AS IT WAS    o   o   AS IT IS

WITHIN the memory of living men Toronto has expanded from a straggling, ill-conditioned village to the position it occupies to-day as the most progressive city in British North America. When it was granted incorporation on March 6th, 1834, Toronto had a population of less than 4,000, the roads were muddy and unpaved, and there was nothing in the nature of a sidewalk within the corporation limits. Tallow candles were the illuminants that shed a dim, religious light over the gatherings of those days, and the transportation facilities were equally primitive. The telegraph, the telephone, the daily paper, the street car and many of the more modern devices were a closed book to the Fathers of Toronto. In those days King street boasted 287 buildings, public and private, many of them old and dilapidated. Yonge street contained 104 buildings. These two main thoroughfares were in such a condition that to venture out on them after dark was attended with danger to life and limb. Of the less important streets, they had nothing to distinguish them from back country roads.

Seventy-seven years is not a far cry, but what a transformation has taken place in Toronto in this period. Instead of 4,000, Toronto now boasts a population of about 425,000, according to the directory estimates. Instead of about 400, there are to-day about 60,000 buildings in Toronto; and instead of bumpy, lumpy, muddy roads there are 270.05 miles of paved streets, and electric street cars run over 103 miles of tracks.

In this article it is not the intention to trace the history of Toronto since its incorporation, but merely to refer to a few of the more striking events bearing on the city's development. The stormy period preceding the ante-rebellion days may be passed over in silence. Politics in those times entered largely into the everyday life of the people, and at this late date a discussion of the interminable quarrels with the Old Family Compact Party would hardly be profitable. There was a dash of politics in almost everything, and broken heads and bruised bodies were the natural attendants on elections.

The election of a Board of Aldermen and Councilmen which followed the incorporation of Toronto as a city, and which took place on March 27th, 1834, was a spirited contest. Political feeling ran very high, and the opposing parties were arrayed against each other like hostile camps. The fact that the adherents of one party espoused any particular measure was quite sufficient to secure the rancorous opposition of the adherents of the other party.

The Act of Incorporation had been opposed by the Reform party on the ground that the expense of a separate administration for the city and county would more than counterbalance any benefit which the citizens would obtain therefrom. The Conservatives had supported the measure on the ground that the civic revenue would be increased by the extended area of taxation, and that the work of municipal government would be more efficiently carried on.

The net result of the campaign was that a majority of Reformers were returned, William Lyon Mackenzie being elected for St. David's Ward. Mr. Mackenzie's successive expulsions from Parliament and his repeated re-elections had occasioned much excitement, and his presence in the field added fuel to the heat of the campaign. On the 3rd of April, the aldermen and councilmen, ten in number respectively, met in the town hall for the purpose of electing a mayor. As a party measure and to compensate him for his expulsion from the Assembly, and as an answer to the charges which had been preferred against him at the Home Office, Mr. Mackenzie was selected by the Reformers as the first Chief Magistrate of the City of Toronto.

The members of the first Council were confronted with many difficulties, and to aggravate them the city's exchequer was practically empty. It was imperative that walks should be provided, and the first act of the Civic Fathers was to start the work of laying 2,618 rods of sidewalk. In order to do this, $5,000 had to be borrowed in anticipation of the taxes. So low was the city's credit that this money was only advanced upon the personal security of the Mayor and other members of the Council. The Bank of Upper Canada, already having a claim of more than $40,000 against the city, did not wish to increase the liability, and the necessary money had to be secured through the Farmers' Bank. The first assessment of the city property was made in June, 1834, and was placed at $934,410, yielding a revenue of $11,680.

It is recorded that from the time of the collection of the first city taxes, the Council were never at a serious loss for ways and means. Toronto's incorporation as a city gave a stimulus to local industries.

Between 1830 and 1836 the population increased from 2,860 to over 10,000, and from that day to this the city has gone on steadily growing in population, wealth and attractiveness.

Of the stormy events of 1837 and 1838, which culminated in the insurrection and the ill-starred battle of Montgomery's farm, and the subsequent flight of William Lyon Mackenzie and Dr. Rolph, but little need be said. The execution of Lount and Matthews may also be passed over. It is more profitable to look to the fruits of the Rebellion. The outbreak aroused the Imperial Government to the necessity of dealing with the Canadian problem, and to this end Lord Durham was sent out to solve it. He reached Quebec in May and arrived in Toronto on the 17th of July. Lord Durham was obliged to return to England in the autumn, but it is now a matter of history that his famous "report" paved the way for a union of Upper and Lower Canada. To Right Honorable Charles Poulett Thomson, afterwards Lord Sydenham, was assigned the task of carrying out his recommendations. He was despatched to Canada as Governor-General, arriving here on the 17th of October, 1838. He visited Toronto on the 21st of November, first having gained the assent of the Special Council of Lower Canada to his plans. He was equally successful in gaining the assent of the Upper Canada Legislature, although at first the Upper House, composed largely of the Old Family Compact Party, were hostile to it. As a result of its ratification a Union Act was passed by the Imperial Parliament, and on the 10th of February, 1841, the Union of the Provinces became an accomplished fact. This Union of the Provinces involved doing away with local Provincial capitals, and as Toronto was not sufficiently central to be suited for the general capital of the United Provinces, Kingston was chosen as the capital. There were grave forebodings by the citizens of Toronto that with its loss of prestige as a metropolitan city it would recede as a commercial centre. Many business men were for moving to Kingston. All these fears proved groundless, and it soon developed that there was something more substantial than the seat of government back of Toronto's prosperity. Kingston continued as the capital for three years, when the seat of government was removed to Montreal.

In 1840 the first attempt was made to light the streets of Toronto with gas. This experiment led to the formation of a company, which in 1847 was sold to the Consumers' Gas Company.

In 1849 the city was sorely afflicted, suffering heavily from fire, in addition to being visited by the cholera epidemic. A conflagration on the 7th of April of this year destroyed over half a million dollars' worth of property, St. James' Cathedral being included in the list. Such a fire may be lightly regarded to-day, viewed in the light of the recent conflagration in the city, but in a comparative sense it was almost as serious. The cholera followed the fire, and before the cold weather set in, 527 deaths had been recorded.

The burning of the Parliament Buildings at Montreal following the passing of the Rebellion Losses Bill, and the bitterness engendered by the several untoward acts committed at that time led to the temporary removal of the seat of Government to Toronto in November, 1849, Lord Elgin taking up his residence here. The affairs of the Dominion continued to be administered from Toronto until November, 1851, when in pursuance of the alternating system the seat of Government was removed to Quebec. At this period Toronto had a population of 30,775.

It was about this time that the need for railway facilities began to obtrude itself, and the matter was carefully considered by the enterprising men of those days. As a result of these deliberations the first line of railway in Western Ontario was projected in this city in 1851, the first sod being turned on October 15th of that year. It was known as the Ontario, Simcoe and Huron Railway, but was subsequently changed to the Northern. The earliest portion of the line from Toronto to Aurora was opened on the 16th of May, 1853. In 1855 communication was opened from Toronto to Collingwood. On the 27th of October of the same year the Grand Trunk Railway was opened through from Montreal to Toronto. It would be idle to dwell on the expansion which has taken place in transportation facilities since 1855; of the advent of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads which have served to cover the Province of Ontario with a network of tracks, keeping pace with the growing trade and requirements of the country.

In October, 1855, the Government offices were removed to Toronto from Quebec, and the city once more became the capital of Canada, retaining that honor until the summer of 1859.

During 1857 and 1858 there was a period of pronounced trade depression, but in 1859 conditions became normal, and Toronto and Ontario took on a new lease of life.

September, 1860, will always be regarded as a red letter month in the history of Toronto, for it was during this month that the Prince of Wales, the late King Edward VII., paid his memorable visit to the city. At that time Toronto had a population of over 44,000.

The Fenian Raid was the event of 1866, receiving its quietus on June 1st of that year. Since that date Canada has not been bothered much with these gentry, although, at stated intervals, two or three of them find their way across the border from the headquarters of the society in the back room of some saloon and endeavor to blow up a bridge or the lock of a canal in order to be revenged on England.

On July 1st, 1867, Confederation was consummated, and Toronto became the capital of the Province of Ontario, Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald being the first Prime Minister in the coalition Government.

The city, which in 1871 had a population of 56,092, continued to show fair progress until 1875, when a pronounced depression set in, which developed full force in 1876. It was a period of transition, and the people became seized with the idea that the fiscal policy, which was on a free trade basis, was at fault. The Conservative party, under the leadership of Sir John A. Macdonald, proposed a protective tariff, and as a result the Government of Hon. Alex. Mackenzie was swept from power in 1878, and Sir John A. Macdonald and his followers were returned under the National Policy. The lean years and trade disturbance affected Toronto but slightly, and with the change of Government business again experienced a revival, which up to the present shows no evidence of abatement.

In 1885 the Northwest Rebellion broke out, and the several Toronto regiments were sent to the front to assist in suppressing it. The gallantry exhibited by the city volunteers in the field, and the uncomplaining manner in which they faced the hardships and rigors of the campaign were highly commented upon.

The initial movement in the extension of the city limits began in 1883 with the absorption of Yorkville. In 1884 the property east of the Don, together with the village of Brockton, were taken in, while in 1887 the land south of the railway tracks and extending westerly to West Toronto Junction, was annexed. In 1889 the thriving town of Parkdale joined forces with the city. Much property has been added to the city since that date, including East Toronto and the city of West Toronto. The area within the city limits, not including the portion of the city land covered by water, is 28 square miles.

In 1891 the old Ward system, comprising 13 Wards, with three representatives elected to the Council from each, was abolished, and the city divided into six Wards, as now obtains. Each ward elected four aldermen, the Mayor being returned by the vote of the city at large. The Board of Control was elected from Council. In 1903 the Municipi-pal Act was further amended, cutting down the representation of each Ward to three aldermen, and providing for the election of four Controllers by a general vote, on a cumulative basis. The following excerpt is from the Municipal Handbook of the City of Toronto for 1904:

"The government of the city is vested in a Council consisting of a Mayor, four Controllers and eighteen Aldermen. The Mayor and Controllers are elected annually from a vote of the entire city. The Aldermen are elected annually, three from each of the six Wards into which the city is divided.

"The Board of Control deals with all financial matters, regulates and supervises expenditure, revenue and investment, directs and controls departments, prepares specifications, advertises for tenders and awards all contracts for works, material, and supplies implements or machinery or any other goods or property required, subject to confirmation by the Council, inspects and reports to the Council upon all municipal works being carried on or in progress within the city, considers and forwards to Council the reports of the various standing and special committees, and controls all matters not designated as belonging or appertaining to any of the standing committees."

An event of more than passing moment was the transition from horse cars to electric street cars in 1892, the franchise being granted to the Toronto Railway Company for a period of thirty years. This company carried over 100,000,000 passengers in 1910, besides operating three suburban railways which are subsidiary to it, and serve as valuable feeders to the trade of Toronto.

In 1891 the cornerstone of the new City Hall was laid. This magnificent structure cost upwards of $3,000,000, and is acknowledged to be quite the equal of any municipal building on the continent.

An incident illustrating the warmth of the Imperial sentiment was the despatching from Toronto in October, 1899, of the First Contingent of Canadian volunteers to aid Britain in her war with the Boers in South Africa. The contingent was recruited from young men of good families holding lucrative positions, all of whom made great sacrifices in order to respond to what they believed to be the call of duty. This contingent sailed from Quebec on October 30th, 1899, the warmth of the send-off given them by the citizens of Toronto being only surpassed by the welcome accorded the survivors on their return from the war. On January 21st, 1900, a second contingent, recruited largely in Toronto, was despatched to the front.

In 1901 the Duke and Duchess of York, now the King and Queen of England, visited Toronto. On October 10th an elaborate civic reception was given the Royal pair, and on October 11th, His Royal Highness reviewed the militia forces of the Province at Exhibition Park, fully 10,000 troops being on parade.

Having traced in a cursory way the history of Toronto since its incorporation, it will not be amiss to detail a few facts about the Toronto of to-day. Situated as it is on the northern shore of Lake Ontario, and being the capital, commercial and chief distributing centre of the richest and most populous Province of the Dominion, this city possesses potentialities for expansion that are only now beginning to be realized. Apart from its commanding place in manufacturing, Toronto occupies the premier position as the wholesale jobbing centre of Canada. During the calendar year ending December 31st, 1910, the total imports entered for consumption at Toronto amounted to $83,106,315, as compared with $80,204,638 in 1909. Of the imports entered in 1910, $52,244,900 were dutiable, and $26,861,415 came in free. The duty collected at the port of Toronto for the calendar year ended 31st December, 1910, amounted to $9,118,592, as against $7,672,871 in 1909, an increase for 1910 of $1,000,000. These figures are quoted as illustrating the rapid growth in trade. Since 1885 the population has expanded from 105,211 to 425,000 in 1910, while the assessed value of property has increased during the same period from $68,957,706 to about $178,000,000. This growth has not been spasmodic, but steady, and based on natural conditions. Ontario, with its rich natural resources, comprising timber, minerals, fisheries and products of the soil, is the great feeder of this city. The Province embraces 260,862 square miles of territory, and contains over 2,700,000 people. In addition, Toronto draws largely on the trade of Manitoba and the Great West, its dominant position both as regards rail and lake shipments, ensuring the business. Three great systems of railway focus in Toronto. This, with the lake shipments, is a sufficient guarantee that the city will hold its advantage in the matter of cheap freightage which has ensured to it the supremacy in the wholesale trade of Ontario, Manitoba and the Northwest.

As a manufacturing centre, both in the scope and diversity of its industries, Toronto occupies no unimportant place. The various factories give employment to about 60,000 hands and pay in wages over $26,000,000 per annum, while the output of manufactured goods is valued at about $95,000,000. The capital invested in manufacturing industries in Toronto is estimated at over $100,000,000, and this is constantly being augmented by the rapid formation of new concerns. It requires over 60,000 horse power of motive force to keep the wheels of Toronto's factories in motion.

As an educational centre Toronto possesses advantages unsurpassed by any city of equal size in America. It contains three large universities—Toronto, Trinity and McMaster. In federation with the University of Toronto are several strong colleges with courses in theology and arts, namely, Knox, St. Michael's, Victoria and Wycliffe. This University is supported by the Province, and the wide range of its usefulness is shown by the following list of its affiliated institutions in various departments: Toronto School of Medicine, Royal College of Dental Surgeons, School of Practical Science, Ontario College of Pharmacy, Ontario Veterinary College, Ontario Agricultural College, and two colleges of music. The city contains 58 public schools, 20 separate schools (Roman Catholic), 1 model school, 1 Normal school, 4 collegiate institutes, 4 industrial schools, 1 technical school, 7 ladies' schools, 1 residential boys' college, and several excellent business colleges. The public and separate schools and the technical school are absolutely free, and the Toronto public school system is regarded as the most perfect in America. Education in Toronto is within the reach of all and is of a very high type. The public school system leads naturally to the collegiate and thence to the university, and while free education is obtainable up to a point sufficient for any branch of commercial life, the higher branches may also be studied at comparatively slight expense.

There are also numerous organizations of a quasi-educational character devoted to the discussion of public and scientific subjects. These include the Canadian Institute, the Royal Astronomical Society, the Woman's Canadian Historical Society, the British Empire League, the National Council of Women, the Empire Club and the Canadian Club.

In the realm of music Toronto enjoys continental renown. Only two cities of America, Chicago and Boston, can show a greater number of musical students. There are half a dozen conservatories and colleges devoted solely to this art. The Toronto Conservatory of Music alone has an attendance exceeding 1,500. The choral organizations which give important concerts annually are numerous and are unsurpassed in excellence in any city. They include the Mendelssohn Choir, the National Chorus, the Festival Chorus, the People's Chorus, the Toronto Male Chorus Club and the Sherlock Vocal Society, all of which do very ambitious work annually and enlist the services of the best artists.

Toronto of late years has become the Mecca of tourists during the heated term. Not only does the city itself offer many attractions to visitors, but it is so situated as to be within easy striking distance of all the famous resorts of the Province. Well-appointed steamers make daily, and some of them tri-daily trips from the Port of Toronto to Niagara-on-the-Lake, to Port Dalhousie, to Charlotte, and other points, while others pass through the beautiful stretches of the Bay of Quinte and down the St. Lawrence and the far-famed Thousand Islands. Not a little of Toronto's popularity as a summer resort is due to the excellent transportation facilities which have served to make this city the centre of the tourists' trade. Many families find it convenient to make Toronto their headquarters, taking frequent excursions to Muskoka, Parry Sound district, the Kawartha Lakes, the Georgian Bay district, Niagara and other attractive points, all of which are easy of access from this city. The visitor can leave Toronto in the morning on a handsome excursion steamer, spend the whole day at the Falls, and return to Toronto at night. This holds true of other famous points of interest.

Within less than a day's journey from Toronto sportsmen are landed in a natural wilderness, where fish, duck, partridge, bear and deer abound in season, while a day's journey will take them into the moose country. At the principal hunting points there is no difficulty in securing experienced guides and outfits.

Toronto is a delightfully cool, clean and attractive city in summer, the breezes from Lake Ontario making it an ideal resting place. A short drive or a ride on a street car from the centre of the city lands a visitor out into the primitive loveliness of the country. To the westward lies High Park, with its wide, winding roads and stately trees, splendid in its natural beauty. A little farther on the placid Humber River, with its high, shelving banks offers a pleasant retreat for boating, parties, canoeists and picnickers. Munro and Scarboro Beach Parks in the east, skirting the shores of Lake Ontario, are places of interest and natural beauty, while the Scarboro Bluffs, great clay peaks, are objects of curiosity. The beautiful beach along the lake front has been built up with summer cottages, and every year the district is becoming more popular as a resort. There are many other fine parks and beauty spots worthy of mention, not the least of these being the famous Hanlan's Point, Centre Island, with its wealth of verdure and many pretty cottages and residences, and Ward's Point, the joy of the campers, all three being on an island situate across the Bay, about one mile distant from the city. The Queen's Park, with that massive pile, the Parliament Buildings, the home of the Ontario Legislature, in the centre, is a charming spot, embellished as it is by the buildings of the University of Toronto which surround it. In addition the country contiguous to the city abounds in beautiful scenery, pleasant drive-ways and charming by-paths to tempt and delight the pedestrian. In short, Toronto in summer is essentially an out-of-door city.

One of the crowning glories of Toronto is the attachment of its citizens to out-door sports of all descriptions, a hereditary love traceable, no doubt, to their Anglo-Saxon ancestry. The beautiful Toronto Bay gives ample scope and opportunity for aquatic recreations, and these opportunities are availed of to the full. It was on Toronto Bay that the famous oarsman, Edward Hanlan, first learned the rudiments of the art that crowned him champion sculler of America in 1878, and world's champion in 1880. These victories gave an impetus to rowing, and from that day to this the interest in the sport has never flagged. The Argonaut Rowing Club has been well to the front in singles, four-oared and eight-oared crews, while in 1904 the Toronto Rowing Club sent to the Royal Henley Regatta Lou Scholes, who won the Diamond Sculls with all that it implies, being the first Canadian ever to accomplish the feat. In addition to its rowing clubs this city boasts the largest canoe club in the world. There are also several yacht clubs, chief amongst them being the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, which has successfully contended for the Canada Cup and other international events.

In other branches of amateur sport Toronto is also to the front. Lacrosse, the national game, handed down by the redmen, has a great vogue, the city enthusiastically supporting about 10 teams. Baseball, too, is highly popular, as is attested by the numerous leagues which obtain. Golf also finds many adherents, there being four or five thriving clubs in the city. In 1904 Geo. S. Lyon, of Toronto, won the Olympic championship of St. Louis, carrying with it the championship of America. Polo, cricket, bowling, tennis and kindred sports have their following, as well as that strenuous game—football.

Horse-racing has long been popular in Toronto, the annual spring meeting of the Ontario Jockey Club at Woodbine Park being regarded as an international affair. The big event each year, which appeals most strongly to Canadians, is the King's Plate (the National Race) for maiden Province-breds, three-year-olds and up. Of late years the Jockey Club has been holding successful autumn meetings as well. There are also a number of trotting clubs, which hold meetings throughout the season. These, together with the Spring Horse Show, the Industrial Exhibition, and kindred associations, have done much to stimulate a love for good horses, and have materially aided in improving the breed and quality of the animals.

In winter sports Toronto holds a leading position. There are, perhaps, more curlers in this city than in any other city in the world, the game having reached a state of high perfection here. Hockey, skating, snowshoeing, tobogganing, skieing, and like recreations help to make the city gay at all times, besides contributing to the health and longevity of the inhabitants.

Canadian National Exhibition.

The Canadian National Exhibition, held at Toronto each year during the last week of August and the first week of September, has enjoyed thirty-three years of almost uninterrupted progress, and to-day occupies a position by itself among the exhibitions of the continent. It also has good grounds for its claim to being the largest annual exhibition in the world.

It now has a permanent exhibition plant that no city in Canada or on the continent can hope to equal. Its grounds consist of 260 acres of land situated right in the heart of the city and extending for a mile and a half along the shores of Lake Ontario. These grounds are utilized as a city park when not used for Exhibition purposes. And on these grounds an Exhibition City has been built. It consists of handsome buildings of brick, stone, concrete and steel, which represent an investment of about $2,000,000, and give a floor space for exhibits of over 500,000 feet as well as stabling for 1,500 horses, 1,200 cattle, 900 sheep and 600 swine. The Grand Stand alone cost $225,000, and has a chair seating capacity of 16,800.

The exhibits have been described as "Canada Condensed," so comprehensive are they of all that Canada makes, grows, or mines. The Provincial Governments have exhibits of the national resources of their various portions of the Dominion, while the finest live stock Canada and the Old Land can produce, and the best produce of the farms and homes are there in great abundance.

In educational lines the exhibits are also strong. A loan exhibit of pictures by European masters is the feature of the fine arts section, while technical education is demonstrated, and the different Governments furnish demonstrations and lectures along health and agricultural lines.

The tendency of the Canadian National Exhibition is largely educational, but so many attractions and amusements have been added that "Exhibition Time" in Toronto has come to be looked upon as the annual holiday not only of the people of Canada but of thousands from the United States as well. These attractions are naturally on a large scale. England's best military bands lead the musical features; whole regiments of Canadian and American troops encamped on the grounds make the military end more imposing, while vaudeville artists are there by the score, and a specialty is made of historical spectacles in which from 1,000 to 1,500 people take part.

The attendance in 1910 was 837,000 people, and there is every evidence that it will touch the million mark in 1911.
