POETRY

AUTUMN.

BY VERITAS. Tis October, and the Autumn Ruleth earth supremely now, And the withered leaves are falling,

Falling from each leaf and bough. See how thickly they are lying.

Lying scattered o'er the ground, See how thickly they are flying On the winds that murmur 'round

Birds have left the forest bowers That they thronged in summer time, Where they sang in gayer hours When the year was in its prime.

Now no more their notes are ringing Over forests, hills and plains ;

But when spring comes, hither winging, They'll refew those same sweet strains

They have left us with good reason, They have sought a warmer clime,

But they will return in season For another bright spring time. Autumn reigneth, 'tis October,

Short and fleeting is the day; And the earth is sad and sober ; "I'is the month of bloom's decay:

Nearly leafless are the bowers That were budding bowers in May ; Faded are the beauteous flowers ;

They were first to pass away. Busy bees no more are humming, And they hasten home no more,

Over hill and valley coming, Laden with their treasured store.

And I hear the chill winds sighing-Autumn winds so drear and cold ; Time and Seasons swift are flying,

And the year is growing old. And I view the distant wild wood

Fading slowly, day by day-Wood that I have seen in childhood,

Bud and bloom and then decay. Soon the earth, disrobed of beauty.
