Brockville Market
The market Saturday morning was not so largely attended as the two previous Saturdays, but there was a fair amount of business. Potatoes sold at 19c and 20c per bushel; corn, 35c per bushel; apples, 35c and 10c per bushel and veal, 10c to 12c per pound.

The water is still very low in the Rideau, but is rising at the rate of one inch per day. It is still over three feet below the ordinary level of this time of the year, however, and it is not likely to come up very much more after this. It looks as if there would be a short season of navigation this year on that highway.

INTRODUCTORY

In taking over the control of a newspaper it is quite necessary to make some explanations with regard thereto.
I have purchased the Athens Reporter and have done so merely as a business venture, and trust that the liberal patronage that has been given the late proprietor will be bestowed upon the new ownership. It has been proven in the past and will continue in the future, that a local newspaper in the community is one of the most essential businesses in any town. Taking such for granted in Athens and surrounding district, it will be our aim to publish a paper that will be a credit to its readers. We come here a total stranger and as such it will be somewhat hard for us to get in touch with local news items without the assistance of our readers. If you have a news item in your mind kindly send it to us or call us by phone. We will be pleased at all times to receive personal items of your goings and comings.

The merchants and business men make a town and in Athens they are well represented. We look forward for a liberal patronage from them and promise careful consideration.

There are many outlying villages surrounding Athens which have prosperous business men, and to them the Reporter looks for a liberal patronage.

The town of Athens is nicely situated, with beautiful residences, fine public buildings and business places, and excellent high and public schools, and churches of all denominations that are a credit to any town.

In conclusion we will ask those who have been correspondents in the past for The Reporter to continue to do so, and when in town call and see us. It will be our aim to add correspondents from other outlying districts, and to make The Reporter a live local newspaper.

TO THE PUBLIC

With this issue of the Reporter Mr.
T. T. Shaw, formerly editor of the Chesterville Record, takes control of our newspaper and jobbing office.

We bespeak for Mr Shaw the same liberal patronage and support that this village and surrounding villages and country have given this office in the past.

All accounts due for advertising and job work to April 10th, 1915, are payable to me and subscription accounts as they appear on your label are due and payable to T. T. Shaw.

Yours respectfully,
Mrs. G. F. Donnelly

ROSES AND GOLD

A particularly pleasant incident occurred on Thursday afternoon when Miss Bertha Rowe was visited at her home on Bethune street, Brockville, by Mrs George T. Fulford and Mrs Charles E. Gillin representing the Patriotic League, the Daughters of the Empire, and a few personal friends, and presented her with a box of beautiful roses in which was concealed a substantial gift in gold, as a mark of affectionate esteem on the occasion of her departure as a Red Cross Nurse associated with the Queen's Medical Corps, Capt. Eberington in command.
To say that Miss Rowe was delighted and deeply touched by this kindly act of appreciation is to put it mildly, and she expressed her gratitude with sincere feeling. Miss Rowe graduated in 1902 from the Methodist Episcopal Hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y., and is a skilled nurse. On Monday she begins her course of special training at the Military Hospital, Kingston, under Surgeon-Major Gardiner. This course is entirely along military lines, and gives the nurse a recognized military standing. The nurses will be attached to the 5th Stationary Hospital of Queen's College, and after a thorough course of training in their new duties will proceed to a base hospital at the front, presumably in France. It is an interesting fact that Surgeon Captain Eberington is also from Brockville.
The many friends of Miss Rowe throughout this section will join in wishing her every success in her patriotic work at the front under the Red Cross.

I. O. O. F. AT CHURCH

The members of the Athens Lodge, I. O. O. F., accompanied by several visiting members from Delta attended divine service in Christ's church at 3 o'clock on Sunday. There was a large congregation, the hot summer weather bringing in many people from out of town.

The Oddfellows are very strong here but various circumstances prevented their attendance in full force. Edward Barlow of Delta acted as marshal of the procession which proceeded along Elgin street from the lodge room and down Wellington to the church where a number of the front pews had been reserved.

The large surplice choir came up the aisle and took their places in the chancel where they led the congregational singing and rendered the anthem
"Christ is Risen."

Rev W. G. Swayne took as his text the friendship of Jonathan and David, pointing out the presence of God without which fraternalism is not fraternalism in its true sense. He said that however ideal duty to one's neighbor is it comes second to one's duty to God.
Mr Swayne, being an Oddfellow himself, and understanding the high motives of the lodge, was able to speak comprehensively on his subject and the earnestness of his appeal to the churchmen as well as fraternalists touched a responsive chord in the breasts of the listening members.

TRAGEDY AT McINTOSH MILLS

Wilfrid Moore, aged 19 years, a young farm hand employed by George Davis, residing on the road between Camtown and McIntosh Mills, met an instant death while at work on Thursday last.

At noon the young man was leading a colt to water when it suddenly reared and kicked Moore in the pit of the stomach. He fell dead at once.
Assistance was soon at hand, but nothing could be done. It is thought that the colt is being led with Moore at the end of the halter.

The deceased young man was born at Glen Elbe and was a son of John Moore. His mother is dead. A sister, Myrtle, resides near Athens.

RUB YOUR STIFF NECK AWAY TO-DAY-- GOOD OLD "NERVILINE" WILL CURE

Fifteen Minutes After Using Nerviline You Are Well.

Cold, excessive strain and exertion are a common cause of stiff neck, soreness or inflammation. Generally the cause is so deeply seated that only a liniment as powerful and penetrating as Nerviline will effect an immediate removal of pain.

marvellous properties confer upon suffering people. Nerviline is sold upon a positive guarantee that is more prompt, more powerful, penetrating and pain-expelling than any other remedy.

A GIFT OF A SOUL

In the silence of the night, surrounded by the rocks, before him the immensity of the sky and sea, he gathered together all the strength of his will for a supreme invocation.

same moment a shot was heard in the silence, and a red flame lighted up the rocks. It was the custom-house officer who thus made known his presence.

And while these hours fled all too rapidly, the young girl, for Mademoiselle de Vigne, and it was time only fourteen, was ecstatically happy in the society of the two young men.

Pierre Laurier with his intelligent and mobile countenance, his piercing eyes, his sarcastic mouth, and thoughtful brow, had for a long time inspired her with fear. But she had soon discovered that his strange moods were only the consequence of his artistic preoccupations, and that his mocking accents served to mask the confiding goodness of his heart.

In this he showed want of penetration, for Juliette, whose reasoning powers had been early developed, was quite capable of comprehending him. But Pierre persisted in seeing in her only a little girl, and it was always with astonishment that he heard her when she allowed herself to be drawn into the conversation, put forth in a few timid phrases judgment extraordinarily just.

If Juliette, however, had, where art was concerned, a precious quality of assimilating the knowledge of others, she was equally deficient in the tender effusiveness of which she was stowed on Laurier for his protecting care of her brother. Here she neither imitated nor repeated. It was the very heart of the child that spoke, and the painter, however absorbed he might be by preoccupations of which Mlle. de Vigne was singularly ignorant, could not avoid being struck by her emotion and her gratitude.

A little incident, of which he caught the true significance, had just occurred, however, which completely opened his eyes. He had been in the habit of bringing this child, whom he had known since her infancy, a present on St. Juliette's day. When she was a child these presents had been dolls, extraordinarily attired in magnificent robes, made according to the taste and after the suggestions of the painter, as if they had been meant to pose for one of his pictures.

CHAPTER II. Near the seashore, on the charming road that leads from Monaco to Nice, between Eze and Villefranche, but nearer to the latter, in a little bay formed by an abrupt fissure of the cliff, stands a villa painted in red and white, its terrace covered with oranges and mimosa, stretching down into the water.

Then he would begin to chat with Mme. de Vigne and Jacques, without any further heed of the little girl lost in ecstatic contemplation of the porcelain patrician dressed in silk and gold. When Juliette was fourteen, however, dolls, he began to think, were now out of place, and he set about finding a more sensible gift.

My mother is dressing her, answered Jacques. "It is an important affair—her first 'leuz dress.' Our friends have wished to celebrate the occasion. So, what do you think? Her hair also had to be arranged differently. It would not do, as formerly, to wear one's hair hanging loose over one's shoulders—a chignon was a necessity."

He was still laughing when the door opened, and instead of the little girl Laurier expected to see, a young girl, a little timid, a little awkward, altogether changed, but charming, entered the room. She did not run to the painter as usual with girlish curiosity. She extended to him her hand gracefully, and paused, silent and embarrassed, before the two men.

"You look very well so, Juliette," he said. "If I might be allowed to make a slight criticism, I would say that I disapprove of the little curls over the forehead. You have a very beautifully shaped face, and the hair will set. Put them back then, unconsciously enough, it looks younger, and I am sure it will be very becoming to you."

"See," he said, "this is a useful article. I also, treat you like a grown-up person to-day." "Oh, how pretty!" she cried, her eyes sparkling with joy. "Look, Jacques, this is an object of art, my child. This painter has committed an extravagance. You should give him a kiss, at least."

This had been her habit. For many years past Pierre had kissed Juliette on this day, and yet they remained, for an instant, facing each other in embarrassment. Was it the long dress or the new mode of arranging her hair that caused them both this embarrassment? Or was it rather this sudden blooming of the child into the young girl, like a rosebud opening in the sunshine? Be that as it may, the painter did not now feel, as on former occasions, the spontaneous impulse to give a brotherly kiss to Juliette.

It was necessary for Jacques, who observed them with some surprise, to say, "Well, what's the matter? Don't you know each other any longer?" Then Mlle. de Vigne, took a step forward, Pierre took two, and they found themselves in each other's arms. The young man bent his face down toward that of his little friend. She raised herself slightly on the tips of her toes, and with strange emotion Laurier saw that she trembled and turned pale at his kiss. All the evening he remained preoccupied, speaking rarely, as if absorbed by some secret disquietude. From this time on, in his intercourse with Juliette, he showed himself more circumspect, watching every word he said. At the same time his gaze returned continually to the young girl, whom a week before he had treated like a baby.

He began to dream of things altogether different from those which up till now had occupied his thoughts. Artistic triumphs, the free existence suited to him, the stimulus given to thought by variety of sensation, all that had constituted the programme of his life, in the past, was now regarded by him as ridiculous and contemptible.

He thought now that the tranquillity of domestic life, the peace of the hearth, the even course of days well employed might contribute as surely as those to the achievement of great works, and that there was more probability of industry in regularity of labor than in spasmodic efforts. Marriage seemed to him like a fresh source at which to acquire new vigor. He began to think of settling down, of giving proof of wisdom, and he allowed himself to regard Mlle. de Vigne with a tenderness which had nothing in common with the feeling he had entertained for her in other days.

No one perceived this, but Juliette herself. Neither her mother, too much occupied with the dissipation in which Jacques lived, nor Jacques, too much engaged with his own pleasures, suspected for an instant what was passing in the mind of the painter. Juliette, at first astonished at this rapid change in the sentiments of her friend, then happy in thinking herself loved by one whom she regarded as a superior being, was soon destined to experience the bitterness of disappointment. The flame thus kindled, which had protruded to burn with ardor, was suddenly extinguished. Pierre, who of late had been a frequent visitor at the house of Mme. de Vigne, now came only occasionally, as before. And all the flattering hopes, cherished in secret by the young girl, vanished like a dream.

He did not easily resign himself to this change, however, but determined to discover, if possible, the cause of it. One evening, when Jacques came to the house alone to spend a few moments with his mother, Juliette hazarded an expression of surprise at their no longer seeing Pierre Laurier.

"Is he not now in Paris?" she asked. "He is," responded Jacques, "but he scarcely ever leaves his studio. He has a fever for work." "The young girl breathed again. Work was a rival she did not fear. "And what is he painting," she asked.

"A portrait." (To be Continued.) Heroic Mustache. Probably no dog has ever rendered such signal military service or been so honorably recognized as the celebrated poodle Mustache, who shared the victorious fortunes of the French army through most of the wars of the consulate and of the French empire.

HIS CURE FOR COLDS. An Old Farmer's Simple Plan for Getting Rid of Them.

A son of the soil was he, an old farmer with a good education, hale and hearty, and a young man with a bad cold. "Why do you have it?" he inquired, with every sign of sincerity. "It is easy enough to get rid of if you take the right stuff and stop violating the laws of nature. Nature won't accept excuses. She's a hard creditor, and you must pay her all that is named in the bond between you and her, even to many a pound of flesh."

Here the old man paused, and he almost made me wince as he fastened on me a pair of cold, gray eyes, which seemed to be gazing through the green foliage of the tree of knowledge. I began to think of the particular law of nature that I had violated. It really was not my fault that, while seeing a young lady at her home, a chill rain had fallen and made it necessary for me to go back with wet clothing. True, if she and I had walked faster the storm might not have overtaken us, but we had not been thinking of the weather. And yet Nature is a hard creditor; the old man was right about that. And I said to him: "Can you tell me, Mr. Moss, in a very few sentences just what particular cure yours is?"

"Yes, I can tell you in one sentence. Have you ever noticed that when you have a cold and expectorate a great deal of salty matter seems to be given off? All of that salt has to be replenished; the system demands a certain quantity at all times, and especially when one has a cold."

"But you were going to tell me your cure in one sentence," I interrupted, "and my train is nearly due."

"Well, I didn't say that I would tell you in one sentence; I said that I could, and I can, too. The sentence is, 'Drink salt water!'"

"How much? How often?" I asked and the roar of the approaching train. "Glass! Half a teaspoonful of salt, once or twice a day!" the old man shouted to me as I mounted the car steps. And I must say that the cold got well very quickly.

Suffered For More Than Two Years Then Joseph Gagne Found a Cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Quebec Man Took His Wife's Advice And is Now Enjoying a New Lease of Health. Ste Marguerite Bay Mills, Saguenay Co., Que., April 26.—(Special). "Yes, you can tell the public of the great relief I got from Dodd's Kidney Pills."

The speaker was Mr. Joseph Gagne, a well-known resident of this place, and he has every reason to be enthusiastic over the great Canadian remedy. "For more than two years I suffered from Kidney Disease," Mr. Gagne continued. "It finally developed into pleurisy and I was a very sick man when my wife persuaded me to give Dodd's Kidney Pills a trial. "I took just three boxes and they made me well."

Dodd's Kidney Pills make their users enthusiastic because they not only cure the particular ailment aimed at but they spread good health all over the body. They do this by curing the kidneys, cured kidneys strain all the impurities out of the blood. That means pure blood and new health all over the body.

Silliness—Do you think it is possible for one woman to make another woman perfectly happy? Cynicus—Oh, yes; simply by envying her.—Philadelphia Record.

A GOOD MEDICING FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism of neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble. Do not dose yourself with purgatives, as so many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood, which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes thin, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. S. E. Stephens, Ponoka, Alta., says: "I suffered severely from headaches, and was badly run down in health. I had tried several remedies, with no benefit, until I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and these have fully restored my health, and I can recommend them with confidence to all weak women."

LOOKING AT A PHOTOGRAPH. Better Effects Are Obtained When Only One Eye is Used.

Photographs should be looked at with only one eye to appear best, says F. W. Marlow in an article on "How to Look at a Photograph" in the Photo Era.

"Most photographs, particularly small ones of landscapes, street scenes and interiors, fail to produce their true value because they are not looked at in the most effective way," the author says. "Take as an example a print resulting from a camera with a five-inch focus lens. Such a print is usually looked at with both eyes open and held at a distance of twelve inches or more. Now a camera is essentially a one-eyed instrument, or, at any rate, it views the object to be reproduced from a single point, the optical centre of the lens. The object must be looked at, therefore, with one eye only and from a point corresponding as nearly as possible to the optical centre of the lens if its characteristics as it is to be reproduced in the camera are to be appreciated."

"Let it be remembered that when a print is looked at with both eyes open binocular vision emphasizes the flatness of the card, and this tends to offset the illusion of great or less distance produced by the light and shade and perspective of the print. By using one eye the impression of flatness is greatly diminished. If at the same time the eye be placed at the right distance everything is seen under its natural angle or perspective, and the picture unfolds itself, the different objects receding to their proper relative distances, making details very obvious which may be unnoticed if looked at in the ordinary way. "As a sort of corollary to the above use one eye along to decide whether a landscape or other scene is worth taking. If with one eye the scene looks flat it will not make a satisfactory photograph."
