the sake of the record and not with the idea of raising any partisan issue, I should like to remind the house that the old Laval-Two Mountains constituency was adjusted so that it would take in part of Ile Jesus. Two Liberal parishes on Ile Jesus were taken away from that constituency and added to a Montreal constituency. Perhaps all this was done to promote navigation on inland waters. This is the seat represented by the former Postmaster General, the Hon. Mr. Sauvé.

Somewhat the same thing applies to the constituencies of the former Minister of Marine, the Hon. Mr. Duranleau. That was the well known constituency of Chambly and Verchères. This brings out the point mentioned by the Minister of Justice. In the old days when it was necessary to combine two counties, this was done without changing their boundaries. Part of the county of Verchères was taken away and given as a gift to my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin). That was thrown in with Richelieu, which made it a very strong Liberal seat indeed. There was one parish, the parish of Ste. Julie, which had always voted Conservative. That parish was not given to Richelieu; it was kept in Chambly. To that was added, not the county of Rouville, but the Conservative section of the county of Rouville.

I could go right along and point out further examples. Take the county of Laprairie, for instance; it was added to Beauharnois far away. Then they joined both constituencies by a sort of Polish corridor, comprising part of the county of Chateauguay, and that had the advantage of relieving the Conservative member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon of some Liberal parishes.

I admit that the results have not been quite what was expected, and that we should prove good winners and not stress these points too much. It shows that after all redistribution is not perhaps so important a matter as affecting the electoral lists as some hon. members may think. I believe that when a current of opinion is established it does manifest itself, no matter how the limits and boundaries of constituencies are fixed, and I believe with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that it is more important to devise new methods and more equitable ways and means of effecting redistributions in the future than it is to go over the mistakes of past redistributions. I am not at all so great a partisan as to pretend that this is the only time there have been complaints about redistribution, for we might as well admit that there have been complaints about most redistributions, and it is much more important to devise better means for making the next one than to dig up the past and see what can be done to adjust existing grievances. Therefore I hope, Mr. Speaker, and am confident that the mover (Mr. Brunelle) will withdraw his motion and allow the Minister of Justice, as he has promised the house to do, to make a motion not to refer back to the 1933 or any other past redistribution but to appoint a committee which will examine ways and means how the redistribution should be made in the future and the advisability of changing our methods in that respect.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I cannot see very much reason why we should get excited in the house and waste hours talking over a trivial matter like the last redistribution. I have seen many redistributions, and to my mind it does not matter very much how you change the boundaries, for if the wave is with the party, they get in, and if it is against them, they get out. I for one have probably suffered just as much by redistribution as anybody else, and yet it could not be helped. It was as fair as any redistribution could be, but one cannot have an absolutely fair redistribution. No one will ever think he has been fairly treated.

The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) probably has a right to some kick about what happened in his riding, as has also the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), and yet they are both here in the house. The latter claims that the redistribution committee tried to eliminate North Battleford altogether. I consider these members two of my best friends in the house. They are wonderfully capable; they make able speeches, and love to hear the reecho of their voices, but I do not think anybody takes them too seriously. I think they should follow the advice of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and forget all about it. Only one election can be held before the next redistribution, so why worry? We are just like a kindergarten here, and if some hon. members could hear themselves outside, they would be ashamed. As I say, if the wave is with a party they get in; if not, they get out. It was that way with us in 1930, and no matter what the redistribution was we would have been trimmed. The wave was with hon. gentlemen opposite in the last election; it was against us, and that is the only reason why they are sitting over there.

The hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock) was speaking this afternoon, and I am sorry I did not hear all he said. But he knows what happened in that riding to beat our good friend the late Herb. Lennox. Talk about gerrymandering! Why, everything possible was done to get that man out of the riding, and still my hon. friends could not get him out. Now my hon. friend comes in with Mulock's millions behind him, and perhaps we shall never put him out. We may attempt to by hook or by crook because we have to fight an election.

As far as the redistribution committee was concerned, I think they tried to be fair to everyone. No doubt there were complaints. The former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) thought he was getting very unfair treatment, and probably he was, but matters were fixed up for him and for several other members, and, as can be seen by the vote, although it was small, there was general agreement on that redistribution when it came into the house.

As far as Quebec is concerned, I know very little about it. If anything wrong was done, it should not have been done. I do not approve anything unfair or any gerrymandering or anything ungentlemanly to do someone out of a seat. Let us all be good sports and take our defeat with good grace; let us quit losing time and get down to business.

Mr. H. E. BRUNELLE (Champlain): Mr Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh). I think he is very clever. He apparently is in favour of changing the boundaries of his constituency. He therefore admits that there was at least one injustice done by the Representation Act of 1933. On the other hand his leader is against my resolution, and therefore my hon. friend must be against it. Then he says he would be in favour of the resolution of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), which is not before this house, and which apparently is going to serve the same purpose as my motion, but he is against my motion, which is before the house.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) state the other day that he was chairman of the committee which prepared the last redistribution in 1933. The hon. member for Leeds has the reputation of being a fair-minded man. Personally I look upon him as just and straightforward, and why he tolerated the recommendations of the committee over which he presided in 1933 I cannot understand. I do not wish, however, to change the good opinion I have of him, for I feel certain that at least the members representing the province of Quebec on that committee must have taken advantage of his good nature and kind disposition. Those members have disappeared from the political scene in this house, which proves that "la tricherie revient a son maitre." Be that as it may, the hon. member for Leeds feels himself in duty bound to defend a thing from which in normal circumstances, I am sure, he would be the first to dissociate himself.

I must disagree with the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) when he says that the Representation Act of 1933 was the result of an agreement between the parties.

Mr. BENNETT: No; the members of the committee.

Mr. BRUNELLE: Oh, the members of the committee, but surely what the members of the committee decided had some reflection in what the parties in the house decided afterwards. The debate on the act covers 360 pages of Hansard and represents a discussion extending over practically ten days, and the then Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had to invoke the aid of the brute majority to put the measure through. These facts are not of a nature to show that there was agreement between the parties. The contentions of hon. members of the opposition are quite erroneous and contrary to all accepted legal principles. In the first place, some of them at least contended that the act was just, and that in the alternative, if it were not just, there was no available remedy until the next redistribution in 1942 or 1943. I shall not take up the time of the house discussing this point. So many members have already pronounced themselves against it, and the injustices have been shown to be so glaring, that to prolong the discussion would only be a waste of time. To pretend, however, that our laws and institutions do not provide an adequate remedy for all injustices and all torts committed is to state a principle which, I submit, should not be enunciated in this house, for it is not conducive to a feeling of security and peace among our people. There is involved in this issue a principle which should dominate any political viewpoint.

Referring to what I said a little while ago, that some who opposed my resolution had suggested that there could be no remedy until 1943 or until the next census, may I say that when attending law school I noted that our professors always impressed upon us the fact that whenever our common law or statute laws did not provide any remedy for injustices or torts, the law of equity was always available to provide the necessary relief. Clement was quoted by me last week, and also by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock), to show that the government has the right to change the boundaries of constituencies. I submit, therefore, that both by law and in equity the government would be justified in having a committee study the matter with a view to removing the most flagrant injustices committed. I wish to put some emphasis on the purpose of the resoultion. It is only to correct errors, to right certain wrongs, and, using the words of the holy book, to make the paths straight.

Let me repeat that practically every representation act since confederation has been amended; for some reason or other they have been all amended. Even the 1933 act was amended, affecting, if I am not mistaken, the constituencies of Hamilton East and Hamilton West. The Minister of Justice has said he is willing to appoint a committee or to reappoint the committee which sat last year to study this question, and in view of that he has suggested that I should withdraw my resolution.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I meant the committee on elections which was constituted the day before yesterday on a motion of mine, and I have already given the notice which I told my hon. friend I would.

Mr. BRUNELLE: That will serve my purpose, and with the consent of the seconder I agree to the suggestion. Before resuming my seat I wish to tell those who have opposed the resolution—and I am speaking on behalf of those in favour of it, whether they have spoken or not—that we as members are not in favour of imposing ourselves upon the country against the people's wish by way of legislation because that method amounts to force and violence. Let me tell those who oppose the resolution that we do not expect any committee to take steps or make recommendations based only upon ballot boxes but we expect it to take steps or make recommendations based rather upon the convenience and welfare of the electors. Let me tell the opposition that we do not expect the committee which is to be appointed to replace one injustice by another, because we do not believe in the principle of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. All I ask is that fair play and impartiality be shown in a federal law which I deem to be of great importance because of the bearing it has on the vote of the electorate at election time.

Motion withdrawn.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. WILFRID LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Railway Act (Telephone Tolls).

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency): The Quebec-Montmorency chamber of commerce have submitted to the board of railway commissioners an application seeking to modify the boundary limits within which the Bell Telephone Company serves the city of Quebec. In accordance with the view then expressed by the chairman of the board, that they are without any authority as far as the fixing of that boundary limit is concerned, and after agreement with my colleague the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), I am presenting this bill to clarify the law so as to allow the board to render judgments in keeping with the facts submitted to them.

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I was called before the board of Railway Commissioners, in Quebec City, to represent electors from my county who wished to lay before the board a complaint regarding the Bell Telephone Company's service in Quebec-Montmorency county. In my riding, which encircles the city of Quebec, there are several small industries and industrial centres which have constant business intercourse with the city of Quebec and which need therefore, for the marketing of their products, to keep continually in contact with that city, from an industrial as well as an agricultural viewpoint, and which have to exchange telephone calls with the city every day, even four and five times a day. They must pay long distance toll charges each time they put in a call for the city of Quebec. Even when they are unsuccessful in reaching the proper party, they must perforce pay for their useless call. When the farmers of my riding who market their products in the city of Quebec have to make four or five calls a day, it means a daily outlay of 40 cents. There is moreover a charge of so much per mile which they must pay to the company according to the present rates. If we wish to promote the development of our cities, to allow a more regular intercourse between the rural and urban population, we must provide greater facilities, especially to those people who live in the vicinity of the city of Quebec.

When I appeared before the Railway Board, the Bell Telephone replied: "The expenditures which you demand, which you would have us make would be too heavy for the Bell Telephone Company." So I put the following question to one of the company's representatives: How much would that amount to? The Bell Telephone official could not say. Well now, gentlemen, if we wish to hold back the forces of communism, the best way is to see that public utilities give satisfaction to those that have to foot the bill. Before the Railway Board, I asked the same company, represented by its attorneys: What are your profits? And they answered: We will let you know later. I have here a report of that company showing its profits. How much do they amount to, Mr. Speaker? In 1935—I mean the net profits—they amounted to $8,343,819. And you will note that the total operating costs, for the same year, amounted to $10,748,896. I claim that part of what is called "operating costs" is distributed to the Northern Electric, a Bell Telephone subsidiary company, consisting of a few Bell Telephone shareholders. They are hiding their profits, they dare not distribute them to the Bell Telephone Company, to its shareholders; there is an effort made to hide from the public what the earned dividends really are and the public is even precluded from benefiting by the profits accrued to the company. This constitutes a social injustice. I appeal to the members of this house, and through you, Mr. Speaker, to the people of this country, and I say that, ever since 1927, never has the Bell Telephone made the public aware of its profit, even to the smallest extent, and never has the Bell Telephone given the public the benefit of an appreciable change in its rates.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, are we really anxious to stem the rising tide of communism in this country? The best manner in which to attain that end is to allow the common people, those who wish to live and breathe freely in our beautiful Canada, sufficient means for sustenance, and to provide the Canadian people with public services which are really for their own use.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to follow the greater part of the remarks made by the hon. member (Mr. Lacroix), but it would appear that he proposes that the jurisdiction of the railway commission with respect to telephone tolls should be clarified. I may say I see no objection to this bill receiving second reading; I think a matter of this kind is distinctly one that should be referred to a committee so that the interested parties might appear before the committee and express their views.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

FOREIGN POLICY

PROPOSED STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES TO APPLY IN RESPECT OF WAR, THE CAUSES OF WAR, AND WAR MUNITIONS AND MATERIALS

The house resumed from Monday, January 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

That, in the opinion of this house, the foreign policy of Canada should conform to the following principles:

1. That under existing international relations, in the event of war, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the billigerents may be.

2. That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.

3. That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

Mr. O. B. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): I wish to support this resolution, but I do so with certain reservations. Referring to the first clause, in regard to remaining strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be, I wish to draw a picture of the spectacle that faces us in actuality. There are at the present time, exclusive of the forces in China, 5,000,000 men under arms throughout the world. More than 19,000 military planes are in the air forces of twelve nations; more than 4,000 warships patrol the seas defending trade routes. The world is full of great fortresses, organizations, plants, training equipment, war stores, arsenals and armouries. The world this year will spend $9,000,000,000 on armaments, or over $6,000,000,000 more than in 1913. If war broke out to-morrow, five nations in Europe could launch 17,900 planes into the air: Russia, 4,500; England, 4,000; Italy, 3,600; France, 3,000; Germany, 2,800.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) remarked that Canada is very fortunate, her defence being three oceans: the Atlantic, the Pacific and the Arctic, with the United States to the south; that more than anything else. I very reluctantly disagree with this line of reasoning, because I have repeatedly seen pictures and read of large transports for the purpose of bringing seaplanes close to the borders of our country, which planes may at any time cause destruction and death to our people. The borders of no man's land are no longer limited to the fighting front, but include the whole civil population of every country in the world. The recognition of this new danger demands that we take such measures of preparation for defence as are within our power. Beyond that I am not prepared to go until other matters in our national life which I shall mention later have been rectified.

This parliament is responsible for the lives of the people of this dominion. That is a grave responsibility. We must rely on the sincerity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) when he said:

I want to make it quite clear that we will not necessarily become involved in any war into which other parts of the British Empire may enter, simply because we are a part of the British Empire. It is for this parliament to decide whether or not we will participate in a war in which other parts of the British Empire may be engaged.

I am sure that if, through neglect on my part, the civil population of this country were to suffer death and destruction by not having some measure of protection from invasion, I would be very negligent in my duties, but certainly we cannot keep up with the major nations of the world in armament, and possibly it would be unwise to increase our burden of debt by engaging in any armament scheme of the kind.

With respect to the second clause, dealing with profits made in the manufacture of war munitions and materials, in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) the other evening, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

I share the hon. member's abhorrence of anything in the nature of profiteering. I cannot imagine a more contemptible means of seeking to make one's fortune than by doing so at the expense of the lives of others.

And again:

I think private industry, where it is engaged in the manufacture of munitions and war materials, has to be watched closely, for the very reason mentioned by my hon. friend, namely to see that excessive profits are not made.

I should like to point out to hon. members, however, that profits are not made only on war materials and munitions, as can be proven by a table of war costs which I have in my hand. I should like to place this table on Hansard without reading it, Mr. Speaker, with your permission. The table is as follows:

Canada's Bill for the Last War

It will be seen that since 1915 direct war expenditures have cost Canada $1,698,517,653; pensions, $684,706,554; soldiers' re-establishment, $235,019,732; war graves, $4,811,287; soldier settlement administration, $26,448,528; interest charges, $1,953,464,614, or a total of $4,602,968,368. Interest charges increased steadily until 1933, and amount to $254,046,962 more than the entire direct expenditure on war materials, and $1,002,478,513 more than the entire cost of pensions, soldiers' re-establishment, war graves and administration from 1915 to 1936 inclusive. During 1936 interest charges were $103,506,140 and total war expenditures, including all the headings I have already mentioned, amounted to $55,269,000, which gives a total of interest exceeding other expenditures of $48,237,140.

The people of this dominion no doubt will judge the sincerity of the statements of the Prime Minister by the immediate action he takes to correct some of the abuses now being attempted by some of our financial buzzards who have had a long life of good pickings. Between 1920 and 1930, according to the price spreads committee, financial promoters who control bank funds and policyholders' insurance premiums added $500,000,000 of water to the industries and utilities of Canada. Interest must be paid upon the water under the doctrine of the sacredness of money contracts and sweatshop wages. Hitherto the state has had one device remaining in order to deal with financial monarchs. It could wait until they died and impose an inheritance tax. Costly brains have been hired and set in motion to devise ways and means of beating the inheritance tax and possibly the income tax as well. Now we see an exodus of Canadian multimillionaires to Nassau where a stay of a few short months each year, when the cold blasts blow in Canada, at the end of two delightful seasons turns a super-patriot into a full-fledged West Indian, immune from the payment of inheritance tax to the Dominion of Canada, whose people he may have gouged and exploited to the limit. And we are anxious to learn the results of the investigation into the textile industry.

With regard to the third clause, which concerns the removal of the causes of international friction and social injustice, it is my belief that trading restrictions coupled with the fight for markets by the major nations are the primary causes of war. The four danger points are Germany, Italy, Austria and Japan. These nations will hardly start a war unless it is forced on them by the commercial policies of the trading nations of the world. In other words, should the trading nations of the world continue to require these nations to effect commercial impossibilities, war is inevitable as soon as these nations realize that war is the only alternative to internal collapse. The actions of the present government would indicate that they are conscious of the possibility of the slaughter of another ten million young lives and the maiming of twenty million more. This inference may be taken from their efforts to consummate trade agreements with all nations, but until recently everything, as far as trade relations are concerned, seems to have been done in order to foment the causes of war while nothing has been done toward preserving peace.

The probabilities of war can be tested by two factors—gold production and ability to pay for imports by shipping exports. The nations I have mentioned do not produce gold in any important quantities, and when required to finance their imports by paying money based upon gold they are helpless, and must fight or starve. The maintenance of a standard of living among the people of a nation requires the bringing into the homes and pantries of that nation the necessities of life, varying in number with climate and locality. Averaged in all the trading nations of the world, however, they resolve themselves into twenty-five classes. Russia is the only nation that has power to produce the entire twenty-five classes within her own borders. The British commonwealth of nations and the United States of America have power to produce within their own borders from fifteen to eighteen of these classes, depending upon climatic conditions. Then comes a tremendous drop to Germany, Austria, Italy and Japan, which makes them the world's war danger points. Germany and Italy can produce within their borders only five of these classes. Austria and Japan can produce only three. On the basis of an efficient standard of living, therefore, Germany and Italy must import twenty of these classes while Austria and Japan must import twenty-two. Attempts to force them to pay for these imports on the basis of money having a value in gold are useless, because these nations have no gold producing power. The alternative is to keep them tied up commercially until, faced with internal collapse, one of them starts a war, which I believe would develop into a world war. The path of peace is along the commercial highway of fair trading relations, allowing these nations to use exports to pay for imports. This is certainly better than sacrificing ten million more lives. The idea that Canada and the United States can stay out of a world war is absurd.

When trading relations are based upon a barter plan, the cry of cheap labour is usually raised, but I should like to quote one fact which will show how baseless the cheap labour cry actually is. When the British government recently announced its intention to go into air force defence in a large way, the increase in value of shares in aeroplane companies amounted to more in actual money than labour could possibly get out of the whole program. Zaharoff may be dead, but he must have left a good successor somewhere, if we are to judge from war activities and profits already in process of making.

Many letters are coming to my desk from people in all walks of life requesting that I support restrictions of profits in war materials, careful promotion of defence facilities along our coastal borders, and the promotion of peaceful gestures to all nations. War is not caused chiefly by a lust for territory or prestige. It is also caused by a low standard of living, by a feeling of economic insecurity and by the desire for moral and social emancipation. When war becomes a matter of equal sacrifice for all and special privileges for none, there will be less propaganda in favour of it.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because I believe I represent a certain type of revolutionary thinkers, and I speak because I consider it my duty to do so. I agree with the mover of the resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) and join with him in his utter detestation of war in any form. No good can come from it to man, woman or child, physically, morally, spiritually or financially; yet I fail to see how Canada can remain neutral. We belong to the British commonwealth and if that commonwealth is engaged in war we are responsible, even though such war might be in northern India, or in Egypt, or in some other part of the empire. Our neutrality would not be recognized by any enemy with a big navy or air fleet.

If we are to remain neutral it seems to me our only alternative is to secede from the empire and start on our own. What could eleven million people do? How could we exist in a land-hungry world? The outstanding example of the impossibility of our position is found in the Ethiopian affair. On the other hand we might join the United States or permit the United States to look after us. Then, if they were engaged in war I wonder where our neutrality would be. What is the difference between allowing somebody else to fight for us, and fighting for ourselves? Therefore it seems to me impossible to remain neutral. An enemy which might capture our country might not give us the privileges we now enjoy. We might not have freedom of worship. It is possible that we might be captured by an un-Christian nation, and our children would be taught to worship war. I am sure there are a great many Canadians who would say that could happen only over our dead bodies.

I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) spoke wisely when he said that he refused under any circumstances to tie the hands of the nation to a declaration of neutrality. Such a policy would be as likely to invite attack as to stave it off. No doubt Ethiopia was selected by Mussolini as a point of attack because they were not able to hit back with equal force, and were not familiar with modern warfare.

I would not ask the government to do for the country what I would not be prepared to do for myself. If my wife and family were attacked I should like to see the man in this chamber who would get away unscathed after attacking them. If any other man's wife and family in Canada, people just as good as our families, are attacked, it is our duty to see that they are protected. I must admit that I have not risen to that perfection of Christian character where I can say that I will have peace in every possible way. I know it is possible for a man who is hit on one cheek to turn the other also, but I must admit my weakness in not having attained that point of perfection.

I am sure any citizen must give serious thought to the part of the resolution dealing with profits. To have control of all profits we must have complete nationalization of resources—resources from the land, and all other sources. Even the leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, according to the manifesto of that group, is not willing to go that far. I am willing, however, to agree that profits should be wiped out of this horrible thing, because they represent the price of blood, and I suggest that is a poor basis for wealth. We have noticed some people who made money during the late war, and we know that to-day they are not very happy about it. It should be made known that services will be given at wages equal to those gained by the men in the trenches. As wealth is of less importance than human life, wealth should be conscripted first.

We all believe in war. Hon. members may think that is a peculiar statement, but as I sit in the chamber and listen to hon. members who take part in the debates I feel the sword thrusts of political warfare and I hear speakers who are anxious to give the thrust that will fatally wound their opponents, so that they will be sent back to be buried forever in their constituencies.

If we are not prepared to be absolutely unselfish I do not see how we can say we do not believe in war. We must work for peace, and to me there is only one cure, namely, following the Prince of Peace. During the present session I have been agreeably surprised to find Christian courtesy between the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I think both these men must have in their private lives places where they can go to be quiet and get built up.

What is the cure for war? It can be cured only by following absolutely the Prince of Peace. As that old philosopher Socrates once said to a group of youths who were bothering him a little by asking how they could get to Mount Olympus, "Keep going in that direction." Anything that will cure hate in an individual will cure it in a nation. I am convinced that there are groups of people all over Canada to-day who are leading a Christian revolution which will help to cure the curse of war.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the house at great length in speaking on this matter, but I feel it is a question upon which everyone should be well informed. I have heard the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) say time and again that this program upon which the government is about to embark is purely one of defence. Then the other day I heard the right hon. gentleman make the remark that a world war was inevitable and that we must be prepared. In view of these words I must say that I am not quite satisfied as to just what is the program of the government. I want to make myself clear on this point as my opinion has changed slightly from what it was the other day. If we go ahead and prepare for a war, when that war comes we may be thrust into a great conflict when we never expected such a thing to happen.

As I read the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), it seems to me to be rather vaguely worded. I am in accord with the principle of the resolution, but I cannot agree with its exact wording. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the foreign policy of Canada should conform to the following principles:
> 1. That under existing international relations, in the event of war, Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be.

2. That at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials.
3. That the Canadian government should make every effort to discover and remove the causes of international friction and social injustice.

I cannot agree with the first principle, that Canada should remain strictly neutral regardless of who the belligerents may be. On page 675 of Hansard of March 2, 1936, will be found the following words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

We come to the policies of our country, and as yet, unfortunately in my judgment, this country, like a good many other countries is still relying more or less upon armaments as a last resort. I suggest that an isolationist position cannot be successfully maintained in the world to-day. Things may come to such a pass, if we are about to be dragged into a war and there may be no other policy open to us.

I would say that if the time comes when we must enter into a war, then we shall have to do so. The resolution states that under no circumstances should we take part in any war. I cannot just follow the reasoning of that. I cannot imagine ourselves being placed in a position where we would have to submit meekly to any proposal put up to us. I have in mind the possibility of a war between the United States and Japan. They are both militant countries, and should Japan attempt to attack the United States there is no doubt in my mind that the former would make every effort to establish a base in Canada. Once Japan had taken the United States there is no doubt that she would immediately turn on us. We could not remain neutral because we would not be in a position in a military sense, to force our neutrality upon Japan or any other nation. Surely we would not sit with our hands folded and say to Japan or any other nation: We will let you come in and do just exactly as you want us to do and we will make no effort to put you out of the country. I think that would be an entirely wrong position to take. I may say quite frankly that I do not think that is the real intention of the resolution and that is why I say it is rather loosely worded. I was interested the other day in hearing the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) say that we should remain strictly neutral. In order to remain neutral a nation must have a certain strength with which to maintain that position.

The second principle in the resolution states that at no time should Canadian citizens be permitted to make profits out of supplying war munitions or materials. Here again I am fully in accord with the principle of the resolution. I do not think profits should be made in time of war. As the Prime Minister said the other day, there were no terms with which to describe one who would endeavour to participate in the earning of blood money. But we know that this is being done all the time and I do not think such things should be permitted. The wording of this part of the resolution is a little ambiguous. The word "profit" is rather broad. If we are to say to the manufacturers that they will be permitted to earn just the bare cost of manufacturing, we shall have nothing manufactured. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) referred to the fact that our soldiers are paid only $1.10 per day while fighting in the trenches. That is all they receive for taking the chance of being blown to pieces. I do not think a manufacturer of munitions, boots and shoes, tunics, or farm products, or the developer of our natural resources, should get one penny more than the man in the trenches. Possibly he should not get as much. I think the word "profiteer" would have been a better expression. Some may say that there is no profiteering, but I cannot agree with that. This has been pointed out already by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Rowe) and another hon. member from this side. I should like to quote from an article in the American Weekly, dated Washington, February 8. It may be said that this is something from the United States, but I believe the same conditions exist in this country. The article reads:

United States Senate committee exposes deals in which Brazilian rebels were bilked. A profitable business in bilking Brazilian revolutionists with thousands of dollars supplied for the purpose of war materials sticking to the fingers of armament agents was exposed to-day by the United States Senate munitions committee.

With the current Paraguayan revolt lending interest to its inquiry, the committee traced an apparent profit of $77,000 to Lieutenant Leigh Wade, former United States army flyer, as a result of one deal for ten airplanes.

In addition, there was an item of one hundred machine guns sold for $350 by the United States army as junk, reconditioned, and passed around a circle of revolutionary representatives with their price increasing to a final figure of $49,000.

Further, there were numerous instances of fictitious prices, charged and invoiced by manufacturers and sellers, with a rebate for the overcharge made later to the buying agent.

Wade, now in South America despite a committee subpoena, received $130,500 from William Brown, disbursing agent for a gun-running ring, formed in connection with the Sao Paulo, Brazil, revolt of 1932.

He paid the Consolidated Aircraft Corporation of Buffalo, N.Y., $53,000 for the planes. The balance of $77,000 never was accounted for, Brown testified.

Moreover, the planes were never delivered to revolutionists. With the revolt crushed, the federal government of Brazil claimed title to them, and they were delivered to it.

While that refers to the country to the south of us, the same conditions would be revealed right here if the proper investigation were carried on. I think now is the time that we should definitely know what we are going to do. I remember three years ago when I was travelling through British Columbia I stepped into the concentration plant at Kimberley, where they have a copper mine, and I saw piled up there a great mound, much bigger than this room, of concentrates from the copper mine, thousands of tons of it. Upon inquiring why it was piled up there, I was informed that they had already reached their quota and they could not ship out any more, so they were just piling it up there. Now in time of war I contend that the price for copper would go up as soon as war was declared, and there would be a chance for these mine owners to make a huge profit due entirely to the war. The price of copper should be controlled, and the same with other metals, nickel, iron and such like. We set the price of wheat in the war. That was not beyond our power to do, and if we can set the price of wheat, why cannot we set the price of these other commodities in a case of great emergency? I do not think this should be done in any haphazard way. We should prepare for it now and manage it along business lines, and if the Canadian people were assured that there was going to be no participation in profiteering in the next war and that we were fighting absolutely for our country without any profiteering, there would be a great deal more satisfaction throughout this dominion.

I have before me another article taken from the Calgary Herald, entitled "Trading in Arms charged by Geneva. Article of Treaty forbids Reich exporting or importing war material. Britain bought products." This was given out by Geneva. I just heard someone say that this must be a great paper. So it is because it gives us information of this kind. The article goes on to say:

League of Nations officials charged—

This is from the League of Nations, mind you.

League of Nations officials charged Monday that Germany was trading in arms and munitions of war in open violation of the Treaty of Versailles.

Germany sold munitions worth 10,340,000 reichsmarks ($4,136,000) in 1935, the league reported, and bought arms of war to the value of 215,000 reichmarks ($86,000).

A little further on it says:

League officials, listing the total known world trade in armaments as $43,600,000, pointed to Germany's report to the 1935 edition of the "Statistical Year Book on the Trade in Arms and Ammunition" as evidence to support their charge.

Heretofore, officials said, Germany accompanied her arms trade figures with a footnote describing them as "arms for sporting purposes." This year the footnote was omitted.

The league warned its report for 1935 should not be accepted as complete for the world-wide traffic in arms. The world total of $43,600,000, it was pointed out, necessarily was incomplete.

Germany's best customer in arms for 1935, according to the league, was Great Britain, with purchases amounting to 1,089,000 reichsmarks ($435,000).

Can you conceive, Mr. Speaker, that, according to the league, Germany's best customer in arms for 1935 was Great Britain with purchases amounting to $435,000. We have enough manufacturers of munitions in Great Britain and Canada, if we are engaged on a purely defensive program, to go ahead and manufacture our own arms without any importations from Germany or any other country. I see it is nearly eleven o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put pursuant to standing order.

Friday, January 29, 1397

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved:

That standing order 63 of the House of Commons, relating to the appointment of standing committees of the house, be amended by adding to the standing committees of the house for the present session a standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, to which will be referred accounts and estimates and bills relating thereto of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for the present session, for consideration and report to the house; provided however that nothing in the resolution shall be construed to curtail in any way the full right of discussion in committee of supply: and that the said committee consist of Messrs. Barber, Beaubier, Bothwell, Deachman, Elliott (Kindersley), Ferland, Fiset (Sir Eugène), Fraser, Hanson, Heaps, Howard, Howden, Howe, Kinley, McKinnon (Kenora-Rainy River), McLarty, Maybank, Parent (Quebec West and South), Ryan, Stewart, Vien, Walsh and Young.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEES

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS—CHANGE IN PERSONNEL

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the name of Mr. McLean (Simcoe East) be substituted for that of Mr. Pinard on the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT—CHANGE IN PERSONNEL

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved:

That the name of Mr. Pinard be substituted for that of Mr. McLean (Simcoe East) on the joint committee of both houses on the parliamentary restaurant.

That the name of Mr. Rhéaume be substituted for that of Mr. Howden on the joint committee of both houses on the parliamentary restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

GOLD CLAUSE OBLIGATIONS

PROVISION FOR DISCHARGE BY PAYMENT IN LEGAL TENDER OF COUNTRY WHERE PAYABLE

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that obligations governed by the law of Canada and payable in gold or in gold coin or in an amount of money measured thereby may be discharged by payment of the nominal or face amount thereof in legal tender of the country in whose money the obligation is to be paid.

Motion agreed to.

SPANISH CIVIL WAR

ENLISTMENT OR RECRUITING OF CANADIANS FOR FOREIGN MILITARY SERVICE—EXPORT OF MUNITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). I am informed that during the regular nightly CBC news broadcast on Wednesday of this week at 10.45 p.m. eastern standard time it was stated that the government of Canada contemplated the passing of an order in council giving effect to the Imperial Foreign Enlistment Act of 1870 in Canada, with a view to the prohibition of Canadian volunteers fighting in Spain. I wish to inquire whether, and if so why, a decision of such importance is to be dealt with by order in council without first ascertaining the will of parliament now in session.

[Mr. Howe.]

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The hon. gentleman was kind enough to give notice of this question. No order in council has been passed regarding enlistment in the armed forces in Spain or elsewhere, nor has the government contemplated passing any such order in council without first bringing the question before parliament.

In order to make the information more complete, and as it relates to the same subject, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) I desire to answer immediately a question asked by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Gariépy), being question No. 19 on the order paper, which reads:

1. Has the government given consideration to a speech delivered by the Honourable Maurice Duplessis at Three Rivers and published verbatim in "Le Devoir" of January 26, 1937, in which he said:

"I declare that in our province communistic recruiting has been going on, that our young men have been enrolled to fight for the communists in Spain, that Canadian passports have been procured for them for Spanish ports, not for one or two young men, but for several, which shows that an organization exists, and indicates that there is something lacking somewhere."

2. Is it the intention of the government to investigate these assertions concerning the issue of passports, as mentioned in this speech?

In reply to a question by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Elliott) on January 19, I stated:

In view of recent developments, the question whether any special action should be taken regarding the control of enlistment in Canada for military service in foreign countries has been under examination. Canada is not included in the twenty-seven countries, all European states, which are represented on the non-intervention committee organized to deal with the Spanish situation, and which has made recommendations to the governments represented thereon for the prohibition of the substantial enlistment on both sides in the Spanish conflict which has taken place from European centres. The question, however, will continue to be given consideration.

I added that something more would be said on the subject later on. The whole question of the control of enlistment as well as the related question of the export of munitions has been under consideration by the government for some time past. As regards enlistment, members of the house are aware that the Foreign Enlistment Act, passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom in 1870, extends to Canada. The government concluded it would be desirable to propose Canadian legislation on this subject. After examination of the question by a technical committee, instructions were given for the drafting of a bill, which will shortly be introduced.

As regards application to Spain, I may say that the main section of the act, section 4, provides a penalty for enlistment or inducement of enlistment of a British subject within or without His Majesty's dominions, in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with any foreign state at peace with His Majesty; the fifth section provides penalties for embarking for such purpose, and other sections deal with shipbuilding and fitting out naval or military expeditions against the dominions of any friendly state. It had been generally held that the prohibition of enlistment or recruiting did not apply to a civil war. This month, in pursuance of its endeavours to secure the acceptance by European states of the policy of non-intervention in Spain, the government of the United Kingdom issued a statement indicating its opinion that the act, and particularly the sections penalizing enlistment or inducement, or embarking for the purpose of such enlistment, are applicable in the case of the present conflict in Spain. As the Canadian government had already decided to introduce legislation on the general subject, it was considered advisable to deal with such specific questions in that connection.

As regards the issue of passports, I am informed that for some months past no application for a passport has listed Spain among the countries to be visited, and no passport has been issued to any person who has indicated Spain as one of the countries of destination. The procedure as to passports will be brought into conformity with any legislation that may be passed by parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARYSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): In the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) the following question: The speech from the throne last year promised a bill to provide for the creation of parliamentary secretaryships. This bill was not presented to the house last session. Does the government propose to submit such a bill to the house during this session?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): If my hon. friend is agreeable I will submit his question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) for reply when he is back in the house.

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS

PROVISION TO ENCOURAGE REPAIR OF RURAL AND URBAN DWELLINGS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to guarantee approved lending institutions against losses which they may sustain as a result of home improvement loans made by them, to limit the liability of the government of Canada in respect of such guarantees to not exceeding fifteen per centum of the aggregate amount of home improvement loans made by any such approved lending institution and to not exceeding seven million five hundred thousand dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will give us as clear an explanation as he can of the whole situation. I thought it might be preferable that that be done now, when questions may be asked if necessary, rather than that time should be taken up in a discussion of the matter before going into committee.

Mr. DUNNING: At this stage would the committee prefer a general statement, which later could be dealt with when the bill is in committee? Details can be much better examined, of course, when the bill has been brought down, but I agree that in connection with new legislation it is desirable at this stage of the proceedings to indicate broadly what is proposed.

The bill which this resolution precedes is designed to secure legislative sanction for the administration of a plan which has become widely known as the home improvement plan. Briefly stated, the bill asks authority to give a limited government guarantee to loans made in accordance with certain stipulated conditions which will be found in detail in the bill itself, by approved lending institutions for the purpose of making repairs, additions and improvements to urban and rural homes. The guarantee is to be limited to fifteen per cent of the total amount of the loans made by any approved lending institution, and in any case the authority to the government to guarantee is limited to $7,500,000 in the aggregate. This means that the total amount of loans to be subject to guarantee can not exceed $50,000,000. In the bill also, Mr. Chairman, will be found a provision reserving to the government the right to announce at any time that no further loans will be guaranteed.

The plan itself is based upon a recommendation made by the National Employment Commission as a result of extensive investigations into methods of absorbing the unemployed in this country, and into the operation of a similar plan in the United States of America during the past two years.

The recommendation was made by the commission and accepted by the government on the 9th of September, 1936, on which occasion the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) made a public announcement in which he stated that the plan in its financial aspects would require parliamentary sanction under new legislation and that such legislation would be introduced into parliament at this session.

The announcement made by the Prime Minister on that occasion met with an enthusiastic response in, I think, all sections of the country. Many requests were received that the plan should be made effective at once in order that its beneficial effects might accrue during the winter months when unemployment tends to be most severe. Under date of September 28 the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association, acting on behalf of all the chartered banks, wrote to me as Minister of Finance stating that the banks had agreed to cooperate fully with the dominion government in carrying out the plan, and moreover that they were willing to commence making loans on their merits without awaiting the legislation, provided they had the assurance that the necessary legislation would be introduced and that it would be in such form as to make the dominion guarantee retroactive to cover loans made in accordance with the approved conditions prior to the passing of the necessary legislation.

The plan as originally announced had suggested a financing charge not in excess of the discount rate of five per cent for a one-year loan repayable in equal monthly instalments, and proportionate rates of course for longer periods. This was the maximum originally contemplated by the employment commission, and is the rate which was and is still allowed under the United States scheme. While the five per cent rate was intended by the employment commission only to be the maximum, and while such small instalment loans entail a great deal of detail work by way of both investigation and collection, it appeared to the government to be unnecessarily high for the effective working of the plan. Representatives of the banks were therefore called for conference at Ottawa to discuss their offer of immediate assistance and to consider the conditions which would have to be imposed in order to make the loans eligible for guarantee, including the maximum interest charge.

I would be stretching the truth somewhat if I were to say that the banks enthusiastically welcomed the government's proposal to reduce the maximum financing charge from a five per cent to a three and a quarter per cent discount rate, but I can at least pay the tribute to the banks that when they were fully apprised of the government's intention and desire to make the plan a complete success, they willingly accepted the low interest rate as their contribution to a great national cooperative undertaking, and assured us that they would give the government their wholehearted cooperation in making the plan a real success. I think it is a matter of common knowledge that in the last few months the banks and other lending institutions have been living fully up to this undertaking.

When the conditions imposed had been accepted by the banks, under date of October 15, I wrote to the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association giving him the assurance that the government would introduce the necessary legislation at the next session of parliament, and that the legislation would be introduced in such form as to make the guarantee retroactive to cover loans made prior to the passing of such legislation, provided the loans were made in conformity with conditions approved by the Department of Finance and conditions which, of course, will be embodied in the legislation. On the basis of this assurance the home improvement plan has been in operation since about November 1, and the figures as to loans from November 1 to December 31, during the first two months of operation, as reported to the Department of Finance, indicate that up to that time $1,200,000 has been loaned in small amounts, and that, if my memory serves me correctly, about 3,600 loans had been made during that time.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the figures as to loans to provinces?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not that information before me, but will have it when we are in committee on the bill. I shall have information by provinces, by cities, the average amount of loans, and analyses of any kind that might reasonably be issued from the standpoint of information required. However I have not the information sought at this stage, and am attempting merely to give a general survey.

I believe the first two months' experience should assure the committee as to the future success of the plan, and I believe there is wisdom in putting it into operation during the late fall and early winter months. I am sure the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) will confirm the opinion of the employment commission. After studying the matter exhaustively they have found that approximately eighty cents out of every dollar expended in the project is expended on labour used at some stage of the proceedings. When the bill is under discussion I shall be pleased to table the correspondence with the president of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Perhaps it is sufficient for me to say at this time that the plan provides for loans to owners of rural and urban homes in order to assist them in financing repairs, additions and improvements. The loans shall not exceed $2,000 on any single property. A provision in the bill to be laid before the house, however, will suggest a somewhat higher maximum with regard to multiple family houses. Another provision will be that the loans shall be made for terms not in excess of three years, except with respect to loans in excess of $1,000, where the maximum term may be five years. All loans are repayable by equal monthly or other convenient periodic instalments.

The bill will provide that the maximum financing charge shall not exceed a discount rate of three and a quarter per cent for a one-year loan repayable in equal monthly instalments, and proportionate rates for longer periods. The loans are based on the character and income of the borrower, and no security by way of collateral or endorsement is required. Furthermore we have attempted to devise a simple procedure in order that the plan may be available to home owners in every community, with a maximum of convenience and economy.

Although I believe the purposes behind the development of the home improvement plan are familiar to all, they may be described as (1) to absorb unemployment, particularly in the building trades where unemployment is most heavily concentrated; (2) to stimulate a revival of the construction industry, which, as every hon. member knows, has been one of the laggards among Canadian industries in the recovery movement, and (3) to make it possible for home owners throughout Canada to make long-needed repairs and improvements to their homes.

With regard to the experience in connection with a similar plan in the United States, may I say that in that country the plan is known as the modernization credit plan, and was initiated in the summer of 1934 under title one of the Federal Housing Act. It has now been in operation for over two years, and has met with striking success. In the first twenty-two months of operation, namely up to June 1 of last year, a total of 1,056,000 individual loans had been made in the United States for an aggregate amount of $382,000,000. In an official booklet issued by the federal housing administration of the United States under date of July 20, 1936, the following statement is made:

> Losses of the 6,289 financial institutions which have made loans under the modernization credit plan and which have been paid by the federal housing administration have to date totalled less than one-half of one per cent of the total amount of their advances. A survey made in the early part of 1936 showed that these loans on the whole had had an excellent record for prompt repayment. At that time only a fraction over two per cent of the total number of loans were in default thirty days or more. A total of 4,333 financial institutions reported that they had no accounts that were delinquent thirty days or more.

That is the experience of the United States plan up to June of last year, as officially reported.

Later information indicates that by the end of 1936 close to $500,000,000 had been borrowed under the plan in the United States, and the authorities there estimate that for every dollar borrowed, private capital has spent an additional $3. On that basis they have arrived at the conclusion that a $2,000,000,000 construction repair program has apparently been the result. No up-to-date figures as to actual losses in the United States are available, but it is estimated by the authorities of that country that they are still less than two per cent, and that the actual eventual loss to the government will be under one per cent.

In the original United States plan the government of that country guaranteed the lending institutions against loss up to twenty per cent of the total amount of loans. Later the insurance against loss was reduced in that country to ten per cent, and provision was made for increasing the limit of loans up to $50,000 with respect to certain larger properties such as apartment houses, manufacturing and industrial plants, colleges, churches, hospitals, business and commercial buildings, and so on. In this legislation we are not contemplating going beyond the home.

In connection with the amount of the guarantee, I would say that while we have provided in the legislation and in the resolution now before the committee for a guarantee up to fifteen per cent of the amount of the loan, judging from the experience in the United States I believe that the losses incurred will be only a fraction of that amount. However, it appeared essential that if we were to achieve the success we had in mind we should remove any hesitation which might otherwise be evident in the attitude of the lending institutions. Consequently, a fifteen per cent guarantee is asked for. I think the attitude of the lending institutions is at least in part the result of this decision, especially in view of the fact that in the United States the lending institutions secure a much higher rate on the government guarantee home improvement scheme than we are proposing to allow under the legislation of which this resolution is a necessary preliminary.

This is all I wish to say in the way of a general statement. I think the details with respect to terms and conditions and standards and all the rest of it can be discussed much better when the bill is in the hands of hon. members. The bill will be distributed just as soon as the resolution is concurred in.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great attention to the explanations given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). Every hon. member of this house is favourable to the improvement of Canadian homes, but it seems that such improvements should be made by those who already have the money to make them. There are thousands and thousands of men throughout the country who have money deposited in the banks, and who are keeping it there instead of spending it on home improvements. Since 1930 many people have been sitting on their money instead of spending it. They have been waiting for the proper time to spend $1,000, $2,000, $5,000 or perhaps $10,000 to build a barn, to purchase land for a son, to paint a house, to build a store, and so on. They are not yet spending their money as freely as they did when this government was previously in power before July, 1930. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) left the people of Canada a wonderful souvenir when he presented that budget which showed a surplus of over $40,000,000. That was a long time ago, and we have passed through some strenuous years.

Before giving an opportunity to people who have no money to get some from the banks, it would be much easier to induce those who have money to spend some of it. The results can be seen from the bank clearings. The last year my hon. friend was minister of finance, before July, 1930, the bank clearings amounted to $20,000,000,000. The year after, under the guidance of the leader of the Conservative party, who was then minister of finance, the bank clearings dropped down to $15,000,000,000. People got very tight with regard to money matters because they had very little confidence in the government of the day.

Before passing such legislation as is proposed, two things should be done. First, we should fire all the Tories which the previous government put into strategic positions, and, second, we should repeal every piece of legislation passed by that government. If that were done, public confidence would be restored and people would begin to spend their money more freely. It is all very simple: we do not need any legislation. Fire the Tories and drop the Bennett legislation into the wastepaper basket. Then the people throughout the land will breathe easier.

This is one of the ideas of the employment commission. I do not believe in supermen or wizards. The chairman of this employment commission is a so-called wizard, but we do not need any wizards in this country. What we need is people with common sense.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: When the hon. member refers to common sense he looks over to this side.

Mr. POULIOT: I was not referring to the hon. gentleman, but if I were it would be in connection with "cents." I was referring to "sense." This idea really came from the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. McLarty), who suggested it to the chairman of the commission. Here is what will actually happen. Joe has poor credit while John has good credit at the banks. They will both go to the bank to try to get $500 to improve their homes. Joe will get nothing because his credit is no good, while John will get the $500 he asks for. But he would get it even if there was no such legislation. If his credit is good he will get the money right away, whereas if his credit is no good, he will get no money from the bank. All this legislation actually changes nothing. We will have to come back to the good old policy of firing all the Tory strategic men and dropping the Bennett legislation into the wastepaper basket. When that is done business will be good throughout the land.

The second idea brought forward by the employment commission was the classification of the unemployed. This idea was suggested by the member for Témiscouata. He carried on this classification himself, and then it was continued very efficiently by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). This work was done without the help of the commission; the ordinary staff in the department were able to do all that was necessary. Since September this work has been in charge of the employment commission, but we have heard nothing of it. It is being done by wizards, which probably means that it will never be seen. Work like this should be done right away and not continued over the centuries. I suggest to the chairman of the employment commission, to spend some time on this idea of the classification of the unemployed. Let him work on it instead of making useless speeches on the housing scheme. This is my very humble suggestion about the matter. I may say that I do not believe in the enactment of more legislation; there is already too much of it. A very eminent financier, Mr. Thomas Bradshaw, has spoken of the enormous number of laws that we have in this country, laws that nobody is supposed to ignore. Next session it would be better, and I suggest this to the government, if they simply brought down the estimates and the necessary bills to ratify trade agreements. Let us try a session like that, without futile legislation, and the country, I am sure, will be all the better for it.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the minister has referred to certain letters. I think it might be well to observe the rule and table them now, so that we shall have an opportunity to see them before the bill is brought down. The rule requires that in any event.

Mr. DUNNING: I was intending to comply with the rule, and I indicated—

Mr. BENNETT: After they have been referred to, they should be tabled.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be pleased to send for copies—I haven't them here—and they will be available at the bill stage of the proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT: I think, Mr. Chairman, it will be found that the three and a quarter per cent discount is a misnomer. Some of the borrowers have informed me that the rate actually paid more nearly approximates twice that. It is a misleading term.

Mr. DUNNING: Because of the importance of it, in order that there may be no deception, in all of the publicity the two rates will be given: the three and a quarter per cent discount rate, with the explanation of the manner in which it works, and its equivalent in terms of simple interest, which amounts to something just over six per cent. The rate in the United States is five per cent discount, which works out at a trifle over ten per cent simple interest. In Canada it is three and a quarter per cent discount, which works out at 6·13 per cent, I think, in terms of simple interest—I may be out a fraction.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Chairman, I think generally speaking the people of this country will welcome the legislation which is to be founded on this resolution, in fact it is long overdue. It is true that the National Employment Commission may have suggested it to the government last year, but the Minister of Finance as well as other hon. members will recall that the housing committee of this parliament which sat in 1935 recommended that loans of this kind be made for the purpose of improving properties throughout the dominion.

I might point out also, in view of certain criticisms that have been made here this afternoon, that the greater part of the loans so far requested by people who own homes have been made, if I am correctly informed, in the province of Quebec. I know of none who requested such legislation more insistently than did the representatives from the province of Quebec, and I think there will be no province in Canada which will take advantage of these loans to a greater extent than the province of Quebec.

The Minister of Finance in his remarks this afternoon said that this money would be loaned for the purpose of improving individual homes. I am not quite clear how the minister will define individual homes. What I have in mind at the moment—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend has in mind the multiple family house, provision will be made for that.

Mr. HEAPS: No. What I had in mind was the returns that were laid on the table or the answers that were made to questions last year, showing that the loans that were made under the housing act of 1935 were for the most part much larger amounts than were required for the building of individual homes. Loans of $20,000 and $30,000, and in many cases more than that, were made. I am speaking from memory, but I think the Minister of Finance will find that I am not very far out.

Mr. DUNNING: Just on that point, and also speaking from memory—I will bring down the information at a later stage although it is not really relevant to the matter under review, because the housing act as my hon. friend knows, is an entirely different statute—the average loan under the housing act was in the neighbourhood of $4,000.

Mr. HEAPS: Per house?

Mr. DUNNING: In that neighbourhood, yes.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not want to go into that further now. Last year I wanted to go into the operation of the housing act, but no opportunity presented itself, not even on the estimates, if I remember correctly; therefore nothing was ever said about it. What I want made clear at the moment is this: The minister has spoken of individual homes. Will these loans go for homes either single or duplex, and not for large buildings, the owners of which perhaps may want to take advantage of the lower rate of interest? Personally I have no objection to apartment houses coming under the scheme provided there are reasonable guarantees for the government and the lending corporations. I think we ought to have information from the minister on that point.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend would be good enough to leave it until the bill is before us, because all the various qualifications necessarily appear in the bill itself, and I think the reading of it would save the asking of a number of questions. I cannot offhand answer that particular question in detail, but I know that provision is made for it.

Mr. HARTIGAN: I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance one feature of the act that was in operation last year, because it offers a very serious impediment to proper administration of the act. The clause to which I refer, which withholds the benefits of the act from a certain large class of our population, stipulates that the person borrowing the money must be steadily employed. Automatically that rules out, whether intentionally so or not, the shore fisherman on the Atlantic seaboard. I do not know what is being done on the Pacific coast, but on the Atlantic coast and in the maritime provinces the banks are taking advantage of the fact that a man must be steadily employed before he can come under the act. We all know that a fisherman's occupation is seasonal, and the amount he receives in any year depends on what he gets for his catch. The homes of our fishermen are badly in need of rehabilitation. A great many of them are living in buildings that would not be tolerated by any other class of the community except those living in the outports of the dominion. This is one clause of the act which I think calls for revision.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend (Mr. Hartigan) must be speaking of the housing act and not of the proposed legislation with respect to home improvements, which of course as yet has no existence.

Mr. HARTIGAN: No, I am speaking of the alteration and improvement loans that we had during the past year.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is it the intention of the government to issue loans strictly on the merits of the property in question, or are certain districts to be favoured first? I ask the question because in the neighbourhood of Victoria when some people have applied for loans they have been informed: We propose, to begin with, to lend only in certain districts, ignoring others. I consider that is hardly fair, and I would like to know what is the intention of the government.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is confusing this proposed legislation with the present housing act. I have had no such complaint with respect to the two months' operation of the home improvement plan. Under the housing act, as my hon. friend knows, the complaint he is now making was a very general one, especially in British Columbia. But any owner of a home, who is credit worthy and desires to make improvements, can get from a chartered bank or any of a number of other institutions, details of which I will give on the bill, a loan under the terms of this home improvement plan, which is entirely separate and distinct from the housing act.

Mr. TOLMIE: I thoroughly understand that. I know quite well the property to which I refer. I sold the land, to begin with, on terms to the man who proposed to build the house, so that I am fairly familiar with the situation. What I was asking was whether it was the intention to favour certain districts or to lend them money on the merits of the property in question. In this case the man is a first class risk; I regarded him as one to whom a sale could be made on credit. He has constructed his house to a certain point, but it is not finished, and he wants to take advantage of this scheme in order to complete the building.

Mr. DUNNING: I can hardly understand, under the circumstances referred to by my hon. friend, how a man could be refused a loan under the home improvement plan by any branch of any chartered bank, because that is the basis of the scheme. There may be something in connection with the credit worthiness of the individual concerned about which I know nothing, and about which, perhaps, my hon. friend knows nothing. If loans have been refused for any other reason than that the borrower is not in the view of the lending institution credit worthy, or that the money is not to be used for the purpose contemplated by the scheme, I have not heard of it. These are virtually the only two valid reasons for refusal of loans, and one of the things that have pleased me most is the very small number of complaints of people not being able to make use of the facilities provided for by the plan. I have felt up to now that the banks and other lending institutions concerned have been cooperating whole-heartedly in getting it going in a large way. There will be cases, of course, where a prospective borrower will think he ought to get credit when the lending institution thinks he is not likely, for reasons which appear good to them, to be able to repay the loan. We are not compelling the lending institutions to lend where they do not think a loan would be repaid; they must have reasonable confidence of that. I take it, in the case that my hon. friend mentions, he at any rate would be willing to lend the money, because the borrower is a good risk, and if that is so there should be no reason why the borrower cannot demonstrate to a bank that he is a good borrower and, provided he comes within the terms of the scheme as provided by the bill which will be introduced following this resolution, he should be able to get the loan.

Mr. TOLMIE: I shall be glad to give the minister further particulars in the form of a letter.

Mr. DUNNING: Thank you.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to know whether the lending companies take any lien on a property for any loan they make.

Mr. DUNNING: None whatever. The only security is the individual's note. No endorsement is required.

Mr. McGREGOR: Does the minister mean that anyone can get a loan without someone else backing his note?

Mr. DUNNING: Absolutely; that is what I say. This scheme is devised for the individual on his own credit, without endorsement and without collateral security. That is why the government is standing behind the scheme,—in order to make it easy for people who have character and credit, and can assure the bank of their ability and willingness to repay, to get a loan without note or collateral, in the simplest possible way. That is why the scheme has started off so successfully. In spite of the winter season, $1,200,000 has been lent in small amounts in less than two months. All this, of course, will develop during discussion of the details of the bill itself.

Mr. McGREGOR: That is not being carried out in my constituency. Anyone who applies for a loan must have someone to back his note before he gets the money.

Mr. DUNNING: If it is a loan under this plan?

Mr. McGREGOR: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, a bank making such a loan cannot qualify for the guarantee of the government.

Mr. McGREGOR: I can tell the minister that the fact is as I have stated, because I personally have backed two of the notes.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to have the particulars, because one of the conditions is undoubtedly the one I have stated. It will be possible to discuss this more intelligently on the bill itself, but if the loan is under the provisions of this plan unquestionably a borrower does not require an endorsement.

Mr. McGREGOR: I will give the minister the details, including the name of the bank, when the time comes.

Mr. LOCKHART: May I support what has been said by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Tolmie), and also pass on a suggestion to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning)? In my particular vicinity there are two areas which in the past five years have been considered rather poor localities from the point of view of security. I personally supported one applicant to whom I would quite readily make a loan if I had the money, and who required it to repair his house. The bank, taking the attitude they have maintained for the last five years, said that the locality did not warrant a loan, although the man was definitely of a good type to whom money could be lent, and is well employed. It may be said that the banks are justified in taking this attitude, but I bring the matter to the attention of the minister so that in his instructions to and deliberations with lending institutions he may point out that where a man is financially in a position to borrow, the locality of his residence should not particularly affect his entitlement to a loan.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps there has been a little misunderstanding on the part of some of those who have spoken. The government has not undertaken under this plan to direct that banks shall make loans. The banks must make their own decision, based upon the exercise of discretion.

Mr. DUNNING: Right.

Mr. BENNETT: But if they do make the loan—without endorser, too; they have no right to ask for an endorser or for a second name—the government underwrites it to the extent of fifteen per cent against loss. The plan, as has been pointed out, is not entirely new, and it is predicated on the assumption that the institutions will lend money. They are not compelled to lend it; there is nothing at all in this resolution which provides that. It merely means that if I walk into a bank and say I want a thousand dollars to improve my home, the bank advances me $966.50—roughly that is what I get—keeping back three and a quarter per cent bank discount. Thereupon I execute an agreement to repay the $1,000, not the $966, in monthly instalments upon which interest is computed.

Mr. DUNNING: No, my right hon. friend is wrong there. Interest is not computed; the discount takes care of it.

Mr. BENNETT: But what I am pointing out is that, extended over a period of months, the ten dollars, or whatever the amount is, certainly represents some part of the additional interest; otherwise you would not have your six per cent. I think however it is only confusion of detail, not of principle. If I meet my engagement promptly, then of course it is just a banking transaction between the bank and myself, but if at the end of the given time the bank finds that fifteen per cent of its advance has not been paid, up to that point the government will reimburse. The government may be obliged to reimburse the bank under this guarantee to the extent of $150, if the loss amounts to $150. I have not yet had a chance to go into the legislation, but there are always questions of subrogation of the government and matters of that kind, which will be considered in the bill itself. Were any orders in council issued giving effect to these arrangements between the government and the lending institutions?

Mr. DUNNING: No. I think the correspondence which I have mentioned covers it all. I am not positive of that, but almost positive.

Mr. THOMPSON: No member of this committee is more anxious to see our working men better housed than I am, but I believe this bill is starting at the wrong end. I am confident that there are sufficient funds awaiting investment in the hands of private individuals to build all the houses necessary in this country, but these funds are not so used because if a man builds a house in any city or town in Canada he cannot sell it for more than fifty per cent of what it cost him. That is where the trouble lies. Years ago a man could buy a lot, build a house and rent it and make some money out of it; to-day the costs of labour and material and taxes are so high that it is impossible for people to make such investments profitably. Some relief from taxation on real estate would help a great deal in the matter of the expenditure of money for the building of houses for our people. It would not then be necessary for the government to enter into any building scheme.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. PELLETIER: I would like the minister to define what he means by the term "home improvement."

Mr. DUNNING: I would appreciate it if my hon. friend would wait for the bill, because the bill itself goes into considerable detail as to what is covered by that term. It is one of the most difficult things to apply limitations to, and I have not the bill before me at the moment.

Mr. SENN: Will these loans be available for farmers?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. ESLING: This discussion is simply leading to confusion as between the housing act and home improvement loans. To my mind this home improvement proposal is the most sensible and practical one which has ever been put into legislation. In the first place it relieves the government of overhead charges; it places the responsibility upon the banks. No hon. member can expect a man to be able to go into a bank and borrow money unless the bank thinks the loan will be repaid. The man must be a home owner to start with. The difference between this proposal and the housing act is that the lending companies who lend money for the construction of a house consider material collateral. In this matter they simply consider a man's moral worth and likelihood of repayment of the loan. And it is not a matter of thousands of dollars but of a few hundred—to improve one's bathroom or kitchen, to add a room, and so on. As for private loans, one hon. member suggests that there is plenty of private money available. Let me tell you, you can have plenty of difficulty in getting a private loan, and the rate of interest will be higher than it will ever be on a loan from a bank, if your moral standing is good.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to know whether the bill will cover a case like this: I have in mind a very worthy and thrifty working man who came here from the old country—he is perhaps only one of many in the same class—who bought a piece of land, paid for it, and commenced to build a little home. In the first place I believe he built two rooms. He saved a little money and added two more rooms. In the building of the house the roof necessarily had to be flat, because it was only one storey. Now he desires to add another storey and have a hip roof, and to modernize his plumbing a little. He has no debt of any kind; his property is clear. What would that man, who at the moment requires something less than $750 on a property worth $3,000 or $3,500 have to do to borrow the $750? Could he go to a bank or lending institution, get the money and proceed with the work without engaging a solicitor or someone to intercede for him when the loan is being negotiated? If the bill covers such a situation as this I can see that it will be of tremendous benefit to hundreds, perhaps thousands, of working men of the class I have mentioned, and will result in considerable increase in employment in the building trades and allied industries, such as lumber, hardware, plumbing supplies, and so forth.

Mr. DUNNING: It is very difficult to give an answer with respect to a specific case, especially in view of the fact that my hon. friend approaches the matter from the wrong angle. He speaks of the value of the property, which is free of encumbrance. That has nothing to do with the home improvement loan scheme, because the bank cannot take security on the property. My hon. friend will see that the factors entering into the bank's decision to make the loan cannot comprehend any collateral, because the scheme bars collateral and bars endorsements. If the man in question, having a house such as my hon. friend describes, is in a position to show the bank that there is reasonable prospect of his being able to repay the money according to his contract, certainly the bank can qualify for a guarantee from the government under the home improvement scheme for the kind of improvement which my hon. friend has outlined. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. MacNICOL: This particular man is a civic employee; he works perhaps ten months a year, and is very thrifty. Plenty of people will lend him the money on mortgage, but being an old country Scotsman he does not want to mortgage the property. What I want to know is, will he be able himself to go to a bank and get a loan under this scheme? If so, the bill will be of great benefit.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not like to say that he can get it, because I know nothing of the credit standing of the man.

Mr. MacNICOL: His credit is A-1.

Mr. DUNNING: But I am not the judge of that; the bank is, as the right hon. leader of the opposition pointed out. As long as a man's credit standing is good; as long as his character is good enough to warrant the bank lending him money on his sole note, he does not need to go to a lawyer, and the bank cannot take a mortgage under this scheme. I think that is the answer to my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: It is intended for properties that already have mortgages on them, I think.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. WILTON: Unless this government or the provincial governments are in a position to regulate to some extent the activities of the municipalities in regard to assessments I am afraid this bill will not attain the success it so richly deserves. For example, a man finds it convenient or necessary to make some improvement to his home. He goes to the bank and, on his good credit, succeeds in securing a loan to the extent of $300, $400, $500 or $1,000. He then adds to the value of his house by the erection of a verandah, we will say, on the front, or by some other improvement to the extent of his loan, which we will say amounted to $500. A little later along comes the local assessor. He looks at the house and says, "It is a thousand dollars better than it was," so he raises the assessment by a thousand dollars. This sort of thing is going to discourage householders, I am afraid, who may desire to take advantage of this scheme, and I think something should be done to put a stop to it.

Mr. DUNNING: In fairness to the provinces and municipalities I should say that since the scheme has been mooted province after province and municipality after municpality have come forward voluntarily and said that so great is the need for stimulating employment that the necessary arrangements will be made so that improvements of this kind will not be made a penalty upon the improvers, within the terms of their assessment acts. I cannot pretend to know personally how they work it out in detail, but I know that the employment commission has succeeded in getting quite a strong body of public opinion behind this thing in order to make it go.

Mr. BENNETT: They should; they are paying a man $4,500 a year for publicity.

Mr. DUNNING: Part of that body of public opinion is shown by the fact that many municipal authorities are willing to cooperate with a view to removing the disadvantage to which my hon. friend refers. I did not catch the remark of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: I said they were paying a man $4,500 a year for publicity.

Mr. DUNNING: I suppose he is earning it; I do not know.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the fifteen per cent guarantee apply to each individual loan? That is to say, if a bank lends a million dollars altogether, naturally some of those loans will not be repaid. Does the guarantee of fifteen per cent mean that the government is behind the bank to the extent of $150,000 of losses?

Mr. DUNNING: It is an aggregate, not an individual guarantee.

Mr. BENNETT: It applies not to the branches of the bank but to the bank as a whole?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): In regard to these loans, is there any provision which will ensure that one hundred per cent of the amount borrowed will be used in the improvement of the property? Is there any provision in the bill to that effect?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. If my hon. friend will wait until the bill is introduced I shall be glad to go into that with him, although he will understand that it rests very considerably upon the good faith of the bank in making the loan and following it up.

Mr. GRAYDON: During this discussion we have heard a good deal with reference to home owners in urban places. I should like to have the position of the farmer made clear. Does this scheme apply only to the house on the farm or does it apply to any other buildings which the farmer may desire to repair under this arrangement?

Mr. DUNNING: I can assure my hon. friend that it is not confined to the farmhouse, but if my hon. friend will be good enough to wait until the bill is brought down I think all these details will be made clear.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 11, to increase employment by encouraging the repair of rural and urban homes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 8, to amend the Dairy Industry Act.

He said: In moving the second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I just want to refer to what I said on the motion for leave to introduce it. The amendments do not involve any matter of principle having to do with the Dairy Industry Act. They are very limited in extent, and might be better discussed in committee, I suggest, therefore, that the house go immediately into committee to consider the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. GARDINER moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is this one of those bills which, having regard to its relation to agriculture and to the dairy industry in particular, it would be better to have considered by the committee on agriculture? I remember that on one occasion the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) took the view—I did not share it at the time and I do not say that I share it now—that a bill which involved discussion of details concerning an industry such as agriculture would be better dealt with by a committee, where the members can discuss the different questions in the light of the information that from time to time may be conveyed to the committee from other sources. I merely ask the question, because I am not enough of an authority on agriculture to express an opinion.

Mr. GARDINER: I would have no objection to letting the bill go to the committee, but I would suggest that the changes are very limited. The first is just a matter of adding the word "cream" to one section where we had only "milk" before, preventing the introduction of adulterants into cream as well as milk. Another change simply takes from section 7 the amendment we made to that section last year, and puts it in section 8. The wording is practically the same, but the penalty under section 7 is from $500 to $1,000, while under section 8 the penalty is from $10 to $50. The penalty under section 7 was too high. These are the main changes. Another section of the present bill merely adds a few matters which may be dealt with by regulation.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of what the minister has said, as far as I can see there is no necessity for sending the bill to the committee. Apparently it can be dealt with here.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—No foreign matter to be added to milk or cream.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister state whether there have been many cases of adulteration of cream, and why the word "preservative" appears in this section? It seems to me that at times it might be difficult to get along without a preservative.

Mr. GARDINER: The word "preservative" has always been in there. The only words added are the words "or cream."

Mr. SENN: But cream, as well as milk, is included in the bill. A preservative might not be well in milk, but it might do no harm in cream. I am not prepared, however, to make a definite statement as to that. Have any cases of adulteration come to the notice of the department? Is it a prevalent custom?

Mr. GARDINER: This is a more or less technical matter. My information from officers of the department is that there has been some difficulty due to the fact that cream has not been covered by the act, and that the insertion in the section of the words "or cream" is not in any way endangered by the fact that "preservative" is mentioned later.

Mr. SENN: I am not finding fault.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Cheese.

Mr. LOCKHART: The last part of section 3 states:

. . . but nothing in this subsection shall be held to apply to portions of Cheddar cheese of indiscriminate weight, or to cheese of indiscriminate weight manufactured by individual farmers.

Will this permit farmers serving cheese to customers on the market to label as one pound packages those containing only twelve or thirteen ounces?

Mr. GARDINER: This particular section is not intended to apply to individual farmers who are selling their products. I assume there are sections in other acts which would permit the prosecution of a man who sells as a pound a weight of any product which in fact is not a pound.

Mr. LOCKHART: I have asked the question in order to clear the matter in the event of any technical point being raised. I know it has been discovered that cheeses manufactured by some farmers have been sold on the market under conditions such as I have described. So far they have got by with it, and I thought the provision in the bill might strengthen their position.

Mr. GARDINER: No, this would not strengthen their position.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REVISION OF ACCOUNTING SET-UP

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for,

(a) the surrender by the Minister of Finance of certain amounts of the capital stock of the Canadian National and the Canadian Northern railway companies,

(b) the transfer and exchange of certain shares of the capital stock of the said companies,

(c) the abandonment of certain claims against the Canadian National Railway Company,

(d) the adjustment of certain accounts affecting government railways,

(e) the setting up of a securities trust corporation for the purpose of preserving the priority rights of the dominion and its protection against future contingencies in respect to potential interest and other savings, and

(f) generally for revision of the accounting set-up of the Canadian National railway system.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is customary to discuss a resolution of this kind before the house goes into committee. In view of the fact that it involves many intricate matters with respect to money and finance, without in any sense committing ourselves to the principle of the resolution I am prepared to agree that the Speaker leave the chair and the house go into committee, on the understanding that by so doing we are in no sense acquiescing in what under some circumstances might become a very dangerous piece of legislation, depending upon what the legislation may be as outlined by the minister.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, as the resolution indicates, the bill to be founded on the resolution involves important changes in the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways. In the first instance it will provide for the centralization of capital stock control of the companies now comprising the national railway system, through one company, namely, the Canadian National Railway Company. At the present time the Canadian National Railway Company includes the Grand Trunk railway and about sixty subsidiary companies. On the other hand the Canadian Northern Railway Company includes the old Canadian Northern railway with about forty subsidiary companies. These two companies are entirely separate corporations, both owned by the Dominion of Canada, the only connection between them being a common board of directors.

The financing for both the Canadian National and the Canadian Northern is carried out through the Canadian National Railway Company, so that through the funding of maturing obligations and advances for capital purposes the debt of the Canadian Northern is gradually being transferred to the Canadian National, even though the Canadian National Railways have no direct stock control of the Canadian Northern Railway.

Mr. BENNETT: Does it not own all the stock?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian National Railway?

Mr. HOWE: No, the stock of the Canadian Northern Railway is owned by the Minister of Finance, or the federal government. Similarly the government railways are in a rather anomalous position. Under the act of 1919 the government railways were entrusted to the Canadian National Railways for management, with the proviso that the account of profits or deficits would be for the consolidated fund. In the financing act of 1923 and in subsequent financing acts this arrangement has been modified, so to-day the deficit account or profit account of the Intercolonial and other government railways is included in the consolidated balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways. But the control by the Canadian National Railways is far from definite, and this whole situation requires some clarification. The bill will provide also for the bringing of the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways into conformity with the net debt of Canada. At the present time there is a duplication between the net debt of Canada and the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways which has reached the staggering sum of $1,500,000,000 and which is pyramiding annually.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not pyramiding as a national debt; it is pyramiding only on the books of the railway.

Mr. HOWE: But it is pyramiding as a duplication. I have noted this frequently in financial journals and I had it brought to my attention quite forcibly a short time ago during a discussion with a prominent man who was investigating the finances of Canada. The debts of the railway are a liability of the government as long as the railway does not earn sufficient to cover them, and the usual practice by analysts interested in dominion finance is to add the net debt of Canada to the debt of the Canadian National Railways as shown in the balance sheet. If that is done the obligations of Canada are shown to be about $5,750,000,000, which is entirely incorrect. This figure is arrived at because of the duplication to which I referred. The real position is that the responsibilities of Canada with regard to debt on account of both dominion and railway obligations amount to about $4,250,000,000. I think this is a very important matter and one which should be corrected. If this pyramiding of duplicated debt is allowed to continue it is bound to affect the credit of Canada very materially, as well as the credit of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BENNETT: It is only the interest that is being pyramided.

Mr. HOWE: In 1932 the pyramiding of deficits was put an end to, but the pyramiding of interest goes on. When I tell you that to-day the interest alone, which is included as funded debt of the railway, amounts to $495,000,000, you will appreciate that it is pyramiding in an extraordinary way.

Mr. HEAPS: Has money been borrowed to meet these interest obligations?

Mr. HOWE: This interest has never been paid and has never been shown on the government books as due. Under the legislation governing the accounts of the Canadian National Railways it must be shown as a debt of the railway in the balance sheet. To that extent it duplicates the national debt.

Mr. HEAPS: Have there not been occasions when the government was obliged to borrow in order to meet the indebtedness of the railway?

Mr. HOWE: This has no relation to the obligations of the railway to private investors.

Mr. HEAPS: I was referring to interest charges alone.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps I should trace the source of this duplication. Prior to the taking over of the component parts of the Canadian National system, that is, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Northern Railway, certain money was lent to these railways and the government took interest bearing bonds in return. When the railways were acquired by the government the government continued to advance money for capital and deficit purposes, taking interest bearing notes to cover these advances. In 1920 the then Minister of Finance, Sir Henry Drayton, took the view that the likelihood of obtaining a return of the capital and the interest on these obligations was remote and that these advances should not be shown as an active asset on the books of the government. At that time he included in his annual budget a fund sufficient to bring these sums into the net debt of Canada. However, there was one logical step he did not take at that time, and that was to write these amounts out of the capital of the Canadian National Railways. That is where the duplication started, when these debts were taken over by the net debt of Canada and were perpetuated in the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways.

As I say, up to 1932 this situation was allowed to go on and there was pyramiding both of advances for deficit and for interest purposes. These amounts continued to be added to make up the sum which we are now discussing. In 1932, as a result of a recommendation in the Duff report, the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Railway Act was passed, which provided that the deficits of the railway should no longer be funded. To that extent pyramiding was stopped, but the pyramiding of the interest on funds previously advanced still continues. The bill proposes to adjust this matter by writing out of the balance sheet all accumulations of interest on borrowings from the government. About $361,000,000 was advanced to cover operating deficits and about $284,000,000 was advanced for capital purposes. It is proposed to write out of the balance sheet the $361,000,000 advanced to pay yearly operating deficits. I think it is obvious to all of us that an operating deficit is lost capital, that the replacement of that capital is not adding to the earning power of the railway and is not a payment which can properly be funded. As a matter of fact I believe that the company law of Canada provides against the issuing of common stock for sums advanced to a company for the payment of deficits. If that is true, the issuing of bonds for sums advanced for that purpose is even more improper.

With regard to the $284,000,000 advanced by the government for capital purposes, that is, for the purpose of adding to the earning power of the railway, it is proposed to retain this in the balance sheet as an owner's equity. When we consider the set-up of the railway in general and the large debt to private investors, I think there is no doubt that the investment of the government in its railway is really an owner's equity rather than a funded debt. It is a common stock equity instead of an equity that should be carried in the form of an interest bearing funded debt. That is how it is proposed to treat it.

With regard to the capital stock of the Canadian National Railways, the company now has outstanding $165,000,000 of common stock which is wholly owned by the government of Canada. This stock was obtained in exchange for the stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, that is the common and first and second preferred stocks. A properly constituted board of arbitrators found that this stock of the Grand Trunk Railway was worthless; consequently the stock of the Canadian National Railways issued in exchange is also worthless. I do not think there can be any doubt about that. It is proposed that this stock shall be surrendered and cancelled in full.

The Canadian Northern Railway has outstanding $100,000,000 of common stock. The position of this stock was also reviewed by a board of arbitration which found that sixty per cent of the stock was worth $10,800,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Fifty-five per cent, was it not?

Mr. HOWE: Sixty per cent, I think. I believe the government owned forty per cent, which it had obtained in compensation for guarantees and one thing and another.

As I was saying, the board of arbitration found that sixty per cent of the stock of the Canadian Northern Railway was worth $10,800,000, which would make the total stock of the railway worth about $18,000,000. It is proposed to surrender $82,000,000 of this stock which has no value, and to write into the balance sheet the remaining $18,000,000 of stock which was found to have full value. This $18,000,000 will be exchanged for new stock of Canadian National Railways, which will represent common stock ownership of the railway, and which of course will be wholly owned by the dominion government.

That is a brief outline, Mr. Chairman, of the changes in the balance sheet. Of course, when the bill is brought down, the details will be shown, with very complete explanations in the bill. In any event the bill will be sent to the committee on railways and shipping, where it will be studied very fully.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister might deal with paragraph (e).

Mr. HOWE: That deals with the securities trust corporation. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the revision of the capital structure has been before the house on many occasions, and has always been the subject of debate when the Canadian National Railway estimates have been before the house. The reports of the committee on railways and shipping also indicate that similar discussions take place there every year. The government has always taken the view that no change in capitalization could properly be made as long as any feature of the Canadian National accounts was in dispute; that is, as long as lawsuits were pending, the capital position of the railway should not be changed.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the present position of that lawsuit? Is it through?

Mr. HOWE: The Lovibond case, yes. I have a statement here but I think I can give the gist of it. The privy council ruled that Lovibond has no claim against the government of Canada. They also ruled that he has no case against the Canadian National Railways for having the stock of the Grand Trunk Railway restored to the books. The privy council did give him permission to sue the railway for damages, and they said in their judgment, "for what it is worth," indicating that they thought his claim was not very serious. However, in order to preserve all the priorities in the case it is proposed that the claims of the government which are being eliminated as funded debt from the balance sheet shall be preserved in a securities trust, a company within the corporate structure of the railway and the stock of which will in turn be wholly owned by the dominion government. These claims of the government that are eliminated from the balance sheet will be maintained in this securities company, where they can be used at any time to maintain the priority of the government equity as it now exists. In that way I think we can say that the priority of any outstanding security or any outstanding claim against the railway will not in any way be disturbed by the change in the capital structure now proposed.

This change in the capital structure involves no change whatever in the net debt of Canada. Any claim against the railway on behalf of the government which is regarded as an active asset is maintained in exactly the same position. The change in capital does not involve the writing out of the balance sheet of any amount that was expended on the railway for capital purposes, that is, which created an earning asset of the railway, although its position is being changed from bond interest to proprietors' equity.

In regard to the Intercolonial and other government railways which were entrusted to the Canadian National Railways, these railways are included in the balance sheet as proprietors' equity. These railways were paid for by the dominion government as they were built, and their present position in the balance sheet as a funded debt against the railway is hardly proper under the circumstances.

[Mr. Howe.]

That is a general review, Mr. Chairman, of the subject matter of the bill. The details will be printed in the bill itself, and the bill is printed with very complete explanations of the changes proposed.

Mr. ESLING: With respect to the indebtedness to consolidated revenue of about $600,000,000, and accrued interest of $500,000,000 odd, is that interest of $500,000,000 being carried to the trust account? Does it still remain a liability of the railway? What becomes of it? Was any portion of it ever guaranteed by the government?

Mr. HOWE: The interest referred to, $495,000,000, is the interest due to the dominion government itself for funds it advanced to the railway.

Mr. BENNETT: Out of consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. This interest is being written out of the balance sheet of the railway. It is a duplication of the consolidated fund, because no asset in the consolidated fund is set up to correspond with it. This $495,000,000 of interest will disappear from the balance sheet of the railways but will be carried in the securities trust for the purpose of preserving whatever priority the government has in connection with these claims against the railway for interest.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand Hansard of April 27, 1936, in which there is a speech by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) at page 2200, where he says this:

> The minister has referred to the president of the Canadian National system. I have a high regard for him.

I am not speaking; it is the right hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Bennett) who is speaking through me. He went on:

> He was in Calgary, working with the Canadian Pacific Railway, when he was taken by Mackenzie and Mann as master mechanic, and he has risen to a position of importance, but it is my duty to say this, that, temperamentally he cannot resist pressure. He cannot, in that sense, say no. The pressure of politicians, members of this house, members of the government, is such that he cannot resist it; that is the pressure, not of the opposition, but of the powers that be. I say that with the best intentions in the world, and I say so because I know whereof I speak.

Afterwards our venerable colleague who sits for one of the constituencies of Montreal, St. Antoine-Westmount (Mr. White), protested very strongly against the language used by his leader in connection with the president of the Canadian National Railways.

The questions I ask the leader of the Conservative party, the right hon. member for Calgary West, are these: When did he notice first that Mr. Hungerford was weak and could not resist pressure? Was it before he himself appointed Mr. Hungerford president of the Canadian National Railways, or was it afterwards? If it was before, was it on account of the fact that he found Hungerford was weak that he appointed him, to please the Canadian Pacific Railway? If it was afterwards, why did he not cancel through his own government Hungerford's appointment as president of the Canadian National Railways? I have written a series of articles in a weekly which is published at Rivière du Loup, and which the right hon. gentleman probably reads because he quoted from it during the last session. The questions I have put to him are most serious. Here is the most important job in the business of our country, a job equal to that of president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, one that needs a strong man. The so-called strong man who was at the head of the government of that time chose a weak man, and, having chosen him, he says, "I know whereof I speak." I will ask the right hon. gentleman to be kind enough to answer the three questions I have just put to him.

Mr. BENNETT: The resolution which is now before this committee is one of very great importance. It affects in many respects the welfare of this country. That a proper balance sheet should be made available to the Canadian people, who are the owners of the Canadian National system, goes without saying, and that that balance sheet should disclose the exact investment in money of the people of Canada in that road also goes without saying. It has never been contended by anyone I have known that the balance sheet should do other than indicate the exact amount of the investment of the Canadian people in their enterprise; they are the shareholders.

Recently I had occasion to look into the position of the state owned railways in South Africa. They extend to about fourteen thousand miles; they were consolidated with very great difficulty after the union in 1910, and the state, that is the union, has invested in the enterprise something like £140,000,000, which is represented as part of the national debt of the union. One of these days I shall bring into the house the last annual report of these roads, because it is one of the most interesting documents it has been my privilege to read.

Mr. DUNNING: The debt is about $700,000,000, translated into our money?

Mr. BENNETT: If you put it that way, yes, about $700,000,000. The road is a narrow gauge one, three feet six inches wide. Last year they operated the road on a ratio of 58 per cent of its takings, without depreciation, and after allowing for depreciation it cost only 65 per cent of its earnings to operate the property. The important part of this interesting document is the detail with which the investment of the people of South Africa in the property is indicated.

So far as I am concerned I was pleased to hear the minister say to-day that he thought it undesirable that there should be any change in the capital structure as long as that litigation was pending in respect of the shares. When we came into office in 1930 we found this threat of litigation, and it continued until after Mr. Lovibond finally got the case to the privy council. Particulars of his statement of claim were placed upon Hansard in answer to a vigorous complaint made by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Euler, that we had failed to deal with the reduction and readjustment of the capital stock as suggested by the auditor and by the then chairman of the trustees. I pointed out the reasons why we had not done so, and I think they were wholly adequate ones, because if the judgment which Mr. Lovibond had hoped to get had been obtained the question as to the shares in the Grand Trunk being properly vested in the Minister of Finance would have been at issue. As the matter now stands, the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) represents my appreciation of the situation, namely, that Mr. Lovibond may maintain an action for damages, with what success the future may disclose, but that would be an action which would be founded purely in damages and would be disposed of by a monetary payment.

Mr. DUNNING: It will not affect title at all.

Mr. BENNETT: No; as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) says, it will not affect title. That is an entirely different question from the one that obtained when the judgment of the privy council was given. I may say frankly to the committee that it was a matter of some relief to me to see that judgment, because there have been grave differences of opinion as to whether this parliament could adequately vest in the Canadian Minister of Finance shares of a company whose head office was at Dashwood House, in London. But I always felt that the answer was to be found, not as a pure matter of law, in just a legal proposition, but rather in the conduct of the parties, and that it was not competent for the railway company, in view of what had taken place, to make any such contention as that. The ground of the decision, however, was technical; it does not touch that phase of the matter at all; and we may now eliminate from our consideration any question which arises with respect to the shares themselves and realize that any action which may possibly be maintained will be an action founded in damages and not against the shares themselves.

There are three matters that must engage the attention of anyone concerned with a readjustment of the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. The first is the properties which belong to the crown, and which we speak of as government railways. They comprise the Intercolonial railway so-called and all the other properties which have been acquired which were branch line feeders of that property; they also comprise the line from Winnipeg to near Moncton, namely, the National Transcontinental and various other connections with that line. The Prince Edward Island line I classify as part of the Intercolonial. We have here a definite investment which is reflected in part in the national debt of the country and in part by payments made out of surplus revenues during days of buoyant and large revenues in this dominion.

The method by which that expenditure can be dealt with in a set-up or balance sheet is not one which for the moment I am going to discuss. The minister says that he proposes to send the bill to the committee, and the committee doubtless will have the opinion of the auditors who made the suggestion as to the set-up, and will arrive at a conclusion as to the best way to deal with it. There are many methods of dealing with it, but the cold fact is that in any report made to the people of Canada it is in my judgment essential that they should know that since confederation the people have invested so many millions of dollars in the Intercolonial, the Prince Edward Island railway, the National Transcontinental railway, and the branch lines and various undertakings subsidiary to and connected with that large government railway enterprise.

The minister referred to this investment being dealt with as owner's equity. I do not think that term conveys anything to the people of Canada in dealing with this matter. It need not be an item in the balance sheet itself in the narrow sense of the term, but in the wide sense a report of the Canadian National Railways should never be issued which does not make apparent to any person who reads it the amount of the investment by the Canadian people in what we call government railways.

Mr. HOWE: That is, preserved in the balance sheet.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is all it is necessary they should know. I am not very particular as to how it should appear, but I am concerned that the Canadian elector who reads that balance sheet shall be able to know, for his own interest and his own welfare, just how much money has been invested in the railways and their appurtenances since confederation. That is number one.

Number two is the investment made by the Canadian people in the Canadian National railway system. It will be recalled that the Canadian National system was reorganized by the Borden administration with a capital of $100,000,000. That this was done against my protest, and that I voted against it—

Mr. HOWE: Excuse me; I think the amount is $165,000,000. They exchanged the Grand Trunk—

Mr. BENNETT: No; I am speaking of the Canadian Northern. The second branch is the Canadian Northern system. It will be remembered that the Borden government reorganized that system by creating out of the various constituent and subsidiary companies a new organization known as the Canadian Northern system, capitalized at $100,000,000. That I personally thought that capitalization greatly excessive or that I voted against my own friends on that occasion is not a matter of interest now. But I did protest as strongly as I could against the property not being allowed to go into the hands of a receiver. We set up a new system, known as the Canadian Northern system, with a capital of $100,000,000. That system transferred to the Canadian people a certain percentage of its capital stock, I think some 40 per cent, or $40,000,000. As compensation for that the Canadian people advanced to the system $45,000,000, partly paid, as the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) mentioned the other day, by the issue of promissory notes of the Dominion of Canada in the shape of $1,000 bills.

Then the war came. But the result of the first transaction on the part of the Borden government was to create a new transportation system known as the Canadian Northern system, which comprised railways in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and one small line in Quebec.

It is worthy of note at this point that practically every province except Prince Edward Island, and I think Quebec, was concerned with the Canadian Northern system as a guarantor of its securities. That is a matter of tremendous importance in dealing with the set-up of the balance sheet. The province of British Columbia guaranteed the securities of the Canadian Northern (British Columbia), and from the proceeds of the securities thus guaranteed Mackenzie and Mann built that line from the great divide between Alberta and British Columbia down into the city of Vancouver. They also built certain lines in the Okanagan district, and undertook certain contractual obligations with respect to hotels and other matters. Bear in mind, however, that that undischarged guarantee of the province of British Columbia was the basis of the construction of the British Columbia section of the Canadian Northern railway system, and that from day to day and from year to year since the consolidation, British Columbia has not been called upon to pay that guarantee but the Canadian taxpayer has himself absorbed it and is from day to day making the payments which otherwise would have had to be made by the province. If that is kept in mind, the extent to which the Canadian taxpayer has prevented the bankruptcy of that province will be realized, because it would have been financially impossible for British Columbia during the years of the great depression to pay the guaranteed interest upon those securities.

In Alberta a number of guarantees of the same kind were outstanding. On the strength of the legislation and the guarantees the bonds and securities were sold by Mackenzie and Mann and the money deposited in a trust account, and there is yet a part of a right of way from Calgary to Macleod as a memorial to the optimism of the people and the capacity of great contractors to induce the people to take action which was wholly unnecessary. The road has never been built, but part of the money was expended and the remainder was in a trust account when last I investigated.

In Saskatchewan guarantees were given more largely to the Grand Trunk Pacific branch lines company than to the Canadian Northern system. There again, as in the case of British Columbia and Alberta, the people of Canada are discharging the obligations arising under those guarantees, which, if added to the already impossible burden that these provinces are carrying, would have made it quite beyond the realm of possibility for them to stagger on. That obligation of those three provinces has been discharged by the Canadian people since the consolidation of the system into the Canadian National.

Then we come to Manitoba. In Manitoba a very difficult situation exists. There are the old Canadian Northern lines of Mackenzie and Mann; the old Northern Pacific lines, to which, as hon. members know, the province succeeded, and the province making its arrangement with the Canadian Northern. There are, in addition, guarantees given with respect to terminals, branch lines and main lines, and there is certain legislation enacted by this parliament to deal with that situation. The consequence is that the province of Manitoba is committed to guarantees on a scale which it is quite impossible for it to meet—I think that is a fair way to put it—which guarantees the Canadian people are now paying instead of the people of Manitoba.

In Ontario just before the election of 1911 guarantees were given by this parliament on the Canadian Northern Ontario railway, the section in that province. And certain land grants were made available for the system under conditions to which I need not now refer. There was, I believe, one small line, a very small one, guaranteed in the province of Quebec. In New Brunswick the National Transcontinental ran to Moncton and thence went off on the Intercolonial to Halifax or Saint John. I think the guarantees, as far as the people of New Brunswick are concerned, were given to lines which since have been merged in the Canadian National system, rather than to the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk. New Brunswick was saved from bankruptcy by reason of our assumption of the obligations created by the guarantee given by the government of the day on the Halifax and South Western road, which was constructed by Mackenzie and Mann from Halifax around the coast. In Prince Edward Island there was nothing to get, so that no railways were guaranteed there.

That is the picture in regard to number two. How are you going to set it up in your balance sheet? In 1917, it will be recalled, the government of the day was pressed to acquire the balance of the Canadian Northern shares, and the question as to whether this should be done by arbitration or through the exchequer court was considered by the parliament of that day, sitting in the Victoria museum. Finally it was decided to have it done by arbitration. Three arbitrators, the chief justice of Nova Scotia, the chief justice of Ontario and the late Wallace Nesbitt, constituted the arbitration tribunal, and they decided that the remaining 60 per cent of the shares was worth $10,800,000. But I believe it was clearly demonstrated by the evidence which was given that the shares were worth nothing, and but for what took place in this chamber I do not think the arbitrators ever could have awarded anything, because instead of the shares having value, they certainly were a liability. But they were given a value of $10,800,000, which was $800,000 more than the maximum which the statute provided should be paid for the shares. Allowing that 60 per cent is worth $10,800,000, it follows that 100 per cent is worth $18,000,000, and in my judgment the minister is dealing generously with the situation when, on the balance sheet, he carries those shares at $18,000,000. That is what he proposes to do. In my judgment they are worth considerably less than that, but the matter is one which need not be discussed now. It is ancient history; I expressed my views on that subject some twenty years ago.

Mr. DUNNING: The shares never were worth it.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not. I come now to the third factor in the balance sheet which is dealt with by this resolution, namely the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Pacific and allied organizations. This is neither the time nor the place to deal with the situation as it arose in connection with the Grand Trunk. Personally I would have let it go into the hands of a receiver, but again my views were only those of one man, and very unimportant at that time.

Mr. DUNNING: There was one other.

Mr. BENNETT: We determined to deal with these railways in another way; certain securities were settled with on the basis of an annuity, to put it shortly, and the value of the other securities was to be determined by arbitration. That arbitration by a majority decision decided that the shares had no value. Against that judgment, of course, the old Grand Trunk people have ever since protested, and at times they have made it rather difficult for us in London and elsewhere because of the contentions they have made. During the few weeks or months we were in office in 1925-26, I came to the conclusion that the sound thing to do was to bring to the knowledge of the British people the real facts in connection with the Grand Trunk; for if one wants to read of high finance developed to its nth degree in connection with the payment of dividends and the disbursement of money, one has only to read the evidence given at the arbitration in connection with those matters.

The subsidiary companies, the Grand Trunk Pacific, Grand Trunk Pacific Townsites, and so forth, perhaps need not be referred to here beyond saying that what we paid for the Grand Trunk system and its subsidiary companies is represented by an annuity, and nothing else. And when I say an annuity I mean the interest upon the senior securities which we took over practically at par and which we need not now discuss because they were not the subject matter of either arbitration or expropriation. Their value was fixed by agreement.

Mr. DUNNING: The Grand Trunk Pacific did go through receivership.

Mr. BENNETT: I was coming to that. The Grand Trunk Pacific, while it was a subsidiary enterprise of the Grand Trunk system, was a separate entity. I am sure all good Liberals who read the history of it must do so with a sense of pride. I cannot resist saying that, though I am endeavouring to be most moderate in my criticism. At any rate the Grand Trunk Pacific did go through a statutory receivership. The Minister of Railways became the receiver, and ultimately the late Sir Henry Thornton made an adjustment with respect to the securities, which are now part of the obligations of the Canadian National system with which we have to deal from time to time. I might have said the same with respect to certain income securities issued by the Canadian Northern.

That is the third factor we have to deal with in the balance sheet. I think the minister is wholly justified in writing out absolutely the Grand Trunk common shares and the other shares, because we paid nothing for them, and if my logic is sound there should not appear in the balance sheet a successive valuation upon anything in that balance sheet. Therefore, as far as the Grand Trunk and its subsidiaries are concerned, we can write out the value of those common shares.

Those are the three factors. To-day they constitute what we speak of as the Canadian National railway system, but there are no Canadian National railway shares in the sense in which we usually speak of a corporate enterprise. To all intents and purposes the Canadian National is a holding enterprise. In reality the Minister of Finance holds the shares; I am considering the Minister of Finance as being the same thing as the Canadian National.

Mr. HOWE: The Minister of Finance is the holding company.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, but the operations are carried on by the Canadian National. Perhaps as a matter of exactitude I should say that the shares are vested in the Minister of Finance, unless the procedure has been changed. I take it that they are still so held.

Mr. DUNNING: They are still held by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. HOWE: The Canadian National is the Grand Trunk; the shares were just transferred.

Mr. BENNETT: That is why the passes issued by the Canadian National still bear upon their face the name of the Grand Trunk. In addition I should have pointed out, under the third factor, that a portion of our lines is foreign owned. We have the lines running from Portland into Canada and the lines running from Canada to Chicago, as well as the branch lines or subsidiary properties which belong to that United States concern, the Grand Trunk Western.

How are we going to deal with these properties from the standpoint of conveying to the Canadian people a true picture of what is their investment in the enterprises? It being realized that we took them over, the next question is: What did we to when we took them over? All one has to do is to look at the answers the minister gave to a question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Esling) as it appears at page 211 of Hansard. There we find a clear statement of what the Canadian people have put into these properties. The minister is quite right when he says that we should not show as part of the debt of the Canadian Northern railway the same sums of money we show as part of the national debt, without making it clear they are the same sums. That is, if the Dominion of Canada sold bonds to the value of $100,000,000, as it did, and the money is put into the Canadian Northern railway, the Canadian Northern railway owes the Canadian people for the money thus invested, and if the property was doing as well as was expected the Canadian people would be securing from the Canadian Northern railway enough money to enable them to pay the interest on the $100,000,000, and possibly establish a sinking fund to take care of the amount at maturity.

The national debt of Canada shows the expenditures made directly by the people of Canada in connection with factors one, two and three that I have mentioned. The hon. member's first question is:

1. What is the total indebtedness of the Canadian National railways to the public?

And the answer:

$1,184,612,248.59 at December 31, 1936.

There never should be any possible question of that information not being known to the Canadian people, when they read the balance sheet of their road. That is all I have to say on that point. No system of bookkeeping entries should be devised which would in any sense deceive the Canadian people into thinking that they had put into the railways less than $1,184,612,248.59. We are agreed, I trust, as to that.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not always the view expressed, mark you. I am happy to hear the minister take that view, because some of the officers of the road on one occasion went so far as to suggest to me that it would be desirable to write the enterprise down to what it was worth. How is one going to determine what it is worth? What we want to know is what we put into it, and the amount on which we have to pay interest.

The second question asked by the hon. member is this:

2. What is the total annual interest on this indebtedness?

And the answer is: $49,184,622.87 in 1936. That is the sum of money which, if our railway system were successful, it would be earning, in addition to any other sums, to enable it to square—and I use a word which is sometimes used—or to clear itself with regard to its accounts.

Mr. HOWE: Had it been successful it would not owe any such sum, because a large part of that is deficit, and interest on deficits.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but that is a separate matter, and I shall come to it later on. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that I have endeavoured to put before the minister this—and so far he has agreed with me—that we have an indebtedness of $1,184,612,248.59 of the Canadian taxpayers' money tied up in our railways. For the year 1936 to the end of December it cost the Canadian people $49,184,622.87 to service that debt. It cost that much to pay interest on the sum invested. My submission is that it must always be clear to the Canadian people what sum they have had to pay by taxation and otherwise from year to year to discharge the interest on the obligations incurred for the railways. I am talking about the public only—

Mr. DUNNING: It is very difficult.

Mr. HOWE: I do not like to interrupt my right hon. friend at this point, but—

Mr. BENNETT: It is quite all right.

Mr. HOWE: —we may as well discuss these points as they arise. May I point out to the right hon. gentleman that in its legislation of 1932 the late government really stopped the historical record, that is, as to the funding of deficits. I do not see how the historical record suggested by my right hon. friend can be maintained, even if no change is made. We might give the deficits of past years, but we stopped giving them in 1932, so that the whole picture is really not a correct statement. That is, the balance sheet of the railway does not show the total funds advanced by the government to the railway for capital and deficit purposes, with interest compounded annually.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid the minister has not been following the matter prior to coming to the house. In 1932, when the Duff commission was appointed, it dealt with the matter and made a recommendation stating that it was undesirable to issue the company's securities for deficits guaranteed by the government, but that the government should borrow the money itself and pay the deficits.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Therefore, so far as the securities items on the railway company's accounts are concerned, the balance sheet does not show. But they should show that to pay those deficits they got the money from the Canadian people.

Mr. HOWE: But the balance sheet does not.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I contend they should have done. I have asked them to do it, but it was not done. I had no control over it, because the trustees were in complete control. I do not think their views were in any greater harmony with mine than with those of the Minister of Transport.

I say without question the sums of money the Canadian people had to borrow to pay for the deficits on that road from year to year should be apparent in the accounts of the system, so that the Canadian people, the shareholders, may know what they had to borrow to keep their property afloat. That is the position I have always held, and I submit that anything less could not be regarded as satisfactory. If we do otherwise we are not being fair with the Canadian people.

My position with the officers of that system is a simple one. I simply say to them, "I want a balance sheet that shows to me as a citizen and a shareholder how much money the Canadian taxpayer had to put up last year to keep this property afloat. That is all I want." Anything less than that I cannot but think is a form of deception—not practised deliberately, possibly—upon the Canadian people. In other words if they assume, from looking at the accounts, that because there is nothing showing, and because it is not indicated that they had to borrow so much money to pay their obligations during the year, all is well, they are living in a false paradise.

Now, let us come to the next point. What is the total indebtedness of the Canadian National railways to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada? That is, how much money from time to time did we pay out of our revenue fund to these properties? The minister made this answer:

3. Of the total cash expenditures by the dominion, amounting to $1,468,611,114 (not including interest on loans) as shown on page 7 of the Department of Railways and Canals report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1936, the following are the amounts that may be considered as charged against the Canadian National Railways:

Loans to C.N.R. (includes loans to former privately-owned roads) on which interest is accrued but not paid	$645,527,455 83*
Investment in Canadian government railways	388,880,002 78
Stores and open accounts of Canadian government railways	15,748,921 60
The following amounts are in suspense:
Temporary loans (interest paid currently)	36,390,204 25
Expenditures under supplementary public works construction act, 1935 (unemployment relief)	5,068,081 85
Balance covering all deficits, subsidies, and all other items which have been absorbed in the net debt of the dominion	376,996,447 69
Total	$1,468,611,114 00

The other day the minister was good enough to give us the aggregate of the deficit and of the subsidies which had been paid which, in part, include part of the national debt of the country and, in the other part, those portions which were paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

I am not going to discuss the matter in further detail, much as I might be disposed to do so, because when the minister said he proposed to send the bill to a committee it appeared to me that it is for men more expert than I am in matters of this kind to explain and to suggest what would be a proper system of accounting. I think the committee will agree with me when I say that whatever set-up may be finally agreed upon, it should be a statement which will show to anyone who studies it just what have been the expenditures by the Canadian people in our railways. That is number one.

The next point is that, although it may not be part of what one might call the consolidated balance sheet, it could easily be shown as part of the annual statement so that there would be no difficulty in understanding on the part of any one. I think the minister is anxious, and I know every hon. member is anxious, that with respect to our railroads we should know just what we have done. I do not believe any hon. member is satisfied by being told that we had a deficit of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 last year; what he is anxious to know is how much it has cost Canada to run these railways.

If I were disposed to give a chronological history of the railroads of this country I am sure it would be very difficult for any one within sound of my voice who belongs to the Liberal party to explain how two transcontinental lines came into being. I have never met such a man in later years although I used to meet him occasionally in earlier years. I can remember during the progress of a debate in the old chamber when one member suggested that I favoured three systems. The late Mr. Oliver had made some observations about having built up two systems and my cynical interruption was, "Three systems." It was then stated later on that I favoured three systems.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not wonder that the hon. gentleman laughs. In my own community I was condemned as a pessimist.

Mr. DUNNING: That was said about me too.

Mr. BENNETT: Whoever said that was not very familiar with my public appearances. I advocated to the extent of my ability that there should be a second system. I happened to be in Edmonton when the Canadian Northern was opened for traffic to that city on September 1, 1905. I wonder if many members in this chamber realize what limitations were placed upon the guarantee which Mr. Blair gave Mackenzie and Mann. Do they realize that Mr. Blair provided that there should be no amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific? When I lived long enough to see this effort made to put three transcontinental systems across the Dominion of Canada, I but ventured to prophesy what came to happen. I do not think I was very much of a prophet because I was successful in my anticipations. I could not see how anyone could have done otherwise.

But I am not concerned about the past. Recriminations serve no useful purpose with respect to these matters. There is one thing I do feel very strongly, that is that the balance sheet as finally made up should be such as will enable every Canadian to know without difficulty just how much money successive governments have compelled the taxpayers of this country to pay. That is not unfair, is it? That is not asking too much, is it? Anything I have to say will be predicated entirely upon that assumption. I did not think we could reach this matter to-day and I did not bring with me the report of the government railways in South Africa. This is a volume of many pages and it deals with every phase of their railway life. I think it will make us feel that there is still room for more improvement.

Cannot we get this matter out of politics? During the last election I was charged everywhere in the country with being an enemy of the Canadian National system. I dare say that not more than five per cent of Canadian National employees who were electors voted for the candidates of my party, that is outside those employees who voted for purely personal reasons for candidates in a particular locality. I dare say that dollar for dollar I am as much interested in the success of the Canadian National Railways as most people. Every failure of the Canadian National to meet its obligations means more taxes for the Canadian people. Let there be no misunderstanding about that. If it does not meet its annual expenditures the minister has to borrow money with which to pay them, or he must get it out of surplus, which means taxation of the Canadian people. No citizen of this country, however poor he may be, has not a direct interest in the success of this system. It touches his economic life as no other single thing in the state does. There are combinations of many things which may concern him more, but there is not a single thing which concerns him so closely.

Do hon. members realize what the raising of the interest on the public debt and providing for these deficits mean? As I mentioned last session, it means the providing of so many dollars per minute or even per second. Every citizen is concerned. We are often anxious to make matters appear better than they are, and I ask the minister to keep in mind what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said the other day about conferences. His statement should be applied to these balance sheets. Let these balance sheets reflect the facts; let them indicate the full extent of our liability and our financial responsibility, so that every Canadian will be interested in giving his support and assistance toward the successful operation of his property. It is his property, not somebody else's. It belongs to us, not to somebody else. In my judgment the only way in which a sense of responsibility can be developed is to show the people the financial side of this question, what it means in taxation, what it means in interest on the national debt and in the payment of deficits. All this has to be borrowed from the public and they must be made to realize that the success of the railway means a lessening of the burden of taxation. To the extent that taxation is lessened, the personal prosperity of the people is increased.

When I rose I had not intended to speak at such length on this matter, as the minister said that he was going to send the bill to the committee on railways and shipping. It seems to me that that method will provide an opportunity for everyone concerned to express his opinion and for those who are expert in the adjustment of figures on balance sheets to make such suggestions as in their wisdom are necessary. I hope the minister will keep this one thought in mind, that the balance sheets should reflect the true financial condition of the enterprise so that every citizen of Canada may know without difficulty the exact extent to which he and those who went before him have either placed out real money or borrowed money for the purpose of making the enterprise part of the assets of this country.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here quite impatiently for the last fifty minutes and I cannot say that I have listened very carefully to what the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has said. What he took fifty minutes to say he could have said in ten had he cut out all repetition. You are presiding, sir, over a committee made up of seventy-nine members of this house. May I ask each one of the other seventy-eight members of the committee if the hon. member for Calgary West has answered my questions. They were fair, very easy to understand, and spoken in very plain language. I want an answer, Mr. Chairman. The right hon. member for Calgary West stated, according to page 2200 of Hansard of April 27, 1936, that he had realized that Mr. Hungerford was weak. Now he is the gentleman who appointed Mr. Hungerford as president of the Canadian National Railways, a most important job. I ask him now, When did he realize that Mr. Hungerford was weak, according to his own statement? I ask him if it was before Mr. Hungerford's appointment by the right hon. gentleman himself or if it was after, and if it was after, why did he not discharge Mr. Hungerford on account of that weakness? This is no joke, sir. The right hon. member for Calgary West said, "I know whereof I speak." It was probably not the first time he said it, but he said it on that occasion. I should like to have an answer to those three questions, if you please.

Oh, no answer? I shall sit down then because I should like to have an answer; it is very important. No answer? There will be a long speech, a long lecture on everything, and I am surprised the right hon. member for Calgary West has not given us the name of the first locomotive between Montreal and Laprairie. He was telling the story of the railways, and he could have told us that, as well as the length of the locomotive, the number of wheels, and all that. That is the kind of story we listen to in the house when we have important business to carry on. Now I ask him a question concerning a position of the greatest importance, equal to that of the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not a rich man, but I am a good Canadian citizen, just as good as anybody else, and I should like to know why the right hon. gentleman appointed Mr. Hungerford as president of the Canadian National Railways if he thought he was a weak man, and I shall ask him, further, if it was not because he thought he was a weak man that he appointed him to that position.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 12, to provide for revision of the accounting set-up of the Canadian National railway system.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Dairying, $290,000.

Mr. THOMPSON: May I ask the minister the reason for the increase of $18,000 in this item, and what is the purpose of the vote?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The item of $290,000 which the committee is being asked to vote this year is made up of proposed expenditure on administration, $13,500, which is $1,900 more than was spent last year, but the largest item in the vote is for the dairy produce division, $226,000, an increase of $7,500 over last year. The estimate for the dairy markets division is $41,000, an increase of $6,300 over last year; the estimate for the dairy research division, $5,000, an increase of $800 over last year; the estimate for milk utilization service, $4,500, an increase of $1,500 over last year.
