poetry. THE PORTRAIT, BY JESSE HAMMOND.

I want no picture of my love, Her form has pass'd away; She's with the scraph-band above,
And shines as bright as they.
Why mock me with a toy like this?— What beauty can there be lo lips that breathe no promise in eyes not mean for me?

Though summers in their splendour face, Her beauty sull remains, But this poor hauble's light and shade Fond memory prolones;
For where's the chastely pencill'd brow,
That sages loved to see,
And ruby lips that used a throw
Their witchery on me?

And where's the soul that lit her eyes, And where's the soul that hit her eyes,
That touch by nature giv'n,
When gazing on the starry skies
She sigh'd a prayer to 'deav'n'.
And where's emotion's tear to tell
What mortals ne'er, can see,
And where's the sinde that sweetly fell
Like heavysty's area or ma? Like heaven's rays on me?

Go. take the wretched daub away, Nor with remembrance sport, ome earth-born fair ye may portray, An angel's not your forte:
"Twas heaven gave her every grace,
The queen of beauty she,
God's hand alone could form the face
That shed its smiles on me!
