THE BRITISH CABINET.

How its Secretary is Maintained.—No Record kept of its Doings. From the West.

The most enthusiastic admirers of the British constitution will not deny that the machinery of government is complex, and many respects anomalous, and very little understood outside the narrow circle.

For instance, in spite of the very high importance, the cabinet is not recognized by any court of law in the kingdom and no record is kept of its decisions. It is informally summoned by a card calling "her majesty's servants to meet to-day."

Its deliberations are purely informal, no votes are taken, and the greatest secrecy is observed as to whatever transpires. No minutes are kept of the proceedings, and the result of a meeting of the cabinet, it being a strict point of honor with its members not to reveal its proceedings.

This is the prime minister, as it is imperative for it to present an appearance of solidarity to parliament. It was originally a meeting of the most trusted members of the privy council who assembled in the king's "cabinet" or private room. Since the time of the early Hanoverians, who did not understand the English language, it has not been customary for the reigning monarch to be present.

Vanity Fair thus writes: "The cabinet council may thus meet when and where and how pleases, yet, as a matter of convenience, its meetings are held in the house in Downing street which as a private residence by the first lord of the treasury. The prime minister, as secretary for foreign affairs, first rule the cabinet; these two alone keep everything in the hands of the cabinet."

Tradition assigns the members their seats. The premier sits at the top of the window. On the right sits the foreign secretary, and opposite to him the secretary for India. On the left sits the secretary for the colonies, and on the right sits the secretary for the war. The secretary for the colonies sits at the foot of the window, and opposite to him the secretary for the treasury.

In a corner stands a table bearing a few copies of the papers, and a few chairs are ever introduced into the room. There is no oratory; the opinions of the ministers are expressed briefly and plainly, and each man is expected to say what he really thinks, without ambiguity and concealment, for he is taken at his word by his colleagues.

DUELING IN GERMANY. An interchange of opinion on Various Phases of University Life. A Berlin telegram to the London Times says: In connection with the debate on the estimates of the ministry of public works in the Prussian chamber of deputies there were some interesting interchanges of opinion on various phases of university life.

A prominent club member, Herr Reichensperger, opened the discussion by complaining of the idleness, the drinking and dueling habits of students, of the academic system of cramming, and of the clique existing among the professors at some universities.

But it was on the subject of dueling that the conversation mainly turned, and it was not difficult to divine how the tacit sympathy of the great majority of the members. Even the remarks of Herr Gosler, the minister of public works, drew from Dr. W. that while dueling was abolished in Prussia, it was nevertheless defended in this place. The ultra-montane leader hereupon expressed his indignation at the fact that a man of the caliber of Herr Gosler, according to which, as one speaker put it, a duel with sharpened blades or rapiers was necessary, and that it was necessary to be combat with mortal weapons, which was opening a door of escape with vengeance. And it was pointed out that in legislative quarters the practice is still continued as much as ever, and that there was even a movement among the members of all factions, as Minister Gosler reminded the honorable members of the chamber of deputies.

To this very practice Prince Bismarck had caused him so much vexation—a spirit that men learned and did not care to be taught, and that in legislative quarters the practice is still continued as much as ever, and that there was even a movement among the members of all factions, as Minister Gosler reminded the honorable members of the chamber of deputies.

THE PERILS OF WHALING. NEW LONDON, Conn., Feb. 28.—Capt. Sanford Minor of the whaling schooner Sarah W. Hunt, which left New Bedford July 10 for a two years' cruise has written here for the loss of seven of his crew. On the outward passage one fell from aloft and was drowned. On Nov. 27 two boats with six men each left the vessel to search for seals in shore at Campbell Island. Heavy squalls set in. The boats could not be found after three days' search.

The three other boats have been made up miles through severe gales to New Zealand. The steamer set out and found one of the boats' crew. The others were probably drowned or died from starvation.

Strike of Miners. PITTSBURGH, Feb. 28.—The coal miners in the third pool struck to-day for the district price of 31 cents per bushel. Fifteen hundred men are out. Only twenty-two are working the entire pool. An assessment of $1 per week on each miner in the three other pools has been made to support the strikers. If this fails a general suspension will be ordered.

The Old Black Bottle. "I see you have got that black bottle filled again," remarked Mrs. Spatterly the other day, as Spatterly was hunting around for the sugar. "Yes," replied Spatterly, "a little something is good for me about the house in case of sickness." "I don't think whisky is a good medicine," said Mrs. Spatterly. "And why not? I would like to know," asked Spatterly, with some degree of feeling. "Many of the leading physicians recommend it," said Mrs. Spatterly, with a composed air of contentance, "if it is a good medicine it don't agree with your system. I notice that you are never well while there is a drop of the stuff in the house."
