The Path of Peace.

It is so hard to walk earth's toilsome way

Ever while slow moons wane, or slow increase,

So hard to follow duty day by day,

Leading us to God's peace!

O weary grows the heart and worn the feet

In the dull round of uneventful cares;

Yet there's a thought might make our service sweet,

For God our toil prepares.

Lift up thy tired eyes! No cloud is spread

Betwixt thee and His heaven serene and pure.

He holds His hand above thy humble head,

Thy happiness is sure.

Then keep the courage of thy morning prime,

And bravely bear the cross He lays on thee.

'Tis but a little space of troubled time in His eternity.

Remember, only in this pathway lies

Thy safety—once beyond its sheltering bound

What choking mists, what bitter tempests rise,

Where never rest is found!

Hard may be duty's hand, but lo, it leads

Out into perfect joy, where pain shall cease;

God sees thy striving, and thy patience Heeds,

And thou shalt find His peace,—Celia Thayer, in Youth's Companion.

SELECT STORY.

The Hero of Beaver Head.

BY ALVA MILTON KERR.

CHAPTER I.

He was only a crippled boy, with soft, sorrowful eyes, and a mat of curling hair crowned with an old straw hat.

He was standing on Beaver Head, a jutting cliff that rises close upon the right of the little inlet bay of Redwood, on the northern coast of California.

Back of him a great stairway of forest-covered ridges climbed into the coast range, with all their tumbled ocean of tree-tops turning a golden olive in the sunset.

On his left the earth sank sharply down to meet the waters of the bay, while just before him, with a sheer drop of quite a hundred feet, the head hung over the deep with its granite chin brushed by the buffeting flood.

Its whole face was solid rock; the forehead trenched and furrowed like a giant's muscle-knotted brow, the cheeks rent and eroded by uncounted storms, while a vast slab of stone hung pendant in the centre like a nose, with other fallen ends in the surf below, and leaning against the wind-worn lips like shattered monoliths.

From the crest the view was wide and beautiful, the sea spreading out its ever changing plain to the horizon; here, as the sky's moods came and went, a silver track, there a field of violet and beyond it level emerald. In the far southwest a group of islands lay low in the sea, like blue monsters swimming outward, and beyond them a fleet of lumber schooners was falling in the offing.

The boy drew a long breath of weariness as he watched them. He could not help feeling how sweet it would seem to be sailing away from all the heart-breaking trouble that tore his own and other booms there on Beaver head.

He was leaning against a tumble-down wall which crowned the crown of the cliff a few rods from where it dropped off to meet the sea. Near by there was a gap in the wall, evidently once a gate, and a little way back along the path an old stone house. A tall man could almost touch the eaves, but it was wide and long, being divided into two low but rather roomy halves, while its walls were thick, but cracked and matted with moss, through which two small, square windows peeped out like sunken eyes.

About the yard were a number of redwoods, massive and straight, with the sea winds purring among their branches and the sunshine yellowing on their tops.

The house had been built, so tradition said, years before by a weather-beaten old tar named Beaver, who, strangely enough, deserted the sea for an Indian wife and this queer shelter on the head, only to forsake them in turn to take to the sea again.

Then the seasons had blown on, and presently a village had sprung up about the inlet bay, with great sawmills at its inner end, where a little river brought the logs down from the redwood forests.

Here Trave Armor, the boy's father, drifted westward through the pines of Michigan and Wisconsin, and making now and then a futile stand against drink, ill luck and poverty, had come to work in the mills, but falling, through rum, drifted at last, with his ragged flock, into the old stone hut upon the head.

His progress had been pitiful enough, and Paul, the eldest of the five children, bearing its scars upon his body, and its infamy in his memory, had felt, with every season as he progressed toward manhood, a growing sense of blight and degradation.

He knew whence his lameness came; that when he was a child his father once came home in a storm of drunkenness, and being pleaded with by the boy's mother, splintered his flask of liquor on the hearth in an ecstasy of rage, and that he, a baby crawling around the grate, had lapped at the liquid like a lion's cub licking greedily at blood, and that his father had caught him up in a drunken fury and dashed him into the fire, from which he had come limping thus far on the road of life.

Often he had felt something like mortal hatred of his father rise within him, and that day when he turned from watching the lumber schooners go down over the blue flood, and saw his mother worn with toil and faded with bitter care, bending over her wash tub that her children might have bread, an anger rose in his heart that was almost fit for taking human life.

But when his mother spoke to him in tender cheerfulness as she always did, it vanished in a moment.

"I need some rising water, Paul," she said, straightening up with difficulty in the steam of the tub, and stripping the glistening bubbles from her thin, tired arms. "If Jimmie and Carl would only stay round I'd have them do it, but it seems like they're most always off when needed."

"Oh, I'll do it!" said the boy with a half pathetic smile. "I'm stronger than they are, only my legs ain't so good!"

And taking up a wooden yoke with a bucket attached to either end, he placed it across his neck and shoulders, and went limping down the hill side, whistling a little that his weary mother might hear.

The woman stood a moment, leaning with her soap suds on the tub's edge, and looked after him with tender eyes. Then she glanced at little Gabe, six years old, and three-year-old Lannie, who were playing under the trees, and began washing again. "He's the best of them all," she murmured as she rubbed. "His heart's as soft as a girl's; he'd help me more than he does if he could. Oh, if his father had only never done that awful thing to him!"

And tears slipped down her cheeks and fell into the suds.

The boy stopped at a spring half way down the bluff, and, filling the pail, looked a moment at the mills back of the bay. Red-shirted logmen were working with their cant looks among the brown stumps, their sing song of "Ho-ho-ho!" as they lifted, coming in, mellow waves across the water with the long-drawn, never ceasing whine of the feeding saws.

Presently he labored back up the hill with the water, and when the tubs were filled and his mother had thanked him gratefully, he sat down on a bench near by and watched her drarily.

"Mother," he said at last, "do you s'pose we will always live here?"

"I hope not, dear."

"Do you think I ken ever go to work in the mill, mother?"

"I hope so, Paul; or maybe something better. The doctor said, you know, when he looked at your knees, that if those parts that were grown together could be parted you would not be bothered much. But you would have to go away to a big city where they do such things, and it would cost a good deal." She could not bear to look up, and kept on washing, feeling the cloud that always hung over them grow thicker with thought of all their helplessness.

"Yes," said the boy, after a little silence, "it would cost lots; but maybe something'll happen sometime, and I'll be done."

"Yes, something may happen," said the mother, soothingly; "it don't cost much to live here in this old house that nobody owns, and as long as I have strength to wash we won't starve. May be sometime your father'll quit—will be himself again."

Her voice broke, and the boy got up with an angry tumult in his breast and went down to watch Lannie and Gabe, who now were playing near the precipice. When he had sent them into the yard he stood looking gloomily out to sea. The sun had fallen into the water far on its western rim, with a flat mass of clouds lying over it like a dull red bed of coals.

Above this vast cloud hung in greenish folds, slit here and there with sharp, bright blades of light, while half the great vault above him was covered with a troubled, purplish sea.

But he took no note of the seeming prophecy of storm in the sky; he was revolving in a blind kind of way the thought that if his father was not in the world his mother and they would go back to her people in the east, and all might be bright and joyous again.

But she would never go, he knew, as long as his father lived and was helpless in the chains of his galling habits. She clung too fondly to what was gentle in the man to set him adrift, or even cease to hope that something at last might save him.

And the boy himself, responsive to the ties of nature felt a trob of pity fly to his heart when he thought of death for the one who had given him even so hurt and hateful a life.

After a time, when the day had come nearer its close, he roused himself from his brooding stupor and turned toward the house. The west was now a vast bank of dead and smouldering fire, and he noticed that a ship seemed sailing directly into it, looking strangely black and motionless against the dull, red flare. Then he suddenly brought thought his mother, and limped quickly up the pathway to the door.

"Ken I help you any more, mother?" he asked.

"Yes, Paul; we'll empty the tubs now. I'll hang out the clothes in the morning, and try and get the millmen's shirts done. Did you notice which way your father went this morning, dear?"

"Up along the shore, I guess, mother. He took the rifle in the boat with him."

"Did you notice—was he—had he—been drinking?"

"I don't know," said the boy, without looking up. "He sold the fish he got yesterday, I guess."

After that they were silent. In a little time their meager supper was over, and darkness was thick without. It was singularly warm and still even for the mild California coast, and after putting the children to sleep the mother went out and listened. Paul was leaning upon the ruined wall with his face turned seaward, and nothing stirred the silence save a faint whispering of waters out in the darkness. The atmosphere seemed utterly becalmed. But suddenly as they listened there came a little puff of wind like something invisible fleeing behind the storm, then a sort of something rous far overhead, as if the clouds were turning in helpless fear about the ceiling of the sky, and the sea began to chop and purr like an unseen animal whetting its teeth in the darkness. In a moment the few remaining stars were ingulfed, and in another moment there came a shivering crash, and the whole scene leaped in view.

"My God!" cried the woman, starting forward, and Paul, with a faintness rushing over him with thought of the wish he had made in his heart, knew that she was praying for his father, out in his double darkness of his evil weakness and the guttering terrors of the night.

Together they hurried in and made the doors and windows fast against the coming storm. In a moment it broke, and roared and lashed across the cliff for hours, while the mother, with white face, went to and fro, soothing the children, and turning now and then as if she would go out into the storm and find the one she feared might never come again. Paul's eyes followed her troubled face, with a look of pleading terror. Suddenly he seized the latch.

"Mother, I'm going to the shore!"

"No, child, no!" she cried.

"Oh, mother, I must! I must! Father may come!" and he sprang out into the tempest.

At first he was thrown from side to side and dashed against the house by the wind, but presently got his feet and went reeling through the falling torrents down the hillside, and came upon the beach.

The sea seemed alive with leaping ridges as the lightning fell upon them and all along the base of the head it bared at times into lurid fire. The boy drew back before it, but his father was out there—out there where all things rolled together in convulsion, and he clung in the teeth of the tempest, straining ear and eye upon the sea. Suddenly a ship burst into the glare. It seemed coming straight upon the shore, and the boy shouted, with fear, but it veered and passed away into the darkness. But what was that leaping along the billows? There it shone in the glare; now all was swallowed up in night; there it came again—a boat! and he ran into the very arms of the billows to meet it as a long wave hurled it high up on the beach. With a leap he was beside it, and when the lightning came again he saw it was his father's boat, but—empty! A shock of horror passed through him; his wish had come true. The lightning flared about him, the ocean turned to froth, and the billows, bursting against the head, leaped up the shattered pillars in blueish, snowy sheets. But he gave no heed. Suddenly he seemed to hear voices calling. Now they seemed in the roaring wind across the bay; now far out to sea; then high up in heaven. It must be his fancy, he thought, or the winds whirling in the holes and hollows of the cliff. He passed around toward the front of the head and listened, but the blast roared in his ears, and the noise of the inrolling flood was so great he could not hear distinctly.

Women of Whom to Beware.

Beware of the woman, my dear girl, who tells you all about herself the first time you meet her. Beware of the woman who announces that she never said a disagreeable word about another woman. Gracious! goodness! the air will be given when she does begin. The woman who never does say a disagreeable word is like the dog that never barks—he bites, and he bites to poison.

Beware of the woman who is ever rich in her carresses to you; by all the laws of nature a woman ought to kiss a man, and she is wasting the time of two women when she foals about this sort of thing.

Growth of London.

The census of London shows a population of 4,211,056—an increase in the past ten years of 395,486. In 1801 the population was 858,868. The increase during the last 20 years has been greater in the suburban districts; the rate there being calculated at 68 per cent, while that of London proper has been only 36 per cent. What were a few years ago only hamlets are now populous towns, and so great are the facilities for transportation that they are reached as easily as a city merchant can get from his office to the Bank of England.

Ayer's Pills

Keep all others as a family medicine. They are suited to every constitution, old and young, and, being sugar-coated, are agreeable to take. Purely vegetable, they have no ill effects, but strengthen and regulate the stomach, liver, and bowels, and restore every organ to its normal functions. For use either at home or abroad, on land or sea, these Pills

Are the Best.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family for over thirty years. We find them an excellent medicine in fevers, eruptive diseases, and all bilious troubles, and seldom call a physician. They are almost the only pills used in our neighborhood."—Bedford Co., Conn., now Laudon P. O., W. Follicular Parish, La.

"I have been in this country eight years, and, during all this time, neither I, nor any member of my family have used any other kind of medicine than Ayer's Pills, but these we always keep at hand, and I should not know how to get along without them."—A. W. Roderberg, Lowell, Mass.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEP. 4, 1891.

The Dominion Census.

The first bulletin of the census of Canada has been issued and deals with the population of the various provinces which comprise the Dominion.

Following is the account of the recent visit of the American press representatives to Wolfville, as given by Dr Parkhurst in Zion's Herald:—

At Wolfville, the next stopping place, we were greeted at the station by a large assemblage of people, and for the first time were formed into a procession, with a mounted marshal in advance, and driven some eight miles, in which a charming view of "Blomidon" was secured from the "South Mountain."

The following is the population of Nova Scotia by counties, with the rate per cent. increase or decrease:—

Table with 3 columns: County, 1891, 1881. Rows include Annapolis, Antigonish, Cape Breton, Colchester, Cumberland, Digby, Guysboro, Halifax City, Halifax County, Hants, Inverness, Kings, Lunenburg, Pictou, Queens, Richmond, Shelburne, Victoria, Yarmouth.

The Laurel to Wolfville.

At Wolfville, the next stopping place, we were greeted at the station by a large assemblage of people, and for the first time were formed into a procession, with a mounted marshal in advance, and driven some eight miles, in which a charming view of "Blomidon" was secured from the "South Mountain."

Fair Play a Jewel.

EDITOR ACADIAN.—In your issue of July 24 I saw a letter from Kentville headed "A Voice from Kentville," on the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, &c.; but it is like pouring water on a duck's back, in the big town of Kentville, with two pure gilt papers published twice a week, you cannot find a word against the liquor dealer; but let some poor man get drunk (or poisoned) at some of the leading hotels, and get incapable, then each of these gilt papers will find space to spread their names all over the country.

The following is the population of Nova Scotia by counties, with the rate per cent. increase or decrease:—

They are blind to the sight of Justice and deaf to the threats of the liquor-seller. I know, Mr. Editor, the town officials are very much in love with their town, and I am sorry to have to communicate the truth; but let them take heed. Fair play is a jewel, so is Justice when dealt out in proper doses.

A Magazine Writter by Women.

As was expected, the greatest interest has been exhibited in the new story by Amele Rives which was begun in the August number of the Cosmopolitan. The second part appears in the September number and the story will close in the following issue.

The Exhibition at Halifax.

Now promises to be one of the finest shows that has been seen for years. Applications for space are being received from all the Provinces, (although outsiders cannot compete with Nova Scotia) business men feeling it to be their interest to make as extensive an attractive an exhibit as possible, while the farmers and stock-raisers are determined to let the public see what vast improvements have been made in their line during the past few years.

Excursions from all parts of the Provinces.

The exhibition will be opened on Tuesday, September 29th, by His Honor the Lieut. Governor, Mr. B. Daly, Esq., at which all the military and civic dignitaries will be present and take part in the ceremonies.

Berwick Cleanings.

Dr March has rented and is moving into the Rev. D. O. Parker's house near the post-office—Mr Parker's family will move to Wm. — Mr Crighton is much pleased with his new home in Berwick. Mr Owen Chipman of class '92 at Acadia has the head department of our school for the remainder of summer term—Mr H. S. Shaw of Newton Theological Seminary has been spending a few days at home, and preached to a large congregation in the Baptist church last Sabbath morning.

Consumption.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by the use of the above medicine, and of long standing has been used. Includes a full list of testimonials, and a valuable treatise on this disease, to be sent free on receipt of name and address to T. A. SLOOM, M. C., 166 ADELAIDE ST., WEST, TORONTO, ONT.

LADIES' BAZAR.

Materials for Ladies' Art Needlework Always in Stock. JUST OPENED! A beautiful assortment of Wools—Berlins, Zephyrs, Eiderdown, Astrachan, Saxony, Fringing, &c. Ladies' & Children's Hygiene Waists. INFANTS' RUBBER CLOTHING.

TENDERS.

SEALED TENDERS will be received by the Building Committee of Wolfville Division, S. of T., up to September 10th, 1891, for the construction of the Temperance Hall Building—plans and specifications of which may be seen at the office of B. O. DAVISON, SECRETARY OF COMMITTEE, Wolfville, Aug. 28th, 1891.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEP. 4, 1891.

Local and Provincial.

We have had quite good weather this week for a change.

Mr and Mrs H. E. Fleming of Moncton, are in town visiting at Mr F. C. Johnson's.

Mr and Mrs J. D. Chambers have been in Wolfville this week, visiting at the home of the parents of the latter.

The last issue of the Dominion Illustrated contains a portrait of the late Rev. I. E. Hill, D.D., with an article on his life.

Mr F. A. Dixon is making good progress with his house. The frame is now up and covered in and the building will soon be completed.

The annual fall meeting of the proprietors of the Grand Pre dike is to be held in Borden's Hall, at Grand Pre, this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Rev. Mr Martell occupied the Presbyterian pulpit last Sabbath afternoon, owing to ill-health of the pastor, and preached an excellent sermon.

About Aylesford the cranberry industry is rapidly growing in importance, last year about 1,000 bushels were shipped from the township and the crop will be equally as large this year, the first crop on old bogs being counterbalanced by new ones.

The Sunday school Convention met as announced on Wednesday. The attendance was good and the meetings interesting and instructive. A full report of the proceedings is just to hand, but on account of its length and our lack of space we are compelled to hold it over till next week.

It has been decided that our produce will be admitted into the markets of the Spanish West Indies on as good terms as any other nation. This will be good news to our farmers, who were afraid the United States treaty would have the effect of crowding us out. They will be glad to know that we are all right for another year at least.

Get Japanese Kinnel Point for art furniture at Walter Brown's. Anyone who apply it.

Mr Charles Ford, of Milton, Queens county, has refused a cash offer of $250 for his two-year-old colt sired by "General Gordon," and the John Martin mare by "Island Prince." Where is the draft station in this Province that has had more good money offered for a two-year-old? Mr Ford says that his colt will weigh over 1500 lbs, when he is three years old. The skin should be telling.

Green Wire, Cloth Windows and Doors ready to put on, for sale low.

The insurance inspectors were in Wolfville on Tuesday, examining our water system and appliances for protection against fire, with a view to a re-rating of the town for insurance purposes. The fire company was called out in the afternoon and succeeded in getting three streams of water on the Baptist church before the fire broke out. The alarm was given at 10:30, when the fire was struck. The inspectors were well satisfied with the lot.

On August 29th is even richer than usual, and if anything were wanting to vindicate Greg's claim to be an index to the Journal this issue, would do it. The principal cartoons deal trenchantly and at the same time amusingly, with the scandals of the day, and the other political and literary contents are sparkling with humor. Another Irish letter from "Teddy Tierney" is among the best of the good things. Get a copy at the Book-store.

Mr C. F. A. Patterson, of Horton Landing, has recently procured an excellent local Jersey bull. He is bred from the Hart's stock at Lunenburg, C. B. I. The service of which costs $100. Anyone wishing the services of this fine animal, should communicate with Mr Patterson.

The Earle Publishing House of St John, N. B., desire us to state that all persons wishing to read the fac-simile letters of Sir John, Mr Hugh Macdonald, and others, proving the authenticity of Col. Macpherson's book, can have a pamphlet containing them mailed to their address by sending a one cent stamp to pay postage on same. The pamphlet also contains a specially interesting fac-simile letter from Mr Joseph Pope to Col. Macpherson, as well as a portrait of Sir John.

On Sunday next, Sep. 14th, the services in St John's church will be as follows: Eight o'clock a. m., holy communion; celebrant, Rev. John Storer, Vicar of St Peter's church, Eaton Square, London. Eleven o'clock, morning prayer, sermon, and holy communion; preacher and celebrant, Rev. G. E. Wilton, D. C. L., President of Kings College. Seven o'clock p. m., evening prayer and sermon; preacher, Rev. John Storer, of London. Special collection will be made in aid of church improvements.

Weston. Mr Fred Shaw, B. A., of Horton Collegiate Academy, who has been preaching at Annapolis Royal during his vacation, came home last week to visit his friends, and preached to a highly appreciative audience last Sunday afternoon, in the Hall. Mr Shaw returned to Wolfville on Tuesday to resume his duties as teacher in the H. C. A., for the year, after which he intends to study at a Theological school before entering fully upon the work of the gospel ministry. The Rev. F. Ford, of Fort Williams, with his wife, on their way to their association at Yarmouth, reached for us in the evening. The Rev. L. D. Morse, missionary elect to India, will preach here next Sunday, at 8:30 P. M.

Good Reports of the Crops.

DEAR ACADIANS,—I will send you a few items with reference to crop prospects, and some facts with reference to the capabilities of our climate for growing peaches. The 24th inst. Mr Leander Hand picked, mostly from five trees, 2 1/2 bushels finely colored, ripe peaches. On the 25th William Cox, Esq., of Canada, picked over a bushel from four trees—three of the trees were a sight to behold. J. E. Lockwood had five dozens from two trees; some of them measured 8 1/2 inches around. All were of the "Early Canada" and "Early Crawford" varieties. The two first named parties' trees were out four years, the latter three years. Plums will be a short crop in this section. Peas are looking well, most all trees are well loaded. Apples, under the average. Oats are a splendid crop—about straw and well filled; and wheat has been sown in certainly very fine. Mr B. W. Borden has a field of wheat hard to be beaten in any section of the country. Mr W. H. Hardwick has the largest and finest field of cabbage that has ever been grown in Canada. Potatoes promise a good crop, and if the West India market should be open to Canada on equal terms with the U. S. I do not see why our farmers should not be the happiest and most contented people in the land. The picnic season is in full swing now, and by the number of parties going should call them well patronized. We are also having quite a number of visitors from Halifax and other U. S. to enjoy our cool summer weather. True Return.

Canada, August 26th, 1891.

Castrating Cattle. The proper time to perform this operation is while the colt is following his dam. By the use of the castrator the colt can be operated on and allowed to run with his dam, without any special care. In all the western stock farms geldings are made before they are weaned. Why not adopt this plan in this Province, as the colt will develop into a larger and finer animal than he would if left until he is two years old. Besides, at this season of the year the weather is warm, and there is not the danger of taking cold that there is in the spring when the winds are cold and damp. I have had some experience in this matter having operated on two hundred and twenty and know what I am saying, and have four of the best veterinarians in the world to substantiate my statement. The idea of a horse having a better neck because he is allowed to run in his natural state until he is half developed, is a delusion of the strongest kind. As it only tends to give a horse a lighter hind quarter and to make him sluggish, J. I. Snow.

Canada's International Exhibition. We would draw special attention to the advertisement of this exhibition, appearing in another column. The programme is laid out so fully that it will not be necessary for us to enlarge upon it. We are informed that the exhibition proper promises to be more successful, both in point of exhibits and in their attractiveness, than that of last year. The entries are coming in rapidly, and besides a large number of local exhibitors some very fine ones are being sent from England, United States, West India Islands and some other foreign countries. All of the railway and steamship companies are making much more satisfactory arrangements for reduced fares than they did last year. The programme of amusements is so large and varied, that our readers will be safe in arranging their visit to almost any day from beginning to the close of the Exhibition.
