The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Library of Congress
Photoduplication Service

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

SIR,

Boston, June 18, 1768.

AS you allow me the honour of your correspondence, I may not omit acquainting you with so remarkable an event as the withdraw of the Commissioners of the Customs, and most of the other officers under them, from the town, on board the Romney, with an intent to remove from thence to the Castle.

In the evening of the 10th, a sloop belonging to Mr. Hancock, a Representative for Boston, and a wealthy merchant of great influence over the populace, was seized by the Collector and Comptroller for a very notorious breach of the acts of trade, and, after seizure, taken into custody by the officer of the Romney man of war, and removed under command of her guns. It is pretended that the removal and not the seizure, incensed the people. It seems not very material which it was.—A mob was immediately raised, the officers insulted, bruised, and much hurt, and the windows of some of their houses broke; a boat belonging to the Collector burnt in triumph, and many threats uttered against the Commissioners and their officers: no notice being taken of their extravagance in the time of it, nor any endeavours by any authority, except the governor, the next day, to discover and punish the offenders; and there being a rumour of a higher mob intended Monday (the 13th) in the evening, the Commissioners, four of them, thought themselves altogether unsafe, being destitute of protection, and removed with their families to the Romney, and there remain and hold their board, and next week intend to do the same, and also open the custom-house at the castle. The Governor pressed the council to assist him with their advice, but they declined and evaded, calling it a brush, or small disturbance by boys and negroes, not considering how much it must be resented in England, that the officers of the crown should think themselves obliged to quit the place of their residence, and go on board a King's ship for safety, and all the internal authority of the province take no notice of it.—The town of Boston have had repeated meetings, and by their votes declared the Commissioners and their officers a great grievance, and yesterday instructed their Representatives to endeavour, that enquiry should be made by the Assembly whether any person by writing or in any other way, had encouraged the sending troops here, there being some alarming reports that troops are expected, but have not taken any measures to discountenance the promoters of the late proceedings; but, on the contrary, appointed one or more of the actors or abettors on a committee appointed to wait on the Governor, and to desire him to order the man of war out of the harbour.

Ignorant as they be, yet the heads of a Boston town-meeting influence all public measures.

It is not possible this anarchy should last always. Mr. Hallowell, who will be the bearer of this, tells me he has the honour of being personally known to you. I beg leave to refer you to him for a more full account.

I am, with great esteem, Sir,

Your most humble and obedient servant,
THO. HUTCHINSON.

S I R,

Boston, August 1768.

IT is very necessary other information should be had in England of the present state of the commissioners of the customs than what common fame will bring to you, or what you will receive from most of the letters which go from hence, people in general being prejudiced by many false reports and misrepresentations concerning them. Seven eighths of the people of the country suppose the board itself to be unconstitutional, and cannot be undeceived and brought to believe that a board has existed in England all this century, and that the board established here has no new powers given to it. Our incendiaries know it, but they industriously and very wickedly publish the contrary. As much pains has been taken to prejudice the country against the persons of the commissioners, and their characters have been misrepresented and cruelly treated, especially since their confinement at the Castle, where they are not so likely to hear what is said of them, and are not so able to confute it.

It is now pretended they need not to have withdrawn, that Mr. Williams had stood his ground without any injury although the mob beset his house, &c. There never was that spirit raised against the under officers as against the commissioners, I mean four of them. They had a public affront offered them by the town of Boston, who refused to give the use of their hall for a public dinner, unless it was stipulated that the commissioners should not be invited. An affront of the same nature at the motion of Mr. Hancock was offered by a company of cadets. Soon after a vessel of Mr. Hancock's being seized, the officers were mobb'd, and the commissioners were informed they were threatened. I own I was in pain for them. I do not believe if the mob had seized them, there was any authority able and willing to have rescued them. After they had withdrawn, the town signified to the Governor by a message that it was expected or desired they should not return.

It

S I R,

It was then the general voice that it would not be safe for them to return. After all this, the sons of liberty say, they deserted or abdicated.

The other officers of the customs in general either did not leave the town, or soon returned to it. Some of them seem to be discontented with the commissioners. Great pains have been taken to increase the discontent. Their office by these means is rendered extremely burdensome. Every thing they do is found fault with, and yet no particular illegality or even irregularity mentioned. There is too much hauteur, some of their officers say, in the treatment they receive. They say, they treat their officers as the commissioners treat their officers in England, and require no greater deference. After all, it is not the persons, but the office of the commissioners which has raised this spirit, and the distinction made between the commissioners, is because it has been given out that four of them were in favour of the new establishment, and the fifth was not. If Mr. Hallowell arrived safe, he can inform you many circumstances relative to this distinction, which I very willingly excuse myself from mentioning.

I know of no burden brought upon the fair trader by the new establishment. The illicit trader finds the risk greater than it used to be, especially in the port where the board is constantly held. Another circumstance which increases the prejudice is this; the new duties happened to take place just about the time the Commissioners arrived. People have absurdly connected the duties and board of Commissioners, and suppose we should have had no additional duties, if there had been no board to have the charge of collecting them. With all the aid you can give to the officers of the crown, they will have enough to do to maintain the authority of government, and to carry the laws into execution. If they are discountenanced, neglected, or fail of support from you, they must submit to every thing the the present opposers of government think fit to require of them.

There is no office under greater discouragements than that of the Commissioners. Some of my friends recommended me to the ministry. I think myself very happy that I am not one. Indeed it would have been incompatible with my post as chief justice, and I must have declined it. and I should do it although no greater salary had been affixed to the chief justice's place, than the small pittance allowed by the province.

From my acquaintance with the Commissioners I have conceived a personal esteem for them, but my chief inducement to make this representation to you is a regard to the public interest, which I am sure will suffer if the opposition carry their point against them.

I am, with very great esteem,

Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

THO. HUTCHINSON

August 10. Yesterday at a meeting of the merchants, it was agreed by all present to give no more orders for goods from England, nor receive any on commission until the late acts are repealed. And it is said all except sixteen in the town have subscribed an engagement of that tenor. I hope the subscription will be printed, that I may transmit it to you.

DEAR SIR,

Boston, October 4. 1768.

I WAS absent upon one of our circuits when Mr. Byle's arrived. Since my return, I have received from him your obliging letter of 31st July. I never dared to think what the resentment of the nation would be upon Hallowell's arrival. It is not strange that measures should be immediately taken to reduce the colonies to their former state state of government and order, but that the national funds should be affected by it, is to me a little mysterious and surprising. Principles of government absurd enough spread thro' all the colonies; but I cannot think that in any colony, people of any consideration have ever been so mad as to think of a revolt. Many of the common people have been in a frenzy, and talked of dying in defence of their liberties, and have spoke and printed what is highly criminal, and too many of rank above the vulgar, and some in public posts have countenanced and encouraged them, until they increased so much in their numbers, and in their opinion of their importance, as to submit to government no further than they thought proper. The legislative powers have been influenced by them, and the executive powers intirely lost their force. There has been continual danger of mobs and insurrections, but they would have spent all their force within ourselves; the officers of the crown, and some of the few friends who dared to stand by them, possibly might have been knock'd on the head, and some such fatal event would probably have brought the people to their senses. For four or five weeks past the distemper has been growing and I confess I have not been without some apprehensions for myself, but my friends have had more for me; and I have had repeated and frequent notices from them, from different quarters, one of the last I will inclose to you *. In this state of things, there was no security, but quitting my posts, which nothing but the last extremity would justify. As chief justice, for two years after our first disorders, I kept the grand juries tolerably well to their duty. The last spring, there had been several riots, and a most infamous libel published in one of the papers, which I enlarged upon, and the grand jury had determined to make presentments, but the Attorney-general not attending them the first day, Otis and his creatures, who were alarmed and frightened, exerted themselves the next day, and prevailed upon so many of the jury to change their voices, that there was not a sufficient number left to find a bill. They have been ever since more enraged against me than ever. At the desire of the governor I committed to writing the charge while it lay in my memory, and as I have no further use for it I will inclose it, as it may give you some idea of our judicatories.

Whilst we were in this state, news came of two regiments being ordered from Halifax, and soon after two more from Ireland. The minds of people were more and more agitated, broad hints were given, that the troops should never land; a barrel of tar was placed upon the beacon, in the night to be fired, to bring in the country when the troops appeared, and all the authority of the government was not strong enough to remove it. The town of Boston met and passed a number of weak, but very criminal votes; and as the governor declined calling an assembly, they sent circular letters to all the towns and districts to send a person each that there might be a general consultation at so extraordinary a crisis. They met and spent a week, made themselves ridiculous, and then dissolv'd themselves; after a message or two to the governor, which he refused to receive; a petition to the King, which I dare say their agent will never be allow'd to present, and a result which they have published, ill-natured and impotent.

In this confusion the troops from Halifax arrived: I never was much afraid of the people's taking arms; but I was apprehensive of violence from the mob, it being their last chance before the troops could land. As the prospect of revenge became more certain, their courage abated in proportion. Two regiments are landed, but a new grievance is now rais'd. The troops are by act of parliament to be quartered no where else but in the barracks, until they are full. There are barracks enough at the castle to hold both regiments. It is therefore against the act to bring any of them into the town. This was started by the council in their answer to the governor, which, to make themselves popular, they in an unprecedented way published and have alarmed all the province; for although none but the most contracted minds could put such a construction upon the act, yet after this declaration of the council nine tenths of the people suppose it just. I wish the act had been better expressed, but it is absurd to suppose the parliament intended to take from the King the direction of his forces, by confining them to a place where any of the colonies might think fit to build barracks. It is besides ungrateful, for it is known to many that this provision was brought into the bill after it had been framed without it, from meer favour to the colonies. I hear the commander in chief has provided barracks or quarters, but a doubt still remains with some of the council whether they are to furnish the articles required unless the men are in the province barracks, and they are to determine upon it to-day.

The government has been so long in the hands of the populace, that it must come out of them by degrees, at least it will be a work of time to bring the people back to just notions of the nature of government.

Mr. Pepperrell, a young gentleman of good character and grandson and principal heir to the late Sir William Pepperrell, being bound to London, I shall deliver this letter to him, as it will be too bulky for postage, and desire him to wait upon you with it.

SIR,

THE great esteem I have for you in every point of light, perhaps renders my fears and doubts for the safety of your person greater than they ought to be; however if that is an error, it certainly results from true friendship, naturally jealous. Last night I was informed by a gentleman of my acquaintance, who had his information from one intimate with and knowing to the infernal purposes of the sons of liberty, as they falsely stile themselves, that he verily believ'd, from the terrible threats and menaces by those catalines against you, that your life is greatly in danger. This informant, I know, is under obligations to you, and is a man of veracity. He express'd himself with concern for you, and the gentleman acquainting me with this horrid circumstance, assured me he was very uneasy till you had notice. I should have done myself the honour of waiting on you, but am necessarily prevented. The duty I owed to you as a friend, and to the public as a member of society, would not suffer me to rest till I had put your honour upon your guard; for though this may be a false alarm nothing would have given me greater pain, if any accident had happened, and I had been silent. If possible, I will see you to-morrow, and let you know further into this black affair. And am with the sincerest friendship and respect, your honour's

Most obedient, and most humble servant.

ROB. AUCHMUTY.

To the hon'ble Thomas Hutchinson,Sept. 14, 1768.

DEAR SIR,

Boston, Dec. 10, 1768.

I AM just now informed that a number of the council perhaps eight or ten, who live in and near this town, have met together and agreed upon a long address or petition to parliament, and that it will be sent by this ship to

Mr. Bollen to be presented. Mr. Danforth, who is president of the council, told the governor, upon enquiry that it was sent to him to sign, and he supposed the rest of the council who had met together, would sign after him in order; but he had since found that they had wrote over his name, by order of council, which makes it appear to be an act of council. This may be a low piece of cunning in him, but be it as it may, it is proper it should be known, that the whole is no more than the doings of a part of the council only; although even that is not very material, since, if they had all been present, without the governor's summons, the meeting would have been irregular and unconstitutional, and ought to be discountenanced and censured. I suppose there is no instance of the privy council's meeting and doing business without the King's presence or special direction, except in committees upon such business as by his majesty's order has been referred to them by an act of council; and I have known no instance here without the governor, until within three or four months past.

I thought it very necessary the circumstances of this proceeding should be known, though if there be no necessity for it, I think it would be best it should not be known that the intelligence comes from me. I am with very great regard,

Sir, your most humble,

and most obedient servant,

THO. HUTCHINSON.

DEAR SIR,

Boston, Jan. 20, 1769.

YOU have laid me under very great obligations by the very clear and full account of proceedings in Parliament, which I received from you by Capt. Scott. You have also done much service to the people of the province. For a day or two after the ship arrived, the enemies of government gave out that their friends in Parliament were increasing, and all things would be soon on the old footing; in other words, that all acts imposing duties would be repealed, the commissioners board dissolved, the customs put on the old footing, and illicit trade be carried on with little or no hazard. It was very fortunate that I had it in my power to prevent such a false representation from spreading through the province. I have been very cautious of using your name, but I have been very free in publishing abroad the substance of your letter, and declaring that I had my intelligence from the best authority, and have in a great measure defeated the ill design in raising and attempting to spread so groundless a report. What marks of resentment the Parliament will shew, whether they will be upon the province in general, or particular persons, is extremely uncertain, but that they will be placed somewhere is most certain, and I add, because I think it ought to be so, that those who have been most steady in preserving the constitution and opposing the licentiousness of such as call themselves Sons of Liberty, will certainly meet with favour and encouragement.

This is most certainly a crisis. I really wish that there may not have been the least degree of severity beyond what is absolutely necessary to maintain. I think I may say to you the dependance which a colony ought to have upon the parent state; but if no measures shall have been taken to secure this dependance, or nothing more than some declaratory acts or resolves, it is all over with us. The friends of government will be utterly disheartened, and the friends of anarchy will be afraid of nothing, be it ever so extravagant.

The last vessel from London had a quick passage. We expect to be in suspense for the three or four next weeks, and then to hear our fate. I never think of the measures necessary for the peace and good order of the colonies without pain. There must be an abridgement of what are called English liberties. I relieve myself by considering, that in a remove from the state of nature to the most perfect fect state of government, there must be a great restraint of natural liberty. I doubt whether it is possible to project a system of government in which a colony 3000 miles distant from the parent state shall enjoy all the liberty of the parent state. I am certain I have never yet seen the projection. I wish the good of the colony when I wish to see some further restraint of liberty, rather than the connexion with the parent state should be broken; for I am sure such a breach must prove the ruin of the colony. Pardon me this excursion, it really proceeds from the state of mind into which our perplexed affairs often throws me.

I have the honour to be, with very great esteem, Sir,
your most humble and most obedient servant,

THO. HUTCHINSON.

DEAR SIR,

Boston, October 26, 1769.

I THANK you for your last favour of July 18th. I fancy in my last to you, about two months ago, I have answered the greatest part of it.

My opinion upon the combination of the merchants, I gave you very fully. How long they will be able to continue them if Parliament should not interpose, is uncertain. In most articles they may another year, and you run the risque of their substituting, when they are put to their shifts, something of their own in the place of what they used to have from you, and which they will never return to you for. But it is not possible that provision for dissolving these combinations, and subjecting all who do not renounce them to penalties adequate to the offence, should not be made the first week the parliament meets. Certainly all parties will unite in so extraordinary a case, if they never do in any other. So much has been said upon the repeal of the duties laid by the last act, that it will render it very difficult to keep people's minds quiet, if that should be refused them. I have been tolerably treated since the Governor's departure, no other charge being made against me in our scandalous news-papers, except my bad principles in matters of government ; and this charge has had little effect, and a great many friends promise me support.

I must beg the favour of you to keep secret every thing I write, until we are in a more settled state, for the party here, either by their agent, or by some of their emissaries in London, have sent them every report or rumour of the contents of letters wrote from hence. I hope we shall see better times both here and in England.

SIR,

Boston, May 7, 1767.

I AM indebted to you for the obliging manner in which you received my recommendation of my good friend Mr. Paxton, as well as for the account you are pleased to send me of the situation of affairs in the mother country.

I am very sorry that the colonies give you so much employment, and it is impossible to say how long it will be before things settle into quiet among us. We have some here who have been so busy in fomenting the late disturbances, that they may now think it needful for their own security to keep up the spirit. They have plumed themselves much upon the victory they have gained, and the support they have since met with ; nor could any thing better shew what they would still be at, than the manner in which, by their own account published in the news-papers last August, they celebrated the 14th of that month, as the first anniversary commemoration of what they had done done at the tree of liberty on that day the year before. Here a number of respectable gentlemen, as they inform us, now met, and among other toasts drank General Paoli, and the spark of liberty kindled in Spain. I am now speaking of a few individuals only, the body of the people are well disposed; yet when you come to see the journal of the House of Representatives the last session, I fear you will think that the same spirit has seized our public counsels. I can, however, fairly say thus much in behalf of the government, that the last house was packed by means of a public proscription just before the election, of the greatest part of those who had appeared in the preceding session in the support of government: their names were published in an inflammatory news-paper, and their constituents made to believe they were about to sell them for slaves. Writs are now out for a new assembly, but I cannot answer for the choice: I hope, however, that the people in general are in a better temper; yet the moderate men have been so brow-beaten in the house and found themselves so insignificant there the last year, that some of them will voluntarily decline coming again. I think this looks too much like a despair of the common-wealth, and cannot be justified on patriotic principles.

The election of counsellors was carried the last year as might have been expected from such an house. The officers of the crown, and the judges of the superior court were excluded. And I hear that it is the design of some, who expect to be returned members of the house this year, to make sure work at the ensuing election of counsellors, by excluding, if they can, the gentlemen of the council, (who by charter remain such 'till others are chosen in their room) from any share in the choice, though they have always had their voice in it hitherto from the first arrival of the charter. If the house do this they will have it in their power to model the council as they please, and throw all the powers of government into the hands of the people, unless the the Governor should again exert his negative as he did the last year.

You have doubtless seen some of the curious messages from the late house to the Governor, and can't but have observed with how little decency they have attacked both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor. They have also in effect, forced the Council to declare themselves parties in the quarrel they had against the latter in a matter of mere indifference. In their message to the Governor of the 31st of January, they have explicitly charged the Lieutenant Governor (a gentleman to whom they are more indebted than to any one man in the government) with "ambition and lust of power," merely for paying a compliment to the Governor agreeable to ancient usage, by attending him to court, and being present in the council-chamber when he made his speech at the opening of the session; at which time they go on to say, "none but the general court and their servants are intended to be present," still holding out to the people the servants of the crown as objects of insignificance, ranking the Secretary with their door-keeper, as servants of the Assembly; for the Secretary with his clerks and the door-keeper are the only persons present with the Assembly on these occasions.

The officers of the crown being thus lessen'd in the eyes of the people, takes off their weight and influence, and the balance will of course turn in favour of the people, and what makes them still more insignificant is their dependance on the people for a necessary support: If something were left to the goodwill of the people, yet nature should be sure of a support. The Governor's salary has for about thirty-five years past been pretty well understood to be £.1000 a year sterling. When this sum was first agreed to, it was very well; but an increase of wealth since, has brought along with it an increase of luxury; so that what was sufficient to keep up a proper distinction and support the dignity of a Governor then, may well be supposed to be insufficient for the purpose now. The Lieutenant Governor has no appointments as such: the captaincy of Castle-William, which may be worth £.120 sterling a year, is looked upon indeed as an appendage to his commission, and the late Lieutenant Governor enjoyed no other appointment: he lived a retired life upon his own estate in the country, and was easy. The present Lieutenant Governor indeed has other appointments, but the people are quarrelling with him for it, and will not suffer him to be easy unless he will retire also.

The Secretary may have something more than £ 200 a year sterling, but has for the two last years been allowed £.60 lawful money a year less than had been usual for divers years preceding, though he had convinced the house by their committee, that without this deduction he would have had no more than £.250 sterling per annum in fees, perquisites and salary altogether, which is not the one half of his annual expence.

The crown did by charter reserve to itself the appointment of a Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Secretary: the design of this was without doubt to maintain some kind of balance between the powers of the crown and of the people; but, if officers are not in some measure independent of the people (for it is difficult to serve two masters) they will sometimes have a hard struggle between duty to the crown and a regard to self, which must be a very disagreeable situation to them, as well as a weakening to the authority of government. The officers of the crown are very few, and are therefore the more easily provided for without burdening the people: and such provision I look upon as necessary to the restoration and support of the King's authority.

But it may be said, How can any new measures be taken without raising new disturbances? The manufacturers in England will rise again and defeat the measures of government. This game, 'tis true, has been played once and succeeded succeeded, and it has been asserted here, that it is in the power of the colonies at any time to raise a rebellion in England, by refusing to send for their manufactures. For my own part, I do not believe this. The merchants in England, and I don't know but those in London and Bristol only, might always govern in this matter and quiet the manufacturer. The merchant's view is always to his own interest. As the trade is now managed, the dealer here sends to the merchant in England for his goods, upon these goods the English merchant puts a profit of 10 or more, probably 15 per cent. when he sends them to his employer in America. The merchant is so jealous of foregoing this profit, that an American trader cannot well purchase the goods he wants of the manufacturer; for should the merchant know that the manufacturer had supplied an American, he would take off no more of his wares. The merchants therefore having this profit in view will by one means or other secure it. They know the goods which the American market demands, and may therefore safely take them off from the manufacturer, tho' they should have no orders for shipping them this year or perhaps the next; and I dare say, it would not be longer before the Americans would clamour for a supply of goods from England, for it is vain to think they can supply themselves. The merchant might then put an advanced price upon his goods, and possibly be able to make his own terms; or if it should be thought the goods would not bear an advanced price to indemnify him, it might be worth while for the government to agree with the merchants before hand to allow them a premium equivalent to the advance of their stock, and then the game would be over.

I have wrote with freedom, in confidence of my name's not being used on the occasion. For though I have wrote nothing but what in, my conscience I think an American may upon just principles advance, and what a servant of the crown ought upon all proper occasions to suggest, yet the many prejudices I have to combat with, may render it unfit it should be made public.

I communicated to Governor Bernard what you mentioned concerning him, who desires me to present you his compliments, and let you know that he is obliged to you for the expressions of your regard for his injured character.

I am, with great respect, Sir,

Your most obedient and most humble servant,

ANDREW OLIVER.

I ask your acceptance of a journal of the last session which is put up in a box directed to the Secretary of the board of trade.

SIR,

Boston, May 11, 1768.

I AM this moment favoured with your very obliging letter by Capt. Jarvis, of the 2d of March, which I have but just time to acknowledge, as this is the day given out for the ship to sail. I wrote you the 23d of February in reply to your letter of the 28th December; that of the 12th of February which you refer to in this of the 2d of March is not yet come to hand. You lay me, Sir, under the greatest obligations, as well for the interesting account of public affairs, which you are from time to time pleased to transmit me, as for your steady attention to my private concerns. I shall always have the most grateful sense of Mr. Grenville's intentions of favour also, whether I ever reap any benefit from them or not. Without a proper support afforded to the king's officers, the respect due to government will of course fail; yet I cannot say whether under the present circumstances, and considering the temper the people are now in, an additional provision for me would be of real benefit to me personally or not. It has been given out that no person, who receives a stipend from the government at home, shall live in the country. Government here wants some effectual support: No sooner was it known, that the Lieutenant Governor verner had a provision of £.200 a year made for him out of the revenue, than he was advised in the Boston Gazette to resign all pretensions to a seat in council, either with or without a voice. The temper of the people may be surely learnt from that infamous paper; it is the very thing that forms their temper; for if they are not in the temper of the writer at the time of the publication, yet it is looked upon as the ORACLE, and they soon bring their temper to it. Some of the latest of them are very expressive; I will not trouble you with sending them, as I imagine they somehow or other find their way to you: But I cannot but apprehend from these papers and from hints that are thrown out that if the petition of the house to his majesty, and their letters to divers noble lords should fail of success, some people will be mad enough to go to extremities. The commissioners of the customs have already been openly affronted. The governor's company of cadets have come to a resolution not to wait on him, (as usual) on the day of general election, the 25th instant, if those gentlemen are of the company. And the town of Boston have passed a vote that Faneuil-Hall in which the governor and his company usually dine on that day shall not be opened to him, if the commissioners are invited to dine with him. A list of Counsellors has within a few days past been printed and dispersed by way of sneer on lord Shelburn's letter, made up of king's officers; which list, the writer says, if adopted at the next general election, may take away all grounds of complaint, and may possibly prove a healing and very salutary measure. The Lieutenant Governor is at the head of this list, they have done me the honour to put me next; the commissioners of the customs are all in the list except Mr. Temple, and to compleat the list, they have added some of the waiters. I never thought 'till very lately that they acted upon any settled plan, nor do I now think they have 'till of late; a few, a very few, among us have planned the present measures, and the government has been too weak to subdue subdue their turbulent spirits. Our situation is not rightly known: but it is a matter worthy of the most serious attention.

I am, with the greatest respect, Sir,
your most obedient and most humble servant,

ANDREW OLIVER.

I shall take proper care to forward your letter to Mr. Ingersoll. He had received your last.

SIR,

Boston, February 13, 1769.

I HAVE your very obliging favour of the 4th of October. I find myself constrained as well by this letter as by my son and daughter Spooner's letters since, to render you my most sincere thanks for the very polite notice you have taken of them; and I pray my most respectful compliments to the good lady your mother, whose friendly reception of them at Nonsuch has, I find, engaged their warmest esteem and respect—He hath wrote us that he had a prospect of succeeding in the business he went upon; but the last letter we had was from her of the 23d of November, acquainting us that he had been very ill, but was getting better. She writes as a person overcome with the sense of the kindness they had met with, in a place where they were strangers on this trying occasion.

You have heard of the arrival of the king's troops; the quiet reception they met with among us was not at all surprising to me.—I am sorry there was any occasion for sending them.—From the address of the gentlemen of the council to General Gage, it might be supposed there was none. I have seen a letter from our friend Ingersoll with this paraphrase upon it.—“We hope that your excellency observing with your own eyes now the troops are among us, our peaceable and quiet behaviour, will be convinced that that wicked G——r B——d told a fib in saying, we were not so before they came."

I have given you the sense of a stranger on a single paragraph of this address, because I suspected my own opinion of it, 'till I found it thus confirm'd—if you have the newspapers containing the address, your own good sense will lead you to make some other remarks upon it, as well as to trace the influence under which it seems to have been penned. The disturbers of our peace take great advantage of such aids, from people in office and power—The Lieutenant Governor has communicated to me your letter containing an account of the debates in parliament, on the first day of the session: we soon expect their decision on American affairs, some I doubt not with fear and trembling—Yet I have very lately had occasion to know, that be the determination of parliament what it will, it is the determination of some to agree to no terms that shall remove us from our old foundation. This confirms me in an opinion, that I have taken up a long time since, that if there be no way to take off the original incendiaries, they will continue to instill their poison into the minds of the people, through the vehicle of the BOSTON GAZETTE.

In your letter to the Lieutenant Governor, you observe upon two defects in our constitution, the popular election of the council, and the return of juries by the towns. The first of these arises from the charter itself; the latter from our provincial laws. The method of appointing our grand juries lies open to management. Whoever pleases, nominates them at our town-meetings; by this means one who was suppos'd to be a principal in the riots of the 10th of June last, was upon that jury, whose business it was to inquire into them: but the provincial legislature hath made sufficient provision for the return of petit juries by their act of 23d Geo. 2d, which requires the several towns to take lists of all persons liable by law to serve, and forming them into two classes, put their names written on separate parate papers into two different boxes, one for the superior court, and the other for the inferior: and when venires are issued, the number therein required are to be drawn out in open town-meeting, no person to serve oftener than once in three years.—The method of appointing grand juries appears indeed defective; but if the other is not, it may be imputed to the times rather than to the defect of the laws—that neither the grand juries nor the petit juries have of late answered the expectations of government.

As to the appointment of the council, I am of opinion that neither the popular elections in this province, nor their appointment in what are called the royal governments by the king's mandamus, are free from exceptions, especially if the council as a legislative body is intended to answer the idea of the House of Lords in the British legislature. There they are suppos'd to be a free and independent body, and on their being such, the strength and firmness of the constitution does very much depend: whereas the election or appointment of the councils in the manner before mentioned renders them altogether dependent on their constituents. The king is the fountain of honour, and as such the peers of the realm derive their honours from him; but then they hold them by a surer tenure than the provincial councillors, who are appointed by mandamus. On the other hand, our popular elections very often expose them to contempt; for nothing is more common, than for the representatives, when they find the council a little untractable at the close of the year, to remind them that May is at hand.

It may be accounted by the colonies as dangerous to admit of any alterations in their charters, as it is by the governors in the church to make any in the establishment; yet to make the resemblance as near as may be to the British parliament, some alteration is necessary.

It is not requisite, that I know of, that a counsellor should be a freeholder; his residence according to the charter is a sufficient qualification; for that provides only, that he be an inhabitant of or proprietor of lands within the district for which he is chosen: whereas the peers of the realm sit in the house of Lords, as I take it, in virtue of their baronies. If there should be a reform of any of the colony charters, with a view to keep up the resemblance of the three estates in England, the legislative council should consist of men of landed estates; but as our landed estates here are small at present, the yearly value of £. 100 sterling, per annum, might in some of them at least be a sufficient qualification. As our estates are partable after the decease of the proprietor, the honour could not be continued in families as in England: It might however be continued in the appointee quam diu bene se gesserit, and proof be required of some mal-practice before a suspension or removal. Bankruptcy also might be another ground for removal. A small legislative council might answer the purposes of government; but it might tend to weaken that levelling principle, which is cherish'd by the present popular constitution, to have an honorary order establish'd, out of which the council should be appointed. There is no way now to put a man of fortune above the common level, and exempt him from being chosen by the people into the lower offices, but his being appointed a justice of the peace; this is frequently done, when there is no kind of expectation of his undertaking the trust, and has its inconveniences. For remedy hereof it might be expedient to have an order of patricians or esquires instituted, to be all men of fortune or good landed estates, and appointed by the Governor with the advice of council, and enroll'd in the Secretary's office, who shou'd be exempted from the lower offices in government, as the justices now are; and to have the legislative council (which in the first instance might be nominated by the crown) from time to time fill'd up, as vacancies cancies happen, out of this order of men, who, if the order consisted only of men of landed estates, might elect as the Scottish peers do, only reserving to the King's Governor, a negative on such choice. The King in this case would be still acknowledged as the fountain of honour, as having, in the first instance, the appointment of the persons enroll'd, out of whom the council are to be chosen, and finally having a negative on the choice. Or, the King might have the immediate appointment by mandamus, as at present in the royal governments. As the gentlemen of the council would rank above the body from which they are taken, they might bear a title one degree above that of esquire. Besides this legislative council, a privy council might be establish'd, to consist of some or all of those persons who constitute the legislative council, and of other persons members of the house of representatives, or otherwise of note or distinction; which would extend the honours of government, and afford opportunity of distinguishing men of character and reputation, the expectation of which would make government more respectable.

I would not trouble you with these reveries of mine, were I not assured of your readiness to forgive the communication, although you could apply it to no good purpose.

Mr. Spooner sent me a pamphlet under a blank cover, intitled, "the state of the nation." I run over it by myself before I had heard any one mention it, and tho't I could evidently mark the sentiments of some of my friends.

By what I have since heard and seen, it looks as if I was not mistaken. Your right honourable friend I trust will not be offended if I call him mine—I am sure you will not when I term you such—I have settled it for a long time in my own mind, that without a representation in the supreme legislature, there cannot be that union between the head and the members as to produce a healthful constitution of the whole body. this union could be perfected by the first experiment. The plan here exhibited seems to be formed in generous and moderate principles, and bids the fairest of any I have yet seen to be adopted. Such a great design may, as in painting, require frequent touching before it becomes a piece highly finish'd; and after all, may require the meliorating hand of time to make it please universally. Thus the British constitution, consider'd as without the colonies, attain'd it's glory. The book I had sent me is in such request, that I have not been able to keep it long enough by me, to consider it in all its parts. I wish to hear how it is receiv'd in the House of Commons. I find by the publications, both of Governor Pownall and Mr. Bolland, that they each of them adopt the idea of an union and representation, and I think it must more and more prevail. The argument against it from local inconveniency, must, as it appears to me, be more than balanc'd by greater inconveniencies on the other side the question: the great difficulty will be in the terms of union.—I add no more, as I fear I have already trespass'd much on your time and patience, but that I am, Sir,

Your obliged and most obedient humble servant,
ANDREW OLIVER.

SIR,

New-York, August 12, 1769.

I HAVE been in this city for some time past, executing (with others) his Majesty's commission for settling the boundary between this province and that of New-Jersey. I left Boston the 11th of July, since which, my advices from London have come to me very imperfect; but as my friend Mr. Thompson writes me, that he had drawn up my case, and with your approbation laid it before the D. of Grafton, I think it needful once more to mention this business to you.

There

There was a time when I thought the authority of government might have been easily restored; but while it's friends and the officers of the crown are left to an abject dependence on those very people who are undermining it's authority; and while these are suffered not only to go unpunished, but on the contrary, meet with all kind of support and encouragement, it cannot be expected that you will ever again recover that respect, which the colonies had been wont to pay to the parent state. Government at home will deceive itself, if it imagines that the taking off the duty on glass, paper and painter's colours will work a reconciliation, and nothing more than this, as I can learn, is proposed in Ld. H's late circular letter. It is the principle that is now disputed; the combination against importation extends to tea, although it comes cheaper than ever, as well as to the other forementioned articles. In Virginia it is extended lately to wines; and I have heard one of the first leaders in these measures in Boston say, that we should never be upon a proper footing 'till all the revenue acts from the 15th of Charles II. were repealed. Our Assembly in the Massachusetts may have been more illiberal than others in their public messages and resolves; yet we have some people among us still who dare to speak in favour of government: But here I do not find so much as one, unless it be some of the King's servants; and yet my business here leads me to associate with the best. They universally approve of the combination against importing of goods from Great-Britain, unless the revenue acts are repealed, which appears to me little less than assuming a negative on all acts of parliament which they do not like! They say expressly, we are bound by none made since our emigration, but such as for our own convenience we choose to submit to; such, for instance, as that for establishing a post-office. The Bill of Rights and the Habeas Corpus Acts, they say, are only declaratory of common law which we brought with us.

Under such circumstance as these, why should I wish to expose myself to popular resentment? Were I to receive any thing out of the revenue, I must expect to be abused for it. Nor do I find that our chief justice has received the £. 200 granted him for that service; and yet the assembly have this year withheld his usual grant, most probably because he has such a warrant from the crown.

With regard to my negotiations with Mr. Rogers, I did in conformity to your opinion make an apology to Mr. Secretary Pownall for mentioning it, and there submitted it. I hear it has been since talk'd of; but unless I could be assured in one shape or other of £. 300 per annum with the other office I would not chuse to quit what I have. I have no ambition to be distinguished, if I am only to be held up as a mark of popular envy or resentment. I was in hopes before now through the intervention of your good offices, to have received some mark of favour from your good friend; but the time is not yet come to expect it through that channel! I will however rely on your friendship, whenever you can with propriety appear in forwarding my interest, or preventing any thing that may prove injurious to it.

If Mr. R. has interest enough to obtain the Secretary's place, I shall upon receiving proper security think myself in honour bound to second his views, though I have none at present from him but a conditional note he formerly wrote me. If he is not like to succeed, and my son Daniel could have my place, I would be content, unless affairs take a different turn, to resign in his favour, whether administration should think proper to make any further provision for me or not. And yet I never thought of withdrawing myself from the service, while there appeared to me any prospect of my being able to promote it.

If I have wrote with freedom, I consider I am writing to a friend, and that I am perfectly safe in opening myself to you.

I am, with great respect, Sir, Your most obedient, humble servant.

ANDREW OLIVER.

DEAR SIR,

THE commissioners of the customs have met with every insult since their arrival at Boston and at last have been obliged to seek protection on board his majesty's ship Romney.—Mr. Hallowell, the comptroller of the customs, who will have the honour to deliver you this letter, will inform you of many particulars; he is sent by the board with their letters to government. Unless we have immediately two or three regiments, 'tis the opinion of all the friends to government, that Boston will be in open rebellion.

I have the honour to be with the greatest respect, and warmest regard,

Dear Sir,

Your most faithful and obliged servant,

CHARLES PAXTON.

*On board his Majesty's ship Romney,

MY DEAR SIR,

Boston, Dec. 12, 1768.

I Wrote you a few days ago, and did not then think of troubling you upon any private affair of mine, at least not so suddenly; but within this day or two, I have had a conversation with Mr. Oliver, Secretary of the province, the design of which, was my succeeding to the post he holds from the crown, upon the idea, that provision would be made for Governor Bernard, and the Lieutenant Governor would succeed to the chair, then the secretary is desirous of being Lieutenant Governor, and if in any way three hundred pounds a year could be annexed to the appointment. You are sensible the appointment is in one department, and the grant in another; now the present Lieutenant Governor has an assignment of £200 a year upon the customs here; he has not received any thing from it as yet, and is doubtful if he shall; he has no doubt of its lapse to the crown, if he has the chair; if then by any interest, that sum could be assigned to Mr. Oliver as Lieutenant Governor, and if he should be allowed (as has been usual for all Lieutenant Governors) to hold the command of the castle, that would be another £.100. This would compleat the secretary's views; and he thinks his public services, the injuries he has received in that service, and the favourable sentiments entertained of him by Government may lead him to these views, and he hopes for the interest of his friends. The place of secretary is worth £.300 a year, but is a provincial grant at present, so that it will not allow to be quartered on: And as I had a view upon the place when I was in England and went so far as to converse with several men of interest upon it, though I never had an opportunity to mention it to you after I recovered my illness—I hope you will allow me your influence, and by extending it at the treasury, to facilitate the assignment of the £.200 a year; it will be serving the secretary, and it will very much oblige me.—The secretary is advanced in life, though much mere so in health, which has been much impaired by the injuries he received, and he wishes to quit the more active scenes; he considers this as a kind of otium cum dignitate, and from merits one may think he has a claim to it. I will mention to you the gentlemen, who are acquainted with my views, and whose favourable approbation I have had. Governor Pownall, Mr. John Pownall, and Dr. Franklin.—My Lord Hillsborough is not unacquainted with it—I have since I have been here, wrote Mr. Jackson upon the subject, and have by this vessel wrote Mr. Mauduit. I think my character stands fair—I have not been without application to public affairs, and have acquired some knowledge of our provincial affairs, and notwithstanding our many free conversations in England, I am considered ed here as on government side, for which I have been often traduced both publicly and privately, and very lately have had two or three flaps. The Governor and Lieutenant Governor are fully acquainted with the negotiation, and I meet their approbation; all is upon the idea the Governor is provided for, and there shall by any means be a vacancy of the Lieutenant Governor's place. I have gone so far, as to say to some of my friends, that rather than not succeed I would agree to pay the secretary £100 a year out of the office, to make up £. 300, provided he could obtain only the assignment of £. 200—but the other proposal, would to be sure, be most eligible. I scarce know any apology to make for troubling you upon the subject; the friendship you shewed me in London, and the favourable expressions you made use of to the Lieutenant Governor in my behalf, encourage me, besides a sort of egotism, which inclines men to think what they wish to be real. I submit myself to the enquiries of any of my countrymen in England, but I should wish the matter may be secret, 'till it is effected.

I am, with very great respect and regard, my dear Sir,

L E T T E R S.

THESE are the letters, upon which the Assembly have artfully been induced to pass their censures, and have founded an address to remove his Majesty's Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Unable to point out a single action of the Governor's during his four years administration, they find themselves under a necessity of recurring to letters, written before the time, when either of these gentlemen were possessed of the offices which they now enjoy.

Upon the revival of them, I see strongproofs of Mr. Hutchinson's judgment and understanding, of his just notions of the interest of that country and of this, and of his fidelity and steady regard to the welfare of both: but am at a loss to find what there is in them, which can be a ground of blame; and much less warrant the very extraordinary censures, which have been passed on them. They are his private correspondence with the late Mr. Thomas Whately a private gentleman in London: a member of parliament indeed, and one who had been secretary to the treasury: but who was then out of place; and far from being connected with Government, during the whole time while these letters were writing, was voting in opposition. Being neither of them in trade, their letters did not contain bills or invoices, but they turned upon subjects which gentlemen naturally write about to each other: the occurrences of the time, and the several public matters, which were transacting in the places where each of them resided. The intelligences they contain may have come to hand something earlier than those by the common conveyance. But the facts themselves were, soon after, all known to every man in this country as well as that.

They give an account of a riot at Boston, upon the seizure of a smuggling vessel belonging to Mr. Hancock, a principal supporter of the party, and one of the committee appointed to the management of the censure passed upon these letters; but of this riot we all of us in due time from our several correspondents knew full as much as Mr. Whately did from his †.

The letters mention the combinations at Boston against taking our goods: but is it a crime to write as news, what they wished to have told to all the world? and printed in their news-papers for that very purpose, in order to bully our Ministers, and frighten our merchants and manufacturers?—They mention, that upon the Governor's not judging it proper to call an assembly at the will of the party leaders at Boston, these townsmen took upon themselves to write circular letters to all the towns and districts, to send one person each to Boston—And do we not all know that they did send such summons? and that this mock assembly did

† In this riot. Mr. Harrison, the collector, an old gentleman of an irreproachable character, and very respectable appearance, received a contusion in his breast by a brick-bat, which was thrown at him; under the ill effects of which he languished for more than twelve months, and probably might have been trampled to death, if his son, and others had not rescued him. This is what they called a brush, or small disturbance with boys and negroes.

meet? and did they not desire that the world should know it, and publish their resolves for that purpose?

These letters mention the need there is of the Government's supporting and encouraging the officers of the crown in the faithful discharge of their duty—And had not the House of Commons long before this determined the very same thing? and did they not address his Majesty, that he would so support and countenance them? they mention the common people's having been worked up into a frenzy, and talked of dying in defence of their liberties—And have they not been perpetually publishing threatnings of the same sort? and in all their papers sounding the trumpet of mutiny and sedition?

The letters say that many of rank above the vulgar, and some in public posts, had encouraged this frenzy. And do these censurers pretend to say they were not in such a state of confusion? far from denying the truth of this account, the committee of council themselves acknowledge that "the state of things at this time was greatly disordered, but the greatness of this disorder they say arose from other causes," which they there enumerate. Whether they or Mr. Hutchinson were right in their judgment about the causes of these disorders is immaterial to the present argument. Both acknowledge that there were disorders. And had not Mr. Hutchinson as good a right to give his opinion about the causes of them to a private correspondent, as these gentlemen have openly to traduce the British government, and to say that they were owing to them?

With the relation of these facts, the letters mention the writer's sentiments upon Government, and such other subjects as occur: sentiments which, as Mr. Hutchinson justly observes, contain nothing respecting the constitution of the colonies, more than what is contained in his public speeches to the assembly. But whether they did or did not will these sons of liberty, as they affect to call themselves, avow the position, that a gentleman of Boston ought not to write his opinions to his friends in London, unless those opinions do exactly coincide with theirs? I say nothing of the moderation and good temper which appears in all these letters; for if they could have been still more temperate, yet, while Mr. Hutchinson stands in the way of the leaders of a faction, who can live by nothing but confusion, they would have equally condemned them. They wanted nothing more than to get some letters under the Governor's hand; and whatever they were they would have condemned them in the same manner as they do those, and have found that the design of them was to overthrow the constitution, and to introduce arbitrary power into the province. Thus they have treated their former Governors; thus they have treated this; and if Mr. Hutchinson were to die, in three months time they would treat his successor in the same manner.

I might justly rest the matter here; and appeal to every impartial reader, whether if his own private correspondence should by any act, of fraud or perfidy, happen to be betrayed, he would not feel himself happy to find that his letters contained as many things as these do, for his friends to commend, and so very few for the malice of his enemies to carp at. But as these men affect a mighty concern lest Mr. Whately should have shewed his letters to the King; and they might interrupt and "alienate the affections of our most gracious Sovereign King George the Third, from his loyal and affectionate province; and destroy the harmony and good will between Great Britain and that colony, which every friend to either would wish to establish." And as the generality of people here, misled by false representations and feigned letters in news-papers, are but too apt to believe them, this makes it necessary to take off the mask of hypocrisy, and to exhibit them in their own proper features. When the reader will himself see, that all these fearful apprehensions of his Majesty's displeasure, and all these professed desires of harmony between Great Britain and the Colony, are mere mockery and insult; and that they really mean the direct contrary.

See, reader, the true standard of their loyalty, extracted from the journals of the last house of representatives. The party had it not in their power to make a declaratory Act of assembly, because they knew that the Governor would not pass it: but they passed the following declaratory resolutions.

" Mercurii, 3 die Martii, A. D. 1773.

" The house, according to order, entered into the consideration of the report of the committee appointed to consider his Excellency's message relative to the salaries of the justices of the superior court; and thereupon the following resolves were passed:

" Whereas by an act of the British parliament, made
 " and passed in the sixth year of his present Majesty's
 " reign, it is declared, 'That the King, Lords and Com" mons in parliament assembled have, ever had, and of " right ought to have, full power and authority to make " laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity, to " bind the colonies and people of America, subjects of " the crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatever; and " afterwards the same parliament made and passed an act
 " for levying duties in America, with the express purpose
 " of raising a revenue, and to enable his Majesty to ap-
 " appropriate the same for the necessary charges of the ad" ministration of justice, and the support of civil govern" ment in such colonies where it shall be judged necessary,
 " and towards further defraying the expences of defend" ing, protecting and securing said dominions: and his " Majesty has been pleased, by virtue of the same last
 " mentioned act, to appropriate a part of the revenue thus " raised against the consent of the people, in providing for " the support of the Governor of the province; and from " his Excellency's message of the 4th of February we can" not but conclude, that provision is made for the support
 " of

“ of the judges of the superior court of judicature, independent of the grants and acts of the general assembly, contrary to the invariable usage of this province: Therefore,

“ RESOLVED, That the admitting any authority to make laws binding on the people of this province in all cases whatsoever, saving the general court or assembly, is inconsistent with the spirit of our free constitution, and is repugnant to one of the most essential clauses in our charter, whereby the inhabitants are entitled to all the liberties of free and natural born subjects, to all intents, constructions and purposes whatsoever, as if they had been born within the realm of England. It reduces the people to the absolute will and disposal of a legislature, in which they can have no voice, and who may make it their interest to oppress and enslave them.

“ RESOLVED, That by the Royal Charter aforesaid, ‘the General Court or Assembly hath full power and authority to impose and levy proportionable and reasonable assessments, rates, and taxes, upon the estates and persons of all and every the proprietors and inhabitants of the province, to be issued and disposed of by warrant, under the hand of the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council, for his Majesty’s service in the necessary defence and support of the government of the province, and the protection and preservation of the inhabitants there, according to such acts as are or shall be in force within the province.’ And the making provision for the support of the Governor and the Judges otherwise than by the grants and acts of the General Court or Assembly, is a violent breach of the aforesaid most important clause in the charter: the support of government, in which their support is included, being one of the principal purposes for which the clause was inserted.

“ Whereas

" Whereas the independence as well as the uprightness of the Judges of the land is essential to the impartial administration of justice, and one of the best securities of the rights, liberties, and properties of the people.

" RESOLVED, therefore, That the making the judges of the land independent of the grants of the people, and altogether dependent on the crown, as they will be, if while they thus hold their commissions during pleasure, they accept of salaries from the crown, is unconstitutional and destructive of that security, which every good member of civil society has a just right to be assured of, under the due execution of the laws; and is directly the reverse of the constitution and appointment of the Judges in Great Britain.

" RESOLVED, That the dependence of the Judges of the land on the crown for their support, tends at all times, especially while they hold their commissions during pleasure, to the subversion of justice and equity, and to introduce oppression and despotic power.

" RESOLVED, as the opinion of this House, That while the Justices of the Superior Court hold their commissions during pleasure, any one of them who shall accept of, and depend upon the pleasure of the crown for his support, independent of the grants and acts of the General Assembly, will discover to the world, that he has not a due sense of ' the importance of an impartial administration of justice, that he is an enemy to the constitution, ' and has it in his heart to promote the establishment of ' an arbitrary government in the province."

Reader,

After the perusal of these resolutions, what are all the things said of these men in Mr. Hutchinson's letters, compared with what they here say of themselves? Or what is there in his mentioning some particular instances of their not paying a due obedience to the authority of Government

" Whereas

Government, compared with this open disavowal of the whole? yet the committee, which drew up these resolutions, consisted chiefly of the same individual men with the committee, which drew up the censure on these letters: and indeed they are the same set of men, whose names appear in all committees of this sort. These are the men, who, in order to give a plausible colour to their censures, can transform themselves into the appearance of the most meek and submissive of all his Majesty's subjects, and affect to be greatly alarmed at these private letters, and to believe that 'they had a natural and efficacious tendency to interrupt and alienate the affections of our Most Gracious Sovereign, King George the Third, from this his loyal and affectionate province: to destroy that harmony and good-will between Great-Britain and this colony, which every friend to either would wish to establish; and to excite the resentment of the British Administration against this province, &c.'

At that very time, when they knew that they had been flying in the face of his Majesty, setting acts of parliament at defiance, and passing the most seditious resolutions against the dignity of the British nation, and the supreme authority of the empire; at that very time these tender-minded loyalists are most piteously concerned about some private letters, lest they should interrupt and alienate the affections of their Most Gracious Sovereign King George the Third: letters which set them in a light of Innocence, compared with the mutinous and insolent portrait, which they have here drawn of themselves.

After having in their public votes spurned at the King's orders, assumed to themselves the controul of his courts of justice, and proscribed the King's judges as enemies to the constitution, and promoters of arbitrary government, if they obey the King's order, founded on an act of parliament, and receive the King's salaries, they can call themselves his most loyal and affectionate subjects.

They

They openly recite a solemn act of the British legislature, and make a counter declaration of their own in direct opposition to it ; and then pretend to be mightily afraid, lest these letters to Mr. Whately should destroy the harmony and good will between Great-Britain and the colony.

But not content with professing their great concern to preserve the good will of the British nation, and to appear to his Majesty as his most affectionate subjects, they are anxious even about the good opinion of his Ministers ; and are grievously concerned, lest these letters should excite the resentment of the British Administration. Reader, these very men, Adams, Hancock, &c. who, in the form of a Committee of Correspondence for the town of Boston, have been inflaming all the towns in the province against the King's government ; who, in the form of a Committee of Assembly, drew up these resolutions, and these censures ; these very men, in a message to the Governor, 12th February, 1773, express themselves in the following terms : ' We are more and more convinced, that it has been the design of Administration, totally to subvert the constitution, and to introduce arbitrary government into this province.' Doubtless the King's servants ought, every man of them, to join in advising his Majesty to dismiss his Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, who could suppose any thing ill of men who stood so much in awe of their resentment ?

There is one remark more, which cannot have escaped the Reader. One of the chief passages objected to by these censurers, is that where Mr. Hutchinson says : ' If no measures shall have been taken to secure this dependence, or nothing more than some declaratory acts or resolves, it is all over with us.' Can there possibly be required a stronger proof of the truth of this observation about the inefficacy of our declaratory act, than the counter declaration which we have now seen ? yet, after having themselves verified the prediction, they would have his Majesty turn out his Governor for having foretold it.

They

Reader, there are but too many men to be found, who, after doing a bad thing, will be false enough to charge it upon others. There are also other instances of men, who having done a wrong thing, will affect to consider as the highest affront, the being told that they have done it. But for men first to do a thing, then to avow it, and publish to the world that they have done it; and after all this to censure it as a crime in their Governor to suppose them capable of doing it: This is a degree of effrontery suited only to the complexion of a Boston Committee-man.

THERE are a few other remarks which it may be of use to make upon these letters.

The only exceptionable expression in Mr. Hutchinson's letters, is that in which he says: there must be an abridgement of what are called English Liberties. And this appears so, only from our not being apprized of the meaning of it. An English reader naturally concludes, that by English Liberties, is meant our being governed, not by arbitrary will but only by acts of parliament. In the Boston new dialect the import of this phrase is just the contrary; and what they call English Liberties, is the not being governed by acts of parliament. The reader need only look into their votes and public proceedings, to be convinced that this is the true and avowed sense in which they understand it. In the Charter of the Massachusetts colony, King William, in the words of their old Charter, says: ' And farther our will and pleasure is, and we do hereby for us, our heirs, and successors grant, establish and ordain, that all and every of the subjects of us, our heirs and successors, which shall go to and inhabit within our said province and territory, and every of their children, which shall happen to be born there, or on the seas in going thither, or returning from thence, shall have and enjoy ‘ enjoy all liberties and immunities of free and natural subjects, within any of the dominions of us, our heirs and successors, to all intents, constructions, and purposes whatsoever, as if they and every of them were born within this our realm of England.’ From King William’s reign to this, no one ever had the least doubt about the meaning of this clause; and the New Englanders have ever enjoyed the full benefit of it, by their being treated in all parts of the King’s dominions, wherever they came not as aliens, but as denizens, and enjoying all the liberties and immunities of free and natural born subjects. This I say has invariably hitherto been understood to be the meaning of this paragraph. But within these few years, the leaders of the faction at Boston have been instructed to put a quite new interpretation upon these words, and to say: The people of England have a right to chuse representatives for themselves, and are governed only by acts of parliament; the charter says, that we shall enjoy all liberties and immunities of free and natural subjects within any of the King’s dominions; therefore we too have as good a right, as the people of England have, to chuse our own representatives, and to be governed only by the laws made by our own assembly; and the parliament of England have nothing to do with us. We, as well as the inhabitants of England, by our charter are entitled to English liberties, and therefore we will make laws for ourselves; and no legislature of Great-Britain has any right to controul us.

A subordinate power of legislation, for the well ordering the several provinces and corporations, and for the making laws for their own good government among themselves, that is a power which we can well understand; and accordingly in the Massachusetts charter, as well as in most other charters, there is an express clause, giving them this legislative power, and limiting the extent of it; that its laws shall not be repugnant or contrary to the laws of the realm, or as the next paragraph says, repugnant to the laws and statutes of this our realm. But these Bostoners passing over this, and all the other clauses in their charter, which provide for their welfare and good government, while they continue in the province, have most unfortunately chosen to build their high claim of independence upon that single clause which grants them nothing while they are in the province, but only provides for their good reception in all parts of the King's dominions when they go out of it.

In opposition to this wild and futile claim of independence, Mr. Hutchinson insists, 'that from King William's days to these, the oldest man living never heard of this interpretation. That never before these days was a doubt made of the supreme authority of parliament over every part of the empire. That in every government there must be somewhere a supreme uncontrollable power, an absolute authority to decide and determine. That two such powers cannot co-exist, but necessarily will make two distinct states.'

Whether it be right or not, that the empire should be split into a number of separate and independent governments, which shall each of them be at liberty to take their own course, and make laws according to their own liking, without being subject to any controul from that supreme legislature, which has hitherto been thought to have the care of the whole, and whose duty it is to see that no part of the empire suffer any detriment, that is an argument which I leave to the determination of a superior authority.

Whether it be a justifiable procedure to foster and encourage this froward humour in the Colonists, and to support them in these pretensions of independence, till we have nursed up their discontents into mutiny and rebellion: whether, I say, it be a justifiable thing to do this, for the single purpose of distressing or overthrowing a ministry, that I leave to the discretion of our party leaders.

All that I have to observe is this: that if by English liberties and immunities be meant a right given to a set of subjects, wherever they go, to erect a legislature of their own; and then to say that they will be governed by that only, and that the parliament has nothing to do with them; if immediately after King James had been expelled for attempting to suspend a very few Acts of parliament, it can be supposed, that King William meant to assume a power to suspend them all; we may then allow, that the people of Boston have a right to vote these to be English liberties.

But if the British empire be but one empire, and we do not wish to see it crumbled to pieces, and break it into as many separate governments, as are the provinces, counties, and corporations contained in it: we must then be convinced, that a grant of English liberties, and immunities does not mean a right given to every province or corporation of the empire, to separate itself from the rest of the British dominions, and to form to itself a legislature of its own, which shall be uncontrollable by parliament:

Or, if the people of Massachusetts bay will persist in the use of this phrase; and will say, that this ought to be called English liberties; we must then say, as Mr. Hutchinson does, that the British empire is but one, and that to preserve that unity, there must be an abridgement of what are (thus absurdly) called English liberties.

MY LORD,

London August, 21, 1773.

I have just received from the house of representatives of the Massachusetts bay, their address to the King, which I now enclose, and send to your lordship with my humble request in their behalf, that you would be pleased to present it to his Majesty the first convenient opportunity.

I have the pleasure of hearing from that province by my late letters, that a sincere disposition prevails in the people there to be on good terms with the mother country; that the assembly have declared their desire only to be put into the situation they were in before the stamp-act; they aim at no novelties. And it is said, that having lately discovered, as they think, the authors of their grievances to be some of their own people, their resentment against Britain is thence much abated.

This good disposition of theirs (will your lordship permit me to say) may be cultivated by a favourable answer to this address, which I therefore hope your goodness will endeavour to obtain.

With the greatest respect,

I have the honour to be, my Lord, &c.

B. FRANKLIN.

Agent for the House of Representatives.

To the Clerk of the Council in waiting.

(COPY)

SIR,

Whitehall, Dec. 3, 1773.

THE Agent for the house of Representatives of the province of the Massachusetts bay, having delivered to Lord Dartmouth an address of that house to the King, signed by their Speaker, complaining of the conduct of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor of that province, in respect to certain private letters written by them to their correspondents in England, and praying that they may be removed from their posts in that Government; his Lordship hath presented the said address to his Majesty; and his Majesty having signified his pleasure, that the said address should be laid before his Majesty in his Privy Council, I am directed by Lord Dartmouth to transmit the same accordingly, together with a copy of the agent's letter to his Lordship accompanying the said address.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient humble Servant,

(Signed)

J. POWNALL.

To the KING's Most Excellent Majesty.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE your Majesty's loyal subjects, the Representatives of your ancient colony of the Massachusett's bay, in general court legally assembled, by virtue of your Majesty's writ under the hand and seal of the Governor, beg leave to lay this our humble petition before your Majesty.

NOTHING but a sense of the duty we owe to our sovereign, and the obligation we are under to consult the peace and safety of the Province, could induce us to remonstrate to your Majesty the mal-conduct of persons who have heretofore had the confidence and esteem of this people, and whom your Majesty has been pleased, from the purest motives of rendering your subjects happy, to advance to the highest places of trust and authority in the Province.

YOUR Majesty's humble petitioners, with the deepest concern and anxiety, have seen the discords and animosities which have too long subsisted between your subjects of the parent state and those of the American colonies. And we have trembled with apprehensions that the consequences naturally arising therefrom, would at length prove fatal to both Countries.

PERMIT us humbly to suggest to your Majesty, that your subjects here have been inclined to believe, that the grievances which they have suffered, and still continue to suffer, have been occasioned by your Majesty's Ministers and principal Servants being unfortunately for us, misinformed in certain facts of very interesting importance to us. It is for this reason that former assemblies have from time to time prepared a true state of facts to be laid before your Majesty, but their humble Remonstrances and Petitions it is presumed, have by some means been prevented from reaching your royal hand.

YOUR Majesty's petitioners have very lately had before them certain papers from which they humbly conceive, it is most reasonable to suppose, that there has long been a conspiracy of evil men in this province, who have contemplated measures and formed a plan to advance themselves to power and raise their own fortunes by means destructive of the charter of the province, at the expence of the quiet of the nation, and to the annihilating of the rights and liberties of the American colonies.

AND we do with all due submission to your Majesty beg leave particularly to complain of the conduct of his Excellency Thomas Hutchinson Esquire Governor, and the Honourable Andrew Oliver Esquire Lieutenant Governor of this your Majesty's province, as having a natural and efficacious tendency to interrupt and alienate the affections of your Majesty our Rightful Sovereign from this your Loyal Province, to destroy that harmony and good will between Great-Britain and this colony, which every honest subject would strive to establish, to excite the resentment of the British Administration against this province, to defeat the endeavours of our agents and friends to serve us by a fair representation of our state of facts, to prevent our humble and repeated petitions from reaching the ear of Your Majesty, or having their desired effect. And finally, that the said Thomas Hutchinson and Andrew Oliver have been among the chief instruments in introducing a fleet and an army into this province, to establish and perpetuate their plans, whereby they have been not only greatly instrumental of disturbing the peace and harmony of the Government, and causing unnatural and hateful discords and animosities between the several parts of your Majesty's extensive dominions, but are justly chargeable with all that corruption of morals and all that confusion, misery, and bloodshed, which have been the natural effects of posting an army in a populous town.

WHEREFORE we most humbly pray that your Majesty would be pleased to remove from their posts in this Government the said Thomas Hutchinson Esquire and Andrew

G

[ 50 ]

Oliver Esquire, who have by their above-mentioned conduct and otherwise rendered themselves justly obnoxious to your loving subjects, and entirely lost their confidence: And place such good and faithful men in their stead as your Majesty in your great wisdom shall think fit.

THO. CUSHING,
Speaker.

The PETITION of ISRAEL MAUDUIT,

Humbly sheweth unto your LORDSHIPS,

THAT having been informed that an Address in the name of the House of Representatives of His Majesty's Colony of Massachusetts Bay, has been presented to His Majesty, by Benjamin Franklin, Esq; praying the removal of His Majesty's Governor and Lieutenant Governor, which is appointed to be taken into consideration on Tuesday next: your Petitioner, on the behalf of the said Governor and Lieutenant Governor, humbly prays, that he may be heard by counsel in relation to the same, before your Lordships shall make any report on the said Address.

SIR,

the prevention of farther mischief, as far as such a declaration may contribute to prevent it) that I alone am the person who obtained and transmitted to Boston the letters in question.—Mr. W. could not communicate them, because they were never in his possession; and for the same reason, they could not be taken from him by Mr. T.—They were not of the nature of “private letters between friends.” They were written by public officers to persons in public station, on public affairs, and intended to procure public measures; they were therefore handed to other public persons who might be influenced by them to produce those measures: Their tendency was to incense the mother country against her colonies, and, by the steps recommended, to widen the breach, which they effected. The chief caution expressed with regard to privacy, was, to keep their contents from the Colony Agents, who the writers apprehended might return them, or copies of them, to America. That apprehension was, it seems, well founded; for the first Agent who laid his hands on them thought it his duty to transmit them to his Constituents.

At the COUNCIL CHAMBER Jan. 4. 1774.
PRESENT, Lord President, the Secretaries of State and many other Lords.

Dr. FRANKLIN, and Mr. BOLLAN,
Mr. MAUDUIT and Mr. WEDDERBURN.

Dr. Franklin's letter, and the address, Mr. Pownal's letter and Mr. Mauduit's Petition, were read.

Mr. Wedderburn.

The address mentions certain papers. I would wish to be informed what are those papers.

Dr. Franklin.

They are the letters of Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Oliver.

Court.

Have you brought them?

Dr. Franklin.

And here are attested copies.

Court.

Do you not mean to found a charge upon them? if you do, you must produce the letters.

Dr. Franklin.

These copies are attested by several Gentlemen at Boston and a Notary Public.

Mr. Wedderburn.

My Lords, we shall not take advantage of any imperfection in the proof. We admit that the letters are Mr.
Hutchinson's and Mr. Oliver's hand writing: reserving to ourselves the right of inquiring how they were obtained.

Dr.

Dr. Franklin.

I did not expect that council would have been employed on this occasion.

Court.

Had you not notice sent you of Mr. Mauduit's having petitioned to be heard by Council on behalf of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor?

Dr. Franklin.

I did receive such notice, but I thought that this had been a matter of politics and not of law, and have not brought any Council.

Court.

Where a charge is brought, the parties have a right to be heard by council or not as they chuse.

Mr. Mauduit.

My Lords, I am not a native of that country, as these Gentlemen are. I well know Dr. Franklin's great abilities and wish to put the defence of my friends more upon a parity with the attack; he will not therefore wonder that I chuse to appear before your Lordships with the assistance of Council. My friends in their letters to me, have desired (if any proceedings, as they say, should be had upon this address) that they may have a hearing in their own justification, that their innocence may be fully cleared, and their honour vindicated; and have made provision accordingly. I do not think myself at liberty therefore to give up the assistance of my council, in defending them against this unjust accusation.

Court.

Dr. Franklin may have the assistance of council, or go on without it, as he shall chuse.

Dr.

[ 57 ]

Dr. Franklin

I desire to have council.

Court.

What time shall you want?

Dr. Franklin

Three weeks.

The substance of that part of Mr. WEDDERBURN'S SPEECH, which related to the obtaining and sending away Mr. WHATELY'S LETTERS.

MY LORDS,

THE case, which now comes before your Lordships, is justly entitled to all that attention, which, from the presence of so great a number of Lords, and of so large an audience, it appears to have excited. It is a question of no less magnitude, than whether the crown shall ever have it in its power to employ a faithful and steady servant in the administration of a colony.

In the appointment of Mr. Hutchinson, his Majesty's choice followed the wishes of his people; and no other man could have been named, in whom so many favourable circumstances all concurred to recommend him.

A native of the country, whose ancestors were among its first settlers. A Gentleman who had for many years presided in their law-courts; of tried integrity; of confessed abilities; and who had long employed those abilities, in the study of their history and original constitution.

My Lords, if such a man, without their attempting to alledge one single act of misconduct, during the four years in which he has been Governor, is to be born down by the mere surmises of this address, it must then become a case of still greater magnitude, and ever be a matter of doubt, whether the colony shall henceforward pay respect to any authority derived from this country.

A charge of some sort however is now preferred against these Gentlemen by this address; and the prayer of it is that his Majesty would punish them by a disgraceful removal.

If they shall appear to have either betrayed the rights of the crown, or to have invaded the rights of the people, your Lordships

Lordships doubtless will then advise his Majesty no longer to trust his authority with those, who have abused it.

But if no crime is objected to them, no act of misconduct proved, your Lordships will then do the justice to their characters, which every innocent man has a right to expect; and grant them that protection and encouragement, which is due to officers in their station.

My Lords, this is not the place to give any opinion about our public transactions relating to the colonies, and I shall carefully avoid it. But the whole foundation of this address rests upon events of five and six years standing; and this makes it necessary to take up the history of them from their first original.

In the beginning of the year 1764, * * * * *

My Lords, after having gone through the history of this people, for the last ten years, and shewn what has been the behaviour of Mr. Hutchinson in all these occurrences, and the very laudable and friendly part he acted on every occasion for the good of the colony; I now come to consider the argument upon that footing, on which my learned friends have chosen to place it.

They have read to your Lordships the Assembly's address; they have read the letters; and they have read the censures passed on them: and after praying the removal of his Majesty's Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, they now tell your Lordships: there is no cause to try—There is no charge—There are no accusers—There are no proofs.—They say that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor are disliked by the assembly, and they ought to be dismissed, because they have lost the confidence of those who complain against them.

My Lords, This is so very extraordinary a proceeding that I know of no precedent, except one: but that, I confess according according to the Roman poet's report, is a case in point.

Nunquam, si quid mihi credis, amavi
Hunc hominem.—Sed quo cecidit sub crimine?—Quisnam
Delator—Quibus Indicibus?—Quo Teste probavit—
Nil horum—Verbosa & grandis epistola venit
A Capreis—Bene habet: nil plus interrogo.

My Lords, The only purport of this important address is, that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor have lost the confidence of the people, upon account of some papers, which they have voted to be unfriendly to them, and that they have been amongst the chief instruments in introducing a fleet and army into the province.—Your Lordships have heard the letters read, and are the best judges of their tendency. I can appeal to your Lordships, that it was not these letters but their own ill-conduct, which made it necessary to order the four regiments. In point of time it was impossible, for in Mr. Hutchinson's very first letter, it appears, that they had an expectation of troops. And they arrived in three months after. I could appeal too to their own knowledge: for the printed collection of Sir Francis Bernard's and General Gage's &c. letters were before them, which indisputably shew the direct contrary.

But as my learned friends have not attempted to point out the demerits of these letters, I need not enter into the defence of them. To call them only innocent letters would be greatly to depreciate them. They contain the strongest proofs of Mr. Hutchinson's good sense, his great moderation, and his sincere regard to the welfare of that his native province. Yet, for these it is, that they tell us he has lost the confidence of the people.

My Lords, there cannot be a more striking instance of the force of truth, than what the Committee, who drew up these papers, exemplify in their conduct. In their second resolution they acknowledge the high character, in which Mr. Hutchinson stands upon account of his eminent abilities. In the very outset of their address they acknowledge the the good use which he had made of those abilities: for he could not have enjoyed their confidence, as they say he heretofore did, if he had made a bad one. They acknowledge that this confidence subsisted, at least till the time of his being made Governor. Else they could not express their thankfulness to his Majesty as they do, and applaud the appointment of him, as proceeding from the purest motives of rendering his subjects happy.

In the height of their ill will therefore to Mr. Hutchinson, truth looks his enemies full in the face, and extorts from them a confession of his merit, even in the very act of accusing him.

But, whatever be the censures, which the Assembly may have been induced to pass on him, I will now give your Lordships a proof of his enjoying the people's confidence, to the very time of the arrival of these letters.

Every one knows that there are few subjects, in which the people of the colonies have more eagerly interested themselves, than in settling the boundary lines between the several provinces. Some of your Lordships may remember the long hearings which have been held at this board upon these disputes. Of late, they have taken upon themselves to fix the limits of the King's charters. An agreement was made between the two Assemblies of New York and Massachusetts Bay, that they should each appoint their Commissaries, to meet and settle the boundary line between the two provinces. Both of them no doubt looked out for the best men they had for that purpose. But the people of Massachusetts Bay, after they had chosen their commissaries, still thought that they could more securely trust their interests in their hands, if Mr. Hutchinson would go along with them. To him they had been used to look, as the man, who best knew the history of their first settlements; him they considered as the ablest defender of the province's rights: and had ever found in him the most zealous affection for their welfare. The party party leaders perhaps might have been content to lose to the province any number of acres or a few townships, rather than owe to Mr. Hutchinson the preservation of them. But they did not dare to set their faces against the general sense of the people. The Governor was therefore requested to go with the commissaries. He did so, and settled for them a much better line, than they had ever expected. And the New York and their own commissaries both of them acknowledged, that the advantage gained to the province, was chiefly owing to the superior knowledge and abilities of Mr. Hutchinson.

Thus far then the Governor's character stands fair and unimpeached. Whatever therefore be the foundation of this Address for his removal, it must be something done by him, or known of him since his return from this service just before the arrival of these letters. Your Lordships will observe, that his enemies don't attempt to point out a single action, during the four years in which he has been Governor, as a subject of complaint. The whole of this address rests upon the foundation of these letters, written before the time, when either of these Gentlemen were possessed of the offices, from which the assembly now ask their removal. They owe therefore all the ill will which has been raised against them, and the loss of that confidence, which the assembly themselves acknowledge they had heretofore enjoyed, to Dr. Franklin's good office in sending back these letters to Boston. Dr. Franklin therefore stands in the light of the first mover and prime conductor of this whole contrivance against his Majesty's two Governors; and having by the help of his own special confidants and party leaders, first made the assembly his Agents in carrying on his own secret designs, he now appears before your Lordships to give the finishing stroke to the work of his own hands.

How these letters came into the possession of any one but the right owners, is still a mystery for Dr. Franklin to explain plain.—They who know the affectionate regard which the Whatelys had for each other, and the tender concern they felt for the honour of their brother's memory, as well as their own, can witness the distresses which this occasioned. My Lords, the late Mr. Whately was most scrupulously cautious about his letters. We lived for many years in the strictest intimacy; and in all those years I never saw a single letter written to him. These letters I believe were in his custody at his death. And I as firmly believe, that without fraud, they could not have been got out of the custody of the person whose hands they fell into. His brothers little wanted this additional aggravation to the loss of him. Called upon by their correspondents at Boston; anxious for vindicating their brother's honour and their own, they enquired; gave to the parties aggrieved all the information in their power; but never accused.

Your Lordships know the train of mischiefs which followed.—But wherein had my late worthy friend or his family offended Dr. Franklin, that he should first do so great an injury to the memory of the dead brother, by secreting and sending away his letters: and then, conscious of what he had done, should keep himself concealed, till he had nearly, very nearly occasioned the murder of the other.

After the mischiefs of this concealment had been left for five months to have their full operation, at length comes out a letter, which it is impossible to read without horror; expressive of the coolest and most deliberate malevolence.—My Lords, what poetic fiction only had penned for the breast of a cruel African, Dr. Franklin has realized and transcribed from his own. His too is the language of a Zanga.

“ Know then 'twas——I,

“ I forg'd the letter—I dispos'd the picture—

“ I hated, I despis'd, and I destroy.”

What

What are the motives he assigns for this conduct, I shall now more deliberately consider.

My Lords, if there be any thing held sacred in the intercourse of mankind, it is their private letters of friendship—If there can be any such private letters, those which passed between the late Mr. Whately and Mr. Oliver are such—The friendship between the two families is of thirty years standing—during all that time there has been kept up an intercourse of letters; first with Mr. Whately, the father, and then with the late Mr. Thomas Whately the son—In the course of this friendship, a variety of good offices have passed between the two families; one of these fell within the period of these letters—Upon Mr. Oliver's daughter's coming to England with her Husband upon business, they were received at Nonsuch by Mrs. Whately and her sons, as the son and daughter of their old friend and correspondent—And accordingly your Lordships will find, that one part of these letters is to return thanks for the civilities shewn to Mr. and Mrs. Spooner at Nonsuch.

These are the letters which Dr. Franklin treats as public letters, and has thought proper to secret them for his own private purpose. How he got at them or in whose hands they were at the time of Mr. Whately's death, the Doctor has not yet thought proper to tell us. Till he do, he wittingly leaves the world at liberty to conjecture about them as they please, and to reason upon those conjectures.—But let the letters have been lodged where they may, from the hour of Mr. Thomas Whately's death, they became the property of his brother and of the Whately family. Dr. Franklin could not but know this, and that no one had a right to dispose of them but they only—Other receivers of goods dishonourably come by, may plead as a pretence for keeping them, that they don't know who are the proprietors: In this case there was not the common excuse of ignorance; the Doctor knew whose they were, and yet did not restore them to the right owner—This property is as sacred and as precious to gentlemen of integrity, as their family plate or jewels are. And no man, who knows the Whately's, will doubt, but that they would much sooner have chosen, that any person should have taken their plate, and sent it to Holland for his avarice, than that he should have secreted the letters of their friends, their brother's friend, and their father's friend, and sent them away to Boston to gratify an enemy's malice.

The reasons assigned for this, are as extraordinary as the transaction itself is: They are public letters, to public persons, on public affairs, and intended to produce public measures. This, my Lords, is the first; and the next reason assigned for publishing them is, because the writers desire that the contents of them should be kept secret.

If these are public letters, I know not what can be reckoned private. If a letter whose first business is to return thanks to an old lady of seventy, for her civilities at Non-such, be not a private letter, it will be necessary that every man should be particularly careful of his papers: for after this, there never can be wanting a pretence for making them public *.

But says the Doctor, "They were written by public Officers."—Can then a man in a public station have no private friends? and write no private letters? Will Dr. Franklin avow the principle, that he has a right to make all private letters of your Lordships his own, and to apply them to such uses as will best answer the purposes of party malevolence? Whatever may have been the confidence heretofore placed in him, such a declaration will not surely contribute to increase it.

* The reader will be pleased to observe, that the question here is not whether they be good letters or bad ones; but whether they are public letters or private.

But they were written to persons in public stations. Just the contrary to this appears to have been the case: Dr. Franklin is too well acquainted with our history, not to know, that Mr. Whately during both these years, and for two years before and after, was only a private member of parliament; and as Mr. Oliver justly observes in a letter of his, They at Boston could not be supposed to apply to him as having an interest with the Ministers, when they knew that he was all that time voting in opposition to them.

Does then the Doctor mean, that his being a member of parliament placed him in a public station?—And will he then avow, that a gentleman's being in parliament is ground sufficient for him to make his letters lawful plunder and to send them to his enemies?

But they were written on public affairs. A very grievous offence! But it is a crime, of which probably we all of us have been guilty, and ought not surely, for that only, to forfeit the common rights of humanity.

But they were intended to procure public measures. And does not every man, who writes in confidence to his friend upon political subjects, lament any thing which he thinks to be wrong, and wish to have it amended? And is this the crime of so heinous a nature, as to put Mr. Whately's friends out of the common protection? and to give to Dr. Franklin a right to hang them up to party rage, and to expose them, for what he knew, to the danger of having their houses a second time pull'd down by popular fury.

But the writers of them desired secrecy.—True, they did so. And what man is there, who, when he is writing in confidence, does not wish for the same thing? does not every man say things to a friend, which he would not chuse to have published to other people, and much less to his enemies? Would letters of friendship, be letters of friendship if they contained nothing but such indifferent things as might be said to all the world?

If

If this is the case at all times with the confidential intercourse of friends, in times of party violence, there must be a thousand things said in letters, which, though innocent in themselves, either by rival malice or party prejudice, may be turned to a very different construction. These letters themselves have been distorted in this manner; and some expressions in them cannot possibly be understood, without knowing the correspondent letters, to which they refer. And when a factious party had got possession of the town meetings, and led the assembly into what resolutions they pleased, and were watching for any pretence to abuse and insult their Governors, is it at all to be wondered that they did not wish to have the contents of their letters told to their enemies?

When we read in these letters such passages as these: "If there be no necessity for it, I think it would be best" "it should not be known that this intelligence comes from me." Or this: "I have wrote with freedom, in confidence of my name's not being used on the occasion. For though I have wrote nothing but what, in my conscience, I think an American may, upon just principles, advance, and what a servant of the crown ought, upon all proper occasions, to suggest; yet the many prejudices I have to combat with, may render it unfit it should be made public." Or this of Mr. Hutchinson's: "I must beg the favour of you to keep secret every thing I write, until we are in a more settled state, for the party here, either by their agent, or by some of their emissaries in London, have sent them every report or rumour of the contents of letters wrote from hence. I hope we shall see better times both here and in England." Or this again of Mr. Oliver's: "I have wrote with freedom; I consider I am writing to a friend; and that I am perfectly safe in opening myself to you." Upon reading these passages, which are all of this kind, a man, whose heart was cast in the common mould of humanity, would would have been apt to say: These are letters irregularly obtained: The writers desire that every thing they write should be kept secret: they belong to Mr. Whately, who never injured me: I will therefore return them to the right owner. Dr. Franklin's reasoning is of a very different cast. After having just before told us: These are public letters, sent to public persons, designed for public purposes, and therefore I have a right to betray them; he now says, these are letters which the writers desire may be kept secret, and therefore I will send them to their enemies. Prepared on both sides for his rival's overthrow, he makes that an argument for doing him hurt, which any other man would consider as a principal aggravation of the injustice of it.

But, if the desiring secrecy be the proof, and the measure of guilt, what then are we to think of Dr. Franklin's case? whose whole conduct in this affair has been secret and mysterious? and who, through the whole course of it, has discovered the utmost solicitude to keep it so? My Lords, my accounts say, that when these letters were sent over to Boston, so very desirous was Dr. Franklin of secrecy, that he did not chuse to set his name to the letter which accompanied them. This anonymous letter expressly ordered, that it should be shewn to none but to a junto of six persons. If the Doctor chuse it, I will name the six. The direction of every letter was erased, and strict orders were given, that they should be carefully returned again to London. The manner in which they were brought into the Assembly, all shewed the most earnest desire of concealment. Under these mysterious circumstances have the Assembly passed their censures; and voted this Address to his Majesty against Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Oliver upon account of a parcel of letters directed to some-body, they know not whom; and sent from some-body they know not where. And Dr. Franklin now appears before your Lordships, wrapt up in impenetrable secrecy, secrecy, to support a charge against his Majesty's Governor and Lieutenant Governor; and expects that your Lordships should advise the punishing them, upon account of certain letters, which he will not produce, and which he dares not tell how he obtained.

But the Doctor says, he transmitted them to his constituents.

That Doctor Franklin sent these letters to such persons as he thought would in some way or other bring them into the Assembly, may be true, and accordingly, after an alarm of some dreadful discovery, these letters were produced by one single person, pretending to be under an injunction to observe the strictest secrecy, and to suffer no copies to be taken of them.—After allowing two or three days for fame to amplify, and for party-malice to exaggerate; and after having thereby raised a general prejudice against the Governor; at length another member tells the Assembly, that he had received from an unknown hand a copy of the letters; and wished to have that copy compared and authenticated with the originals. After this, when they had brought the Council into their measures, they then found their powers enlarged; and that they were at liberty to shew them to any one, provided they did not suffer them to go out of their hands; and the King's Governor and Lieutenant-Governor were permitted to look upon them only in this opprobrious manner, in order to render the indignity so much the more offensive.

This Dr. Franklin may call transmitting the letters to his constituents; and upon those who know nothing of the course of these proceedings, may easily impose the belief of it: But your Lordships will readily see, and every man who has been an agent very well knows, that this is not what is meant by transmitting to his constituents. My Lords, when an agent means to write to the Assembly, he addresses his letter to the Speaker, to be communicated to the House. And the Doctor knows, that there are many articles articles in the Journals of this tenor ; " A letter from Dr. Franklin to the Speaker, was read."

But the course taken with these letters was just the reverse of this. The letter which came with them was anonymous ; though the hand was well known : too well perhaps known to the selected few, who only were to be allowed the sight of it.—Since therefore the Doctor has told us that he transmitted these letters to his constituents, we know now who they are. His constituents, by his own account, must be this particular junto : for to them, and them only, were the letters communicated. Dr. Franklin did not communicate them, as their agent, to the Assembly : for whatever may have been the whispers of this junto, the Assembly, as an Assembly, does not to this day know by whom the letters were sent. And so little do these innocent well-meaning farmers, which compose the bulk of the Assembly, know what they are about, that by the arts of these leaders, they have been brought to vote an Address to his Majesty to dismiss his Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, founded upon certain papers, which they have not named ; sent to them from somebody, they know not whom ; and originally directed to some-body, they cannot tell where : for, my Lords, my accounts say, that it did not appear to the House that these letters had ever been in London.

I have pointed out to your Lordships, the manner in which this conspiracy against the Governor was conducted, with all its circumstances, as the letters from Boston relate them. And from this account your Lordships will not wonder that I consider Dr. Franklin, not so much in the light of an agent for the Assembly's purpose, as in that of a first mover and prime conductor of it for his own ; not as the Assembly's agent for avenging this dreadful conspiracy of Mr. Hutchinson against his native country ; but as the actor and secret spring, by which all the Assembly's motions were directed : the inventor and first planner of the whole contrivance. He it was that received and sent away Mr. Whately's letters. By what means he laid his hands on them, he does not say; till he do, he leaves us at liberty to suppose the worst; I would wish to suggest the best. One case only must be excepted; Dr. Franklin will not add another injury, and say to the representative * of the Whately family, that they were any of them consenting to the perfidy. And yet, my Lords, nothing but that consent could put him honourably in possession of them, and much less give him a right to apply them to so unwarrantable a purpose.

My Lords, there is no end of this mischief. I have now in my hand an expository letter from a Mr. Roome, not a native of America, but sent from London to Rhode Island, to collect in and sue for large outstanding debts there. This poor man, in a familiar letter to a friend in the same province, expresses a just indignation at the difficulties he met with in executing his trust, from the iniquitous tendency of their laws, and of the proceedings of their courts, to defraud their English creditors; and then gives him an invitation to come and spend some time with him at his country house, and catch perch and be of their fishing party. For this letter, the Assembly brought him under examination, and committed him to prison, because he would not answer to his printed name at the end of one of the letters in this book †. Upon this occasion he writes a letter to one of his employers, with whom he had served his clerkship here in London, expostulating on the cruelty and injustice of the executors suffering their dead brother's papers to be applied to such a purpose. For he, my Lords, had no conception that any one else could have made this use of letters which did not belong to him. Mr. Roome had heard that the Boston letters had all been sent back again to London; and knew that their Speaker was directed to procure his original letter, in order to their proceeding against him still more severely. The merchant here came with this letter to a friend of Mr. Whately's desiring that he would go with him to Mr. Whately, and join in intreating him, not to send back the letter to their Speaker, which would oblige him, he writes, either to fly the province, or else to suffer a long imprisonment. My Lords, Mr. Whately's friend had seen too much of the anguish of mind under which he had been suffering for the five months since this discovery. He knew that it would be giving him another stab to suffer a stranger abruptly to put this letter into his hands; he informed the merchant of the state of the affair, and prevented his going to him.

But what had this poor man done to Dr Franklin, that his letter should be sent back too? Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Oliver were public persons, and their letters, according to the Doctor's new code of morality, may be a lawful prize: but Mr. Roome's is a name we had never heard of. Was he too a man in a public station? his friend, to whom he sent this invitation to come a fishing with him, was he a public person? could Mr. Roome, when he was writing to New London, imagine that he was writing a letter to be shewn to the King? and to alienate his affections from that loyal people? Did the sailing of the four regiments to Boston depend upon the intelligence of a man at Narragansett? the writer of this letter could not have a thought of its producing public measures—Surely then the returning of this letter might have been omitted; and this poor man at least might have been spared. But all men, be they in public stations or in private, be they great or small, all are prey that unfortunately fall into Dr. Franklin's hands: he wantonly and indiscriminately sends back the letters of all; unfeeling of the reflection, which must arise in every other breast, that what is sport to him, may be imprisonment and death to them.

But under all this weight of suspicion, in the full view of all the mischievous train of consequences which have followed from this treachery (for such there must be somewhere, though Dr. Franklin does not chuse to let us know where to fix it) with a whole province set in a flame; with an honest innocent man thrown into jail, and calling on Mr Whately not to furnish the means of fixing him there; with a worthy family distressed, in the reflections cast on their own character, and in the sufferings brought upon their friends and correspondents; with the memory of one brother greatly injured, and the life of another greatly indangered; with all this weight of suspicion, and with all this train of mischiefs before his eyes, Dr. Franklin's apathy sets him quite at ease, and he would have us think, that he has done nothing more than what any other colony agent would have done. He happened only to be the first colony agent who laid his hands on them, and he thought it his duty to transmit them to his constituents.

My Lords, I have the pleasure of knowing several very respectable gentlemen, who have been colony agents, and cannot but feel a little concern at seeing this strange imputation cast on that character. I have heard the sentiments of some of them. Upon being asked, whether, if they had laid their hands upon another gentleman's letters, they would have thought it their duty to make a like use of them: My Lords, they received the proposal with horror. One of them said, it was profaning the word Duty to apply it to such a purpose; another, that if he had been their agent, he would sooner have cut off his right hand than have done such a thing.

My Lords, Dr. Franklin's, mind may have been so possessed with the idea of a great American Republic, that he may easily slide into the language of the minister of a foreign foreign independent state *. A foreign Ambassador when residing here, just before the breaking out of a war, or upon particular occasions, may bribe a villian to steal or betray any state papers; he is under the command of another state, and is not amenable to the laws of the country where he resides; and the secure exemption from punishment may induce a laxer morality.

But Dr. Franklin, whatever he may teach the people at Boston, while he is here at least is a subject; and if a subject injure a subject, he is answerable to the law. And the Court of Chancery will not much attend to his new self-created importance.

But, my Lords, the rank in which Dr. Franklin appears, is not even that of a province agent: he moves in a very inferior orbit. an Agent for a province, your Lordships know, is a person chosen by the joint act of the Governor, council, and Assembly; after which, a commission is issued by the Secretary, under the province seal, appointing him to that office. Such a real colony agent, being made by the joint concurrence of all the three branches of the Government, will think it his duty to consult the joint service of all the three; and to contribute all he can to the peace, harmony, and orderly government of the whole; as well as to the general welfare and prosperity of the province. This at least is what I learn from the copy books of two gentlemen, who at different periods were agents for this very colony. But Dr. Franklin's appointment seems to have been made in direct opposition to all these. Upon a message from the Council to the Assembly, desiring that they would join in the choice of an agent for the colony, they came to a resolution, that they will not join with the Honourable Board in the choice of such an agent; but resolve that they will chuse an agent of their own; and then that Dr. Franklin should be that agent. My Lords, the party by whom the Assembly is now directed, did not want a man who should think himself bound in duty to consult for the peace and harmony of the whole government; they had their own private separate views, and they wanted an agent of their own, who should be a willing instrument and instructor in the accomplishing their own separate purposes. Dr. Franklin therefore, your Lordships see, not only moves in a different orbit from that of other colony Agents, but he gravitates also to a very different center. His great point appears to be to serve the interest of his party; and privately to supply the leaders of it with the necessary intelligence. Wheresoever and howsoever he can lay his hands on them, he thinks it his duty to furnish materials for dissensions; to set at variance the different branches of the legislature, and to irritate and incense the minds of the King's subjects against the King's Governor.

But, says the Doctor, the tendency of these letters was to incense the mother country against her colonies.

There is a certain steadiness which is singularly remarkable in this case. These men are perpetually offering every kind of insult to the English nation. Setting the King's authority at defiance; treating the parliament as usurpers of an authority not belonging to them, and flatly denying the supreme jurisdiction of the British empire: and have been publishing their votes and resolutions for this purpose; and yet now pretend a great concern about these letters, as having a tendency to incense the parent state against the colony. Not content with bidding defiance to our authority, they now offer insult to our understanding: and at the very time while they are flying in the King's face, would have him turn out his Governor, because he has in the mildest terms intimated his opinion, that they do not pay the reverence, they used to do, to the British authority.

My Lords, we are perpetually told of men's incensing the mother country against the colonies, of which I have never known a single instance: but we hear nothing of the vast variety of arts, which have been made use of to incense the colonies against the mother country. And in all these arts no one I fear has been a more successful proficient, than the very man who now stands forth as Mr. Hutchinson's accuser. My Lords, as he has been pleased in his own letter to avow this accusation, I shall now return the charge and shew to your Lordships, who it is that is the true incendiary, and who is the great abetter of that faction at Boston, which, in form of a committee of correspondence, have been inflaming the whole province against his Majesty's government.

My Lords, the language of Dr. Franklin's peculiar correspondents is very well known. For years past they have been boasting of the countenance, which he receives in England, and the encouragement, which he sends over to them at Boston. One of their last boasted advices was: Go on, abstain from violence, but go on; for you have nothing to fear from the government here.

My Lords, from the excess of their zeal, these men are apt sometimes to let out a little too much. In the Boston Gazette of the 20th of September last is a letter, understood at Boston to have been written by Mr. Adams, one of Dr. Franklin's six constituents*, which ends with the following passage.—“The late agent Mr. De Bert in one of his letters wrote, that Lord Hillsborough professed a great regard, for the interest of America; and he thought “ that minister it seems was to serve us. But America has “ not yet thought it wise to agree to his Lordships political “ plan, to wink their liberties out of sight, for the sake of “ a temporary accommodation.” “Dr. Franklin, who is “ perhaps as penetrating a genius as his Lordship, extended “ his views a little farther. I hope, says he in a letter “ dated in 1771, “ the colony assemblies will show by “ repeated resolves, that they know their rights, and do “ not lose sight of them. Our growing importance will ere “ long compel an acknowledgment of them, and establish “ and secure them to our posterity.” “ And he adds, I pur“ pose to draw up a memorial stating our rights and grievances

 “ and in the name and behalf of the province, protesting “ particularly against the late innovations—Whether speedy “ redress is or is not the consequence, I imagine it may “ rights should accompany a complaint of grievances; and “ that decent and manly protests against particular inno“ vations, have the surest tendency to an effectual, if not “ a speedy removal of them*.”

Your Lordships will be pleased to observe the time of Dr. Franklin’s announcing his intention of drawing up for them such a memorial, was in 1771. At the proper season in the next year, there was produced a great work under these very heads of a state of rights, and a state of grievances, and protests against the new innovations: but not from the press in London, that would not have answered the purpose. It was to be a memorial in the name and be- half of the province; and therefore was first to be sent thither, and receive the stamp of their authorities. A town meeting therefore was called, and a committee of correspondence chosen, to draw up a state of their rights and grievances, and from the form of the resolution it is pretty manifest, that the leaders knew already what the work was to be. After an adjournment the committee met, and produced this great twelve-penny book, under the very heads of a state of their rights, and containing a list of their grievances, with remonstrances sufficiently strong against what they call Innovations. The work was received with the utmost applause, and instantly converted into votes and resolutions of the town of Boston.

And doubtless it well deserved it: It is a set of ready drawn heads of a declaration for any one colony in America, or any one distant county in the kingdom, which shall chuse to revolt from the British empire, and say that they will not be governed by the King and Parliament at Westminster. They therefore voted that this report of their committee of correspondence should be printed in a pamphlet, and that six hundred copies of them should be disposed of to the select men of the towns of the province, with an inflammatory letter, sounding an alarm of a plan of despotism, with which the Administration (and the parliament) intended to enslave them; and threatened them with certain and inevitable destruction: And desiring that they would call town-meetings, and send their votes and resolutions upon this book. In 60 or 70 villages or townships such meetings had been held: And all express the highest approbation of this excellent performance. And well they might; for it told them a hundred rights of which they never had heard before, and a hundred grievances which they never before had felt. Your Lordships see the votes and instructions of these several townships, in the Boston gazettes here before me. They are full of the most extravagant absurdities. Such as the enthusiastic rants of the wildest of my countymen in Charles the 2d's days cannot equal. It is impossible to read them to your Lordships: those of Pembroke and of Marble-head are particularly curious: but I shall take those of the town of Petersham.

“Resolved, that the parliament of Great Britain, usurping and exercising a legislative authority over, and exacting an unrighteous revenue from these colonies, is against all divine and human laws. The late appointment of salaries to be paid to our superior Court Judges, whose creation, pay, and commission, depend on mere will and pleasure, complete a system of bondage equal to any ever before fabricated by the combined efforts of the ingenuity, malice, fraud, and wickedness of man.

“Therefore, Resolved, That it is the first and highest social duty, of this people, to consider of, and seek ways and means for a speedy redress of these mighty grievances, and intolerable wrongs; and that for the attainment of this end, this people are warranted, by the laws of God and nature, in the use of every rightful art, and energy of Policy, Stratagem, and Force.

“Therefore, it is our earnest desire, and we here direct you, to use your utmost influence (as one of the legislative body) to convince the nation of Great-Britain, that the measures that they have meted out to us, will have a direct tendency to destroy both them and us; and petition on the King, and parliament of Great-Britain, in the most pathetic and striking manner, to relieve us from our aggravated grievances; but if all this should fail, we recommend it to your consideration, and direct you to move it to the consideration of the honourable Court, whether it would not be best to call in the aid of some Protestant Power or Powers, requesting that they would use their kind and Christian influence, with our mother country, that so we may be relieved, and that brotherly love and harmony may again take place.”

These are the lessons taught in Dr. Franklin's school of politics. My Lords, I do not say that Dr. Franklin is the original original author of this book. But your Lordships will give me leave to observe, in the first place, that it is not very likely, that any of the Doctor's scholars at Boston, should attempt to draw up such a state of rights and grievances, when the great man, their master, had given them notice that he should himself set about such a work: and, in the next place, that if the Doctor should not chuse now to filiate the child, yet the time has been when he was not ashamed of it; for, after it had had its operation in America, the Doctor reprinted it here, with a preface of his own, and presented it to his friends.

My Lords, I have said, that sixty or seventy of the townships had already voted their approbation of the book. The evil was catching from town to town (and if the greater part could have been engaged, they would have forced the rest) when the Governor thought it his duty to interpose. He therefore called upon the Assembly to disown these undutiful proceedings. Had he only mentioned the disloyalty and evil tendency of them, they would probably have passed a few resolutions, and have suffered the evil to go on. He was well aware, that the Assembly could easily vote themselves as many privileges as they pleased, but that it was not so easy to prove their right to them. He, therefore, disarmed them of their strength in voting, and put them under the necessity of proving; and there he knew they would fail. By opening the session with that very masterly speech in defence of the British American constitution, he, for a time, stunned the faction, and gave a check to the progress of their Town-Meetings. And though the same men were in the Assembly created a Committee of Correspondence, to write to the Assemblies of the other provinces, yet the spirit of the design languished, and but little more was then done in it.

This, my Lords, is the great and principal ground of their quarrel with Mr. Hutchinson. They want a Governor, who shall know less than themselves, whereas he makes them feel that he knows more. He stopped the train which Dr. Franklin's constituents had laid, to blow up the province into a flame; which from thence was to have been spread over the other provinces. This was the real provocation: and for this they have been seeking for some ground of accusation against him.

After sifting his whole conduct for the four years, in which he has been governor, they are not able to point out a single action to find fault with. Their only recourse is to their own surmises of what were the sentiments of his heart five or six years ago. He was, they say, among the instruments in introducing a fleet and army into the province.—Have they attempted any proof of this? No. But they fancy it from some letters of his, which do not say a single word of that sort. Is it possible to conceive of a more groundless accusation, or not to see their intent in it?

My Lords, they mean nothing more by this Address, than to fix a stigma on the Governor by the accusation. Their charge, founded upon a pretence of knowing six years ago, what were Mr. Hutchinson's thoughts, is not really designed for his Majesty in Council. They know that your Lordships will not take an accusation for a proof; nor condemn without evidence. They never desired to be brought to a hearing: and therefore the first instant when your Lordships call for their proofs, they fly off, and say they do not mean this as a charge, or a trial before your Lordships; and they say truly: they meant to bring it before the multitude, and to address the popular prejudices. The mob, they know, need only hear their Governors accused, and they will be sure to condemn. My Lords, they boast at Boston, that they have found this method succeed against their last Governor, and they hope to make it do against this; and by a second precedent to establish their power, and make all future Governors bow to their authority. They wish to erect themselves into a tyranny greater than the Roman: To be able, sitting in their their own secret cabal, to dictate for the Assembly, and send away their verbosa et grandis epistola, and get even a virtuous Governor dragged from his seat, and made the sport of a Boston mob.

Having turned out all other Governors, they may at length hope to get one of their own. The letters from Boston, for two years past, have intimated that Dr. Franklin was aiming at Mr. Hutchinson's government. It was not easy before this to give credit to such surmises: but nothing surely but a too eager attention to an ambition of this sort, could have betrayed a wise man into such a conduct as we have now seen. Whether these surmises are true or not, your Lordships are much the best judges. If they should be true, I hope that Mr. Hutchinson will not meet with the less countenance from your Lordships, for his Rival's being his accuser. Nor will your Lordships, I trust, from what you have heard, advise the having Mr. Hutchinson displaced, in order to make room for Dr. Franklin as a successor.

With regard to his constituents, the factious leaders at Boston, who make this complaint against their Governor; if the relating of their evil doings be criminal, and tending to alienate his Majesty's affections, must not the doing of them be much more so? Yet now they ask that his Majesty will gratify and reward them for doing these things; and that he will punish their Governor for relating them, because they are so very bad that it cannot but offend his Majesty to hear of them.

My Lords, if the account, given in these letters, of their proceedings, five years ago, tended to alienate his Majesty's affections, has their conduct ever since been in any respect more conciliating? was it to confute or prevent the pernicious effect of these letters, that the good men of Boston have lately held their meetings, appointed their Committees, and with their usual moderation destroyed the cargo of three British ships? If an English Consul, in any part of France

France or Spain, or rather Algiers or Tripoli, (for European powers respect the law of nations) had not called this an outrage on his country, he would have deserved punishment. But if a Governor at Boston should presume to whisper to a friend, that he thinks it somewhat more than a moderate exertion of English liberty, to destroy the ships of England, to attack her officers, to plunder their goods, to pull down their houses, or even to burn the King's ships of war, he ought to be removed; because such a conduct in him has a natural and efficacious tendency to interrupt the harmony between Great Britain and the colony, which these good subjects are striving by such means to establish.

On the part of Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Oliver, I am instructed to assure your Lordships, that they feel no spark of resentment, even at the individuals who have done them this injustice. Their private letters breathe nothing but moderation. They are convinced that the people, though misled, are innocent. If the conduct of a few should provoke a just indignation, they would be the most forward, and, I trust the most efficacious solicitors to avert its effects, and to excuse the men. They love the soil, the constitution, the people of New-England; they look with reverence to this country, and with affection to that. For the sake of the people they wish some faults corrected, anarchy abolished, and government re-established: but these salutary ends they wish to promote by the gentlest means; and the abridging of no liberties, which a people can possibly use to its own advantage. A restraint from self-destruction is the only restraint they desire to be imposed upon New-England.

The following Letter having been mentioned in Mr WEDDERBURN'S Speech, it is printed for the Reader's Satisfaction, and to complete the Collection.

COPY of a LETTER returned with those signed Tho. Hutchinson, Andrew Oliver, &c.
From ENGLAND.

SIR,

Narraganset, Dec. 22, 1767.

I AM now withdrawn to my little country villa, where, tho' I am more retired from the busy world, yet I am still enveloped with uneasy reflections for a turbulent, degenerate, ungrateful continent, and the opposition I have met with in my indefatigable endeavours to secure our property in this colony, but hitherto without success.—The times are so corrupted, and the conflict of parties so predominant, that faction is blind, or shuts her eyes to the most evident truths that cross her designs, and believes in any absurdities that assist to accomplish her purposes under the prostitution and prostration of an infatuated government.—Judge then, my dear Sir, in what a critical situation the fortunes of we poor Europeans must be among them.

We have not been able to recover our property for years past, how great soever our exigencies may have been, unless we soothed them into a compliance:—We are unwilling to enter into a litis-contestation with them, because the perversion of their iniquitous courts of justice are so great, that experience has convinced us we had better lose half, to obtain the other quietly, than pursue compulsory measures:—We are also afraid to apply to a British parliament for relief, as none can be effectually administered without a change of government, and a better administration of justice introduced; and was it known here here that we made such application home, not only our fortunes would be in greater jeopardy, but our lives endangered by it before any salutary regulations could take place.—We are sensible of the goodness of the KING and PARLIAMENT, but how far, or in what space of time our grievance, as a few individuals, might weigh against the influence of a charter government, we are at a loss to determine.

In 1761, I arrived in America, which circumstance you probably remember well.—With great industry, caution and circumspection, I have not only reduced our demands, and regulated our connections in some measure, but kept my head out of a HALTER which you had the honour to grace. (Pray Doctor how did it feel? The subject is stale but I must be a little funny with you on the occasion.) Much still remains to be done, and after all my best endeavours, my constituents, from a moderate calculation, cannot lose less than 50,000*l.* sterling, by the baneful constitution of this colony, and corruption of their courts of judicature. It is really a very affecting and melancholy consideration.

Under a deep sense of the infirmities of their constitution; the innovations which they have gradually interwoven among themselves; and stimulated by every act of forbearance, lenity, and patience, we have indulged our correspondents until deluges of bankruptcies have ensued, insolvent acts liberated them from our just demands, and finally had our indisputable accounts refused admission for our proportion of the small remains, until colony creditors were first paid, and the whole absorbed.

We have had vessels made over to us for the satisfaction of debts, and after bills of sales were executed, carried off in open violence and force by Capt. Snip-snap of Mr. Nobody's appointment, and when we sued him for damages, recovered a louse. We have in our turn been sued in our absence, and condemned ex parte in large sums for imaginary damages, for which we can neither obtain a trial, nor redress. They refuse us an appeal to the king in council; the money must be paid when their executions become returnable; and were we to carry it home by way of complaint, it would cost us two or three hundred pounds sterling to prosecute, and after all, when his Majesty's decrees come over in our favour, and refunding the money can no longer be evaded, I expect their effects will be secreted, their bodies released by the insolvent act, and our money both principal, interest and expences irrecoverably gone.— Is not our case grievous?—We have in actions founded upon notes of hand, been cast in their courts of judicature.— We have appealed to his Majesty in council for redress, got their verdicts reversed, and obtained the King's decrees for our money, but that is all; for altho' I have had them by me above twelve months, and employed two eminent lawyers to enforce them into execution, conformable to the colony law, yet we have not been able to recover a single shilling, though we have danced after their courts and assemblies above THIRTY DAYS, in vain to accomplish that purpose only: consider, my dear Sir, what expence, vexation and loss of time this must be to us, and whether we have not just cause of complaint.

We have also in vain waited with great impatience for years past, in hopes his Majesty would have nominated his judges, and other executive officers in every colony in America, which would in a great measure have removed the cause of our complaint.—Nothing can be more necessary than a speedy regulation in this, and constituting it a regal government; and nothing is of such important use to a nation, as that men who excell in wisdom and virtue should be encouraged to undertake the business of government: But the iniquitous course of their courts of justice in this colony, deter such men from serving the public, or if they do so unless patronized at home, their wisdom and virtue are turned against them with such malignity, that is more safe to be infamous than renowned.—The principal exception I have met with here, is James Helmes, Esq; who was chosen chief justice by the general assembly at last election.—He accepted his appointment, distinguishes himself by capacity and application, and seems neither afraid nor ashamed to administer impartial justice to all, even to the native and residing creditors of the mother country.—I have known him grant them temporary relief by writs of error, &c. when both he and they were overruled by the partiality of the court; and in vain, though with great candour and force, plead with the rest of the bench, that for the honour of the colony, and their own reputation, they ought never to pay less regard to the decrees of his Majesty in council, because the property was determined in Great Britain, than to their own. I have also heard him with resolution and firmness, when he discovered the court to be immoderately partial, order his name to be enrolled, as dissenting from the verdict.—For such honesty and candour, I am persuaded he will be deposed at next election, unless they should be still in hopes of making a convert of him.

I wish it was in my power to prevent any American from suffering for the cause of integrity, and their mother country; he, in an especial manner, should not only be protected and supported, but appear among the first promotions.—Is there no gentleman of public spirit at home, that would be pleased to be an instrument of elevating a man of his principles and probity? or is it become fashionable for vice to be countenanced with impunity, and every trace of virtue passed over unnoticed! God forbid

The colonies have originally been wrong founded.—They ought all to have been regal governments, and every executive officer appointed by the King. Until that is effected, and they are properly regulated, they will never be beneficial to themselves, nor good subjects to Great-Britain.—You see with what contempt they already treat the acts of parliament, for regulating their trade, and entering into the most public, illegal and affronting combinations to obtain a repeal, by again imposing upon the British merchants and manufacturers, and all under the cloak of retranching their expences by avoiding every unnecessary superfluity. Were that really the case, I am sure I would, and also every other British subject, esteem them for it; but the fact is, they obtained a repeal of the stamp act by mercantile influence, and they are now endeavouring by the same artifice and finesse to repeal the acts of trade, and obtain a total exemption from all taxation.—Were it otherwise, and they sincerely disposed to stop the importation of every unnecessary superfluity, without affronting the British legislation, by their public, general and illegal combinations, they might accomplish their purposes with much more decency, and suppress it more effectually by the acts of their own legislation, imposing such duties upon their importation here *, as might either occasion a total prohibition, or confine the consumption of them to particular individuals that can afford to buy, by which measures they would also raise a considerable colony REVENUE, and ease the poorer inhabitants in the tax they now pay:—But the temper of the country is exceedingly fastidious and prone to sedition; they are growing more imperious, haughty, nay insolent every day, and in a short space, unless wholesome regulations take place, the spirit they have kindled, and the conceptions of government they have imbibed will be more grievous to the mother country than ever the ostracism was to the Athenians.

general pestilence, spreads beyond conception; and if the British parliament are too late in their regulations, neglect measures seven years, which are essentially necessary now, should they then be able to stifle their commotions, it will only be a temporary extinction, consequently, every hour's indulgence will answer no other purpose than enable them in a more effectual manner to sow seeds of dissention to be rekindled whenever they are in a capacity to oppose the mother country and render themselves independent of her.

Have they not already in the most public manner shewn their opposition to the measures of parliament in the affair of the late stamp act? do not they now with equal violence and audacity, in both public papers and conversation declare the parliamentary regulations in their acts of trade to be illegal and a mere nullity?—What further proofs do we wait for, of either their good or bad disposition? did you ever hear of any colonies, in their infant state, teach the science of tyranny, reduced into rules*, over every subject that discountenanced their measures in opposition to the mother country, in a more imperious manner than they have done these four years past? Have they not made use of every stroke of policy (in their way) to avail themselves of the dark purposes of their independence, and suffered no restraint of conscience, or fear, not even the guilt of threatening to excite a civil war, and revolt, if not indulged with an unlimited trade, without restraint; and British protection, without expence? for that is the engine of it.—Is this their true or mistaken portrait SAY —If it is their true one, ought not such pernicious maxims of policy? such wicked discipline? such ingratitude? such dissimulation? such perfidy? such violent, ruthless and sanguinary councils, where a Cleone bears rule, and an Aristides cannot be endured, to be crushed in embryo? If not, the alternative cannot avoid producing such a government, as will ere long throw the whole kingdom into the utmost confusion, endanger the life, liberty and property of every good subject, and again expose them to the merciless assassination of a rabble.

I am sensible that in all political disputes, especially in America, a man may see some things to blame on both sides, and so much to fear, which ever faction should conquer, as to be justified in not intermeddling with either; but in matters of such vast importance as the present, wherein we have suffered so much,—still deeply interested, and by which the peace and tranquility of the nation is at stake; it is difficult to conceal one's emotions from a friend, and remain a tranquil spectator on a theatre of such chicanery and collusion, as will inevitably (if not checked, and may sooner happen than is imagined by many) chill the blood of many a true Briton.

It may be true policy, in some cases, to tame the fiercest spirit of popular liberty, not by blows, or by chains, but by soothing her into a willing obedience, and making her kiss the very hand that restrains her; but such policy would be a very unsuitable potion to cure the malady of the present times. They are too much corrupted; and already so intoxicated with their own importance, as to make a wrong use of lenient measures.—They construe them into their own natural rights, and a timidity in the mother country. They consider themselves a little bigger than the frog in the fable, and that G. Britain can never long grapple with their huge territory of 1500 miles frontier, already populous, and increasing with such celerity, as to double their numbers once in twenty-five years.—This is not perfectly consonant with my idea of the matter, though such calculation has been made; and admitting it to be erroneous, yet as they believe it, it has the same evil effect, and possesses the imaginations of the people with such a degree of insanity and enthusiasm, as there is hardly any thing more common than to hear them boast of particular colonies that can raise on a short notice an hundred thousand fighting men to oppose the force of Great-Britain; certain it is, that they increase in numbers by emigration, &c. very fast, and are become such a body of people, with such extensive territory as require every bud of their genius and disposition to be narrowly watched, and pruned with great judgment, otherwise they may become not only troublesome to Great Britain, but enemies to themselves.—Now is the critical season—They are still like some raw giddy youth just emerging into the world in a corrupt degenerate age. A parent, or a guardian, is therefore still necessary; and if well managed, they will soon arrive at such maturity as to become obedient, dutiful children; but if neglected long, the rod of chastisement will be so much longer necessary as to become too burthensome, and must be dropt with the colonies.—They almost consider themselves as a separate people from Great Britain already.

Last month, while I was attending the General Assembly, the Governor sent a written message to the lower house, importing his intention of a resignation at the next election, assigning for reasons, the fumes in the colony and party spirit were so high, and that bribery and corruption were so predominant, that neither life, liberty, nor property were safe, &c. &c. &c. Now, Sir, whether the Governor's intentions as exhibited in this open, public declaration, was real, or feigned to answer political purposes; it still evinces their decrepid state; the prostitution of government; and melancholy situation of every good subject: for it cannot be supposed, by any candid inquisitor, that a declaration of that nature, and form, would, if not true, been delivered by a Governor to a whole legislative body, in order to emancipate himself. If this truth is granted, and this allowed to be their unhappy situation, how much is it the duty of every good man, and what language is sufficient to paint, in an effectual manner, this internal imbecility of an English colony lony (in many other respects favourably situated for trade and commerce, one of the safest, largest, and most commodious harbours in all America, or perhaps in all Europe, accessible at all seasons, situated in a fine climate, and abounding with fertile soil)—to the maternal bowels of compassion, in order that she may seasonably, if she thinks it necessary to interpose, regulate, and wipe away their pernicious CHARTER, rendered obnoxious by the abuse of it.

I am afraid I have tired your patience with a subject that must give pain to every impartial friend to Great Britain and her colonies.—When I took up my pen,—I only intended to have communicated the out-lines of such of my perplexities (without dipping so far into political matter) as I thought would atone for, or excuse my long silence, and excite your compassion and advice.

Our friend Robinson is gone to Boston to join the commissioners. My compliments to Col. Stuart.—May I ask the favour of you both to come and eat a Xmas dinner with me at Batchelor's hall, and celebrate the festivity of the season with me in Narraganset woods. A covey of partridges, or bevy of quails, will be entertainment for the Colonel and me, while the pike and perch ponds amuse you.—Should business or pre-engagement prevent me that pleasure, permit me to ask the favour of your earliest intelligence of the proceedings of parliament; and of your opinion whether our case is not so grievous as to excite their compassion and interposition were it known. This narration, together with your own knowledge of many of the facts, and the disposition of the colonies in general, will refresh your memory, and enable you to form a judgment. Relief from home seems so tedious, especially to us who have suffered so much, like to suffer more, and unacquainted with their reasons of delay, that I am quite impatient.

Above twelve months ago, I received from three Gentlemen in London (in trust for several others) exemplified account

accounts for a balance of above twenty six thousand pounds sterling, mostly due from this colony, not £. 50 of which shall I ever be able to recover without compulsive measures, and what is still worse, my lawyer advises me from all thoughts of prosecution, unless a change of government ensues. I am therefore obliged to send them his opinion (in justification of my own conduct) in lieu of money ten years due. Poor satisfaction! our consolation must be in a British parliament. Every other avenue is rendered impregnable by their subtlety, and degeneracy, and we can no longer depend upon a people who are so unthankful for our indulgences, and the lenity of their mother country. I wish you the compliments of the approaching season, and a succession of many happy new years.

I am, Sir, with much regard,

Your most humble Servant,

G. ROME.
