

Coughs and colds need not be endured; they can be cured, and that quickly.

Many mixtures are temporary in effect, but Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a permanent remedy.

The oil feeds the blood and warms the body; the hypophosphites tone up the nerves; the glycerine soothes the inflamed throat and lungs.

The combination cures. This may prevent serious lung troubles.

AVE JESU! (See Rev. Marquart's).

Crown me with the martyr's crimson roses. Give me wine of comfort to drink; When I see the lady dead confront me.

Do not let me from the conchit shrink Ave Jesu! as fair as ever I loved thee, I now love thee. Look with love on me.

Save me, Saviour, as Thou didst save Thecla From the dread, the nameless tortures three.

Wrap me in the saint's white gleaming garment. When the cruel talons tear my flesh; When one cup of sorrow's drink, sweet Jesus, Give me strength one more to drain afresh. Let me see Thy Face afresh instead of Caesar's.

When behind me shuts the little door Let me hear the "Come to Me, My blessed!"

When sounds the lion's dull, deep roar. Crown me with the martyr's crimson roses.

Place the martyr's palm-branch in my hand, At that marriage supper where the blessed Round Thy throne like lighted candles stand.

Maidens who their children left for crosses, Maids who said farewell to earthly love, Follow where the gentle shepherd leadeth In the pleasant pasture-land above.

"Ave Jesu! I will cry in spirit When these lips of mine grow dumb and pale."

"Ave Jesu! Thou art Love Incarnate, And Thy love shall ever death prevail.

Ave Jesu! as a golden ladder Let each pang, each racking torment be. Leading upward to the Holy City, To Thy saints, Thy martyrs, and to Thee."

lage, however; for, becoming separated from his travelling companions, he wandered into the woods and was never heard from. The actual location of the Haron village whither Pere Menard was journeying, the route he took and the locality where he wandered into the woods, these have all been described points with historical writ of the Jesuit missions and of Wisconsin; and it is chiefly upon them that Mr. Campbell dwells in this paper of his. As the result of his researches and studies on the subject, he locates the Haron village near the present town of Ouellet, in Taylor County; fixes the Jesuit's route along the line which the Indians of Lac Viens Desert took, in the early part of this century, when they journeyed to Keeweenaw to see Bishop Baraga, and he thinks that the place of the missionary's disappearance is Bill Cross Rapids, a locality five or six miles above the trail from the Wisconsin to the head waters of the Black River. Although Mr. Campbell's account of Pere Menard's Wisconsin career differs in some particulars from that given by other writers, it is entitled to due consideration because of the thorough study which he has given his subject and the sources from which he obtained the information whereupon he bases his statements.

Catholic and Non-Catholic Colleges. The opening paper in the current Catholic World is from the pen of Austin O'Malley, M. D., LL. D., who writes on "Catholic Collegiate Education in the United States." Doctor O'Malley's paper is so comprehensive a one to be summarized in the space at our disposal; so we content ourselves with pointing out the effective points made in it. The Doctor upsets the idea entertained by those Catholic parents who send their boys to non-Catholic colleges, that such institutions must necessarily have better professors, and, consequently, superior course of study, because they have the whole country from which to pick their professors, whereas Catholic colleges are limited in that matter to the Catholic body. For he declares that professorships in almost every Protestant college are held by "outside" men, the older the college, the more it tends toward this method. And in selecting its professors from its own ranks, the Catholic college, as a rule, is not so fortunate in its selections, because the professors who are not afterwards to be confirmed, are offered as candidates for professorships, because they could not get appointments of that kind in any non-Catholic college in the country. And still every now and then some Protestant professor, independent or professor gets up in public and talks of "the spirit of large toleration" that prevails at this or that college, and Protestant clergyman, who very often are the disciples of these sectarian colleges, deprecate the "intolerance" that they imagine to exist in Catholic countries!

A good many of the opinions which Doctor O'Malley expresses in this paper of his, particularly those dealing with the dangers to which Catholic students at Protestant colleges are exposed, of either having their faith destroyed or impaired, and what is said of the inferiority of the philosophical courses of such colleges when compared with those at Catholic institutions, have time and again been set forth in the columns of the Review. Doctor O'Malley does not mince his words when writing on the latter subject. "I mean to assert," says he, "that the great professors of philosophy in Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Michigan and the other non-Catholic universities are not competent critics of scholastic philosophy? That is exactly what I hold. Not one of them knows anything about scholastic philosophy except at second hand, and then through prejudice, sources." The Doctor, however, gives these "great professors" credit for putting up the finest game of bluff imaginable, with regard to their philosophical attainments, and of one of them, who told him that he was thoroughly familiar with all the Summa of St. Thomas, he remarks that "he argued with me about the Summa on one page of the Summa to save his learned soul."

It has been claimed for some of these non-Catholic colleges—Doctor O'Malley mentions in this matter Harvard, Yale, the Universities of Wisconsin and Michigan and the Ohio State University—that well instructed Catholic students run no risks of losing their faith by attending such institutions; but the Doctor places little faith in such claims, and cites facts to show that they are generally unwarranted. He quotes a "priest of Boston who has much to do with Harvard Students" in contradiction of such claims for that institution, and he shows by letters sent him by students at the other Protestant colleges named above, that attendance at them is anything but beneficial to the faith of Catholic youth. The subtitled paragraph, which may be used to sum up his views in this matter, is commended to the careful consideration of Catholic fathers and mothers whose sons are preparing to begin their academic studies the coming fall. "If a Catholic parent sends a boy to a Protestant college without absolute necessity, the boy is left there without the grace of state that he would have in a Catholic college. He breathes in, moreover, an air of skepticism. In the better non-Catholic universities is intellectually, the less real religion is found in it. Not that religious faith and intellectual ability are incompatible, but Protestant faith and intellectual ability are.

In Korea. Homer B. Hulbert has a paper in the June North American Review on Korea, and in the course of his article he alludes to the missionary work which the Catholic Church is doing in that Asiatic land. For more than a century prior to 1839, when three priests were put to death there, Roman Catholic missionary work, Mr. Hulbert says, had been carried on in Korea partly by native converts and partly by French priests. When the three aforementioned priests, who were Frenchmen, were killed, France threatened Korea with punishment, but as those threats were not acceded to, the French went on to the conclusion that France was afraid of them. At a later period, consequently, when the regent who was in power showed a disposition to send the Catholic bishop who was the Korean apostle to Russia, to ask that nation to refrain from invading Korea, the fanatic element not only prevailed upon him not to do that, but also induced him, at a subsequent date, to send the bishop and eight of his priests to execution. France, whose subjects these missionaries were, then sent a fleet to Korea and burned the city of Kangwŏn; but when the French fleet departed, a general persecution of the Korean Christians followed, and in that persecution, according to Mr. Hulbert, ten thousand of the faithful were killed, not sparing the hundreds who perished in the mountains whether they fled from the persecutors.
