

The Adventures of MR. PETER RUFF and PRIVATE INVESTIGATOR BY E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM II--THE LITTLE LADY FROM SERVIA

(Copyright, 1911, by the Associated Literary Press.)

Westward sped the little electric bougiam, driven without regard to police regulations or any rule of the road. Inside, Peter Ruff, a little breathless, was leaning forward, trying his white cravat with the aid of the little polished mirror set in the middle of the dark green cushions. At his right hand was Lady Mary, watching his proceedings with an air of agonized impatience.

"Let me tell you," she begged, "kindly wait till I have fixed this and put my studs in. Peter Ruff interrupted. "It is impossible for me to arrive at a ball in this condition, and I cannot give my whole attention to more than one thing at a time."

"We shall be there in five minutes," she exclaimed. "What is the good, unless you understand of your coming at all?"

Peter Ruff surveyed his critically. Fortunately, it was not his. He began to press the studs into their places with firm fingers.

"I'm ready," Peter Ruff said, quietly.

"My younger brother—Maurice," she began, breathlessly—"you've never met him, I know, but you've heard me speak of him. He is private secretary to Sir James Westley."

"Minister for Foreign Affairs?" Ruff asked, swiftly.

"Yes! Maurice wants to go in for the Diplomatic Service. He is a dear, and so clever a fellow."

"Is it Maurice who is in trouble?" Peter Ruff asked. "Why didn't he come himself?"

"At what time did you find out?" Ruff asked, quickly.

"I'm trying to explain," Lady Mary protested. "This afternoon he had an important paper to turn into cipher and hand over to the Prime Minister at the Duchess of Montford's dance tonight. The Prime Minister will arrive in a motor car from the country at about 2 o'clock, and the first thing he will ask for will be that paper. It has been stolen!"

"Who did it?" Ruff asked.

"I don't suspect any one," Peter Ruff answered. "I only know that Count Von Hern is an Austrian spy, and that he took your paper! Has he been out of your sight at all since you rejoined him in the sitting room? I mean to say—I have any opportunity of leaving you during the time you were dining together, or did he make any call en route on the Savoy or the Savoy or from the Savoy here?"

The young man shook his head.

"He has not been out of my sight for several days," he declared.

"Who is the other man—Jermyn?" Peter Ruff asked. "I never heard of him."

"An American—cousin of the Duchess," the Honorable Maurice answered. "He could not have had the slightest interest in the affair."

"Please take me into the hall room," Peter Ruff said to Lady Mary. "Your brother had better not come with us. I want to be as near the Count Von Hern as possible."

They passed into the crowded rooms, unnoticed. They found progress difficult and Lady Mary felt her heart sink as she glanced at the little jeweled watch which hung from her wrist. Suddenly Peter Ruff caught her by the hand.

"Don't look for a moment," he said, "but tell me as soon as you can—who is the tall young man, like a Goliath, talking to the little dark woman? You see who I mean?"

Lady Mary nodded, and they passed on. "How strange that you should ask!" she whispered in his ear. "That is Mr. Jermyn. He is heading over his companion, but a foreign language, which it was obvious that he did not understand. Peter Ruff's elbow pressed against his partner's arm, and his pace slackened. He ventured, even to pause for a moment. We looked into the ballroom as though in search of some one, and he had by no means the appearance of a man likely to understand Hungarian. Then, to Lady Mary's surprise, he touched the Count Von Hern on the shoulder and addressed him.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "but I fancy that we accidentally exchanged programmes, a few minutes ago, at the buffet. I have lost mine and picked up one which does not belong to me. It is yours, is it not?"

"I believe not, sir," the Count answered, "but please to assist me, as I have gone such a long way toward winning him the reputation of being a 'good fellow' among a fairly large circle of friends. I believe, at any rate, that this is his. It is my own. You mistake me, probably, for some one else."

The Count good-humoredly held out his programme.

MADAM, PETER RUFF WHISPERED FROM BEHIND THE CURTAIN, 'I AM SORRY TO DEPRIVE YOU OF IT, BUT THIS IS STOLEN PROPERTY.'

Lady Mary's hand suddenly tightened upon his arm.

"Look!" she exclaimed. "That is Count Von Hern!"

A tall, fair young man, very exact in his dress, very stiff in his carriage, with a not unpleasant face, was standing talking to Jermyn and his companion. Jermyn, who apparently found the intrusion an annoyance, was listening to the conversation between the two, with a frown upon his face and a general air of irritation. As Lady Mary and her escort drew near, the reason for the young American's annoyance became clearer—his two companions were talking softly, but with great animation, in a foreign language, which it was obvious that he did not understand. Peter Ruff's elbow pressed against his partner's arm, and his pace slackened. He ventured, even to pause for a moment. We looked into the ballroom as though in search of some one, and he had by no means the appearance of a man likely to understand Hungarian. Then, to Lady Mary's surprise, he touched the Count Von Hern on the shoulder and addressed him.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "but I fancy that we accidentally exchanged programmes, a few minutes ago, at the buffet. I have lost mine and picked up one which does not belong to me. It is yours, is it not?"

"I believe not, sir," the Count answered, "but please to assist me, as I have gone such a long way toward winning him the reputation of being a 'good fellow' among a fairly large circle of friends. I believe, at any rate, that this is his. It is my own. You mistake me, probably, for some one else."

The Count good-humoredly held out his programme.

What time did you say the Prime Minister was expected?"

"At 2 o'clock," Lady Mary said, anxiously.

Peter Ruff glanced at his watch. It was already half an hour past midnight.

"Very well," he said, "I will do what I can. In the meantime—"

"In the meantime," she repeated, breathlessly.

"Take your brother back to the ballroom," Peter Ruff directed. "Make him dance—dance yourself. Don't give your self away by looking anxious. When the time is short—say at a quarter to 2—he can come down here and wait for me."

"If you don't come," she explained.

"Then we shall have lost," Peter Ruff said, calmly. "If you don't see me again tonight, you had better read the newspapers carefully for the next few days."

For twenty minutes Peter Ruff sat in the remote corner of Lady Mary's electric brougham, drawn up on the other side of the square, and waited. At last he pressed a button. They glided off. Before them was a large closed motor car. Peter Ruff started in discreet chase.

Peter Ruff nodded. He was a little sparing of words just then. The thoughts were chasing one another through his brain. He was listening, too, for the sweep of a dress behind him, or the rustle of a hat. "Is there nothing I can do?" Lady Mary begged, eagerly.

Peter Ruff shook his head. In the distance he saw the Honorable Maurice come quickly toward them. With a firm but imperceptible gesture he waved him away. "Don't let your brother speak to me," he said. "We can't tell who is behind."

I reappear from it, if I do at all, I shall probably be in a hurry. Directly you see me be on your box ready to start. A good deal may depend upon our getting away quickly."

"Very good, sir," the man answered. "How long am I to wait here for you?"

Peter Ruff's lips twisted into a curious little smile.

"Until 2 o'clock," he answered. "If I am not out by then, you needn't bother any more about me. You can return and tell your mistress exactly what has happened."

The motor car had turned round and disappeared now, and in a few moments Peter Ruff stood before the door of the house into which the little lady had disappeared. The problem of entrance was already solved for him. The door had been left unfastened; inside a footstool had been placed against the door, and Peter Ruff, without hesitation, pushed the door softly open and entered, replaced the footstool in its former position, and stood with his back to the wall, in the darkest corner of the hall, looking around him—listening intently. Nearly opposite the door of a room stood a door ajar. It was apparently lit up, but there was no sound of any one moving inside. Upstairs, in one of the rooms on the first floor, he could hear light footsteps—a woman's voice humming a song. He listened to the first few bars, and understanding became easier. These first few bars were the opening ones of the Serbian national anthem!

With an effort, Peter Ruff concentrated his thoughts upon the immediate present. The little lady was upstairs. The servants had apparently retired for the night. He crept up to the half-open door and peered in. The room, as he had hoped to find it, was empty, but Madame's easy chair was drawn up to the fire, and some coffee stood upon the table. Stealthily Peter Ruff crept in and glanced around, seeking for a hiding place. A movement upstairs hastened his decision. He pushed aside the massive curtains which separated this from a connecting room. He had scarcely done so when light footsteps were heard descending the stairs.

Peter Ruff hid his hiding place all that could have been desired. His secondary room itself was almost in darkness, and he was just able to appreciate the comforting fact that it possessed a separate exit into the hall. Through the folds of the curtain he had a complete view of the further apartment. The little lady had changed her gown of stiff white satin for one of flimsier material, and seated in a chair, she was busy pouring out coffee. She took a cigarette from a silver box and, lighting it, curled herself up in the chair and composed herself as though to listen. To her as well as to Peter Ruff, as he crouched in his hiding place, the moments seemed to pass slowly enough. Yet, as he realized afterward, it could not have been ten minutes before she set upright in a listening attitude. There was some one coming! Peter Ruff, too, heard a man's firm footsteps come up the fluted stairs.

The little lady sprang to her feet.

"Paul!" she exclaimed.

Paul Jermyn came slowly to meet her. He seemed a little out of breath. His tie was all disarranged, his collar unfastened. The little lady, however, noticed none of these things. She looked only into his face.

"Have you got it?" she asked, eagerly.

He thrust his hand into his breast-pocket, and held an envelope out toward her.

"Sure!" he answered. "I promised!"

She gave a little sob, and with the pocket in her hand came running straight toward the spot where Peter Ruff was hidden. He sprang back as far as possible. She stopped just short of the curtain, opened the drawer of a table which stood there, and slipped the packet in. Then she came back once more to where Paul Jermyn was standing. He looked at her hands—his dear, dear friend! Shall I ever be able to thank you enough?"

She laid her hand upon his arm—a little caressing, foreign gesture. "Tell me," she said, "how did you manage it?"

"We left the dance together," Jermyn said. "I could see that I wanted to get rid of me, but I offered to take him in my motor car. I told the man to choose some back streets, and while we were passing through one of them, I took Von Hern by the throat. We had a struggle, of course, but I got the paper."

"What did you do with Von Hern?" she asked.

"I left him on his doorstep," the young American answered. "He wasn't really hurt, but he was only half conscious. I don't think he'll bother any more tonight."

GOVERNMENT AWAITS VOTE ON HARBOR BRIDGE

The bill does not provide for the unsetting or disqualification of a candidate.

Mr. Maxwell opened the second reading of the act without its being printed, but Hon. Mr. Robinson pointed out that unless there was a general election before the next session the act could be amended then. The party league of Westmorland were anxious for it to pass. The bill was passed unanimously without being printed or even read.

Under a bill brought in today and passed, it will be possible for persons intending marriage to have their names published one or more times, according to the custom of their denomination, and further that a form of certificate must be attached to every marriage license which is to be filed out, and also forms must be provided by municipalities upon which returns of marriages can be made.

Mr. Burchill divided the house unexpectedly when the bill to guarantee bonds of the Southampton Railway was being read a third time. He moved the three months hoist. There were many members from both sides of the house absent, but Burmell, Corp., Byrne, Currie, Legrove, Sweeney voted against the measure, and twenty-one opposition members and LaBillois voted in favor of it.

Bills Introduced.

Fredericton, N. B., April 12—Hon. Mr. McLeod moved that the fee paid on the introduction of the New Brunswick Hydro-Electric Power Company's bill be returned to the promoters, as the bill had not been recommended.

Hon. Mr. Hazen said that although he did not wish to oppose this motion, he thought the practice of returning fees on bills which did not meet with favor should not be adopted by this legislature. There might be exceptional cases when a fee should be returned, but he did not favor the practice. He also pointed out that there was a rule of the house that if a bill was not recommended at one session, and was introduced again at next, the fee payable on the second introduction would be only $10.

Hon. Mr. Hazen introduced a bill respecting enquiries as to corrupt practices of members of the legislative assembly.

Hon. Mr. McLeod introduced a bill to amend the act incorporating the St. John Valley Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. Hazen introduced a bill to amend the act incorporating the Sackville and Westmorland Agricultural Society.

Hon. Mr. Hazen introduced a bill to remove all doubts as to the legal status of the society which had been incorporated under another name in 1882, but had carried on its business as an agricultural society of late years under its present name.

Hon. Mr. Hazen introduced a bill to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act. He explained that the object of the bill was to correct errors in previous acts, and make provision for the collection of damages ordered paid to employees under previous acts.

Hon. Mr. Fleming submitted the supplementary estimates.

BELIEVES SHEEP RAISING IN NEW BRUNSWICK WOULD BE PROFITABLE INDUSTRY

London Financial Man is of Opinion That Our Farmers Are Not Alive to Possibilities Here—Thinks Good Land Company Would Do Much Profitable Work—The Oil Wells.

That the farmers of New Brunswick are not alive to the possibilities here is the opinion of W. Leonard Palmer, of the Financial News, London, who is visiting Canada in order to learn first hand of its conditions, its prospects present and future.

Suggests Land Company. In addition to the sheep raising industry, Mr. Palmer has in mind another way in which extensive agricultural development should be brought about in New Brunswick.

Mr. Palmer said that he had been advised by a land company which would buy up large tracts of run down lands, as well as new lands, divide them into sections, and bring out from the old country some settlers whose life and farming conditions at home were akin to the conditions to be encountered in this connection.

Former St. John Man, With Forty Years' Experience in Other Lands, Declares They Are Leaving Behind Far Greater Opportunities Than They Are Likely to Find Elsewhere.

Forty years is a long time to be absent from one's native place. Even the slowest village will change considerably in that period.

Mr. Magee said that he had been advised by a land company which would buy up large tracts of run down lands, as well as new lands, divide them into sections, and bring out from the old country some settlers whose life and farming conditions at home were akin to the conditions to be encountered in this connection.

FISHING LICENSES HAVE BEEN CANCELLED

Several fishing parties projected by local sportsmen have been called off owing to an order of the Dominion government that all licenses to fish for trout and salmon in New Brunswick before May 1 be cancelled.

These licenses were formerly issued in defiance of the provincial game law setting May 1 as the opening of the fishing season and the order followed the negotiations between the provincial and federal governments on the matter.

In accordance with the instructions received by Fred Byles, fisheries inspector, has called in five licenses which he had issued since April 1, and notified several other applicants that he will be unable to provide them with licenses.

Mr. Magee's father, forty or more years ago, was a prominent ship chandler in this city.

Mr. Magee said that he had been advised by a land company which would buy up large tracts of run down lands, as well as new lands, divide them into sections, and bring out from the old country some settlers whose life and farming conditions at home were akin to the conditions to be encountered in this connection.
