HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT

7-8 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1959

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TENTH DAY OF APRIL, 1959
TO THE TWENTIETH DAY OF MAY, 1959, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1959

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 10, 1959

The house met at 11 a.m.

TRADE

URANIUM—PROPOSED VISIT BY MINISTER TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he contemplates a visit to Washington in the near future to discuss with the United States government the taking up of the options with respect to uranium which are of such great importance to Canada and to our relations with the United States both economically and politically.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, there is no question about the importance of that contract to our uranium industry and to our economy, and during the last two months I have endeavoured to make arrangements to meet with the appropriate people in Washington concerning this matter. There was some delay, due to the illness of some of the people concerned in the United States, but I expect to have a chance to confer with the authorities in Washington very soon.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR REVOCATION OF RECENT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In the absence from the house of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister and ask him whether, in view of the fact that the recent amendments to the immigration regulations obviously serve no public purpose and are causing great hardship to many families, he will urge his colleague to admit her mistake and recommend that the order be revoked.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): That is not a question; that is a political speech.

FINANCE

STEEL—TARIFF INCREASE ON IMPORTS FROM WEST GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Have any persons representing the steel industry in Canada asked the government to increase the tariff on steel entering Canada as a protection against imports from West Germany?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Not within the last ten months.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Labour whether in view of the statement made in the white paper presented by the Minister of Finance two days ago with regard to the position of the unemployment insurance fund he would not agree that it is desirable that amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act should be placed before the house at the earliest possible moment, so that we may be in a position to appreciate the relation of the state of the fund to the financial situation of the country as presented by the Minister of Finance in his happy manner but gloomy results last night.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have felt that it is desirable to bring these amendments before the house much sooner than the hon. member probably proposes in his question. I have urged that this be expedited as much as possible, and everything is being done toward that end.

REFERENCE OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader and ask him when we might expect the carrying out of one of the provisions in the throne speech, namely the referral of the elections act to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, consideration has been given to that question and I hope it will be possible to make a motion to that effect at a very early date.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED PRINTING OF APPLICATION FORMS IN UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of complaints I have received from unemployed persons to the effect that certain application forms for unemployment insurance are printed in the United States. Would the minister comment as to whether or not that is correct, and as to whether any steps have been taken to have these forms printed in our own country?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): That is correct, Mr. Speaker, and it is no surprise to me. We have recently installed a mechanical processing system in our prairie regional office located in Winnipeg. This office processes all claims for the prairie provinces, and the object of putting in a mechanical punch card system was to eliminate delays.

After some early difficulties were experienced the system is now beginning to operate satisfactorily, and it is estimated that it will result in a considerable saving of time. The system is a Remington Rand installation, and unfortunately the forms necessary for its operation are not as yet being made in Canada. Therefore they must be obtained in the United States. It is expected that when the system has achieved more widespread acceptance in this country these forms will be produced in Canada. I, as much as the hon. member for Assiniboia or any other hon. member of this house, am very conscious of the desirability of endeavouring to have as many as possible of our forms printed in Canada.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING ON R.C.M.P. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Minister of Justice is now in a position to reply to the question I asked him on Wednesday regarding the proposed and now postponed meeting between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general of the provinces in regard to contracts with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

[Mr. Howard.]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice will be back on Monday, and as he has taken this decision himself he will be in a position to give an answer upon his return.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, when speaking on this item yesterday I was trying to ascertain why there exists a discrepancy between the views of a western delegation which recently visited Ottawa and the views of certain western members.

The situation of agriculture in Ontario is not favourable. The farm union in a brief presented just a few weeks ago pointed out that the position has deteriorated again this year in terms of net income. By using dominion bureau of statistics figures they point out that in the last year the net income of the farmer increased by only $9 over the previous year, while at the same time the gross income increased by something over $1,000. Therefore when we hear the Minister of Agriculture quoting gross figures for western Canada as the total Canadian farm income, in terms of net income I think we can be sceptical about the farmer's position being anything near what it was in previous years.

One of the problems which face agriculture in eastern Canada is this matter of vertical integration. I would suggest that one of the reasons vertical integration has become so important is the fact that farm credit has been restricted in recent years. A few years ago a small farmer who was in the mixed farming industry would go to the bank and borrow enough money to buy a carload of feeder cattle from western Canada, or he would go to the feed company and make arrangements for a year's supply or six months' supply of feed on credit. He now finds this impossible. He cannot borrow the money from the bank to buy feeder cattle because the bank maintains this is not a stable investment, that it is quite a risk, and the banks are not willing to lend money at a reasonable rate of interest on that type of loan. When he goes to the feed company he also finds that the feed company is under this tight money policy that the banks have instituted, and it cannot get enough money to carry its credit and therefore it will not extend this type of credit to the farmer.

In my opinion this is why we find farmers going into contract farming and eventually finding themselves under complete vertical integration. Co-operatives have found themselves in a somewhat similar position. They have found that they also have to borrow money from the banks. They are borrowing money at higher and higher interest rates, and this must be passed on to their members when they in turn try to buy something from the co-operatives. This has happened to people who are raising large numbers of hogs, or who are in the broiler industry. The co-operatives have been able to advance money or feed only on the same basis that many of the small feed companies are advancing it, namely entering into a contract on a contract farming basis.

Therefore one of the problems the farmer faces today is this matter of short term credit. The government could give a great deal of assistance if they were to consider this matter of short term credit to the farmers in terms of maintaining the family farm. It is all very well to talk about long term credit, credit of $20,000, extended over a period of 30 years. Unless the farmer can see that he is going to be able to realize something from his farming operation by borrowing this large sum of money on a long term basis he would be well advised not to undertake the obligation. If he finds—and he has had this happen over the last few years—that the price of his product is going to continue to drop he would be very silly, in my opinion, to make a long term loan at a very high rate of interest if he cannot immediately apply it to his production cycle so that he can at least get enough money out of his borrowing to make it worth his while to do so. The fact that he gets $20,000 today to pay off a large number of bills is not sufficient justification for borrowing the money.

Therefore in many instances I think the farmer would be well advised not to borrow on a long term basis unless he can see in the future a stable market for his agricultural products.

In my opinion there is quite a difference between long term and short term credit. Short term credit is what will revitalize and maintain what Ontario farmers like to call the family farm. The family farm depends entirely upon the community, and in return most of the rural communities depend upon the family type of farm. If contract farming is extended through vertical integration, whereby a company runs the farm and the farmer is only a hired man, then obviously the community is going to disappear; because the individual farmer when in an advantageous purchasing position buys from the local grocery store, hardware store, feed store and automobile dealer. These are the people who maintain small communities and rural agricultural life as we have known it. These are the people who support the schools and maintain the communities. On the other hand, when farms grow very rapidly we find that these people buy from the wholesale outlets. They always have the advantage of wanting 20 tractors instead of one. They do not want to buy one carload of feed at a time but 20 carloads, and they tend to deal outside of the rural communities as we know them.

I think the minister should give serious consideration to making short term credit available to the farmer so the farmer can deal within the community, so he can continue to purchase enough products to be able to expand and operate efficiently and not have to go outside the normal credit procedure he has used for many years. I do not think this matter has been given any consideration at all, and in my opinion it is one that should be given consideration.

I have heard some people say that vertical integration may not be a bad thing, and economically this may be true. Vertical integration means automation in agriculture. I am quite sure it will mean a lessening of production costs, but if this takes place I suggest it will not mean that people will be able to buy food cheaper or will receive any of the advantages of the lower cost of production. Rather it will mean that consumers will have to pay more and more for food products because their production will be controlled by a very few people.

We find that in Ontario the production of broilers has been vertically integrated. I am quite sure that some of the western members will say "So what?", but I suggest that if one segment of the economy becomes controlled by the packing companies or the feed companies it will immediately affect the rest of the meat industry across Canada. If they are going to control the broiler industry completely and they dump a large number of broilers on the market, there will be no meat sold in Canada. Such a situation would be developing very rapidly at the present time if it were not for the great impetus to the meat industry brought about by the export to the drought areas of Texas of a large number of feeder cattle.

I believe western farmers had better give very close consideration to the problem of vertical integration, because while they are not now affected to any great extent with respect to the meat industry I am quite sure they will be. Members from farming constituencies who do not agree should visit a local Loblaw store or any chain store in the city of Ottawa. They will find that the housewives of Ottawa are buying a great many more broilers than steaks or roasts of beef. I do not think this market in the United States is a normal market; it is not a market that can be considered as permanent. Eventually when these Texas grazing lands return to production we are going to have to return to our previous methods of selling beef.

In so far as pork is concerned, I might say that 30 per cent of the pork industry in Ontario is under vertical integration. This is an industry that can be easily extended, because it does not take as long to raise pork as it does to raise beef. These big companies that have gone into the broiler industry have done so because the buildings will remain and they do not have to be operated in any one year. It is very easy for these big companies to get into the broiler industry on a three-month basis and then get out of it. With these companies controlling this segment of the farmers' economy, it behooves all farmers to take a very close look at what is happening in that field.

I would suggest that the way in which the minister could deal with this condition is not by legislating against vertical integration but by making credit available to the rural population in the way it was available to them before the Liberal government put their tight money policy into operation. This tight money policy is still in effect in so far as agriculture is concerned.

In my particular area a farmer has almost no opportunity to get any money. If he applies to the farm loan board he is told that the board is not able to make loans in northern Ontario because of land values. They value the land in northern Ontario at as low as $25 an acre. Anyone who has been connected with agriculture in northern Ontario knows that it costs at least $50 an acre to clear this land, so when the board make this type of valuation they are being completely unrealistic. The truth of this statement is even more evident when you consider that the price of a 160-acre farm is around $20,000 or $30,000 in that particular area. The land upon which loans are sought is probably not of this high calibre, but it certainly is in a much higher price class than $25 per acre. The farmers find that they are unable to borrow from mortgage companies or from banks. Unfortunately there is only one way in which a farmer can get enough money to carry on his farm. He leaves the farm and goes into the labour field, leaving his wife and children at home to run the farm.

This method of operation contributes to the creation of surplus agricultural products, because if the husband gets enough money through his labour to pay the expenses then the products produced as a result of the work of the family are really surplus products. This in turn makes it much more difficult for the full time farmer to dispose of his products at reasonable prices.

I had hoped that the agriculture committee would give some consideration to the whole matter of short term as well as long term credit. I suggest to the minister that in my experience the short term credit the farmer uses to operate his business from month to month is causing much more difficulty in rural Ontario than the matter of long term loans. That is because farmers looking at the markets they have today, understanding the problems they have, the rising costs of production and a falling market, will not be stupid enough to borrow money on a 30-year basis at a fairly high rate of interest. What they want to do is operate the farms they have today so they can make a decent living, while hoping that in the near future the government will make some change to allow them to plan on a long term basis.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I feel very strongly with regard to the question of agriculture. Yesterday the hon. member who has just sat down made some remarks about the western members who had been home over the Easter recess and had had an opportunity to talk to some of their farmer constituents. Well, Mr. Chairman, I did that. I attended several meetings and talked to all the farmers I could get hold of, and I can stand up here and say that 95 per cent of the farmers in my area to whom I talked in the meetings I went to were in full support of the government's program and were not in favour of the deficiency payments as outlined by the Saskatchewan wheat pool. I will have more to say about that in a moment.

Before we take a look at agriculture in the west to see what we can do to help it, we should take a good look at what the situation is and go on from there. The problem as we all know it—

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): If you will wait until I get through, sir.

Mr. Argue: That is not the way you behaved when we spoke.

Mr. Peters: What about the delegation?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I will come to that. The problem, it seems to me, is one of maintaining income and increasing the share of all western farmers. I should say of all farmers; I do not want to segregate one from the other. The other problem which has been touched on very briefly by the hon. member who has just sat down is that of vertical integration. These two problems have to be dealt with together, because no one scheme will help western agriculture. There has to be a general policy which is going to include all the factors which are important in developing our agricultural economy.

With regard to this brief which has been presented to us and to the government by the delegation of western farmers, I want first of all to say that I was very proud of the delegates who came from my area. I think they all acted like gentlemen and there was only one matter I found fault with, which was the premise which had been drilled into them by the members of the neighbouring farm unions and the Saskatchewan wheat pool that "You had better help us farmers get our deficiency payments or we'll go into livestock, and then look out." I think this is a completely false premise, because if you go over the figures you will find that the farmers in Saskatchewan have been diversified and since 1951 have been increasing the numbers of livestock on their farms, and these are the people this brief discriminates against and would not take into consideration. The points they raise are good, but the solution they suggest is not in the best interests of agriculture in western Canada.

I wonder, sir, to what extent the instigation of this brief from this delegation, as it was undertaken by the Saskatchewan wheat pool, was to encourage the production of wheat so we would have a larger surplus and the Saskatchewan wheat pool would be able to make more money storing the grain at government expense. This point has not been raised and I think it should be, because it is certainly a factor raised by the delegation in the brief.

We in western Canada, particularly in my constituency where mixed farming is the vogue, where they have been diversified and have had the initiative to go out and raise various types of crops and livestock, are concerned that a program such as this would do nothing more than give to those people who are now driving a Cadillac also a Buick, and they certainly do not need it. I think this whole problem, not only of income to the farmers but of vertical integration, should be, as I said, dealt with as one problem.

The solution to vertical integration by meat packing companies, feed companies and such like is to put our family farms in a position where they cannot only compete but will be the ones which provide most of the produce. We can do this by the policy which this government has outlined for agriculture. We are very happy with the announcement of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to hogs, and we feel that this is one method whereby deficiency payments can be used very well. The question of when deficiency payments should be used on grain can certainly be discussed and should receive consideration, but that is not the problem which was raised or presented by this brief. So the solution to our problem is to set up the family farmer so he can compete with modern business methods and with modern technical improvements. Tto do this as the last speaker has said, we need a new credit system, crop insurance programs and an effective soil use program; and we need most of all the stabilization bill.

How do you define a family farm? The definition of a family farm is a farm on which the family is living. This is important, because it does not apply to a lot of the wheat farmers in Saskatchewan. The government is in support of the type of farmer who is working the year round, and if he is given this support he can be the most efficient type of farmer in the country and in that way can combat vertical integration from the ground. The important point in western agriculture at the moment is that we must support this family farm, the people living on the farm working 12 months of the year and who deserve our support, not only for economic reasons but also for social reasons and for the whole rehabilitation of rural agriculture.

As I said, this government has done a lot for agriculture in the last two years and the farmers in my area appreciate it. They appreciate the announcement with regard to hogs. The only addition we would like to suggest is that any deficiency payment on hogs be made on a premium basis; in other words, that no deficiency payment be made on grade C hogs. The other suggestion is that the floor price on hogs should be removed entirely and a deficiency payment system used exclusively. This does not mean that one should take over a deficiency payment scheme and use it on every product, because that would defeat the very purpose of the stabilization bill, and defeat the flexibility which is the important part of the bill. In years to come in our international relations we will have to play a part in the economic cold war, and there will be a case for the government buying up produce so they can dispose of it to the underveloped countries, or dispose of these products to an international food bank in the future.

As I have said, we all know very well the other things the government has done, but sometimes our friends in the opposition require a little bit of memory brushing up, particularly those in the official opposition, as we realize that they are extremely weak on western agriculture at the moment. The cash advance program which they said could not work has worked tremendously well all over the west, even in our area which is not primarily a commercial grain producing area.

One other thing I should like to mention with regard to agriculture is the transport situation. We all know that this is the primary problem which faces western agriculture, because we have to pay for everything we bring in and all we ship out. We appreciated the stand taken by the government with regard to the Crowsnest pass arrangements, and I think we should point out to the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool in this connection that he is receiving, as representative of the grain producers, a substantial subsidy from the government which livestock producers are not receiving.

We hope the commission which is now being set up with regard to freight rates will delve into the whole question of the equalization of freight rates, because this is vital to the economic life of western Canada.

I think that puts my stand clearly on record. When I spoke on the address I had some remarks to make with regard to the delegation coming to Ottawa. I have not changed my opinion in this regard. One of the western daily newspapers recently carried an editorial entitled "Horner in a Corner".

I would say that I am certainly in a corner, the corner of the family farm and of those who are making a career of agriculture, who are working at it all the time. That is the corner in which I want to be, and the corner in which I intend to stay.

Before I close I should like to make a few remarks with regard to the organization of the Department of Agriculture, and I should like also to compliment the minister on the efficient manner in which he has headed this very difficult department and supervised the work of reorganization. I should also like to say a word with regard to research, particularly into the veterinary-medical aspects of agriculture. I think sometimes all of us do not realize how important this particular aspect of agriculture is, not only to the health of our animals but also to the health of our people generally.

There is only one complaint I have to make in this regard, and that is that we are not spending enough money; we have not a large enough staff of research scientists working in the animal diseases branch. We realize that it is difficult to hold these experts, because they are highly trained men and private industry is competing strongly for their services. However, this is a vital part of the department's work and one which requires our constant help and scrutiny. I am particularly indebted to the Minister of Agriculture for including Johne's disease, or paratuberculosis in cattle, under the animal diseases act this has already helped, in my area, to give one farmer a little hope for the future. I am sure, too, that his neighbours are also very thankful that the government has enacted regulations which make more effective control of the disease possible.

As I have said previously in this house, animal diseases cost this country a tremendous amount of money. Foot-and-mouth disease alone has cost farmers something in the neighbourhood of $600 million. Any money which is spent in the eradication of these diseases and in research into their control is money well spent and will mean a saving in the long run. If 20 years ago we had tackled the problem of brucellosis and done what we are now doing, the cost of eradicating that disease would be only a fraction of what it is today. However, I can say that the department is ahead of schedule in its brucellosis program, and those responsible should be complimented on the rapid and very efficient way in which they have gone about eradicating this disease from our herds.

At this point I urge, once again, that the government should give serious consideration to setting up a veterinary college in western Canada, if not directly then through the agency of the Canada Council. This is a very pressing need not only because it would mean better treatment for our animals but because it would enable the recruiting of veterinary surgeons who would be available for the inspection of meat, its proper grading, and so on.

And now if the hon. member for Timiskaming would like to ask his question I should be happy to answer it.

Mr. Peters: I should like to ask the hon. member if he feels there was a difference between the delegation which represented the Saskatchewan area of the wheat pool and the over-all group which presented the deficiency payment brief. Did the hon. member agree with the over-all brief?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I certainly do say there was a difference between the delegation from Saskatchewan and the delegation from Alberta. Even in Saskatchewan there was a difference in the delegation; there are those delegates who are aligned to major wheat growing, and there are the others. Incidentally, I find it paradoxical that the hon. member who was speaking a moment ago about the evils of vertical integration should not have told us what he thinks a 5,000 acre wheat farm is. Is that not vertical integration?

Another point is that the farm union in Alberta supported this delegation as a method of demonstrating farm unity, and I commend the union for it; but they were sold a bill of goods. They were told by the Saskatchewan delegation, "If you do not support us we will go into livestock, and then look out". That is the only point they made, and it is a foolish argument, one that does not hold water.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Did the hon. member read the brief presented by the western delegation to Ottawa and, if so, does he deny the facts they presented and the conditions on the prairies as outlined in the brief which the delegation presented?

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): As I said initially, we agree on the conditions which are prevalent in western agriculture, but they affect most of all the grain growers, particularly the small grain growers who are not going to get any benefit from the measures suggested in the brief. These are the people who are in trouble, but the brief is not going to help them. The solutions proposed are not going to be of any assistance to them. As I said before, there is no point in giving a Buick to someone who already drives a Cadillac, and that is exactly what the hon. member for Timiskaming is suggesting when he says we should pay $4,500 each to the biggest farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can only assume from the very generous manner in which I am received as I rise to speak on these estimates that the committee generally will expect from me a contribution to this very important subject which concerns all the people of Canada.

After listening to the observations which have just been made I should like to give some political advice to the hon. member, if he would take it from one who has had a fairly long experience in this house. He said that when he went home he found that his constituents without exception fully supported the attitude of the present administration with regard to deficiency payments.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Ninety-five per cent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, he said 95 per cent. I would suggest to him that as a political novice he ought not to use percentages in that particular context, because it must be apparent that the farmers of western Canada are dissatisfied not to the extent of 5 per cent but, in so far as one can judge from the orderly and very significant delegation that came to Ottawa from western Canada, the farmers generally in western Canada are totally dissatisfied with the policies of this government, policies that arise out of assurances given by this administration in the course of two election campaigns.

There is no doubt that the government through the Prime Minister in particular, through the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and through the Minister of Agriculture did give the farmers of western Canada and farmers throughout Canada generally the impression that if they were entrusted with the responsibility of governing this country the farmers would receive from this government a better deal either through parity prices or deficiency payments. No form of dialectics the Minister of Agriculture may use will destroy the impression these hon. gentlemen created in the country: "Entrust us with the responsibility of office and we will provide parity prices"—represented by various amendments introduced in this house by the present Prime Minister—"and we will provide deficiency payments". These characterize the observations made by hon. gentlemen opposite in the course of two election campaigns.

The recent delegation of farmers from western Canada which descended on Ottawa was one of the finest delegations that has ever come here. It was both orderly and constructive. If there was a reason for these farmers coming here it was because this government through its spokesmen gave the impression in two general election campaigns that this government was going to embark on a policy that would result in a better deal for the farmers. The delegation asked the government to pursue that policy.

When my hon. friend says that he found satisfaction in his constituency I suggest to him that he had better examine all parts of his constituency, as other hon. members from western Canada should, with a view to ascertaining whether or not the optimistic interpretation he has just given is in conformity with the facts. I was in western Canada quite recently, too, and I certainly did not find any indication of satisfaction such as the friendly and intelligent but misguided hon. member who has just spoken has described.

This government did not only promise western farmers deficiency payments; it promised the farmers of Canada generally that there would be a price support program the like of which Canadian farmers had never received, guaranteeing to those engaged in agriculture a basic and satisfactory income.

In my own constituency in the county of Essex we were told that there would be deficiency payments and floor prices not only for soya beans and sugar beets but for corn. We have not heard very much about whether or not we are going to have a floor price on corn, but from every indication arising out of statements made by the Minister of Agriculture as to the dangerous position that he sees gathering at the present time—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —not only is it not likely that we will receive a floor price on corn, but we are not likely to have a continuation of the existing floor prices on other commodities. Now, having completed that sentence I shall be glad to deal with my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Since the party of which my hon. friend is a member has not yet stated whether it is in full agreement with this brief, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would care to comment on it. I emphasize the words "full agreement".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend apparently has not seen the observations made by the leader of the Liberal party in the press—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I read those observations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —at the time he received this delegation. The Leader of the Opposition indicated what was the position of the federal Liberal party in this matter. He referred to the resolutions which were publicized—unlike at a recent convention of the Tory party, in which that party stated its policy with regard to deficiency payments—and as the hon. member will know the delegation that met with the Leader of the Opposition and members of this party in a publicized statement expressed their deepest satisfaction with the way in which they had been received and the way in which the Liberal party had stated its position.

I have in my hand the briefs to which my hon. friend is referring. One is the submission by the interprovincial farm union council on agricultural policy generally. What is the government's reaction to this brief? Does my hon. friend say that these briefs, presented by a powerful farm organization in western Canada, are not to be treated as reflecting the state of public opinion in western Canada? Do these briefs indicate that 95 per cent of the farmers of western Canada support the policy of this government in the matter of deficiency payments? I suggest to my young and amiable hon. friend that he would be wise to make a careful assessment of public opinion among the farmers of his riding. As a result of such an inquiry he would be required to revise his position in order to return to this house as an effective voice representing the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was referring specifically to the submission of the western farm delegation to the Prime Minister presented at the Chateau Laurier. The hon. member has not answered my question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I made mention of the fact that the farmers of southwestern Ontario had been assured of a support price for corn. As the Minister of Agriculture knows, he was requested by the corn growers a few months ago to designate corn as a commodity under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The support price suggested was approximately $1.45, which would be the average price for the last ten years for No. 2 dried corn delivered at elevators in the corn producing areas.

When the Minister of Agriculture replies I hope he will indicate what the policy of the government is in regard to this matter. I hope he will also indicate whether we are going to be confronted this year, with regard to the floor price on soya beans, with a situation comparable to that which has developed in the United States, where the floor price on soya beans is being reduced by 25 per cent. Is that going to be the situation in Canada?

The present floor price on soya beans is $2.10. This does not mean that every farmer who grows soya beans receives $2.10. Because of the method of averaging prices many farmers will receive well below $2.10, and many who are in the position of not requiring assistance will receive the floor price. This averaging is regarded by the soya bean growers generally as not being fully in conformity with the assurances given by this government that there would be a floor price on soya beans.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the hon. member a question? Has he asked the soya bean growers if they are willing to pool their returns? If they are willing to do this we can give them all exactly the same return, but up to date they have been unwilling to pool their returns. If they refuse to do so it is impossible to get away from the situation the hon. member describes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The farmers certainly are not willing to pool their returns. That is the very gist of my complaint. When hon. gentlemen opposite during the election campaign said they were going to grant a support price they did not talk about averaging prices. They said every farmer would be guaranteed a minimum price.

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minimum price was fixed at $2.10 by the hon. gentleman. I will say that he carried out his promise in one respect; that is, a floor price was designated, but it was never indicated that the assessment of the price the farmer would receive could mean that he would receive something less than the designated price. Then we were not told—

Mr. Harkness: That is entirely in your opinion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that at the end of the season these prices would be averaged so that some farmers, instead of receiving $2.10, would receive even as low as $1.80, which did happen in some cases that I know about. When the minister deals with this question I hope he will indicate particularly what is the government's intention for the future. Are we going to follow the example of the United States and lower the floor price by 25 per cent, or anything comparable; because the lowering of the floor price in the United States is going to add to the competitive position that now prevails in Canada as a result of the very heavy importations into southwestern Ontario, particularly of United States agricultural products. Soybeans are only one example. Other examples include corn, canned tomatoes, fresh tomatoes and other products.

In the very comprehensive statement the minister made on March 6 he put on record the statistics having to do with total cash income in Canada from the sale of farm products by provinces, the figures for 1940 to 1957 being taken, I think he will agree, from the bureau of statistics, and those for 1958 from his own department. I think I am right in that.

Mr. Harkness: The figure I gave at that time was an estimate. The dominion bureau of statistics figures have come out since. I think the hon. member will find that they are almost exactly the same.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad to have that confirmed. The total for 1958, as given by the minister, was $2,869,319,000. This figure includes some $61 million of supplementary benefits paid to farmers in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I think that is correct. But I suggest to the minister that the total farm cash income is a misleading yardstick to use, though undoubtedly it served the purpose of the minister in that he was able to show an increase of $276 million in 1958 over 1957. It seems to me the better course to follow would be to use farm net income, which would give a better indication, although as I say I did not know until this moment that the figures for 1958 were available.

A glance at the tables that are provided in the handbook of agricultural statistics for 1957, and those given by the minister on March 6, together with the number of farms according to the 1956 census as they appear in the Canada Year Book, gives one a very interesting picture of the state of agriculture generally in Canada which I think should be examined further at this time.

The hon. member for Timiskaming spoke of the condition of eastern agriculture, not in a way that prejudiced his view about the state of agriculture in other parts of Canada. He properly emphasized that in considering some of the developments in agriculture in Canada today one should take into consideration not sectional but national interests and present a national picture as well. It is in regard to this point that I want to say a few words, because I think an examination of the statistics taken from the various publications to which I have just referred will indicate that the average net income per farm in eastern Canada, that is to say in Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, is substantially below the national average.

This suggests, without in any way failing to appreciate, as I indicated I do appreciate, the importance of agriculture in western Canada and the serious economic condition that confronts the farmers of western Canada, that we in this section of the country also have a great interest in this problem. I think hon. members generally will recognize that the problems of agriculture are not divisible, and that any depressed condition in one section of the country is of the greatest concern to all parts of the country. I know that hon. members from western Canada will understand and appreciate the situation in eastern Canada, just as over the years hon. members have appreciated the problems of western Canada. For instance, in 1957 the results in eastern Canada certainly were not very encouraging and, as I say, for the purpose of my notes I did not have the latest figures for 1958 which the Minister of Agriculture says are now available.

I think it is important that we recognize that what is significant is not the net return or the gross return, but the cost of goods and services used by the farmers which, of course, places a different interpretation on the picture. The attitude of the Minister of Agriculture, as expressed in the remarks he made in this house on March 6, seems to have undergone a great and fundamental change. When he was in the opposition he was one of the most vigorous of those who took part in agricultural debates, speaking, as he often did, on what he called cost-price squeeze. The Minister of Agriculture spoke in the house in 1959, as reported at page 1680 of Hansard, as follows:

> It is quite easy to see from these figures in which years the big increase in farm costs took place. It was during the years up to and including 1952. From then on the increase in costs has been nothing like as marked as it was before and, as I say, last year it amounted to only 1.2 per cent.

Despite the fact that the minister said the big increase in farm costs took place in the years up to and including 1952, a little further on in his remarks, at page 1681, he said:

> The farmer was in a severe cost-price squeeze for several years up to 1958.

He did not say this, of course, specifically, but he was obviously trying to give the impression that since he has become Minister of Agriculture the upward course of the cost of goods and services used by the farmers of Canada has been arrested.

Mr. Harkness: That is correct.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am going to challenge the statement of my hon. friend, and I am going to prove that it is not correct. The index prices do not bear out this statement, or the last observation of the Minister of Agriculture. The figures are given for three months of each year, and for 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1958 they are as follows. I ask the Minister of Agriculture to correct me if those—

Mr. Harkness: Where is the hon. member getting those figures?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Those figures come from the minister's own publications, the ones to which I have already made reference.

Mr. Harkness: What publications are those figures from?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, if the minister will look at the Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada for the various years he will find what he asks. If I am wrong I want to have it pointed out. I hope my hon. friend will point it out as I go along. In 1954—

Mr. Harkness: What year's review is the hon. member on, and what page?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am dealing now with 1954.

Mr. Harkness: We do not want any more from the Martin bureau of statistics.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What you do want is the truth.

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You want an accurate statement.

Mr. Harkness: I have given you one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What you do want is an accurate statement.

Mr. Harkness: I have given you that. I am asking you what page you are referring to.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You take my figures and see whether they are correct.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt hon. members, but the present exchange and the way it is being conducted is not quite parliamentary. If the minister wishes to interrupt the hon. member for Essex East he must ask his permission to ask a question or he may raise a point of order or a question of privilege, but the Chair cannot permit the present exchange across the floor of the house.

Mr. Harkness: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member is going to quote statistics purporting to be from an official publication, under the rules of the house he must give the name of that publication and the page from which he is quoting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for your intervention, which obviously will be of great assistance as I pursue my argument.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate your intervention, Mr. Chairman. I think the Minister of Agriculture is not unfair in part of his request. Since we are in committee I shall continue to make my observations and will come back to this point, at which time I will give him the exact page numbers which I do not have at the moment.

Mr. Harkness: Well—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It will not destroy the basic argument. If my hon. friend wants to make my speech he is at liberty to do so, but I am going to tell him that it will not be exactly the same kind of speech I am now about to make.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, again I must insist that the rules of the house be followed. If the hon. member is going to quote statistics purporting to be from an official publication he must give the name of the publication, the year and the number of the page from which he is quoting.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Your request is perfectly fair and I propose to do so. I said that I would postpone this part of my argument so that when I return to it I may be able to give the page as well as the authority.

Mr. Harkness: That is quite all right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But I am now challenging the statement of the minister that since he took office he has been able to arrest a rise in the cost of production. By the way, talking about the increase in the cost of production, may I point out that the government has not yet given any answer to the request of the federation of agriculture and the interprovincial farm union council for the laying down of methods and instructions by which a more accurate assessment of the cost of production can be arrived at. With all this discussion of deficiency payments, all this business of a cost squeeze and the difficulties confronting the farmer with respect to the kind of market in which he sells his goods and the situation he is faced with when he has to buy, it seems to me that in the face of the persistent demands by these farm organizations the government should provide a basis for a more accurate assessment of the factors involved in production costs than exists at the present time.

It will be no answer for the minister to ask why the government of which I was a member did not do that. That is the stock answer of the present government to every conceivable question. Perhaps it should have been done a long time ago; in fact I will qualify that and say that it should have been done, not "perhaps". But hon. gentlemen are now sitting on the ministerial benches, the farmers are asking for this kind of assessment, and in my opinion the persistent delay on the part of the administration in meeting this demand reflects the growing gap between the kind of assurances given by the administration for the purpose of winning an election and the resulting policies once the government has a secure period of tenure, happily ensconced in the seats of the mighty.

I suggest to the minister that he significantly left out of his quotations from the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada a very important paragraph. I should like to refer to the speech he made on January 23, 1959, particularly at page 255 of Hansard. The minister quoted from the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada, January, 1959 issue, as follows:

> Prices paid by farmers in 1958 for commodities and services used in production and for living were only slightly more than one per cent above those of 1957.

Having quoted this passage he went on to say:

> Therefore I feel it is quite apparent that the cost-price squeeze which was a cause of hardship to the farmer under the Liberal administration ever since 1951-52 has been finally halted and reversed.

Significantly, the minister left out of his quotation from the Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada the remainder of the paragraph from which the cited phrase was taken. That paragraph continues:

> Higher prices were recorded for all farm business items used in the index with the exception of building materials, feed and seed.

My hon. friend talks about my bureau of statistics. My statistics may be inadequate, but I do not leave out significant or relevant passages. The minister left out the following phrase:

> The upward trend in the index is expected to continue during the coming year.

Contrast that statement with the statement of the minister in the house on March 6. I have quoted not from his speech but from one of the publications of his own department, which says that "the upward trend in the index is expected to continue during the coming year."

Mr. Harkness: I was talking about facts. That is a prophecy for 1959. I was talking about 1958.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he was talking about 1958, but I do not think that changes the situation at all.

Mr. Harkness: It changes it a great deal.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A mere assertion is no argument. My hon. friend is only making his position untenable. I was going to say "ridiculous" but I will not.

Mr. Harkness: I was talking about facts.

The Chairman: Order. I have already mentioned that this chit-chat across the floor of the house will not be tolerated by the chair.

Mr. Argue: Ask the minister to leave. Let him take a coffee break.

The Chairman: I must ask hon. members to permit the hon. member for Essex East to carry on with his remarks. They will have ample time to make their own speeches. They cannot interrupt him in the most unparliamentary fashion they have been doing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank you once again, Mr. Chairman, for coming to my assistance, but I must assure you that these interventions on the part of the Minister of Agriculture really do not destroy my imperturbability. They do indicate the very uncomfortable position in which the minister finds himself when his argument, which heretofore has gone unchallenged, is challenged. He gave a picture to the country of economic prosperity that really suggested to many people that the real vision for the farmers had at last come to pass under the present government. I am challenging that Utopian vision, and I can understand why it is rather disconcerting and a little irritating to the minister to have to sit here and see his fine castle of achievement and that of the Prime Minister gradually being undermined and the foundations gradually being destroyed. But I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for coming to my assistance.

Mr. Harkness: Self-delusion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister's remarks on the cost of production can only be termed surprising in the light of what he said in his speech on March 6. As found on page 1683 of Hansard he said:

> We have heard, Mr. Chairman, in this chamber and in other places a great deal about the cost of production of agricultural commodities. It has been taken for granted by many people, I believe, speaking on agricultural matters that the farmer was not getting the cost of production so far as many commodities were concerned. It may be true that some farmers are not getting the cost of production at the present time, and it may be true as far as some commodities are concerned that the cost of production as a whole is not being secured. But by and large that statement, from the investigation we have been able to make, is not correct.

Just examine the statement I have just quoted. Place that alongside what the hon. gentleman said this morning in his interventions, and alongside some of the other things he said in his statement in chief on March 6, and see if the minister has not put himself in a very difficult position, to put it in the mildest possible terms.

Then the minister devotes a lot of time in this speech to indicate the tremendous practical difficulties in arriving at cost of production figures. He says on page 1685 of Hansard for March 6, 1959:

> Yet these cost of production figures show that the cost of feed in Alberta is much higher than it is in Ontario, an indication that it is almost impossible to arrive at anything which can be considered as scientifically accurate in these cost of production figures and studies.

Compare this statement with the statement we have that as a result of this government's action, the increase in the cost of production has been arrested.

Then later on page 1685 the minister says:

> One of the reasons I mention this matter is that there is such a widespread demand for cost of production studies to be carried on and for support prices to be related to the figures produced by these studies.

What I find extraordinary about this observation by the minister is that last year when we were debating the Agricultural Stabilization Act, so much importance was attached by the hon. gentleman to the cost of production. This insistence led to section 7 of the bill as introduced being amended to include the words "cost of production". As enacted, section 7, subsection 1 of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, chapter 22, 1957-58 statutes, reads as follows:

> The board shall from time to time in accordance with this act take such action as is necessary to stabilize the prices of agricultural commodities at their respective prescribed prices, and shall take such action and make such recommendations as are necessary to ensure that the prescribed prices for an agricultural commodity in effect from time to time shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of such commodity.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Speakman: I wonder if the hon. member who has just taken his seat would permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall be glad to answer this question if you, Mr. Chairman, will regard that as an intervention which would enable me to conclude my argument afterward.

The Chairman: The course advocated by the hon. gentleman cannot be permitted by the Chair, because we have—

Mr. Harkness: May I suggest that the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to conclude his remarks. When he is doing so may I ask the hon. member to read the next sentence after the one he read concerning what I said about the cost of production studies? In other words, the sentence I should like him to read is as follows:

> We have been doing our best and producing the most reliable figures we can.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that the sentence that my hon. friend wanted?

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am glad he added it. It only confirms what I have been saying. What my hon. friend has been arguing is that the cost of production rise has been arrested. I am not saying my hon. friend is not doing his best to minimize the mischief in the cost of production rise, but what I am saying is that my hon. friend has not arrested it.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member has misunderstood what I was saying. He had been making the complaint that we were not using the cost of production figures in arriving at the support price, and that is not the case as indicated by the sentence I just read.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does my hon. friend want to ask his question now?

Mr. Speakman: I shall wait until after you complete your remarks.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just wanted to answer my friend's intervention, and after that I could complete my maiden speech on agriculture.

Mr. Speakman: I did not interrupt during my hon. friend's speech, because I always follow him with very close attention.

The Chairman: The situation is becoming somewhat confused. The hon. member for Essex East had exhausted the time allotted to him to make his speech, and therefore it was the duty of the chair to tell him that his time had expired. Then there was an intervention which the hon. member for Essex East refused to permit. The Minister of Agriculture asked the committee to give permission to the hon. member to continue his remarks. I believe that to restore some order it would be preferable for the chair to ask the permission of hon. members for the hon. member for Essex East to continue his remarks. If this permission is granted, then possibly the hon. member could answer the various questions which members wish to ask and in addition perhaps satisfy the curiosity of the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the pleasure of the committee to permit the hon. member for Essex East to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thank the committee. I just wanted the hon. member for Wetaskiwin to understand that I was not complaining about the fact that he asked a question. When I used the word "intervention" I was not using that in any offensive sense, because the hon. gentleman is always very courteous.

I followed with interest this last interpolation by the Minister of Agriculture, and as I say I do not think it really adds anything one way or another either in support of his position or denying the main observation I have made. What I wanted to point out was that by the use of section 7, to which I have referred, in the stabilization act, and the words, "shall bear a fair relationship to the cost of production of such commodity", that in itself is an argument establishing the fact that the allegation of the administration that they arrested the rise of production costs is so fallacious as to not really warrant repetition in any statement by the minister on future occasions.

Now, the words used by the minister when introducing this amendment are worthy of note. I refer to Hansard for 1957-58, page 3827, where the minister said:

> There is an amendment to be moved to clause 7. It is as follows:
> That subclause (1) of clause 7 be amended by striking out the words "base price for" in lines 42 and 43, on page 3, and substituting therefor the words "cost of production of".

The minister went on, and this is a very significant observation which I hope will put at rest this understandable but fallacious boast of the minister that his government, and he as Minister of Agriculture, have been able to arrest the rise in the cost of production that threatens the farmers of Canada:

> The purpose of this amendment is to make it certain that the board, in setting prices, will take into full consideration the cost of production and relate it to the price prescribed for any commodity rather than the base price for such commodity. This is one of the amendments which was requested by the interprovincial farm unions. I am quite happy to change the words "base price for" to "cost of production of" so it will be abundantly clear that is the determining factor to be kept in mind in setting the prescribed support price for any commodity. I would ask my colleague the Minister of National Revenue to move that amendment.

These words of the minister ought to be repeated and compared with the assertion of the so-called achievement of the government in doing something that no other Minister of Agriculture and no other government in the world has ever done in the course of human history. I find it difficult to understand how the price fixed can bear a fair relationship to the cost of production. But as the minister says, and I quote again from his remarks from the same page:

> It is almost impossible to arrive at anything which can be considered as scientifically accurate in these cost of production figures and studies.

Now, if it cannot be scientifically determined in that way, how can my hon. friend make the statement he did on March 6, as a member of the government, that the Minister of Agriculture has been able as a result of the policies of his administration to arrest the rising cost of production?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the hon. member where he finds my remarks. I think the hon. member is confused over the cost of production and the cost-price squeeze. Of course he is confused over a lot of other things as well.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I notice that the minister says I am confused. All I can say is that if I am confused the minister certainly is more confused when one places these quotations alongside other quotations, especially in the same speech made by the minister. I will leave it to this house in the exercise of its impartial judgment to determine whether or not the statement of my hon. friend is correct.

May I conclude by saying this to the Minister of Agriculture. His present attitude and that of this administration with regard to agriculture is different from the position taken by him and by all those who spoke on behalf of the Conservative party in the two election campaigns. There was going to be a new deal for agriculture. The Prime Minister, in the action he took as leader of the opposition in the amendments which had to do with parity prices, and in the speeches which were made about the fact that agriculture was not sharing in the economic prosperity of the nation, gave the farmers of this country cause to believe that they had, in hon. gentlemen opposite, the instrument by which they would see a new heaven and a new earth. Now that has not materialized.

My hon. friend pointed to an improvement in agricultural prices. He compared one year only with the current year. The way to test the prosperity of any group is not by comparing 1958 and 1957 but by comparing the present time with a period of years which will generally indicate the situation in Canadian agriculture. If that is done it will not support the contention made by the hon. gentleman or made last night by the Minister of Finance, who said that farm income in Canada had improved by a net of 24 per cent. My hon. friend nods approval of this statement. He confirms that statement, which we are now examining, as perhaps a demonstration of the exaggerated capacity of this government. The statement of the Minister of Finance last night in the budget speech that the agricultural position of the country had improved by a net of 24 per cent will not be supported by the facts, and in the course of these estimates we hope to be able to so show.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture, then, to take what I have said in the spirit of constructive criticism, as the kind of criticism which he himself so generously and wisely, and sometimes so vigorously, gave to us when he was sitting on this side. I ask him to bear in mind the farmers not only of eastern Canada and western Canada but to think as well of the farmers of southwestern Ontario, who right now are concerned about the implementation of certain promises made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and who in the face of the coming season are worried about the cut in acreage, for instance in tomato production. As the hon. member for Middlesex West indicated the other day, they are concerned about whether or not it is true that United States producers are shipping into Canada canned goods which are later designated as Canadian, thereby enjoying the advantage of the international freight rate as opposed to the domestic freight rate with its 17 per cent increase. I ask the Minister of Agriculture to consider that situation and indicate unequivocally, whether or not the government of which he is a member is now embarking upon a policy which will eventually mean withdrawal from the program of price supports.

The hon. member has indicated that exaggerated or dangerous surpluses will encourage that situation. He did not say that two years ago, and his statement is being interpreted by farmers all over Canada as meaning that the government proposes either to reduce the percentage of price supports or to abandon the policy altogether. I trust the Minister of Agriculture will be able some time in the course of this debate to address himself to these points.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I think this is now the fourth day that item No. 1 of the agricultural estimates has been under debate, and perhaps I should say a few words in reply to some of the questions raised during the course of the debate. I believe this is a case in which the first shall be last and the last shall be first, because I want to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Essex East to begin with. I would like to commend him for the research he has apparently done in connection with agriculture. I am sure it will be extremely valuable to him and will give him a better idea than he has had heretofore in connection with agricultural problems.

I regret, however, that apparently his research has not been put to better use, because whilst he said he was offering constructive criticism, I think the speech he has just made could be used as a model for a political speech, a tub-thumping speech on one of the back concessions. Of that kind it was exceptionally good and I must compliment the hon. member on the excellence of his oratory and of his tub-thumping; but from the point of view of a critical examination of agriculture the speech just will not stand up. As a matter of fact it indicates how essentially little the hon. member has gained from his research into these matters.

I doubt, of course, whether he has actually gained as little knowledge as his speech would indicate, because the hon. member's ability is well known. I have great respect for it, and I am sure the reading and research he has done into the speeches which I and other people have made, into statistics and so forth regarding agriculture, has given him a much better picture than he has indicated to the house.

As far as some of the specific points which the hon. member for Essex East was talking about are concerned, he mentioned first of all the delegation which came down here from western Canada asking for deficiency payments on three past crops of grain. I would point out to him that two of the crops on which they were asking payment were grown and marketed during the period the Liberals were in power. The hon. member was implying that the government is responsible for that, but any deficiency they had was before the Liberals went out of office. What did the Liberals do? They did nothing in connection with that matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East) Yes, we did.

Mr. Argue: Both the same.

Mr. Harkness: It speaks ill of the hon. member for Essex East to try to set himself up as a champion of the members of this delegation, because as I said, two of three of the crops for which they demanded payment were grown during the administration of the government to which the hon. member belonged and were their responsibility.

The next thing the hon. member mentioned was that we said the support plan we were going to put into effect would be much better than anything the Liberals had, and the hon. member was doubting that this was the case. The support plan we put into effect under the stabilization act is a great deal better than anything the Liberals had, and covers more products. For example, during the past year we had 23 products under price support. During the whole eleven years in which the Liberals operated the old agricultural prices support act they supported only 15 commodities, and never more than five or six at any one time. That is one sort of arithmetical measure of the great increase in the scope of the stabilization legislation compared with the legislation of the government to which the hon. member belonged.

In addition, the levels at which these commodities have been supported have been relatively high so far as a number of commodities are concerned, particularly dairy products which command the highest prices enjoyed by dairy farmers anywhere in the world. I think the hon. gentleman should be very happy that this has been the situation, instead of trying to condemn what has been done. He said something about the support price for corn, and was asking a support price of $1.45. I should like to point out to him how unrealistic this is, and apparently how little knowledge he has of the situation when he asks for a support price of $1.45 for corn grown in Canada, because the support price in the United States this year is $1.12.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was referring to the request made by the corn producers themselves, and I was asking the minister to tell us his reaction to their representations.

Mr. Harkness: We have been in touch with the corn growers on this subject on numerous occasions, and we asked them to work out some definite basis on which a support price could be founded. The great difficulty arises because of varying degrees of dryness. If the corn is mechanically dried the value of the product for making corn flour and products of that sort is immediately decreased. It cannot be used for some of these purposes and, therefore, it is an extremely difficult thing to arrive at any basis on which a support price could be put into effect. That is the sole reason why there has been any difficulty or hold-up regarding the support price, and the farmers down there know that quite well.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They have a support price in the United States.

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, the same situation prevails.

Mr. Harkness: No, it does not.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is the same moisture problem.

Mr. Harkness: No. The hon. member also asked a question in connection with the support price for soybeans. It is well known that we do not follow the policy of saying some considerable time in advance that we are going to set a certain price. The price will be set after we have obtained all the information necessary from the growers and after we have received the advice of the advisory committee of the stabilization board on the matter. I am certainly not in a position to state what the support price on soybeans will be.

The hon. member went on with great dialetic to try to paint a picture of distress and desperation in the agricultural industry in eastern Canada. He said the situation was very poor, and that he was extremely concerned about it. If the hon. gentleman will look at the table I gave on March 6, which he will find on page 1679 of Hansard, he will see that gross income in Ontario and in Quebec was in each case considerably higher than the farmers have ever earned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What about net income?

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman made great play on the subject of net income. Well, the net income, as indicated by the Minister of Finance last night, was just about 24 per cent better than it was in 1957. The net income has increased a great deal more, proportionately, than the gross income. Gross income was up by 10 per cent over 1957, but net income increased by almost 24 per cent.

Mr. Peters: That is just a guess.

Mr. Harkness: That is the way hon. members opposite treat statistics they do not want to believe. The hon. member who has just interrupted, when he spoke in this committee some weeks ago, quoted some statistics which I think he took entirely out of his head, because they bore no relationship whatever to any figures put out by the dominion bureau of statistics or by the Department of Agriculture. These particular figures—and I will give the committee the figures for the previous years—were put out a few days ago by the research and development division of the dominion bureau of statistics for national accounts. They are contained in a very large book, and this compilation shows that the net income in 1958 was $1,202 million. In 1957 it was $968 million. This represents an increase in net income this year as compared with last year of 23.8 per cent.

If hon. members want to get this publication from the dominion bureau of statistics and look the figures up for themselves, they are quite able to do so. Any statistics I quote are reliable statistics, and I am glad to say where they come from, unlike some hon. members apposite. If people do not like these statistics, particularly members of the C.C.F. group, they immediately challenge them and say the statistics are wrong. There is no question but that the net income of farmers in 1958 was nearly 24 per cent higher than it was in 1957.

This brings me to the point which so concerned the hon. member for Essex East, namely that I have said that 1958 was a very much better year than 1957, and a better year than any of the preceding four years.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not say that. I thought I would get myself into a trap if I said that. I said "an unlimited period of years before 1958."

Mr. Harkness: I did not say that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know. I said that.

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. Harkness: If you said that, you were incorrect. What I said, as the hon. gentleman will see if he consults my speech, was that 1958 was a better year than any year since 1952-53. That is what I said, and I gave statistics which showed this was the case. At the time I spoke I did not have the net income in 1958 as compared with 1957, but those figures came out about three days ago, and they show that net income was increased by about 24 per cent.

That is the measure of how much better 1958 was than 1957. That was what I indicated in the speech I made, and instead of the hon. member for Essex East contending that I was completely wrong in saying that the cost-price squeeze had been halted, he might have acknowledged that I was absolutely right, as shown by the fact that the net income has increased to such an extent.

The hon. member for Essex East seemed to be badly confused, as I indicated in a brief interruption, between the cost of production and the cost-price squeeze. They are not the same thing, I should like to inform him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I clearly indicated that.

Mr. Harkness: What I was talking about with regard to the improvement in 1958 as compared with 1957 was the fact that the cost-price squeeze had been halted. I said nothing about the rise in the cost of production having been halted. As a matter of fact I said that the cost of goods and services used by farmers had gone up in 1958 by a little more than 1 per cent. I read that from an official publication, and it is the case. It was manifestly impossible for me to say that and at the same time say that we had halted the increase in the cost of production. What we did succeed in halting in 1958 was the cost-price squeeze.

I am unable to prophecy as to whether we will be able to do so in 1959. In 1958, however, the farmer's net income increased by about 24 per cent while his gross income increased by about 10 per cent over the previous year. With respect to prophecy, or what will happen in 1959, I must say it has nothing to do with what happened in 1958. By reading from the year-end review published by the Department of Agriculture various statements with regard to their prophecies for 1959, the hon. member for Essex East attempted to show that what I had said about 1958 was incorrect.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is that the current review? Could you give us the page?

Mr. Harkness: I am referring to page 5 of the current review published in January. That is what the hon. member read from.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought the hon. gentleman said I did not read from government publications.

Mr. Harkness: In this particular instance the hon. gentleman did. As a matter of fact the hon. gentleman said he would give us a page reference, and this was the only instance in which he was able to give us a page number. He did that with respect to this publication.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister must remember that I am just a novice.

Mr. Harkness: This, of course, was a great exception. I am sure the hon. member finds the Martin bureau of statistics much more favourable for his purposes than the publications of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Sometimes it is much more accurate.

Mr. Harkness: That has yet to be demonstrated, Mr. Chairman. We have seen no evidence of that as yet.

With reference to the cost of production, the hon. member made a great to-do about reading extracts from speeches I made last year when the stabilization bill was put through, and so forth. We have carried on a considerable number of cost of production studies. As a result of these studies we have attempted to determine as accurately as possible what is the cost of production for various commodities, and then on the basis of that information we have set the floor prices in relation to the cost of production, which is exactly what we said we would do when the stabilization act was introduced last year.

The hon. member for Essex East also said that I only compared 1958 with the preceding year. That is not the case. I compared it with 1957, 1956, 1955 and 1954. I pointed out that the gross income in 1958 was 10 per cent greater than in 1957, 7½ per cent greater than in 1956, 20 per cent greater than in 1955 and 20 per cent greater than in 1954. In other words the hon. member was guilty of making many inaccurate statements in referring to remarks made by me at various times in the past year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I said that I was wrong.

Mr. Harkness: As a result of this the conclusions he drew were equally fallacious. When he concluded his speech the hon. member was complaining, as far as I could make out, about the fact that we were letting in a certain number of canned fruits and vegetables.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was wondering if that were a fact.

Mr. Harkness: I was somewhat surprised at the hon. member complaining about the fact that the tariffs and importation bans on these things were not higher or more stringent. I thought he was a low tariff or free trade advocate, but today he complained that the tariffs were not higher or that these commodities were not being excluded altogether.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member misunderstood me, and I am sure he would not want to deliberately misunderstand my reference. I was simply inquiring of the minister if as a result of the findings of his staff he was able to ascertain whether or not the question put the other day by the hon. member for one of the Middlesex constituencies to the Minister of Trade and Commerce was as that hon. gentleman alleged. In this instance I was simply asking the Minister of Agriculture for some information. I assure him I was not making an argument.

Mr. Harkness: Certainly the implication was that we should increase these tariffs or keep these goods out. As a matter of fact the hon. member in the past made that request of me in connection with soya beans.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, that is right, and I make it now.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman wanted to have the tariff greatly increased, or he wanted an importation ban put on to keep them out altogether. In other words, I say he talks out of one side of his mouth when he is in certain localities, posing as a great exponent of free trade and low tariffs, but when it comes to talking to the farmers in his own part of the country he poses as an exponent of high tariffs, import controls, and so forth.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Don't be too hard on me.

Mr. Harkness: So much for the remarks made by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You spend too much time on me.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. gentleman says, perhaps I spend too much time on him, but he made so many completely inaccurate statements that I thought it worth while to set him on the right path in some of these matters since he is now going to be the chief agricultural critic of the official opposition.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would give me permission to leave the house. I have a luncheon appointment with his colleague the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. member knows, he is at perfect liberty at all times as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member can stay out as far as you are concerned, is that it?

Mr. Harkness: I wish to deal now with the remarks made by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Argue: Oh, good.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Assiniboia complained about the fact that I did not comment on vertical integration and a considerable number of other things the details of which I have forgotten at the moment.

An hon. Member: So has he.

Mr. Harkness: As someone comments, possibly he has too. As it was, I spoke for something over an hour. It is impossible in one speech to deal with all matters concerning agriculture. It would be possible to devote a half hour to a discussion of vertical integration alone. When introducing one's estimates it is not usual to delay them by speaking for three or four hours in connection with the large number of subjects that could come up in a department such as this. For that reason I believe complaints of this nature are poorly founded.

Examination of the hon. member's speech indicates that it was chiefly characterized by the fact that he made a great deal of noise and had very little sound material at hand. That is typical of a considerable number of the speeches made by the hon. member for Assiniboia, I am afraid.

Mr. Howard: If that is so, he is not the only one.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. gentleman complained, as did the hon. member for Essex East, that this government did not fulfil its election program for agriculture. I believe we have done so, and the results of the actions taken by this government are reflected in the increased returns which farmers received in 1958 through improvement in their net income position as well as their gross income position.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Harkness.]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o'clock I had been making some comments on the speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia about a month ago, I think, when those estimates first came up for discussion. I must say I do not like to make any invidious comparisons but I found the maiden speech of the hon. member for Essex East on agriculture much more interesting. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Essex East is back in his seat and we shall expect even better things from him now that he has got his maiden speech on this subject out of the way.

The hon. member for Assiniboia as well as the hon. member for Essex East and several other members have attempted to paint a picture that agriculture in Canada is in a much worse situation than it has ever been, and things along that line. The numerous statistics which I gave in introducing those estimates on March 6, and what I have already said today, I think prove conclusively that these statements are completely inaccurate and that actually in 1958 agriculture had a reasonably good year, certainly a much better year than it had for at least four of five years previously.

Several members who have spoken here, in addition to the two hon. members I have just mentioned, have said something about the delegation of western farmers which came down here, and have attempted to indicate that this delegation established the fact that the western farmers were all in absolutely desperate circumstances, the grain growers particularly. There are several of those people at least who have written in who are not in those circumstances. Just as an example of that I have a letter written by a man in Govan, Saskatchewan. He writes as follows:

> I have enclosed a copy of my net worth statements for 1955 and 1958—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is his name and address?

Mr. Harkness: His name is Sid Maber. I gave his address as Govan. The letter reads:

> I have enclosed a copy of my net worth statements for 1955 and 1958 which I hope may be of some use in pricking the big balloon for deficiency payments. I believe if the minister demanded such a statement from all those farmers visiting him next week, that there would be considerable squirming.
> From this statement you will see that I am a farmer, farming one section of average land, have no other enterprise but grain growing so work at my occupation only about six months of the year, have an annual net worth gain of approximately $6,700, or almost twice the annual income of the average pool elevator agent, or many other members of the community who are on salary, have gathered assets to the value of approximately $60,000 in 18 years, and lastly am eligible for most of the full amount of the proposed deficiency payments.

Now sir, this is no isolated case in this district, at least, as I can look around the neighbourhood and see dozens who are doing just as well and quite a few considerably better. In fact I am of the firm opinion that any farmer operating a section or more of land reasonably efficiently should be in no need of assistance of any kind, excepting crop failure. On the other hand, there are many smaller farmers on uneconomic units who are having difficulties.

And that is only too true. I continue:

But it would seem to me an absurdity to hand farmers such as myself the price of a new automobile from the public treasury.

Also any payments made as an increase on the price of wheat will most certainly have the effect of increasing the acreage sown. Now it has taken us five years to reduce our supplies to the point where we can see a chance of emptying our bins, and this has been done through increased sales, and acreage reduction through substitution of other crops as flax, rape, barley, oats, etc. Now an increase of 30 cents a bushel in the price of wheat will make an unfavourable ratio of about 60 cents a bushel for flax, and also rape, which simply means that considerably more wheat will be seeded, and up will go our carry-over again.

It seems to me, sir, that the government's agricultural program of crop insurance and more credit is a sound and sensible program which should put the assistance in the hands of those who do need it, and not in the hands of those like myself who are well able to buy their own cars.

Now, sir, it seems to me that it may be possible to keep the wheat surplus problem within reasonable proportions with a vigorous sales policy and by not stimulating wheat production by such acts as adding 30 cents a bushel to the price.

Also in closing may I state that I fully expect to have a substantial net worth gain over the next three years, barring natural disasters, even without deficiency payments.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Will the minister permit a question? Has the minister by any chance had those figures checked with the figures that are on file with the Minister of National Revenue to see whether this man reported those figures last year?

Mr. Harkness: No, I did not. I am not in the habit of doubting those people's words in connection with those matters.

Mr. Argue: What about the 30,000 who disagree with him?

Mr. Harkness: In any event, Mr. Chairman, I read the letter in order to indicate, particularly to members who came from other parts of the country, that there is a considerable number of farmers in western Canada who are not at starvation's door, as some members in this house would have one believe—

Mr. Argue: Based on one letter.

Mr. Harkness: —from the statements they have made. I do not base it on one letter. I have received a very large amount of mail in connection with this matter and I should like to tell my hon. friend that during the entire time that this campaign for so-called deficiency payments for western grain was on I was getting quite a few letters every day and about three out of four were against deficiency payments. That is about the way the proportion went. As a result, I knew there was a very large body of opinion in western Canada who did not support the contentions.

To continue, Mr. Chairman, I have a note here to thank the late Omer Gour, who was the member for Russell, for the very pleasant remarks he made concerning myself. I should like to take this opportunity and pay my respects to him and to his memory. Mr. Gour and I had been friendly ever since I came into the house, now nearly 15 years ago, and I always found him an exceptionally fine gentleman from every point of view. I regret very much that I was not able to be here the day following his death so that I might have paid my respects to him in the house at that time and have been able to attend his funeral. I was always very happy to get his remarks and his opinions on agricultural matters. The remarks that he made on agriculture in his last speech here were sound as usual.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would like to point out to the minister that we on this side of the house were all very grateful for the solicitous manner in which the minister expressed his regrets on the night of Mr. Gour's death.

Mr. Harkness: Thank you. I might say that in this speech Mr. Gour expressed some very sound ideas on vertical integration, amongst other matters.

The hon. member for Fort William spoke about the loan policy and its benefit to small farmers, as several other members have done. Since the hon. member for Timiskaming spoke on that subject this morning, all that I can say is, as all hon. members know, we have a farm credit bill which will be coming before the house fairly soon and which I think will greatly improve the credit facilities as far as our farm population is concerned.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Habel: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the minister be permitted to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort spoke particularly about rapeseed. The fact that the freight rate on rapeseed is as high as it is and thus precludes its use as widely as might otherwise be the case has been a matter of concern to me, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport. We have been taking what steps we can to try to secure a cheaper freight rate for rapeseed. I believe there was a small reduction in the rate not very long ago and we are still attempting to get an agreed charge which will put rapeseed in a more favourable position.

The hon. member for Beauce spoke about the increase in the number of loans made by the farm loan board since the present government came into power. Of course there has been an increase and a considerable one in the number of loans made. The hon. member took this as indicating that the farm situation was worse. Actually it is an indication that it is better. If hon. members will look at the record of loans made they will find that they always increase when times are good and decrease when times are bad. However, the main reason for the increase in the number of loans made by the board and in the amounts of such loans lies in the fact that we greatly improved the situation with respect to the amount that a man could borrow and the difficulty he had in getting a loan. We reduced those difficulties considerably and the result of the liberalization of the lending policy which we put into effect is that a considerable increase in the number of loans made has taken place.

The hon. member for Beauce and one or two others said something about imports of chickens from the United States and attempted to make out that this had caused a great decrease in the price of chickens in Canada and was largely responsible for the quite serious decline in the price of poultry during the past six to eight months particularly. Actually the reason for the fall in the price of poultry in Canada has been the extraordinarily rapid increase in the amount of poultry produced in this country. I have here a small table showing the production of chickens under four pounds, chickens over four pounds and fowl and turkeys in the years 1956, 1957 and 1958. As far as chickens under four pounds are concerned there were 103 million pounds produced in 1956 and 175 million pounds produced in 1958. With respect to chickens over four pounds there were 29,200,000 pounds produced in 1956 and 28,200,000 in 1958, or not much change. There were 49 million pounds of fowl produced in 1958 compared with 51 million pounds in 1956.

[The Chairman.]

Production of turkeys amounted to 60 million pounds in 1956 and 86 million pounds in 1958, quite a marked increase. As a matter of fact, the over-all increase in production from 1957 to 1958 was 67 million pounds, from 279 million to 346 million.

Imports actually have declined very considerably since 1956. In 1956, 22 million pounds of poultry of all kinds were imported into the country; 12,270,000 pounds in 1957; and 12,045,000 pounds in 1958. From these figures I think it is quite evident that the decrease in the price of poultry has been due not to imports from the United States, which in amount were very small compared with total Canadian production last year—12 million pounds compared with 346 million pounds—but to the very rapid increase in the production of poultry in this country.

I might say that ever since I have been Minister of Agriculture I have been warning the poultry producers that if they continue to increase their production at the rate they have been in the past two to three years they will produce themselves into a condition of bankruptcy. Unfortunately that is what has happened to some of them during the past few months. They are producing far more poultry than the country possibly can consume because, as I think people realize, the market for poultry is strictly limited. The hon. member for Timiskaming said that most of the people he sees coming out of supermarkets are taking out poultry and not red meat but actually the situation is that while we consumed 358 million pounds of poultry all told in 1958—I think that is the figure but it is given from memory and it may be wrong—we consumed over a billion pounds of beef alone and a larger quantity of pork—I would have to check the figure—to say nothing of lamb and so on.

In other words, there is only a certain market for poultry. People will not eat poultry every day. In fact, on the basis of experience they will not eat nearly as much of it as they will beef even though beef is three times the price at the present time.

Several members, including the hon. member for Charlevoix and the hon. member for Bellechasse, brought up the matter of maple sugar. I think the member for Beauce also referred to maple sugar. We have been quite prepared to put a support price under maple sugar if the producers want it. There are two main companies, really co-operative organizations, that deal in maple products in the province of Quebec. Their officials came to see us and after a full discussion concerning a support price for maple sugar and maple syrup they came to the conclusion that they would be much better off to take advantage of the provisions of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, and that is what they have done. They are using that act to finance their operations.

The member for Charlevoix and the member for Bellechasse both brought up the question of pulpwood. I regret very much the situation in which the farmers have found themselves with regard to the prices they receive for pulpwood. There is no doubt that the situation has been very unfair and wrong. I trust that the combines investigation which showed that there had been a combine on the part of some of the paper companies to buy this pulpwood at much lower prices than should have been paid for it will have the effect of improving materially the prices that the farmers will get and that there will be no more combining in order to hold prices down.

In addition, the pulpwood producers are forming a co-operative in the province of Quebec. In fact, I think it has already been formed. I believe that they will be able to bargain much more effectively through that agency and improve prices for pulpwood. The putting of pulpwood under price support is not a very practical proposition. To begin with, if you did put it under price support you would in effect be giving a subsidy to the big paper companies that do not need it. That would be the situation if you paid a straight subsidy or deficiency payment and if you attempted to buy it it would be a hopeless proposition. The government could not possibly be buying five cords of pulpwood here and three cords somewhere else all over the eastern part of Canada. We would have no way to bring it to a central location and no way of looking after it. It is just not a practical proposition to attempt to do that. That is why we have not been able to go ahead with a support price for pulpwood.

I might say that so far as this co-operative is concerned we are quite willing to make available to it the resources of the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act in order to assist in financing its operations.

I have made quite a number of notes on the various members' speeches but I believe that, in most cases, I have said something which would cover all the points. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee.

The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont was painting a terrible picture of the misery of the farmers which I think I have effectively dispelled as a myth, so far as a lot of the farmers are concerned. In connection with that, I should like to say that in the 1951 census, I think it was, the figures showed about 38 per cent of our farmers in Canada had a cash income of less than $1,200. The farm survey which the dominion bureau of statistics has just finished in western Canada, and has practically finished in other parts of Canada, will, we hope, give us accurate figures on the situation in regard to the income of farmers on the basis of the different groups and territorial locations. We will then have accurate information with which to work to put into effect a rural redevelopment or rural assistance scheme.

The point I want to make is that if you take out this 38 per cent, if that is still the figure as it was in 1951, and then you take the income of the remaining farmers, that is the farmers who have farms of sufficient size to be economic units, you will find a very different picture than the one you get by taking the total number of farmers in the census return and the total income and dividing one into the other. In other words, all the statistics relating to the average income of farmers are badly distorted because of the fact 38 per cent of these farmers had such a low cash income.

The hon. member for Jasper-Edson made particular reference to the research program and the necessity for research. We fully appreciate this fact and that is one of the reasons for the completion of the reorganization in the department, to enable us to streamline to some extent the research facilities and thus do a better job. I should like to voice my appreciation of the work that the hon. member for Jasper-Edson has done, and the interest he has taken in Johne's disease. It was, to a very large extent, due to his efforts and the information he brought to my attention, that we put a Johne's disease eradication program into effect on much the same basis as the tuberculosis and brucellosis programs. I say that without doubt the hon. member for Jasper-Edson has performed a very great service to agriculture in this regard by insisting that a Johne's disease eradication program be put into effect.

I believe these are the chief points I have to make with regard to what has been said by hon. members opposite. There is one other thing about which I should like to say something before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, and that is the misconception which appears to exist with regard to what deficiency payments are and particularly as they relate to the new hog program which I announced a short time ago. I do not know whether or not the hon. member for Assiniboia correctly understood how these deficiency payments work. At page 2133 of Hansard for March 23, 1959, just after I had announced that as soon as we could get the machinery devised we would support hog prices by a system of deficiency payments instead of by purchase, the hon. member said:

> Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to hog prices is most disappointing.

He went on to give quite a blast about this. Here, I have a few clippings from the newspapers which relate to this program. Here is one from the Moose Jaw Times-Herald which says, "Gleave Happy About Change". He is the president of the farmers' union of Saskatchewan. The report goes on to say that he commends the government for putting this program into effect. Here is another one from the Star-Phoenix which says, "Deficiency Payments for Hogs Good Step". The article is written by Professor Van Vliet, the head of the department of farm management at the University of Saskatchewan. Here is one from the Star-Phoenix of March 24 which says, "SFU Lauds Hog Price Decision". This shows how much the hon. member for Assiniboia appreciated what was being done.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps the announcement was not very clear.

Mr. Argue: It was a grave mistake. I wonder if I might ask the minister a question? Has he seen the comment of J. H. Wesson on this question?

Mr. Harkness: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I saw the comment made by Mr. Wesson and he is labouring under the same lack of knowledge as to just what deficiency payments are and just what they do as some other hon. members seem to be, as well as two or three editorial writers whom I shall mention.

At page 2133 of Hansard again the Leader of the Opposition said with reference to this program:

> They have now taken steps, in their wisdom, to correct that situation by introducing a new principle in respect of this product, that of deficiency payments. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, we on this side get some satisfaction out of the fact that the government has adopted the policy put forward in our national convention resolution, where we advocated deficiency payments when required.

The Leader of the Opposition is under the delusion that this is a new policy, and it is not a policy at all. Deficiency payments are one method, they are not a policy, of maintaining floor prices; that is what deficiency payments are. The so-called deficiency payments for which the western farmers asked are not deficiency payments, they are retroactive flat payments.

Mr. Argue: To maintain a floor.

Mr. Harkness: But they are not, properly speaking, deficiency payments. One of the reasons I refer to this is because people continually refer to these as deficiency payments and because there is confusion as to how they work.

Mr. Argue: Only on the government side of the house.

Mr. Harkness: As I say, the Leader of the Opposition was talking about this as though it were a new policy. I should like to point out that so far as we are concerned we have been using deficiency payments practically ever since we have been in power. We have been using deficiency payments to support the price of wool. We have just completed the sending out of the cheques to take care of a deficiency payment of 28 cents a pound on all the wool purchased in this country. We have been using deficiency payments to support the price of soybeans and, last year, to support the price of peaches. We will use them, if necessary, to support the price of Ontario wheat. In other words, deficiency payments are not a new thing, as the Leader of the Opposition seemed to think. We have been using them ever since we have been carrying on a support price program.

I should like to make it clear that deficiency payments, properly speaking, are one method only, just a method, of maintaining a predetermined floor price. When the stabilization act was under discussion I went over this time after time and I thought I made the thing very clear. I said there were three general methods, and they are provided for in the act, by which support prices for agricultural commodities could be provided. One method is by purchase, one by deficiency payments, and the third is flat payments, or any other method of that kind, which may be determined. We used these flat payments for British Columbia tomatoes last year.

Mr. McIlraith: Might I be permitted to ask the hon. minister a question at this point in his remarks? In referring to the statement of the Leader of the Opposition which he has just quoted from page 2133 of Hansard, does he not attach any importance to the words "in respect of this product"?

Mr. Harkness: The only importance I attach to that is that the Leader of the Opposition is making it clear he is referring to hogs.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Harkness: Yes; he is making it clear he is referring to hogs.

Mr. McIlraith: But what is the principle in relation to hogs?

Mr. Harkness: What I read indicates the fact that he did not understand what deficiency payments are.

Mr. McIlraith: I think it proves the opposite.

Mr. Harkness: And he did not understand that we had used them for the last year and a half quite freely.

Mr. McIlraith: In respect to hogs.

Mr. Harkness: I might say that this misconception is shared by quite a number of editorial writers. There is an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen for April 6 talking about the floor on hogs, and so forth, and it says, amongst other things:

> Under a support price, farmers know in advance the minimum return they can expect and can plan their program accordingly. If the floors are attractive, they become a powerful incentive to production. Under the deficiency payments scheme they don't know where they stand until after the product has been marketed—

Well, this is completely incorrect as regards deficiency payment for hogs. We have announced a definite floor price and we are going to use the method of deficiency payments to maintain that price rather than the method of purchase. As I said, the writer of this editorial just does not understand the situation and what is meant by a deficiency payment, as properly used in this sense.

We have the same thing in the Financial Post of April 4, 1959. In an editorial dealing with the change in the method of supporting the price of hogs, the writer complains bitterly over the Minister of Agriculture practising discrimination and cutting out the big farmer and integrated operator, thus making them first and second class farmers. But it is clear that the situation is not understood. The article ends up by saying:

> Surplus pork stocks in storage, already nearly 200 per cent higher than a year ago, are bound to increase and so will the marketing headache for the government.

The whole idea of this change in operation is that the government will not buy pork, and will not therefore have any marketing headaches. The marketing will be in the hands of the normal trade, where I presume the editor of the Financial Post would like to see it, because they are always saying that the free play of the market should determine the price. That is what the situation will be when the new plan goes into effect. We will not be doing any marketing of pork at all We will pay the farmer the difference between what he gets in the market place and the price support announced.

Mr. Argue: Would the Minister of Agriculture permit a question to clarify the policy of the government? Has the department yet decided the number of hogs per farm on which a deficiency payment could be made? In other words, what will be the ceiling in a year, or whatever the period might be?

Mr. Harkness: No, Mr. Chairman. As I said when I made this announcement, I anticipated it would take a few months for us to gather the data necessary to make the determination in regard to that matter and also to be able to devise a system which would be effective in bringing about the result which we have in mind.

Mr. Argue: The ceiling is very important.

Mr. Harkness: I must apologize to members of the committee for having taken so much of their time. My excuse is that after some four days of comments by other members there has really been quite a lot to reply to.

Mr. Milligan: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity of making a few remarks in connection with agriculture and to express my thoughts as a farmer myself. What I have to say today will be in connection with agriculture as I see the problem facing us right across Canada. I do not think we can divide agricultural problems between east and west or any other way, because I feel that anything which is done for anyone in western Canada, in the maritimes or in Ontario assists everyone connected with agriculture. I think we all realize today that farming always has been a low income, high cost, high risk industry. I think the Minister of Agriculture has a very difficult task particularly at this time, because he has accepted the position as Minister of Agriculture at a period when agricultural incomes are at a relatively low level.

I am certainly very proud to hear the minister say that 1958 was the highest income year for agriculture since 1953. I feel that it is due to the efforts he has put forth in that connection. I do not want to leave any misinterpretation in hon. members' minds or lead anybody to think that agriculture has no problems and we are really in a very prosperous position in saying that 1958 was a very high income year. But it certainly is an indication of the efforts of the minister and the government and shows us what they are trying to do to bring agriculture back into its proper position as compared with other industries. It is going to take a number of years to do this.

We have had a lot of criticism from other groups, particularly the consumer groups, who do not realize the position agriculture is in and feel that we are increasing the cost of living. Those engaged in industry realize the picture of the manufacturing industry, which is producing through 500,000 manufacturing plants without any control over them as to their output related to the ability of the market to absorb, and I think urban people should better realize the position that the farmer, the minister and the government are in in order to stabilize this particular industry. Some time ago I made a few remarks at a meeting within my own constituency, and I mentioned the position that agriculture was in. I gave some credit to the support price program we had and the stabilization bill, and in the very next issue of our home paper I was very strongly criticized for the remarks I had made, particularly with regard to the stabilization program. The editorial went on to say:

> The prices of agricultural products, like the prices of any other products, should be based on the consumers' needs—

Then it added:

> Thus taxpayers get it coming and going. They pay for the cost of price stabilization programs and then they have to pay artificially-inflated prices for the foods they need and which are being produced in over-abundance.

That is the kind of misconception you can find in the press of those people not connected with agriculture. Therefore I hope we can in some way point out to other people that we have a terrific problem.

I wonder if we could just consider the position of agriculture at the present time and the trend we are facing. In the long term, the prospects for agriculture appear to be very good due to the fact that the domestic demand for food is increasing from year to year because of the increase in population. That is all to the good. A second encouraging factor is the high general level of consumer purchasing power which promises to continue for a long while. I should like in this connection to refer to an editorial which appeared in one of the newspapers some time ago. In connection with the purchasing power of the consumer's dollar, that article said that in 1929 an hour's take-home pay of a factory worker would buy five and a half loaves of bread, or three and a half quarts of milk. Today, one hour's pay will buy ten loaves of bread, or seven and a half quarts of milk. This is true in respect of almost all our foods—an hour's work does buy twice as much food as it did a generation ago.

A second point I should like to make is that we have been very fortunate in experiencing such a strong demand for some farm products from the United States, notably for beef. We are very pleased to have had a good export market for beef cattle in the United States on account of some shortages experienced south of the border, and this has placed the beef cattle section of the industry in a prosperous position. The same is true with regard to hogs, due to the splendid quality of the hogs we are producing in this country. Then, again, there are the 22 products which have been placed under the support program, and this has certainly improved the stability of the prices of those particular products. In addition, there has been an expansion of the home market on account of the controls that have been placed by this government on the imports of certain food products which had been coming in from other countries. I think that everyone engaged in farming and in agriculture appreciates the action which the government has taken in this direction.

Now let us take a look at what we are up against, and the trend of agriculture in general. I think we must realize that the grain economy of western Canada is in an unsatisfactory position and that the purchasing power of the western farmer is unduly depressed. It seems to me that grain is a basic and major factor in the whole Canadian agricultural economy, and that the prospects for agricuture generally cannot be good unless measures are taken to provide for a substantial improvement in the income and status of the grain growers in western Canada. Otherwise, the western grain grower will be forced to diversify his production by raising livestock and so on, and we will find ourselves in more serious trouble than we are at the present time. However, I think that in years to come there will be room for increased livestock production in western Canada without the risk of flooding our markets.

I want to say a word about the western delegation that came down to Ottawa recently. I was very happy to be a farmer when I saw that delegation come into the city. Much criticism has been expressed about farmers marching to Ottawa, but I feel that farmers should be in the same position as any other group and that if they wish to come to governments and present a case they have every right to do so. I am sure that the western growers, regardless of any decision the minister might make, will accept that decision gracefully; just as gracefully as they came to Ottawa and presented their brief.

There seems to be some difference of opinion among a number of hon. members regarding the type of support which should be given to western grain growers, and there has been some opposition to deficiency payments. I, myself, do not think the western farmer is much concerned how the price of grain is brought up to a level which will enable him to meet his cost of production as long as he gets some kind of support. It is my impression that acreage payments were well received last year. The fact that they were considered insufficiently large was one of the reasons why they came to Ottawa and asked for deficiency payments. I am sure that some method other than deficiency payments would be well received.

We are faced, in the agricultural industry, with some surpluses. If we obtain our floor prices and incentive prices we are certainly faced with a prospect of an accumulation of stocks which would result in the lowering of the general price level and, in consequence, the lowering of price support. I think the time has come when we must do some serious thinking along these lines, because the lowering of the prices of some of these farm products will lead to inability to control production. A farmer's expenses are set. He is bound to meet his expenses, and if he cannot meet them by producing on a farm stocked with ten cows and 50 hogs, say, he is certainly going to buy more livestock and increase his production in order to increase his income to enable him to cover his cost of production.

I should like to say a word about the announcement made by the minister in connection with the floor price on hogs. I think his statement was very sound and I was very glad to hear him say that he intended to have a study made of deficiency payments to bona fide producers.

One of the facts we must face today is the increase of vertical integration and contract feeding. Unless something is done to control this trend a great many farmers will be put out of business, especially the small farmers, those who own a family farm of 200 or 250 acres. I think this kind of competition is most unfair, because there are a great many feed dealers and feed companies which are now feeding hogs and which are able to obtain their grain and concentrates at wholesale prices. I say this is most unfair competition, because the difference between the wholesale price and the price which the farmer has to pay for his feed provides enough profit in itself for anyone engaged in agriculture.

Some people have tried to tell us that agriculture is in a very prosperous condition, but a good indication of the trend is the fact that so many people are leaving the farms and moving into industry. During the past 10 years between 1948 and 1958 the farm labour force dropped from 1,227,000 to 774,000, a decline of 37 per cent. It may be that some of this decline is due to mechanization and to the inability of agriculture to match the wage levels offered by industry.

There has been a lot of criticism about the inefficiency of farmers, but I think that has been merely an excuse by those far away from agriculture who want to imply that the industry can improve its own position. I do not think that any industry has improved its efficiency so greatly or has made so many changes in the last ten years as has agriculture. We are probably still lagging behind as compared with some branches of industry, but to my way of thinking agriculture has now become a very efficient undertaking.

As far as farm units are concerned, I think we have lost as many as we should lose at the present time. Certainly, there were some units which were too small to be efficient. Today, however, the people who worked on those units might be better off than those engaged in farming some of the medium-sized units, because they, at least, have been able to get jobs in industry and still have their families running the farms.

I noticed in the newspapers sometime ago an account of some remarks made by Professor Donnelly in connection with the farmers marching on Ottawa. He is reported as having said that they might better do more thinking than marching.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. member have reference to Professor S. Donnelly of Manitoba?

Mr. Milligan: Yes. I do not think there is a group in this country that does more serious thinking before making demands than the group engaged in agriculture. It has been my experience in connection with farm organizations over the years that in their thinking every consideration was given to the consumer, the effect of their requests on industry and other sectors of the economy before any request was stated or any action taken to improve the condition of agriculture. If other groups would give the same kind of consideration before making their demands our economy would be in a much different position today. Perhaps the farmers have gone too far in taking into consideration the position of other people before seeking to improve their own lot.

Recently an increase in the price of wheat was announced. A few days later it was announced that the price of bread would be increased by 1 cent. That is a good indication of what happens in industry when the costs of production go up. Although the costs of production of those engaged in agriculture have been increasing over the years the farmers are ridiculed and told that they must be more efficient in order to produce at the same level as before. The following comment was taken from the Co-Operative News, issue No. 5:

> If Canadian farmers gave their wheat away free of charge, a loaf of bread that normally sells for about 19 cents would still cost 15.6 cents. A breakdown on the cost of a loaf of bread in Canada shows the farmer got 3.2 cents, the miller, .6 cents, baker and wholesaler 10.5 cents, retailer 3.1 cents, and others 1.4 cents.

There are many parts of the agricultural industry in need of support and assistance. I was happy to hear the Minister of Finance announce last night that some consideration would be given to protection for the fruit and vegetable industry which certainly needs protection. In my own riding seven canning factories have closed their doors in the last two years. This has meant that the people in the area have had to go into some other line of production. These factories did not close down because of inefficient operation or because there were too many canning factories. They were closed because of the importation of products from abroad that can be sold in Canada at prices cheaper than those for which they can be produced in this country. This occurred in various parts of Ontario and caused a serious problem in many areas. We heartily welcomed the announcement that some consideration would be given to this matter.

The dairy farmers are facing problems as well. They have experienced some surpluses but I believe the surplus position in the dairy industry is only about two per cent which is not alarming in my opinion and it will probably right itself. I believe the dairy people themselves should give further study and thought to their position. They should work toward a pooling program through which they could assist themselves to a greater extent than has been the case to date. I have been talking about this in farm organizations for the past ten years and my ideas have received the support of many people. If we had a pooling of all our dairy products at this time there would be no problem in the industry. The dairy farmers could produce for a market capable of absorbing the produce.

I do not think that any farmer in Canada today wants assistance from any government. What the farmer wants is an opportunity to compete and place himself in the same position as those engaged in other industries in our economy. We have heard much criticism of the subsidies given to agriculture. I would point out that industry has been protected through protective tariffs for years. I endorse that because I feel that if industries did not have some protection many plants would close down because of competition from other countries. Our standard of living is such that we cannot effectively compete with countries that have a considerably lower standard. I do not think anyone in Canada would wish to see our standard lowered. Those engaged in agriculture are deserving of the same opportunities and protection given to other segments of our economy.

We should be very concerned about the family farm. To my way of thinking it is one of the most important aspects of our rural communities. A United States congressman, Clifford Hope, was recently reported in the press as saying:

> The strength of our rural communities will always depend upon the strength of our farm families. Thus all of our efforts, government or private, should be directed toward building up the family-type of farm. I believe that the strength of this country rests more than any other place on the economic, moral and spiritual condition of the people on our farms. If this is true, it imposes a tremendous responsibility on all of us.

I agree that each of us, regardless of where we sit in this house and regardless of the position we hold, must acknowledge that agriculture has its rightful place in the economy of this country and accept the responsibilities attendant on this knowledge.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased that the Minister of Agriculture today was followed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox. It provided an excellent contrast. I enjoyed hearing the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox who both in this house and in the committee on agriculture and colonization has demonstrated on many occasions his complete and comprehensive knowledge of farm problems, particularly as they apply in the province of Ontario. It was gratifying to note that some of the opinions expressed by the Minister of Agriculture were not fully shared by all hon. members on the government side of the house.

The picture painted by the minister and by certain other spokesmen on the government side gives cause for considerable concern. Within the period of the last two months various delegations representing farm organizations have visited Ottawa including the interprovincial farm union council, the federation of agriculture, the Ontario farmers union, representatives of the milk producers, and others. Most of the briefs they have presented have been well documented and certainly they tended to depict a situation somewhat different from that depicted today by the minister. Invariably these briefs were supported by an impressive array of statistics and figures and were presented by extremely capable men. The farm unions have been most fortunate over the years in being able to develop leaders who can present their cases with great clarity and sincerity.

If we were to believe what the minister said today in describing the position of agriculture we could only assume that the presentations made by the various organizations to which I have referred were deliberate attempts to mislead all hon. members of this house. There is no other assumption that we can draw if we are to believe the minister, and various speakers backed up his arguments. If we are to believe one we must disbelieve the other.

Another thing that seems very strange, Mr. Chairman—and again the minister produced some material to back it up—is the letters that the western members have been receiving from people in their constituencies. I have spoken to numerous Conservative members from western Canada and they have said approximately the same thing as the minister said today, namely the letters which they have received from their constituents against this idea of deficiency payments have outnumbered the ones in favour by anywhere from four to one which the minister used today, to as high as 10 to one, which was mentioned by one hon. member.

When the delegation was down from western Canada many of its members stopped by my office, introduced themselves, discussed the problems and answered questions and so forth. To numerous members of the delegation I put this very question, how can a delegation have such unanimous support apparently across the three provinces and yet the letters which have been received by the members of parliament from those provinces have run as high as 10 to one against the very thing that the delegation is down here to support? They were quite concerned about that and some of them raised something to which some credence could be given. Some of them suspected that there was an active organization busy to ensure that western members would receive letters along those lines. I do not know whether that is so or not, but it is certainly the only solution we can offer to this apparently insoluble problem, where we have almost a complete slate of government members from western Canada saying one thing and a well conducted delegation of 1,100 western farmers saying something different altogether. They said they possibly had neglected their own duties and had not kept their own members properly informed.

With reference to the remarks made by the minister when he rightly pointed out to the members of the official opposition that of the three years deficiency payments for which it is suggested that the farmers should receive some consideration, two of them belong completely to the former Liberal government. That may be quite true, but like the Stanley Cup hockey game which we watched last night, the score may be two to one for the Liberals now but it may be tied up very shortly because time is passing very swiftly and if nothing more is done, and apparently nothing more is contemplated than has been done in the past, the score will soon be tied at two-two and this government will have two more years in office and the score may be four to two before there is any hope of anything being done about this matter. I would suggest that the government forget about those two years which belong to the former Liberal government. If they do not want to take any responsibility for them, surely they should be able to take the responsibility for the one year for which they are responsible in regard to this problem.

This whole thing, Mr. Chairman, points to only one conclusion, namely the very severe state of confusion which is so apparent both in this house and in the minds of the Canadian people as to just what is the situation in the agriculture industry today. There are possibly many reasons for this confusion. Certainly, one of the most important factors leading to the confusion is the sad discrepancy between the performance of this government and its promises which were made during the last two election campaigns. Another thing which is almost equally bad has already been mentioned, namely the differences in the remarks made by members particularly from the prairie provinces and the farm delegations from those same areas. But there is possibly another reason for this confusion and it may be contained within the minister himself. It may be explained possibly by a little story which has been making the rounds of the various Legion halls in this country in the last while. This goes back to the early days of the last war, at which time the minister was the commanding officer of an artillery unit, according to the story, down in the famous potato-growing province of New Brunswick. This was about the time when the very popular and patriotic thing to do in this country was for everybody to "grow for Britain." The units of the army were encouraged to set a good example to the public and this particular battery of artillery undertook to do so.

Now, sir, the people of New Brunswick, of all people in Canada, should know how to grow potatoes; but apparently that was not good enough for the commanding officer. He insisted on the potatoes being planted western style. Unfortunately, it turned out that they were not planted; they were buried. Through the process of evolution that commanding officer is now our Minister of Agriculture. It is to be hoped, Mr. Chairman, that when the new secretaries are appointed the first one will be a good potato grower from New Brunswick so that we can get that particular aspect of agriculture straightened out. Then, we might suggest that he be rotated with experts in other fields.

One thing that has bothered me quite considerably about some of the remarks made in regard to the delegation from the west is that there has been a tendency to make attacks on the person of the head of the wheat pool, Mr. Wesson; in fact, attacks on the wheat pool itself. The inference is that through the efforts of Mr. Wesson and the wheat pool as a whole something has been put over the western farmers and they have been enticed into doing something which was very foolish, and so forth and so on.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Do you really believe that?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Do I believe that? Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to know just what to believe, owing to the welter of evidence which has been produced on both sides of this particular argument. But the important point, Mr. Chairman, is the inherent danger in this particular aspect of the problem. It smacks entirely too much of the attack we have seen on labour throughout this country in the last few years. An attempt has been made to make the Canadian people believe that every union leader is a Hoffa. It is always by implication, it is always about somebody else but it is always the same thing. I am a bit concerned that we are seeing slight elements of the same type of campaign with regard to the wheat pool and its leader, Mr. Wesson. What we should remember is that 1,100 very able western delegates came to Ottawa, many of whom proved on different occasions that they were very capable speakers, and they chose Mr. Wesson as their spokesman. Consequently we can only asume that he had their confidence.

There is only one other matter with which I should like to deal today in my few remarks at this stage and that is the figure of 24 per cent increase in net earnings mentioned by the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think he did it intentionally but the minister threw out this 24 per cent figure at the same time as he was giving some statistics. The 24 per cent certainly was not a statistic. I think "guesstimate" is a much better way to describe it.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member wants to make an incorrect statement. This statistic is a statistic and I gave the source of it. It was put out by the dominion bureau of statistics only a few days ago. I also gave the same statistic for last year as contained in the same document. It is a D.B.S. figure.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In any event, Mr. Chairman, before we can swallow the 24 per cent completely I think it should be related a little more clearly to just what the situation is in the farming industry in Ontario. Various speakers who have dealt with farm problems have pointed out how big a factor vertical integration is coming to be in the province of Ontario and in other provinces as well, particularly with regard to the broiler industry, the poultry industry, and it is also spreading into other sectors of the economy. There was one thing I did not notice at the time and possibly I should have asked a question then. Does the 24 per cent apply to the farmers' net income or to the net income of the industry as a whole?

Mr. Harkness: Net income of farm operators.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I would assume that the category, "farm operator" would also include some of the large corporations which have gone into the contract farming business. Before we can get a clear picture, before we can assume that the farmers did indeed improve their position as much last year as the minister seemed to indicate, I think we have to have a breakdown of the 24 per cent, if that is the exact figure, to see how much actually accrued to farmers and how much accrued to corporations which have gone into the farming business.

Mr. Harkness: The exact figure is 23.8.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Twenty-four is a good, approximate figure to use. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox and other members as well dealt with the situation of the family farm. I think family farms go a little deeper than the name suggests. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, it has been a way of life in this country, and if we are to believe the briefs presented by various farm organizations there is very little time left for the government to decide whether or not that way of life is worth preserving. If less time were spent in trying to blame whatever problems respecting agriculture facing the government on the previous administration and more time and honest effort were spent in trying to face up to the present problems and do something about them, the government might be worthy of the confidence placed in it in March of last year.

Mr. Campbell (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege to have this opportunity to rise and speak on a number of problems which I am very pleased to say are not problems of surplus production. I have listened with great concern at a number of meetings held in this city recently in connection with the problems of agriculture and most of the problems have centered around the surplus production of various things. Suggestions have been made at these meetings as to what would be the best cure for these problems. Most of the suggestions had to do with the cutting of prices and it was also felt that surpluses should be curtailed to some extent at least in order to remedy the situation.

I should like to emphasize particularly that where there is a possibility that the government may want to curtail the prices of certain commodities I feel that the government should consider increasing the prices of other commodities that are not in surplus production as a means of balancing and offering some special incentive to the farmers to curtail the production of those things that are in surplus and go into the production of things that are not in surplus and be compensated fairly for the change. I believe that is necessary in order to keep the farm economy in fair balance and also to provide incentives, as I have suggested, for the farmers to change to the production of other things.

In this connection I appreciate very much the privilege of being able to take advantage of the opportunity at this stage in the discussion of these estimates to speak on a matter that I have brought to the attention of the house on a number of other occasions. I refer particularly to the production of corn, soya beans and sugar beets because these products are needed and are not in surplus production. In my opinion, indirectly it will be to the advantage of a number of other phases of agriculture to give consideration to these crops even though the whole of the country is not directly concerned with their production because if more land is devoted to the production of things that are needed it will take land out of the production of other things that are not needed. In that way all parts of the country will benefit indirectly, if not directly.

I should like to review for a few moments the benefit from the progress that has been made in the last year and also to try to point out where it would be to the mutual interest of other branches of agriculture to lend support to this idea. In speaking on this matter when the stabilization act was passed in this house I did state that I did not expect it to cure all the ills of agriculture. I also stated that I felt it would require men with sympathetic understanding and sound judgment, as well as a sense of fairness, in the administration of the act in order to make it succeed. The act has been in operation for some time now and I feel that much good has come out of it, as revealed by the report the minister recently made to this house on farm income.

I have here a press report of comments made recently by the minister and it is headed, "Grow What Public Wants, Harkness Warns". It reads:

> Hon. Douglas Harkness, federal agriculture minister, speaking in the commons, points out: First, the need of development of new outlets; second, a warning to farmers to tailor their production to meet Canadian and known export requirements.

I feel that that comment has some merit. I find myself in a position where I must agree that it is only fair to encourage the production of things that are needed, and if this means the curtailment of things that are not needed then encouragement should be given to the things that are needed to compensate the farmer for the drop in the price of the things that are curtailed.

I should like to deal specifically for a few moments with the matter of the production of corn. In this connection, I should like to read an extract from a letter from Mr. Thomas Green, secretary of the commercial corn growers. In part it says:

> Since corn is a commodity that is in deficiency production in Canada, in order to fill our domestic requirements, we must import from the United States around twelve million bushels. There is no reason why, with a little help from the government, that the price of corn could not be more favourable to the Ontario corn grower.

It is true that the corn growers are not organized. It is true also that there is an effort being made to organize them so that they will be in a position to present a more comprehensive report of their activities and, as has been suggested earlier by the minister, put themselves in a position where they can produce a more uniform product from the standpoint of moisture, grade and so on. However, I do hope the government will encourage them, not only to get themselves into that position but also to assist them in bringing their product to the point where it will supply the needs of the country.

I should like to say a few words especially on the production of soybeans. I have in my hand a copy of a news article concerning a meeting which was held in Chatham, Ontario, and at which Mr. K. A. Standing, secretary of the Ontario soybean producers' marketing board told the farmers that soybean oil and meal consumption in Canada was twice the production of these by-products. The article states:

> Mr. Standing said that the soybean industry in Canada can handle double the amount now produced.
> The soybean industry in Canada is confined mostly to the province of Ontario because of the closeness of markets for their by-products and also their source of supply.
> Beans produced in the United States come into Canada on a duty-free basis causing considerable competition with Canadian soybean by-products.

I should like to quote from another article which appeared in the press. This says:

Fears that western Ontario soybean growers may switch to corn and other cash crops unless deficiency payments on beans are raised were expressed at the annual meeting of the Lambton county soybean growers' association here today.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I should like to quote from an address by the Minister of Agriculture in which he says:

I believe there has to be a much more general realization on the part of consumers generally, and that of city dwellers particularly, that the farmer is entitled to increased returns to the same extent as workers in other industries. At the present time an hour's labour secures more food than, I believe, at any other time in our history, and several times as much as an hour's labour in most other countries. Unfortunately this comparatively low cost of food has been, to some extent at least, at the expense of the Canadian farmer.

I should like to say a few words also in support of the suggestion that the government should continue, and if possible increase, the encouragement that has been given to the production of sugar beets. I believe sugar beet production was raised last year as a result of this encouragement. I may not be exactly correct in this, but I believe that in 1957 there were some 14,000-odd acres grown in southwestern Ontario, and as a result of the encouragement given that acreage was raised to over 30,000. I believe that it is quite possible that the acreage could be raised to over 40,000 acres. In fact, I believe the sugar companies are willing and are out now negotiating contracts in the hope that they will get 40,000 acres. I believe the incentive that was given by the action of the government in guaranteeing $13 a ton for sugar beets had a very beneficial effect, not only in connection with the production of sugar beets but also in helping to relieve the overproduction of other things which would have been grown had that acreage not gone into the production of sugar beets. I do feel, therefore, that the government can take some credit for what they did in that connection.

I should like at this time to refer to a statement I made, and which is recorded on page 959 of Hansard for November 11, 1957. It reads:

I should like to say a few words in connection with soybeans. I understand there is a tariff or duty of $1.20 per bushel against Canadian soybeans entering the United States while United States soybeans enter Canada duty free. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian regulations were balanced so as to provide the same protection for the Canadian producer as has been maintained for the United States producer it would change the position of the soybean producers of this country from that of a poorly paid business to one which would pay well. At the same time it would encourage the production of more soybeans which the figures show are needed in Canada. At the same time I feel quite sure this would draw land out of the production of other things which it would seem are being overproduced at the present time.

[Mr. Campbell (Lambton-Kent).]

Mr. Chairman, my opinion is still the same on that matter. To sum up, may I suggest that I feel it is not only possible but desirable to give encouragement by way of price supports to these things, namely corn, soybeans and sugar beets. If we do this it will tend to bring about a change on the part of those farmers who are producing other things in excess of the needs of the people of this country. I believe that the sugar beet growers of western Ontario, if given a bit more support, would increase their acreage by 10,000 acres. This would be of mutual benefit to both producers and manufacturers, yet would come far short of supplying the Canadian need for sugar. I also believe that if sufficient protection and remuneration were assured the producers of soybeans, a probable 200,000 acres would be required to produce sufficient of this crop to fill our domestic need. In addition I believe that if sufficient protection and remuneration were provided for the corn producers to encourage them to produce the requirements of our country for corn, as outlined by Mr. Green, the secretary of the commercial corn growers in the letter I have just read, another possible 200,000 acres could be devoted to the production of corn.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you will readily recognize the effect that this would have by diverting approximately 410,000 acres of the highest producing land we have in southwestern Ontario from the production of cattle, grain, hogs, poultry and other things which are now in direct competition with other farmers in other parts of Canada. The effect this would have on those other parts I am sure you will agree would be beneficial. I suggest that if this land were producing other things which are admittedly needed in Canada, it would benefit by many millions of dollars those other parts of Canada that are apparently producing in excess of the people's needs.

For the reasons I have outlined I would request the government, and the minister in particular, to give the most sympathetic consideration to these proposals: First, that corn be declared a designated product under the stabilization act and made eligible for price support; second, that corn, soybeans and sugar beets be given a continuing assurance of help such as would encourage and justify things which are in surplus to our needs, and tend to bring the production of these three crops up to the place where they will fill the needs of the people. This policy, I suggest, would be of mutual benefit to many branches of agriculture, and whatever contribution, if any, was made by the people as a whole would be for something for which there was a proven need.

Mr. Best: Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk briefly today on these agricultural estimates about the subject of hogs. This is, and has been, a traditional industry in Canada and of great importance, as all hon. members know. It is one which today, to my mind, is in a state of considerable flux, and there are many problems and many directions in which it is possible to travel, and we are seeking solutions. I might say that the figures for the industry as a whole have indicated in past years, in 1958 for example, that this is a very significant proportion of our total agricultural industry, and it has of course, particularly in past years, played an important part in our agricultural export market.

The matters which I want to bring up today specifically are those which have been brought to my attention by various associations and individuals across Canada. First, they involve the government premium system as it now exists and the possibility, and indeed the strong desire of many people, that a greater differentiation should be made between the A and B-1 grades of hogs. In addition, as a hog producer I realize that our record of performance or advanced registry stations are to a certain extent crowded in Canada. My own specific knowledge concerns mainly the one at Waterloo, Ontario, which has experienced very severe crowding, particularly in the last few years. Third, I would like to emphasize the point that our traditional British markets may be beckoning again, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture and his department are examining this possibility with considerable interest. It may fall as well, partially at least, to the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and possibly the Department of Finance with regard to currency problems, but it is a very enticing market at certain times, depending of course on price and quantity conditions in Canada.

Fourth, I am interested, as are all hon. members, in the government support policy with regard to hogs. I must say that the minister's comments and proposals this afternoon were helpful. As a matter of fact, on March 23 the minister said in this house that the support price of hogs would be lowered, and that there would be a different method of approach toward government assistance to hog farmers. I had some worries about these matters, not with regard to lowered floor, but with regard to quotas and deficiency payments, as possibly also did other hon. members, and I feel the explanation which was given this afternoon has assisted us to a very considerable extent.

I would like to go back and talk briefly about the importance of this industry. One can examine various tables of figures and look, for instance, at the current review of agricultural conditions in Canada for January, 1959, and examine the hog population and markets as they existed in 1957 and 1958. One sees that the population of hogs on farms as of June 1, 1957 was 4,857,000, and one year later it was 6,164,000. This total increase percentage-wise for the whole of Canada was some 26.9 per cent, a very considerable figure and one which has brought us some problems which, though I do not think they are drastic, are unfortunate problems which we are facing today.

It might be said, Mr. Chairman, that one of the saving graces at this time and during 1958 was the domestic consumption of pork and pork products. This was, I believe, at a record high for that year. The estimated figure which I have for the moment for 1958 was 750 million pounds, and for 1957 the figure was 85 million pounds less, or 665 million pounds. So we did have high domestic consumption in 1958 of pork and pork products, which was perhaps, comparatively speaking, made possible by the high prices paid to farmers for beef, and the large export beef market. In addition we had a near record year, I think it might be said, for exports of bacon, ham and pork to the United States.

The figure for exports to the United States of Canadian bacon and ham in 1958 was 4.5 million pounds to a total value of very nearly $4.5 million, and Canadian pork exports for 1958 were at a record high level to a value of over $20 million, the largest proportion of which went to the United States. So that while we had a vast increase in hog population and production in Canada, the domestic consumption, combined with a large volume of exports, helped us very considerably.

The value of this industry is difficult to estimate and I have no exact figures on it, but one would gauge it each year at several hundreds of millions of dollars when we are talking in terms of an output figure of some six million pigs per year. Thus, we are dealing here with an industry of considerable importance. We all know—and this is familiar to those who have travelled in the United States— that Canada's reputation in the hog business is high. We have been famed for many years as a producer of quality hog products and it is this quality which I wish to emphasize today, because it is something which I feel to be of considerable importance.

We must ask ourselves how we can maintain and even increase the quality of our production in the face of possible future competition and, probably, of improved quality standards in the United States.

Hog improvement in Canada has taken place particularly over the last 40 years. After the first world war we began to lose to a considerable extent the traditional British market which had been built up by Canada over a number of years. We can go back and look at the figures since confederation and see that in the year 1900, for instance, we exported some 134 million pounds of bacon and ham to the United Kingdom—a very significant figure. And we can go from the period of the first world war when these exports were at a very high level most of the time—in two years they ran to over 200 million pounds—to the 1920's when the figure was declining largely due to increased competition from the Danish market and because of the efficiency and quality standards and closeness of control that Danish producers were putting into effect at that time. This, incidentally, is a position we still face, since the standards of the industry in Denmark, possibly by means or methods of control which we would not advocate in Canada, have inevitably resulted in a product which is uniform and which has a very high efficiency in arriving at market state. The average feed efficiency for Denmark has been quoted at a figure below three pounds of ration to a pound of gain, a figure which is most extraordinary. This has been brought about by constant selection and improvement of the Landrace breed of pig, which is most largely used in that country.

After the first world war we were dealing in Canada with hogs of a variety of types, some of which yielded good bacon or meat, but most of which were of the fat or lardy type, and these were not generally wanted by our export markets although there was, of course, a large domestic consumption. The hogs were bought and sold on a flat basis, regardless of quality, so the incentive to the farmer for supplying the consumer, either here or abroad, with a quality product did not exist. It was in these circumstances that in 1921 a conference of producers, packers, officials of the government and others interested was held in Ottawa, and in 1922 the grading of live hogs was initiated by the Department of Agriculture.

In 1927, the packers undertook to make all hog purchases on a grade basis, paying premiums for top quality hogs, a significant step along the road to uniformity and an incentive to producing a quality product in this country. In 1928, live hog grading was made compulsory in Ontario, followed in the early thirties by other provinces, and so the movement grew across Canada. In 1934 provision was made for optional carcass grading and we were coming then, to a period of gradual transition from the grading of hogs on a live weight basis to optional grading on a carcass basis, and by 1940 most hogs were being graded on a carcass basis, though under optional conditions. In that year, however, carcass grading was designated as the only system of government grading in Canada, though not necessarily of market purchase.

Thus we have seen a transition which is of great interest to those engaged in the industry and it has had a very significant effect on hog quality as one can see if one examines the various figures which are available. For instance, statistics provided by the Department of Agriculture show that in 1929 the original top live grade, called select live hogs, and judged on the hoof, comprised about 16 per cent of the hogs marketed; and that by 1940, the year that carcass grading was made the only system of government grading, this figure had increased to almost 28 per cent, almost twice the proportion of hogs in that category during the earlier period.

If one looks at the reverse side—the so called butcher live or fat hogs—one would see that the number fell from a figure of 35 per cent in 1929 to a figure of approximately 8 per cent in 1940, so that under this live and optional carcass grading system there was a very definite increase in the quality of hogs produced in Canada. This has to a certain extent been the situation, too, under the mandatory carcass grading system although the figures do not always appear to indicate it.

This is one of the problems which producers and government officials must ponder, namely the fact that grade A carcass figures in 1940 comprised virtually 28 per cent of the hogs marketed in that year and that this has shifted during the late forties and early fifties to somewhat over 30 per cent, though it has now gone down again to just under 30 per cent. It is a fluctuating figure. However, one can add the fact that the live weight of hogs has increased rather markedly during this period. Thus, these figures may indicate a considerably greater rate of improvement than they may show on the surface.

It is interesting to note that Canada's share of the British market came back during that period as well; a tribute to this system, I think one might say. In Great Britain, during the early thirties our exports of bacon and ham, for instance, were down in the year 1929 to 25 million pounds; remaining at this level for the next two or three years, hovering around 10 to 30 million pounds, but during the latter years of the thirties the level had gone up to well over 100 million pounds.

Of course, during the second world war we supplied a very large percentage of the British market, a significant contribution which all Canadian hog producers had the opportunity of making during that period. For instance, during 1944, Canada supplied 79 per cent of all Britain's bacon imports, and in 1943, 83 per cent. During the war years Britain's imports from Canada were running at over 50 per cent of the total virtually each season.

This was done through the method of annual agreements or contracts through the meat board of Canada and the British ministry of food. The figures during some of these years and particularly for 1943 and 1944 were very large indeed. One could examine the figures for 1944, for example, and see that our total exports of bacon and ham amounted to $148 million, virtually all of which went to the United Kingdom. I would submit that this is a very large export figure, although of course British dollar restrictions have reduced it to almost negligible proportions since 1951. Thus we have had a most interesting and active export market, one that could bear looking into again.

In addition to the grading system which changed very much our quality of hog production, we have had the system of record of performance or advanced registry as well. This system has provided incentive, knowledge, and information to hog breeders, the people with seed stock upon whom the commercial producers would depend. It has indicated how the breeders could improve their stock in the best fashion. In 1929 the advanced registry system for hogs was started on an experimental basis. In 1934 the advanced registry board recommended the setting up of central stations for testing hogs. All of this produced effects which benefited the commercial producers in terms of improving the quality of pork produced and it served in the long run to assist in maintaining some of our export markets.

I have here the figures for the record of performance or advanced registry stations across Canada as of March 31, 1959. There were some 418 pens or units in use in the seven stations, each taking four hogs at a time. On this basis there has been a considerable turnover of testing groups under this system. I will not go into the figures of turnover in detail but it may interest hon. members to know that in the season 1958-59 over 1,000 groups were tested in these seven stations.

In the last few years we have had a problem in Ontario. While government officials may point out that these stations are sometimes not running at full capacity, there is a definite trend toward overcrowding of these stations, particularly in Ontario. The figures I have obtained for 1956-57, for instance, indicate that in Ontario some 50 tests had to be turned down for lack of accommodation. In 1957-58, 52 tests were turned down, and in 1958-59, 70 tests were turned down. I should like to have more information on that subject. I believe this was at the last stage where breeders were turned down on these animals before they were sent to the station. It might be added that further discouragement came simply because of overcrowding and prevented a considerable number of breeders from entering their stock at the station in Waterloo, and having it tested.

The Canadian hog industry faces many definite problems, as does the advanced registry system. There is, for instance, the question of whether or not we should continue extensively testing purebred lines, or whether crossbreeding will become more widespread. To my mind, this question alone makes it essential that increased facilities be provided for record of performance and advanced registry, since pure breeds will continue to play a large part. I would suggest to the minister, and I hope he will view my request favourably, that the facilities be increased at Waterloo, or that a new station be built to accommodate the ever-increasing number of units going through each season. As advanced registry breeders in Ontario, we feel this is an important point in development, and dissemination of information for purebred hog breeders in that province.

As I mentioned before, the industry today appears to be in a considerable state of flux. This situation is brought about by many causes. One of these is the increased knowledge we have with regard to diseases and nutrition. Increased research on this subject has made it possible for much more efficient production, for greater savings in litter numbers, and greater enlargement of the whole physiological and nutritional aspects of hog production.

Production methods themselves have tended toward greater volume and efficiency. We have here what is probably an inescapable fact in that unit volume production of hogs will continue to increase. Hogs lend themselves to a pyramidal form of population growth. While one would not expect to see the same increase one finds in broilers, one would detect a definite trend toward greater efficiency. This will lead to new problems but also to increased potential.

We have in Canada two main new breeds of hogs. I wish to make particular reference to the Landrace breed which has come in during the last four or five years and which is making a distinguished mark on the Canadian hog scene. I need only point out that in 1956, the first year in which the Canadian national livestock records registered this new breed, there were some 1,172 animals registered. By 1958 the number had jumped to 14,268 compared with some 21,751 for the long established Yorkshires. In other words, last year the Landrace breed registered virtually two-thirds the total of Yorkshires registered, the latter being the traditional Canadian breed. These were the figures registered with the Canadian national livestock record office.

In addition, we have the new Lacombe breed, developed at the Lacombe station in Alberta, a breed that promises to give considerable impetus to the production of pure-bred animals. It will have a considerable potential in high efficiency hog production, and will also be applied in the increasing trend toward cross breeding in this country. Thus, it seems to me, we face many challenges at this time. I feel we must expand our record of performance and advanced registry station facilities. This would serve as an incentive to hog producers, in the improvement of their stock.

Another incentive would come if the present one dollar premium on grade B-1 hogs were removed and added to the two dollar premium on grade A hogs. I do not think we should encourage a second grade of hog. The encouragement offered to grade A production is not sufficient today even with the price differential which the packers are paying, plus the premium. It is often found that producers through different methods of production receive a greater net return by producing grade B hogs. I would suggest that the premium be raised on grade A hogs to provide a greater incentive in Canada for production of hogs of this grade.

This is important for various reasons. We have seen the increase in our United States markets and exports. From my personal knowledge and experience in the United States I am able to state that the producers in that country are making considerable progress in raising the quality of their hogs. We know their experience on the quality level is considerably below ours. As a matter of fact, I find it rather interesting to note that one of the main reference books on our Canadian system of hog production is one produced by the research division of the United States department of agriculture, published in April of 1958. A year or so before that, they sent a commission or group to Canada to study the methods of grading, breeding and selection we had introduced into our hog business during the previous 30 years.

While United States marketings are still done on a live basis and their quality of pork products is far below ours, they are taking significant and important steps to improve their position. Progress is being made particularly in the midwest in the states of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and others. Experimental stations such as the United States department of agriculture's station at Beltsville, Maryland, are examining this matter very closely as well. Thus, to maintain and improve our markets in the United States and to be in a competitive position, I might add, in the future years as well, since imports again may come in from that country, it is of the utmost importance for us to improve the quality of our hogs.

I would add that the British markets are of great importance as well, Mr. Chairman. In addition the methods mentioned this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture with regard to government supports for hogs are probably very healthy indeed. We would be getting out of the pork buying field if we follow the suggestion that he mentioned, this coming autumn. We would be probably setting a quota system on which deficiency payments would be paid only on a certain number of hogs, and it would not control—and I think this is very important—the total number of hogs which any producer could put on the market. It would control the deficiency payments which he could receive, but not the actual number of hogs which he could produce.

This is of great importance, and it is part of the feeling which I and many producers have. While we need assistance, the more government assistance we receive beyond a certain point means that we lose our own independence and the right to do our own programming. These are some points I wanted to make and I feel they are of great importance to the Canadian hog industry.

Mr. Argue: My first words are to say to the Minister of Agriculture I appreciate very much the fact that he made such a comprehensive reply this morning and this afternoon to statements that have been made in this debate today and on previous occasions. I hope I shall be pardoned if I say I think that some of his colleagues in the cabinet might take a leaf out of his book because I think it adds greatly to the type of debate we can have in parliament if we can get an adequate and a comprehensive reply from the minister responsible for the department and the items under discussion.

I am not going to attempt to quarrel with the statistics that were placed on the record last night by the Minister of Finance that there was a 24 per cent increase in net income or any other official statistics that are produced by the minister or by the departments of the government. I would think that they would have to examine those statistics most carefully before they would really dare bring them into the House of Commons as authentic statistics. I think, however, the main reason, or one of the main reasons certainly, for the change in the net income position is the general explosion of production that has taken place in the agricultural industry. The Minister of Agriculture emphasizes different points at different times. At different times he rises in his place and tells us that all is well with agriculture, or all is better with agriculture than it has been since 1951. At other times in other speeches he points out that production is very high; that unless producers are careful to refrain from further increases in production, or in fact to cut back production, the government's policy would have to be one of reducing prices or reducing support.

We have had a tremendous increase in production. This afternoon the Minister of Agriculture gave us some statistics. I took them down hurriedly and they may not be entirely accurate as I have them in my hand, but as I have them he said that in 1957 the total of poultry meat produced in the country was 279 million pounds. In 1958 the production was 346 million pounds.

I have some other statistics in my hand which were taken from the Quarterly Bulletin, Agricultural Statistics, June 1. I trust the hon. member for Essex East will be satisfied that I have made an accurate reference to the statement I have in my hand, following the admonition of the Minister of Agriculture this morning when the hon. gentleman from Essex East was wading through a mass of statistics. These statistics are as follows: cattle on farms in Canada as of June 1, 1951, numbered 8,353,000 head. The year 1958 was slightly down from 1957 because of the relatively good markets; in that year they numbered just over 11 million head. The statistics for hogs show that from 1951 to 1958 there was an increase in production from 4.9 million to 6.2 million, in round figures. The production of hogs has been extensive since 1951. The increase in production of numbers on farms was from 4.9 million in 1951 to 6.2 million in 1958. This demonstrates the great expansion that has taken place in the production of certain agricultural commodities. This would suggest to me that unless the government develops a new policy, or new aspects of its policy, we may be faced with such a tremendous production that under the government's policy prices will fall so low as to threaten the very existence of the agricultural industry as we know it in this country. There is reason to be alarmed when one relates the tremendous increase in production to what I believe to be the government's trend in policy.

Sometimes we may be criticized for not advancing alternatives, but I believe it is absolutely essential to the orderly marketing of agricultural products in this country at reasonable prices for a central organization of some type to have control of the buying, assembling, grading, processing and selling of those commodities. By that I do not mean that a central organization should handle all of the business, but I believe we must have some central regulatory body. I would suggest that there should be established in this country immediately a national livestock marketing board. Perhaps one might extend it to a national agricultural products marketing board.

The grain producers on the prairies are criticized from time to time because it has been said they have produced too much, or because they have asked the government for too much, but for this they cannot be criticized. They have accepted control; they have supported control. As a matter of fact, a few years ago when a vote was taken in the province of Manitoba as to whether the farmers in that province wished oats and barley to come under the Canadian Wheat Board Act and the Canadian wheat board, they voted overwhelmingly in favour of this method of marketing their grain in the order of some 90 per cent. No matter who may criticize the Canadian wheat board, and there are many who do, whether they do it in the newspapers of this country, at times there is a concerted attack against orderly marketing when it comes to the agricultural producers by the great champions of monopolies in this country when it is a matter of control by big business of the means of production.

The wheat board controls in a very real sense the buying, assembling, storage and marketing of grain. This is the type of central control, democratic control, I suggest, that must be applied to other important segments of the agricultural industry. I should like to see the producers themselves take the initiative. I should like to see them do it with their own co-operative organizations set up on a national basis and I should like to see federal legislation with support prices in it which will enable provincial governments to pass similar legislation in order that this kind of necessary control may be obtained.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Certainly.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Is he aware of the fact that the Alberta farmers and the Saskatchewan farmers both voted separately on the question of livestock marketing boards and in both provinces the proposal was defeated? I would say that is the democratic method.

Mr. Argue: My reactionary young friend, who is very quick to point out any move affecting the free enterprise system that he favours so much, should know that a great many of the producers who did not support the legislation did so not because they do not believe in that type of legislation but because they felt that within the confines of a province it could not be made effective. What I am advocating today is national legislation.

The second type of national legislation that I put forward to the minister as something that is needed for the welfare of the agricultural industry is a board of livestock commissioners to establish fair grades and to police and enforce those grades, or better still a board to a board of agricultural products commissioners that would be able to control in a real way the grading of agricultural products so as to ensure that producers are given fair and proper grades. I do not think that the legislation in effect today is operating as effectively as it should.

The criticism has been prevalent for many years—it is not new—that the established floor prices for eggs are not passed on to the producers. There has been evidence this year that there is a combine in the buying of eggs and the establishment of prices for various grades. I think that the agricultural prices stabilization board and therefore the government have some responsibility in this regard because, as I understand the situation, the board buys eggs only in carload lots comprising some 300 cases of eggs in one purchase.

Mr. Harkness: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Surely.

Mr. Harkness: If he has any evidence of a monopoly in the buying of eggs, has he given it to the Department of Justice or to any other government department where the matter can be investigated?

Mr. Argue: The answer is yes. I have brought it to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I think the Minister of Agriculture knows what I am talking about. If he wants to say he does not, it is his right to do so.

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member will permit me, I should like to point out that most of this was done by co-operatives in western Canada. In other words, they got together in order to set a price for eggs. He says that there is a monopoly. As he knows, most of the eggs in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba are handled by farmer co-operatives.

Mr. Argue: The minister is shifting his ground a little—

Mr. Harkness: Oh, no.

Mr. Argue: —and almost but not quite admitting that it has been brought to his attention.

Mr. Harkness: I have mentioned it myself.

Mr. Argue: All right. Then he knows what I am talking about. He asks if I have brought it to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I have in the house on the orders of the day. I know and the minister knows that this situation was brought to his attention and to the attention of the board and in the particular case I have in mind corrective action was taken as I am certain the minister is aware.

Mr. Harkness: I took it myself right away.

Mr. Argue: All right. Then why did the minister question my initial statement as though it was something new out of the sky and I had not brought it to the attention of the proper authorities?

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member will permit me, in view of the fact that this was chiefly done by the farmers' co-operatives I thought he was referring to something else altogether. I think I should also say in fairness to these people that I think they did it entirely in ignorance of the fact that they were contravening any law.

Mr. Argue: I do not know who the members are of the western produce association and I would be very grateful if the minister would give me that information. I have been endeavouring to find out from the departments of government and that information, so I am told, is not available. Mind you, I think the minister has it.

Mr. Harkness: I do not know.

Mr. Argue: First he tells me that it is mainly the co-operatives and now he has not got the information. I do not know which it is, but I am not talking about co-operatives. I am talking about the members, whoever they may be and I do not know who they are, of the western produce association which it is alleged in certain instances formed a combine in the purchase of eggs. The suggestion I wish to make is that the agricultural prices stabilization board could make certain that no combine could exist if it would buy in smaller lots from independent dealers and not buy apparently only from the members of this association who are the large purchasers and therefore able to assemble eggs in large quantities.

Mr. Harkness: We buy mostly from the co-operatives in western Canada.

Mr. Argue: If a co-operative is in an association that is taking action detrimental to the producers in any given area I would no more come to the defence of the co-operative than I would of any other organization. I repeat what I have said, namely that there has been evidence that this was being done. It was brought to the attention of the minister and I am suggesting a method by which this kind of thing could be prevented in the future. If we had some real teeth in the legislation, if we had the type of national marketing boards of which I have spoken, this situation could not obtain.

The producers of eggs are thoroughly dissatisfied with the grades and prices they receive. Other members can speak for the constituencies they represent but when I was home at Easter I found that farmers throughout southern Saskatchewan were getting 18 to 20 cents a dozen for their eggs when they took them to local stores and purchasers.

Mr. Harkness: What grade?

Mr. Argue: Average grade. Do you remember seeing an article in the Western Producer not long ago where a farmer bought a case of grade A eggs and then resold them to the company and obtained a very small percentage of grade A eggs? In my opinion the farmers are greatly underpaid for the eggs they are producing at the present time. This is not a new situation but has prevailed for many years.

I should like to make some reference to the mass delegation that came to Ottawa. I agree wholeheartedly with those who said that it was an excellent delegation composed of people of high calibre, that they presented their brief to the cabinet in a very able manner and that they were a delegation with which any member might be proud to be associated. They arrived in Ottawa, I believe, a month ago to this very day. I am still hopeful that the government will act on the request that they have made, and I am hopeful that the government will react in a favourable way. I am not one of those who think their demands have been excessive.

The western farm delegation, in the presentation they made to the government, asked for deficiency payments which would amount to something in the neighbourhood of $100 million a year. This may sound like, and it is, a great deal of money. However, when it is related to the government's total budget, it is only about two per cent. If you relate it to the defence budget it is equal to only some six per cent or seven per cent of the national defence budget. I think it will be a small sum to pay for a real measure of agricultural stability and for some assurance that the grain producers in the prairie provinces will not turn their tremendous production potential for grain into the production of larger quantities of other agricultural products.

If that is done, what has been a prairie problem will become a national problem. If there is a continued increase in the production of cattle and hogs as well as the production of other agricultural products because farmers feel that on the basis of the low prices they are receiving for grain they can make a somewhat larger income by marketing their grain through livestock, we will have a collapse of present markets across this country. As a matter of fact, if the government does not act in this regard, and taking into account the statement the minister made the other day about the changed policy for the hog industry, I see a great danger that this, in fact, will happen.

I have no brief whatever for the great corporations that may be engaged in the production of hogs. I believe that under a national marketing act there could be established a system whereby the products of these great companies might not be purchased at all, but that purchases would be made from legitimate agriculture producers, if we are in fact in favour of maintaining the family farm as the basic unit of agriculture production. What the minister has said is that beginning October 1, it is his intention to remove the floor price—

Mr. Harkness: No, no.

Mr. Argue: —as an effective price when the farmer takes his hogs to market.

Mr. Harknes: May I correct the hon. member? I do not think he wants to have a wrong impression go out. On October 1, the floor price will be reduced to $23.65 from $25. The change in the method of supporting that floor price will come into effect just as soon as we can get the machinery ready, which might be six weeks or two months.

Mr. Argue: The new system will allow the market to find its own level; that is the point I wish to make. Whatever floor price the minister may set for the individual producer, there will be no effective floor price under the market. The hogs will be dumped on the market as they come in, and the market will find its own level. Whatever production there may be in the hands of these great producers, plus the production in the hands of the ordinary farmer, all of it will go on the market, and the effective floor will be reduced through this technique from $25 to $23.65.

Mr. Harkness: Not by this technique, excuse me. For the next six months the floor will remain at $25 and I would think at least for two months of the period when the floor is at $25 the deficiency method of maintaining that floor will be in effect.

Mr. Argue: The floor will be removed from the market and the price will be allowed to go any place it wishes. In so far as the individual producer is concerned, he can pick up the difference by way of cheques from the minister.

The great danger in this policy, and I hope the minister has considered this carefully, is that a glut of hogs on the market will so force down the price for pork that it will tumble the price for beef; that is the danger that is in the mind of the agriculture producer in this country. How low does the price of pork have to go before thousands of housewives instead of buying higher priced beef will buy a cheaper cut of pork? One result may be a reduction in beef prices, and perhaps a reduction even in broiler prices—although I do not know how they could go much lower—and a general reduction in the prices of meat products.

This is a great danger in the minister's policy, and I think he should have another look at it because this is the kind of policy which may result in a deterioration in the cattle industry and the livestock industry generally. I hope that the government is still considering the request of farm organizations for deficiency payments. I was most disappointed in the statement the minister made on the radio before the delegation came to Ottawa. I hope he now does not believe what he then said; I hope he still does not stand by what he said in that broadcast because I think he was in error. I hope his reply today, by reading a letter from one farmer, is not a method by which the government is saying no to deficiency payments.

If the minister would stand up now and say the government is reconsidering the position the minister took in his radio speech, I would be most pleased. I am very sorry to say that a full month has gone by without any indication whatever of which I know that the government is giving serious consideration to the question of deficiency payments. The minister went out of his way, before the delegation came, to damn their case. In view of his statement today, I regret to say that apparently the presentation of this brief by the delegation has not been successful in any way in changing the minister's mind. The delegation, in my opinion, was an excellent one. It had an excellent brief and I trust that the government may yet take action on this very important matter so that the agriculture industry across Canada will not suffer great deterioration in the coming year. I see it is five o'clock.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. McIntosh: Before the house leaves the business of this department—

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I had the floor and called it five o'clock.

Mr. McIntosh: This is a question of privilege; before the house leaves the business of this department may I have permission to ask the minister a question which concerns only my constituency?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to allow the hon. member to ask the minister a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIntosh: Order in council P.C. 1958-2/1358 was approved on October 2, 1958 and provided for the construction of what is known as the Altawan reservoir in the southwestern part of Saskatchewan. Would the minister make a statement concerning when tenders will be called for this project? If they are called at an early date, could construction be commenced as soon as possible so that the project may be completed this year?

Mr. Harkness: Tenders for this project were called last fall, but the conditions were such that the respective contractors could not get out to examine the ground and therefore tenders had to be withdrawn. They will be reissued again in a few weeks' time and I expect as a result we will be able to get construction started fairly rapidly this spring.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill S-16, to incorporate Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd.—Mr. Rynard.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam) moved the second reading of Bill C-7, to provide for pay for statutory holidays for employees and for pay for work performed on statutory holidays.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy on this occasion to send to the house for endorsement in principle a bill which I am very pleased to note has been endorsed not only by the C.C.F. section of the house but also, on December 13, 1957, by the Liberal and Conservative parties. I therefore aim to be very brief indeed, so that we might have a vote at an early hour of the day.

The aim of the bill, if I may be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to read the explanatory note, is:

> —to provide that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction shall receive their regular pay for at least eight statutory holidays each year, without having to work on those holidays. It also provides that when any such employee is required to work on any statutory holiday, as defined in the bill, he shall receive pay for such work at double time in addition to his regular pay for such holiday.
> Nothing in this bill affects any provision for statutory holidays with pay enjoyed by any employees where such provisions are more favourable than those enjoyed herein, but this bill does suspersede any provisions which are less favourable than those set out in this bill.

My reason for taking an interest in this matter, goes back several years when I noticed the resentment of federal civil servants at being forced to work on December 26, commonly known as Boxing Day, a day on which most other employees in Canada receive a holiday. I know the bill has nothing to do with December 26 in that it is not one of the eight days mentioned in the bill. However, I welcome the bill because it will at least give some measure of assurance to such section of the labour force as comes under federal jurisdiction that they will not be ignored in the matter of holidays which most Canadians are able to observe. The house will note that 90 per cent of the labour force of Canada comes within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. Many of them have not yet made any arrangements in their labour laws in this regard. However, we feel this federal government ought to be an example by way of being an exemplary employer in the Dominion of Canada, and if this house would adopt the bill now before us, we feel it would not be very long until each of the provincial governments also made provisions of like measure in their local labour laws.

The argument has often been used before that this is a matter which should be left to the normal process of collective bargaining. Mr. Speaker, we realize that many employers in Canada who come under national labour laws have already recognized this obvious need of employees to have the same national holidays as the rest of us. There are agreements which have been reached with employers which even exceed what is contained in this bill. However, Mr. Speaker, we have to be realistic and recognize that there are always a number of employers, fortunately only a limited number, who in the absence of legislation will take advantage of existing situations and will not recognize the need for adequate concessions in handling their employees.

I was looking over what happened the last time the bill was before the house, when it was at that time introduced by the former member for Winnipeg North Centre. After his introduction of the bill I was very pleased to note that the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small), who I see is not yet in the house, said:

> I do not think there will be much disagreement with the principle of this bill as outlined by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the granting of eight statutory holidays a year with pay to those who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

And then, later, he says this as recorded on page 2344 of Hansard of December 13, 1957:

> I would propose that we endeavour to arrange to have one statutory holiday occur in each month of the year.

In other words, he thought Mr. Knowles was being over modest and that we should enact legislation which would enable workers to have one statutory holiday each month rather than only eight over the period of one year. Later on, the hon. member expressed some hope about the inevitability of this proposed law or act when he said, as reported on the same page: "If we work toward this end, we shall obtain it".

On page 2347 of Hansard of the same day we find the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) expressing his opinion in the same debate. He said:

> I too should like to speak on the excellent bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

We also had a speech from a representative of the Liberal section in this house, the then member for Kootenay East, Mr. Byrne, who said as reported on page 2346:

> The hon. member has left me just about enough time to say that I am in favour of the principle of the bill, and if it should pass I should certainly like to see it go to the committee on industrial relations for further study.

The bill is necessarily a lengthy one. It is involved, and I do not mind the industrial relations committee of this house making amendments to it. I should be very happy, upon the adoption of the principle of the bill on second reading, to move that it be referred to the standing committee on industrial relations and I plead with hon. members to not take too much exception to some of the details which are offered in the measure, because on second reading we are asked to deal with one matter only, and that is whether or not we are prepared to endorse the purpose of the bill in which case the house, as on many other occasions, then passes the matter to a committee to consider all the details and to make any amendments which it might think necessary.

The whole purpose of the bill is that all in Canada who are subject to the legislation of this House of Commons in labour matters shall be paid a day's pay for each of eight statutory holidays a year and that those who are being asked by their employers to perform work on such days shall receive in addition to their regular pay which all employees receive, double pay for such work. As I pointed out earlier, this is now current practice in most of the better industrial enterprises which have agreements with unions in Canada. It would be specially applicable to federal civil servants. It does not include those workers who already have more favourable agreements with their employers than the details here would indicate. I feel that if New Year's day, Good Friday, Victoria day, July first, Dominion day, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Remembrance day and Christmas day are worthy to be named as national holidays by the government of Canada, we should give serious consideration to enacting legislation which will enable as many Canadians as possible to take the day off and share the holiday with the rest of us.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words with regard to Bill No. C-7 which has just been introduced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier). First of all, I want to commend my hon. friend for his sincerely wanting our workers to benefit from paid holidays. Yet, I believe it is my duty to draw the attention of this house to some specific points.

In order completely to realize the extent of the legislation before us, we must, first of all, know the reason for which paid holidays have been introduced. At first, paid holidays were granted in order to assure the worker that he would suffer no loss of money because of a holiday coming up during the working week. That was the main reason for which that policy was agreed upon. It has never been the intention, when instituting that custom of paid holidays, that they should become bonuses.

For nearly a quarter of a century, I worked for a company where my duties were such that I served as a spokesman for the employees in our dealings with the employer, and each time the matter of paid holidays was raised, it was in that spirit that we considered it.

The economic effect on a given industry of paid holidays should not be overlooked either. I agree that large industries could easily face their obligations and pay their employees who work on statutory holidays three times the regular salary. It is precisely what is being asked under this legislation, since we are being asked to add to regular salary a sum equal to twice the regular salary rate. As I said, large industries could very well face their obligations; however, we must also protect smaller industries. In fact, many small industries, of the family type, industries which are just beginning, would certainly be ruined if they were subjected to such legislation.

I therefore think, before approving such a measure, that we should necessarily give thorough consideration to all aspects of the matter, even to those which appear to be of secondary importance.

I said earlier that no one proposes to make bonus days out of leave days. A reasonable worker expects to receive good wages for a good day's work. As a rule he does not expect to receive money he has not earned. I think it is on the basis of that principle that the matter should be considered.

The proposal should also be considered with reference to provincial statutes. In some provinces, including Quebec, a provincial statute provides for seven or eight paid statutory holidays, I believe. I am not too sure about this but I think the number is at least seven. That is why I urge the house to make a thorough study of all aspects of this bill before they support it.

The hon. member who just spoke pointed out, and others before him have often mentioned, that the matter must be left for the labour unions to deal with. I agree with them because I believe that in certain circumstances in certain industries employees or their representatives, the labour unions, would be willing to accept only five or six paid holidays, in exchange for other privileges which would seem more important, not only for themselves, but also for those they represent.

Here again I must say that this measure must be examined in the light of all those facts.

Then there are the cases of emergency. It is recognized for example that union contracts provide that, under certain circumstances, double the regular pay shall be paid for work done on Sundays and statutory holidays. However, some categories of workers, such as guards, boiler tenders and others who by reason of their duties, belong in some way to the maintenance personnel, agree that they cannot qualify under this clause.

Therefore smaller industries that need all their capital, should not be compelled to make this extraordinary expenditure which might lead them to bankruptcy.

Referring to statistics, we find that this legislation is not as important as the previous speaker would have us believe. In fact, we find that paid statutory holidays are granted to the majority of employees under federal jurisdiction. For example, as far as air transportation is concerned, 81.7 per cent of employees already enjoy at least eight paid holidays per annum. As for road transportation, 79.1 per cent out of 10,593 workers who are not office employees have at least eight holidays with pay. Canadian National and Canadian Pacific employees also are sure to have at least seven holidays with pay per annum. Among public service employees, 94 per cent who are not office employees also have eight or more holidays with pay per annum.

In the light of all these facts, Mr. Speaker, although I am in full agreement with the principle of the bill, I feel obliged to urge my colleagues in this house to consider the measure carefully before passing it.

Mr. J. J. Martel (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few remarks to the words just spoken by my good friend, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). I support what he just stated and I must say that I too support the principle of this bill. However, I am not quite certain that this legislation provides adequate remuneration for employees who are called upon to work on statutory holidays. I am in favour of at least double time being paid to employees who have to work on statutory holidays, but I also believe that we should remain within reasonable limits.

If we want to be realistic, as the mover of this bill said a few moments ago, we should also consider what might happen to the owner of a small business—and the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot also stressed the fact—as well as to the employees throughout this country, if such legislation were immediately passed without being more fully considered or without some amendments thereto, or at least one change, which I believe, is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Speaker, if we abide by the principle outlined in the statement which has been made on this bill, what will happen to persons who have to work on Sundays and statutory holidays, like doctors, hospital employees, male and female nurses, technicians, employees of public utilities, of municipal waterworks, fire departments and snow removal services in the winter time?

Would not people assigned to those various services be also entitled to claim three times their regular fees, salaries or wages? I feel we must, all the same, stay within the limits of common sense and be reasonable.

I also know that most people who are required to work on religious holidays and on statutory holidays can exchange those days with fellow-workers, with the consent of their employers, as is the practice in most cases.

I have no doubt that at the present time, an employee who is called upon to work on a holiday or Sunday should be paid double time, since such statutory holidays as Sundays and ordinary holidays are above all days of rest. Furthermore, it is agreed that if a man is called upon to work at an essential service, he is entitled to increased remuneration.

However, if I correctly understood the statement made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) concerning his bill, he suggests, in other words, that any person who has to work on statutory holidays should get a salary equivalent to double the salary rate, in addition to his regular salary, which would triple his salary.

There is no doubt that a double remuneration should be paid for any work performed on certain such days, but as I pointed out a moment ago, what would the public say if workers employed at essential public services, or again doctors, nurses, druggists or hospital employees should demand, in addition to their regular salaries or fees, a double remuneration? I am convinced that this idea would hardly be received with favour by the public in general and, besides, I do not believe that it is the objective contemplated by the hon. member's bill. I suppose he rather meant to say that double time should be granted to employees having to work on statutory holidays.

I now come to the question touched upon a moment ago by the mover of the bill, and that is the matter of increasing the number of statutory holidays to an average of one a month or twelve a year. With regard to this question, in the province of Quebec, as was pointed out a while ago by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, a provincial statute provides for the payment of a salary to provincial employees on certain holidays which are not necessarily statutory holidays throughout the country. On that score, moreover, many will no doubt recall the judgment handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Henry Birks & Sons (Montreal) Limited and other plaintiffs vs. the city of Montreal and the attorney general of the province of Quebec. The judgment was handed down in 1955 and dealt with by-law 2048 of the city of Montreal concerning the closing of stores and business establishments on the following holidays: New Year's day, Epiphany, Ascension, All Saints' day, the Immaculate Conception and Christmas. Of those various holidays New Year's day and Christmas are already recognized as statutory holidays; the others are mainly religious holidays especially observed in the province of Quebec.

I do not want to labour the point but I think it is my duty to emphasize, since the opportunity is provided, the regrettable fact that storekeepers operating in a province with a French and Catholic majority, have decided to appeal from a municipal bylaw and tried to have it declared ultra vires, or in other words to have it quashed.

I hope we will eventually be able to come back to that question and that it will then be possible to make those religious holidays, which are still observed in many villages and cities in the province of Quebec, indeed in the great majority of our communities, as obligatory not only in the fine province of Quebec, but also throughout the country.

I could deal at greater length with this question because I am aware that those holidays which are considered as being religious holidays only in the province of Quebec have already been considered for a long time as statutory holidays in England because a law was passed there to that effect.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to place on record an editorial which appeared in the December 1955 issue of the magazine Relations on this matter, following a judgment from the Supreme Court of Canada. I quote:

In its ruling in the case of the Montreal departments stores, the Supreme Court upheld the appeal filed by the stores against the ruling of the second circuit court; the latter ruling had reversed that of the first circuit court, which had ruled that the provincial act of 1949 and by-law 2048, passed by the city of Montreal on November 2 1951, were both ultra vires. The provincial act of 1949 amended section 2 of the "Early closing act" by adding section 2a which reads as follows:

The city council may, through a by-law, order that such stores remain closed all day on the first day of the year, on the day of the Epiphany, on Ascension day, on All Saints day, on the day of the Immaculate Conception, and on Christmas day.

By-law 2048, patterned after this section, also added section 2a to by-law 695 established under the early closing act:

In the city of Montreal, stores shall be closed all day on the following holidays: New Year's day, Epiphany, Ascension, All Saints' day, Immaculate Conception and Christmas.

The Supreme Court agrees with the judge of first instance that the legislation regarding religious holidays, like Lord's day act, comes under the Criminal Code and therefore is not subjected to the Legislature. The Supreme Court judgment makes considerations that are not easily brushed aside. It would not be serious to say that the Court has been hostile to the province of Quebec. But an admission of the consistency of the legal argument is, by no means, a recognition that the problem is definitely settled. Legality does not always coincide with moral and psychological reality. That is precisely what happens in the matter of store closing on religious holidays.

While we leave to jurists the responsibility of deciding whether an indisputable legal basis can be found, we do say that, even if none is found, the desired goal may be achieved.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the hon. member, I do not believe the matter he is discussing now has anything to do with the bill. He is referring to other holidays and that sort of thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I would ask the hon. member to stick to the principle of the bill we are discussing, namely Bill C-7.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks and give a full account of what I was referring to because I feel that the holidays referred to may eventually become statutory holidays, and as a result can be discussed here. I have only a few more sentences to read.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The principle of this bill is whether or not there should be eight statutory holidays each year with pay, and if employees work on those days they should get double pay. The holidays are all named in the bill and that is all we can refer to. On second reading we cannot refer to anything else because it is not in the bill.

Mr. Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is within the subject because some of the holidays mentioned in what he is reading are also in the hon. member's bill. I think he is quite correct in what he is doing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The hon. member can mention the holidays referred to in the bill but he cannot mention others because they are not in the bill and we are discussing the bill.

Mr. Martel: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to mention that the bill introduced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is not very clear on that point, at least when it suggests that according to the definition in the explanatory note, which reads:

—any such employee is required to work on any statutory holiday, as defined in the bill, he shall receive pay for such work at double time in addition to his regular pay for such holiday.

We should always keep within the bounds of reason. Personally, I feel that double time is enough. Therefore, if the hon. member would amend his bill accordingly, it might perhaps receive general approval.

(Text):

Mr. Laurier Regnier (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member who introduced this bill. I think it is a very laudable one. I am in favour of as many holidays as it is possible to give to human beings who are the only animals who work. I think we should shorten the hours and increase holidays for everybody, including ourselves. There is only one danger about working less and getting double pay for our work. The fact is that in other countries in the world there are many more unemployed than we find in Canada and we might price our goods out of the markets of the world. I think a greater effort should be made in the United Nations to enforce a certain number of holidays in all countries of the world so that the working people of the world will be on an equal basis. Then we would not have to use tariffs to protect our home markets. If wages and working days were the same in all countries in the world we could trade freely and have much more prosperity.

I think the principle in the bill is already in force in Canada. I know that in Manitoba workers get double pay when they work on a statutory holiday and I believe they have all the holidays enumerated in the bill. I suppose there may be exceptions in some provinces such as the province of Quebec. They have twice the number of statutory holidays that other provinces in Canada have and, as explained by the last speaker, the difficulty in that province is that the merchants will not comply with the provincial and municipal laws in that province. They insist on keeping their stores open. In fact, they have gone to the Supreme Court of Canada to dispute a local law on the matter.

Perhaps the federal government should pass a law to enforce all holidays in effect in the province of Quebec as well as those in effect under federal statute. In this way there will be more rest for the workers. With the machines we have now and with unemployment I think that the hours of work could be reduced so that people could enjoy the good things of life instead of being busy all the time working. As we say, it is existing, not living, if you have to work long hours every day. Of course, some people have to work on holidays. Mention was made of nurses and other hospital employees and probably it would involve too much to have them receive double pay on holidays. However, I do not think this legislation is intended to cover that situation.

As I said before, it is a difficult situation if one country has too many holidays when other countries have none or very few. Take countries like China, Japan, India or even Russia where people have to work 10 or 12 hours a day. In Russia women have to work sweeping the streets and really lead a life of slavery. It is too bad that communist doctrine, which is supposed to benefit human beings, results in the worst conditions in the world. They have made slaves of their women and other workers. I understand they have very few holidays and have even been deprived of the right to strike in order to try to benefit the lot of their own people. I think that might be one of the things that might be taken up at the next meeting with Khrushchev, an effort to improve the conditions of the working people of the world beginning with Russia so that we can live more peacefully and agreeably. I do not believe there is much more I can say on the matter and I again congratulate the mover of the motion.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in complimenting the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) upon his introductory remarks. They were brief, clear and to the point. I only wish that in the little time at my disposal I could point out with the same clarity certain points about the bill which disturb me although I would not say that they constitute objections.

The purpose of the bill is quite clear. It provides that the employee is to receive eight statutory holidays with pay. He is to have these holidays without loss of income. But the bill also provides that if the employer forces the employee to work on a statutory holiday the employee shall get triple pay. It is the matter of triple pay that disturbs me. We represent 17 million people and I know millions who do not get any pay even on working days, those engaged in agriculture and perhaps in other industries. But that is beside the point. Labour is entitled to holidays with pay.

The bill applies to employees of the federal government, but I see a hidden purpose in the bill, that purpose being to deter the employer from making an employee work on statutory holidays by providing for triple pay for work on such days. The federal government is a large employer. I do not have time to go into the statistics but most of the industries in which the dominion government employs men and women call for continuous service and involve operation day in and day out every day of the year including all holidays. Examples are the railways and ferries, including the ferry service between Vancouver and Vancouver island, with which my hon. friend is greatly concerned. It would also apply to air transport, telegraph and telephone industries giving continuous service without which Canadians cannot get along. If the Canadian people must pay triple wages on holidays in order to continue these services, what alternative has the employer?

The employer has the alternative of curtailing the service, which would be very unpopular. There would be quite a bit of objection to that course. Otherwise, he has to increase the rate for these services. This course would affect the pocketbook of everyone who looked forward to travelling during the holidays or receiving these services during the holidays.

I feel that this bill is patterned on the Saskatchewan legislation. However, the Saskatchewan legislation does not go quite so far. It provides for 2½ times the regular wage for work on statutory holidays. Manitoba's law provides—

Mr. Martin (Timmins): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Mandziuk: Certainly.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Does the hon. member feel that federal legislation should be patterned on provincial legislation or that it should be even better than provincial legislation?

Mr. Mandziuk: The hon. gentleman knows very well that if federal legislation of this type were adopted private industry would follow suit. We would have restaurants and hotels closed on holidays because they could not afford to pay triple wages to employees working on holidays. We would have a lot of other services, such as hospital services, curtailed.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Is this the case in Saskatchewan now?

Mr. Mandziuk: I do not think it is, but triple wages are not paid there and that is what I am trying to bring out. I am trying to compare the Saskatchewan legislation with this proposal and show that this measure would go farther.

The Manitoba legislation provides for seven holidays with pay and for time and a half for work on statutory holidays. This proposal is not in accord with the prevailing practice in private industry. I have not the statistics here, but I think they would bear me out, indicating that only six per cent of the labour contracts in force contain provisions for triple pay for employees working during holidays and 94 per cent provide for double pay or less. This was revealed by a survey made a year ago by the Department of Labour.

We have for example, collective agreements in the railroad industry for the non-operating groups. These agreements provide for six or seven holidays with double pay. The train and engine service employees receive no statutory holidays because continuous service has to be provided. Anyone going into this service fully realizes that it is an everyday service all year which the country needs and without which we cannot get along.

The dominion government provides many services which are continuous services and therefore while I could go along with double pay for statutory holidays I cannot go along with triple pay for statutory holidays. It would immediately set an example for private industry. In spite of the fact we have a labour force which runs into the millions, there would still be a great number who would be affected by this proposal. Then, too, there would be those who would be affected by the lack of service there might be on statutory holidays at our airports, on our trains and in government-owned hotels. I feel, therefore, that this bill requires a few amendments and I would urge my colleagues to vote against it if it comes to a vote.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the sponsor of this bill because of his many kind references to me. There is one aspect of the bill to which I do not believe the sponsor has given full consideration, and that is the implication that there would be increased government control of union activities and interference with the collective bargaining process as a result of this legislation. I would have thought that after the recent experience in Newfoundland, about which the hon. member did have many pointed remarks to make as did his colleagues, he would wish to shy away from any implication of interference, except to the extent that is required to protect the unorganized workers through minimum wage laws.

The transport workers are not unorganized. For many years the backbone of the American federation of labour was the running trades of the railroads as well as the non-operating brotherhoods. I happen to know a bit about this because my own father was for many years a conductor on Canadian National Railways. I do know that these men went into their jobs with the full knowledge of the disadvantages as well as the advantages. Let us never forget that in these operations there are advantages which are not given to the ordinary worker in a factory.

I must hurry, because I have not too much time. However, one of the clauses of the bill, which is a punitive clause, is the one providing for triple time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order; I am sorry but I must advise the hon. member it is now six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the leader of the house what is on the agenda for Monday?

Mr. Green: On Monday we shall commence the budget debate and go right through as I indicated.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 13, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER RESPECTING LOSS OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' DAYS

Mr. Speaker: On Monday, March 9 last, as recorded at page 1724 of Hansard, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) raised a question concerning the loss of private members' days through a motion for the adjournment of the house under standing order No. 26. He suggested that as the day had not been used for the appointed business it should not be counted as one of the six private members' days. If the point were well taken this would be a private members' day today. I thought, as the hon. member is in his place, I might say I have examined carefully into the precedents, in so far as there are precedents, with a view to seeing whether the rules would permit the solution which he suggested.

I find the answer is simply that the rules do not provide the machinery for compensatory time in such cases. I could go into the matter at some length, but I think the question appears to be reasonably free of doubt and unless hon. members wish a further explanation I shall leave it at that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARSON—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN BUDGET PAPERS TABLED BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which I believe affects every hon. member of the house, inasmuch as it concerns particularly the accuracy of the records of the house. This matter deals with financial assistance to Newfoundland under the terms of union; not, I hasten to add, to the question of the form and substance of the obligation of the government of Canada under those terms of union. That matter I have already discussed. It has to do with a statement made and reports inserted in the records of this house which concern the legislative basis for any such assistance.

I should add also, Mr. Speaker, that this matter, the breach I refer to, was made on budget night, Thursday night, and normally I should have brought it to the attention of the house on Friday; but as Hansard was not available to members until Friday afternoon, this is the first opportunity I have had, after having read Hansard, to bring it to the attention of the house.

On Thursday evening at page 2410 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance asked leave of the house to place on Hansard certain budget papers and tables and, of course, he was given that permission. Those tables and the explanatory notes attached to them are now part of the record of this house. One of those statements, Mr. Speaker, is in my view false and misleading, especially in relation to the explanation which is appended to the table, and as such I think is a breach of parliamentary privilege.

I am referring to table No. 11 on page 55 of the budget papers. In that table there is a figure of $13,600,000 under the heading, "Additional grants to Newfoundland". In the paragraph explaining it we have the following words, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What is the page number?

Mr. Pearson: Page 55 of the budget papers appended to Hansard of April 9, table No. 11. The explanatory paragraph attached to the table reads:

> Under the Newfoundland additional grants act, pursuant to the report of the royal commission on Newfoundland finances appointed under clause 29 of the terms of union, Newfoundland is to receive additional grants for the fiscal years 1957-58 to 1961-62 inclusive. The additional grants for the first two fiscal years, which are payable in 1958-59, amounted to $13½ million.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, although the Prime Minister has indicated that such a Newfoundland bill covering this matter is to be introduced in the House of Commons, no such resolution and no such bill have been introduced. The Minister of Finance in this statement not only assumes that such a bill has been introduced but assumes that parliament has passed this bill. He is acting accordingly, by including in this table the figure which has not yet been before parliament, let alone been passed by parliament.

I hold, Mr. Speaker, that this is a contempt of parliament and therefore an important breach of our parliamentary privileges. Unless instructions are issued by this house that these statements be corrected, they will remain as a permanent part of revised Hansard and the Journals of this house. Surely such a development would be objectionable in connection with the privileges of the House of Commons, referring in our records to an act which has not yet even been introduced in the House of Commons as justification for the insertion of certain figures into our records. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill):

Reference to Statement in Budget Papers

That this house instruct the officials of the house to delete line 4 of table 11 and the first paragraph appearing below table 11 on page 55 of the budget papers and to replace the same in the revised Hansard and the Journals by a statement reflecting the true facts of the situation.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to be sure that I understand the privilege of the house which is involved before I hear the minister, who I presume will wish to speak to this matter before the motion is dealt with. If the Leader of the Opposition could tell me explicitly what privilege of the house is involved in the statement I would appreciate it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the privilege in short is the appearance in the records of the house, in a table which was introduced into those records at the request of the minister and with the approval of the house, of a reference to an act of parliament as something which has been passed and which justifies certain statistical material, when that act of parliament has not even been submitted to the house, let alone passed by the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear. Parliament still has some rights.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the house has just listened to a most extraordinary statement from the Leader of the Opposition. He began first of all by saying that in the course of the budget speech certain tables were placed on Hansard by leave of the house, but what he refers to is not something that was put on Hansard by leave of the house on Thursday evening during the course of the budget speech at all. He is referring now to something that was in the white paper tabled on Wednesday afternoon before the budget ever came down. That is the first of a number of errors in the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. Pearson: That is wrong.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then when you come to see what he takes issue with, it is to be found on page 55 of the white paper which by decision of the house, indeed on motion of the house unanimously passed on Wednesday, became part of the records of the house. On page 55 of the white paper, as now appended to Hansard of Thursday last, he draws attention to the item, additional grants to Newfoundland—this is the fourth line of which he speaks—which for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959 amount to $13.6 million.

He takes up the time of the house to make this appear as a great mystery, when there is nothing mysterious about it at all and it is completely in accord with what the Prime Minister announced in the house the day before the house rose for the Easter recess. It was made very plain then that it is the purpose of the government to submit to the house legislation—it will be first of all a resolution and then a bill to follow the resolution —to provide for the payment to Newfoundland in accordance with the recommendation of the royal commission on the terms of union with Newfoundland of the payments for the first two years of the five year period in question, and it was made perfectly clear in the Prime Minister's statement that the payments for the fiscal years 1957-58 and 1958-59 would be charged to the federal government's accounts for the year 1958-59. That is perfectly plain for everyone to see, and that is precisely what is proposed.

As to the amount, the Prime Minister made it clear that this is the amount that is provided for in the recommendations of the royal commission on the terms of union with Newfoundland. It amounts to the annual payments that are recommended less the transitional payments which are now in decreasing amounts as they run out, and the sum of $13.6 million represents two years' net payments after deducting the transitional grants in accordance with the provisions of article 29 of the terms of union with Newfoundland. Nothing could be plainer than that.

It has not taken legislative effect yet and cannot, of course, until parliament passes the legislation. It is the intention of the government, as the Prime Minister then indicated, to introduce the necessary legislation. First of all there will be a resolution, and if the house approves the resolution the bill will then follow. The amount that has been named in the report of the commissioners for these many months now is the amount that was indicated by the Prime Minister; and this statement indicates, Mr. Speaker, that it is the intention of the government that these payments for the two fiscal years—

Mr. Chevrier: It does not. It does no such thing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —1957-58 and 1958-59 should be charged to the federal government's accounts for the year 1958-59. What could be plainer, what could be fairer, what could be more proper than that, instead of all this smokescreen and nonsense that has been raised today?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure how relevant it is, but could the minister say whether the reference to the Newfoundland additional grants act is a reference to an act which has been passed or which is proposed to be passed?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, Mr. Speaker. In the table, as you will notice, the first line refers to payments under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, as amended. Then it goes on to deal with the statutory subsidies, then the transitional grants to Newfoundland, and then the additional grants to Newfoundland. There is as yet no statutory authority for the payment of the additional grants to Newfoundland, and that will be the purpose of legislation to be introduced.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point of privilege which the Leader of the Opposition raises is that by referring to an act in the white paper as though it had been passed the minister is, in effect, offering an affront to parliament, which has not yet passed the act. If the act has not yet been passed but is only contemplated or in the bill stage, perhaps the minister would agree to the insertion of the word "proposed" before "Newfoundland additional grants act"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would be more than happy and ready to agree to that if it would make my hon. friends happy. Certainly it has no legislative effect, and if my hon. friends opposite object to the proposed legislation, perhaps it cannot be passed.

Mr. Pearson: The minister has made some statements that would call for some words from me. In the first place he said if we object to the passing of this legislation, why do we not say so? At the beginning of my remarks I said that the questions of the extent and nature of the government's obligations under the terms of union were not at issue. We have made our position clear on that.

Then the minister, who was in the past always so sensitive, even so spectacular about his devotion to the rights of parliament, said that this particular addition to Hansard really did not have any validity because it was something that had been introduced into the record before the budget speech and did not require the permission of the house that evening for such introduction. If the minister will look at page 2410 of Hansard for April 9, 1959, he will see that he asked permission of the house to introduce these budget statements as part of the records of the house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pearson: Now, just a minute.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition is quite wrong.

Mr. Pearson: I shall read from Hansard, page 2410:

> There will be a number of tables that by leave of the house I will propose to place on the record of Hansard tonight, if the house were prepared to give its consent to that now I might save interrupting later.

So, Mr. Speaker, on page 55 of the budget papers we have one such table.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Pearson: The explanation of that table reads, "Under the Newfoundland additional grants act", not an act which is the proposed and which if the house passes it will be the basis for these additional grants, but under an act which assumes that parliament has already taken action. In support of that interpretation, Mr. Speaker, I cite the last sentence of this paragraph, which reads:

> The additional grants for the first two fiscal years, which are payable in 1958-59—

Not, "would amount" to $13.5 million, but the words used are "amounted to $13.5 million", as if they had already been covered by an act which has not even been introduced in this house in the resolution stage.

This is the point of privilege. If the minister will admit that he is wrong, and if this correction is made and it is admitted that it is a mistake his department made, perhaps on the assumption that the Prime Minister would introduce a bill and have it passed; if he will get up and admit that they made this mistake and if he will make the necessary corrections, we need not proceed with this motion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is one correction that needs to be made at once in the hon. gentleman's understanding of the situation concerning these tables. The white paper is not one of the tables for which permission to incorporate in Hansard was sought and obtained during the course of the budget speech on Thursday night. The white paper appears in the records of the house by reason of a motion passed on Wednesday, April 8, at page 2343 of Hansard, and which reads as follows:

> That the budget papers be published as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings and also as an appendix to tomorrow's Hansard.

That was the authority given by the house for inscribing the white paper in the records of the house. When at page 2410 of Hansard, in the course of the budget speech of Thursday evening, April 9, I asked for leave of the house to place on the record without reading them certain tables, those are tables appearing in the budget speech of Thursday evening and they do not include the white paper at all. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman that he is quite wrong in his approach to that matter.

As to the content of this statement in the white paper, I tried to make it quite clear that the legislation that was contemplated when this white paper was written, and is still contemplated, has not yet been passed and has not yet been introduced under pressure of business of the house. You have suggested, Mr. Speaker, that the word "proposed" be inserted, and I indicated that I should be entirely happy to accede to that suggestion in order to clarify the matter.

The house has not been misled. There is no suggestion that anything has been done or will be done that has not the approval of the house. The accounts for the year 1958-59 have not been closed. So far as the provision made or proposed to be made for the payment to Newfoundland of sums recommended for the fiscal years 1957-58 and 1958-59, they will be so recorded in the accounts of the government for the year 1958-59 when parliament has so authorized and certainly not before.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word because I want the record to be clear. The Leader of the Opposition, with what appeared to be synthetic annoyance engendered beyond the importance of the matter, made the statement that the reason that he did not raise this question—

Mr. McIlraith: Who is exhibiting synthetic annoyance now?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. gentleman who is now interrupting, and whom the former administration put and kept in a position of subservience, kindly be quiet?

Mr. Robichaud: We hear that from the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: The usual courtesy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask the house to give the Prime Minister the opportunity to discuss the question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman made the statement that the reason he did not raise this matter on Friday was that he had not before him Hansard, which did not come out until three o'clock in the afternoon, as I remember it. The hon. gentleman apparently did not realize that it appeared attached to Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday, April 9. Therefore the care with which he explained the fact that he could not raise this alleged question of privilege until today falls down. It indicates that the examination he made over Sunday was not made when it could have been made of Votes and Proceedings. I just mention that matter because the hon. gentleman was explaining why he had failed to raise this matter earlier. It is apparent that those who read for him had not seen this in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, once again I have been brought into the argument. The Minister of Finance has raised a smokescreen of argument, I admit, but the Prime Minister has raised a smokescreen of political claptrap. If I was not able to digest all the details of these budget papers in the 48 hours from Wednesday to Friday, it is obvious that the members of the government were not able to go over these papers in the two or three weeks during which they were considering the budget. Otherwise they would never have allowed this table to appear.

The Minister of Finance has called attention to the fact that it appeared on Wednesday, and in that I think he is quite correct. But it and the other papers were introduced on Thursday in Hansard, with the consent and approval of the house. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 2410 of Hansard the minister—and I am sure he will agree with this—asked for the inclusion in Hansard of a table which appears on that page as table 1. It is headed "Federal contributions to the provinces" and there is no argument, I am sure, between us as to when he asked permission to include this table in Hansard and when it was included.

In this table—and this is a supplementary criticism which I make of the government on this occasion—the minister included a figure of $13.6 million as the federal contribution to the province. If the Minister of Finance, irrespective of what the Prime Minister has said, will just carry out the promise he has given us to correct this paragraph by putting the word "proposed" before the word "Newfoundland", and change the word "amounted" in the fifth line to "would amount", the record will be corrected and the house can go on with its business.

Mr. Speaker: In so far as there may be an affront to the house in the description of the act in the white paper, the minister who is responsible for it has agreed to add the word "proposed" before "Newfoundland additional grants act". Does the minister accept the other suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, the substitution of the words "would amount to" for the words "amounted to"?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the other suggestion is unnecessary, because the figures in this table are estimates. These are the estimated payments proposed and, similarly, with regard to table 1 which was placed on record in Hansard by leave of the house on Thursday evening, those are estimated payments also. When we are making up the tables for the payments estimated to be made for the year 1959-60 we include the provision which we expect will be made by way of payments to Newfoundland of $7.3 million, just as under the heading 1958-59 we show the preliminary figure to include the proposed payment of $13.6 million. It is perfectly clear, and perfectly in accordance with the practice of the house in former years.

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested that the words "amounted to" be changed to the present tense and be made to read "amount to". If the minister would agree to make this change, and the house would accept it, it seems to me it would dispose of the matter and make it unnecessary for me to rule on this motion. Is it acceptable to the minister that a change be made so the last line shall read "The additional grants for the first two fiscal years, which are payable in 1958-59, amount to $13½ million," instead of "amounted to $13½ million".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you reading from page 55?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, from page 55. We might change the wording to make it read "amount to" rather than "amounted to", putting it in the present tense. Does the house agree to these corrections being made?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Sixth and seventh reports of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

TRANSPORT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR APPLICATION BY TRUCKERS TO MINISTER ON AGREED CHARGES

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-39, to amend the Transport Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The purpose of this amendment is to provide that representatives of the trucking industry shall have the right to make application to the Minister of Transport when they feel that an agreed charge unjustly discriminates against a motor vehicle operator.

Proposed Legislation

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR APPLICATION BY TRUCKERS TO TRANSPORT BOARD ON COMPETITIVE RATES

Mr. J. F. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-40 to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. Chevrier: Explain this.

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): The purpose of this amendment is to provide that representatives of the trucking industry shall have the right to make application to the board of transport commissioners for the disallowance of a competitive rate when they consider that such a rate has subjected motor vehicle operators to an undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the hon. member what section of the Railway Act he seeks to amend?

Mr. Browne (Vancouver-Kingsway): Section 334.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

The Minister of Public Works—The following proposed motion:—That items numbered 261 to 293, inclusive, and items numbered 476 and 477, as listed in the main estimates of 1959-1960, relating to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, be withdrawn from the committee of supply and be referred to the standing committee on mines, forests and waters, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the minister allow this to stand over until tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT

On the order: Government notices of motion:

The Minister of Transport—The following proposed motion:—That a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government, be appointed to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships and Trans-Canada Airlines, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys; and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 67 in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee shall consist of 26 members.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PROTESTS RESPECTING TERM 29, TERMS OF UNION, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 85—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland since March 25, 1959, protesting the announcement of the government regarding term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, together with the replies thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this motion stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, I was proposing to move this motion.

Mr. Speaker: I understood that the hon. member was willing to have it stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the government wish to have it stand, and if the government make a request to that effect, I would be glad to consider it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member willing to have the motion stand?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I said, if the Prime Minister wishes to have this motion stand for some good reason, I would be very glad to comply with his request.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NFLD.—PROTESTS AGAINST FEDERAL ACTION

Motion No. 86—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland since March 10, 1959, protesting the refusal of the government to reinforce the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Newfoundland, together with the replies thereto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stand.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I see no reason why this motion should stand. It is in exactly the same terms as a motion asking for similar correspondence addressed to the Minister of Justice and to the Prime Minister, which was passed by the house. I wish to proceed with this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING RENTALS, ARMED FORCES, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Motion No. 87—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by Hillcrest Housing Company of Summerside, Prince Edward Island or any solicitor or agent on behalf of that company on the one hand, and the Minister of National Defence or any official of his department or any other department of government since June 21, 1957, respecting the rental of housing units for personnel of the armed forces.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, for sound and adequate reasons I ask that this motion stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to comply with the minister's request.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

PROTESTS AGAINST TERM 29, TERMS OF UNION, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 88—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Prime Minister since March 25, 1959, protesting the announcement of the government regarding term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, together with the replies thereto.

Right. Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, subject to the limitation respecting personal or confidential letters or communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, subject to the reservations expressed by the Prime Minister?

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on March 25, just before the Easter recess, the Prime Minister was good enough to state in reply to a question by me that he would "endeavour forthwith after the Easter recess to place before the house in as complete outline as is then possible the legislative program". I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position to do that now, or within a few days?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think it would be better if I had a few days in order to look into the matter so the statement will be as complete as possible.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It has to do with question No. 147 on the order paper, which has been standing unanswered since February 18. I wonder when I might receive an answer.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I am surprised that the hon. member has not had the answer either Saturday or today, because it passed over my desk on Thursday afternoon, I think, and went forward.

Mr. McIlraith: Would you check up on it?

Mr. Harkness: I will be glad to check up on it again. The only reason I can suggest why he has not received it is some delay in the mail. I am sure the hon. member will get it tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: Ask the Postmaster General.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REASON FOR STATEMENT ON PROVINCIAL PAYMENTS IN BUDGET ADDRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it would be a fair conclusion that the reason he included in his budget the figure of $1,212 million, representing all payments by the federal government to the provinces, was that he wanted to indicate that he had no intention of acceding to Premier Frost's request for an additional $100 million?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Essex East might better take advantage of the debate which will follow this to deal with matters of that kind.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL AID TO STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that on March 9 last the house passed a resolution that I moved asking for the production of certain correspondence more directly related to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Will he kindly make inquiries as to why this rather lengthy lapse of time has passed since the motion was passed and no results have been forthcoming?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do that.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF U.S. SUBSIDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the minister's coming trip south of the border to talk with United States officials on problems relating to the Canada Shipping Act. Will the minister consider talks with the proper United States officials on the effects of their policy of subsidizing United States maritime shipping into the great lakes, or at least find out why and how they support their shipping with such subsidies?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to give consideration to the hon. member's request.

IMMIGRATION

KLAUS FUCHS—REPORTED REQUEST FOR ADMITTANCE TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In this morning's Gazette it is reported that London may ask Canada to accept the atom spy, Klaus Fuchs. Has any consideration been given to this question?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had various departments communicated with in order to ascertain what foundation, if any, there is for the press dispatch referred to by the hon. gentleman, and I have been unable to find anything to substantiate the substance of the report.

HIGHWAYS

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON REPORTED CLOSING OF MAIN ROAD ALONG WATERFRONT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Laurier asked me a question arising from an article in La Presse to the effect that the main highway running along the waterfront in Montreal adjacent to the border and within the jurisdiction of the Montreal harbour commission is to be closed. In answer I am glad to report to him that it is not the intention to close the waterfront road to which my hon. friend referred. This road is located inside the harbour limits, and by reason of the fact that a considerable number of persons having no business in the harbour have been utilizing it, congestion and serious inconvenience to port traffic and railway operations have been created. To alleviate this condition, which is detrimental to the welfare and efficiency of the port, the imposition of restrictions upon unwarranted traffic is now proposed.

I might add that the article in La Presse says, among other things:

> A few days away from the opening of the seaway, the decision of the national harbours board appears fully justified.

Also, on Thursday last the Gazette commented in an editorial, "The move is a logical one."

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the fairly lengthy budget speech which we heard the other night buried a number of important facts, I think, within the superlatives in the address. One's immediate reaction was that some of the rhetoric and semantics fairly shouted for further investigation, and one is indeed quite grateful for the interval of two or three days before dealing with some of the important matters referred to then.

There have been rather substantial increases in the public relations and personal staff of the Minister of Finance, and after the event they endeavoured to see that summaries were provided to the C.B.C. and the press that would give the impression that the budget had substantially avoided the little man in its tax bite; but I was amused to find in this city of Ottawa on the following day something that is rather extraordinary. The two Ottawa papers do not always agree, but we find that they had almost exactly the same headline. The Ottawa Journal said "Every Pocket Hit", and the Ottawa Citizen varied it very little and said "Budget Hits Every Pocket". After a bit of digestion I think that is what is understood to be the result of the budget.

Certainly the increase in sales tax hits everyone, and a substantial portion of the new taxes to be levied comes from that source. I was somewhat surprised that this would be the tendency of the Minister of Finance, because he certainly was a very severe critic of the merit, so far as the little man is concerned, of placing special emphasis on tax raising from this source. Indeed the Minister of Finance, on the occasion of his last opportunity to discuss fiscal and monetary matters when on this side of the house, complained on March 21, 1957 that the minister of finance of that time had done nothing to reduce the sales tax on clothing, boots and shoes, etc. He went on to say, as found on page 2555 of Hansard:

> If inflation expresses itself in high prices then surely the government ought to have reduced the sales tax on those necessities of life—

Yet this is the source of tax revenue that seems to be chiefly relied upon in this budget.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Chiefly?

Mr. Benidickson: In dollar volume. My hon. friend anticipates increased annual revenue of $352 million, and I think he will find that a very exceptional portion is from the sales tax.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): About one-quarter.

Mr. Benidickson: I am referring to the over-all tax on purchases for old age pensions as well as excise taxes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): About one-quarter.

Mr. Benidickson: I think he will also agree that the tax on corporations is generally regarded as being passed on fairly quickly to the consumers, and I propose to have something to say about that, too. The Minister of Finance, in comments since Thursday night, has been called an Indian giver. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the Indians in the part of northern Ontario from which I come could learn quite a bit from the present Minister of Finance, because the arithmetic is pretty simple. Actually he has taken back $2 for every $1 he gave in tax reduction in the pre-election budget or the baby budget of 1957.

But that is not the entire story. I think a great number of people who have had economic reverses during the period that my hon. friend has been in charge of the treasury will agree with the secretary of the trades and labour council, who said:

> Most of the minor tax reliefs granted before the election of 1958 were eliminated in Thursday's budget without restoring the level of economic prosperity that existed at that time.

We have had a very quick reaction as to the inflationary squeeze that can develop from further imposts on consumer expenditures such as were so prominent in the budget. Even the press was wrong. The following morning the headlines said "Fags Up 2 Cents." That, of course, seemed to be the nearest figure to the actual amount of the tax increase, but we all know that within a matter of hours the giant in the field said "Oh, well, we have increased operating expenses, and as a manufacturer our increase must be 3 cents." We quickly got a very similar reaction from other manufacturers. Canadian General Electric said their costs were rising. Westinghouse reacted in the same way and said that as a result of the new tax set-up they would have to reprice their goods. No one will deny that as a result of the repricing the consumer will end up paying out of the gross national product about which the minister speaks a great deal more than the actual dollar value of the taxes referred to in the budget.

I am sure there were a great many who were surprised that the minister had actually increased the purchase tax with respect to automobiles. I am sure the ministers from the Ontario constituency, the hon. Minister of Labour, as well as the hon. members from Essex constituencies would be very surprised; because we recall the great enthusiasm with which hon. members opposite greeted the announcement of a 2.5 per cent decrease in the purchase taxes on automobiles announced by the Minister of Finance in December, 1957. Statements were made that this amounted to a 25 per cent reduction of the excise tax formerly at 10 per cent. Well, put on that arithmetical basis the minister has taken back 40 per cent of the value of any reduction he made at that time.

It has been said that perhaps early today we will hear from the treasury benches, and that perhaps the spokesman will be the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). I recall that he participated very early in the budget debate last year, and I recall that one of the many statistics he used to buttress his arguments related to automobile production. Fortunately there has been some slight increase in the sales of automobiles in Canada as compared with last year. The statistics to the end of March indicated that the increase in the sales of automobiles and trucks combined amounted to 12 per cent. However, other members will have read, as I have, that the increase in the same period of 1959 in the United States amounted to 70 per cent. This extra purchase tax, therefore, is going to be felt very importantly in these constituencies where I think unemployment of late has been of unusual prominence.

There are a few items in the budget press releases that I feel are not properly understood by the people of this country. I suggest that one such item is the actual increase in the tax take which results from this budget. Prominence was given, of course, only to the estimated value of the extra tax revenue that would come from the new rates, but what was overlooked was the fact that because of the extra expenditures and the extra revenues, the total tax take predicted by the minister for the coming year is not up $245 million but is to be up $640 million. The minister felt justified in telling the house and the country he expected an increase in the gross national product, and he expected that might amount to $2.2 billion. But I am sure any reasonable person today, with recovery not bouncing, would be wondering whether or not a proposal to take $640 million by federal taxes alone out of this expected increase in the gross national product is likely to aid or abort recovery.

I said the other night that you get figures in a debate like this that have a bright side, and if they are unduly exaggerated or overemphasized there is a duty to present as well some of those that are distressing and not quite so cheerful. I want to point out, with respect to the gross national product, that the minister has qualified his estimate in exactly the same words that he qualified his estimate last year. He said, and his assumptions are very important, that assuming normal crops, stable prices and no untoward external events, he predicted this year a 7 per cent rise. We recall the figures with respect to the minister's prediction of last year. He predicted an increase of two per cent, and it turns out that in dollar values the increase was 2.5 per cent. However, his white paper on financial results points out that 80 per cent of that increase came from inflated prices, so this is something to which we have to give consideration when he estimates an increase in the gross national product.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Did the hon. gentleman not suggest last year that 2 per cent was optimistic?

Mr. Pearson: And so it was.

Mr. Benidickson: I want to point out that based on his assumptions the minister proved to be wrong. Actually, the white paper establishes that Canada's living standards underwent a slight decline in 1958. Living costs outpaced small gains in wages, reducing real earnings for the first time in recent years. My hon. friend can calculate that from the white paper itself, I think on page 5, where it states that 80 per cent of the 2.5 per cent increase was due to inflationary prices.

I said the other night, and I think it is worth emphasizing, that in looking at this all-important figure of the gross national product it is very difficult to be as optimistic as one would want to be because of two particular elements that are essential to a steady rise in the gross national product. One of these elements is exports; the other is capital investment. Since the budget speech we have received the most recent issue of the Financial Post, a very reliable newpaper indeed. The Financial Post of April 11, 1959, has this to say about these elements:

> Exports are giving more indications of receding from last year's high levels. In February, for example, Canadian goods sold abroad were off 11 per cent, after taking into consideration seasonal influences. It is unlikely that the full year will be down this much, but it is still hard for many producers to see any sudden upsurge in foreign demand for most Canadian source-related products.

This year's statistics, available only for the first two months, actually show that the trade deficit of this country is three times that reported last year. With respect to capital spending, another all-important element in the gross national product, the same issue of the Financial Post has this to say:

> There is still no sign of a turnaround in capital spending by business. Year-to-year decrease for Canada for 1959 will be about 5.5 per cent. In the United States, by contrast, business plans call for 1959 outlays over 4 per cent higher than last year's.

I suggest to the minister that there is certainly no significant "oomph" in figures of this kind. In addition to that, in the private sector, according to the latest report I have from the A. E. Ames brokerage firm, reporting on corporation borrowings to March 23, it is stated that corporation borrowings in Canada, indicating capital investment intentions, are down 76 per cent, or are $48 million this year instead of $207 million last year.

Now, at this stage I am not going to belabour the question of what is the real deficit, either in the accounts of 1958-59 or 1959-60. However, I am going to point out again that as a result of some rather slick bookkeeping, the minister is still successful in planting this figure of a deficit of $617 million rather than the real figure of $835 million. I say to the minister that if it was his intention to keep these expenditures from the defence account out of the current budget he required to do more than simply make a speech about it as he did on budget night in June last. Actually I think he will find that he saw to it that not only were those proposed defence expenditures in full put in the blue book of estimates, but that they were included in appropriation bill No. 5 as part of the budget at the gross amount, $1,630 million.

But I am afraid that some of this type of arithmetic is not over with. We all noted that again this year there appears prominently a figure of this kind. When the minister estimates the deficit for the forthcoming year at $393 million surely it is obvious that, contrary to practice for quite a number of years, he has no intention of including in the expenditures for this year a fairly closely calculable item of $42 million, namely the expected deficit in the old age pension fund. He did not say positively that this would be recovered even within the following year; he said it might take two or three years to recover that amount. But the point is that that is to be a borrowed item. In accordance with the practice of past years one would have expected that it would have been included in the budget in the normal way.

I said the other night that one of the obvious indicators of decreasing financial confidence in the competence, understanding and real intention and determination of this government to cope with what I agree were fairly massive, wide dimensional problems, was the steadily declining prices offered for federal bonds. The minister spoke again on Thursday to the body politic; but while the patient realizes that he cannot change his physician for a couple of years yet, he did not seem to be any more convinced that he was getting the right treatment. Because actually, following the minister's statement with respect to mammoth increases in expenditures, borrowings, debt and taxes, federal securities weakened again the day after the budget. The latest budget, no more than other financial statements, I submit to the minister, therefore has not succeeded in convincing the country that they know what are the intentions of the minister and the administration in these all-important matters.

That indeed is the charge we have made against this administration, but I did not expect it to come from the chief journalistic supporter in Toronto of the Conservative administration. However on Saturday, after examination of the budget, the Toronto Globe and Mail had this to say:

> The present government at Ottawa has not yet arrived at a fiscal policy. It is simply struggling to raise money for a 12-month period—the money needed to meet its cumulative commitments, and the predetermined expenditures of its various departments.

We have said before that the budget deficit of last year was not planned but merely happened. We say again that the new taxes and the important deficit for this year are again the result of a long series of unco-ordinated decisions. I know the minister would like us to believe otherwise. He would like us to think these were part of an over-all financial plan. However, I think the record is against him. For too long, in matters of this kind, the ministry has not been planning ahead. Its decisions have been on a hit or miss basis, and the minister has had no choice but simply to pick up the chips for the bungling and bumbling that has involved only hindsight and not foresight. The big thing is that the ministry continues to keep the country in the dark as to its real intentions. As a result we have continued confusion and uncertainty. That is why the country lacks confidence financially in the administration.

As we know, from the very beginning we have had conflicts among important people in the ministry as to what is the real plan and intention of this government in matters of fiscal policy. During the election campaign of 1957 the Minister of Finance was just as vigorous and almost as vocal as was the Prime Minister when he told the people, and convinced them, that it was possible to increase old age pensions, make larger payments to the provinces and municipalities, cut income taxes, cut automobile taxes and do all these things on a balanced budget. That is obvious from a great number of quotations that are available to us. In Vancouver in 1957 the Prime Minister said:

> The Liberals say they cannot increase pensions and reduce taxes. Give us a chance and we will show you.

Of course we all know with what indignation and withering scorn he was able to make assertions of that kind, but the point I want to make is this. Even after six or seven months of the responsibility of office was there any indication on the part of the Prime Minister that as a result of being on the other side of the house he had found out some of the facts of life with respect to financial policy, or that he was more knowledgeable or realistic in matters of that kind?

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, we find this. Six or seven months later, after statements of this kind that might be excused to some extent in an election campaign, the financial critic the hon. Mr. Sinclair on this side of the house asked the Prime Minister about his much vaunted assertion he had made so frequently, namely that a $500 million reduction could be made in taxes with $120 for each man, woman and child in the country, and so on, and why were the financial proposals of the Minister of Finance in December so meagre in comparison.

We find this. On January 20, 1958, as reported at page 3523 of Hansard, the Prime Minister was asserting that he had done a great deal, and this is the dialogue:

> We have reduced taxes—
> Mr. Sinclair: How much?
> Mr. Diefenbaker: They say how much, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Sinclair: You promised $500 million.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: When we have the authority we shall do so.

We know that in a short time the Prime Minister was given authority. He has a commanding majority here. We sometimes wonder whether it is not a commanded majority. Nevertheless, this was the assertion; even after seven or eight months of holding office he still maintained that this assertion was justifiable. We know what happened. The public was persuaded that, with the vision, the government could spent more, tax less and do all this without any inflation; and, of course, could do this with a balanced budget.

Over the week end I have heard some comments. Many people who are not partisan with respect to politics say they do not see much change in the budget propositions that have been put forward, or many changes, except one important one. Practically all of them realize that the new administration has certainly left the till empty.

Right after the election we found that the Minister of Finance had lost no confidence in his ability to operate on the theories I have just quoted. I remember the great satisfaction that was portrayed on the faces of the new members on the treasury benches when we assembled in the fall. They were quite satisfied that they could accomplish these things, and they did not seem to be much concerned about the recession.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his speech the other night would lead us to believe that in his first financial effort in this chamber in December 1957 he did seem to have given some recognition to the economic conditions which eventually proved to be depressive. But I just want to give hon. members some indication this is not so and that if this were so the minister was certainly not talking to the House of Commons or to the rest of Canada in this way, because on the very day before he made that financial statement to this house on December 5, 1957 this was his view as expressed to the young people at the University of Toronto when he was addressing the Hart House debaters. He said: "Canada has no crisis or emergency in unemployment". A day or two before this he was addressing another group, and he had similar comments to make. Speaking before the dominion commercial travellers association he said that unemployment on the present scale naturally gives us all concern, but that there is no justification for calling it an emergency as some are doing.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) had occupied his office for some months, and this experience did not seem to convince him that there was too much to worry or complain about, because in December, in Montreal, he said this:

> There is hardly an economist who does not feel that the unemployment situation is merely temporary, and that given a brief breathing pause the natural buoyancy of the economy would assert itself.

We know what happened in the election campaign. There was no attempt on the part of the administration to indicate that they had many serious worries about the future in this respect. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in February and March was saying that the situation was licked, and we know that all summer after the election there were optimistic noises being made despite warnings from all sectors of the country. In the middle of June when the Minister of Finance was obliged to disclose the financial situation in his budget the picture really began to shock the country.

We have since seen the financial results. The true position was indicated, not only by a deficit where the minister had predicted a surplus but also by the terrific deficit which he forecast for the year 1958-59, and the intimation that deficits of this order were likely to be with us for some time. I am sure that this, as much as anything else, has set off the inflation psychosis to which the governor of the Bank of Canada referred in the report which was recently issued.

I maintain that this lack of frankness, over two years, is still one of the most serious matters of misconduct of which this government can be accused. There are many matters at this very moment which call for candid statements to this house. I am thinking of such subjects as tight money and inflation and I intend to say something about the conversion loan. I want, also to say that we on this side abhor the debating tactics of several hon. members on the other side of the house when an attempt is made to discuss these all-important questions. We are not going to be deterred at all from discussing them and bringing them into the light of parliamentary debate by the threadbare argument that this would be giving some comfort to the Russians, or that it was almost unpatriotic—practically traitorous—to talk about some of these matters. I hope that before this debate closes we shall get from the Minister of Finance, both in attitude and in frankness, something very different from what we have witnessed recently when matters of this kind have been before us.

I have observed that it has been the minister's custom to sit in his seat and shout across the floor such terms as "rubbish", "nonsense", "improper", "irresponsible" and so on. Then before the debate closes we hear nothing further from the hon. gentleman. I hope he will speak with greater candour in the course of this debate with regard to these all important matters. This shyness on the part of the Minister of Finance is something new. He never used to be shy in discussing matters of this kind, and I can easily give an illustration or two in support of what I am saying. For example, on March 27, 1956, as reported in Hansard on page 2648, this is what he had to say:

> Every time the bank rate was raised, it had the effect of subtracting millions of dollars from the value of the bonds held by Canadians, including dominion government bonds.

We found no shyness or lack of statements from the government when interest rates appeared to be going in another direction. I recall that on January 27, 1958, as reported on page 3852 of Hansard, the finance minister did not think it was improper to say something about government policy in a matter of this kind. These are his words: "The tight money policy has now been eased in line with the policies of this government." He was referring to municipalities, and so on. The Prime Minister had earlier met the premiers of the provinces—on November 25, 1957—and again, at this conference, he had no timidity about discussing a matter of this sort. He said: "Here in Canada, quietly and gradually over the last three months, the tight money situation has been eased." And he added:

> Those whose business it is to follow the bond market will have noticed it, and that includes many of you here, but it has not attracted such attention as one would think it has merited.

I could give innumerable quotations of this kind. The Minister of Finance during the election campaign was listing the elements of the Conservative inheritance which had been left them by the Liberals, and one of them, he said, was that interests rates were at the highest point in the generation. Credit was stifled, he said, by a tight money policy. Then he went on to say:

> Money is now more plentiful. Credit and interest rates have been reduced very substantially.

I draw to the attention of the minister that the rate for treasury bills one day after the budget was 4.42 per cent. A week before it was 4.33 per cent, and the week before that it was again 4.22 per cent. The all-time high, previously, was 4.08 per cent —the rate about which he had been complaining—and I suggest we are entitled to have some further authoritative statement from the ministry with respect to the government's intentions in matters of this kind, because when interest rates were going down, hon. gentlemen on the other side did not hesitate to say it was a result of government policy. The governor of the Bank of Canada, at page 3 of his recent report, said this:

> I believe that these fears of inflation will prove to have been exaggerated, particularly if appropriate steps may be expected to be taken to overcome government deficits.

The minister told us in his budget speech that he is not unduly apprehensive, or rather that he has no expectation of substantial increases in the cost of living in the course of the next year or two. If the minister and the governor do take this view I think the Minister of Finance should be able to tell us just why there is such a tight money rein at the moment. We know it is stifling capital investment and that the resort to the United States market is unduly high, particularly on the part of junior governments. And I am sure that the Minister of Finance did not miss the complaint of the chairman of the metropolitan area in Toronto, Mr. Gardiner, who is no normal critic of the present government but who felt obliged to complain and squeal with respect to the federal government's policies in this sphere of interest rates.

Mr. Stinson: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member leaves this subject, would he permit a question?

Mr. Benidickson: Surely.

Mr. Stinson: Would the hon. member not agree that the conversion loan was a good thing for Canada?

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has simply drawn me to the next subject with which I propose to deal. We did not have an opportunity to deal with any authoritative information on the matter of the conversion loan when the house adjourned last session. The Minister of Finance at that time was not prepared or was not able perhaps to give us very much information with respect to the costs of the operation and we only this session gained some information of that kind.

As the hon. gentleman who interrupts knows, the Minister of Finance is certainly one who has maintained with great fervour that this scheme was an unqualified success. Indeed, he says it so frequently that I suspect there are many Canadians who wonder if it is not a case of the minister protesting too much.

An hon. Member: Mr. Coyne says so.

Mr. Benidickson: I am going to indicate some questions that I feel should be very carefully considered by all hon. members of this house particularly when we are being asked to raise taxation for a one-year period to the extent of some $350 million. I have indicated that the sentiment of investors vis-à-vis this government has not improved and in fact seems to be on the decline, despite protestations that this conversion loan was an unqualified success. I believe it is a well known fact that since this government came into office—we will take the period from the end of June 1957 to the end of March 1959—it has increased the amount of our debt by $1,664 million and at the same time the money supply is about $1,720 million greater than it was at that time. I do not think anybody can deny that the deficit announced last June has been the cause of the conversion as well as the cause of this unprecedented expansion of the money supply. The government's need to borrow money is the explanation of both of these operations.

I think the following is rather significant. I noted that one of our most respected officials who has retired from the Department of Finance is reported in an article at page 394 of the November-December journal of the Canadian tax foundation. I think this statement is typical of the down to earth remark one would expect from Dr. A. K. Eaton. Describing the role of civil servants in the finance area he said:

> You cannot pretend to be fighting inflation at a time when you have lined up your powers behind the government in a drive to sell bonds to meet deficit financing.

There are a number of facts we have obtained this session with regard to the conversion loan. I ask hon. members who have asked me questions about this particular operation to reflect on the matter and tell us what they think about some of these startling results. The Minister of Finance in returns to those on this side who have asked these questions has indicated that we can now take the immediate cost of the operation to be $42,400,000 for premiums, $19,478,000 for commissions, $7,300,000 for issuing fees, $1,495,000 for advertising and $1,265,000 for administrative costs. Those immediate costs alone total $71 million plus, to get the project launched. Even more important, I think, is the cost that is involved in the years ahead.

I continue to draw the attention of hon. members to the relationship to the need for increased taxation. The Minister of Finance has indicated that the annual interest on the new bonds will be $58 million more than what was paid on the bonds that were converted; there is an amortization charge on an annual basis of $6 million; that totals $64 million.

The important thing I want to ask hon. members who have interrupted is this. Can they give me any good reason—and we have heard nothing about it from the administration—why the conversion committed itself to maturities well in the future. I refer to the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th victory loans. Permit me to state what the result of that cost has been. The extra interest that will have to be paid for the 6th victory loan, which would not have matured until June 1, 1960, is over $13 million. Calling in advance the 7th victory loan results in an expense of $44 million; for the 8th victory loan, not due until October of 1963, $91 million, and for the 9th victory loan, not due until 1966, $165 million in extra interest. The total of interest with respect to these particular maturities is the staggering amount of $314 million.

But that is not the whole story. In addition to that, premiums had to be paid for the conversion of these loans. That involves another $30 million, giving a total of $345 million. I point out that this is very close to the increase in taxes we are discussing here. As an hon. gentleman on this side suggests, this could perhaps be referred to as a howling success.

Another question I would direct to hon. gentlemen opposite is this. Have they received a satisfactory and convincing answer to the question posed by the fact that in the case of the 17-year 4¼ per cent new bonds and in the case of the 25-year 4½ per cent new bonds there was no elementary prudence taken in putting in, a few years in advance of maturity, a provision that would give a right on the part of the government to call them. This has been more or less standard practice in the past. In other words if interest rates go down within the 17 and 25 year periods the government has no right to call in those bonds.

Surely hon. members supporting the government have heard from many constituents, as I have, another criticism to the effect that from sorry hindsight they rather think they were diddled by this operation. They are recalling with considerable distaste the television and radio eloquence of the Prime Minister, the sledge hammer arguments of the Minister of Finance, the high advertising campaign and its very considerable expense and perhaps in particular they remember advertisements such as those which encouraged females to take advantage of the premiums and buy new hats. They remember all these things but what they are perhaps most conscious of is the fact that they have suffered promptly very substantial capital losses.

I have been disappointed to find in the explanation we have received from the ministry that there is an indication that they seem to be proud that they put something over and that this saved the crown some money. If in August the government knew what was likely to happen to bond prices and still went ahead with the conversion scheme, the complaints we are getting from the public are justified. If the government did not know what was going to happen then I feel it should have been better informed. If the government did not know, how much reliance can we place on the predictions and comments we might get along a similar line at this time? In any case, I think it is extremely poor taste on the part of the administration to brag about the success of this conversion operation which has resulted in a great number of their fellow citizens being victimized by sustaining very injurious losses.

A great number of matters are referred to in the minister's speech with which one would like to deal, but the debate will be going on for some days and there will be many others more competent than myself to deal with them. In addition, it is an unusual debate in that it provides several stages for further discussion, namely the resolutions, the bills and so on. As I said the other night, one of the most impressive things, because of the relative silence, in the budget speech, was the reference to unemployment. We are all very concerned about the fact that if the recession is disappearing it is doing so much faster than unemployment.

Probably many of us read recently the report in the Financial Post of a very wide canvass of businessmen as to the economic prospects. Quite a number of them indicated that in their opinions there could be an expectation of an increase in profits, in output and that those were inching upwards in probably a majority of instances; but 70 per cent of those consulted said that they foresaw no increase in the labour force even in consequence of an advance in those other sectors. These are the things that we have heard little about from the administration and I hope that those who follow me in the debate will say more about government intentions in this all-important field.

I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan):

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following be substituted therefor: "this house regrets the bad faith of the government, which sought and secured support from the Canadian people on a program of lower taxes, reduced expenditures and a balanced budget, and which has now produced, in flagrant disregard of pre-election promises, a budget calling for higher taxes, record expenditures and a large deficit.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the country has waited a long time for the bringing down of the budget. We have all recognized in this as well as in other commonwealth countries that the contents of the budget must not be revealed to anyone before the budget is actually presented to the house and to the country. I do not for a moment assume that there was a leak of the contents of the budget this time. I know that a member of the fourth estate is, however, a senior adviser and it is likely that when some months ago he was asked by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) what his opinion was as to the contents that the budget should contain he supplied a little advice to the Minister of Finance and he assured him that that advice would be accepted. I have reference to an article in the Montreal Gazette, dated March 12, 1959, under the title, "Ottawa Day By Day", by Arthur Blakely, in which he says among other things:

> Rightly or wrongly, the general expectation is that Mr. Fleming will not postpone a decision any longer but will move, in the new budget, towards a restoration of the rough state of balance between budgetary revenues and budgetary expenditures.
> It is also assumed that he will not attempt to restore this state of balance in a single budget, but will take some remedial action now and defer later measures (which might be made unnecessary by a new buoyancy in the economy) until later.

Then, a little farther on at the end of the article he says:

> It would not surprise many observers if Mr. Fleming made the fund—

And he is referring to the old age security fund.

> —again self-supporting by the imposition of a 3.3.3 formula, taking one additional per cent from personal income tax, corporation tax and sales tax.

I for one would like to congratulate this member of the fourth estate for having a keen insight into the operations of the mind of our Minister of Finance.

When we look at the budget which has been revealed we realize what a disappointment it is indeed because for the masses of the people of Canada there is nothing in it except higher taxes, higher interest rates and a rise in the debt of the federal government. There is nothing in the contents of the budget which will supply any hope to our unemployed, to our farmers, to our basic enterprises and to our secondary enterprises. There is in the budget no hope for those responsible for raising the necessary financing for the operation of either the provincial or municipal governments.

I realize that the minister is most able to present the budget of Canada for the government of Canada in as excellent light as it is possible to present a budget of the kind that he has brought before us. I will not attempt to assist him in that most able performance of what is a message of very little comfort indeed for the Canadian people.

I notice that the minister has made many admissions of failure in the budget. I grant that those admissions were very ably presented so that to find those admissions one really has to look very hard indeed. The minister has been able to persuade most Canadian newspapers and magazines—and he was able to accomplish this even before the presentation of the budget—that things are on the upgrade in Canada. There has been indeed a lot of whistling in the dark to keep our spirits up. The minister was very adept indeed on Thursday last at pouring on a lot of soothing syrup. There were plenty of words, exceptional language, there was excellent oratory, indeed, as only he is able to present oratory. However, as I listened to the minister, Mr. Speaker, it reminded me of a very conscientious clergyman who typed out his sermons and left rather wide margins. His sermons were also like the minister's speeches, on the lengthy side. On one particular margin of one particular page he had inserted the note, "Argument weak here; shout like hell". After listening to the minister, after considering the effect of the budget on the economy of Canada, we realize why the excellent oratory was indeed necessary.

The minister has a remarkable ability to use argument to prove prosperity when in the argument itself there is an admission of failure. I refer to an old term used in senior government civil service ranks which dates back—the minister did not use this one; however it is a play that can be put on words—I remember a Liberal minister of labour who used to talk about the decrease in the rate of increase when he gave us figures on unemployment. The other day the minister used the sentence, "Our net borrowings should be less than one-half", definitely conveying to the average layman, not spending too much time on the budget, the impression that we were about to reduce our debt. Actually I must admit that the minister said no such thing. However, his statement, "Our net borrowings should be less than one-half" invited the reaction and led many people to believe that we were about to reduce our debt.

It is our contention, Mr. Speaker, that the economy of Canada has reached the stage of being in very deep trouble indeed. I see that even the minister admits this, although inadvertently, because on page 2425 toward the end of his remarks, he said:

> Canada has no reason for fear.

I hope the minister can explain why he felt it necessary to insert in his budget speech the sentence, "Canada has no reason for fear." We maintain that there is a good deal of fear. The minister only has to look at interest rates to realize that there is a good deal of fear. I feel that he admitted that. However, he is attempting to wish it out of existence with the sentence, "Canada has no reason for fear."

It is our contention that the Tory party and the government, not only at election time but since, have been misleading the people of Canada as to what the true situation is, especially in the fields of unemployment and economic recovery and particularly so in the field of public finance. I have here a clipping from the Globe and Mail of March 6 last and under the heading, "Questions and Answers for Investors" there is an article published by Wood, Gundy and Company Limited containing a graph comparing yields on bonds and yields on stocks. It shows that the exceptionally high and excessive yields from investment in Canadian equities, which we in this group have advocated should be made more moderate by the imposition of heavier taxation, have forced a rise in interest rates on government borrowings until today, without considering the dividend income tax provisions, the returns from bonds are higher than the returns from investment in Canadian equities. That is something that has not happened during the whole period covered by the graph which begins with 1949 and goes up to 1959.

On many occasions we have called for the establishment of a national investment board and I note the odd place where our approach to this problem is being met. I have here a report in the Globe and Mail of March 31 from Madrid which reads as follows:

> The Spanish government announced here details of a new anti-inflationary law aimed at controlling public and private investment and steering it into areas useful to the nation.

In this modern day and age we feel that that concept will eventually have to be accepted as being one of the responsibilities of government, the management of the direction and flow of available investment capital so that the social needs of the nation may be met along with our industrial needs.

I notice that the confusion in the money market has caused some concern south of the border. Our Canadian government tells us that everything is all right but in another article published in the Gazette of March 11 I find this sentence:

> The 1958 fiasco was the worst debacle in the history of United States public finance. Thousands of investors lost money. The government bond market became demoralized and has not yet regained public confidence.

Official investigations are under way south of the border as to what can be done to restore public confidence in the issuance of government securities. Here we have in office a government that does not recognize the seriousness of the situation and tells us that we must accept the old law of supply and demand of the market place with regard to our social capital needs.

The government also has not fully informed the Canadian parliament or the people of the implications of the capital investment forecast for 1959. When we consider the implications of the statistics we see that capital investment is three per cent off compared with the 1958 level. I should like to refer to an article by John Meyer, financial editor of the Gazette, published on March 9 last in which he says:

> The $8,321 million in capital investment which the Department of Trade and Commerce anticipate this year, on the strength of the estimate given it at the beginning of the year, is 1.1 per cent less than last year's figure. Prices have increased 2 per cent over the last 12 months. In terms of 1958 values, then, capital investment intentions are a little more than 3 per cent off the 1958 level.

This article ignores the continuing growth in the Canadian population and if we consider the factor of the growing population we will see that the real situation in terms of continuing investment and expansion of the Canadian economy is even worse than indicated in the article.

With regard to markets, we are again assured that everything is rosy and that we do not have too much to worry about. The minister always likes to talk about what is happening south of the border and how that influences us here. I should like to refer him to an article in the Globe and Mail of March 12, 1959 by Richard E. Mooney from the New York Times service. Mr. Mooney says in part:

> In broad terms, the conclusion here—

The reference is to Washington.

> —is that the world is back on its feet. Europe has regained its prewar competitiveness, and underdeveloped nations are coming up. Both of these developments have long been objectives of U.S. foreign policy, objectives for which billions of dollars have been spent. The result, according to thinking here, is that U.S. producers can no longer dominate world trade so easily as they did in the earlier postwar years.

I believe that the government found that out when it found that its decision to transfer 15 per cent of our imports from the United States to the British commonwealth was not as easy to implement as to pledge at election time. We have a recession in our local market. Mention was made some time ago of retail sales. I have figures here to show what is happening in the field of retail sales. According to a dominion bureau of statistics report in February last, retail sales in 1957 amounted to $1,235,500,000 and in 1958 to $1,271 million, indicating a 2.9 per cent increase. When we relate this to the 2.6 per cent increase in the price index over the same period and also relate it to the increase in Canada's population of 2.3 per cent, we can see that net retail sales on a per capita basis in 1958 were away below those of 1957. We are not only losing markets abroad but we are losing markets at home, even though some statistics may be produced to show otherwise. If the change in the purchasing power of money is taken into account, as well as the growth in Canada's population, then we find we are not moving out of the economic recession, we are very much in it today. We find no action proposed by the government to remedy the situation.

Then, in so far as unemployment is concerned, this government plies us with statistics from the unemployment insurance commission, attempting to show that unemployment is on the wane. It reminds one a little bit of the phrase "argument weak here, shout like hell". This was the course followed during the election when we were assured, in these loud, booming voices, that so far as unemployment was concerned we were past the peak. Has anyone in the government ranks ever made an estimate of all those people who are ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits and who have not been near an office of the unemployment insurance commission for many long months? During the last winter in the Vancouver area we had 10,000 such people. All of these people whose unemployment insurance benefits have expired are no longer in the statistics that are supplied to this house by the government of Canada. Almost all the people above the age of 35, and especially those above the age of 40, who are told that they are too old for employment, have long since been taken off the list in the unemployment insurance commission offices.

We are told that last year there was a growth in Canada's labour force of only 1.16 per cent. The government always likes to brag about the growing number of people who are working in Canada. As I indicated before, last year our population rose by 2.2 per cent and yet at the same time our working force showed a rise of only 1.16 per cent. In my opinion this is rather clear evidence that unemployment actually is climbing in Canada instead of receding as the government would have the people of Canada believe. I should like to cite only one little example. If we were really climbing out of the economic recession, if we were really on the way to economic recovery, why would a report indicate that at this time some 25 per cent of the population of one of our ten provinces is on social welfare or relief? Surely, that does not indicate a return to prosperity.

Then, we have claims made, by a reference to industrial enterprise, that we have this economic recovery. Once again, when you consider the growth in population, when you consider the change in prices and think of the volume of goods, you will note that we are lagging rather than growing out of the recession. I have figures here showing industrial output for the month of December, 1958 as compared with December, 1956, and the base period for this index is taken as 1956. The index for December, 1956 stood at 154, while in December, 1958 it was only 148.2. One could take mining, for instance, as another good example. In December, 1957, the index for mining was 217.6; in December, 1958, the index for mining was 214.6. These indices are based on volume rather than the annual sales value in monetary terms.

I fail to see how the minister can, like the men of magic, pull a rabbit out of a hat and base a budget on a growth in gross national product for 1959 by seven per cent, because that is only two per cent less than the greatest industrial growth that Canada has ever experienced since the end of the war. In one year it was nine per cent. Last year, on a volume basis, there was less than one per cent growth, and on a per capita basis there was actually a decline in our gross national product. In spite of this, the minister says he expects a growth of seven per cent, and his predictions are very important, Mr. Speaker, because the whole welfare of the federal budget depends on the accuracy with which the minister is able to make his predictions.

In so far as national defence is concerned, the whole country is in a quandary. We do not know what the policy of the government is, nor is enough information supplied to indicate what the policy of the opposition is on this matter. We have no information about government policy in the field of transportation, and yet we are asked to subsidize railway transportation at least. The minister has not tackled the problem of the finances of the other levels of government. Instead of calling a dominion-provincial conference he is having a meeting with the provincial finance ministers. In the field of public financing, I feel the minister made a serious error the other day when he indicated his public borrowings would be $850 million. He failed to point out he will have to borrow this year some $1,350 million to refinance government bonds that are falling due in 1959. Adding this amount to the $850 million, we find that federal government bonds or other sureties that will have to be handled this year will amount to $2,200 million as opposed to last year's figure of $2,250 million, that is excluding the bond conversion deal. When we exclude the bond conversion deal, we find the minister will offer on the market this year practically the same amount of government bonds and treasury bills as he did last year.

I know the minister is accurate in the actual wording and the grammar of what he said but, in effect, the country was misled into believing that government borrowings this year would be only half of what they were last year. The facts show that the minister will be borrowing $2,200 million this year as opposed to $2,250 million last year. If he says that much of this is retiring debt, and the debt is only going to grow by $850 million, I know he is right. At the same time it has the effect of placing all these bonds as a new issue on the money market.

We feel that the Tories have been misleading the public in the matter of public financing and its relations with other governments. We feel that they have supplied inadequate information on national defence and on transportation. We feel that they have been misleading the public with as to what is happening with regard to economic recovery, unemployment, the market, our capital investment forecast and present incomes of Canadians which are down, as can be found at page 8 of the Canadian Statistical Review, the February issue.

We feel that the results of no action on the part of this government will be serious indeed. The world today is moving at a rapid pace. Canada's economy is especially vulnerable. Unemployment breeds unemployment. Industrial progress must be made in order to meet our ever-growing commitments and the requirements of our population. Agriculture is facing industrialization unless action is taken to meet the problem posed by the cost-price squeeze. Short term policies with regard to other basic enterprises lead to serious lack of conservation, especially in lumbering, forestry and mining. Higher interest and higher taxes bring more unemployment because they affect the purchasing power of the people. Our troubles begin to compound themselves.

After all, Mr. Speaker, the Tories recognized the ills that we had and the larger ills that we were heading for. At the time of the several elections the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his party assured the country that they had the answer. We now find that instead they are following a policy of advising the people of Canada to play the sitting ducks game and to take the consequences of an open season. We feel that this procedure is hardly in keeping with the solemn pledge that was given to the Canadian people. I should therefore like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"and this house further regrets that the government has failed to present to parliament a planned financial and economic program designed to develop the economic health of the nation by, among other things, (a) reversing the trend of rising interest rates (b) establishing a capital gains tax".

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who has just taken his seat will not be offended if I amplify that story with which he regaled the house a short time ago and in which he spoke about the minister and the marginal notes which were included in the wide margin. Actually, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), myself and some of the rest of us who are associated with the legal profession have perhaps a better knowledge of that story because we were all told it in law school many years ago. It has three parts to it instead of the one to which he referred. The advice which was given to the students was this. If you have the law with you, you do so and so with a judge. If you have the facts with you, you do so and so with a jury. It is only when you have neither with you that you do what the hon. member suggested be done.

In the same breath the hon. member regretted the fact that all of the newspapers and all of the magazines in this country had accepted the statement of the Minister of Finance that prosperity was around the corner and that this country was moving forward every day in its recovery from the depression. I would suggest to the hon. member that the Minister of Finance obviously had the facts with him and he impressed the jury because in matters of this kind the jury, of course outside of the members of the House of Commons, are those journals and magazines and other agencies of public opinion in this nation.

I am rather intrigued by the atmosphere of gloom which still permeates the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) who has just taken his seat. The financial critic for the opposition was more careful in his gloomy prognostications than he was last year. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, this house was confronted with the appalling prospect of having a deficit which was going to amount to over $1 billion and if you do not accept the words of a politician for that, then you accept the words of financial authorities across the country. This afternoon for a few moments I checked back on some of the statements which were made during the budget debate last year. We have that redoubtable master of statistics who now has the Martin bureau of statistics figures with which he regaled the house in the past. Speaking in the budget debate last year he said this as reported at page 1883 of Hansard of July 3, 1958:

Instead of these promises being fulfilled we are faced—

There was no doubt, no hesitation, no question.

—with a billion dollar deficit. This the Minister of Finance denies—

And so on and so forth.

And the Leader of the Opposition, in dealing with this matter last year, says this as reported at page 1903 of Hansard:

If you think my predictions in these matters—

And he predicted over a billion dollar deficit.

—coming from a political source are suspect. I can refer you again to the director of the Canadian tax foundation which is an accepted authority.

And he goes on and spells out a deficit of over $1 billion. I cannot put my finger on it at the moment but I am sure that my friend the financial critic of the opposition will recall that last year, in dealing with this matter, he too said that if the figures were analysed properly there would be a deficit of over $1 billion. He also quoted various tax authorities which he called to witness in order to establish the financial condition in which this country was going to find itself after one year of budgeting under the present Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance had suggested that the deficit would be $700 million or approximately that amount, and all of the dire prophecies which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is still repeating in this house this afternoon were stated by our friends in the official opposition last year. There were charges of misleading the house and charges of an absolute breakdown of the financial structure of this country, with an inevitable deficit of $1 billion.

Yet what do we find? When the minister brought down his statement last Thursday night and the white paper the day before we found that there was a deficit of not $700 million for which he budgeted but of $618 million. I think that the Minister of Finance and this government deserves great credit for having accomplished this result in the light of the dire prophecies which were made last year. When I hear these gloomy prognostications about the way the country has been betrayed, the way in which the financial structure of the country is being jeopardized, I must say that outside the attendance in this house, where members are always assiduous in their attention and in their attendance, the attendance in the galleries would not suggest that the nation is living in fear and trembling of what is going to happen under this budget or that it wishes to express any indignation or any great apprehension because of what was proposed by the Minister of Finance.

We have had a difficult year during which to finance. I think the Minister of Finance deserves a great deal of credit for having planned the financing of this nation, assuming additional responsibility and financial expenditures which were never contemplated in the days in which we were in opposition and having succeeded in coming out with a deficit of not that which he had expected but which was less than that for which he had budgeted. Why is it that there should be these suggestions about the "terrible Tories" having betrayed their promises and exposed the country to increased taxation. We have heard about the things which are supposed to have been done; according to the amendment which has been moved—

> This house regrets the bad faith of the government which sought and secured support from the Canadian people on a program of lower taxes, reduced expenditures and a balanced budget, and which has now produced in flagrant disregard of pre-election promises a budget calling for higher taxes, record expenditures and a large deficit.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that promises of any kind, whether pre-election promises or otherwise, should be honoured and respected so far as circumstances will possibly permit, but I would suggest to you, sir—and I think all hon. members on both sides of the house would accept this general principle—that promises made to this House of Commons and promises made to parliament stand in an even more favoured position in so far as sanctity and respect are concerned than promises made during an election campaign.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

What has been one of the major reasons why we are facing increased taxation at this time? It is simply the necessity for putting on a sound financial basis the old age assistance and security fund which was accepted by this parliament in 1951 after a joint committee of the House of Commons and of the Senate had spent months in considering the inauguration of such a fund. I have the report of that committee here, but I do not intend to weary the house by reading excerpts from it, unless hon. members should desire me to do so. But this was the effect of the report —that there should be established provision for old age assistance and old age security in this country and that the fund should be on a self-supporting basis. As a matter of fact, reference was made to this point in the committee's report itself, that the fund was to be placed on a "pay as you go" basis. This report was adopted by the government of which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) was then a member. Others who sit in this chamber today were also members of the cabinet at that time; the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin); the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill)—

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I was a member at that time.

Mr. Nowlan: No. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was, of course, still relegated to the back room. It was some time before he escaped his enclosing confines and came to the front row of the house.

A resolution was moved to establish this fund, and it came to this house having previously been approved by the governor general because it involved the expenditure of money. It was moved by the hon. member for Essex East, who was at that time the minister of health and welfare in these terms:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of pensions, without a means test, of $40 a month to persons who have attained the age of 70 years and have appropriate resident qualifications and to establish a fund made up of special contributions levied for that purpose.

In other words, this fund was to be established to pay for the pensions. The minister of finance of that day, now one of the distinguished ornaments of the Supreme Court of Canada, and one who will be remembered by many of us here, said in dealing with this matter that the fund should be self-liquidating. As reported on page 390 of Hansard for October 25, 1951, he said:

> The purpose of the provisions to which I have just referred is to ensure that the fund, at least after the first few months, will be self-sustaining and that the revenue sources are sufficient to ensure an adequate flow of income to meet the pension payments and the repayment of loans. This is the basic principle on which it is proposed to operate the fund.

After that, the debate went on for many, many weary days. Then Mr. Abbott again dealt with this matter, and said that if there should be a shortage in the fund he might have to advance a loan for a few weeks or, possibly, a few months, and he goes on to say as reported in Hansard of November 8, 1951, at page 840:

Early next spring when we are looking at general budgetary matters, we shall have to see how things get started; and as I said in my opening statement, some special action may have to be taken at that time to get the fund off to a proper start. But while it may be necessary to advance moneys to the fund to make payment of current pensions, pending tax receipts—or if tax receipts prove inadequate, pending the time taxes are increased to make up for the deficit—from then on that is the basis upon which the fund will be operated.

Then a former hon. member who will be remembered by many of us in this house, the former hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Stanley Knowles, asked a question, wishing to make it clear whether pensions would be paid, whether the fund was in balance or not, and Mr. Abbott said, in reply:

I would say that additional taxes would have to be imposed, sufficient to reimburse the fund for any advances made, and to provide for future payments.

And Mr. Knowles further asked:

In other words, it could go on as a sort of debt which could pile up as simply a picture of what it has cost to provide old age security.

And this is the response given by Mr. Abbott; it is one to which I should like to draw the particular attention of this house:

That would be possible, but it would not be probable as long as this administration is in power.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker? That was in 1951, and with regard to carrying out that promise to parliament, as with regard to carrying out many other promises to parliament and to the country, the government of that day immediately chose to disregard it, and from then on, every year, this pension fund was never brought into balance. Every year there was a deficit. Last year, as hon. members know, there was a deficit, partly due to increase of pensions which this government made and partly due to the increases which were put into effect by the preceding government amounting to the tremendous sum of $186 million in the fiscal year just closing. And the year before it was $102 million.

Was that principle not right, the principle which was enunciated in 1951? Was it not a sound principle, this principle which had been agreed on not only in the House of Commons but in the other place, and agreed on unanimously, that old age security should be guaranteed by means of funds to which we all have to contribute, and that those funds should be kept in balance? Were not the government and the minister of finance justified in making this pledge and saying they felt it virtually impossible to conceive of any other way of doing things?

We all know the situation in which we find ourselves today and the situation in which the Minister of Finance has found himself. We have therefore gone ahead this year to deal with the difficulty, and a very substantial part of this so-called increase in taxation—in fact, $183 million in the full year—will go toward bringing the old age assistance fund, the old age security fund, into balance. This will not be accomplished entirely next year, but over a period of a year or two the fund should be in balance. In this case, as in so many other situations which the government inherited, we shall be carrying out, and redeeming and implementing, a pledge which was made heretofore and which was ignored by our predecessors in office.

Much will be said, I am sure, with regard to sales tax. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) referred—though not in such detail as I thought he might have done—to the fact that there is an additional sales tax of one per cent, the proceeds of which will contribute to the deficit in the old age security fund which might be prejudicial to the motor car industry. And, of course, there is the additional excise tax, too. Everyone regrets having to pay increased taxes. I may say I feel that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has let me down to some extent because he did not go as far as I thought he might in condemning the increase in the sales tax. I am sure amplification of that has been left for some other speaker on that side of the house and no doubt that hon. gentleman will appreciate my bringing to his attention a statement made by the then minister of finance, Mr. Abbott, as reported at page 388 of Hansard of October 25, 1951:

The sales tax more nearly approaches the ideal levy for financing social security than any other tax in our system. Where under social security provisions the benefits are to be universal it is only right that contributions to the fund should likewise be universal. Income tax, incidentally, reaches, I believe, only about half of our working population. It seems clear that all should take at least some part, however small, in making provision against need.

I commend those words to hon. gentlemen opposite and suggest to them that what we are doing now, at least to the extent of $183 million, is meeting the pledge which was made by the then minister of finance. Some hon. members will be able to recall that hon. gentleman as he sat on the treasury benches, and will remember that pleasant voice, his smile, the way his eyeglasses were removed and waved around to make a point. They will recall his attitude that any questions coming from the oppositon were simply something to be laughed at. Many will recall his typical statements, "We are going to do so and so; we shall do thus and thus". And because he and his associates did not do what they promised, we have one of the results with which we are faced today.

Much has been said about the weight of taxation and the terrible thing this government is doing in increasing taxation as it has. What are the proposed increases in taxation? I, like the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, am not going to deal with all the details of taxation. As he stated, this debate is going to continue for several days and during that interval many speakers will participate and many questions will be dealt with. In brief we have a two per cent increase—or call it three per cent, if you wish, including social security—in corporate income tax. We have an increase of approximately two cents on a package of cigarettes and of 15 cents on a bottle of whiskey. These increases are introduced and hon. gentlemen opposite immediately rise and proclaim that the whole social and financial structure of this country is going to come crashing down on our heads and that the Minister of Finance, like Samson, has disturbed the pillars and now the temple will come crashing down in ruins. If that disastrous event should come about I am sure that both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister would be willing to start smoking cigarettes and drinking whisky to save the economy, but I think we need have no fear of such a catastrophe occurring.

I want to suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite that the financial fabric of this country is what we inherited.

Mr. Pickersgill: Rubbish.

Mr. Nowlan: If it is as bad as critics suggest today then I can only remind them that we inherited this condition which certainly belies and beclouds all the boasting we used to hear from hon. gentlemen opposite when they sat on this side of the house about the greatness of Canada, one of the leading nations of the world, brought to the forefront through policies they introduced, a nation strong financially, internationally and in every other way. Hon. gentlemen opposite now depict us as a nation of frightened rabbits scurrying through the bushes, weak, emaciated and timid, all because of a little tax on whisky and cigarettes, and a two per cent increase in the corporate tax. No reasonable person believes what is said to this effect by hon. gentlemen opposite. That is why I suggest, emphasized by the great interest we see aroused in this debate on the part of the public, that there exists on the part of the Canadian people a general acceptance of this budget.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would ask if any hon. member has ever seen a budget in which substantial tax increases are advocated, promulgated and brought forward, which has been so readily accepted by the nation as has this budget? I use the word "accepted" advisedly. Oh, I am quite convinced there will be no paeans of praise nor any hallelujahs, but I am certain there is general acceptance. Even hon. members sitting in this chamber bear their share of the burden of the increased taxation. I am sure none of us wants to throw his hat in the air and boast about it. But, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) has pointed out, the press and magazines of this country have already accepted the fact that increased taxes were necessary and that the Minister of Finance has developed a system of increases which on the one hand will tend to stabilize our economy and ward off the dangers of inflation and on the other hand not interfere with the economic development of the nation or deter the course of recovery which is taking place at this moment.

Reference has been made to broken promises. I suppose there has never been a budget brought down about which some reference of this nature has not been made n terms of broken promises. There is no question but that statements were, have been and probably always will be made during the course of election campaigns, both inside and outside of this house, in connection with the financial affairs of this country and reduced taxation. Such statements were made during election campaigns held prior to 1957.

Let us examine what has transpired. Early in 1957 and probably prior to then this country was entering into a serious business recession months before we came into office, the seeds of which recession had been sown, had sprouted and were almost in full flower prior to our taking over the administration of the nation. That is a fact, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: That old myth.

Mr. Nowlan: That is a fact. I do well to remind hon. gentlemen opposite once in a while of the fact that the indications of this recession were well known to hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power and were concealed from this house and from the people of Canada. If we had had a proper appreciation of the financial facts which they knew and deliberately concealed perhaps some of the statements which were made during the course of the election campaign would not have been advanced with the emphasis they were given. That is the only difference in so far as that situation is concerned.

What happened next? We have emerged out of the depression to a remarkable degree. My friend the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made reference a moment ago to retail sales. I wonder if any hon. gentleman in this house could name a retail merchant in any constituency in Canada who having experienced normal circumstances, and quite apart from unique or peculiar situations involving a strike or something of that sort, would not be in a position to tell him that he had enjoyed better and increased business and more sales last Christmas than ever before in his experience?

The province of Nova Scotia is not one of the wealthiest provinces in Canada and it has received substantial assistance from this government. I can tell hon. members that with the possible exception of one or two industrial areas where labour troubles had resulted in substantial unemployment locally, there was not one retail merchant in that province who did not experience more sales last Christmas than at any other Christmas in history and I am sure that the same thing applies generally across this nation. These facts are independent of figures produced by the bureau of statistics. These are facts which everyone knows, which the country accepts and for which the people of this nation are grateful to the present government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Do not scoff. I am not attempting to take full credit for the government. It has been one of the factors contributing to this situation. Management, labour and government working together have accomplished a tremendous amount for the nation during the last 18 or 20 months and we shall continue to do more in the months that lie ahead so that by the end of this year we should experience the highest degree of prosperity that has ever been known in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I still hear the scornful laughter across the aisle. I could make reference to a well known quotation but I shall refrain from doing so because it might be personal and I should not want to be guilty of that. I believe that when the budget is brought down next year it will tend to justify the prophecy I have made.

There is a psychological danger of inflation and that is one of the problems with which the Minister of Finance has been confronted. I do not refer to an immediate danger of inflation such as has been spoken of by some politicians and some bankers and a few other people. There did exist in this country, however, a genuine psychological danger of inflation. If steps had not been taken to deal with this threat, again through the co-operation of management, labour and government which assisted economic recovery, there possibly would have been a real danger of inflation that could have had some detrimental effect on money markets. Certainly when words of warning about inflation were spoken by so-called financial experts they carried some weight.

The minister dealt with that in his budget, and by increasing taxation substantially and yet not exceptionally, by reducing the budgetary deficit substantially next year, he has given to the people of Canada an assurance, implied from this government, that we are not going to stand idly by and watch the fires of inflation develop a head of steam in this country. The people can accept that, and that is why this budget has been framed in the way in which it has.

I am not sure whether it was the financial critic or the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam who referred, of course, to unemployment and the dire state of employment in this country. We hear a great deal of talk about that at all times and we all realize that when one man is unemployed it is a tragedy as far as he is concerned, and the more there are unemployed the greater tragedy it is. No one certainly sitting on the treasury benches, or no one sitting on this side of the house, and certainly on the other side as well as far as that is concerned, would for one minute attempt to minimize the tragic effects of unemployment where it does exist. One of the paradoxes, of course, of the immediate situation is that you get all those indices of expanding economy, higher wages, more men employed than ever before, and all the other matters to which reference could be made, and yet we do have a fairly substantial element apparently of unemployment in this country. We have called it seasonal unemployment in the past. I sometimes wonder whether the true seasonal effects are implied. We who live north of the 49th parallel suffer more from a more severe climate than does the great country to the south of us. Undoubtedly, there is a substantial element of seasonal unemployment; possibly also unemployment due to automation possibly due to other things.

There is a backlog of unemployment which has been generated owing to economic conditions.

Someone has asked: What is the hope for the future? What about employment? I would like to point out something, Mr. Speaker. These figures may have been put on the record before, but they certainly deserve repetition if they have. The number of Canadians working in mid-February, and there are far more today, according to the D.B.S. figures, was 5,247,000, or 152,000 more Canadians than ever worked before at that time of the year. That is the wonderful record of employment which has been achieved in this nation. Similarly, the number of people without work, reported under the D.B.S. system, was 26,000 fewer than it was in February of the preceding year. We were employing substantially more, over 152,000 more, and unemployment was dropping, and this under economic conditions which we have been told have been made terrible by this government.

Let us speak of the deficit and additional taxes. The Minister of Finance is critized for those additional expenditures. I would like to commend to the house those figures on the contributions to the provinces, the payments which we are making to the provinces of Canada only in comparison with what was assumed three years ago. It will be found at page 2410 of Hansard. I think those figures should commend themselves to every member of the House of Commons and to every intelligent person throughout this country. My time is running out but we find that in the 1956-57 fiscal year—just two years ago—the total contribution made two years ago by the treasury of this country, by the minister of finance, by my hon. friend's predecessor, was $689 million. That was the last payment made by the immediate predecessor of my hon. friend. According to the budget which the present Minister of Finance has brought down for which he is critized for imposing higher taxes, for which he is critized because t still has a deficit, what is the situation? According to those figures, for the fiscal year which will end next March 31 the total contributions to the provinces will be $1,212,500,000, virtually twice the $689 million which was paid three years ago. Yet this government is criticized for breaking promises, for not having a dominion-provincial conference called, and so forth. This government has done more in connection with these matters than the preceding government did in the 25 years preceding this budget, and make no mistake whatsoever about that.

In the past three years we have doubled the total amount of payments which the preceding government made to all of the provinces for all purposes, conditional and unconditional.

Mr. Pickersgill: You have not been in office three years. You are including Mr. Harris' increase in 1957.

Mr. Nowlan: I would not praise Mr. Harris' budget because I still remember something about one cup of coffee and two lumps of sugar, or two cups of coffee and one lump of sugar. It was one or the other.

Mr. Pickersgill: If his was two, yours was three.

Mr. Nowlan: This is the government which is not giving leadership; this is the government under which there are financial problems; people are suffering because of our leadership. I have the white paper in front of me. I have not time to refer to it, but some of you have seen a summary of part of it in the Globe and Mail. I am reading from an editorial of April 10, which is a reflection of the figures which appeared in the white paper:

> The personal incomes of Canadians totalled $24.6 billion in 1958, highest such figure in their history. Average annual wages were at a peak of $3,534. Farmers had the second biggest earnings on record—$2.8 billion, just 2 per cent less than in 1952. Canada's gross national product passed all previous marks at $32.2 billion.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out the other night, in the table appears schedules dealing with increased taxation. I refer to the increase in the personal tax. He detailed to the house what the increased income tax would mean to the average family of this country, a married man with two children, and three children, and the various salaries ranging from $3,000 up. Do not forget that this increased tax does not fall on the medium and middle groups. Although it is true, as the minister pointed out, we have raised income taxes this year over what they were last year, nevertheless the increase does not offset the decrease in taxes which he brought in in his preceding budget, so that those taxpayers in that great group, the intermediate and medium group, are better off today than they were before, vis-à-vis income taxes, even after the increase which we have proposed to impose by this taxation increase. In fact, social security has been improved, we have a hospital scheme and all these other things to which reference could be made if time permitted.

I note by the clock, Mr. Speaker, that I have but one or two minutes left. I do not think anything more I can say will point up the argument I have attempted to make. Scan the record, see what the government has done and how it has been accepted by the people of Canada. Despite the one or two scornful laughs I hear from the other side—you have to expect one or two but the majority over there must be so woeful that they dare not laugh out loud—the country is accepting the fact that because of a combination of circumstances, over a substantial number of which we had no control whatsoever, increased taxation was necessary; that increased taxation to the extent to which it has been imposed is justified and that this government by controlling inflation or holding out the threat that if inflation should start it will be drastically controlled, while at the same time approaching a balanced budget and providing these additional benefits, has given the type of fiscal security and financial leadership that the nation wants and expects. The result will be that Canada will achieve a higher standard of production and prosperity than it has ever known before.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Hull, I should like to say a word about the subamendment which has been put from the chair without objection being taken as to its propriety. There are two features of the subamendment which appear to me to raise doubt as to the regularity of accepting it.

In the first place the subamendment "regrets that the government has failed to present to parliament a planned financial and economic program." That is very reminiscent of the subamendment moved in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne which added after the word "policies" the words "caused by the absence of social and economic planning."

But there is a further point to which I think I should at least refer before the debate proceeds. Although the amendment condemns the government for increasing taxes rather than reducing them, the subamendment calls for the establishment of a capital gains tax, which is contrary to the amendment itself. To my mind a subamendment should be such that it relates to the same subject matter as the amendment, to the degree that if both the amendment and the subamendment were accepted they would make sense together.

I am not sure that in a wide-range debate such as this it will be restrictive in any sense of the privileges of the house or of the freedom of debate whether or not the subamendment is allowed to remain before the house or not but I should not like to be met in the future with this subamendment as a precedent on relevancy. Therefore I take the opportunity to enter this caveat before calling on the hon. member for Hull.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I must say right in the beginning of my remarks that the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has been received in Canada with the greatest disappointment, not so much because of tax raises in themselves but mainly because of the state of mind of those hon. gentlemen who, when they were sitting on this side of the house, invariably grumbled against any tax increase that might be submitted. As a matter of fact, I remember quite a number of speeches by the Minister of Finance, when he was sitting on this side, and the vigorous language he used in lambasting the government every time taxes went up. When on the other hand, the government proceeded to cut down some taxes, the minister—when he was sitting on this side of the house—still found fault with that, complaining that the tax cut was too small. Besides, the present Prime Minister always referred to the Liberal government, as the "taxing government". Now, on December 24, 1958, the Montreal Gazette had this to say:

(Text):

"The high tax party has been in power too long," declared Mr. Diefenbaker in 1947. "The taxes have become confiscatory and can, if continued, bring about the end of our system of free enterprise."

(Translation):

This was the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) speaking at the time. Today he seems to have forgotten it all. And the Gazette reported further:

(Text):

The Conservatives promised to reduce taxes, and this they have done in two separate takes, to the amount of about $200 million per year. So, as things now stand, they have done what they were pledged to do.

Mr. Diefenbaker and his colleagues emphasized time and time again, taxes were so high as to "penalize success, neutralize incentive and diminish production."

(Translation):

Such was the language of those hon. gentlemen when they were sitting on this side of the house. And each time they had a chance to speak about the budget, the present Prime Minister and several of the members of his cabinet kept asking that a royal commission investigate expenditures made in Canada. Furthermore, I find in the Gazette of February 19, 1959, the following text:

(Text):

During the long years that the Conservatives decorated the opposition benches, they built up over the years a warm affection for the proposition that a royal commission should be set up to probe federal government spending and recommend possible savings. In those days, all true Conservatives stood four-square by and for the project. They made no secret of the fact that they were appalled at the rate at which the Liberal government of the period could spend money and of their related conviction that something should be done about it.

(Translation):

Those are the gentlemen who today extol the many expenditures they have made and propose new taxation without seeming in the slightest degree embarrassed. General criticism throughout Canada had foreseen that such orgy of expense on the part of the present government would necessarily lead to the present conditions. And I find again this in the Montreal Gazette, a publication which can hardly be labelled Liberal:

(Text):

Birds that come home. Spending of this kind is bound to create a deep deficit. And the deficit will be filled only by more taxing or more borrowing. As far as taxation is concerned, Canadians have already reached a worrying level.

This was on February 10, 1959. Therefore, even papers supporting the government were afraid of conditions that might follow in the wake of such extravagant and exaggerated spending, which did not always aim at correcting conditions in this country.

If, at least, those expenses had considerably reduced unemployment, they would have been accepted as well as deficit budgets; but, no, the situation grew worse from year to year. Though there is some decrease in unemployment figures, if we add to them all the people who are no longer entitled to unemployment benefits, the number will be greater than those statistics indicate. Moreover, we read in the Montreal Gazette of December 26, 1958:

(Text):

The unbalanced wheel. What is to be done now? The government, by spending beyond its revenues, has incurred a budget anxiously large. But it has also, without doubt, made its contribution to national inflation.

(Translation):

And that is a tremendous truth. I was flabbergasted the other day Mr. Speaker, when I heard the minister state with a broad smile, Mr. Speaker, that the deficit this year would not be a billion, not even 700 million, but only 617 to 618 million dollars and, moreover, looking quite smug, announced a general increase in taxation which is going to affect everything walking on two feet in Canada, and tell us later in French in a poetical flight:

We have withstood the disturbing calm of recession, and the winds of prosperity again fill our sails, as the basic strength and soundness of the Canadian economy again assert themselves. With a united, determined and confident population, Canada marches on unflinchingly towards its bright destiny.

Mr. Speaker, this puts me in mind—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caron: You can pound your desks as much as you like! This puts me in mind of Nero who sang his poems and plucked his harp while Rome burned.

I notice that these hon. gentlemen have stopped their applause.

Mr. Speaker, the government announces an estimated deficit of some $335 or $350 million, and I am convinced that, if the government really did its duty, the deficit would be much higher. In fact, if the deficit is only $335 million, it is because the government has failed to act as it should.

For instance, we are now able to see—which has been said and stated by every economist,—that the unemployment insurance fund has declined dangerously. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, there are only two ways of settling the matter. We should pay an amount of $300 or $400 million into the fund in order to put it in a more favourable position. Now, there are only two ways to levy such an amount: either it should be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund, which would add to the estimated deficit, or the rate of contributions should be raised, which would mean an extra tax on all workers in Canada.

Either way it would be bad, and I am afraid the government might lack the courage to take drastic action as would seem warranted under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter which the government failed to deal with, and seems unwilling to approach. It is the question of civil service employees.

We have in this country civil servants who are getting much lower salaries than those paid in industry, a good many of whom for instance, are getting $3,000 a year or less. There are many married employees with two, three, four, five or six children, whose take-home pay varies between $50 and $60 a week. I think their position is quite deplorable and if the federal government were to do its duty, the civil servants should get a general increase, which would again add $300 or $375 million to the estimates for the current year.

I do not know whether the claims of federal civil servants and their plight are not being recognized because of a statement made by the hon. Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) during the by-elections of Montmagny-L'Islet, when he said on October 28th, 1958—and you might note that this was in a public meeting, Mr. Speaker:

"We didn't succeed in bringing the boys from the Civil Service Commission to heel, but we shall get the better of them and manage that business ourselves."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that such attitude on the part of a minister of the crown, whose statement has been refuted neither by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) nor by another cabinet member, gives rise to some fear with regard to the future amongst federal civil servants in spite of many years of service. They dare not express their views, even on matters having to do with their most urgent needs, and most particularly their salary increase. Some of them dare raise their heads, but most of them are afraid—and besides, we have heard hon. members repeat the same thing—that the people sitting on the other side of the house will apply the axe to them.

Mr. Speaker, it is not taxation that we condemn, but the incompetent and unwieldy administration of this government. The present taxation affects everybody. It is all very well to claim that income tax affects only those having an income of $3,000 or more, but the fact remains that the additional tax for old age pension purposes affects everybody, as does the higher sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), speaking about the increased sales tax, said: "What will be the reaction to the 2 cents increase on a package of cigarettes?" That statement is false, Mr. Speaker; the present tax is $1 per 1,000 cigarettes, which actually represents an increase of one cent per package. However, since the new tax has been applied in the province of Quebec, cigarette manufacturers have increased the price of a package by 3 cents instead of one cent. A package of cigarettes which sold for 37 cents now sells for 40 cents; one which sold for 46 cents now sells for 50. And the same thing applies to the gasoline tax and every other tax. People take advantage of that increase in taxation to boost their own profits. This is due to the fact that the government did not foresee how to proceed with such increases; and this, of course, will substantially increase the inflationary trend.

Mr. Speaker, there are two problems...

Mr. Pigeon: The national printing bureau!

Mr. Caron: I shall come to that later, and those who know nothing of the situation will not prevent me from doing so.

Mr. Pigeon: Thanks for the compliment.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, there are two continuing problems—problems that the hon. member will perhaps never understand, blinded as he is by partisanship—which call for serious consideration: I mean inflation and unemployment.

Inflation is probably the greater of the two because it places Canada in a very alarming situation. We see in various newspapers, and in reports of meetings, statements by bank managers and insurance companies, in other words by people who know something of finance, to the effect that criticism is being directed against the government.

For instance, in the Citizen of December 26, 1958, we read the following:

(Text):

—Less than a year and a half after the Liberals turned over control of the nation's affairs—with the treasury in a healthy condition and the only grumblings arising because of the size of surpluses—the economy is suffering from stresses and strains. It is plagued by the twin apparitions of inflation and unemployment, neither of which the Diefenbaker magic appears capable of shooing away.

(Translation):

We read also in the December 30, 1958 issue of the same paper, the following:

(Text):

Then there is the subject of the gross national product (the sum of all goods and services produced during the year) . . . 32 millions.

—This figure represents a two per cent dollar increase over 1957 which, on the face of it, seems to be a heartening growth. The fact is, however, prices have risen by approximately the same amount during the 12 months so there is, in fact, no physical increase in our national product at all.

(Translation):

And speaking about inflation, a western paper, The Herald, a paper in full sympathy with the Conservative party, writes as follows:

(Text):

In an editorial called "Crisis of Confidence", the Herald took a long look at the six billion dollar—

Said the Herald: "This newspaper, as its readers know, supported the Conservative party in its bid for power. We devoutly wish we could now assert that Canada's finances are being managed as well as they could possibly be managed. But we cannot in all honesty make such a claim."

(Translation):

It was a Conservative paper which expressed itself as follows:

(Text):

We do not think the present government of Canada is managing our country's finances as well as they could be managed. On the contrary, we have reluctantly come to the conclusion that Canada is heading for a serious financial disturbance; that the nation's confidence in money is being undermined; that the market for government long-term bonds is likely to become progressively more sticky; and that Ottawa will increasingly have to resort to short term borrowing, which is the most inflationary of all the available methods of providing the cash which the government must have to carry on.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, there were a number of other quotations I intended to read, but I shall have to set them aside, because my time is running out. However, I must quote the following:

(Text):

In the decade after 1946, this volume climbed by about three per cent per year whereas the money supply rose by about five and a half per cent annually.

In the last 13 months, the volume of output of goods and service remained virtually unchanged. But the supply of money in the hands of the people increased by a startling 14 per cent.

The increase in the money supply in the last 13 months has totalled $1,500 million. It is much greater than in any similar post-war period.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, there is criticism from all quarters.

Here is another case:

(Text):

Fewer Bonds Held by Public

Here are the figures which show the continuing recent decline in public investment in government bonds, not including savings bonds:

At August 28, 1957, this figure stood at $6,159 million.

At June 25, 1958, it was $6,013 million.

At September 24, 1958, it was $5,597 million.

The trend is unmistakable. It is down, down, down.

During the same period, the gross public debt has been going up, up, up.

Again, here are the gross public debt figures for the same periods:

At August 28, 1957, this stood at $14,765 million.

At June 25, 1958, it was $15,507 million.

At September 24, 1958, it was $15,815 million.

As of October 20, it was over $16 million.

The gross public debt is still going up, having reversed the downward trend last year.

(Translation):

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, those are statements from outside, but let us take one from another source. I quote:

The greatest inflationary pressure that exists today is reckless government expenditure and extravagance. And if the government is going to preach the virtues of thrift and care to the individual Canadian, I say let it begin in its own house. Before plucking the mote from the eye of the individual Canadian, I say to the government "first pluck the beam out of thine own eye". There is no more inflationary force in Canada today than the full weight of reckless government expenditure and extravagance.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the words spoken by the present Minister of Finance on March 27, 1956, as reported on page 2648 of Hansard.

It can be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the present Minister of Finance's policy for this year is being criticized not only by people from outside, but the minister himself condemned such a policy in 1956. Yet, he comes forth with a wide grin and says: "Everything is fine, all is well; everything has burned, including the stables."

The danger of inflation does not threaten our country alone; it is much more serious than people apparently realize. In 1920, Lenin stated:

(Text):

Lenin advised his communist followers that inflation was one of their chief weapons for the world revolution they hoped to bring about. Lenin said the best way to destroy capitalistic countries was to demolish the purchasing power of their currencies.

(Translation):

Moreover, Lord Keynes, in discussing the situation at about the same period, said to the British: "Take care not to fall into the hands of communism by supplying it with potential weapons". This, in fact, was nothing new. Karl Marx himself, in his book Das Kapital, made the following statement:

(Text):

The surest way to overturn the social order is to debauch the currency.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that the members of this government, including the Minister of Finance, have communist leanings. No, they are against communism, but through their careless administration, they are doing exactly what Lenin called for as a means of changing world organization and putting it under communist control. That is the kind of administration the country is getting. They are the ones who come forth with a wide grin, and who assure us that they are in the process of saving Canada and placing it in a position such as we have never known before.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that in France, it was after an inflationary period that, in 1789, the people revolted after they had had enough of destitution and hunger. They revolted, the guillotine entered the picture, and all those who did not share their views were wiped out.

It was with the help of inflation in Russia, in 1917, that the communists succeeded in their revolution and one has only to read history to be convinced.

In 1948, the Chinese revolution succeeded on account of this inflationary system which placed the people in a condition worse than mendicity.

Again it was due to inflation that Hitler managed to take over the exclusive control of his country and, later, to launch war.

In 1923, in Germany, it cost, I believe, 1 million marks to take the streetcar while those who lived in the country could pay off a mortgage with a cow or two pigs.

Well, Mr. Speaker, because of that situation, Germany went for the exaggerations of that braggart Hitler and followed him in a revolution which brought about a world war for which we are still paying today.

Mr. Speaker, this situation cannot last. This government cannot boast of having accomplished a marvellous task for, if it were really serious, it would have followed rather the advice its supporters were giving us when they sat on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker, since it is six o'clock, I move the adjournment.

(Text):

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned, I was speaking about inflation and its great dangers, for inflation leads to a vicious circle because of increasing living costs and receding monetary value. Salaries have to be increased in order to allow the worker to follow the trend towards higher living costs. Now this generally brings about higher production costs. Because of competition on foreign markets, high production costs generally lead to the loss of those markets, and, finally, to the closing down of a number of industries. By this very fact, the vicious circle causes increasing unemployment at a time when it is our duty to check it.

Unemployment is the second point I want to stress, because it remains a serious obstacle to our economic development. Statistics reveal that in some parts of this country,—and I admit the fact—unemployment has slightly decreased, while in others, it shows a small increase. Therefore, as I said this afternoon, if we add to the number of those that are now unemployed all the people who are not registered as such, having no more stamps giving them the right to draw benefits, I maintain that the unemployment situation is as serious as last year at the same time. This entitles me to say that the government has the responsibility to see to it that unemployment is considerably reduced, because Canada cannot go on having 500,000 unemployed each year, as is the case now. In fact, even if that number were much lower than the figure of 500,000 indicated by us, the problem cannot be a permanent one. Nevertheless the issue remains a serious one and as the government seems unable to settle it, the load falls back on the municipal government.

The people who do not get enough, as well as those who are not paid any benefits now, have to appeal to municipal governments to obtain food, clothing, housing and heating, which considerably increases the cost of municipal administration with regard to public welfare. Therefore the government should consider it its responsibility, if it is able to do so, to find the means to remedy this persistent evil, which, even if it has been reduced in some areas of this country, has considerably developed in others.

Let us, for instance, take Newfoundland, where unemployment is on the increase, Quebec where it is also growing, and Ontario where an important rise has been noted even if unemployment did recede in some areas.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) told us this afternoon that employment is on the increase, that more people now have jobs than at the same date last year. That is normal, in view of the increasing population; in fact, it would not be quite normal, if there were no increase. In any case, with over 500,000 unemployed in Canada, even if more people now have jobs, for people who do not work and have not sufficient income to look after the needs of their families, the problem remains a serious one.

When there are more than 500,000 unemployed in the country, and when, in addition, there is inflation, it is normal that the worker should ask for higher wages, in order to keep pace with events; however, salary increases, as I said a moment ago, might be a dangerous thing. On the other hand, if the government, through its laws and taxes, hits every pocket without exception, increases the cost of living, can we blame the worker for claiming higher wages? The minister said it in Toronto: "People will have to tone down their demands."

Well, the only way to tone down people's demands for higher wages is to reduce the cost of living, and that is one of the duties of the Minister of Finance. He has been advised to do so since he took over his post; he has been advised by the Liberal party, by the C.C.F., by labour leaders across the country, by industrial management, by bank managers, by directors of insurance companies, in other words, by all those who are interested in the welfare of Canada. Now, what has he done, nothing or nearly nothing. And what has the government done? Of course, we will be told that it has spent about $15 million to help municipalities in their winter work program. People had not had time to prepare in advance. We are told this helped 30,000 unemployed, but what are 30,000 people out of 550,000? On the whole, it is not a very substantial help. What we need is a much more energetic cabinet. Here are people who, at the present time, are content with saving their own skins, with saving their own political party from bankruptcy and from the disrepute into which it has fallen. That is why there are so many requests on the part of labour unions. Instead of always asking for higher wages, they should tell those who are responsible for the administration of this country: "If you do not want wages to go up, see to it that there is no increase in the cost of living." Drastic means should be found to reduce the cost of living. It is the only way for us to develop a link between capital and labour in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, our foreign market is in jeopardy. I do not blame workers for finding fault with the government, since the government brought about that danger. As a matter of fact, the problem facing us today is actually a Conservative problem. We had to face the same problem with the Bennett government which had imposed comparable legislation on markets, the same legislation on tariffs and the same increases in every segment of the economic life. It was described as the "blasting" Bennett administration. Today we have a new government which follows a policy strictly patterned on what the 1930 government has done. It will be called the 15 percent Diefenbaker government. For the people the result is the same: hardship, and the same difficulties. The cost of living is increasing and the people are unable to find what is needed for a decent living.

However, when the same gentlemen were sitting on this side of the house, they boasted they could administer everything without boosting taxes, that all they had to do was to cut down expenditures, and they promised everything in sight. To-day they keep apologizing and saying that they are compelled to take such action. They are compelled to do it because they placed themselves in a situation which forces them to take such steps. That is why, I submit this government was remiss in its duty when it tried to take office through promises it could not keep. Our friends criticized the Harris budget which, we realize it now, was a sound and wise budget, designed to work out a policy capable of checking inflation, as well as of reducing unemployment. Now, after blaming the previous administration for some tax increases, they have no hesitation in taxing everybody. In point of fact, only four-legged animals are not taxed.

Mr. Speaker, I dealt with the necessity for the organized workers to ask for higher wages due to the lackadaisical attitude of the present government. But there is also the danger that some elements might avail themselves of the plight of the organized workers and proceed to infiltrate into the labour movement. They succeeded in some instances in introducing people like Knowles, and there was already a Forsey to prepare the ground for them.

And in that way, organized labour is being brought into the political field, something that is extremely dangerous. Instead of being helped, the workers are being enslaved. The idea is not new, because it was attempted in the United States in 1920. It is an idea against which labour should react, because when it was put forward, in the United States in 1920, such intelligent leaders as Lewis, Hutcheson and Gompers, fought tooth and nail against the encroachments of politicians into the field of organized labour.

La Patrie, in its Sunday issue of January 4, published an article written by Mr. Manuel Maître, which reads as follows:

> Canada, a young country with a brilliant future, but not immune to political adventure, unfortunately seems ready to throw itself into the wolf's jaws heedless of the experience of others. Indeed, it requires no crystal ball but merely good eyesight to say that Canada's national labour organizations and unions affiliated with American bodies—which admittedly are a vital necessity throughout the world—will tomorrow be rallying under the sole banner of the CCL (beginning with our own CCCL) and will, as a result, become an obedient and well disciplined tool in the hands of the C.C.F. which by throwing the working masses, whether passive or militant, into the great adventure of the next federal electoral battle, may become a dangerous opponent for the Conservative party, replacing the Liberal party which is greatly weakened in several provinces. As the saying goes, forwarned is forearmed. Canadians . . . should look before they leap, because it will be too late after. It will be too late if a socialist government eventually gains power in Ottawa, as this might be the first step towards communism sooner or later. Let us hope, therefore, that labour will keep "outside politics" in Canada as elsewhere, so that we may avoid the dangerous excesses to which such a course might lead.

I have here an article written by Mr. Hutcheson, an American labour leader of the 1920's who kept the unions from falling into a political movement. I quote his words:

> For some time now, under the skilled leadership of certain politicians—

Mr. Speaker, I shall have to cut this short, because my time is running out.

(Text):

No one will gainsay or deny the importance of political action on the part of wage earners in their constant struggle to right the wrongs and to secure to the workers a full and equal opportunity to life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

(Translation):

This is something written in 1920 by Mr. Hutcheson:

(Text):

Differences arise not on the principle of political action, but to the extent of which economic trade union determinism should be supplemented by political power and influence of the wage earners should be manifested.

That there is room for improvement in the efficient exercise of the political power of the wage earners is freely admitted. The dangers of exercising this power from a purely partisan political standpoint (emphasis ours) is convincingly portrayed in the report of the executive council . . . With the increasing tendency to place employees in public and semi-public utilities under public and governmental control there is an increasing need of more closely solidifying the forces of labour in all their varied manifestations and in such a manner as not to interfere with the workers' freedom of choice and freedom of action. To render ineffective, or to hamper in any degree, or to lessen the importance and value of trade union economic determinism merely to attain possession of political authority, to place into dominance political parliamentarianism will not have been a gain but a loss to the advancement of the workers to a fuller, a freer, a better and nobler life.

(Translation):

As you realize, Mr. Speaker, intelligent leaders, the American labour leaders who created the American unions out of nothing in 1907, fought like lions to get for the workers the right to be represented when the importance of organized labour was being discussed. Well, those men, who even risked imprisonment to fight the cause of the worker did oppose the intervention of politicians who tried to creep into their organization in order to bring them to defeat. That is why I believe that organized labour should be exceedingly careful before dealing with those matters.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that time flies and I must shorten my remarks to a certain extent.

It was said this afternoon that federal grants to the provinces, which were $689 million in 1956-1957, would reach $1,212,500,000 for the fiscal year 1959-1960. Well, Mr. Speaker,—and here I address my remarks to the members from the province of Quebec, —this was done by telegram or through the newspapers, even without calling a federal-provincial conference. These gentlemen should recall that during the last general election, they promised that the Conservative party would change that situation, that it would call a federal-provincial conference and that nothing would be done that would not be in accordance with the constitution. Well, Mr. Speaker, today, they have increased everything without even consulting the provinces and I wonder if these gentlemen could tell me where are the centralizers today, and who really abides by the constitution?

Mr. Speaker, I know that they will keep the complacent silence that they have kept from the beginning on that matter. They have not the courage to express their opinions because they are blinded, some of them by the Conservative party theory, others by their leader of the Union Nationale. Nevertheless, it is a good thing that people should know that their promises in that field, as in all other fields, have not been fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker, I still had two points that I wanted to deal with, but I feel that you look at me as if you wanted to tell me that my time has already run out.

But just the same, I want to say that, in a few years, we will be celebrating the hundredth anniversary of our constitution, of the foundation of our Canadian nation. I know that for years there have always been those problems arising between the provinces and the federal government. This situation is natural, because when the constitution was adopted in 1867, Canada was nothing but a small and sparsely populated colony of England and the problems which resulted at the time could be compared to traffic problems. At the time, horses and buggies were all that we had; today, with automobiles, aircraft and all you can think of, the situation has changed a great deal.

The present government should therefore call a meeting with the provinces to review all aspects of this situation, so as to ensure that past errors be avoided in the future, and that there be no repetition of a situation such as that brought about in Newfoundland by the present government. It would also clarify the position as between the provinces and the central government. If the government has the character and the courage to defend its beliefs, it will follow this course. Thus at least one of its promises will not have been ignored, but will have been fulfilled in the best interest of Canada.

(Text):

Mr. John MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether I shall ever be as volatile as the hon. member for Hull but I hope the house will find my comments just as interesting as his. At the outset I should like to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the capable, competent and courteous manner in which he presented the budget to the house. In the course of this debate—it has been a short debate so far—the minister has been criticized in rather a destructive way. Of course, in such a responsible office as his he should expect criticism; for he cannot hope to please everyone all the time. But I do believe some of this criticism is unjustified.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) made comments at length upon the budget and I should like to deal with some of the points which he attempted to make in this house. He saw fit to suggest that the government had increased taxes at this time only so that in two years time they might decrease taxes. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this sort of statement is not in keeping with the hon. member's position in the house. Who likes to raise taxes? To think for one moment that we are going out of our way to raise taxes so that in two years time we can decrease taxes is absolutely fantastic. Do hon. members think that I am pleased, or any member of this government, or any member in this house, for that matter, is pleased when taxes are raised? I know that I myself, and I am sure this feeling beats eternally in the hearts of everyone across Canada when budget time comes, hope that taxes will be decreased. However, that is not always possible. I point out this to the hon. friends to my right. If taxes are decreased next year and the following year, or three years from now, it will only be because of the policies followed by the Minister of Finance and by this government.

There has been much talk this afternoon, and there was much talk in the latter part of Thursday evening, with regard to our decrease of taxes late in 1957. It is even being intimated that perhaps this was a pre-election scheme of some sort of the Conservative party—

Mr. Pickersgill: Was it not?

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): I see my friends are following me very closely. I think it is fairly well recognized—and it is recognized by some of the best financial people across this country—that our decrease in taxes at that time, along with our higher expenditures, the two of them combined, were probably the most important forces in stemming and halting the business decline in 1958.

Then, we have this statement by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is breaking faith with the electorate; he is not fulfilling his promises. He even moved an amendment to this effect. He said the Prime Minister stated that there was no great difficulty to be encountered in bringing about deductions in taxes and also having increases in pensions. The Prime Minister probably did make this statement, but what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River forgot to mention in this house was that there was a budgetary surplus of $282 million in 1956; that there was a forecast budgetary surplus of $305 million in 1957 which—and I want to be fair about this—the former minister of finance took upon himself to apply in only his own inimitable fashion and in devious ways to cut down the surplus to $152 million. We have then the Prime Minister making those statements before the election of June, 1957, statements based on huge surpluses two years running by the former Liberal government.

Is it too far out of line to say that the Canadian people took this for granted, that when we were in office, if there was a surplus, we would take that surplus and use it for the benefit of the Canadian people? Surely it is misconstruing the facts entirely and underestimating the intelligence of the Canadian people to say that they believed this hodgepodge; that what was said at that time dealt with economic conditions during the recession or when financing needed to be done in such a huge manner as was needed last year and is needed to be done this year.

The hon. member talked about unemployment, but he is not the only one who talked about it. The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) talked about unemployment. I would like to talk about unemployment. This is something I want to point out to the Liberal party. Last year and this year they have taken a keen interest in the problem of unemployment. Where their interest was in 1954 and 1955 I have failed to discover. I have searched Hansard for those years and have failed to find one comment by any member of the Liberal front benches about the importance of the disastrous unemployment in 1954 and 1955. Certainly, all unemployment is bad. Let us not forget that. Regardless of what explanation or excuse we place upon it, nobody wants unemployment. I do not want unemployment. We would all like to see everybody with employment.

During the debates on this topic we are forever talking about statistics and figures. The government brings out statistics; the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) brings out his statistics; and we have a battle royal. But those statistics and figures do not mean anything to the man on the street who is out of work. This is a problem that was thrown upon us when we assumed office, a problem that was not of our doing, and do not think for one moment that the people across this country recognize that it is any different. And yet, we have our winter works program where we pumped millions of dollars into the program. We have a statement by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) on November 11, 1958 with regard to what he thought of the winter works program. He said in Toronto, Ontario, according to a Canadian Press report of November 11, 1958:

> The federal government's winter work program has been made too late to be of maximum effect this winter.
> The government's attack on jobs has been "unco-ordinated, unplanned—actions which have resulted in large expenditures without corresponding results in terms of employment."
> During the summer there was a seasonal improvement in trade and employment. Canadians showed vigour and initiative in combatting recession and preventing it from sliding into depression, he added. This was in large part due to the social and economic policies brought into operation since 1935 by Liberal governments, policies which had kept up consumer purchasing and cushioned the impact of recession.

He says in effect that if unemployment gets worse it will be the government's fault; their policy and program have no value. Then he goes on to say there was an improvement during the summer in employment and, of course, this was due to the social and economic policies brought into operation since 1935 by the Liberal government. What he says in effect is that if things get worse it is the fault of the present Conservative party; if things get better it is only because the Liberal government was in power for 22 years. What a remarkable statement for the Leader of the Opposition to make. Possibly he has never made a more inaccurate and misleading statement since he assumed office.

On unemployment the opposition currently talks in generalities. I am, of course, concerned with the general picture, but I am more vitally concerned with the situation as it exists in the city of Winnipeg. During the debates on unemployment and during this debate here we have heard their cries about the terrible picture of unemployment and how terrible it is today. Let me point out to them that the situation in the city of Winnipeg at the present time is better than it was in 1955. Where were the cries of the member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) in 1955 about unemployment or, for that matter, the cries of any of those on the Liberal front benches? They are not fooling the people of the city of Winnipeg on this very important matter.

Just for the record I want to put these figures on Hansard as they make very interesting reading. On December 18, 1958, there were 17,927 unemployed in the city of Winnipeg while on December 18, 1954 there were 17,447. On January 22, 1959 there were 23,568 unemployed while on January 22, 1955 there were 22,744. On March 19, 1959 there were 22,594 unemployed while at the end of March, 1955 there were 23,374. At the beginning of March, 1959 there were 23,240 unemployed and at the end of February, 1955 there were 23,554, this being the only comparable figure I could get. At this point in our economy the city of Winnipeg has fewer people unemployed than in 1955.

Mr. Pearson: What about 1956 and 1957?

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): I can get those figures for you too and they would not be far off.

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to have them.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): We are not fooled by the outbursts of concern and anxiety of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and the other members to my right about unemployment. We are not fooled because nothing was said by them about unemployment in the city of Winnipeg in 1955.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River also speaks about trade, but does he speak about credit restrictions under Liberal policy? Is it not apparent, and I believe it is—if it is not apparent to all members of the house it is apparent to the people across Canada—that under a Liberal policy of credit restrictions the recession from which we have now emerged would have in effect become one of the blackest depressions from which this country has ever suffered? He does not tell us of these matters. He does not speak of the greatest trade deficit in Canadian history which was built up under a Liberal government; the greatest trade deficit in the history of the country with the United States of America in the amount of $1,280 million. He does not speak of these things when he is criticizing the budget.

These are some of the things I want to point out to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and his associates. I would also remind them that although the deficit for last year was large, if the Liberal party had been in power the deficit would have been greater, greater by perhaps $675 million.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh yes, $500 million in tax reductions and $175 million of a tax holiday. The Leader of the Opposition has never said that this is not correct. He made these promises during the election campaign. Can you imagine what the deficit would be today? Can you imagine what the tax increases would have to be? The people of Canada are not being fooled by all this shillyshallying on the part of members of the Liberal party.

I point out all these facts to the members of the Liberal party and the C.C.F. party and their friends in the province of Manitoba who are attempting to use federal politics in a provincial election.

Mr. Pearson: Shame.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): I point out all these facts just to put it on record in order to show that the people of Manitoba are not fooled. We are well aware of the huge budget surpluses of the former Liberal administration before the election of 1957. I am sure that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River underestimates the intelligence of the Canadian people when he suggests that they are misled with regard to promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) or by any other responsible member of the cabinet. Does he underestimate their intelligence by thinking that they believed that they were going to get something for nothing? Any promises made with regard to tax decreases can only in effect deal with budgetary surpluses.

With regard to the C.C.F. subamendment I will say that it is quite typical of the thinking that goes on in that corner of the house. It calls for a planned financial and economic program. Those are words they use continually whenever they wish to move an amendment to a speech from the throne or a budget debate. Their amendment is vague in its beginnings. Just what planned financial and economic program they would put into being, heaven only knows.

Then they make two points. This planned financial and economic program would have to do with reversing the trend of interest rates. My heavens, that is exactly what we are trying to do with this budget. Do they think any government wants higher interest rates? The budget dealt with that effectively.

Second, they call for a capital gains tax. There may be some merit in that suggestion but I would think that this matter has been before the present Minister of Finance and Mr. Harris, his predecessor. I would think that the difficulty with regard to a capital gains tax is where you put it into effect and what means you use. For instance, I point this out to my friends on the far right. If you had a capital gains tax in effect, an old age pensioner selling his house and moving into an apartment would be taxed on the proceeds of that sale.

[Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Regier: Nonsense.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): A capital gains tax would deal with bank accounts. It would deal with everything.

Mr. Winch: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): The pensioner with a bank account would be affected. You would have all kinds of difficulties to surmount. Just how this would be done I do not know. If it is possible to do it on an equitable basis, fine.

Mr. Winch: You might but we wouldn't.

Mr. MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): There is that chatter again. We hear that chatter every so often. Having regard to the way the subamendment is worded and its ambiguity, it is impossible for me to even think of supporting it. We have heard repeated pleas with regard to reducing capital expenditure. The latest plea to that effect was made by the hon. member for Hull. This would be fine in itself. I am one of those who support such a proposal. We must reduce government expenditures in every way possible.

As a matter of fact, the government has reduced expenditures in this budget when you consider our total expenditures in the light of the increased services and the increased population. However, at this point in our economy when we are emerging from a recession I cannot see for the life of me, and I have looked over the budget quite thoroughly, how we can cut expenditures any further.

There are three main branches of expenditure. One of them has to do with national defence. Expenditure on national defence in any free country is very large. It does not appear at this time that much can be done with regard to cutting expenditure on this department. As Mr. A. G. Gardiner sets out in his "Life of Harcourt":

> What a good thing for the world it would be if all nations were altogether insolvent. How much less mischief they would do.

But as he noted, "Even beggars will fight." This has been true ever since Victorian days. Beggars have learned to fight with modern weapons and to pay for a good stock of the most up-to-date killing machines, even if they can pay for little else. Perhaps this example is a little far-fetched but in reference to the world scene today a disarmament policy has not been put into effect and at the present time we cannot afford to cut our expenditures on national defence.

Then we come to social security which is another item of major government expenditure. I hope that no one here is suggesting that we cut old age pensions or family allowances. Certainly I for one believe that all Canadians realize that social security has to be paid for by way of taxes, and I do not think there is anyone who would not expect an increase in the rate of taxation in order to balance the old age security fund. I do not think there is anyone who believes this is unfair at the present time. Let us be realistic.

I should like to say a few words about our old age pensioners. Many of our old age pensioners are barely existing on the $55 a month they receive, and I think most members will agree with me when I say that old age pensions should be increased and perhaps the age qualification should be reduced to 65 years. I am in favour of these two things as are many members of this house. The only obstacle that remains is how to accomplish them.

The government has received Dr. Clark's report which is the result of an extensive investigation into the present social security system in the United States in relation to Canada's old age pension scheme. I have read the report thoroughly, and I must say that Dr. Clark made a very complete and thorough investigation. This report is now in the hands of the government and the existing problems in connection with old age security must be met in the near future. How far such provisions should go and what form they should take are still open problems. There are two things that appear to be needed: one is stability in real terms for payments, and the second is an agreement on a stable proportion of the national income to be devoted to this purpose.

A simple system is needed, in my estimation, to tie the payments to the movements of national money income. I believe the old age pensioner across Canada realizes that this government has his interests at heart, and since this is the case we should stand prepared to alleviate any of the sufferings of our senior citizens. I have every confidence that this assistance will be forthcoming by way of legislation after a thorough study has been made of the fine report submitted by Dr. Clark.

However, I do not believe that this will be enough. I would think that after the government has studied this report in all its details, a national conference should be called to consist of the government and all interested agencies across this country as well as representatives from the various provinces. Then, this conference could re-evaluate the present situation of the old age pensioner. Something must be done and the problem must not be left to the haphazard guessing game of other days. The policy must be a long range one and must be for the benefit of old age pensioners across the country in the years to come.

There is another item, probably the last major item of government expenditure mentioned by the hon. member for Hull, and that is the servicing of the national debt. Surely, no one could suggest that this be discontinued. After these three items, defence, social security and the servicing of the national debt, have been dealt with, there are really very few places for the government to economize. At this time, therefore, we are faced with the only alternative and that is to raise some taxes, yet not raise them too high so as to prohibit the expansion of our economy. Certainly, some budgetary deficit would be appropriate in order to ensure the continued economic recovery of this nation.

Our economy has become dependent on growth and, therefore, very substantial increases in both domestic and foreign demand will be necessary in order to keep pace with the growth of the Canadian labour force and its increased efficiency. We have two problems, therefore, to solve in our present day Canadian economy. One of these problems is unemployment and the other is inflation. It is important, and I believe all financial experts agree with me on this, that the soundness of the Canadian dollar be preserved.

In this connection it was mandatory that an attack be made on last year's deficit, as it was made by the Minister of Finance. I do not believe there is anyone who disagrees with the statement that inflation creates more unemployment than it cures. Not only does it do this, but it affects the savings and investments of a great many people and, in the end, it would lower productivity. It is important, therefore, that we attack inflation. Why do we not go all the way and raise taxes still further in an attempt to balance the budget? This would not be a proper thing to do for, as the minister has pointed out in his budget speech, we have to combat inflation and yet ease unemployment. We have to have an expanding economy, that is our industrial output must be increased. We have to be careful just how high we raise taxes to ensure that our economy does not retract but keeps on expanding. It is not possible at this stage in our economy to ensure an expanding economy other than by way of a deficit budget, although this deficit is a great deal smaller than the deficit of last year.

Our national budget is supposed to provide us with a picture of our finances which will enable us to reorganize the economic life of our country. Our national budget should give us an indication of whether or not the government is really grappling with the problems prevailing in our economic society. I believe in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that the budget brought down by our Minister of Finance does fulfil these conditions. Since it does this, I believe it reflects the outstanding characteristics of the present government. Let us never forget that the manner in which we govern our country is linked with the manner in which we govern our finances. The wealth of this nation is not measured by statistics relating to fiscal policy; it can be measured only by the amount of goods and services provided to our people and by the standard of living they enjoy as well as their freedoms as evidenced during their daily life in this great country.

It is the dream of every minister of finance to build a perfect budget. Perhaps before too long the present minister may have occasion to do just that. I hope I am sitting in this house when he does. This year's budget has been described in various ways in speeches by hon. members and in the various newspapers across the land. It has been described as a belt-tightening budget, as a recovery budget and in the Winnipeg Free Press in my own home town as a castor oil budget. Some of these things, in essence, are true. I should like to name this budget and call it a sincere budget. I would call it a sincere budget because it is typical of the responsible attitude of this government toward the people of Canada.

In closing I should like to reiterate the statement the Minister of Finance made while presenting his budget last year. This represents the true position of this government. "We stake our unwavering belief in Canada's destiny, and we shall strive to meet the challenge of our responsibilities."

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, in his reply following the presentation of the budget on the evening of April 9, the opposition financial critic, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), stated that unfortunately, as we often find in such presentations by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), there was an exceeding amount of passion in the presentation of his case but not very much consistency. In so far as the degree of passion is concerned in this year's budget, we are not surprised at all because if we care to look at page 2435 of Hansard we will find that under tariff item 95c the rates in effect prior to the rates proposed in the present budget on passiflora edulis, remain the same. Passiflora edulis, of course, is nothing else than what is commonly known as passion fruit. This fruit is to be allowed free entry under the British preferential tariff and must have been available to the minister in the preparation of his budget at no extra cost.

In so far as consistency is concerned, I can agree with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River that this new budget seems to be directly opposed to the policies the minister and other members of the government have enunciated in recent years. It is my intention, in the course of my remarks this evening, to elaborate to some extent on this lack of consistency in the present policy of the government, as compared with the pre-election stand of its members, and particularly with the stand taken by those who have been sitting on the opposition side of this house in the years past.

My criticism of the present budget will be based on six different points, all the factors concerning which I intend to elaborate, which show the complete lack of consistency, even the lack of policy of the present government. This lack of policy on the part of the government was clearly indicated in an editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail on Saturday, April 11, under the title "No Policy To Guide Him". This newspaper which is commonly known as being generally not too unfriendly to the present administration clearly states that present tax increases will also increase costs and prices in every sector of Canada's economy. They will make Canadian goods dearer and less competitive at a time when the budget speech tells us, as found at page 2408 of Hansard:

> World markets are becoming increasingly competitive, and unless we can keep our costs of production in line with those in other important trading countries we shall find it increasingly difficult to sell our goods abroad and meet the competition of imports at home. Indeed this is happening now.

The minister admits that Canada's prices are too high and still, in the same breath, he introduces tax changes which will increase commodity prices by another $352 million in one full year.

If I were assigned the task of moving an amendment to the present budget I would be tempted as my first suggestion to move that the government has failed to reduce taxes which are an excessive burden on the Canadian people and place our producers under a severe disadvantage in meeting competition from abroad.

The present Minister of Finance, when speaking in the budget debate on April 28, 1954, described the Abbott budget of that year as a "poor, scrawny creature dragged into the chamber by the minister of finance". He then went on to describe the members on the government side as following their usual course of obedient cheering but nevertheless with not much "stomach" for the task that had been assigned to them. He also criticized the Minister of Finance for not offering a substantial reduction in taxes on commodities and for keeping on adding to the cost of living by collecting taxes on the basic necessities of life.

Where is the evidence of consistent policy of the present government in the fiscal field? No later than February 9 of this year when speaking on an amendment to a non-confidence motion introduced by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), the Minister of Finance warned the opposition members not to dare to accuse the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) of this country of not carrying out the undertakings that he had given. If you dare to do such a thing, said the Minister of Finance, you will find 207 loyal members and followers of the Prime Minister of this country rallying to his support.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robichaud: There they are. I think the trained seals are not so well trained after all because there is only one performing at this time.

An hon. Member: Stick to your text.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I rise on a point of order Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to suggest this, but I suspect that the hon. member is reading his speech. That is a practice that has been declared to be not in accordance with the rules of the house.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am following my notes. I understand it is permissible to follow one's notes.

Mr. Speaker: I hope that the hon. member who has the floor will bear in mind the fact that it is contrary to the practice of the house to read a prepared speech verbatim.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday night last, those witnessing the performance of the Minister of Finance, whether sitting on the opposition side or whether sitting in the galleries, were offered a rather amusing spectacle.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): He is reading verbatim.

Mr. Robichaud: Amid the usual obedient cheering of 207 followers of the Prime Minister, there were bursts of applause as the Minister of Finance proceeded with his remarks. I am wondering how much stomach those members had for their task when applauding the minister's statement to the effect that the 1958-59 deficit would be in the vicinity of $616 million.

An hon. Member: Turn the page.

Mr. Robichaud: Those same hon. members must have had in mind the warning of the Minister of Finance when again they burst into applause following the announcement of $352 million of increase in the taxation field. In 1954, under a Liberal administration, it was a crime for the government of the day not to offer tax concessions or reductions in excess of $26 million with a forecast surplus of $4 million. Let us see what the present Minister of Finance had to say on that occasion. At page 4208 of Hansard we find the following remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton:

> The effects of high taxes are having ever-widening consequences. We see them reflected increasingly today in the high cost of production which is having secondary effects in this country of very serious significance. We see on every hand, every day, Mr. Speaker, the effects of these high taxes in the increasing cost of production, and they have been a major contributing factor in bringing about a situation where our export trade has been falling off to a disturbing degree.
> Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, the extent to which, by reason of these high taxes and high costs we have been pricing ourselves out of some of our best markets abroad? The government seems to take no account of that fact, and no responsibility. The effects do not stop with our markets abroad, for right here at home, by reason of these high taxes and the high costs to which they have given rise, we are seeing the loss of our domestic market to goods which are being imported from countries abroad where the burden of taxation is less heavy.

The hon. member for Eglinton is occupying today the post of Minister of Finance, and he is doing just the opposite of what he was advocating in 1954, and this is with the applause and approval of his government supporters.

What did the Prime Minister have to say about high taxation when appealing to the electors of Canada for their support prior to the last election? In Edmonton on March 8, 1958, as reported in the Vancouver Sun of March 10, we find this:

> Prime Minister John Diefenbaker indicated here Saturday that if re-elected he will make drastic changes in taxation treatment of oil companies.
> He promised "tax adjustments to put Canadians in a more equitable position compared with Americans in exploration and development".
> He said later he was referring to the depletion allowances treatment accorded firms under Canadian tax laws, and the allowances permitted against earned income to offset unsuccessful wells.

Then again in Selkirk, Manitoba, on March 17, 1958, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press:

> —Mr. Diefenbaker promised that Canadians would be given opportunities equal to foreign investors in developing the country's natural resources.
> Until now, he said, Canadian investors had found themselves at a disadvantage but this would be changed by tax revisions.

What is the result of the present government's policy? What is really happening in the foreign capital investment field? Let us listen again to the Prime Minister's own words. What did he have to say in a "Nation's Business" broadcast on March 9 of this year? Listen to this:

> Now, as to the maintenance of Canadian sovereignty—that's a concern, and that's one of the reasons that over the years I've advocated the necessity, in the interests of Canadian defence and of Canadian sovereignty, and of preserving Canadian sovereignty, that action must be taken to assure Canada's destiny by a northern development plan. And it's worked out—in the last few weeks 75 million acres of northern Canada, the wastes of northern Canada they used to say, have been taken up for oil and mineral development. And I want to underline this—that's the way to preserve Canada's sovereignty.

In a question which was addressed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and answered on March 11, as reported at page 1833 of Hansard, we find that a check had been made of the status of the various successful bidders. There were ten successful bidders, of whom two were United States corporations, and four were Canadian subsidiaries of such corporations. One corporation is owned by United States, Canadian and British interests and there were two Canadian firms. Later on it was found that as to these Canadian firms, only five per cent of the rights in the 75 million acres mentioned by the Prime Minister went to them.

Let us be realistic. Are those United States investors now to be branded as "Yankee pirates" or "Texas buccaneers"? Those were the terms used by hon. members now on the government side when they were in opposition. Are the tax revisions offered by the present government the revisions referred to and promised by the Prime Minister in Selkirk on March 17, 1958? Is this the government's way of protecting Canadian investors? Maybe not, but at least we must take the Prime Minister's word when he stated, and I repeat again his own words: "That is the way to preserve Canada's sovereignty."

What about tobacco? I have here an excerpt from the Toronto Star of February 18, 1958 containing a report of what the Prime Minister had to say at that time about the tobacco industry in Brantford, Ontario. It reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker last night dropped a clear hint that the taxes on cigarettes, cigars and tobacco soon may be cut.
> He told an audience of 1,400 that no industry in Canada suffers a greater degree of taxation than the tobacco industry.
> Tobacco growers, he said, are the one segment of agriculture that has not received the attention it deserves, although growers long have clamoured for government aid.
> The Prime Minister added: "We want to give them this assistance. We are having a study made of this industry to see what action is needed to give tobacco growers a reasonable return and some security for their efforts.

Let us be realistic. We know what the Minister of Finance has done to the tobacco growers in his present budget now under discussion. The government has failed to reduce taxes which are placing an excessive burden on the Canadian people and putting our producers under a severe disadvantage in meeting competition from abroad. The facts are that the Minister of Finance expects to collect this year a total of $5,165 million, plus an additional $245 million in new or increased taxes, or, altogether, an additional $638 million over and above the total tax collections for 1958.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, the hon. member reads very well.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I am continuing my speech.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member continues his speech he will do so on the basis that he observes the practice of the house.

Mr. Robichaud: I will try to follow the practice which has been the practice of this house for years, and especially during the present session. I was just saying that the Minister of Finance expects to collect this year an additional $638 million over and above the total tax collections for 1958.

My second criticism of the present budget is that it has failed to reduce unnecessary expenditures. Hon. members of this house who were here in 1954 will remember the criticism which was made by the opposition of that day when the then minister of finance presented a budget estimating expenditures of $4,460 million. We well remember the official critic for the opposition, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) telling us that as long as the government has the pocket of the taxpayers open to it, it does not become realistic. We also remember him saying: "We all know that taxes enter into the cost of production and we all know that non-defence expenditure should be coming down." As a member of the present cabinet, was the hon. member for Greenwood consistent in advising the government to put into practice what he was preaching in 1954? I have reasons to believe that he has been warning his colleagues in the cabinet, but that unfortunately his advice and counsel have reached deaf ears.

What did the present Minister of Finance have to say about waste, extravagance and unnecessary expenditures? Let me refer again to page 4208 of Hansard for April 28,

1954 where we find the hon. member for Eglinton saying the following words:

> Mr. Speaker, there will be no effective significant reductions in taxation at Ottawa here until this government faces up, as it has never done, to the problem of its own waste and extravagance. Time after time when proposals have been made in this house for review of the operations of government with a view to introduction of efficiency and elimination of waste and extravagance, our efforts have been defeated by the government.

And again, on page 4207 we find the hon. gentleman saying:

> Hidden taxes go on. There has been no attempt on the part of the minister to bring these taxes out in the open so that the consumer, the man who pays for the goods, knows what portion of the price is going for taxes.

Not only is the hon. member for Eglinton now a minister of the cabinet, but he occupies the chair of the Minister of Finance. What has he done to put into practice what he was preaching in 1954? Oh, when I was listening to the minister on Thursday last telling the house and the country that at an income level of $4,000 a year, under the new rates a taxpayer will pay a total of $208, an increase of $14 from the 1958 level, but still $44 less than before the reductions introduced in 1957, I could not help but be reminded of the minister's own words: "Hidden taxes go on." Yes, hidden taxes go on, and the consumer keeps on paying. This same taxpayer will see his $44, his "Tory gift", being gradually pulled out from his other pocket day after day until he himself will be compelled to reach into his left pocket in order to pay his share of the $352 million of additional taxes imposed on him by the present budget. In other words, as a Canadian consumer he will be asked to share and share fully in meeting the requirements of the record Tory budget of 1959 presented by a minister of finance who has lost his regard and concern for the same human beings for whom he was appealing in 1954.

As my third point, I should like to ask the question: what real and noticeable changes have taken place in the administration of government since June 1957? Where is the evidence of all this waste and extravagance which was supposed to take place in the administration of various departments of government? The only change we are able to find is an increase of approximately 9,000 civil servants together with an unknown number of patronage appointees which has added to the ranks of government employees since this government took office. Is this the government's major move to improve the efficiency of its administration?

A fourth subject which is of major interest at this time is the government's complete lack of policy with regard to offering relief to those who are unemployed. In other words, the present budget fails to recognize the plea of the unemployed. What did the hon. member for Eglinton have to say with reference to unemployment when he was speaking in the 1954 budget debate? Then, as recorded on page 4208 of Hansard for April 28, the member for Eglinton, now the Minister of Finance, made this statement:

> In consequence we see today Canadian unemployment at a post-war peak. The latest government figures issued by the national employment service have shown that on March 18 the number of Canadians applying for work through that service totalled no less than 570,000. We have had no figure to compare with that in the last decade and a half.

If there were 570,000 Canadians applying for work on March 18, 1954, hon. members might like to know that the registrations at national employment services offices on February 19, 1959 reached a total of 791,210. The March figures when released may prove to exceed 800,000. In other words, the fact of 570,000 unemployed was viewed as representing a serious problem in 1954, but the fact of 800,000 unemployed or an additional 230,000, an increase of 40 per cent, does not seem to worry the minister too much in 1959. "So what?" would say the Minister without Portfolio, (Mr. Browne), the representative in the cabinet from Newfoundland. The present government chooses to ignore the pressing problem of unemployment.

We all know that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has taken pride and satisfaction in the total cost of projects undertaken by municipalities involving the expenditure of $70 million and providing employment to 30,000 people with the federal share amounting to $15 million. The minister did not state, however, that a large proportion of these 30,000 workers were employed only for the period of a few weeks and in some cases for only a few days. In effect to alleviate winter unemployment the government contributed $15 million or approximately $500 each for two or three per cent of the workers registered for employment throughout Canada.

What has happened to the huge pre-election public works program of $1,185 million that was enunciated to ensure the development of our country and to provide as well help to Canadians, work to Canadians and an opportunity for Canadians to acquire the better things of life? Where are those work projects promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in February of last year when he said that his government would not allow the possibility of deficits in the national budget to stand in the way of providing work projects to try to take up the slack in unemployment?

The words of the Prime Minister in his telecast of February 18, 1958, as reported in the Montreal Star the following day, must be repeated at this time in order to remind the Canadian public of phony election promises:

> "As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada," said the Prime Minister, "everything that can be done—everything without regard to limit—will be done to the end that no one will suffer."

In Cornwall on February 24, 1958, as reported in the Winnipeg Free Press, the Prime Minister said:

> We have given young Canadians the hope. We have given them the vision.

Yes, a vision it was and a vision it will remain. The Prime Minister must be reminded once again of his pledge to the Canadian electors in an address in Charlottetown on February 27, 1958, as reported in the Toronto Star, when he said:

> I make this promise. We acted. My pledge is to every man and woman in this nation who is unemployed—

And there are 800,000 today.

> —so long as I am Prime Minister, no one will be allowed to suffer in this nation.

There are public works projects which could be undertaken and which would provide not only temporary employment and temporary relief but that would at the same time contribute to the stabilization of the general Canadian economy. Major public works such as the Chignecto canal between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia if undertaken would help to relieve the unemployment situation in the maritimes. An over-all national program to include consideration of projects which would be of lasting and definite benefit to Canada, should be the aim of the government under existing conditions.

In my own constituency of Gloucester, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) has been offered the possibility of providing employment, and I mean permanent and repeated seasonal employment, to a large number of fishermen and shore workers in different fishing communities. I have placed before the minister requests for a wharf extension at Maisonnette; for the replacement of a wharf at Lower Caraquet which was partly disintegrated in a storm last fall; for the construction of a wharf at Pigeon Hill, to accommodate the fleet of 60-odd fishing boats of the area; for improvements to the entrance of Tracadie Harbour, and Ferguson Gully. Those are the kind of public works projects which should receive priority in the preparation of public works estimates. A new post office building or a new federal building will provide employment during the construction stage, but it will not add to the economy of an area as much as a public wharf which can accommodate a fishing fleet and bring in new industries to the communities concerned. In delaying the construction of a public wharf, where its construction has been proven economically justified, the department is contributing to the extension of the serious unemployment situation such as exists today in my constituency, and in other fishing areas of the maritimes.

A request is before the department for the construction of a new wharf at Bathurst. There is a progressive town with a paper mill, lumber mills and other industries, but nevertheless it is deprived of proper shipping facilities. The matter has been before the department for some time and it is urgent that a decision should be reached without delay to provide Bathurst harbour with adequate docking facilities to permit shipping by water the production of its industries.

An important factor in Canada's economy is the disposal of our surplus primary products. Time will not permit me to elaborate on this fifth factor, which shows the lack of direction of the present government and its inconsistency in the application of its trade policy. This is the government which had pledged itself to switch some of Canada's trading eggs out of the United States basket. This is the government which has boasted of its accomplishments in increasing trade and beginning the shift away from an overwhelming percentage of Canadian purchases in the United States. This is the government which, on the eve of the last general election, claimed to have a real plan worked out in detail in order to give opportunities to provide markets. Nevertheless, this is the same government under whose administration the value of merchandise exports in 1958 amounted to $4,890 million, compared with $4,909 million in 1957, a decrease of $19 million, and this notwithstanding the gifts of wheat shipments made under the Colombo plan and without at the same time taking into consideration the annual increase in our population. This is the same government which has lead the country to unwarranted restrictions of quotas on the part of the United States, on imports of certain Canadian products such as oil and base metals.

I am not surprised, that on April 1, 1958, the day following the last general election, a mining company in my constituency, the Brunswick Mining and Smelting, made the announcement of its decision to cease operation at once and place its equipment and machinery in mothballs until the advent of better days to come.

A sixth factor which is clearly noticeable from the present budget is the failure of the government to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly increasing responsibilities. Here again, time will not permit me to discuss this subject at length this evening. May I be permitted, however, to remind the house of the words of the present Minister of Finance, then the private hon. member for Eglinton who, when speaking on the 1954 budget debate as reported at page 4212 of Hansard of April 28, 1954, said:

> There is the hard fact of the situation, and there is the fact that makes this sophistry we have listened to from the Minister of Finance and others so completely unrealistic. You can talk today about concurrent rights on the part of the provinces, the Minister of Finance and others can say that the provinces have just as much right as they ever had to levy income tax on persons or corporations but, Mr. Speaker, you must take account of the fact that the federal government is already taxing to the limit in those fields.

> Nothing will change it except action on the part of the dominion and the provinces to come together to reach an agreement in this field and then action on the part of parliament and the legislatures in consequence.

It is not surprising that a government with no policy to guide it would devote so little attention to a subject of such cardinal importance. It is a surprise, however, that the Minister of Finance has forgotten so soon his own statements as well as those made by the Prime Minister during the last federal election campaign.

I know that I have only a few minute left at my disposal. I have elaborated on six different points which demonstrate the complete failure on the part of the government to cope with existing problems and I have illustrated its inconsistency and lack of policy in the administration of the affairs of the country. I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) will be quite familiar with the six points I have mentioned this evening. So far as the other members on the government side are concerned, I would refer them to pages 3992 and 3993 of Hansard for April 12, 1954, where they will find those six points included in the amendment of the official critic of the opposition on the 1954 budget presented by Mr. Abbott.

In view of the contents of the present budget, I cannot see how the hon. member and those on the government side who were sitting in the opposition at that time cannot vote in favour of the amendment introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson).

We were accused then of failing to reduce taxes when in reality the budget offered $36 million in tax reductions as compared with increases of $352 million in the present budget. We were accused of failing to reduce unnecessary expenditures when our total expenditures in the 1954 budget were estimated at $4,460 million, as compared with total expenditures of $5,660 million, or an increase of $1,220 million; yes, an increase of $1¼ billion in the present budget. We were accused of failing to improve the efficiency of the administration when in fewer than two years of administration the present government has increased the civil service force by over 9,000 and has failed to show evidence of waste and extravagance in any of the departments.

We were accused of ignoring the problem of unemployment when we had a temporary 570,000 registrations for jobs at the national employment service which, two months later, had practically been entirely absorbed owing to the policies of the then government, against a present force of over 800,000, which has constantly remained at a level 30 to 40 per cent higher since the present government took office.

We were accused of failing to retain and regain markets for our surplus primary products when the expanding trade and the real plan to provide markets promised in the 1958 election campaign have failed to materialize.

We were accused of failing to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined re-allocation of taxing power, so that municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly increasing responsibilities, when the present budget offers no relief whatsoever in this field and when the present government refuses to meet with the provinces and municipalities to discuss their mutual problems.

With the exception of the war years the Liberals produced an almost continuous series of surpluses which were associated with years of progress and prosperity. In a spectacular fashion, under a Conservative government, the pattern has been altered and the lower taxes promised in 1957, and partially applied in 1958, have been of short duration. In fact, the over-all picture is that Canadians were offered a thin slice of $200 million in tax reductions out of a promised $500 million reduction, and fewer than 10 months later they were being asked to pay back this same $200 million, plus an additional amount of $152 million, making a total additional burden of $352 million in a full year. This, is quite different from what most Canadians were led to expect when they listened to election promises and decided to let new political hands take over the administration of Canada's business. It is no wonder, that we find members on the government side rebelling, as we saw in an article published in the Ottawa Citizen of this day, which has the title, "Tory Rebel tells P.M. to amend Newfoundland's Ways". Part of this article, which has reference to the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne), reads as follows:

> He said the government's decision to end special payments to Newfoundland in 1961 was "contrary to everything we said or preached while in opposition.
> We were, remember, the party for maritime rights. We were going to right the wrongs of previous governments. We cannot have one policy when in opposition and another when in government."
> Mr. Van Horne said that in order to be on the government side of the commons, "we sold the Canadian people a bill of goods. Our purpose now must be to deliver those goods in fulfilling all our promises.
> He said it was not too late for the Diefenbaker government to "regain the vision we apparently have lost. The best possible thing this government can do is to admit it was wrong, correct its mistakes and adopt a new attitude."

These were words spoken by a member about whom the Prime Minister said during the campaign, "I need him on my side in Ottawa; I want him in Ottawa." The attitude of the member for Restigouche-Madawaska exists also among some of the members on the government side and the day is not too far away when some of them will have the courage to expose the lack of policy of the present government as well as its failure to keep its promises.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, early in this session, when I came back to the House of Commons, I found my seat had been changed. You may recall that last session I was sitting beside you, to your right, facing the opposition. If by-elections between the two sessions did not modify the Progressive Conservative representation of March 31, 1958, they had, at least, the effect of establishing me in this part of the house. However, be assured that I am happy about it, because the effect was to take me further away from the opposition, and anyone getting away from the present opposition can truly have the feeling of getting nearer to the Canadian people. That is why tonight I want to speak on the problems of education, of international trade and also on another subject, if time allows.

Mr. Speaker, since I came to this house, I was astonished to note with what care, and also sometimes with what indifference, a good number of hon. members avoid referring to the significant problem of education. When dealing with such matters we must always go back to the confederation pact of 1867, because our parliamentary thoughts and actions must be ruled by our constitution. We may say immediately that if the Canadian constitution is a good one, it should be respected. If it is bad, it should be amended with the consent of all parties concerned. But as long as it is not changed, we should respect all that it prescribes.

As far as I am concerned, I would be in favour of amending the federal pact with regard to some matters of a physical nature, like the trans-Canada highway and hospital insurance. We know that since 1867—it is not difficult to confirm it—Canadian economy has developed considerably. Economic problems have changed and we have now eleven governments, i.e. ten provincial governments and one federal government. When these governments want to carry out their projects, they sometimes, in certain fields, feel with regard to the constitution as if they were stifled by a straight jacket.

In regard to problems of a practical nature, it would therefore be desirable to amend the Canadian constitution. At a federal-provincial conference, it would be proper to set up a national economic council, with economists from the federal government and from each province as members, who would study and report their views to the various governments, precisely in order to co-ordinate the production of each and to allow an appropriate development of our natural wealth.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is a field which, in my humble opinion, cannot be touched and that is the field of education. In 1867, the two main races and the four provinces of the time created the federal government of which we are now part. In doing so, they wished to set up in this country a federal system, that is the Canadian federal system.

But what is federalism? It is a system of association between autonomous governments; in other words, the governments adhering to and composing such a system, are not subordinated to one another, but are co-ordinated governments. Under such a system, those governments co-operate in common tasks, such as, for instance, under article 95, in immigration and agriculture. Those same governments respect the exclusive rights of each. Under such a system, those same governments know that they cannot do indirectly what they are prohibited to do directly by the constitution.

Those principles of Canadian federalism were recognized and sanctioned several times by decisions of the privy council in London, especially in the Great West Saddlery case, 1921, in the Edwards case, in 1930, and in the aeronautics case, in 1932.

Mr. Speaker, if the province of Quebec, in 1867, adhered to the confederative pact, it was precisely to safeguard its rights, prerogatives, traditions, as well as its teaching and educational system.

Under the Canadian constitution, article 91 provides that the federal government may legislate for the peace, order and good government, in all matters not coming under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. Under section 93 of the constitution, the provinces are granted exclusive rights in the field of education.

But what is meant by an exclusive right? It is a right that belongs peculiarly to the holder and cannot be shared, except with mutual consent. An exclusive right is of a higher order than an ordinary right, and even overrides a priority right, a relative right. In its own field, it is an absolute right.

But it is not enough to have rights; there must be the financial means to exercise them. So the fathers of confederation had the foresight to include subsection 2 of section 92, which grants to provinces the financial means of exercising their prerogatives. I am referring to direct taxation, within the provinces, for the purpose of raising income to meet provincial needs.

That is the basis of the position taken by some provinces, and particularly the province of Quebec, in claiming exclusive rights in the educational field. It is a matter of justice, of right and of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, whatever formulas may be invented, whatever contortions of the mind are resorted to, I think sooner or later, we shall have to come back to the spirit of the confederation pact of 1867, and hand back to the provinces that want them the taxation fields they need to discharge their exclusive prerogatives and rights.

In 1901, the following statement was made by Boucher de la Bruyère, superintendent of education in the province of Quebec:

> The majority of the people in the province of Quebec insist on controlling their own schools, and in no way favour the encroachment of the federal government in the educational field outside the limits set by Canada's constitution.

A few years ago, Mr. John P. Rowat, then chairman of the Protestant committee on education in the province of Quebec, in discussing federal government interventions into the field of education, made the following statement:

> I oppose such interventions, because they go against our laws and against the traditions of the majority in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the only case where, under subsections 3 and 4 of section 93 of the confederation pact, the federal government may subsidize schools is where the schools of a minority group in a province are being deprived of their rights.

But under what principle do many Canadians and those of the province of Quebec in particular object to the active role of the federal government in the field of education? It is because of the principle of the responsible government which we have been enjoying in this country since 1841. Responsible government requires ministers to account to the people for their management and expenditures. Now for an administrator to be able to account for his managership, he must control the moneys he is distributing. And it is precisely this control which defeats the purpose of the confederation pact and which the province of Quebec is not prepared to accept.

An objection might be raised to the effect that the federal government can give unconditional grants. But such a procedure is fraught with danger, and the best evidence I can marshal on that score was given by the former justice minister in the Liberal government, Mr. Garson, who in March 1952 said in this house in the course of a debate:

> If they were large enough to be worthwhile, the dominion treasury simply could not defend handing out these large sums of money to the provincial governments without assuming some responsibility as to the manner in which they would be spent.

It will be recalled that when the Liberals were in power they did indirectly what the constitution forbade them to do directly in this field. During the winter of 1957, they passed two pieces of legislation under which they established an arts council and granted financial assistance to universities. To justify their encroachment upon this field of education they referred to an excerpt from the judgment of Lord Atkin, of the privy council in London, in a case concerning unemployment insurance. That part of the judgment reads as follows:

> That the dominion may impose taxation for the purpose of creating a fund for special purposes and may apply that fund for making contributions in the public interest to individuals, corporations or public authorities could not as a general proposition be denied.

But while they were referring to that judgment, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals were hiding the truth and knowingly failed to communicate the other part of the same judgment of Lord Atkin, of the privy council, which rightly limits the governmental activity in the field at issue. That second part of the judgment reads as follows:

But assuming that the dominion has collected by means of taxation a fund, it by no means follows that any legislation which disposes of it is necessarily within dominion competence.

It may still be legislation affecting the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 and, if so, would be ultra vires. In other words, dominion legislation, even though it deals with dominion property, may yet be so framed as to invade civil rights within the province; or encroach upon the classes of subjects which are reserved to provincial competence. It is not necessary that it should be a colourable device, or a pretence. If on the true view of the legislation it is found that in reality, in pith and substance, the legislation invades civil rights within the province or in respect of other classes of subjects otherwise encroaches upon the provincial field, the legislation will be invalid. To hold otherwise would afford the dominion an easy passage into the provincial domain.

Briefly, such are the law and the precedents that establish the exclusive competence of the provinces in the field of education. The province of Quebec is then perfectly right in claiming its exclusive rights in that field. But while it was offering resistance, claiming its dues and being thus deprived of money, the Quebec universities were thus less favoured by the provincial state than the other universities in the other provinces.

In fact, the Quebec universities received, in 1956, provincial subsidies for general purposes, equivalent to 20.83 per cent of their budget. In Ontario, that proportion was 32.43 per cent; and, in the west, 45.52 per cent.

To settle that problem, formulas were suggested, among which a reduction in taxes, the surrendering of the direct taxation field, the restitution of levied overtax and the deduction of taxation.

But in my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, the main remedy for the provinces under the constitution would be the gradual return of their taxation fields to the provinces who want them back, so that they may exercise their financial prerogatives guaranteed by the federal pact.

The federal government has to face so many problems in national and international affairs, that it is ill-advised to deal with matters in which it is not concerned.

[Mr. Allard.]

If the Liberals, when they were in power, had looked after their business, the country would not have been so badly administered and it would not have been left to us in such a state of unemployment and inflation.

As they are now in opposition, Mr. Speaker, we often hear them hold forth and make interjections, and the questions we are asked precisely arise from that die-hard centralizing policy they have embarked upon.

In that regard, I recall a statement made by the Liberal member for Megantic (Mr. Roberge) who on January 29, said in this house, as reported on page 133 of Hansard, and I quote:

Therefore, I repeat that in my opinion the fathers of confederation, in good faith, did not think in terms of universities when section 93 was enacted.

Mr. Speaker, I must reply to that statement made by the member for Megantic that I have never heard such a superficial and inadequate interpretation of the Canadian constitution.

It was rightly said: in 1867, in addition to Laval University, McGill University had already been erected on the Burnside estate by the royal institute for the advancement of science. Established in 1856 under chapter 54, Victoria 19, the higher education income and investment fund was to be distributed by the superintendent of lower Canada schools to such universities or colleges as were approved by the governor in council. This higher education income fund, as well as education, the permanent university fund and the royal institute, are mentioned in the fourth schedule to the British North America Act as part of the assets taken over by the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. How then can someone rise in this house and say that section 93 does not include education at all levels, including the university level?

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the present government will restore things to their proper place. I know the right hon. Prime Minister shows respect for the Canadian constitution. I should like to quote from a statement he made during the last session before a delegation of the Canadian conference on education:

Education must remain under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. The sections of the British North America Act which grant to the provinces the exclusive jurisdiction in the field of education must stay intact. Such constitutional rights are not apt to be amended. All Canadians must recognize the necessity of maintaining the constitution inviolate in this respect.

In turn, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) September 6 of last year, while explaining his estimates to the house, stated:

> Now I say, Mr. Speaker, on the matter of Canadian universities and about the attitude of the present government, that while the formula contained in the present agreement has not so far been such as to be viewed with favour in the province of Quebec, if there is any formula or modification of the present agreement which anyone cares to put forward which would permit the institutions of higher learning in the province of Quebec to participate, and which is in keeping with the national interest, we as a government are prepared to give it serious consideration.

That is why if the Quebec government cares to offer a suggestion, to make an official proposal, an appropriate and constructive one, I am positive that this government will consider it with great care and that, eventually, a decent solution will be found in this field.

Some hon. Members: We have been waiting for it for a long time.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me—

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I shall allow my hon. friend to ask questions when I am through with my speech. It will then be a distinct pleasure to answer his questions.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, before going any farther I should like to sincerely congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who last Thursday night presented in this house a budget which was most favourable to economic recovery. He completely confused those in the opposition who seemed to prophesy a billion dollar deficit. His statement revealed our economy is presently healthy and progressive under an intelligent administration.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, through the federal parliament we deal with national problems, we also must turn our thoughts to international issues.

I wanted to inform this house of a particular observation I made during my stay in New York as a parliamentary observer last fall, during the thirteenth regular session of the general assembly of the United Nations Organization. The house certainly remembers that the six main institutions of the United Nations are: the general assembly, the secretariat, the security council, the trusteeship council, the economic and social council and the international court of justice. Now, one of these bodies, i.e. the general assembly, mainly functions through a bureau and seven larger committees. Those committees are: the committee on political and security questions, comprising control of armaments; the special policy committee, which during the thirteenth session studied the opportunity of maintaining the police force in Gaza; the committee on financial and economic questions, which considered, during the thirteenth session, technical assistance to underdeveloped countries; the committee on social, cultural and humanitarian matters; the committee on trusteeship comprising non-autonomous territories; the committee on budgetary and administrative matters and, finally, the committee on legal matters. It is therefore, in the economic and social council, one of the six bodies mentioned, and also in the third important committee, that economic problems are discussed. Some people, when speaking of the United Nations Organization, think that it has attained no concrete or practical results and they point out, amongst others, the field of politics. Indeed, if we consider some aspects like armaments, for instance, we find that since 1946 there has not been much progress yet in this respect. More than 863 meetings took place, either at the atomic energy commission, or the disarmament committee, or even at the security council. But nations have always developed new armaments. However, in the economic and social fields, commentators recognize that the United Nations have attained practical results.

One can wonder if, in the economic field, the United Nations Organization has used its influence to improve trade relations, labour conditions and production methods for or between its members.

On February 18, 1946, a resolution adopted by the economic and social council recommended the establishment of an international organization on trade and employment. An international conference was therefore held in Havana, from November 1947 to March 1948. It was intended at the time to promote the economic progress of underdeveloped countries as well as to improve their standard of living. At that conference, 53 countries, including Canada, adopted regulations known as the Havana charter. To give permanent form to the international organization on trade and employment, a provisional committee was created and Mr. L. D. Wilgress, of Canada, became the first chairman of the executive committee. But, since that event which took place in Havana and which was designed to regulate international trade and employment, there has been no practical result, except that resolution coming every year before the economic and social council. That resolution is urging member nations to approve, through their respective domestic legislation, that principle of international organization of trade and employment.

It seems that the U.S. congress, at first reticent for several years, would support that principle. Canada, for its part, would wait until the United States and the United Kingdom take legislative action in this matter. Pending the belated setting up of such an international organization, some countries have joined together and concluded general agreements on customs tariffs and trade. These agreements are known as GATT. In 1947, at Geneva, 23 countries adhered to that multilateral trade agreement and, in 1949, at Annecy, 10 other countries took part in another series of negotiations on customs tariffs. But in spite of those international efforts to smooth international trade relations, the United Nations does not seem to sponsor any co-ordinated system in the field of production. It would be advisable if member nations agreed to determine and co-ordinate the nature of their production. For instance, here in Canada, in Ontario and Quebec, and particularly in the eastern townships, where I come from, we produce textiles; other countries like Japan, the United States and England are producing identical or similar textiles. The result is, therefore, that without wishing it perhaps, we are sustaining against each other a very keen competition, a very unhealthy one. Would it not be preferable then, that countries competing in the manufacture of a similar product should agree to diversify their production and co-ordinate their industrial activities? In that regard, would it not be desirable within the United Nations, through the economic and social council, or within the North Atlantic pact, to set up some sort of body, namely an economic guidance council, in order that such member countries might study the problems relating to the diversification of their production and the co-ordination of their trade and industrial activities? Indeed, such an organization might be set up within the UNO or under the North Atlantic pact. Article 2 of the North Atlantic treaty reads as follows:

> The parties will contribute toward the further development of peaceful and friendly international relations by strengthening their free institutions, by bringing about a better understanding of the principles upon which these institutions are founded, and by promoting conditions of stability and well-being. They will seek to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies and will encourage economic collaboration between any or all of them.

Since the North Atlantic treaty was signed on April 4, 1949, economic alliances have begun to take shape, such as Benelux, the coal and steel pool, EURATOM, the six-power customs union, the European common market plan, but all these moves are outside NATO, and the leading American partners of the alliance are kept outside.

Mr. Paul-Henri Spaak, secretary general of NATO and chairman of the North Atlantic council, stated on April 8, 1959, during a brief press conference held at the St. Hubert airbase:

> However, in the economic field, very little has been done: we shall have to lay particular stress on co-operation in this field. In that regard, I think the NATO countries should co-ordinate their efforts with regard to helping underdeveloped countries.
> The fifteen NATO countries will have to do much more and much better in that field and NATO should be the ideal instrument for the co-ordination of endeavours intended to contribute to the economic growth of underdeveloped countries.

So, whether through UNO, NATO or the commonwealth, Canada should continue to initiate economic endeavours. I am inclined to believe that the allies will defeat communism and will restrain its effects to the extent that they will co-ordinate their efforts and their economic relations.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it 10 o'clock?

Mr. Chevrier: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allard: Certainly.

Mr. Chevrier: About his earlier argument concerning the interference of federal authorities in the provincial field, does the honourable member not agree that his argument applies much more strongly in the case of this government with respect to the increase in the contributions to universities and to the construction of the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the hon. member for Laurier, who is now in the province of Quebec, that his question like many others which are asked by members of the opposition are a result of and spring from the uncompromising and centralizing policy which the Liberals implemented when they were administering this country.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry but I must remind hon. members that it is ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Since I did not get an answer to that question, perhaps I could ask the leader of the house what the business is for tomorrow.

Mr. Green: The hon. member will do a little bit better on this question. Tomorrow we shall continue with this debate.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

SALES OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ABROAD

Question No. 147—Mr. McIlraith:

1. Were any agricultural products, other than butter, sold abroad by any agency of government, other than the Canadian wheat board, since December 31, 1957?

2. If so, what products were sold abroad, and in the case of each commodity, to what countries, in what quantities and at what prices?

3. What prices did the agency pay to acquire each such product?

4. What was the difference between the price to the Canadian consumer and the export price for each product at the time of such sale?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Yes.

ENGINEERING SERVICES, ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA

Question No. 305—Mr. Fisher:

1. What companies supplied engineering service to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, during the fiscal year ending March, 1958, and for the subsequent period to March 23, 1959?

2. What was the amount, by company, of these services?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 14, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES—CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron) presented the third report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Third report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Cathers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOOD FOR PEACE CONFERENCE—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AND POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements which have come out of Washington, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether a food for peace conference is to be held in that city on May 4? If so, will the Canadian government be represented by a minister, and can the Prime Minister perhaps give us a general indication of the principles which should govern Canadian policy at such an important conference?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree that such a question might very well have had notice given in order to make it possible to give a very full report on the situation.

In so far as this conference is concerned, Canada will be represented at the meeting. The design of the conference was set forth in the state of the union speech of the President some weeks ago. The purpose is to bring together the various food-growing nations to the end that through discussion and consideration of their problems of distribution and also of the needs of other parts of the world, some policy applicable to all the food-producing nations might be arrived at. In point of fact I am hopeful that at that meeting consideration will be given to a proposition which I placed before the meeting of NATO in December, 1957. As the house will recall, I suggested the formation of a food bank to the end that by the establishment of such an institution surpluses would be stored against the probability of crop shortages or failures in the future. It would also constitute a storehouse for the assistance of those countries which find themselves and their populations short of necessary food.

I will make a further statement on this. If the Leader of the Opposition will agree, I shall go into some detail in a day or so.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO RECENT CHANGES IN REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether she is going to make a statement today or very soon on the changes in the immigration regulations, as seemed to be indicated by her remarks last week.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I hope to deal with this matter during the course of the current budget debate. I have given some consideration to it, and it occurs to me that the information I wish to give the house is probably a little more comprehensive than that which might be given in an answer on the orders of the day.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask a supplementary question? Does the hon. lady not think that the simplest way to deal with the matter would be to withdraw this unnecessary and inhuman order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The inhumanity goes back to the order in council passed on May 24, 1956.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): He knows all about inhumanity.

Mr. Pickersgill: More of the Prime Minister's diversions.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the hon. member is serious about that, I can say to him that all aspects of the problem are being considered.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am serious about it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

HULA HOOPS—ALLEGED RESALE PRICE MAINTENANCE IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I sent him notice early this morning, and I hope he received it in sufficient time. Has the minister's attention been drawn to an article in the November, 1958 edition of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture news and information bulletin to the effect that a manufacturer of hula hoops in Saskatchewan had engaged in a resale price maintenance practice and a refusal to supply hula hoops when the resale price level established by the manufacturer was not adhered to, which appears to be contrary to section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act? If so, is an inquiry under way or is one contemplated into this alleged contravention?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his question. I note that it refers to a report which appeared in the press in November, 1958, and I am not quite certain whether I am in order in answering an inquiry relating to a matter occurring that long ago, on the orders of the day. But if I am in order I can inform the hon. gentleman that a reference to this matter appeared in the daily press early in October and at that time the director made some preliminary inquiries. In view of the fact, however, that there was a direct conflict of evidence as to what had transpired, and also in view of the fact that the manufacturer, who had been operating on a very small scale, advised that he had discontinued production of this article entirely, it was considered that further inquiry was not warranted.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SASKATCHEWAN—OBSERVANCE OF MAY 3 AS CHILD SAFETY DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises out of the commendable campaign being carried on in Saskatchewan to prevent accidents involving children, and particularly the announcement that Saskatchewan will observe May 3 as child safety day. Can the minister assure the house that his department will lend its co-operation and support to Saskatchewan and other interested provinces in this worth-while project?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. My department's health grants include one directed to child maternal care, and I am always interested to hear of projects in this field. If there should be any move to sponsor child safety day on a national basis, my department would be prepared to lend any suitable support. If Saskatchewan or any other province submitted a project in this field within the terms of the national health grants we would always give it every consideration.

Mr. Argue: Is the minister or his department prepared to issue a statement supporting the efforts of the province of Saskatchewan in this regard?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I have answered the question, in that I said we would give every suitable support to any of these projects.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I have not given him notice, but the story to which I have reference appeared in this morning's press and perhaps he may have seen it. Can the minister tell the house when the seaway will be opened to navigation this year, and why there has been so much criticism of the department for its fumbling and bumbling of the opening, according to the story in this morning's Gazette?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Laurier knows very well, just about two weeks are necessary once the ice has been cleared in order to set up buoys for navigation. As I announced last winter, it was our hope that navigation could be opened on April 20. Since that time ice conditions have proven to be extremely severe, more severe than in most winters. I had expected to make an announcement today that navigation would open on April 25. However, I am not able to do so because, just before coming into the house, I received a report from my department that a number of attempts to set up buoys have not proven successful because of the severe ice conditions.

We are making a final ice survey this afternoon, and I will make an announcement in the house tomorrow. I can assure the hon. member, as I think he appreciates only too well having been minister of this department and dealt with these matters, that there has been no fumbling or bumbling at all in connection with this matter.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN CONSTRUCTION OF ATOM SMASHER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Was a proposal made to the government by the Canadian association of physicists or by any other association, asking the government to participate in a project in the field of nuclear science involving the construction of an atom smasher? If such a request was made, what was the government's reply to it?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to have notice of a question of this importance. Such a proposal did come forward and was discussed with the national research council. The matter was gone into very thoroughly and it seemed that at the present time we would be unable to accede to the request of the physicists, and they were so informed.

Mr. McIlraith: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what was the main reason for the refusal to accede to the request?

Mr. Churchill: I would have to look back at the material I have with regard to this particular problem. I know that the amount of money involved was rather substantial. running into some $20 million.

TRADE

URANIUM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MINISTER'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in a position to report to the house on a visit which, according to the press, he made to Washington yesterday to discuss with the United States government the very important matter of the renewal of the contract for uranium sales to the United States by Canada after 1962?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I was in Washington yesterday. The main purpose of my visit was to meet with the members of the atomic energy commission. There have been some changes made on both sides during the last 12 months, and I thought it advisable to get acquainted with Mr. McCone, head of that commission at the present time. This is the first opportunity I have had to meet with him and with other members of the commission. We discussed matters of general interest with regard to the atomic energy program affecting our two countries. Further conversations with respect to the particular matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition will be held in the near future.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

TRAIL, B.C.—INQUIRY AS TO PLANTING OF SHRUBS AROUND ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question on floriculture to the Minister of National Defence. I apologize for not giving him notice, but I was only prompted a few hours ago to ask this question by responsible citizens of the Trail district. In view of a recent visit by the minister to Trail when he promised a number of important citizens that he would have grass, flowers and shrubs planted around the armouries at Trail, and in view of the fact that nothing has been planted to date, will he inform the house when this work is going to be done.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I have no knowledge of any planting to be done around the armouries at Trail.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DOUKHOBORS—REPORTED DECISION TO REMAIN IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any comment to make on the reported decision of the Doukhobor Sons of Freedom sect to remain in Canada? Was their entry into Russia refused? Is there any objection to the admission to Canada from Uruguay of their spiritual leader, Stefan S. Sorokin?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the three questions in the order in which they were asked, may I say, first, that so far as I am aware no formal decision has been made by the Sons of Freedom sect to abandon their plan to return to Russia. I understand that press reports to that effect have been circulated, as a result of which we have had the Royal Canadian Mounted Police make inquiries. I also received a copy of a petition from the Sons of Freedom relating to the matter of the readmission of Stefan Sorokin. It was apparently as a result of the presentation of that petition that the impression was given that the Sons of Freedom had abandoned their intention to return to Russia. I am informed, however, that no such decision, in a formal sense at any rate, has been made by them.

With regard to the second question, which I think was "has their admission to Russia been refused?" the answer is that we have no knowledge of the attitude of the Russian government. Up to the time I left this city before Easter we had had no direct or indirect communication from the Russian government on this point. We have made it clear to the Sons of Freedom that so far as we are concerned, the Russians must indicate their readiness to accept the sect before we shall be in a position to proceed further.

In so far as the third question is concerned, namely the attitude of the government toward the readmission to Canada of Stefan Sorokin, may I say that to the best of my information no formal application for his readmission has been received. However, my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) would probably be in a better position to answer further questions in that regard.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to supplement the information I gave a moment ago in answer to the hon. member for Welland, in case I may have left an incorrect impression. The petition to which I referred, a copy of which I have seen, which was submitted by or on behalf of the Sons of Freedom sect, refers to the possible readmission of Sorokin, but to my knowledge we have had no formal application for readmission from Sorokin himself. The contents of the petition are receiving our careful consideration.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): On this question I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I must say how much I appreciate the interest of the hon. member for Welland in some of my constituents. Has the minister any further information with respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Welland, namely with respect to the application for readmission?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Was that with reference to the re-entry of Sorokin?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: As far as I know there has been no formal application for re-entry on behalf of Sorokin.

[Mr. Fulton.]

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE TO ANNOUNCEMENT BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question of which I have sent him notice. Can the Prime Minister give the house any detailed information regarding yesterday's announcement from Washington by the international joint commission to the effect that a mutually satisfactory basis for agreement had been reached between the United States and Canada regarding the development of the Columbia river?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the hon. member has reference to a press report that was issued by the co-chairmen of the international joint commission, namely Douglas McKay for the United States and Andrew McNaughton for Canada, in which were given the results of the commission's semi-annual meeting which took place in Washington between April 7 and April 10. The only portion of the press release which deals with the matter in question is this:

> Following its meeting with the Columbia board, the commission held further discussions concerning the formulation of principles for the determination of downstream benefits and their apportionment. The commission has now reached a mutually satisfactory basis for proceeding to a consideration of a first draft of principles. These principles will be discussed and further developed at the next meeting of the commission in Montreal on April 30.

The international joint commission, of course, is an independent international body which issues its own press releases. We have had no official communication by the commission with respect to the request made by the governments of the United States and Canada on January 29, 1959. However, I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the mutually satisfactory basis is not stated to be for an agreement between United States and Canada but for "proceeding to a consideration of a first draft of principles". In short, I assume that the commission is proceeding with the task assigned to it several months ago, and that in due course an official report will be made thereon to the two governments.

COAL

APPLICATION OF DOMINION COAL COMPANY FOR LOAN OF $6 MILLION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): May I ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can the minister say what consideration has been given to the application of the Dominion Coal Company for a loan of $6 million under the Maritime Coal Production Assistance Act in order to improve the lagging coal mining industry?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult the dominion coal board and get a report on this matter, which I will give to the house at the next sitting.

FISHERIES

SALT COD—INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the suggestion made at the fisheries council meeting last week that the government place a floor price under salt cod fish, can the minister tell us when the government intends to carry out its promise made prior to March 31, 1958 by the Prime Minister at Charlottetown and elsewhere in the Atlantic provinces, that the government would place a floor price under their salt fish?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. Unfortunately I received it only since coming into the house. I would say, however, that if the situation warrants it the government is prepared to apply price support to fish products at any time, and legislation is already in existence for such purpose. In applying such a program we must be careful not to act in a way which would expose our products to dumping duties or to embargoes by any of our best customers.

However, in the last year or so fish prices have been going up, and in the last fiscal year the industry had one of the best years it has had for some time. I might add that as far as Newfoundland products are concerned, through the efforts of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce we succeeded in selling a quantity of salt fish to Brazil at a good price for the first time in a number of years.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has in mind chiefly the problem which everyone admits existed in Newfoundland last year. The fisheries prices support board held special meetings last September in Halifax and St. John's to look into the problem of the income of the Newfoundland fishermen who fish cod to be processed into dried salt cod. The advice of the fisheries prices support board was that the problem in Newfoundland was one of catch failure rather than of prices, and that no action could be taken under the Fisheries Prices Support Act which would meet that problem. I want to say, however, that the whole matter is reviewed from time to time, and is under careful consideration by the fisheries prices support board.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL RIVER, ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR ICE REMOVAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Public Works if he would see to it that immediate action is taken to have the entrance to the Montreal river harbour, some 80 miles north of Sault Ste. Marie, opened as soon as possible so the fishermen may be able to make use of the harbour as soon as the ice leaves.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to have the situation checked.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOLARSHIPS IN HONOUR OF THE LATE SIDNEY SMITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government given serious consideration to the proposal of the national federation of Canadian university students for the establishment of a system of national scholarships in honour of the late Sidney Smith?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no consideration has been given to that question.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if, in view of the long lapse of time since the strike at Polymer Corporation in Sarnia began, he has any report to make to the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I deny that there has been a long lapse of time such as the hon. member refers to. The strike has been going on for only a few days. I have now received notice of concurrence from the Polymer Corporation, and the processing of the appointment of a mediator to assist in this dispute is now going on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Labour, who is obviously very well disposed today toward constructive suggestions, advise the house what he means by "just a few days"?

Mr. Starr: Just slightly over one week.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Regier.

(Translation):

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, what are the outstanding facts arising out of the budget brought down last Thursday evening? In a speech which lasted almost two hours, and with his well-known aplomb, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) told us that, for the fiscal year ending March 31 last, his government had managed to come up with the largest peacetime deficit in our history. He confessed that his government had managed to reach an all-time record in regard to expenditures. He also pointed out that, by means of an entirely novel plan for the reconversion of part of the debt, his government had succeeded in raising to a more respectable level the interest rate on money. The minister of Finance also added that Canada's debt had increased considerably, that the Canadian standard of living is declining, that there are far too many unemployed, that the danger of inflation remains great, that production costs are too high, etc.

In fact no one could have done a better job of showing up the policy of bankruptcy which has been followed by the Conservative government since it took over in 1957. It was that policy of bankruptcy which prompted a Toronto paper to say last Saturday, with reference to the budget:

(Text):

No policy to guide it.

(Translation):

The newspaper went on to say that the Minister of Finance had been faced with a difficult task. This we readily admit, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did have to face a difficult task in preparing the estimates for 1959-60. His cabinet colleagues have spread money around rather casually, they have administered their departments in an easy-going way, they have promised favours right and left, with the result that the Minister of Finance had to ask the Canadian taxpayers to pay the piper.

The minister was therefore obliged to conclude his speech, on Thursday night, by saying that the deficit for the fiscal year 1959-60 would again be phenomenal, but that Canadians would get off, at least for the time being, by paying about $350 million a year in extra taxation. Nor did the minister fail to stress that of this increase of $2.3 billion in gross national revenue, he proposed to take in as his share no less than 23 per cent or to be more accurate an amount of $640 million.

The hon. minister took great pains to make it appear that the average Canadian would not be too much affected by this fiscal increase of $245 million for the current year and of $350 million for a full year. Now let us see how the matter stands. Here is what we note in table 8, page 2425 of Hansard. First, with regard to tax increases, in the field of budgetary levies, we note that personal income tax has increased by $54 million. We also note that corporation income tax has increased by $56 million. And we note further down the table that customs duties, sales tax and other duties and taxes, included in the budgetary levies, have increased by $46 million. And, in that field only, by a total of $156 million.

But, that is not all. As regards contributions to the old age security fund, we note that taxes have gone up by 50 per cent, since the personal income is being taxed by 1 percentage point with the result that instead of 2 per cent, each individual has to contribute 3 per cent to the old age security fund. And the corporation income tax has gone up also by 50 per cent. The same goes for the sales tax, with the result that in that field we note an annual increase of $196 million. And that table summarizes the increases in taxes as follows:

Personal income tax, $129 million; corporation income tax, $84 million; sales tax, $93 million; cigars, cigarettes and spirits, $46 million; and that, for an overall total of $352 million for a full year.

Now, who are those—and that is the interesting point—who will be called upon to pay this increase in taxation of $245 million for the current year or of $350 million for a complete year?

Mr. Speaker, here is the answer to that question: each and every one of the 4,600,000 Canadian taxpayers will be called upon to pay that increase in taxation. It will be the price of reality, as was so ably said by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). Canadians now realize that the Prime Minister could not carry out his promises, as the people believed he would. The people are now being asked to pay the price of reality.

That is why, the day following the budget speech, the man in the street, wishing to express his opinion on the recent events, made the following remarks: "That is too much", "It is an excess"; "We've had it", said another one; another one added that it was the last drop overflowing the cup and still another one said: "The party in power is the party of one man only". And the wisest of them all said: "I did not vote Conservative in the last election, because I knew what was coming".

Mr. Speaker, why has there been such a forthright reaction from the man in the street? This government's liberalities to the Canadian taxpayer, in the taxation field, for 1957-58, though they amounted to only a small fraction of what had been promised, have now been washed away and engulfed by the 1959-60 tax increase. As evidence of this, I am going to use the very illustrations used by the minister last Thursday night. As quoted on page 2417 of Hansard, the minister, having briefly mentioned the liberalities of 1957, quoted the following examples to illustrate the efforts I was mentioning a moment ago:

> Taxpayers in the lower and middle income brackets will find that their tax increases this year will cost them less than the relief granted to them by the reductions of 1957.

And for purposes of illustration, the minister made this statement:

> For purposes of comparison, let us consider the position of a typical married man who is the father of two children of family allowance age.
> At an income level of $3,000 a year, under the new rates this man will pay a total of income tax and social security contribution of $56, an increase of $4 from the 1958 level. He will, however, be paying $34 less than he paid before the reduction we introduced in 1957.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I say that so far as income tax is concerned, that is the true situation, but the minister forgot to add that in the course of the year, the taxpayer will have to buy certain things, and will therefore have to pay the increased sales tax when the time comes to purchase a refrigerator, an electric range, or perhaps even a car or some other commodity. It can therefore be readily seen that not only will the taxpayer not pay less than before the 1957 deductions, but will now have to disburse more to pay for the tax increase.

Now if you take the case of the three other classes of taxpayers, those earning $4,000, $5,000 and $7,500, it must be concluded that the minister was not telling the whole story when he stated that the taxpayers would be paying less taxes, because there are some among them who will be buying a car, and they will have to pay for the increased sales tax.

In fact, it was no later than Friday, or immediately after the budget speech, that we were told the tax on cars would be raised by at least $25 to $30. So the poor Canadian, in the coming year, not only will be forced to return the few favours he enjoyed in 1957, but will have to reach into his other pocket and pay the difference through the amounts he will have to pay in the current year because taxes have been raised.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to federal-provincial relations, the minister noted that since the house had discussed the matter at least twice during this session, he did not intend to again deal with the matter in his remarks. However, with apparent satisfaction, the minister put on record certain remarks that I am pleased to recall to him, and that are of particular interest to the taxpayers and people of the province of Quebec. We find at page 2410 of Hansard, that the minister said:

> Under the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act we are making unconditional payments to the provincial governments or unconditional tax abatements amounting to $684 million in the current year, of which $167 million is in the form of fiscal aid through equalization and stabilization payments.

It is to be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has said:

> We are making unconditional payments—

Have you ever heard of anyone paying back a sum of money to some one he really owes it to and saying: "I'm paying this back to you unconditionally"? Who ever heard of such a thing? In fact, if the Liberal government had dared to use such a phrase in a budget speech, I do not know what would have happened, but I doubt that somebody would have raised his voice and talked about centralization.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the minister also seems to rejoice over the fact that the total conditional grants now reach $460 million, instead of the $136 million reached in 1956-57.

There again I presume that Quebec taxpayers are taking a wide-eyed look at this figure because they will never see a good part of those $460 million, at least not for quite some time.

In hospital insurance, the federal government will be making conditional payments of $160 million, of which the province of Quebec will not get a single penny.

In conditional payments for highways and transportation, the government will spend $70.3 million. We might get part of this for railway crossings, but the province of Quebec will get mighty little of this $70,300,000.

However, as regards item 7, in paragraph B, providing for conditional payment of $23.8 million for resource development, I do not believe that we shall see a single penny of that amount.

University grants will amount to $26.2 million, of which, of course, we will not receive a penny. Quebec taxpayers must indeed be vastly impressed!

And what will be the reaction of those who heard our hon. friends opposite say, when they used to sit on this side of the house: "What a bunch of centralizers", with reference to those who were managing the country at the time? But today, where are the true centralizers? I ask you, Mr. Speaker: Where are they? They are sitting there, on the other side of this floor.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to say a few words about our trade and about our foreign trade relations, especially with our neighbours to the south.

While in his budget speech the Minister of Finance dealt fairly at length with our international trade and our foreign economic relations, he practically said nothing about what action his government proposes to remove the uneasiness which is now being felt in our trade with the United States.

After saying that much of the increase in European gold reserves came from the United States and that this country was continuing to act as a "good creditor", he said, and I quote from page 2408 of Hansard:

> But it is to be hoped that the people and the government of the United States will become less timid regarding imports, particularly imports from a country like Canada, which buys from them far more than it sells, and is linked with them by bounds of common continental defence.

This is fine, Mr. Speaker, and the minister goes on:

> In particular the actions of the United States in imposing during the past year new import restrictions on lead and zinc and mandatory controls on petroleum have aroused strong resentment in this country. We shall continue to press for the removal of these and other unjustifiable impediments to our export trade.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is rather a hesitant and lukewarm statement, and we wonder if that is all the government means to do.

In last year's budget speech, the minister was much more categorical. Let me quote a few paragraphs of his remarks at that time. I have before me the French Hansard for he 1958 session and I quote from page 1237 of volume II. The minister said this:

> While access to the United States market has been improved in the last decade, and its tariffs have been significantly reduced entry into that market remains difficult and uncertain for many classes of goods produced in Canada.

Further on the minister added:

> Perhaps most troublesome of all are the uncertainties arising from the many escape clauses in United States legislation and administrative practices. Hon. members do not need to be reminded of the recent restrictions imposed against Canadian oil and the continuing threat to our exports of lead, zinc and copper—notwithstanding firm trade agreement obligations.

When he said this, the minister was right. And a little further he stated:

> We find it difficult to understand why the United States should treat its best customer and friendly neighbour in this way. We have made it clear to the United States authorities that measures which add to our difficulties in selling in the United States market or in third countries cannot but impair our ability and willingness to import from them.

That was, so to speak, a kind of threat. And the minister added:

> This brief examination of the nature of our trading problems with the United States points up the need for vigorous action of a constructive nature. We intend to press for wider access on reasonable terms to the United States market; and we will continue to oppose with all the means at our disposal any threat to impose greater obstacles against Canadian exports to that market.

There again, Mr. Speaker, the minister was right.

> At the same time we will continue to foster the growth and diversification of efficient Canadian industries so that a constantly larger supply of our requirements may be met economically from domestic production.

That, Mr. Speaker, is what the hon. minister was saying last year; he gave the appearance of being quite firm. He appeared determined to convince his colleagues of the necessity of making certain representations to our friends to the south—at least that is the impression we got—and that he would lose no time about it. However, the excerpt I have just read from this year's budget speech, sings a rather different tune. The minister is now using the soft pedal. He does not say that the United States should buy more of our products, nor does he say that the government will continue insisting that the United States purchase more of our goods.

Mr. Speaker, we should realize—and this is most important, that many of the difficulties and problems confronting both the Canadian people and our friends in the United States are rooted in our trade exchanges.

In this regard let me give an example. I refer to the present unquestionable uneasiness in Canada about the future development of a particular industry, mining.

In that industry, and in the economy as a whole, inflationary pressures continue unabated and constitute a serious danger. Competition for the conquest of world markets is keener right now than it was before the second World War. Other ore-producing countries are developing their resources at a fast pace. However, in many of those countries wages and production costs are but a fraction of what they are in Canada.

Let us not forget for a minute that the mining industry in Canada is geared to export trade and that ore resources are valuable only to the extent that they are developed, put into production and marketed. Otherwise, they are but worthless rock.

The widest market for our mining products and for many others is unmistakably the United States. The contracts we are able to obtain in that field are awarded under terms imposed by the American administration as a result of pressures by the producers exerted by American producers who look upon those measures or restrictions as increased protection for their products, and even the very survival of their own industry.

Canadian mining companies hope for and anticipate the possibility of remaining the greatest suppliers of copper, zinc, lead, uranium and iron ore and many other metals in the United States, for many generations to come, on an ever increasing basis.

However, Mr. Speaker, Canadian producers are worried, and I would even say greatly worried. They naturally realize the difficulties we have to face at this time and which are caused by that protectionist policy of our neighbours to the south. But their concern goes further than this. Canadian producers are wondering whether the Canadian government is actually taking the necessary steps to avoid a still more detrimental policy on the part of the American administration.

We might get an answer to this question when we know the attitude the U.S. government proposes to take with regard to the options which the United States atomic energy commission is holding in respect of Canadian uranium production after 1962 and 1963.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian uranium industry is admittedly facing great difficulties, especially as regards the period following the years 1962 and 1963, when the sales contracts with the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited will have expired and, hence, as regards arrangements between this corporation and the United States atomic energy commission.

The Canadian uranium industry has developed amazingly in the last three years. It now ranks first among metal and ore producers in Canada in dollar value of exports.

During 1958, the value of uranium exports was no less than 5 per cent of all Canadian commodity exports.

The following figures show how much that industry has advanced. In 1957, uranium exports reached a total of $131 million, as compared to $260 million in 1958. For the current year, and taking into consideration the number of mines and plants holding production contracts, our uranium exports will probably reach the $350 million mark.

We know that uranium producers have contracts with the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited to the value of $1,500 million, and that the latter, in turn, has contracts for a similar value with the United States atomic energy commission. Therefore, it is evident that the United States is our main purchaser of Canadian uranium.

General opinion seems to indicate that in the next ten years the uranium market, for civilian purposes, will be fairly insignificant compared to the productive potential of mines.

So, for a period of six to eight years, that is from 1962 and 1963, after the contracts with the Eldorado Mining have expired, there will be a gap.

In addition to its existing contracts with the Eldorado Mining the United States atomic energy commission has options on a large portion of the uranium potential of Canadian mines for the period subsequent to the lapsing of its contracts, that is until December 31, 1966.

The commission will thus be in a position to take advantage of those options until March 31, 1961.

We all know that if that industry has reached its present development, it is because of the demands and representations of the United States government which wanted to provide for its own basic requirements of uranium oxide. Canadian uranium companies have therefore every reason to impress upon the Canadian government the necessity for the United States government to take up its options on Canadian production until December 1966, and to do so with the least possible delay.

That is most important, Mr. Speaker, and in this connection, I should like to refer to a brief submitted to the Canadian government about two or three months ago. In that brief the Canadian Metal and Mining Association outlined as follows the Canadian producers' approach to this matter:

(Text):

As the civilian market for uranium up to 1966 will be very limited, it is of vital importance to the Canadian uranium industry that these options be taken up. It is respectfully requested that the Canadian government examine this situation and bring to the attention of the United States government the importance its attaches to the taking up of the options before March 31, 1961, and the desirability of giving notification of its intention to do so at the earliest possible date.

(Translation):

Then, Mr. Speaker, we notice—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What is the date of the brief?

Mr. Dumas: It is dated January 1959. This shows how important it is that the government make representations at the earliest possible moment.

I should like to say a few more words about our Canadian uranium industry. I would have liked to deal with the subject more extensively, but I notice that my time is fast running out.

Did the government take action on that recommendation of the Canadian Metal and Mining Association?

Is the Canadian government doing something to induce the United States government to amend its apparently ever-expanding protectionist policy? Or will Canada's own trade policy turn to protectionism? That is the question raised by the budgets brought down in this house by the Conservative government since it gained power in 1957.

This afternoon, in reply to an inquiry from the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) stated—much to my surprise—that only on one occasion had he met with officials of the atomic energy commission in the United States. And yet, everyone knows how important it is to urge the U. S. government to let us know whether it intends to take up its options on Canadian uranium production after 1962 and 1963. This is of the greatest importance. If we fail to get a statement from the U. S. government as to its intention of instructing the A.E.C. to take up its option, there is grave danger that several mines located in the constituency of the Leader of the Opposition will be forced to close down, and then, only the mines with very high grade ore will be in a position to continue production.

In the light of recent developments, Canada is more than ever in need of assurances so that large segments of the Canadian economy might not be adversely or seriously affected as result of certain decisions that might be taken in the United States. In the case of Canadian uranium purchases by the United States, American producers are exerting pressure to prevent the options I have mentioned from being taken up. And to think the Minister of Trade and Commerce has only just met with officials of the United States atomic energy commission! That is astonishing! Moreover, we expect and demand that the Canadian government take all necessary steps to insure that these options be taken up as soon as possible.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we must resist any pressure tending to curtail future trade between Canada and the United States.

Besides, to the extent allowed under existing legislation and essential administrative principles of both countries, it is important that consideration be given to the possibility of easing certain restrictions which have already caused some misunderstanding and which are apt to give rise to more.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to take part in the budget debate, and first of all to pay tribute to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for a job well done. It is very pleasant and easy to pass out tax reductions and concessions and ministers of finance, being only human like the rest of us, must yearn for that fiscal paradise where every year social services can be increased and taxes reduced.

A year ago, as the minister stated, we were still in a recession which, while world-wide, was more severe on the North American continent than any other place. As he said, federal fiscal policies played a major role in arresting the decline and sustaining the economy until the balance of economic forces again swung toward recovery, a recovery which is well under way. I can do no better in explaining the steps taken than to quote the words of the minister as found on page 2405 of Hansard for April 9, where he said:

> The most important forces stemming the decline in business activity during 1958 were to be found in the fiscal policy and position of the federal government—lower tax rates and revenues, higher expenditures and increased cash disbursements particularly in housing loans. The additional spending power provided in this way helped to arrest the decline and underpinned both consumption and investment to a substantial degree until the major retarding influences had spent themselves. The tax reductions announced in December, 1957 helped to maintain the purchasing power in the hands of the public. Personal taxes paid in the calendar year 1958 were $142 million lower than in 1957, despite an increase of $1.4 billion in personal incomes. In addition, there were increases in social security payments, such as old age pensions, veterans' benefits, and unemployment insurance payments, and these also had the effect of maintaining personal incomes and consumer expenditure.

The net result of this policy was a deficit of $617 million in the year 1958-59. The budget for this year anticipated a deficit of $680 million if there were no tax changes. It is obvious that continued deficits of this magnitude are beyond the capacity of the country if national solvency is to be maintained. It is equally obvious that there is no hope at this time of a balanced budget. The amount of extra taxation required to bring this about could conceivably halt the whole process of recovery and throw us back to the point where we started. The compromise suggested by the minister in this budget will still result in an anticipated deficit of $393 million.

I wish particularly to commend the minister for facing up to the problem of deficits in the old age security fund. The deficit in this fund this year amounted to $184 million. Contributions have never covered the cost of pensions in any year since the fund started, and the total deficit to date is over $600 million. The fund has been financed by a tax of 2 per cent on personal incomes with a ceiling of $60, 2 per cent on sales tax and 2 per cent on corporation taxes. This figure has now been raised to 3 per cent on corporation taxes and sales tax and on personal income tax, with a ceiling of $90. I think all Canadians will be in favour of this fund being placed on a pay as you go basis. The pension fund will now be fully contributory and not maintained out of general revenue.

I think it only fair, however, to warn the minister that this change removes the major argument against these pensions being paid outside of Canada, and I would strongly urge the government to make this change as soon as the fund is on a self-sustaining basis. There are no residence restrictions on the payment of United States pensions, and United Kingdom regulations have recently been relaxed in the same manner. Many pensioners have children or relatives outside of Canada with whom they could live on their pensions in comfort and dignity if they could take them with them, whereas living alone in Canada they will likely have a lower standard of living even with additional assistance from other sources. Pensioners who may emigrate to other countries such as the United Kingdom or other areas in the sterling bloc will help to increase the supply of Canadian dollars in those countries, which will come back to Canada in the way of increased purchases of our lumber, wheat and other products.

Besides covering the deficit in the old age security fund, these increased taxes will help to finance the federal hospital insurance scheme, which it is estimated in this its first full year of operation will cost about $100 million. Considering all this, I think Canadians will agree that this is a reasonable budget. It has been designed to have little effect on low income groups and the greatest impact on high income groups who, in all honesty, can best afford to pay higher taxes when these are necessary.

Perhaps the best index of our growing recovery is the fact that for some months now opposition members have ceased badgering the Minister of Labour for unemployment statistics. When unemployment was mounting, hardly a day went by without such a question. According to recent releases from the national unemployment service, as of April 2 there is a reduction of 71,454 in the number registered this year as compared to last year. In January of this year there were 88,000 more people with jobs than last year, and in February of this year there were 152,000 more people with jobs than last year. The improvement on the Pacific coast has been greater than the national average, in that there has been a drop of 25 per cent in the national employment service figures for both the Pacific region and Vancouver this year as compared to last year. In recent months even the cost of living has held steady. Retail sales, now at an all-time high, continue to climb and capital expenditures this year will once again be in excess of $8 billion.

I do not wish to leave the impression that we are at all complacent in regard to the unemployment picture. It is still our major concern. I do say that we believe the tide has turned at last, and that some credit for this must be given to government policy in general and in particular to such policies as our housing and winter work program.

With regard to housing, the Minister of Public Works has told the house that housing starts in 1958 numbered 164,632, some 42,000 more than in 1957. He estimated that housing construction in 1958 provided 200,000 man-years of employment at on-site construction alone. Then of course there is in addition the employment provided in servicing the land, in the production, transportation and handling of building materials, and in the manufacture of furniture, materials and equipment used in a house. Almost all the materials used to build and furnish a house are made in Canada. Therefore the tremendous funds made available by the government to the home building industry had an immediate effect in providing employment and sustaining consumer spending. Between government agencies and private lenders some $800 million was provided in loans to builders during 1958. It is estimated that the housing program provided in 1958 at least 600,000 man-years of employment in Canada.

I think even its bitterest critics will give the government credit for the action taken in regard to housing. But just in case there are some doubters let us compare the results in Canada with those in the United States. In both Canada and the United States the previous record year for the housing industry was in 1955. United States construction in 1958 was 13 per cent below their 1955 record, while Canadian construction in 1958 was 18 per cent above our previous record in 1955. The conditions in both countries were the same. We were both in a business recession causing acute unemployment, with the added complication in Canada of more rigorous climatic conditions severely restricting construction in the winter months. Yet despite this major handicap, because of government action our record is one of which we may well be proud.

This parliament has voted a further $250 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing purposes, bringing the total made available to date to an even billion dollars. Without in any way reducing the tempo of home building, I should like to see more emphasis placed on providing housing for old age pensioners and those in lower income brackets. In my opinion C.M.H.C. has not adequately promoted or publicized the use of the limited dividend section of the National Housing Act, whereby the government will loan up to 90 per cent of the cost of low rental housing. Limited dividend projects are usually sponsored by non-profit organizations such as churches, legion branches, service clubs and other public spirited bodies, but to date the number of such projects has been far too few in relation to the need. It is true that in 1958 more money was spent in this field than in any previous year but this amount, some $49 million, falls far short of satisfying the demand for this type of accommodation.

Limited dividend housing is relatively low-cost rental housing, but it is not subsidized housing. Subsidized housing is a joint municipal-provincial-federal project with the three governments sharing in the capital cost and in the subsidy required to cover any operating losses. In addition there is provision for the federal government to contribute 50 per cent of the cost to a municipality in acquiring and clearing slum areas for redevelopment programs.

It is in these three areas of slum clearance, subsidized rental housing and low-cost but non-subsidized rental housing that more activity is required because the need is so great. Present restrictive regulations, such as the one limiting old age pensioners to 20 per cent of the total accommodation of a subsidized housing project to prevent so-called "islands" of elderly citizens, prevent full utilization of provincial help designed to provide housing for senior citizens only. The financing of limited dividend projects by non-profit organizations should be made easier by allowing prospective tenants to subscribe part of the initial capital if they wish and are able so to do. Above all, an intensive promotion program by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is required to acquaint services clubs, legion branches, churches and other possible sponsors as to how they can help to provide decent housing accommodation for families in need, at a price they can afford.

A peculiar feature of our Canadian economy is the effect our long and severe winter has on employment, particularly in the construction industry. Therefore we have each year our peak unemployment in winter months. This government has tried to combat this by extending unemployment seasonal benefits to make them payable from the first week in December to May 15, in place of from the first week in January to April 15 as was the case under the former government. It has often been said that the former Liberal government were out of touch with the Canadian people. I would suggest they were also out of touch with the reality and severity of the Canadian winter.

A second attack on the problem of winter unemployment was the joint municipal-federal winter work program. Under this program the government agreed to pay half the labour costs of approved municipal projects carried out in the winter months. Let me make it clear that this refers to paying half the cost of additional jobs; that is, for labour specifically hired for the approved project, labour which would not have had a job if the project had not been started. As of March 20, 1959, as we were informed by the Minister of Labour, a total of 32,000 jobs have been provided under this scheme, and of the total of 1,909 applications from municipalities across Canada, 1,838 applications or 96 per cent were approved.

The scheme was deliberately designed to give the greatest federal help to those projects which would have the highest new labour content and so help the most in combating seasonal unemployment. Parliament voted $15 million to cover the cost of the program, and it appears that the greater part of these funds will be expended when the program ends on May 31. I hope the program will be reinstated next winter, when the experience gained in this first year of operation will allow an even more successful program. Planning should be started as early as possible so that a well thought out program will be ready for implementation as soon as the proper time arrives.

Mr. Speaker, from Canada's earliest history Canadian expansion has been geared to high levels of foreign trade and to massive capital inflows required to finance and stimulate the growth in our economy. Because the greatest part of our capital inflow now comes from the United States, and because the greatest part of our trade is with the United States, the Canadian economy is highly sensitive to United States business cycles. The current recession which had its birth in the United States was well under way when this government first took office. The financial critic for the Liberals, in commenting on the budget statement of the Minister of Finance, had this to say at page 2456 of Hansard:

> He did not tell us that carloadings in the United States, compared with last year, are up almost six per cent but in this country our carloadings are down. The Financial Post of March 28 pointed out that the United States industrial production will likely get back to its boom-time peak within a matter of days but by contrast Canadian output is only one-half up to its low in recovery.

I suspect what is meant is only one-half up from its low in recovery.

Let us examine this statement to see what did happen. The complete story is that industrial production started to drop in Canada early in 1957 but did not start to drop in the United States until after August of that year. This drop in production in Canada was therefore well under way by the time the first Conservative administration was formed. Through government measures outlined by the Minister of Finance consumer expenditure, which is much the largest and most stable element of demand in our economy, was maintained at a high rate and the drop in industrial production was halted at a point 6.6 per cent below the previous record level. In contrast in the United States, though the drop in industrial production started eight months later than in Canada it fell twice as far, namely to 13.1 per cent below the previous record. The Financial Post article which the Liberal critic quotes states that United States production has regained all but 1.5 per cent of its decline. This may be true; indeed I hope it is. In regard to Canadian industrial production, however, according to dominion bureau of statistics figures the industrial production index as of January, 1959 was 157.2 as compared with the previous peak of 159.6, showing that we also are about 1.5 per cent below our all-time record.

In regard to carloadings, it is true we are down from last year. According to dominion bureau of statistics figures carloadings for the first three months of this year were 828,516, as compared with 829,079 last year. We are therefore down one-twentieth of one per cent. I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker that the ground for this criticism was not well chosen. If the Liberals wish to compare the effects of the recession in the United States and Canada I suggest they read the Bank of Montreal Business Review of February 24, 1959, or Labour Research of August, 1958, a bulletin published by the Canadian Labour Congress. Both these issues are devoted to a comparison of the recession in Canada and the United States. In almost every comparison both publications show that the recession in Canada was less severe than in the United States.

We are not trying to minimize the effect of the recession in Canada, with the resulting slow-down in business and employment and the hardships Canadians are suffering as a result. We do say that what a government can do to help, that we have done. We have been aided in this by helpful suggestions from labour, management, interested organizations and ordinary citizens. In fact we have received constructive ideas from almost every group except the opposition, who have given us a great deal of destructive criticism.

I have already indicated the close dependence of our economy on the United States and our sensitivity to business fluctuations in that country. We are the fourth largest trading nation of the world and are more dependent on export trade than any other nation, in that one out of every five Canadians is directly dependent on export trade to keep his job. The United States is our biggest customer and supplier, selling us 70 per cent of our imports and buying 60 per cent of our exports. Although our imports from the United States were down 11 per cent in 1958 compared with 1957, we still bought more from the United States last year than we did in the boom year of 1955. In fact we bought $660 million more from the United States than the United States bought from us.

In 1957, despite our position as one of the leading manufacturing nations of the world, we imported fully finished manufactured goods to the tune of $262 for every man, woman and child in the country. By comparison the British figure was $48 and the United States figure a mere $28. It is my conviction that the overwhelming ownership of Canadian manufacturing facilities by United States firms tends to restrict the natural expansion of these subsidiaries in serving both domestic and export markets. The tendency is for the parent company to continue to supply fully manufactured products to its subsidiary long after the Canadian market has grown to a point where local manufacture is possible and profitable.

There are other problems in regard to United States-Canada relations, such as the United States wheat disposal program, restrictions on imports of Canadian oil and base metals, the imbalance in trade between our two countries, and of course the question of continental defence. We have been accused by the opposition on the one hand of having an ultra-nationalistic point of view and thus antagonizing the United States, and on the other hand we have been accused by the opposition of having a very subservient attitude in regard to defence problems.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that they cannot have it both ways. Our policy of bringing our problems with the United States into the open for frank discussion has resulted in a better understanding by the United States of Canadian economic conditions. We have stood up for Canadian rights and in so doing we have earned the respect of the American people. We are no longer taken for granted. At the same time we have been realistic enough to acknowledge that in matters of continental defence we must play a lesser role and merge our defence system with that of the United States. This is only common sense and it is in the interest of the preservation of both our countries and our common way of life. In both these attitudes, I submit, we are serving the best interests of Canada. We shall continue to press for more independence in the operation of foreign subsidiaries in Canada to the end that these subsidiaries shall be operated in the best interests of Canada and that they shall be, as far as possible, truly Canadian operations.

Much has been said about our overwhelming dependence on the United States market. We have frequently been told that we place all our trading eggs in one basket and that it would be the mark of common prudence to try and diversify our trade pattern. To this end the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) took the leadership in calling a commonwealth trade and economic conference in Montreal last September, the first such full scale commonwealth conference on trade and economic problems to be held since 1932. It was the largest commonwealth conference ever held and indeed one of the largest international conferences ever held in Canada.

The sterling bloc represents the greatest single trading area in the world today. Close to half the world's trade is conducted in sterling, but up to now we have had extreme difficulty in penetrating this market primarily due to quotas and currency convertibility restrictions.

As a result of this conference there was an immediate freeing of trade channels between Canada and the United Kingdom, culminating in the decision of the United Kingdom government in December to make sterling convertible. An immediate result of the conference was the sale of the record British Columbia salmon pack to the United Kingdom. Another result is commented upon in a Financial Post article in the April 11, 1959 issue, stating that Australia has relaxed quota restrictions against Canadian goods for the third time since last fall when the conference was held. We had an expanding trade with Australia up to the second world war. The war broke this trade pattern and it was not restored because of Australian import restrictions. The Liberals in their preoccupation with trade with the United States, neglected commonwealth trade. We propose to build up this trade and I believe a good start has been made.

There is one thing certain and that is if we wish to sell we must be prepared to buy. In this regard it is interesting to note two recent announcements. The first was by International Harvester and said that in future heavy duty trucks would be manufactured in Hamilton, rather than imported from the United States. Also, in place of bringing in United States diesels to power these trucks they would use Rolls Royce engines imported from the United Kingdom. The second announcement was by Cummins Diesel, one of the largest diesel manufacturing companies in the world, which stated their Canadian organization would, in future, purchase diesels from the Cummins subsidiary in the United Kingdom rather than from the parent plant in the United States. It appears that private United States industry recognizes our need to diversify our trade pattern, to correct in part our imbalance of trade with the United States, even if the official opposition does not.

Mr. Speaker, high levels of employment are neither reached or maintained in automatic fashion. Inflation must be held in check if our standard of living is to be protected. The government must continue to be vigilant in holding down governmental costs and industry and labour, while each guarding its own special interests must work together in the overall interests of Canada. If this is done, we will be able to maintain high levels of employment in an expanding economy and with a constantly rising standard of living.

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, on March 26, I received my copy of the local newspaper, the Timmins Press, and I received a very rude shock when I glanced at the headline featured on the front page which read as follows:

> Pensions May Cause Tax Boost

The first paragraph of that article stated:

> Canadians may be in for a round of higher federal taxes aimed at making the old age pension fund pay its way—

That part of it is very true but the fact remains that there appears to be a deliberate attempt on the part of this newspaper which has always been extremely friendly toward the present government to create the impression that present tax increases announced in the budget presented to the house last week were caused by the poor old age pensioners. What a change from the impression which was given to us and to the old age pensioners by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the past.

We well recall when the last increase of $9 in old age pensions was authorized. The impression given to the house and to the Canadian people was that this was merely an interim measure to tide us over until the government could tidy up the affairs of the country and then the old age pensioners could really look forward to something much better. As the months went by nothing was done and the question was handed over to a royal commission. Finally, after many long months of waiting, the report of that commission was handed down. That was some time ago but to date we have not heard a word about what this government is going to do for the old age pensioner although, as I say, scare headlines now appear in Conservative newspapers across the country which seek to blame the old age pensioner for present tax increases. The old age pensioner has received no increase in his pension but has been the recipient of blame for present tax increases.

I ran across another very interesting item this morning in what is probably the leading Conservative newspaper of the host of such newspapers across the country. The article appeared on the editorial page and the first paragraph stated:

> In the wake of last week's dominion budget, leading companies in two major industries—oil and rubber—have increased the price of gasoline and tires. Tax increases were the decisive factor in each case.

I refer, of course, to the Globe and Mail, issue of today's date. Here we have a deliberate, bald-faced statement by companies in two of our leading industries that they simply will not be taxed because immediately upon the announcement of increased taxation they announced their intention of passing the tax on to the consumer. I do not have figures concerning the amount by which they increased their prices so I have been unable to compare the increase in price with the increase in tax. I do not know if the price was raised sufficiently to equal the tax, or if it was raised three times as much as we have seen in many cases in the past.

A favourite preoccupation of newspapers of this political flavour, and particularly the Globe and Mail, over the years has been to blame labour for everything. I wonder what would have happened if the Canadian Labour Congress had immediately announced, as these companies did, that it refused to accept the increased taxation and that the increase would be passed on to the consumer through the medium of the congress immediately seeking raises in pay across the country? Would the Globe and Mail have written an editorial in defence of its action as it did in the case of these companies to which I referred?

Certainly the working people have as much right to pass along increases in taxes as has any company. The editorial goes on to point out how justified these companies are in taking this action. Incidentally, the editorial also points out how foolish hon. members of this group are in attempting to tax corporations. The editorial states very clearly that as soon as corporations are taxed they pass the increase on to the consumer and therefore they ask what is the sense of taxing them. The suggestion is that one might as well tax the consumer in the first place and be done with it.

One thing this editorial has accomplished has been to explode the carefully prepared and promoted theory that obtained across Canada that this was the small man's or working man's budget that laid off the little man and went after the big fellow. Within a week of the bringing down of the budget the Globe and Mail, the leading Conservative newspaper in Canada, has come out with an editorial stating that this was not the case at all because even before the budget debate concluded in the house many companies have already taken action to pass the increases on to the consumer, the little man for whom the government was supposed to have shown consideration in this budget.

These tax increases and especially those that are passed on by the corporations to the Canadian consumer lead to nothing other than a further boost in the cost of living, a general rise in prices and an increase in the so-called danger of inflation that threatens us. The greatest criticism one could offer this government, a criticism it has justly deserved, is that it is seeking to avoid facing up to the two most vital problems in the country. It presents them in a rosy hue and attempts to make believe they do not exist. I refer, of course, to the problems of inflation and unemployment which are closely interwoven. The combination of these two elements gives rise to an even greater danger to our way of life and that is the growing economic offensive of the Soviet union. A British economist of note, Barbara Ward, broadcasting on the C.B.C. T.V. on April 5, 1959, had this to say:

> If the west could achieve stability along with economic growth we would have little to fear in the threat from soviet economic offensive. Indeed such an offensive would be a good thing not only for the world but for the west as well.

It is very obvious that we have not achieved any stability in the past and certainly the government is not taking any serious steps to try to achieve any stability in the future. With this lack of stability we see the hard fought gains in welfare and security measures falling by spurts over very short periods of time, with the whole situation leading to more and more unemployment.

This so-called inflation we have at the present time is a new phenomenon. It is no longer the old-fashioned inflation of too much money chasing too few goods. What we have in its place now is a case of sellers overcharging for their surplus products. There is only one reason for it and only one reason can exist in this country today. The reason is that today in this country we have price control by big business, with organized labour fighting for its life to maintain its position and by so doing giving big business an alibi to maintain its prices. The trade union movement in this country is tied to business just as the tail is tied to the dog.

The Prime Minister was supposed to have recognized this new situation when he spoke at the Canadian Labour Congress convention in the city of Winnipeg just about a year ago. At that time he made an appeal to labour and business to hold the line, and he was supposed to have recognized the new situation which is arising. If we find that our inflation is the old-fashioned type, then the Prime Minister's appeal last year would have no meaning whatsoever because the natural process of supply and demand would straighten out matters and would bring things back into equilibrium. But the Prime Minister made his appeal to labour and to business. The chief difficulty was there were no businessmen present; there were only labour representatives. That is why there has been no record of the Prime Minister giving the same speech to the Canadian Manufacturers Association. It is very similar, Mr. Speaker, to a referee stopping a fight by throwing one man into the penalty box and letting the other man go free. It was recognized as such. Certainly business did not curtail itself in any way and as a result labour followed suit. We have just carried on in our own regular, merry way.

The most important thing is that prices are not rising because of the pressure of buyers. Prices are rising today because of the pressure of sellers. We have a sellers' inflation instead of a buyers' inflation. What we see is that each and every day sellers are engaging more and more in strenuous and furious activities and we find that business people are able to do everything except lower their prices. This situation was recognized by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his remarks the other day, as reported at page 2408 of Hansard, when he said:

> Advancing technology might have been expected to reduce the cost and selling price of many products to consumers. It is evident, however, that developments in corporation pricing policies, in labour organization and even in our political democracy are producing increased rigidities which inhibit the free play of competitive forces and thereby promote inflation and price increases.

I think the minister put his finger very close to the sore spot here, but we notice again that labour is brought in and given almost equal billing with business when actually, as I said before, the only thing that labour is trying to do is to hang on by the coat tails in this society of ours today. Labour is part of the cycle but labour is no more responsible for it than the tail is responsible for the mad dog which exists in our society today.

In the face of this phenomenon which we see rising, it is no wonder that the Liberal cure as applied to this situation was of no effect. I refer to the cure of high interest which the Tories like to refer to as the tight money policy. It did not work and it could not work because it was an old remedy for a new disease. It was trying to use a cold cure to cure pneumonia. The Canadian people realized that this scheme would not work and they got themselves a new physician, and they are now under the tender care of the Minister of Finance. When we look at it very closely we find that we still have a cold, we still have pneumonia, we have bronchitis along with it and the odd bit of flu. The result of all this treatment by the minister has not been a reduction in prices; it has not contributed to the general employment; in fact, it has retarded our economic growth.

In spite of all the fine words of the Minister of Finance, employment and inflation, or the high cost of living, whichever you prefer, still remain two of our biggest problems. Before any improvement can be hoped for the government has first to recognize the problem which so far they have not done and, second, they have to do something about it. So far, I am sorry to say, the government obviously proposes to do neither.

The minister is very industrious. It took a very industrious man to dig out all of the statistics necessary to paint such a rosy picture as he painted the other night. Unfortunately, it has an ominous ring. This prosperity around the corner is something we heard about all during the 1930's. I hope we shall not have to listen to it again during the next 10 years.

There is another very important problem, Mr. Speaker, which apparently has been given no consideration whatsoever, namely the problem of education in this country. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton), and the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Stinson) during the throne speech debate outlined very clearly what we are facing with regard to our educational standards across the country as compared with those behind the iron curtain. This problem is confined, not only to secondary schools, which this special report dealt with, it applies also to our universities across the country which are finding it more and more difficult to make ends meet. If we go back to Hansard for March 4, 1959 we find that I asked the Minister of Finance the following question, as recorded at page 1596:

> I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which arises out of an article on page 1 of the Vancouver Sun of February 24, 1959. The question is this. In view of reports that the University of British Columbia finds it necessary to increase its fees by $100 per student next year, and in view of the prospect that other universities may find it necessary to do likewise, has the government considered the necessity of increasing its grants to universities in order to ensure that Canadian youth have every opportunity to obtain an education commensurate with their ability?

Now, the minister's answer at that time was as follows:

> Without taking the time to comment on some of the questionable assertions contained in this question, I can only say that no consideration has been given to the subject.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, we are still in the same situation. There has been no consideration given to this subject. I do not know to what the minister was referring when he spoke of the questionable assertions in my question, but I have done a little checking since that time and I find that since this government took office the following universities have had to raise their fees: The University of British Columbia, McMaster University, Toronto University, Assumption University, Windsor, University of New Brunswick, Carleton and Ottawa universities. The increase in fees ranges from a low of $25 at Ottawa University, to a high of $100 at the University of British Columbia or possibly the increase at McMaster and Toronto which was 10 per cent.

I think it is obvious to all hon. members that we are moving more swiftly all the time toward a technological age. The days, relatively speaking, of the pick and shovel are over. The wealth of tomorrow is going to be produced by brainpower rather than by manpower. I noticed that today the Prime Minister, in answer to a question from one hon. member, gave a similar answer to that which the Minister of Finance gave last month, that is that no consideration has been given to this problem. I would like to know why. There is no question but that the government knows about this problem. It has been pointed out very clearly by members from their own side. It certainly has been pointed out time after time by members of the opposition. It has been pointed out in newspapers across this country from coast to coast. When is this government going to realize that there is a problem in this field, or are they going to sit back and let the iron curtain countries outstrip us completely in this field?

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that this is government policy to ignore the problems, to paint rosy pictures and, possibly worst of all, to embark upon a deliberate policy of raising interest rates across this country. As we have seen, the government has no money for old age pensioners. They have no money for the civil servants. They have no money for the western farmers. They have no money, relatively speaking, to spend on unemployment. They have no money for education. They have no money for health insurance. I hear an hon. member mention small business. There is another one that I left out. What is more, he is right; they have no money for these purposes. But it is no wonder they have no money, because all their money has gone to the money lenders of this country. There is nothing left for the essential services or to meet the serious problems of this country.

We had the example of the bond conversion last year. The terrifying costs of this conversion were outlined very well by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). This subject was raised first, you may recall, by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) last year, and then by me, when we spoke in the budget debate. I well recall the contribution made to that debate by the Minister of Finance. All he could do was say "rubbish" and "poppycock".

What has been done as a result of this policy? Let us first of all take a look at the treasury bills. I have here a weekly listing, starting with the week of January 7, 1959 and going up to the week of April 8, 1959. We see that treasury bills in Canada have risen in that time from 3.25 up to 4.42 as of April 8. Many questions were asked of the Minister of Finance during the last couple of years, and particularly in the last two months, concerning this problem. We heard various answers to the effect that this rate fluctuates from week to week; that it is dependent on the United States, and so forth. We have in this list a comparison of the spread on treasury bills between Canada and the United States over that same period of time. This spread has widened from 57 cents on January 7 to $1.47 on April 8. I should like, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house, to include this table in Hansard for today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Has the hon. member leave to include the table?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May we ask the source of the table?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): It is taken from the Bank of Canada weekly report.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The table is as follows:

Treasury Bills

I should like to move on to a consideration of the present bond situation in this country. I should like to deal with just two aspects of that matter. I am not going to deal with other moneys owed across this country, but I should like to stick specifically to the bonds. This information comes again from the statistical summary. We find that provincial bonds total $5,708 million; municipal bonds, $3,318 million; corporation, $6,853 million; institutional and others, $170 million. This makes a total of $16,049 million. The government of Canada securities, direct market issues, amount to $10,993 million; treasury bills, $1,495 million; Canada savings bonds, $2,895 million; guaranteed issues, $1,023 million; making a total of $16,406 million or just about half of the complete total. We find that the two of these together reach a grand total of $32,455 million, which by chance is just approximately our total gross national product.

I should like to show just what a 1½ per cent increase would do to this over-all picture, the same 1½ per cent increase that the minister used last year with his conversion bonds. A 1½ per cent increase on the total bonds owed by the various organizations that I have listed would amount to $496,825,000. I think that that shows where the money is going in this country today. I feel that is why it is horrible to see such headlines as these which try to put the blame for any increase in taxes in this country on the poor old age pensioner.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in examining the budget, it would appear to me that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has done a very fine job in his method of taxation for the current year. He has made reductions where possible and has increased taxation where necessary. If one looks over the places in which he has increased taxes, one finds that he has increased from two per cent to three per cent the taxes on incomes, corporations and sales to meet the needs of the huge deficit in our old age security fund. Surely, there is no one in this house who will raise any objection to making this portion of our social security program self-supporting.

Then the minister has increased the excise tax on cigarettes by two cents per package of 20. I am not sure that this increase should not have been greater because it would serve as an added deterrent. I think this is a wise move in view of the great volume of medical evidence that has accumulated on cigarettes and the harm which is suspected as a result of smoking them. Surely no one will disagree with the increase of 12 cents per quart bottle of whisky. Personally, I would feel that this increase could have been doubled because 90 per cent of the liquor drinking is social or compulsive and less than 10 per cent has any medical basis. In many cases the use of alcohol results in a long line of social expenditures by governments for the treatment of alcoholics. In many cases broken homes are the result, diseased bodies, loss of jobs and so forth.

The taxes on cigars have been increased by $1 per thousand and since most cigars are now 10 cents and up, I do not think this will work any hardship on the cigar smokers. Then there is the tax on corporation income. There is no increase in taxation on small businesses with incomes of less than $25,000. However, there is an increase on incomes over this amount from 45 per cent to 47 per cent.

Surely no one will disagree with those increases in taxes which will increase the grants under compensating payments to the provinces of something like $162 million over 1956-57. Surely there is no one in this house who will disagree with the $160 million that will be required for the health insurance scheme with the participating provinces which all parties in this house have agreed to.

Then we have for straight health alone an increase of almost $30 million over 1956-57. There is also an expenditure of almost $20 million more in our resources department which will help to develop Canada, this great country of ours. Trans-Canada highway transportation is up around $45 million. No one can quarrel with this. Therefore I see no alternative to what the Minister of Finance has proposed to this house. If we are going to have these social security programs, if we are going to carry our share of the defence burdens, we must be prepared to pay for the same.

The Minister of Finance's proposals will not only meet these problems but will cut the deficit very substantially. Yet it will not interfere with normal recovery from a condition that has gradually built up over a period of years and must be corrected. I refer to the fact that we are now paying off some of the obligations incurred unwisely over the last decade. Let us look in brief retrospect at what happened.

Canada, a young and virile country, came out of the last war untouched and unscathed as far as her lands and industries were concerned. She occupied the third exporting position in the world but what do we find ten years later under a Liberal administration? Great Britain with half her industrial capacity ruined at the war's end, today more than challenges us in the quality of the goods produced and the cost per man-hour. Germany, almost in rubble after the last war, today in most fields can outsell us and beat us with respect to the cost per man-hour. Japan, a defeated, conquered nation, an occupied country, also challenges us and, in many cases, in spite of high tariffs, can outsell us on the spot in our own country.

This did not happen today; it happened over the period since the last war. Textile mills across Canada, one after another, had to close down until in 1957 there remained only a shadow of what once represented a great Canadian industry, close to the hearts of the people, because those industries were mostly located in the small cities and towns across Canada.

We saw this happen in the rubber footwear industry and in many other industries that I could mention. In the forestry industry we find Japan laying down mahogany, although facing heavy duties, and challenging British Columbia fir right on the very ground on which it is growing.

All three nations that I have mentioned are members of the Colombo group, nations that are, in large part, short of the raw materials they need to manufacture the finished articles which they have to sell in the markets of the world. They are obliged to depend on the import of those raw products which carry the price tag of labour costs in primary industry of the country from which they are imported. We in Canada sit on an abundance of almost every known raw material. What a tremendous advantage we should have over those other countries.

I have not said anything of the challenge of the U.S.S.R. in the economic field. Today we must face the economic challenge of a people who are looking forward to the day when they can outproduce the nations of the west, when they can outsell in the markets of the world those same nations. In some scientific fields today Russia is out far ahead of the free nations of the world. For example, the United States alone has three times the potential capacity for manufacture that Russia has. Where then is Canada's potential capacity going? Is it going into the manufacture of cars, television sets, radios and electric gadgets of all sorts? In this economic challenge, this challenge of our free way of life, it may be that some of this productivity must be channelled into increased productivity of goods that are needed for our defence or that are needed to increase new sciences or new methods which in turn will manufacture or be the means of manufacturing new products to sell in the markets of the world.

We in Canada, with the second highest standard of living in the world, with a country having some of the greatest resources in the world—which we did not place there—have we not become a little bit too demanding in our "keeping up with the Joneses"? Is it not a fact that over the past ten years we have been depleting some of those God-given natural resources and shipping them in payment for manufactured goods brought into this country when we could have, in many cases, bought in Canada to support the factories and manufacturers of this country or factories could have been built to produce in this line? Over the past ten years, do not let us forget that we have piled up the largest trade deficit ever before piled up by this country. In this period of time it would appear to me that more should have been done and could have been done to protect and nurture more industry in this country.

In the immigration field all of us can recall the severe prodding that the administration at Ottawa took right after the war to fill in the wide-open spaces of this country and how slow they were to get started. It was not until one of the provinces, namely the province of Ontario under a Conservative government, undertook on its own to bring in the immigrants they needed that the Liberal party at Ottawa adopted some semblance of an immigration policy. Just let me refer to one point. These newcomers brought with them, in addition to their skills, over $800 million in cash and securities; another $300 million was brought in in personal belongings. They have bought or commenced thousands of small businesses across Canada. They have settled on thousands of farms, many of which were semi-vacant. What a golden opportunity the previous administration had and what a loss we have now suffered as a result of what appears to me to have been an extremely short-sighted policy. Today we are paying the interest on those mistakes. However, we must face the future. Today there is no standing still. We must compete or perish. New sciences, new techniques, new machines must be developed by the scientists and utilized by management of this country so that our costs per man-hour will be on a competitive basis in the markets of the world. That means the utilization of all man-power and of all available brain-power. The challenge must be met in the schools and universities, in industry, in labour. In the common people of this country there must be a clearer understanding of this challenge. We all either pull together or sink separately.

I am one of those who believe that the boys or girls growing up in Canada should be given the opportunity and encouragement to go as far as their ability will carry them. I am not one of those who believe that only the top students should be given the opportunity for study. The opportunity should be given to all of them. I have lived long enough to have seen some great contributions made by students who were in the lower half of their class. We must also remember that the more education given in our schools today, the better understanding there will be of democracy, and how to make that democracy function at its best. Time is of the essence. The challenge is here.

Have we, as Canadians—all of us, in whatever field we find ourselves—the moral, spiritual and economic dedication to meet this challenge and surmount the problems in a country blessed with some of the richest resources in the world today, a country whose ancestors wrote into the history of yesterday the freedom that we enjoy today.

In closing, may I say this. May we as parliamentarians accept this challenge and dedicate ourselves to our task as examples to our fellow Canadians.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, it is almost five o'clock but since I probably would not get the unanimous consent of the house to adjourn the debate until eight o'clock, I suppose it is necessary for me to go on now for the ten minutes.

In rising to speak in this debate I want to refer to a speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in Vancouver on May 24. He said this and I hope he said it sincerely:

> The Liberals say they cannot increase pensions and reduce taxes. Give us a chance and we will show you.

In December, 1957, we had a prologue to a show which promised a happy ending, and on Thursday night last we had the full second act of that show, which I think has ended in tragedy. I am sure all the provinces and municipalities of Canada are interested. The stage was all set, and we in this house sat in the pit and applauded the hero of the evening, who we hoped would bring a rabbit out of the hat. The hero entered. He was smiling but was without the blue boutonniere that he usually wears. He reached great heights in a soliloquy in his heroic role against that two-headed monster of debt and inflation. Most, but not all, applauded him when he went on to tell how much better he now intended to deal with this beast; but some of us here realized that in order to carry out even a fraction of his election promises he had still to beat this beast. The provinces and the people of Canada wondered how long this show must go on. I was struck the other night by one sentence of the minister in his speech on page 2424 of Hansard of April 9. He said:

> With a good response to our Canada savings bond campaign this year, our net market borrowings in 1959-60 should be less than one-half of the $1,220 million borrowed in the market in 1958-59.

This was a master stroke to lull the public. There was no mention of the $1.35 billion that is coming due this year between July 1 and December 1. This must be refunded or dealt with in some other way by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). These people have to be sold again the new bonds, if the bonds are refunded, and we know that the interest rate has now risen to 5.06 per cent, according to table 48 in the budget papers. The market is waiting to see what happens. I think that is one reason the bonds have not gone up and might go down; in fact they have gone down somewhat in the last day or so. The minister needs close to $2.2 billion made up of next year's deficit borrowing for capital account plus the refunding of maturities due this year between July 1 and December 1. I realize that the Prime Minister can speak on the radio and tell little stories about patriotism and that the Minister of Finance can get a more modern version of the 1958 Fleming hat and have it advertised in every newspaper across the country. I expect a lot of these people will refund their bonds, likely at a higher interest rate.

Over and above this the minister has to deal, and deal constantly, with an amount of $1.6 billion approximately, which he has borrowed from time to time from the Bank of Canada or other banks in treasury bills. I know this has always been the practice, and therefore at the present time the minister is dealing at least with an amount between $3.7 billion and $3.8 billion. This is serious, and I think our country is in some rather deep financial trouble. I hope that the stage is not being set for the second Fleming folly.

What was there in the budget speech that the colleagues of the minister applauded so heartily the other night? I would say they applauded an increase in our gross public debt of $1.8 billion to the amount of $20.2 billion. That is in Hansard at table 2A. This represents an increase in debt of over $420 for every family of four in Canada. The minister's colleagues applauded that deficit of $835 million, made up of $617 million announced by the minister, plus $212 million taken out of the national defence equipment account, plus $6 million taken in fancy bookkeeping from an account which under section 11 of the National Defence Act represents surpluses from sales of national defence material. This deficit alone adds up pretty close to a debt of $200 for every family of four in Canada. They also warmly applauded another whopping deficit, and a major tax increase in spite of the prophecy that we would have a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product.

After all, there was very little else to applaud unless it be the largest spending in history, our largest peacetime deficit in history, the highest interest since the days of the Bennett government, the largest number ever of unemployed and, according to the Minister of Finance, the conversion loan was the greatest transaction in the history of our country. Then we have also the highest interest paid in respect to current borrowings of treasury bills. The Minister of Finance seems to revel in superlatives, and if I were to use a superlative I would say that this is rather a mess, the greatest mess in our history. On page 2413 of Hansard the minister said:

> Our net debt per capita was $847 ten years ago, $725 five years ago and is reduced to $676 now.

Surely in these words the minister is not trying to give anybody in Canada the idea that he has ever had anything to do with the reduction of debt. Of course, every baby born in Canada helps to spread the debt, not to reduce it as the minister infers. What a heavy extra load of debt he is handing to every newly born Canadian! The only unsolicited comment which I heard given the following morning by a man in Montreal concerning the budget was, "It took the Grits 22 years to get as unpopular as the Tories have in two."

An hon. Member: That is impossible.

Mr. McMillan: The government has got to the point where they simply cannot help our provinces and municipalities very much. They have reached the point where they cannot really help themselves very much.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order No. 15, subsection 3. There are a number of private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole. Is it agreed that in accordance with standing order 54 (1) they be referred to the committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax) moved that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on private bills appearing in today's order paper as orders Nos. 43 to 68 inclusive.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PRINTING OF NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS IN BOTH ENGLISH AND FRENCH

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Boulanger for the second reading of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise at this time to speak to the bill before us which has been sponsored by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), my neighbour in this house. I am eager to have a vote taken on it. The bill has been discussed on various occasions in this chamber and we were enlightened by the contributions made by those hon. members who participated in the debate.

Before I resume my seat and request a vote on this bill I wish to make a few comments concerning bilingualism in relation to the constitution of Canada. It has been stated that bilingualism is not constitutional outside the province of Quebec. I intend to make reference to statements on the subject of the constitution of Canada written by some of the leading authorities on constitutional law.

The constitution of Canada, like that of many other countries including Great Britain, is based on two sets of rules. First, there are the rules of law which form that part of the constitution enforced by the courts. Second, there are the conventions of the constitution. These form what is known by the specialists as the morality of the constitution. These are the conventions that have grown up through usage and form the understandings, habits or practices which, though they may regulate the conduct of the several members of the sovereign power, of the ministry or of other officials, are not in reality laws at all since they are not enforced by the courts and do not appear on the statute books.

It has sometimes been stated in this house that bilingualism is not constitutional in Canada and because it has been stated by public men, various people throughout the country accept this remark and repeat it. In order to clarify the situation I shall read an extract from the book on constitutional law written by Dr. McCrea, former professor at the University of Toronto, volume 1, page 2. In paragraph 6 we find the following:

> Rules of law and rules of convention—Among the rules relating to function a distinction has to be made between "rules of law" and "rules of convention." Rules of law are simply those rules of constitutional law which are enforced by the courts. Rules of convention, on the other hand, are rules of the constitution which are not enforced by the courts. Though regarded as part of "constitutional law," they are not law in the strict sense, but merely rules of constitutional usage or understanding which are enforced by public opinion only. It is with the "rules of law" of the constitution that the lawyer is concerned. The conventions of the constitution are matters which concern those engaged in public affairs rather than those engaged in the practice of law.

> Now there is one use of the word constitutional which we must notice in order that we may put it on one side. Occasionally it is contrasted with legal; we are told for example that a minister's conduct was legal but not constitutional. We have seen that our rules of law touching public affairs are very intimately connected wih rules touching public affairs which are not rules of law, rules which are sometimes called rules of constitutional morality, or constitutional practice, the customs of the constitution, the conventions of the constitution, or again constitutional understandings.

The author then makes reference to a volume on the law of constitution by Mr. Dicey, 8th edition, at page 23 where two examples are given. One of these is that ministers of the crown resign office when they have ceased to command the confidence of the House of Commons. A second example is that a bill must be read a certain number of times before passing through the House of Commons. These requirements are not found in any statute but they are a part of our constitution and we must observe these conventions.

The author refers to the fact that Mr. Ridges in his volume on the history of the constitution, 5th edition, at pages 4 and 5, gives no less than 13 examples of these rules of convention that are constitutional and that should be adhered to by our parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, before I resume my seat, I would feel remiss if I did not to say a word in French to my friends and fellow citizens of the province of Quebec. I hope that, as a result of the thorough discussion touched off by the introduction of this bill, all members will be unanimous in suport of the second reading of the bill introduced by the honourable member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger).

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, may I say that I feel greatly honoured in having the opportunity, this afternoon, to deal with the matter of bilingual cheques in Canada.

I am pleased to say, as I have indeed quite often repeated in and outside the house, that I readily support this bill concerning bilingual cheques, because I represent a constituency whose voters perfectly realize that Canada is a great and young bilingual country. The people in Brome-Missisquoi constituency also realize that there are more than two great races contributing to the glory and to the strength of this great country. The spirit of Cartier and Macdonald, still with us in this year 1959, apparently makes Canadians realize that today Canada's population is composed of many racial groups.

Mr. Speaker, is there need to recall at this time the speeches made by Liberal members when a similar bill was introduced by Dr. Poulin?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to relate to hon. gentlemen an experience with which I am frequently confronted. Many hon. members of parliament from provinces other than the province of Quebec have in all sincerity asked me from time to time why bills of the nature of the one before us this afternoon are of seemingly great importance to French speaking hon. members of the house. I have endeavoured to explain that many bills analogous to the bill concerning the printing of cheques in both languages are of extreme importance in Quebec. I know that other hon. members of the house are not interested in hearing the personal political history of any one hon. gentleman in this chamber, but perhaps I may be permitted to make a brief reference to my own background.

I think it is known to some of my confreres in the opposition party that one of the real reasons why I personally left the Liberal party and switched my allegiance to the present Progressive-Conservative administration was that, as a citizen of the province of Quebec, I witnessed personally the divide and rule game that the Liberal party has always played and is continuing to play in the province of Quebec.

In spite of the sweet nothings whispered in this house by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), we still see that this party has not learned its lesson; we still see that they have one program for the rest of Canada and yet another for the province of Quebec. If I speak in such a general way on the subject I do so because I fully realize that the members in the opposition know full well that this subject has far greater and broader connotations than merely bilingual cheques. I say that if after years of being in power we did not have bilingual cheques under the Liberal administration the reason is this. After 22 years of divide and rule the Liberals were unable to present that spirit of unanimity and national unity which would enable a bill of this kind to be passed by the members of parliament in this Canadian House of Commons.

This is a subject, that I never wanted to bring up in this House of Commons and I was more than surprised in my first year as a member to see the numbers of bills of this type put on the order paper by the party opposite. One had to be only a candidate or a resident of the province of Quebec during the last two federal elections to realize that the Liberals have not stopped playing the divide and rule game. I will never forget the orange cut-out dolls of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) which appeared in my district, and I would like all the members of the press gallery outside of the province of Quebec and all the members of the House of Commons outside the province of Quebec to make a point of obtaining one of these bits of literature and then realize exactly the significance of the bill which has been placed before this house today; if it is an attempt to divide us, an attempt, to show the people of my province that this present government is against the province of Quebec. But I will tell hon. members opposite that today, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, a spirit of pan-Canadianism and national unity exists which has never existed before in this country.

Mr. Godin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I feel that the hon. member has strayed far from the principle of this bill. Unless he wishes to tell us what the Prime Minister has done or will do—

Mr. Grafftey: I am about to come to that point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Godin: —I do not think he should bring in the problems of the province of Quebec or the hon. member for Laurier or Mr. St. Laurent.

Mr. Speaker: I recall that the hon. member who raises the point of order dealt with the broad constitutional issue, and I think the hon. member is within the scope of the bill in trying to put it in its context.

Mr. Grafftey: At the outset of my remarks I believe I told the hon. member who has just spoken that I am entirely in accord with the constitutional interpretations which he offered the House of Commons. He mentioned Dicey. I agree with him. He mentioned several constitutional points of view. I agree with them. I simply want to say that while I agree with his constitutional point of view I do not agree with the method which his party has employed in order to pass such a bill. By explaining the general notions that I have attempted to explain to the House of Commons today I am trying to point out that under the present government and under the present spirit of national unity we are taking further and further steps in order, in my judgment, to make it easier for a bill of this kind to be passed.

I repeat, since I came to this House of Commons I have seen young and older members of parliament from all other provinces make a real attempt to speak the French language. We have seen good-will tours by members outside the province of Quebec into the province of Quebec, and we have seen a real spirit of national unity in this house.

Last night the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard)—and I say this fits in to the general context of what we have to say because I think all hon. members from the province of Quebec know that this is the general subject which must be discussed—outlined to the house the attitude of this government with regard to dominion-provincial relations when he said that we are awaiting any suggestions which may emanate from the provinces with regard to educational matters.

Mr. Godin: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes.

Mr. Godin: Is the hon. member trying to indicate to the house that this bill pertains only to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Grafftey: I think I have already answered this question of the hon. member when I repeated before that I am in accord with his constitutional point of view. As I understand it, his constitutional point of view recognizes the pan-Canadianism of bilingualism and it goes from coast to coast.

We have seen the installation of a simultaneous translation system in this House of Commons. On this point with regard to bilingualism under the present administration, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read into the record some of the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister at pages 3332 and 3333 of Hansard of August 11 last, when he was introducing the motion with regard to simultaneous translation:

> There is general agreement that this assembly, now considering this motion, is under our constitution entirely bilingual in character.
> There is, therefore, no reason why the presenting of this motion should have been so long delayed; and the adoption of this motion will be belated recognition of the equality of the two basic languages of this country as related to discussions in this chamber.

In concluding his remarks on the introduction of the motion the Prime Minister said:

> Therefore on behalf of the government, and I hope with the support of hon. members in all parts of the house, I am placing this measure before the house to the end that by its achievement we will be actually symbolizing the constitutional provisions of the British North America Act and giving to them within this chamber the authority of this house.

In concluding the debate on this motion the Prime Minister said at page 3340 of Hansard of August 11, 1958:

> I am not going to deal with other steps that may be taken in future to assure the complete recognition of bilingualism under the constitution of our country, but I can say that in taking this step we in this government believe that while it is easy to talk about the subject of Canadian unity, in bringing in this motion a major step toward its achievement is assured.

I would simply like to state that under the leadership of remarks such as these and under the atmosphere which is generated by leadership of this kind, I am only too sure that bills of the sort presented in this house by an hon. member opposite will in the future be more easily passed than they were under the old regime.

Mr. John Pratt (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, apparently the question of bilingual cheques and documents is one which has been brought many times before this house. In fact, this year I believe there are two bills introduced for this purpose.

An hon. Member: No, three.

Mr. Pratt: I stand corrected, three bills. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, and therefore I do not feel qualified to deal with the constitutional aspects of this question. However, I am a Canadian and therefore I cannot see any real objection to the use of both languages on cheques and other documents. We already have bilingual stamps. We already have bilingual currency and recently, in this house, we installed a simultaneous translation system. I am sure all members will agree that it has been a great improvement. This move has resulted in improved attendance of English speaking members, at least, during French speeches.

I am sure that bilingual stamps and currency are accepted across the country today and go almost unnoticed by most Canadians because they are used to seeing these things. I think that bilingual cheques would be even less noticeable, except probably to tourists who may be intrigued and I feel that would be a good thing. These cheques would, of course, be noticeable to our fellow French speaking Canadians who would be very gratified at seeing their own language on government documents. Certainly, from the point of view of cost there can be no objection because the cost would not be too high.

Now I, personally, am from a bilingual riding. Everything is bilingual in the riding of Jacques Cartier-Lasalle. We have approximately 60 per cent to 70 per cent English speaking people and about 25 per cent or 30 per cent French speaking people. Our newspapers are bilingual, bus transfers and even parking tickets are bilingual. We accept all these things, as a matter of course. We accept these things as a matter of just plain, ordinary, everyday living. In fact, in the constituency of Jacques Cartier-Lasalle French is so interchangeable with English that we almost speak a third language which you might describe as "Franglais".

There is just one other point I should like to mention, Mr. Speaker, and I feel very strongly about this. When documents are bilingual, they should be written in good English and in good French and not just in a poor, literal translation of either. When this is done, it is an insult to both languages and worse than using only one language. I would say this to any English speaking citizen of Canada who may feel a mental barrier upon seeing a document in a language foreign to his own. He should put himself in the place of his fellow citizen who speaks the French language and who never sees his own language on such a document, then imagine how he would feel under those conditions. I personally, believe that we should have bilingual cheques and other documents. If such documents were used generally across the country this might even encourage English speaking Canadians to learn our second language, as I feel they will all eventually do in any case.

In so far as cheques alone are concerned, I am sure that the numerals on those cheques are of much more importance to most people than the words. However, we Canadians have so much in common now, and this small gesture would mean so much to our fellow Canadians who speak the French language, that I say let us by all means have bilingual cheques. I am most heartily in favour of this measure for that reason.

(Translation):

Mr. J. C. Van Horne (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to second the motion now before the house. Each time this bill comes up for consideration, several of my French speaking fellow-citizens in the maritimes ask me to emphasize the need for recognition of their right to have bilingual cheques.

Frankly, I wonder whether it is necessary to have a bill in order to carry out what all hon. members in this house want, i.e. that family allowance cheques be bilingual. Might not a simple order be enough to have these cheques printed in both languages. This would put an end to the discussion and eliminate all those motions that take up the time of the house, on various occasions, at each session.

Mr. Speaker, I honestly believe that not a single hon. member in this house is not in favour of bilingual family allowance cheques. It would be a simple recognition of a right provided by the constitution. As a matter of fact, if some government does recognize this right it is this government, for our country's history clearly shows that, when it came to recognizing Canada's two official languages, this was done by a Conservative government.

It would be a pleasant task if, putting an immediate stop to this debate, we voted to pass this bill, thereby stressing our unanimity in the matter of bilingual cheques throughout this country.

(Text):

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, in approaching this bill with its implications of bilingualism as introduced by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger), my mind carries me back to the origin of this country. It was nearly 92 years ago that the father of the fathers of confederation, John A. Macdonald, with his able lieutenant Georges Etienne Cartier united behind their leadership a group of men of differing views but common purpose. This group of men became known as the fathers of confederation. They were men of vision, dedication and of faith.

After years of outstanding leadership, and hard work, coupled with compromise and diplomacy, a new nation was conceived. This new nation united two languages and two creeds and was dedicated to the principles of equality, opportunity, unity and freedom. It is to that country, no longer new, that we in this chamber stand dedicated and loyal today. We the members of this House of Commons, subscribe to those principles which were embodied in the creation of this country. We are proud to serve those principles.

Today we are considering a bill to establish that negotiable instruments of the government be printed in both the English and French languages. I am proud to say that I am in favour of this bill. I would be proud if this bill were to pass under this Conservative administration, because it was under a Conservative government that this country was united and that these two great races were united. It was under a Conservative government in 1934 that bilingual currency was introduced. It was under the present Conservative administration that a simultaneous translation system was introduced into this house. It would only be fitting if we were to progress further in the recognition of the partnership of these two great languages and pass this bill today.

Now, I should like to quote from the explanatory notes to this bill as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to provide that every cheque, draft, traveller's cheque, bill of exchange, postal note, money order, postal remittance and any other similar remittance of any department as defined in paragraph (f) of section 2 of the Financial Administration Act or of any crown corporation enumerated in schedules B, C and D of the same act shall be printed in both the English and the French languages.

This is in accordance with the principle established in the Bank of Canada Act where it is enacted (subsection (4) of section 21) that the notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada issued by the bank shall be printed in both the official languages.

We can see that this principle has already been adopted and, as the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney) pointed out very ably, the principle of bilingualism is well established. It is questionable whether or not this legislation is necessary at all in order to enable the government to print these instruments in both French and English. We already have, as has been pointed out, bilingual currency, bilingual stamps, bilingual money orders and excise stamps. Certainly, bilingual cheques would be a natural progression.

I have a very great respect for bilingualism in this country. My only regret is that I am not more fluent myself in the French language. According to the 1951 census only 8.5 per cent of the population of Manitoba were of French origin. I would say that there is no higher percentage than that in my own constituency. However, this fact does not make my feelings any less strong. I can appreciate the strong feelings of the members from Quebec in connection with this matter. In this regard I might say that although the French feel strongly, they feel strongly as Canadians.

I know something of the feelings of the people who live in Quebec because I lived there myself for two years. In fact, the first school to which I went was a school in which no English was taught, just French. I have further learned to appreciate the French Canadian viewpoint from various conferences and contacts I have had in the province of Quebec. Indeed, the greatest appreciation of French has been inculcated by being a member of this house. Therefore as a member coming from an area which is remote from the province of Quebec and one that is not primarily French Canadian, I should like to add my strong support of this bill. I should also like to express the hope that perhaps this bill might be voted on and passed before six o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I note that all the hon. members who are speaking on this bill are telling us nothing new. All they say has already been said by many of our colleagues. If our friends of the Conservative party are sincere, if they are really in favour of this bill, I would ask them to join with the Liberals and pass it immediately.

Mr. Vincent Brassard (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I shall say but a few words on this bill. I represent, as you know, a constituency where 99 per cent of the people are French speaking, and yet, all municipal councils, all organizations do respect bilingualism; in fact, I may even say, like my colleague who spoke a moment ago, that parking tickets are printed in both English and French.

I am glad therefore to support the proposed legislation. I support it simply because bilingualism is the only thing which distinguishes Canada from the United States. Without the French language and culture in Canada, it is to be believed that with the passing of years, Canada would perhaps become the 51st or the 52nd state of the United States. That is why I am glad to support this bill, because it contributes to develop further this spirit of bilingualism in our country. I hope that, before long, the bill will be put into force.

Mr. V. F. Dubois (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-4 today under discussion, is a project that was submitted to this house on many occasions, under a Liberal government, but it never came to a vote.

Bilingual instruments have always been asked for by our various organizations. In fact, our chambers of commerce have more particularly asked that negotiable instruments, like cheques, travellers' cheques, and all those instruments payable to the bearer, should be bilingual.

When in 1867, the fathers of confederation wanted the recognition of the two official languages of our country to be written into the British North America Act, they intended them to be treated on equal footing. Indeed, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) paid great tribute to the fathers of confederation when he introduced simultaneous interpretation in this House of Commons. Simultaneous interpretation, Mr. Speaker, had already been asked for on many occasions in the past, but it needed a Conservative government to give it to the House of Commons.

That is why I am not afraid to state today that if we succeed in obtaining bilingual instruments throughout Canada, as mentioned in this bill, we shall owe it to the Conservative government and to a prime minister like Mr. John Diefenbaker.

We find in the 1951 census that there are in Canada 990,440 Canadians of French origin living outside the province of Quebec. Now, amongst those French-Canadians living in other provinces than Quebec, some do not speak any English, and when negotiable instruments, cheques or travellers' cheques are presented to them, they are unable to understand what they have in hand, and they have to ask others for information. On the other hand, we have in the province of Quebec, some English people who are unable to speak French and when they receive documents written only in French from the government, they have to have them translated in order to know their contents. By printing all these instruments in both languages, the two groups in Canada would be fairly treated and each could thus read in his own language any document presented to him. We often find that government publications have a French and an English edition. When we write to the various departments, we find that, when we express ourselves in French, we receive a letter in French and that when we write in English, we get an answer in English. This shows that the present government is anxious to see both languages, well recognized in this country.

I recently read in a civil service publication that, as from April 1 last, applicants for civil service positions were required to be bilingual. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have there a commendable gesture by the government which is most anxious that both languages be officially recognized throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of Bill C-4 and I hope that, in the near future, the whole of Canada will rejoice at the vote taken under a Conservative government.

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. members who took part in the debate in the last few minutes have brought nothing new.

It looks to me as if our Conservative colleagues were claiming all the credit for introducing bilingual cheques. This is an approach that we consider unimportant. We are in favour of the bill, and we ask that it be put to a vote without further ado.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today in strong support of this bill—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGee: —whose purpose is to recognize bilingualism in our legislation.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, my pronunciation reflects something of my neglect of a certain subject as a child in this city. We have heard from two members of the so-called Liberal party interjecting and demanding that further discussion on this matter cease forthwith. Some parties and some individuals never seem to learn. When I first came to this house and inquired among the more experienced members just what were the processes and procedures concerning private bills, the explanation given to me was this. I was told that for the day and for the time when a member was introducing a bill into the house he was at the same time a government almost to himself, his own whip and his own gatherer of support. Since the Canadian public, in their great wisdom, removed that group from office, there have been few opportunities since then for them to behave in that small way I have suggested as a government. Yet when they do on those infrequent occasions, what do we observe? We observe immediately a demand that everybody else should cease discussion forthwith. I have one final comment on the behaviour of that group, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Why don't you stick to the point?

Mr. McGee: It seems more than passing strange that a member who pretended such a great interest in this bill did not see fit to be present in the house to participate in the discussion. On reflection, perhaps I do the hon. member a great disservice; if so, I apologize.

An hon. Member: Stick to the point.

Mr. Speaker: I hear some complaint, although no formal objection is taken. However, I would advise the hon. member not to continue too long in that vein because it seems to me that it is far removed from the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McGee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I presume that your remarks do not include the subject matter which has been discussed previously. I will not attempt to expand the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) but will merely say that I agree substantially with everything he has said. The thinking of people in Canada—and in particular those in the city from which I come, namely the city of Toronto—has changed, altered and developed considerably in recent years. This matter was referred to, as hon. members will recall, on February 3 of this year most eloquently by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Maloney). To what he said in that regard I should like to add that in the city of Toronto there is a new, extended and rejuvenated interest in the subject of the French language. In my particular town, namely Don Mills, there is afoot, as there is in many other sections of Ontario, a move to have included the teaching of the French language in the early grades in school.

Mr. Speaker, I spent my early youth in this city, and just about half our gang, as we called ourselves, were French speaking. Unfortunately the modus operandi which we worked out was that those of us who spoke French spoke French, and those of us who spoke English spoke English. We all understood each other, but it seemed to me that very little effort was made, particularly on the part of those of us who spoke English, to acquire a fluency in the other language. As I said in the early part of my remarks, I neglected an opportunity at that time of which I am very conscious. It was an opportunity that I shall do everything in my power to see that my children do not neglect, and I will support any measure, including this one, which will take us along the road to further extension of bilingualism in this country.

Mr. Godin: Vote it.

Mr. McGee: It is almost unnecessary to indicate the advantages which accrue to an individual who is bilingual, whether he pursue a business career, a political career, a professional career, or indeed almost any career in this country.

Mr. Godin: You are not enough in favour to vote.

Mr. McGee: This measure, the discussion of which has been allowed to develop in many directions, actually touches on a larger issue, the issue of brotherhood, tolerance and understanding. That is an issue which cuts across many of the unhappy inheritances with which the pages of Canadian history unfortunately are soiled.

There are those, Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned in this house, who suggest that this type of bill extends bilingualism into yet other aspects of our national life. I read an argument recently in the Toronto Globe and Mail which developed along these lines, that once French is accepted then next will come other languages, and I think the term used by the writer of the letter to the Toronto Globe and Mail was that a situation approximating the tower of Babel would result. I think this is an argument based on an unsound and possibly uninformed premise, and certainly the extension of bilingualism as this bill, like others of Conservative members in this house, introduces would not result in the situation suggested both in this house and in letters and discussions which have taken place recently in educational conferences in the city of Toronto. I would like to express my support for this bill, the principles on which it is founded, as well as the issue implied by the discussion which has taken place here today and on previous occasions.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the purposes sought to be achieved by the bill now before us will, if it is not passed today, be brought presumably before the attention of this house at a later date. There are other bills on the order paper which would achieve the same objective. There is obviously wide interest in this matter, and I for one am not going to share the ambition of all other hon. members that this bill must necessarily pass in its present form today. Indeed, I am not satisfied that the purposes sought to be achieved by this bill are not better achieved in Bill No. C-9, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon).

Mr. Godin: Order. Mr. Speaker, I think some time ago you disallowed discussion of the other bill referred to, and to which the hon. member is wishing to draw a parallel.

Mr. Speaker: I hope I did not say anything which would indicate that it would be improper to refer to the fact that there were other bills on the order paper, or that it would be improper to make comparisons between this bill and other methods of achieving a similar result.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, in debating the purposes sought to be achieved by legislation which would require the printing in the two main languages of Canada of all the negotiable instruments issued by the Canadian government and its agencies I believe that we as members of parliament must have regard to the spirit which reflects the desire to have this type of legislation put through, and it is to my mind a matter as much of the heart as it is of the head. My constituents are not directly affected by this proposed legislation. Not more than 50 of the 200,000 people in my constituency speak normally in the French language, yet I am one of those who believes that this country in the nationhood we now share achieved that nationhood and will continue to prosper and flower only as we have regard each to the other, and that without those things of the spirit and the heart there would have been no possibility of nationhood. Indeed, in its beginnings it might have taken the form of other nations, one of them not at all removed and which achieved the beginnings of nationhood in the fires of civil commotion. We in this country achieved nationhood by the joining together primarily of two great lingual and ethnic groups. I am one of those who believes that there is no such thing as a French Canadian, nor is there any such thing as an English Canadian. There are French speaking Canadians and English speaking Canadians.

Mr. Godin: What is the difference?

Mr. Morris: What is the difference? There is a great difference. The difference comes in the adjectival use of "French speaking". A French Canadian is not the same thing as a French speaking Canadian. I would be delighted to have the hon. member join us at dinner when some of the 55 Conservative members from Quebec will be glad to enlighten him as to the difference.

This sense of spirit seems to me to inhabit the one objection which could legally be made to this legislation, and that is in section 133 of the British North America Act. It is sometimes said that section 133 places a proscription, a limit, upon the use in official communications and official assemblies of the two languages. Section 133 requires that English and French are equally usable in the parliament of Canada, in its journals and its papers, and in pleading before any court established under that act. But I believe that section 133 of the British North America Act was intended to set the minimal standard for the use of the two languages, and I, as an English speaking Canadian, think the criterion, whether the principle of this bill merits our support, must be decided in the first instance by the French speaking members. If they have perhaps a minority feeling toward this legislation, and if they ask parliament for this legislation, then I think that their request should be taken by us as a guide to our conduct, for certainly nothing that we do should be inclined to retard or diminish the sense of the spirit which was achieved by the mingling of these two ethnic groups.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Regier.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, when this debate was interrupted at five o'clock I was proceeding to speak about how much this government has cost the people of Canada this year. Previously I had stated that this government, taking into consideration the depletion in the unemployment insurance fund, would cost the taxpayers of Canada over $1 billion this year. It has exceeded that amount; indeed, the figure of expenditure runs to $1.07 billion. This amount represents overspending. In the financial planning of the government it has built up increased charges which will be carried into future budgets and result in overspending in future years.

This overspending amounts to approximately $3 million a day, or $125,000 an hour. As I have stated before, that daily expenditure is about equivalent to the assessment of a town with a population of from 3,000 to 5,000. It means that the equivalent of the value of a $10,000 farm goes down the drain in overspending every 4½ minutes.

I know that the government has saved a lot of money this year in cutting down defence expenditures. I also know that military leaders in Great Britain, the United States and even our own Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) have stated that we need manned interceptors. We were informed that the Arrow would go 2½ to 3 times as fast as the interceptors now in use, but we were also told that those now in use would suffice at the present time. Even at that the minister admitted they would not overtake the modern bombers. I should like to know what protection we in this country have with manned interceptors? In my opinion what we have does not amount to adequate protection. I hope that the safety of our people has not been jeopardized in order to meet election promises.

I am not sufficiently well informed to know whether our course in dispensing with the Arrow was a proper one or not but I do know there has been a saving of many millions of dollars in reduced defence expenditures. The former government spent a great deal more of the tax dollar in defence and certainly if this government were putting the same proportion of the tax dollar into defence its deficit would be considerably larger than it is. The Canadian air vice-marshal has said we need the Arrow. I have seen or heard no reasonable argument to the contrary. I am not saying this government made a wrong decision but it failed to present us with any technical reasons in support of the course it followed. The voice of the one man who should know was heard but once and never heard again. I cannot help but feel that a select committee made up of hon. members from all parties in this house should have had an opportunity to hear him and others giving expert opinions. In that way the Canadian people would have had confidence in the safety of this country. They would know that the decision was made purely for military and not for political reasons.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in referring to the conversion loan described it as a huge success when in fact we on this side of the house think it was the biggest flop in the financial history of this country. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) said yesterday that we are paying about $345 million more in extra interest up to the time of the original due dates of the 6th to 9th victory loan series. The minister does not come by $345 million very easily. In fact, that would be a whopping deficit in a budget for one year.

In referring to the financial policy followed last year, as reported at page 2415 of Hansard of April 9, 1959, the Minister of Finance said:

> I think nearly all informed observers have agreed that our policy last year was right in its direction and about right in its degree.

I believe that is utter trash. The people of Canada will not believe this. Nearly every daily paper, periodical, financial paper and other publications carried frequent articles written by bank presidents, heads of trust companies and other financial institutions, as well as statements by financial writers, giving advice to the minister, imploring him to set an example in government by sane financing and spending. Every hon. member of this house knows this to be true. Indeed, almost everybody in Canada knows this to be true and I do not need to verify it by quotations so many of which are available in the recent press.

In my opinion the Minister of Finance tries to smooth everything over to his own advantage. In referring to the conversion loan in the budget speech, as reported at page 2411 of Hansard, the minister had this to say:

> But in so far as the market and the investor were concerned, this $6½ billion was not spread over eight years, because the first four of the issues were callable in 1959 or earlier and the 1966 issue was callable at any time after September 1, 1961. From the investors' point of view, therefore, this $6½ billion had to be considered as being spread over, not eight years but approximately three years.

Who is the minister trying to fool? The bonds were callable only at the option of the government. No bond holder would lie awake wondering where he might reinvest the money obtained from the redemption of any bonds this government, plunging into debt, might call in. I wonder if this gave the minister the idea of committing the Canadian taxpayer to long term non-callable loans? The foolish conversion loan contributed more than anything else to the unsettling of our bond market and served to push interest rates up. When people saw such inept financing many got their cash for converted victory bonds right away before the market started its precipitous decline. I personally know some who did that.

> But the fact remains that the Canadian bond market has not been accustomed to absorbing as large a volume of new government bonds of Canada as we have had to offer during the past year. The impact of our borrowings, which over the year as a whole have been achieved largely in a non-inflationary manner, has exerted an upward pressure on interest rates.

I think this is really a confession at last that what the Minister of Finance did was to push the bond interest upward. Members on this side of the house told him what would happen. I myself told him what would happen. We told him that he would be stopped in his tracks. On January 21, in the debate on the speech from the throne I said, as reported at page 168 of Hansard:

> A banker lends money to a creditor if the manager thinks he is a good risk; but if he becomes a spendthrift or otherwise shows that he cannot handle his money wisely the credit is withdrawn. This is exactly what the people of Canada have done to the Minister of Finance. They have called a halt to his wild spending by refusing to buy his bonds at the fast rate he requires. It is just as simple as that, no matter how much the Minister of Finance confuses us with such terms as bank rate, bills of exchange rate, short and long term money rates, and so on.

It is quite evident from what I put on the record before five o'clock that a lot of the borrowing last year was only short term borrowing, and we know that nearly $1.35 billion comes due this year between July 1 and December 1. Hon. members will recall that between 1959 and 1966, $6.4 billion in the 5th to the 9th victory loans were to come due. Almost 55 per cent of those victory loans were sold in the long term issues, but slightly over 45 per cent of them were either not sold or else were sold as short term issues, and those two short term issues are due in 1961 and 1965 at an earlier date than many of the original victory loan bonds. For the latter bonds to which I have referred, namely the short term issues, the minister will pay an extra total interest bill of some $66.5 million, plus millions in bonuses and commissions for a very questionable advantage because one-half of them must again be dealt with by the Minister of Finance during this parliament. The minister again will have a big bill for refinancing the maturities over again, with another bil bill in commissions, advertising and what not. This is the same minister who used to talk about the former government and their waste and extravagance.

The main advantage in the conversion that we have got at the present time is that we have 55 per cent of the bonds for a longer term; but to get 55 per cent over to a longer term we have paid a terrible price. We paid $71 million in costs, plus increased yearly interest charges of $66 million a year. This latter figure includes $7 million the minister reported as a yearly amount to amortize the cost of the loan. Hon. members will see that the minister got rid of only a little over half of the victory loan bonds into longer maturities, and he has the rest of them very much with him at the present time.

If the minister had dealt with the 5th victory loan bonds as they came due in the normal way there would not have been the same upward pressure on interest rates, and certainly he could have sold them or could have refunded them, probably at a better price and certainly not at any higher price than the average of 4 per cent, the interest that he had to pay on the conversion issue. Had he done this he would have saved over $50 million this year alone. This amount is about double the increase in personal income tax, or at least $10 million more than the increased personal contributions to the old age pension fund for this year alone, and it would be many millions more than the increased taxes on cigars and cigarettes and the increased taxes on women's cosmetics which are being imposed by this budget. I think this Fleming folly will be felt by generations of Canadians probably yet unborn.

This promise that the conversion loan would make money more readily available to the municipalities and to the provinces at a cheaper rate is simply not true. Hon. members here have only to ask their bankers or their municipalities what they think of this and I do not think they would find anyone to agree with it.

At the present time many municipalities have money borrowed from the bank. There are municipalities in the Niagara district which have borrowed money and have loans at the bank which they cannot get out at a reasonable debenture rate. Canadian government bonds became a glut on the market. They fell in price and put the price of money up to everybody. The people in many of the remotest parts of Canada will be paying extra interest for their sewers, sidewalks and roads long after the minister has retired with his foolish and misguided fiscal policy.

Our bonds are lower and therefore money is costing us more than it is costing most other countries of the western free world, including such countries as Belgium, Norway, Sweden and even revolutionary Cuba, whose long term bonds are selling well above ours right now. In fact, our bonds do not seem to be wanted in New York or in other world markets. Sometime ago I quoted that one Canadian bond was sold in New York when over $375,000 worth of Australian bonds were sold that week. In the week before last there was not one Canadian bond sold on that market, and last week all those that were sold were bonds that went down in price over their previous sale, while bonds of most other countries of the western free world were going up.

It was put on record in the British House of Commons and by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) here that Canada has the highest unemployment, along with Italy, percentage-wise in relation to working forces of most other countries of the western free world. I think our high interest rates go along with the high unemployment rate. I submit that the municipalities, the provinces and individuals cannot borrow money at those high rates and cannot proceed with projects that they would like to proceed with at this time, which would take up a lot of the slack of unemployment.

I do not think the minister is doing anything to lower interest rates. We all know that in February he sold $200 million worth of bonds in two issues, one was a 2¾ per cent issue and the other a 3 per cent issue, and they were sold in denominations of $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1 million. As I said before, those bonds were not for the little man and the minister rather took exception to that. I say that if any little man had $1,000 he had to be pretty nimble and agile to get one of those bonds in the 15 minutes in which the books were open.

How does the minister expect the ordinary people to buy bonds under such circumstances? If we refer to table 48 we will see it shows that the yield at the price to the government of the 3 per cent bonds due in December, 1960 was 5.06 per cent, the highest price since the days of the Bennett government. The other issue was a 2¾ per cent, 13-month bond, which cost the government 4.86 per cent. They both carried income tax gimmicks which cost our treasury well over 6 per cent net when sold to big corporations and others in the 50 per cent income tax bracket.

Instead of trying to cut expenditures the government is establishing a record of expenditures year after year. The minister used to blame the former government for waste and extravagance based on the number of civil servants employed. At the end of the first year in office of the present government the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) said that there were 8,124 more civil servants on June 30, 1958 than the previous June, and with about two and a half months to go I suppose we will have another increase of the same size. According to the book of main estimates, the Minister of Finance has 143 more civil servants in his own department than his predecessor had. In that connection may I say that the only thing of greater magnitude with which they have to deal is debt.

I want to say again that a fundamental weakness in the Bank of Canada is the fact that the government has appointed some highly political men to the board of directors of that bank. They should be above reproach just like our judiciary as their decisions influence the lives of all Canadians. Are we assured that their decisions are free from political considerations and are for the good of Canada?

When I see our bonds selling on the world markets below those of Cuba which is in a state of revolution, I wonder, and so do many other Canadians wonder. No wonder our Canadian bonds are selling on a par with or lower than many of our provincial bonds including many provincial guaranteed bonds. I put that on the record in the house not long ago. The ordinary people will not buy long term government bonds unless they have a guarantee as to principal at all times. They have been jockeyed out of buying these high interest, short term bonds but they will be let in to pay for these bonds and to help pay for the mistakes of the government.

The minister is often evasive and we can only find the true figures in the statistical summary of the Bank of Canada and in other places or we have to work them out ourselves. He tells us regularly that our mathematics are wrong but in Toronto before the Canadian club he said:

> The average coupon rate of the bonds converted is now 3.83 per cent.

He was referring to the conversion loan. Without taking into consideration the numbers of bonds sold in each category, the minister added together the percentages, 3 plus 3¾ plus 4¼ plus 4½ and divided by 4. That seems like a childish way. He arrived at 3.83 but afterwards he admitted that it should be 4 per cent.

Again, when I asked him if the figures he gave in that address in Toronto were right he said that he did not know what figures I was referring to but if he gave them they were right. Here again, when pressed further he admitted he had understated the increased interest as a result of conversion by $10 million. I regard these as mistakes but there are other errors in statements made by the minister, always made in favour of the government, that I regard more seriously.

On February 13, 1958, the minister spoke to the Empire club in Toronto about government bonds being immediately oversubscribed and went on to say:

> The twelfth Canada savings bond campaign was inaugurated in October and achieved a record response. The offering was discontinued at December 31. By that time a record of gross sales of $1.175 billion had been achieved, vastly exceeding the amount realized on any previous issue.

This seems to me a most spurious deception because the amount of Canada savings bonds in the hands of the public increased only by $436 million between October 1 and December 31 and not by $1.175 billion in that period as you might be led to expect. I understand that what happened was that people turned in some $700 million of less desirable Canada savings bonds for more desirable bonds, but on the other hand that is not what you are led to believe when you read the statement of the minister.

The minister said in his budget speech last year, concerning the government's cash requirements and the loan which it had floated in April, as found at page 1241 of Hansard for June 17, 1958:

> We have already made a good beginning. Since April 1 we have sold issues totalling $950 million, of which $350 million was new cash.

You will get some idea about the minister's expression, "a good beginning," if you read the remarks of the governor of the Bank of Canada on page 5 of his annual report where he says:

> There were two periods of large scale monetary expansion. The first took place at the time of the May 1 new issue of government securities when it appeared that a net increase in non-bank holdings could not be achieved.

I want you to mark those words, "could not be achieved," because we were certainly led to believe that these bonds were going over like hotcakes. When the minister tabled the 1959-60 estimates he said, as found at page 705 of Hansard of February 5:

> The most noteworthy feature is that compared with those for the present year, 1958-59, these estimates provide for a decrease of $39.1 million in the non-statutory items.

I do not know whom the minister thinks he is fooling. This may read well in the press but the minister does not compare like with like. What he has done is to compare this year's main estimates with last year's main estimates plus supplementary estimates plus further supplementary estimates Nos. 1 and 2, and last year these supplementaries amounted to $427.5 million. The main estimates this year are $416 million greater than the main estimates last year and we are bound to have supplementary estimates this year as we have had every year since I have been a member of the house.

If we question the minister's figures we are told by him that we are irresponsible or that we are lacking in our knowledge of mathematics. The minister himself has not shown himself to be infallible in mathematics. The finding of the $10 million mistake in connection with the increased interest with respect to the conversion loan, together with many other mistakes with respect to statements made by the minister, all made to the advantage of the government and either planned or by misadventure, requires a good deal of laborious work. It involves going to statistical reports of the Bank of Canada and other publications, checking and cross-checking, and in some cases it requires endless calculations particularly in arriving at interest rates.

If the minister continues to give us information at variance with subsequent reports we will have no time to do this work since we have so many committee meetings to attend and we want to fulfil our responsibilities to the people of Canada. We are willing to overlook honest mistakes on the part of the minister and we have and we realize that the government has got to defend the decisions that are made. But we take serious objection to statements that mislead the country and mislead members of the house. Such statements may give the government temporary advantage but after a time all factual statements become suspect. I have given three examples and I have many more before me. I should like to think of all ministers of the crown as being straightforward and not misleading in their statements, and I should like to make an appeal to the Minister of Finance to be factual in his statements in the future. Is my time up?

Mr. Speaker: One minute.

Mr. McMillan: I want to say a few words on trade. If we had more trade we would not have so much unemployment. Back in the good old days when we used to have nearly 100 per cent employment 20 per cent of our people depended for their livelihood on our foreign trade. This government seems to blow hot and cold with our best customer, the United States.

Now, at election time there were criticisms from almost every Tory platform and in the Tory press about certain aspects of United States capital coming into Canada. Then we had the great talk about the diversion of trade and again great pronouncements by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) about preserving our sovereignty in the north, clearly directed against the United States forces situated along the D.E.W. line and other bases up there.

Now, what has happened? On March 9 our government sold gas and exploration rights on nearly three million acres in northern Canada. Who got these rights? Canadian corporations got 4 per cent; British, United States and Canadian corporations got 3 per cent and United States corporations got 93 per cent, of which Canadian subsidiaries of American companies got 25 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired.

(Translation):

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in rising tonight I do not propose to sum up in my own language the salient points of the masterly budget submitted to us last Thursday by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

Mr. Dupuis: The bleeding points!

Mr. Courtemanche: Salient points.

Mr. Pigeon: Are you referring to the war?

Mr. Courtemanche: At the end of my remarks, my hon. friends opposite will realize that there is nothing bleeding about it.

I would be wrong, Mr. Speaker, if, like Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, I summed up the main points of that speech for the information of hon. members. There is a very simple reason for this. My hon. friend from Eglinton needs no help from me to express himself in French. I should however like to congratulate the Minister of Finance for giving part of his budget speech in French.

An hon. Member: One minute out of two hours.

Mr. Courtemanche: That historic precedent which he established last year is a tribute to his fine spirit of comprehension.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State just said that this is an historic precedent. Does he mean that—

An hon. Member: He was not referring to Mr. Harris, in any case.

Mr. Pigeon: People who are unprepared should not rise to ask questions.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The point the hon. member is raising is not so much a point of order as a point of disagreement.

Mr. Denis: It becomes about the same thing.

(Translation):

Mr. Courtemanche: I shall give my hon. friend from St. Denis (Mr. Denis) certain explanations so that he might fully understand. The historic precedent does not lie so much in the fact that nobody on the other side of this house, or in any former governments, ever expressed themselves in French, as in the fact—and therein lies the precedent—that last year for the first time a Minister of Finance spoke in French.

Mr. Pigeon: The Liberals never did.

Mr. Courtemanche: Mr. Speaker, indeed this is not the only precedent of this kind, and I do not hesitate to say that the development and recognition, from day to day, of full bilingualism is due to the example given by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) as well as by several members of his cabinet and a good many hon. members in this house.

(Text):

Mr. Dupuis: Why don't you speak English?

(Translation):

Mr. Courtemanche: I express myself better in French.

In submitting to the House of Commons a budget which is primarily in the best interests of the nation, this government preferred increased taxation to immediate prestige.

Mr. Habel: What humility!

Mr. Courtemanche: Without that increase, the future of this country would have been seriously jeopardized and we would have had to wage an even more bitter fight against inflation, that economic disease which we must face and check in the best interests of Canada.

The sole purpose of my remarks is to show how, with the problems facing the government, there could not be in a general way, a more effective solution to develop our trade relations and to meet existing problems.

All hon. members know that Canada is one of the great trading powers of the world, that our country, with its sparse population and its diversified natural wealth, has to seek foreign markets for many of its products. Farm and forest products would soon remind us of the fact if ever we were inclined to forget it. It is true that the manufactured products' sector of our economy has developed considerably in the last 15 years, but there again the need to export to foreign markets is being felt. Need I refer to our large sales of wheat, newsprint and lumber?

The danger which threatened our international trade was the exaggerated increase of our trade with our good neighbours to the south. Of course, they are our best customers and it would be wrong not to consider them as such. On the other hand it would be a great mistake on our part—and that is what the present government has fully realized—to neglect our commercial outlets within the commonwealth, and in other countries of the free world, which enable us to protect the stability of our trade and to ensure, as much as possible, a favourable trade balance with more countries.

This quest for a balance in our international trade, which was one of the main purposes of the commercial and economic commonwealth conference, held in Montreal last fall, proved to be most fruitful.

Hon. members will no doubt remember what the hon. Minister of Finance stated last Thursday, in that connection:

> The results of the Conference fully justified its opening theme: "An expanding Commonwealth in an expanding world".

That policy is strictly a policy of the present government. Outlined on several occasions by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), it was summarized here in the house by the hon. Minister of Finance on June 17, 1958 as follows:

> In brief, they may be described as follows:
> 1. To achieve expansion, diversification, better balance and greater stability in our trade with all countries;
> 2. To extend and strengthen Canada's trade and economic relationships with the commonwealth;
> 3. To support and promote a regime of law, order and morality in the field of international trade; to respect the spirit and intent of international commitments; and to stand ready to defend our rights and interests if they are challenged or ignored;
> 4. To recognize the legitimate needs of Canadian producers; and to safeguard them against unfair trading practices;
> 5. To promote the balanced growth of all sectors of Canadian industry and agriculture.

Despite the government's efforts in the field of international trade, the economic slump, which spared none of the western powers, has had such an impact that Canada was faced with domestic difficulties, foremost of which, without doubt, was the shortage of jobs.

As you are well aware, Canada has great obligations, both on the international front and on the national front, which must be met. It has the obligation to protect its citizens in a world where scientific discoveries become obsolete overnight; it has to provide social security for Canadian citizens; it has to help provide a living for its people.

We are now enjoying a period of peace, a peace not altogether free from fear and anxiety, but peace none the less. And we have to remain prepared for any emergency. That is why the government is doing all it can to share in common defense with the western powers, so as to give Canada adequate protection.

Social security is costly, but within the limits set by justice and charity, it is a task of paramount importance. There is no need for me to mention here old age pensions, increased unemployment insurance benefits, and all the other social security measures that exist for the welfare of Canadians.

The government did not hesitate, despite increased unemployment insurance benefits and other legislative amendments, to set its sights as the hon. Minister of Finance stated last year, not on a balanced budget, but on providing jobs for the unemployed. That is why some $250 million were made available this year for housing construction, why the public works program was stepped up, why co-operation was extended to the provinces and municipalities for winter works, etc.

The economic recovery is gaining strength. Everywhere, business activity is picking up. Surely, the best yardstick of this is that mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance when he drew attention in this house to the reduced number of unemployed as compared with last year, while indicating that the country's labour force has increased by 152,000 workers. Moreover, the economy of free countries is improving, which means that international trade stands to gain by this.

While it is true that universal consent, in itself, is not a valid argument, it is a strange thing that several countries of the world, with a free economy, have thought fit to resort to methods similar to those used by this government to solve their economic and financial problems. Thus in the grave crisis facing France, the drastic remedies applied by General de Gaulle's administration are apparently the only way to ensure economic recovery. Far be it from me to compare Canada's economy with that of France. Canada is going through a period of sustained economic development unequalled in its history.

If we take a look at a country whose economy is strangely similar to ours, namely the United States, we find that the Eisenhower administration has submitted a budget involving the extension of a special 52 per cent tax on corporate profits, as well as other taxes on such items as cars, alcoholic beverages and tobacco, which normally were to be withdrawn next June 30. Moreover, Mr. Eisenhower recommended an increase in the excise tax on automobile and aircraft fuels, as well as drastic measures to raise the yield of the tax on life insurance companies, so as to reach the co-operatives.

Many people feel that only an effort such as this, to balance in some degree the budget of the American nation, will ensure monetary stability. Otherwise, we might perhaps expect financial and economic chaos.

In the state of New York, the new governor, Mr. Rockefeller, inaugurated his term by imposing new taxation, including a tax on personal income, in order to put some order into government finance. The day after he brought down his budget, on February 3, 1959, the New York Times concluded its leading editorial with these words:

> Governor Rockefeller chose an unpleasant and perhaps unpopular policy which, however, was certainly dictated by common sense. It would have been dangerous for us and for the economy of the state if he had not stopped the drifting of public finance towards bankruptcy. He could hardly do less if he wanted to put the state on a sound basis. He probably could not do any better in any case, politically speaking, at the present time. We congratulate him again for his courage.

Speaking generally about the problem of the public debt in The Canadian Banker (winter issue of 1958) E. P. Neufeld wrote the following:

> While we must acknowledge that government expenditures are rather rigid and that the government has to be financed one way or another, successful management of the debt will only be possible, without inflationary prices, if the authorities allow the interest rate to develop freely toward high levels and if federal taxation is increased.

In other words, it is impossible to avoid inflation and its disastrous consequences without resorting to some rather drastic measures, and especially to increased taxation.

Besides, we have seen many instances recently of public administrations having to resort to increased taxation to ensure the development of the country without allowing inflation to jeopardize the future of the nation.

In this regard, the Minister of Finance had this to say, as found at page 2408 of Hansard of April 9, 1959:

> I do not see any present evidence of overt inflation in the coming year, in fact the consumer price index has declined for the past four consecutive months. We must, however, continue on guard against potential inflationary pressures. I believe that is well within the power of Canadians to achieve reasonable price stability without sacrificing either immediate recovery or balanced growth.

Can anyone seriously point an accusing finger at this government and charge it with failure to accept its responsibilities in the face of the complex problems of our trade and social security policies and of the economic recession?

We did all that could be done. Of course, our methods can be questioned, but who could say that the methods suggested by the opposition would have given better results? Unfounded assertions and theories offering no possibility of direct application are mere dreams and the fruit of questionable mental gymnastics.

During the last war, we had many budgets showing a deficit. We were in a state of emergency. We are now going through another rather difficult period. It takes money to ward off an economic slump and an employment crisis. Every Canadian citizen knows that the government has to take such action as is necessary to secure the revenues that will enable it to take care of those in greatest need, and to work toward the recovery of the Canadian economic life.

(Text):

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join those who have preceded me in this debate and offer a word of appreciation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the monumental—with the help of his assistants—job of preparing and presenting the budget which in itself constitutes a project of major proportions. I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) for the very careful and critical analysis of the weak features of the budget. The minister's statement that the budget must be flexible to meet changing conditions and changes in the economic condition of the country is a statement with which I fully agree. His statement with regard to inflation, however, is a horse of another kind.

I am afraid inflation is still very much with us, although I wish it were not so. But the fact is that most commodities cost more. In the building of a small home the cost has gone up from 5 per cent to 10 per cent. The effect of the freight rate increases alone raised the price of an ordinary dwelling in Fort William by $200. If there are no adjustments made in this field the cost of every commodity, including food, will go up. The trend of rising costs will continue, which only means inflation. On this occasion I again appeal to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) to give serious consideration to the proposal which I made on April 7 last regarding the adjustment of freight rates throughout northwestern Ontario.

The Minister of Finance argued that inflation is not inevitable. Perhaps it could be curbed if the proper measures were applied at the right moment. I am not saying that this is an easy matter which can be resolved with a stroke of a pen. It is something which requires deep study and political courage. However, if we are faced with a choice of inflation or unemployment, of the two evils inflation would be the lesser. I have here a short quotation from the Labour Gazette. It states:

> Nobody has a formula for dealing with inflation and unemployment at one and the same time. A number of business leaders seem to think inflation the graver threat of the two, perhaps they are right.
> "But no cure is any good that tries to make inflation better by making unemployment worse, and treats a sound dollar as if it were more important than a sound man."

In order to combat both these evils it is necessary to overhaul government thinking on the matter of trade. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) mentioned trade but was unable to finish his speech because his time was up. But how can we hope to expand trade with other nations when the government is extending their protectionistic tendencies, which are traditional, of course, with the Conservative party?

Mr. Hector McKinnon, a recognized authority on tariffs, has recently stated that the time is now opportune for greater flexibility in GATT to provide for faster readjustment in fixed rates. He also urged a custom union or free trade pact with the United States.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think I ought to tell my hon. friend it he is going on to quote a press report attributing certain remarks to Mr. McKinnon, that Mr. McKinnon has informed me that there are serious errors in the newspaper report of what he is alleged to have said.

Mr. Badanai: I wish to thank the hon. minister for that information. However, if he made that statement it might be it is too drastic a step to take. But a more flexible free trade pact with a European free trade bloc would certainly be worth a trial and the same should apply to the British commonwealth of nations. The British offered us a free trade deal, but what has our government done about it? It has ignored the offer and done precious little in spite of their highly-praised commonwealth conference which took place in Montreal last year. Some day we will awaken to the idea offered by Britain and the idea behind the European common market of six nations. It would not only benefit us but would be a factor in bringing about full employment in Canada.

The tremendous recovery of Germany is generally conceded to be due to her expanding trade with other nations, and from her book we could perhaps learn a lesson or two. Here we are, one of the richest nations in the world, and we can also say one of the poorest, with nearly half a million people out of work. It does not seem to make sense. Here we have a government which obviously was elected on the promise of easy money, prosperity and work for everybody, but once elected it has failed to come up with a solution. There are hundreds of thousands of people impoverished in this rich country, unable to find jobs. In my own city one-quarter of the labour force is out of work. If the Canadian Car Company proceeds with its announced intention of moving its entire commercial operation to Montreal and no other work is provided for the plant we will add the heads of an additional 1,000 families to the relief rolls of our city welfare department.

In all sincerity and with all the energy I possess I plead with the Prime Minister and with his government to proceed without delay to take immediate steps toward a solution of what I believe to be the most important business before the government, that of finding jobs for the unemployed. The appointment of a royal commission composed of competent persons, one from each province, to study the causes and remedies of unemployment might well be considered.

I have in my hand an editorial dealing with the same question which I should like to read:

> Take Square Look at Chronic Unemployment—
> Canada now has one of the highest rates of unemployment in the civilized world, yet there is a massive complacency about the situation. This "so what?" attitude is itself alarming.
> Dominion bureau of statistics February figures, issued yesterday, showed 537,000 persons looking for work—8.8 per cent of the total labour force. In Britain where the government is apprehensive and opposition parties are raising a hullabaloo because of unemployment in the nation, the number of jobless there represents only 2.4 per cent of the labour force. Even in the United States, still afflicted by serious unemployment, the amount is about 7.4 per cent of the labour force.
> Canada's jobless condition is worse than the DBS figures indicate. The number of claimants for unemployment insurance benefit at the end of January was 785,071. Neither this figure nor the DBS statistics of 537,000 jobless is accurate. The true figure probably lies somewhere between. Nobody knows where.
> The very fact that our governments do not seem to want to arrive at a reliable figure on unemployment, or have not set up a mechanism for determining the actual amount, indicates an official aplomb that is disturbing
> Although figures are various; although the latest estimates show more people in jobs than a year ago; although the amount of unemployment is apparently declining slightly, this appalling fact remains: that more than 500,000 Canadians are still out of work.
> Further, most of that unemployment is not "seasonal"; it is with us whatever the weather. Jobs are not going to mushroom in the spring like magic. The expected full recovery across the border, which was supposed to presage good times here, has not occurred. Further, a return to so-called "prosperity" will not necessarily create jobs for the jobless. George Meany, American AFL-CIO president, noted recently that while steel production was higher than it had been 20 months ago, 100,000 fewer workers were required by the industry.
> The Canadian Labour Congress has estimated that Canada will be carrying a permanent jobless force of 400,000.
> There is a real danger of Canadians accepting chronic unemployment as something over which they have little control. What an admission of weakness and futility by this reputedly vigorous nation and by the enterprise system which we boast of as being so superior to communism.
> Canadians and their governments must defeat this social and economic blight, not merely mumble about it. And meanwhile they must do better than provide unemployment insurance benefits which cover only part of the work force and in January provided an average of only $21.38 a week for unemployed persons and their families to live on.

Mr. Speaker, I am not a politician nor do I claim to be one, but it seems to me that many good ideas are not acted upon because of political considerations. In view of the serious unemployment situation I urge the government to exercise every possible means at its command to eliminate this sad picture of long queues of men and women standing outside our unemployment insurance buildings in all kinds of weather hoping and waiting to be called for jobs which as of now are non-existent.

I wish to commend the minister for not increasing individual income tax on the income of individuals earning $3,000 or less annually, but about the excise tax I cannot help being critical of an important omission, that of a reduction in the excise tax on motor cars. The story of the excise tax and sales tax is really an interesting one and I am sure that all hon. members would like to hear it. I shall begin at the beginning of the history of this tax. It was brought into being at a time when it was regarded as a luxury tax because only very few people could afford to own and operate a motor car. The actual birth of this ill-conceived tax was on February 12, 1915. It was a 7½ per cent special war tax brought in by the government of Sir Robert Borden.

On April 30, 1918, shortly after the battle of Vimy Ridge the same government added an additional 10 per cent which was labelled a luxury tax. On May 19, 1920, the special war tax of 7½ per cent was eliminated but the luxury tax of 10 per cent was raised to 15 per cent on a car costing $3,000 or less. Not content with that, an additional new sales tax of 1 per cent was introduced. In May of 1921 the sales tax on domestic-produced vehicles was increased to 1½ per cent and sales tax on imported cars was increased to 2½ per cent.

On May 24, 1922, the first known excise tax was imposed. The rate was 5 per cent on the first $1,200 of wholesale value and 10 per cent on any amount over $1,200. The sales tax was also increased to 2¼ per cent on domestic and 3½ per cent on imported cars, from the percentages which had previously obtained, 1½ per cent and 2½ per cent respectively. On January 1, 1924 the excise tax remained the same, but the sales tax was increased to 6 per cent on both domestic and imported cars.

On April 11, 1924 the excise tax remained the same but the sales tax was reduced to 5 per cent. On February 18, 1927 the excise tax remained the same but the sales tax was reduced to 4 per cent. On February 17, 1928 the excise tax remained the same but the sales tax was reduced to 3 per cent. On March 2, 1929 the sales tax was reduced to 2 per cent but the excise tax remained at 5 per cent and 10 per cent respectively.

On May 2, 1930, the sales tax was reduced to 1 per cent and there was no change in the excise tax. On June 2, 1931 the sales tax was increased to 4 per cent plus a special 1 per cent import tax with no change in the excise tax. In April of 1932 the sales tax was increased to 6 per cent; the special import tax was increased to 3 per cent and the excise tax remained at 5 per cent and 10 per cent respectively.

On May 2, 1936, the first change in the excise tax rate since its inception was made. The tax was lowered to a straight 5 per cent on the first $650. The sales tax went up from 6 per cent to 8 per cent and the special import tax remained at 3 per cent. On April 26, 1939, the special import tax was abolished, with the excise and sales taxes unchanged. June 26, 1940, in the darkest days of the second great war, was the occasion of the first real wartime budget which set the staggering excise rate on passenger cars of 10 per cent on the wholesale price up to $700; 20 per cent from $700 to $900; and 40 per cent from $900 to $1,200; and 50 per cent on the amount over $1,200. The sales tax remained the only thing unchanged when a war exchange tax of 10 per cent was introduced.

The government, not content with that, on December 3, 1940 increased the excise tax to a scale of 20-20-40-80 on the same price breakdown as before, while the sales tax and the war exchange tax remained at eight per cent and 10 per cent respectively. On May 1, 1941, the government of the day really went to town on the automobile business. The excise tax was upped to 25 per cent on the first $700; 40 per cent from $900 to $1,200; and 80 per cent over $1,200. The only things left unchanged were the sales and war exchange taxes. On May 15, 1945, a few days after D-day, the excise tax was reduced from 25 per cent to a straight 10 per cent, but the sales and war exchange taxes were retained without change. On October 13, 1945, or after the conclusion of hostilities in the Far East, the special war tax of 10 per cent was abolished, but the excise tax of 10 per cent and the sales tax of 8 per cent remained.

On November 18, 1947, the government introduced an emergency measure designed to conserve United States dollar exchange. For this purpose it introduced the stiffest excise tax in history of 25 per cent on the first $1,200; 50 per cent from $1,200 to $2,000; and 75 per cent from $2,000 up, and still retained the same sales tax at 8 per cent. On August 1, 1948, the excise tax was reduced to a straight 10 per cent with the sales tax at 8 per cent. On September 8, 1950, as a result of the outbreak of the Korean war, the excise tax was increased to 15 per cent; the sales tax remained as before, namely 8 per cent. On April 11, 1951, the excise tax received another boost to 25 per cent and the sales tax was raised from 8 per cent to 10 per cent. On April 9, 1952, with the war over in Korea, the excise tax was dropped to 15 per cent, but the sales tax remained at 10 per cent.

On April 6, 1955, the government reduced the excise tax from 15 per cent to 10 per cent, retaining the sales tax at 10 per cent. On December 7, 1957, notwithstanding all the glittering promises of tax reductions and the eloquent speeches in the house against the excise tax on motor cars—indeed, when the Minister of Finance sat on this side of the house the pages of Hansard were literally covered with sharp quotations from the members of the present government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker); so much so that there was the reasonable expectation that at long last the excise tax would be eliminated—the government, contrary to their members' extravagant statements when in opposition, did reduce the tax by 2½ per cent, retaining the same rate of 7½ per cent which it was when it was introduced in 1915. It is a tax which was born during wartime and has been principally associated with distress and the calamity of war, and therefore when the exigencies of war and the stress no longer exist there is no justification to retain it.

When the Minister of Finance gave his first budget to the house on June 17 last the people of Canada and the 800,000 Canadians employed in the automotive industry who make their living directly or indirectly through the sale of motor vehicles fully expected that surely at this time the words of the Prime Minister would be carried out. On January 15, 1955, he made this statement, as reported at page 192 of Hansard:

> What are we doing to meet the situation? What is the reason for it? We have said that over the years Canadians were being taxed out of the markets of the world and taxed out of their jobs. I know they used to say you could make jobs without profits. We have learned differently in Saskatchewan with the disappearance of the mirage of 1944. What about hidden taxes? The average automobile has a hidden tax of $400. I believe that Canada's industry must be revitalized by giving tax relief at once. The government must act and act now.

If the average automobile had a hidden tax of $400 then, it is more like $600 now. Surely at this time, after such a significant reference to this tax, one would expect that the minister would see to it that it would be removed once and for all. I need not elaborate to hon. members the keen disappointment which gripped the industry but more especially the workers and employees of our automobile factories whose jobs depend entirely on the sales of motor vehicles.

Last Thursday, April 9, the budget was brought down. Incidentally, this seems to be the most favoured month of the year for the introduction of new budgets. There is a good reason for this. It is the time of the year when we are accustomed to look for warmer weather, for flowers to bloom. It is a time of renewal of hope, and so it was with some justification that people felt that surely the time had arrived to hope, with the spring that brings new life, that it would bring also the end to the misery of cold and the end to an unjustifiable tax.

Does the minister realize that today the motorist is by far the most heavily taxed individual in Canada? If he does he has not shown any regard for the benefits that would result from the removal of this tax which, in addition to giving a little well-earned relief to the prospective new car owner, would stimulate sales and create more jobs not only in the automobile plants but in the iron ore pits, the coal mines, the nickel mines and the aluminum plants which are now in the doldrums, the textile industries and dozens of suppliers of materials too numerous to mention.

To illustrate the importance of keeping this industry buoyant and at a high level of employment I have only to quote a few figures which show that in 1957 the manufacturing industry alone paid in excess of $143 million in salaries and wages, not counting those employed on repairs, in the sale of gas and oil and in distribution, which would account for another $150 million. The retail value of motor vehicles in Canada in 1957, which is the latest figure available to me, was $1,400 million. Some people will say, "Well, if you want to reduce the price of automobiles why do you not manufacture a smaller and cheaper car, something like the small European style car?" It is quite true that Canadian manufacturers can produce small cars but would the average Canadian buyer be interested in purchasing these so-called cheap cars? If the objective is to meet the price of the European style cars, it is not necessary to bring out a small car for the simple reason that the present popular Canadian models in the Chevrolet price field sell at not more than the so-called cheap cars; if the people were content to buy the automobile without the extras which are usually sold with the car and which are not included in the European car. But the average Canadian is not content with a stripped automobile. He wants automatic transmission, power brakes, better upholstery, a clock and a radio. He wants better tires and better springs to give him a more comfortable ride and he wants a safer car. The element of safety is also involved because a larger and heavier chassis naturally has greater stability on the road; hence the wide acceptance of the average Canadian automobile.

One could not contemplate our economy without the automobile. Can anyone conjure or visualize in his or her mind a way of Canadian life without motor cars? It would not require a great deal of imagination to visualize what would happen if we were suddenly deprived of this universal means of transportation. Literally millions of people would be thrown out of work in almost every field of human endeavour. I would be loath to think that any government would dare to do anything to bring about stagnation in an industry which has done more for so many in raising the standard of living to the second highest in the world for all Canadians.

I beg the Minister of Finance to reconsider the case for a reduction at least, if not the total elimination of the excise tax, especially now in view of the increase in the sales tax of one per cent which has the effect of increasing the price of the smaller Canadian cars by approximately $25. The continuous presence of the 7½ per cent excise tax on passenger cars is a threat to the steady employment of thousands of Canadians at a time when the unemployment situation, as I mentioned earlier, is so serious that unless very drastic steps are taken soon the misery that will visit those now unemployed will be the sword that will eventually cut into the heart of the government.

It is rather regrettable that the budget did not contain provision for the establishment of scholarships on a national basis for worthy students. This is an objective which merits the consideration of the government, especially in view of the need for greater aid for deserving students, to say nothing of the promises made by members of the government in election campaigns. Of all the trappings of government, our democracy depends most upon education. Assisting students by means of bursaries is not only a gift but is insurance in the defence of our own way of life. What I am advocating here is what the Right Hon. C. D. Howe advocated in a speech as chancellor of Dalhousie University when he said:

> Every ambitious and well-qualified student of parents who cannot afford the cost ought to be helped. Government, business and private citizens realize the urgency that the problem of university financing presents and understand the need for educating more engineers, scientists and personnel with a broad training in the humanities. If university fees of prewar times are inadequate, they should be increased, but all capable and deserving students should be enabled to obtain a university education regardless of costs.

Mr. Howe said that scholarships, bursaries and loan funds were supplementary means of financing the educational needs of such students and that those who could pay should do so and thus ease the problem of university financing. Because of the great impact of science on modern thought, Mr. Howe urged that those majoring in the humanities should study some of the philosophy and methods of science. In short, education is the business of the nation.

With regard to the recent amendments to the immigration regulations, the Prime Minister, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who asked if consideration would be given to allowing the house to debate the matter, gave the following answer as found on page 2297 of Hansard:

> The hon. member for Essex East knows that in the next few days the budget debate will take place, at which time any member can deal with the question as he sees fit.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I think that the time alloted for the budget debate should be devoted to the fiscal policy of the government and not to subjects which are not directly related to the budget. However, I wish to say a few words about the racial line drawn by the government with respect to immigration. I am not advocating a wide-open door immigration policy, especially at a time of unprecedented unemployment. There are times when restrictive measures are necessary. However, I find that the most objectionable feature of the order in council is that it prohibits the admission of brothers and sisters of Canadian citizens unless they are of British or French origin. Notwithstanding the Prime Minister's statement to the effect that there is no discrimination in the order, there is no doubt in my mind and in the minds of many other Canadians that a racial line unfortunately has been drawn, the effect of which is that only Canadian citizens whose parents happened to be born in the British isles, France or the United States can be allowed to bring to Canada their brothers and sisters.

Mr. Pallett: That was in the original order in council in 1956.

Mr. McIlraith: No, it was not.

Mr. Pallett: That was in the original order in council in 1956.

Mr. McIlraith: No. You will withdraw this order in council before many weeks have passed.

Mr. Badanai: Regardless of who brought it in, this government or the previous government, the order is not in accordance with the principles of democracy.

Mr. Pickersgill: The original order in council allowed brothers and sisters. Anyone who says the contrary is not telling the truth.

Mr. Badanai: Those whose parents were born in the other countries of Europe do not qualify, of course, to fall in the same class. Yet the Prime Minister says there is no discrimination. I hope that the government, on the recommendation of Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), will consider rescinding that feature of the order that sets up a barrier which keeps families apart.

In the constituency I represent there are some very fine dairy and truck garden farms. The district could not be classified as a prosperous agricultural area with the exception of the Slate river valley, the village of Murillo and a few townships scattered over a beautiful countryside. For the most part the farms are in a primitive state of development and these farmers need assistance in the form of long term loans at a low rate of interest. The government would perform a great service for these people, imbued with the pioneer spirit which opened up the greater part of our country in years gone by, by extending the farm loan board activities to enable these farmers to obtain loans, for which purpose the board was established but from which very few people have been able to obtain assistance.

At the present time, unless a farmer has collateral assets to the extent that he does not need to borrow it is virtually impossible for him to receive any consideration whatever. Another important aspect of the difficulties encountered by the farmers in the district of Thunder bay is the lack of a meat grading station and cold storage facilities. The establishment of these facilities would stimulate not only the growth of our farm area but would create a prosperous climate which could have the effect of attracting more people to the land, the development of which would without a doubt be beneficial to our entire area of northwestern Ontario.

Last week the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities met again with the government and presented a comprehensive brief which should not be cast lightly aside. Their request for an extension of the present winter works program and for assistance to help municipalities pay for major capital works is sound and should receive favourable consideration. The establishment of a federal loan fund to enable municipalities to borrow at a lower rate of interest than they can now in the open market is definitely a desirable project which would not cost the government anything. It would simply provide funds for projects approved by provincial-municipal authorities and, in due course, these funds would be repaid with interest.

The mayors of Canada have asked for federal-provincial-municipal conference on several occasions, but their requests have always been sidestepped.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Douglas Jung (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the debate which follows the presentation of the budget, hon. members are usually given great latitude in their choice of subjects. I, therefore, wish to place before this house tonight four subjects, three of which are domestic in nature and the fourth, while national in concept, has international ramifications.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) concluded his budget speech the other day with this statement, as found on page 2425 of Hansard for April, 1959:

> Canada has no reason for fear. Blessed as she has been by a benign Providence above all other lands, she can face her shining future with utmost confidence.
> [Mr. Badanai.]

As one who is part of a group of Canadians who have the greatest part of their lives still ahead of them, and as one who would, therefore, most benefit or suffer from the actions of our leaders, may I say I share that spirit of confidence. Looking into the future I can conceive that it is quite possible that Canada will develop into the most influential nation within the commonwealth. It is entirely possible that this development will take place within my lifetime. It is a prospect that is at once exciting and one which fires the imagination. So I am proud to have the privilege of serving Canada at a time when so much remains to be done.

However, because so much remains to be done I feel that at times we Canadians are too immersed with details and problems of our day-to-day existence that we sometimes forget to look at the over-all picture. I can think of no better time than now to pause and to consider our future position. Our country today is in a period of transition. We are experiencing a feeling of restlessness. These conditions have been brought about by national and international events of serious proportions. Nationally we have an economic situation that baffles the experts because, on the one hand, we have a level of high prosperity and, on the other, we have a level of high unemployment.

Internationally, the Berlin situation, the unrest in the countries of Africa and Asia, the challenge of communism and the threat of a nuclear war, all have given our leaders serious concern, as indeed they have to most men. These are common difficulties faced by almost every other country. But it is useless, I submit, to talk about what other countries are doing unless we ourselves are prepared to think about these problems. In this connection, I would remind the house that our leaders are engaged in trying to find solutions to these very vexing problems. They would be the first to admit that these are serious problems. While this party has done a great deal for this country in the short time it has formed the government, I know that this government will do even more in the future.

But how we develop and in what direction will depend upon what the people of Canada want. To say that we want Canada to develop into a great nation is trite. I suggest that our consideration should be, how much are we willing to sacrifice to help our country develop into a great nation. As in all things, without a clear knowledge of what we want, and without a desire and ambition to work for a common goal, all our dreams and hopes are for nothing. As a young person I have a great stake in the future of this country. As I said earlier, it is not at all impossible that within my lifetime Canada will become the leading nation within the commonwealth. How are we going to achieve that position? One answer that I can give is the answer given by our leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker).

In the first place, there must be a vision of our future greatness. There is a biblical saying that without vision the people perish. In the second place, there must be confidence in our own ability and this confidence must spring from a realistic appraisal of our own capacities. Third, there must be a willingness to work hard. These three requirements imply that there must be an orderly and controlled development of our resources. We must guard against too rapid an expansion of our resources, otherwise there will not be the maximum and most efficient utilization of these resources. There must be a controlled development to ensure that it is our country, and every segment within our country, which receives the prime benefit of our resources. There must also be an increase in our population because an increased population means an increased demand for goods and services which, in turn, stimulates production. One result of our present small population is that our producers, in trying to reduce costs, must try to sell our goods overseas, and it is in this field of international trade that we have our most serious problem because we compete with countries who can produce the same goods at a lower cost.

The ramifications of that situation are obvious. None the less, Canada is taking her place industrially in the world. In taking our place we are facing the economic facts of life which industrial giants like the United States of America and Great Britain experienced long ago. We must now have an economic shakedown in which we will gradually gear our activities and our production to our resources.

Such a period of adaptation is difficult at the best of times, but it is aggravated by our high cost economy and by the entry of the U.S.S.R. and communist China into the field of international trade. The Prime Minister underlined the seriousness of the situation when he spoke in the house on January 19. As reported at page 55 of Hansard he said this:

> —there is an offensive in trade that is bound to be one of the most challenging dangers of the days ahead.

The communists have declared economic war on us. Whether or not we can survive will depend upon our ability to meet their competition. All this calls for a mature and realistic appraisal of our obligations. In this connection I suggest that government, management and labour must take time for deliberation and co-operation. Failure to do this will result in our way of life being overwhelmed without one shot being fired.

I think that one of the greatest tasks facing government, business and labour is to embark upon a program of education so that everyone will clearly understand and appreciate the magnitude of the economic war which has been declared against us by the communist countries. In these communist countries there is a continuing process of education. You can call it propaganda or indoctrination or what you will; but there is a program aimed at telling their people again and again what is their goal. We must admit that they can see the results of their planning. We in the free world have nothing comparable because we have been brought up in an atmosphere of plenty. We cannot conceive that, materially at least, things could be better. The other countries have a sense of urgency because they see our material accomplishments and so their goal is not only to equal us but also to surpass us. This economic competition is competition in the fullest sense of the word, and there is no prize at the end but merely survival. This then is the responsibility facing Canadians. As for myself, I am confident that we can survive and prosper. We have the means and the technical knowledge, although in the light of sputnik I have some reservations even on that thought.

In meeting this challenge we must not forget to help the underdeveloped countries because in helping them we help ourselves. I have heard some people criticize the grants which we make to the Colombo plan because they say that charity should begin at home. Mr. Speaker, may I say that it does begin at home because practically all the money which we give to the Colombo plan in order to help these underdeveloped countries is used by them to buy Canadian goods and services. They do not use this money in order to buy things from other countries. So let there be no misunderstanding about the way in which that money is spent. Not only do we in Canada benefit from supplying goods and services to these countries but also we receive their friendship and good will. This friendship and good will is all important, because in the conflict of ideologies which faces us today we are trying to sell our way of life to other countries. However, the bargain counter days of democracy are over. No longer do we see countries rushing to embrace our way of life which is on display before highly critical buyers who are getting increasingly harder and harder to convince that our way of life is in fact the best way of life.

We seem to think that just because another country lives in the same century as we do they should acknowledge the superiority of our way of life, and at times we are bewildered and even angered when our overtures to them are rebuffed. We fail to appreciate their culture and outlook which they have developed over many thousands of years, and in exasperation we throw up our hands and say "We cannot understand them". Of course we cannot understand them because we try to look at them through our own eyes and through our own experiences rather than through theirs. Only when we can look at them through their eyes can we begin to understand and appreciate the differences between us.

Earlier, Mr. Speaker, I spoke about the responsibilities of government, business and labour in co-operating to meet the economic challenge of the communists. How should we go about this task? I suggest the establishing of an organization which will include not only government, business and labour but also representatives of the press. In the economic education of the Canadian people I feel that the press, with all its related media, is the only way in which the man in the street can become acquainted with the facts of this economic struggle. We have as separate organizations government agencies, business groups and labour unions; but I feel that there should be even more cohesive groups working with and not against each other. These groups should be not merely concerned with getting an increase in salaries or in asking the workers to produce more. It is my opinion that once the facts of this economic struggle have been brought before the Canadian people they will be willing to make the necessary sacrifices. It is useless to ask people to do something unless you explain to them the reason why they do it.

Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, the example which the Prime Minister gave to this house after his visit to Asia. He said that cloth which is manufactured in Great Britain and which sells for $1 a yard in Asia is produced and sold by the Japanese for 60 cents a yard, but communist China produces and sells the same thing for 33 cents a yard. But according to other reports, underselling applies not only to cloth but also to things like sewing machines, cement, nails, bicycles, canned fruit, vacuum jugs, electric fans, typewriters, radios, caustic soda, paper, glass, ceramics and some machinery. Reflect for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and you will realize that these items, while insignificant in themselves, are in great demand in the countries of southeast Asia which are beginning to raise their standards of living.

In the composition of this organization which I propose to call the Canada trade council, for want of a better name, I should like to see more rank and file members of labour organizations included because, in the final analysis, they are the ones who will have to produce more and make the most sacrifices. I would even suggest that the government arrange for such a group to visit communist countries in order to see for themselves what is our competition. The few industrialists who have visited communist China and the U.S.S.R., for axample, have returned deeply impressed and indeed deeply frightened by the great advances which they have seen in technology. It is the boast of Premier Krushchev that by 1967 Russia will be the world's greatest producer. From the information which is available that appears to be no idle boast. Only yesterday a United press item from Moscow said this:

> Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's drastic sevenyear plan for catching up with U.S. industrial output over-fulfilled ts first targets by 105 per cent, the government announced today.

This idea of a Canada trade council, is a subject which I said had international ramifications, even though it was national in concept, because this council could be expanded to include all members of the commonwealth. Hon. members will recall the commonwealth trade and economic conference which was held in Montreal last September. The theme was an expanding commonwealth in an expanding world. This theme was singularly appropriate, but I suggest that there should be greater continuity in thought and coordination in action beyond the commonwealth. The idea of a national trade council, designed to educate the people of each country within the commonwealth to the urgent necessity of meeting this communist trade offensive, could, if projected to the international level, provide the driving force to maintain the momentum of the decisions taken at the commonwealth trade and economic conference. Without a larger goal, without a more urgent purpose, trade conferences could become bogged down with national restrictions and considerations. I cannot express too strongly my concern for the need for this economic education, because in the end it is education for freedom.

I have already spoken about the need for an orderly and controlled development of our resources. One of the greatest resources of any country is its people, and so I wish to deal with my other three subjects. These are university students, old age pensioners and housing.

Under the British North America Act education is the responsibility of the provincial authorities. On the other hand, nine out of the ten provinces have received grants from the federal treasury for education. In spite of the efforts of provincial and federal authorities our school facilities and standards are according to reports way behind those of the U.S.S.R. Universities are plagued by a shortage of money, and many are operating at large deficits. To offset these deficits fees have been increased, but these increases have added to the hardships of the students. I do not think everyone is entitled to a university education, even if he can afford it. My concern is for the deserving student who cannot afford to attend university. I know that local scholarships and grants are available, but many of these are insufficient in themselves for the undergraduates. I therefore urge the government to establish national scholarships. These scholarships would be awarded on a competitive basis and the recipient would be allowed to attend any accredited university in Canada. Such a system of scholarships would remove any fears a provincial government might have that the federal government was interfering in the field of education.

There is another suggestion, however, and this has to do with the university loan fund for students. I understand that the University of British Columbia holds promissory notes from students for some $200,000. I am also advised that these notes are 99.9 per cent good, because while it may take the student a long time to repay them they are ultimately repaid. I have no knowledge as to the amount of the funds available at other universities, but I think the integrity of the Canadian university student is the same. That being so, in order to keep the loan funds circulating I would suggest that the federal treasury discount these notes. Thus the government might even make a small profit, and the universities would have more money to loan without having to wait a long time for the money to be repaid. If the government does not consider this suggestion feasible, then I would suggest that the Canada Council, with its huge endowment and its declared purpose of encouraging Canadian art and culture, should investigate this problem facing the universities.

I now wish to speak about old age pensioners, of whom I have a very large number in my constituency. Time and time again I receive letters from these pensioners asking why they cannot receive the pension if they go outside the country. I know that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) has received many representations on this subject, and I assure him that I appreciate the administrative problems which make the payment of pensions outside of Canada difficult. Nonetheless, while the administrative problems present difficulties, I believe they can be overcome. One of the more minor problems is that of identification, and I would therefore offer to the government this suggestion. Why not issue a small identification card to the pensioner when he first qualifies for his pension? This card might be similar to the small wallet-sized card issued on request by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and which has a picture of the applicant sealed between plastic covers. Such a card would be very satisfactory identification, because not only does the card bear his picture but it also bears his signature. I do not think that any bank would hesitate to accept or recognize such identification. If the government is concerned with the possibility of fraud or that the pension cheque might fall into the wrong hands, such an identification card might be one solution.

Mr. Speaker, I now come to my last subject, and that is the matter of housing. My constituency, Mr. Speaker, is a most unique riding. In recent years great changes have occurred, particularly in the residential area known as the west end. Old houses are being torn down daily and apartment blocks are springing up like mushrooms. One of the most urgent problems brought about by this rapid change is the need for space for stores. The west end has its own shopping district, but thee is a danger of the small stores disappearing because as more and more land is taken over for apartments it becomes correspondingly difficult to find space for stores. At present Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will not lend money on apartments if there are stores in those apartments. This might be a good time for the government to consider amending the National Housing Act to permit Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to lend money to build apartments which would have stores on the ground floor.

Hon. members will see that this plan might have some possibilities. Apartment blocks could be built to replace the present old business blocks and at the same time retain the small stores which are such an attraction and convenience to the apartment dwellers. I do not visualize huge supermarkets being built into these apartments but rather shops selling ladies' and men's wear, dry cleaners, drug stores, beauty parlours, small restaurants and other shops offering necessary services on a small scale. I am also convinced that this type of apartment can be designed so as to be functional and yet satisfy the aesthetic senses of those living in the apartment. For example, one might consider an arcade type of apartment. Again, these stores could form the perimeter of a court yard, or the stores could be built facing the street, with the apartment block set back a little and joined to the stores.

I can get quite enthusiastic over the design possibilities, but what is more important is that I am convinced this type of apartment would fill a very useful and urgent need, particularly in areas like Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal. I know that the west end business association of my riding would be very grateful to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) if this scheme could be introduced. The Minister of Public Works has established an outstanding reputation for the highly competent way in which he has administered his department, and I believe that one reason for the minister's popularity is his readiness to listen to suggestions and his approachability. I therefore offer this suggestion to him in the hope that his department will explore the possibilities.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Speaker, could we not by unanimous consent allow the hon. member to proceed? I understand he has nearly finished.

Mr. Jung: If I may impose on the generosity of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jung: Mr. Speaker, my remarks today have ranged over a wide field. In ranging from the need of further financial assistance to university students to the need for awakening every Canadian to the economic war which has been declared by the communists on us, I have done so with one object in mind, and that is the welfare of our country. Our country is recovering from a recession. Notwithstanding this recovery, serious doubts about our future welfare come to my mind when I see various groups acting only in their own interests and without regard for the consequences which some of their acts will have upon other innocent parties. Yet when some of these groups get into trouble because of their actions, they cry and run to the government for help.

Government has its obligations but so does every group within the state, be it business or labour. There appears to be no diminishing of this pattern of activity. Everywhere you turn you hear the question "Why does the government not do something about it?" or "Let the government do it". Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that what many call government assistance or intervention may turn out in the end to be discipline by the state. Phrased in that way, many of us might take a second look at our habit of running to the government for a cure when, as is so often the case, the solution lies within the means of the parties involved.

No one likes discipline and to avoid unnecessary discipline we must first learn how to discipline ourselves. This does not necessarily mean sacrifice but it does mean the practice of moderation in our demands and a more mature acceptance of our responsibilities to others. The Minister of Finance in his budget has given us our terms of reference. I hope that with this new awareness of our responsibilities Canadians everywhere will indeed face the future with confidence in our ability, courage in our actions and faith in our country.

On motion of Mr. Pickersgill the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the leader of the house if it is proposed to go on with the budget tomorrow?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the plan is to go right on with the budget debate until it is concluded.

It being four minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES—DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES

Question No. 93—Mr. Winch:

1. In the year 1958, how many persons in federal penitentiaries were sentenced to corporal punishment for disciplinary purposes and how many in each institution?
2. In the year 1958, how many persons in federal penitentiaries were sentenced to disassociation cells (a) solitary for disciplinary purposes; (b) how many in each institution?
3. In the year 1958, how many persons served a disciplinary sentence in a disassociation cell (solitary) (a) three months; (b) six months; (c) nine months; (d) twelve months, and how many in each institution?
4. How many in federal penitentiaries have been in disassociation cells (solitary) for over a year for (a) disciplinary purposes; (b) ungovernable sexual pervert; (c) ungovernable violent temper; (d) strictly disciplinary purposes, and how many in each institution?
5. Are there any federal penitentiaries where disassociation cells (solitary) are of such a nature that in addition to the barred door, there is an additional steel door cutting out all sight and voice to the inmate? If so, what penitentiaries?
6. How many persons in federal penitentiaries in the year 1958 (a) attempted suicide; (b) commited suicide; (c) were in a disassociation cell at the time, and in what institutions did the aforementioned occur?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice):

1. Twelve; one at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary; eight at Kingston penitentiary; three at Collin's Bay penitentiary.

2. (a) 971 cases; (b) Dorchester, 171, federal training centre, 148; St. Vincent de Paul, 344; Kingston, 57; Collin's Bay, 27; Manitoba, 32; Saskatchewan, 96; British Columbia, 96.

3. (a) nil; (b) nil; (c) nil; (d) nil.

4. (a) nil; (b) one at British Columbia penitentiary; (c) one at British Columbia penitentiary; (d) nil.

5. Yes, Dorchester, Kingston and Manitoba penitentiaries.

6. (a) Three (one at St. Vincent de Paul; one at Kingston; one at British Columbia); (b) One at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary; (c) None in disassociation cells.

LOCKAGE TIMES, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 299—Mr. Argue:

1. What is the lockage time at each lock now being constructed on the St. Lawrence river by the St. Lawrence seaway authority?
2. Is the lockage time the same at each lock?
3. If not, (a) At what locks does the time differ and by how much? (b) For what reason was the difference in lockage time made? (c) How long will it take a vessel to pass through as compared with other locks? (d) What effect will this difference in lockage time have upon the rate of flow of up and down traffic at these particular points?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:—

1. For purposes of economy in construction, operation and maintenance, the lock filling and emptying systems at St. Lambert, Cote Ste. Catherine and Beauharnois were standardized. The design, confirmed by model studies, provides for the raising or lowering of water level in a lock of the maximum lift of 45 feet (Beauharnois) in 8 minutes.

The time of raising or lowering the water level in a lock varies with the height of lift which, in turn, depends on the stage of the river. The average times for average conditions at the different locks are shown in tabular form in the answer to question 3, hereunder.

2. No.

3. (a) and (c)

Lock	Average lift	Average time for raising or lowering	*Average time for vessel to pass through
St. Lambert	18′	6 min.	41 min.
Cote Ste. Catherine	33′	7 "	42 "
Upper Beauharnois	42′	8 "	43 "
Lower Beauharnois	42′	8 "	43 "
Iroquois	2′	4 "	39 "

*Between passing points for upbound and downbound vessels.

(b) Answered by 1.
(d) Virtually none.

Questions

LOCKS CONTRUCTION, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 300—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any of the locks being constructed by the St. Lawrence seaway authority been completed yet?
2. If so, which ones have been completed, and on what date was each completed?
3. Have any of these completed locks been accepted by the Warner-Hersey Company?
4. If so, which ones have been so accepted, and on what dates were they accepted?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:—

1. No, although all are virtually completed and are suitable for operation.
2. Answered by 1.
3. No, it is not their function.
4. Answered by 3.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 15, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Kucherepa (High Park) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—RESIGNATION OF JOHN FOSTER DULLES AS SECRETARY OF STATE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, members of the house will have heard the announcement this morning by the President of the United States to the effect that due to the state of health of Hon. John Foster Dulles, his resignation has been necessitated as Secretary of State of the United States of America. While I realize that this is not an occasion to give an evaluation of his services to the free world, it will be generally agreed that in the six years or more that Mr. Dulles has been in the position of secretary of state he has given direction to the foreign policy of his country with dedicated purpose, with superb courage and with unchallengeable integrity, and that his views and judgments have left their imprint on the history of these post-war years and the history of all peoples of the world who believe in freedom and its maintenance.

Canadians will honour him for the understanding and sympathy he has shown at all times in the solution of the problems which arise from time to time between our country and the United States. I believe I express the sentiments of Canadians as a whole when I say that we hope Mr. Dulles will continue to be associated in some less onerous way with the formulation of the foreign policy of the United States, particularly in view of the fact that one and probably two major conferences will take place in the months ahead, at which mankind hopes new milestones will be achieved to the peace and freedom to which Mr. Dulles gave so unstintingly of his outstanding qualities of mind and heart.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in common I think with other members of the House of Commons I learned with very great regret this morning that reasons of health had compelled the resignation of Mr. Dulles as Secretary of State of the United States. His work in building up the forces of collective resistance in free democracies against aggression has been of immense value. He never spared himself in that work, which he carried on with energy and determination which at times seemed almost superhuman and which undoubtedly was the main reason for the breakdown in his health which has now led to his resignation. If any man was ever a casualty in battle for the things in which he believed, Mr. Dulles is that man.

When I worked with him, Mr. Speaker, I did not always find myself in complete agreement with all his plans or policies, but I was always in agreement with his objectives. I deeply respected his devotion to his ideals and I admired his indomitable courage, the almost religious zeal which he displayed in pursuit of the purposes in which he believed. In Mr. Dulles' resignation the United States has lost a towering and dedicated public servant, and the cause of freedom has lost a great champion.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): We in the C.C.F. regret very much this further indication of the continued deterioration in the health of Mr. John Foster Dulles. Our position in regard to his policies has been made known from time to time. We think it is better at this time to make no detailed or particular comment, but merely say that history itself will judge John Foster Dulles and his policies. We recognize his strong character and the great fight he is waging against this dreadful disease. We regret very much that his health has made it impossible for him to continue the active life that has been his for so many years.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPENING OF NAVIGATION ON APRIL 25

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the ice reconnaissance survey which was made over the whole area yesterday, I am pleased to be able to announce that navigation in the St. Lawrence seaway system will open on April 25.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Bourbonnais (Vaudreuil-Soulanges): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Since the icebreaker d'Iberville will be the first boat to pass through the St. Lawrence seaway on the opening day, which I presume will be April 25, would it be possible for the minister to arrange matters so the members of the House of Commons could be invited on board the d'Iberville on its first trip through the St. Lawrence seaway?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to report to the hon. member and to this house that invitations are in the process of being prepared inviting all hon. members and all hon. senators to be aboard the d'Iberville, and it is my sincere hope that a goodly number will find it possible to be aboard.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that, according to the Montreal press this morning, shipping men in the Montreal area do not know to whom to apply for permission to transit the new St. Lambert lock?

Mr. Hees: I will draw that to the direction of the president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

STARRED QUESTIONS

SUMMIT CONFERENCE—INVITATIONS TO MEET IN QUEBEC

Question No. 51—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Were invitations extended to any countries for the proposed summit conference to meet in Quebec?
2. If so, to what countries, and in what form were the invitations sent?
3. What replies, if any, have been received?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer to the first two questions is as follows.

1. and 2. The governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and the U.S.S.R. have been informed through diplomatic channels that Canada would welcome the holding of a summit conference in this country and that there are facilities in the city of Quebec which would render such a conference in that city not only feasible but appropriate.

3. The French have informed us through diplomatic channels that the Canadian invitation will be kept in mind.

As hon. members are aware, the arrangements proposed by the western powers and agreed to by the Soviet government are that the time and place for the summit meeting will be decided during the foreign ministers' conference which commences in Geneva on May 11. If indications are that the four powers would welcome holding the summit meeting in Canada, formal invitations will be sent at that time.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

TRIPS ABROAD BY MINISTERS

Question No. 52—Mr. Hardie:

1. Have any members of the government travelled outside Canada since taking office?
2. If so, which members, to what countries, for what duration, for what purpose and at what cost?

AIR TRANSPORT FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT, EASTER RECESS

Question No. 53—Mr. Hardie:

1. Was transportation provided by government aircraft for any members of parliament to and from their constituencies during the Easter recess?
2. If so, for what members of parliament and for what members of their families, if any?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

Motion No. 30—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and each provincial government since April 1, 1958, regarding the roads to resources program.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Stand.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This motion has been on the order paper now, I imagine, for months and the minister keeps requesting that it stand. I have no objection to that procedure even today, but it would seem to me that the action the house should take is to pass this motion and await the return in the normal fashion.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should be quite agreeable to that procedure. I am waiting for the signing of the agreements, and I will be glad to bring them forward.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): If I may, I should like to revert to the previous motions, Nos. 5, 23 and 25. The same explanation would apply.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreeable to the house to take these motions together?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, NORTHERN ONTARIO

Motion No. 5—Mr. Fisher:

For a copy of all correspondence, since September 1, 1958, exchanged between the federal government and the province of Ontario respecting the roads to resources program in the districts of Kenora, Patricia, Thunder Bay, and Algoma.

Motion agreed to.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, ONTARIO

Motion No. 23—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of all correspondence, and any agreements entered into between the federal government and the government of Ontario since January 1, 1958, relating to the roads to resources program.

Motion agreed to.

EAST SAINT JOHN THERMAL PLANT, N.B.

Motion No. 25—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any official thereof, and the provincial government of New Brunswick, or the New Brunswick electric power commission, with respect to the signing of an agreement for the construction of the East St. John thermo plant, for the period June 1, 1958, to date.

Motion agreed to.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS AND SUPPORT PRICES

Motion No. 64—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the agricultural prices support board, the agricultural stabilization board, and officers of farm organizations, since January 1, 1957, referring to the question of deficiency payments and support prices on agricultural products.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and I have discussed this matter and have agreed that in the third line the words "officers of" shall be followed by "dominion and provincial", so it will then read, "officers of dominion and provincial farm organizations". This means it will not be necessary to search thousands of files in order to present communications from locals all over Canada. Subject to that change I am agreeable to the motion being passed.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the amendment to this motion suggested by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING RENTALS, ARMED FORCES, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Motion No. 87—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications between Hillcrest Housing Company of Summerside, Prince Edward Island or any solicitor or agent on behalf of that company on the one hand, and the Minister of National Defence or any official of his department or any other department of government since June 21, 1957, respecting the rental of housing units for personnel of the armed forces.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING ON R.C.M.P. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Acting Minister of Justice if he could give the reason for the delay in calling the conference between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general regarding the R.C.M.P. contracts with the provinces, and the minister said the Minister of Justice would answer this question on his return. I wonder if the minister is in a position to give that reply now.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A conference had been arranged with the attorneys general of the provinces for late this month to discuss the contracts between this government and the provinces for the services of the R.C.M. Police. This conference had been arranged a number of months ago; I think it may have been late last year or at the very beginning of this year. We then considered that it would be advisable to have a meeting of officials prior to the meeting of the ministers to discuss and isolate those points which it was desired to revise. That meeting was set for, I think April 8.

Following that, upon the resignation of the commissioner and the appointment March 31, of a new commissioner, and two or three other changes in senior personnel, it was considered that it would not be convenient to have those meetings at the time they were arranged, namely the first meeting on April 8 and the other toward the end of this month. Therefore I asked the attorneys general of the provinces whether they would agree to a postponement of the conferences until the new commissioner could effectively take control of his task and the provinces, I think without exception, readily agreed to a postponement of the conferences.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACTS FOR PURCHASES OF FUEL OIL FOR NAVY SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister noted press reports relating to protests that fuel oil which could be produced in Vancouver refineries is being bought from the United States for use in Canadian navy ships? Can he inform the house if the contracts for the new contract year stipulate the use of Canadian fuel oil?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Contracts for the Department of National Defence are let by the Department of Defence Production. I suggest that the hon. member address his question to the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Winch: May I so do, and redirect my question?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's first question is yes. In reply to the second question, "Can the minister inform the house if the contracts for the new contract year stipulate the use of Canadian fuel oil" the answer is again yes.

I wish to say, with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, that two new contracts have been placed for the current fiscal year. The first contract covers the supply of 1,750,000 gallons of diesel fuel oil, awarded to Standard Oil Company of British Columbia, Limited, which firm maintains a refinery at Burrard Inlet, British Columbia, and Alberta crude oil will be used. The second contract covers the supply of 250,000 barrels of oil boiler fuel, naval, awarded to the British American Oil Company Limited, Toronto, which firm maintains a refinery at Port Moody, British Columbia, and again the source of the crude is Alberta.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Could the minister tell us the difference in price between the low bidder and the successful contractor in each of the two cases mentioned?

Mr. O'Hurley: I do not have that information, but I will procure it for the hon. gentleman.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED ASSAULT UPON CIVILIAN BY MEMBER OF FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Has the minister's attention been drawn to a report in last night's Ottawa Journal concerning a certain Constable Campbell of the R.C.M.P. and an alleged assault by him upon a Mr. Jones? If so, has the minister made any investigation, and would he care to make any comment thereon?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Yes, I have seen the press report, and I have obtained preliminary reports from the officers of the R.C.M.P. I am advised that as soon as oral word was received on Saturday night from the solicitor acting for Mr. Jones, alleging this assault, the R.C.M.P. authorities made an investigation. This inquiry resulted in a vigorous and complete denial by Constable Campbell—and this was confirmed by the two other policemen who were with him—that he had in any way assaulted Mr. Jones.

Following the publication in yesterday's newspaper of a repetition of the accusation, the police had planned to make a further inquiry, which, on this occasion, was to take the form of an inquiry under oath. Before this could be commenced, however, word was received that Constable Campbell has himself started a civil action for libel against, I believe, both the newspaper and the solicitor who, I understand, made the allegation. After we received word that a civil action had been started we, of course, deferred the further inquiry under oath. That inquiry will be deferred pending the outcome of the civil litigation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN RAILWAY AND UNION REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister give the house any information regarding the recent discussions between representatives of the Canadian National Railways and those of the union?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes. I am informed that a lengthy meeting took place yesterday afternoon between Mr. Donald Gordon, president of the Canadian National Railways, with other senior officials of the railway, and Mr. W. E. Gamble, vice president of the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and enginemen, accompanied by the general chairman of the union. After detailed discussion the union representatives refused to consider an agreement which would implement the recommendations of the recent federal conciliation board concerning wages and working conditions of the C.N.R. firemen.

Prior to this and other meetings the railway company had relinquished its claim for complete managerial discretion in the employment of firemen helpers and had accepted the recommendations of the board of conciliation, which were based on the principles of the Kellock commission report. In these circumstances the company has therefore informed the union representatives that it has no responsible alternative but to implement the recommendations of the board of conciliation, and a notice is being prepared outlining the amendments to existing conditions of service to take effect as from May 1, 1959.

This notice will be delivered to the union representatives today over the signature of Mr. S. F. Dingle, vice president, operations, and concurrently a personal letter is being sent, over the signature of the president, to all C.N.R. firemen and hostlers enclosing a copy of the notice and explaining its effect.

I am further informed that Mr. Gamble has announced that authorization to strike has been given by the membership of two regions, and that strike authorization is being sought in the third. Management has made it clear to the union that they intend to operate the railway even if this membership withdraws from service.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask the Minister of Labour a supplementary question. In view of this statement, does the minister propose to take any action to avert this strike?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we in the labour department are watching the situation very closely and will take appropriate action at the appropriate time.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he feels that it is in the national interest that there should be a delay in the appointment of a new secretary of state for external affairs until after all matters in this house having to do with the budget have been completed?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the overwhelming interest of my hon. friend in the question of the filling of this position, an interest which he had in earlier days when he was a member of the government of the day. I shall go no further than that in answering the question.

Mr. Habel: Skating around as usual.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister anything further to add to the statement he made in this house on April 9 in connection with the dispute at Polymer, and can he say whether the Polymer Corporation has now agreed to the very commendable offer of the minister, namely to agree to mediation in this dispute as the union has already done.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Polymer Corporation has agreed to mediation services as offered by the Department of Labour. We are now in the process of appointing a mediator.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether, in view of our friendly exchange yesterday in the matter of the Polymer strike, he can advise the house when that strike actually did begin?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the order given by the union was for the strike to begin on March 25. However, this was not observed since the company began laying off men on March 18 and the men went out on strike on March 19.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

WEST INDIES FEDERATION—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN GIFT OF SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister tell the house what progress is being made by those responsible for the preparation of plans and specifications for one or other of the two new ships which the government intends to give to the British West Indies federation? The minister will remember that I asked this question some two months ago, and I think he said the matter was under negotiation and about to be terminated. I would like to know where it stands at this date.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, rather lengthy negotiations have been carried on with representatives of the West Indies with regard to the type of ship they require. I will have to report to the hon. member the progress of those negotiations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COAL

STATEMENT ON APPLICATION OF DOMINION COAL COMPANY FOR LOAN OF $6 MILLION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). An application for a loan was received from the Dominion Coal Company, and the matter was dealt with on February 18 last by the dominion coal board. The decision taken was the following:

Whereas the future operations and markets of the Dominion Coal Company are, in the opinion of the board, too uncertain to justify an expenditure of $5,846,810 for a wash plant, the board recommends that the requested loan for this purpose be not granted.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour following my question to him on April 8 regarding amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. At that time he said the bill was being printed and as soon as it came off the press it would be introduced. Is he now in a position to state whether or not it has in fact been printed, whether it is off the press, or can he give us any further information?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the last investigation into this situation showed that it was still being printed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOOD FOR PEACE CONFERENCE—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of statements which have appeared in the press, which seem to know far more about this matter than the House of Commons, can the Prime Minister now tell the house who will form the ministerial delegation to the forthcoming food for peace conference in Washington on May 4?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As I said to the hon. gentleman yesterday, in a day or two I will give a full report on the matter.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence—perhaps he would prefer to take this question as notice—whether he is in a position to make a report to the house on the food bank proposal which he made to the NATO council a year ago, and which he said was under consideration by the council?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I have nothing further to report at the present moment.

Mr. Pearson: Further than what?

GRAIN

PROVISION FOR MOVEMENT OF TOUGH AND DAMP GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a serious situation in northeastern Saskatchewan, where large quantities of tough and damp grain on farms are in danger of spoiling. Will the minister consider asking the wheat board to institute additional emergency quotas for tough and damp grain only, particularly in view of the unanimous resolution of the Saskatchewan legislature requesting that this be done?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this question was raised on March 3 by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), who has a greater interest in this problem than even the hon. member for Assiniboia. It was also drawn to my attention by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort (Mr. Rapp). Neither of those gentlemen depended upon a resolution passed by the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan in order to draw attention to this serious problem.

Now that the hon. member for Assiniboia is aware of the problem I do not mind repeating and enlarging on the answer I gave on March 3, if it is in accordance with the rules of the house. The problem at this time is not so much one of higher quotas but rather one of sufficient storage facilities at terminal positions to accommodate the volume of grain which must be moved.

The board has been making every effort during the winter months to move high moisture grain out of country positions as rapidly as possible, and for several weeks shipments to the lakehead have been confined largely to this type of grain. As a result quotas in the northeastern area of Saskatchewan are at a generally higher level than in other parts of the west. However, storage facilities at the lakehead have been congested for a considerable period of time, and no large volume of grain can be moved to this destination until after the opening of navigation.

I am assured by the board that immediately space becomes available with the opening of navigation, priority in shipments will continue to be given to high moisture grain, and the railways and handling companies have been so instructed. The railways, in anticipation of the opening of navigation, have already commenced to load grain in volume for the lakehead, and as a result a heavier movement of this out of condition grain is already under way.

Within a very short period of time I am confident that producers in the northeastern area of Saskatchewan with high moisture grain will be provided with additional delivery opportunity in an effort to alleviate the danger of such grain going out of condition.

Mr. Argue: Since the minister's assurance early in March that adequate action was being taken has not been fulfilled and therefore this further question was necessary, can the minister say whether upon the opening of navigation additional quotas will be granted in this area to take care of tough and damp grain so there will not be enormous losses to farmers?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is just repeating a question he has asked before. He is attempting to state an opinion to the house rather than seeking information.

Mr. Argue: I am trying to get an answer to this question. Will consideration be given to special emergency quotas after the opening of navigation?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times an answer has to be repeated in this house, but I will do it again for the hon. member. The problem at this time is not so much one of higher quotas but rather one of sufficient storage facilities at terminal positions—the lakehead, in this instance—to accommodate the volume of grain which must be moved.

Mr. Argue: The minister of no answers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can inform the house when a chairman of the civil service commission will be appointed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The answer is no, not yet.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Regier.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak today on the budget I am sure that all those who listened to the news broadcast at eight o'clock this morning would think me remiss if I did not offer my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on having been selected by the press as the next secretary of state for external affairs. I may say that I join with the press in this tribute to the urbanity of the hon. gentleman and to the tact and diplomacy with which he has always conducted himself in the house.

I may say I do so with even more satisfaction because the post, for reasons which we all so much regret, had scarcely become vacant before I suggested to my colleagues that the most likely successor was the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Prime Minister knowing that was my judgment, will not hesitate to make my prediction come true, though I knew a prime minister in the past who took a certain satisfaction in disappointing the press and even at times, in disappointing the opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do you remember one who disappointed you very recently?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I know of no prime minister, except one, who has disappointed me recently and that is the right hon. gentleman who sits opposite. I was only one of about a million people who have a close interest in the province of Newfoundland who were disappointed by his announcement.

Now, sir, a budget is after all only a reflection of housekeeping. It is a reflection of good housekeeping, or of bad. It does seem to me that the test of a budget is perhaps not so much in what that budget contains, about which I feel there are many of my colleagues on this side of the house more competent to speak than I am—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —such as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan), to mention only two who have already dealt very effectively with the presentation made by the minister the other evening.

I intend to speak on the general theme of good faith and good management, which seem to me to be the two tests that should be applied and which in fact are applied in the long run and sometimes in a quite short run to any government. I want to recall to the minds of hon. members, particularly to hon. members in the Conservative party to my left who perhaps were not here at the time, a few words that were uttered in this house from a seat very close to the one I now occupy, by Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent on the only occasion when he spoke on the address in reply to the speech from the throne as leader of the opposition. His remarks will be found at page 43 of Hansard for October 16, 1957. Mr. St. Laurent said:

> It is over 22 years since the Liberal party was last in opposition. In the 22 years Canada has enjoyed—I use a word that I believe will become more widely used in that connection as time passes —I say in the 22 years that Canada has enjoyed a Liberal government we as Liberals have prided ourselves on the fact that every item on the program placed before the public in each successive campaign has been implemented in full whenever it was possible for the government or for the parliament of Canada acting alone to implement it.

He went on to say:

> This is a record of which we are justly proud. We are also proud of the fact that in these past 20 years the people of Canada have come to take it for granted that the government of Canada acts in good faith and carries out its undertakings to the people. I believe that the good faith in fulfilling undertakings that the public has received from the Liberal government they will now expect to receive from a Conservative government.

I propose to examine a few highlights because, with the record of this government, I will only have time for that, and apply to them the test that Mr. St. Laurent suggested at the very opening of the first parliament after this government took office. I also want, before doing that, to draw to the attention of the house something else Mr. St. Laurent said in that speech at page 45 of Hansard, because it seems to me it is very relevant to what we are considering here now. He said:

> We are all looking forward to the presentation of this budget—

That was in the last parliament.

> —and to a full debate on the case the Minister of Finance will present at that time.

Then I would ask hon. members, particularly those who were here at the time, to mark these words:

> From time to time I have noticed from press rumours that the government intends to make important changes in the fiscal policy of this country without giving the elected representatives of the Canadian people an opportunity for a full debate which, under our parliamentary system, is afforded by the presentation of a budget.

This is Mr. St. Laurent speaking.

> I refuse to believe that a government whose leading members made so much of their attachment to the rights of parliament would seriously propose, both to alter the tax structure of the country and to increase expenditures substantially without giving parliament every opportunity afforded by the rules to consider the whole financial picture and to debate fully the benefits of proposed changes upon the economy.

But that, sir, is precisely what this government did. It is true that the Minister of Finance told us before that parliament met that he was going to bring down a budget. But then he got a message from "le grand chef", who had gone to London, telling him he had made a mistake. "Le grand chef" was not presenting a budget, so there was no budget. The result, of course, gave "le grand chef" an opportunity which he would not otherwise have had; because if we had had a budget in December, 1957 the Prime Minister would not have been able to come into this house with that document which, in the most dishonest performance I have ever seen in this house, on January 20—

Mr. Pickersgill: —of 1958—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will reconsider the adjective he used.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And withdraw it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to waste my time by considerations of that sort. I will say the most incredible performance I have ever seen in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, I withdraw the word. The minister can sit down and not waste my time by trying to prevent me from saying what I want to say.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: As I was saying when I was so rudely interrupted by the new secretary of state for external affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will take my seat at all times when the hon. gentleman does not give cause to members to rise on questions of privilege when he violates the privileges and rules of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister, on that occasion that we all remember, read bits and pieces out of their context from a document which was not intended for publication and which was refuted in a most complete way by the Minister of Finance himself on June 17 last in his previous budget speech, as one of my colleagues will show later in this debate. We had the same old straw threshed over again and the same old tiresome story by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) the other night. He said the Minister of Finance might not have brought down such a budget as he did if they had only known the truth, if Mr. Harris had not concealed it.

Now, sir, when the Prime Minister spoke on January 20, 1958 this government had been in office for seven months, and they stand convicted out of the mouth of the Minister of National Revenue of being so stupid, so incompetent that in seven months they could not find out for themselves what they claim Mr. Harris knew and hid three months before that. This is what the Prime Minister asked the people to believe. With that capacity for making black seem white, which no doubt convinced many juries in the past, he perhaps convinced his last jury; because I do not think he will ever convince another.

An hon. Member: Neither will you.

Mr. Pickersgill: We will see about that. I certainly do not hesitate to appear before the jury that passes on me. If the Prime Minister would like to come and contest my seat with me, it would not give me a bit of worry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to deal first of all with the most recent example we have had of bad management and bad faith, both at once, by the present government. I refer to the recent amendment to the immigration regulations. Now, sir, as a prelude to what I have to say I want to admit that no sensible person would urge the government at this time, when they have the economy in such a deplorable state, when there is such a level of unemployment, to open wide the floodgates of immigration. No one is suggesting that. But we did have an unnecessary and cruel act performed the other day.

I should like to draw attention to what was said about that act by the Prime Minister on April 7 last in answer to a question by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Morton). He suggested that if there was any discrimination in that order, that discrimination was not in the order itself but was in an order in council that was passed on May 24, 1956.

Now, sir, there is always discrimination in the selection of immigrants. Everyone knows there are only two ways to avoid discrimination. One is to let everybody in and the other is to let nobody in. What we want to avoid is improper, unfair and cruel discrimination. I am not suggesting it was the discriminatory character, but it was the restrictive character of this recent order that was at fault. What is really more extraordinary, sir, is that here was a law—because this order in council is part of the law of Canada until it is changed —enacted by the governor in council on March 19, though it was not published for quite some time after that, and here is what the Prime Minister said about it on April 7, as recorded at page 2296 of Hansard:

> I, for one, intend to have this looked into—

He says on April 7 he intends to have it looked into.

> —because the section indicates that the one passed in 1956 had whatever objections can be raised against the present amendment.

Any of us who served under Mr. St. Laurent when he was prime minister know that he would not have had to come to the house two weeks later and admit that he had not taken the trouble to read a document that was before the cabinet and that was to be made a law affecting the lives of people. That was not the way he presided over the government of this country, and it seems to me that no more shocking example of the mismanagement of the Prime Minister could be found than that which the Prime Minister himself gave by that statement.

We are told by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, or by some so-called spokesman for that department, that the reason they made this unnecessary, cruel and inhuman order was to give preference to skilled workers. Of course that is the most unadulterated camouflage; there is not the slightest intention on the part of the government of doing anything about that at all. This order was just a restriction. It was an unnecessary and inhuman restriction, and it was aimed at one community in this country; it was aimed at those people of Italian origin.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: The reason it was done, sir, was that when the government realized that more people of Italian origin than people from the United Kingdom came in last year, they got in a panic. They were afraid of many of their political supporters, and they felt they had to do something about it. Then they did this stupid, cruel, silly and inhuman thing.

An hon. Member: That is pure nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can make his speech on his own time and it will, no doubt, be pure nonsense.

By restricting the number and relationship of the persons who can be sponsored the government has worked the greatest hardship upon many other communities, particularly those people from Poland who for the first time in many years are in some small numbers able to get out of their country, and who, at a time when they can get out, are being met with a slam of the door by this country.

What is more, Mr. Speaker, this was a grave affront to parliament. This order was passed on March 19. We were considering the estimates up until March 18. I happen to know something about the way in which cabinets are run. I know perfectly well that an order in council is not passed on March 19 unless a recommendation has been in the privy council office some days previously. In other words, the government knew perfectly well and the minister knew perfectly well that this recommendation was before parliament at the time when we were considering the estimates. Every member who spoke on both sides of the house complained that the minister was too tough and too restrictive in her treatment of sponsored immigrants. Not a word did she breathe about this restrictive order that she intended to have passed the very day we were denied, under the rules, the opportunity to debate it in the normal course. Then the moment parliament disposed of the estimates the order was passed and, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) admitted, without any consideration.

Also, when I suggested that this was a rather dubious procedure, the Prime Minister took it upon himself to say, as reported at page 2296 of Hansard:

> —I am not sure that the hon. gentleman is strictly right in the lecture on procedure inherent in his question, because I seem to recollect that a similar situation arose when he was minister.

Even if that had been true, it is no excuse for the conduct of the government. If I did something wrong, that is not the slightest excuse for their doing something wrong. But that happens to be totally, completely and utterly untrue in every syllable. Every amendment which I proposed and which the governor in council made to the regulations was announced well before the estimates or during the estimates. One or two procedural changes which were not amendments to the law I announced in the house or in the estimates committee, as the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) will recall, while we were actually carrying on our proceedings, because in one case he took the most violent exception to what was suggested. Hence, whatever else may be said about any of these things, no one can say that I ever at any time attempted to make regulations or to get the governor in council to make regulations at a time when there was not full opportunity given to parliament to deal with them.

There is no need for a long speech on the budget by the hon. lady in order to deal with this matter. All she needs to do is to come in here honestly and admit her mistake, say that this stupid and inhuman order has been revoked and that they have gone back to the situation which subsisted for four years and which for two years the government has had a chance to change, if there was anything wrong with it; and which they did nothing about. I would strongly suggest to the hon. lady, if she were here, that instead of getting the Tory machine to write her one of those essays to say "The Liberals did this and the Liberals did that", she just come in and deal with what she herself was responsible for, say it was a mistake, make the change and get on with the business of the house.

I can deal only briefly with each of these points, but I come now to what I regard as the most shocking example of bad management we have had from the present government. I refer, of course, to the handling of the Arrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Your ammunition is all wet.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hon. gentleman will not expect me to pose as a military expert, and I am not going to do so.

An hon. Member: Or any other kind.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or any other kind, someone says. No, I am simply a representative of the people here in parliament representing some of the taxpayers of this country.

The Prime Minister came in here and told us on February 20, as reported at page 1222 of Hansard, as follows:

> —frankness demands that I advise that at present there is no other work that the government can assign immediately to the companies that have been working on the Arrow and its engine . . . We must not abdicate our responsibility to assure that the huge sums which it is our duty to ask parliament to provide for defence are being expended in the most effective way to achieve that purpose.

Everyone would agree with that second statement. But if that was the case, Mr. Speaker, surely one of two things should have happened after that announcement by the Prime Minister in September. Surely the Prime Minister and the government should have given their attention to putting something in place of the Arrow. There was no possible shadow of excuse for carrying on this program one day after September when the Prime Minister now says he reached the conclusion that this machine was obsolete, except the determination to find something else to put in its place. The government did absolutely nothing about trying to find anything else to put in its place. Instead of that, the Prime Minister made this statement which is like the Delphic oracle which was interpreted in two different ways according to the desires of the people who interpreted it. Then he went off on a trip around the world.

I am going to suggest what would have happened if Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. C. D. Howe had had to deal with this problem. In the first place, I suggest that no speech would have been made in September at all. When they realized, if they had, that this was no longer a proper military program and that we had to have the kind of co-operation with the United States about which the Prime Minister talked so much, I suggest that instead of going thousands and thousands of miles in another direction they would have gone to Washington and they would have stayed in Washington until they got results, just as Mr. St. Laurent did with regard to the St. Lawrence seaway within three months of becoming prime minister. The St. Lawrence seaway would not have been built today if Mr. St. Laurent had not gone to Washington on February 7, 1949 and had that conference with Mr. Truman which my friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) will recall.

The other thing, of course, that was absolutely incredible about the management of the Arrow was this statement which the Prime Minister made about the dismissal of the employees, and I think I should read it. It is to be found at page 1306 of Hansard of February 23. He said:

> Was there any justification to say to everybody, "You are out", and today announce, if the press is correct, that some 2,500 are called back? What was the reason for that precipitate action? Was it necessary? In the estimates it was shown that a further amount of some $50 million was to be expended . . . Why rush them out on Friday afternoon if it was not for some purpose other than the benefit of those employees?

Some days later after that insinuation had gone all over the country and could never be caught up with the government produced the telegrams that were sent from the Department of Defence Production ordering the company to stop work immediately and dispose of its employees. That is why the company had to do it. I am sure they did not do it out of any choice. They did it because they were ordered to do it by the government and because they could not have received another cent out of the contract, as the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) demonstrated in the house, in order to pay wages. It is true they could pay severance pay but severance pay is not wages.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) and I have searched carefully through the estimates and we cannot find that elusive $50 million. Of course, $50 million is apparently a very small sum for this government, but for the taxpayers it is still a large sum of money. The casual way in which the Prime Minister was tossing about $50 million was, I suggest, characteristic of this whole business. It seems to me there was one of two things that could have been done last September about this matter. I may say that I am merely talking about mismanagement and about the budget and about financial responsibilities. One was to stop the production then if the government were not going to do anything whatever about it, as in the event happened—they did nothing —and save that money for the taxpayers. The other was—and I think it would have been a far better course—for the Prime Minister and the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley) and anyone else who might have any influence in Washington, to go to Washington and try to do something about it. But that is not the kind of management of the affairs of this country that we get nowadays.

The other thing about the Arrow which was a very great shock to us was this. Nobody could understand for a long time why February 20 was chosen by the Prime Minister as the date to cancel the contract. Then on March 3 the Prime Minister's supporter and friend, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Walker), got up and told us why suddenly on February 20, without any warning of any kind or preparation of the employees of any sort, this order was issued. This statement was made in the house. Here are the words of the hon. member for Rosedale. He said, as reported on page 1566 of Hansard for March 3 last:

> —a high priced film which was intended to show, subtly, that the Arrow was going strong. Ostensibly the film was supposed to mark the 50th anniversary of flight in Canada but it was mostly about the Arrow. It was offered free to TV stations across the land—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. Pickersgill: From Hansard, the speech of the hon. member for Rosedale.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interfere with the hon. member's prepared speech, but I think even the hon. member knows that reference to a previous debate is not allowed at this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the Prime Minister does not want me to read it I can paraphrase it very well. What the hon. member for Rosedale said was that the reason the Prime Minister acted on February 20 to throw 14,000 men out of work was to ruin a T.V. show.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, no one knows better than the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate how ridiculous that is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a point of order I will hear him.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then we had a lot of real or synthetic indignation about lobbies and how a government which really had the interests of the public at heart would resist all lobbies. I will quote the Prime Minister on the subject of lobbies when he was not Prime Minister, in another session, so I do not think the Prime Minister can prevent these words from going on Hansard. On July 24, 1956 the Prime Minister was speaking on the tax-sharing arrangements in the debate on Mr. Harris' bill, and this is what he said as reported on page 6368:

I do not want to involve myself in any maritime argument—

He has changed from that too since then!

—but I would say this. There is one difference between the members from the maritimes and those from the western provinces, and it is this. While we from the western provinces do disagree, sometimes on the basis of partisanship, none the less when the welfare of the western provinces is being discussed and in particular when our major subject, agricultural production, is being discussed, we bury our disagreements and unite for the common benefit of the western provinces. Sometimes, as I listened to my hon. friends from the maritimes upholding those things which they themselves assuredly cannot support other than vocally, I wonder whether a similar united front analogous to that being formed today by the premiers of the maritime provinces would not have a most beneficial effect upon the economy of the maritimes, especially if that analogy were continued and extended into the House of Commons.

In other words, what the Prime Minister advocated when he was over on this side was that we should have regional lobbies right here in the house itself. Now he objects to other Canadians elsewhere seeking by legitimate means to protect their interests.

Mr. Pickersgill: We can see, of course, how terrified the followers of the hon. gentleman are, because when we on this side of the house have attempted to describe the coal crisis in Nova Scotia and seek to get something done about it we have seen how frightened the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) was—I am sorry he is not here now—to have it discussed. He was so afraid that somebody might say something which might hurt the feelings of the Prime Minister and might indispose him to the Nova Scotian coal miners, with the result that nothing would be done about it. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have reached the stage where if you open your mouth and say something on behalf of your constituents it is a lobby, and nothing can be done about the problem; if you keep quiet and say nothing, then there is no problem and nothing needs to be done. Well, that is a wonderful way of carrying on government!

I would have liked to have had the time to deal with those Atlantic resolutions of the Conservative party about which so much was made before the 1957 election. We all remember that great advertisement which appeared with the pictures of all the candidates, and all those points that they were going to bring about, but I forbear to deal with that for this reason. The other day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in a burst of cynicism, which was unusual for him, said as reported on page 1838, column 1, of Hansard for March 11:

That is two elections ago.

I repeat. He said:

That is two elections ago.

In other words, with regard to anything promised before 1957, there has been another election since, so it does not count. That was the attitude and the position taken by the Minister of Finance the other day in the debate to which I referred.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you taking into account the change in circumstances over the years?

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no change in circumstances. The promise the hon. gentleman was dealing with at that time was the promise to call a federal-provincial conference, and I know of no change in circumstances—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You know of no change?

Mr. Pickersgill: —except the inconvenience and uncomfortable character of such a meeting for the government.

I have many other things which I had planned to say but I have perhaps been more exuberant than I would have wished and I notice my time is running out. I would like very much to go over many of these other promises made two elections ago about which nothing apparently is going to be done. I do say that no more cynical observation was ever made than that made the other day by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) in attempting to put a face upon this volte-face in this budget, and a pretty poor face it was. But I do say that confidence is a plant of slow growth. It is a structure which can be built up only very slowly. Unhappily, confidence is always fragile. It is a most fragile thing, particularly in public life. I am glad that I could stand on this side of the house behind Mr. St. Laurent when he made that proud boast with which I opened my remarks. But this government will not be able to do it. Indeed, the confidence in this government is such that the only thing I can think of with which to compare it is Humpty-Dumpty. You remember that Humpty-Dumpty sat on a wall, and Humpty-Dumpty had a great fall; and I do not think that all McKim's horses and all McKim's men will ever put the Humpty-Dumpty of confidence in this government together again.

In a provincial election in the province where I spent 30 years of my life the premier of that province is giving promises to the people that the Prime Minister has given him the assurance that the proposed $80 million Manitoba flood control scheme will be supported financially by the federal government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How does it look out there?

Mr. Pickersgill: It has looked very different since the budget from the feelings they had before the budget. Out there you have an exact duplication of the situation we had here. You have a spending spree of incredible proportions. But they have seen the morning after, here, and surely that will have some effect. But what I want to say is this: I do not think, after the record of broken promises that we have had from this government, anybody in Manitoba, even a Tory, is going to believe that there will be any contribution to Manitoba. Maybe if it was Saskatchewan it might be different. They cannot feel any confidence that there will be any contribution for them under this scheme unless an act of parliament is passed, and I do not mean just printed in the budget papers; I mean passed by parliament.

But the ultimate in bad faith is what we have seen in recent days. We have seen the Prime Minister take it upon himself to alter or seek to alter the terms of the agreement upon which two nations were joined together into one nation, and there will be other opportunities to debate this question. It will never be forgotten. I said to the Prime Minister just after he made his announcement on March 25 that every Newfoundlander would regard this as a betrayal, and he suggested that I could not speak for the Newfoundlanders. Well, I have been in Newfoundland, and I am speaking for the Newfoundlanders, all of them but one. And then there is the extraordinary attitude taken by the Prime Minister about the supreme court. Here is a court which for three months has been unable to function properly because it has only two judges, and the Prime Minister has the impertinence—and I use the word in its proper sense—to obtrude himself into provincial affairs and say that he will not make an appointment to that court until—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never said that.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was quoted in the press as having said it. If the Prime Minister wants to deny it he can do so afterwards, but not in my time. The hon. gentleman was quoted as having said that he would not appoint a third judge until the province had provided for a fourth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is incorrect.

Mr. Pickersgill: Imagine what would have happened if the Prime Minister had said that to Quebec or to Ontario. It is just because this is a small province. Why does he not say that to Prince Edward Island? They have three judges. They have never had more than three. We have had three judges in Newfoundland—

Mr. Diefenbaker: We?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Newfoundland is a part of Canada, and I think I can say "we" when referring to Newfoundland, even if the Prime Minister cannot.

I can tell the Prime Minister that there is one other question about which not only the people of Newfoundland but the people of all Canada are concerned. When the Prime Minister came into this house on that black Monday and took the side of the law breakers against those who were maintaining law and order he did more to destroy confidence in his government than by any other act he has done or is likely to do, and it seems to me that of all the acts of bad faith which will be remembered against this government that will, for all time, be the worst.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the presentation of the budget now before parliament by the Minister of Finance, I could not help but think that no one in the house within sound of his voice could help but realize his outstanding ability and his untiring industry and devotion to any task with which he has ever been confronted. I have always enjoyed listening to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill): He and I have been friends here for a long time.

We are proud in the rest of Canada to have Newfoundland join in confederation. It has great possibilities. It is the youngest province, but recently it has not been conspicuous for a child-like silence, and I know the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) must have realized that during these last several weeks. It has certainly caused some concern on the part of the government, but that concern was far exceeded by the distress and the excitement that it caused among that old and at one time happy family of Liberals across Canada. I am sure there must have been times when former cabinet members who now sit to your left, Mr. Speaker, must feel the tattered remnants of a once great party—have a gigantic task ahead of them.

I am afraid the hon. member who has just resumed his seat cannot be better described than by the words used of Lord Ronald when he said nothing, he flung himself from the room, flung himself upon his horse and rode madly off in all directions. I think that those who listen to his speech will have realized that he is still riding fast and furious, and still in all directions. I was listening carefully in case there might be something he had to say that I could follow, but I feel it would be unnecessary for me to try, along with him, to resurrect and fight two elections all over again in such rapid succession after such a serious defeat for his party.

The budget now before parliament is a difficult budget. I have listened to a great many budgets in this house. Canada is only 92 years of age. We are a young country. We have a tremendous structure, a tremendous setup of transportation facilities, and high costs to meet, but in the 92 years of our existence we have reason to have pride though it may be mingled with a certain degree of concern about high taxes, deficits and so forth. There is no reason for despair. I have seen great changes here. As a matter of fact, I have listened to substantially more than one-third of all the budgets presented since Canada was born.

Mr. Pickersgill: And most of the good ones.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, but I have listened to just about as many from one party as from the other and I am amazed at the way Canada has survived the absence of the policies that your party did not have. Again I emphasize that this is a young country. If I may be ultra-personal, I might say that my mother and father both lived longer than Canada is old. So there is still hope yet for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and his leader.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was faced with a difficult problem. He had a heritage left on his doorstep because of the smug complacency of a government which was too big and which had been too long in power and which was sitting on the side lines, like Micawber, waiting for something to turn up. They told the people of Canada that there was great prosperity before them. It was a prosperity that was born of defence production; a prosperity into which they had poured $15 billion of the taxpayers' money in 15 years.

The opposition talk about the A. V. Roe situation, or any other situation in which they made such reckless and extravagant expenditures. It is true that it was perhaps difficult for them to understand matters of this kind. They were trying to keep pace with the demands which were being made during the hot war, the post war and the cold war. Had it not been for the hot war, the postwar period and the cold war period, this country, under the lack of policy of the former government, might well have lost its economic independence entirely. More than anything else it was the $15 billion that the taxpayers of Canada poured into our economy of that day that averted that situation. As I listened to the hon. member today and those who are quibbling about dollars and cents and as to whether there are 500,000 unemployed, 499,000 or 507,000, or whether it is so many millions of dollars or not, I ask this question. Do hon. members mean to tell me that this has all developed because the public changed the guard, because the public were tired of a government that had no policy and put in a new government? If you let a country drift for two or three decades, at least over two decades, you cannot repair the destruction in two years.

The party that sits to your left now, or the remnants of that one-time great party—it looks smaller to me than ever before—was very complacent. I have sat in opposition and watched them when they were so large that they did not know what to do with themselves, when they were so complacent that they left everything as it was.

I have great admiration for the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I have known him for many years. He was trained in political technique. I am not so sure, in fact, whether he was trained by the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King or whether he trained the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King, but at any rate between them they kept the public more or less fooled for a long time. I certainly have great regard for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). I have known him also for many years. The older I grow the more mellow I become. The more experience I have the more tolerant I am of the other fellow's problems, and I see his. I do not envy him, but I do suggest to him—since he is not in the house I hope the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will tell him—that I have nothing but the warmest regard for him, and while I cannot from over here do much to help him I would like to ask him to take a suggestion.

I suggest that the crafty attitude adopted by the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King would be an excellent one for him to follow, namely that when things look the darkest, no matter what the problem or no matter how difficult it may be, just wait and see, something will turn up. That has been more or less the policy of the Liberal party down through the years. We have seen a trend, Mr. Speaker—I am not exaggerating when I say this—over the last two decades, as I have said, in this country that had it not been for the $15 billion that was poured into defence expenditures this country might well have ended up, as far as economic dependence is concerned, as a satellite of the United States of America.

I remember how those who are now in the opposition used to come back from Washington and tell us what they told those fellows in Washington. They would say, "We told them that if they put tariffs against this or that what it would mean to us". Oh, how vigorous and loud were they. They were so loud they almost ripped the heather of the bloom in order to emphasize what they were doing. They were doing nothing more than emphasizing their own smug complacency, criticizing the other country's policy when they had none of their own.

The people of the United States are proud; they are great business gentlemen. It has been my experience in years past to do a great deal of business with leading citizens of the United States of America. I was once responsible for a company which did many millions of dollars worth of business over a period of 16 to 18 years. There are no finer business gentlemen in the world. They appreciate you far more if you run your own business and do not tell them how to run theirs. They are shrewd operators and they have much more respect for you if you shrewdly operate your own interests. They have their own economic survival to look after; they have done a good job at it and they do not object to you looking after yours.

No, Mr. Speaker, we had a government in power for many years, as you know very well—that was before you divorced yourself from politics—that always said, "We must not do anything that will be considered provocative by the United States of America". Oh, how those words must ring in the ears of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, because I do not know whether he wrote them or whether Mackenzie King wrote them. Oh, no, we must not do anything to provoke them. Down through the years that has been their attitude.

I say this for the benefit of those younger members. I know some of those older men over there who have been around nearly as long as I have been. Some of them have been around longer, by the look of their faces, I know those men. I am sure they would appreciate the fact that there has been a change of the guard and that we have a new government. They appreciate the fact that we have the most dynamic leadership in the person of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we have had in this country for years. They must appreciate that. If they have not met some of our younger members I will introduce them to them. We have right here in this parliament a great number of young men with the greatest amount of latent ability and background of education and experience for their age that has ever sat in any party in this house since confederation. There is a great future for many of these younger men.

The present Minister of Finance, it is true, had to raise taxes. He had the unemployment problem. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, or any hon. member on the other side of the house, whether that was merely because there was a change in government in the last year or two? It was caused more by the lack of appreciation of our problems in this country by the previous government. We have problems which are purely Canadian. Our forefathers thought of them many years ago. The first leader of our party thought of them. He knew this country was large; he knew we had few people. He knew we were to have transportation carrying charges which would be higher than those that any similar number of people had. He knew we had a frigid and cold climate. He knew that we would have to protect agricultural interests and that we would have to protect industry in this country in order to provide employment for our people.

Those who are sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker, in those days were saying the same thing as an hon. member in another place said not long ago. He is one of the leaders of the Liberal party in another place. He said a few weeks ago that the only hope for Canada was the wholesale development of our own resources. May I say to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate through you, Mr. Speaker, that had that policy been followed and if that policy is followed in the future they will not be criticizing the immigration department; there will be no immigration department. What we will have will be an emigration department because under that kind of government more university graduates and scholars will be trying to find jobs in the United States than will stay in Canada.

These are things that distinguish this party from this old, torn, worn, dusty group which is now almost extinct. We must look to the future, Mr. Speaker; we must plan for the future.

My hon. friend talks about high taxes. He criticized this government for high expenditures. He seems to forget the fact that the former government continued a tight money policy, but at the same time they were taking $600 to $700 million more than they needed. Out of the other side of their mouths they were criticizing Canadians for not investing enough money in our development. At the same time they took $600 to $700 million a year more than they needed and they wondered why we had no money to invest in the development of this country. Had we followed that trend, where would we have been?

I remember many of those finance ministers. I remember the Robbs, the Ilsleys, the Dunnings, the Abbotts and how each of them would change their policy from time to time as often as they changed ministers. I remember how each of them would say, "Why, this is cyclical budgeting. We are going to take the money from you now because we think we can spend it and take care of it better than you can." I remember them criticizing Canadians for not investing in our great resources like the Americans do. Would there be another depression? No, they said, we would never have a depression like we had in the 30's, a depression for which many on the other side blamed the Conservative party as being responsible even though the depression prevailed throughout the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, after taking $700 million a year more than they needed they now turn around and criticize the Minister of Finance because he found the gross national product at the highest level in the history of our country and still 10 per cent of our people are unemployed. Does not that spell a warning to everyone in the house? I say that nobody realizes more than the able Minister of Finance and the colourful and distinguished Prime Minister that there must be something wrong when you have a gross national product of that magnitude and 500,000 people unemployed.

The former government sat there smugly and complacently and disregarded the greatest market we had. They were flying all over the world to find markets in the lowest cost countries in the world and neglecting with reckless disregard and abandon the best market the farmers have had right here in Canada, the home market.

I have had experience in several enterprises connected with raw resources, especially farming. Believe it or not, I am still a farmer. My friend from Twillingate laughs. I will take him up to my farm some day. But, Mr. Speaker, every hon. member within the sound of my voice from Quebec, Ontario or western Canada knows that it only takes about half as many people today to produce the same amount of agricultural products as it did when I entered the house first. From being connected with it I know that with modern machinery it takes only half as many people today to produce as it did a quarter of a century ago. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate nods approval because he knows that problem.

Where then is this country going to find employment for the increased population, a population increasing by 2½ per cent each year through new births and 2½ per cent through immigration? Where is the employment going to come from? Years ago you had to be a farmer to get into Canada but today it is a reason for being kept out of Canada because we do not need farmers. You do not need people in forestry. I remember sending a man to Europe 15 years ago to get 300 men. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate remembers that well because he was the minister of immigration at the time and assisted in bringing them in to work in the bush. Today half as many men will do the job.

Mr. Speaker, then we have the situation with respect to manufactured products. In that regard keep in mind the general advancement we have had in science, technology and automation. Think of the utensils that are used in the kitchen now. Our grandmothers used to wash their clothes on a washboard. Our grandfathers used to grind corn by hand for feed for the cattle. Now you press an electric button. One man today can look after as many cattle, whether dairy or beef, as 10 men did 30 years ago.

So we have all these new things coming into use. As old as some of you may think I am, I am not one of those who believe for a moment that the new machinery is going to ruin employment for the people. There will be more employment available than we have people to take advantage of it if we have a vigorous policy, if we follow the government's policy and develop our raw resources and process more of our own requirements at home in the future, which has been the distinctive policy of the Conservative party since confederation.

The Liberal party has neglected that phase of our development. They have supported a lopsided development in this country down through the years. The result is that they hoodwinked themselves by believing that defence production would ensure permanent prosperity, and they hoodwinked the whole of Canada unconsciously. I know they would not do it seriously. These apostles of world trade have been suggesting for a quarter of a century that you have got to buy before you sell. I do not know of any business I have been connected with where that ever worked out. It has never worked out. They say that you have got to buy before you sell. What has been the result? From early days we have been buying before selling. No other country in the world buys so much per capita as Canada. We buy $273 per capita, the United States of America buys $26 to $28 per capita and Britain buys $48 per capita. We think we can buy ourselves into prosperity. We think we can buy from everybody so we can sell to somebody.

Business is not one-sided. May I say again that I have great respect for the United States government and I do not want to say anything today that would reflect on our international relations. I have many friends in that country. But I say again that we cannot follow such a policy. I remember being in this house when my friend from Twillingate was secretary to the Right Hon. Mackenzie King. When he came to Ottawa first he was a nice looking young fellow. I remember well that when I came here first we were buying about $400 million more from the United States than we were selling them. I remember that in 1930 we were still buying over $3 million a day more. Then, after the 22 long and awful years, which Canada must have been strong to endure, with the Liberal party in power, we wind up buying from the United States $3 million to $4 million a day or over $1 billion more than we sold per year. Did that make the United States take any of our surplus wheat? Did it prompt them to buy any of the stuff we want to sell? No, politics are not run that way. Kissing may go by favours in politics but it does not do so in business.

I know there are some men in this house who have tried hard to mix business and politics but my view after some years in the house is that it is easier to mix politics into business than to put business into politics. It does not seem to me that under our democratic system there is an opportunity to get down to cold facts. We not only have a country of tremendous size but we have built up the strongest social security and welfare state that any similar number of people have ever enjoyed, and we live beside the United States of America. Our labour unions are controlled by heads of unions in the United States. We have no hope of bringing about reductions in wages. I have listened to bank managers from coast to coast telling government to cut down wages, to cut down expenditures and you would think it was as easy as cutting Black Diamond cheese. Can we maintain this welfare state and high standard of living while at the same time accepting any reduction in our net production? No, Mr. Speaker, the only hope for this country to maintain this excessively high standard of social security compared with any similar number of people in the world is to broaden our basis of taxation, more people, more jobs, more industry and more taxpayers. That must be done if this country is to survive.

May I be pardoned for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, if I look back a little bit into the shades of the past. I know the policy of the Liberal party of those years. I have watched a lot of it and I have read about the rest of it. The part that I watched was even worse than the part about which I read.

We know their policy down through the ages, at a time when the United States put a tariff against everything from this country except our raw products. One of the leaders of our party, and the prime minister of Canada at that time, saw a vision. He saw that this country had to do something to keep our own people employed if we were ever going to become a nation. He brought in the national policy which became the fiscal trading policy of this country. Might I say that this is a policy which has never been diverted from and this party is in power today because they told the people of Canada they intended to change the policy then in force and give employment to our own people by processing our own resources. This is the reason we are here, and the reason we will stay here for some time. This is the reason Canada will grow and prosper as our pioneering leaders expected.

I know there are those on the other side because I have heard old quiet Liberals pleading in their ridings and pleading in this house for support for tariff changes. I heard one in this house plead for tariff protection on bones, bottles and rubbers, and he was from Waterloo North. He is not here now; he did not get the protection. But we have watched this down through the years.

The United States of America did not retaliate. They had more respect for our prime minister of that day than any other leader in Canada. In those days the Liberal party was shilly-shallying between commercial union and political absorption by that country.

A few years later the Liberals ran an election on commercial union, and thank the Lord they were defeated. A few years later they suggested reciprocity. The United States, in the meantime, had wanted our raw products. It is true that there is always a joker in the thing. Afterwards it became known that there never was a reciprocity agreement for the Canadian people for all products. There is not an hon. member within the hearing of my voice who can deny that. It was proven two months after the 1911 election that we never had been offered reciprocity except on some raw products. All we had been offered was an open door in the United States for all our raw products. Two years afterwards the new tariff that came in under the Wilson government gave us free entry for more of our products than had ever been proposed in the reciprocity agreement. We, as Conservatives, have been condemned all through the years for turning that down. It was as empty as anything could be.

Then, following that we had the Fordney-McCumber tariff. I remember that well. It resulted in an open door for our raw products. I had been selling cattle on my farm. Overnight livestock prices dropped from 22 cents a pound to 12 cents and hog prices dropped from about 18 cents per pound to 7 cents. The Fordney-McCumber tariff resulted from the fact that the farmers of the western United States saw a little depression coming up and they did not want our cattle coming into the country so they closed us out overnight. This is no discredit to them because they are running their own business. We did not howl about it or run as cry babies to Washington.

Then in 1928 or 1929 they brought in the Hawley-Smoot tariff. They needed cattle again and we sold cattle to them at 28 cents a pound. Then they closed that overnight, too, just when they saw a world depression coming. I, myself, later sold cattle for a nickel a pound. There is an old adage that there is no sentiment in business. I cannot even sell you a race horse if you do not want one, no matter how friendly we are. Do not let us kid ourselves. This goes on down through the years.

The Right Hon. Jimmy Gardiner, who was a great friend of mine and must have been a great friend of many across the way—I am not going to say he was any better than what I see over there, but he was just as good—was a marvellous politician. He never missed a trick. Now, my dear Jimmy, since he is in the twilight of his better judgment, since he knows he is not going to return for another parliament at least, said the other day that there was no use going on with our tinkering experiments for agriculture. He told the members of the federation of agriculture that irrespective of deficiency payments on wheat, floor prices or subsidies, the only long term solution for agriculture is the development of our home markets by decentralized industry across this dominion. Oh, what a difference a few years makes. I said that 25 years ago, and he laughed at me.

Then, I should like to say a word or two about the imperial trade agreements. They were brought about by another revenue tariff brought in by the United States of America. I was here at that time. When the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett saw that he said that our only answer was to call an imperial trade conference. May I make it short, because I see my time is going. The imperial trade agreements that were brought in in 1930 have been the most misunderstood, the most underrated, the most misrepresented by the Liberal party, every one of whom condemned them, of any trade agreements that have ever been entered into by this dominion. What did they do? They fixed the situation in Europe and in England where, for instance, we were selling only five per cent of British Columbia fir timber. At that time the United States was selling over 65 per cent of the British requirements. A year after the imperial trade agreements we sold over 93 per cent and the United States sold only 6.3 per cent.

In so far as our agricultural and other products were concerned, we sold over 43 million pounds sterling during those depression years. During the next two years, with a world depression, that market increased to 71 million pounds. We saw more United States factories built in Canada in a time of depression than have ever been built in Canada by the United States even in the most lush times. This is the history, gentlemen, of this situation that we dare not ignore.

We know that the United States suffered a great body blow so far as her markets in Britain were concerned. They knew it. The result was that in 1937, after Africa had been supplying the British with oranges and grapefruit and Australia had been supplying them with other fruits, wheat, barley and other products, the United States was so desperate that the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King and his party sacrificed many of our advantages under the British preferential agreements in order to please the United States of America and make a deal by which they could draw up an Anglo-American treaty. They were so complementary to each other that they were both signed on the same day, November 17, 1938. We surrendered the advantages that we got and left the door open for more competition in our home market.

What is the result today? In 1955, one of the last years of the Liberal government, just as they were quietly slipping out of office, we were buying $3.5 billion worth from the United States of America, and about $900 million worth of stuff that we could have manufactured here at home. United States statisticians and economists brag about the fact that they had about 700,000 people employed in the United States producing products for consumption in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is almost too late. It is later than we think. Canada cannot afford this any more than we can afford to compete in this cold climate with the tropical production of agricultural products. In Canada in our manufacturing industry you can take your coat off and work in your shirt sleeves when it is 50 degrees below zero. But if you try shovelling snow behind the barn when it is 40 degrees below zero and try to compete with Australia or New Zealand in the dairy industry, then you will find that we have a difficult situation.

The GATT agreements were drawn up ten years ago by the former government. Hon. C. D. Howe at that time said, "We have lowered our trade barriers; we have done more to make it possible for people to sell in Canada than has any other country in the world". When he went into the trade agreement it was like going into a gun battle after you have thrown away your gun. What happened? Is there an hon. member who can rise in his place and tell me that the general agreement on tariffs and trade has helped industry and development in this country? It has not helped one iota. The situation is similar to that in 1930 when the Liberal party wanted to have a countervailing situation. They became tired of their free trade doctrine. They wanted to have countervailing duties. The late Mr. Dunning said, "We will have a countervailing situation. If Washington raises tariffs, we will raise ours." In other words, we delegated our responsibility in fiscal matters to Washington. Then they go to Geneva.

Mr. Speaker, these problems are purely Canadian problems. This climate is purely Canadian. Our geographical situation is purely Canadian. I just want to say this. With the great forthcoming Russian competition, with Japan selling today for 40 per cent less than the United States with her mass production can supply goods in Europe, and with China selling for one-third or 30 per cent of the cost of our product, do you mean to tell me that the European bloc is going to solve our problems? The only place where these problems can be solved is here. They are Canadian problems and can only be solved by Canadian policies.

Whether we like it or not, I am satisfied that we are living in a different age. I have long since awakened from dreaming about the federation of the world. Some day when we are all one family, with NATO and all the rest combining in technical matters, in science and military affairs, and everybody being his brother's keeper, everything will be fine. That sounds fine and it will be fine. But when it happens, certainly some of us older ones are going to be upstairs looking down. It is going to take a long time.

But in the interval, Mr. Speaker, let us not fool ourselves. These problems are purely Canadian. We have the highest rate of cost of any people in the world per capita. We bring in more from outside the country than any other people in the world. We are recklessly extravagant because we have the greatest resources of any similar people in the world. The great St. Lawrence development, the great two systems of railways and all that they mean cost money. The only hope for lower taxes, for Canada's long term solvency and security, whether in war or in peace, is more people; and in order to get them we need more jobs and more industries. We need encouragement for those industries just as much as we need it for the farmer.

Agriculture is extremely important. When I entered this house first, 45 per cent of the people were employed in agriculture. Agriculture was the backbone of the country. I worked that "backbone" idea until everybody got tired hearing it. Today the manufacturing industry produces more national wealth and gives more employment than all of the primary industries combined, including agriculture, mining, oil wells, fishing and lumbering. I recall reading the other day a C.N.R. survey report in which it was stated that they had studied industrial centres like Joliette, Three Rivers, Stratford, Ontario, and other places—seven or eight of them—and had found on the average that 100 men employed in a plant gave 427 other jobs and meant a million dollars of retail business. Mr. Speaker, just stop and think of what we could do in our democracy.

In my closing remarks, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that these problems are unique to Canada and must be solved in Canada. Do not let anybody tell you that during the regime of my hon. friend who just preceded me and who is temporarily at least leading the party, you led the world because you did not. In ten years following the war old England—and many in their party thought that she was all through—increased her industrial activity by 48 per cent. Australia increased hers by 40 per cent. West Germany increased hers by 53 per cent. The United States increased hers by 37 per cent. We increased ours by only 25 per cent. We have fallen down. We have lagged behind the world. It is a wonder some of their friends in the other place cling to the old dusty doctrine that we have nothing to sell but our resources, that we do not know how to make things out of them.

In conclusion I would just say this, Mr. Speaker; when I see you rise I will sit down. I say this to the government in all sincerity. I have absolute confidence in this government, in the leadership and in the great battalions that is behind them with their youth and ability. But, Mr. Speaker, these are purely Canadian problems and they cannot be solved by policies fashioned in Washington or anchored in Geneva.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, you have no doubt noticed the prolonged applause that followed the speech of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). Our friends opposite probably meant this as an expression of their great joy, because the representative who just sat down made them forget for a few minutes the intense blackness of the budget submitted last week by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I can understand their rejoicing and hardly blame them for it.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just sat down again recalled the years of deep darkness which, according to him, marked the period during which the Liberal party was in power. Well, as I looked at him a moment ago, standing there tall and erect, pinkcheeked, firm of voice, dapper, in a freshly-pressed suit, with a handsome tie, white silk shirt and gold watch, I said to myself: "Well those 22 years of Liberal rule were not so hard on him, after all!" Judging by his looks, I would be very very much surprised if the hon. member had suffered any hardship during those years of Liberal administration. He certainly was not brought up on dishwater and blueing.

And now, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the matter we should be considering, the budget speech. I hope the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe will bear me no grudge if I do not continue in the same vein as he did, harking back to remote antiquity. Before I go on, may I express the wish that he remain as healthy and jovial during the years of Conservative government that lie ahead, as he was during those of the last Liberal regime.

Mr. Speaker, last year, the hon. Minister of Finance introduced his first budget to the country; it was the first budget of his parliamentary career. When he announced small tax reductions, we said that they smacked of funerals. In fact, they had to do with cut flowers, rat poison and ambulances. Today we readily realize that, in fact, he was preparing a first class burial of all those promises and illusions which the Tories had advertised in the last election campaign.

Mr. Speaker, the budget introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance last week is one which is worthy of the last Conservative regimes, worthy of Mr. Borden, of Mr. Bennett and, 30 years hence, history will record that it was worthy of Mr. Diefenbaker. No one will escape its effects. All classes of citizens, small, medium or big, wage earners, individuals, corporations, all are affected. There is a general tax increase in all fields. And the hon. Minister of Finance, who is well known for his poise, came into the house the other night, without a quiver, and announced with a smile on his lips that the deficit was not very high, only $600 million. What a piece of news! What a great joy for the people of Canada!

However, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Finance could not help looking a bit crestfallen and his smile was a bit strained, because he introduced that evening an unprecedented peacetime deficit, a peacetime increase in taxation which we had never seen since the Borden and Bennett regimes.

Mr. Speaker, what cannot be overlooked,—and what our friends opposite forget to tell us—is that not a single promise made in the course of the last election campaign has been fulfilled. The government was elected on false promises and, today, coming as they do here to violate their promises, I say, like the whole Canadian people at present, that they do not deserve our confidence. They distorted the facts, they ignored their promises: they should then resign at once, before it is too late.

And that, Mr. Speaker, is but one instance of two years of Conservative government. What will be the situation two years hence?

An hon. Member: The finish!

Mr. Dupuis: In all parts of the country, people say that they want a change of government. Everywhere in the streets we hear people say: "Just wait, as usual, they won't be there for long."

Yesterday evening, the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) made a surprising speech. He who had promised to all and sundry that a Conservative government would mean prosperity and lower taxation, told us that in his view the Minister of Finance's decision to boost taxes was a very wise one. Drawing a comparison, he said: Look at France, General de Gaulle is popular. Everything is shipshape over there and yet he has increased taxes. Therefore we are also right in raising them.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in France, when General de Gaulle took over, was different. He came at a time when that country was in a deplorable state, without a stable budget, whereas, when our friends opposite came into power, they found the country in a state of prosperity never before reached in the course of our history. And in order to make the hard pill of taxation easier to swallow, the Minister from Quebec pointed out that during his budget speech the hon. Minister of Finance had spoken in French for one minute out of two hours. That is a fine effort on his part! That is grand! We appreciate it very much, but you may be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the French population of Canada would have preferred to hear him speak English during that minute or two, if it could have served to announce lower instead of higher taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall the promises made by our friends opposite. Oh, I know they do not like being reminded of those fine promises, advertised in the weeklies of the various constituencies they represent here, extraordinary, fantastic, astounding promises. "We shall reduce income tax." "We shall abolish the sales tax." "Under the Conservative government, nobody will suffer from unemployment." "We shall undertake huge public works projects." "We shall call at once a federal-provincial conference to solve fiscal problems." Two years have elapsed since then, and the conference has not yet been called. We are still waiting. "We shall appoint an ambassador to the Vatican." It is about time to do so. "We shall abolish the wastage of people's money." "We shall reduce the wastage in the Colombo plan." "We shall see to it that the provinces regain their autonomy in the field of education." "We shall abolish federal help to universities." "We shall increase family allowances." "We shall grant old-age pensions to people at 60." "We shall introduce an emergency measure to protect our textile industry against dumping." "We shall introduce, at the very first session, a vast farmers' assistance program." Ora pro nobis.

Mr. Speaker, all that was vision. All that was but idle promises. All that was but a joke. And, as an illustration of the monumental blunder of our friends opposite, here is a cartoon which appeared in the Toronto Star. You can see it as well as I do, since you are not very far, Mr. Speaker, just look how fine this is. Here is the Prime Minister; he looks very natural. And, standing by his side, is Mr. Fleming, the present Minister of Finance. And then, you can see John Q. Public in front of both.

Mr. Pigeon: I hope it is not Smallwood?

Mr. Dupuis: No, he is not as "small" as the hon. member who has interrupted me. And then, we have the Prime Minister of Canada inviting John Q. Public to look through a telescope, and telling him "Come and see the fine vision". Unfortunately, John Q. Public is being shown the telescope by the wrong end. And, while John Q. Public is peering through the telescope, there is a certain Mr. Fleming coming behind to tell him, while he is snatching John Q. Public's wallet: "Now, come here my child." And John Q. Public is standing before the Minister of Finance who says to him:

(Text):

Come and see the nice vision.

(Translation):

And, Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that we may not copy that cartoon, because, frankly, more than one Canadian would find it singularly timely. May I put it on the record, Mr. Speaker?

A few moments ago I referred to some fantastic promises made by our friends opposite, but we should not forget that in addition to not fulfilling those promises, they took the same action they had condemned in the past.

Last winter, I was listening to a French television program, and I had the pleasure of seeing the Minister of Finance with the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Martel) sitting on his right and the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Drouin) on his left. It was really something to see! The hon. member for Dorchester had in his hand a small sheet of paper and, turning towards the minister, as we used to do at school during the rhetoric class, he said: "Mr. Fleming, is it not true that the country is going through a period of amazing development?" And Mr. Fleming replied: "Yes indeed, we will restore the nation's prestige." Then the hon. member for Chapleau asked. "Is it not true, Mr. Finance Minister, that the country has been waiting a long time for the return to power of the Conservatives?" "Indeed", replied the Minister of Finance, "Canada will be going through years of prosperity such as it has never known."

Well, Mr. Speaker, that was a program for political meetings, a monumental hoax, a television program, a huge joke, all lies and false promises.

The other night, the Minister of Finance recalled in this house a little story which, he thought, was most original. This is what the Minister of Finance told us on March 30, 1953:

I speak as one who does not smoke and who is not personally affected by this present bill.

We were considering the excise tax bill on cigarettes, and the hon. member went on to say:

But as a non-smoker, I wish to say that I think the taxes on cigarettes and tobacco are still too high. I wish to say also that, if we have a smuggling problem at the border today with respect to cigarettes it is largely the creation of this government by its boosting sky-high of excise taxes and other impositions on cigarettes, particularly the large advances in taxes that were made two years ago.

Now, when the Minister of Finance was just an opposition backbencher, he used to attack the Liberal government which was then having budgetary surpluses, saying that, when the government wanted to raise the excise tax on cigarettes, it was contributing to inflation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the same Minister of Finance came to us the other evening, well groomed, with a nice Fleming smile, to announce that he proposed to increase the excise tax on cigarettes. What promises! What results! What disappointment! And, just do not try to tell the Minister of Finance that he was wrong! Oh! no, his budget is a fine one, the deficit is only $600 million. He will not accept any comments, nor any criticism. He knows where he is going.

He reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of the Pharisee in the Gospel who exclaims: "I thank Thee, Lord, that I am not like other men. I do not smoke, I do not drink, nor am I the same type of minister of finance as my predecessor, having never indulged in too many surpluses."

Mr. Speaker, there is also another member, now a minister in the cabinet of our friends opposite, who made the following statement, as reported on page 492 of Hansard for October 29, 1951. Here is the statement made at the time by the hon. member for Three Rivers, who is now the Solicitor General (Mr. Balcer):

Finally, another means the government has found to meet the rising cost of living is the setting up of an additional cigarette tax—truly an unduly high tax. I submit that the government is now inducing the Canadian people to become the greatest smugglers in the world.

Mr. Speaker, not only is the present Conservative government driving Canadians to become the greatest smugglers in the world, —when people are starving, you never know what they can do—but it is driving the country back into the dark days of the former Conservative government.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Minister of Finance that, when he was in the opposition, he blamed the Liberal government for daring to increase the 4 per cent tax levied by Bennett, namely the federal sales tax. And here we have, as Minister of Finance the same man who, in the past, would shout and rant against an increase in the sales tax and declare that if the Conservatives were elected to office, they would remove that evil tax which was creating inflation in Canada.

Here is part of a remarkable speech made by the Minister of Finance when he was in the opposition. Discussing the sales tax, he said this:

(Text):

This tax still applies on clothing, boots and shoes, furniture, some processed foods, all of which are basic necessities of life. Is it any wonder that today we are not very far away from the danger of recurring inflation? I do not believe even the minister will stand up in this house and say that the danger of inflation has passed. Then why does the minister insist on heaping up these indirect taxes which have such an inflationary effect. They boost the cost of living; they reduce the value of savings and insurance and make more difficult the lot of those who are trying to procure housing for themselves. This budget lost a great opportunity to do something for the people with small means or small incomes in neglecting to reduce the sales tax.

(Translation):

Well, Mr. Speaker, last week, despite all the promises that he had made, the same Minister of Finance who was then opposed to sales tax informed us without flinching, that he was now increasing the sales tax which he condemned in the past.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I have here a quotation of the man who is the present Prime Minister. Here is what he said on February 15, 1954, about the new sales tax:

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sir, there is a move the government might make, the removal or reduction of the sales tax that in considerable measure acts as a detriment to the expansion of trade through competition.

(Translation):

And they dare today raise the sales tax!

When the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) made a speech last night, did he refer to the appointment of an ambassador to the Vatican, he who had so insistently urged the Liberal government to take such a step? Did he refer to that matter, he who, during the last election campaign in the province of Quebec used to blame the Liberal government for not having appointed one while all recognized countries in the world have their ambassador there? If last night the Secretary of State had been consistent, he would have repeated what he said in the House of Commons at the time the Liberals were governing the country. I quote from page 553 of Hansard of March 18, 1952, where I find what he said then:

Mr. Courtemanche: But I wonder why Canada goes on ignoring the existence of the Vatican, where the other great nations of the world, nations which sometimes count an infinitely small minority of Catholics make a point of being represented by an ambassador or other official envoy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do say this to the Secretary of State, to the Minister of Finance, and to the Prime Minister: You promised to reduce taxes, but you did nothing; you promised to balance the budget and you give us a budget showing a deficit of $600 million; you promised to abolish taxes on cigarettes and you increased them; you promised to abolish the sales tax, and you increased it; you promised to name an ambassador to the Vatican and you do not talk about it any more; you have repeatedly deceived all the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as far as corporation tax is concerned, the Minister of Finance, when he used to sit on this side of the house, had this to say:

(Text):

What were the effects of the increases last year in the corporation taxes? They were passed on wherever possible and the effect was inflationary, as it added to the cost of living.

(Translation):

And, Mr. Speaker, during the discussion of the budget in 1952, and still in the same speech, Mr. Fleming told us as we can see on page 1535 of the official record of April 23, that the increase in corporation taxes automatically brought about a raise in rail and telephone rates.

Well, Mr. Speaker, even before the present hon. Minister of Finance announced an increase in corporation taxes, the Bell Telephone Company has been allowed—under a Conservative government and without consulting Parliament—to increase its rates while railway companies are increasing their freight rates.

And, Mr. Speaker, there are still people in the province, in this country and even here, who attempt to discredit a government that was a thousand times better than the present administration of this country.

I now refer to another page of Hansard where I find a statement made by the present Minister of Finance on March 12, 1952, as may be seen on page 375:

(Text):

I may say that the time has come—and this is my final word—

(Translation):

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that his last word has not been spoken yet.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker—when this government should be told to let the people handle their own money. We want to develop the resources of this country. We have to have capital. That capital must come from the savings of the people and from profits. We must have that kind of capital. We must have savings. We cannot have them if the government is going to go on fleecing the people of this country by gouging them with these heavy taxes. We are depending today far too heavily on foreign capital for the development of these resources. We want to see more Canadian capital going into the development of our own Canadian resources. We must have increased savings. We must have increased earnings in Canada. We cannot have those as long as the weight of federal taxation in this country is so seriously retarding Canadian enterprises.

(Translation):

And the same Minister of Finance has completely changed his mind since he has been in office. Not only does he not abolish the corporation income tax, which helps increase the cost of living and creates inflation, but the Minister of Finance, solemn and unflinching, stands there proudly to announce that his Conservative government is increasing that tax which he had previously denounced.

There are other passages which I could quote, and which show what he thought of the then government, for instance his statement of March 3, 1955, but which he now denies.

Mr. Speaker, need I recall all those things? There is not a single Canadian who does not know how the Conservatives betrayed their good faith during the general election. How many promises were made which remained a dead letter? The hon. member for Three Rivers who is now the Solicitor General, rose in the house in 1956 and blamed the Liberal government for its failure to raise family allowances. It was the same minister who travelled through the province of Quebec in the last elections, making speeches in favour of our friends opposite. He would say: "We Conservatives have some consideration for large families, and we will increase family allowances." Have they been raised? No.

The only increases we have seen since the budget was laid down have been tax increases, in short increases of every kind, but never an increase in social welfare benefits. Those were false promises, misleading words to hoodwink the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, a while ago I heard my friend the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe claim that the Liberals had done nothing for this country. I suppose they did nothing in the field of social welfare! No social legislation was passed by the Conservatives. The legislation concerning old age pension, the blind, the disabled, unemployment insurance, family allowances, was enacted by the Liberals and gave something to the people.

In regard to the sovereignty of this country, did the Liberal party not go forward? Under the able guidance of the Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent, did the Liberal party not give Canada a sovereignty which was unknown before? At this stage, I only want to mention some of the measures passed by the Liberal government, which have brought about the recognition of the sovereignty of this country: the Canadian Citizenship Act, a Liberal achievement; the abolition of appeals to the London Privy Council, a Liberal achievement; the repatriation of the Canadian constitution, a Liberal achievement; the appointment of a Canadian governor general, the establishment of a Royal Military College in the province of Quebec, the setting up of an autonomous Canadian military force, all those were Liberal achievements.

In the administrative field, the Liberal party has given this country the finest years of prosperity ever enjoyed by Canada. Under the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose policy we are proud to continue; under the guidance of the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King whom we respect and venerate as a great Canadian leader; under the guidance also of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, this little French Canadian from Compton, who made this country famous throughout the world, the Liberal party has endowed Canada with a prosperous administration. It is claimed in this house that the Liberal party did nothing for 22 years. Everything the Liberal party did has been of benefit to those very people who, today, talk with indescribable ingratitude.

Mr. Speaker, through the fault of those same people who misled us and abused the Canadian voters, with the help of the Duplessis administration which our friends hold in such high esteem, every year, in the province of Quebec we are losing—I am referring to the federal field—millions of dollars we should be receiving from the federal treasury. The citizens of Quebec pay taxes just as the rest of the country, and they too contribute to the country's development, but when the time comes to receive their fair share of the money they have paid out, and which should be distributed to all Canadian provinces, it is another matter. This through the fault of those very people who are now facing us from the opposite side of the house, and who lied shamelessly in the last elections, saying to the people: "Vote for us, the Duplessist candidates, and when we get to Ottawa, things will change. You want an ambassador to the Vatican? He will be leaving the next morning." Apparently, he has not yet taken the boat.

The same people also declared: "We will abolish grants to universities". What a farce! Have the grants been abolished? On the contrary, they were rapidly increased. What a bunch of jokers!

They also promised to put an end to contributions to the Colombo plan. And, Mr. Speaker, it was quite a sight to see the publicity we were subjected to in Quebec, with full pages in daily and weekly newspapers: "The Liberals give to the Colombo plan; Mr. Duplessis gives to his province". Those same people travelled throughout the province making this statement: "Vote for us, send us to Ottawa, we will straighten things out and bring back the taxpayers' money given away to the Colombo plan". Once in power, they do not get the taxpayers' money back from the Colombo plan; instead of that, they allocate even more of the taxpayers' money toward the Canadian contribution to the Colombo plan. Liars! Whited sepulchres! Pharisees!

Every year the province of Quebec loses millions of dollars by refusing to accept federal grants for the building of the trans-Canada highway and help to universities and other federal grants in different fields, when taxpayers in my province are paying the same taxes as any other Canadian taxpayer.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we, the Liberals, want to live as Canadians, we are proud of being Canadians and I will point out the great difference between the Conservative party and the Liberal party. The Liberal party is a national party with a single concept, a single thought and a single national philosophy.

Chameleon-like, the Conservative party changes its color or philosophy according to its environment. Go out west, you would hear a speech prepared for people of that part of our country. But, in Quebec, the speech is altogether different.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would rather be a member of a truly Canadian party, such as the Liberal party. We, Liberals, are in favour of the Colombo plan and we never said otherwise.

We also hold that the rights of the French language should be respected. You will never be able to quote a Liberal member as saying anything in this house against the French language. However, we have heard an Ontario member, on the Conservative or Tory side, remind us that it was one of the privileges we owed the Freemasons to be able to speak French in this country.

Such statements are vicious and unfortunate and they undermine national unity.

Mr. Speaker, you have never heard any Liberal member come out against "O Canada" as the national anthem. However, within the Conservative party, two ministers—quite candidly, suddenly, without thinking it over, and without any question having been asked—said that they were against "O Canada" as a national anthem.

Mr. Speaker, before closing, I might say that the Liberal party has given Canada a solid doctrine, and a Canadian citizenship that is recognized everywhere. And this brings back to my mind the trip made abroad by the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent. I recall that when he walked into Notre Dame cathedral in Paris—the story was reported at length in all newspapers—when this grand old man with silver hair walked down the central aisle, the grand organ of the cathedral broke into "O Canada, our Home and Native Land", That, Mr. Speaker, was a great day in our history.

We are now living in troubled times, that of the Conservative regime, which take us back to the dark years of the Bennetts and Bordens. Two years in power, and all promises broken. I shall now take them one by one, and you will note that all of them were broken. Instead of administering the country, they will joke about the whole thing.

The Conservatives had promised to reduce the income tax; they increased it. They have promised to abolish the sales tax; they increased it.

They also said that nobody would suffer from unemployment. I need not say more on this count.

They said they would undertake huge public works projects. Those are still to come.

They had promised—that was in 1957—to call a federal-provincial conference at once. I feel they are not very anxious to do so, lest they be criticized by the provincial delegates.

They had promised to appoint an ambassador to the Vatican. As I said a few moments ago, he hasn't taken the boat yet.

There was also a promise with regard to restricting the waste of the people's money, comprising aid under the Colombo plan; now the Canadian contribution has been raised.

We had been promised provincial autonomy in matters of education; our friends from the province of Quebec just voted an increase in the assistance given to the universities.

We had also been promised a raise of family allowances; we are still waiting for the Solicitor General, that fatherly minister, to do so.

There had been a promise of old age pensions from age 60; there are now citizens who are 62, 63 and even 64, but they are still waiting.

We had also been promised an emergency act to protect the textile industry against dumping; we are still waiting for that.

We were also told of plans to launch a vast program to help our farmers; that is still to come.

Mr. Speaker, all hon. members have the duty to denounce that phantom budget which has deceived the good faith of our voters and to tell this country right out: "The Conservatives have made promises which they did not keep, they have mentioned a vision for which you are paying dearly today. Wake up before it is too late."

(Text):

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have this opportunity to take part in the budget debate. I remember having my name on the list last year and the debate concluding before I had the opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on his budget. Almost a year has passed since then and we are now in a good position to assess his achievement in last year's budget. I recall the expenditures it provided for such things as home building, a program that took approximately $550 million out of the treasury of Canada last year; the millions of dollars approved to improve the condition of the aged, the blind and the incapacitated; the supplementary payments to the maritime provinces to support their recovery after 22 years of Liberal rule; and the grain assistance payments to the farm people of the prairie provinces.

As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) indicated on budget night, the present budget is a record-breaking one for peacetime or wartime expenditures. Last year his criticism of the budget was that it was not planned. This year his criticism of the budget is that it was not planned. Last year he said it "growed". This year he said that "it only happened". He has not changed his tune very much, though he was somewhat subdued in his criticism this year and his whole attitude indicated that he was not eager to indicate that there would be a million unemployed this year or that there would be a billion dollar deficit as he indicated last year.

When all arguments of logic failed him he drew on the reconversion loan of last summer, garnished it with the bond market weakness in the United States of America and came up with the significant question as to why the government is not undertaking a study as is being undertaken in the United States with regard to the outstanding bond market weakness there. Any third grade student could have told him that the government foresaw conditions and launched the reconversion loan drive rather opportunely to protect the refinancing of Canada's war loan maturities which were products of the Liberal government during wartime.

When the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and his colleagues mentioned bad faith, lower taxes and increased expenditures for services they display some of that old spirit of degenerate Liberalism that convinced the Canadian people it was time for a change. When the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) referred to the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent's remarks with regard to how they kept their pledges, which the hon. member said were implemented in full, he even went so far as to say that he was proud of that proud boast. He called that kind of record the ultimate in good faith. He indeed has my sympathy; indeed, all his colleagues have my sympathy. It must be humiliating to them to see many of their favorite election pledges being brought into being by a Tory government. I think of such things as the South Saskatchewan river dam, not endorsed by Louis St. Laurent but long a promise of Liberal members of the House of Commons at election time. The reality of this project now taking shape must certainly take on the aspect of a vision to many of those who were in the front benches of the Liberal party. It is not the kind of vision that the Liberals scoffed at so scornfully last year but one which brings vividly to their minds thoughts of opportunities lost and dreams shattered but not entirely forgotten.

I think of health insurance, long a plank in Liberal platforms but today a living thing put in force by a government that tries to keep its promises, and in this instance a Liberal platform promise also that goes back to 1919. I would have mentioned the history of the old age pension fund but the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) took the Liberals down a path that they hoped had been forgotten as he traced the utterances of the Hon. Douglas Abbott on the financing of that fund.

No wonder the financial critic of the opposition was subdued in his criticism. He knows that the government is today proposing expenditures of $1,212 million for the municipalities and the provinces compared with an expenditure of $689 million in the year 1956-57. When he complains that almost every pocket is hit let him remember that the main increases in the budget fall on purchases of tobacco and whisky, plus the increases in corporation taxes. Would he care to offer any alternative sources of revenue? To be perfectly frank, he did not attempt to perform the good offices of an opposition critic. He went back to defend the 1954 Liberal budget and well he might, for Canadians remember that that was about the time that things began to get difficult for them.

The C.C.F. critic has not learned much since a year ago. Like the rest of his colleagues, he labels everything under consideration as misleading if it does not give him the opportunity and cause to criticize the government. The C.C.F. have always hated the man who leaves a good estate and once again they have expressed that hatred by calling for a capital gains tax and lower interest rates. Anyone who is interested in the history of economics knows that the greatest benefactors of capital gains are widows and orphans and the retired men and women of a country. The C.C.F. would deny these people the benefits of a decent rate of interest on their sole source of income in many cases, an odd way to practise, "humanity first."

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) recall the by-election in the province of Quebec. We on this side of the house are thankful to the people of that riding for the confidence they expressed in last year's activity by sending to the house the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin). On several occasions the hon. member for Hull has expressed fear of the guillotine being used in the civil service. His friends in the civil service remember the ruthlessness of the Liberal axe which in many cases brought them to their positions in the employment of this government. The hon. member is really disappointed because he cannot go out and point to the guillotine as a weapon used by this government on the civil service of this country. You know, sir, if we wanted to solve unemployment the way the Liberals would do had they come to power as we came to power, we would fire half a million civil servants and hire those who are unemployed today. The civil service employees in Canada never had a better champion than John Diefenbaker and this government. In so far as appointments are concerned, no one can say that this government has taken what could be called anything approaching a partisan stand. To be quite frank, I think this government has been entirely too generous with many of the people in the public service of Canada who do not appreciate that there has been a change of government. Some of these people still think that orders come from Liberal headquarters.

The hon. member for Hull has a well-known theme song. "I blame the Tory government", he says. He says the national debt has gone up, but he failed to mention that the per capita debt is down. He estimated that we would have a million unemployed last year, but we had only half a million. He said we are trying to get by with impossible promises. Impossible they may have been to the Liberals, but this government is fulfilling the very promises the Liberal government reneged upon. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) is a real Liberal. He asked the question, what real and significant changes in government have taken place? He answered the question in the negative and then proceeded to cite everything that this government has done. He drew a picture of large surpluses of primary products, and then retreated from that statement by saying that time did not allow him to elaborate upon it.

The hon. member was so bold as to say that this government had failed to show waste and extravagance in the departments of government, forgetting the printing bureau in Hull. He asserted that this government had refused to meet the provinces and municipalities to discuss their problems. Where has the hon. member been during the last several months? The fact of the matter is that we have not any opposition in the opposition today. Every last one of them admires the government and the courageous action it has been taking since coming to office. They admire the Minister of Finance and his budget. They know Canadians were expecting a balanced budget and the taxes involved. They know that this budget struck a happy balance in meeting the problems of unemployment and inflation. They have my sympathy I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and they will need more than that to recapture the imagination of the Canadian people.

In weak, subdued voices they say this budget was not planned, it only happened. Let us take a look at the record. It only happened to provide the greatest home building program in the history of this nation. This program provided homes on convenient terms and provided employment to the construction and allied trades of Canada. Second, unemployment benefits were provided on a scale and in a measure hitherto unequalled in the history of this country—not planned, it only happened. There is no $6 Harris in this government, but pensions are provided to meet the needs of Canadians.

The refinancing of Canada's wartime bonds was a measure that restored individual interest in these transactions. Hospital insurance, the dream of Liberals since 1919, was enacted under a Conservative government. It was certainly not planned, it only happened under a Conservative government. The $25 million in supplementary payments to the maritimes was certainly not planned by the Liberals. It only happened under a Diefenbaker government. The $13.5 million to Newfoundland was certainly not planned, but it is certainly happening. The university grants were raised from $16 million to $26 million, and that was not planned by the Liberals. It only happened under a Tory government. The $41,300,000 for prairie grain growers was not planned, it only happened under a Conservative government.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) has insinuated that the new members from Saskatchewan and western Canada did not even know where to hang their hats when they arrived in Ottawa last May. I am willing to admit that that may have been so. When we came to Ottawa last May we were so green that we threw our hats down in the centre of the map of Saskatchewan, and when we picked them up the people of Saskatchewan found $100 million voted so that there would be a dam across the South Saskatchewan river at Outlook. This was the first step taken in recent years to correct the inequities of those policies of the Liberal party which had resulted in giving everything to the people of other provinces and making the people of Saskatchewan the poor relations of those other parts of Canada.

We knew so little about where to hang our hats that we threw them in a pile over the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and when we reached for them that act was amended to provide benefits to more people who needed those benefits than at any time before in our history. We were so green that we thought a man who contributed to the 1 per cent levy should be able to benefit, and today many who were denied payments under the former regulations are now eligible for payments in the event of crop failure. There are still some improvements that could be made in that act.

As I intimated earlier, one of the great needs in all areas of Canada is better housing. When we came to parliament a year ago we found the National Housing Act on the table, and it looked like a good place to hang our hats. When we picked up our hats we found that the government of Canada had voted $300 million to be repaid on convenient terms. This legislation has been of great help to people in all parts of Canada; in the cities and towns as well as the farm areas. There has been one notable exception, and that is in Saskatchewan where farmers are denied the use of this legislation because of the so-called farm security act introduced by the C.C.F. in Saskatchewan. If the hon. member for Assiniboia knew where to hang his hat he would hang it on the farm security act and give Saskatchewan farmers the same benefits as are available to farmers in other provinces. At the beginning of this session we voted another $250 million for housing, and these programs have been of great help to those engaged in carpentry and other seasonal trades.

When we came to Ottawa we found the table covered with the promises of the government of Canada to repay those millions of dollars borrowed from the people of Canada during wartime. We threw our hats over those promises and when we picked them up the people who had put their money into bonds to finance the war effort were able to get a little better return on their investment, in keeping with the increased cost of living since these bonds were first purchased. It has been said by the C.C.F. that some companies and banks have benefited from this action. I ask you, sir, is there anything we can do that will benefit those who should benefit that will not, in some way, benefit those who may not need the benefits?

We threw our hats over the excise tax and tariff regulations. We did not like trade restrictions any better than anyone else, and we removed the excise tax on a number of items, including rat poison. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) has not yet told us in this house how it came about that a Liberal government had been in power for 22 years and still had an excise tax on rat poison.

On many occasions industry has come to ask for protection from the government of Canada and the people of Canada and they are usually accompanied by labour. That so-called free trader, Stanley Knowles, has often pressed the case for protection for those engaged in labour in the factories of our country. We thought that we should protect those jobs and granted some of the requests made. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked labour to hold the line, what was the answer that Stanley Knowles gave? It was that labour must continue to ask for increased wages and benefits. Instead of hanging his hat on that one, the hon. member for Assiniboia has sought to build for himself a free trade reputation among farmers while giving labour encouragement to continue the upward spiral of costs of everything that the farmer must buy.

There are a number of towns in Canada which are wholly dependent upon the gold mining industry for their existence. For several years now the government of Canada has been subsidizing the price of gold. It appeared that all parties were agreed on the need of some action along this line last session in order to protect these people from the disaster of shutdowns. Why does the hon. member for Assiniboia go to the farm people in the province of Saskatchewan and criticize the subsidy to the gold mining communities while he was content to see it passed here in the House of Commons? I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what his criticism would have been if we had abandoned those people and let them be shut out. He would have called us the enemy of labour and the enemy of mankind.

We hung our hats on pensions of one kind or another and voted money that belonged to the people of Canada so that some of our citizens could enjoy their retired years, their blind years or handicapped years with a little bit less anxiety. The C.C.F. say that we should have voted more. But in this debate they have criticized the budget for taxing in order to secure these revenues.

Up to the time we came to office freight rates had increased by 120 per cent during the preceding ten-year period. The government of those days allowed those increases without once assuring the Canadian people and the western farmer in particular that the Crowsnest pass rates would be protected. Last fall everyone seemed to be agreed that the non-operating employees needed an increase in wages and benefits. This government allowed that increase and we hung our hats on it too with the assurance of a subsidy to alleviate the full burden of that increase. The question of freight rates was placed under study in order to seek a solution that would eliminate the inequities of today and the Prime Minister assured parliament and the people of Canada that the Crowsnest pass rates would be protected.

When we came to Ottawa we found the biggest surplus of wheat in our entire history, a surplus that had accumulated during 12 years of Liberal rule. We threw our hats on that pile of wheat and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) sold more wheat than anyone in this house thought could be sold. He did this at a time when every other exporting country in the entire world was unable to maintain its volume of sales. The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not wait for the customers to call. He went out and sold wheat, and when he could not sell it he gave it away to those who could not pay for it. He did this after the treasury of Canada had secured the consent of parliament to pay for this western wheat which was to be given away.

When the delegation from western Canada was here about a month ago they reminded us that when the Liberals had been in power they had given wheat to Britain at less than cost for two years, and that the government of that day had been unable to secure anything in return for this concession. Those people from western Canada estimated that this Liberal policy had cost the western grain grower something less than $600 million at that time. We voted $45 million to move wheat to underdeveloped countries during the next three years. Most of this surplus wheat is in the province of Saskatchewan. Hence even the C.C.F. must admit that we did not forget the western wheat grower when we went out and sold his surplus so that at the end of this crop year we hope to be in the position of having cleaned up stocks on farms across the prairies.

When we came down to Ottawa last spring we found a bill for over $2 million on the table to complete the payments to those who had delivered oats to the Canadian wheat board. We threw our hats on the table and voted the money. But we left our hats on that table and the government of Canada today does not have to pick up a bill for $2 million on the sale of oats. The final payment will come through in the amount of anywhere from three cents to seven cents per bushel. Where would the Liberal party hang their hats on that one, when they remember reducing the initial payment on oats by five cents a bushel at a time when farm costs were rising as they had never risen previously.

When we came to Ottawa we found on the table the representations of farm organizations in western Canada for an equitable share of the national income. We hung our hats on that problem and we searched out the causes which had led to wheat being surplus in such quantities that farmers for many years had to bear the cost of carrying that wheat, which cost amounted to 12 cents per bushel. We saw how the failure of the former government to use its price support legislation for livestock products had driven many of our farmers into straight grain growing on increasingly larger acreages, because for eight years wheat and coarse grains were practically the only products in Canada that had a steady guaranteed initial price. We saw how failure to attend to markets had gradually forced many of those in the grain growing industry into other crops in order to secure cash on which to live.

We knew that farmers in western Canada were in a difficult position since 1953. There was every indication that we would be unable to bring our long term legislation before parliament soon enough last year to touch their position. We believe that these farmers wanted the causes dealt with, so that a program could be built for those who will farm in the future. We did not go back to pay for the inequities that were suffered under a Liberal administration. Instead, we sought to bring before parliament with all haste, compatible with good, sound legislation, those things which farm organizations had been asking for over a long period of years.

We took a good, long, hard look at the report of the royal commission on rural life which had been authorized by the provincial government in Saskatchewan. We were influenced by its study of farm problems. When we hung our hats on the federal treasury and secured over $40 million we made sure that those who needed it most would not be forgotten when the cheques were put in the mail. We paid it out on an acreage basis. We believed that this was a sound way to help the income position of western farmers, without aggravating the trend toward larger grain farms and the encouragement of wheat production. The delegation which came to Ottawa rejected acreage payments as charity and a handout, as something they did not want. The C.C.F. down the last two years encouraged them in that stand. They asked for an expenditure of an estimated $300 million. I do not hesitate at all in saying that if we were to spend $300 million I would feel compelled, from my knowledge of the problems in my constituency and in the province from which I come, to support payments on an acreage basis. Payments under that system would give $1,500 to the average farmer, instead of giving the larger producer $4,500 and letting the smaller farmer shift for himself. The acreage payment, whatever the amount of money involved, will benefit the smaller and average sized farmer a great deal and will still be of some help to the larger producer.

There is a clear cut issue at stake here as between ourselves and the C.C.F. They have come out supporting bushel payments. That can mean only one thing: They support the idea of paying $4,500 to some and practically nothing to others. I urge this government and those on the treasury benches to complete the task which was begun 12 months ago to build a truly national policy for those engaged in agriculture, a policy which will encourage the production of livestock and diversified crops on those farms where the family type of operation makes this possible. A policy such as this will give those who must of necessity produce grain, a market for that grain, and a market that will absorb their production a little more readily than has been the case during the last 13 years.

To accomplish these things I feel we must get our long term legislation dealing with credit and crop insurance passed by parliament in this session. In addition, we will need short term help, such as the acreage payment was last year. I therefore urge another acreage payment this year. I also want to emphasize how disturbed and disappointed I was when the delegation came to Ottawa and rejected acreage payments as unwanted and unappreciated by those who farm in western Canada. I am convinced from my trip during the Easter recess and from the letters which I have received that those who have made these assertions do not speak for the majority of the farmers of my constituency or for the majority of the farmers in the province of Saskatchewan. Together with those from Alberta and Manitoba I urge this government to endorse and put into operation a two-price system to cover domestically consumed wheat, the basis of which we sought to lay last year during the debates and the caucuses. Then there is the subsidy on export flour which I feel should be borne by the treasury of Canada.

The speaker who preceded me had some very interesting things to say. He said among other things that the most beautiful years of prosperity that Canada ever knew had been given to Canada by the Liberal party. There is only one thing wrong with that statement, and that is the picture of war in all its horror. The hon. member should study humility when he makes such statements. He also went on to say that the Liberal party was the only national party. I ask hon. members of the Liberal party, how many provinces do they draw their support from today in this House of Commons?

In conclusion I may say that I could not possibly support the amendment or the subamendment. These appear to be the product of confused thinking. These members of the opposition who have been hoping against hope for a million unemployed and a billion dollar deficit have expressed their frustrations in these weak, meek and mediocre terms. They will go through the motions of proposing these amendments, but their hearts are not in them at all, and I extend to the hon. Minister of Finance and through him to the government and the Prime Minister my confidence in the main motion.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker made some remarks about farm matters about which I am not an expert and cannot contradict, but he intimated, I gathered, that this particular group, in speaking in support of deficiency payments and the delegation headed by the interprovincial farm council, the Saskatchewan wheat pool and other associations connected with the march, came out strongly for $4,500 a farmer. As I understand it, we supported the position taken in the brief, which would be a maximum of $1,500.

Mr. Horner (The Battlefords): For one year.

Mr. Fisher: But to isolate our position as being something special or unusual seems to me a little unfair. All we did throughout was to identify ourselves, as I understand it, with the justice of the presentation, and of course we have nothing to be ashamed of in that particular regard.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) made the most interesting remarks in so far as his budget speech debate is concerned. I only wish he had not spoiled them by bringing in something at the end in connection with a point which has always rather bothered me, and that was the tremendous concern of politicians to hold other politicians to election promises. With a cavalier air which is quite suited to his manner, he tended to dismiss this and say, I take it, that under the exigencies of power you could not always carry out your election promises. This would have been fine, I think, if he had stopped at that rather frank admission, but of course he had to go on and ride the Grits and we got dragged into the thing, as did the hidden report. The hidden report type of argument seems to me to confuse the issue. I think if this government has not lived up to its election promises, as the Minister of National Revenue indicated it had not, it might be better if one of the cabinet ministers, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), indicated where it did not live up to its election promises.

I know that a small matter about which we have had an explanation which satisfies me is this. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in speaking in Quebec during the last election, was all for support prices for farm cut pulpwood. We have also had an explanation from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) about the difficulties of applying this particular policy, and certainly in this particular case it seemed quite logical and reasonable. But I have never really heard the candid admission that this was one election promise which was over-extended and perhaps one which should not have been made.

One of the interesting points about the budget presentation was the indication that the Minister of Finance expects that the financial picture of the Canadian National Railways is going to improve in the next year. It seems to me that this is one of the most important organizations which has any link with the government. We have all noticed reports in the press today which indicate that Canadian National Railways have incurred a deficit of over $50 million, and in addition we have all received copies of the latest annual report. This deficit represents a sharp increase compared with last year. It is a very serious situation, most of all, I think, because one of the consequences is going to be more and more mud-slinging at the C.N.R. as being a typically inefficient public enterprise not able to hold up its end in competition with a private enterprise organization, the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It seems to me that we never recognize sufficiently that the particular burdens placed upon the C.N.R. prevent it operating in the way the C.P.R. is able to operate. That is a point which I hope all hon. members will keep in mind during the coming year, because this is a subject which is going to be very much to the fore, with discussions on freight rates and a royal commission on transportation or some other kind of inquiry into transportation going on. It seems to me that we should be well advised to do something which I suggested we should do some time ago, namely make up our minds whether we ought to go on any longer with the anachronism of one railway system operating under private enterprise within a legal framework which extends to another railroad which we cannot expect to operate on such a basis because it is saddled with so many services and so many lines which have probably never been profitable or never will be paying in any competitive sense. It seems to me that this is one of the key places where we shall need to do some thinking, and that is one of the key places where we can expect or hope for leadership.

One of the disappointing features of this budget as far as a large group in our area, or their representatives, are concerned, was the failure of the minister to make any change in the income tax rates in so far as they apply to workers in the woods. We have still not been able to devise any satisfactory way by means of which workers in the woods can take advantage of the amendment brought in to bring relief to those engaged in the building industry, and the fact remains that the amendment which was brought in applies only to a very small section of people actually engaged in construction work in this country. They are getting relief, whereas those who worked in the logging industry have been excluded from the benefits of this provision. I firmly believe that if the basis of good taxation law is equity, if the minister will not extend the benefit that he is giving to the construction workers to the loggers he should take it away from the construction workers. That may seem a little revolutionary, but the situation which exists at the present time is certainly not good in equity.

I was very interested when this budget came down to note the increases which had been made in corporate taxes, increases with which I have no quarrel. However, I was disappointed in one respect. Hon. members may recall that some time ago a very vocal statement was made by a pulp and paper concern which is, perhaps, the largest pulp and paper group in Ontario—the Abitibi Company—through its president when he presented his annual report. It was a continuation of a charge he had made previously about the burden of corporate taxation on the pulp and paper industry.

I should like to reiterate that in this particular field the minister is not being fair to two groups—one is the group of people who are trying to introduce proper silvicultural management into this country, and the other is the workers who are engaged in this industry, particularly in my area. We have often been faced in Ontario with the argument that we have the highest cost wood in the world because we have the highest wages. In the arguments between the workers and the company it is always being said that the company cannot pay any more, that a ceiling has been reached. I was interested the other day in reading the figures put out by the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company with regard to their wood costs which appear in a letter in the last issue of the periodical Saturday Night from an Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company official, indicating that the per cord cost at the mill runs between $22 and $23. Anyone who is familiar with wood costs in so far as pulp is concerned will recognize that our costs in Ontario are $10 or $15 above those faced by the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company.

One of the arguments used by the forest corporations—and they have tended to make it stick—is that unless there is a different attitude in so far as corporate taxation is concerned they cannot afford to assume heavier burdens with regard to silviculture, particularly relatively expensive regeneration measures. They take the position that they cannot do this until the tax position has been cleared up by the only people who are able to do it, the federal government. And until this is done, then for just so long will they be able to use this as an excuse, if it is an excuse.

So from this point of view, in particular, I am disappointed that the minister did not announce measures which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) indicated he intended to carry out, namely arrangements for a study of the taxation position of this very important industry. As far as this point is concerned, it seems to me that the whole future of our forests is not so much in jeopardy as that it has reached a turning point. I think there is a growing sensitivity on the part of these very large organizations about their responsibilities, and it seems to me also that many professional foresters, the people who have some indication as to where we should go, feel that if we could just get over this particular argument we might get somewhere. That is why I voice this somewhat out of the way disappointment with this budget.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CONVERSION LOAN COMMISSIONS AND FEES

Question No. 243—Mr. McMillan:

In connection with the Canada conversion loan of 1958:

1. What was the aggregate amount of commissions paid to the chartered banks?

2. Were issuing fees paid to the chartered banks, and if so, what was the amount thereof?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. $8,085,064.01.

2. Yes. $4,769,579.88.

Note: These amounts include payments to Montreal City and District Savings Bank and The Quebec Savings Bank. Figures are preliminary.

FEDERAL OWNERSHIP OF FOOD PRODUCTS

Question No. 273—Mr. Regier:

1. Does the government of Canada have ownership of any food products purchased under federal legislation?

2. If so, what is the value of government holdings, in regard to the above?

3. How much has the government paid for storage of such food for each of the last 12 months?

4. Has the government ever conducted a survey of the practice in the United States of America, whereby such surplus food products are being made available to various welfare organizations?

5. If so, what consideration has been given to implementing a similar policy in Canada?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Yes.

2. At February 28, 1959, the book value, including storage and handling costs and any merchandising losses incurred in the fiscal year to date, for food products owned by the agricultural stabilization board was $75,-150,344.01.

3. The book figures for storage which may or may not apply directly to the month in which they are invoiced and also may apply in earlier months to greater or lesser quantities of products than those included in the total figure given in question 2 are as follows:

March 1958, $129,992.09; April 1958, $114,-803.16; May 1958, $184,820.17; June 1958, $91,218.03; July 1958, $163,673.02; August 1958, $212,242.77; September 1958, $240,435.64; October 1958, $258,077.19; November 1958, $278,656.08; December 1958, $365,054.95; January 1959, $444,887.29; February 1959, $450,-766.40.

4. While no over-all special study of all programs has been made with respect to the United States, most of the United States programs relating to school lunches, sales to foreign agencies, etc., have been reviewed individually for administrative consideration from time to time.

5. Canada has at different times given food products for international and domestic relief and has entered into such other programs as might seem appropriate based on the apparent desirability, both from the standpoint of requests and need for assistance and from the standpoint of whether or not there was a real surplus which could not be sold at a reasonable commercial value.

Examples of substantial activity in this regard are recent donations of dry skimmed milk to international relief agencies and a year or so ago the provision of butter on a national scale to approved institutions at a substantially reduced price.

FISH AND GAME DEPARTMENT, QUE.—NATIONAL DEFENCE DEPARTMENT PAYMENT

Question No. 282—Mr. Bourget:

1. Did the Department of National Defence receive, during the fiscal year 1957-58, an amount of $5,000 from the fish and game department of the province of Quebec?

2. If so, on what account?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1. Yes.

2. For the rental of a hangar at the Gaspe naval base.

BELLIVEAU COVE, N.S.—POSTMASTERSHIP

Question No. 293—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has a vacancy occurred recently in the postmastership of the Belliveau Cove, Nova Scotia, post office?

2. If so, has a successor been appointed?

3. What is the name of the appointee?

4. What are the names of the persons who made applications for this position?

5. Was the appointment made based on the results of competitive examination, or by recommendation?

6. If made by recommendation, what procedure was followed?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Fidele Theriault.

4. Joseph Philip Belliveau, Fidele Theriault, John Edward Theriault, Joseph Hilarion S. Comeau.

5. Made by the Postmaster General.

6. See 5 above.

C.B.C. VIEWER RATINGS

Question No. 306—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's audience research division viewer and listener ratings for the television and radio program "The Nation's Business" for 1959?

Questions

2. If so, how do these viewer ratings compare with the ratings at the same weekly period for the following programs: Citizen's Forum, This Week, Tabloid, Folio, Press Conference, Fighting Words, Viewpoint, the Ed Sullivan show, the Perry Como show, and the 11 p.m. news?

3. If so, for radio how do the ratings at the same weekly period compare with Citizen's Forum, Week-end Review, Capital Report, Critically Speaking, Project '59, University of the Air, and 10 p.m. national news?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

1. No.

2. and 3. See No. 1.

HALIFAX AIRPORT—SECURITY FENCE

Question No. 308—Mr. Carter:

1. Were tenders recently called by the Department of Transport in connection with the construction of a security fence at the Halifax International airport?

2. If so, how many tenders were received?

3. What are the names and addresses of those who submitted tenders and the amount of each tender?

4. What is the name and address of the firm receiving the contract?

5. On what date was the contract awarded?

6. What is the completion date of contract?

7. Has the firm ever done any similar work for the Department of Transport?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.

2. Eight.

3. Ted B. Blackburn Ltd., Lower Sackville, N.S., $16,140; Dominion Steel & Coal Corp. Ltd., Montreal, P.Q., $17,133.35; Frost Steel & Wire Co. Quebec Ltd., Montreal, P.Q., $22,942.76; The Steel Company of Canada Ltd., Montreal, P.Q., $22,942.76; The N.B. Wire Fence Co. Ltd., Moncton, N.B., $25,940.25; Watkinson Limited, Berwick, N.S., $29,288.44; Diamond Construction (1955) Ltd., Fredericton, N.B., $30,760; Laurie W. Ledwidge, Enfield, N.S., $45,400.

4. Ted B. Blackburn Ltd., Lower Sackville, N.S.

5. March 12, 1959.

6. July 31, 1959.

7. No.

MAIL SERVICE TENDERS, LUNENBURG COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 312—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Were tenders called for the performance of mail service for Blockhouse, Maitland, Northfield, Pine Grove, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, who submitted tenders and in what amounts?

3. On whose recommendation and for what purpose were such tenders called?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes, for a service known as Blockhouse rural route No. 1.

2. Randall Raymond Aulenback, Blockhouse, $2,375; Albert Victor Barry, R.R. No. 1, Blockhouse, $2,400; Aubrey Reginald Balcome, Blockhouse, $2,476.80.

3. Contract expires March 31, 1959 and tenders were invited to secure a new contract on the recommendation of the member for Queens-Lunenburg.

TENDERS FOR SORTING CASES, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 316—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Were public tenders called for an order of sorting cases and tables for the Post Office Department from November 1, 1958 to February 15, 1959?

2. If so, what were the names of the tenderers, and the amount in each case?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes; November 28, 1958; SE-376 Newspaper cases and tables; SE-481 Parcel shelving.

2. Parkdale Woodworkers Ltd., Ottawa 3, Ont., $18,404; Canadian Public Booth Co. Ltd., Arnprior, Ont., $19,127; Canadian Office and School Furniture, Preston, Ont., $21,240; Canada Crate Co. Ltd., St. Jean, P.Q., $24,-301; The Singer Manufacturing Co., St. Jean, P.Q., $25,681; Office Specialty Mfg. Co. Ltd., Ottawa, Ont., $26,400; Beaver Woodcraft and Display, Hull, P.Q., $28,360; The Globe Furniture Co. Ltd., Waterloo, Ont., $43,000.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Eighth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McCleave.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—STATEMENT ON CANADIAN ATTITUDE TO U.S. LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on April 8 the hon. member for Rosedale asked:

Would the Prime Minister tell us the attitude of the Canadian government toward the legislation recently passed in the United States House of Representatives in regard to the diversion of water from the great lakes at Chicago?

I replied, after dealing with one or two matters of history, and said:

—we are paying the closest attention to this matter, at the same time not wishing to do anything that would in any way cause a situation to arise which might not be beneficial.

I now wish to bring the house up to date on this subject. When I last spoke on April 8 I stated what the fact was, that the government was giving careful consideration, and since then has given further consideration to the most effective manner of making known Canada's opposition to the bill which, as I said a moment ago, has passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Senate committee on public works. A note registering the reasons for Canada's objection was delivered on April 9, and with the leave of the house I ask permission to table it so that it might possibly appear in Votes and Proceedings. I am not going to read the entire note, but just two particular paragraphs thereof to indicate the general tenor and attitude of the government in this regard. In the third paragraph the following appears:

Every diversion of water from the great lakes watershed at Chicago inevitably decreases the volume of water remaining in the basin for all purposes. The government of Canada is opposed to any action which will have the effect of reducing the volume of water in the great lakes basin. Careful inquiry has failed to reveal any sources of water in Canada which could be added to the present supplies of the basin to compensate for further withdrawals in the U.S.A. The government of Canada considers that many agreements and understandings between the U.S.A. and Canada would be broken if unilateral action were taken to divert additional water from the great lakes watershed at Chicago and directs attention to provision of two treaties in particular.

The first is the boundary waters treaty of 1909 and the second is the Niagara treaty of 1950.

The general summation of the attitude of the government in this regard is contained in the last two pertinent paragraphs:

Because of the importance attached by the U.S.A. and Canada to the honouring of international undertakings in letter and in spirit, the government of Canada views with serious concern any possible impairment of agreements and undertakings relating to the great lakes basin. Furthermore, the alarms created by repeated proposals for diversion which inevitably disturb the people and industry of Canada are a source of profound irritation to the relations between our two countries which we can ill afford.

I am instructed, therefore, to express the hope of the government of Canada that the U.S.A. will view this matter with equal concern and will be able to give satisfactory assurances that unilateral action will not be taken which would imperil the present regime of the waters in the great lakes basin and the status of the agreements and understandings to which I have referred.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Prime Minister perhaps modify his request so the letter will be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable to having this document printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a word with regard to this extremely important matter. I think the house will have learned with satisfaction that a note in the terms which the Prime Minister just read has been, I think on April 9, presented to the United States government. It will be recalled that a note in not very strong terms was presented by the Canadian government last year expressing our concern. This note of April 9 seems to be a much stronger one, and I think that is all to the good.

I believe I am right when I say that this note, however, presented on April 9, has been presented at a time when it is too late to influence congress which has, if I am not misinformed, already taken action in this matter. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it now remains for the President of the United States to protect Canada's rights in this matter by vetoing action which may have been taken by congress. Perhaps if this note had been presented earlier before congressional consideration had been given, it might not have been necessary to rely entirely on the President of the United States to protect our interests in this matter.

However, the note has been presented and I hope it will have the effect it should have in preventing the United States from taking action which would be a breach of treaty arrangements between the two countries.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group I want to say that we are extremely pleased to hear the statement of the Prime Minister with respect to this latest note. We are also pleased to note that it is in stronger terms than any previous note. We support the government in any effort it may take to protect Canadian interests. We in this group hope that the congress of the United States will pay attention to this day's proceedings and note from the proceedings that parliament in this respect is unanimous.

A. V. ROE COMPANY

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of reports of almost total failure to secure jobs for the 10,000 persons who lost their jobs in the aircraft industry at Malton. Will the minister say what success he has had in locating jobs for these unemployed workers? Would the minister comment on the statement by union leader Peter Podger that the minister has said that other industries are reluctant to hire these workers because of the possibility of their being recalled by Avro or Orenda?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. First I would like to refer to the latter part of his question, and say that the remarks made by Mr. Podger are not entirely correct; but when he states that employers and industries are reluctant to hire these workers because of the possibility of their being recalled by Avro or Orenda, I say this is the report which I get from my national employment service officers in that area. In addition, the report also includes the fact that most of these people are still hoping to be recalled to Avro and Orenda; consequently they are not too receptive to placement in any other industry.

At the time of the lay-off there were registrations totalling 11,582. The number who have been placed by the national employment office is 622. Those who have found work on their own total 1,179. Those who have failed to report back to the national employment service—in other words they are not drawing unemployment insurance, and naturally we feel they have found employment elsewhere—amount to 1,268. A total 3,069 have been removed from the national unemployment insurance rolls.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister able to tell the house if the government is making continuing efforts to find appropriate alternative work for the displaced workers and capacity of the Avro plant in Toronto?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is giving very careful consideration to everything that can be done through the instrumentality of joint production and the like to the end that Canada's airplane industry shall receive its fair share; and if this is secured and maintained naturally there will be an extension of employment to those who have been trained in that type of work.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister think the present negotiations will result in some agreement in the not too distant future?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman having occupied a portfolio in the last government in the days between April and June will realize something of the delays that do take place in the best plans that are made.

ATOMIC ENERGY

NUCLEAR TESTS—INQUIRY AS TO U.K. AND U.S. PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John MacLean (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister comment on recent press reports concerning the proposals made by the United States and the United Kingdom at the resumed negotiations in Geneva on nuclear tests?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was informed by the hon. gentleman of his intention to ask this question. I appreciate his interest in this regard, but I feel that in view of the length of the answer which would have to be given, if he would agree I could answer his question tomorrow before the orders of the day.

TRADE

LEAD AND ZINC—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT INTERNATIONAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether or not an international lead and zinc meeting will be held in New York at the end of April, I believe on the 28th or the 30th, and if so will Canada be represented at such meeting?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Canada will be represented. I am not sure of the exact date of the meeting.

Mr. McIlraith: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister, perhaps not today but when he has an opportunity, tell the house the attitude which the Canadian representatives will take with regard to the conference and the organization of a lead and zinc agreement?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I will be prepared to give an answer to the hon. gentleman later.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED DENIAL OF BENEFITS TO LOGGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if the Canadian Labour Congress has supplied affidavits to the government in which it is claimed that unemployment assistance or social welfare has been denied to residents of Newfoundland because they were members of the I.W.A., and if so, because of the contributions of the government toward unemployment assistance, what action is being taken in regard to this alleged discrimination?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would like to thank the hon. member for having notified me of his intention to ask this question. I would say that some time ago, in the latter half of March—I believe on March 23 to be exact—press reports from Newfoundland did indicate that applicants for relief in that province were being questioned as to their membership in the I.W.A., and that relief was being denied to members of that union.

As soon as these reports came to my attention I gave instructions that a letter should be sent to the provincial welfare authorities in Newfoundland asking for a full report on the matters dealt with in the press. A letter was sent to the Newfoundland authorities under date of April 6, and we are now awaiting a reply to this letter.

I should add that some time later, on Tuesday of this week, representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress came to see me about the situation, and yesterday they sent me a number of affidavits along the lines of the earlier newspaper reports. I was able to tell the gentlemen who came to see me of the action already taken by the department and to assure them, as I am glad to assure the hon. member, that this matter is being actively followed up.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED PRICE INCREASES IN EXCESS OF TAX INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could I ask the Prime Minister whether or not the government is planning any legislative or other action to protect consumers against unscrupulous manufacturers who are raising prices by more than the tax increases announced by the Minister of Finance a few days ago.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There have been reports indicating that some manufacturers and the vendors of some products affected by the commodity tax changes announced in the budget are raising prices to the public, and increasing them inexcusably by amounts in excess of the increase in the tax.

However, there is no legislation at the present time which would meet such a situation. Indeed, it is questionable whether any legislation passed by the federal government which could bring about any result of the nature suggested would be within the legislative province and authority of parliament. I can tell the hon. member also that the only way in which price control legislation could be passed, if I read the authorities correctly, would be under the emergency provisions—the emergency being defined by the courts. The government has no intention of introducing price control legislation of the kind suggested.

If the hon. member has knowledge of any manufacturers who are raising their prices illegally by the exercise of monopoly or restrictive pricing power, I suggest he bring the facts of the case to the attention of the combines branch of the Department of Justice, which is constantly on the lookout for such practices.

Mr. Winch: Did I understand the Prime Minister to say "illegally", not "immorally"?

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

WEST INDIES FEDERATION—STATEMENT ON PROGRESS IN GIFT OF SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier asked for a progress report with regard to the two ships which Canada proposes to give to the West Indies federation. The designs of two passenger cargo type vessels have been prepared by a firm of ships' architects according to plans drawn up by officials of the West Indies government and accepted by officers of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Transport. The designs have been submitted to a shipping expert named by the West Indies government. He has approved the designs, and specifications are now being prepared by the company of ships' architects and will be ready by May 15. The West Indies representatives will see the specifications at this stage and tenders will be called.

The ships will be built in Canadian shipyards, and it is hoped that they will be ready early in 1961. The plans provide for two 1,500-ton ships, 298 feet in length, with 80,000 cubic feet of cargo space and accommodation for 54 cabin and 200 deck passengers.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Arising out of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to the two ships that are to be built, may I ask the minister if the government will give consideration to having one tender called on the west coast and one on the east coast?

Mr. Churchill: It will be done by open tender, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN TO NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in regard to another delay I might ask the Minister of Justice if he has given further consideration to the appointment of a woman as the fifth member of the national parole board.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have just received notification through Votes and Proceedings that a question is to be asked in that regard, and I shall be answering it in due course.

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday, may I ask him when the government hopes to fill the vacancy in the Newfoundland supreme court, a vacancy which has now existed for four months?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, experience in the past with the former government was that there were long delays. There will not be a long delay in this case, and I hope the Minister of Justice will be in a position to make an announcement very shortly.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he can add anything to the statement he made yesterday regarding the strike at the Polymer Corporation in Sarnia.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can add is that we expect to have a mediator appointed in the early part of next week.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could say whether or not the new mediator will meet with representatives of the union and the company, and when his work will actually be started?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the situation is that the mediator is not of any use unless he meets with both the company and the union.

Mr. Argue: Perhaps the minister misunderstood my question. Can he say how soon the mediator will start work in mediating in this situation?

Mr. Starr: As soon as he is appointed.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR FLOOR PRICE IN MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the Prime Minister's statement at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, as reported in the Halifax Herald of February 28, 1958, that the 80 per cent floor is assured for all farm products, and in view of the fact that potatoes this year have been selling at about half what they sold for at the time the statement was made, can the minister tell us whether this floor will be applied to potatoes in the maritime provinces?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the content of the statement to which the hon. member refers; therefore I am in no position to make any comment on it.

PATENT ACT

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question about long delay that I wish to address to the Secretary of State. It arises out of the extended delay in the completion of the inquiry of the royal commission on patents, copyrights, trade-marks and industrial designs, appointed June 10, 1954. Can the minister say when he expects to receive the report of the commission on patents and the report on trade-marks, and when these reports will be published?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his questions. The latest information I have is unfortunately to the effect that the submission of the report on patents of inventions will now be delayed until next fall. I have no information as to when there will be a report on trade-marks, if any.

CRIMINAL LAW

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON SEXUAL PSYCHOPATHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a very short question to the Minister of Justice. I do so in view of all the inquiries made to me. I should like to ask the minister, as I did over a month ago, when he expects to be able to table the report of the McRuer commission on sexual psychopaths.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): My recollection is that the last time the hon. member inquired I said it was being printed. I am sorry I do not have more up to date information, but I will inquire immediately, and will press for prompt completion of all steps leading to tabling of the report.

Mr. Winch: That was six weeks ago.

PRICE SPREADS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Prime Minister when he expects to receive the report of the royal commission on price spreads appointed, I believe, about a year and a half ago.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I will have to inquire about that. I have not had any recent information.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Regier.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak when there are at least more than the corporal's guard present who will be here tonight when the hockey game is on. One of the points brought up by the hon. member for Hull interested me very much. I do not quite see its relevance to the budget, but he did make some remarks about the position labour should take so far as political action is concerned, and he pointed to the United States situation as a wonderful example of how labour can do very well without taking direct political action.

I should like to suggest to the hon. member, having in mind the whole attitude toward American labour unions and American business, that he cannot have it both ways. Surely any member of the house can recognize that the United States system is so different from ours that political pressure by any lobbying group can be exerted on individual members of the House of Representatives and Senate, who are not welded together in a party unit as is the case in this country. Therefore the United States experience is completely different, and there is much more compulsion toward labour taking political action in this nation than there is in the United States. I am not saying that is complete justification for it, but it is certainly an argument.

On the other hand we are always having the United States example of labour not taking political action held up to us, while at the same time these very same people, and I would not rule out the hon. member for Hull, are the ones who say that we will rue the day that we hooked up with international unions. They say it is a terrible thing that Canadian unions should be tied up with United States unions. As a matter of fact over 70 per cent of Canadian unions have American affiliation of some kind or other. It seems to me that you cannot have it both ways. If you are going to argue that the one thing is bad, then surely you cannot argue that the other is bad.

I should like to make another point in that regard. You also have to look at the fact that most of our large economic organizations have a very direct relationship with United States companies. Quite often they are subsidiaries. That is one of the logical points with respect to the international union pattern, because economies within specific industries have a direct relationship. Yet we have this kind of nonsense that is all part of the "clobber labour" picture that seems to be so popular at this time, and if you do not want to stress the other side then at least in fairness this point should be looked at.

I was very interested to notice today in the Montreal Gazette the annual report of the St. Lawrence Corporation containing some very striking comment by the president, Mr. Percy M. Fox. Mr. Fox is a gentleman who got a load off his chest only a couple of months ago about this terrible situation of United States union domination in Canada and how it was the ruination of the country. The interesting thing to me is that amongst the directors of the St. Lawrence Corporation there are several Americans, and there are strong indications that United States capital plays a very large part in this company.

Furthermore, Mr. Fox made the standard insinuation that with this union domination there is no democracy in unions any more. Let us look at the picture with respect to corporations and see how much democracy there is there. There have been a number of recent examples of very small shareholders trying to bring their points of view before corporations. There was one recently involving the Canadian General Electric Company. If you are going to stress democracy in the one case, why is it not stressed in the other?

The point I want to make in connection with this call for democracy has some relationship to a political point. There was an interesting article in the Toronto Star the other day by Mr. John Bird on whether we have a one-man government. I do not entirely agree with all the points he made, but he presented a very challenging point of view that the government that we have today is a one-man government. Certainly my impression from talking to Conservative members of parliament is that the Prime Minister is very much in control. There is nothing wrong with that. I think we accept that as part of the situation. On this very point I should like to refer to an editorial in the magazine The Reporter for April 2, 1959, where I find the following:

> Quite a number of elected politicians still find it difficult to acknowledge the leaders of organized labour as politicians from another realm. We have heard ad nauseam in the halls of congress that union members should incessantly and massively participate in all the major decisions on union affairs and spend their free time watching over their elected representatives. Respectfully, one can ask our congressmen how they would like to have their constituents massively breathing down their necks.

I should like to suggest that the Prime Minister does not have his constituents or the members of parliament who support him in the house massively breathing down his neck at all times, from a democratic point of view. Surely you have to recognize that a union is the kind of organization in which the executive, when elected, has to be given responsibility, especially in the interim periods between elections. Therefore it seems to me that the howl or cry that unions are undemocratic organizations is based upon a misconception of how a union has to carry out its task. If the union executive has to turn around every time any kind of decision is to be made and call a mass membership meeting, I can only suggest that the union would be in a very difficult position, just as difficult a position as if the Prime Minister had to go to the country every time a major decision in politics was to be made.

I think this is a point that really needs to be made and emphasized, because it is all part of the unfair damnation of the labour movement that seems to be so popular in Canada at the present time and especially, I am sorry to say, quite often within the House of Commons.

One of the other points in connection with labour that the hon. member for Hull made was a warning of the danger of getting tied up with the C.C.F. with respect to the idea of forming a new party. I think any fair-minded member in this house will recognize that if there is any possible way in which you can get people discussing politics under almost any auspices in this country, you are achieving something; you are carrying out some kind of educational pattern. I think all hon. members are aware of the apathy that we had. Whether or not this new party movement is successful—I happen to have my hunch there, and it is probably different from the rest—surely it is going to be a fairly large achievement if it presents a challenge to the labour movement, to the people connected with the labour movement and other citizens who may be interested in it. Surely one result will be an increase in political interest and in the whole tempo of political events. I insist that that is very good, because I feel that one of the reasons we now have perhaps less understanding in our country of the responsibilities of government is because of this apathy, disinterest and the increasing tendency for people to shrug off any mature responsibility toward political events.

There is one other point I should like to make to these people who are taking this interest in the new party. The assumption within this House of Commons always seems to be that this is going to be strictly a labour deal. I should like to remind hon. members, as an example, that the majority of the members in this particular group in the House of Commons have no direct connection with labour, have not come up through any labour organization or labour movement. We happen to be rather proud to some of the achievements of the C.C.F. in a democratic way. The C.C.F., whatever its efforts, has managed to develop a fairly large membership, and that membership has never been based upon any great union strength. I think the government members from Saskatchewan will acknowledge that.

I believe it is complete nonsense to say that out of this development that may be coming you are going to get a political party that is going to be completely dominated by labour. I should like to assure the members who have this interest that within the C.C.F. movement itself there is enough concern, enough interest, in this particular point of view to see that we do not develop a political party that is in any labour leader's pocket. I do not mean by that last remark that I have anything against labour leaders; it is just not going to be that type of political party.

I feel that one of the points made by Mr. Fox in his annual report has a definite bearing upon the budget in a general way, and concerns something for which I have been looking in this House of Commons. I refer to the genuine free enterprisers who belong to these other two majority parties. Mr. Fox says:

> Politicians still bet on voters being foolish enough to think that welfarism means something for free, that higher taxes and bigger spending don't matter as long as the hand-outs keep coming. And the politicians still seem right about some people, for there are some who try to think that a government is coping with inflation when it taxes more even though it shows no attempt to spend less.

It seems to me this is a direct comment upon the budget presented by the Minister of Finance. Mr. Fox goes on to say:

> We cannot look to politicians or any political party to halt the spreading of indiscriminate welfarism. The aim of politicians is to win elections.

This affects all of us. The Minister of National Revenue was very candid the other day in suggesting that there is a lot of difference winning elections and carrying out a program. Mr. Fox goes on:

> They tell themselves that the people ask for welfarism; that it will continue to catch votes. Therefore, whether they think it good or bad, political party strategists will go on offering more and more of it until the people themselves stop them. In over 30 years we have had no sign of statesmanship in Canada to let us hope for anything different.

Well, that is a very bleak picture. I think one of the great disappointments to me, as one interested in political ideas and the fact that there should be some sharp division of ideas, is that I have not been able to recognize in that monster party that flows around the sides of this chamber any clear-cut exposition of what I thought they were directly connected with, that is free enterprise, private enterprise and all the rest. I have expressed this opinion before. We find it quite simple, in many cases, to cast our votes for most of the measures that are brought in here. This, if I correctly interpret it, indicates that we have a sprawling, middle of the road party that is away over on the left. Perhaps this is fine and perhaps it will keep members in for a long time, but it makes it very difficult to find any clear-cut political opposition. It is obviously making it difficult for the Liberal party.

Mr. Argue: They have gone to the right.

Mr. Fisher: We do not know where they have gone. The Leader of the Opposition made this statement; he said that the Liberal party is not against social planning. This represents tremendous progress.

Mr. Argue: Nor Joey.

Mr. Fisher: Well, they are not against Joey, either; that is one of those things that are difficult to define. Obviously what Mr. Fox has called for is not going to come, at least it does not look as though it will come, unless we can make enough appeals to gentlemen like the Minister of Finance.

The political party to which I belong, and which we hope will develop into a different one, of course has the greatest difficulty because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: —of this particular situation.

Mr. Pallett: You might enlarge that statement.

Mr. Fisher: The difficulty is precisely this—

Mr. Broome: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Fisher: I am always willing to give the hon. member a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Broome: When your party evolves into the party you expect it to be, will you still be introducing a bill concerning the disclosure of election expenses?

Mr. Fisher: Absolutely; I cannot see what difference that would make. I imagine the hon. member himself is interested in election expenses, especially out in British Columbia. I should not be surprised if the hon. member would like to know why some Conservative members in British Columbia got more money out of the kitty than he did.

An hon. Member: Did they?

Mr. Fisher: I have been asked, did they? Oh, yes, they did.

The difficulty of a definite position here, in so far as a group or a party that feels it is a socialist party is concerned, is simply that so many of the ideas of democratic socialism have permeated right through this chamber that we have difficulty marking out a clear-cut position. This is one of the things we attempt to do, and we will try to do to a greater extent. I know someone made a scornful reference to our amendment as being full of time worn phrases such as "the effect of social and economic planning". I admit that the time-worn phrase "social and economic planning" is not good enough. Of course an amendment does impose on you some limitation in spelling out what you suggest, but certainly our hope is in the future, and certainly our plan will have to be, to spell out in much greater detail both the steps in a welfare direction and the steps in so far as planning is concerned, especially economic planning.

On that last point there is still considerable confusion amongst what I call the less thoughtful people in this country—I will not say they are reactionary—about just what the term "socialism" means. I know that quite often, especially by United States writers, it is taken to be a blanket political program of complete nationalization. One of the points put up was that we did get into the amendment the idea of a capital gains tax. The suggestion was made that we meant that this tax was to apply all across the board, to property and everything else. That is just nonsense. The United States, which I think can claim with some fairness to be a little bit more capitalistic than this country, has a capital gains tax. It works and is effective. It applies specifically to dealings in the stock market; it has nothing to do with property.

To return to the planning aspect of what we need to do and where we need to go, may I say this. It seems to me the fact that the majority of people recognize that the central government has a responsibility for the economy today is full support for the idea of a coherent planning program. One of the other difficulties that loom in our way in Canada, and is a big bogey, is the whole question of provincial rights. We can certainly see that education has to be a fundamental part of any plan. It may be the whole key to our future, whether or not we are taking a socialistic interpretation. As long as we have one province holding the line, as Quebec indicates it is going to do, we are going to have difficulty in moving to national planning in order to attack the problems in education. If Quebec holds on to its point of view I think we may even reach the stage where we will find that the rest of the country will have to go ahead with national educational planning and let Quebec stay outside, as she has stayed outside in a number of other arrangements. If Quebec feel that it is so necessary for their own individuality and culture to remain outside in the educational field, then I think we will have to recognize that they have that right and, on the other hand, Quebec will have to recognize that the rest of Canada has a right to go ahead on a national basis with some sort of plan to pull us out of our educational problems.

That is an example of the kind of field I think we have to attack with planning. It is one of the fields to which I think we can point and say to this particular government, "You have not done what you indicated you would do". There is no use flaunting around the words of a man who is no longer here. Certainly as an educationist I and most of my colleagues, to my knowledge, had great respect for the late secretary of state for external affairs. We know that he proselytized across the country time after time, before he was a politician and when he was a politician, for a national approach to the higher education problem. He spelled it out in terms of junior colleges and the kind of support the government should give. That is the type of planning with which I think we should go ahead.

One of the points always made by anti-planners seems to be that it leads to a greater and greater build-up of the top-heavy civil service. Let us look at an example. I was checking the departments of this government and their rate of growth; and, from what I can make out, the fastest growing department we have is the Department of Transport.

Yet that is a department in which almost every member of this house has a real interest. We are always calling on that department, and I think fairly, to extend its services.

If you stop and think of the scope of these services and what they mean, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a department of this kind must grow in order to fulfil its obligations. Consider for example its obligations in so far as television and radio communications are concerned, licence checks and that type of thing, or in the field of northern development, airports and airport development and the tie-in with our whole communications structure. That department is bound to get bigger and broader and be involved with faster and more complicated devices.

This matter of growth is something you just cannot shrug off. It is something that has to be thrown back at these people who are always calling for smaller and smaller government. In a field such as transportation I think we can and should call for what we have insisted on for some time, namely a national planning authority and some kind of regulatory authority. In the last few days we have had in a committee a long argument on freight rates. From the presentations that are being made it is obvious that this is more than a question of railways. It is a question that comes down to fundamental principles in our country, namely whether we should take the socialistic approach to our railways or whether we should try to put the clock back and go back to some kind of capitalistic approach. It is also evident that you cannot separate the railways from water transportation or truck transportation in any kind of regulatory control. If you give one regulation, it impedes it unfairly with respect to the others.

One of the obvious difficulties of the planning approach is that it is difficult. It is not easy. There is no simple formula, and experts can quite often be wrong. It is easy for people to look around the world and cite certain examples where the experts have been wrong. I think the favourite example is the labour government's groundnuts scheme in Africa just after the last war. We can get all kinds of examples of that kind. But really there is no choice but that of planning. There is no other choice. We cannot go back to any day that really never did exist in Canada, of complete dog eat dog, the market place ruling and the law of supply and demand. That situation just does not exist any more.

What our responsibility should be—and it is certainly a responsibility that this group tends to bear and that I hope our new party will tend to bear—is to do more detailed planning of where we should go. If that program does not appeal to the Canadian electorate and does not get their support, of course we shall be disappointed; but more than being disappointed, I think we shall rue the day.

(Translation):

Mr. Emilien Morissette (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) should be commended for his budget speech. His review of Canada's general economic position and his analysis of the public accounts for the year ending March 31 last, reveal on the one hand that his estimates of last year were accurate, which lends probability and validity to his estimates for the current year and, on the other hand, that legislation passed by this government has efficiently and decisively contributed to check the recession and launch our economy towards a new era of prosperity.

The facts brought out in the minister's speech also show that the gloomy forecasts of our Liberal and socialist friends were not to be taken seriously and were the result of an ill-contained spite rather than an objective and intelligent study of existing circumstances.

My colleagues will remember that the Minister of Finance had forecast, with regard to 1958, a gross national revenue of about 32 billion dollars. The facts have proved him right.

As a matter of fact the gross national revenue exceded that amount. According to the dominion bureau of statistics, it reached a figure of $32,184,000,000. Yet, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), financial critic of the official opposition, has attempted to deride the minister's forecast. He has accused the Minister of Finance of picking that figure out of the air and of failing, in those estimates, to take into consideration the main components of the gross national revenue. The hon. member said, at that time, as can be seen on page 1465 of the official record of this house:

> I suggest that the minister seems to have taken probably the most optimistic of all advice in calculating the gross national product. That leaves some doubt in the first instance, when we consider this matter of deficit, as to whether the revenue estimate of $4,660 million is attainable.

Everybody knows today that in 1958 the Minister of Finance was not over-optimistic, and that his forecast was a sound one, for the revenue which had been estimated at $4,652 million actually amounted to $4,770 million. The facts, therefore, failed to justify the opposition's calculated pessimism.

Other members of the opposition had also made gloomy computations. Some of them had forecast the breakdown of our export trade. Others had indicated that the number of unemployed would reach a million. All of them were wrong, for our export trade has remained stable and the employment situation never deteriorated to the extent prophesied by our hon. friends. As the Minister of Finance stated the other day, the number of workers has gone up by 152,000 as compared to last year, and the number of unemployed itself is also lower than the year before.

On the whole, Mr. Speaker, and thanks especially to a fiscal policy and adequate legislation, the pattern of the Canadian economy has been sound in 1958. The recession was brought under control and under the impetus of a wise government policy the country's economy is showing signs of increased buoyancy.

It is both interesting and encouraging to note that the trend of the Canadian economy as a whole has been better than that of our neighbours. I should like here to make a brief comparative survey of this development on the basis of some of the most reliable tests of the economic situation. The figures I am going to use are found in the Labour Research, a review published by the Canadian Congress of Labour. According to this review, the seasonally adjusted gross national product in Canada reached $31,748 million in the third quarter of 1957. In the last quarter of 1957, it decreased to $31,460 million. In the first quarter of 1958 it had increased $31,684 million, and in the second quarter to $32,248 million. We are aware that this upward trend held out in the latter part of the year, and that the rate of increase was stepped up.

In the United States, at the end of 1957, the gross national product amounted to $438,900 million. In the first quarter of 1958, it was $425,800 million and, in the second quarter, $429 billion. Thus, it is easy to realize that the volume of gross national income in the United States was falling off, whereas Canada's gross national product had already begun to grow substantially. In other words, assuming that the gross national product figure reached in the third quarter of 1957 represents 100, we find that in the last quarter, it went down to 99.1 per cent, then up to 99.8 per cent in the first quarter of 1958 and as high as 101.6 in the second quarter of 1958. In the United States, the situation is as follows: the figure in the third quarter of 1957 reached 100. The index decreased to 98.5 in the fourth quarter of 1957, to 95.6 in the first quarter of 1958, and stood at 96.3 in the second quarter of 1958.

In other words, while the downward trend in the volume of the gross national product occurred at the same time both in the United States and in Canada, it was never as marked in Canada as it was in the United States, and moreover, the gross national product had already started to increase in Canada while it was still declining in the United States.

Now, let us draw a parallel between available personal incomes. I mean the total volume of personal income, less direct taxes and especially income tax.

In Canada at the end of 1957, those incomes amounted to $21,480 million. In the first quarter of 1958, they went up 2.8 per cent, to reach $22,080 million; in the second quarter, they rose to $22,892 million. In the United States, the available personal incomes reached, in the third quarter of 1957, $308,700 million. In the fourth quarter, they dropped 0.6 per cent to $306,800 million. They again declined, in the first quarter of 1958, by 1.2 per cent to $305 billion. They went up again in the second quarter of 1958, when available personal incomes reached $307,500 million, which was still 0.4 per cent below the pre-recession level. There again, the Canadian economy is showing greater buoyancy.

It should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that the buoyancy, in Canada, of available personal income resulted in greater consumption, estimated at 3 per cent, between the third quarter of 1957 and the first quarter of 1958, while in the United States, it declined by nearly 1 per cent, as a result of a substantial decrease in the purchase of durable goods.

The greater strength of available personal income is due especially to the fact that old age pensions and other governmental transfer payments have been increased, while there was a decrease in taxation rates.

There is now evidence that those government measures have had considerable effect on the expansion of our economy.

In Canada, the workers' income rose, in August 1957, to $1,305 million. I refer here to the over-all seasonally adjusted monthly income. After having gone down to $1,282 million at the end of 1957 that income rose to a new high of $1,316 million in May 1958, i.e. an increase of 0.8 per cent as compared to August 1957. In June, there was a slight decrease to $1,312 million, followed by a new rise to $1,317 million in July 1958, which exceeds the level reached in August 1957.

Let us now refer to the same statistics with regard to the United States. In August 1957, workers' income reached $20,825 million. That figure kept declining until April 1958, to reach the level of $20,075 million, i.e. a decrease of 3.6 per cent. They increased in May, June and July 1958. Worker incomes, both in Canada and in the United States, started to drop during the same period, and declined steadily until the end of 1957. However, while the decrease was felt until April 1958 in the United States, the trend was reversed in Canada in January 1958, and the index continued to rise steadily. In Canada, worker incomes did not drop as low as they did across the border, and they recovered earlier, at a more rapid pace and to a greater degree than in the United States.

Now if you compare industrial production indexes in both countries, you again find that Canada's economy showed greater strength than that of the United States. Both production indexes began to drop at about the same time in early 1957, but while there was substantial recovery in Canada early in 1958, there was no marked recovery in the United States until mid 1958. Furthermore, the decline in industrial production was twice as great in the United States as in Canada. In July 1958, the industrial production index in Canada was 4.4 per cent below the point reached before the downswing, while in the United States, the gap was 8.2 per cent. In manufacturing, the situation was similar; in Canada, the index declined in 1957, but began to recover as early as January 1958. The rise continued into February, April, May and June. In July, the index reached a point 5.7 per cent below the level of February 1957. In the United States, the decline began in August 1957 and lasted until April 1958, when the trend was reversed. Thus, while manufacturing production declined earlier in Canada than in the United States, it dropped to a much lower level in the United States. Manufacturing production had been picking up for three months in Canada while it was still declining in the United States. In July 1958, in the United States, it stood at 6.8 cent below the peak registered before the decline; in Canada, it was only 5.7 per cent below the February 1957 level.

In Canada, the production index for durable goods, after reaching a peak in July 1956, began to drop until March 1958. At that time, the trend was reversed, and increases were registered in April, May, June and August 1958. In the latter month, the index stood at a point 12.7 per cent below the 1956 peak.

In the United States, the same index began to fall in December 1956. The downswing went on from September 1957 to April 1958. Having reached a low point of 20.6 per cent, the index then began to recover.

Here, in Canada, the production of durable goods weakened earlier than in the United States, but on the other hand, the decline was greater in the United States.

In Canada, the number of housing starts had reached a record of 145,400 units in the first quarter of 1955. Early in 1957, that number had decreased to 86,000, or 40.9 per cent.

From then on, though, a marked increase was recorded. In the first quarter of 1958, the number of starts reached a fantastic high of 175,600, 20.8 per cent above the pre-recession record. In the second quarter of 1958, they decreased to 162,500, still much higher than the pre-recession record.

In the United States, the highest number of starts, 1,435,000, had been reached in December 1954. In March 1957, they went down by 35 per cent and in February 1958, the decrease had reached 36.2 per cent.

In July, a recovery took place but it was still a long way from the high level reached before the economic slow-down.

The volume of home building has therefore declined less sharply in Canada and recovery has been infinitely stronger than in the United States. In Canada, home building permits for an amount of $86,712,000 had been issued in September 1955. In December 1956, this amount had dropped to $50,466,000, a decline of 41.8 per cent.

A new record was reached in November 1957. The figure was then $92,539,000. This increase held out until February 1958, when the fantastic amount of $130,242,000 was reached. This was an increase of 50.2 per cent over the record pre-recession level. In June 1958, the amount was still at the very high level of $101,133,000, or 16.6 per cent above the pre-recession record.

In the United States, a record was reached in November 1956, when the total amount was $1,468,000,000. A year later, in November 1957, there was a very slight improvement. From then on, there was a drop until May 1958 followed by an increase in August 1958.

The lowest level was 9.1 per cent lower than that of November 1956 and 9.4 per cent lower than that of November 1957. The August 1958 high was 2.6 per cent over that of November 1956 and 2.3 per cent higher than in November 1957. While recession started earlier and was sharper in Canada than in the United States, the recovery was much stronger in Canada. The whole credit for this should go to the government, for making the necessary funds available to house builders. We know that 50 per cent of the housing starts in 1958 in Canada were financed through the National Housing Act.

In the field of industrial construction, it should be noted that while the decrease in Canada was sharper than in the United States, recovery was noticeable by May 1958, while the decline was continuing in the United States.

In business construction, the American economy was somewhat better than our own.

Let us now compare statistics relating to corporation profits. I refer here to profits before taxes. An unprecedented high had been reached in that field during the first and third quarters of 1956. From the third quarter of 1956, they registered a decline lasting up to the first quarter of 1958. From the second quarter of 1958, corporation profits were on their way up.

The United States have experienced a somewhat similar movement, but the decline was twice as sharp there as in Canada.

Let us look now at the trends of employment in some sectors of the economy. In Canada, the employment index in manufactures reached a high in December 1956. From then on, it decreased until April 1958, but in May, June, July and August 1958, it showed an increase. In the United States, the pre-recession high was reached in December 1956.

From then on there has been a decline until May 1958. During the following months, conditions showed some improvement. The decline began at the same time in the United States and in Canada. It has been checked earlier in Canada, and it never reached the same proportions as in the United States. From that point of view, Canada stood up better than our neighbour. The same holds true for the employment index in the production of durable goods. The peak was reached in Canada in November 1956 and was followed by an irregular downward trend until April 1958. In May and June, there was an increase.

In the United States, the highest level was reached in December 1956, followed by a decline until May 1958. The development of the unemployment index in that sector of the economy is very much similar in both countries though, here again, we find that recovery is firmer in Canada. The employment index with regard to the production of non-durable goods reached its peak in Canada in August 1957. A downward trend was noted until March 1958, but from then on there was an increase. In the United States, the peak was reached in November 1955, and was followed by a decline until March 1958. From then on, an increase was noted, but, here again, it must be said that the downward trend in the United States was twice as marked as in Canada.

We may therefore conclude that, after all, Canadian economy has stood up well in a period which was extremely difficult for North America. Recession is one of those things the Conservatives inherited from the Liberals. The facts I have shown prove that the recession has hit bottom and that recovery is now well on its way.

In his annual report the governor of the Bank of Canada stressed that "in the last quarter of 1958, the gross national product was higher by 4 per cent in Canada and 2 per cent in the United States, than the previous record figure."

The policy of relaxation with regard to monetary conditions which the government applied at the end of 1957 contributed more than any other factor to check the recession and to promote economic recovery. As a matter of fact, the recession has not been as severe or as protracted as certain people had foreseen. This is an a posteriori confirmation of the government's wise policy.

The Canadian public is grateful to the government and to the Minister of Finance who, in a difficult period, have practised a bold policy which, in the first place, checked the progress of the recession, then stopped it completely and, finally, brought about a strong economic recovery.

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): The figures and statistics quoted by my good friend the member for Rimouski (Mr. Morissette), who is an economist, I believe, have yet to convince me that Canada's economy is in good shape.

Mr. Tremblay: You failed to understand his speech.

Mr. Dupuis: Come, come, Roberval—you naughty boy!

Mr. Pigeon: We do not use Mr. Lamontagne's statistics.

An hon. Member: Nor Mr. Martin's.

Mr. Racine: I believe I heard the voice of the member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay). I also note that the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) has already started to interject. If he really wants to coo, he might wait till I am through with my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the budget brought down on April 9 last by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) came as no surprise, as far as the deficit is concerned, and despite the government's efforts to have the people accept this general tax increase, I think the people are fully aware that this government's election promises were nothing but a smoke screen and had no other purpose than to win votes.

We also recall that the pre-election concessions granted by this government in the taxation field included reductions involving about $178 million.

It follows that such generosity is more than cancelled by the $245 million to be taken from the taxpayers by the end of this year, and by the $352 million which the new taxes will cost us in a full year.

There is no denying that the tax increase will mostly hurt the consumer, because most of the business firms that are being taxed will include the taxes in their sale price. Consumer purchasing power, which already was extremely low, will be further lowered by the government's action.

The consumer purchasing power being reduced, that will substantially affect the demand and, in my opinion, the supply will certainly be affected as well. It should not be surprising if, as a result of that decline in the purchasing power, some concerns were obliged to cut down their production, which would certainly not help solve the unemployment problem nor bring the revenue which the Minister of Finance seems to be so much in need of.

The Minister of Finance has admitted a deficit of $616 million for the fiscal year 1958-1959.

That deficit would certainly have been more palatable if it had contributed, in some way, to an economic recovery or had helped at least to partially reduce unemployment, if not completely.

That deficit is not either the immediate result of an increase in social benefits, such as family allowances, for instance, which would have helped increase the purchasing power of the taxpayers as well as stimulate business and industry.

The position of the federal treasury and the financial problems facing the minister are evidence, as well as the very picture, of the difficulties which workers, farmers and industrialists in this country must face.

Such financial unbalance is the very picture of the sad economic situation prevailing in several fields in Canada, and which is causing unceasing concern to a great number of our fellow-citizens, especially if we consider the nearly total absence of governmental measures designed to help remedy such a situation.

We realize also that the financial situation of the government has deteriorated during the two years of Conservative administration. For instance, the funded debt, according to table 2a, page 2412 of Hansard, has gone up from $15.4 billion in 1956 to $15.6 billion in 1959. For the same period, the total debt rose from $19.1 billion to $20.2 billion, and the percentage of the gross national product, which was 41.7 in 1956, has gone down to 36.3.

In spite of increased taxation, the present Minister of Finance will be able to boast of a rather unenviable record: that of having increased the national debt by more than $1 billion in two years. His forecasts for 1959-1960 are hardly more encouraging, since he expects another deficit of $393 million.

Are we going to have, under the present government, a continuous and yearly increase in taxation? The Minister of Finance stated on television, the night he introduced his budget, that he could not say when he would be able to introduce a balanced budget.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, when he was in the opposition, the same minister was asking for a balanced budget, and was not criticizing Conservative deficits, but rather Liberal surpluses, which contributed to reduce the national debt.

The Minister of Finance is far from improving our financial position. He faces the same problem as last year, and has admitted himself that in spite of the deficit he expects, he will again be facing the same problems next year.

If, at that time, he uses the same methods, the consumer will be paying again, and we will again witness a further drop in our purchasing power.

Just to show the inconsistency of the present administration, let us take an item which has been increased, as evidence that election promises are not being carried out.

Here is a statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) on February 17, 1958 at Brantford, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of February 18:

(Text):

Prime Minister Diefenbaker last night dropped a clear hint that the taxes on cigarettes, cigars and tobacco soon may be cut.

He told an audience of 1,400 that no industry in Canada suffers a greater degree of taxation than the tobacco industry.

Tobacco growers, he said, are the one segment of agriculture that has not received the attention it deserves, although growers long have clamoured for government aid.

The Prime Minister added: "We want to give them this assistance. We are having a study made of this industry to see what action is needed to give tobacco growers a reasonable return and some security for their efforts."

The tax on a 33 cent pack of cigarettes now is about 18 cents, made up of an excise tax, and excise duty, and a 10 per cent sales tax.

The study probably will be made by the Department of Finance and any ensuing tax cut could be introduced in time for the 1958-59 federal budget expected in May.

To the Brantford audience, living on the northern fringe of Ontario's tobacco belt—where production has jumped from 63,000 acres in 1943 to 120,000 in 1956—the Prime Minister's hint appeared an effective vote catcher.

(Translation):

I wonder if, after presenting this budget, the Prime Minister could go back to Brantford, repeat those statements and make as many friends among the voters.

This budget also fails to justify any hope of higher benefits under existing social legislation or of any further welfare measures.

May I quote what the Prime Minister said in Hull on February 25, 1958, as reported in the Montreal Star of February 26, 1958:

(Text):

The Prime Minister told his Hull audience of some 850 persons that some features of the United States plan would have to be altered before it could be fitted on top of the present Canadian program of $55 monthly pensions paid to all at 70.

He detailed the payments which he said are made under the United States plan to those on average incomes: between $88.50 and $98.50 a month for single workers retiring at age 65; $132.80 a month for a husband and wife retiring at age 65; death benefits of $255; disability payments starting at age 50.

(Translation):

More unkept promises! Mr. Speaker, if I wanted to list these in detail in this house, it would take me much longer than my allotted forty minutes.

However, if we examine all the Prime Minister's election promises, we find with some surprise that he has not indicated his position with regard to family allowances which are, to my mind, the most significant social legislation we have in Canada.

Last year, on the same occasion, that is during the budget debate, I spoke at length about family allowances and showed that at that time the cost of living index regarding family needs had doubled since they were introduced in 1944 and paid out in 1945, and that it was the government's responsibility to increase them adequately.

No one need be an economist to realize that the family allowances set up in 1945 no longer have the same buying power in 1959, and I believe it is the government's duty to correct that situation so as to provide for the needs and requirements of Canadian homes.

If the Prime Minister made no reference to this matter during the last elections, are we to understand that family allowances are of no interest to him or that he wittingly or unwittingly overlooked them? Under the circumstances, I cannot account for the Prime Minister's position on this matter. On the other hand, there were hon. members who did not hesitate to tackle the subject, during the election campaign and to come out with their promises so that I wonder why they kept mum about it last year. At all events, I hope those hon. members will not be afraid to expound their views on the subject and to ask for an improvement with regard to family allowances.

I would now like to deal with another question of great significance, i.e. federal-provincial relations, especially as concerns grants to universities.

My friend, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), when speaking in this house on April 13 last, mentioned in certain parts of his speech the satisfaction he felt over being given the seat he now occupies, pointing out that he was happy to get farther and farther away from the opposition.

I am delighted that he should find comfort in this particular way. Obviously, he is easily satisfied. Of course we do miss his presence just opposite. However I would point out to him that he is getting closer and closer to the exit, and that we will be very unhappy, after the next federal election to see him go, but let him take comfort in the thought that he will not be the only one: many other members opposite will be doing the same.

I say that my hon. friend from Sherbrooke is both likeable and understanding, and I can prove it because I admit those qualities in him. I should like to quote a statement he made which, in my opinion, is exceedingly important. I congratulate him for the sincerity with which he dealt with the problem of university grants, as far as the province of Quebec is concerned. As recorded on page 9 of the appendix for April 13, here is what he said, and I quote:

> That is why if the Quebec government cares to offer a suggestion, to make an official proposal, an appropriate and constructive one, I am positive that this government will consider it with great care and that, eventually, a proper solution will be found in this field.

I am in full agreement with my hon. friend from Sherbrooke. I am sure that, if the Quebec government really wanted to make a constructive proposal, the present government would consider it with great interest, as the previous government would have done too. But, if we accept my hon. friend's statement we have to infer that in the last 7 years since those grants were offered, the province of Quebec or rather the Union Nationale government or even the premier himself, (Mr. Duplessis), have failed to come out with some constructive suggestion, some official or appropriate proposal in order to settle that problem.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, how many talents have gone to waste, how many young people have had to give up their studies because they could not afford to stay in college.

Last week, I received a letter from a young man who had two more years of philosophy to do before completing his classical course and enter the university. I should have liked to read that letter in the house, but I do not think it is proper to read the names of people who are in such dire straits, and thus reveal their sad plight. I shall content myself with summarizing the contents of the letter without tabling it.

That young student, forced to interrupt his studies, wrote to me, asking whether I could find a job for him for a year, so that he could earn enough to finish his studies. That young man showed much interest in his studies and was even prepared to make sacrifices; I believe this is a typical case. That student explained to me that he comes from a family of 14 children and that his father could no longer afford to keep him in college.

I think I can safely say that many young men in the province of Quebec are in the same plight, so that we can state there is an enormous wastage of talent.

I therefore agree with my good friend, the member for Sherbrooke, that the Quebec government should put forward some constructive proposals with a view to reaching understanding, so that our young people might benefit from this help and reach their goal in life.

On the other hand, the Quebec government is responsible for wasting the abilities of a whole generation, because it has been turning down these grants for seven years, has taken a negative stand, and made no move to iron out the differences that existed.

The member for Sherbrooke has expressed surprise at finding, since his election to the house that many members show little interest in the matter and are reluctant to discuss this vital problem. Let him have no fear, we too know of this problem, and have been aware of it for quite some time. We too would have been anxious for the Quebec government to take the action he has suggested, and which we have been suggesting for some time.

With this in mind, I have obtained from the Association Generale des Etudiants de Laval, from the Association des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal and from the federation of classical colleges, some of the tables included in the brief they submitted to the Tremblay commission. The first table shows the percentage of students attending Laval and Montreal Universities and classical colleges in the province of Quebec according to the job classification of their fathers:

Job classification of fathers	Percentage of students
	Laval	Montreal	Classical colleges
1. Professional men: ...	17.0%	21.6%	44.3%
2. Manufacturers, businessmen, owners of large business concerns:	28.0	26.1

Job classification of fathers	Percentage of students Laval	Montreal	Classical colleges
3. Clerical workers, in civil service, railways, etc.	28.0	9.3	12.1
4. Skilled workers:	18.0	9.5	25.7
5. Unskilled workers:	2.0	4.5	5.3
6. Agriculture:	7.0	7.6	12.5

	Attending university	Within the province
1. Professional men:	19.3%	4.4%
2. Manufacturers, etc.:	26.9	6.0
3. Office workers etc.:	18.6	15.9
4. Skilled workers:	13.7	43.1
5. Unskilled workers:	3.3
6. Agriculture	7.3	16.6
7. Others:	10.9	14.0

Mr. Speaker, we also know that tuition fees in the province of Quebec are perhaps not the highest in the country, nor are they the lowest. So with the permission of the house—

Mr. Tremblay: It was different last year.

Mr. Dupuis: Quiet, Buster!

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, if the house agrees, and to avoid taking up too much of its time, I should like to include into the official record a table indicating tuition fees in leading Canadian universities.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Has the hon. member permission to put this table on Hansard?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the source of the figures contained in the table?

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, this table was included in the brief submitted to the Tremblay commission by the Canadian federation of universities.

Mr. Pigeon: So long as it was not by Maurice Lamontagne.

Mr. Dupuis: Are you jealous of Mr. Lamontagne?

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I gather these figures are not from an official government body, nor is the table one drawn from any official government source, either primary or secondary source?

Mr. Racine: This table is contained in the submission of the universities to the royal commission and has been submitted to the government. It is the same table.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Has the hon. member permission to put this table on Hansard?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine:

According to the table showing representation in universities, 41.2 per cent of the sons of professional men and manufacturers attended universities in 1956, while their parents accounted at the time for only 10.4 per cent of the population of the province of Quebec.

In other words, 89.6 per cent of the people, made up of clerical workers, skilled and unskilled workers, farmers and others were using only slightly over one half the capacity of universities. Skilled workers, farmers and others, are usually considered in the class of average income who should be enjoying the same privileges as people of greater means. I still believe that an agreement should be entered into and that action, as suggested by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, on the part of the government of the province of Quebec, for the purpose of making positive proposals, should be taken at once so that families who account for close to 89.6 per cent of the population might receive the same benefits as the well-to-do.

The province's refusal of federal grants is detrimental to those people and I trust that some way of accepting the grants will be found so as to provide assistance to many students who, while they have the necessary aptitudes, sometimes lack the money to go on with their studies.

I am sure that the universities would gladly accept those grants, for we are all aware of their financial problems and we know that they must find other sources of income to make up their deficit.

We hope that these grants will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference we are looking forward to, and we also trust that, at the time, a solution will be found that would be fair to both the government of the province of Quebec and the federal government, because university students who have been deprived of those grants for seven years now need them badly.

In that same regard, I suggest to the hon. Minister of Finance that he grant higher tax deductions to parents with children in college or at the university.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close my remarks by quoting a few excerpts of a statement made by the hon. Leader of the Opposition and of the Liberal party (Mr. Pearson) on February 10, 1959. They are proposals that we have made during the election campaign and, unlike the Conservatives, what we said then we can say again today. We still believe, as we have advocated, that the way to reduce unemployment is to increase the buying power of consumers by lowering taxes. This government has chosen an altogether opposite view, and we know into what depths we have been thrust as a consequence.

Mr. Allard: May I put a question to the hon. member for Beauce? Could the hon. member tell the house if he believes that the reference to education in section 93 of the British North America Act applies to university education?

Mr. Racine: Would you repeat your question; I did not quite understand it.

Mr. Allard: Does the hon. member for Beauce think that section 93 of the British North America Act, in its reference to education, also applies to university education?

Mr. Racine: Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly said during my speech that I agreed with the hon. member for Sherbrooke when he said that the province of Quebec should take whatever steps are required to come to an agreement with the federal government. My hon. friend knows, of course, that I am not a lawyer and that references to sections are matters that have given rise to much controversy.

Mr. Tremblay: Oh, no. Oh, no.

Mr. Racine: I think it is irresponsible to solicit my advice on those matters, for even leading jurists do not agree on their interpretation.

(Text):

Mr. B. G. Allmark (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, may I add my congratulations to those already expressed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for his excellent presentation of the budget. May I also extend my congratulations to the hon. members who have preceded me in this budget debate for the contributions which they have made through their budget speeches.

In the presentation of the budget the minister has given the Canadian people a frank and honest appraisal of Canada's economic position, and a clear-cut explanation which Canadians have learned to expect from our capable and realistic Minister of Finance. Editorial comment regarding the budget has been interesting, and for the most part the opinions expressed showed satisfaction. There has been a general agreement that the minister's budget is one well suited to our present economic position. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, I speak for all Canadians when I say I am pleased to see indications which definitely point to recovery. The fact that there is less unemployment than a year ago and there are more Canadians employed in Canada than one year ago is extremely encouraging and proof of the wisdom of Conservative government policies.

The provision of money by this parliament in its first session made possible more than 163,000 housing starts in Canada in 1958. That is truly an amazing record and one which surpasses the previous record year of 1955 by about 25,000. The availability of this money for housing was a notable factor in creating employment in my own riding. In the riding of Kingston in 1951 the value of housing for which building permits were issued totalled slightly less than $1 million; in 1957 this figure stood at slightly over $2 million; in 1958 in the city of Kingston this figure jumped to $4,725,000. That is concrete evidence of the value of the government's policy to provide money for the construction of homes.

Both labour and contractors in my riding have been doing an excellent job carrying on winter construction. However, I think that we Canadians have a great deal to learn about winter construction. Nevertheless it is apparent that never before has construction been carried on to the extent it has been carried on this winter. I think it is most important that we intensify the educational program which has already had excellent results but which if carried on in a thorough and extensive manner will result in a further expansion of construction during the winter months.

It has been quite remarkable to watch the construction of buildings at Queen's University during the past winter. There has been excellent co-operation by the university. As a result, our Kingston tradesmen and labourers have benefited through this season when normally employment would be at a low level. I think our own government departments which are responsible for construction should make it their policy to award contracts at a time of the year when it would permit the building to be at such a stage that construction could be carried on during the winter months under the most favourable conditions. It is useless for the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) to publicize the necessity for providing winter work unless, of course, our own government departments co-operate and set an example to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, since this is the first occasion on which I have spoken on a budget or throne speech to date, I trust that you will grant me the privilege of making some reference to the riding which I represent. I refer to the historical riding of Kingston, an area comprising the fast growing city of Kingston, the townships of Kingston, Storrington and Pittsburgh and the islands of Wolfe, Howe and Simcoe. I do not intend to trace the events in the long and historical existence of my riding, but I think I should mention the fact that the people I represent have displayed an exceptional quality of judgment down through the years. My electorate chose John A. Macdonald, then 29 years of age, as Kingston's member to the government of Canada, on October 15, 1844. This quality of good judgment has obviously remained with the people. This fact was proven last autumn when the Speaker of the House of Commons was chosen as the recipient of an honorary doctor's degree at the fall convocation at Queen's University. It was my privilege to attend this convocation; and may I say that I was extremely proud to witness our able Speaker being honoured by the university in my riding.

We who are the residents of this riding are proud of the part we have played in Canadian history but may I stress the fact that in these days of growth and expansion in Canada we are not living in the past. We are not afraid—as are some on the other side of the house—that Canada is facing ruin. We believe we will share in the great and rapid expansion which will take place in Canada in the years ahead. We believe that Kingston will share in the prosperity which will result from the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway which will carry the ships of all nations half-way across this vast continent.

It is to be regretted, Mr. Speaker—and I have said this before in the house—that those responsible for the planning of the seaway did not have the foresight or the good judgment to use the Canadian channel in the western 25 miles of the St. Lawrence river. I think that the hon. members of the house should be aware of the fact that before the building of the seaway there were approximately 30 miles of the Kingston to Montreal section of the St. Lawrence in United States waters. The decision to put the Snell and Eisenhower locks on the United States side placed 20 miles in United States waters, and the decision to use the United States channel rather than the Canadian channel in the Kingston area—and this channel had been the shipping channel since shipping in the St. Lawrence began—placed another 25 miles in United States waters, so that now approximately 75 miles of this 168-mile stretch of river is completely on the United States side of the boundary.

Kingston is a thriving port, handling one million to one and one-half million tons of seaway cargo a year, I think it is interesting to note that with the proposed seaway tolls this represents $600,000 to $700,000 yearly. That is a substantial contribution toward the $28 million required annually to amortize the seaway over a 50-year period. It is difficult to understand why such a port was ignored by the Liberal government when for a small expenditure the channel could have been retained in Canadian waters.

On June 28 of this year the people of the Kingston area will welcome Her Majesty's yacht Britannia which will carry the Queen of Canada and His Royal Highness Prince Philip to the city of Kingston which was once the capital of Canada. We are distressed to realize that the Britannia will not follow that same Canadian channel taken by Baron Sydenham, governor of Canada, when he arrived in Kingston on May 28, 1841 to open the parliament of Canada. I hope that on this trip which the Queen makes across Canada there will be a minimum of ceremony and an opportunity for the royal couple to enjoy the scenic beauty and the many places of historic interest in our country. By our actions this year let us convince our Queen that she may enjoy in Canada that leisure and rest which will make this trip an enjoyable vacation.

This junction of the St. Lawrence river and the lakes is also the terminal for both river and lake pilots. There appears to be the opinion that the crews of foreign-going ships are capable of piloting their ships through the restricted waters of our inland system. There is no one who will deny that foreign ships' officers are capable navigators, but this is a skill of little importance in lake and river shipping. It has been said that the safety of the seaway is paramount, and this also applies to our marine installations throughout the lakes, to our ships and to the lives of Canadian sailors. If we in Canada are to be assured of the degree of safety necessary then we must rely on the experience and ability of those men who have spent their lives learning the skill of ship handling and learning the hundreds of miles of river and restricted channels in our inland waters.

We have in my riding four of Canada's nine penitentiaries, one of these being the women's penitentiary. Kingston is also the location of a staff college for the training of penitentiary officers. I do not suggest that those of us who live near the penal institutions are therefore experts in the matter of penal reform; and I trust that the observations I am about to make will not be construed by the members of this house as being those of an authority. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) has within his department a correctional planning board which is at present studying the penal system in Canada. To this group may I suggest that the majority of female inmates come from the same fair province as does the minister. It is my observation that his province would be a much more suitable location for this institution. I suggest that this handsome limestone building now being used as a women's prison might well be converted into a modern inmates' hospital. The excellent Queen's University medical school is undoubtedly responsible for providing in Kingston hospital facilities comparable to the best on the continent. A new modern penitentiary hospital could enjoy the benefits which this medical school would provide.

May I also request the Minister of Justice to consider Kingston as the site for a new minimum security institution. There are many advantages in having prisons grouped in one area. Kingston, located as it is halfway between Toronto and Montreal, is ideally situated since it makes the visiting by the inmates' relatives easier and this visiting privilege, I understand, is an important factor in the rehabilitation of the inmate. If the Kingston area is fortunate in obtaining a new institution I would suggest that it be located a few miles to the north of the city rather than to the east or west, where in a few years it would be encircled by residential development.

The people of my riding have a fair knowledge of penal institutions. The officers for the most part are residents of our city and we appreciate the problems which exist in the operation of penitentiaries, and we are indeed pleased to have them located in our area. There is one point which is very apparent, and that is that the present Minister of Justice has had dumped in his lap a penal system totally inadequate to take care of the needs of a country of 17 million people. This is a direct result of the failure of the Liberal government to take those steps which are necessary to increase the accommodation in these institutions.

One of the scenic beauty spots of our country is that point of land at the junction of the great Cataraqui river and the St. Lawrence, where the royal military college is situated. Many of the members of this house had the opportunity to visit R.M.C. on army day last year, and I am convinced that they were impressed with the natural beauty of this location. On the very tip of this point of land is located Fort Frederick, a very beautiful and historic old fort which in recent years has been allowed, unfortunately, to fall into a bad state of disrepair. I would like at this time to express my appreciation of the very able and expert assistance of the Kingston historical society, which assisted me in bringing to the attention of the minister the condition of Fort Frederick. This fort is being repaired and will further enhance the appearance of these beautiful grounds. The decision of the Conservative government to do this work is to be commended.

I would like to remind the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) that the removal of those houses with which I am sure he is acquainted located at the north of the playing field at R.M.C. would make possible the conversion of this particular area into a beauty spot in keeping with the remainder of the college grounds. There are thousands of United States tourists each year who view our Kingston military installations and the college as they pass along No. 2 highway. It is my opinion it is extremely important to Canada that these buildings and grounds be kept in a condition of which we, as Canadians, may be proud.

I am very pleased that the route of the Britannia will carry Her Majesty through the thousand islands on her holiday this summer. This is a magnificent sight and one which should thrill our royal visitors. One of our great assets in the thousand islands are our national parks. Pleasure boats varying in size from the small outboard motorboats to the large palatial yachts pack the dock facilities provided by the Canadian government. Here too there has been an unfortunate lack of foresight in the national park area, with the result that today there are far too few docks to accommodate the vast number of boats in this area. Obviously we would not wish to prevent our United States visitors from using these national parks, so there appears only one solution. If Canadian boat owners are to enjoy their own Canadian islands we must build additional dock facilities. I can assure the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton) that the provision of additional docks in the parks of the thousand islands will make him a very popular person among the great number of boat owners.

Mr. Speaker, we have in my riding a very large and growing tourist industry. Not only in the city, but in the country to the north there are hundreds of beautiful lakes, and it is truly a fisherman's paradise. There is presently set up an international Kingston-Cape Vincent bridge committee which comprises six United States and six Canadian members. Its purpose is to promote the construction of an international bridge in this area to facilitate the crossing of the St. Lawrence and thereby further increasing the tourist business to this lakeland area. If this bridge is built it will be indeed a tremendous asset. I would like to point out the spirit of goodwill and co-operation which exists between the Canadian cities and towns in this area and those across the border in the United States. This is indicated by the ability of these neighbours to join together for the promotion of a project beneficial to both countries. May I commend here the members of this committee for their sincere effort and enthusiasm in this project.

I earlier made some modest reference to Kingston's place in history and to the fact that in 1844 Kingston was represented in the parliament of upper and lower Canada by John A. Macdonald. May I close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that Kingston riding has been denied for some years the privilege of having the name of Sir John A. Macdonald placed on the pages of Hansard by a Kingston member of the same political faith as the old chieftain. I do so today with humility and respect for that great statesman, whose leadership, wisdom and vision foresaw in this united dominion the land of opportunity we have today.

[Mr. Allmark.]

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on this occasion to take part in the budget speech debate on behalf of the constituents of Nickel Belt. I realize that possibly some of my remarks at first glance will not please too much the members of the government, but I trust that if they will have the patience to listen and possibly try to ascertain the significance of some of my remarks, it may assist them in pressing the government to which they belong to bring about an administration which would be, at least partly, in line with the promise made by it at the last election.

I may say I have possibly more reasons than the members of the government to indicate certain views in this house, because my people of Nickel Belt are not responsible for the administration which we have today. It is obvious by my being here on this side that it was not their wish. They have to suffer like every other citizen in Canada under the present administration. I would also say, Mr. Speaker, that possibly the balance of Canadians who voted Conservative in the last election could very well be excused, because it is clear that after 23 years of a government which fulfilled to the greatest degree of possibility its promises the Canadian public at the last election had reason to feel that amongst the thousands of promises made by this government at least a fair proportion would be kept. For that reason I think the Canadian public could be excused.

The main fault of this administration—and it is most apparent in the budget speech—is that it has defaulted on practically every promise made. We heard yesterday a very fine remark concerning the fall of Humpty Dumpty. I should like to remind the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that possibly the greatest fall a man could have, occurs when he stumbles over his own bluff. We have seen introduced into this parliament a new domestic policy of administration, a policy which I should like to term the fork and spoon policy. During an election campaign, the Prime Minister and his assistants go about spooning with the Canadian public and then as soon as the election is over the public all realize that the time has come to fork over. That process is apparent in this budget.

We listened last night to a very fine speech, I thought, by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). I appreciate that the hon. member has been in this house for a very long time, both as a member of the opposition and as a supporter of the government. Naturally, he recounted many memories, but I think it was obvious to all of us that there is one conception which the Conservatives have missed and that is the proper definition of the word "memory". That is apparent from a study of the promises which have been made. Indeed, the position of the government's supporters reminds me of the answer given by a school child when the teacher asked him to define "memory". After some hesitation, the boy gave this answer: "Memory is the thing I forget with". I think it is obvious to us that this is the definition which has been adopted by this government.

I could touch on many subjects, but the time allotted to me will not permit. But let me mention at the outset of these remarks the government's promise to lower taxes. What happened to that? We all listened to the budget speech and we are in a position to judge for ourselves. Then there was the undertaking to abolish the sales tax. What happened to that? There was the promise to solve the unemployment problem. And then there was the vision. The closest the Canadian people can get today to the vision of the great northland about which so much has been said would seem to be through a telescope held upside down. The Conservatives promised to reduce expenditures. But what do we find in the budget? Although the government has discarded certain commitments in the field of national defence—I refer, of course, to the Avro program—and some saving has certainly been made in this respect, we are still confronted with the fact that the present expenditures of the administration will exceed those of the previous year by no less than $300 million.

As I said a moment ago, there seems to be an understanding that supporters of the administration should pay tribute to various personalities in the government; feeling that the Canadian people will be satisfied if it is simply stated, as was done last night, that the greatest administrators in the country have now come to the helm. But that will not suffice. The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe said last night—and it sounded odd to me—that the only way in which we could solve unemployment was by putting people to work. Such simplicity of approach will not solve the problem which the Canadian people are now facing; a more concrete solution will need to be provided.

The hon. member I have just mentioned made reference to past acts and past ambitions and then went on to speak of ambitions and visions for the future. Undoubtedly he forgot to list a number of very real accomplishments, and I should like to remind him of only a few which were carried out in recent years under a Liberal administration. What about the Chalk River project, for example? Is that not something worth talking about? What about Elliot lake and the development of uranium mines in Canada? Is that not a project worth talking about? What about the St. Lawrence seaway, undertaken by the Liberal government? Is that not a Canadian project to talk about?

Now we are told that the Conservative party has something to offer toward a solution of the unemployment problem, though nothing specific was mentioned. The hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe made the statement that the Liberal party was tied to the United States and took dictation from the United States. That is not so, and I can prove it by giving one example, the case of the St. Lawrence seaway which I have just mentioned. All Canadians knew, and I knew, though I was not actively in politics at that time, that the United States was not prepared to come into this major project and that the Liberal administration at that time made a move which was strong enough to impel the United States, our strong neighbour, to take action along with us. These acts are recorded in the books of the Canadian parliament, and they are concrete achievements; they are not in the nature of a vision which includes no explanation of what the projects may be.

Now I should like to touch on one point of particular concern to the people of the Nickel Belt area, namely the increase in the income tax announced in this budget. Our people, engaged in the mining industry, earn salaries which are relatively high, so every one of them is affected by this increase. It seems to be the minister's contention that if he did make an increase it was a minor one. It reminds me of those who discuss operations; a minor operation is always an operation which is performed on the other fellow. Then we have, tied in with this, the conversion loan. The Minister of Finance appears to have a brand new theory ready for the Canadian people. He tells them: "You save your pennies, taxes will take care of them." That is what Canadians will get out of the budget presented here last week.

Then we come to this increase in the tax on cigarettes, a tax which is most important and which affects so many Canadians. I should like to direct the attention of the house to the opinions expressed by the Minister of Finance when he was a member of the opposition in 1953. He had occasion, on March 30, to make a short speech, one which, no doubt, he regrets today, concerning a bill which had to do with a change in the rate of taxation on cigarettes which was brought into the house after the government had substantially reduced the tax on cigarettes. In this connection I should like to quote a phrase from a speech made by Mr. Abbott, who was the minister of finance at that time, because it was quoted by the hon. member for Eglinton to indicate what the situation was. This was the statement by Mr. Abbott:

A further reduction in the levy on cigarettes seems desirable. It is clear that following the reduction made last year there was quite a definite increase in cigarette sales which from the point of the revenue collector is very encouraging.

Then the present Minister of Finance had this to say, and I hope hon. members will listen very carefully. These are his words as found at page 3411 of Hansard, the fourth volume, of 1953:

I speak as one who does not smoke and who is not personally affected by this present bill. But as a non-smoker I wish to say that I think the taxes on cigarettes and tobacco are still too high. I wish to say also that if we have a smuggling problem at the border today with respect to cigarettes it is largely the creation of this government by the boosting sky-high of excise taxes and other impositions on cigarettes, particularly the large advances in taxes that were made two years ago.

Where will the Canadian people find the reasons for smuggling today? What a contrast there is between the statements made by the present Minister of Finance when he was in the opposition and those he made in his recent budget speech concerning increased taxes.

Mr. Nesbitt: The price of United States cigarettes is up.

Mr. Pickersgill: What has that to do with our budget?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It has everything to do with it.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist commenting that Conservatives are somewhat like buttons in that they keep popping off.

It occurs to me that the Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton), who has just this moment entered the house, may be prepared to give consideration to the introduction of a special commemorative stamp this year. If this is so, possibly he will accept my suggestion and print a stamp commemorative of a 25-year period in Canadian history which is indeed memorable. Possibly one-half of the new stamp could bear the effigy of Lord Bennett and on the other half there could appear a weeping taxpayer.

Mr. Nesbitt: Big joke.

Mr. Godin: I doubt that the Postmaster General would be disposed to having printed a stamp commemorative of the tenth anniversary of Newfoundland and so I was inspired to offer this alternative suggestion. Perhaps many Canadians would appreciate the thought behind it. A stamp such as that I describe would certainly commemorate a definite anniversary, one which would be understood by every Canadian, because Canadians feel at this time that we are marking the anniversary of the Bennett administration.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I want to express myself in French in order to deal with a few matters for the benefit of my fellow citizens, i.e. hon. members from the province of Quebec. I believe it appropriate to speak on behalf of my fellow-citizens in northern Ontario with regard to the serious problems of higher education in this country, of federal-provincial relations and, lastly, of grants to universities.

I rise as the representative of a riding which has the youngest bilingual university in this country, i.e. the University of Sudbury, which, for several years, has had the opportunity of benefiting from federal grants put at the disposal of Canadian universities.

As an hon. member explained just now, I realize how easy it is to make political speeches about that problem and to repeat the words "autonomy" and "constitutional", but I think that the 50 hon. members or so from the province of Quebec who are sitting on the government benches would be well advised to take steps to come to some agreement with the federal government and the government of Quebec so that students from that province might enjoy the benefits of higher education which federal grants could provide and therefore be on the same footing as their fellow students elsewhere in this country.

I have no intention to refer to discussions regarding the constitutional point of view, but it seems reasonable to assume that the fathers of confederation, when wording the British North America Act, possibly did not imagine what higher technical education would cost in 1959.

In order to prove that allegation, I would like to quote remarks from professor Lower's volume From Colony to Nation. On page 343 of that book, professor Lower deals with the question of higher education in Canada in 1867 and he says:

(Text):

In higher education all the larger colleges and universities of eastern Canada had been founded with the exception of Western Ontario and McMaster. Some of these institutions, such as Queen's, already had several faculties. Both Queen's and Victoria had faculties of medicine and there was also a medical school in Toronto. Queen's had 18 professors and 180 students, Victoria had 200 students, Trinity seven professors, University College, Toronto, nine. Every institution in the country, with the exception of Toronto and Dalhousie, was denominational and there was about them all as there was about every school, too, a strong religious flavour.

(Translation):

It is of interest, Mr. Speaker, to compare the situation which prevailed at that time to present day conditions.

On page 412 of the same volume, Professor Lower says further:

(Text):

The universities were still somewhat out of the main currents of Canadian life. As late as 1890 their staffs were mainly old-country men who regarded themselves as "exiles" in Canada; Canada's own able young men, under the weight of the older and stronger culture, were only slowly winning footholds in the higher education of their country. Students bodies were larger, but not much larger than they had been thirty years before: Universities were for the education of persons who took education seriously and expected to go into a profession: the great modern movement of mass 'education' had not begun.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time politicians realized that they should not undertake to settle by themselves the problem of education.

In the field of education, and in the light of recent developments, consideration should be given to the establishment of laboratories where atomic energy development could be taught. There is possibly no province in this country which would be wealthy enough to set up, on her own, a proper laboratory for the teaching of that science. Consequently, provincial governments should request federal help in that field.

As hon. members from Quebec belonging to the Conservative party are on good terms with the federal as well as with the Quebec government, they might lend their good offices so that some agreement might be reached which would permit acceptance of the grants under reasonable conditions, so that Quebec universities might benefit like those of other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it should be understood that we cannot always hide under the cover of the constitution and of autonomy.

It is a recognized fact that the present premier of Quebec accepts grants from the federal government.

Last year, in answer to a question I was asking him, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) maintained that grants awarded in the geological field were accepted in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, if the province of Quebec accepts grants for certain purposes, in all logic she should accept them for any and all purposes for which the federal government offers them.

It goes without saying that I leave it to the authorities of the two governments concerned to find an adequate formula, whereby those grants might be distributed and accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to read you parts of the brief submitted by the College Jean-de-Brebeuf, to the royal commission on constitutional problems. I quote from page 158:

Without claiming any competence in constitutional matters, we believe, however, that it is not necessary, in order to solve that serious problem, to redefine the basic powers of taxation. A somewhat different agreement, one that would safeguard basic provincial powers, seems to us possible and practicable.

And now, Mr. Speaker, it seems that members from the province of Quebec would like to settle the educational problem, by substituting themselves to educators and professors.

On page 160 of the same report we read the following:

So we should consider the possibility of entrusting the levy of personal income tax and perhaps even the corporation income tax, not only to the central government, acting both for itself and for the provinces, but to a joint administrative body which would become the representative of both the central state and the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I do not claim that this is the only solution, but I do say that the views of Quebec educators do not coincide with those of politicians.

In this connection, and concerning specifically the federal-provincial relations, here is what I read in the May 1958 issue of Relations, a review which is highly regarded in the province of Quebec:

A new era in the federal-provincial relations?

In the March 31 election, the people gave to one party the greatest majority ever enjoyed by any Canadian government. The Conservatives now occupy the comfortable position held for more than 20 years by the Liberals: they are now the undisputed masters of federal policy.

A Conservative era therefore seems to have started in Canada. Among the many matters brought up by this event, there is one which we should like to point out: Will this era really bring something new in the field of federal-provincial relations, most particularly in the relations between Quebec and Ottawa?

Mr. Speaker, we have heard the promises made by the Conservatives in Quebec that they would change that situation. We have seen the government, without the 50-odd members from the province of Quebec knowing it, rubbing a little salt into the wound by doubling the grants to the universities, grants which are accepted only in the other provinces.

And, Mr. Speaker, the article goes on to say:

> As far as Quebec is specifically concerned, now that between its government and that of Ottawa the obstacle of partisan rivalry has been removed, it is imperative that as soon as possible and in line with a constructive federalism, settlement should be sought of the two most urgent problems from the standpoint of federal-provincial relations: federal grants to universities and hospital insurance. In both cases, the maintenance of the status quo would appear as the less defensible solution; it is the duty of both governments to try to remedy a situation which, left to itself, could only deteriorate.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough on the subject to make the house understand it is time to find an adequate solution.

(Text):

I should like to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, on the matter of municipal and federal relations. This is of the greatest importance in my riding because it contains rather small and young municipalities located in rocky areas where construction of public services is most costly. When I spoke for the first time in the house last year I suggested that the government should think of the burden of taxation on the people living in mining areas brought about by the high cost of services in the municipalities. I suggested that the government should find a solution for the problem of double taxation whereby the ratepayer pays for all local services and also pays a second tax to the treasury in Ottawa on the money so spent.

Before the election the municipalities were promised a meeting with the federal government, a meeting at which they would find solutions to their local problems through federal channels. Later came the conversion loan which, as is known by all municipal officers, hurt their position very much by raising the rate of interest and creating many difficulties in the sale of their debentures. Taxation is high in the mining municipalities. The people employed in the mines must live nearby and they live in a rocky region where it is definitely more costly to build homes. I believe that the government should assist Canadians to realize their ambition to own their own homes. A system whereby money spent for municipal taxes would at least to some extent be exempt from federal taxation would be one way of equalizing the burden of home ownership in Canada. It is obvious to all that it is more costly in certain areas to have the services which Canadians are entitled to have under our standard of living and this type of tax exemption would certainly be beneficial.

What about the federal-municipal meeting which was promised during the election campaign? We know that it was held. We know very little more about it with the exception of certain comments made in the press on what took place at the meeting. I have here an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of October 8, 1958. Commenting on the meeting held late last summer, it had this to say under the heading "No Taxes for Towns":

> In the last election campaign Mr. Diefenbaker expressed great concern about the financial plight of the municipalities. He promised that, if re-elected, he would call an "informal" federal-municipal conference. Out of this conference would come, he hoped, "alternate sources of revenue" for the municipalities. "We shall see to granting them a reasonable share of taxes so they will be able to meet the new needs arising from their rapid growth," he said.
> It was with these glowing promises in mind that the municipal representatives trooped down to Ottawa. They could be forgiven for thinking that Mr. Diefenbaker, by some magic, would figure out a way to give them a larger share of federal tax revenues; or, at the very least, that the federal government would, through some kind of loans system, provide a greater measure of indirect financial help.
> The Prime Minister lost no time in disillusioning them and in again demonstrating the vast difference between the pre-election and the post-election Mr. Diefenbaker. No longer was the federal government interested in seeing to it that the municipalities got a reasonable share of taxes.

The Canadian people, especially municipal officers, are fully aware today that not an iota of assistance has come from the federal government to the municipalities.

As I am just about ready to conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Minister of Finance that in preparing a budget, which is supposed to be a reflection of the administration of the affairs of the nation, he should at least indicate that he has a target at which to aim instead of shooting at random, and that is one fact which is most important in the budget. Everyone is hit a little bit, and in that way I suppose it becomes easier for the administration to use the word "minor", as has been done frequently by speakers on the government side, with reference to the tax increases. On behalf of my constituents I am most pleased to support the amendment presented by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) indicating that the people of Canada have lost confidence in the conduct of the government as exposed in the budget, that the government has made promises and in no way—

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Godin: Yes.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the hon. member tell the house if he intends to support the C.C.F. amendment?

Mr. Habel: You will know when the time comes.

Mr. Godin: The question is irrelevant. May I suggest to the government member who has just spoken that possibly, in view of the budget just presented, the best manner for him to save face would be to keep the lower part shut. It is obvious—

An hon. Member: Keep the lower part shut?

Mr. Godin: As I said at the beginning of my remarks, it is possible that members of the government will not appreciate my remarks. However, if they have time to review some of the opinions I have expressed and the facts I have cited during the last half hour or so, I am quite sure that in their own minds, and in their own rooms, they will admit that only two years after this administration came into office the Canadian people are definitely worried about economic conditions in this country and about the faith they should have in the present administration.

Perhaps I appear to be speaking harshly and without consideration for the feelings of some hon. members, but I recall after the last election, at which time I was elected for the first time, I had occasion to read a news item. This will be most interesting to the hon. member who has just popped up. I had occasion to read a news item in the local Sudbury newspaper which, as everyone knows, is not unfriendly to the present administration. This article referred to the possible visit to Sudbury area of one Mr. Grosart, who was to investigate why the people had voted in the manner they had. This surprised me, so I checked to ascertain who he could be. I was told that he was a businessman, so I placed a certain question on the order paper. Just the other day I read in the same Sudbury Star a news item which was as follows:

> Figures tabled for Nickel Belt M.P.
> McKim Advertising Limited of Toronto received $2,211,708, from the federal government on contracts since June 1, 1957, the commons was informed Monday...
> Directors of the company in 1957 included Allister Grosart, now national director of the Progressive Conservative party.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that possibly this is one promise which had been made and which was kept.

Mr. Nesbitt: How about Cockfield Brown?

Mr. Godin: Perhaps before hon. members on the government side suffer a breakdown, I should close my remarks. I should like, first, to tell them of a remark I received from a lady constituent of mine. She had this to say: "God made everything out of nothing, but the Conservatives have made nothing out of everything". I was hoping the hon. members may take credit for that, because they take credit for about everything that has been done by the Canadian parliament.

Mr. Pallett: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would table the letter to which he has made reference? He has read from a letter.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member quotes from a letter, the house is entitled to have it in its possession.

Mr. Pickersgill: Without labouring the point, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think there have been many occasions when this question has arisen on points of order, and that it is only official documents quoted by the government to which this rule applies.

Mr. Godin: In any event, it is a very good definition.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would give me a moment to consider this matter. It appears that there may be some limitation of the rule to official documents, and I shall reserve judgment on the matter.

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No doubt members of the government would like to spend some time on matters which are irrelevant in order to divert the attention of the house from some of the important subjects which I have had occasion to mention in the last few minutes.

In conclusion, I am sure my people would wish me to state that they feel they can continue to assist in the expansion of Canada. We Liberals have faith, notwithstanding the fact that the administration has created many difficulties. As a member of this parliament I feel that the Canadian people have gone through worse times and they will get through these hard times in the same fashion. Nevertheless, since I am the elected representative of the Nickel Belt constituency I feel that I have a duty to advise the government about the shortcomings which my people have noticed. With that in mind, I feel that this government should think over their present policies in order to find a means of achieving, in part, the great expansion and prosperity which was enjoyed by the Canadian people for 23 years during a Liberal regime.

Mr. W. H. Payne (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to pass along very hearty congratulations to our able Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I might say that one week has passed since the presentation of the budget, and unlike the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Godin) I can say that mail has been arriving. If I may hazard a chance, I should like to quote the two basic words which are in practically every letter received. Those words are, "sensible", and "sound". Those are the two descriptive adjectives found in every single bit of correspondence that has reached me containing references to the budget presented by the Minister of Finance one week ago tonight.

In addition, there have been many references to the courageous stand taken by the Minister of Finance in relation to the refinancing plan. Facing as he did a formidable accumulation of maturing bonds he set forth a long range program which would permit Canada's economy to become stabilized over the next 12 or 15 years, so that progress on a proper business basis would again be possible. Following these remarks which are directly relevant to the presentation made by the Minister of Finance, I should like to ask your indulgence, sir, to refer more specifically to items relating to the economy of this nation. I should like, in doing so, to discuss at some length and in some detail matters relating to the great harbours of this nation, and in particular to the great harbour of Vancouver.

In doing so, I wish first of all to stress and state again my full confidence in the basic policy of the administration of Canada's great deep sea ports, those entities which reflect so intimately the ebb and flow of the economy of this nation of ours. We being a great exporting country I should like to stress and state my faith in the basic administration under the concept of the national harbours board. In doing so I should like to pay particular respects to the chairman, Brigadier Archer, and the vice-chairman, Mr. Rankin, for the tremendous work they have done and co-operation they have shown during this past year in the administration of one great harbour. I should further like to say congratulations and thanks, on behalf of the people of the whole of the lower mainland of British Columbia, to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) for taking a new look at a problem which was sorely neglected for over 30 years. In doing so, may I say that I am sorry that the hon. member for Nickel Belt has left the house because I am sure he would be somewhat alarmed himself to realize some of the activities which in the past have marred the history and the development of this great national asset.

In order that this discussion can go forward on a factual basis, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to submit statements for the year 1957 covering arrivals and departures, of vessels and net registered tonnage; one covering capital expenditures on ports; one covering cargo tonnage; a statement on maintenance and repairs plus a statement secured, in this case, from various ports throughout the world, as to the annual foreign cargo tonnages shipped. May I have leave to file these statements, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member suggesting that this material be printed? Is that his request?

Mr. Payne: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: What is the extent of the documents which the hon. member wishes to have incorporated in the record?

Mr. Payne: They are statements. They are quite brief but they are statistical and I would not wish to take the time of the house in going over the details.

Mr. Speaker: How many pages are there?

Mr. Benidickson: Would the hon. member indicate the source of the material?

Mr. Payne: It is the 1957 statement of the national harbours board in one instance. In the case of foreign ports, it is from the port authorities of six foreign ports throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish the leave of the house to have these tables incorporated in his speech at this place?

Mr. Payne: If I may have it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have the proposed statements incorporated in the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Payne: The statements referred to are as follows:

Mr. Payne: Mr. Speaker, these tables will bring into vivid focus the fact that the port of Vancouver, unknown largely throughout Canada, handles a foreign tonnage in excess of that of Bristol in the United Kingdom, Capetown in South Africa and the Clyde navigation trust in the United Kingdom. I feel that it is right that hon. members of this house should be advised of these rather important facts. I would also further state that only fractional, under the total foreign tonnages is the total of Vancouver compared with that of the great world ports of Sydney, Australia, Calcutta and the port of Montreal.

I would further state that in this connection I wish to draw direct reference to certain specific suggestions. I would point to the arrivals in the year 1957. The total for the national harbours board was 49,421. The ships and vessels arriving at the port of Vancouver totalled 31,433, or 60 per cent of those arriving in our national harbours board ports in Canada. I would further like to point out that of the total of national harbours board recorded departures of vessels, namely 49,031 ships, 30,997 sailed from the port of Vancouver or over 60 per cent of the total in this dominion. The registered tonnages arriving and departing from the port represent 40 per cent of the total registered tonnages in this dominion. As to cargo, 29 per cent of all the cargo tonnages in and out of national harbours board ports passed or under the first Lions Gate bridge at the First Narrows in the port of Vancouver.

Set against this record and in tragic reference to the administrations of the past, in many instances the administration of the national harbours board was not left at the discretion of the board but was handled through the discretionary powers of the former minister of transport who unfortunately is not with us at this time. Despite this, in 1957, following the pattern through the years of Liberal administration, 6 per cent of the total amount spent by the national harbours board on maintenance of ports was spent on the port of Vancouver. I would point out that this 6 per cent represents no charges for ice-breaking. It represents no capital cost relative to the construction of seaways. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to stress that the people of British Columbia do not in any way criticize any capital development anywhere in Canada. We endorse it; we wish it well. We just ask that in the future—and indeed I am sure that this will be the case—the tragic pattern which has led to the distressing conditions in this great port of the world will not continue as it did under the former administration.

I should also like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that on capital account spending, following a pattern established again under the former administration and followed for many years, 5 per cent of the total spending for capital development went into the port of Vancouver in 1957. That pattern was a tragic one that can be traced throughout our history during the years of Liberal administration. Again we say in respect of the administration and the difficulties experienced in this great port, that it was indeed Canada's Cinderella port. As far as the former minister of transport was concerned, it was hidden 3,000 miles from Ottawa and across the Rocky mountains. That was the measure of concern that was given to this industrial and commercial facility which provides Canada with berthing for 60 per cent of all the vessels arriving at and departing from national harbours board administered ports in this nation.

I have already stated that the port of Vancouver makes no call on the government to provide ice-breaking facilities. In addition, along with the ports on the east and west coasts, it provides berthing and harbour facilities for vessels 12 months of the year, providing stability to commerce throughout the full 12-month period and does not curtail the movement or in any way impede the matters of trade and commerce at any period of the year.

Basically in the port of Vancouver our largest movements are of grain, livestock, coal, chemicals and oil, in addition to British Columbia's own world outstanding export of lumber, finished and in logs.

We have over the past years, as indicated by the figures and the comparisons I have given, suffered acute congestion in the harbour, which I point out definitely most directly affects the ability of that port to service the needs of Canada's industries. The speed with which a ship may arrive in port, discharge its cargo and again depart with a load aboard, the turnaround, indicates the basic cost factor with which that port is able to handle its input of tonnages. If a port becomes stagnant by virtue of delays then there is an increased cost factor involved, it ceases to serve the needs of this exporting nation; and it matters not how well your other freight carriers may discharge their responsibilities and carry their loads, you cannot meet the needs of commerce.

I would point out in considering the Vancouver situation that in 1957 from a maintenance cost $207,860 was spent in the port of Vancouver, $8,000 less than was spent in the port of Churchill, to handle 132 inbound and outbound vessels as compared with the figure given earlier of 31,433. I think these figures point out the tragic need and necessity which faced the Minister of Transport on taking office and reviewing the general conditions and situation surrounding this great natural facility. And what was found? I would like some of the former administration to listen to this.

Here is a port surrounded by mountains, limited in its foreshore development upon the recovery of gravel from the floor of the harbour to construct headlands. And what have they done? For years the favoured few garnered permits for the recovery and removal of gravel for 10 cents a cubic yard to sell to the commercial market at fantastic profits. And this, tragically enough, they did.

Perhaps that accounts for the quotation I would like to read from Bruce Hutchison's "The Fraser", which I would point out was printed and published in 1950. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you and hon. members do not recognize Bruce Hutchison as an outstanding Tory propagandist. On page 197 of "The Fraser", for all to read, is this tragic statement:

> In the shelter of this mushroom aristocracy, and usually with the aid of its campaign funds, Vancouver has produced some of the worst politics in Canada. The famous machine that has dominated public life almost without interruption for more than thirty years, has appointed its princelings to Senate and bench, has won elections with more money than prayers and always found that investment profitable, is about as efficient and ruthless as any in the nation. Governments, in both Victoria and Ottawa, have often tried to shake it but they have never succeeded, for it can deliver the votes.

But in 1957, and again last March, that machine could not deliver the votes, and it has been one of the jobs of the Minister of Transport to bring into focus and bring into function a proper policy so that in future these valuable assets of fill which can be recovered from the harbour bed and laid on the foreshore to guarantee that the development of this great harbours future could go forward. That policy, as I said last spring to my constituents, the minister has endorsed.

At this time I wish to give notice to the Minister of Transport, who unfortunately is not here, that some commitments had been made prior to the institution of this policy and certain permits are still running which will terminate this spring. I believe one has been renewed for a period of two years. I do not wish to be unreasonable, nor do I think my constituents would wish me to be unreasonable, but I will assure you that I will be a watch dog to see that when it terminates in two years no more raids on this great asset shall be undertaken.

The port of Vancouver, definitely reflecting this unimaginative program with the years of withholding the necessary funds for proper maintenance of the harbour has brought into focus today the urgent need for certain development and planning. Proper utilization in the future is a responsibility which we owe the generations which are yet unborn and the future needs of the harbour and the tonnages that the port will have to discharge. I feel that we should embark upon a very broad study to assure its proper utilization and development, and if necessary search the world for the outstanding engineers and consultants necessary to lay forth these plans. These, I would point out again, should be given authority, and the harbour authority should be extended so that proper negotiations can be conducted between the city of Vancouver, the city of North Vancouver and the other four municipalities which surround Burrard inlet. Because without this it is impossible to bring into being plans for imaginative development programs, which our port needs if it is to survive and service this nation's and the west coast's needs. This authority must also call upon the department of Indian affairs, which I should mention holds very valuable strategic properties lying along the foreshore. It is important not only to Vancouver and the commercial needs of western Canada; it is also a requirement as far as the Indians are concerned. It will give them an agency through which these lands could be recovered, put to the best possible use, bringing to them as a result the highest potential returns.

Very urgently needed today, particularly on the main waterfront of Vancouver itself, is a high level approach road. Through topsy-turvy development in the past, no proper road access exists in many areas, be it for the movement of freight or be it for fire protection on the waterfront. This capital spending would amount to millions, but if our port is not going to be strangled it must be included in future plans and at an early date.

I would like through you, Mr. Speaker, to advise this house that the Vancouver Wharves Limited have during these past ten days or two weeks announced the construction, on the north shore of Burrard inlet a new facility which will provide the basic deepsea wharfage need which I mentioned in the throne speech debate at the last session was so urgently required. This will provide the newly developed Pacific Great Eastern railway with the outlet to the ocean so badly needed. We are pleased to see this program going forward, and I trust that the minister and the national harbours board will see that no impediments are placed in the way of this development so that this essential program may proceed. Also, since last speaking to the house, Pacific Coast Bulk Terminals Limited have developed on the south shore a bulk loading facility so that in future,

I believe as of June this year, bulk tonnages and cargoes of coal, sulphur, chemicals and products of mines can be shipped from the port of Vancouver and will no longer require movement across the border and shipment from the port of Seattle.

One difficulty which today has caused more concern than any other—and this certainly was not only engendered but fostered by the former administration—has to do with the terminal railway facilities around the harbour. I must point out that at this time this great port which is today moving tonnages 15 times in excess of those handled by the port of Portland, Oregon, has no central terminal rail facilities. Instead, we have a complex and confused arrangement of railway switching charges under which, for instance, a C.N.R. box car delivered to a C.P.R. port for trackage outlet may be delayed for eight days and, in the process, have to pay exorbitant charges based on tonnage. Linking the north shore with the south shore we have the Second Narrows bridge; the old bridge, not the new highway traffic bridge which was the subject of tragic attention in this house last year. The old Second Narrows bridge was also the focus of attention in this house when a private bill was discussed. At that time I endeavoured to point out how essential a part the old Second Narrows bridge would play in a proper harbour authority terminal rail facility. Today I should like to call on the Minister of Transport to give serious and urgent consideration to bringing into being an adequate harbours board terminal railway facility based on the pattern existing in the port of Montreal so that this ridiculous and artificial obstruction to the movement of our trade and commerce may end forever.

These are but a few of the problems which face the harbour. We have seen over the years, in every city in all nations where harbours develop, that bridges become an essential part of the necessary facilities. I must confess that it is with special satisfaction that I find that bridges owned and operated by the national harbours board, or bridges which are being built and which are to be owned or operated by the board, exist today. I will name two—the Jacques Cartier bridge, with a capital cost of over $20,080,000, to be operated under a toll authority by the national harbours board, and the Champlain bridge with approximately $32 million of capital cost. I trust that this may be considered a new policy on the part of the government, for I am sure that the people of Halifax will join with those of us on the lower mainland of British Columbia in urging the need for assistance in particular areas where bridges are required over navigable waters and in making the plea that the national harbours board or some other national body or administrative entity should be able to assist in relieving communities of the inordinately high cost which they must inevitably face in building bridges high enough to span navigable waters and at the same time, provide for the free movement of ships.

There is another situation which I think calls for immediate attention and inclusion in planning if the outlet to the world of commerce of which I have been speaking is to operate with any degree of efficiency. And in saying this I should like to point out that over 60 per cent of the world's population live today within 183 miles of the Pacific shore coast.

This final suggestion has to do with the port of Squamish, served, as it is, by the Pacific Great Eastern railroad from the north. This port is capable of providing good possibilities for the development of useful additional deep sea wharfage facilities in an area with which the port of Vancouver is closely connected and I submit that it would be tragic for this new port and tragic for the future both of the port of Squamish and of the port of Vancouver if any development undertaken were not to go forward on a complementary basis. I suggest that this port should be included as a satellite, or as an integral part of the administration of the port of Vancouver itself.

With these remarks I now leave the subject of the harbour for a moment, though not entirely because I wish to refer again to my initial statement and that is to the great and profound faith I put in the theory of administration by the national harbours board. I must state, however, that the activities which have already gone on and the developments which have taken place, the facts and figures of the past and the activities within the port of Vancouver, bring into focus one thing which I think the house today should consider carefully. This is the fact that management authorities within each port and unit are on a highly powerful and personal level. It must of necessity be that way. I think we should take a second look at the personnel who are engaged in administrative areas such as this, especially at those who have in the past, as the record proves, so completely failed to justify the faith placed in them in the discharge of their responsibilities to this nation. How in the world can we have faith in their ability, judgment and vision with regard the future planning which must go forward in order to provide for the facilities and needs of the future?

Mr. Speaker, I thank you again for this opportunity to present to the house a case which is as vital as this one is to the people of the lower mainland. I trust we may see no continuance in the future of the tragic policies of the past. I am sure we shall not see this with respect to the port of Vancouver.

Mr. G. R. McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): In rising to take part in this debate, I extend appreciation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the work he must have put into the preparation of the budget. I judge that the time and effort which must go into the preparation of this most formidable document, irrespective of how the budget may be received, is considerable, and I think the minister and his officials should be shown appreciation for their discharge of this task. Another step has been taken along the fiscal road of the nation's business by the presentation of this year's budget. It is now part of the permanent history of Canada. It will, very likely, be the basis of discussion on many future occasions, if only for the purpose of comparison in election campaigns yet to come. Time will tell. It is now the subject to the forefront at this present time.

This debate is following the pattern of other budget debates. Party spokesmen add up the items, make calculations and come up with totals that are widely different. Some leave out relevant items and others include them which leads me to believe that an old saying is no longer true. That saying is, "Liars can figure, but figures do not lie." The arguments pro and con presented thus far in this debate, like those presented in other budget debates, suggest on the one hand that the government has presented a splendid budget, while on the other hand suggest that this budget will be detrimental to the country.

The government spokesmen contend that we are in a period of economic recovery, that there is a marked improvement in the trend of employment and earnings; an improvement in the volume of retail sales; that corporate profits have increased; and that there is no present evidence of over-inflation. Opposition spokesmen contend that the budget has taken back from the public $2 for every $1 given in the previous budget, that the percentages of increase announced by the government on certain goods will be further increased by producers' costs which will result in a further increase in the cost of living, and that the total tax for the year will be $640 million and not $245 million, as announced in the budget. Opposition spokesmen will claim that living standards have declined in the past year, that there was a reduction in real earnings and that the true deficit figure is $835 million and not $617 million, as announced in the budget.

As government and opposition members take part in this debate comparisons will go on and on. Many speakers present a story on the budget items which they have derived from research and which they feel gives a true picture. However, in many cases with the human element being in the forefront guiding the thoughts along certain channels, factors that are pleasant predominate while factors that do not suit the taste are dropped.

I am of the opinion that most hon. members of this house are far from being experts on government financing. I am one of those. This being the case, I do not intend to dwell upon the financial aspects of the budget except for a few comments. Everyone understands what taxes are and what increased taxes, hidden or otherwise, mean to us as individuals in our everyday lives. We know that if taxes are increased we must increase our personal income to provide and maintain our present standard of living. People do not like to cut back their standard of living, especially in peacetime, and therefore will look for opportunities to increase their income when the cost of living rises. As these costs increase they look for matching increases in family revenue.

It sounds very patriotic to say that Canadians must work harder and produce more to keep their economy buoyant. Canadians generally speaking are prepared to work harder to improve the economy of the country, to provide for their families a good standard of living, to work toward the accumulation of holdings that will provide security in the future, to provide education for their children and to assist their children in getting established.

I wish I could share the optimism of those who state that the Atlantic provinces are on the doorstep of economic and industrial expansion. The only apparent industrial expansion in that area is in the city of Saint John, New Brunswick. The other areas of those provinces are in the main very depressed. The Newfoundland cod fishing industry is in dire straits. The maritime lumber industry both in terms of export and import is labouring under the hardship of falling prices and decreasing markets. The maritime coal industry is in a most precarious state and income from maritime farming is away below the Canadian average. Many sectors of our base metal industry have closed down.

Immediate action toward the improvement of trade policies is vital and essential. Major government projects that will provide lasting benefits must be undertaken. The government must provide the opportunity to increase trade and seek by other means to keep alive the very lifeline of the provinces on the Atlantic coast and thus pave the way for an improved economy.

Shortly after confederation the maritimes fell out of step with Upper Canada. The great contribution they made went to the benefit of Upper Canada and in later years to western Canada. The maritimes received little in return. The wider benefits that are the inherent right of the maritime and Atlantic provinces never became a reality.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McWilliam: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for the dinner recess at six o'clock I was commencing to make some remarks with regard to confederation and how it affected the maritime provinces. I said that shortly after confederation the maritimes fell out of step with Upper Canada and that the great contributions that were made by the people of the maritimes at that time and in the years following confederation went chiefly to the benefit of Upper Canada and in later years to western Canada. The sacrifices made by our forefathers in the maritimes did not bring about the good results held out by confederation. The visions held out which brought about union and prompted great sacrifices and toil by our forefathers in the maritimes were not realized.

In a great many respects the maritime provinces today, on a comparative basis with the rest of Canada, are in a much less favourable position than they were in the period prior to and immediately following confederation. I feel that the maritimes paid the price of union and their inherent rights were not recognized down through the years. Throughout the years many of our maritime leaders have promoted the view that the maritimes should break away from confederation. I do not think this is a solution and I certainly do not hold this view. There are no better Canadians, than the people who live in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Drysdale: British Columbia.

Mr. McWilliam: I will include other parts of Canada. Maritimers wish to remain full-fledged Canadians, these descendants of the Scots, the French, the Irish and the English who are proud to call themselves Canadian. In my opinion the solution lies in the proper recognition by the federal government, proper recognition as of right as the first step and as subsequent action is necessary to bring about the balanced economy which we believe is so necessary for the provinces by the Atlantic ocean.

I am sure that Atlantic province members of both parties share these views and desires and in their own respective and limited ways they are trying to bring this about. The onus is upon the federal cabinet members from these four provinces. Theirs is the task to convince their cabinet colleagues that action must be taken. Their provincial differences, if any exist, must be resolved and they must present a united front before their cabinet colleagues, a united Atlantic provinces front.

The federal cabinet ministers from the maritimes, and I say this sincerely, are doing a good job as heads of the departments of veterans affairs, fisheries and national revenue, and we in the maritimes think it is unfortunate that one of them is not Minister of Trade and Commerce. As the chief spokesmen for the Atlantic provinces they have a most important job to do, the task of bringing a balanced economy to the provinces they represent. In their efforts toward this end they will receive the support of all Atlantic coast members and the support of all groups and people in the area.

Many and varied suggestions to improve conditions are a matter of record. The Atlantic provinces economic council, is working toward this end. Other groups have presented views and are anxious to assist in the field work. Bold and imaginative action is required. Efforts of the type made in varying degrees in the past will not be sufficient in my opinion. A better, a wider, a more comprehensive over-all plan is needed. A more practical and realistic plan must be put in action. This is the appeal I make particularly to the Atlantic provinces cabinet ministers.

While it is realized that all parts of Canada cannot be on an absolute par, nevertheless no part of this great country should be lagging behind the average level to the extent that the Atlantic provinces are. It has been said often that the greatest export of the maritimes is brains. Lack of opportunity has been the reason why our better educated and highly skilled young people leave the provinces of their birth. Opportunities are vital to keep them at home where they can make great contributions to their respective provinces.

Because the area in square miles is much smaller than other provinces and because the population figures are lower should not work to their disadvantage when consideration is being given at the federal level toward improving the economy of the Atlantic provinces. Because we have only three Atlantic provinces ministers as heads of departments of government and one minister without portfolio should not weaken our case at the federal cabinet level.

There are only three Liberals from the maritimes, all from the neighbouring constituencies of Gloucester, Northumberland-Miramichi and Kent on the east coast of New Brunswick. They have been referred to as the three members from the Gaza strip. There are five Liberal members from Newfoundland who I am sure join with all the Conservative members from the Atlantic provinces in the hope that a program involving a planned economy will be undertaken to improve the conditions which I have outlined generally in my speech.

Budgets will come and budgets will go. Budgets will be drafted by the department's financial experts and the minister of finance of the government of the day. Taxes may be increased or may be decreased, all of which has a bearing on the country at the particular time. But what is more important at this time, more important than the present budget, to the people of the Atlantic provinces is an uplift in our economy, the providing of additional opportunities for our people to make the uplift a reality and provide security for the future of these people, descendants of the pioneers of our nation who have a deep sense of loyalty and responsibility and who are still prepared to make sacrifices to build a bigger and better Canada. They only ask for the opportunity to keep on making contributions to our Canadian way of life on an equal basis with the Canadian average. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that any efforts that are made will be crowned with success and the inherent rights under consideration will at last be ours.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to have the opportunity to address myself to the current budget debate. It is a debate in relation to a budget which in its forthrightness asks sacrifices from those who can sacrifice. It is a budget which considers those people who must be considered under present economic and social conditions.

During the past elections many Canadians supported the present government because our party told the people of Canada that they would bring government back to the people and the people back to the government, to the House of Commons, where it ought to be. I feel sure that this is borne out by the fact the Canadian people today are taking a greater interest than they ever have in exactly what is happening in this House of Commons, and by the fact that the budget now under discussion has kept faith with the people.

I noticed that at the start of this budget debate the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) referred to the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) told the Canadian people there was no reason to have fear. Then he read into this statement all kinds of ulterior motives. I say the very reason that the Minister of Finance made such a statement was because of the doom, gloom and pessimism which has been preached by opposition members. I have attended this debate quite regularly since it began and I have heard one opposition member after another criticize the high expenditures. However, I have not heard one suggestion as to what expenditures they would cut. Would they cut the increased old age pensions? Would they cut the increased hospital insurance? All these measures have resulted in increased expenditures. Not one suggestion have they offered to the Canadian House of Commons during this debate with regard to the cutting of expenditures.

I have not been surprised. This opposition is what I call a Hamlet opposition, "To be or not to be". They have a very uncanny knack of falling on both sides of every question that is brought to the floor of this house. You know, sir, they did almost the impossible. I think I witnessed the impossible being done by the Liberal party on the floor of this house recently. It was almost as rare as a triple play in baseball. During the Newfoundland debate they actually fell on three sides of the question.

During the budget debate this morning I noticed that the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) mentioned the unions. He was talking about labour unions in relation to their international affiliations. When he mentioned unions I could not help but think of a remark he made during the closing days of the last session. I shall show you why I feel the remark he made had something to do with unions. He said that the C.C.F. party would go to the next election with increased money muscles. I asked myself exactly how they would get bigger money muscles for the next election. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have the answer. Oh, I know they are going to say that once these things come about there will be freedom at the local level of the unions. I have heard that argument before. I will tell the C.C.F. how they think —they will not—they are going to get increased money muscles for the next election. The only way they could do it would be by deductions from the pockets of workingmen and women who never have and never will support the C.C.F. socialist movement in this country.

Mr. Howard: Your cheer leaders are at the hockey game.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned they might be there tonight, but I cannot see him in the house, either.

We, as Canadians, can be rightfully proud of one thing and that is since the days of confederation we have encouraged and nurtured a classless society founded on the truest type of democratic principles. I know how hard this is for my friends away yonder in the C.C.F. to appreciate. They would not like this, I know, because one only had to listen to their leader on budget night to realize that that party has its own little divide and rule game to play. I can tell the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that the Canadian people will never tolerate or be drawn into this type of bitter "chip on the shoulder" warfare.

I realize that tradition designates a fair latitude of discussion on both the budget debate and the throne speech debate. It is for this reason that this evening I should like to relate to the House of Commons some of the impressions and some of the observations I made recently as an observer of the last session of the United Nations general assembly. I can assure you that I have been duly warned about the dangers and pitfalls which face a freshman member of parliament who plunges into the intricacies of foreign affairs. I can equally assure you and the house, sir, that I do not intend to go into any farflung interpretation of international conditions. I was merely an observer, and I merely have observations to offer.

Mr. Argue: Is this your bid for a cabinet post?

(Translation):

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to offer my deepest and most sincere condolences to the family of our late secretary of state for external affairs, the Hon. Sidney Smith. As a young man, I had the great honour and privilege of serving under his guidance at the United Nations. Again, Mr. Speaker, I offer my sincere condolences to his family, and I bow to his memory.

(Text):

Basically, the United Nations is performing a pretty straightforward function, but perhaps we all have a tendency to look upon it as a bit of a mystery, even though we have a general appreciation of how it works and even though something is usually written about it each day in our newspapers. The United Nations today is performing a role and functions which were not clearly visualized during the early days of San Francisco. Like so many people in Canada, and in this House of Commons, I have read a great many reports emanating from the United Nations during the postwar years. I had a general appreciation of how the various councils and agencies were set up, but never did I feel that I had a real insight into the basic meaning of this world organization. As one columnist put it to me, "The world today needs a meeting place and this is it."

I readily admit that seven weeks is too short a time in which to gain a complete insight into many of the complex problems which face the security council and the general assembly but it is not necessarily too short a time in which to realize that situated within this building on the East river are to be found ideals and principles which just must work in the world of today. Inevitably —and I say, sir, unfortunately—the political aspect of the United Nations gets most of the publicity.

I think most of us here today realize that when something goes wrong in the world it is bound to end up in the security council or the general assembly. Much public criticism is often levelled in the direction of the United Nations because, after endless talk, charges and countercharges, often no solutions are reached and resolutions passed are often flagrantly violated by member countries. Yet I suggest that in the United Nations we are dealing with problems which are as old as man, problems which the United Nations itself did not create but which are aired and dealt with by nations and men with all their faults, both good and bad. As man does not always live up to the principles of his religion, so nations and men do not always live up to the principles of the United Nations and its charter. But this does not mean that we should destroy the institution which, as I have said before, is so often merely a mirror for nations, men and their collective behaviour.

(Translation):

It is often said that not enough attention is paid to the hard day to day work of the United Nations. The work they accomplish for children, refugees and underdeveloped countries of the world is so important. Such agencies as the World Health Organization work without letup. Let us look for a moment at one example of international cooperation: how a letter or a parcel can be delivered, in a very short time, to any corner of the world? You address your letter, put a stamp on it, mail it in your own town and often, after quite a lot of handling, it rapidly gets to destination. This is not done by some miracle, but because of a continuous international co-operation.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the United Nations I have yet another brief observation to make and it is this. I felt that many of the member countries wished to remain uncommitted to either the east or the west. It is so important that we attempt to capture their imagination by good example. At the same time I feel that too much public emphasis should not be placed on a struggle to line these countries up with the western camp, as so many of the middle powers have their own destinies to follow. When parents sometimes separate and quarrel in public over the custody of their children, frequently the latter back away and seek their own home and way of life. When I say that we should capture their imagination by good example, and while the historical doctrine of the two swords separates church from state, we in the west should never be too shy to tell the communist countries in clear and emphatic terms that our political, social and economic orders are founded on eternal religious principles. For this reason it seems so extremely important that we do not limit our debate with the communist bloc to the economic level, even while the so-called cold war has taken on characteristics of an economic nature.

It seemed that the citizens of many of the member countries at the United Nations had seen tyranny at first hand. They deeply feel and deeply believe in the principles and ideals embodied in this institution. For this very reason I think it is extremely important that we as Canadians, living in a most privileged land, never look upon this international institution merely as an intellectual proposition; for before too long I personally sense that the authority of the general assembly and the security council will have real teeth in it. While I dwelt on this thought my mind wandered back to the early days of parliamentary history, and I wondered exactly what Westminster looked like at that time. Then I realized that, while the United Nations oftentimes passed resolution after resolution which were often openly and flagrantly violated by member countries, they perhaps here were evolving procedural customs and practices which ultimately would form the basis of a new type of body.

I listened with great interest to the fine speech delivered in this house yesterday by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). After listening to his speech I realized that, in a realistic fashion, we might be obliged to avoid calling it a world government; undoubtedly, we shall be obliged to avoid calling it a world government. But nevertheless, I feel that in the not too distant future the security council and the general assembly will have greater teeth in it. Admittedly the present voting and veto system leave much to be desired. But this state of affairs is not necessarily permanent, and no doubt patience and future demands will dictate change.

Another lasting impression that I took home with me relates to the secretary general himself. One could not help but be impressed by the energy, the integrity and the vigour of this great man. I think all hon. members of the Canadian House of Commons were more than interested to note that he acted for and on behalf of the United Nations in the Middle East dispute. One might easily say that the secretary general acted as a negotiating force. I can only add that as long as men of the integrity and the character of Mr. Hammarskjold occupy this high position of public service, it should prove to be a most interesting and useful experiment.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians should be rightfully proud of the part being played by Canada at the United Nations. It has often been said that under modern conditions the middle and the smaller powers have a role of definite importance to play. As has been said so often both inside and outside of this house by myself and many other hon. members, Canada herself is in a unique position, often interpreting the old world to the new and the new world to the old. This should never mean, though, that we do not have our own well-defined stand on any major issue. Yet, when the major powers become deadlocked, it is often the smaller and the middle powers which come up with a solution. I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) is aware of these circumstances. As one Swedish correspondent said to me down in New York, "Small countries do not necessarily mean small ideas". As the head of the British delegation mentioned to some of the younger observers from the Canadian delegation down in New York, after our late secretary of state for external affairs had made his intervention in the political committee on the disarmament debate, "That was a fine speech by your secretary of state for external affairs; he said so many things that are better said by you than by us".

Circumstances offer us a peacemaking role which is often denied the larger powers, and while they gain much of the publicity at the United Nations, no country remains unaffected by world events nor can remain aloof from the current interplay of international politics. I repeat, that the very forces which cemented and created Canadian confederation can help us play a most significant role today on the international stage. I am sure that hon. members in all parties will agree when I ask, what other country has had our extremely interesting history of dominion-provincial relations? I am certainly sure that all members of all parties will agree that dominion-provincial conferences have been and continue to be conferences which must be approached with a high degree of understanding compromise. I repeat that these qualities well equip Canada to play her role on the international scene.

With this in mind, we should always realize that compromise should never be overstressed under present conditions. I think all of us here today would readily admit that what I refer to as the compromise spirit has many beneficial characteristics; but it also has characteristics of which I, in all sincerity, feel we should be aware. Admittedly, all confederate powers must approach their legislative functions with a spirit of compromise, and Canada is no exception to this rule. But in my opinion Canada has other distinct historical and current characteristics which add to what I call this compromise spirit.

Second, there is the above-mentioned go-between function on the international level; and third—I know I will be accused of having a partisan spirit when I say this—there was the long period of 22 years of Liberal rule where pragmatic compromise often keynoted the activities of a party which had long since abandoned its principles. So often it seemed to me that the architects of dullness misjudged the temper of our nation and its ability to absorb direction in its leadership. To know our strength is to know our history.

I make these remarks about compromise because it is so terribly important under present international conditions that Canada, on the international scene, does not take on a cool, aloof look of spiritless self-satisfaction. But I feel that under the present administration this can never happen. I have often said in the house, and I say it again here tonight, that under the present government the new spirit of Pan-Canadianism has united this country as it has never been united before. I say that this feeling of strength gives us a more united and strong look on the international scene, thus always assuring our allies exactly where we stand.

Sir, on my last day at the United Nations it was not very difficult to return home to Canada with a feeling of real and deep faith in this important world body. As I passed along the corridors outside the general assembly hall I passed by men and women who had dedicated a great part of their lives to the important work of this body, men and women who realize that, in this short period of history, man is faced with a task which must be lived up to, which must be challenged. I returned home to a country which is a comparatively young country; a young member of the family of nations living together on the banks of the East river. Yet to me it seems to be a most welcome member, a member which should bring those qualities of optimism and imagination to a living room which is sometimes sad, and to a household which too often loses its sense of humour.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be like the hon. member who has just taken his seat and speak during the budget debate about a subject which at this particular time has very little to do with the budget. I was wondering if there was any reason why he steered his speech away from the budget into other channels. I suppose there have been many names given to this particular budget according to the way it appeals to those who have read and paid attention to it. I would call it the pay-off budget. It is the budget that has demanded of Canada payment for the election promises and the wild spending of the present Conservative party. In the last two years we have danced the dance and now we must pay the fiddler. But I was rather interested in the way this budget debate began.

Mr. Pallett: You fellows are expert fiddlers anyway.

Mr. Batten: You will have your chance when your time comes, and you will probably steer away from the budget too, and I do not blame you. As I was saying, I was interested in the way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) came into the chamber to deliver his budget speech. I thought the carnation with its artificial colouring was conspicuous by its absence. I thought the reading stand had been bared of the usual blue velvet, but I suppose the time had come when the Minister of Finance was no longer going to handle the people of Canada with velvet; this was going to be a harder budget. We, I suppose, have been able to see this budget in the light of the many promises which have been made over the last two election campaigns. I am not going into a long speech reiterating these; that has already been done. But we can see the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), for example, flitting across this country in the spring of 1957 telling the people that they were overtaxed by $500 million, that each family was overtaxed by $120 a year, that Canadian people were overtaxed by $30 for every man, woman and child in the country. Yes, we can see the Prime Minister saying all this, and we can also see him telling what services were going to be given under his government if he were elected. We can see him standing up and telling the people who listened to him, "Give us a chance and we will show you."

We have seen in this particular budget that it is impossible to provide more benefits and increase the spending of the government without the time coming when these bills have to be paid. But I suppose these are election promises which, according to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), are not very sacred anyway. But if one could judge from recent happenings I might say that even contracts which have been laid on the table of the House of Commons are not very sacred either. So it appears we are now being ruled by a government which rules by expediency, although before the election of 1957 they were the champions of rule by law and of the dignity of office.

In former budget discussions we heard a lot about the vision. This year it has scarcely been mentioned. I am reminded of the professor who was trying to explain to one of his students how it is possible in the English language to have two words which normally mean the same thing but which, placed in different contexts, may mean something entirely opposite. And as an illustration he said, "Take the words 'vision' and 'sight'. At the college dance, the girl you had was a vision and the one I had was a sight." I think that the Tory vision has now gravitated into a definite sight.

I should like to pass on to one of the aspects of our financial affairs which in the last three or four years has occupied the attention of many people. I want to speak for a minute or so on interest rates. I do not intend to define interest rates, because every hon. member will know what interest rates are and how they are calculated. I am sure all hon. members will all know how important the interest rate is to the people of this country, particularly to provincial governments and to municipal governments. We have heard many fears expressed in the past about the difficult times ahead for provincial governments, municipalities and other borrowers because the interest rate on borrowed money was so high. I listened to the Minister of Finance when he spoke as a member of the opposition on August 11, 1956, as reported on page 7462 of Hansard. He said this:

> The effect of these repeated increases in interest rates—five in the period of one year—

May I stress the word "five"?

> —has been a tremendous increase in the burdens cast upon provincial governments with respect to their borrowings and upon municipal governments with respect to their borrowings and upon business, and punishing losses upon the holders of Canada's obligations.

These were the words of the Minister of Finance, as he is now, on August 11, and at the time he was speaking the interest rate was 3.25 per cent. The hon. gentleman has been witnessing over the last three months some very significant increases in these interest rates although the Conservative party pledged during the election campaign that they would be reduced. Not only did the hon. gentleman's party pledge to reduce them, but they also took credit for reducing them, and I say to the Conservative party today: if you are going to take credit for reducing the interest rate I fear you will also have to take the blame for raising it. If you take credit for the drop, you will also have to take the blame for the rise. Listen to the Prime Minister speaking at Calgary on March 14, 1958 as reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of March 15. The report reads:

> He claimed that interest rates had fallen sharply as a result of government action since last June from a high of 4.33 per cent to 2.89 per cent in recent weeks.

If the Prime Minister thought that 4.33 was a high rate, I suggest he should compare that with the rate last week.

Mr. Benidickson: And it was higher yesterday.

Mr. Batten: The Prime Minister went on to speak in Selkirk, Manitoba, on March 7, 1958, as reported in the Toronto Telegram of March 18. After claiming that the government had eased the tight money situation, he went on to say:

> This has been done by releasing $300 million for new housing, launching a vast public works program and by reducing taxes.

Incidentally, I wonder where that public works program went to. Then, in Halifax, on March 24, 1958, as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald:

> Referring to finances, Mr. Diefenbaker said his government reversed the "tight money policy of the Liberals". Interest rates had been decreased from 4.3 per cent to 2.8 per cent. As a result of the $300 million provided for housing loans there were more housing starts on homes "for average Canadians" than ever before.

Yet despite the promises which were made in 1958, we find that the interest rate today is higher than it has ever been before, and if we look at the rates since January 7, 1959 we shall find that there has been a gradual increase from a rate of 3.5 per cent to a figure which, last week, was 4.67 per cent. Surely if there were grave disadvantages for the provinces and the municipalities, as predicted two years ago, when interest rates were lower than 4 per cent, those disadvantages are present today in a much more acute form. Here is a case of just another promise which was made to the people of Canada and forgotten after the balloting was over.

May I now proceed for a moment to a discussion of the gross national product. The Minister of Finance began his budget by explaining how he thought the Canadian people were prepared for an increase in taxes, and he went on to condition even the members of the House of Commons on those lines. He talked about the flexibility of budgets, and so on; in fact I thought at times that the budget which the minister was reading was a treatise on flexibility by inflexible Fleming. At any rate, the hon. gentleman went on to forecast an increase of 7 per cent in the gross national product, provided, of course, that prices remain stable. I think there are many people across this country who doubt that in the coming year there can be an increase of 7 per cent in the gross national product.

Earlier in the year, the Minister of Finance predicted a gradual improvement in the position, or a gradual growth in the gross national product, and I think he was right in this expectation. But I do not think that an increase of 7 per cent at this particular time, with stable prices, could be considered as normal or steady growth. I believe that is exaggerating. After all, a recovery of 7 per cent in the gross national product very nearly approaches boom conditions; that was the size of the growth in 1956. I think we have to bear in mind that this recession has been something more than a pause; that it has dug deeper into our economy. I believe that from here on we are never going to have conditions which will be quite the same as before. Our economy has been readjusted because of this recession, mild as it was. These recessions always have an effect on the economy of the country in which they occur, and here in Canada, particularly, where we are so dependent on foreign trade, it is difficult to see how a recession coming at a time when there is also a recession in other countries could not have a very serious effect upon the economy. Other countries are expanding. Other countries are making efforts to capture new markets, and to the extent to which they succeed a new problem is created for a country such as Canada which must depend for its livelihood on trade.

Take as an example Canadian exports to the United States. These do not reflect the recovery that we might have expected or the recovery which I think is taking place in the United States. Let me give the house one case with which I feel I am familiar; I refer to the newsprint industry. The demand for newsprint in the United States for the first quarter of 1959 increased by 4.4 per cent, but Canadian exports to the United States were down by 6 per cent. This was not due to a decrease in production in Canada, because the decrease in the production of newsprint in Canada amounted to only 1.7 per cent.

I do think the minister's forecast of a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product is somewhat ambitious. In 1958, for example, the increase in the gross national product was 2.5 per cent over 1957 but the larger part of this was taken up by increases in prices. In actual fact the increase in the gross national product for 1958 over 1957 was less than 1 per cent.

One might go on and make reference to some more figures. By volume, 1958 was less than 1 per cent over 1957. In 1957 there was very little change over 1956 and for the period 1947 to 1958 the average growth in the gross national product was 4 per cent. It does indeed appear that the minister's forecast was a little high and yet it is the forecast on which he bases his figures for the coming year.

In talking about the gross national product let us have a look at the corporation tax. The corporation tax was increased by 3 percentage points which means that the actual tax to be paid by corporations that make a profit of more than $25,000 for the year 1959 will be increased by approximately 6 per cent over that of 1958. This means that the main sources of employment are being taxed rather highly. Modern plants and modern equipment are needed to produce in Canada products at a price acceptable in the foreign markets. If we are going to tax our corporations too highly it will mean that the price at which the products we produce will be sold will be unacceptable in the markets of the world.

In 1958, the corporation tax was about 5 per cent lower than in 1957. In 1957 it was lower than in 1956 but there were gains in 1955 and 1956. When we look at the fact that the corporation tax is decreasing we must ask ourselves this question: Are we levying increased taxes on a decreasing return? I think that is perhaps what we are trying to do here. We must realize that our corporations produce the goods we sell. While I think the corporation tax is decreasing, I have no doubt in my mind about the Canadian potential. I believe we have a great potential for production in the future. However, we have in this country a great deal of old plant facilities and old plant equipment. I believe the time has come when industrial Canada should take a good look at itself and compare its capacity to increase with its present potential. In the years that lie ahead this will be a matter of great importance to our country.

I wish now to refer briefly to federal-provincial relations. Hon. members will remember that this is one of the topics that occupied the attention of many of those who traversed this country in 1957 and in the campaign of 1958. We will remember that promises were made in 1957 to the effect that a federal-provincial conference would be called immediately if the Diefenbaker party were elected. Well, it was elected and the conference was called, not immediately but in November. I was present at that conference, at least the public part of it. For all that was done the premiers of the provinces might just as well have stayed home and sent in their submissions by mail. They rose and read their presentations to the conference and proceeded to go back home to their respective provinces having been given the promise that they would meet again in January. They did not meet in January. Instead of a meeting being called the premiers were the recipients of the notorious telegrams sent by the Minister of Finance in December stating what was going to be done and saying, in effect, "You must take it or leave it".

We saw a reflection of this same attitude in the throne speech. It contained no plan for arriving at some satisfactory solution to all the problems that now exist between the federal government and the provinces. Let me say immediately that the government has given a great deal of assistance to the provinces including the maritimes. I will be one of the first to admit that. My criticism of the government's attitude is that the assistance it has given the provinces and particularly the maritimes has not been the result of general policy but rather the result of a piecemeal operation which so characterizes the present administration.

I believe we have reached a time when, if these problems are going to be solved, a federal-provincial conference must be called. But I suggest that this government is not going to call such a conference at this time. My own province has some extremely serious problems in this respect but I shall wait for a proper occasion to make my specific comments concerning these matters. I trust, however, that the Minister of Finance does not think that reducing the excise tax on artificial bait and lures is any substitution for the fulfilment of term 29 of the articles of union.

In conclusion may I suggest that the supporters of this budget have been arguing, in effect, that it is just right for the present financial situation. I must confess there is some truth in that position, but let me hasten to add that the present financial situation with which this government finds itself confronted is of its own making. Members of the government have gone out around the country and have made promises to the people. They came into parliament, formed the government and proceeded to spend wildly. Now that they have spent the bills must be paid and they are demanding that the Canadian people pay increased taxes in order to bail them out.

I believe that the Canadian people will accept this budget resignedly because they believe nothing else can be done under the present circumstances. I am also of the opinion, however, that many people across the country will know that the present financial situation is one the government voluntarily got itself into.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as a reward for those who have been patient and loyal I should like to announce that at the end of the first period in the game between Toronto and Montreal for the Stanley cup the score is 0-0.

Mr. Pickersgill: We missed nothing, in other words.

Mr. Keays: As I rise to take part in this debate, I wish first of all to convey to this house the gratitude and appreciation of the people of Gaspe, where I have the honour of being mayor, concerning the recent announcement that Her Gracious Majesty will visit that town on June 21 next. The itinerary as announced was very welcome. Recently a dispatch has been sent to Her Gracious Majesty expressing on behalf of our town good wishes for a safe voyage and expressing the eagerness of our townspeople to receive her.

It is interesting to note that when the royal couple visit our great country they will first pay a visit to the youngest province of Canada and then the oldest. When I say the oldest, Mr. Speaker, I refer to the year 1534 when that famous French explorer, Jacques Cartier, by the act of erecting a cross took possession of this country in the name of God and his country. Throughout the annals of history Gaspe has always been described as the birthplace of civilization in Canada and I was somewhat disturbed by the fact that at the celebrations in honour of Champlain in Quebec city last year they attributed to themselves the honour of being the birthplace of Canada. It was at Gaspe. With this in mind I wish to convey to the house the appreciation and gratitude of our people at receiving her.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit a question?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I will permit a carload of questions as soon as I have finished my remarks. I should like to speak for my constituents and express their heartfelt thanks to the government for acceding to the request for an economic and physical survey of the Magdalen islands. This was undertaken by the government in the fall of 1958 and I must say that it was a thorough investigation. It proved that the Magdalen islands have been forgotten and I trust sincerely that when the study has been completed these people will be given a chance to win the battle they have been fighting since 1653, the battle between man and the sea, the battle for the right of survival of the people of these islands and the right to earn what they need for their existence. I am quite sure that when these studies have been completed these islands will be given the harbours and fishing facilities needed for the survival of the people.

As I have mentioned, Mr. Speaker, these islands have for long been forgotten. The history of the islands dates back to 1653 when Nicolas Denys took possession of same as a favour from his government and since that time the people have been engaged in the battle to which I have referred. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in a local newspaper, Le Phare, in October, 1948, and which reads as follows:

(Translation):

The cove provides so little security that people have to get up on very stormy nights to go and pull the boats ashore, and there are only 30 of these boats left in the bay. Fishermen are getting discouraged and try to find a more stable way of earning a living elsewhere. Our two seaports are only so in name: They are Havre Aubert and Cap aux Meules. They are in need of dredging and of some construction work: breakwaters and jetties, so that ships of higher tonnage might find shelter there. Some coastal communities, which have neither our population figure nor our volume of business have well-organized seaports. The project is therefore practicable. Our requests are reasonable.

(Text):

It then goes on to say, Mr. Speaker,

(Translation):

Magdalen islanders are hoping that the federal authorities will one day favourably consider their requests.

The same paper wrote in December 1948:

If that field were under provincial jurisdiction, there would be action and no mere promises.

(Text):

I then read the ideas of Robert Rumilly, a great historian and one interested in the problems of the Magdalen islands:

(Translation):

And that is true. The federal government is as indifferent and negligent with regard to the isles as was the provincial government until 1936. We would let them off if they did for the islands a tenth of what the provincial administration did for us. Let me write down all my thoughts, which have been confirmed by 13 years of experience in Ottawa. The federal government has jurisdiction on the sea fisheries of all provinces, except Quebec. So that the federal treasury, fed by Quebec taxes, looks after the maintenance of fisheries in all provinces who have any, except those in Quebec. The federal administration being freed from that load should as a compensation take more interest in our ports which are still under its jurisdiction. The victims of this federal sulking are the fishermen.

(Text):

It is therefore apparent, Mr. Speaker, that the Magdalen islands have long been neglected and as a result of the study undertaken and a realization of the needs the government has already undertaken the construction of a large wharf at Grindstone island, the construction of a wharf at Amherst island, commonly called Havre-Aubert, these facilities permitting the fishermen to approach the fish processing plants. I am sure that the study undertaken by the government will prove that the people of the Magdalen islands have long been forgotten and that it is time to realize their needs.

New transportation facilities are required and subsidies to encourage the establishment of such facilities. Although the present air service is quite adequate, unfortunately the freight rate is rather high for the transportation of fish by air. For your information, Mr. Speaker, the first steamboat to ply between the islands and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island started to do so in 1876. The first telegraph line was installed in 1880, but unfortunately broke down in 1910. The numerous requests which were made to this government at the time for transportation facilities fell upon deaf ears.

It was then that the mayor of House Harbour or Havre-aux-Maisons, Alcide Gaudette, thought of one method of transportation. He arranged a barrel or cask in which he placed the mail going to the relatives of these people in the United States, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the Matapedia valley. These were the relatives of the deported Acadians. Then, on this barrel he placed a little white flag to represent the spirit of the people in those islands. Some days later he set this new mode of transportation afloat and left it to the will of the open seas. It left on January 8, 1910 and on February 12 this barrel landed on Cape Breton island. In the barrel there was a letter addressed to the then postmaster general, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, which said: "If you cannot send a reply by boat, send it in this barrel".

The result of this communication was that in March of that year a steamboat left Sydney carrying mail. It is noteworthy also, that in 1911 with the advent of the Borden government the first Marconi station was installed on the Magdalen islands. The people of the island were then granted a special privilege from the fall until the spring of sending 2,000 words per week free of charge. This was the beginning of regular transportation between the islands and the mainland.

It is easy to conceive, that everything was not rosy for these brave fishermen. What they claim today, as I have already mentioned, is the right of survival and the right to a share in the general economy of our country. We have heard a great deal of criticism from the opposition of this budget. I would not dare say that much of it was of a substantial nature, but rather seemed to follow the present policy of the opposition of criticizing without making constructive suggestions. They seem to be endeavouring to instil in the minds of Canadians a state of despondency. If only this mode of criticism could be left aside and the opposition would make a volteface, we might hear something concrete and beneficial.

We hear repeated references to inflation and recession. I should like to refer to what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) said as recorded on page 35 of Hansard for January 19, 1959:

> While we were in office, Liberal fiscal, monetary and economic policies were sound, steady—and steadiness is pretty important—flexible and successful. They made it possible for this country to combine startling economic expansion and reasonable monetary stability.

We know, that the contrary is true. Reports received from many financial institutions indicate that our economy is more stable today than it has been during the last few years. This opinion, is shared by many of the financial institutions in this country. Although we are aware of the dangers of inflation, much of this is of a chronic nature. The Minister of Finance has brought in a budget which is aimed at combatting inflation and reducing its dangers. This budget is very important and, as evidence will prove later, was brought in as a medium of attacking inflation, keeping in mind the genuine recovery of our economy. This, in itself, is very commendable, is good business practice and logic.

The Minister of Finance has endeavoured to further narrow the deficit and, as he mentioned in his speech, has brought in a budget designed to foster recovery. It is conceded that the mere statement made by the Minister of Finance will not, in itself, be a cure-all for the inflationary dangers, but is rather merely the first step provided by the government to relieve the dangers.

I should like to bring to the attention of this house the fact that inflation is not the sole concern of government but of every individual taxpayer in Canada. A few minutes ago I mentioned that first public reaction to the presentation of the budget was probably doubtful. However, after the business consultants, analysts and critics had a chance of studying the proposed actions contained in this budget, they were pleased and commended the minister for his courage in facing reality and giving us a budget commensurate with the needs of the day.

Mr. A. C. Ashforth, president of the Toronto-Dominion bank, and president of the Canadian chamber of commerce, is quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press as follows:

> I believe balanced budget, or close to one, would improve the bond market and general business. I personally was not surprised at the increase in income taxes to meet the current situation. However, I do feel that income taxes are too high on a long term basis for a young developing country like Canada.
> We cannot expect the government to lower taxes if we, the public, are constantly asking them to do more and more for us.
> Every penny the government spends has to come out of the pockets of the taxpayers. There is no other source. I am pleased to see the minister of finance is optimistic about the volume of this year's business.

Mr. Laurent Lauzier in an article in La Presse of Montreal of April 11 has this to say:

(Translation):

> The federal budget continues to give rise to many comments, especially among businessmen and, above all, among income tax experts. The first hours of reflection and consideration having elapsed, the actual objectives aimed at by the government in its budgetary resolutions, introduced Thursday night by the Hon. Donald Fleming, Minister of Finance, are better grasped.
> In financial quarters there seems to be general agreement—

(Text):

I should like hon. members of this house to note this.

(Translation):

> In financial quarters there seems to be general agreement about the necessity of the tax increases announced by the government. It is generally believed that the increases provided are not high enough to hamper the economic recovery now in full swing.

(Text):

I have one more quotation coming from the income tax committee of the Chamber of Commerce which was presided over by Mr. Charles McLaughlin. He had this to say in an article in La Presse of Montreal of April 11:

(Translation):

> The tax committee of the chamber of commerce, presided over by Mr. Charles McLaughlin, C.A., chief of the taxation division at the Canadian Industries Ltd., notes that the tax increase is slightly lower than could have been expected in the circumstances. He approves of the general attitude of the government, which seems to have looked for a middle course solution between a fight against inflation and a balanced budget. The committee notes also that the government is showing an obvious desire to protect the taxpayer, small or average, in restricting its income tax increases to higher income brackets and its sales tax increases to luxury articles.

(Text):

Last night, Mr. Speaker, I attended the closing meeting of the Canadian mining convention and I met a friend of mine who attended the luncheon on Tuesday of the chartered accountants and business administrators of the city of Montreal. He admitted that everyone was surprised that when the experts on administration and financial affairs spoke, every one of them said there was no other course to follow and that they endorsed the courage of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

It is noteworthy, Mr. Speaker, that when statements such as these are made we find that they come from people who have no political axe to grind. All hon. members know that the best interests of our form of government demand that those with authority to speak must give constructive criticism to legislative government so that the rights and concerns of all sections of our country are made known to the legislators. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) himself was well aware of this situation when speaking in Winnipeg last year to the Canadian Labour Congress. He then asked labour to hold the line with respect to demands for wage increases. Regrettably, such has not been the case, and in many instances labour has requested increases in revenue which were much to the detriment of the companies concerned.

There are those in this house sitting at our extreme right who have a well-known reaction to any announcements made in this house of government subsidies to farmers, industries or others. Whenever a statement is made that $40 million or $6 million or $2 million is to be made available to the public, they have but one common reaction: it is either peanuts or it is not enough. This group want bigger grants, bigger social security commitments and higher wages, with no concern for higher productivity.

Mr. Speaker, in order that a country can prosper, the corporations must make a profit and take out of their surplus the requirements for their expansion and future development. I do not say that all unions are in the same boat, because some have justly understood the problem and have heeded the warning of the Prime Minister. Labour in general has made a grand contribution to our development; but unfortunately there are still those who do not understand that increases in salary should also bring about increase in productivity, in order thereby to keep our dollar value as stable as possible.

Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt this speech to say that the score is still 0-0 at the end of the second period.

On the other hand, we have those in our country who are the executives of large corporations and who have an important say in the directives given to industries. To many of these persons can be atributed the dangers in our economy. Too many after dinner speakers and social club speakers spend their time criticising government legislation without endeavouring in any way whatever to suggest any solution to the problems always confronting government and refusing to take an interest in their communities in so far as these problems affect the economy of our country. They deprive their communities, their province and their country of the gift of their talents. They fail to see the forest for the trees and miss a great opportunity to create better public relations to the benefit of their concerns.

Those who seem afraid of public life or who seem to look down upon those who take an active part in it will be well advised to reconsider their position and to realize that they owe a debt to their communities and to their country. Instead of staying away from public life and avoiding exposing themselves to criticism, they should think the matter over and, if possible, bring to their communities, as I have already mentioned, the gift of their talents.

I was very happy some time ago to read what another Gaspesian, Gratton O'Leary of the Ottawa Journal, when speaking at a luncheon meeting in the Chateau Laurier during the congress of the Ottawa insurance agents' association, had to say, and I quote:

> Canada's business leaders sit "in the bleachers" and complain about the government but don't know what they are talking about because they take no active interest in public affairs. They sit in the bleachers. They talk loudly about inflation. But I don't see any of them telling us what should be done. Businessmen were calling at the same time for both lower taxes and a balanced budget.

Those who believe they are born to be sheep should endeavour to be shepherds and become the leaders of labour and industry and help those who take an active part in the business and financial problems of our Canadian economy. There is a place in Canada for everyone to be in the flock and not to be of those who eventually find themselves in the camp of those who oppose constitutional government, or even find themselves the leaders of such groups.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a speech made in this house by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) reported in Hansard at page 207. The hon. member referred to the infamous strike at Murdochville. I am not going to defend Gaspe copper mines, nor am I going to defend Noranda mines, its president, vice-president or other officials. But I believe in all justice to those labourers who stayed on the job that they deserve to be defended, and I would like to tell this house that when they marched on Murdochville, 1,000 people from all over the province of Quebec, they found not 40 men back on the job but 675 people back on the job and willing to work. I say this because I live with the people and many have come to see me, crying and wondering what they should do. They were intimidated and afraid and would not return to work although they had five, six, seven or eight children to feed. They said, "What are we going to do? We are scared. We want to go back to work but are frightened". They were satisfied with the salaries paid and happy to work for a higher wage than they had ever earned before.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention how our Canada has come ahead from the days when Voltaire once described it as a few acres of snow, and relate the sentiment expressed by Mrs. Erich Neuhouser, a lady of German descent, who fears that Canadians are losing the pioneer spirit of their forefathers. This to some extent is true, and I believe that the alarm should now be sounded to revive this spirit, and with the example shown by many of our new Canadians give impetus to the development of this country and the vision as seen by this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays) was kind enough in the course of his speech to say that he would answer a question of mine at the end of his speech, and my question is this. Does the hon. gentleman know that before Cartier planted the cross at Gaspe he visited Bonavista, and 37 years before that, the real discoverer of Canada, John Cabot, discovered Canada at Bonavista?

Mr. Keays: If I might answer that Mr. Speaker, as we read through history we will find at one time, many years before the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) ever gave to this country his gift of knowledge, that Newfoundland, the Magdalen islands and Prince Edward Island were all connected, and I would say that this connection of the Magdalen islands and Prince Edward Island gave to Newfoundland the desire to come into confederation ten years ago.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Will the hon. member permit another question? The hon. member referred to the strikebreakers at Murdochville receiving the highest wages they had ever received. Could he tell us what the wages were at that time?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, as a Gaspesian and one who lives close to his constituents and employs 200 or 300 people, I can speak on labour problems in the Gaspe peninsula. I would say that the salaries paid at Murdochville were 20 per cent higher than any salary paid in that region.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my remarks with those points which I know will be looked upon and received with the most interest. This knowledge is probably well known, but I think in view of the undue interest in another event which is taking place this evening I might say that at the end of the second period of the hockey game there was no score.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Just like you.

Mr. Howard: The Postmaster General (Mr. Hamilton) gets nastier and nastier every day.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have such good material to work with.

Mr. Howard: Naturally, sir; look who he is sitting next to.

Mr. Speaker, often members start by referring to the particular motion which is before them, especially when it is a long debate, so that we can go back over the ground. I do not think it would be too wise to do that in this case because the motion is that you leave the chair and it has no substance to it in fact. The next best thing we can do is to look at the amendment moved by the Liberals, and if I may I should like to read it again:

> This house regrets the bad faith of the government, which sought and secured support from the Canadian people on a program of lower taxes, reduced expenditures and a balanced budget, and which has now produced, in flagrant disregard of pre-election promises, a budget calling for higher taxes, record expenditures and a large deficit.

There is certainly a philosophy contained in that particular amendment which is the same as the philosophy of the Liberal party; that there is nothing constructive in it, there is no suggestion, no ideas or proposals—

Mr. Pickersgill: Just good faith.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend made no such point as that tonight. Yet they moved that motion in all sincerity and in all good faith and expect hon. members to vote for it.

An hon. Member: I expect you will.

Mr. Howard: What you expect and what you receive may be two different things.

Mr. Pickersgill: You will vote for it all right.

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman must not be too hasty in his assumptions. I will just say this: if they would allow a free vote from their supporters, I would point out to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) that many of his own followers would not hesitate about voting for it. This represents the quandary the Liberal party is in and reflects the attitude of fence sitting which has been so common in the party for so many years. And we know why. We know that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction existing at the moment in the Liberal party. We know there is an attempt under way to replace the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) by someone else who has gained national prominence in the past two or three weeks.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Howard: Hon. members may laugh, and my friend may say "shame" but if the truth is shameful that is the way it is.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): You ought to know.

An hon. Member: Are you going to try for it?

Mr. Howard: Do you want me to be the leader? There is one thing I will be proud about to my dying day, and that is I was not, and never will be, a member of the Liberal party.

This attempt to substitute "Smallwoodism" for negativism does reflect the political dilemma of the party to my left and the situation which exists in Canada between the Tories and the Liberals. The Liberals know that their usual position on a seat on the fence a little left of centre does not exist any longer because the Tories have replaced them in it. As far as progressivism is concerned, the Tories are more progressive. So what can they do? They have gone just as far as they can go in a progressive direction, so now they say: we must go in the other direction; we must move to the position of being a reactionary group. At this point there comes into the picture a personage from Newfoundland, Premier Smallwood, hoping that with a policy of reassessment and re-examination the Liberal party might be built up to the position it once held; and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is paving the way for all this to take place.

An hon. Member: Carving the way.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend says "carving the way". It may be a little more sanguinary but it does represent the quandary in which the Liberal party finds itself. I think we only have to make a comparison between the amendment put forward by the Liberals and the amendment to the amendment which we have proposed to be reminded of the differences which exist between our group and that which sits to my left. After all, our amendment, within the limited scope available, does recommend some positive, some constructive, some progressive action, and this is the role which the C.C.F. has always played even though we have never been in government. We have always led the way in progressive measures and in the introduction of constructive ideas. We do not complain because the Liberals over the years have stolen them, or that the Tories have stolen them. We wish to heaven they would take over the whole works and put it into effect because then we would have the kind of society we want.

One of our proposals deals with the question of instituting a capital gains tax. I think we are entitled to look at the condition which will develop in the future if we continue to be without a tax on capital gains while our neighbour to the south has imposed such a tax. First of all, such a tax on capital gains would provide a monetary incentive for the investment of United States capital in Canada and increase the influence exercised by the United States corporations in this country. That is one of the detrimental effects which such a situation would bring about. Another is that in some instances there would be a drain on the finances of Canada, because if a person or corporation from the United States invests in Canada, makes a capital gain and returns to the United States, such gain is subject to taxation by the United States authorities. In other words, funds which should be flowing into the coffers of the Canadian Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) are instead being diverted to the coffers of the United States treasury.

A third effect of such a situation is this: one of the by-products of the investment of United States money in Canada is a tendency to force up the exchange rate between the two countries which places us at a disadvantage in so far as world markets are concerned. It further places the Canadian taxpayer in an unfavourable position because he suffers at the hands of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) through having to raise additional money for taxes out of his own pockets. All this could be avoided if we had the capital gains tax we suggest. By his failure to institute this kind of tax, as we envisage it, the Minister of Finance has made the pro-Canadian type of speeches he used to make when in opposition sound extremely hollow. Indeed, his lack of action shows that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke in a somewhat hypocritical fashion when he talked about United States buccaneers making piratical profits out of the pipe line stock deal, which was a capital gain.

Many of the unpleasant consequences which I have just mentioned would be overcome to a great extent if the minister would only have the courage to introduce measures of the kind we have suggested in, apparently, what is to be one of his last actions as Minister of Finance before he moves to another office. I see a smile upon the minister's face. I say to him that if the speculation in the newspapers is correct, and if he does move to this other post in the cabinet, that of external affairs, I hope he will be more tactful and diplomatic in that post than he has been as Minister of Finance.

An hon. Member: He has improved.

Mr. Howard: He has improved. He now smiles a few times a day as he is doing at this moment, but it will take more than that forced smile to raise Canada to the position it enjoyed when the present Leader of the Opposition was secretary of state for external affairs. In fact, it might be that the Prime Minister had this in mind, knowing there is no one in his own ranks available to take this post. It may be that he is considering a bi-partisan policy and will take the Leader of the Opposition into his ranks and thus pave the way for the appearance of Premier Smallwood as leader of the Liberal party. This may sound amazing and imaginative but in politics nothing is impossible, especially with the Tories in office.

An hon. Member: A bed time story.

Mr. Howard: Every time I look across the house I see hon. members opposite nodding in their chairs, whether it is early in the day or late in the evening. So any time is appropriate for a bed time story.

An hon. Member: When you have the floor.

Mr. Howard: That is possible, and I would be the one to admit it. But there are 208 others who, I am sure, are much worse than I am.

Another matter mentioned in the amendment to the amendment was the rise in interest rates and this is a very crucial question because these rates represent a hidden drain on the purchasing power of all the taxpayers in Canada. Increases which may at first appear to be quite small —one-tenth of one per cent, for example— amount to a great deal when they are accumulated, and the effect of these higher rates of interest on the purchasing power of individuals, municipalities and provinces is most serious. At the present time these rates are at usurious levels and they are tending to creep even higher.

Municipalities, provinces and individuals are finding themselves in a very difficult position because of the attitudes and actions of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the present government. In fact, they are trapped. The municipalities, provinces and individuals are trapped in this interest rate by what one might classify as "Fleming's foolishness".

I know that the minister comes from some constituency in Toronto and doubtless he will be interested as will other hon. members in knowing that Toronto has just scored and the score is 1-0.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to impart that information to the house and make it part of the record?

An hon. Member: He has to say something intelligent.

Mr. Howard: Coming from the west as I do, I hope Toronto will win, of course.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: Seriously, the Toronto Maple Leafs have been favourites of mine ever since I was a small child and first began listening to hockey games over the old crystal set.

When we come to talk about interest rates we can look back only a little while ago to that time when the Minister of Finance was gloating and rubbing his hands in glee over the decline in the rediscount rate on treasury bills. It was not long ago that he was asked questions about this. They are recorded in Hansard and if I have to refer to them for the exact words, I will. At that time the minister said the lowering of the rediscount rate on treasury bills was directly the result of the action of this government. He explained that it meant that inflation was curbed because interest rates were going down. He suggested that it meant the economy was recovering and that it marked the end of the tight money policy of the Liberals. He sat there and mustered together as large a smile as he is capable of producing and said these things with apparent open honesty. He attempted to take the credit saying it was the result of the efforts of his government that interest rates were lowered.

Following that we had the conversion loan which was designed, the minister said, to stabilize the money market. In this instance, I refer to page 4598 of Hansard of September 4, 1958 where my hon. friend who may be going to some other post in the cabinet is reported as having said:

> I will say without fear of contradiction on the part of any responsible source in this country—

The minister took in a pretty wide territory, speaking for everyone in Canada. He continued:

> —that the effect of the Canadian conversion loan has been to stabilize the market and in that way it has contributed not only to preventing a further rise in interest rates but in checking it and turning the tide in that respect. That is the effect of this issue.

At the end of August at about the time the conversion loan was to go into effect the rediscount rate was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1.4 to 1.7 per cent. That was in the last part of August or the first week of September. Since that conversion loan took effect interest rates have climbed higher and higher and today they are at the highest point they have ever reached in the history of Canada. What does the Minister of Finance, silent Sam, do now? He keeps his mouth shut. He does not talk about that because it is embarrassing to the government to find out that today the rediscount rate stands at 4.86 per cent, an increase of 1.9 per cent over a week ago, as a direct result of the budget.

I observe that the minister shakes his head and denies that this was a result of the budget. The minister is at liberty to deny that. All I have to do is look back at the number of statements he has made since assuming that portfolio. He has been wrong so many times that it is obviously doubtful if we should pay any attention to the statements he makes at this time.

In the one instance he is only too eager to accept the credit, but in the other instance he keeps his mouth shut. I say to him that if this government is going to take the credit for those periods when the sun shines it also has to take full responsibility for those periods when it rains. Today was a beautiful summer-like day with high temperatures and it is a wonder that some hon. gentleman opposite did not rise in his place and make the statement that the weather has now been placed under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

This treasury bill rate reflects government policy as the Minister of Finance has told us so many times in the past. It is indeed a direct result of government action, attitudes and policies and represents a direct return to the situation that existed when the Liberals were in office, not a tight money policy but an even tighter money policy. My hon. friend shakes his head again. Perhaps he does not know what tight money is. Money is tight with me all the time and if interest rates go up much higher I, like some other hon. members of this house, may have to find a part-time job.

Mr. Aiken: You might find a full-time job.

Mr. Howard: It may well be that my employers, the constituents in Skeena, may decide to employ me full-time someday. That is, of course, a decision that they may take and there will not be much I can do about it, although I shall attempt to convince them that they have an excellent employee in me and should continue to employ me, which is a course followed by everyone in this house.

I should like to deal now with the effect of a financial policy of the government which has been mentioned by two or three hon. members, some in a derogatory way, some in a way that indicates they have not the foggiest idea what it is about and others in a partially sensible way in which they attempted to look at both sides of the picture.

The hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays) who preceded me in this debate mentioned what he thought was the effect of wage increases on the economy. The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) in either the throne speech debate or in a speech on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, I forget which, also used the same approach and drew the analogy that because wages go up the farm implement machinery industry has to increase the prices of farm machinery and therefore the hon. member blamed the wages of workingmen for the higher prices of the materials used by manufacturers in producing farm machinery and the resultant higher costs of farm machinery and equipment.

My friend the hon. member for Acadia may know something about farming but it is extremely obvious that he does not know a darn thing about the relationship of wages and trade unions to the general economy.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock and in the same breath announce that the score is still 1-0.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the Minister of Finance if it is proposed to go on tomorrow with the same debate?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

UNIVERSITY GRADUATE STATISTICS

Question No. 159—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

1. How many graduates of colleges or universities now reside in Canada, as follows: (a) bachelors or equivalent level; (b) masters or equivalent level; (c) doctors?
2. What percentage of the population is each of the above categories?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Statistics are not available.
2. Statistics are not available.

CHANGES IN RURAL POSTAL REGULATIONS

Question No. 324—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has a change been made in postal regulations reducing the required number of patrons from four per mile to three per mile to qualify for rural mail route service?
2. If so, is the post office department making a survey to ascertain the additional patrons who will qualify?

Questions

3. If the department is not making a survey at this time, will the department accept requests for service from additional qualified patrons?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. Yes.

IMPORTS OF NORWEGIAN LURES AND ANCILLARY EQUIPMENT

Question No. 325—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Is the government giving further consideration to the elimination of the custom duty on the importation of Norwegian lures and ancillary equipment used in commercial fishing on the east coast of Canada?
2. If so, will a decision be reached in the near future?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

1. The government has recently given consideration to the elimination of the customs duty on the importation of Norwegian lures and ancillary equipment.

2. In the tariff changes introduced in this year's budget it is proposed that lures, jiggers and artificial baits be permitted duty free entry under the provisions of tariff item 682.

APPENDIX

CHICAGO DIVERSION—CANADIAN NOTE TO UNITED STATES

No. 184

Sir,

I have the honour on instructions from my government to refer to proposals for legislation in the United States of America concerning an increase in the diversion of water from lake Michigan through the Chicago drainage canal. It is noted that one proposal to this effect has been approved by the House of Representatives and will shortly be considered by the Senate. During a period of many years there have been numerous occasions on which the government of Canada has made representations to the government of the U.S.A. with respect to proposals concerning the diversion of water from lake Michigan out of the great lakes watershed at Chicago.

Many of these representations have been directed toward particular proposals then under discussion by U.S.A. authorities. Because of the importance of the question, the government of Canada believes it timely to re-examine the considerations which it regards as most important concerning any proposals for additional diversion of water from the great lakes watershed. Accordingly, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the views of the government of Canada, I have been instructed to bring the following considerations to your attention.

Every diversion of water from the great lakes watershed at Chicago inevitably decreases the volume of water remaining in the basin for all purposes. The government of Canada is opposed to any action which will have the effect of reducing the volume of water in the great lakes basin. Careful inquiry has failed to reveal any sources of water in Canada which could be added to the present supplies of the basin to compensate for further withdrawals in the U.S.A. The government of Canada considers that many agreements and understandings between the U.S.A. and Canada would be broken if unilateral action were taken to divert additional water from the great lakes watershed at Chicago and directs attention to provisions of two treaties in particular

(a) The boundary waters treaty, 1909: The applicability of either art. II, para. 2 or art. III of this treaty depends upon the interpretation of physical facts.

If lake Michigan physically flows into the boundary water lake Huron, art. II preserves to Canada the right to object to such a diversion which would be productive of material injury to the navigation interests in Canadian waters.

If, as has been asserted by eminent U.S.A. jurists, art. III of the treaty applies, no further diversion shall be made except with the approval of the international joint commission.

(b) Niagara treaty, 1950: This treaty allocates water for scenic and power purposes. The amount of water which shall be available for these purposes is the total outflow from lake Erie. The specific inclusion of certain added waters in art. III of the treaty emphasizes the underlying assumption that existing supplies will continue unabated. In addition to these treaty provisions, there is a further agreement of far-reaching importance. Power development in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec is predicated upon agreed criteria for regulation of the flows of the St. Lawrence river. The order of approval of the international joint commission of October 29, 1952 as supplemented on July 2, 1956 and accepted by both our governments, forms the basis for the construction and operation of the hydroelectric power installations in the international section of the St. Lawrence river. Criterion (a) of this order of approval assumes a continuous diversion out of the great lakes basin limited to the present 3,100 cubic feet per second at Chicago.

Navigation and commercial interests depend upon the maintenance of the basis upon which channel enlargements have been designed in order that vessels of deep draught may proceed with full load to and from the ports of the upper great lakes. In this connection I would refer to the following matters:

(a) The construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. Legislation in the two countries and the several exchanges of notes concerning the construction and operation of the seaway now just completed are based on the assumption and understanding that there will not be unilateral action repugnant to the purposes of the legislation. Withdrawal of water from the great lakes basin would materially affect the operation of the St. Lawrence seaway;

(b) Dredging. By agreement contained in the various exchanges of notes between the two countries, profiles have been prepared for the excavation which has taken place or is about to take place in the International rapids section of the river, in the Amherstburg channel and in the St. Clair river. These agreements are based on the implied understanding that material changes would not be made in the volume of water available for navigation;

(c) New channel. In an exchange of notes dated February 28, 1959, it has been agreed that a new channel should be constructed to eliminate the so-called southeast bend of the St. Clair river. The agreement by the government of Canada to this proposal was based on the understanding that there would be no artificial interference with the present supplies of water.

Because of the importance attached by the U.S.A. and Canada to the honouring of international undertakings in letter and in spirit, the government of Canada views with serious concern any possible impairment of agreements and undertakings relating to the great lakes basin. Furthermore, the alarms created by repeated proposals for diversion which inevitably disturb the people and industry of Canada are a source of profound irritation to the relations between our two countries which we can ill afford.

I am instructed, therefore, to express the hope of the government of Canada that the U.S.A. will view this matter with equal concern and will be able to give satisfactory assurances that unilateral action will not be taken which would imperil the present regime of the waters in the great lakes basin and the status of the agreements and understandings to which I have referred.

Please accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HELLYER—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the members of this house. Yesterday in reply to a question from the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is quoted in this morning's Globe and Mail as having said:

> There have been reports indicating that some manufacturers and vendors of some products affected by the commodity tax changes announced in the budget are raising prices to the public and increasing them inexcusably by amounts in excess of the increase in the tax.

In Hansard of April 16, Mr. Speaker, the same part of the Prime Minister's reply is as follows:

> There have been reports indicating that some manufacturers and the vendors of some products affected by the commodity tax changes announced in the budget are raising prices to the public, and increasing them by amounts in excess of the increase in the tax.

In the interests of clarity and accuracy, Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister should tell the house which report is correct.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. gentleman is a model of accuracy and for that reason I would like the opportunity to say this. The blue copy which was sent down by Hansard is exactly as it appears today in yesterday's Hansard. I do not make it a habit to change Hansard in order to alter what appears there, except in so far as changes are made by my staff in the ordinary run of things. Yesterday when the blue was brought to my attention it did not contain the word "inexcusably". However, I recall having said that, but I would not alter Hansard in order to change the meaning or purport of the context prepared by Hansard. The word "inexcusably" was said by me yesterday but it did not appear in Hansard; therefore I would not change the record as it was.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. SPEAKER ON ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a question of privilege, and I feel that all members of the house are involved and interested in it. The question of privilege relates to an event that will be taking place between now and the time this house meets again on Monday next. I would like to express my own thoughts, which I am sure coincide with the thoughts of all hon. members, and extend to you, sir, the very best wishes on the celebration of your birthday on Sunday, April 19. Naturally I hope also there will be many more such events ahead.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FOOD FOR PEACE CONFERENCE—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER AS TO MEETINGS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my reply to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition on Tuesday in connection with the food for peace conference, the Canadian government has accepted an invitation to participate in the meetings with representatives of the United States and other major wheat exporting countries to consider the proposals outlined in the President's farm message to congress on January 29. The invitation was extended by the United States secretary of agriculture, Mr. Benson, to whom the President entrusted the task of pursuing the proposals which he advanced in his message. The other countries taking part will be Australia, Argentina and France. The director general of the food and agriculture organization will also be present.

The meetings will take place in two stages. Officials will meet from April 27 to April 29 to prepare material for consideration at a ministerial meeting on May 5. In his address to congress the President proposed that a new approach should be made to endeavour to make better use of the free world's agricultural abundance in the interests of reinforcing peace and the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world; in short, to use food for the purposes of advancing peace and peaceful objectives. The United States suggested that attention might be turned first to problems in wheat distribution and indicated that at a later date consideration might be given to other agricultural commodities. It is proposed at these meetings to review problems affecting products and trade in wheat and surplus disposal programs now in effect. Consideration will also be given to the possibilities of improving present programs in order to make more effective use of current agricultural surpluses.

I need hardly add to what I said the other day, namely that the Canadian government is wholeheartedly in support of the objectives outlined in the President's address and welcomes the opportunity to discuss problems in wheat distribution and marketing with other major exporting countries. The suggestions I have made on other occasions looking to the establishment of a food bank for the assistance of countries whose populations are short of necessary food, either because of crop failures or natural disasters or for long term reasons such as economic underdevelopment, were directed to very much the same objectives as those outlined by the President. The Washington meetings will provide an opportunity to examine these suggestions as well as other suggestions put forward, and the Canadian representatives will endeavour to play a constructive role in seeking to advance the humanitarian objectives outlined by the President.

The success of any food for peace program will depend on finding ways to increase consumption in the food deficit countries. At the same time they will seek to ensure that in any proposals that may develop, adequate provisions are made to ensure that normal commercial markets are safeguarded. The elaboration of detailed proposals is not an easy task, and I should like to endorse the remarks of Secretary Benson that soundness of approach is essential and should take precedence over speed, important as speed is.

The Canadian government will be represented at the ministerial level on May 5. The composition of the Canadian delegation to the two meetings will be announced shortly, and the house will be given full information as to the results of these meetings. I think that is about as far as I can go at this time in answer to the hon. gentleman's question. I hope I will be in a position almost immediately to announce the composition of the delegation.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this conference bids fair to be one of the most important international economic meetings to be held for some time, and I think it is quite appropriate, indeed it is essential, that Canada should be represented by a minister as the Prime Minister has just indicated will be the case.

The Prime Minister has stated that the conference will deal with wheat and other food products. Perhaps the commodity which will be of most importance to Canada in any such discussions under present circumstances would be wheat. The importance of such a subject at a conference of this kind is obvious when we realize that the world wheat surplus is large and perhaps increasing, and that national measures for the disposal of such surpluses have been shown to be inadequate and unsatisfactory. An international approach to this problem might therefore be an advantage for all concerned as well as a means of assisting underdeveloped countries by international action.

As the Prime Minister has mentioned, it is very important that the steps which can be taken in this field should be taken with a minimum of dislocation of established commercial markets, because if it were not done in this way Canada would probably suffer relatively more than the other countries which will be represented at the conference. It is always important to keep in mind—and we had evidence of this the other day in the reply to a question which appears at page 2652 of Hansard for April 13—what chaotic and strange results can ensue when exports are subsidized in the way that some of our food exports have been subsidized in recent months.

I hope this conference will have good results nationally for Canada, and good results internationally.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): For Canada this is a critical conference. I am very pleased that it is to take place, because for many years when others were laying great emphasis on the United States export program I was saying that instead of making such loud protests it would probably be more effective if we were to sit down in conference with the United States and other countries involved to work out a common program to deal with this common problem.

Canada's wheat surplus at the present time is not as large as it has been, mainly because our wheat acreage has been reduced and because in recent years we have not had such large crops as we had previously.

Mr. Churchill: There have been increases in sales, too, you know.

Mr. Argue: However, the situation today makes such a conference as this essential.

There are disturbing indications that the United States is making very rapid progress in increasing its exports of wheat while Canada's wheat exports have fallen to some extent.

I hope this conference will be followed by other conferences dealing with other agricultural products. We have many products in surplus in Canada today. Large inventories are held by the agricultural prices stabilization board, and unless action is taken at both the international and domestic levels to deal with food surpluses and make them available to people who need them, I think our agricultural industry at home will be in great danger.

The Leader of the Opposition said that a recent return showed what chaotic conditions can be brought about when exports are subsidized. I do not agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this situation has been brought about by the subsidization of Canadian exports. This problem must be dealt with in a co-operative manner such as is being contemplated by this conference.

In the international situation today I believe that food is more important than ever. It is important not only in the sense that it must be made available to people who are hungry and in great need, but I also believe it is an important instrument in the arsenal of democracy, an instrument that may be used to feed undernourished people and in turn help underdeveloped countries improve their economies. We welcome this conference and express the hope that it meets with success.

ATOMIC ENERGY

NUCLEAR TESTS—STATEMENT CONCERNING U.S. AND U.K. PROPOSALS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked as to whether I could comment on recent press reports concerning the proposals made by the United States and the United Kingdom at the resumed negotiations in Geneva on nuclear tests. In reply I wish to advise that the Canadian government has been informed of the stand taken by the United Kingdom and United States representatives at the Geneva negotiations with respect to the approach they are making to the Soviet representations at that conference.

What is perhaps not clear from some of the published reports is that the western powers have not proposed abandoning the attempt to reach a comprehensive agreement and of substituting for it an agreement confined to nuclear tests in the upper atmosphere. They have proposed that the main effort continue, but that since the major stumbling block has been the question of on-site inspection in the case of unidentified subterranean events, and since discussion last summer of the techniques of detection in outer space was not pursued to agreed technical conclusions, as an interim measure the existing area of agreement might be consolidated. The negotiations would then continue with respect to explosions underground and in outer space.

This suggestion was put forward by the two countries as an alternative procedure. If the Soviet union were not for the present prepared to change its position on the veto in respect of procedures for on-site inspection and on early discussion of practical measures for high altitude detection, at least the alternative proposed, if implemented, would provide the means for avoiding further contamination of the atmosphere with artificial radioactivity should the nuclear powers decide to resume weapons tests. It would also enable a start to be made on the establishment of a control system. It would, however, leave for the future the achievement of the important objectives of arresting competition in the development of nuclear weapons and in restricting the capability of manufacturing them.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the other day when he was in Hamilton at the inauguration of the first reactor in Canada, the Prime Minister expressed the hope that some constructive results would be achieved in the vitally important discussions that are now taking place in Geneva on nuclear tests, and perhaps the reception to or the results of these new proposals will indicate whether these hopes are to be realized.

These new proposals do run the risk of being misinterpreted, misrepresented and indeed distorted by those who are opposed to any international action in this field. This risk is the greater because of certain statements that have been made in Washington during recent months to the effect that underground tests cannot be detected by any control agency although, I should add, there are other United States experts who have denied this. This is one of the reasons, of course, for the confusion of laymen in a field of this importance. But the confusion which does exist has given ammunition and argument to the opponents of a ban of all tests in the U.S.S.R. and in the U.S.A.

I realize, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, that the Russian position in regard to control and inspection, which are a vital part of this whole effort, has been intransigent on their insistence on the use of the veto. I suggest, however, and perhaps this is a point which will be in the minds of those who are taking part in these discussions, that perhaps the western position would be stronger in reply to this Russian position if there could be no big power representation of any kind on any control agency which might be set up, and if that could be left to the United Nations where it could be effectively done.

This new proposal, Mr. Speaker, I hope will not be interpreted by public opinion in any country as a withdrawal from the ultimate position which the west has taken, to the effect that all nuclear tests must be banned. If this could be put forward as a stage, it might be easier for the Russians to accept because the ban would be confined to atmospheric tests. Some of the controls which would be required in other forms of tests would not be necessary here. If it could be put forward in this sense, as one stage, it might be useful and helpful in the achievement of the ultimate objective of a total ban. If, however, it is going to be misinterpreted and misrepresented as a departure on our side from that ultimate objective, then, Mr. Speaker, we shall all suffer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was the point I was trying to make. I thank the hon. member.

Mr. Pearson: I realize that.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): The C.C.F. for years has taken the position that nuclear tests should be abandoned. Of course the best possible arrangement is to have international control and inspection. I think there is a growing body of evidence that continuing nuclear tests endanger the very existence of mankind. The position Canada should take is that we should encourage and endeavour to persuade all nations in the world to cease nuclear tests. I myself feel very strongly that the western nations should take this lead, and should say to the Soviet union, "our testing is over", that we should cease testing nuclear weapons, particularly on this continent, at least until such time as we see what action or what measure of co-operation will be forthcoming from the Soviet union after we have said that our nuclear tests are ceasing.

There is disturbing evidence that the increase of strontium 90 is endangering human welfare and could lead to very serious results for the human race in generations to come. I submit that Canada has an opportunity to take the lead by insisting on ceasing and endeavouring to persuade all nations to cease nuclear tests.

FLOODS

MANITOBA—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN RED RIVER CONTROL PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house whether the government has completed its study of the material provided by the premier of Manitoba in connection with the plan for flood control on the Red river? If so, has a decision been reached to provide federal assistance for this plan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is answered by its first part. The government has not yet completed its examination.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST BERLIN—REFERENCE TO HIGH ALTITUDE FLIGHTS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the reported concern of the British government and the British public with respect to the high altitude flights of the United States air force to Berlin, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the Canadian government is prepared to extend its good offices toward settlement of this unfortunate and hazardous situation?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman brought this question to my attention. The Canadian government is aware that certain high altitude flights have been made to and from West Berlin by aircraft of the United States. It has received the text of the reply of the United States of America of April 13 to a Soviet protest about such flights. The text of that reply, of course, has appeared in the press as well.

The United States is making these flights as one of the occupying powers in West Berlin with certain rights of access and with certain requirements of supplying the western garrisons there. Having regard to all the circumstances I would not like to make any extended comment, indeed any comment, at this time, in respect of the question asked.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REPORTED CONFERENCE ON USE FOR DEFENCE PURPOSES—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. I apologize for not having given him notice. Will the minister advise the house whether Canada has received an invitation to attend a meeting to be held in London this week, as reported in the London Times of April 13, to discuss existing and future collaboration under the Anglo-American agreement for co-operation on the use of atomic energy for defence purposes?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): If such an invitation had been received it would have passed through the department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

CRIMINAL LAW

TABLING OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON SEXUAL PSYCHOPATHS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was asked when I would be tabling the McRuer report on criminal sexual psychopaths. I am glad to be able to advise the house that this report was tabled in both English and French yesterday afternoon, and that in accordance with the previous undertaking sufficient copies are available so that members can obtain them.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED PRICE INCREASES IN EXCESS OF TAX INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks in answer to a question from the hon. member for Vancouver East, to the effect that some manufacturers and vendors are increasing their prices inexcusably by amounts in excess of the increase in taxes, could the Prime Minister inform the house if he thinks it would be excusable if they only raised their prices by such an amount as to offset the tax?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the answer yesterday, which raised a question of jurisdiction, I suggest to the hon. member that it is questionable whether this is a matter of administrative responsibility of the federal government.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I now, having known that this question was going to be asked, ask leave of the house to have the word "inexcusably" added to the Hansard record at page 2739?

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to have the word "inexcusably" added to the record?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister has been kind enough to clear up any misunderstanding, I wonder whether he would answer a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister deem it equally excusable if the trade unions of Canada were to follow the same automatic practice of the companies?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is getting into the realm of hypothesis now, and I do not think I can allow the question.

NATURAL RESOURCES

IRON ORE—PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT AT UNGAVA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources which is the result of a rather restless night. In view of the minister's criticism of United States financial control of the Canadian iron ore industry at the annual dinner of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, would the minister inform the house if he is correctly reported as having given his blessing to the $50 million iron ore development in Ungava proposed by the Krupp and Eaton interests?

Mr. Fulton: You must have had a restless night.

Mr. Speaker: Before the minister replies, I think there is also a question of jurisdiction involved here, with respect to whether the development of iron ore resources in Ungava is not solely a matter of provincial concern. However, I do not want to prevent an answer if the minister wishes to reply.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was handed this question as I came into the house. I should like to say first of all that I am very pleased that the hon. member is taking an interest in the speeches I am making. I did not have time to bring a copy of the speech with me, but I can assure him that I made no reference in my speech to any iron ore development in Ungava. However, I will go to my office later, obtain a copy of the speech and send it to the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFF OF RAILWAY WORKERS—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION BY PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I regret that I was not able to give him notice of it. It arises out of a news item in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that during 1958 Canada's two major railways had dismissed 18,000 workers, and the article also contains a suggestion that the proposed royal commission on freight rates should have included in its terms of reference the question of the lay-off of railway employees and the effect of technological changes or automation. Has this request been communicated to the Prime Minister, and what degree of consideration will be given to it?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge at the moment of this matter having been brought directly to my attention or to the attention of any member of the government. I did read the item in question, and when the enunciation of the powers of the royal commission is made I think there will be an answer to the question the hon. gentleman has asked.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister; I regret that I was unable to give him notice. It has to do with a report in this morning's Montreal Gazette to the effect that the government's legislation to establish a national energy board may not be introduced during the present session. Can the Prime Minister say whether we will be dealing with this legislation this session, or whether it is awaiting some clarification of United States policy as far as Canadian oil exports are concerned?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There is no foundation for the statement that the legislation will not be introduced at this session. It will be introduced and proceeded with.

Mr. Benidickson: Soon?

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 16, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Regier.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I seem to be getting a fair amount of exercise today in rising and sitting down. Last evening as we were approaching ten o'clock I had begun to relate my opinion as to the attitude which exists in Canada today regarding the effect that wage increases may have upon price increases. I had said there were varying opinions, some to the effect that the workingman is completely to blame. Others are more enlightened, and say that while wage increases may have had some effect there are also other causes.

I mentioned that the hon. member for Acadia in his discussion of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, had left the impression that the rising level of wages in the agricultural implement industry was directly responsible for the increases in the prices of farm machinery. He made reference to a 6 per cent increase instituted by the farm implement companies last fall, and left the impression that this was the direct result of an increase in wages paid to employees working in the agricultural implement industry.

I would point out that in this instance I do not think the comparison is quite correct. The real reason that prices were increased was the Tories' $1 an acre program and the fact that the farm machinery manufacturers wanted to capitalize on this extra income. With respect to the movement of farm machinery prices, it is a pretty well-known fact that for at least 50 years some sort of price fixing arrangements have existed in the agricultural implement field and that there has been relatively little competition and in many years no competition in the prices for farm machinery. In fact in 1937 a committee of the house considered the question of farm implement production, and one conclusion it came to was that there had been little or no competition in the farm implement industry for quite a number of years.

We know that annually for at least the past five years and probably for some number of years before that the companies in the farm implement industry have been making regular and almost automatic increases in the prices of the machinery they sell, amounting to approximately 6 per cent each year. I have some statistical information compiled by the dominion bureau of statistics respecting average annual hourly earnings in the agricultural implement industry. I am only taking the figures from 1953 to 1958, as being relatively recent. Over that five-year period we find that wages increased in this industry by 18.01 per cent, but we also find that the prices charged by the agricultural implement industry increased by some 30 per cent. That means twice as much increase in price percentagewise as compared with the increase in wages over that same period.

At one time it used to be quite popular to be against sin. Then there was an anti-Quebec feeling; people from Quebec were on the short end of the stick. The Jewish people have been subjected to the same sort of thing. It was popular to be against communism. Now it is popular to be against unions, or anti-union. The spread of this propaganda of an anti-union nature takes many people down a blind alley and leads them to the conclusion that anything which unions do is of no value and should be condemned. I know from personal experience, as I related to some extent during last year's debate on departmental estimates—and I intend to comment also on this at a later stage in the proceedings—that unions sometimes do things which are not too sensible and which we should not regard as too helpful to our economy. It is true that in some negotiations which have been conducted by the unions, their attitude, approach and demands are sometimes just not reasonable. But that does not give us the right to condemn everything the unions do.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to relate two or three instances where international unions have acted in a manner which is most responsible toward society, and whereby they gave full consideration to the effect of their negotiations upon other sections of society apart from those in which they were directly involved. I would like to relate an instance of an attitude which has been prevalent in the united packing house workers of America for some years. Negotiations between the U.P.W.A. and the packing house industry have an effect on farmers, and for some time the packing house workers in their negotiations with the meat packing industry have asked the industry to guarantee a certain floor price to the farmers for the commodities the meat packers buy. They have been concerned enough about the farmers to attempt to protect them as much as they can in that way, but they have been told time after time by the meat packing industry to mind their own business. They said, "The price we pay the farmer for hogs or other animals which we buy has nothing to do with you." So the U.P.W.A. has expressed this desire to protect the farmers and the commodities they sell to the meat packers of Canada, but they have been told it is none of their business and that they should pay attention to the wage rates and other conditions of their members in the packing plants.

Recently the united automobile workers under Walter Reuther made a similar proposal to the automobile manufacturers asking them to act sensibly in the prices charged for their cars and trucks and so on to consumers, and Walter Reuther was told again by the automobile industry to keep his nose out of the companies' business, that they would charge whatever prices they liked.

On January 20 of this year the united steel workers of America, which is another international union organized on behalf of one of the basic industries in our country, indeed in the world, being so concerned about the effect of increases in steel prices over the past number of years, presented a memorandum to the Prime Minister. They asked in that memorandum if the government would undertake to conduct an independent survey into increases by steel manufacturers in the prices they were charging the consumers, and asked for a study of the relationship between the charges made in the steel industry and the prices charged by the steel corporations.

The steel workers union suggested that they would be prepared to co-operate with the government in any way if the government would institute such an investigation and study; and if it was discovered that wages paid to the steel workers were pushing up steel prices, the steel workers' union would take that into consideration in its negotiations for wages and it would affect the wages paid in the steel industry. They are asking for an independent survey because they do not know what the position is. That is another instance of a union which has the welfare of society at heart and is attempting to find ways and means of assuring that other sections of our Canadian society are protected to the greatest possible extent.

I would suggest that generally speaking wage increases have relatively little effect on price increases. The Prime Minister made reference yesterday, and again today, to the inexcusable action of certain manufacturers in raising their prices. It had nothing to do with wage increases and nothing to do with negotiation. It merely had to do with an opportunity to boost prices by using the tax increases as an excuse. The attitude of the Prime Minister was that this action is inexcusable, and I am sure he would extend those remarks to price increases in other fields as well.

We know that our corporate structure in Canada, and indeed in other parts of the world, has been for quite a number of years now developing more and more toward a monopoly or oligopoly position. More and more throughout this century there have been arrangements between companies within a nation with regard to fixing prices, the automatic raising of prices, the reducing of production and the records in the combines investigation branch of the Department of Justice are full of different practices which have been studied by the restrictive trade practices commission. More and more international cartels have been established to carve up the world into markets and assure that the highest possible income will accrue to those cartels.

We have been moving toward bigger and bigger industries, more and more price fixing arrangements, and control over our economy by outside forces. International cartels do not exist in a legal or corporate sense. In many instances they exist only by gentlemen's agreements or even by written contractual agreements, and the position is such that it is impossible for a nation to take any corrective measures to ensure that the consumer gets the fullest possible benefit from the goods produced by those particular industries.

This is one of the fields to which we should be directing a great deal of thought, as to how our Canadian governmental agencies can effectively deal with the steadily increasing cost of living and the increasing prices of goods and commodities, rather than following this blind lead which has been given to us that the unions and their members and working class people generally are entirely to blame for every price increase which takes place.

I am not in any way trying to say that unions are lily white and pure in every sense.

But unless and until the government undertakes to move in this direction and considers the necessity of instituting statutes and regulations to ensure that the consumers of Canada get the best possible deal they can in terms of price, quality of goods produced and services offered, we will continue to have the control of our society, our industry and our very economy resting in the hands of people not responsible to parliament or to the government. This government will be most derelict in its duty if it does not move in this direction.

In the speech from the throne it was indicated that changes are proposed in the combines investigation laws some time during the present session. I sincerely hope these problems are taken into consideration when this legislation is drafted, so the authorities within the combines investigation branch will be able to deal with them in a most effective way. But as long as we continue to allow the control of our economy to rest in hands not responsible to the government, to parliament and to Canadian citizens, we will continue to be caught concurrently in depressions, inflation and out and out thievery from the pockets of the people of Canada.

Perhaps I can sum up very briefly by saying this. During the debate on the budget which was presented last year I was able to develop an anagram on the letters of the last name of the Minister of Finance. It was quite appropriate, but this particular budget does not allow me to use the last letters of the minister's name. I must therefore content myself with his initials, which I think are most appropriate, and declare the budget to be distasteful, mean and foolish.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to make a brief contribution to this debate I should like to draw your attention and that of the house to a trend which has been very noticeable in this country, and probably in every country, over the years. In the last three quarters of a century the place of government generally in the lives of Canadians and in the economy of the country has become very much greater than it used to be. For example, there are many emanations in the administrative field, and many departments, whose annual budget is now much greater than was the total budget of the federal government in the days of our grandfathers.

This is not due entirely to the development of the country and the increase which has taken place in the population, because the per capita importance of government has increased tremendously in the same period of time. During the last few years the per capita expenditure of the dominion government has been in the neighbourhood of $300 annually, whereas 75 years ago it was only $7 or $8 per capita. So it can clearly be seen that the impact of government policy, be it good or bad, is bound to have a much greater effect on the economy of the country in this day and age than it had in the days of our grandfathers.

As a matter of fact this trend has been increasing with the passing of time. In the years since 1945 the total expenditures of all governments at all levels in this country has increased by about 96 per cent. This is understandable, because governments at all levels offer a great number of services, welfare payments and projects of infinite variety which were never offered in the days of our grandfathers; some of them, indeed, could not even have existed. For example, the annual budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation today is much greater than the total national budget was in the days of Sir John

A. Macdonald in the last years of the nineteenth century. Thus it should readily be realized that the role of government in the everyday life of the average citizen is much greater than it used to be.

In addition to the facts I have just mentioned we are, of course, in this era of cold war faced with the necessity for spending vast amounts of money and effort on defence. There are generous payments made to other levels of government, on a scale which was unequalled in former years. The increased importance of government, with its correspondingly greater effect on the economic forces of the country means that the responsibilities which rest on any present-day government in the economic field are much greater than they used to be.

With due deference to economists, trained experts and self-appointed experts, the business of predicting the effect of any particular policy on the economy of a country is far from being an exact science, and one of the notable things about any measures which are taken is that there is a considerable time lag, usually between a year and a year and a half, between treatment and recovery.

In this connection I am struck, as a former pilot, by the close analogy between this and flying an aircraft with primary instruments. The thing that has to be learned is that when a trend shows, even to the slightest degree, corrective action must be taken early. If a trend develops, the tendency is to overcorrect when the full impact of the trend becomes apparent. We have heard repeated references in this house to unemployment. Unemployment is an unfortunate thing and is a matter of serious consequence in our economy. Nevertheless it must be realized that after the treatment is applied some time is necessary before the effects begin to appear.

There is another analogy which occurs to me from the medical field, when repeated demands arise for this or that cure in a certain situation. We do not want to be in the position of the relatives of a patient who would insist, when that patient was very ill with pneumonia, that he be given doses of penicillin every five minutes because he did not appear to be recovering. There has to be time for the treatment to take effect. In this day and age foresight is of prime importance.

When this government came to power, it found immediately that there were evidences, and sometimes danger signs, of unsatisfactory trends as far as the economy of the country was concerned. There was the prospect, the forecast, of sharply increased unemployment. There was inadequate social security, and the country was faced with a considerable decline in home building, a slowing up of the growth in personal income, an increasing disparity in the standards of government services as between provinces, increasing stocks of agricultural surpluses and many other indications of difficulties ahead.

This government acted quickly to apply treatment to some of these unsatisfactory trends. One of the earliest things it did was to stimulate home building in order to provide not only homes for Canadians but also jobs for those who build them and for the service industries which supply all the innumerable things which go into a modern home, its furnishing as well as its construction. The result was that after a decline of 8 per cent in 1957, expenditures on home building in this country rose in 1958 to $353 million or 25 per cent.

The government expanded its own capital expenditure in order to stimulate the economy and provide jobs. In addition, in co-operation with the provinces, it embarked on various projects designed to create employment quickly in certain fields, and last winter it embarked on a policy in co-operation with the provinces which allowed the municipalities to put in hand essential public works projects which, in addition to being beneficial in themselves, did at the same time provide employment for thousands of people. It will be remembered, too, that this government on coming into office immediately increased old age pensions, disabled persons' pensions, veterans' pensions and many other social benefits, besides extending hospital insurance programs to the provinces. Perhaps most important of all, it reduced taxes to those in the low income group. It increased payments to the provinces, with special adjustment grants to the Atlantic provinces, to go some considerable way, as I have already mentioned, toward eliminating the disparity between the levels of services which those provinces are able to offer as compared with most other provinces in the country.

The transfer payments of the federal government to other levels of government increased in 1958 over 1956 by $177 million. This government also placed restrictions on some types of farm products which were coming into Canada at depressed prices and glutting our own markets for Canadian producers. The government also embarked on a vigorous program of wheat sales, with the result that the wheat surplus has been cut to some extent.

In the present budget the government took further action to better the position of the Canadian farmer in his own markets by imposing reasonable duties on fruit and vegetables coming into this country, including potatoes. I am very pleased indeed to see this come into effect because for many years my own province, where the growing of potatoes is vitally important, was in the position of having its potatoes go into its chief market, the United States, over a duty of 37½ cents per hundredweight whereas for many years United States potatoes came into Canadian markets duty free for most of the year. Two or three years ago a change was made to increase the length of time during which the duty was payable, but the present action by the government puts the Canadian producer on an even footing with his United States counterpart as far as entry into each other's market is concerned.

What are the effects of some of these policies that have been applied? I believe all Canadians are pleased to realize that during the last couple of months—for the first time in approximately 18 months, I believe—the level of unemployment is less than it was 12 months previously. There are other encouraging trends, too. Home building, which declined in 1957, rose by 25 per cent in 1958, in which year there were 164,000 starts made to establish an all-time record by 26,000 units. Net farm income, which went into a rather sharp decline in 1957, rose in 1958 by $234 million, or 24 per cent. Cash farm income rose by 8 per cent. When it is realized that the number of people engaged in agriculture declined during the same period and has been declining for many years, it will be appreciated that in 1958 the per capita cash income of people engaged in agriculture established an all-time record. The gross national product in 1958 as compared with the previous year rose by $778 million. Unincorporated non-farm business income rose by 7 per cent in 1958.

These policies which the government embarked upon were not, of course, without cost. Anyone who imagines that services and benefits can be created out of thin air is deceiving himself or the public, or both. In a rich country such as ours it is my belief and that of the government that investment in Canada and in the welfare of Canadians is money well spent. No wise government, with the conditions which have existed over the last few months would, I believe, have attempted to balance the budget, because under those circumstances such a balance would not be in the public interest.

The past year was a period when the economy of the country needed stimulation. It received that stimulation and is now responding. With the increased tempo of the economy generally it was reasonable then, to make a small increase in taxes—and it is a relatively small increase—affecting those who are best able to carry the load. I should like to point out here and now that the income taxes paid by the low income groups in Canada, representing approximately four-fifths of the income taxpayers, have not been raised on this occasion. The income taxes paid by a vast number of Canadians are still lower than they were two years ago.

It was felt that with a gradually brightening situation steps should be taken to bring the budget more nearly into balance. That is what has been done. Those who would cry ruin because for a short period deficits have been shown are not realistic. It must be remembered that the ability of a country to carry its debt is made up of many factors. To begin with, the per capita debt of Canada is much lower at this time than it has been for long periods in the past. The development of our country, which brings our whole economy more into balance and thereby renders it able to carry with ease tax burdens which would have been completely unsupportable 40 or 50 years ago, is another consideration.

I have great confidence in our country's future. We are rich in natural resources and are blessed with one of the finest collections of racial stock that exists on the face of the earth. We live in the temperate zone in the northern regions of the world, regions which since the dawn of history have produced the greatest stimulation to human endeavour. I am convinced that Canadians in all walks of life can look forward with great confidence and optimism not only to their own immediate future but to the future of their children and their children's children.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the budget debate, I would have liked to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on last week's budget speech. Unfortunately, I am unable to do so under the circumstances, and instead I would like to tender a message of sympathy. I sympathize with the Minister of Finance for having had to bring down last week's budget. He was obliged to meet the inconsiderate expenses made during the session between the last two general elections. As a matter of fact, during that session, the Minister of Finance had to meet the expenses resulting from inconsiderate promises made during the 1957 elections and, Mr. Speaker, people in Canada now realize that they have to pay for alleged gifts.

This reminds me of a particular fact. When the present Minister of Finance was sitting in the opposition, and the Liberal government had increased the price of postage stamps by one cent after the 1953 general election, he stated, as can be seen on page 1132 of Hansard, volume II, "The chickens are coming home . . ."

(Text):

—the chickens are coming home to roost—

(Translation):

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the chickens are coming home to roost. We must today pay the piper, and that is what the Minister of Finance had to do last week.

When the Minister of Finance entered this house last week, I was reminded somehow of the prodigal son. The Canadian people had entrusted the Conservative party with the government of this country. The Liberal party, which had preceded the Conservative administration had left well-filled coffers. The Minister of Finance and the Conservative government have spent our legacy and today, the Minister of Finance comes back to us smiling, but empty handed, and asks us to fill his pockets again.

Mr. Speaker, the honeymoon is over. The Canadian people, which has allowed itself to be taken in by the Conservative party, now realizes, on its return from the honeymoon trip, that the magnificent engagement ring which it had been given is not even paid for. The Canadian people also have noticed that the magnificent house which had been held out as their future home was only a mirage and that the vision of stable employment at all times does not exist.

Mr. Speaker, the present government also reminds me of those used cars we buy in garages. When a buyer appears, the salesman points out the good features of the car, makes him look at all the chrome fittings, and, once the sale is made, the buyer soon realizes he is stuck with a "lemon".

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are now stuck with a "lemon", the Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker, this budget reminds me of the man standing on the highway between Ottawa and Montreal waiting for the bus to go to Montreal. After many hours, he sees a bus coming at last. He waves to the driver to stop and gets into the bus. After a while, he notices that the bus driver takes all possible roads without seeming to know exactly where he is going. The fellow gets up and asks the conductor: "Where are we going?" and the conductor replies: "But, sir, don't you know this bus is not going anywhere in particular?" Well, Mr. Speaker, this government gives us the same impression, the feeling that it is not going anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, as I said just now, the honeymoon is over. Today, the government is facing the people, but the encounter is not the same as the one we saw last week on television.

At this stage of my remarks, I address my remarks particularly to the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), and I should like to refer to this matter incidentally, because it comes under parliament and has to do with programs put on the national network of television, for which Canadians are paying the bills.

On April 12 last, at 10.30 p.m., we were given a program entitled "Affrontement" (Encounter) which was nothing of the sort. In fact, before coming to the house this morning, I took the trouble of looking up in the Larousse the exact definition of the word "affrontement". Well, according to the dictionary, "affrontement", means "action d'affronter". Now, "affronter" means "to attack with intrepidity, to brave". You should have seen, Mr. Speaker, with what intrepidity the provincial member for Jeanne-Mance, Mr. Maurice Custaud, and Mr. Julien Morissette, a well-known supporter of the Union Nationale, were facing each other. Incidentally, the provincial member for Jeanne-Mance is a member of the Union Nationale and one of the parliamentary secretaries of the Union Nationale government. By the way, may I inform the house that the Union Nationale government has appointed parliamentary secretaries, which must arouse the envy of many backbenchers in this house, many of whom just now are perspiring, pining, hoping and hankering after the position of parliamentary secretary in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that on that program there was no actual encounter of participants. All it amounted to was fulsome praise of the Quebec government. If such programs are to be continued, in spite of protests from the people of the province of Quebec, it would be a good idea to retitle the program "Thwacks with handkerchiefs".

Mr. Pigeon: Or "Jean-Louis Gagnon", one or the other.

Mr. Rouleau: Yes, the program might well be called "Thwacks with handkerchiefs" and, as a topic for the first program they might well deal with the usefulness of parliamentary secretaries in the parliament of Canada. Furthermore, I would suggest that the first two participants in the program be the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) and the member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). It would be quite interesting to hear those two members discuss that matter.

Mr. Tremblay: Certainly.

Mr. Rouleau: Instead of making continuous interjections, the hon. member for Roberval would be well advised to do like the member for Lake St. John (Mr. Parizeau) and follow personality courses. Perhaps he could find a sponsor and get paid for making advertisements. He could advertise Ex-Lax and say: "While I felt sick, I took Ex-Lax tablets and today I feel just fine".

Mr. Pigeon: We never hear you addressing Maurice Lamontagne.

Mr. Tremblay: Nor Father Levesque.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, when looking over the interjections made by the hon. member for Roberval, one finds he spends most of his time calling others ignoramuses. In making such a remark, he is probably referring to all the other members in the house. I agree that we are not as well read as he is, since we did not have the opportunity to read les Malheurs de Sophie, Aurore, l'enfant martyre, nor Le voyage de M. Pleurnichard.

Mr. Speaker, I would also suggest that the panelists on the second telecast of the program "Thwacks with handkerchiefs" should be the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) and the Minister of National Revenue; they could talk about the national anthem "O Canada".

On the third telecast, the panelists could be the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Van Horne) and Mrs. Gilberte Côté-Mercier; they could deal with complete tax exemption in Canada. This would no doubt please the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) who is obliged to tax the Canadian people.

Again on the program "Affrontement" if it should be decided to retain that name, I suggest that the panelists on the fourth telecast could be the Minister of Finance and the Canadian taxpayers. Following the budget which was introduced by the minister, we would certainly witness a real encounter.

Instead of taking pleasure in just sitting on the government benches and instead of showing smug smiles of satisfaction, members of the cabinet should endeavour to listen to the complaints of the people of Canada.

[Mr. Rouleau.]

Mr. Speaker, last Monday, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) said that he was glad that he did not have to sit any more in front of the opposition. He also added that since he was seated further from the opposition, he was closer to the people. May I advise him to be careful, for the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in his vision, perhaps has felt that the hon. member for Sherbrooke would not stay long in this house and has placed him closer to the exit, as the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) said yesterday.

If the hon. member for Sherbrooke would get closer to the people, he would see that the people of Canada are suffering and he would hear them protesting loudly against the heavy burden of taxes they now have to bear.

Mr. Speaker, is there a more revolting sight than to see the men who now occupy the government benches—those who, for years, have been criticizing and saying that the people were too heavily taxed—unduly tax the Canadian people? When they were in the opposition, they used to tell us that taxes were too high in Canada, and now that they govern the country, they increase those taxes.

At the time they were in the opposition, they used to tell us that there was too much taxation in Canada; and now that they are in power, they tax us some more.

Mr. Speaker, during the last two election campaigns, the hon. ministers and the members who sit on the government side of the house, like the juvenile heads, the "wonder boys" they wanted to be, roved all over Canada promising tax cuts, lower expenditure, a lowering of the national debt and full employment everywhere in the country. Let me refer to only a few of the promises made by the leader of the Conservative party, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in Toronto on April 25, 1957. This is what the Prime Minister said on that occasion, and I quote from the Montreal Star of April 26, 1957:

(Text):

It is time to take the unrepentant tax-masters off the backs of the Canadian people. No one can deny that present rates of taxation penalize success, neutralize incentive and diminish production.

(Translation):

And in Quebec, on April 27, 1957, as reported by the Ottawa Journal of April 29, the Prime Minister said:

(Text):

Don't you think you have been overtaxed long enough by this government?

(Translation):

In Vancouver, over the national broadcasting system on May 24, 1957, the Prime the Prime Minister said:

(Text):

Are you satisfied with the policy of the Liberal over-taxation?

(Translation):

Today, Mr. Speaker, it is the people of Canada who are putting the same question to this government, and particularly to the Minister of Finance who is responsible for introducing in the house the budget agreed to by the government. Today, the people of Canada are asking the government: "You used to say that we were overtaxed, but what are you doing now? You are taxing us even more. We, the people of Canada, now ask you: what are you leading us into?"

Canada's present financial position is the result of a lack of administrative judgment on the part of the government, of its lack of administrative foresight and its policy of indifference and neglect.

During the campaigns which preceded the election of this parliament, the people of Canada had been promised new records of achievement. We had been promised a racing car that would take us to the highest peaks and records. But all we have now is a stock-car, headed for disaster. We do hold records, but of the wrong kind, for instance the record of unemployment, the record for peacetime government expenditure, the record for peacetime taxation, and the record for peacetime increase in the national debt. We also hold the record for peacetime deficit.

Yesterday I was listening to the speech made in this house by the member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays), in which he stated that at the Canadian mining convention he had met manufacturers who said to him, and I quote from page 2778 of yesterday's Hansard:

He admitted that everyone was surprised that when the experts on administration and financial affairs spoke, every one of them said there was no other course to follow and that they endorsed the courage of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming).

Well, to disprove that statement of the member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine I need only quote from the Northern Miner of February 19, 1959:

(Text):

The continuation of big deficits at Ottawa, knocking bond values down to a level that creates interest rates that stifle new capital-raising; the tax pinch on provinces and municipalities forcing them to curtail improvements; a high-cost economy that scares away foreign capital that has had so much to do with Canada's recent boom; constantly recurring big gobs of unemployment requiring expensive relief; all these are plain signs that the Canadian people should stop, look and investigate.

That goes for the government too. The government should stop, look and investigate.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when we criticize the government, government members either laugh or shower us with insults, or say to us: "What would you do in our place" Or again, "it is the fault of the former government".

Well, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to an editorial which appeared in Maclean's on 28 February 1959, and I quote:

(Text):

It seems fair to suggest that the time has now come for getting on with the job, instead of proving all over again that the Grits are to blame for whatever ails us.

(Translation):

And, in conclusion, the writer said this:

(Text):

Conservatives will get the credit for the good things that happen to Canada in the next four years. They will have to take the blame for the bad things.

(Translation):

So, Mr. Speaker, I need not tell you that the picture is pretty dark in Canada at this time. People are realizing that things are bad, and the blame rests on this government, and this government alone. If things are had in Canada, it is, as I said before, because of poor administration. The opposition does not have to run this country; this is a responsibility of the government. And if Canada is in a bad way right now, the government is to blame. When I say that things are bad in Canada, I am not stating my own opinion, nor that of the opposition, but the opinion of the people of Canada, as reflected in every newspaper across the country.

Here is what we find in Le Droit of April 8, 1959:

Biggest deficit ever—Living standard down.

This from the Gazette of April 10, 1957:

(Text):

Income, Sales Taxes Up; Also Liquor, Cigarettes.

(Translation):

There was another interesting article in Le Droit of April 2, 1959:

Mr. Fleming's headache.

In La Presse of Wednesday, April 8, 1959, another article appeared under the headline:

$617,000,000 deficit.

And here are other headlines which appeared in the April 8, 1959 edition of La Presse:

Increased public debt
Lower purchasing power in 1959
Debt $685 per capita
Defence Fund exhausted
Deficit of Old Age Security Fund

Decreased Unemployment Insurance Fund Consumer pays the bill.

And, finally, I have here another article which appeared in Le Droit of April 15, 1959:

CNR deficit largest since the depression.

This in an editorial of La Presse on Thursday, April 9, 1959:

Situation far from bright.

Finally, from an article in Le Devoir for April 10, 1959. This is striking, for it is headed:

All taxes up.

And just under the heading, there is a picture of a smiling minister of finance who seems to be grinning at the nice trick he pulled on the people of Canada.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, some of the headlines that appeared in the press across the country. They clearly show that the situation in Canada is bad. And yet, at the same time, during the same month, the British government managed to reduce taxes while budgeting for a surplus. La Presse for April 8, published a news report from London, stating that:

Mr. Amory (Chancellor of the Exchequer) estimates that the reductions (of taxes) will cost the government $826 million for the current year and that without those reductions the budget would have shown a surplus of $1,111,600,000. But despite those reductions, Mr. Amory forecasts a surplus of $285,600,000.

This government, through its leader the present Prime Minister, always a great admirer of anything British or coming from the Commonwealth, should have come to some understanding with the ministers when he was drawing up this year's budget. He should have followed the pattern set by England for the management of the people's money and, instead of a deficit budget involving tax increases, he should have announced a surplus budget with no increase in taxes.

This year's budget, Mr. Speaker, is an anti-family budget. In support of this statement, let me quote from an article in Le Devoir of Saturday April 11, 1959, under the by-line of Paul Sauriol:

—our income tax does not make sufficient allowance for essential family expenditures.

The budget submitted last week by the Minister of Finance weighs especially upon small Canadian families. The Conservative party which has always been the party of big business, was again unmindful in its budget this year of those who toil or suffer.

Last night, in his speech, the hon. member for the Magdalen Islands (Mr. Keays) gave a striking illustration of the Conservative approach when he recalled how the Prime Minister last year in Winnipeg had urged workers and especially the National Labour Council not to press for higher wages. The member for the Magdalen Islands said last night that higher wages would hurt corporate profits and that it was important to make sure in the first place that corporations operate at a profit before workers' wages are allowed to go up.

Mr. Speaker, after hearing those words of the member for the Magdalen Islands, I wondered about his background. I looked up the current edition of the Parliamentary Guide and I realized why the hon. member had spoken in that vein.

According to the Parliamentary Guide the hon. member styles himself an "Industrialist". Furthermore, he is the president of Gaspe Equipment & Transport Limited; president of the South Bay Lumber Limited; president of the Gaspe Shipbuilding Limited; and vice-president of the Peninsula Construction Company Limited. Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is the stand which has always been taken by the Conservative party, protect big business and forget about the workers and the small Canadian families.

As for the Liberal party, when it held power and managed the public funds, it always tried to protect the average Canadian, the worker, the ordinary people, the small wage earner. The Liberal party, through its social legislation which benefits everyone in Canada, enacted legislation such as the Family Allowances Act, the Disabled Persons Act, the Old Age Pension Act, and all the other welfare legislation which is part of the Canadian pattern.

This year's budget, Mr. Speaker, bears down economically and financially on the workers and, strangely, but unfortunately, reminds us of the hardships of the years 1930-35. The budget presented to us last week by the Minister of Finance makes no mention, Mr. Speaker, of a matter of interest to all people of Canada, namely dominion-provincial relations.

And yet during the recent election campaigns, the present Prime Minister had promised to settle once and for all every tax matter having to do with the allocation of taxes between the different governments. To this effect, may I be allowed to quote certain formal statements made by the present Prime Minister. In Toronto, on April 25, 1957, the Prime Minister stated:

(Text):

We intend to form a government to immediately convene a dominion-provincial conference to bring about a settlement of these problems not in the spirit of arrogant domination as displayed by the present government, but in the spirit of unity and amity and with mutual tolerance and respect.

(Translation):

I have here a report of the newspaper Le Soleil, dated April 30, 1957, dealing with a statement made in Charlottetown by the Prime Minister on April 29, 1957, and I quote:

During a speech in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island's capital, Mr. Diefenbaker promised that, if he should be entrusted with federal authority, he would immediately call a conference for the redistribution of fields of taxation.

Maybe that was another fleeting vision of the Prime Minister's. The present government is nothing but a government by postponement. The government has not achieved anything in the field of federal-provincial relations. It does not wish to solve that problem for fear of having to face it. Tax relations between the provinces and the central government are the best proof of this government being a government by postponement. During the 1957 pre-electoral campaign the present Prime Minister promised, if he was called upon to lead parliament, to convene a federal-provincial conference as early as September 1957. The leader of the Conservative party became Prime Minister, but he has called no such conference; he found excuses for not convening it in September. The conference took place in November 1957, in the shape of a preliminary conference to another conference which he had promised for 1958.

Everybody knows that this conference was never called.

And now, Mr. Speaker, there is talk of calling a conference of provincial treasurers, not for the purpose of settling fiscal problems but to draft a research plan which could be put into effect by a committee of officials.

Yet in 1957, the premiers of the provinces had made concrete suggestions. Why should the provincial premiers meet in Ottawa, if it is to set up a committee of officials to study those problems? In my opinion, the establishment of such a commission is useless.

As I said a moment ago, the provinces, Ontario and Manitoba particularly, made concrete suggestions during the 1957 federal-provincial conference. I feel that the federal government has had plenty of time to study those proposals, and that it should now make its intentions known to parliament, to the provinces and to the Canadian people at large.

The provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, together with the other provinces with the possible exception of Quebec, suggested to the federal government the 15-15-50 formula, which provided a deduction of 15 per cent from the individual income tax collected by the provinces, of 15 per cent from the corporation income tax also collected by the provinces, and 50 per cent from the succession duties levied by the provinces.

Why does this government persist in its refusal to tell us that it is ready to accept that formula? As I said just now, there is hardly any need for a survey by officials to determine whether the federal government has the financial means to accept provincial requests and to carry out their suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, I think and I am even firmly convinced, that federalism is the only possible system in Canada. Federalism should comprise several states. We now have in this country, under our federal system, eleven states, with ten provincial governments and a central government, which means that several of those states could make some compromise, as there is a distribution of legislative power and of fiscal power.

If the federal system is essential to the Canadian nation, it has also some drawbacks which must be accepted, including some necessary compromise arrangements in the taxation field, and those arrangements should be periodically adjusted to meet economic changes in this country.

In 1955, the Liberal government and the provinces jointly found a formula which, at that time, was the best and most likely to rally all parties. I admit that the formula might be improved in the light of new needs that are now felt. In order to do this, a federal-provincial conference should be called as soon as possible in order to settle the significant matter of federal-provincial relations.

Should a federal-provincial conference be held, another matter could be dealt with, in my opinion, and it is that of indirect taxation.

As you know, under the constitution, only the federal government has a right to levy indirect taxes. And, as Mr. Duplessis, premier of Quebec, would say the provinces, all over the country, I believe, have encroached to some extent upon the field of indirect taxation. To levy indirect taxes the provinces have entrusted to the retailers, in many cases, the function of levying taxes on behalf of the provincial government. In my opinion, this is only an expedient, and the whole field of indirect taxation should be open to the provinces.

If the provinces used that method of taxation, sincerely and honestly, they could benefit from several advantages, of which the most important would be, in my opinion, the decentralization of indirect taxation, without creating any geographic inequality.

Furthermore, the revenue accruing from indirect taxation does not depend so much on the industrial picture as do corporate taxes and succession duties.

The revenue from indirect taxation is more stable and, finally, the cost of its levying is lower than that of direct taxation.

At the federal-provincial conference on reconstruction, in 1945-1946, the federal government proposed to the provinces to open to them the field of indirect taxation.

At the 1950 conference, the provinces made the same suggestion, except, of course, the province of Quebec, who was opposed to it.

After the 1950 conference, the federal government circulated to the various provincial governments a proposed amendment to the constitution, which would have allowed the provinces to levy indirect taxes. However, in the face of Quebec's continued objection, the proposals were dropped. The time has come, it seems to me, for the federal government to call a federal-provincial conference, in order to find out if the province of Quebec's attitude has changed since then in that respect. However, I can see that, in the light of past experience, the federal government may well wonder whether the province of Quebec is really willing to make suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, when the member for Sherbrooke spoke in this house last Monday, he closed his remarks on education by expressing the wish that the province of Quebec take the trouble to offer definite, appropriate and constructive suggestions and proposals to the federal government. I would have liked him to enlarge upon his conclusions and to add that he wished the government of the province of Quebec would make definite and constructive suggestions and proposals to the central government in the matter of taxation.

After reading the proceedings of the federal-provincial conferences which have taken place in Ottawa, it is difficult, I know, to expect that the premier of Quebec will offer anything else but beautiful sentences. He will probably never submit definite proposals.

Mr. Duplessis' speech to the December 1950 conference, may be summarized by the paragraph appearing on page 27 of the proceedings. I quote:

(Text):

Co-operation is not centralization; co-operation is not assimilation; co-operation is not bureaucracy; co-operation is the friendly and mutual collaboration of two fellow Canadians working loyally hand in hand respecting fully the rights of each other, so as to safeguard and stabilize the future of Canada by rendering full justice to each and every one.

(Translation):

Such is the purport of the speeches made by the premier of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Rouleau: The hon. member had better wait till I am through with my remarks. I will answer him later.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member gives us such a good imitation of the premier of the province of Quebec, may I ask him to also do a take-off on the then prime minister of Canada.

Mr. Rouleau: I'll do that later.

Then, if we refer to the 1955 and 1957 conferences, and take the trouble of reading the speeches that were made on both occasions by the premier of the province of Quebec, we see that in 1957, he repeated exactly word for word, the speech he had made in 1955.

Mr. Johnson: It proves that he does not change his mind.

Mr. Rouleau: A study of these two speeches does not show, Mr. Speaker, any positive proposal submitted to the federal government towards a solution to the problem of the centralization of tax fields.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville would like to hear a sample of the speech made by his provincial leader—

Mr. Johnson: No. But he has always said the same thing.

Mr. Rouleau: —I will give him a few examples where he will recognize the premier of the province of Quebec. When Mr. Duplessis came to Ottawa in 1955 and 1957, he referred to an illustrious fellow Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier; he talked about the highlights of history and its ancestral traditions and about fundamental truths. He also dealt with inalienable and unalienated rights and talked about good judgment and good sense—incidentally the Minister of Finance should have been there to listen to what the premier of the province of Quebec said—and he also talked about moderation in the matter of taxation.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec premier made no concrete proposal to the government. And when he goes back to the province of Quebec after attending conferences here in Ottawa, the premier travels throughout the province to make tub-thumping speeches raising a hue and cry against the Ottawa government. But that did not prevent the premier from always accepting federal grants in substantial amounts. The Quebec premier wants the direct taxation field to himself. The province of Quebec has the same rights it always had. It never lost anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him that his time has expired.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Dollard (Mr. Rouleau) allow me to ask him a question?

May I ask him if Mr. Maurice Lamontagne prepared his speech?

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, rumours are going around here in the lobbies to the effect that the "chatterbox" from Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm has 27 or 28 speeches already prepared. I do not know who prepared them for him but as far as I am concerned, ever since I came to parliament and I entered politics, I have always managed to prepare my own speeches.

Mr. Pigeon: I myself am at work when I am supposed to sleep.

Mr. Tremblay: You will tell Mr. Lamontagne that his style is very poor anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! I would ask the hon. members sitting on this side of the house to be a little bit less demonstrative.

(Text):

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on rising to take part in this debate, I see it is now almost one o'clock. May I call it one o'clock?

(Translation):

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Speaker, I was not through with my remarks. When you rose, I understood that it was one o'clock and I resumed my seat. I would like to continue my remarks at two thirty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must point out to the hon. member for Dollard that the reason I got up was that he had already spoken for forty minutes, indeed, 42 minutes.

(Text):

Is it the pleasure of the house that I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

It being one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this time to make my contribution to the budget debate I should like first of all to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the excellent manner in which he presented the budget to the House of Commons. The manner in which it was presented shows that he devoted much study and hard work to it and no doubt he consulted and sought the advice of experts in every phase of the economy before arriving at his final decision.

The opposition have been taking the same approach as last year, clouding and casting smoke screens over all the issues. They take delight in citing past statements of the Minister of Finance and other hon. members of the government. I should like to remind hon. members of the opposition that some of the statements made by them last year in the budget debate make funny reading today.

I do not profess to be an expert on matters of finance but I believe I have the average good sense and show the same responsibility of duty as the average Canadian. The average Canadian has accepted this budget. Last year the Minister of Finance predicted an increase of 2 per cent in our national production. Opposition members made fun of this and said that he was being highly optimistic. They also tried to make fun of the large deficit forecast a year ago. After listening to them for many days one got the impression they were secretly hoping conditions would get worse and not better. I honestly think they were disappointed when the white paper was presented to the house on April 8 showing that our total national production has increased by 2½ per cent and that the deficit was considerably less than forecast. Even though this did not please the opposition I am sure it pleased the people of Canada.

In my opinion the Minister of Finance and the government deserve much credit for checking the two evils they inherited from the former government, unemployment and inflation. The opposition have now embarked on the same line of criticism they adopted last year and one again gets the impression that they hope things will worsen and not improve. The people of Canada have every reason to have confidence in the predictions of the Minister of Finance for the coming year. All they have to do is take as a guide the predictions of a year ago in which he forecast conditions so accurately.

This year the minister has forecast an increase of 7 per cent in our national production and a budget deficit of $393 million. I am confident that at the end of the year both these figures will be bettered; that is to say, the gross national product will be more than 7 per cent higher and the deficit will be less than estimated. In some press reports this has been termed a recovery budget. I believe the words of the minister as reported at page 2425 of Hansard of April 9, are worthy of repetition. During the course of his budget speech the minister said:

> Just as last year's budget was designed to meet 1958 economic conditions and needs, so this year's budget is designed to meet the changed conditions and needs of 1959. In a period when economic conditions are undergoing rapid change, our approach to our fiscal problems must be flexible and adaptable.
> This budget has been designed to foster and promote recovery. Our aim is to maintain a sustainable rate of growth in terms of employment, development of resources and a sound dollar, so that Canadians everywhere may find full expression for their enterprise, industry and aspirations as free men and women.
> Canada has no reason for fear. Blessed as she has been by a benign Providence above all other lands, she can face her shining future with utmost confidence.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I am not happy about increases in taxes and I am sure that none of our people are. In this we no doubt agree wholeheartedly. However, my hon. friends to my right are not altogether correct or fair in their criticism when they say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and other members of the government had promised tax cuts and increased social services. Members of the government did promise tax cuts in the campaign prior to the June 10 election and they did fulfil those promises when they introduced the baby budget of 1957 which lowered taxes and increased social services. They definitely kept faith with the people of Canada. However, when they assumed office they did not fully realize how bad the situation was, nor did they have all the facts. When they took office they became aware of conditions in the country brought about by the policies of the former government and became aware of the extent to which unemployment and inflation prevailed. The last budget brought in by the former government helped to aggravate both these conditions.

Last year's deficit budget represented a remedial step to help check both the evils mentioned and the actions of this government have helped to bring about a steady recovery.

My friend the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Keays) in his remarks quoted a statement made by Mr. A. C. Ashford, president of the Canadian chamber of commerce, which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, and I wish now to make reference to a statement by Mr. Ashford reported in the Winnipeg Tribune of April 10. I am a member of a small chamber of commerce and through my association with the Canadian chamber of commerce I have found them to be sound in their judgment on most matters. The article reads as follows:

> A. C. Ashford, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, told the Tribune today a more balanced budget means general business improvement but that high taxation can be harmful on a long term basis for a young developing country like Canada. He said, "I believe a balanced budget, or close to one, would improve the bond market and general business. I personally was not surprised at the increase in income taxes to meet the current situation. However, I do feel that income taxes are too high on a long term basis for a young developing country like Canada.
> We cannot expect the government to lower taxes if we, the public, are constantly asking them to do more and more for us. Every penny the government spends has to come out of the pocket of the taxpayers. There is no other source. I am pleased to see the Minister of Finance is optimistic about the volume of this year's business."

Mr. Ashford, incidentally, is also president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank. The Ottawa Citizen on April 13, under the heading, "Budget Hikes Necessary, Realtor Says", carried another interesting article which reads as follows:

> Donald H. Koyl of Saskatoon, president of the Canadian association of real estate boards, says recent tax increases announced in the federal budget were necessary.
> Mr. Koyl, here to attend the B.C. association of real estate boards convention, said the budget was not inflationary. It was foolish for a government to do heavy deficit financing when it could be avoided and an increase in taxes was not inflationary.

Mr. Koyl then went on to say that the real estate business in Canada is in a very sound condition.

This budget was designed to bring about a further recovery. No matter how much we dislike higher taxes they are necessary to meet higher national bills and to keep our dollar sound. Over half the increase in taxes goes toward the old age security fund to put it on a sound basis for the first time. Since the fund was set up and a formula adopted it has always operated in the red. I am sure that every Canadian is glad to see this fund put on a sound basis. I am sure that no one would want to see the old age pension decreased.

I personally believe that many of our senior citizens are having difficulties in getting by on the present pension. I do feel that we should give serious consideration to increasing the pension for needy pensioners as well as to lowering the age limit. In my home town of Gimli, Manitoba we have the Betel old folks' home, one of the finest establishments of this nature in Canada. Any community contemplating building a senior citizen's home, no doubt could get valuable information from the board of directors of this institution.

No doubt what annoys the members of the opposition is that the public have accepted this budget and have accepted the tax increases as necessary. They realize that they are getting far greater social service benefits than ever before and that these things have to be paid for. No one wants smaller old age pensions, smaller family allowances, smaller pensions for the blind, smaller veterans' pensions and so on. Mr. Speaker, if the public were asked to vote on these services I am sure it would vote overwhelmingly in favour of maintaining them. Furthermore, the hospital plan has come into operation since this government took office and this creates a large expenditure of money. This is another matter that the people approve of.

Another large item of expense is for national defence, and I have not heard the opposition suggest that this is not necessary. With present world conditions and the cold war, this expenditure appears absolutely necessary. It is also spread throughout the country and does help the economy of the country. In Gimli we have an R.C.A.F. station, and its location there has given considerable employment to people living in the vicinity. I am sure that the people in that area want to see that air force station remain there in operation indefinitely.

Last year in my maiden speech I gave a brief outline of the boundaries of my constituency and also a brief description of the people and their occupations. When you look at the map of Canada you can see that Manitoba is the centre of Canada and is known as the keystone province. The centre of Manitoba is the interlake area which comprises the constituency of Selkirk. The boundaries of the Selkirk constituency follow the east shore of lake Winnipeg and the west shore of lake Manitoba and includes all the land between those lakes, and includes both lake Winnipeg and lake Manitoba.

Most of the people of my constituency are primary producers. They are engaged either in farming or fishing. Generally, people who are primary producers are proud and independent. This is true of all the people in my constituency. They greatly value their freedom and the opportunities of earning a livelihood through their own efforts. They are not the type that expect handouts from the government. These people have worked hard, and it is throughout all this area that we have the real, genuine family farms. The interlake area is sometimes referred to as the breadbasket of Manitoba. There have been times when these people have met with hardships through drought and flooding. When people are faced with such conditions through no fault of their own the government should assist.

This government since coming into office has introduced legislation and has an agricultural program tailored to meet the needs of the farmers. Since taking office this government has introduced the stabilization act, paid cash advances on grain, made acreage payments and amended the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to the point where it is now much more practical and much more acceptable to the farmers.

This year in the throne speech the government indicated that it will be bringing in legislation dealing with crop insurance and farm credit. Legislation regarding farm credit will be of real benefit to the farmers. I think all of this legislation has been asked for by farm organizations, and all of it is aimed at improving the conditions of those engaged in agriculture. I feel confident that this government will continue to study the problems of agriculture and when necessary bring in legislation accordingly.

The fishermen in my constituency have also had good years and bad years. Some years the fish just do not seem to be there. Nobody knows the reason why. Recently in my province the fishermen formed the Manitoba federation of fishermen, and they have already met with the government of that province to discuss the industry. There is real need for some form of credit system for fishermen. At present the only credit available is from the fish companies, and I am sure they would be glad to get out of this financing. There is need for more research and also a need for better advertising, and an education program on the cooking and the preparation of fish. There is no problem in selling certain fish and it brings a high price on the export market. Pickerel, white fish, sauger, perch and goldeye are among these. It is for what we call the rough fish that such a publicity and educational campaign is required.

I have mentioned briefly some of the problems of the farmer and the fisherman. I also wish to point out that the increase in income tax and corporation tax affects very few people in my constituency.

I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that Manitoba is the centre of the nation and the Selkirk constituency is the centre of Manitoba. It is like the core of the nation. Take the core of an apple; when the core is healthy the rest of the apple is also generally healthy. Manitoba is the core of the nation and that core is in excellent condition; therefore the rest of the nation is also healthy.

Manitoba is blessed with having an excellent government. Mr. Roblin and his colleagues are giving the province real progressive legislation, and I am sure the people of Manitoba will show their appreciation of this at the polls on May 14.

Recently, a report released by the retail merchants' association in Manitoba showed a large increase in retail sales. This shows conditions in the country to be the direct opposite of what opposition members are preaching.

The government of the province of Manitoba tackles the problems before them and does something about them. The education bill is an example, and I could give the house many more. The attitude of the previous government was, "we will wait and see".

I am pleased to see that the grants to the provinces are higher than at any time before and almost double those of three years ago. With the grants to the provinces larger, they in turn can make larger grants to the municipalities, which have a very limited income through the real estate tax. The services that municipalities are being called on today to supply cannot be financed through the real estate tax, and their only other source of income is government grants.

This morning the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) outlined very well that the budgets of all forms of government, municipal, provincial, et cetera have greatly increased during the past years, and the services being rendered have increased many times over what they were 50 years ago.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten), as reported at page 2773 of Hansard, last night referred to the meeting that the Prime Minister held in Selkirk. He said:

> The Prime Minister went on to speak in Selkirk, Manitoba, on March 7,—

That is an error; it should be March 17.

> —1958, as reported in the Toronto Telegram of March 18. After claiming that the government had eased the tight money situation, he went on to say:
> "This has been done by releasing $300 million for new housing, launching a vast public works program and by reducing taxes."
> Incidentally, I wonder where that public works program went to.

Of course, he must admit that the housing program has been a huge success and that we built more houses last year than at any time before. When I went home at Easter I was amazed to see the number of new houses being put up in the town of Selkirk during the past winter and being constructed at the present time.

As far as the public works program is concerned, I am also aware of some of that work being done, as this government has been participating in the cost of roads being built along the west shore of lake Winnipeg on a 50-50 basis with the provinces. They have also just recently given out contracts for three extensions to wharves in my constituency. I can assure you that this public works program is going on, and I can refer also to several public buildings for which contracts have been awarded or which tenders for construction are being called for.

Before I conclude my remarks there are a few things that I want to mention briefly that are of real importance to the people of my constituency. One thing that is badly needed is improved television. I am continually getting complaints, petitions and so forth from the people of the interlake area requesting television facilities. If the C.B.C. is not prepared to give these facilities, then serious consideration should be given to granting a licence to a private station that would be willing to render this service.

Another thing that is of importance to my riding is northern development. Roads and communication are of real importance to such development. The development of our natural resources is very important, and to accomplish this one has to build railroads, highways and communication systems into these areas. In the Arthur D. Little report on the economy of Manitoba it is proposed that a railroad be constructed from Gypsumville to Grand Rapids and to Wekusko on the Hudson Bay railway. This would shorten the distance from southern Manitoba to Churchill by quite a bit. This report also points out that Grand Rapids is a logical point for a power development project on the Saskatchewan river, and if power were developed a pulp and paper mill would be built. These are sound projects and serious consideration should be given to carrying them out.

I was extremely interested in the report of the lakes Winnipeg and Manitoba board which was presented to this government last June. The board was established jointly by the federal and provincial governments. Following this report the province had the benefit of a cost analysis made of the proposed lake Manitoba regulation. The findings of this study are contained in a report entitled "Benefit-Cost Analysis, Lake Manitoba Regulations, September, 1958". This report shows that regulation of lake Manitoba is economically feasible. I appreciate the action taken by the provincial government, and this is a project worthy of support by this government. Controlling the level of this lake will not only benefit those engaged in agriculture, but it will, I am sure, have a beneficial effect on fishing and hunting. It will also provide much better beaches.

Before I resume my seat I did want to make a further mention of northern development program. Last fall I was very much interested in hearing a lecture given in Winnipeg by the Arctic explorer Vilhjalmur Stefansson. I cannot claim to be related in any way to him. However, he was born at Arnes, which is in the Selkirk constituency. He spent many years in the Arctic. In fact, he wrote a book back in 1922, "The Northward Course of Empire." I am just paraphrasing some of the things he said in this lecture. I think it was his third Arctic expedition which was financed by the United States government. They gave him $50,000. Then, he found himself running out of money. He knew the head of some university in Ontario as well as the president of some bank, and between them they got him an appointment with the prime minister of the day, who at that time was Borden. Stefansson talked with Mr. Borden and suggested that he would like to get $25,000 from the Canadian government because any land he might discover would be north of Canada. The next day he met with Mr. Borden who had met with his cabinet and Borden told him that he was sorry but they had turned down the offer. However, Mr. Borden said, "I will tell you what we will do; we will take over the expedition." They paid back the $50,000 to the United States and Canada took over the expedition.

During the course of this expedition he discovered five large islands in the Arctic. He named all those islands after Conservative cabinet ministers. There is Brock, Lockheed, Borden and I forget some of the others. Then, he said the Liberals came into power and they referred to this as a Conservative archipelago. Then, he referred to what he thought was a sort of mean trick. Several years later when they flew over this largest island which he had named Borden it was found that what he had thought was a large bay was actually a strait, so there were two islands. Now, the Liberals were in power and they named the larger island Mackenzie King island. You can check this on the map. It was very interesting for me to hear this. He said, referring to the book "The Northward Course of Empire", that it had finally caught on when Diefenbaker was elected; they had seen the vision of development in the north, and I am sure this development will continue steadily.

In concluding, I should like to point out that Canada is well on the road to recovery and can look forward to a steady expansion in economic activity, employment and income. The policies being pursued by the present government assure the people of Canada a bright future.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, since this debate occurs at a time so close to the tenth anniversary of confederation with Newfoundland one would normally use this occasion to say something about the impact which confederation has had on the tenth province. However, recent events have rendered that inadvisable, so I shall restrict my remarks to registering the keen disappointment and the utter disillusionment of the people of my province at the treatment which they have received from this government. I shall reserve further remarks until the appropriate legislation comes before this house.

Yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) dwelt at considerable length on the subject of democracy and particularly democracy as it is practised by corporations and by labour unions. Today I should like to add a few words of my own on this subject. Despite the successes which the Russians have had in perverting the meaning of words there is still only one kind of democracy, and that democracy is founded on the bedrock of the importance of the individual and the nature of the individual as a created being. The human personality has worth within himself as a human being and because of that he has certain God-given rights which should not be violated by the state, by any organization or by any other person.

Democracy also recognizes that among these fundamental rights there are priorities and the highest priority goes to the right to live. As Shylock said in "The Merchant of Venice", you take away my life when you take away from me the means to support that life. Democracy also distinguishes between God-given fundamental human rights of a human personality and the legal rights of an impersonal organization which are conferred upon it by man.

The hon. member for Port Arthur yesterday pointed his finger at corporations and observed that they were not very democratic in their actions. Then he went on to use that argument to justify the same kind of action on the part of unions; in other words, two wrongs make a right. Naturally this raised some questions in my mind, and to balance the arguments put on Hansard yesterday by the member for Port Arthur I should like to read excerpts from two articles which appeared recently in the Newfoundland press. The first article is taken from the Evening Telegram of St. John's, Newfoundland, for February 27, 1959. It is a press report from Grand Falls by Ian Macdonald. I quote:

> The Canadian Labour Congress took away the charter of the Grand Falls-Gander district labour council early today for their stand against the striking international woodworkers of America (C.L.C.). It was the first punitive action taken by the C.L.C. against any labour body as a result of the bitter and violence-spattered strike of 1,200 I.W.A. loggers against the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company.

I skip a portion because I do not want to take up too much of Hansard with this article and I come to another excerpt from the same article which gives the meat of the problem:

> Eight of the twelve unions represented at the special labour council meeting left en masse after Mr. Rhodes called on them to back the I.W.A. strike. The meeting was called to discuss the reinstatement of Sterling Thomas as council president. He was suspended as president of the 3,000-member council and as vice-president of the Newfoundland federation of labour by the Canadian Labour Congress for his opposition to I.W.A. "tactics" during the two-month strike of 1,200 loggers.
> A statement issued by Mr. Grimes on behalf of the eight dissenting unions said:
> "At a meeting tonight of the council with C.L.C. representatives C. W. Strong and Henry Rhodes the suspension of Sterling Thomas was discussed. After about one hour it was pointed out that the council had no alternative except to come out and file full support to the I.W.A. and notify the premier to this effect. On this statement, eight unions rose as a body and walked out of the labour council."

The second article is much shorter and comes from the St. John's Daily News of February 23, 1959. It contains a statement made by Mr. Thomas himself describing what led up to the action referred to in the article I have just read, and it reads as follows:

> Sterling Thomas, ousted president of the Grand Falls and Gander district trades and labour council, has accused the Canadian Labour Congress and the Newfoundland federation of labour of taking discriminatory action against him. . . . Mr. Thomas told the Daily News he can come to no other conclusion than that he has been discriminated against in view of the fact that other affiliates of the two bodies have expressed just as strong support for Premier Smallwood's stand and no action has been taken against them. He said, "They too are governed by the regulations of the federation and C.L.C.". Mr. Thomas said he was particularly surprised at Mr. Jodoin's action in the light of the work that he, (Mr. Thomas) has done in re-organizing and helping to firmly establish the Grand Falls-Gander council. He pointed out that over the past two years a lot of work had been done to get the council on its feet and to make it a strong member of the C.L.C. and the federation. His reward, he said, is to be thrown out without a hearing. He said, even more disturbing is the fact that even though there was a C.L.C. representative in Grand Falls he was never once approached about his stand. He was not given the opportunity to defend or explain his actions.

For the benefit of hon. members I should point out that Mr. Sterling Thomas is an officer of an international union of long standing and that he bears the highest repute in his community. The hon. member for Port Arthur is not in his seat at the moment but if he were I would naturally like to ask him if this was the kind of democracy to which he was referring yesterday.

I should like to take a few minutes now, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the budget. The purpose of any budget is to give a clear, concise picture of the state of the national health, describing what maladies may be present and what remedies are prescribed to cure them. The real test, therefore, of a budget is the clarity and accuracy with which it presents that picture. Since the budget concerns everyone it should be presented in such terms that the ordinary man in the street can understand its salient points.

The present budget follows that traditional pattern which has been established over the years and which is getting far too complicated to be understood by the man in the street. The pertinent facts are buried under masses of words, figures and graphs, buried so deeply that you have to use a pickaxe to dig them out. The present budget is perhaps a little wordier and more complicated than that of last year. The astronomical figures are beyond the ordinary man's comprehension and the very form of the budget tends to conceal important facts rather than expose them.

We can understand, of course, the human tendency to present unpleasant facts in as favourable a light as possible, particularly in a light favourable to the party in power. That is a human failing but it is one that carries with it certain disadvantages because the time has come when we must treat the Canadian taxpayer as a mature individual, one who is able to face unpleasant facts and one who has a great part to play in whatever remedies may be prescribed.

The most important fact of any budget is that there is only one pie. During elections we hear a great deal about pie in the sky. During the last two elections I think we had more pie of that kind than ever before in our history. We were told about savings of $500 million of waste and extravagance, of more spending, greater pensions, less taxes and of course a balanced budget. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) who has just taken his seat said, "Of course, everyone understands that these things have to be paid for". I challenge him or anybody to get on the floor and give one instance where anyone in the last two elections told the taxpayers they could have all these additional things but they had to be paid for.

An hon. Member: I accept the challenge.

Mr. Carter: Well, not very many have. There was certainly nothing said about paying the bill, according to the speeches of the Conservative party spokesmen during the last two elections. I have read most of the reports both during the elections and afterwards, but I do not recall very much stress being laid on the fact that you can have more pie but you have to pay for it.

That particular kind of pie is proving very indigestible at this moment. Every new speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) described a brand new millennium that was coming to pass, and a greater and greater vision was going to be revealed according to every speaker. But nothing was ever said about the cost. Certainly as far as the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) is concerned, I remember nothing being said about costs. But I can remember many occasions when the Prime Minister pointed his finger at the Liberals and said, "They said it could not be done, but give us a chance and we will show you." In the last election he said, "We did it."

An hon. Member: What did your leader do?

Mr. Carter: We never said it could not be done. What we said was it could not be done and balance the budget. This budget, of course, confirms exactly what we said. There is an old saying, "You can be sure your sins will find you out". and this budget really confirms this saying. At least, the budget admits that the piper has played, the people have danced to his tune, and now the piper has to be paid. Of course, I realize that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) implied the other day that these promises were not meant to be taken too seriously, but I do not think he advised anybody to that effect during the election. The fact is that people did take them seriously, and while one may think that the reason the people were hoodwinked was because they wanted to be hoodwinked, nevertheless they have now been forced to learn some very painful facts. The Canadian people have been told there is no pie in the sky after all. You cannot get something for nothing. Everything must be paid for soon or later; in this case it is going to be later. No matter how you carve it up there is still only one pie and only one taxpayer.

The man in the street is concerned, I think, first and foremost about that pie. What he wants particularly to know from the budget is how big is this pie? Is it getting bigger or smaller, and what is happening to his particular share? Well, the budget is not too helpful in that respect. The budget gives the size of the pie in figures which do not mean what they say, and can be very deceiving. I noticed that the hon. member for Selkirk was very deceived when he made reference to it, as also was the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) this morning. If you really want to find out what is happening to the pie—

An hon. Member: Whose figures are these?

Mr. Carter: These figures can be verified by the dominion bureau of statistics any time you wish. If we want to find out if the gross national product is getting bigger we have to convert it into terms of constant dollars. The dollars which my hon. friend from Selkirk referred to this afternoon, and the Minister of Fisheries this morning, were 1958 dollars. That is a very different kind of animal from the 1949 dollar. Also, the increase is made up of two parts, and only one part is due to the increase in volume, which is the important thing. The other part is the increase in prices, which is a very serious thing. If you convert it to 1949 dollars you get the true picture with regard to the increase in volume. In 1954 our gross national product in ordinary dollars was $24.871 billion; it was down 0.6 per cent. But when it was converted to 1949 dollars, the volume was down 3 per cent. That is, the volume of production went down and the reason the over-all change was only 0.6 per cent was that 2.6 per cent of that was made up by increased prices; in other words, by inflation.

An hon. Member: Are these your figures?

Mr. Carter: These figures were received from the bureau of statistics and can be obtained from the library. In 1955 the gross national product was $27.07 billion, up 9 per cent; but in constant dollars it was only $21.961 billion, up 8 per cent. That was the year when we did have stable prices and very little inflation. The increase in volume was 8 per cent out of a total of 9 per cent, showing only 1 per cent inflation. In 1956 it was $30.098 billion, up 11 per cent; in constant dollars it was $23.547 billion, up only 7 per cent; in other words, 4 per cent inflation. In 1957, and this is important, the figure was $31.406 billion, up 4 per cent apparently; but in constant dollars the figure was only $23.51 billion; in actual volume it was down 1 per cent. In 1958 it was $32.189 billion, apparently up 2½ per cent; in constant dollars, $23.704 billion, up only 0.8 per cent.

These figures which I have just quoted show in terms of constant dollars that there was very little change in gross national product in the years 1956, 1957 and 1958. In fact, there was hardly any change at all. If the population had remained unchanged the size of the individual share of the pie would have been unchanged too, but during those years our population increased. In 1954 it was 15.28 million; in 1955 it was 15.69 million, up 3 per cent; in 1956 it was 16.081 million, up 2 per cent; in 1957 it was 16.589 million, up 3 per cent; in 1958 it was 17.048 million, up 2 per cent. Thus, in the three years when our gross national product was stationary, the population was steadily increasing as an average rate of 2.5 per cent per year and the size of the individual piece of pie was becoming smaller.

If we think in terms of the labour force, we see that the labour force in 1954 was 5.493 millions; in 1955 it was 5.610 millions; in 1956, 5.782 millions; in 1957, 6.003 millions; and in 1958, 6.127 millions. The increase in the labour force is a little out of line with the change in population due, of course, to immigration, but if we look at the increase which took place in the labour force and take into consideration the fact that total production was practically unchanged, it is clear that each worker during the last three years has been producing considerably less than did an individual worker in 1955.

I have these figures in the form of two tables and it might be more convenient for the house if I were given consent to place them on record in Hansard in tabular form.

Mr. Speaker: Were the tables prepared by the hon. member or by the dominion bureau of statistics?

Mr. Carter: They are excerpts from the d.b.s. figures.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to have these two tables inserted in his speech at this point?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Carter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They are as follows:

Year	Pop. millions	% increase	average labour force millions	% increase
1954	15.287		5.493
1955	15.698	3%	5.610	2%
1956	16.081	2%	5.782	3%
1957	16.589	3%	6.003	4%
1958	17.048	2%	6.127	2%

Year	G.N.P. billions $ ordinary	% change	G.N.P. billions $ constant (49)	% vol. change	Inflation
1954	24.871	— .6%	20.186	—3 %	2.6%
1955	27.070	+9 %	21.961	+8 %	1 %
1956	30.098	+11 %	23.547	+7 %	4 %
1957	31.406	+4 %	23.510	—1 %	5 %
1958	32.189	+2.5%	23.704	+ .8%	1.7%

An hon. Member: How have the Liberals been increasing in the last few years?

Mr. Carter: You cannot digest the ones you have at this moment. You had good Liberal pie for 22 years but you did not appreciate it.

An hon. Member: It went rotten.

Mr. Carter: Well, the people now have a chance to taste the difference.

Next to the gross national product, the problems which most interest the man in the street concern the twin subjects of unemployment and inflation. The effect of inflation is illustrated by the figures which I mentioned a few moments ago. The gross national product last year amounted to $32.189 billions, but this had the value of only $23.704 billion when the value of the dollar is kept at a constant figure. In other words, it takes roughly $32 now to buy what could be bought in 1949 for $23.50. The Canadian dollar has lost one-third of its value in the past ten years.

An hon. Member: Did you say "few years"?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is where the inflation was, in the last two years.

Mr. Carter: Those who are in a position to do so can keep abreast of this dollar depreciation by demanding more dollars, but if they do so they make the situation even worse for those who are not in that position. Currency debasement is just as great a threat to national security as missiles are, and it is far more insidious. Obviously something needs to be done about this. Perhaps we should make a thorough inquiry into our whole monetary system, including the question of interest rates.

As far as unemployment is concerned, jobs depend mainly on two things, foreign trade and the provision of capital investment. New jobs depend on capital investment. I do not know what the actual figure is with respect to each job provided, but it is somewhere between $10,000 and $25,000. But capital investment in 1957 amounted to only $8.7 billion; in 1958 it was $8.4 billion; and in 1959, only $8.3 billion. In other words, capital investment this year is $400 million less than it was in 1957, and in 1957 our total production was 1 per cent less in volume than in 1956. How, in the face of this situation, can the minister expect a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product next year?

An hon. Member: You will find out.

Mr. Carter: Where is it coming from? I can tell the hon. member, whoever he was, that an article by Mr. E. J. DeSeau in the Financial Times dated April 11 inferred that if it takes place it must be due to inflation. If there is a better explanation we are ready to hear it, but nobody has explained it yet. The figures just do not add up to 7 per cent, or even to 4 per cent.

An hon. Member: They do not add up to a billion dollar deficit, anyway.

Mr. Carter: Well, they do add up to an $800 million deficit.

Mr. Speaker: Some of the members in this part of the house are feeling excluded.

Mr. O'Hurley: Look at the Speaker.

Mr. Carter: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was getting so much attention from that part of the house—but I certainly did not mean any disrespect to the Chair.

If we are to cure our unemployment problem it must be done by using the industrial capacity we have idle at the moment and by creating new jobs through capital investment. The figures which the minister has tabled do not indicate that nearly enough is being done in this direction, even without taking into account the natural increase in the labour force. In addition, also, we must take into consideration the effects of automation. We must remember that in the United States the pre-recession level of production was reached a short while ago but the number of workers employed was one million less than were employed prior to the recession, the difference being due to automation. We must realise that these forces are at work in Canada, and the only logical conclusion we can reach is that unemployment will continue to be a problem for some years yet.

The other point, of course, is trade. Twenty per cent of our jobs depend upon trade, and the international picture is not nearly as encouraging as the budget would seem to indicate. This is pointed out in an article in the Gazette of March 31. Referring to what it calls special items, this article says:

> The maintenance of exports would have been more encouraging were it not for the influence of "special items" in which uranium shipments were foremost.
> These were worth $277 million last year, compared to $128 million in 1957 and $46 million in 1956. The export of aircraft and parts, and cattle and meat, at $109 million and $153 million respectively, were double the 1957 figure.
> When these "special items" are subtracted from the export total, a more realistic assessment of the impact of recession on the export trade is available. At $3,758 million, exports of mineral products, wood and paper products, other agriculture and fish products, and manufactured goods are $380 million less than in 1957.

This is an extract from an article written by John Meyer, financial editor of the Gazette which appeared in the March 31, issue.

The commonwealth trade and commerce conference about which we heard so much also has not turned out to be the success we were lead to believe it was, at least not in the eyes of the Tory counterparts in the United Kingdom parliament. I wish to read now from a statement made by Sir Albert Braithwaite as reported at page 1112 of the British Hansard of December 2, 1958:

> First of all, I should like to pay tribute to the chancellor of the Exchequer and the president of the board of trade for the brilliance which they displayed in leading our own delegation to the Montreal Conference. Reading between the lines, it seems to me that what they did there literally saved the conference from being almost a stalemate. They infused some life into it. At the same time I am not satisfied that the conference report is by any means a document upon which to rebuild and revitalize the British commonwealth of nations. Its implications are narrow. It is phlegmatic. It is not precise enough in its conclusions, and it gives no real, positive direction on how even those conclusions will be carried out.
> I wanted something much more vital to lead our commonwealth affairs than a lot of pious platitudes. Many people have said a great many things about how we should develop the commonwealth, but there has been a remarkable absence of action since the Montreal conference took place. The Canadian Prime Minister came over here and made great speeches on what should be done, but I have seen no real reflection in deeds implementing the words which he uttered.

Those words were not spoken by a Liberal or Socialist member of the British parliament but by a Conservative.

In the few moments left at my disposal I should like to deal briefly with the bond conversion. Last year the Minister of Finance came before us and told us about the problem of refinancing. He had, he said, $6.4 billion falling due in eight years which meant an average of $8 million worth of bonds falling due each year. That situation, he indicated, was likely to cause instability in the bond market during that period of time. His solution was to convert to long term bonds and spread the repayment over a longer period. That, of course, appeared to be a very sound idea. But what has actually happened? Less than half—45 per cent to be exact—of those original bonds were converted to long term bonds. Suppose we say half. The sum of $3.2 billion of original debt is still coming due within the seven year period. We must then add to that the $3.3 billion of new borrowing which has been made by this government since it came to power. I should like to emphasize that all of this borrowing is short term borrowing of less than three years. If we add half of the original amount, $3.2 billion, to the new borrowing of $3.3 billion—and I hope my hon. friend is checking on the mathematics at this point—we still have $6.5 billion falling due in the next eight years and so we still have the original problem with which we were faced.

If we have gained anything by that transaction I should like to have the Minister of Finance explain to us just what it is. On the other hand, we have paid a very high price for that experiment. We have to pay $340 million in extra interest on bonds maturing between 1960 and 1966. We have to add to that $31 million in premiums, bonuses, for advertising, etc. While we still have the original problem that existed before the conversion took place we also have increased our indebtedness by $345 million. I have much more to say but I think this perhaps would be a convenient time to stop.

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, since becoming a member of this honourable house it has not been my lot to swell the records with many words and I assure you that on this occasion I intend to continue my brevity. When I was very young I was advised that no man learns wisdom while talking and since I have been a member of this house—and I have been here some time now—I have often wondered if the same thing does not apply to listening.

I take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for the splendid budget he has presented. I do not propose to comment at length upon it, but I suggest it is one which should appeal to Canadians generally as a compromise to our economy and an incentive to all to participate in the great future which this country offers.

And now, since it is my privilege to represent the finest constituency in Canada, I should like to transgress a little on the time of the house to say a few things about my part of the country and the excellent people who live there. Geographically, the counties of Colchester and Hants are located in the centre of Nova Scotia, hinging on the town of Truro which is known as the hub of Nova Scotia. Our lands envelop the headwaters of the famous Cobequid bay and run north to a short frontage on the strait of Northumberland. It is unique that I am nearly surrounded by and border on the constituencies of seven of the other eleven members who represent Nova Scotia in this house. I assure you that it is very comforting to have such wonderful neighbours.

The good judgment of my people is well known provincially because at present we are represented in the legislature by four members on the government side. Of these, one is deputy speaker, another is our excellent minister of highways and a third is none less than the distinguished premier of Nova Scotia.

This constituency is steeped in history and the area bordering the Cobequid bay and the north shore still bear evidence of Acadian settlement as far back as the 17th century. Because we are blessed by fertile lands bordering our shores and in our many river valleys our economy is based chiefly on agriculture which is, in most cases, coupled closely with the harvest of wood products from our forests.

The world-renowned tides of the Cobequid bay at some points and in some cases rise to heights of over 60 feet above low water, and the action of these turbulent waters entering and receding from the rivers have over the years built up large areas of fertile marsh lands. It was part of these lands that the early settlers reclaimed and tilled to support themselves and their livestock. Today, thanks to the assistance rendered by the Maritime Marshland Reclamation Act, thousands of acres of marsh lands are being turned into crop and grazing areas. The people who own those lands are very grateful for this assistance, and I hope that this program will continue to the benefit of all areas.

Owing to the steepness of the watersheds on our rivers, occasional flooding is a menace to those who live in the lower valley areas. Erosion of valuable farmland is also much in evidence. This situation has been aggravated somewhat by the removal of timber from the slopes. Owing to the intensity of this erosion and the increased cost of labour and materials, the farmers are finding it most difficult to provide necessary protection. I fully realize that this is a widespread problem, and I am happy that a study is being made to ascertain whether some assistance is warranted. There are several inland areas inundated by shallow water at the present time which could be brought under cultivation by drainage. Perhaps the provisions of the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act could be extended to include projects of upland erosion and drainage.

I have already mentioned that the cutting of timber has upset water control, and although it is generally recognized that natural rehabilitation of forests is as fast here as anywhere else in Canada, recent surveys show that growth is not keeping pace with cutting. We have learned to assist nature in our field production and I believe it is high time that we applied more common sense to forest management. Even if we give a tree a good chance we must realize that it takes nearly a generation to produce.

Because our economy is so closely tied to the forest products industry, it is both desirable and necessary to continue limited production. Financial returns are continually diminishing and the recent increase in freight rates has dealt a very serious blow to our home markets. Mr. Speaker, I urge this administration to expedite, and quickly, a complete review of the freight rate structure, with the objective of equalization of advantage to all Canadians in all industries.

Our principal manufacturing is in the textile field located in the towns of Truro and Windsor. Good management and skilled craftsmen have combined here to produce, and even now we are expanding in the production of excellent quality goods which are famous from coast to coast. The quarrying and export of gypsum and barytes adds to the economy of a large area, as does the manufacture and export of pulp products in the western area.

Owing to our short coastline fishing is done only on a limited and seasonal scale. Because we are centrally situated transportation plays an important part in our general activity. Both railways and highway transport converge on Truro from all directions. Many hon. members of this house who were among the thousands of troops who proceeded overseas during the last war will recall Truro as the last train stop before reaching the point of embarkation. To those of you who can find time for a holiday I commend to you the excellent scenery of Cobequid, the valleys, streams and hills, and the beautiful and excellent bathing beaches of the north shore where the water temperature is most inviting. For the outdoor sportsman there are many inland waters and forests which will reward exploration during the mid-seasons.

I am proud to report that the general economy of my constituency has held fairly firm, and many indications point to a steady improvement. This speaks well for the people who are resourceful and believe in steady progress. Those people believe in keeping one foot on the ground and consolidating each step rather than getting up in the air and expecting someone else to come to their rescue.

Problems, Mr. Speaker! Certainly, we have problems. No one should ever expect to get through this world without adversity and each one is provided with a brain to apply, and not to think that we are in a Utopia where all our wants will be supplied on demand.

During 1957 and early 1958, most of the federal services located in my constituency were moved elsewhere. This has brought great hardship upon a certain segment of the population and I would urge the departments concerned to co-operate in filling the gaps.

Most of camp Debert, including excellent air terminal facilities, have been vacated. This vacant camp area is well underlaid with miles of water mains and sewer mains, which could be utilized by other industry. There are also plenty of sources of water supply, railway siding facilities, air landing facilities, hangars and other buildings in the area. It is located very close to Truro on the main Canadian National Railways line, and I would urge this government to locate some type of crown corporation there or, if they have no intention of using this vacant area, to consider turning it over to other interests which might utilize it for industrial uses. I personally believe, and I suggest, that it should be turned over to the crown corporation of Nova Scotia known as Industrial Estates Limited, which is at this time doing such a wonderful job in promoting some industries in the province of Nova Scotia. The establishment of light industry not only in Debert but in other parts of the constituency would serve as well to absorb those displaced because of these changes and current slumps such as the depressed forest products industry.

There is another matter which requires immediate attention. The town of Windsor is located on the shores of the Avon river. At the present time part of this town is endangered by erosion. This river is subject to terrific tides and erosion has been taking place progressively in the town. Actually now the highest tides flow into some sections of the town. There are and there have been over the years some public works established on the river at that point. I suggest that they have made some contribution to the erosion here. I strongly urge that the government take some responsibility in providing some protection of this shore, otherwise, part of this town is going to suffer because it is impossible for the townspeople to assume the whole cost of such an undertaking.

Better transportation is one of the great needs of the maritimes. I am very proud that our local department of highways is making considerable improvements throughout the province of Nova Scotia. At the present time they are paying particular attention to the main highway linking Truro and Halifax. This highway is one of the most widely travelled in the province of Nova Scotia, and I would suggest that the whole highway will require the same treatment which sections of it are getting now. I would strongly urge that the provisions of the Trans-Canada Highway Act be extended to include this highway in order to help with the cost of construction of a highway which is so badly needed to handle the projected increase in the volume of traffic during the months and years to come.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to leave with you an observation. The sudden increase in the birth rate after the beginning of world war II has had a considerable impact upon our educational facilities. The burden of providing these facilities has fallen upon the present adult population. The impact of this terrific force will hit the labour force over the next few years. We, the present adult population, have moulded this force; they are our investment. Their opportunity is the greatest on this earth. I say, then, to the pressure groups of this country and the members of this house, let us not mislead them but rather let us encourage them to stand on their own feet. What these young people are inheriting was not built on dependence upon others but upon the initiative and courage of the individual. Training and leadership are essential so that our youth may face their careers with confidence. However, morale is not born of over dependence on others. I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that without morale no battle can be won.

(Translation):

Mr. Samuel Boulanger (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, since the budget speech was delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), I have had the opportunity to meet many citizens from a few communities in the province of Quebec, and more particularly in my own riding. The majority of those people with whom I spoke were of Liberal allegiance, probably, because it is hardly possible by now to find any supporters of the Conservative government. Indeed right thinking people in general are waking up from the great illusion that had been held out to them two years ago and they do not hesitate to express their dissatisfaction and disapproval of the Minister of Finance's budget.

There are ridings which, today, are happy not to have trusted the Conservative party. Those are the ridings where Liberal representatives were elected. It is true that we are not many, but we may boast to have freedom of speech, and sincerity of mind.

Mr. Johnson: Thanks to the Conservatives.

Mr. Boulanger: If the Conservatives in the province of Quebec had the qualities I just quoted, they would not be afraid to say to the Canadian people, and more particularly the people in the province of Quebec, what they really think of the budget, as well as of the grants which have been doubled since the Conservative government is in power. I mean the grants to the provinces.

Some time ago an increase of $100 million was voted for the construction of highways in the province of Quebec. If Conservative members had been sincere, they would not have withdrawn behind the curtains but would have expressed their opinion here in this house. Their gesture was perhaps due to the attitude of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) who seems to have become the head of the Conservative members from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Tremblay: I am very much honoured!

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I want to deal with more particularly on this occasion, namely the building of a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Three Rivers.

The idea is not new. A road crossing the river at that spot was already considered to be necessary in 1950 and there was some discussion whether a tunnel or a bridge would be preferable.

A few years later, in 1953, a group of sympathetic and able businessmen set up an organization with the aim of investigating the possibility of carrying out that project.

After a survey was made in Halifax, where a bridge had just been built crossing the river to the city of Dartmouth, it was revealed that an undertaking of that type in Three Rivers would be possible and would be self-liquidating.

A research fund of $30,000 was subscribed by the people concerned so that the project could be studied thoroughly.

The services of the consulting engineer for the Halifax bridge were retained, and Mr. P. L. Pratley, of Montreal, was instructed to make an extensive study of the project. In September 1954, he stated that the building of a bridge at Three Rivers was decidedly possible, that it would be self-liquidating and, furthermore, that there was great need of it.

The most elementary study of the immediate traffic and subsequent possibilities, he added, points to the urgent need of a better means of communication than ferry-boats, not dependent upon weather conditions, seasons, winter ice, mechanical stallings and hazards of navigation.

After reading the Pratley report, the bridge committee felt reassured and hopeful. It decided to retain the services of a firm of consulting engineers from New York, Coverdale and Colpitts, founded by a Canadian, Mr. W.H. Coverdale, to make a more elaborate study of the possibilities of the traffic anticipated.

That second report, published in November 1955, filled the bridge committee with optimism and enthusiasm.

The report stated that, during its first year of operation—it was believed then it would be in 1960—the traffic between the two shores would increase by 45 per cent; in the second year, by 10 per cent; and then, that it would continue to increase at an average rate of 5 per cent a year. At the toll rate established at the time of the investigation, they said, the bridge would be self-liquidating.

The cost of such a project had been estimated, at the time the plans were being prepared, at $12½ million, which would have been financed through a 4½ per cent interest loan, repayable in 13 or 14 years.

But at the time the first plans were accepted by the federal and provincial authorities, the seaway project necessitated a change in plans, which resulted in an increase of the estimates to $20 million, which would have then to be financed at a 6 and 6½ per cent interest rate, in addition to higher cost of material, steel and labour.

Other studies were made on the self-paying possibilities of the project; it is still considered quite practicable. However, amortization would have to be on a period of 40 years, instead of 14, as was the case at the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, it has been established, beyond any doubt, by engineers and financiers, that the building of a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Three Rivers is a practicable and self-liquidating project in addition to being urgently required.

All the population of the Mauricie area and the eastern townships, all the manufacturers and farmers and everybody have been urging the construction of this bridge for many years.

I need hardly quote figures to prove this desire of almost half the population of the province of Quebec. The bridge would be located in the centre of the province and nobody, even those who would not benefit directly by it, would object to its construction since its cost would be financed not by taxes but by a private corporation.

In the course of certain debates of years past, here in this house and in political meetings, we have heard members who today are ministers make sensational statements in favour of the construction of that bridge.

The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Balcer) himself, at the beginning of the 1953-54 session, made a speech from which I quote at page 65 of Hansard: Here is what the then member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) who today is the Solicitor General said:

> At present, we are experiencing a lot of trouble with the ferry between Three Rivers and Ste. Angele. The system is so inadequate that one has to wait from three to four hours before being able to make the trip. And for this reason the national harbours board should improve the wharf at Three Rivers so that this city may become a modern port such as its geographical location would call for.
> We have to face a large number of problems, but the number one problem undoubtedly is the joining of the north and south shores, by means of a bridge between Three Rivers and Ste. Angele in the county of Nicolet. This would help not only the city of Three Rivers, but all the cities in the district which are hampered by the lack of communications between the two shores. As a matter of fact, the whole central part of the province suffers from this state of affairs. It finds itself, because of that fact, in a state of economic inferiority.

And later he added:

> That is why I ask the federal government to do its share, for it is a large-scale national undertaking.
> The federal government collects a large proportion of the taxes. At the present time, it collects 77 per cent of the taxes so that there remains very little for the provinces and municipalities. The latter are in a precarious position, for real estate in the small towns cannot be taxed any more than it is now. Consequently cities and municipalities hesitate before embarking upon large-scale projects.

It was that same minister who, in a speech he made at the Ste. Cecile school in Three Rivers—that was of course, during the 1957 election campaign—made the following statement, as reported in Le Nouvelliste of Three Rivers on May 31, 1957. I quote:

> The candidate added: "The matter of the bridge was raised during Mr. St. Laurent's visit. Mr. St. Laurent made the same reply as had been made in 1908 by Mr. Laurier when the matter of building of a canal across the isthmus of Chignecto was being considered". According to Mr. Balcer, Mr. St. Laurent has only to utter the words "national necessity", and this means a first class burial for the bridge across the St. Lawrence.
> Moreover, the federal government has insisted on two central spans for this bridge, which raises the cost by $7,000,000. Today, the promoters of the bridge have no way of raising this extra money. The federal government should pay the difference. At the same time, the people of all Canada will contribute to the St. Lawrence seaway, which will divert many ships from the port of Three Rivers. "The bridge will be a monument to the good sense of the people of Three Rivers", said Mr. Balcer. "No one should be allowed to play politics with such a matter".

True enough, Mr. Speaker, no one should play politics with this matter which is of interest to the people of between 15 and 20 constituencies, and it is time to prove it.

If the Solicitor General is true to his word, he will introduce a bill as soon as possible, thus giving effect to his high-sounding promises.

Think of the number of years the Solicitor General has been criticizing the Liberals, claiming they were opposed to the construction of this bridge.

Today, he is in a position of authority, in addition to having been pardoned for his disowning his leader at the 1956 convention.

Just what is it that is standing in the way of building the Three Rivers bridge?

Apparently, it is not Ottawa that is balking, because three federal cabinet ministers reportedly promised Ottawa's financial support to pay for the difference between the initial cost and the present cost, according to an item in Le Nouvelliste of March 4 last.

This report went on to say:

> However, such promises are unofficial. It has been recognized that provincial government approval is an essential requirement. That, at least, was the main outcrop of the last general meeting of the chamber of commerce, held last week.

That organization thought it appropriate to pursue the matter by having the chairman of its bridge committee call on the premier of Quebec last February to sound him out. Mr. Duplessis expressed approval of the bridge in principle, but added that present economic conditions did not justify construction of the bridge at the present time.

The chamber of commerce and the people concerned do not agree with that view, however; they have expressed the opinion that it is never time to spend millions, but that faith in the future is often justification for bold undertakings.

The studies and surveys made by the people concerned show that there is still an obstacle which stands in the way of the building of the Three Rivers bridge and only the premier of the province of Quebec can overcome it by a simple approval, which would be of no serious consequence, and by guaranteeing the first year's operational deficit, as was done in the case of the Halifax bridge. It is the responsibility of federal and provincial members to act jointly and to put pressure on the provincial authorities so that they give their approval. A suggestion was made in the Three Rivers chamber of commerce to the effect that provincial members of the legislative assembly from the 15 counties in the central area of Quebec would be asked to stake their seat on the proposed bridge that would span the river at Three Rivers.

This shows the determination of the promoters, of the chamber of commerce, of the Three Rivers city council and of the citizens who subscribed $30,000 for the use of the research committee.

When workers are desperately looking for jobs, this undertaking could not be more timely.

Unlike the premier of the province of Quebec, we submit the implementation of such a project I just told you about will improve the economic situation.

Mr. Johnson: Are you talking federal or provincial politics?

Mr. Dupuis: Don't answer, it is not worth it.

Mr. Boulanger: Besides supplying jobs to thousands of workers, the construction of such a bridge would promote the industrial development of communities on either shore.

It cannot be said that our industries in that area are not thriving, but our industry in general does not expand at the same rate as in centers better served by highway development.

I repeat with conviction and sincerity, along with the radio stations on both sides of the St. Lawrence: We need that bridge, we shall have it.

Mr. Roger Parizeau (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, before tackling my main theme, I would like to tell of the impression I have of this house after listening for a whole year to hon. members of the loyal opposition.

To my mind, the reason for which the people of Canada got rid of the Liberals, was that it realized, after several years, that it was made up only of practical jokers. We may wonder, Mr. Speaker, who is the greater clown, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) or the latest arrival in this house, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis).

This reminds me somewhat of some happenings during the last world war. You will surely recall them, Mr. Speaker. When there was intensive training in England, the famous Lord Haw! Haw! used to say: "The MacNaughton circus is on the run again". Well, I am saying: "The Pearson circus in on the run again. Yes, the Pearson circus is on the run again and it will be on the run for quite a while."

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the government through the distinguished Minister of Finance, for well-balanced budget he has just presented to the Canadian people. In times as difficult and complicated as these, legislation brought in by our government will help reduce unemployment and check inflation.

The people of Lake St. John asked me to thank the government for everything that has been done since it took over in this country, and more particularly for all that has been done in the building field. As a matter of fact, the sound action taken under the National Housing Act has helped a great number of workers in my riding, as anywhere else in Canada, to become homeowners.

I am speaking in full knowledge of the case because in 1956, only about 60 homes had been built at Alma, our county town, whereas that figure has gone up to 85 in 1957 and to a record high of 126 last year. The people of Lake St. John owe those magnificent results to the government, Mr. Speaker, as the necessary legislation was passed to facilitate loans to help our workers.

However, Mr. Speaker, economists and experts agree that while there has been considerable improvement in the National Housing Act, following legislation introduced by this government, more should be done radically to solve the housing crisis which, it must be said, is still critical throughout the country, but to a varying degree.

The problem of home ownership, is, as we have all learned, the crux of the social problem, as it constitutes the basis of this nation's prosperity. For the last few years, we have to face all sorts of concepts and theories, aimed at destroying and sapping the principles we have been taught. Those nefarious ideas have greater impact on people who are not attached by owners' rights, and that is why we must tackle the problem boldly and find adequate solutions. Among those which we feel are the most practicable and possible, there is one which should particularly draw the attention of our government, and that is that each citizen should be provided with a house of his own.

If we take a look at history, Mr. Speaker, we realize at once that revolutions in the old countries were organized and directed by people who did not enjoy the benefits of property rights. It was then a struggle between tenants or slaves against owners or lords. We have not yet reached that point, and I am far from believing that we could ever reach it. However, it is on account of a lack of foresight on the part of government leaders that peoples could rise and follow the lead of revolutionaries.

Mr. Speaker, our government has already shown great vision in adopting adequate social measures to stem the wave of unemployment which was spreading all over the country. Its housing policy has been of great help to our people, thus checking unemployment, but especially in the fight against subversive ideas, by providing easy means of obtaining money to those who wanted to become owners.

Property is the basic element in the development of the individual; it is basic to the existence and welfare of the family, and contributes to social peace. There will not be better defenders of our country than our own people, once they are owners. Our country should be a land of predilection, where the old saying would be truer than anywhere else: "To each his home, to each his little tract of land, and the country will be safe."

Those who thrive on overtly spreading liberal or socialist doctrines seek above all to attack private property. It is up to us therefore to defend it, if we want our ideas and principles to be listened to and followed by the people.

I am sure that we will succeed, if we keep on helping construction by voting still larger sums of money for house building in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you of an idea I put forward last year at the time of the debate on the speech from the throne, for the further improvement of that housing loan act. In fact, as recorded on page 649 of Hansard of May 29, 1958, I said that the interest rates should be lowered, in order to help Canadian workers, since they are unable to pay $75 or $80 a month for capital and interest charges.

I repeat the same suggestion this year, Mr. Speaker, asking again a lowering of the interest rates in favour of the borrower who is building a house through the C.M.H.C. The 6 per cent interest now being paid by the borrower is much too high, because its cost, over a period of 25 years, almost doubles the initial amount of the loan, which is hardly the purpose of the act.

Allow me to digress briefly at this point to say that the citizens of the Saguenay-Lake St. Jean area are seriously affected by the lay-off of employees of the Aluminum Company of Canada, a lay-off which has been brought on by the lack of markets and the cut-throat competition of iron curtain countries. The company intends to rehire these people as soon as possible. Meanwhile, however, they are unable to meet their obligations. I therefore urge the government to take whatever steps are needed to enable these people to renew their contract with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and to have the privilege of paying an extra $5 or $10 when they resume their work, instead of having to catch up on their rent payments in a single shot. I was therefore saying that a means must be found to reduce the interest rate, and this without altering the national budget, so as to enable more people with low incomes to become home owners, a privilege to which they are entitled just as anyone else.

If you look at the statistics, you will find that 163,000 houses were built in Canada last year. Had the interest rate been 3 per cent, for instance, rather than 6 per cent, it would have meant a saving of close to $5 million for the taxpayers who became property owners in the last year. At that rate, it adds up to the fabulous figure of $125 million over a period of 25 years, a saving that would enable many Canadians to become home owners.

I have no thought of dictating to the government, but as a suggestion, may I be allowed to outline a plan that might result in considerable improvement of the construction situation? I would suggest, as I indicated last year, reducing the interest rate by 3 per cent, and this without interfering with the national budget.

To this end, I would first suggest amending the Criminal Code to allow for setting up a national lottery such as exists in other countries. However, the entire proceeds from this national lottery, under government control, would be made available to the Central

Housing and Mortgage Corporation Fund as a means of reducing the interest rate. Such a measure would be of considerable benefit, because the government would have no outlay to face as a means of reducing the interest rate. It would only have to keep making regular annual payments as a help to construction.

It would be an innovation, Mr. Speaker, and may be a revolution in our way of life, but we must follow the march of progress. According to surveys made by responsible agencies, 95 per cent of the population would be in favour of a national lottery and those who would oppose all games of chance would only mildly object.

Should we not keep in Canada the millions of dollars that are going out of the country each year on lotteries? Mr. Speaker, I would be interested to know how many hon. members have, at times, bought a lottery ticket; it was the simple psychological effect of the man who takes a chance, without any ulterior motive. But is not life itself a continuous game of chance, Mr. Speaker? The insurance we buy on our life, on the life of our family, on our house, our car, are all chances that we take, are they not? We take chances every day and I do say that there are many people here who take chances with much more consequences than if they would buy a simple lottery ticket.

I would like to go into more details about the effects of a national lottery as an aid to housing. Considering that we could build as many as 400,000 houses a year to meet the immediate needs of the population, this could mean about $120 million in interest, a sum that we could return to the new owners with a reduction of 3 per cent in the rate of interest on average loans of $10,000.

That return of interest of $120 million would be entirely covered, I am sure, by the revenues of a national lottery which, I believe, for the sake of argument, could easily reach $150 million. Thus, the national budget would not be affected by this reduction of interest and it would be of considerable help to the new owners.

Mr. Speaker, it would be the best way to resist these subversive movements which try to infiltrate our country. It is proclaimed everywhere that that property thrives on exaggeration, that it must be overthrown and destroyed. Pope Leo XIII gave us the answer to these ideas in his encyclical letter Rerum Novarum, when he said:

> Socialists condemn the poor to jealous hatred of those who possess; they claim that all ownership must be abolished, that each man's possessions should be common property and that their administration must be vested in the municipality or the state.

So, that is what we have to fight, Mr. Speaker, by all possible means, even by a national lottery, if necessary. This reminds me of the story of the good communist who, trying to explain the communist doctrine to one of his friends, told him: "It is simple; I am going to explain it to you. Suppose that you have ten cows, you give me five; that is the communist doctrine. Suppose that you have twenty sheep, you give me ten; that is the communist doctrine. Suppose that you have fifty chickens, and you give me twenty-five." "Oh! No", replies the friend. "I have no cows nor sheep, but I have chickens, so I'm going to keep them."

This is the answer we are looking for, Mr. Speaker. The man who owns something has no intention of sharing; he is master in his home, he is conscious of his strength and proud to be a good citizen, a true Canadian.

In closing my remarks and as an example, I am pleased to mention my own city of Alma, in my constituency of Lake St. John, where the number of home owners increased from 35 per cent in 1953 to 51 per cent in 1958. Here is a city that benefited of the advantages offered by the government in the field of home building, but it is also a city where every citizen has the ambition to own his home in order to be a better Canadian. People of that kind, we would need hundreds of thousands more of them every year, and it is the duty of the government to take necessary action in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, we belong to a party that is still young but has noble and high ambitions. We all want to make Canada a prosperous country. Home building is a way to bring about this result, while reducing employment at the same time.

I am sincere, Mr. Speaker, when I state that we must do even more in order that everyone may own his property, that everyone may be proud to own a small part of our country. I ask therefore that the government take note of my suggestion and consider it on its merits, because it represents the thought of thousands and thousands of Canadians.

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my friend the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Parizeau) has put forward at least one idea I can support, with respect to national lotteries. I fail to see why there is so much hypocrisy on this matter. Many people who are anxious to take on a holier-than-thou attitude object to the idea of a national lottery in this country, but how many, on the other hand, at home or between the four walls of an office, make no bones about buying lottery tickets, thus helping to send overseas millions of dollars from which hospitals and educational institutions of other countries derive a great benefit. I submit a national lottery could help the housing industry, as was said by my friend the hon. member for Lake St. John, and could also have a beneficial effect in the field of education in the province of Quebec.

I have listened to a good number of Conservative members who took part in the budget debate and all of them of course congratulated the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) for introducing a courageous budget on April 9 last.

Not so long ago a Conservative member said in this house that the Canadian people had welcomed the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance. Such a statement sounds queer when you take cognizance of the recent newspaper reports on this matter. For instance the Ottawa Citizen on April 16, 1959, carried a story entitled:

(Text):

Survey of the Press Shows Budget Critically Received

The Toronto Star, of course, was critical.

(Translation):

I would just like to refer to two or three comments made by newspapers in order to prove perhaps our colleagues have no monopoly on truth.

For instance in the Toronto Star, we can read the following:

(Text):

It said that one thing was sure about the budget, namely, "it has dissolved the last vestige of the financial mythology created by Mr. Diefenbaker before the 1957 election. He promised to raise welfare payments, cut taxes and balance the budget. The payments were raised, taxes cut, and the result of these things plus the recession was the biggest deficit in our peacetime history. Now Mr. Fleming finds it necessary to raise taxes by an amount which exceeds his previous tax relief by nearly $150 million a year. So much for financial magic."

In neighbouring Hamilton, the Spectator said that "although Mr. Fleming told the commons that his budget was designed 'to foster and promote recovery,' its fiscal details suggest no such positive purpose."

And along in Windsor, the Star took a roundhouse swing in Mr. Fleming's direction. "The blunt fact", said the Star, "is that the Conservative government has been spending far in excess of any Canadian government, even in wartime, and much further in excess of its revenues than any government in peacetime. Where does it think such a policy will lead? If a private individual were to follow the same practice he would be headed for speedy bankruptcy."

Out on Canada's west coast the Vancouver Sun was outspokenly critical. "Canadians now know what value to put on a Tory election promise. They were promised lower taxes and they have got higher taxes... when a patient is recovering the wise physician coddles the body. Mr. Fleming compels his patient, the Canadian economy, to don a hair shirt."

The Victoria Times had this ironic comment: "It is a courageous budget, since it admits that the government completely miscalculated the nation's finances and misled the public with impossible promises in two elections... The government is showing a new sense of responsibility. It is late but welcome."

Like the Star-Phoenix's line that the "Diefenbaker vision must be taking on the dimensions of a nightmare," the Winnipeg Free Press trumpeted, not surprisingly in an editorial called "Cost Of The Vision," that the Canadian people had been handed "the second instalment of the bill for the vision. And a shocker it was."

(Translation):

Among the Conservative members who took part in the debate and praised the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance, I want to refer particularly to the Secretary of State (Mr. Courtemanche) who made a brilliant speech.

I was a bit surprised when I heard him commend the government the way he did, and I wondered if he had not already spoken in this house about the problems that confront us to-day. Therefore, I leafed through Hansard from the previous years and I found out that on March 6, 1950, as we can see on page 520, the Secretary of State who was then sitting in the opposition had risen about the question of unemployment; however in 1950, unemployment was far, very far from reaching its present day proportions and still here are the words, quite—I shall not say courageous—but critical, he used concerning the administration then in power. Thus, I quote from Hansard of March 6, 1950, on page 520. These are the words of the present Secretary of State:

Mr. Chairman, let us not forget that unemployment is the breeding ground of disorder, poverty, unrest and communism. Unemployment leads to communism. It must therefore be averted. We have tried to fight it with words but that was a wasted, futile, useless effort. People do not yet understand why there was so much employment and money in wartime and why there is so little now, in peacetime. If money is found for destructive ends, it should also be available for constructive purposes. Should the fact that consumers are too few in number justify starvation in the homes of the jobless?

And a little further on, the hon. member said:

I therefore ask the government to attend to these alarming wounds, to heal them. That is within its powers as well as within its duties. There is no reason why any one of our citizens should not be able to live in a country 3,700,000 square miles in area.

In my own name, in that of my constituency, of my province—

The hon. member used high-sounding words at the time.

—(in the name) of my own race, in the name of the whole country which is threatened with the same crisis, the same miseries, I beseech those in power to put an end to this sad state of affairs.

Let us find jobs for our people. That is the only way to earn a salary. Whatever work is found, let it be, not just any work, but useful work, constructive work which will benefit our country. Let us not fight communism with words, but with action, honestly, by ensuring to the people what is rightfully theirs—order, justice, prosperity and national security in this fine, powerful and great country of ours.

Mr. Habel: He made a nice speech on that occasion.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, that very statement was made in this house on March 6, 1950 by the hon. Secretary of State, then sitting on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker, following such feats of oratory, the only thing one can add is this: a man can often turn a new leaf in his lifetime.

The hon. Secretary of State now sits on the government side; he is even a minister of the crown in the Conservative cabinet. If he was sincere—and I don't doubt his sincerity—when he made that declaration in 1950, how could he talk the way he did this week, in this house, on the budget of the minister of Finance?

There is an example, among many others anyway, of the kind of contradiction of which the Conservative party as well as a great number of its members are guilty, not only during electoral campaigns and while they were in the opposition, but also since they have been sitting on government benches.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the government to the unfortunate unemployment situation in the Lake St. John area. My colleague, the hon. member for Lake St. John made reference to it, but I would like to give particulars.

It never occurred to me that one day I would see groups of young unemployed, or similar associations, get together to settle the problem of unemployment and complain of a situation such as that which exists today in my riding and the whole area known as the Kingdom of Saguenay. At Jonquiere, Kenogami, Arvida, and even the three other ridings of this area, we can see those associations of young men of 18 to 30 years of age who are making their complaints heard not only by this house, but by all the public bodies of our area, begging them to try and find a way to put a stop to this unemployment which causes thousands to suffer, not only in my area, but also in the areas of Lake St. John and Saguenay.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

(Text):

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: There are three private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole. Is it agreed that in accordance with section 1, Standing Order 54, that they be referred to committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-15, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company—Mr. Jones.

Bill No. S-12, to incorporate Paramount Life Insurance Company. (As amended, and recommending that the title be changed to "An act to incorporate British Pacific Life Insurance Company")—Mr. Taylor.

Bill No. S-14, to incorporate the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux. (As amended, and recommending that the title be changed to "An act to incorporate the Congregation of the Sisters of the Holy Family of Bordeaux in Canada")—Mr. Flynn.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-5, to amend the Small Loans Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we all seem to be good-natured this afternoon and there seems to be an unusual amount of co-operation on procedural matters which I think is all to the good. However, when the division bells ring that co-operation ceases to exist.

I have moved second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I feel that the interest rates now being charged by small loans companies in this country are unnecessarily high. The small loans business is very extensive.

Hundreds of thousands of Canadians avail themselves of such loans, and I submit to the house that a maximum rate of interest of 1 per cent per month should be ample at the present time. Following the amendments adopted in 1956 the maximum rate for loans up to $300 has been 2 per cent per month. The amendment provided by this bill would place a ceiling of 1 per cent per month on all interest rates charged by small loans companies.

I have had similar bills on the order paper every year since 1955, and although experience under this new administration would seem to suggest that private members' bills and resolutions are becoming of less and less value, nevertheless the experience I have had with regard to this particular bill has indicated to me that it has been very worth while and that parliament has listened. In 1956 the government acted. I did not think the legislation at that time went nearly far enough. The original proposal I made prior to action being taken by the government in 1956 was along these same lines. Before 1956 the rates on loans up to $500 were controlled by the Small Loans Act by providing a maximum ceiling of 2 per cent month.

This particular measure has never received, either by way of vote or speech, strong support from any member of either the Liberal or Conservative parties, but in 1956, because public opinion demanded that action be taken and because the minister of finance at that time, the Hon. Walter Harris, was in this instance paying some attention to public opinion, action was taken. As a result of that action many millions of dollars have been saved the consumers of this country.

When the government's bill, going part way along the road I had suggested, was before the banking and commerce committee in 1956 numerous representatives attended from the small loans companies. There were spokesmen for the small loans companies association and spokesmen for individual companies. They represented to the committee at that time that the legislation being proposed by the government would cripple them financially and that they would be put out of the small loans field. Crocodile tears were shed by members of the Conservative and Liberal parties and initially not all members of the Liberal party were in favour of the government's legislation. They were worrying about the widows and poor people who would have to have loans but would no longer be able to get them because conditions were going to be so difficult for this gang of loan sharks incorporated with the blessing of the government.

What has the result been? They have not suffered. They have prospered and grown. They have extended their business. They have made an increasing amount of profit. They have done very well. Perhaps this was the kind of legislation which was necessary to suggest to them that they should increase their volume of business. By increasing their volume of business at somewhat lower rates of interest they have been able to effect an even higher net profit than theretofore. I know that if this bill were placed before the banking and commerce committee at this time the small loans companies would come before the committee once again in droves and would plead that they would be crippled if this legislation were passed. But I suggest that if it is passed, as it should be, those companies would prosper under what I consider to be a very ample rate, yes, a very high rate, of 1 per cent per month.

We had the men in the grey flannel suits before the committee; I think 50 of them came in 1956. There was a tremendous lobby and not without some effect, because it took the greatest possible amount of persuasion by the minister of finance. I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) will remember the occasion very well. The minister of finance was determined, and finally some of the members of the Liberal party who were reluctant to go along with the minister voted the right way and the Conservatives took to their heels and quit the opposition which they had initially started in that committee.

With the government we now have, I see no indication that there is so much as a single member on the government side of the house who is prepared to stand up and say that he supports action by the government to lower the interest rates on small loans companies.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: All right.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has introduced this bill I think two or three times, and the difficulty I have is that although I would be extremely glad to support him unfortunately I have somewhat of a selling problem, because the only authority I have is the hon. member. The hon. member says repeatedly, "I feel that interest rates are unnecessarily high". The difficulty is in explaining to some people that the hon. member is an agriculturist, I believe, by avocation, and it is a very difficult problem to sell them this legislation. Perhaps he could give some statistical information as to why the 1 per cent rate should be used.

Mr. Argue: That is a very learned question which took the hon. gentleman a long time to ask.

Mr. Drysdale: I regret the time.

Mr. Argue: Let me remind him of the statement the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) made the other day in the discussion on freight rates. He said, "This is a complicated field. I am a novice and know little or nothing about the intricacies of freight rates. But if you allow it to go before a standing committee of this house, we will bring in the experts and then everything will be made clear." I suggest that we allow this bill to go before the banking and commerce committee and then call in the experts, the superintendent of insurance and officials from the credit unions of this country and the men in the grey flannel suits. I think that we can turn them into the very best witnesses possible to bring evidence which will support this kind of measure. I am not an expert on banking matters. I do not profess to be an expert in any given field.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I do not have to get up and blow my horn, as the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) did last night in his campaign speech to get into the cabinet. He went down to the United Nations, as an observer, and it was not good enough to tell us once; he reminded us in every other paragraph that he had been on an important trip to the United Nations which apparently made him an expert in that field. However, I am prepared to put my judgment in this matter before the committee and confront any witness who may be brought before that committee. If the hon. gentleman and his colleagues wish to have evidence on this bill I suggest it be sent to the committee.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a further question? Would the hon. member not think that before it went to a committee he should establish a prima facie case? All he has established so far is what he personally feels. That may be authoritative in his group, but perhaps other people in the country question such authority.

Mr. Argue: I do not expect to convince a Tory member of anything, Mr. Speaker. It would take something of a sledge hammer to get some very elementary economics through to them.

Mr. Drysdale: Well, I am listening.

Mr. Argue: I can tell the hon. member that there are many people in the country who would like to see this legislation passed. There are organizations who are in favour of control of interest rates and who think it is a shame, a crime and an insult that Canadians should be forced to pay up to 2 per cent per month on small loans; and of course in other fields the sky is the limit.

Mr. Drysdale: Would my hon. friend permit another question?

Mr. Argue: I have been very generous with my hon. friend and I think, if he will permit me, I will give him some information which may be helpful. Then he can speak a little later on and can take his place as part of the group whose main purpose is to talk out these bills.

Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a table of the loans and profits of small loans companies and moneylenders. They are the latest figures up to the end of December, 1958, which is the first year following the former government's legislation and the number of accounts of small loans companies and moneylenders was just over 1,075,000. The number of accounts of small loans companies and moneylenders lending amounts covered by government legislation, that is up to a maximum of $1,500, numbered 1,107,000. The amount of loans in 1957 totalled over $368 million and that figure had increased in 1958 to $477 million. So that with a reduction in interest rates the small loans companies in 1958 were able to increase their number of accounts and the volume of business by some $109 million; namely, from $368 million to $477 million.

I am convinced that if this legislation were passed the small loans companies would be able to function and still carry out their high pressure advertising, and would increase their volume of business. The main thing which would take place would be a reduction in the maximum rates of interest that they would be allowed to charge. These companies have not gone out of business as was threatened. As a matter of fact, there are more in the business today than there were at that time. There are today 82 small loans companies and moneylenders, which is approximately five above the number in 1956. The number is increasing and their volume of business is increasing.

It was stated before the committee in 1956 that if legislation were passed to limit the rate of interest on loans from $1,000 to $1,500 to one-half of one per cent per month the chances were that companies would not make substantial loans in this area. That has proven to be correct. According to the statistics which have been made public by the superintendent of insurance in the report for the year ended December 31, 1957 the small loans companies had relatively few accounts in the category between $1,000 and $1,500 and fewer accounts still in the category from $1,100 to $1,500. It has been said that this is one means of placing an effective ceiling on the total amount of money that small loans companies are prepared to lend. I am not certain that I go along with that theory, but it has been suggested that this is a way of making certain that small loans companies remain in the small loans field. I would have no objection, myself, to these companies being given a standard rate for making their loans provided the standard rate was not exorbitant and provided it came within the limit mentioned in the bill I have proposed.

I would ask that the members of this house allow this question to come to a vote. I do not think it is a service to parliament for hon. members to talk out every single private members bill that comes before this house. If this were a new bill, if this were the first time this measure were before parliament and if hon. members were not acquainted with its terms, I could see some reason for talking it out and, by that means, killing it by this back-door method until it were dealt with at some future session. But since this is not a new bill; since it has been before parliament in the same form on previous occasions, I would suggest that the house should proceed to take a vote on this question.

I do not like to see the members of the government party which has such a huge majority becoming so subservient to the party whip. I should like to see some independent thought; I should like to see some indication that the capacity for independent thought still exists. How often, on past occasions, the Hon. George Drew, when he was leader of the opposition, turned on a very large Liberal party across the way—it was still, of course, much smaller than the number of supporters of the Conservative party here—and told them that they were trained seals because they did very little but applaud at the right time when the prime minister or one of the cabinet ministers made what appeared to be an appropriate debating point. Now the applause comes from the Conservatives, and the very same thing the Liberals once did is being done by them. And when we had the trained seals rather than the present large volume of apparently untrained seals —when we had these trained seals, unanimous as they were in giving their applause when the then prime minister or members of the cabinet made good debating points—they did, nevertheless, have within their ranks a number of members who from time to time were prepared to take an independent stand; members who were prepared to stand up and speak on a private members bill and take a view different from that taken by the government or by a member of the cabinet.

There is no evidence in this colossus that is now the government, of any independent thought. Not only is there an absence of independent thought but a stand has been taken by hon. members opposite which prevents all members including members of the opposition from voting on the matters which come before this house. I believe that by their attitude in talking out every single measure such as this and every single resolution they are undermining the prestige of parliament, undermining the position of the Conservative party in this country and, moreover, proving that statements made in years gone by about the rights of parliament were merely empty words without meaning in fact.

I think the country is becoming tired of seeing members of parliament spend a couple of hours a week debating subjects which I and, no doubt, many others, consider to be of great importance while, at the same time, performing something of a farce because the government has said: there will be no vote; we will talk it out; although we have the biggest majority that any government has ever had in the history of this country, we must admit we are the government which is the most timid, so afraid that we will not deal with any matter which is placed before the house by the opposition. I have no doubt that if an hon. member on the government side had presented a bill the government would be just as timid with regard to his bill as they are with regard to opposition proposals.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia is not referring to the bill at all at this point, and is himself succeeding in talking it out.

Mr. Howard: On that point of order, may I say that it is strange how delicate the feelings of certain members of the government can become on some occasions.

Mr. Speaker: It does occur to me that the hon. member for Assiniboia has been generalizing on what he alleges has happened on other occasions rather than on what may happen on this occasion and that, strictly, is not in order.

Mr. Argue: I appreciate Your Honour's optimistic point of view, but if I may make a prediction I venture to forecast that when six o'clock comes we will see a repetition of what has happened on those other occasions; Conservative members will occupy the time between now and six o'clock and this bill will go to the bottom of the list of bills under public orders and will, for all practical purposes, have been killed for this session.

This measure runs counter to the trend of interest rates in the country today. The trend of interest rates in Canada today is upward, and this is so because this government has allowed interest rates to rise to the highest point in Canadian history. Instead of being a government interested in securing lower interest rates, as they said they would be, they have become a government of higher and higher interest rates. Although 12 per cent is still a high figure, if the government allows the central rate to go much higher then even a bill with a ceiling as high as this might make it difficult for the companies concerned to operate. I can foresee great harm coming to the country, because if this trend is not arrested some of the legislation which has been placed before the House of Commons and which is already in our statute books to provide loans for certain segments of the Canadian community at reasonable rates of interest will be jeopardized.

If maximum rates under these statutes are maintained, as I trust they will be, it will mean that many of the institutions that are making loans today necessary to the welfare of farmers, fishermen and people buying houses, will either find it impossible to make loans or great losses will be sustained by them. I know that hon. members opposite are anxious to deal with this measure. I hope they will deal with it in the only way in which parliament should deal with legislation and that is by way of a vote and a decision.

Mr. Pallett: After full discussion.

Mr. Argue: My hon. friend says, "After full discussion". What a hypocritical interjection. Full discussion to his mind means killing every good idea that comes before the house by way of a private member's bill or resolution. It used to be different and ideas were not given this kind of cavalier treatment. When an hon. member presented a bill on any subject in which the public took a great deal of interest the government in the past adopted a position and a cabinet minister or a parliamentary assistant would stand up and present the government's attitude, and then private members would rise and give their opinions and then a vote would be taken.

We now have a cabinet which is not interested in members' bills and resolutions even to the extent of stating the government's position. If we know anything about party discipline we can presume that word has been sent around by the Conservative whips that there shall be no vote and no decision. If parliament itself carries on this kind of mockery this institution will be held up to public scorn. If this attitude is to continue then the time is here for us to consider appropriate amendments to the rules of this house which would not permit closure, a procedure followed by a former administration, but which would provide the opportunity in any given session to thoroughly discuss and reach a decision on each measure that is advanced by a private hon. member. Unless we do that we shall be undermining the parliamentary institution which all of us say we support so fervently.

Mr. Murray Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed a performance from that eight-ring circus to my right which covered everything from soup to nuts.

Mr. Argue: After the soup I got back to you.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): The soup was thin, the nuts were stale. In effect, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) is asking us to rubber stamp something that he has placed on the order paper when he himself used up most of his time in talking about something other than what is before us today. In my mind he has failed to advance one good reason as to why we should support this bill. I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman that although, as he stated, he has had a bill of this nature on the order paper every session since 1956, a check in the parliamentary library such as I have made this afternoon indicates that not one reached the stage of debate in this house.

The hon. member is asking us to rubber stamp a measure which he tried to explain to us in about five minutes this afternoon. I for one will rise in my place on any occasion I feel inclined to on private members' days and put my views before this house. The hon. gentleman should also realize that there are a great many new members in this house who have valuable contributions to make on this or any other subject that may come forward and so discussion should not be curtailed.

The purpose of this legislation is to provide that interest or the cost of a loan allowable under the Small Loans Act shall not exceed the aggregate of 1 per cent per month on any part of the unpaid principal balance not exceeding $1,000 and one-half of one per cent per month on any remainder of the unpaid principal balance exceeding $1,000.

I should like briefly to discuss the history of small loans companies in this country. In the early stages of the development of Canada each family was a largely independent unit and produced its own needs. Family units were relatively independent of outside sources. However, there was a gradual change from a crop economy to a cash economy. This was prompted by the movement of citizens from the farms to the cities and towns. Families became dependent upon a cash income and any interruption or emergency that reduced the family budget caused a serious crisis and hence a need arose for sources of small sum credit. The existing laws at that time were ineffective to deal with moneylenders because the legislation did not take into consideration the changed conditions and did not protect the public from unscrupulous lenders. Consequently rates of 400 and 500 per cent were quite common. People could not repay these short term loans—weekly or monthly loans —and in the final analysis paid many times the amount of the loan in interest over a period of a year or more and still had the principal amount to repay.

The legislation concerning interest was ineffective at that time for two reasons. First, the borrower was in a poor bargaining position and second, as I have mentioned, certain charges for such things as investigations or the preparation of documents were permitted legally because only the interest rate was controlled.

This was the situation that obtained during the mid-thirties. The Moneylenders Act which was in force at that time restricted the rate of interest on loans up to $500 to 12 per cent per annum but no restriction was placed on various other charges that could be made. In 1938 the House of Commons committee on banking and commerce made a report which formed the basis of the Small Loans Act. This plugged the gap and provided a rate to include all charges, including interest. The rate established was 2 per cent per month on loans up to $500. The rate applied each month after the monthly payments of principal and interest had been made.

In 1956 the act was again amended because most operators were now making loans up to $1,500 in value and so the present rates were established at that time. The rates that are in effect today are 2 per cent per month on that part of the unpaid principal balance up to $300, 1 per cent over $300 to $1,000, and one-half of one per cent over $1,000 up to $1,500. It is possible that at this time we should have another look at this legislation. Perhaps in this day and age these rates are somewhat high. However, I am not prepared to accept the words or opinions of the hon. member for Assiniboia because I do not feel that he has done the research into this matter that he might have done.

[Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North).]

What he has given us this afternoon are opinions and not facts. I should like to point out to the house that another bill placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Assiniboia would provide that interest rates under the Interest Act could not exceed 12 per cent. I merely point out that the two bills conflict with one another. The combined effect is that the licensed lenders under the Small Loans Act would be allowed a lower rate of interest than the unlicensed lenders. The unlicensed lenders could charge a rate of 1 per cent per month while the licensed lenders would only be able to charge a combination of 1 per cent and one-half of one per cent per month. This would be a reversal of the principle that the smaller the loan the higher the rate needs to be. Here I should like to quote from the report of the committee on banking and commerce which was presented to the House of Commons in 1938:

> Quite obviously the purchase of a block of 12-year Canadian government bonds requires little expenditure for investigation and none for supervision; investments in 50 farm mortgages for varied periods entail considerable cost both for investigation and supervision; while the investigation of 1,000 applications to effect loans to 500 people for a few months with meticulous supervision becomes expensive business when expressed as a percentage rate of $100 on a monthly basis.

I submit that the hon. member for Assiniboia, by presenting these two bills which conflict with one another, is not quite sure in his own mind as to just what the problem is, let alone what the remedy should be.

I should also like to point out to the hon. member that a great many of the people who do business with small loans companies seem to be quite satisfied with their dealings. I am informed by the president of one of the large finance companies that in 1957 the figures for his company show that over 90 per cent of the loans made were to people who had dealt with them before or who had been referred by others who had dealt with them.

Mr. Benidickson: They never get out of their clutches.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): They never get out of their clutches? Well, the same company informs me that every year one-third of the outstanding loans are paid off, and if one-third are paid off every year I think they are getting out of their clutches somewhat and it certainly is not the 50 per cent figure that is so cast around wholesale by the members of the C.C.F. party when they say that half of the people who deal with finance companies never get out of their clutches.

I should like to read a letter which was placed on Hansard in the session of 1952-53. This was placed on the record by a member who I followed very carefully politically, namely Mr. Alistair Stewart, the former member for Winnipeg North. The letter appears at page 5170, volume V, of Hansard for the 1952-53 session. At that time the house was dealing with estimates and he read this letter:

> Here's the answer to your debt worries—
> The present high cost of living makes it often very difficult to meet the demands of all your creditors.
> The result: you get phone calls and letters of demand from your creditors, garnishees on your pay, court judgments and seizures, lawyers' actions . . . problems upon problems.
> Now, with one visit to the office of Consolidated Finance you can shed your problems. Simply make a list of all debts you owe for: hospitals, automobile, furniture, jewellery, groceries, doctors, lawyers, loan companies, etc.—then see us.

This is a letter which was circulated by Consolidated Finance Corporation. I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this very same letter was placed on the record of Hansard, at page 950, of the current session by the hon. member for Assiniboia, exactly the same letter from exactly the same company. I should also like to draw attention to the fact that the company commenced business in 1952 or 1953. At the insistence of the Ontario department of insurance the name was changed to Consolidated Payment Plan because in effect they were not a loan company or a finance company. Because of their unsatisfactory performance their licence was cancelled by the Ontario department of insurance on December 1, 1954, and they ceased doing business early in 1955. We have the letter on Hansard in 1953. The company went out of existence in 1955, and in 1959 the hon. member for Assiniboia is using the letter as evidence in his argument for the case that he is trying to present to us today.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reiterate that there may be grounds for reducing interest rates, and it might be a good idea to study those interest rates at this time; but I would submit that unless the research of the hon. member for Assiniboia is better now than it has been in the past we have nothing to go on. In view of the way in which he roamed today through everything from zoology to no-ology I think we should look into this matter and hear opinions from other members of the house because this attitude of "Don't confuse me with the facts; my mind is made up" does not go over as far as I am concerned.

Mr. R. S. MacLellan (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Smith), I am in general agreement with the tenor of the bill and agree that certainly interest rates charged by small loans companies, as by other concerns, should be no higher than necessary. I support this bill to the extent that certainly an inquiry should be made, and that the interest chargeable by small loans companies should be limited to the extent necessary to provide funds for the availability of people who cannot borrow from other loan sources. However, it is a matter which should be examined very carefully because, as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) has neglected to consider, there is a very good possibility that by limiting the interest on loans by small companies, as he suggests, it would deprive the wage earner and the man who is unable to borrow at banks or from other institutions, of funds that he needs and requires in his daily routine.

I think that one of the most important aspects of the whole problem of consumer financing and the business done by finance companies has been neglected by this bill. Certainly, it has always been an accepted principle that the interest rate charged should be in relation to the risk of the loan. And that has been the argument the finance companies have used to justify interest rates which are much higher than would be charged by banks or other institutions. But it seems to me, that at least in one instance in the consumer finance field this argument has no jurisdiction whatever. I refer to the large amount of consumer financing that is done through acceptance corporations; that is to say, the very large finance corporations which do not make loans directly to the purchaser, but which lend him the money through the dealer or the retailer from whom he purchases an automobile, appliance or other goods.

We have been striving in this nation, as other free nations, for stability in the money that is available in the country; to try to control booms and prevent busts. We do that through the Bank of Canada which was established by the Bennett government in 1934. It has been done by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the budget which he introduced last week. The amount of money available in the nation at any given time will affect the expansion and the amount of production in the nation.

It seems to me that consumer finance companies in some cases make available an unhealthy type of credit in the nation, a credit that oftentimes in periods of inflation is greatly expanded when it should not be. Many consumers are thereby invited to purchase goods and through advertising programs are encouraged to seek loans which they cannot afford. In the case of an automobile dealer who recommends a finance company to his customer, the acceptance corporation or the finance company may charge interest rates considerably higher than those that would be charged by a bank. At the same time the finance company may take much less risk than the bank takes.

The acceptance corporation has not only the security of the article which has been sold, the car, television set or any other type of appliance, but also has the security of the endorsement of the consumer and the endorsement of the retailer. These companies take little risk, yet they charge high risk interest rates. Since they assume small risk they are ready to make money available at any time, often at times when the nation cannot absorb it, and some people are encouraged to buy goods which they cannot afford. It seems to me that these acceptance corporations should be required to assume the risk themselves on the money they lend. They should be precluded from requiring the endorsement of the retailer or the dealer. If they are going to charge these interest rates, at least let them accept the risk on the loan.

I have seen many instances in which dealers needed to achieve a volume of sales—

Mr. Speaker: I have allowed the hon. member to stray into a field that is not covered by this bill, hoping he would relate his argument to the principle that is involved here. It seems to me that he is going too far in a direction that is not covered by this bill at all.

Mr. MacLellan: I have been establishing a basis for an argument on the interest rates charged by some small loans companies, which are certainly unjustified, which I felt was within the purview of the bill before the house.

Speaking again of consumer finance companies, which are small loan companies—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is coming to this bill, I do not want to interfere with his line of argument. But this is small loans companies bill and does not relate to other methods of financing.

Mr. MacLellan: Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will relate my remarks to that subject. I feel that the interest rates charged by finance companies should be examined closely by a committee to see to it that those rates are in relation to the risk taken on the loan. Certainly, I am in full accord with the limits suggested by the hon. member for Assiniboia in this bill in so far as acceptance corporations are concerned which do not take full risk on the loan but rather rely on the endorsement of the dealer. The effect, so far as the country is concerned, is that at the slightest downturn easy credit which is encouraged by these loan companies in good times brings on repossessions and we have a drab picture of people being saddled with borrowings they cannot repay.

I would suggest to the house that while this matter is of the utmost importance, we should proceed with some caution. The whole matter should be examined very closely. Certainly, we should never make a decision on the basis of the small argument that was put forth this afternoon by the hon. member for Assiniboia. It is a shame that the hon. member spent so much time in discussing other matters that there was not a proper opportunity to discuss this bill, when I am sure so many members would like to put forth their views. In effect, this bill was talked out this afternoon by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Argue: That is a false statement.

Mr. MacLellan: There were very few of his remarks directed to the bill.

Mr. Argue: Question, question.

Mr. MacLellan: I suggest that in presenting this bill the hon. member for Assiniboia is not sincere. He is not anxious to have this bill discussed. It is just a matter of continuing the C.C.F. propaganda.

Mr. Argue: Read on.

Mr. MacLellan: At no time this afternoon have I done anything more than refer to my notes. I did notice, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North was discussing the bill, the hon. member for Assiniboia showed little interest. He chatted with his seatmate and he read the newspaper. I suggest he has no interest in this bill. It is a mere matter of C.C.F. propaganda.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the acting house leader the business for Monday and as many of the succeeding days of the week as he can indicate.

Mr. Brooks: On Monday we will continue the budget debate and expect to continue with it on Tuesday and Wednesday. After Wednesday we intend to go on with estimates and intend to take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Chevrier: Does that mean on Thursday and Friday we will discuss agriculture estimates?

Mr. Brooks: If agriculture estimates are not through on Thursday.

Mr. Chevrier: Can the acting house leader indicate when the budget resolutions will be discussed?

Mr. Brooks: No, I cannot, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PAYMENTS, SHERBROOKE, QUE.

Question No. 320—Mr. Boivin:

1. Were instructions issued some time in March, 1958, by the legal branch of the Montreal regional office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission for an investigation to be carried out in Sherbrooke regarding the payment to certain textile workers of unemployment insurance benefits to which they were not entitled?

2. Did any employees receive overpayments?

3. If so, what was the amount overpaid in each case?

4. Was the investigation stopped?

5. How was the matter settled by the commission?

6. Were these employees compelled to refund such overpayments?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. Yes, when it was reported to the Montreal regional office that several claimants had omitted to disclose as earnings the amounts of production bonuses received from their former employer.

2. Yes; overpayments were established in 442 cases.

3. Full information is not available but the amounts ranged from $1.00 to $168.00 with the bulk under $50 each.

4. No, the investigation was carried to conclusion.

5. Claimants who were overpaid were required to make restitution. In a few cases other infractions were discovered as a result of the investigation and punitive action was taken with regard to them.

6. See answer to No. 5.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 20, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fourth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PAINTING "THE ROAD"

Motion No. 53—Mr. Murphy:

For a copy of the minutes of the meeting of the trustees of the national gallery in 1923, relating to the purchase of the painting "The Road", by Karl Henry Ahrens, and also a copy of the record of the national art gallery showing in what places this painting has been shown since its purchase.

He said: Stand.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am willing to accept this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to proceed?

Mr. Murphy: Stand.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): There is no need for delay, Mr. Speaker, because the minister has accepted it.

Mr. Murphy: I am sorry; I did not hear the minister.

Motion agreed to.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING—LEGAL AGENTS

Motion No. 83—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of any letters, lists or other memoranda sent to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation by the Department of Justice since January 1, 1956, stating the names of legal agents that may be engaged by the corporation.

Motion agreed to.

PROTESTS RESPECTING TERM 29, TERMS OF UNION, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 85—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland since March 25, 1959, protesting the announcement of the government regarding term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, together with the replies thereto.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): My understanding of the practice is that when a minister does not have departmental responsibilities an order cannot be made; therefore I am opposed to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the right hon. Prime Minister correctly that he indicates opposition to the motion on the ground he has stated, but not on a point of order that the motion should not be heard?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PAINTING BY BREUGHEL

Motion No. 89—Mr. Batten:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between any minister or acting minister, official of the government, director of the national gallery or any other official of the gallery on the one hand, and Baron Von Polnitz or any person acting on his behalf on the other, dealing with the painting "Landscape with Christ appearing to the Apostles" by Breughel.

Motion agreed to.

MINUTES OF MEETING RESPECTING PAINTING BY BREUGHEL

Motion No. 90—Mr. Batten:

For a copy of the minutes of any meetings of the trustees of the national gallery, relating to the painting "Landscape with Christ appearing to the Apostles" by Breughel.

Motion agreed to.

P.C. 24/3539, JULY 15, 1949

Motion No. 91—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of P.C. 24/3539, July 15, 1949.

Motion agreed to.

CHAIRMANSHIP, BOARD OF REFEREES, ROUYN DISTRICT

Motion No. 93—Mr. Dumas:

For a copy of all communications exchanged since July 1, 1957, to date, between the Minister of Labour or any officer of his department on the one hand, and any other person and organization on the other, regarding the chairmanship of the board of referees for the Quebec regional division (district of Rouyn, Quebec) under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I wonder whether the hon. member will agree to let this motion stand.

Mr. Dumas: Yes.

Motion stands.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a week ago I asked the Prime Minister a question regarding the legislative program for the rest of the session. He indicated then that he would look into the matter and hoped to be able to reply in a few days. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can say anything about this important matter at this time.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, apparently I do not have my notes on the matter with me, but I will reply tomorrow.

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour could bring the house up to date on the strike at the Polymer Corporation, Sarnia.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The only thing I can say is that Mr. Frank J. Ainsborough of the Department of Labour was appointed on Friday as mediator in this dispute. Today he is in the process of arranging a meeting between the company and the union.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO LOANS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF CURLING RINKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, and I must mention a most interesting coincidence. This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, while I address this question to the minister a former comrade of ours Mr. Percy North is in the galleries and will witness my interrogation and his explanation. I might say that the last time we were together was during the battle of the Somme in 1916.

Does Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or any other agency or department of government make loans to clubs or community organizations for the building of curling rinks?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask a supplementary question. My question is based on a report in the Ottawa Journal of April 16 which mentions that the crown made a loan for the building of a curling rink at H.M.C.S. Carleton. Would that be the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Green: It certainly is not public works.

Mr. Herridge: Would the Minister of National Defence inform the house if this money was lent by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I will have to take that question as notice. I really cannot tell you whether or not the money was lent.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. DEFENCE SECRETARY ON PRODUCTION SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware of the statement reported in the Financial Post of April 18, in which it is alleged that the United States secretary of defence, appearing before a congressional committee, made a statement to the effect that Canada would get no defence contracts from the United States except for items to be used in Canada, and also to the effect that Canada would not be getting as much defence business and that the request made by Canada was a very modest one?

In view of the statements made by the Minister of Defence Production in the house and by the Minister of National Defence, himself, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to comment on these statements.

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I have read the statement in the Financial Post of April 18, and it refers to a meeting I had with the secretary of defence, Mr. McElroy, in Washington earlier this month. An identical question was asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West on April 9, and both these questions refer to the same meeting I had with Mr. McElroy. There is complete understanding so far as the United States officials are concerned as to Canada's position. I made it quite clear to Mr. McElroy and the other officials who attended that meeting that Canada would not be satisfied with a production-sharing program which was limited to those projects which were of purely Canadian interest.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question. If there is complete understanding between Mr. McElroy and my hon. friend on this matter, would the minister then urge Mr. McElroy not to make statements of the kind he is reported to have made to a congressional committee, which indicate there is a misunderstanding in somebody's mind.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CLAIMS BY CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. On March 9 motion No. 67 standing in my name was agreed to, calling for certain documents to be filed relating to contractors' claims for payments from the St. Lawrence seaway authority. This was some 42 or 43 days ago. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he would kindly advise the house and myself when the order for return is going to be filed.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for advising me of his intention to ask this question. I have spoken to the St. Lawrence seaway authority about it, and they have told me that considerable work has been entailed in preparing these answers. They expect to be able to provide the answers in the near future.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he seen the statement in the St. John's Evening Telegram of April 16 attributed to the minister from Newfoundland, to the effect that he saw no reason why Bell island ore mines should not be treated in the same way as Sydney coal mines? Is the government considering any action to avert the impending lay-off and consequent unemployment?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The hon. member sent me notice of his intention to ask this question when I was sitting in my seat. This same problem has been of great concern to the hon. member for St. John's East, who has been in communication with me on a number of occasions. I am sorry to inform the hon. member that I have not seen this report in the St. John's Evening Telegram to which he refers, but I want to assure the hon. member that this problem, as many other problems, is being given very serious consideration. We are looking at the situation to see what can be done.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Minister without Portfolio): On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I made no statement to the St. John's Evening Telegram on April 16. I have no recollection of any such statement at all.

COAL

REPORTED LAY-OFFS IN ALBERTA MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I have been advised by the secretary of the united mine workers of America at Calgary that recently in the Drumheller area, namely at East Coulee and Drumheller itself, Murray Collieries Limited and the Midland and Hy-Grade mines have been closed as a result of dwindling markets for domestic coal, coupled with the constantly rising costs. As a result some 500 men have been put out of work in the Drumheller area, 300 men have been put out of work by the closing of Murray Collieries Limited, and approximately 200 by the closing of the Midland and Hy-Grade mines.

Has the minister received notice of the situation, and is any consideration being given at the present time to giving assistance to these men who cannot obtain employment elsewhere in that area?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): This is the first time this matter has been brought to my attention. I would appreciate it very much if the hon. member would give me more details so I could look into the situation and ascertain how it could be alleviated.

Mr. Woolliams: I shall be happy to do that.

IMMIGRATION

NEWSPAPER REPORT THAT RULING DRAFTED BY CIVIL SERVANTS TO EMBARRASS GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister in a position to repudiate a charge appearing in the Toronto Telegram of April 16 that the recent ruling on immigration was drafted by civil servants to embarrass the government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is simply a request to state whether or not a newspaper account is true, and that is not in accordance with the practice followed at this time.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; you have ruled that the question which has just been asked is not quite proper. I wonder, with great respect, if it is not proper to ask this question of the minister and thus give her an opportunity of repudiating a charge against the integrity of the civil service?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): That statement on the part of the hon. gentleman answers itself. It is a ridiculous statement.

Mr. Pearson: This is not an answer to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The question was framed as an invitation to repudiate or deny the truth of the statement in a newspaper. We have followed the practice of not permitting questions of that kind to take up the time of the house at this stage.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Would it not be proper then for the hon. member to ask the minister if the story referred to has any foundation in fact?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Essex East is in exactly the same dilemma with that question.

TRADE

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SPONSOR MEETING OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Prime Minister. My question is, has the government received a request from the Canadian Petroleum Association to sponsor a meeting of the industry to consider present market problems? If such a request has been received, is it the intention of the government to sponsor such a meeting?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this to the attention of the minister and have a reply as soon as he returns

URANIUM—REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. ATOMIC ENERGY OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the attention of the government has been drawn to a statement made by the director of the raw materials division of the atomic energy commission in Washington five days after the visit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Washington, to the effect that United States uranium imports from Canada will be cut down by more than two-thirds after June 30, 1962?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment. I realize the situation in general with regard to uranium, as I am sure the hon. gentleman does, and also the difficulties which lie ahead. By 1962 we trust that steps will be taken in order to meet the needs of the two countries, and that agreements will be arrived at.

In so far as the dispatch is concerned, I would suggest that the question be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has the fullest information.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO POSITION OF PILOTS ON GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I do so because I had the privilege of spending two days in Welland, where I was approached by a number of pilots. In view of the fact that the St. Lawrence seaway will be opened, I understand from the minister's statement, on April 25, and the pilots there do not know whether or not to report to work or what their position is, can the minister make a statement as to the position of these pilots when the seaway opens?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the pilots concerned will get in touch with the closest pilotage office under the operations of the Department of Transport they will be advised what the regulations are regarding their particular case.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—STATEMENT ON CONSULTATIONS WITH U.S. ON PILOTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that he is back from Washington, where he made certain representations in connection with the legislation to amend the Canada Shipping Act, is the minister in a position to make any statement arising out of his visit?

Hon. George H. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I spent last Thursday and Friday in Washington, where I met the secretary of the treasury and senior representatives of the various departments and agencies concerned with pilotage matters on the great lakes and discussed these matters. After my meeting with Mr. Anderson, the United States secretary of the treasury, we issued the following statement:

> We met today in Washington to discuss the question of pilotage on the great lakes and further consultative meetings will take place at the staff level with a view to working out co-operative arrangements for pilotage.

Further consultations on these matters are continuing this week at the official level between Canadian and United States representatives in Washington. I might say that today these consultations have resumed. I believe that satisfactory progress has been made in this matter, and I will be prepared to make a more detailed statement in connection with the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act at the appropriate time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST BERLIN—SUGGESTION BY CANADA AS TO UNITED NATIONS ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister; I regret I was unable to send him notice. My question arises out of his statement of April 17, as to Canada's position that the United Nations should be asked to play a useful role with regard to the Berlin problem. In view of the reported rejection of the United Kingdom's position, is the Prime Minister able to say whether the very useful and important proposal which he put forward has met with success?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman will agree that it would not be very helpful at this time to comment on the various plans and possibilities which are under study by the various powers. I do not think I could go any further at this time. I feel that possibly later in the week, if the hon. gentleman chooses to bring the question again to my attention, an answer might be forthcoming; but at the moment there is nothing I could add which would be of benefit.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED BAN ON PHOTOGRAPHING DESTRUCTION OF PARTLY FINISHED PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact that photographers are prevented, on grounds of military security, from taking pictures of welders destroying six partly finished Arrow interceptors?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any such order having been issued.

REPORTED PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister state whether or not it is correct that Canadian armed forces are acquiring certain equipment from France; and if so, was any endeavour made to have this equipment produced in Canada under licence?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I presume the hon. member is referring to the ground to ground missile which is known as the SS-10 and SS-11. This is an anti-tank missile which has been produced for the French army. Canada is acquiring two control units and a very limited number of these missiles for trial purposes. If the trials prove successful and there is a requirement for this particular type of weapon in the Canadian army, I have every confidence that they could be manufactured in Canada.

CANADIAN RADIO PATENTS LIMITED

INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST AGAINST U.S. ANTI-TRUST SUIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian government has made any formal protest through diplomatic channels to the United States government against its anti-trust suit involving Canadian radio and television manufacturers, or was the protest made only in the conversations between the Minister of Justice and the attorney general of the United States?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that information at the moment. The hon. member will realize, on the basis of his own experience, that a question such as that cannot be answered off the cuff.

SPORTS

WINNING OF SENIOR BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP BY ALBERTA CHINOOKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. May I call the attention of this house to another invasion from the west. The southern Alberta Chinooks senior men's basketball team from the premier section of the dominion have just taken home from Ottawa the senior men's A championship, and may we add our congratulations.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, April 17, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last Friday night, I was telling about the altogether deplorable unemployment situation in my constituency and in the whole Saguenay-Lake St. John area in general. Unemployment is so serious in my constituency over the whole neighbouring area that municipal authorities, local organizations, local boards of trade as well as the Saguenay-Lake St. John local of national unions felt alarmed about it and formed a "regional committee against unemployment", of which Dr. Henri Vaillancourt, mayor of the city of Jonquiere, is the distinguished president.

Last Wednesday, April 15, the representatives of that committee met with the premier of the province of Quebec and asked him to consider the number one problem of our region, unemployment. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, today is the premier's birthday and I want to join with his friends to extend to him my best wishes for a very happy birthday. Now that I have done my duty in the matter of etiquette, I shall go on with politics.

Mr. Speaker, I have never spoken in this house of what goes on in Quebec. However, because of the great significance of the matter for the unemployed in my riding and in the surrounding area, I think I have the duty and responsibility to refer to it today, at least with regard to the requests submitted to the premier and his answer to them.

The brief mentioned that at this moment there are in our area some 16,875 unemployed householders with dependents. It states too that a survey has shown that nearly 66,200 people, out of a total population of 250,000 are adversely affected by the lack of employment. The brief also points out that one of our householders is at present unemployed.

The committee members made several constructive suggestions to the premier. Now I know that those who volunteered to look into that serious matter in order to help the unemployed gave it much of their spare time.

Let me refer here only to those suggestions which might interest the federal government. In the first place the premier was asked—and I quote from the brief:

> To see that Quebec is given an opportunity to avail itself of the federal government's offer in the matter of unemployment assistance and to accept Ottawa's co-operation in building access roads to mining areas.

For my part, I have repeatedly pointed out to this house that Quebec is the only one of Canada's ten provinces which is not participating in the unemployment assistance plan introduced in 1956 by a Liberal government. Of course, the chief weakness of the plan is the fact that it was adopted by a Liberal administration and by the very fact, is in violation of Quebec autonomy. Mr. Speaker, not only are the people of Quebec deprived of unemployment insurance benefits, but, through their income tax and other taxes of all kinds, they contribute to the payment of that special financial assistance which is being distributed in the nine other provinces of Canada, in order to help the unemployed who are not or have ceased to be entitled to unemployment insurance. It is not, as I said here previously, that I am jealous of my fellow citizens in other provinces who do enjoy those benefits, but I wish my fellow citizens from Quebec could recover at least a small part—however slight—of the hard-earned money they pay over to the federal government. That financial assistance would be particularly welcome at this time, in my area, because so many of our unemployed do not now get the benefits. Besides, we are very anxiously hoping the government will soon submit its proposed amendments to the unemployment insurance act, so that we might see whether it will give due consideration to the many unemployed who no longer get unemployment insurance benefits or will stop getting them as of May 15 next. What does the government propose to do for those people who will not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits next fall and next winter, and who are now out of work? Will the government evade the issue and tell us that unemployment is decreasing, or will it dare repeat to our faces, with all the cynicism and irony characteristic of certain government members, the words spoken to the Canadian people by the Prime Minister during an evening television broadcast on February 18, 1958, as reported in the Montreal Star of the following day, and I quote:

(Text):

> "As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada," he said in a live telecast, "everything that can be done, everything without regard to limit, will be done to the end that no one shall suffer."

(Translation):

Everybody knows that, at the time during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister was speaking of the unemployment problem in Canada. That solemn declaration, that official commitment on the part of the first citizen of our country, if considered in the light of what is happening in Canada today, can only induce the people of Canada to lose faith in their public men. It is by dint of saying or promising something, and then not doing it at all or half-doing it, that public men end up by destroying the confidence the people had put in them. A great many people today look upon politics as a rather queer galley, and that is the very reason why many good men refuse to have anything to do with it. Should the situation deteriorate, it could, without the least possible doubt, lead to excesses that everyone would bitterly regret.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to asking the premier of Quebec to allow our province to enjoy the benefits of unemployment assistance, the representatives of municipalities and public bodies also urged him to accept co-operation with Ottawa with regard to the establishment of access roads to certain mining areas. This is another case where my fellow citizens from Quebec are paying for something enjoyed by other provinces, and this time something that does not bear the stigma of having been proposed by a Liberal administration. On behalf of a very large number of my constituents—the majority, I would say—I ask the government to confer with Quebec provincial authorities in order that my fellow citizens of Quebec may at least profit from a small fraction of the millions of dollars they are paying in taxes of all kinds to the federal government.

The Quebec premier's reply to the members of the local committee on unemployment assistance gave little cause for hope; I would say it was similar to the reply made by the Prime Minister of Canada last fall to representatives of municipalities, when after a lengthy speech, he finally told them: "Go back to your homes, our commitments are too heavy". He did not seem to have called the conference to find a real solution to the many problems of municipalities, but rather for the purpose of keeping at least one of his many promises.

It was his own peculiar way of respecting the autonomy of municipalities which exist only by provincial government proxy and which, constitutionally, are unknown to the federal government. Those "daughters of the provinces", if I may use the expression of Quebec's premier, were standing there, shy and trusting before the Prime Minister of Canada, in the absence of any representative of their mothers, the provinces.

The premier of Quebec gave some of his reasons for his inability to do anything, then he seemed to seize the opportunity of aiming a shaft at his Quebec friends in Ottawa, as if he wanted to encourage them to speak his language here in this House of Commons. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read out to you a paragraph—only the first paragraph—of the interview reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 16, and I quote:

(Text):

Premier Duplessis moved one step closer to an open rift with the Diefenbaker government today when he charged that the new federal Conservative government has been no better than previous administrations in stealing Quebec's fiscal rights.

(Translation):

Such a statement, Mr. Speaker, may seem strange if compared to another declaration, that of the Hon. Antoine Rivard, as published in L'Evénement of March 21, 1958. The minister happened, entirely by chance, to attend a meeting of the federal Conservative candidate at Notre Dame des Laurentides, near Quebec. This is what he said:

"I am independent of federal parties, but I must be fair. And in all fairness, I must say that, in the past 10 months during which the Conservative party has been in power, we have advanced further in the recovery of our powers, in the protection of our freedoms and the defence of our rights, than during the 22 years of Liberal rule", said the hon. Antoine Rivard—

How can such contradiction be explained? Well, there is only one explanation: everything depends on timing, that is whether a speech is made before, during, or after an election.

Besides, this is also the present policy of the federal government. In fact, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) implicitly confirmed that approach when he stated, in a somewhat puerile speech, that after all election promises should not be taken too seriously. Another childlike statement which I should like to point out to the house is the one also made by the Minister of National Revenue in the same speech when he said, as recorded on page 2626 of Hansard:

If that disastrous event should come about, I am sure both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister would be willing to start smoking cigarettes and drinking whisky to save the economy, but I think we need have no fear of such a catastrophe occurring—

I feel that such maturity of mind makes him fully competent to step into the shoes of the Minister of Finance. All that, Mr. Speaker, inclines me to read, with much hesitation I admit, to my colleagues of the house, the text of an intelligence test given to all candidates wishing to officially enter the ranks of the Conservative party. That text, which I took from the Vancouver Sun of April 11 last, reads as follows:

(Text):

Spring, 1959, Intelligence Test for Conservatives:

Examiner: So you want to be a Conservative. Let's hear you answer a few basic questions—Describe in your own words, "the Fleming budget."

Candidate: It is a courageous document.

Examiner: Tell me now—what caused the federal deficit?

Candidate: The discredited Liberal administration.

Examiner: If someone said to you that dynamic John Diefenbaker ever promised to reduce taxes what would be your response?

Candidate: I'd say it was a dirty opposition smear.

Examiner: Actually, have the Conservatives raised the taxes?

Candidate: Anybody who does not pay taxes will not pay a cent more than before.

Examiner: What is the cause of this inflation that we hear about?

Candidate: Inflation is caused by the opposition parties.

Examiner: Is there much unemployment in Canada today?

Candidate: Statistics show that more Conservatives are working today than for years.

Examiner: Outline, in a few words, the Conservative government's policy on agriculture.

Candidate: The Conservative government has adopted a hands-off policy on agriculture. They are allowing the farmers to lay off their hands.

Examiner: Is the dynamic Diefenbaker government keeping its pledge to stand up to America?

Candidate: Our government has adopted a new policy. Instead of standing up to the Americans we are standing up for them.

Examiner: What do you think is the best weapon for Canada's air defence?

Candidate: I have not yet seen this afternoon's dispatches from Washington.

Examiner: My boy, you've passed! You're a Conservative.

(Translation):

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the major concern and by far the most characteristic obsession racking the great majority of Conservative minds—there are, fortunately, a few exceptions—is the constant craving for politics, and only politics. Are they so much to blame, after all, to desire to become the worthy followers of their leader who surpasses them all, and who keeps on giving them each day eloquent lessons on the matter, even in this house?

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the umpteenth time that I have heard the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) give us one of those soliloquies which characterize him so well. I fully understand, as we all do, I believe, how anxious he is to attract the attention of members of the government and of the Prime Minister in particular, and especially in case the latter, in order to act quickly, should decide to appoint the parliamentary secretaries before 1961.

My hon. friend will perhaps allow me, however, to invite his reflection on a thought which could, in any case, be very healthy for him in the seeking of the objective which haunts him and which prevents him from sleeping soundly. I refer to a sentence by Carlyle, a Scottish writer, historian, critic—

Mr. Martin: And Liberal.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): —moralist and humorist at times, who lived in the 19th century. Oh! I have no doubt that the precocity and constant erudite concern of my hon. friend will have made him discover, even in his very young kindergarten days, that ravishing pearl, very ravishing indeed, which I shall recall, without unduly prolonging his cruel waiting, to his always respondent intelligence:

But I want to be kind to my hon. friend; so I will not let him wait until tomorrow to satisfy his quite legitimate curiosity by consulting the French Hansard in order to find out what my lingo means. I will try then to give him right now—not the best, for I know too well the requirements of my learned colleague—but the less peculiar translation possible, which is approximately, in my own poor language, at least, as follows:

(Text):

God gave you that gifted tongue of yours,
And set it between your teeth,
To make known your true meaning to us,
Not to be rattled like a muffin man's bell.

(Translation):

And now, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to more serious matters, in a language that everybody will understand.

I could give many examples to illustrate what I just said. However, I will be satisfied to quote but two remarks that were made here last week by the Prime Minister. On April 13, according to page 2608 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said to the hon. member for Ottawa West, (Mr. McIlraith):

—Whom the former administration put and kept in a position of subservience—

On April 16, answering then a question politely put to him by the hon. member for Toronto-Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), the Prime Minister said, according to page 2738 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman having occupied a portfolio in the last government in the days between April and June—

Mr. Speaker, that is the type of entirely personal remarks that the former prime minister, the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, would never have made; he had a high degree of respect for the human person, and was much too conscious of the dignity of his position, as first citizen of the country, to indulge in any type of pettiness.

Moreover, the Prime Minister knows full well that the hon. member for Ottawa-West is a former parliamentary assistant. If, in using the expression "position of subservience" the Prime Minister is revealing what he truly thinks of the position of parliamentary assistant or secretary, this is hardly a compliment to those who are preparing or yearning for such an inferior job. Furthermore, the Prime Minister's actions in this regard are another proof that he considers the position of parliamentary secretary as an inferior job. As further proof of this, I need only to say that over a year has elapsed since his government was re-elected, and the Prime Minister has not deemed it advisable or important to fill the vacancies. Moreover, the appointments will be for one year only as, though to imply that the people appointed need not—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that we had a debate on this subject in this house not so long ago.

(Translation):

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In any event, such statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada in this house are somewhat disappointing, coming from a man whose high office should raise him above party considerations. Why does he not leave such tasks to other Conservative members? There are some who are extremely well qualified in this field. To use an expression that is dear to the heart of the Prime Minister "the old glory of parliament" does not lie only in a bill on human rights, nor in a proposal for the abolition of the closure procedure, a matter which, incidentally, is no longer being mentioned.

The main point I wish to stress is that, during the period in which I served as a federal civil servant before being elected in 1957, I never heard the Right Hon. Mr. St.-Laurent cast personal aspersions on anyone who approached him, or try to humble them. His first and foremost interest was in directing the country's course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): As far as he was concerned, the people of Canada always came before members or friends of the Liberal party; the interest of the country had precedence, and by a wide margin, over the interest of the party. He was at the same time head of the government and leader of the Liberal party, but he devoted 99 per cent of his time to the business of the country, occasionally accepting representational functions. He was devoted to his heavy administrative duties to such a point that he was criticized for not being enough of a politician. Even during election campaigns, he never indulged in extravagant promises just to get votes. He was a devotee of higher politics, the first citizen of the country, a statesman, maybe one of the most prominent and respected Canada ever knew. He did not make Canadians pay for his "vision" but just the same the whole nation benefited greatly from his greatness. He was not a man who considered only immediate results of the moment whenever he had to take a decision that could have important effects for Canadians; he would consider the whole area.

In 1955, just over six years after assuming the administration of our country, and after repeated invitations, he made his trip around the world. He was then 74 years old and indeed, it is not for the sake of pleasure or to avoid his task, and much less for the sake of publicity, that a man of his age undertakes such a tiring trip. So, his health was greatly affected by this exertion and I wonder if he ever completely recovered from the fatigues of that journey.

Wherever he went, thanks to his simple dignity, his poise, his skill, his modesty and perfectly balanced judgment, he added great lustre to the reputation of this country, of which he was indeed the first citizen. If Canada now enjoys that enviable prestige all over the world, it is mostly due to the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent. It is also due, and certainly to no lesser extent, to that man who directed, with unmatched competence for nearly nine years, our Department of External Affairs, the hon. member for Algoma-East (Mr. Pearson), the leader of the Liberal party, who more than anyone else, in his functions, helped Canada attain, among the nations of the world, a rank held by very few countries of 17 million inhabitants.

It is precisely men of such mettle who are lacking in the Conservative party to direct our affairs today.

Precisely men like Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who is being criticized by many birdbrained people who do not know that Right Hon. C. D. Howe will occupy a select place in the gallery of the great builders of Canada. He had faults, I agree; he made mistakes, of course—political mistakes, I mean—but where is the serious and objective mind who will dare question his immeasurable contribution to the expansion and good administration of Canada during those twenty-two years in which he held office in successive Liberal administations? Besides, after his defeat, newspapers in the country were unanimous in paying tribute to the gigantic work he had done in those twenty-two years of political life, at the service of his fellow-Canadians. It is such a man, or men like him, I repeat, that the Conservative government urgently needs today.

The former Liberal team has been upbraided for having managed this country the way businessmen do, but, to say the least, in all that period which some fanatics still attempt to decry, Canadians knew where they were going, the country was sound and in good hands; nobody feared those chaotic business conditions that, today, brand as incompetent an administration playing at politics in a "mock parliament".

Some hon. Members: Hear. Hear.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): The Leader of the Opposition has the mettle of Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent, and you will never hear him express any inconsiderate criticism, of the kind I heard when some members of this government were sitting on this side. The Leader of the Opposition will never yield to the temptation of making the type of criticism which betrays irresponsibility, because he himself knows what it is to administer a country. No, Mr. Speaker, I am not ashamed to belong to the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe):—a party which has been defeated and decimated. As the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent said on television on the night of June 10, 1957:

What is good for Canada is also good for the Liberal party.

Canadians had the right, after 22 years, to change their minds when faced with all the extravagant promises that were made to them. They must have learned for themselves whether they have changed for the better. The test is beneficial since it gives the Liberal party the opportunity to regenerate and to renew itself. To those who think that our group is not large enough to return soon to the other side, I will mention two facts, and only two: first the June 10, 1957 election has proved that public opinion can change very fast, and second, on the eve of the same 1957 election, the Conservatives had but some 50 members in the House of Commons.

Mr Speaker, the Prime Minister and all his candidates made great promises to the people of Canada in the 1957 general election. We see now what is happening to those promises.

They promised to settle the unemployment problem, and the problem of federal-provincial relations; they promised to find new markets, new outlets. They made all kinds of promises. The Prime Minister, who had heard C.C.F. and Social Credit candidates making promises that were as extravagant as his own, if such a thing is possible, made a statement in this connection.

Mr. Speaker: I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him his speaking time is over.

(Text):

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to participate in this interesting debate. There are some who observe that the budget debate is not a very interesting performance. Sometimes the members of the press gallery indicate that, and occasionally even members of the house so intimate. Frequently, however, one notices the latter point of view emanating from those who do not participate in the debate!

The opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Finance is one which I welcome most heartily. He deserves great congratulations for the brilliancy and incisiveness of his splendid budget address and I believe, too, for the realistic appraisal of the economic state of the nation which he made some few nights ago. I believe that already his performance in this most onerous office in these most difficult times rates him with the great finance ministers of our nation's history, men like Fielding, Sir Thomas White and E. N. Rhodes.

The budget as the Minister of National Revenue pointed out, is perhaps a not overwhelmingly popular document, yet it is one that is being accepted realistically by the Canadian people. It is encouraging to note that it has won widespread approval from many economists in universities and various business bureaux, men who are specialists in the field of fiscal operations on the governmental level. There is a pretty general consensus that this type of budget was just the sort which was required for this particular phase in our nation's economic health.

I would be making no startling pronouncement if I said I am not one of those who rejoices over the contemplation of increased taxes, even the moderate increases that have been provided. But these are things which at this stage we must accept. It was Oliver Wendell Holmes who said some years ago that taxes are what we pay for civilized society. It seems we now live in a phase in our history, as my colleague the Minister of Fisheries pointed out the other day, when as the years go by the role of government in our daily life increases and, of course, as government grows the cost increases proportionately.

I am not one who is terribly alarmed about this development. I am not sold on the idea that the word "Conservative" and the word "reactionary" mean one and the same thing. I think if we look back on the history of Canada we will find that the extension of governmental operations dedicated to the welfare of the people has been carried on by parties of both labels which have held power in this country.

Looking over the program, projected and completed, of the government which I am proud to support, I see no place where I would suggest that a certain project or expenditure be blotted out or withdrawn. The programs that have been advanced in the interests of national development have served and will serve a very useful and valuable purpose not only in long range national development but, in the short run, in that important objective of cutting down the unemployment which the government faced early in its career for reasons that have been discussed many times in this house. The estimates, for instance, for the little province of Prince Edward Island, from which I come, are the largest on record. They represent assistance which will benefit directly or indirectly all the people of our province.

In considering questions of national development it is perhaps not surprising that I should focus my attention on one particular area, the maritime provinces. In the maritimes since our entry into confederation we have had many problems to deal with, many difficulties to surmount or at least to attempt to overcome. Some of these were imposed by geography, some by topography and some were aggravated and I am afraid augmented by confederation.

One of the most urgent of these, of course, is the problem of transportation. I suppose a railway timetable is not a usual reference paper in this house, but I should like to direct hon. members' attention to one little item which may graphically demonstrate some of the aspects of our transportation problems. If one looks at the railway timetable covering service between Ottawa and Montreal he finds therein that the railway lists a distance of 117.6 miles, and the Canadian National can make the trip in two hours. If he looks at the railway timetable for the run from the great railway centre of Moncton to the city of Charlottetown, the cradle of confederation, he will find that the railway lists a distance of 126.8 miles, and that the time for the trip from Moncton to Charlottetown is six hours and 20 minutes. Going the other way it is much faster; the trip is made in 6 hours and 5 minutes! I think that demonstrates graphically that we have a legitimate complaint when we make comparisons with respect to the transportation situation.

But one part of the trip from Moncton to Charlottetown is the water link between the province of New Brunswick and the province of Prince Edward Island, and I should like to devote some few minutes to that. Last week I made a short, quick trip to Prince Edward Island. On the way back on Thursday morning I encountered a situation which most certainly underlined for me the transportation problem that we in Prince Edward Island face. On arriving at the terminal at Borden, P.E.I. I found that no automobiles could be transported across the strait because that gallant old ferry, the Prince Edward Island, had suffered propeller trouble and was not able to leave the dock all day. Thanks to Maritime Central Airways, the one bright spot in the transportation system of the maritimes, I was able to get over to Moncton and back to Ottawa.

I must say that the officials of Canadian National Railways put forth their very best effort and the next day the Prince Edward Island was in operation again. On Thursday, the day the accident occurred, the ancient ship Scotia was again brought into service and made some trips. But for some considerable time the province of Prince Edward Island was isolated as far as automobile traffic from the rest of Canada was concerned. This occurred because our No. 1 ferry, the Abegweit, was in drydock in Montreal for spring refit.

Three times in the last year the Prince Edward Island has suffered a complete breakdown and has not been able to operate on her usual run. Everyone knows that the No. 1 boat, the Abegweit, may at any time suffer some mechanical disability, as happens to any automobile, train or boat, and when that occurs the people of Prince Edward Island are dependent upon a very old boat which is displaying its inability to cope with the demands now being made upon it.

Down through the years this chamber has heard my predecessors from Queens and the predecessors of my colleagues from Prince Edward Island deal with the subject of communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Indeed, as is known by all, Prince Edward Island was one of the colonies which were reluctant to enter confederation. For six years we demurred at becoming a part of confederated Canada. It was believed that the position of the province as an island isolated from the rest of the country and as a smaller province made for a different set of circumstances, and that our interests would not be altogether identical with those of the larger provinces to the west.

To mitigate against our separation and insularity great emphasis was placed upon the matter of communication. A situation was to be created whereby we would get all the benefits of a direct link with the Intercolonial and other railways which were being projected at the time. The disadvantages of our isolation were to be overcome, and on that basis the colony of Prince Edward Island entered confederation in 1873. The terms of our agreement are precise on this question, and I quote from the 1873 agreement:

> The dominion government shall assume and defray the charges of efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland of Canada, winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion.

I might say that last Thursday I found the communication neither efficient nor continuous! Down through the years there has been much dissatisfaction about the implementation of these terms, much hardship and, indeed, at times in the older days actual suffering on the part of the people of my province in trying to make this connection with the rest of Canada. For years there was talk of a tunnel, and a survey was actually made during the administration of Sir John A. Macdonald. Boats were provided, but never did they seem to be adequate. In 1911 Mr. Robert Borden, leader of the Conservative party, came to the town of Summerside and said, "If you elect me prime minister of Canada you will get a car ferry." That promise was faithfully kept. The car ferry was built, and in his honour the terminal on Prince Edward Island was called Borden. This boat, built well over 40 years ago, is the one to which I made reference a moment ago. It has been crashing back and forth through the heavy ice of Northumberland strait for well over a generation. This splendid boat has been a credit to the fine Scottish shipyards which produced it, but it should have long since been put into an auxiliary role instead of being retained as one of the main links in this most important communication area.

There is still a feeling in the province of Prince Edward Island that we have not yet obtained the proper type of communication contact with the mainland. We do not talk about tunnels in this modern age but as this house has heard before we are very concerned, and very hopeful, that the final fulfilment of the confederation terms will be granted through the construction of a causeway which will provide continuous communication with the mainland. We rejoice that the government has taken such an interest in this project and has carried out such an extensive and, I believe, thorough survey of the whole problem connected with building the causeway.

Mr. Crestohl: What will it be named?

Mr. Macquarrie: I think there are many prospects in that connection, Mr. Speaker. We could, perhaps, make use of the names of a great many people who would be involved. Prince Edward Island would be very generous in the naming of it, if it emerged as an actuality. We look forward, in any event, to the tabling of the report on the causeway. It is our fervent hope that as a result of the report the government will have reason to believe that the project is feasible and will move forward to accomplish this final step in bringing this old island province into the kind of communication pattern for which it has sought so long.

I think I would not be guilty of excessive partisanship or of revealing a lack of realism if I were to say that this government has already demonstrated to Prince Edward Island an awareness of the needs of the island and a regard and consideration for its difficulties. This would lead one to believe that a government of this type, with a truly national view, would proceed to build a causeway for the province if it were technically feasible, to the advantage of the maritime region and Canada.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would not be covering this whole question if I stopped there. It would take some years, with the best engineering skill, to build that causeway. There is at this time an immediate problem, and important problem. We are hoping to see the causeway built, but I think this transportation situation at the present time has two important aspects. The first one is that the boat, the Prince Edward Island, is old and should have been replaced or augmented a good many years ago. The second aspect is that both the Prince Edward Island and the Abegweit cannot cope with the summer traffic which every year brings thousands and thousands of tourists to the beautiful province of Prince Edward Island. This indicates that there is much wisdom in every part of the world, very good judgment and taste. The demand for tourist accommodation is rising year by year. There is no place in which these tourists are more welcome than in Prince Edward Island.

We are very much concerned about the fact that we cannot get these people over fast enough, and that from time to time there are long lines of automobiles anxious to get across to the province. These boats now have to work under forced draft to accommodate these people. Until a causeway is built, if it is built and we hope it will be, immediate and interim action must be taken to provide another boat. Suggestions have been made to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) that this boat might be purchased outside of this country. I am not alone on this matter. All Prince Edward Island members are deeply concerned, thoroughly aware of the problem, and most anxious that the province's transportation be upgraded to meet modern conditions. I do not bring this problem forward as a humble suppliant for favours and certainly not in any posture of threat or club-wielding admonition. We in Prince Edward Island have scarcely the strength to take the latter position and certainly are not of the temperament to take the former.

On a basis of simple justice, as an appeal to the most helpful and understanding dominion government that Prince Edward Island has ever had, I put forward this case, just as my colleagues and I have in recent months to the minister concerned. We expect that our just cause will be fully and properly dealt with and that, as with the Borden government of old, the Diefenbaker government will move quickly and effectively to meet the vital needs of this great province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Speaker, there is a temptation for one to devote himself to matters concerning only his constituency. I was impressed with the remarks by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Kennedy) the other day when he spoke about his own reluctance to speak often, and then when I heard him describe the glories of Colchester-Hants I felt I was like him in that connection. Although the temptation is there, I should like to just direct a few thoughts to a subject which was discussed the other day by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Jung). He spoke about some of the economic aspects of Canada's position in the outside world. Certainly, I am not going to discuss such things as the Berlin crisis, which would not be appropriate at this time, and which I know are receiving attention of the ministry and absorbing the interest of all hon. members. There are two areas of what we might describe as external outreaching which I think that Canada, in its present position, might well explore a little farther.

I have been interested for some years in the Latin American area. In recent years Canada has strengthened its trade links with this part of the world. Recently new ties have developed in the West Indies federation. I know all members hope that these ties will be strengthened and relations will grow more friendly as the years progress. In this western hemisphere there is an old regional agency, the Organization of American states, which was founded in 1890. In the early days Canada could not become a member of this great body because we did not have jurisdiction over our foreign policies. Indeed, we would not have been too warmly welcomed by one of the great member nations immediately to the south.

But modern times have brought changed conditions and Canada is most heartily welcome at the present time. There is every evidence of that. I believe it would be a most valuable step, considering the present world conditions, if Canada moved to make complete the hemispheric solidarity in the western hemisphere and become a member of this very successful international organization, the organization of American states. We have much in common in the diplomatic field with its members, and I think our role could be not only a useful one but an important one, indeed perhaps great.

Then there is an area which today finds many changes coming in rapid succession. On the great continent of Africa we find that the tide of nationalism rises faster today than it did in Asia, which event itself seemed to be just yesterday. In the United Nations we find that there are many new members about to enter that body. These come from the great and long-silent continent of Africa. I am sure we all remember that in our school days when we looked at the map of Africa we found if we wanted to trace the political status of certain areas we had to look at the map of Europe, where we could find the same colouring. Practically every part of Africa was a colonial state of some European country. In my school days there were only two independent countries, Ethiopia and Liberia, two small areas in a total continent of subjection and dependency. Yet now we find things changing, and changing very rapidly; indeed, so rapidly that there are political, social and economic ramifications of considerable disturbance. But these changes are bound to come. They are inevitable; they are irrepressible. The importance of these changes cannot be underestimated by a country like Canada which has been so successful in carrying its burden in world affairs and which has built up over the years such a fine reputation in the international field. I can but hope that Canada will move toward the realization of greater interest in this area and that our Department of External Affairs will expand in this part of the world and we will have more listening posts and greater awareness of this great continent, of its needs, of its interests, and of the burning desires of its people at the present time when they find themselves emerging into the field of national sovereignty and autonomy, with all its changes, responsibilities, difficulties and problems. I believe that Canada, with its great reservoir of goodwill and very fine staff of diplomats, in its splendid external affairs department, can do much to reach out to the peoples of Africa in these days when their disposition on questions of international diplomacy are of such great significance, and may tomorrow be even vital.

Perhaps with the great crises of international affairs which come upon us from day to day it is difficult to take a long range view. Certainly in these crises it is not so easy for Canada to play a commanding part, although we always, I hope, play an important one, but in some of these long range considerations I believe our role could be potentially greater perhaps than that we have yet played, thus enabling us to further the fine performance which we have to our credit.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Marquarrie) will agree with me that it is desirable at the earliest moment possible for the government, through the Prime Minister

(Mr. Diefenbaker), to make an appointment in succession to the late and much respected secretary of state for external affairs. The hon. gentleman's interest in foreign affairs I know would justify my assuming that he would readily concur in this suggestion. The other day I addressed a question to the Prime Minister and asked him if he thought it was in the national interest to delay the appointment of a new secretary of state for external affairs until such time as all matters having to do with the budget had been completed in this house. The Prime Minister's irrelevant reply was interesting and is a matter of record, but it did not answer the question which I put to him. I therefore suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) that he might pass on to the Prime Minister the suggestion which I make on behalf of this group, that if the appointment of the new minister would be facilitated by this house dealing with all matters having to do with the budget at the earliest possible moment, he may be assured of that co-operation.

This is an all important matter, as the Minister of Finance, who sombrely looks at me now, will be the first to realize. This is a matter involving the appointment of the secretary of state for external affairs who will formulate, in co-operation with his colleagues, the foreign policy of this country at one of the most critical periods in recent history. We all admired, I am sure, the capacity and the competence of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) when he spoke for Canada at the recent anniversary meeting of the NATO council; but in following the precedents of other council meetings it would possibly have been helpful if other ministers had been present, particularly a minister charged with the responsibility of projecting foreign policy in this country.

The foreign ministers of the great powers are to meet soon. It may be that these meetings will be followed by a meeting at the summit. There certainly will be further NATO council meetings. This is one of the most important periods when Canada should not be without a secretary of state for external affairs. The President of the United States did not delay in the appointment of a secretary of state for foreign affairs in that country, and while the responsibilities of the government and the people of the United States are greater than the government and the people of Canada, this does not mean that our responsibility and our opportunity for constructive suggestion and participation does not exist. We hope, as I know the people of Canada hope, that there will be a decision in this matter by the Prime Minister at the earliest moment.

Mr. Speaker, this may or may not be the last budget of my hon. friend and classmate, the Minister of Finance. I can only say to him that because of my admiration for him, and my affection too, I sincerely hope that whatever he desires he will receive provided we are generally satisfied as to the competence which must attend the particular realization that he may or may not have in mind. I am sure that the Minister of Finance could discharge other obligations with great credit to himself and the country. I share with him the anxiety of these difficult moments until such time as this important decision will have been made one way or another.

I can only say to the Minister of Finance that, notwithstanding my goodwill toward him, like other hon. members I have an obligation to give some consideration to the budget which he presented to this nation a week ago last Thursday. It seems to me that the amendment offered so ably by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) expresses in general terms our dissatifaction and criticism of this budget, as I believe it now expresses the judgment and reaction of the people at large.

It proposed:

> That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following be substituted therefor: "this house regrets the bad faith of the government which sought and secured support from the Canadian people on a program of lower taxes, reduced expenditures and a balanced budget, and which has now produced, in flagrant disregard of pre-election promises, a budget calling for higher taxes, record expenditures and a large deficit."

This amendment is a criticism of the government for its reversal of the main elements of the Conservative party's financial policy as stated by the Minister of Finance and other spokesmen for that party in this house prior to the elections of 1957 and 1958. Now what were the basic elements in the former policy of the Conservative party as represented by the Minister of Finance and others? The elements of this policy were, first of all, balanced budgets, reduced taxes and a persistent effort toward the elimination of waste and extravagance. These elements were deeply imbedded in the policy of the Conservative party as stated by its spokesmen in this house. The spokesman for a long time was the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), the Minister without Portfolio in the present administration, and I have looked at some of the things that he had to say about financial policy. In Hansard, at pages 2764 and 2765 of April 5, 1955, here is what the financial critic of the Conservative party had to say about the matter of a deficit in a budget. He said on that occasion:

> Now, deficits are things we should fully understand. We should realize what happens when we have a deficit; we should realize what it means. It means that the minister, after wringing out of us every dollar that he feels he can, after scraping the barrel, or rather the pocket, then goes out and borrows $194 million in order to keep level, and that means you and I and all the other taxpayers will have to pay that money back.

And then he went on, a little later—and this is the financial critic of the Conservative party speaking only a few years ago—to say:

> We come now to the deficit, which is not a good thing. There is not a word to indicate any sense of uneasiness.

It seems to me that these words apply so aptly to the mood and to the demeanour of the Minister of Finance when he spoke the other night. The Minister without Portfolio, as he now is, continued:

> There is not a suggestion that there is any chagrin. Certainly there is not a suggestion of any apology to the people of Canada. But after several years of booming times, of good times, they have not been able to organize the economy so people can get work. After all, in two general elections we were told that everything was going to be taken care of.

I have stated that the financial policy of the Conservative party was one of a balanced budget, and it is important, therefore, that we should have some idea what was the position of the Conservative party with regard to the question of surpluses. That statement by the financial critic of the Conservative party had to do with deficits, but the hon. gentleman also stated his views and those of his party on surpluses by quoting, as the minister will no doubt remember, from Mr. Snowden. Speaking on March 19, 1957, as reported at pages 2458 and 2459, the hon. member for Greenwood, then the financial critic of the Conservative party, had this to say:

> This means that the government has taken an extra $382 million from the Canadian people. Philip Snowden used to say that if any government took half a crown more than it needed it was guilty of getting money under false pretences. But today the government has no hesitation in taking hundreds of millions extra from the taxpayer.

Now, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), though not dealing directly with this question of a balanced budget, said that if there had been a violation of Conservative party promises this was because of circumstances which existed unknown to the opposition. He suggested that the hon. members who presently sit on the ministerial benches did not know of a situation which the previous government had hidden from them. The conclusion reached in his observations was that if they had known this they would not have made certain declarations or given certain assurances to the people of Canada, forgetting, of course, what the position of the Conservative party while in opposition had been, as stated by its financial critic and others including the present Prime Minister and, of course, the Minister of Finance whose observations are well known. But lest there be any misunderstanding about the position of the Prime Minister, the present leader of the Conservative party, long before this famous secret economic report of 1957, let us look at what the Prime Minister said in Saskatoon on June 13, 1953 as reported by the Star-Phoenix:

> The Progressive Conservative policy was one of lower income taxes. There was no need to tax married men earning less than $3,000, particularly with the cost of living at its highest point in history.

And then at Clinton, on July 9, 1953, as reported in the London Free Press, the right hon. gentleman pledged an October session of parliament to cut taxes by $500 million, or $170 per family.

Then again, the Prime Minister is reported from Foxford on July 13, 1953 as having said, according to the Star-Phoenix that the Progressive Conservatives would remove the 10 per cent tax on such needs of the home as furniture, clothing, shoes, tea and coffee and other necessities now heavily taxed, and would provide for full taxation of all federal government properties on the same basis as was applied to all other municipal taxpayers.

And so it went on. And if there could be any doubt about the position taken by the leader of the Conservative party during the election, we now have the opportunity to examine a document which is well known to many hon. gentlemen but which I saw for the first time only within the course of the last few days.

An hon. Member: The hidden report.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This document is called "A new National Policy" and underneath the title appear the words: "Unity requires it... Freedom demands it... Vision will ensure it...". Then it continues: "A date with Diefenbaker", and on the other side of the cover Mr. Grosart, or someone, goes on to say:

> In a remarkable way these statements reflect the man and his mission . . . his concern for great matters of state and his abiding faith and interest in the average man and woman.

I have no doubt that the Prime Minister has an interest in the average man and woman but I want to relate that interest to some of the things that he as leader of the Conservative party and the Minister of Finance and others told the Canadian people as a result of which they now sit to Mr.

Speaker's right. Among other things I find these words on page 2 of the document to which I made reference:

Call a dominion-provincial conference for the purpose of making the Senate an effective arm of democracy.

We will discuss that at some other later date. I did not know that was in the party plank. But here is one that interested me very much because it has to do with what I have just been saying. This is the Prime Minister speaking:

Last year Canadians were over-taxed by $120 for every family of four.

He then went on to say:

Major elements increasing inflation are heavy government spending and high taxes in both of which fields the St. Laurent government seems to pride itself on its record of failing to reduce either or both.

Those words may be found on page 7. On the last page the Prime Minister went on to talk about the old age pension system in the United States concluding with a statement in these words:

A Progressive Conservative government will consider expanding the present old age pension system by the addition of an insurance system similar to that in the United States. The United States plan of old age and survivor insurance provides average monthly benefits on retirement of $76.00 for single workers, $128.00 for aged married couples without dependents and $65.00 for aged widows.

The average contribution per person is $27.08 not much more than the average contribution by Canadians of $22.70 for the old age pension. A Conservative government will consider implementing such a plan "in addition to" the present pensions system. The United States plan is "worthy of the highest commendation."

Well, there will be ample opportunity to discuss that plan at some future date. There we have the Prime Minister promising to reduce taxes and increase benefits, not explaining how those contradictory things could be done. Supporting statements of a similar nature were made by every hon. member who now sits to Mr. Speaker's right and the overflow to Mr. Speaker's left as a result of which these hon. gentlemen sit in the seats of government today.

If there is any doubt about this promise to reduce taxes, one could refer hon. gentlemen opposite to the speech made by the Prime Minister before the Montreal chamber of commerce on February 19, 1957:

—tax changes to put Canadian companies on a basis of equality with foreign corporations or their subsidiaries operating in Canada.

Or one could refer to the Prime Minister's opening campaign speech in Massey Hall on April 25, 1957, when he said that any government he represented would introduce:

—less discriminatory methods of taxing Canadian oil companies.

One could also refer to the speech made by the Prime Minister at Edmonton on March 8, 1958, as reported in the Vancouver Sun of March 10 of that year, at which time the minister referred to:

—drastic changes in taxation treatment of oil companies.

Or one could again refer to the opening speech of the Prime Minister in Toronto when he promised:

—further incentives in the Income Tax Act for Canadians to invest in Canadian equity stocks.

One could also make reference to the speech of the Prime Minister at Campbellton, New Brunswick, on May 4, 1957, at which time he promised:

—tax inducements to persuade business firms to process raw materials in Canada.

Or one could refer to a speech made by the Prime Minister at Brantford on February 17, 1958, at which time he promised:

—tax reduction for the tobacco industry.

And I have by no means exhausted references of this nature which I could cite to hon. gentlemen opposite.

When Mr. Harris presented his budget for 1957 his estimated tax was $4,780 million, and if you add the revenue from old age security it came to $5,150 million. The present Minister of Finance anticipates tax revenues of $4,757 million and revenues for the old age security fund of $536 million making a total of $5,293 million. In other words, in spite of all these promises the total tax burden for a year in which we are just emerging from a recession is to be greater than it has ever been before at any time in Canadian history.

Of course, these promises do not mean anything, we were told by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) who made a most unusual exposition, I thought, of a new theory of public morality when he said that commitments made to the Canadian people were not to be taken as seriously as commitments made by the Prime Minister or the leader of a party in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did not say that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance is wagging his head in the negative but not too strongly. I suspect he thinks I am not quoting the Minister of National Revenue correctly. Let us see what that hon. gentleman did say as reported at page 2624 of Hansard of April 13, 1959:

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that promises of any kind, whether pre-election promises or otherwise should be honoured and respected so far as circumstances will possibly permit, but I would suggest to you, sir—and I think all hon. members on both sides of the house would accept this general principle—that promises made to this House of Commons and promises made to parliament stand in an even more favoured position in so far as sanctity and respect are concerned than promises made during an election campaign.

I cannot say that this represents the view of the Prime Minister and I am sure it is not the view of the Minister of Finance, but I express the greatest surprise that the Minister of National Revenue, for whom I have always had the highest regard, should make that kind of distinction. Surely if public life means anything as we practise it in this country, an assurance given to the people of Canada is sacred whether it is made in this house or on the hustings during an election and made for the purpose, particularly during an election, of giving hon. gentlemen the right and the opportunity of governing the affairs of this nation. Assurances made to the people of Canada to cure unemployment, to cut taxes, to have balanced budgets and similar pledges cannot be dismissed unless we want to weaken the structure of our political system.

If the Minister of National Revenue does not fully concur in what I am saying I would ask him to look at the words of a great leader of the Conservative party and a former prime minister of this country, Sir Robert Borden who, speaking in the House of Commons on January 20, 1909, said:

I say that the system of offering bribes to the constituencies in this country is a vicious one, and that, so far as I am concerned, I lifted up my voice during the last parliament in favour of the prohibition by statute of such acts; and I hope some day to see this wrong righted in Canada by statute.

I looked up the Hansard of 1909 quite some time ago. I asked for it this morning in the library and it was not available. I would, however, refer hon. members to what Sir Robert Borden said which represents basically in principle what I have just said he did observe in this house on September 9, 1930, as reported at page 35 of Hansard of that date. At that page there appears a reference to the statement made by Sir Robert Borden on January 20, 1909.

Sir Robert Borden, leader of the Conservative party of that day, a prime minister of great note, felt that assurances given to the people of Canada were no different from assurances given in parliament by a leader of a political party and I say this by way of deduction from what he said. For the Minister of National Revenue to take a different position is, I suggest, to run counter to the kind of public morality that in this country most of our public men for a long period have sought to practise. As a matter of fact, that this is the tradition is clear from what Professor Robert MacGregor Dawson the eminent Canadian political scientist says in his book, "The Government of Canada":

Election manifestoes are largely the work of respective party leaders and essentially personal pledges given by them to the electorate.

It cannot be otherwise construed or else the people of Canada would have the right to conclude that anything said by a leader in an election was not to be taken seriously. There would be nothing that would undermine our political system more than to find that what was said by the Minister of National Revenue in this house represented the true situation. I believe it does not. For that reason we have the responsibility and the duty of reminding this administration of the promises which it made in so many fields and with respect to a vast number of matters and particularly concerning matters relating to reduced taxation and balanced budgets.

As I have said, the Minister of Finance has broken all peacetime records by the deficit he announced in this house on budget night. His deficit for 1958-59, however, I suggest to him, is not as some other hon. members have indicated, not $617 million but $835 million. Every effort to conceal the true budget by accounting manipulation in the defence equipment account I suggest to my hon. friend was both improper and unconvincing. His use of the defence equipment account to finance expenditures for which he had asked approval was, I think, very misleading.

In that connection, I know what the Minister of National Revenue said about my estimate of a $1 billion deficit last year, an estimate which was based on suggestions that had been made by the Canadian tax foundation. The fact is—and I say this in reply to the Minister of National Revenue—that on the basis of the estimates submitted to this house last year the budgetary deficit would have been $950 million. Two things happened to reduce this deficit. First, as I just indicated, the use of the special defence account; and, second, increases in revenue. On the basis of the estimates submitted to parliament by the Minister of Finance the budgetary deficit, I say, would have been $950 million, since the expenditures authorized were $5,605 million, while the minister estimated revenues at $4,650 million. The budgetary expenditures, as finally estimated, amount to $5,387 million. The difference between this figure and the amount of $5,605 million is explained and accounted for by the fact, as I have noted, that the minister had used $218 million from the special defence account so as to make his budgetary expenditures appear less than they actually were.

This accounting device does not, however, change the fact, so that the actual deficit I say is $835 million and not $617 million as claimed by the minister.

But the minister took some pride in the fact that by this accounting device he was able to say that there was a deficit of only $617 million. Well do I remember the day when he rose in the house before he delivered the budget, without having previously gone through the usual courtesy of advising the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) of the figure which he proposed to give, and said that the deficit was not a billion dollars. He said, "Oh, no, my deficit is not a billion dollars; my deficit is not $800 million; my deficit is only $617 million," as though that in itself did not seriously reflect upon the financial policies of this government.

When my hon. friend took office in June of 1957 Mr. Harris had presented him and this nation with a budget which contained a surplus of $500 million at least, and now within 18 months—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was all gone.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —my friend, the Minister of Finance, rises in his place the day before the budget and says, "I am not going to have a deficit of $800 million or $1 billion, I am going to have a deficit of only $617 million". He did not tell us at the same time that that was a violation of an election promise; he did not tell us that it was the highest peacetime deficit in the history of our country.

Now, the other factor—and I want to come back to the Minister of National Revenue and I then will return to my dear friend, the Minister of Finance—accounting for the reduction in the anticipated deficit is the increase of $120 million in revenue, $4,770 million as compared with the minister's original estimate of $4,650 million. This increase in revenue is attributable to four factors, namely customs duties, $36 million; profits of the Bank of Canada, $20 million; income from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $12 million; and interest on the United Kingdom loan, $22 million. Only $30 million of this increase, Mr. Speaker, is attributable to higher tax yields. This is the situation and this is my reply and my answer to the Minister of National Revenue.

I now come back to the Minister of Finance. Not only has he produced the biggest deficit in the peacetime history of Canada, but he has achieved a record that no other minister of finance achieved because he has presented three successive budgetary deficits totalling $1.3 billion: in 1957-58, $38 million; in 1958-59, $835 million, I say; he says, $617 million; and in 1959-60 I say $435 million if my hon. friend will take into account the $42 million deficit in the old age security account.

Mr. McGee: According to the Martin bureau of statistics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I say to my young friend it does not matter whether they are Martin or Fleming figures, the fact is that my young and honourable friend belongs to a party which has produced the biggest peacetime deficit in our history. But I want to give the hon. gentleman some more statistics; he loves them. This is not the only record of the Conservative party. The Conservative party has a great penchant for this sort of thing because since the Conservative party has been in office it has produced only four budgetary surplusses since confederation and, for my hon. friend's information, not one since 1913. And so we are confronted with a deficit. The government that was going to reduce taxes presents us with a tax burden of $350 million in extra taxes this year, wiping out entirely the minister's pre-election tax cuts and adding an extra $100 million in taxes. The heaviest burden, notwithstanding what my hon. friend sought to give, will be borne by the lower income groups—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —who will pay a greater relative share of their income through increased sales taxes, sales taxes which my hon. friend said were iniquitous when he spoke in criticism of the last budget brought in by Mr. Harris.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was Mackenzie King who said that the sales tax was iniquitous.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): When the Minister of Finance presented his budget he said little about the most serious problem that confronts Canada at this time. According to the bureau of statistics of my hon. friend, and not those of my own creation, when the minister delivered his budget there were 537,000 people out of work in Canada. In Britain there are 550,000 out of work. Canada, with a population of 17 million and a working force of 5½ to 6 million has 537,000 out of work. Britain with a population of from 45 to 48 million with a working force of 22 million has 550,000 people out of work. Notwithstanding, these facts, the Minister of Finance, in a government which was going to see that no one suffered because of being out of work, had little to say in his budget about unemployment except that he looked for a recovery and an improvement.

He forecast an increase of 7 per cent in the gross national product. He did not indicate in his forecast how much of that would be as a result of a rise in prices. He certainly did not tell us that the 2 per cent increase last year or 95 per cent of it, was largely because of a rise in prices, nor did he tell us that if there is going to be a recovery, which we all certainly hope will take place, every indication, in so far as plant equipment is concerned, points to a continuation of a serious level of unemployment.

I ask the government, in the face of the situation that has confronted us this year, a situation that was allowed to arise in spite of our warnings last June and July, particularly those given by the Leader of the Opposition, to take preparatory steps now to meet a situation which we all trust will not be as serious as last fall and winter but which, in terms of unemployment, from most indications would seem to present this nation with a problem comparably as serious as that in the period we have just gone through. Now is the time for the government to anticipate that kind of a situation. I must say regretfully that from the statement of the Minister of Finance one would think that the situation was not one to be compared unfavourably with other western countries, that our situation was better than that in the United States, Sweden and other western countries. Of course this is not the case. There was very little reference to unemployment in the budget statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Page 2409.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says "2409". One paragraph! He devoted more time to the commonwealth conference than he did to unemployment. The chancellor of the exchequer, speaking of the commonwealth conference in the budget he delivered a couple of weeks ago, only had one sentence about it.

Mr. Pearson: One word.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One sentence or one word.

An hon. Member: He has spoken on it many times though.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In this session my hon. friend has rightly spoken a great deal about these matters of great consequence like the commonwealth conference but he has not spoken very much nor has he given the house much detail about the problems that really do agitate us at this time, namely that there are still men and women out of work in their thousands and that the government is not addressing itself to the problems involved.

So I indict the government not only because of its failure to reduce taxes and to carry out its promises, not only because it has not carried out its promise to present a balanced budget but because it has not addressed itself as it said it would to the problem of unemployment. The minister referred to the unemployment insurance fund. He did not tell us that he anticipates imposing further taxation on certain groups of people in Canada as a result of the maladministration by the government of the unemployment insurance fund, the deterioration of the fund's securities as a result of the bond conversion policy of my hon. friend. He did not tell the people of Canada these things which will present a picture of increased burden and increased taxation.

I wish my hon. friend everything that he wants but I do say to him, with all the sincerity I can command, that I regret that in the presentation of what may be his last budget he has not lived up to the high standards which I know he himself would have liked to set perhaps because of the reluctant attitude of those who sit with him in the ministerial benches and do not altogether share his financial policies. It may be for that reason that he will be moving upwards or downwards. In any event, all I can say about this budget is that I wish the Minister of Finance had moved.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is with real pleasure that I rise to take part in this debate and, of course, to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) on the realistic manner in which he has presented the budget. Truly it is difficult to analyse all the forces which contribute to our economic structure and if there has been some concern felt in the past we can gather encouragement from the inherent stability in our minister's purpose and from the cautious optimism of his forecasts.

Naturally we expect to find those who disagree but I believe sincerely that the government has made a tremendous effort to meet every challenge in solving our problems. Recently, in reading trade journals, financial forecasts and articles by responsible leaders of industry and finance, I have noticed that practically without exception they contain highly optimistic forecasts. These are the people who really know. They are planning their production and development to meet the needs they anticipate. Surely with the great expansion in industry and the development taking place all over the country today the value of our gross national product is bound to increase, and the Minister of Finance has indicated a figure which may prove to be very conservative.

Having dealt with expansion in generalities, may I say that I am fortunate enough to witness in my own riding some of this industrial development which has been sadly lacking in the past in western Canada in general and Saskatchewan in particular. However, in keeping with the great development of natural resources in this country my constituency of Melville, which up to the present has been largely agricultural, will soon be playing a major role. In the south-eastern part of the constituency, ten miles from the town of Esterhazy and 3,100 feet below the surface of the earth lie vast, untapped deposits of potash, probably richer in content and greater in abundance than any place else on earth.

In preparation for the removal of the potassium bearing ore, construction of the world's finest potash mine, to be operated by International Minerals and Chemical Corporation, commenced last year. The Utah Company of the Americas has the contract for this immense project, the cost of which will exceed $20 million. Development of the project has already brought an additional million dollar payroll to the area and there are further expectations for the future since 16 other companies are actively engaged in planning and exploration in the province. Surely this is an optimistic sign for further investment and development.

Areas such as I have mentioned are particularly fortunate, and while enterprises of the nature mentioned do stimulate the local economy the basic problems of agriculture still remain. While the farmer feels that the commodities that he sells do not bring him a return commensurate with what he has to pay for the goods he buys, he also has the added burden of increased costs for services, utilities and education. The only means local governments have of procuring revenue is from the taxation of real property and in the areas with which I am most vitally concerned taxes have more than doubled since the war while there has been a steady decrease in the prices of the farmers' primary products. The greatest costs have been those for education, which brings me to the point that there is a necessity for more consideration of the needs of education at the federal level.

Under the terms of the British North America Act education is solely a matter for provincial legislation. However, close to 100 years have passed since the B.N.A. Act came into being. With the passing of these years, times and conditions have changed to such an extent that some of our best educators are suggesting that the federal government should be giving consideration to the establishment of a federal department of education with a minister of the government at its head.

The purpose of such a department would not be, of course, to take away any control of educational matters from the provinces but rather to assist in every way possible the existing provincial departments of education. I believe all political parties have acknowledged that the federal government has some responsibility for education but none has done too much about it. Quite possibly the reason for this lack of action is that no particular department or no particular individual has any definite responsibility for education.

Following the first world war the government of the day felt it should be doing more for education and, as a result, money was found for the establishment of technical schools in the larger cities across Canada. Then, education was promptly forgotten by the federal government until after the second world war when a federal-provincial agreement was drawn up to provide further technical education and the establishment of a number of composite schools across the country. This agreement has run its course and education has become dormant except in the minds of a few who are promoting its interests. Recently the great scientific advances made by the Russians have again stirred us to the point where we are giving more thought to advanced education.

It is suggested, that it would take something less than a world war or events of great significance to move us as a nation to thinking about education. The establishment of a federal department of education by the government would give official recognition to education. It would give us an official body with whom we could deal when making proposals about education. Up to the moment, no one has had any official status so far as education is concerned, and ideas about education have only been aired in this House of Commons.

A department of education such as I have mentioned could, among other things, do research in connection with education, even if that research were just to determine what the government's responsibility for education is. While the federal government's responsibility should extend to all levels of education, from elementary to university, a projected study by research personnel might come to other definite conclusions; in any event, such considerations should not be left to mere chance. Education merits intensive consideration by government and deserves something more than a passing opinion.

It is obvious that, especially in the rural areas of our country with sparse populations, any advances in education will be slow in coming if the financial burden is to be borne at the local level. It is true we have projects which will expand our industry and increase our population, thereby assisting in a great measure in distributing the burden of taxation. However, in the immediate future we must concentrate more on cutting costs than in promoting the ideas of "salvation by subsidy".

Whenever I think of cutting costs my thoughts invariably turn, in so far as agriculture is concerned, to our prairie port of Churchill which, with extended facilities, could do much more to produce a stable economy in the west. Even today prairie farmers save 12 cents per bushel on grain transported through Churchill and British buyers receive their purchases for 6¼ cents per bushel less via the Churchill route. However, it is unfortunate that of the 55 ships which visited Churchill last year practically all of them arrived in ballast. This, of course, offers some advantage in a quick turn around, but before any port can operate on a normal basis there must be at least some balance between import and export cargo. In so far as Churchill is concerned, the real difficulty is in finding a manner in which imports can be increased. The fact that so many ships arrived in ballast simply means that the Churchill hinterland is not importing from overseas. The area is not highly populated and naturally its buying power is limited. This condition may be attributed also to the fact that the purchasing habits are directed to other sources of supply.

In the west, as in other parts of Canada, our buying habits are influenced largely by the intense barrage of advertising propaganda directed at us through practically every medium of communication. This results in the demand by the consumer for goods from across the border being much greater than the demand for goods manufactured in Britain or continental Europe. However, it might be well to remember that only recently a contract was awarded in the United States to a British company bidding on a multimillion dollar project because the tender submitted underbid other competitors, largely from the United States, by $5 million. This is only used as an illustration, of course, to demonstrate that if price and quality are right, the supply which is nearest is not necessarily the best. Since it is not my intention to cast any unkind reflections on our neighbours to the south, or in any other direction, I think I might make progress in a somewhat different vein.

(Translation):

Another type of progress is very evident in this house. I am referring to a simultaneous interpretation system, but I would point out that it is also a serious drawback. Several members who could be bilingual are limiting the extent and value of their contributions in this house by speaking only in English. Let us hope that, in these times of great national unity, where there is greater cohesion among our members than any party has ever known, the results of this scientific age will not prevent these feelings of confidence and mutual understanding from being expressed verbally in both languages.

(Text):

May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, on another note of progress which arises from events which have been taking place in my own constituency. I am able to draw the attention of the house to the "forward look" which is apparent in the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I refer to an important milestone which has been reached in the integration of the Indian into our modern society. Recently two treaty Indians were appointed to serve as assistant agents on the reserves in the File Hills-Qu'Appelle Indian agency. These appointments, I am sure, reflect the confidence of the department and its officials in the inherent capabilities of the Indians, and will act as an inspiration to other original Canadian citizens, as well as serving to prove that there are no strictions on ability and opportunity. May I suggest that these and other actions are further indications of the progressive nature of this government, and of the enterprise and initiatives of those devoted and able individuals who carry out its policies.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the budget introduced the other night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) was something of an in-between budget. It was not a balanced budget, yet the forecast deficit was less than the forecast deficit of a year ago. It was a fence-sitting budget. It was a budget that was neither fish nor fowl and was directed mainly towards reducing the criticism in the press of this country without, at the same time, subjecting the Canadian people to the full tax burden necessary to bring about a balanced budget.

During this debate one is able to discuss a great many matters, and therefore I have the opportunity to refer to the same matter which was initially referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), namely the desirability of an immediate appointment to the post of minister of external affairs. There is disturbing news in today's press that United Kingdom Prime Minister, Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, in putting forward what I consider to be very important proposals which might have resulted in an easing of world tension, has been opposed by the United States, France and Germany. In this context I think it is more important than ever that Canada has at the earliest possible time a full time minister of external affairs, and that Canada should put forward continuing proposals directed toward easing international tension. I am hopeful that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), in the reply which he promised in the course of a few days in answer to a question of mine this afternoon, will support and strengthen the position taken by the prime minister of the United Kingdom.

This is no time in the history of the world to cling to inflexible positions which have been taken for many years. I believe, and the C.C.F. believe, that this is a time for negotiation, that this is a time for the putting forward of proposals directed at easing international tensions. I of course do not know who the Prime Minister may appoint to this very important portfolio, but I do hope that in considering the many able candidates, any one of whom might fulfil this post extremely well, the Prime Minister should not discount either youth or ability, that he should appoint the person who is likely to bring to this portfolio the best of judgment, tact and flexibility, keeping always in mind the necessity of achieving security and peace throughout the world.

I listened to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Ormiston) this afternoon, and I would like to say that I agree with his statement that the port of Churchill should be used to the greatest possible extent. This is a port which has assisted the economy of the prairie provinces. It is a port which is now just coming into its own. On the prairies we have been most happy to support the building of the St. Lawrence seaway, but in doing that and believing that it is in the best interests of this country, we submit that here also is a good case for an extension of and improvement in the storage facilities for grain at Churchill, and for greater use of this developing and important seaport.

We are now debating, Mr. Speaker, the amendment to this budget which was put forward by the official opposition. Basically we see in this debate at this time that there is little difference between the stand taken by the government and the stand taken by the official opposition. It has been said in the press that the budget debate lacks interest, that there has been little by way of keen debate. I think that is true, and the reason there has been so little interest taken in this debate is that the position of the Conservative party and the position of the Liberal party is almost identical.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: All that the Liberal party has been able to do is to say to the Conservative party, "You haven't kept your promises." While they have been talking for a balanced budget, I have not heard them criticizing the government for a deficit. I have yet to hear them say what steps they would take at this time to balance the budget. Mr. Speaker, I am not so much interested in whether the budget is balanced at this time as I am in having that kind of budget which will bring about the greatest amount of production in Canada and the very best possible distribution of that production.

This is not a forward looking budget. This is not a budget with a plan. This is not a budget that is designed to give leadership to the country to bring about full employment and maximum prosperity. This is a budget of tax increases. This is a budget with a sales tax increase. This is a budget which says to people who have had certain tax exemptions in the past when they were hospitalized, "Your taxes because of reduced exemption will be greater, and this increased revenue will help us bring the budget more nearly in balance."

This, Mr. Speaker, is the budget of a tired old party. The government has not been in office long but it is exhibiting the same characteristics as the former Liberal administration which had been in office for 22 years. This government is prepared to mark time, to leave it to the great corporations, to leave it to so-called private enterprise to see whether or not there will be greater production and a greater measure of prosperity in the years to come. There is a place in our nation for a political party that is a real alternative to either of the two tired old capitalist parties. We submit that although the word "socialism" has been greatly criticized in days gone by, the philosophy which we represent provides the only answer to the great challenges which confront Canada both internally and externally.

There should have been presented to this house a budget which provided for greater development and increased social services. This is not the time for a fence-sitting budget. This is the time for a budget of expansion. I would suggest that the government should have a special department devoted to economic planning and development. I would not ask that there be an additional minister. After all, with a large number of cabinet ministers, soon to be strengthened by an almost equally large number of parliamentary secretaries, there should be no need for another minister. There are two ministers who are marking time without any portfolio, also the Secretary of State and the Solicitor General, both of whom I am certain are doing a very good job, are under-employed. There could be an amalgamation of these portfolios and thus the opportunity to provide a new department of government which would look to the expansion of this country.

Is there something that should be done now to provide for full employment? I would think so. The statistics with regard to unemployment are still disturbing. The Minister of Finance, in the best forecast he could make, did not predict anything approaching full employment. I suggest that one of the first things that should be done is to bring forward a greatly expanded winter works program which would provide opportunities for employment next winter when seasonal unemployment is likely to be on the increase. The C.C.F. believe in full employment at all times, but we realize that it is more difficult to provide employment in the winter time. Now is the time for planning; now is the time for consultation; now is the time for discussions with the provinces so that this useful program can be greatly extended so as to remove as far as may be possible seasonal unemployment.

The Minister of Finance has himself indicated that the budget does not provide for special accounting for capital funds, and I would suggest that there should be a separation of the main fields of expenditure into two general accounts, and that there should be a large capital fund established for the purpose of capital expansion. This fund, amounting, I suggest, to $2 billion, could be used by the government whenever it seemed necessary and desirable to supplement and complement private investment so as to assure full employment and greater prosperity in this country. There is plenty of scope for increases in capital works.

Another thing which such a department as I have proposed—a department of planning and development—should be doing is to survey the road and highway needs of this country. The government has clung to the single road policy of the former administration, namely the trans-Canada highway. This government should not be satisfied with maintaining that program; it should provide a program of co-operation with the provinces in order to construct a second trans-Canada highway, to build other main highways running north and south and, in short, to supply a modern highway system for this country. Such a program could not be considered as a hand-out or as frivolous expenditure. This would be a project which would return great dividends to the Canadian people in years to come.

There is another area of social investment which is crying out for action, and that is the field of education to which reference has already been made this afternoon. We are faced with a need for more schools, the need for increased facilities at our universities and the need for capital assistance toward the building of educational institutions all across the country. I wish to commend expenditures such as this to hon. members and I submit that they constitute important uses to which a capital expansion fund could be put.

There is another important field of capital expansion which needs attention, and that is the provision of increased hospital facilities across our nation. It is true that the government and previous governments have been providing some money for hospital construction and expansion, but the amounts have been far too small. In addition to general hospitals, there is an urgent need for the expansion of hospitals designed to take care of the mentally sick people in our nation. Here is another important field of social investment which requires action at this time.

However it appears that the government intends to mark time for the next 12 months. This is a "stand pat" budget—a status quo budget. In the submission of the C.C.F. group we should have a budget which would increase the productive facilities of our nation. I have never been one who has advocated government ownership merely for the sake of government ownership, but I do believe that public ownership has an increasingly important role to play in a modern society. The possibilities of public ownership have never been developed in this country as they should have been. Here is an area for expansion which if developed would greatly improve the standards of life in our nation.

No matter what has been stated to the contrary, the C.C.F. believes very much in private ownership of private property, the private ownership of small business, the private ownership of certain industries which are in fact, competitive and where the exploitation of employees does not exist. We also believe in supporting co-operative ownership, and in this respect I hope that the government will consider bringing to parliament a national co-operative act such as is being requested by the co-operative union and other co-operative organizations across this country. We think that co-operative ownership is one of the very best methods of ownership at any time. It is democratic ownership; it enables people to bring together large amounts of capital in order to do the jobs that only large amounts of capital are capable of doing, and at the same time it enables them to do this on a democratic basis and to return the profits, or savings as they are usually termed, to the consumer or to the producer as the case may be.

The next form of ownership is corporate ownership which is very rapidly developing in our nation into monopoly ownership. We see the means of production in this country accumulating steadily in the hands of fewer and fewer people. We see one large industry after another concentrated either in a single company or in the hands of very few companies, and it is to offset this type of monopoly ownership that we suggest it is the duty of government to develop public ownership and co-operative ownership.

I think there are important fields where public ownership should be extended. For example, we should like to see future trans-Canada pipe lines, either for gas or oil, publicly owned. Indeed, we believe that the pipe lines now belonging to the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Company should be brought under public ownership. We say that national trans-Canada pipe lines which are, in fact, a natural monopoly should be publicly owned. We feel, also, that the steel industry which, we submit, stands in need of great expansion in this country, is a field in which public ownership might be very appropriately developed. This is not to say that some segment of the present steel industry would not lend itself to public ownership, but certainly here is a place for some measure of public ownership in the future development of this industry.

The fertilizer, drug and chemical industries are more and more under monopoly control. Here is a place where the development of public ownership would, we believe, bring about a reduction in the price of the commodity to the consumers and make a good return on investment to our nation.

There are other areas in which public ownership could be usefully developed. We submit that although the Conservative and Liberal parties have turned their backs on public ownership and have in general opposed any expansion in this field, if our nation is to meet the challenges of unemployment, greater competition in export trade and the general challenges of the twentieth century, then the field of public ownership should be greatly expanded.

There is another area in which we feel there is room for the development of public ownership and that is in the field of credit. Interest rates in this country are becoming alarmingly high. The exorbitant interest rates that are being allowed and promoted by this government will endanger expansion and constitute such a serious threat that the trend toward expansion may be being reversed. I have spoken on other occasions in this house advocating a great reduction in certain interest rates and in certain controls. I believe the chartered banks in this country are doing an abominable job as far as developing loans in the small loans field is concerned and with respect to providing loans to people with low incomes. This has resulted in a great explosion of activity by small loans companies, moneylenders and loan sharks, as I call them. Although this government may wish the chartered banks in Canada to develop the field of small loans there is no indication that it does and even if there were there is no guarantee that the chartered banks would do that. Many of them apparently are quite happy to take the easy business that comes to them without having to bother with a large number of small loans. They merely pick off a few easy and lucrative loans in this field.

I suggest that we have here a field where public ownership could be developed. I do not intend to suggest that the federal government should immediately socialize the chartered banks but in all sincerity I say to the Minister of Finance that here is a wonderful opportunity for those who say they believe in competition and free enterprise to go to the chartered banks and give them a chance to compete by establishing in this field a publicly owned system under which small loans could be made by chartered banks.

I concede that the previous administration and other governments in the past have come close to this by one means and another. There has been established an industrial development bank for intermediate credit. A system of publicly owned chartered banks would provide credit at low cost to prospective borrowers and would provide real competition in this field for the chartered banks.

The policy of high interest and tight money followed by this government is just as badly conceived and is just as great a detriment to Canada and its national welfare as it was when it was inaugurated by the former administration. I do not always agree with the remarks of the Minister of Finance but I did concur in the strong statements he used to make condemning the former government for allowing the Bank of Canada interest rate to go higher and higher and in condemning the previous administration for its so-called tight money policy.

We now have a Conservative, high interest rate, government. This is a government that is saddling the ordinary people of this country through their private borrowings—and the municipalities and provincial governments along with them—with unnecessarily high interest rates. It is time this ill-conceived policy was reversed and I suggest that public ownership is one means of bringing about the desired reversal.

There is another field in which public ownership might be developed. As a matter of fact, I notice that some of the great corporations of this country are now beginning to say there is a need for some central credit organization to which they could go to obtain long term credit in order to compete in international trade with the Soviet union and eastern bloc countries. Here is an opportunity not just for an export-import credit insurance act which we now have and which guarantees loans made from the banks, but for a public organization with public funds which could ensure that Canada has an opportunity to expand her exports and to increase her overall trade.

Our trade is reaching a real crisis. Although we develop or expand new markets from time to time we soon find them in serious jeopardy because trade is so greatly unbalanced. In 1957 Poland purchased from us over $16 million worth of goods. In that year, we purchased from Poland just over $1 million worth of goods. In 1958 trade with Poland almost ceased. In 1958 we exported to the Soviet union almost $9 million worth of products and in the same year we imported from that country less than $6 million worth of products. We should not be surprised that the present trade negotiations with Poland and Russia are encountering great difficulties, not because these countries do not wish to purchase from us but because our trade is so greatly unbalanced. I believe these countries stand ready to purchase from us at least in volumes equal to their purchases in the past if we would buy from them.

I suggest that an international trade bank or trade organization be established with funds available to carry on a government program established by a department concerned with national development to bring about expanded trade and a much better balance of trade. These are some of the ways through which we could expand the productive capacity of our nation.

In expanding our productive capacity we should not overlook the need for a great advance in social security and welfare measures. At no time should we complacently say that we have gone far enough, that our old age pension is as high as it should be or that our health program is satisfactory. Instead we should develop and improve these programs year by year. I suggest that action should be taken this session to bring about a contributory system of old age pensions on a much higher level than at present and related to recent annual income. The C.C.F. program in this field is well developed. We feel that such a program should carry with it a basic old age pension of not less than $75 a month and a contributory program providing pensions above that amount.

Some hon. members may throw up their hands in horror and say that this is a program the nation cannot afford. I can remember former ministers of finance telling us that old age pension programs, family allowance programs and health insurance schemes are not a real burden on the nation in the sense of expenditures for war or defence but rather are basically transferred payments for certain well defined social services.

I submit we can afford these services and I submit that this kind of improved services would be a beneficial investment for our nation. As a parliament we owe it to our elderly citizens to act to improve their income. This government promised action. What did we get? We got two voluminous volumes of the Clark report. You can go through that report with a fine tooth comb or a magnifying glass and you will not find on which side of the fence Dr. Clark stands, whether he is for an improvement in our system now, related to the system in the United States, or whether he thinks we have gone far enough.

I imagine it is just the kind of report that this government wanted; it is a report of confusion; it is a report without any exactness; and it is a report that will enable this government, if it wishes, to delay, to procrastinate and to forget its very important promise to the Canadian people.

We of the C.C.F. for many years have advocated a system of national health insurance. We are pleased that in recent years there has been some progress toward this end. As a member of the C.C.F. party I am very proud that the province of Saskatchewan, as far back as 1947, pioneered the field of public hospitalization in our country, not without difficulties, not without many problems. But with all of those problems we in Saskatchewan have developed a pattern for hospitalization that has been copied and is being copied both in Canada and in the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Argue: I would suggest that now is the time for a further great advancement in the field of health. Now is the time to bring into our health program, medical and dental coverage. Instead of a forward movement in the budget what has the government said? It has said that if somebody is unfortunate enough to be hospitalized, he will pay more taxes in the future than he has paid in the past. That might be an acceptable point of view, in the light of the contribution the government is making for the present insurance program covering expenses. But by going to hospital one incurs only a part of the expenses which are brought on because of ill health. Surely, nothing is more important than the health of our nation and this is a field where, if the government acted, I am certain it would receive not only unanimous support in this house but the acclaim of the Canadian people.

This is no time for a fence-sitting budget, Mr. Speaker; this is no time for this in-between, stand-pat budget, and this is no time to listen to nor to follow the suggestions and the criticisms of the official opposition because theirs has been a negative approach. Both in the amendment and in the statements that have been made all the Liberal party has done in essence is to say, "you promised a lot and you are not fulfilling your promises".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, no.

Mr. Argue: Whether it takes a minute or whether it takes 40 minutes to say it, it scarcely adds up to a policy worthy of the official opposition in this house. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that now is the time for action, now is the time for a great development program, now is the time to embark on a program of development in the field of social capital, in the field of production capital and in the field of necessary and improved social security measures. We ask the government to go forward in those fields and we shall support every measure introduced in this house to bring about that worthy objective.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in the old days before the building of the lighthouses, the poor noddies of many a Newfoundland outport prayed for wrecks—aye, and with easy consciences. Only the few hundreds of them who took to deep sea voyaging in those days had any awareness of the outside world, or of its people. All the world, excepting their own outports, was either down north or up along. It was a grand, rich place where all men wore shirts and collars each day of the week and ate pure figgy-duffs. The folk up along, therefore, had the easy end of life and why should they not contribute something of their goods and gear to the honest Atlantic province's noddies?

In those days they used to say the wrecker's prayer, which hon. members will find, if they care to consult it again, in the Penguin volume of Canadian verse at page 109. I shall quote only a few verses from it before resuming my debate. The wrecker's prayer went like this:

Give us a wrack or two, good Lard,
For winter in Tops'il Tickle bes hard,
Wid grey frost creepin's like mortal sin
And perishin' lack of bread in the bin.

A grand rich wrack, us do humbly pray,
Busted abroad at the break o' day
An' hove clear in 'crost Tops'il Reef,
Wid victuals an' gear to beguile our grief.

God of reefs an' tides an' sky,
Heed Ye our need an' hark to our cry!
Bread by the bag an' beef by the cask,
Ease for sore bellies bes all we ask.

One grand wrack—or maybe two?—
Wid gear an' victuals to see us through
Til spring starts up like the leap of day
An' the fish strike back into Tops'il Bay.

One rich wrack—for Thy hand bes strong!
A barque or a brig from up along
Bemused by Thy twisty tides, O Lard!
For winter in Tops'il Tickle bes bard.

Loud an' long will us sing Yer praise,
Marciful Fadder, O Ancient of Days,
Master of fog an' tide an' reef!
Heave us a wrack to beguile our grief.

Many previous members of parliament have spoken in this chamber, Mr. Speaker, of the disabilities which the Atlantic provinces have incurred since confederation. Many speakers have asked in effect that the government of the day "Heave us a wrack to beguile our grief". Recently the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, in a series of ten editorial comments, pointed out some of the disabilities of the Atlantic region and suggested some possible cures. I have not the time in this debate to discuss this series of editorials in detail and I therefore took the liberty a few moments ago of placing a collection of these editorials in the boxes of hon. members at the House of Commons post office. In summary the recommendations, which were the result of considered editorial concern, can be broken down into six. The first was special tax concessions, either in the form of tax holidays or in the form of accelerated depreciation allowances, the latter not as attractive to us in the east because accelerated depreciation is only of benefit to those firms already operating at a profit.

The second major step would be a revision of the national freight rate structure to end the pattern of present horizontal per ton mile rate increases. In this regard there is a growing sentiment in the Atlantic provinces that we do not really want a national freight rate policy if that national policy means one policy right across the country. What we want in the Atlantic provinces is a national freight rate policy composed of separate regional policies, for what will do the job for other regions will not do the job for us.

The third recommendation of the editors of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald was special low rate capital loans. In this regard it is noteworthy that the United Kingdom government now has in operation a Distribution of Industries Act which provides for low rate, long term capital loans to establish industries of benefit to the entire nation in those areas of the nation which have not in the past prospered from industrial expansion.

Fourth, the newspaper believed that special federal consideration should be given to the building of new highways and water transportation facilities. In this regard I believe that the Atlantic provinces members generally accept the proposition that the first phase of the trans-Canada highway project should be pursued with continuing vigour to completion on schedule but that it should then, and only then, be succeeded by a subsequent phase of highway development which we feel should take into account the incapacity of the Atlantic provinces to share fully on the present sharing basis. I have in mind that the province of Newfoundland finds it difficult to finance its share, and consideration should continue to be given to the possibility of equating its contribution to highway construction with that of other Canadians. In my province we shall continue to hope and to press that in the subsequent phase of the trans-Canada highway some of our larger centres now omitted in phase one, notably my own city of Halifax, will be linked to the trans-Canada highway to provide that freight may be moved by highway and thus contribute salutary effects on competitive transport charges and so that other Canadians may come to us and we may go to other Canadians.

The newspaper also advocated greater regional allocation of defence and other contracts for publicly financed undertakings. I shall have more to say about that in a few moments.

Finally, it advocated increased attention to certain sections of the United States tariff program having to do with the importation into that country of such unrefined Canadian resources as gypsum which is now shipped in bulk from my province for subsequent processing in the United States, therefore producing less prosperity for us than it might otherwise do.

In considering any budget speech, Mr. Speaker, we in this house are sometimes bound to be animated not only by partisan considerations but by regional considerations. In this regard it will be of interest to hon. members to recall the final report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, better known as the Gordon economic report. I want to say quite frankly that I am one of those who in the heat of election campaigns misused this report. The report has suffered a bad fate because it has been said sometimes that all it recommended for the maritime provinces was the deportation of our skilled workers. Now that I am able to contemplate the report with more consideration, there is much more in it than simply sloughing it off for that one unfortunate wording. At page 404 of the final report the authors of the report state as follows:

> An objective of economic policy should be to integrate and improve the basic economic framework of the Atlantic region, including in particular the transportation facilities of the area with a view to facilitating and encouraging economic growth within the region. This is not likely to be accomplished by a multiplicity of uncoordinated measures providing aid on an ad hoc basis.

It is this point, Mr. Speaker, which I shall try to expand in greater detail following the supper recess. It is in essence that we in the Atlantic provinces would like to see an early end to hand-out government. We want to be regarded as being Canadians on our own feet. We do not want to have to pray, sir, "good Lard, heave us a wrack."

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

AIR TRANSPORT

AUSTRALIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONTINUED DISCUSSIONS ON AGREEMENT

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): I wonder if I could have the permission of the house to revert to motions to make an announcement regarding the Canada-Australia bilateral air agreement which has been under discussion in Canada and Australia at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to interrupt proceedings at this stage to revert to motions to make an announcement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: The civil aviation delegation from Canada and Australia, meeting in Melbourne to review the air agreement between the two countries, decided that the present agreement which was negotiated in 1946 was now inadequate to meet the needs of the coming jet era in world aviation. In particular, it did not fully recognize the very close political and commercial affinity of the two countries which was traditional in its origin and has been substantially developed in the postwar years. Since the matters involved were of a highly technical nature, the discussions could not be concluded in the time available at Melbourne, and the discussions have now been adjourned but are expected to resume shortly, possibly in Canada. Meanwhile the existing air services between Canada and Australia will continue on a weekly basis. It is hoped that a new bilateral air transport agreement between Canada and Australia may be concluded before the end of the year.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, there is a new spirit of buoyancy in the Atlantic provinces, a spirit of optimism that at long last we are, in the east, moving away from being backbenchers in a family of Canadian equals. We do not want to continue indefinitely in the Atlantic provinces living in an economy in which our livelihoods depend upon handouts from government. In the words of the premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Robert Stanfield—if I may borrow a phrase from that distinguished parliamentarian the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill); one of the really great Canadians of our time—we have been busy in Nova Scotia, too busy bailing to fix the boat. We want to stop bailing and get at the job of basic reform.

What do we hear from the opposition spokesmen, both in this house and in the local legislatures? Their hope for the Atlantic provinces continues to exist in the dream of the wreckers, "Give us a wrack or two, good Lard, For winter in Tops'il Tickle bes hard."

Everything is black, everything is wrong in the maritime provinces. It is not part of my business to advise hon. members of the opposition why it is they lost the election and will stay where they now are, but as long as they are out of tune with the youthful, vigorous, viable and vital optimism of the people of the maritimes and preach only wreckage, they will consistently stay out of touch with the thinking of the people. We know what it is to be backbenchers in the Canadian family. We want an end of it. There is a great deal of lip service paid to Canadianism and national unity. We believe in national unity. We maritimers were here when Canada was born. We want to be equals and we want to do a basic job of reforming our economy and not live by continued handouts.

I quote from the Ottawa correspondent of the Times of London, who wrote in that distinguished world newspaper after a visit to the Atlantic area:

> There is an unmistakable atmosphere of hope, much of it engendered by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, coupled with a determination to fight against the tide of depression. This is particularly evident among the younger generation. They do not want their provinces to be perpetually responsible to federal aid as a bolster to their economy.

Mr. Speaker, I have the opportunity in this budget debate to address myself to only three specific subjects having to do with the economic well-being of the peoples of the Atlantic area. The first of these has to do with the impact of the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway upon us and upon the use of Atlantic ports. I am bound by the rules of this house not to address myself to a debate which takes place in the other place. I am not free to debate what has or is about to be said in the other chamber. I know, however, that on this Wednesday the other place is to debate a resolution having to do with the impact of the St. Lawrence seaway upon the ports of Halifax and Saint John.

Statements which have been made outside that assembly by the principal architects of this resolution indicate that they have only recently discovered that the St. Lawrence seaway will have an impact upon the Atlantic coast area. One of these two gentlemen is a former member for Halifax and the other is a former premier of Nova Scotia. On Wednesday they will debate this resolution, within two and one-half days of the first cargo moving through the St. Lawrence seaway. They now discover the seaway will have an effect on Halifax and Saint John.

After 90 years of waiting, and only 60 hours from the opening of the seaway, what are we told by them? We are told that the St. Lawrence seaway will cause a loss of business to the ports of Halifax and Saint John. We are told this by people who had the responsibility of putting forward that view when, in fact, they supported the federal administration of the day, indeed one of them as premier of Nova Scotia. However, not a word was uttered, not a word passed their lips, not a word from the lips of the surviving Liberal members in this house. I have been here since October, 1957 and I have not heard one Liberal member from the Atlantic area—there are precious few of them left—say a word about the St. Lawrence seaway. Why is this so? It is because they were committed to it by the last government. It was commenced by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), who I regret to note is not in his seat tonight. He started it; it was his idea as minister of transport to put it through, and after having conceived it as a member of the cabinet he quit that job and moved into the seaway authority to make sure it got built. Then he moved back into politics, expecting a different result from that which accrued in June, 1957.

I will pass over this. The vicissitudes of political life come to young and old alike. He not only moved back and forth between a position of governmental responsibility and that of functionary in charge of construction, Mr. Speaker, but when he left he left the further construction of the seaway in the hands of a gentleman who is now the executive vice-president of the national Liberal federation. So we have a definite Liberal policy of building the seaway. All right, Mr. Speaker; the young sentiment in the east is not opposed to the St. Lawrence seaway because we do not feel we can seek to acquire greater justice for our people by denying it to others. Lest anybody think in other places that this is a discovery, two and one-half days before the opening of the seaway, which is now going to have a deleterious effect upon us, let me say these very people are the people who had the capacity to be meaningful in their representations to the government.

Mr. Speaker, what is the Liberal policy as regards transport through the St. Lawrence seaway? That policy was conceived by the hon. member for Laurier as minister of transport and then as head of the St. Lawrence seaway authority. But he is not satisfied. Nobody in the back benches of the Liberal party speaks about this in the house, only in the other place. But here we have to be beatified by public awareness every four or five years. On January 21, 1959 the hon. member for Laurier expanded the Liberal transportation policy in the St. Lawrence basin. He was not satisfied to put the seaway through and to build it. He now has another plan, and you will not hear about this in the other place. At page 155 of Hansard of January 21, 1959, asked by the government to give some idea of things which he might undertake to improve the economy he said:

> The first is for the immediate appointment of a board of engineers for the purpose of studying and reporting upon the economic advantages of linking the St. Lawrence river with the port of New York via the Richelieu river, lake Champlain and the Hudson river.

Then the hon. member went on to say that he wished he had time to go into the matter more fully, and we all wish he had had more time. Then he went on:

> All I can say at this time is this: If it were given consideration and put into effect by a recommendation, of course following a report of a board of engineers, it would put to work thousands of people in an area where work is required.

Certainly it would put into employment thousands of people. Here we have a seaway which has been paid for by the taxes of all Canadians. The hon. member for Laurier initiated the seaway and put it through. Its first cargo will go through on Saturday, as the Toronto Telegram says, meaningfully enough "a cargo of politicians." We have already had enunciated for us a new Liberal transport policy. Now we are going to dig a ditch between Montreal and New York. This would mean the complete eradication of Atlantic coast ports.

I draw the attention of the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) to the fact that when I spoke in the house last year I mentioned some quotations he had used in connection with regional projects. He asked me at that time where I had got these quotations. I said that I was paraphrasing, and he said, "If you must paraphrase, paraphrase accurately." Well, it turned out I was paraphasing accurately, and I have come tonight with the quotations. The Fredericton Gleaner of March 19, 1958, just twelve days before the election, quoted the hon. Leader of the Opposition as saying that "a policy of scattered, unco-ordinated projects would create jealousy harmful to national unity." The Montreal Star of March 18, 1958, quoted him as saying that regional projects create "regional jealousies which could affect Canadian unity." Mr. Speaker, at a time when the St.Lawrence seaway is about to come into operation for the benefit, as we in the east hope, of all Canadians, although we have our fears, for the Liberal party to now come along and advocate that we divert everything travelling east from Montreal south to New York, most of it through United States territory, is that not a regional project likely to create strains on national unity? I suggest that the hon. Leader of the Opposition get into the habit of sending copies of his speeches to his seatmate so that both of them know what each other is saying.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt that the hon. member quoted me quite correctly, of course, but I would ask if he objects to this kind of canal junction between the St. Lawrence and New York through Quebec province? Would he object to that?

Mr. Morris: Yes, absolutely, until the St. Lawrence seaway is reasonably well paid for. I have, as do many of my constituents, the highest respect for the hon. Leader of the Opposition. In fact, we think he is too good to lead the bunch he does lead, but he is at perfect liberty to preside over a group of prayerful wreckers. He may smile at my answer, but it is more meaningful than some answers I have heard from the Liberal side of the house. I oppose the suggestion absolutely until the seaway is reasonably well paid for.

I would now like to give the hon. members of the house some idea of the antecedents to that opposition. Mr. Speaker, on September 12, 1864 a large dinner was held in the former Halifax Hotel in Halifax. The decision to advance to confederation was not taken in Charlottetown but in Halifax; but thereby hangs another tale. I doubt whether hon. members opposite consult the Creighton study of Sir John A. Macdonald, but if they do they will find the story there. At that meeting Sir Georges Etienne Cartier said this:

> I have heard since I have been in Halifax the objection thrown out that there is much danger that you would be absorbed. It will be very easy for me to dispel such fears. I answer them by a question: Have you any objection to be absorbed by commerce? Halifax, through the Intercolonial railroad will be the recipient of trade which now benefits Portland, Boston and New York . . . It is as evident as the sun shines at noon that when the Intercolonial railway is built—and it must necessarily be built if confederation takes place—the consequence will be that between Halifax and Liverpool there will be steamers almost daily leaving and arriving at the former—in fact it will be a ferry between Halifax and Liverpool.

The Hon. George Brown said:

> But far in advance of all other advantages would be this, that union of all the provinces would break down all trade barriers between us, and throw open at once to all a combined market of four millions of people. You in the east would send us your fish and your coals and your West India produce, while we would send you in return the flour and the grain and the meats you now buy in Boston and New York.

Sir John A. Macdonald said:

> What will be the consequence to this city, prosperous as it is, from that communication? . . . Build this road and Halifax will soon become one of the great emporiums of the world. All the great resources of the west will come over the immense railways of Canada to the bosom of your harbour.

Let us be bipartisan in this series of promises to the Atlantic ports. Let us quote a Liberal prime minister, the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who moved in the House of Commons on July 30, 1903 for leave to introduce a bill for the construction of a national transcontinental railway. On page 7671 of Hansard of that date he is reported as having said:

> Let me observe that if we have used American ports, it is not because for five months in the year our own ports are ice-bound. Everybody knows that our ports in winter are just as open as the American harbours. Everybody knows that if we have used American ports and the bonding privilege, it was not because our harbours were ice-bound in winter, but simply because we had no railways to reach them.

I should like to cite chapter 71 of the acts of 1903 authorizing aid in the construction of a railroad, and sections 42, 43 and 45. I should also like to cite section 13 of the acts of 1911, chapter 6; chapter 20 of the acts of 1914, section 6, and section 21 of chapter 29 of the statutes of 1955, the last of which says:

> The board of directors of the Canadian National Railways shall so direct, provide and procure that all freight destined for export by sea that is consigned within Canada for carriage to National Railways either at point of origin or between that and the sea shall, unless it has been by its shippers specifically routed otherwise, be exported through Canadian seaports.

I draw the attention of the house to the ordering "shall" rather than the permissive "may", and I should like the government to give consideration to the manner in which the C.N.R. is complying with the statutory conditions and the earlier statutory citations all of which, I am advised, are still in force.

We in the Atlantic area have changed from an attitude of defeatism to one of buoyancy and optimism. We still have hard problems ahead, but we have had much experience in the handling of hard problems. I have here Thursday's edition of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald with the headline: "Record Investment for Atlantic Area this Year". This points out that the value of this year's investment spending in the Atlantic provinces will be increased by 10 per cent over spending last year despite the fact that the national investment intentions appear to be slightly lower than last year. In this regard it is interesting to note that in the investment intentions the manufacturing sector is particularly hopeful and that there are indications of a three-fold increase over 1958. Indeed, an accompanying statement from the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council says this indicates that "investors are aware of the manufacturing opportunities in the Atlantic provinces and are determined to take advantage of those opportunities by spending large sums to enlarge present enterprises and to establish new ones."

Despite all this, from both groups of the opposition we hear nothing but despondency and gloom. Nothing but gloom. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), another hon. member who is not in his seat tonight, has a solution for our seaway problems which may suggest itself to the hon. member for Laurier. The hon. member for Assiniboia possesses, not only knowledge about how to solve all problems but he has a solution before the problems even arise. Prior to the announcement of St. Lawrence seaway tolls he said: I want to say this—not for myself, and not on behalf of the members of my group in the house, but for the C.C.F. party—that we are opposed to all tolls on the seaway. He wanted no tolls at all. Taxes would be taken from British Columbia and taxes would be taken from Newfoundland, but there would be no tolls on the seaway. And this is from a group in the house which is now composed almost entirely of agrarian protesters and former employees of the international woodworkers association. These are all that exist, but they have a solution for everything. I have said here on a previous occasion that if the hon. member for Assiniboia were asked to express his opinion in connection with the international regulation of space I believe he would say: I cannot tell you exactly what form it will take, but it will not work unless you have deficiency payments.

We have now in this house two opposition groups, one of them dedicated to constructing yet another channel for diverting trade through United States ports, the other to no tolls. Hon. members will recall that on August 29, 1958, as reported in Hansard on pages 4311, 4312 and 4313, I showed that the total amount of exports of Canadian products leaving this country via United States ports for overseas destinations amounted to $154 million a year and that imports entering Canada from overseas points for Canadian destinations amounted to $239 million a year. And yet some hon. members wonder why the Atlantic provinces area has sometimes had to pray the good Lord to give us a wreck. It cannot be denied that our ports and our facilities have not been used to anything like the extent of which they are capable.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I speak briefly about one of the things which we in the Atlantic area think we can do, if it is to be done, as well and perhaps better than anybody else in the country? The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Pearkes) paid our area a visit during the latter part of last week, and he announced in Halifax that if there was any contemplation of an atomic submarine program we would build the submarines in Canada, not for appearance's sake or for the sake of prestige but in terms of useability. This is a reasonable argument. Maritimers are well aware of what is to be said in favour of things being done on the basis of serviceability rather than prestige. I note there has been a subsequent announcement by a Montreal firm in this connection saying that they were prepared to go ahead with this work. But this is one job which Atlantic companies believe, with all respect, they can do better than anybody else. We build ships, and we have built them for longer than other people. The Halifax Shipyards Limited, a division of A. V. Roe which is lineally directly related to Hawker Siddeley, the only United Kingdom firm now building nuclear submarines, is closer to more of the Royal Canadian Navy than any other shipyard; two-thirds of the ships and the officers and men are based on the Atlantic command at Halifax. This shipyard knows more than any other Canadian shipyard about the construction of atomic submarines or other vessels.

I say this because I am one of those who believe that Atlantic provinces rehabilitation depends in part at least upon the people themselves. We must not come here as whiners. We must come here prepared to exercise our own initiative and not only to point out our disabilities but to suggest ways in which they can be corrected. It has been estimated by competent economists that the lower level of economic activity in the Atlantic provinces area costs this country $300 million a year. No Canadian saves anything by subsidizing the maritimes. It will be better to help us up to our feet and let us make our own way.

One final word more, and I have finished. It has to do with Newfoundland. I am not the one and this is not the place to comment upon the recent controversies that have raged in the headlines between members of the federal government and the premier of Newfoundland but because I am a member from the Atlantic provinces—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let the hon. gentleman continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Does the house give unanimous consent to permitting the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Morris: I thank hon. members of the house and particularly hon. members of the opposition for that courtesy. I will not trespass long upon it. I simply wanted to say that hon. members from the Atlantic provinces are perhaps, because of geographic propinquity, more acutely aware of Newfoundland than are other hon. members of this house. While I do not feel that I am the one or that this is the time for comment upon recent controversies involving the federal government and the premier of Newfoundland I do say this. I believe and my people believe that the government of this country should rotate only between the Conservative and Liberal parties and not between those parties and the socialists. There is this bond of affection between us. We believe that government exists for people, not people for government, and underlying all the controversies are the people of Newfoundland themselves and their disabilities. If they have disabilities I am the lesser as a fellow Canadian and I therefore suggest for the earnest consideration of the premier of Newfoundland that in this tenth anniversary year of confederation of his province with Canada he consider the efficacy of inviting a tripartisan group of parliamentarians to his province so we could effectively discharge our duties to the people of Newfoundland, which are as great but no greater than our duties to all other Canadians.

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, as is customary during the budget debate we have heard speeches on a variety of subjects. I, however, would like to address myself to a subject that either by design or by accident has been scrupulously avoided by the members of the government in particular. The press of our country has made it no secret that it cannot understand why parliament and its members have not in any way at all debated the resignation of Commissioner Nicholson of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

As recently as two days ago on the national television program "Viewpoint", Mr. Blair Fraser, the alert and knowledgeable political observer—

Mr. Nesbitt: A good Grit.

Mr. Crestohl: I will quote Conservatives as well because this is an impartial subject unless it be that hon. gentlemen opposite have already prejudged that it is not an impartial subject. I shall quote sources of all kinds because I believe it is a matter affecting every hon. member of this house regardless of where he sits.

As I was about to state, Mr. Fraser remarked that he considers Commissioner Nicholson's resignation one of the most important items before parliament. He expressed astonishment at the fact that not a word has yet been said about it during the present budget debate. A similar opinion was expressed as far back as March 19 by the Ottawa Citizen which published an article under a three-column headline entitled, "Members Strangely Silent on Nicholson Resignation." Permit me to read the two brief opening paragraphs of this article:

> The strangest thing about the resignation of Royal Canadian Mounted Police Commissioner Leonard Nicholson is the virtual silence that has reigned in Ottawa since it was announced on Monday.
> Members of all political parties seem unhappy that he quit but nobody seems anxious to talk about it or to try and blow it up into an issue.

An hon. Member: So you are going to do it.

Mr. Crestohl: No, I shall not do it. Your party probably will be the one to make an issue of it. I am trying to suppress an issue.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss directly the cause of the resignation itself but I consider it an act of the greatest importance to parliament and indeed to the country when a top civil servant of the standing of the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police suddenly resigns because, as he himself has put it, he had no option and, as Mr. Maurice Jefferies of the Windsor Daily Star described it in the March 17 issue, he resigned in protest.

I believe that parliament has been and is delinquent in remaining so strangely silent during all this time. Not only should we have debated the matter long before today but I consider it was our duty to probe much further into the cause of this resignation and the reasons that lay behind it. We should know just what the commissioner meant when he said he resigned because he had no option. What did the commissioner mean when he said he resigned in protest? What was it he resigned in protest against? Why should parliament remain silent in the face of these two statements made by the commissioner? I believe they are vital to the very existence of our security. The simple announcement of the resignation by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) is not sufficient. The resignation came as a distressing surprise to the house and indeed to the entire country. Because of the unusual suddenness of this event I had expected that the government would have at once and of its own volition set up a probe to inquire into the background of this vital matter.

The government is the only authority that has the power to establish an inquiry and ferret out the reasons for this resignation. Much to my surprise and certainly to the surprise of the entire country as evidenced by the press the government allowed the significance of this event to lapse into the background. Obviously the government is quite anxious for this issue to remain in the background. I fear that unfortunately many painful implications can flow from the unexpected resignation of any of our top civil servants and particularly that of the chief of the organization which is responsible for the internal security of the country.

When a resignation results from normal retirement or perhaps from illness or incapacity, it could be a sad event but when a man resigns in the prime of his life with many more useful years of valuable and important service to give to his country and when in fact his resignation involves even a personal sacrifice we are definitely remiss in our duty if we do not explore to the utmost the reasons for such a resignation. In this particular case especially parliament should be concerned. The commissioner had a very high record and he said in his resignation he had but one more year to complete in order to be entitled to his full pension but nevertheless he sacrificed the advantages of that and resigned.

He would not normally resign under those circumstances or under circumstances which touched the interest and security of everyone in Canada. Nevertheless, he says he is constrained to resign, and he explains why he was unable to follow the course indicated by the Minister of Justice, with which he could not agree and which he apparently found to be inconsistent with his sense of duty. For an attitude such as this a civil servant deserves to be applauded by all Canadians. This is an exemplary form of behaviour, and it maintains the high standard of all our civil servants.

As I see it, it is the duty of parliament to protect and to safeguard the integrity of all our civil servants, especially those at the top who carry the burdens of responsibility. Moreover, it is the duty of parliament to sustain their independence. We must not expose them to any form of partisan pressure or influence at any time. We must hold inviolate their courage to discharge their duties regardless of the change of government or regardless of the change of a minister. Parliament has frequently applauded the fearlessness with which the Auditor General of Canada, for example, submits his reports and his recommendations. He has always been courageous and at times, Mr. Speaker, even daring in the frankness of the observations which he makes in his annual report to parliament and in his testimony when he appears before parliamentary committees, be it the committee on estimates or the committee on public accounts. I am sure that everyone in this house, and indeed the entire country, recognize and appreciate this independence of our Auditor General.

In the same category of top civil servants and their staffs for whom parliament must or should preserve the same freedom and independence, and who must be liberated from any anxiety which often follows a change of government, I would include all our deputy ministers, the chairman of the civil service commission, the chairman of the national research council, the chairmen of all similar commissions and councils, the governor of the Bank of Canada, the presidents of all crown corporations and most certainly, Mr. Speaker, the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. We must spare them apprehension of how they might be affected by any change of government or by any change of a minister.

Mr. Grafftey: Like 1935.

Mr. Crestohl: I am not speaking of 1935; I am speaking of 1959, and you will soon hear why.

Mr. Montgomery: The hon. member is the last one who should be talking about 1935 to 1945.

Mr. Crestohl: As a matter of fact, that lesson was learned in 1930 when the Conservative government came into power and we saw what happened. We realized the independence which we must preserve for our civil servants. I say, Mr. Speaker, we must relieve them of what might sometimes be terrorizing fears which can come from the fact, to use a biblical phrase, that there arose a new king in Egypt who knew not Joseph. I suppose if the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) were here he would say to himself he wished he were that king who did not know Joseph. The civil servant has a continuing responsibility and this responsibility must not be shaken by any change of government or political pressure, since the duties of civil servants must be discharged with the courage and impartiality which are characteristic of honest civil servants in contrast with those who for selfish reasons seek to curry favour with a new government or with a new minister.

Let me illustrate what I mean, Mr. Speaker. We heard a typical clarification of this entire problem in the house on April 15 last week. I refer to a speech delivered by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), and I quote from page 2729 of Hansard. This is what the hon. member said:

> I think this government—

He was referring to the present government.

> —has been entirely too generous with many of the people in the public service of Canada who do not appreciate that there has been a change of government. Some of these people still think that orders come from Liberal headquarters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Crestohl: I am very pleased to hear that he is not the only one in the government party who still thinks that way and who still supports that statement.

Mr. Small: The facts are there.

Mr. Crestohl: The facts are there? Let us look at the facts. What does the hon. gentleman mean when he says that the government is too generous with the civil servants? Does that generosity consist in the fact that they are not dismissed from their employment? In what does the generosity of the government consist toward the civil servants of Canada? Is that meant to be a subtle threat to all the civil servants who worked for this country before this government came into power or what else does the reference mean? What does the hon. member mean, for example, when he says that the civil servants do not appreciate that there has been a change of government? How does he want the civil servants to manifest their appreciation?

Mr. Anderson: By being loyal.

Mr. Crestohl: Does he expect them to fall on their knees twice a day and sing hallelujahs for the new Prime Minister and the new government? Is that how these gentlemen would like to have the civil servants show their appreciation?

Mr. Ricard: If you do not know why are you drawing conclusions?

Mr. Crestohl: Just be patient. I do not know, nobody has said or indicated.

Mr. Ricard: You are trying to insinuate things.

Mr. Crestohl: Nobody has indicated how the civil servants can show their humility, their appreciation, their thanks and their gratitude for being permitted to serve the country as they have done in the past. I should like to know also what the hon. gentleman means when he says:

> Some of these people still think that orders come from Liberal headquarters.

Where does the hon. member or the government think orders should come from? Should they come from the Conservative headquarters. I say, that this is an issue that is not without some difficulty for civil servants. Their integrity must be maintained; their independence must be protected, and we should liberate them from such thoughts as were expressed by the hon. member for Rosthern and as indicated also by other hon. members in the government. I am sure, that the members of the government want that independence for all civil servants and it is to this matter that I am addressing myself.

I consider, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern are an undeserved and unwarranted reflection on the honesty and integrity of our civil servants. As I have indicated, it is precisely this and similar thinking against which we must protect our civil servants. Just look at what happened in the house today. To me it was a very shocking thing. When the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) asked a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough) the Speaker ruled that the question was not framed—

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): It was out of order.

Mr. Crestohl: I will tell you what it was. Just wait and listen. The Speaker ruled—I agree with the Speaker's ruling if that will satisfy my friend—that the question was not framed in accordance with our standing orders. That is perfectly true, and the question was ruled out of order by the Speaker quite properly. But here is what I say happened. An accusation was read by the hon. member for Fort William and I should like to read it again. As found in the Toronto Telegram of April 16, it reads:

> They charged that the order was drafted by the pro-Liberal civil servants merely to embarrass the government while Prime Minister Diefenbaker was absent.

The minister sat in her place, having read the accusation levelled against her employees —whether or not it is true is immaterial for the moment—saying that pro-Liberal civil servants drafted the regulation in order to embarrass the government. I respectfully submit that the minister should not have waited for a question to be asked. It is my submission that the moment she learned there was such an item in the press she should have risen in her place on a question of privilege and vigorously denied the accusation against civil servants in her department. Her failure to rise in her place and deny an accusation against old and tried civil servants is to me quite disturbing.

Mr. Nesbitt: Are you trying to create a sacred cow?

Mr. Crestohl: I cannot hear the hon. member.

Mr. Nesbitt: Are you trying to create a body above criticism or reproach?

Mr. Crestohl: I am making no accusation against the minister. I am making no accusation against civil servants. If the hon. member will follow me he will realize I am trying to point out that here was an occasion when the integrity of civil servants should have been upheld. The minister should have stood up in her place and said, "No, I will not permit this; I deny vigorously that my employees wrote this order in order to embarrass the government. That is not true." That is what I expected her to say. However, she remained silent. This is something which supports the thesis I am trying to present this evening to hon. members.

When I referred a few moments ago to the importance of preserving the courage, integrity and honesty of our civil servants I must say that, without reflecting on any of them at all, I place the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in a category by himself.

Mr. Bigg: Why?

Mr. Crestohl: I will tell you why. He above everyone else must be free from and unfettered by any political fears and influences.

An hon. Member: Should he decide policy too?

Mr. Crestohl: The hon. member who interrupted me may not feel that he should be free from and unfettered by political influence but certainly there is no one else in the entire country who will agree with him. On the contrary, the people will agree with my statement. When there is interference, when attempts are made to encroach upon the independence of the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, every Canadian, every member of the house and every person elsewhere in the country is placed in jeopardy and our democratic institutions become weakened and exposed to danger. I therefore urge that because of the possibility, or even the slightest suspicion that someone in authority has, because of political expediency, attempted to disturb the great confidence which the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has always enjoyed—

Mr. Grafftey: What political expediency?

Mr. Crestohl: I said if there is the slightest suspicion it is a responsible duty of parliament to call on the government to dispel this suspicion and to set up as speedily as possible an objective and impartial inquiry into the matter. If there is nothing to be afraid of, why object to it, why oppose it? Why not go along with it?

Mr. Bigg: Why defend it?

Mr. Crestohl: I am not defending it.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): What are you doing?

Mr. Crestohl: I am saying "if there is suspicion." The hon. member has not paid attention. The commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police resigns suddenly at personal sacrifice and hon. members opposite are willing to sit by and say that they are not interested as to why.

Mr. Bigg: How do you resign gradually?

[Mr. Crestohl.]

Mr. Crestohl: The country is far more disturbed by the possibility of such interference than can be readily imagined. The impartiality and independence of the force which gives Canada its internal security must not be left in doubt. Let me indicate from only a few press editorials the degree to which this agitates and disturbs the entire country. I should like to read a brief opening paragraph from the Fundy Fisherman of March 25, 1959:

> Canada has lost one of its most distinguished public servants in the resignation from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of Commissioner L. H. Nicholson. This outstanding son of New Brunswick refused to allow the R.C.M.P. to be made use of to further the ends of political expediency. He chose the sterner path of duty, and resigned when it became clear that he would not be allowed to maintain law and order in the manner and form required by the oath of his office. He will be honoured by people across the country and his example will be applauded by citizens of his native province.

I should also like to read an excerpt from an editorial in the Edmonton Journal, the other end of the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: What about British Columbia?

Mr. Crestohl: I am glad hon. members have caught the mistake. It was not intended at all. This editorial appeared in the issue of March 20, 1959, and reads in part as follows:

> However, a larger question has been opened by justice minister Fulton's grave decision to interfere directly with the movements of the R.C.M.P. This question concerns the degree of political control over the police possible today. It deserves the serious consideration of parliament.

Further, Mr. Speaker, in an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen of March 17, 1959, headed "Commissioner Nicholson Resigns" I find the following:

> The resignation of Commissioner L. H. Nicholson from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police raises questions of policy in the administration of the R.C.M.P. which deserve the most searching inquiry. In recent days, the cabinet has evidently gone over Commissioner Nicholson's head, on one occasion countermanding an order he had given, and on the other giving an order of which he knew nothing. In his own words, this made his position untenable.
> The result can only be confusion and some loss of morale in the R.C.M.P., which has had to meet enough difficulties in the past few days without this added trouble.

Another editorial, Mr. Speaker, appeared in the Financial Post of March 21, 1959, entitled, "The Man of Principle."

> Decent people everywhere instinctively respect the man of principle, and particularly the man who is willing to suffer because of his principles.
> Such a man is Commissioner L. H. Nicholson of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, just resigned—

Nicholson was a conspicuous success in one of our country's toughest and loneliest jobs.

His decision to do what he believed to be right —without regard for the present government's popularity with the labour vote—ends a career in a way that brings lustre to him and to the finest traditions of the public service.

From these expressions of public opinion across Canada, it is clear that the country wants to know whether or not there has been political interference or political overtones which provoked Commissioner Nicholson's resignation. What the country wants to know is just that, and it is the duty of parliament to set up an inquiry to ferret out the truth so that the country may retain its confidence in our civil servants.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Crestohl: Yes.

Mr. Grafftey: Does the hon. member feel that ministers of the crown are duty bound, under all circumstances, to accept without question the recommendations of senior civil servants?

Mr. Crestohl: I cannot answer that question, but I certainly believe that the refusal to accept a civil servant's direction—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Direction?

Mr. Crestohl: —or suggestions, has its consequences with the top civil servants.

Mr. Bigg: You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Crestohl: This is something that you do not want to hear, but the country wants to hear about it. You will hear from the country when the country is told the facts. I feel that the inquiry which I suggest should be promptly set up. I cannot understand why there should be the slightest hesitancy to set up this inquiry. I cannot understand fears that anyone should have about setting it up, because the confidence of the top civil servants has been badly shaken and it should be restored.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is the most unmitigated nonsense I have ever heard in the House of Commons.

Mr. Crestohl: I am very much interested in hearing all these objections. I suggest an inquiry be set up in order to explain all the facts relating to this occurrence which shook the confidence of the entire civil service.

Commissioner Nicholson refused to be budged from what he saw his duty to be, notwithstanding any ingenious methods and specious arguments that were presented. I say, therefore, that one cannot help but admire Commissioner Nicholson all the more for stating in his letter to the Minister of Justice, so frankly and so fearlessly, the following and I now quote:

I realize that other issues are before you which arose from this strike, but I feel most strongly that the matter of law enforcement should be isolated and dealt with on its own merits.

I underscore the words "on its own merits", Mr. Speaker. Then, he continues, and I quote:

This is the attitude the force has taken throughout. It has not concerned itself with the issues back of the strike, but has merely tried to maintain law and order in the area.

It appears that this is what the commissioner was desirous of doing; nothing more and nothing less. However, when he felt that his duty was being interfered with he took, as he himself describes it, the only course open to him. He resigned. I am sure the entire country will say to him, "Bravo". By his action he has sustained, if not even elevated, the high standards and traditions of this distinguished force for its courage and integrity, for which it is world renowned.

I respectfully urge the government to recognize this exemplary civil servant and not permit him to suffer, amongst other things, any financial loss because he did his duty with courage and with honour to himself and to the reputation of the men under his command. A most appropriate editorial on this subject appeared in the Montreal Star of March 18, 1959, which, in my opinion, effectively makes an appropriate recommendation to the government. I desire to read it into Hansard. It is entitled, "Colonel Nicholson Deserves well of his Country" and reads:

In his graceful tribute to Commissioner Nicholson, expressed in the correspondence surrounding the sending of R.C.M.P. reinforcements to Newfoundland, the Minister of Justice wrote: "You can rest assured that whatever may be the views as to the present situation, you have earned the respect and esteem of all those with whom you have served."

This respect and esteem is in no sense diminished by the fact that Commissioner Nicholson has disagreed with his minister and resigned on an issue of principle. It took courage to do this at a moment of public controversy. It took courage to do this more particularly because Commissioner Nicholson is within a year of his normal retirement from the R.C.M.P. after completing a full term of service. That service has been distinguished by a devotion to duty and a concern for the dignity and effectiveness of the force against a background of tradition that has made it a symbol of law enforcement tempered with mercy the world over.

It would be anomalous in the circumstances if Commissioner Nicholson should suffer a disability of any kind by reason of his resignation on grounds of principle. If his resignation is accepted now he will in fact suffer a financial disability. His pension will be lower than it would be if he completed his full term of service a year hence.

A grateful Canadian people would support a move to grant him leave of absence for a year, when he could retire in the normal course on full pension. Such a course is commended to the government.

If this were the appropriate time or if it were possible for me now or at any other time to move a resolution to that effect or to introduce a bill to that effect, I would not hesitate to do so. However, procedure and standing orders being what they are, it is obvious that only the government can take the appropriate means for making this possible. I, therefore, call on the government to take the necessary steps and follow the suggestion contained in the editorial in the Montreal Star to see that the commissioner, who has rendered such loyal and faithful service and who resigned on a matter of principle—as I indicated it took courage to resign on a matter of principle—does not suffer as a result of his action. I would urge the government to take the necessary steps to avoid punishing a civil servant and to see that he does not suffer any financial loss because he has performed his duty. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the entire country would welcome such a suggestion.

Mr. Bigg: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Crestohl: Yes.

Mr. Bigg: Would he explain exactly what the monetary loss would be if Commissioner Nichlson retires at this time as he wishes?

Mr. Crestohl: I have not checked the figures, but I am prepared to accept—

Mr. Bigg: Have you any idea what his pension will be?

Mr. Crestohl: I have not checked the figures, but even if it were only $10 the amount is not important. I do not see why the hon. member quibbles about this. I think it is a sensible suggestion by the Montreal Star. I think the entire country would accede to it, and I certainly feel that a bill or a resolution introduced by the government to restore the commissioner's pension would be well deserved.

Mr. Bigg: Would the hon. member permit another question? Would he like this resolution put forward before he has this full inquiry he asks for?

Mr. Crestohl: If the hon. member suggests that such a resolution be considered after a full inquiry, I would go along with that. I would have no objection if the government waited before introducing such a resolution until after the inquiry. Mr. Speaker, I again submit that the proposition made by this newspaper should not be considered adversely by any of the parties in this house, unless the inquiry discloses things which the country does not yet know. But if we are to accept what we now know, we have the splendid reputation of the commissioner himself and the courage which he showed in resigning one year before he became entitled to a full pension. All these facts in themselves are commendable and should certainly be accepted and considered by every hon. member in this house.

Mr. Speakman: Does the hon. member from Cartier (Mr. Crestohl) think that the head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which is in fact a semi-military force, is right in his decision to disagree publicly with his superiors?

Mr. Crestohl: I would love to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has himself pointed out that there is some suspicion that the situation is not clear. Therefore I suggest this inquiry. Certainly if the commissioner resigned because he said, "I could not accept the decision of the minister"—

Mr. Speakman: The decision of his superiors.

Mr. Crestohl: It was not a decision.

Mr. Speakman: It was.

Mr. Crestohl: What he said was that he found that the minister's request was inconsistent with his duty.

Mr. Speakman: But that was his decision.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to inform the hon. member and those who would ask further questions that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks I wish to refer to a statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) concerning the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan). I was here in the chamber when the minister made his remarks which were referred to, as reported at page 2624 of Hansard of April 13, 1959. These remarks did not seem to me to carry the meaning attributed to them by the hon. member for Essex East and were in fact delivered in a jocular manner. I want to make it clear that I cannot subscribe to any double standard of public morality or different degrees of sanctity concerning promises. I am quite sure the hon. minister did not intend to give this impression, but since that has been inferred in statements made this afternoon I do not want to let it pass without stating that I do not subscribe to any such theory.

For the past several days we have heard discussions on all topics in connection with the budget. We have listened to discussions about taxation, inflation and other matters. I would like to take this opportunity to discuss a few matters which I believe deserve more serious attention by the government than has heretofore been given. The first subject I want to refer to concerns the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. I feel this department should be among the very first which requires attention. The work of the department, particularly the technical surveys, forms the very basis and beginning of our development program. It is and has been for many years a neglected department. We have been talking big for a long time about our resources in Canada, and I feel we must do something big. Mr. Speaker, scientific research must precede development. We must have geological surveys, magnetic surveys and gravity surveys to determine what is underneath the surface of this country. We must probe the depths of the ocean and find the continental shelf boundaries. We must translate our findings into maps. We must know what we have to develop before we can start to develop it.

What is the situation which we now find? First, the department in understaffed in all its scientific branches. Scientists are so underpaid that they are leaving the government service for industry, for other countries, and even for the universities which have long been classed as providing poorly paid jobs. Even our universities are stealing scientists from the government service. We need grants for scientific research. We need special assistance for those students who have shown some indication of being able to perform those services which are most essential to us if we are going to develop this country to its maximum degree. Mr. Speaker, accommodation is short in all the branches of this department, and although a large building project is under way the buildings not yet completed are now inadequate to serve as a preliminary foundation for the development of our resources in Canada. Even at the dominion observatory here in Ottawa there is such a shortage of space that the scientists are working in the basement of the residence occupied by the dominion astronomer. Too little attention has been given to this problem. More and more the eyes of the public have been directed to our great natural resources.

Our Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Hamilton), a great enthusiast for this national development, must have before him the surveys and the maps which will assist in such a development. We have to recognize that this department must be properly equipped in order to be able to carry out its researches. This has not been done, and it should be done to a much greater extent. It is realized that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has problems, and they are grave ones. He has brought forward a budget which has very well satisfied the problems that do exist. However, with regard to geological surveys, for example—surveys of the surface and what lies under the surface of our country—only $3,500,000 of the whole national budget is used for this purpose. That is only $1 in every $1,600.

I should now like to turn to a second subject which is always a favourite of mine and one which is related very much to the same type of thing. It concerns the tourist industry in Canada. This is another area where we could be making a great advance. As I have mentioned previously, there can be no argument about the fact that the tourist industry is one of the largest sources of foreign currency available to us. The Canadian government travel bureau is doing an excellent job on the funds which have been allotted to it, and these funds have, in fact, been increased, but I think this house should consider setting up immediately a joint committee on travel in co-operation with the other place, because this has become a neglected field in Canada. It is true that the provincial governments are doing their best, but I think that a greater push is needed from this government. Last session I brought forward a resolution with reference to loans to tourist operators. That subject was very well discussed and I do not intend to raise it again at this time except to say that any project or any idea which can be brought forward to further the encouragement of visitors to this country is one which might well engage the attention of the government.

Tourism should go hand in hand with the development of the country. This is well recognized by the fact that the Canadian government travel bureau is set up within the department of northern affairs. By and large, a lot of our neighbours to the south seem to have the feeling that Canada is the poor man's vacation land. We are somewhat modest in our publicity and careful in our expenditure. That is easy to understand. Mr. Leo Dolan, who was formerly head of the travel bureau, said recently that Canada lacks "snob appeal" for its visitors and suggested that we should rectify this. Just what he meant is hard to pin down, but the general idea is that we must get over the belief that we cannot compete with Europe in connection with our tourist industry.

Here in Canada we have some most interesting tours, and they are improving and increasing with the development of the northland.

I feel that we must make an effort along these lines of a magnitude that has not heretofore been undertaken. In 1958 there was more travel in Canada than there was in the previous year but this travel was not undertaken by visitors; it was done by more Canadian people travelling between their own province and another province. The influx of tourists from the United States fell off last year, and a number of reasons are given for this—the recession in the United States, the weather, strikes and European competition.

I think the government is doing an excellent job in advertising Canada, but I think we should do more than put advertisements in newspapers and publications. I think we must have publicity agents, people who will bring to visitors from other countries details of the tours and other items that we can provide for them which are of interest and which will provide real competition to European centres.

I should like to speak on a third subject which is related to the other two. This has to do with the fantastic development in North America, and particularly in Canada, over the last few years of pleasure boating. In 1958 over three million Canadians took to the water in pleasure boats. Over 750,000 pleasure boats are now owned by Canadians. The reason for this is that there is a desire to get off the travelled highways and escape the overcrowded conditions that obtain on the highways. Many want to get off the highways and get to more quiet places where they can enjoy a vacation. I think this feeling has been best expressed in an article in Western Business and Industry in which a boating enthusiast has stated:

> After being cooped up in an office or driving over jammed highways you discover a completely new world. There is sunshine, space, waves, wind and freedom from worry. I am a different man when I am out there. I am relaxed. I cannot even remember my phone number. A lot of pleasure boat owners agree with me. They have spent time on the open road. They have also spent an irritating portion of that time going ten yards every three minutes, breathing gas fumes and placating the children in the back seat.

Hon. members may wonder what this has to do with the budget, Mr. Speaker. It is just this: I think the government must recognize that facilities for this pleasure boating must be provided. It is a source of income. It is a commercial undertaking just as much as any other. The Department of Public Works, in providing navigation facilities, docks and so forth, and the Department of Transport are both responsible for navigation but I fear that in the past this work has been viewed from the standpoint of commercial navigation. I think we must not lose track of the fact that there is this great swing toward pleasure boating and that the departments must now take into consideration the provision of facilities for small boats as well as for large ones. I hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hees) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green) will take note of this important new water traffic. At this point I should like to mention the pamphlet "Safety Afloat" put out by the Department of Transport. This has provided an excellent service for those who engage in pleasure boating. It has been well received and well distributed throughout Canada.

In a riding such as mine which is mostly engaged in the tourist business the maintenance of water facilities is particularly important. Many of the standards now set up by the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport are those based on so-called commercial navigation. In fact, nothing is so commercially valuable to the country, I believe, as the pleasure boating traffic which is now developing.

I should like to ask the Department of Public Works to re-examine its policy in relation to the building of docks and navigation facilities. I have to admit that the Minister of Public Works has been extremely cooperative in this regard but always, of course, with a considerable amount of urging on the part of everyone concerned. The district engineer for my area who operates out of Toronto has been extremely understanding in the situation. In the area I represent it is now necessary to have a government official to look after the navigation facilities on behalf of the two departments of government.

Related closely to this is the next and final subject with which I shall deal. It is also connected with boating. I have reference to the Trent canal system. I should like for a few moments to read from a booklet published by the Department of Transport and entitled, "The Trent Canal System," because it is something not sufficiently publicized:

> The term "Trent canal" is applied to that series of rivers and lakes which, by a system of dams, locks, short artificial channels and two marine railways, provides 8-foot navigation for 89 miles from lake Ontario to Peterborough and 6-foot navigation for an additional 135 miles to Swift Rapids as well as for 8 miles from Georgian Bay to Big Chute.
> The canal began in a small way in 1833 with the construction of a few locks on the Trent and Otonabee rivers and on the Kawartha lakes in order to connect up the small pioneer settlements along their banks and shores. In addition to performing this vital service, these early locks and dams, assisted by an extensive system of log slides, contributed for many years to the flourishing lumber trade of the district. With the depletion of the forests, however, traffic began to settle down to a more prosaic freight-carrying trade. Good roads and motor transport made some inroads on this traffic during the nineteen twenties and thirties, but they have also brought about a very extensive development of the route as a holiday and tourist playground in which the canal facilities play no inconsiderable part.

I understand that the Department of Transport is now after many years actually considering improving the facilities on the Trent canal. A great number of small craft from both the United States and Canada use the canal extensively for pleasure boating. This brings tourists right into the heart of Ontario with the attendant benefits of purchasing power, the purchases of supplies of fuel and food and other things. I am glad to see that the Department of Transport is now taking an interest in the canal and recognizes that there is an upsurge of interest in pleasure boating that will be with us for many years if highway traffic continues to expand as it has done over the past few years.

Related to the Trent canal system is a dream that has been in existence for fifty years. That is the dream of some day connecting the Trent canal system with the Muskoka lakes. These lakes provide a large inland waterway extending over many miles of lakes and rivers. If the Trent canal system were connected, which would be a comparatively easy and certainly a feasible operation, it would bring to the centre of this country large and small pleasure boats from all parts of the North American continent. There is an easily accessible route through the Morrison lakes and various other lakes leading into lake Muskoka itself. It is hoped that the planners in the Department of Transport will see the value of this dream and make it a reality, thereby providing in the very heart of this country boating facilities that will be equalled by none elsewhere in the world.

I had a number of other matters to mention in connection with the budget but not related to the subjects I have mentioned and for that reason I shall leave them for discussion on a later occasion.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to refer very briefly to something that was said a little earlier this evening by the shorter member for Halifax (Mr. Morris). I am sorry to observe that the hon. member was called from the chamber. I was rather surprised to hear the congenial and usually Canadian-minded hon. member object quite strenuously to a project which I have had very close to my heart for some considerable time. I refer to the construction of the Richelieu seaway which would join the St. Lawrence river at Sorel to permit travel up the Richelieu river to Lake Champlain and down the Hudson river to New York. I have had the opportunity of studying the effects of this project and am convinced that this seaway would be of invaluable economic use not only to the Richelieu valley or to the province of Quebec but to the country as a whole.

I feel sure the hon. member does not wish to impede or provide obstacles to economic improvement anywhere in the country just as other hon. members of this house are always pleased to learn of projects that are of assistance to the maritime provinces. Indeed, in this respect although hon. gentlemen opposite do not always agree with me I feel that at least some members of the Conservative party would agree that this seaway from the St. Lawrence to New York through the Richelieu river would be of invaluable economic assistance.

I should now like to come to a detailed consideration of the budget. I believe it is quite clear that the budget brought down some weeks ago is symptomatic of a very marked and serious lack of administrative responsibility. To my mind the record deficit with which the country is now burdened for the most part is due to the fact that political expediency and opportunism have replaced the objectivity and the realism which are essential in a government which intends to administer in the interest of the country's welfare. Because of the necessity of having in Canada responsible governmental administration if we are to achieve the highest summit of prosperity which our labour force, our industrial power and our natural resources warrant, and because we are now faced with this budget, with the staggering results of a most disquieting political philosophy, I think it would be extremely useful for us to reflect seriously on the often-quoted words of Thomas Jefferson on public spending. May I quote Thomas Jefferson as follows:

> I place economy among the most important virtues and public debt as the greatest of dangers to be feared. To preserve our independence, we must not allow our leaders to load us with perpetual debt. We must make our choice between economy with liberty, or profusion with servitude.

These words are as fundamentally true today as they were generations ago, and in spite of the Utopian promises and commitments of the Conservative party in 1957, the huge record deficit that we have in front of us today brings us back to the cold, hard realization that no one really gets anything for nothing. As a matter of fact there seems to be a natural law which inflicts the loss of independence, of pride and of liberty on all those who try to obtain something for nothing. In this case, along with those losses, Canada has been inflicted with a huge deficit, an increased national debt and increased taxation.

It might also be well to reflect on a paragraph which appears in the final edition of the Gordon commission report, found at page 14, and I quote:

> There will be plenty of ways to spend our increasing national wealth. We will first have to meet the claims of defence and decide what we are prepared to pay as our contribution to the collective military force of the western world designed to deter an atomic attack. We may also want to round out our social security program and to increase the payments made under it. There will also be proposals for expenditures on projects to add ease and grace to our common life and on other projects that would contribute either directly or indirectly to our economic growth. But we must recognize that these claims are all competing. At any one time we may have to decide that some of them are beyond our present means and have to be deferred. For if they were accepted indiscriminately and all superimposed on the normal operations of the economy, the result might well be an inflation that would bear cruelly on some groups in the community and that would price us out of some of the world markets in which we must compete. If that were to happen, we might wake up to find that our prodigality had cost us dear.

Mr. Speaker, our prodigality has indeed cost us dearly, with the huge deficit of $617 million, and the people of Canada are now asked to pay for the lack of foresight and the lack of wisdom in this government's administration. No one, not even my socialist friends to my right, not having the responsibility of administration, claimed, as indeed did the Conservatives in 1957, that they had a magic formula that would make of Canada a Utopian paradise. There is no one, there is no government, who can return to the people more in the way of social or national security than is warranted by the moneys which the people themselves have contributed to the common fund and for a common good. I submit it is an irresponsible government which commits itself, as this government has done, to the expenditure of moneys which it knows surpasses the capacity of the people to pay and which in this case has resulted in a huge deficit and increased taxation for the people of Canada. And what for, Mr. Speaker? In order to create, and for the sole purpose of creating, the impression that this government was indeed fulfilling the irrational, exaggerated and contradictory promises it made in 1957.

While we study the deficit and note the deficit for this year as well as an estimated deficit of some $400 million for next year, in spite of the increased taxes across the board, I could not help and I still cannot help but hear ringing in my ears the echoes of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) most theatrical voice when he shouted from one coast to the other of this country that the Liberals had a surplus of some $500 million; that the Liberals were overtaxing the Canadian people by $150 per family per year; when he shouted from coast to coast that the government at Ottawa was rich and the provinces and the municipalities were poor. If those accusations were true, then I accuse the government of having within 20 months squandered all that wealth without having one trace of it in any of the government records. If the accusations were not true, then I accuse the government of having used electoral tactics which in fact undermined the very concept we have of our democratic form of government.

If we have come to the point in the evolution of our political life where the winning of elections is the sole consideration of a political party and where half-truths and untruths are asserted as facts, and where impossible and unrealizable projects are presented to the Canadian public not only as being desirable but as being economically and constitutionally sound when they are not, then I submit, that such tactics will destroy the country's faith in our parliamentary system. They will destroy the country's faith in our public men and in fact they will make out of our parliamentary system a veritable farce. They will keep away sincere, honest and independent young men from political life and leave the future generations of Canada a prey to the most unscrupulous and obnoxious form of dictatorship and government banditism.

Lest anyone should believe that the cause of my fears are unfounded I would ask hon. members to compare the speeches that were made by the Conservative party in the election of 1957 with this budget, the results of the administration of 20 months of Conservative rule. I would ask hon. members to take a look also at the statement which was made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) the other evening, which is to be found at page 2624 of Hansard. In order to be fair to the minister I am going to quote the whole paragraph:

> Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that promises of any kind, whether pre-election promises or otherwise, should be honoured and respected so far as circumstances will possibly permit, but I would suggest to you, sir—and I think all hon. members on both sides of the house would accept this general principle—that promises made to this House of Commons and promises made to parliament stand in an even more favoured position in so far as sanctity and respect are concerned than promises made during an election campaign.

As the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) said this afternoon, we do not accept the general principle of the Minister of National Revenue. We feel very strongly that statements and promises made concerning the administration of this country to the people of Canada by our public men must be as respected and as sacred as statements and promises made in this house. The statement of the Minister of National Revenue is not only an indescribable insult to the intelligence and dignity of the Canadian people but is a formal denial of the basic concept of democracy. How can the people of Canada have faith in our public men? How can they choose wisely the administrators of the country when in fact the Minister of National Revenue, a minister of this government, states that what is said in the house is more sacred than what is said elsewhere to the people who in fact chose those who sit in this house and who act on behalf of the people of Canada?

We have heard a great deal about the dignity, respect and rights of parliament, and they must be maintained. I submit they can be maintained only if first of all we respect and acknowledge the rights, privileges and prerogatives of the Canadian electorate. The Minister of National Revenue has indeed confirmed the dangers we have seen in the political attitude of the government and he has corroborated better than anyone else possibly could have the accusations we have been levelling against the government that it has indeed ignored the elementary rights of the Canadian electorate and that as a matter of fact it has trampled on the dignity of the Canadian people in its haste to achieve power.

Today the government's defence of this abominable budget is that under the circumstances the government had no other alternative but to increase taxes. Mr. Speaker, that is begging the question. The point of argument is that the government is responsible for the circumstances in which the country now finds itself. It is the attitude, policies and actions of the government which, in the space of 20 months, have brought about a deterioration in economic conditions and the financial position of the country whereby we have passed from a surplus of $257 million in 1957 to a deficit of $617 million in 1959 and an estimated deficit of $400 million in 1960.

If Canadians today are being burdened with increased taxation without seeing the possibility of relief in the immediate future, it is not only because the government has demonstrated the attitude of immaturity to be found in that type of person who continually over-tips without being able to afford it but also because the government is caught in the web of words and promises it wove in order to win the election. In order to save face as much as possible and in order not to be laughed right out of parliament the government has implemented a fraction of the irresponsible promises it made and as a result it has jeopardized our economic position and has imposed additional tax burdens on the Canadian people. As we look at the deficit and prepare to take additional money out of our pockets to pay increased taxes we may well ask ourselves, what has the government done, what has the government returned to the people to justify or even explain the huge deficit with which we are now confronted? What has the government to show for record peacetime expenditures?

I am entering on a new subject, Mr. Speaker, and I wonder whether I might call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

OTTAWA AND NEPEAN TOWNSHIP—LAND ACQUISITION

Question No. 114—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What acreage has been acquired by the government of Canada for future government buildings in the city of Ottawa and the township of Nepean, south of the Baseline road and west of the concession road between the first and second concessions of the said township (Woodroffe avenue extension)?

2. From what persons were these lands acquired?

3. How many acres were acquired from each such person?

4. Was this acreage acquired by (a) expropriation; or (b) purchase?

5. In each case, what was the date of the expropriation or purchase?

6. What was the (a) total amount; (b) amount for land; (c) amount for buildings; (d) amount for interest; (e) amount for other reasons, paid to each such person?

7. For what purpose did the government intend these lands to be used?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works):

1. 435.725 acres.
2. See attached statement.
3. See attached statement.
4. By expropriation.
5. June 25, 1954.
6. See attached statement.
7. Site for future government buildings.

Questions

AIRPORT TERMINALS—PLANS AND TENDERS

Question No. 119—Mr. Hellyer:

In respect to each of the six airport terminals being completed this year (a) on what date were architects appointed to prepare plans; (b) on what date were tenders called?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The following buildings are nearing completion but it may be 1960 before construction is finally completed at Halifax, Montreal and Regina:

	Date architects appointed to prepare plans	Date first tenders called
Gander	July 8, 1955	Oct. 25, 1955
Halifax	Aug. 7, 1957	Jan. 16, 1958
Ottawa	Dec. 10, 1954	April 17, 1956
Montreal	Aug. 9, 1954	July 4, 1955
Toronto (extension of present building) ..	DOT architects	March 11, 1958
Regina	DOT architects	Nov. 6, 1958

DR. RICHARD S. MACNEISH—CITIZENSHIP STATUS

Question No. 286—Mr. Argue:

1. In what country was Dr. Richard S. MacNeish, presently an employee of the national museum of Canada, born?

2. Was Dr. MacNeish a British subject or a Canadian citizen at the time he was first appointed to a position at the national museum?

3. If not, (a) On what authority was Dr. MacNeish appointed to this position? (b) Of what country was he a citizen? (c) On what date did he enter Canada to take up permanent residence, and how long had he been a resident of Canada before taking up his appointment with the national museum? (d) Has Dr. MacNeish become a British subject or a Canadian citizen since his appointment to the staff of the national museum? (e) if so, on what date did he apply, and on what date did it become effective?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. United States of America.

2. No.

3. (a) See answer to 291, (b) United States of America, (c) Took up residence in Canada on appointment to the national museum, effective June 20, 1949, (d) No, (e) N/A.

ATOMIC EXPLOSION, NORTHERN ALBERTA

Question No. 315—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any conversations been held with, or any communications received by, the federal government regarding the explosion of an atomic device in the northern Alberta tar sands or its immediate vicinity?

2. If so, what was the nature of these communications or conversations?

3. What was the reply of the federal government?

4. Have any studies been made of the possible dangerous effects of such an explosion?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

1. Yes.

2. A series of discussions dating from June, 1958, with the Richfield Oil Corporation.

3. The project will be subject to careful scrutiny by a technical feasibility committee and, in this connection, I would refer the hon. member to Hon. Paul Comtois' reply in the house to a question by Mr. A. R. Smith (Calgary South). See Hansard Tuesday, March 10, 1959).

4. The most important part of the inquiry by the technical committee will be concerned with the safety question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 21, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR SESSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition requested a few days ago and again yesterday that I should outline the main items which the government intends to introduce during the present session. I would say that in addition to the items which are already on the order paper the following will be introduced: the bill of rights, a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, a bill to establish a national energy board, a bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, a bill to provide additional grants to the province of Newfoundland, an amendment to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act; bills respecting the superannuation of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and members of the Canadian forces; a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act, and a bill to bring in certain amendments to the Criminal Code.

In the field of agriculture, amendments will be introduced to assist the provinces in implementing crop insurance, as well as a bill to extend and improve farm credit facilities, and a bill to allow veteran farmers to take greater advantage of modern agricultural practices will be introduced by way of amendment to the Veterans Land Act.

In addition there will be, of course, the budget legislation and the usual measure respecting the financing of the Canadian National Railways. Consideration is also being given to certain other measures of lesser importance. It is probable that some of these may be introduced before the end of this session. However, if any change is made in this regard ample notice will be given to members of the house.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In thanking the Prime Minister for the information he has just given, I take it that the order in which he has mentioned these bills is no indication of the order in which they are to be introduced into the House of Commons?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, we are not following that order. I am glad the Leader of the Opposition asked that question.

Mr. Pearson: In that case I merely express the hope that the Prime Minister and the house leader will put these bills on the order paper in ample time to give us on the opposition side time to study them, because they include some very important pieces of legislation.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): This is a very heavy and exhaustive program which the Prime Minister has outlined, and I hope the legislation can be placed on the order paper as quickly as possible, since it seems clear that the major part of the business of this session has yet to be done. If the session is not to be of very great duration it will certainly be necessary for hon. members to have this legislation before them as quickly as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in that connection I am sure all of us are very desirous of assuring that the business of the house will be placed on the order paper and then brought before the house at the earliest possible date.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMPOSITION OF ECONOMIC CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There is another announcement I should like to make, Mr. Speaker. A corresponding statement was made at 4 p.m. Greenwich mean time in London today. It has to do with the composition of the commonwealth economic consultative council. It will be recalled that by decision reached at the commonwealth trade and economic conference in Montreal last September regarding commonwealth consultation on trade and economic matters there was a statement in the conference report which read in part, as follows:

> Commonwealth consultation and co-operation in economic matters are of primary importance in achieving our objectives in the economic field. We are agreed that the present machinery for consultation is working well; it is flexible and informal and well fitted to the family character of the commonwealth relationship. We decided that the existing arrangements should be co-ordinated under the name of a commonwealth economic consultative council.

The conference also agreed that, at the highest level, the council would consist of the finance and economic ministers of the commonwealth countries meeting together whenever the circumstances demanded and that—in the words of the report—it would—> —incorporate various channels and bodies through which economic consultation at present takes place and any further bodies which may be set up from time to time on a temporary or permanent basis. Meetings at high official level will also be held as necessary to prepare for the meetings of ministers.

Since the Montreal conference there has been an exchange of views regarding the particular commonwealth bodies of officials that should be incorporated within the framework of the council. All commonwealth governments have now agreed that the council should be regarded as also incorporating meetings of senior commonwealth economic officials held to prepare for meetings of ministers, the commonwealth liaison committee, the commonwealth economic committee and meetings of commonwealth statisticians to consider the balance of payments of the sterling area. The inclusion of other commonwealth bodies through which economic consultation takes place will be considered from time to time as seems desirable.

I should emphasize in conclusion that what is being done is to incorporate existing bodies within a new framework rather than to create new bodies. To quote once again from the report of the Montreal conference:

> Arrangements which are already extensive have served us well: there is no need to expand them, nor would we wish to change in any way their consultative character.

A meeting of senior economic officials representing commonwealth governments will be held in London starting on May 5, to exchange views on general trade and economic subjects. It is expected to last three or four days. While the composition of the Canadian delegation is not complete, I should advise the house that it will be led by the deputy minister of finance, Mr. K. W. Taylor.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows, for a great many years now commonwealth ministers in charge of financial and economic matters have been meeting periodically, as have other commonwealth officials in these fields. Various commonwealth economic and other committees were established years ago and have been functioning for many years. I think of the imperial economic committee, which has been more lately called the commonwealth economic committee, the imperial shipping committees, and others. I gather from the Prime Minister that no new machinery is being created, but that an effort is being made to co-ordinate and consolidate existing committees.

In so far as this proposal will serve to accomplish that purpose I think it is to be welcomed, but I do not think we should attach too great importance to the fact that this decision has been taken and has been implemented, because commonwealth economic consultation and co-ordination is going on effectively now and has been for a good many years.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Any move to streamline any consultation is probably a good thing and certainly welcome as far as we are concerned. I would think that co-operation and consultation amongst commonwealth countries are much more essential now than they have been in the past. Particularly in the field of trade, the commonwealth, Canada included, faces the challenge of the European common market as well as the challenge of the Soviet union. With those great economic challenges facing us at this time, anything that can be done to streamline our methods of consultation and bring about new policies is more than welcome.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—REPORTED POSSESSION OF NARCOTICS BY GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I took occasion to send him notice, and I hope he has received it. Can the minister give the house any detailed information regarding a news item in this morning's Globe and Mail which reports that a guard at Kingston penitentiary has been arrested for possession of narcotics? Can the minister indicate whether there is any evidence that would point to a so-called drug ring operating among the staff of that institution?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the hon. member gave me notice of his intention to ask this question. One of the guards at Kingston penitentiary had been under suspicion of trafficking, and an investigation was carried out by members of the R.C.M.P. in collaboration with the warden. On the night of April 19-20 he was searched upon his arrival at the penitentiary, and was found to be in possession of capsules which have been subsequently analysed as containing heroin. He was placed under arrest and charged under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. He appeared before the local magistrate in Kingston on April 20 and was remanded until April 28.

From information so far available this appears to be an isolated case of trafficking, but the matter is still under investigation by the R.C.M. Police and the penitentiary authorities.

Mr. Howard: May I ask a supplementary question. Would any of the inmates to whom those narcotics may have been directed also be subject to prosecution if they are in fact found in possession of the drug?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that question is a bit hypothetical. All I can say is that the investigation is continuing, and if there is illegal possession established I would assume that further charges would be laid.

ATOMIC ENERGY

CONFERENCE ON USE FOR DEFENCE PURPOSES—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the other day a question was asked of the Minister of National Defence which he said would be more properly one for external affairs. May I ask the Prime Minister as Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada was invited to participate in the Anglo-American talks which are now going on in London on co-operation in the use of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition I may say that the meeting in London is one between officials of the United States and the United Kingdom governments within the terms of the bilateral agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes signed between those two countries on July 3 of last year. Therefore the question of Canadian participation in that meeting, involving as it does the relations between the two countries named, does not arise.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to seek the same kind of bilateral agreement with the United States which the United Kingdom now has?

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the Leader of the Opposition knows, there already is an agreement with the United States for co-operation regarding atomic energy information for mutual defence purposes, which was signed on June 15, 1955. The question of negotiating a further agreement modifying the 1955 agreement to take advantage of the amendments passed by the United States congress last July is now under consideration. As the hon. member knows, in the agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States there is, among others, the following provision:

> Each party will communicate to or exchange with the other party such classified information as is jointly determined to be necessary to:
> 1. the development of defence plans;
> 2. the training of personnel in the employment of and defence against atomic weapons and other military applications of atomic energy;
> 3. the evaluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the employment of atomic weapons and other military applications of atomic energy;
> 4. the development of delivery systems compatible with the atomic weapons which they carry; and
> 5. research, development and design of military reactors to the extent and by such means as may be agreed.

I have quoted from the agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States, and I think the observations I made with respect to the Canadian position in this regard will be very clear to the hon. gentleman.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING TO INDUCE MORTGAGE LENDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Has any meeting been held or has any meeting been called of Canadian trust companies by the minister or by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purpose of inducing participation in mortgage lending? If so, will the minister give a report?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no such meeting held or called. We have had very good co-operation from the various lending institutions.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

IMPENDING FIREMEN'S STRIKE—MEETING OF HOUSE RAILWAY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the approaching strike deadline of May 1, has he any information on what role his department is playing or will be called upon to play in the negotiations between the Canadian National Railways and the firemen's union?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the facilities of the Department of Labour will be available when an opportunity arises for intervention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Fisher: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the deadline of May 1, and the arrangement for the president of the C.N.R. to appear before a house committee on April 28, is any consideration being given to changing the date of that committee meeting to after May 1?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS—SUGGESTED LACK OF UNDERSTANDING BY CABINET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether she has any comment on the insinuation in the Toronto Telegram of April 16 that she and her colleagues did not understand the meaning of the recent change in the immigration regulations made by the order in council of March 19, 1959?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker; no comment.

(Translation):

TELEVISION

INQUIRY AS TO APPEARANCE BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is there any truth in the many spot television announcements that the Minister of Finance will attempt to defend his budget tonight? If so, who will be paying for those advertisements?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was asked by the C.B.C. to appear on television tonight at 10.30, and I hope I shall have the pleasure of counting my hon. friend among my listeners. He would do well to tune in on that program.

Mr. Denis: May I ask another question? Does the Minister of Finance intend to blame the Liberal party for his maladministration?

Mr. Fleming: The administration is good. My hon. friend might well envy the present administration.

[Mr. Starr.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED BAN ON PHOTOGRAPHING DESTRUCTION OF PARTLY FINISHED PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Defence Production. Is it a fact that photographers are prevented, on the grounds of military security, from taking pictures of welders destroying six partly finished Arrow interceptors?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The same question was asked yesterday, I think of the Minister of National Defence. I am not sure whether or not it was answered.

Mr. Pearson: No, it was not.

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): In reply to the question yesterday the Minister of National Defence answered that he had no knowledge of the subject. I wish to state that, as all hon. members will recall, the CF-105 program was cancelled and my department has been proceeding with the termination of this program. At the moment no aircraft are being dismantled. We have four complete CF-105's, and they are not being touched for the time being. A fifth aircraft was damaged and was being repaired at the time of the cancellation. Five others were in different stages of production. No work has been done in connection with dismantling these aircraft.

However, all aircraft that were in production had the Hughes MA-1 fire control system installed, and this is classified as a secret component of the aircraft. These systems are being taken out of the aircrafts, and for this reason my department has judged that no photographs should be taken while this work is in progress.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE ON MANUFACTURE OF SMALL CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of a statement reported in this morning's Montreal Gazette to the effect that there would be serious damage to the Canadian car industry if small cars were to be made in the United States and not in Canada. Can the minister say what study the government is giving to the submissions made to them yesterday by the united automobile workers, and particularly can the minister say whether a conference of government, management and labour will be held to discuss this very important question?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Very serious study is being given to all aspects of this situation.

Mr. Argue: As a supplementary question, can the minister inform the house whether the government has already discussed or intends to discuss with the management of these automobile companies the possibility of their going into the small car manufacturing business in this country?

Mr. Starr: That is one of the things that is being given serious consideration.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether any discussion has taken place between the government and the companies?

Mr. Starr: No, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

NATIONAL ANTHEM

REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General? Has the minister inquired by now into the statements made by the Ministers of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), regarding the national anthem of Canada? If so, does he share their opinion; if not, does he intend to resign as minister?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. gentleman did not put that question with the expectation of receiving an answer. He is asking one minister about opinions expressed by a couple of other ministers, not necessarily within the scope of their administrative responsibilities.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED SHRINKAGE IN LABOUR FORCE AND INCREASED REGISTRATIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of the very disappointing press release on the employment situation which was issued today. Could the minister give any explanation to the house as to why the labour force has shrunk, according to this statement, by 7,000 between February and March, whereas in the last five years there has been an increase in that month of about 22,000? I refer to the total labour force. At the same time, could the minister give any explanation for the rise of over 4,000 in the number of registrations at the national employment offices?

66968-9—183½

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I can well imagine why he is disappointed because there is a drop in unemployment. At the same time, his question as to the decrease in the labour force puzzled me, so I have made inquiries and have been informed that this sort of thing happens once in a while. In September the same situation occurred. As far as can be ascertained, in the province of Quebec in March approximately 7,000 women withdrew from the labour force. We can only assume that their husbands were able to get jobs and they went back to their homes. In the same province 3,000 men withdrew from the labour force, particularly from the woods industry, and in the main they were farmers who wanted to go back to their farms and work them, feeling that they had made enough money during the winter months.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the minister did not hear the second part of my question, which asked for an explanation of the additional 4,000 registrations in the employment offices, which seems to suggest, as these are actual figures, that unemployment has increased.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in the months of February and March there was a week or two where there was a slight increase, but in the main there has been a continual drop in the registrations. At the moment the registrations are 78,000 fewer than they were at the same time last year.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED STRIFE AND INTRIGUE IN SELECTION OF PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State. On March 13 last I asked the minister whether his attention had been drawn to a newspaper article to the effect that strife and intrigue are being created in the selection of federal government employees through the actions of officials in various departments, and whether he could make any comment about that report. His answer at that time was that he had not seen the report but would check and answer later. I wonder if the minister now, a month later, is in position to answer.

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position today to make any comment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF RADIO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the undertaking given by the minister to the house last session that a committee on broadcasting would be set up shortly after the beginning of this session, which was in January, would the minister now make the necessary arrangements so this committee can begin sitting at the earliest possible moment?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, arrangements will be made for the convening of this committee at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): A supplementary question, sir. Does the minister regard this as a promise made to parliament?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, I regard this as a promise made to parliament; therefore I am considering it in that way and not as a distinguished Liberal minister once said of Liberal platforms, that like railway car platforms, they were things with which to get in on.

Mr. Pearson: Would the minister indicate what he considers to be shortly after the beginning of the session in January?

Mr. Nowlan: The reason this committee has not been convened earlier is that hon. members on all sides of the house, including those hon. members beside and behind the Leader of the Opposition, asked that we should not convene this committee until some of the pressure was taken off committee work.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the absence of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) I rise on a question of privilege to recall to the mind of the minister that the hon. member for Laurier repeatedly asked to have this committee convened early in the session.

FINANCE

STATEMENT ON LOANS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF CURLING RINKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West asked if a loan had been made by the crown for a curling rink at H.M.C.S. Carleton. The answer is that no such loan has been made. However, the building is on national defence property and is leased to the curling club.

[Mr. Courtemanche.]

POLYMER CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with the appointment of a mediator in the Polymer dispute. My question arises out of concern expressed by employees of the corporation as to whether a person from within the Department of Labour may be subject to political pressure when endeavouring to mediate in a dispute involving a crown corporation. I would like to ask whether any consideration was given to the appointment of a mediator from outside the government service, and can the minister give the employees any assurance that the mediator will act in an impartial manner?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we endeavoured to get an outside mediator. The person we had in mind unfortunately was unable to accept this nomination. We then took the best man we had, who is stationed in Toronto and has had a great deal of experience, with a good many years spent in this type of work; and I can assure the hon. member that in my department there have been no political pressures in connection with this dispute.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, before I go on with my speech which I started last evening I would like to offer my apologies to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Morris). I had no opportunity of correcting the proofs of my speech last night, and this morning, to my dismay, I found that Hansard had quoted me as referring to the hon. gentleman as "the shorter member for Halifax". May I assure the hon. member that I certainly had no intention of referring to him in that way. I thought I had referred to him, and I am morally certain I did, as "the hon. member for Halifax".

Mr. Morris: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. I thank the hon. member for his apology, but that is precisely the definition I would prefer. We have no junior or senior member.

Mr. Cardin: In those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw the apology.

Mr. Speaker, one of the points I was attempting to make last evening was that in its defence of the budget the government is begging the question when it claims that under the circumstances it had no alternative but to have a large deficit. What the Liberal opposition has been saying is that the government has created, and indeed is responsible for, the circumstances in which the government now finds itself. If Canada is burdened with a record deficit and increased taxation it is because the government, in order to save face, has attempted to implement a fraction of the exaggerated promises and commitments which it made during the election campaign, and which the Canadian economy simply could not afford at this time. So I think it is quite clear that the deficit is attributable to the political expediency, to the opportunism, to the lack of wisdom and to the lack of administrative responsibility shown by this government.

When the house rose last evening I was saying that as we look at the deficit, and as we prepare to pay additional taxes, we might well ask ourselves what the government has returned to the people which might explain or justify this huge deficit, and what the government has to show in return for this record peacetime expenditure. Immediately, of course, the members of the government point to the increase in the old age pension, as did the Minister of National Revenue the other evening. In his remarks the minister referred to the increase in the old age pension from $40 to $46 made by the Liberal government as representing two cups of coffee, a slogan which was very widely used during the electoral campaign of 1957. What the minister did not say was that Canada could afford the two cups of coffee at that time, whereas the three cups of coffee which this government has offered in this $9 increase in old age pensions have created a deficit of $184 million in the pension fund which must be paid out of consolidated revenue, and which has necessitated a permanent increase in the special sales tax and income tax earmarked for that purpose.

That is not increasing social legislation, reducing taxes and balancing the budget. Desirable though it may have been to increase old age pensions, this government stands condemned not only for having misled the Canadian people with regard to the economic possibility of an increase in pensions at that time but for having, by its extravagance and ill-timed spending, added to the inflationary tendencies of our economy and detracted from the purchasing power of that very same $9 which was given to help out our senior citizens. As a matter of fact the three cups of coffee represented by the $9 increase have now been reduced to only two cups because of the increase in the cost of living.

Can we say that the money involved in the government's deficit has been used in order to stabilize our economy? Where, in fact, is the special billion dollar public works program which the Conservatives claimed would solve the unemployment problem? There is not one indication either in the estimates or in the budget speech that the government has embarked on what is designed to be, or what has turned out to be, a truly visionary program. On the other hand there are indications that unemployment is still rampant in the country and running at an uncomfortably high level for this time of year. We know, of course, that the moneys in the unemployment insurance fund are still below the critical point, yet there is not indication whatsoever of any legislation with regard to unemployment such as was promised in the speech from the throne at the beginning of this session. Can anyone say that our economy is in any way more stable now than it was in 1957?

Similarly, it cannot be claimed that government expenditure has been directed at solving the federal-provincial fiscal problem in such a way that both the provinces and the municipalities would have adequate tax revenues to enable them to meet their constitutional responsibilities. This, again, was promised by the Conservative government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member would permit me to interrupt him, I would ask for a little more co-operation from the house. I think the hon. member is having difficulty in making himself heard in the face of so much competition.

Mr. Cardin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be very interesting to take a good look at page 2410 of Hansard, where hon. members will find a table headed "federal contributions to the provinces". This is the table to which the Minister of National Revenue referred at page 2628 of Hansard, where he said:

> My time is running out but we find that in the 1956-57 fiscal year—just two years ago—the total contribution made two years ago by the treasury of this country, by the minister of finance, by my hon. friend's predecessor, was $689 million. That was the last payment made by the immediate predecessor of my hon. friend. According to the budget which the present Minister of Finance has brought down, for which he is criticized for imposing higher taxes, for which he is criticized because it still has a deficit, which is the situation? According to those figures, for the fiscal year which will end next March 31 the total contributions to the province will be $1,212,500,000, virtually twice the $689 million which was paid three years ago.

Evidently in saying this the minister was trying to create the impression that the Conservatives had doubled the federal contributions to the provinces. But he forgot to mention that in arriving at that conclusion he had to include the increases which were made by the Liberal government in the budget of 1957-58 brought down by Mr. Walter Harris. It is not true that the last contribution made to the provinces by the Liberal government was of the order of $689 million, because in the budget of 1957-58 the federal contribution to the provinces was considerably increased.

May I remind hon. members that when the Minister of National Revenue was making this statement he was making it in the House of Commons; he was not making it on a political platform during a political campaign. It would be interesting to hear what Conservative members of the house have to say about the fact that the tax rental agreements and the tax abatements made to the provinces are considered by this government as federal contributions to the provinces, though we, as Liberals, have always acknowledged and recognized that the moneys obtained by the provinces either through the rental of their direct taxing powers or through the abatements applied to the provinces were not a federal contribution but were a direct constitutional right and prerogative of the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: If the Conservative members in this house, particularly those from the province of Quebec, who have waxed so eloquent in the past about the necessity for preserving provincial rights and autonomy, do not get up in their places and accuse this government of a most insidious attack on provincial rights, it will be another conclusive proof that provincial rights and provincial autonomy have been used in the province of Quebec as a political warhorse and for political purposes only, and that in spite of the indignant speeches we have heard from these hon. members during election campaigns in the past they have lacked either the courage or the interest to get up and defend their province against a serious and really dangerous infringement of a fundamental constitutional right.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the deficit could be explained on the grounds of a substantial increase in government expenditure in the field of national defence. Here again it should be noted that there is nothing in our national defence policy that warrants the expenditure of $617 million. The government, as we all know, has spent every last cent of the $211,800,000 in the special defence equipment fund, which if it had not existed would have boosted our national deficit to well over $800 million.

It has been our national defence policy in the past for Canada to participate to the fullest extent it could in maintaining peace either through the medium of the United Nations or through NATO. We have in fact sent Canadian troops to Korea, and we have stationed troops in the Middle East and in Europe in order to prevent aggressive attacks from the U.S.S.R. At a time when it is well known that the dangerous, critical and strategic area is no longer Korea or Europe but indeed is the North American continent; when it is further realized that Canada has virtually become the forefield of United States defence and that in the event of war between the United States and the U.S.S.R. Canada would likely be the battleground of that war and at a time when the security of our very soil is being threatened as never before in the past, this government to all appearances does not seem willing to do as much for the defence of our own land as Canada did in the past for the defence of other lands which were in danger of aggression.

Under this government we have seen a cutback in our militia. Even though experts many times in the past have told us that the best protection against thermonuclear warfare is civil defence, it has not been possible for many months to obtain a report on civil defence so we might know what is or is not being done in this field. We have seen the last CF-100 come off the assembly lines. We have witnessed the discontinuance of the production in Canada of the Astra control system. We are no longer producing the Canadian Sparrow. We stood by and watched the aerial defence of Canada turned over to the United States. We have discontinued the production of the Canadian Arrow and replaced it with the United States Bomarc because it was cheaper, though everyone knows that by the time our armed forces are equipped with the Bomarc it will be as obsolete as the Arrow would have been.

Just the other evening the hon. member for Quebec South, for whose judgment I have a great deal of respect, stated blandly on a television broadcast that the Sparrow was dropped in order that the government might economize. I have nothing against economizing, but the crippling of our national defence industry and the increasing of unemployment are not my idea of sensible economizing. It would appear that the government has not only placed our national defence policy on a bargain basis, but it does not seem to be willing to pull its own weight in the mutual defence agreements we have with the United States for the defence of the North American continent. There is no other interpretation to be placed on the fact that the government has nothing to replace either the CF-100 or the CF-105, the discontinuance of which leaves a terrible gap in the strength of our armed forces.

The fact that the government is allowing thousands of scientists, engineers, technicians and skilled labourers to leave our national defence industry is an indication that the government is not planning to continue to any extent the production of Canadian armament for Canadian defence. While we feel that such an attitude is a tremendous blow to the pride we justifiably felt during the war when Canadians were sailing Canadian ships, firing Canadian guns and flying Canadian planes, the government's attitude has struck an even more painful and serious blow to Canadian industry as a whole which was born of the determination and sacrifice of the Canadian people to meet the challenge of that former day with Canadian armaments and equipment, and which indeed resulted in the unprecedented prosperity Canadians have been enjoying until very recent times.

Today it appears that the government has based its national defence policy on a production sharing basis with the United States. Of course the Prime Minister has given us the assurance that Canada will get its fair share of national defence production. I must admit that I am a little sceptical with regard to the Prime Minister's verbal assurances when I recall the assurances he gave to the Canadian people in the autumn of 1957 to the effect that there was no unemployment, and the assurance he gave a little later that while he was Prime Minister not one Canadian would suffer from unemployment.

Several months have passed since the Prime Minister gave the assurance that Canada would receive its fair share of defence production, and as yet there is not one indication that Canada will in fact get its fair share of defence production from the United States. The existence in the United States of the buy American act, the existence in that country of 4,500,000 unemployed, and the fact that a large number of defence industries there are working only part time are causes for anxiety which outweigh the Prime Minister's verbal assurances.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, having had the pleasure of sitting through the entire seven days of this debate I believe I may say that the speeches were obviously of two classes. There were those which had something kind to say about the budget, and the other half comprising those which did not have something kind to say about the budget. Throughout I have been literally a captive audience.

Having been on the receiving end for seven days I may be pardoned today if I perhaps seek to reverse the role somewhat. I may comment, however, that I am deeply grateful to hon. members for the many kind things they have said in the course of this debate; I appreciate them very much indeed. If in my remarks today I do not dwell on speeches of that kind, I trust hon. members will realize that the time is limited for dealing with the other half of the speeches.

I may perhaps claim that in the course of the budget debate last year and this year I have learned to become somewhat philosophic and relaxed about that half of the speeches to which I should like now to address myself. A good many of these speeches, of course, have been read. I may be pardoned perhaps for suggesting that I think it would be a good thing if Professor Lamontagne would vary his style a little from speech to speech. A variation of that kind, rather than monotony, is a desirable thing in a ghost writer. There was one outstanding exception, of course, and that was the speech made by my good friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), who refreshed us all yesterday with his intervention in this debate, interspersed as it was with copious—or should I say "liberal"—statistics drawn from that unique source, the Martin bureau of statistics.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debate for these past seven days I may say, I hope not immodestly but out of conviction, that if I were bringing in a budget tonight it would be the same budget I had the honour to introduce in this house on the evening of April 9.

The house has before it, sir, an amendment introduced on behalf of the official opposition. It purports to ask the house to express regret that the government has shown bad faith. Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to examine this amendment and to search it from end to end for any statement of principle in regard to those matters that receive attention in it, namely taxes, expenditures, a balanced budget. What is the principle that the official opposition inserts in its amendment? What would it—

Mr. Pickersgill: That politicians should carry out their promises.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —introduce by way of a budget, Mr. Speaker? What would be the guiding principle or policy of its budget if it were in a position to bring one in? Mr. Speaker, you can read this amendment a thousand times, and you will know just as much at the end as to what was in the minds of hon. members opposite as when you began. There is no policy. They have not ventured to say where they stand on questions of taxes, or expenditures, or balancing of the budget. Therefore we are entitled to say to them at this time, when they have had the opportunity given to them under the rules of this house to state their policy, to state their position, to give the features of the budget they would have introduced: what would they have done had they been bringing in the budget? Rather the theme on the part of hon. members opposite has been that the people should not have elected the government. From member after member we have heard them deliver reproaches upon the electorate. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well that we should have an understanding of some features of this democratic system of ours. Hon. members opposite had better learn soon that the people, the sovereign people, are supreme in this country, and it will reflect no credit upon the opposition to exert themselves to deliver reproaches upon the people of this country for their decision.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we have listened on the part of hon. members opposite to a series of what might be called hit and run speeches, because they have run right away from anything approaching a statement of their position on those important issues confronting the Canadian people. They have run away from reality; they have expressed no concern over such matters as inflation and other major problems.

I do not wish to overlook any hon. members opposite. In the course of this debate I think we have seen on the part of the C.C.F. group the same willingness to go blithely along proposing measures regardless of whether they would destroy initiative and enterprise, or whether they would harm the economy. It has been the old picture of pie in the sky, a sky full of pie, and pie that never has to be paid for.

Well, so much for them. As for the official opposition, Mr. Speaker, they have floundered in their own pretences; they have thought apparently they could somehow skate through eight days of debate without ever exposing their own views on those important questions. One of them said I had to walk a tight rope in this debate. Mr. Speaker, I may have had some difficulties to deal with in framing this budget, but believe me the tight rope walking in this debate has been done by hon. members opposite. Indeed, sir, in the way they have threaded their way around and away from those important issues they have, I suppose, earned for themselves the title of "the pick and choose company".

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Now, evidently having no policy of their own to offer, I do not blame them for whatever they wish to say about us in the light of what we may have said on other occasions. But, Mr. Speaker, that is a far cry from what has been done by hon. members opposite with statements made in the past by members of the government and others who are sitting to your right. We have watched them in this debate wrench statements out of their context, twist them out of all resemblance, divorce them from the time and circumstances related to them, while they have not said anything about their own past statements. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may be forgiven if today I seek to remind them of some of the things they have said in times past and undoubtedly would like to forget today.

There is one feature, Mr. Speaker, that stands out above all others in the attitude of the official opposition in this debate. It is this, Mr. Speaker, and it is a sad fact. The Liberal party, as represented by its speeches in this house, is today at odds with the Canadian people. The partisan interests of the Liberal party have been demonstrated to be at variance with the real interests of the Canadian people. They have spread gloom; they have breathed pessimism. They are happy only when they can revel in what is bad news for the Canadian people. When we have talked about expansion, prosperity, more jobs, their treatment has been cold water, cynicism and scorn. They do not want good news, so they go on talking about the difficulties.

There are difficulties but, Mr. Speaker, they do not need to be exaggerated, and it is no credit to hon. members opposite to have gone on in this way spreading gloom, magnifying, exaggerating, trumpeting abroad every difficulty they can conjure up. This presents real danger to the future of the Liberal party. May I say, Mr. Speaker, as a believer in the two party system, that I view this situation with very deep concern.

There have been certain criticisms in which hon. members opposite have indulged in the course of this debate, and while they are not serious I think, having introduced this budget, I should deal with them as far as time permits.

I am told first of all, Mr. Speaker, that my forecast is too optimistic. I forecast a 7 per cent increase in the gross national product over the 1958 record figure. Mr. Speaker, I put that figure forward having weighed it well; I put it forward on a solid basis, and anything that has happened in the 10 days since that figure was put before the house has gone to confirm that prognostication.

In the United States in this period respectable forecasters have come forward with estimates that the gross national product in the United States will increase this year by between 10 and 12 per cent. We have seen in Canada in the same period a most extraordinary expansion of commercial loans. Mr. Speaker, the commercial loans in Canada amounted to $100 million last week, just about double the normal rate for this period of the year. I do not say that is going to continue at this extraordinary pace every week, but those factors are of a very great importance.

Mr. McIlraith: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry; I will not have time to answer questions in the limited time at my disposal, unless my hon. friend will wait to the end.

Mr. Pearson: The minister can have all the time he needs.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am satisfied that the forecast which I made of that 7 per cent increase is fully justified; and I am sure of this—and this I do not like to say, Mr. Speaker, or to find—that if this forecast is borne out in the event, the Liberals will be disappointed. They have shown that already. They will be happier, Mr. Speaker, if the recovery does not proceed as fast as I estimated in the budget speech. They do not even like to admit that there is any recovery in process. They do not want any good news. They do not want bright hopes for the Canadian economy. They prefer to dash cold water on Canadian hopes. This, Mr. Speaker, is the sorry state to which the once great Liberal party has fallen.

But when we are talking about forecasts let us go a little further in this review and test accuracy as reflected in previous figures. On June 17 last year I forecast a deficit of $648 million. As a result of further commitments undertaken later in the same session that figure was revised to $700 million. When the budget was presented to the house this year I was able to report a deficit of $616 million, and to draw the attention of the house to the fact that in our estimates of expenditures we were within two-thirds of one per cent of the amount they turned out to be. In connection with revenues, which are harder to estimate, we were in the event within 2½ per cent of what the estimate had been. This combined estimate of revenues and expenditures, 1958-59, in the budget introduced on June 17, 1958, is throughout the whole post-war period, with the exception of one year, the budget which came closest to accuracy in the outcome.

Our hon. friends opposite were not very happy about this improvement in the deficit position. They were deeply stirred by it, and they have done their best since to make it appear worse. Well, Mr. Speaker, on any test the result shows, first, accuracy in the estimating and, second, an improvement in conditions in Canada since last June even over and above the anticipated improvement on which we based our estimate in the budget of 1958.

Let us look now at the record of those who are complaining now that our estimates are too optimistic. I turn to what was said by hon. gentlemen opposite in the budget debate last year. I begin naturally with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson). Speaking on July 3 in the budget debate and dealing with my estimate of a deficit of $648 million he said, as found at page 1902 of Hansard, "the deficit will likely be over $1 billion." Again, as found on page 1903, he said, speaking of borrowings: "Approximately $1 billion is due to government deficit." Again two months later, speaking on September 4, he said, as found on page 4574 of Hansard:

> Furthermore, the huge budgetary deficit announced by the minister, which may be greater than announced by him—

And further, as found on page 4583, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) referred to a forecast by Mr. Harvey Perry, director of the Canadian tax foundation, and said that on the basis of that forecast that "our deficit would be close to $1 billion—we predicted it would go over $1 billion."

Well, Mr. Speaker, after the session the Leader of the Opposition heeded the ancient advice, "Go west, young man, go west," and west he went. He had some interesting things to say in the course of his western tour. The Winnipeg Free Press quotes him in its issue of October 6 as having said at Regina:

> —"the deficit for the current year will be much greater" than the $700 million forecast by finance minister hon. Donald Fleming. . . . "My guess is that it will be close to $1 billion," Mr. Pearson said. "But that's just speculation."

Mr. Pearson: So it was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It certainly was just speculation, and pretty wild speculation at that. But he did not content himself with that. On he went, and we find that he spoke in Toronto and is reported in the Globe and Mail of November 12 as having said in the course of a speech to the Liberal businessmen's club of Toronto:

> —we are now reaping the whirlwind of a billion dollar deficit.

The following day he participated in a by-election campaign in Trinity riding.

Mr. Pearson: A very good one, too.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In an attempt to influence the result of that contest he is quoted in the Toronto Star of November 13 as having claimed "the Conservative government has a $1 billion deficit". At least in part on the strength of that misrepresentation, Mr. Speaker, his candidate won the election in that riding.

Mr. Pearson: The people are sovereign.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Later my hon. friend went on indulging in the same forecasts. He is reported in the Ottawa Citizen of November 19 as saying the same old thing:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker sowed the wind of election promises and reaps the whirlwind in a billion dollar deficit.

And again:

> There is a billion dollar deficit in a time of recession—

Well, Mr. Speaker, I made a speech in Toronto which hon. members opposite have chosen to quote very frequently since, and there I stated that in the light of the figures that were available at that time, the beginning of January, I did not think my estimate of the deficit would be very far out. But here we find the Leader of the Opposition, as late as March 16, saying in an address to the eastern Ontario young Liberals, as reported in the Ottawa Journal:

> Opposition leader Pearson, in a blistering attack on the government, forecast a billion dollar deficit budget "within two or three weeks".

Now, Mr. Speaker, we do not know whether he was talking about the 1958-59 deficit there or 1959-60. The report must remain ambiguous on the point, but whichever way he takes it the Leader of the Opposition was hopelessly wrong in his attempts at estimating or even at speculating. I think hon. members of the house will be able to place their own estimate on the value of any of his prophecies or estimates with regard to the economy. Rather, I commend to hon. members opposite what was said by the Ottawa Citizen by way of editorial comment on April 9:

> Those who, a few months ago, had forebodings that the federal government's 1958-59 deficit would approach the billion dollar mark should be glad that events have proved them unduly pessimistic. The figure as presented to the commons yesterday by Mr. Fleming, the Minister of Finance, is $617 million, which is even less than the minister himself had forecast ($648 million) when presenting his first full budget on June 17 last.

Mr. Pearson: Explain your bookkeeping.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I commend to members of the opposition the views expressed in this editorial in the Ottawa Citizen, and I ask at the same time why they chose to exaggerate and misrepresent the deficit budgeted for in 1958-59. They know and they knew when they uttered those remarks that a billion dollar deficit would have done damage to the Canadian economy, that it would have made our fiscal position much weaker and would have exaggerated our borrowing needs. For those who would listen to them, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have brought on the Canadian economy by their talk all the harm that a billion dollar deficit would have brought upon it if they could have had their way.

Mr. Pearson: That is a new excuse for failure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They have adopted an irresponsible course, and they have convicted themselves.

They have also had something to say to us, if you please, about promises. I wish to deal with what has been said by them about promises. With respect to the subject of tax reduction in 1957, the Prime Minister and others associated with him in the campaign said that if the people would give the Prime Minister a mandate we would bring about a reduction in taxes. The people elected us and we carried out our promise. In December, 1957 the government introduced substantial reductions in taxation aggregating at that time $178 million, reductions that took various forms; increases in the exemptions for dependent children, reductions in the rates of taxation on those in the lowest income brackets, an increase in the portion of corporate income that is exempt in order to benefit small corporations. Hon. members opposite had a much better opportunity than we did to bring about reductions of this kind because times were better in 1955, 1956 and 1957.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But even in the face of their opportunities they chose not to reduce taxes and we, grappling as we were with the difficult conditions they left us heir to, brought about reductions in taxation.

We had another election campaign in 1958. Already we were spending very heavily to combat a recession. In the campaign we did not make promises of general tax reductions under these circumstances. We pointed to several individual reductions which, if the people would re-elect us, we would bring about; and we did. This parliament was elected on March 31, 1958 and the promises on which the Conservatives were elected in the majority in this house have been carried out and will continue to be carried out.

In June of last year we proceeded to carry out those promises we had made that we would bring about certain individual reductions in taxation. We brought in a new estates tax act which reduced the tax on smaller estates. We reduced the sales taxes on purchases by municipalities and brought about a number of other individual reductions which aggregated $26 million. Mr. Speaker, the aggregate of the reductions made in 1957 and 1958 totalled $202 million, under the circumstances then existing. But under the circumstances of today, in the light of conditions of today, the numbers of taxpayers, incomes and so on, these reductions have been estimated by my department to be worth not $202 million but $230 million per year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Inflation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have said that that promise of ours was fulfilled. That promise was fulfilled to the letter.

I draw attention to the fact that again in this budget, Mr. Speaker, we have demonstrated, as we did in 1957 and 1958, the same concern for the man of small means, the small taxpayer and small businessman. The present budget removes from them much of the burden of the increases. Today we are showing that same concern for the person of small means. This has been accompanied, Mr. Speaker, by the largest program of aid to provinces, municipalities, hospital insurance, house construction, hospital construction, social security and aid to employment in the history of Canada. This is the answer to the double talk we have heard for years from hon. members opposite about the big interests. Our proven concern has been for the people of small means in this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they talk about reduced expenditures. Certainly before we came into office we inveighed against waste and extravagance and the expenses of government under the Liberal administration. We had reason for doing so. If we had been elected earlier unquestionably we could have saved this country money by eliminating waste and extravagance. In the 1957 campaign we asked the people for a mandate to increase social security expenditures and aid to the provinces and municipalities. We were given that mandate and we have carried out our promises. We never promised or pretended that these increases in social security could be carried out without somebody paying for them. In 1957-58 we had to work with the budget that had already been brought in by the Liberals, on the strength of which the spending programs of that year were already launched and commitments made before we came into office in late June, 1957.

In the 1958 campaign we promised the people that while continuing our social security program and proceeding with and hastening the introduction of hospital insurance programs and spending heavily and constructively to combat unemployment, we would continue to wage war against waste and extravagance. We have done so, and we shall continue to do so wherever we find them. The treasury board this year has been tighter and closer in its scrutiny of estimates than ever before. A lot of these things are not talked about in detail everywhere, but let there be no doubt about it; the treasury board today is doing an effective piece of work. There are not going to be any more printing bureau scandals; there are not going to be any more of these spring-filled dance floors. There is a tightening of the rein on expenditures.

When we are told about the expansion of the civil service, may I remind you that in bringing in the estimates for the present year, on February 5, I drew attention at page 706 of Hansard to these facts. I said:

> Notwithstanding the increases of $42 million in salaries and wages and pay and allowances, there has been no appreciable expansion in the strength of the civil service of Canada or of the defence forces. While additional responsibilities have been assumed, the over-all increase in the size of the government establishment for 1959-60 will be only .4 per cent over 1958-59. This is the smallest annual growth shown since 1951. It demonstrates the government's continuing effort to increase efficiency and at the same time to economize on the use of staff.

It is appropriate that at this point I should ask hon. members opposite if they will be frank with the house and the Canadian people. Do you want to reduce old age pensions? Do you want to eliminate hospital insurance? Do you want to reduce or eliminate the expenditures we are making on housing, on public works, on our winter works program and other measures to combat unemployment? Would you deny the aid we are giving to the provinces and municipalities? I put on Hansard on the evening of April 9 table No. 1 which shows the rapidly increasing assistance we are giving to the provinces of this country. This table did not escape the attention of one Liberal journal in this country, and I should like to quote a sentence or two from an editorial appearing in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of April 17. I find this:

> But the tax-sharing agreements aside, the provincial administrations have received from the federal treasury a good deal more financial assistance since the Conservatives took office. This fact is usually overlooked but Finance Minister Fleming brought it into prominence during his recent budget speech. He made public a most interesting table which, if nothing else, seems to prove the federal government has been quite generous with the 10 provincial governments, generally speaking.

There are further statements in that interesting editorial to the same effect. I commend it to the attention of hon. members opposite. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask hon. members opposite where they would reduce expenditures, if they say expenditures should be reduced? We are paying the provinces this year, as table 1 shows, as compared with last year, $148 million more in these various ways. Our responsibilities for social security and pensions of all kinds are increased in this budget over last year by another $148 million. Here is where the increases in 1959-60 estimated expenditures lie as compared with 1958-59.

You do not hear frank statements of that kind from hon. members opposite. So I say, Mr. Speaker, we have had from hon. members opposite, while they have been mouthing these phrases about reduced expenditures, not one word, not a single proposal, for taking one cent off the expenditures in this year's estimates. On the contrary, one of them has come forward with a proposal that would probably increase expenditures this year by substantially over $100 million.

They say something now about a balanced budget. I have something to say to them about that too, Mr. Speaker. We did not promise, when we went to the people, that we would balance the budget this year. We did not promise that we would balance the budget last year. A balanced budget, as such, was not even mentioned in the course of the 1958 election campaign. We were not elected on any promise or any platform that for last year or this year or any other particular year we would balance the budget. Nowhere in the 1958 campaign can any such assurance or promise on our part be found. I give that denial, to put it mildly, directly to the kind of nonsense and rot to which we have been listening from hon. members opposite in recent days.

Sir, we did hear something from the Liberals previously on this subject. Perhaps it is time, now, to turn to something interesting they have said. They talk to us in this amendment about deficit financing. Mr. Speaker, here are the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) spoken in the house in the last budget debate as reported on page 1898 of Hansard for July 3:

> Therefore it is not the deficit as such that we are criticizing, because deficits are required in the kind of situation we have in this country at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, that expression has never been withdrawn. Who are those who talk today about deficit financing? We had some other interesting comments which fell from the lips of the Leader of the Opposition in the course of the election campaign, and not once but several times. I recall to mind one in particular on February 10, 1958, when he said that the Liberals would bring about a tax reduction immediately of $400 million. That was followed up on March 21 in Toronto with a promise of a $100 million tax holiday. That is an aggregate of $500 million. This tax holiday is an interesting thing because the people were going to be given a tax holiday, if the Liberals were elected, right after the election, and when this brief tax holiday was over up would bound the same old rates of taxation again, like a bouncing rubber ball or my hon. friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

Mr. Speaker, for hon. members opposite to charge us with bad faith when we made no such statement to the Canadian people in the election campaign is to indulge in the sort of thing they like to accuse others of, namely making false and misleading statements. I just point out in passing on this subject of deficits that if the Liberals, with their tax holiday and policy of deficit financing, had been in office and carried out their election promises, their deficit today for the fiscal year 1958-59 would be twice as much as ours was. Certainly it would have been well over a billion dollars and probably closer to one and a quarter billion dollars.

I see my time is running short, and I have not as much time as I would have wished to answer all the new attacks we have heard in this house with regard to certain forms of accounting. As regards the defence replacement account I have time only to say that this account has been in existence now for some years, actually nine years, and for eight of those years the Liberals did the budgeting. In seven of those eight years they provided drawdowns from the defence replacement account and they were used to improve their budget position. But there is a difference between the Liberal methods and ours. They did not tell the House of Commons what they were doing. We did. We told the House of Commons beforehand, expressly and frankly, that what we were doing was in the interest of better accounting to parliament. So we did what was right and proper and what we said we would do and what parliament last year approved. We have wiped out that defence replacement account.

They also complain about the old age security fund. How they have forgotten, Mr. Speaker, that the old age security fund was to be on a pay as you go basis. That was what the committee recommended in 1951. That was what Mr. Abbott brought before the house and is the system which came into effect on January 1, 1952. That is what the act calls for. It lays on the Minister of Finance the responsibility for making recommendations in this respect. Mr. Speaker, it has escaped the recollection of hon. members opposite, but what has happened in all these years? In 1951-52 the act was in force only three months and the deficit of $50 million was charged to general budgetary expenditure. In 1952-53 the deficit of $100 million was covered by a temporary loan; it was not charged up against the budget of that year. That loan was written off as charged against the reserve for losses on realization of assets in 1953-54, and was not charged as a budgetary expenditure, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Abbott did not want that shown in his budget.

But hon. members opposite, having forgotten that they were party to that act in 1953-54, now say, when we put this fund on a sound basis and propose that the deficit for this year should be borne in succeeding years, that that is all wrong. How do they account for the fact that in 1953-54 they charged the deficit for 1952-53 up against, not the budget —it did not appear in the budget—but one of those convenient reserves which they had tucked away in the consolidated revenue fund where things were not intended to show. So in a variety of ways since then they have gone on.

They do not have to take my word as to our solution. I would like to read from the Toronto Star, the issue of April 10, 1959, and let hon. members know what is said about this budget:

> It is time to put the old age pension fund on a self-sustaining basis—contributions fell $184 million short of disbursements last year. And Mr. Fleming proposes to do it in an even-handed way, raising the levy on personal income, corporation income and the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent each.
> He has also dealt fairly in raising personal and corporation income taxes by 2 per cent. The increases apply only to the top income fifth of individuals and companies; obviously the ones best able to pay more. Nor do we think there can be any serious quarrel with his modest tax increases on liquor and cigarettes.

That is the Liberal Toronto Star speaking.

Mr. Pearson: Read the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member will have plenty of time to quote it to his heart's content, only I hope he reads them all, not only the selected articles.

Mr. Pickersgill: As you are doing.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I might mention the matter of sales tax. It was dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) in his clear speech a week ago last Monday, when he drew attention to the fact that it was the Liberals who proposed to use the sales tax as one of the elements contributing to the old age security fund, and Mr. Abbott brought it into effect because he said it was fair for the purpose and that the sales tax was not a regressive tax but a progressive tax within the limits effective for the old age security fund contributions.

I had hoped to say something further, Mr. Speaker, but my time is up.

Mr. Speaker: If my interpretation of the rule is correct, the hon. minister is not limited in time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I only wish I had spoken of it sooner.

I am now given the opportunity, for which I am grateful, of saying something about interest rates. We have heard a lot of loose talk in this house about tight money. There has been on the part of hon. members opposite a fundamental failure either to understand or to state the facts in truth relating to this question. Unquestionably interest rates have risen. They started rising in the United States, in the New York bond market a year ago, and soon after that we began to feel the effects in this country. There was a bad break in the bond market in New York in June of last year, and we felt the effects of that very soon. I have comfort in the fact that the break in the New York bond market, with its effects already evident in Canada, occurred before and not after my budget of June 17 last year. Liberal criticism on this subject of our efforts to meet this problem has grown steadily weaker, and when I hear hon. members talking about the successful measure we took last year to bring about a degree of control and management in relation to the national debt of this country, I prefer the views of some much more eminent and knowledgeable Liberals outside this house, who recognize the wisdom, foresight, fairness, equity and necessity of the conversion loan, and thank them for the part they took in it.

In the budget speech, I have reviewed the problems of financing in relation to our borrowing needs for budgetary and non-budgetary requirements, and the budget contains constructive proposals designed to reduce our difficulties in that respect and to reduce them substantially. The effect of this budget, and of the measures that it proposes, will bring about such a lessening of the pressure upon the bond market through federal borrowings as will be of substantial aid, we expect, to the provinces, municipalities and business in their borrowing programs, all of which have an important relationship to the whole recovery pattern in this country.

I have already drawn attention to the extraordinarily heavy demand there is today for commercial loans from the banks and we are faced, naturally, with a situation where there has been, on the part of the banks, a good deal of liquidation of their bond holdings in order to meet the demand for commercial loans in the course of the very substantial expansion which is going on in the Canadian economy at this very moment. Capital in this country is not unlimited, and this is part of the price of recovery at the present time.

I draw attention, however, to what is either an accidental or a calculated confusion in the minds and speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite. They talk about this rise in interest rates which reflects the extent to which the Canadian bond market is affected by conditions in the United States, and they confuse what is happening now, or what has been happening in relation to interest rates, with what happened under the Liberal government under what has come to be known as the tight money policy of the Liberals. Mr. Speaker, here is the essence of the difference: on our part, we have done what we could, in the light of the difficulties of the situation, to resist the pressures which have caused an increase in interest rates on this continent; but in the case of the Liberal government, the rise in interest rates and the other things they did were brought about in pursuance of deliberate government policy. There is the difference. Their policy was designed deliberately to check business expansion and interest rates were pushed up as part of that policy.

But that was not the only form which that policy took; part of that policy was intended to bring about, deliberately, a severe contraction in commercial credit and to force the banks to cut back on credit, and we well know the way in which the application of that policy harmed business, particularly small business, farmers and others. We opposed and we denounced that tight money policy, and we were right, and the Canadian people at the polls vindicated our stand in regard to the excesses of the Liberal government in deliberately pursuing that policy as they did. And, to the limit of our powers as a government, when we took office we reversed that policy and set about undoing the mischief that that policy had done in retarding the Canadian economy. Therefore, at this time, we are not in the position that tight money conditions have been brought about by the government of the day, as was the case when the Leader of the Opposition was a member of the government.

Mr. Pearson: It just happened to you.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, and it has happened all over this continent and we, the government of Canada, a responsible government, do not exercise supreme power over the economy of the whole of the North American continent. Our policy has been, as hon. members know, to resist as far as lies within our power the payment of high interest rates on federal borrowings and that, I emphasize once again, is a very different policy from that to which the Leader of the Opposition himself was a willing party—the Liberal policy of pushing up interest rates, contracting credit and nipping the buds of Canadian prosperity.

Mr. Pearson: Was that a time of boom or recession?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Hon. members of this house will see clearly that there is a world of difference between the policies of this government and the policies pursued by that discredited Liberal government which was dismissed from office and upon which the Canadian people passed a second verdict, on March 31, 1958, a verdict which has left them in the unhappy position in which they find themselves today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have dealt with the terms of this extraordinary amendment, an amendment which has the temerity to accuse this government of having made promises which it did not make; of having been elected on the basis of promises which it did not give during the election campaign, and of having broken promises which it did not make.

We were not elected on any such platform as hon. members opposite have talked about. I have gone over the record of the 1958 campaign, and I have shown how wildly inaccurate have been the statements of hon. members opposite about our platform and our program as laid before the Canadian people at that time. The bad faith which is to be found in relation to this debate is not in the budget; it is not in the proposals to which the budget speech led. The bad faith lies in the unfounded charges that are contained in the opposition amendment. I suppose we might leave it at that. The opposition has nothing to offer. They did not have anything of which they thought sufficiently highly to be worth according even an honourable mention in their amendment. Such be their verdict upon themselves.

I do not propose to review now what I said in the budget speech which was, I realize, of quite excessive length. But this may be said for the budget which is now under consideration, that it is based upon a view of the present situation which frankly takes account of the difficulties as well as of the bright spots, and faces those difficulties and prescribes clear courses of action, if the house will approve, for meeting those difficulties. It states the tax policy of the government, and states it clearly. It is a constructive effort. It contains a group of constructive proposals based upon a realistic approach to the problems. I think it may be fair to say that it is an approach which will, if approved by the house, contribute substantially to recovery. If it be optimistic, it is optimistic with good reason to be optimistic. It applies what I believe to be a sound principle in dealing with economic conditions that are changing as rapidly as economic conditions have changed in the period of the last year. It uses the fiscal methods open to the government as a flexible means of meeting the problems which confront us at this time.

It may well be that this budget does mark a very important point in the developing economy of this period. I feel complimented indeed by the article written by Mr. Bruce Hutchison, who by all accounts is an eminent Liberal, in what he has had to say about the budget. I have here his article which is headed, "Budget Shows Double Courage", and which concludes with this statement which I should like to leave with the house:

> If so, the budget may be judged later as one of the most important in our history.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that statement will be borne out in the light of events. I am not going to make claims of that kind but I am going to say that this is a realistic budget and one based upon a policy and not, like the amendment, which is based on a lack of policy. We have kept our promises. We shall continue to keep our promises. Because this amendment falsely accuses the government in this respect we ask the house to reject the amendment and reject it decisively.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that many hon. members in this house must feel almost drowned by the verbiage that has flowed from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) during the last 53 minutes. My regret is that so much verbosity should have come from a cabinet minister and particularly the Minister of Finance containing no logic or reasoning.

The minister opened his remarks by informing the house that he has become philosophic and relaxed. Philosophy and relaxation are good in their place, if correct, but I personally have no hesitation in saying that the philosophy which I fear the minister has now adopted is not in the best interests of this country. In his budget speech and again this afternoon he made it evident that his philosophy is to close his eyes to the realities of conditions in Canada and he chooses to be relaxed at a time when there are major problems requiring attention and solution.

It was delightful from an oratorical point of view to listen for 53 minutes to Don Fleming Quixote charging against mirages to the loud huzzas of his colleagues.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not so very loud.

Mr. Winch: At this time Canada needs as minister of finance something more than a Don Quixote charging at mirages. We need a minister who will face economic realities and problems that cannot be solved by excessive verbiage or emotional eloquence or by charges levied against other individuals or parties. We need someone who will face the realities of increasing interest rates and continuing unemployment and who will find solutions for problems relating to the export markets required by this country. These matters require a true philosopher and realist, not a Quixote.

The Minister of Finance referred to prophecies respecting increased gross national products in both Canada and the United States. This is something to which we look forward. It was very noticeable, however, that in the budget speech and in his remarks this afternoon when the minister spoke of increases in the gross national product he did not relate the increases to the value of the dollar. Therein lies one of the fallacies in the approach and prognostications of the minister.

It was also noticeable that when approximately twenty minutes ago the minister nearly burst his buttons telling us that in 1957 he had reduced taxation by $178 million we did not hear him say a confounded word about the fact that in 1958 he increased it by $325 million. Apparently from the minister's point of view there are some things to be emphasized and others to be ignored or given not too much emphasis.

The minister made some comment about a stringent economy but I think it should be noted that although we have no legislation concerning social welfare on the order paper this session the minister this year is asking for an expenditure of $350 million more than was requested in the budget last year.

During the 53 minutes the minister consumed this afternoon he continued the sham battle between the government and official opposition. I believe we have had enough of sham battles and charges and countercharges between the government and official opposition concerning what they said they would do and what they actually did.

Mr. Godin: Are you sorry he mentioned only two parties?

Mr. Winch: We do not utilize the time of this house engaging in idle chatter of that kind. I could spend my entire time making similar statements, charges and accusations but I shall not do so because I do not believe in talking simply for the sake of talking nor do I countenance unnecessary repetition. Enough has been said concerning campaign promises and the fulfilment or lack of fulfilment of those promises.

I wish to tell the minister that I think he fell down in the policy decisions he made relative to taxation. I know that hon. members of the government attempt to advance the argument that it is not taxation that is going to hit the average citizen in Canada. We say that such an assertion definitely is not correct. When an increase of 1 per cent in sales tax is introduced by the government the government is delving into the pocket of every individual in Canada.

I say to that that I find it difficult to understand why the Minister of Finance, when he is getting his greatest revenue mainly from the average citizen of Canada, feels he has to hit them more. I have reference, of course, to the increase on cigarettes. Before the last increase in taxation appeared cigarettes paid a federal tax of 17.7 cents on a package of 20, which I understand is 54 per cent of the retail price. Because the great majority of the average citizens enjoy their smoke and when the government is receiving 17.7 cents on a package of 20, 54 per cent of the retail price, I say it is a darned shame that the minister finds it necessary or decides to add an additional two cents per package of 20. What I say about it being a darned shame I also apply to the increase in spirituous liquors.

Prior to the federal tax increase approximately 80 cents out of every dollar spent on the retail price of spirituous liquors went to the federal and provincial governments. If my understanding and analysis are correct, the federal government receives 43 cents out of every dollar spent. Now, of course, it is going to be more. I personally want to tell the Minister of Finance that when he is already getting 43 cents out of every dollar spent on spirituous liquor I think he is just putting on a little bit too much pressure when he wants still more money. It would not be so bad if he would bring in a law to take some of the water out of it; but since he is still going to levy his tax on the amount of water in the spirituous liquor, then I say 43 cents out of every dollar is enough without an additional 12 cents a bottle. I have to say that I am grateful for one thing, namely that he has left the workingman's beer alone. The 1 per cent is going to have some effect, but I pay my compliments to the brewers who have already announced that they will absorb the sales tax increase.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has found it necessary to increase taxation so as to raise approximately an additional $325 million, I feel the increases he has announced would have been more acceptable, more reasonable and more logical if he first of all, or at the same time, had gone after those who make millions and pay no taxes at all. I refer to corporation and company promoters and stock manipulators who, of course on the evidence, in Ontario alone invest a few hundred dollars and make millions.

Every endeavour that we have made in the estimates committee to find out whether or not the government collects any taxes has been turned down. Therefore, there are only two men who know whether or not those who make money out of stock promotions—since they are in the know—pay anything in income tax. I refer to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) who refused to give information in the estimates committee, and the Minister of Finance. I say to the Minister of Finance, if you are going to hit the people of this country for more than 17.7 cents per package of 20 cigarettes and more than 43 cents out of every dollar spent on spirituous liquors, then why have you not the common decency to collect something from those who make millions and pay no taxes whatsoever? Any demand by the Minister of Finance for increased taxation on the common people will be better understood if he will interest himself in going to those who in the past and now pay no taxes on certain financial manipulations in Canada.

I was most interested yesterday when the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) addressed this house in this debate. The hon. member had this to say, as reported at page 2841 of Hansard. He was speaking of the Minister of Finance:

> I believe that already his performance in this most onerous office in these most difficult times rates him with the great finance ministers of our nation's history, men like Fielding, Sir Thomas White and E. M. Rhodes.

The hon. member for Queens is most certainly entitled to his opinion; so are we all; so am I. The Minister of Finance, in introducing his budget and informing this house and the country of the taxation increases did not deal with many of the realities and problems we are facing; did not make any statement whatsoever of policy or legislation to collect millions from those who pay no taxes now. I think the hon. member for Queens was wrong. The Minister of Finance will not go down in history as a great finance minister, as was intimated by the hon. member for Queens. In my opinion he will go down as "the great betrayer" because in his budget this year he has done three things. He divorced financial policy this year from his own government's and party's campaign promises. He divorced himself and his government from a realistic taxation policy; and he divorced financial policy from the needs of the common citizens. It is for these three reasons that I say he should be, and I think will be, eventually known as "the great betrayer".

I have mentioned the word "divorce" three times. From now on in the 20 minutes I still have at my disposal I am not going to discuss the budget because I have no intention of repeating the statements and the arguments which have already been put forward in the past by previous speakers. I should like to discuss the question of divorce because this debate gives me the opportunity to discuss not only the budget itself but anything else I feel to be of importance and should be discussed in the House of Commons. I recognize that in so doing I am raising a most controversial subject but I do feel it is necessary to speak upon it from two points of view; one, the handling of divorce for the provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec through the medium of the Senate and the House of Commons; and, two the matter of the law as it relates to divorce itself.

Before I enter into these two subjects I want to make it very clear that I am not expressing C.C.F. national policy nor am I giving voice to any policy of the C.C.F. members in this house. I am speaking strictly from a personal point of view on two matters which I feel should be brought to the attention of the house and be given consideration by the government and the house in the not too distant future.

Section 91 of the British North America Act of 1867 gives to the parliament of Canada exclusive legislative jurisdiction in relation to marriage and divorce. All provinces in our country except two have courts that deal with divorces. The provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec do not have such courts. As a result, the Senate and the House of Commons find themselves in the position of having to deal with matters which actually should not come before members of parliament for investigation and decision.

A great deal has been said in the house in the past about the extraordinary situation that faces members of the House of Commons in having to sit in judgment on divorce cases. Over the years suggestions have been made that separate courts should be established for these two provinces or that the Exchequer Court of Canada should handle divorce cases from Quebec and Newfoundland. It is quite evident, however, that no move is contemplated to establish outside courts in order to remove from the Senate and the House of Commons the responsibility of dealing with matters of divorce. Because there is no indication that such a step will be taken, I am taking it on myself to throw out a suggestion different from the establishment of courts but one which I think is worthy of consideration and will remove from the House of Commons the unhealthy task which up till now it has had to accept.

In conversation with constitutional authorities I have found that parliament has the right to delegate power and as a result I want to make a suggestion which I ask members to think about calmly and reasonably. I suggest that we establish a precedent and that the House of Commons and the Senate should pass an act under which the Senate shall have the power to deal with divorce cases, royal assent then being given by resolution, so that the Senate alone will exercise the power preceding royal assent now required of both houses of parliament. I say that if the United Kingdom can say that certain bills passed by the house of commons need not be passed by the house of lords and shall become acts on receiving royal assent then the opposite is true if the procedure is authorized by both houses.

In putting this proposal forward it is my personal opinion that it would be beneficial because divorce bills would no longer need to be considered on the floor of the House of Commons. I believe that the prestige of the Senate would be enhanced if sole jurisdiction were conferred upon it in this regard. I say that our present system is clumsy and outmoded and that the procedure I recommend would greatly simplify the situation. I say further that the Senate has the time and has developed the necessary machinery.

I recognize that there are three possible arguments against my suggestion. First, it might be said that it would saddle the Senate with the whole problem of divorce. I admit that but the Senate is already saddled with the problem so there is nothing new there. Second, it is also arguable that the participation of the commons in divorce bills is a useful check on Senate. In my opinion this argument is not sustainable. I should like to give the house statistics to substantiate that contention. I am certain that the members of the house who are present will be interested in this information.

From 1945 through 1958 the Senate committee heard 4,126 divorce petitions. Of these the Senate committee rejected 54. That meant that the House of Commons received 4,072 divorce bills from 1945 through 1958. The House of Commons rejected 18. There may be some members who would prefer to have information for the last two or three years. From 1956 through 1958 the Senate committee heard 1,219 divorce petitions and rejected 20. Therefore during the same period the House of Commons received 1,199 divorce bills. The House of Commons rejected four.

It is quite obvious that the House of Commons does not sit as a court on divorce bills.

In the light of the fact that out of 4,072 divorce bills received by the house from 1945 through 1958 only 18 were rejected and in the period from 1956 through 1958 only four were rejected, we are making a farce of the procedure.

I come now to the main argument that can be used against my proposal. It can be reasonably argued that such an idea would involve an abdication or abandonment of the powers of parliament. I recognize that. I recognize what kind of a precedent it would be. But I feel that this objection can be met by pointing out that the act would be passed by both houses of parliament and if found unworkable or too shackling it could be repealed or amended by a subsequent act in any future parliament.

I should like to spend more time on the matter of our procedure but I am not going to do so. I hope I have given enough information to justify honest consideration by the government and by all members of the house with regard to the procedure of handling divorces from Newfoundland and Quebec by the two houses of parliament. I say that if the government is not prepared to do as I think it should, if it is not prepared to take the necessary steps to remove this work now required of both houses by referring it to an outside or already established court, then the government should have the guts at least to give consideration to the type of proposal I have made this afternoon.

It is not sufficient, at least in my opinion, to speak about the procedure of divorce in two provinces, without also saying a few words about the law of divorce in Canada. This, too, is a highly controversial subject. I get into trouble sometimes because I insist on raising highly controversial issues. I feel that if something should be said, then it is going to be said; that is, if I think it is right. I do say on behalf of the minority—I am happily married myself, so I am not concerned—that Canada has the most antedated and antiquated divorce laws. Canada's divorce laws are more backward than those of most countries in this world.

Time and time again in my capacity as a representative of my constituency in this house, and previously in the provincial legislature, I have met persons who had real problems. They have been deserted for years, and where the husband or wife is they do not know; nobody knows. If a woman is deserted for a period of years, why should that woman be denied the normal happiness of life, the normal expressions of life? Should we insist that she become immoral by living as a common law wife? I do not believe so. When we have a person subjected to physical cruelty and sexual cruelty, why does the law say that that person must remain tied to such an individual? Why is it that when a person is committed to an insane asylum and found incurably insane the spouse must be denied the right to a normal life? Why is it that when a man is committed to jail as a sexual psychopath—I understand that term is going to be changed—or as a habitual criminal or is found guilty of murder and the sentence commuted to life imprisonment, the spouse should be denied a normal life?

I ask that the members of this house and the government just think these things over. I am not alone in this opinion. I was most interested in reading in a local newspaper the other day a report from Vancouver which said that the British Columbia churches now advocate easier divorce. It says that five of seven British Columbia presbyteries of the United Church of Canada have advocated broader grounds for divorce, and then outline what they think should be the broader grounds. I know you realize, Mr. Speaker, as we all do, that marriage is a sacred and wonderful thing, and everything possible should be done to maintain a marriage, especially when there are children. But under the circumstances I have outlined, why should we in Canada be so far behind the rest of the world, be so unchristian and heathenish, as to deny happiness and a full life to those who are caught in certain circumstances.

As a result of my own personal reading, my consultations with many members of the church, social welfare organizations and as a result of my talks with individuals caught in the web of circumstances, I should like to recommend certain changes. I have no hesitation when I speak on this matter in giving my own views. Let me make this clear; the spouse would have to ask for the divorce because if there was a desire to wait and hope that the person would come out of the insane asylum or out of jail, then that would be the responsibility of the spouse. I should like to recommend that the divorce law be changed; and in addition to the existing grounds for divorce, the following be added: Desertion for three years; after repeated physical and sexual cruelty; after insanity for three years if the spouse is still retained in an institution; and, if one is incarcerated in a penal institution with a sentence over five years or an indefinite sentence after serving a definite sentence of three years.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I first had a few words to say about what the Minister of Finance said on the budget and then on two matters which I did not think anyone else would raise, and which I felt should be raised. Having done so, I would ask the government and every member of the House of Commons to search their own minds, their own consciences, and not only answer the questions which I am about to ask but also decide whether or not they feel they have a part to play in solving the problems of the minority, who have the same right to happiness as the majority. The question I should like to ask is this: Under what code of human behaviour, religious ethic, or civilized law should the innocent suffer for the sins of the guilty? That is what our law imposes upon people today. I leave the answer to that question to the thinking and the decency of the government and the members of this house.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT PUBLICATION OF STRAW POLL RESULTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-11, to amend the Canada Elections Act (publication of straw poll results).

He said: In introducing this amendment to the Canada Elections Act we are asking for the prohibition of the publication of opinion polls or what is commonly called straw polls prior to an election. These polls have been given pseudo-recognition by the people of Canada as being fair, being honest, though the integrity of opinion polls was questioned as recently as 1948 in a very large example.

The Canadian electors are in no way assured that the polls are representative or that the questions which are asked are representative questions. A question asked sometimes of an unrepresentative group leads to an answer which is occasionally used by political parties during the elections. Opinion polls are being conducted in the major portion of our schools. There are many advantages to conducting these polls. For one thing, it keeps a large number of people employed who are operating private polls of one type or another. Second, I think it is a good thing to discuss at election time who the pupil would vote for and probably the reason why that pupil would so vote. But on a number of occasions it has been very easy to tell prior to an election exactly what people in a certain area will do, because their children, attending school and reporting through their polls, make this information available to the teacher.

For some odd reason, possibly a quirk of the Canadian mind, quite often our people have a tendency to accept these polls and decide that they have to vote in an election for the party that is going to win. So it sometimes gives an unfair impetus to the recipient of a very favourable poll. There would be nothing wrong with this if polls were conducted in a manner which would assure the people reading the answers that the polls were an honest sampling of opinion and that the questions had been designed to give true answers and were reported in that manner. But I do not think this is always true.

In the last few months we have seen where polls have been conducted and have not been accepted by the federal government. This is probably more evident in the Department of Labour than in any other federal department. The dominion bureau of statistics operates on the principle of the sample poll. I do not think any member in this house could tell who did the sampling for the department. I never came in contact with anybody who was ever asked any of the questions, but it was found that the system being used was not necessarily the most efficient one which could be developed, and within the last few months the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has been using a number of other methods to find out the number of people seeking employment in Canada. This being one of our official polls it would indicate that it does not even operate in the manner in which we wish it to operate.

If the polls were supervised and the questions standardized, and use of these questions by correspondents and newspapers was made to give a fair sampling of opinion, then there would be less objection to them. But this is not the case. In the United States election of 1948 it was a well-known fact that a number of the polls in that country were so conducted that the questions were asked in such a manner as to receive a particular answer.

This information has been very difficult to come by, because after a poll is conducted and the results published nobody ever looks back on it again. So we tend to forget where the polls made mistakes in the past and are much more interested in what the poll is going to report on the new problem which has arisen. British Columbia faced this matter in 1939 when they passed section 168 of the British Columbia elections act, which reads:

> No person, corporation or organization shall after the issue of the writ for any election take any straw vote, which will prior to the election distinguish the political opinions of the voters in any electoral district.

In moving this amendment we are not suggesting that these polls do not be taken, because they do serve some purpose. We are only suggesting that the results of the polls be not published during the period of election, or from the time the writ has been issued until the time the election itself is conducted.

In 1948 the matter of how honest and trustworthy polls were was shown in an election when Mr. Truman and Mr. Dewey were fighting for the presidency of the United States. Mr. Truman was fighting an election for the third time, but there were many reasons why his popularity should have decreased. He, through congress, had suggested that several things be done which were not too popular, and a number of the pollsters in that country were pledged to support, and to elect if possible, Mr. Dewey, and they worked toward that end. Very little information has ever been available as to what polls have accomplished or with regard to their operation, but a little book was written by Morris L. Ernst and David Loth called "The People Know Best. The Ballots vs. the Polls". It contains some observations which I think are interesting enough to examine. It points out at page 11:

> The presidential election of 1948 has given us the most dramatic, the most significant example of the hazards which our basic concept is facing. With a unanimity which has seldom been equalled in our political history, the men and women upon whom we relied for facts, for comment and for opinion were hypnotized (or hynotized themselves) into the conviction that President Harry S. Truman's campaign was hopeless.
> The great damage to our way of life was not that they were wrong. Far more serious is the attitude of all of us toward that error. We laughed at the recollection of their pontifical certainties. We sneered at their motives, at their intelligence, at the validity of their information, at their methods and at the media through which they spoke to us. We were gleeful or sad over their discomfiture, depending upon how the results of the election pleased us. But there is also an opportunity for us to gain a more substantial benefit. We can use our experience of this great illusion to improve our media of information and our understanding of them.

Then it goes on to say that this is one of the things that we must be on guard against today, because if we are not we are going to allow the pollsters to form an opinion and thus develop our need for voting in one direction because we want to be on the winning side, rather than being able to decide for ourselves which is right and which is wrong. This book points out that in many cases it does take away from the voter the right to make up his own mind and establish for himself his own opinion. Some of the polls in that election in 1948 gave Dewey 96 per cent of the vote, while others gave only as high as 56.

[Mr. Peters.]

I think it is interesting to note some of the questions which are asked. In one of the Gallup poll ballots appears this statement:

> The battle for control of Congress in the November election will be far more closely fought than the presidential battle—
> As you feel today, would you be more likely to vote for the Democratic or for the Republican candidate for congress from your district?

The question which is asked does not relate, hon. members will notice, to the statement which precedes it. And then the result is reported as a Gallup poll report, as follows:

Democratic candidate	41%
Republican candidate	41
Other parties	1
No opinion	17

Another question was asked on August 12, and again a statement was made in connection with it, as follows:

> Although congress brushed aside President Truman's request for limited price controls, there has been a sharp increase of public sentiment in favour of controls since the special Congressional session was called—
> Do you think the government should or should not put back rationing and price controls on some products?

And the answer which was given, reads:

Should	56%
Should not	35
Price controls but not rationing	2

When these results are reported in the newspapers an impression is created that the issue has already been decided in the minds of the majority of the electorate. I suggest that this type of poll taking is not accurate, and that it is not necessarily honest. It is to the credit of the people of the United States that they saw fit in that election to vote on the basis of their own opinions rather than accept the opinion reached by most of the news commentators and all the public opinion polls.

All this, in my opinion, establishes a case for prohibiting the conducting of this type of poll and the reporting of these polls in the press during elections, because the use of these methods is eliminating one of the basic rights which the people possess—the right of choice. We depend a great deal on statistics, on publications and on facts and figures which are used as yardsticks, among them, for example, the figures which are published every month with regard to the cost of living. Publications of this kind are taken as facts and are accepted by the people as being facts. If we publish opinion polls as facts in the same way people will tend to use them and depend on them as crutches rather than to find out for themselves.

I would very much appreciate a vote on this matter. We have 31 public bills and orders on the order paper; we have spent one day on each one of them, and have achieved no results. I am not sure whether hon. members are in favour of the proposal I am making or not, but I have noticed in the last few weeks that many people are in favour of it. Yet we still take the whole hour, and then defeat the measure by letting it go by the board. I strongly urge the government to allow a number of these 31 items to be voted on. They are all important to the people who put them on the order paper and there are a number which are a good deal more important than the one in which I am interested at the present time. I appeal to the government either to oppose this measure or to speak in its favour through one of its representatives, and thus allow us to continue with other matters. Otherwise I suggest we might as well discontinue the item of public bills altogether, because I think we would be wasting a great deal of time on these subjects.

Mr. McGee: I was rising on a point of order to point out that on other occasions hon. members who have attempted to comment on this aspect of the matter have been ruled out of order, and to suggest that the hon. member for Timiskaming is himself out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I was getting ready to interrupt just as the hon. member rose. While a passing comment on the fate of these bills is not objectionable, that certainly should not be made the subject of debate. We should confine ourselves to the matter in hand.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): I think this bill is a foot-in-the-door infringement against freedom of expression, freedom of opinion and freedom of the press. Indeed, it is an insult to the Canadian people and I, for one, if there is a vote, will vote against it. What right have we to sit here in this House of Commons and legislate against expressions of opinion from the Canadian people, published or otherwise? What right have we to say that the Canadian people must not be allowed to read about the opinions of their fellow countrymen?

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), in what I think was an attitude of arrogant superiority, is saying that the Canadian people cannot be trusted to think for themselves, and, furthermore, that we must protect them from the thoughts of others. This bill says to the Canadian people: you are so colourless, so opinionless, that we cannot trust you to read about the opinions of other people. I do think this is an insult to the Canadian people. One moment the socialists are viewing the situation with alarm because they say the polls are influencing voting, and the next moment, still viewing the situation with alarm, they are saying that the polls are not infallible and that—as the hon. member for Timiskaming himself pointed out—the polls were in fact wrong in 1948 and President Truman did win the election in the United States. Moreover, the polls did not seem to influence voting in the 1957 Canadian election.

I say that the socialists cannot have it both ways. They cannot say that the polls influence voting while maintaining at the same time that the polls can be wrong and, therefore, do not influence voting. I think that public opinion polls are part of our democracy, and not only of our democracy; in 15 countries around the world these polls are taken. I should just like to put the names of a few of these countries on record, because there is a certain significance attached to them. They include Canada, the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Denmark, Sweden, Italy, Holland and Norway. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that none of these countries are communist countries. Communism will not allow the publication or expression of opinions. I do not suppose communist leaders even want to hear about public opinion as expressed in public opinion polls. Or perhaps, like the socialists, they are afraid of public opinion.

The passing of this bill would, I feel, place Canada in a ludicrous position. It would certainly indicate that Canadian politicians are afraid of public opinion, and I believe that to legislate against the publication of polls would be to legislate against freedom of opinion. I do not know how the hon. member for Timiskaming who professes to believe in a bill of rights can reconcile this bill to such a belief.

How far would such a censorship as this go? What about those who go across the country just before an election and who, normally, in the course of their work, comment on the state of public opinion? Practically every large newspaper sends reporters across the country to make surveys and take polls, and these reports are subsequently published in the newspapers. Is the hon. member suggesting that they should be censored, too, or that they should be made illegal? In my opinion he is, because the amendment begins with the words:

> No person, company or corporation shall publish results of straw polls—

I think this is dangerous and evil legislation even to contemplate. Not only is it menacing freedom of opinion but freedom of the press.

In his explanatory note the hon. member for Timiskaming sets down the purpose of his amendment to the Canada Elections Act in these words:

> The purpose of this amendment is to prohibit, and to make punishable as an illegal practice, the publication in any manner before election day of the results of a straw vote or poll of the political opinions of the electors.

We are told that that is the purpose of this bill. What the hon. member has not told us is the real reason for the presentation of this bill. I suggest that the true reason is that the socialists are afraid of public opinion and perhaps with justification because public opinion and public favour certainly have not been very heartily on their side in the last few elections.

Last year when the hon. member for Timiskaming introduced this same bill in the house, as reported at page 2831 of Hansard of July 29, 1958 he had this to say:

> We all know of cases where questions are asked of the general public which are very innocent in nature but by the time the results of such polls are used by certain advertising agencies and implications are drawn from them, the information presented to the public does not necessarily represent the opinions expressed by the participants in the poll.

I do not understand this strange generalization. The hon. member concluded that statement by saying:

> There is actually no guarantee to the Canadian people that such polls are taken on a regular sample basis—

What does the hon. member mean when he suggests that all of us know of cases where innocent questions are asked and implications drawn which do not represent the opinions expressed by those polled? I for one know of no such cases. I can see no point in that kind of accusation. Polls are costly things to take and I cannot see why anyone would spend substantial sums of money on a poll and then falsify the results.

The Canadian institute of public opinion which is the Gallup poll in this country has some 500 people working continuously on a wide variety of subjects across the nation all the time. Their work embraces polls concerning the voting intentions of the electorate, not just at the time of an election but throughout the year every year. The hon. member says there is no guarantee that polls are taken on a regular sample basis. I do not know what he means by a guarantee but I do know that the Canadian institute of public opinion conducts a political poll every eight weeks. It describes its services as "a snapshot of voting intentions" taken not on election day or just before election day, but continuously thoughout the years. It is a political poll taken on a regular sample basis.

In conclusion may I say I condemn this bill not only as a manifestation of arrogant paternalism but also as a menace to fundamental freedoms. What right have we, the elected representatives of the people, to place any kind of restraint upon expressions of opinion? If the socialists would pay a little more attention to those expressions of opinion instead of trying to censor them they might learn something of what the people are thinking and be a little better off.

This bill is a veritable iron curtain behind which the socialists seek to hide their own inadequacies. It occurs to me the mere introduction of this bill is an indictment against the C.C.F. party and certainly a warning to the Canadian people. The socialists would impose their will upon the free expression of opinion of a free people. I hope, just as the hon. member for Timiskaming said, that we may have a vote on this amendment so that every responsible member of parliament may have the opportunity of standing up in this house and being counted on the side of freedom.

Mr. A. R. Webster (St. Antoine-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if the bill which is before us for discussion this afternoon were to pass it would be in my opinion extremely difficult to enact it. What is to hinder the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) or any other hon. member appearing on a public platform or before a gathering of news people and predicting the result of a coming election by releasing the findings they have gathered from the reports sent in by their district organizers? Are we to make this a crime? Are we to make it unlawful to mention this from a platform? Any piece of legislation which having been put on the statute books is ignored or not enforced is to my mind serving only to clutter the administration of justice and to bring other worthwhile legislation into disrepute.

The newspaper people who travel across the country with the leaders of political parties during campaigns are entitled to and indeed are expected to express their opinions as to what people in the country are thinking and I do not believe we can bring in legislation to counter what the people of this country want and expect in the way of news.

A large number of people in this great country of ours are undecided as to how they should vote. Being human they naturally want to be on the winning side so that after an election they will be in a position to tell their friends that they were clever enough to have picked the winning candidate or the winning party. This is an unfortunate situation because it indicates a lack of political education but, like the poor, this type is always with us.

I cannot see how any great harm could be caused by a straw vote which is only an indication of how the people are thinking at the particular time the poll is taken. Something could happen which would cause the voting population to veer completely around and vote in an entirely different fashion. Being so closely associated with our good neighbours to the south where the advance poll or Gallup poll has become almost a national institution I do not see how we in Canada could possibly prevent the publication of any advance prediction relating to a Canadian election.

The result of a poll among the general public concerning an election even when published does not mean that the outcome is guaranteed. Hon. members will recall during the election in which Mr. Harry Truman sought to become president of the United States all the newspapers and public polls were against him and yet by getting out and conducting an active election campaign he was able to win by a substantial majority. Apparently he was able to convince the people he was the better man. This illustrates the fact that although papers and magazines were full of how his opponent was taking the country by storm and that he might as well close up shop, nevertheless the polls were wrong and the man who had the backbone of public opinion behind him was he who won the election.

The hon. member who introduced this bill to amend the Canada Elections Act has said that he has no objection to the taking of public opinion polls in public schools and high schools by the pupils or in any other such places. Does he not realize that if the children who take these polls go home and report the results to their parents, in a number of cases they will have an effect on influencing the parents' votes. I know that during the last election in the constituency which I have the honour to represent my daughter was a school teacher and the children went back to their parents and practically told the parents that if they did not vote for my daughter's father they just would not have anything further to do with them, and that influenced quite a number in my favour. People want to be informed and I believe it is the duty of the newspapers to inform them. A poll does not constitute propaganda. The report of a public poll is only the announcement that in some measure a certain percentage of the population declares itself for or against a political party or a politician.

In my opinion these polls cannot prejudice our friends in any way because in this country people may often consider not so much the results of those polls but rather the party program and the candidates who are up for election. We saw that the results taken during the last election gave the facts, and the results were neither inaccurate nor dishonest, as the Canadian people sent to the house in the last election such a large Conservative majority.

I do not see any reason for the introduction of this bill, which seems to me to be only an excuse to use up the members' time when we could be gainfully employed in debating legislation that has merit to the country as a whole. I make these remarks as I am opposed to this bill and do not see any great merit in it. I believe this bill should not have been submitted to this house this afternoon.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a few words in support of this bill.

An hon. Member: To talk it out.

Mr. Winch: Not me. I just wish to say I am most surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken) that this would mean an iron curtain. Because of her great experience she must know of petitions that are sent out and signed by anybody without their ever reading them. She also knows that the Gallup poll can, and does ask loaded questions. Because of her experience, she must know of petitions being signed without a knowledge of their contents. She must know how questions can be loaded. I cannot understand why she calls it an iron curtain. I rose particularly because a previous speaker said he could not understand how the legislation could be administered. This kind of legislation has been administered for 20 years in British Columbia without complaint. There is the proof, 20 years without any complaint in British Columbia.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think other hon. members on the government side have brought out most of the points that I think should be brought out in connection with this bill. In view of the lack of time I will not repeat their arguments but I would like to compliment them on their statements and on expressing my views so clearly. But as a former newspaperman who probably has had a great deal more experience in reporting and in editorial work, and knows more about the integrity of newspapers and their influence on the public than the proposer of Bill No. C-11, I should like to bring out only two points which are involved in this proposed amendment.

In my opinion, they are two very vital points in our form of democracy which would be curtailed by this bill. These two points are freedom of the press and the right of each individual to all the information and expressions of opinion that he can possibly obtain, even during an election, or perhaps I should say particularly during an election. Any denial of those rights, I am sure, will not come from this government.

The sponsor of this amendment, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), wants to have public opinion polls, what he calls straw votes, abolished by federal statute. The purpose of this amendment, as was pointed out by the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken), is to prohibit and make punishable as an illegal practice the publication in any manner before election day of the results of a straw vote or polls of the political opinions of the electors. All I can say to this is that the hon. member for Timiskaming must have a very small regard for the mentality of Canadian voters. Perhaps he has reason for this poor opinion. I have a much higher regard for those who mark their ballots in federal elections. By inference, Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of this bill is saying that Canadian voters have no minds of their own, and, like a flock of sheep, will cast their ballots after having themselves directed in one direction by newspaper quotations and headlines and by publication of what the mover calls straw votes. I suggest that this is a very poor picture of our electorate. It is a picture that is not borne out by recent elections.

The Canadian voters have minds of their own and exercise their franchise as they see fit, and are not told how to vote by any newspaper headlines. I see nothing wrong with publication of straw votes in an election campaign. As I have said, straw votes are part of public opinion polls, and public opinion polls are part of public education. Public education has brought the Canadian people to the high level of living and, I might say, the high level of government that we now enjoy.

I should like to conclude with strong support for freedom of the press. The Canadian people want to be informed and it is the duty of our newspapers to inform them. As you know, Mr. Speaker, on most days when orders of the day are called the press gallery is filled with reporters and their job is to inform the Canadian people. Again, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that public opinion polls have the influence on voters that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) fears they have. I think that during an election campaign Canadian voters consider the programs of the various parties as they are presented to them on the platform and they also consider the ability of the candidates. In my opinion, therefore, members of this house should show their confidence in the clear thinking of the Canadian electorate by voting against the motion.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8. p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, tonight I wish to speak on our Canadian fruit and vegetable industry. It is always a pleasure to stand up and talk about something with which you have had a close association. Many hon. members in this house represent constituencies in which this industry plays a prominent part, but I am sure all hon. members have a very special interest in the affairs of the growers of this country.

There are three points which I wish to stress tonight. They are, first of all, the recent tariff changes; second, the position of the Canadian Horticultural Council in relation to the industry and the government and, finally, fair value for duty. As to my first point, the recent tariff changes, the budget has been received throughout the fruit and vegetable world of Canada with a great deal of satisfaction, and with very good reason. The tariff amendments are twofold. First of all, there are changes in the tariff itself—that is the rates—and, second, changes have been made in the times when the rates will apply. This does not mean that the tariff has been raised on all items. In fact, the raises are, you might say, modest in the extreme. Generally speaking, though, they are worthwhile and designed to help combat imports at the critical time when marketing is taking place. I would say at this time that congratulations are due to the government, certainly to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and his department, not only for the changes which have been made but also for steering us through the hard times during the negotiations with other countries.

Let us examine a few of these changes. Some of these items have had tariff cuts. Perhaps the most important one to the whole industry has been the cut in the tariff on apples. Formerly the tariff was $\frac{3}{8}$ cents and now it is cut down to $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. This has been counteracted by applying the rate for the whole year. It now applies for 52 weeks, whereas formerly it applied only from May 20 to July 31.

Other items have the same tariff but there is an extension of time. For example, on peaches, the time is extended from 9 to 14 weeks, and on potatoes the extension is to 52 weeks, the full year, as against the former period of from June 15 to December 31. Pears also come into this category. Again certain other items have an increase in the rate with no extension of time. In this group an example I can give is apricots. Finally, there are those items which have an increase in rate and also an increase in the time of application. Here prunes show an increase of $\frac{1}{2}$ cent and a two-week extension, and I give that as an example. Altogether there were 31 changes in the tariff structure which apply to fresh produce, nine to packaged products, and sixteen to canned goods and miscellaneous items.

You might say, Mr. Speaker, that these are complicated changes, and you might also query who asked for these and what is behind all the changes. This brings me to my second point. The answer is easily given: The changes have been made by the government as a result of listening to that organization which represents the fruit and vegetable growers throughout practically every province in the dominion. That organization is known as the Canadian Horticultural Council. This is the body which originally made representations to the tariff board during 1957, and they were the representations which led to the present tariff changes made in this budget.

Perhaps at this stage it might be as well to look at the council's membership. We have seven out of the ten provinces represented on the council, excluding only Alberta, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland. These three have no grower organizations, with the exception of Alberta which has one local. However, I am glad to report that all carry on extremely amicable relations in co-operation with the Canadian Horticultural Council. There are also seven ministers of agriculture who are with the Canadian Horticultural Council. Then there are associate members and also contributors. I have a list of the member organizations and it is rather a long one, and I would ask that leave be given for them to be printed so as to appear in the context.

Mr. Speaker: What is the source of the information the hon. member wishes to have printed?

Mr. Pugh: The source of the information, Mr. Speaker, has been given me by the Canadian Horticultural Council. It is a list of the members.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member has leave to have this list of the Canadian Horticultural Council members printed in Hansard at this point?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pugh: The table is as follows:

Organizations of the Canadian Horticultural Council

British Columbia: B.C. Fruit Board, P. C. McCallum; B.C. Fruit Growers Association; B.C. Interior Vegetable Marketing Board; B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board; B.C. Tree Fruits Limited; Okanagan Federated Shippers' Association.

Manitoba: Vegetable Growers Association of Manitoba; The Gardeners Sales Ltd.

Ontario: Ontario Asparagus Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Berry Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Fruit & Vegetable Growers Association; Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Peach Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Pear, Plum & Cherry Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Soil & Crop Improvement Association; Niagara Fruit Shippers' Association; Ontario Peach Growers Cooperative; Ontario Vegetable Growers Marketing Board; Ontario Potato Growers' Association.

Quebec: Quebec Pomological & Fruit Growing Society; Quebec Federation of Vegetable Growers; Cooperative Federee de Quebec.

New Brunswick: N.B. Potato Shippers Association; N.B. Fruit Growers Association; Hartland Agricultural Society.

Nova Scotia: N.S. Fruit Growers Association; Scotian Gold Cooperative Limited.

Prince Edward Island: P.E.I. Potato Promotion Committee; P.E.I. Potato Marketing Board; P.E.I. Producers Cooperative Association.

National: Canadian Association of Nurserymen; Canadian Food Processors Association; Allied Florists & Growers of Canada, Inc.; Canadian Mushroom Growers' Association; Canadian Wood Products Ltd.; Canadian Fruit Wholesalers' Association; Canadian Wine Institute.

Province: P.E.I. Department of Agriculture; N.S. Department of Agriculture; N.B. Department of Agriculture; Quebec Department of Agriculture; Ontario Department of Agriculture; Manitoba Department of Agriculture; B.C. Department of Agriculture.

Associate: Ontario Food Processors Association; Continental Can Company; H. J. Heinz Company of Canada Ltd.; Martin Paper Products Limited.; Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers Association; Norfolk Fruit Growers Association; Thompson Wood Products Limited; Jordan-Danforth Wines Limited; T. G. Bright & Company Limited; Chateau-Gai Wines Limited; W. Clark Limited, Lorne Clark; Gair Company of Canada Ltd; Bathhurst Containers Limited; B.C. Federation of Agriculture.

Contributors: Alphonse Raymond Limitee; Atkin's Flowers; Kent Fruit Growers Cooperative; Northern Seed Potato Co. Limited; Oxford Fruit Cooperative Limited; Superior Bulb Company Limited.

On referring to the list, Mr. Speaker, it is noted that the province of Quebec has its various organizations, as does Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. This list is a long one, comprising virtually all growers in Canada. My purpose in placing this list on the record is to show that requests coming from the council are in no wise sectional but rather the unanimous decision of a representative body. You will see that this can mean only one thing, and that is an ideal relationship between the council and the government, particularly with the Department of Agriculture. This has long been recognized by the department and I need only quote the words of a former minister of agriculture, Mr. Gardiner, to this effect, when he stated in Hansard of Friday, July 24, 1942, at page 4697 as follows:

I want to say . . . that the Department of Agriculture and I as minister greatly appreciate the associations that have existed between the horticultural council and the department . . . Since I have had the privilege of being Minister of Agriculture the one group of farm producers who have maintained ideal relationships between the department and their industry are those people who are associated with the horticultural council . . . They have not asked the department or the government to be represented in certain places. They set up an organization of their own; they have made known their needs and seen to it that the department at all times knew what their organization thought ought to be done. They have worked consistently at the task of taking care of the interests of their producers. They have not wasted any of their energies in other directions. While the thanks of the growers of fruit, and particularly the apple growers, have been extended to the department officials and to myself as minister, I must say that a great part of the credit is due to the fact that the industry has been so well organized under the council . . . I think they found the officials of the different departments ready to sit down with them to work out their problems. The problem could not be dealt with entirely by the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Finance plays a considerable part . . . and also the Department of Trade and Commerce when the problem is associated with trade outside of Canada. That organization at all times has been well informed not only with regard to their own industry here, but also with regard to the possibilities of marketing their products. They have stayed with the job until they, in co-operation with our officials, have worked out plans which would be helpful.

May I also quote Mr. Stirling, a former Conservative member of this house, who for many years ably represented his constituency. His remarks followed those made by Mr. Gardiner and are reported in the same edition of Hansard:

I should like to present my own thanks to the minister for the way in which he has referred to the Canadian Horticultural Council. I feel sure that the recognition which he has given this evening will be greatly appreciated by the many associations which go to make up that council.

So long as I have been a member of this house, in my endeavours to represent the fruit and vegetable growers of the part of Canada that I represent, it has been of very great assistance to me to be able to turn to the information always available through the secretary of the horticultural council.

May I add my own appreciation of the services provided by the council? I may say in passing that they were kind enough to have me at their last three-day meeting in Ottawa. I have dealt with this council at length, because I wish hon. members to know more about it. This body—the Canadian Horticultural Council—is a sincere one. There is nothing sectional in its ambitions. The government knows, through its long association with the council, that the requests made by it have been thoroughly studied and debated, and it is for this reason that the government respects the council's decision.

You will understand now, Mr. Speaker, that I have no hesitation about raising my final point, which is this: that the government should give effect to the fair value for duty section which applies to fruits and vegetables. You will recall that it was passed last year under the amendment to the Customs Act, namely paragraph (b) subsection 7 of section 40A. However—and this should be underlined—this was only to take effect upon proclamation, and to date the section has yet to be proclaimed. The Canadian Horticultural Council has always recognized the principle of fair value for duty. They feel that it is an absolutely necessary safeguard against distress selling or, as we say otherwise, the importation of fruit and vegetables into this country at fire sale prices. I say that the council has always recognized the principle of fair value for duty, but perhaps it would be better to say that they have fought for it since the inception of the council in 1922.

Finally, I subscribe to this principle because I have seen the effects of distress selling in my own constituency, and I am sure many hon. members here have themselves seen the effect of distress selling in their own ridings. I myself have seen the gradual deterioration of a well established industry. It is a hard thing to consider that at best our growers can only realize a second rate price for the goods they produce. Fair value for duty is, I think it is fair to say, the answer to this problem, and I now ask the government to give early and earnest consideration to this establishment.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I hope that my hon. friend who has preceded me will forgive me if I do not follow him into the fruit orchards and vegetables gardens of the lovely part of the world from which he comes. I propose to deal with some more general aspects of the budget, of the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in introducing it and, indeed, of the speech which he made this afternoon in defending it.

I regret that the Minister of Finance is not in his place but I quite realize that he is filling an important public engagement at which I know those who sit on the opposite side of the table will have a greater opportunity of asking him questions with regard to some of his spectacular statements than we had in the house this afternoon. However, the absence of the minister does not deter me from complimenting him on his energy and his industry and on what I might call the massive performance of his budget speech which, according to some commentators and onlookers, may be his last. If this should be the case I think we can say quite sincerely that he has been the greatest minister of finance that Canada has had since Mr. Walter Harris.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, of course, is not a new joke. That has been used several times.

Mr. Pearson: In saying this I do not overlook the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) was acting minister of finance, I think, though for a very short time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; that last statement was no more accurate than the other one.

Mr. Pearson: I can congratulate the Minister of Finance on that score at least, and I do it very sincerely, for I have a real admiration for him though at times I find it difficult to understand how a man who can be so amiable in private conversation can, when he debates in the house or on the hustings, indulge in what I can only call such voluble irascibility. I cannot, however, compliment the minister on either the form or the content of his budget speech which I thought—and nothing he has said this afternoon has removed that thought—was less than candid and more than normally partisan in many places.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) in a report which he apparently makes periodically from parliament hill to the Kentville Advertiser described this budget very accurately indeed in the latest of these reports which I have seen as "bitter and disagreeable medicine". Well, that seems to be the verdict in the country. A paper which circulates widely in my own constituency—a very good newspaper, though a very Conservative paper—The Sault Star—called it a vexing disappointment. The Globe and Mail called it worse than that.

The budget does indeed show a startling contrast between past promises and present performance and nothing that the Minister of Finance said this afternoon has altered our view on this score. To hon. members on the government side that contrast must have been disheartening. To the country it is disillusioning.

There was an interesting contrast, too, between the approach of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue to the budget in so far as the question of promises is concerned. The burden of the remarks of the Minister of Finance this afternoon on this aspect of the subject was, as it were, "We did not make the promises but we are keeping them." One part of the remarks made by the Minister of National Revenue the other night was to the effect that they made them but they are of two kinds. He went on to say as reported at page 2624 of Hansard of April 13, 1959:

> —there is no doubt that promises of any kind, whether pre-election promises or otherwise, should be honoured and respected so far as circumstances will possibly permit—

Indeed, the Minister of National Revenue has now divided political promises into two kinds, those made outside the house and those made inside the house, first and second class promises. Surely there is sufficient justification in those words and their reflection in government policy for the charge which is implicit in our amendment on which we will be voting this evening, the charge that this administration has elevated expediency into a principle and practice of government. Surely that is the main reason why this government has lost standing in the country so soon after its electoral triumph of a year ago.

Perhaps, however, hon. gentlemen opposite are beginning to learn. I confess that this budget shows some signs of it. They are perhaps beginning to learn that every promise conceived by an advertising director who now directs a political party and tossed emotionally and irresponsibly to the electorate—

Mr. Nesbitt: What about the tax cuts?

Mr. Pearson: I will come to that. Perhaps they are beginning to learn that such actions have fiscal and economic consequences.

An hon. Member: You will come to grief if you continue.

Mr. Pearson: At this time the Prime Minister has indeed called the political tune but it is the people who are paying the piper. That is perhaps why one prominent Canadian business man has called this budget the chicken roosting budget, and no crowing by the Minister of Finance or his faithful backbench followers can conceal that fact. Perhaps an even better designation for this budget would be the budget of the morning after two nights before.

Events are now catching up with the minister and his colleagues. Their pilgrims' progress from the fantasies of the hustings to the realities of the treasury benches has been slow, painful and very expensive for the country. If, however, this progress should result in planned and well thought out economic and fiscal policies in the future based on sound economic principles and not on the whims and emotions of party pressures and party advantage, something at least will have been salvaged from the partisan promissory activity of two elections.

The Minister of Finance this afternoon was guilty of a course of action of which he and some of his colleagues have been guilty before. When they are in trouble and when it is difficult for them to explain the problems that face them in the economic and financial fields—and the minister was having some difficulty in that regard this afternoon, especially when he got into the field of monetary policy—they blame it all on world conditions. They say the United States or some other international factor is to blame.

An hon. Member: The Liberals.

Mr. Pearson: We will come to that later; that is an easy one with which to deal. If this was a purely international difficulty and if the minister and his government are not to be blamed for the Canadian reflection of the difficulty, I should like to mention to the government the interesting fact that two days before the Canadian budget was introduced the chancellor of the exchequer in London, England, introduced his budget. That budget brought in tax reductions of nearly $1 billion in our currency, indicated a surplus of $102 million, a monetary position of sterling improvement during the year to the extent of £200 million with a bank rate reduced from 7 to 4 per cent, and all of that with stable prices and an unemployment percentage of only 2.5 of the total working force as compared with 8.6 in Canada, according to today's figures. What a contrast that is to the Canadian budget. The United States budget also provides a contrast. In that country the administration proposes to balance the budget without any general increase in taxes.

Let us turn to our own budget for a more detailed analysis. It is a record breaking budget, all right. But it breaks all the wrong records. What are some of these new and bad records which have been made? Last year's budgetary deficit, of which there has already been a good deal of argument in this debate and about which the Minister of Finance waxed vehemently sarcastic this afternoon when he was commenting on our estimates of the amount of the deficit before the figures came out, proved to be not $615 million by any honest and reasonable calculation but rather $835 million, and we know why. When the Minister of Finance whose presence I am delighted to welcome, and I hope I will not put him off his equilibrium for his press conference which is shortly to follow—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You will have to watch the applause, though, and see that it is not credited to the wrong source.

Mr. Pearson: When the Minister of Finance, without the kind of smile which he has on his face now, attacked our estimates of the deficit for last year and my own in particular —because I did undoubtedly make an estimate and so did the Canada tax foundation of almost $1 billion—we said the deficit would be $835 million based on the minister's own calculations of revenue. Taking into account the national defence expenditure fund that would have been $950 million as my hon. friend the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) pointed out yesterday. On the basis of the revenue forecast by the minister himself, the estimates we made earlier and which the minister said had done so much damage to the country—estimates of almost $1 billion, on those estimates based on the minister's own calculations of revenue and not ours—he had to change them later, the deficit would have been $950 million.

As it is, his revenue has exceeded his estimates. He had a few windfalls, one due in no small part to the increased interest rate which gave the Bank of Canada a slightly larger profit than they had calculated, I think $22 million larger. But whatever the figure may be, last year's deficit was the highest peacetime deficit in our history, a record.

The estimated budgetary deficit this year is not $393 million but $435 million, if we include, as we should, the current deficit on the old age security fund. That makes a two-year budgetary deficit of $1,270 million, which is a record however you look at it. It makes the budgetary and non-budgetary deficit for 1958-59, $1,200 million, well over the $1 billion which the minister tosses back to us. His estimated cash deficit, budgetary and non-budgetary, for the current year 1959-60 is $850 million. Therefore, we have a cash deficit for two years of over $2 billion, which is another record broken. We had a deficit last year in the old age pension fund of $184 million and a year's drop in the unemployment insurance fund of $242 million, two more records. We have an increase in one year in the national debt of $1,400 million, which is a peacetime record in our history and which almost wipes out the reductions made in 10 years to the national debt because of prudent and wise Liberal financial administration.

I will give a few more records. From December 31, 1957 to December 31, 1958 we had an increase in the money supply of $1,324 million, or more than 11 per cent, which is greater than the total cash deficit for that year, and that is a record. We also have an increase in taxes in one year—not the figure the Prime Minister used on television last night—of $352 million, and we have that while, according to the figures which were released today for March, more than half a million men are still out of work. That is another record; that is another first, Mr. Speaker. We have an increase in the number of government employees, also a new record.

Then we come to expenditures for 1958, 1959 and 1960, something about which the Minister of Finance had a good deal to say this afternoon in showing how hard the treasury board—he is the chairman of the treasury board—had worked to keep expenses down. Last year, as the house knows, the expenditures were $5,387 million, the highest in any year, peace or war, in our history, and $538 million above the figure for the last year of Liberal administration.

We on this side of the house remember how the hon. members on the other side, when they were over here and when they were on the hustings, were going to save $500 million out of government expenditures because of waste and extravagance. What have they done? They have added $538 million to government expenditures. That was another record until it was exceeded by the budgetary estimates for 1959-60, which reached $5,660 million. These expenditures for 1959-60, which the minister gave the other night in the house, are $165 million more than the amount submitted in the main estimates previously. But it is not likely that that will be enough to deal with the extra expenditures of government, because out of this $165 million the minister has to find amounts under the Agricultural Stabilization Act; he has to find $51 million for the C.N.R. deficit; he has to find assistance, if any to western grain producers; he has to find increases, if any, in the salaries of civil servants; and he has to find enough for the usual and further supplementaries. But with all these increases in government expenditures, the capital expenditures, as I shall try to show in a moment—these are the employment expenditures, Mr. Speaker, at a time when we need employment—are not higher this year, they are lower. Therefore, the level of expenditures generally will not likely make any material contribution to a lower level of unemployment but they are likely to make a contribution to a higher level of inflationary pressures.

I have a table here comparing the main estimates—and this is not the kind of comparison which is fair, not in comparing the main estimates of one year with the main and supplementary estimates of another, as the minister has done more than once in the house—of 1958-59 with the main estimates of 1959-60. I have taken the figures for one of those years from the summary of standard objects of expenditure and special categories which is attached to the estimate book which we received some time ago. If you look at the expenditures in this way you get a very interesting idea of where the increases and decreases are. Civil salaries and wages are up in the current year by $24 million, and the government was going to cut down civil service expenditures. Here is an interesting item. Perhaps this has a bearing on what the hon. member for Essex East said last night in his peroration. He expressed the hope that the minister might move up or, if it suited him, he might move down or, at least, he said the minister should move. The minister and his colleagues are moving all right, because under the item "travelling and removal expenses" we have an increase of $9 million in the current estimates over last year. I know this government had done a good deal of travelling, Mr. Speaker, but I did not know that it added up to a $9 million increase in our expenditures.

We remember also how the minister and his friends, when they were on this side of the house, inveighed against the government of the day for wastage on telephones, telegrams, publication of departmental reports and all that kind of thing. Well, telephones and telegrams and all that sort of thing are up over $2 million in 1959-60 and the publication of departmental reports should be down because we have the greatest difficulty in getting departmental reports circulated. We assumed that naturally the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) especially was saving money. Well, the publication of departmental reports—

Mr. Churchill: When are you going to steal another one?

Mr. Pearson: —this year is up $1 million. On exhibits and advertising—I do not know how much of this goes to the McKim advertising company—we have a figure of $11,800,000 this year; but, Mr. Speaker, when we get to the summary of standard objects that deal with capital expenditures, the things that make jobs—and we have 525,000 people looking for jobs in this country—when we get to buildings and works, construction or acquisition, repairs and upkeep, we have a decrease of $68 million. So much for the great billion dollar works program which we heard so much about. These record increases, Mr. Speaker, come from a government elected on a solemn undertaking to reduce the cost of government and eliminate all waste and extravagance so as to increase services without raising taxes. At one stage indeed they were going to appoint a royal commission to look into the civil service and cut out all these unnecessary costs.

When the minister told us this afternoon that we have been misquoting and misrepresenting promises which were never made, may I say there is one promise dealing with this which has already been put on the record of Hansard. I would not put it on again tonight if it were not for the minister's vehement denial this afternoon that it was ever made. I refer to the promise made on Empire Day, May 24, 1957, over the C.B.C. to the people of Canada by the Prime Minister, and I will repeat once again these immortal words. He said:

> The Liberals tell you it is not possible to lower taxes and raise pensions at the same time. Give us a chance—

And he got the chance.

> —we'll show you.

But the Minister of Finance says that no such promise was ever made. Lest the minister of National Revenue might dismiss this kind of statement as the bubbling over of an election campaign, let me add some other words also spoken by the Prime Minister. I quote from another statement he made:

> My idea of politics is that promises should only be made that can be effectuated.

In other words, promises that are made should be kept, which is a simpler Anglo-Saxon word than "effectuated". Well, let us look at some more records. There is another first in our financial history. We have had recently rising prices in a period of persistent recession or pause or whatever you want to call it. The average treasury bill rate for last week, and the Minister of Finance did not tell us about this this afternoon, was 4.61 per cent, an all-time high in this country, compared with a treasury bill rate on July 30, 1958 of .87, or an increase of 530 per cent during that period of time. The minister is inclined to blame this on the United States so perhaps he will listen to this. The present rate in Canada is 60 per cent higher than that in the United States where the treasury bill rate is 3 per cent, so let us not blame that development in this country on the Americans. So much for the Tory condemnation of dear money.

Where are the other vows of yesterday? Where is the 15 per cent trade diversion? That figured largely in a lot of talk not so very long ago but I can understand why members of the government are very silent about it now in the light of what has happened. In 1958 the United Kingdom's unfavourable balance with Canada widened, and the United Kingdom is the country that was going to be helped by this diversion. It rose from $221 million to $254 million. That is diversion the wrong way. In the first three months of 1959 imports from the United States into this country, which were to be diverted, are up 4 per cent and imports from the United Kingdom, which was to benefit by the diversion, are down 8 per cent compared with the same period in 1958. These are figures from the bureau of statistics survey and not from the Fleming or Martin statistical services.

No wonder, that the president of the board of trade, Sir David Eccles, complained in a speech in London on February 5 to the Canadian chamber of commerce, I believe, that Canada had done little to improve her purchases from Britain. He is reported as saying in what was referred to in the press as a rebuke to Canada:

> No other country sold to us so much more than it bought.

Then, Mr. Speaker, where is the cure for unemployment through that billion dollar public works project which has also disappeared? Where is the new deal for the provinces and the municipalities? Where is parity, not charity, for the farmers? Where is that stand-up policy to the United States that was to prevent restrictions on our exports and unfair competition in surplus disposal programs? Where is this policy that was going to protect our sovereignty against United States economic and financial control?

On March 9, the Prime Minister on the program "The Nation's Business" had this among other interesting things to say, and I quote from the text of his broadcast as issued from his office:

> It was because I knew Canadians felt so strongly about the necessity of preserving Canada's destiny that I have advocated and the government has launched its national development policy to push back our northern frontiers. The result of our action has been that in the last several weeks over 75 million acres in northern Canada have been taken up for oil and mineral development, and I want to underline this—

The Prime Minister is doing the underlining, not I.

> —that this is a major means to preserve our sovereignty.

Then he went on to say, "Let us be realistic." Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try to be realistic and indicate the facts as we secured them from the minister concerned. Of all these millions of acres taken up for oil and mineral development to protect and preserve the sovereignty of Canada, 95 per cent of the leases went to United States firms or Canadian subsidiaries of United States firms. This is the way we are protecting our Canadian sovereignty.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): On a question of privilege, I gave some figures in the house to the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie) concerning one single sale of permits in an area just north of British Columbia, the total acreage amounting to 3½ million and the area being 2,000 miles away from that mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pearson: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister would state his question of privilege.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The question of privilege is very clear. The Leader of the Opposition has misinformed the house by giving absolutely incorrect figures.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister disagrees with what is being said he will have an opportunity at the end of the address to make a correction.

Mr. Pearson: I would not wish to do the minister any injustice so I will read the questions and answers. Perhaps I do not need to read all the questions. I will read the pertinent ones but if he wants them all I will put them on the record. The first question was:

> What are the names of the ten successful bidders for oil and gas permit rights in northern Canada?

We got those names. The second question was:

Which of these are United States corporations, Canadian corporations, Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies, British corporations, others?

The third question was:

Of the total acreage under permit rights, how many acres have been assigned to each of these companies?

I gave the answer to that question tonight in terms which are strictly accurate. The successful bidders were United States corporations or Canadian subsidiaries of United States corporations in the case of 95 per cent of the area that was leased.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the minister is rising on a point of order or a question of privilege he should not interrupt. If it is a matter of disagreement with the facts as presented or if he feels the house is being misled by what is being said he has an opportunity at the end of the address to make clear anything that is in question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the hon. member should read the whole answer.

Mr. Pearson: I want to make it perfectly clear. The Prime Minister said, in respect of the taking up of leases for oil and mineral development, that this was a major means to preserve our sovereignty. When we asked for specific information in respect of certain specific bids we got the information that I put on the record, and it is strictly accurate.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): You are still wrong. Read the answers.

Mr. Starr: Read the answers.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are on Hansard.

Mr. Pearson: All these promises, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A very shameful performance.

Mr. Starr: Put on the answers.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A deliberate misstatement.

Mr. Speaker: Order; let the hon. member make his own speech.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to rise to a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rouleau: A vision again.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister was rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I believe I am correct in saying it is a proper matter of privilege in this house when I, as a minister, stand up and say the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) is misstating a clearly stated answer I made in the house. Even though I have not got it here, he will find that I said: assuming that this means one sale, this is the answer. Any person who would do a thing like that has definitely committed a breach of privilege, and I want it corrected in this house.

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the question of privilege which the minister is raising, he is saying that the Leader of the Opposition is not using the answer that was given, not that the Leader of the Opposition is giving an incorrect answer.

Mr. Pearson: I have used the answer that the minister gave. I have not stated one incorrect figure. Once again, in order to be fair, I will read the questions. These questions and answers may be found at pages 2348 and 2349 of Hansard for April 8, 1959. The questions are as follows:

1. What are the names of the 10 successful bidders for oil and gas permit rights in northern Canada?
2. Which of these are United States corporations, Canadian corporations, Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies, British corporations, others?
3. Of the total acreage under permit rights, how many acres have been assigned to each of these companies?
4. Of the total acreage under permit rights, what percentage has been assigned to (a) Canadian corporations; (b) United States corporations and Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies; (c) British corporations; (d) others?
5. In this connection, what is meant by "cash bonus bids"?

The answers appear on a subsequent page of Hansard and are as I indicated in my statement.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Read them.

Mr. Starr: He is not telling the truth.

Mr. Pearson: As a result of the March 9 sale these 10 companies received permit rights as follows, and the 10 companies are itemized. Then, the next answer is:

4. The percentage acreage breakdown as between the Canadian, United States companies, etc., within the 10 companies listed in 3 above is as follows: (a) Canadian corporations, 4 per cent—"

Mr. Starr: Be honest and read the answer.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on another question of privilege?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): It is the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member was asked to read my answer—

Mr. Carter: The hon. member does not have to do what you tell him.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —and I have Hansard here in front of me.

Mr. Carter: Read it afterwards.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I ask him to turn to page 2348 of Hansard and read the first answer because the hon. member has not read it.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the hon. member who has the floor has the right to make his own speech. I see no question of privilege in the point that has been raised by the minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: Who is Speaker of the house?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I understood the Leader of the Opposition aright, he mentioned the 75 million acres that had been taken up—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister is now making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: I ask hon. members to be quiet so I can hear the question of privilege which the Prime Minister is trying to make.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman mentioned 75 million acres as having been taken up, and then went on to say that the answer in Hansard showed that only 4 per cent of the companies that took up that acreage—

Mr. Robichaud: He said 5 per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —were Canadian companies. This statement is not borne out by the answer given in this house which refers to a total of some 2,900,000 or about 3 million acres so that the minister has, in effect, a question of privilege in that the Leader of the Opposition is not quoting what he said as reported in Hansard.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not a question of privilege, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope hon. members will kindly allow the Prime Minister to make his point.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize that the truth hurts some of these babblers. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition has either deliberately or unconsciously, unknowingly or deliberately, misstated this answer. It refers to 3 million acres, not 75 million acres.

Mr. Speaker: This is an unnecessary tempest because what the hon. Leader of the Opposition has been reading, I take it, is a matter of record, and what the Prime Minister refers to is a matter of record, so it does not seem to me there is room for misunderstanding.

Mr. Harkness: There is misrepresentation.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the minister of northern affairs allow the hon. member to proceed with his speech. Before the time for the vote arrives I will give him an opportunity to correct any wrong impression which he feels has been made in what has been said.

Mr. Pearson: If I had intervened this afternoon when the Minister of Finance was speaking every time he made what we considered to be a misstatement or one that caused a wrong impression the Minister of Finance would not have had any time to speak at all. I would also draw to your attention that when we courteously asked the Minister of Finance for the opportunity to ask him a question, he would not accept our question.

Mr. Harkness: You are just continuing the misrepresentation.

Mr. Pearson: Now, these members of the government, who are so sensitive about statements on this side that they rise to questions of privilege which have nothing to do with privilege in any way and yet the Prime Minister take up 15 minutes of my time—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: I consider the matter closed, and I hope the Leader of Opposition will proceed.

Mr. Pearson: Yes; I will return to this statement of the Prime Minister that 75 million acres in northern Canada had been taken up for oil and mineral development. This shows how this government, under this Prime Minister, is protecting our sovereign rights, and yet when we ask for information in respect of a specific matter, dealing with some million acres which were leased, and we get specific information covering about three million acres, we find that 95 per cent of these leases were granted to United States corporations or Canadian subsidiaries of United States corporations. This is how this government is protecting our sovereign rights. Is it any wonder, therefore—perhaps the Prime Minister will keep quiet for a few minutes now and compose himself—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not have to ask the C.B.C. to correct a report.

Mr. Pearson: Is it any wonder that—

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister had to send in a correction last night.

Mr. Pearson: I seem now, Mr. Speaker, to be interrupted by both my friends and my foes. Is it any wonder, in these circumstances, that we accuse the government in this budget of both bad faith and bad management, as a result of which confidence in this government and therefore confidence in Canada has been weakened, both at home and abroad. There is lots of evidence of bad faith, although the Minister of Finance got very indignant this afternoon because we used these words in our amendment. I tell him and the government that the word of Canada does not mean as much now as it did.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Shame on you!

Mr. Pearson: I can get lots of evidence to support that statement. I can give the evidence of the R.C.M.P. contracts. I can give the evidence of term 29 of the pact of union with Newfoundland, which was finally and irrevocably and unilaterally determined by the Prime Minister the other day. I can give the evidence of the commitment by the government to purchase pictures for the national gallery which was later rescinded. I can give the evidence of the promise to convene a federal-provincial conference on fiscal relations.

Then, Mr. Speaker, what about bad management? I had hoped to be able to talk tonight about the conversion loan which the Minister of Finance insists was such a colossal success. Yes, I think that was the word he used: It was a "colossal" success. But ask the man who owns a bond. Ask the municipalities. Ask the provinces or the corporations who have to borrow money at present interest rates. I tell the Minister of Finance that far from this operation being a colossal success, in its timing, in its scope and in its cost it was a failure. It has resulted in dear money, in lack of confidence in Canadian bonds, and I do not think the minister himself believes all the adjectival praises he heaps upon it at this time.

We will leave the conversion loan because the 15 minutes I was going to spend on that subject have been taken up by the Prime Minister and the minister for northern affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Let us look at the prospects for 1959.

An hon. Member: Let him speak as long as he likes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that if we are going to have these statistics on the record there will have to be 50 per cent more silence from 3 per cent of the membership.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. In former days, and by that I mean days before the present Minister of Finance, the prospects for the coming year were usually given in considerable detail in the budget speech. But the present Minister of Finance has practically eliminated this customary and important section from his budget speech for this year, massive a performance though it was. In 1958 five pages of Hansard were devoted to the prospects for the forthcoming year. This budget speech had one paragraph to forecast economic conditions in 1959-60. It had one paragraph on the forecast of the gross national product which is the basis for estimating a revenue and thereby establishing a deficit or a surplus. All the minister had to say this year, was that, assuming normal crops, stable prices and no untoward external events, there should be a gross national product of about $34.5 billion, or a 7 per cent increase. He made no attempt then to justify this optimistic forecast, and he made no attempt to justify it this afternoon. It is a forecast which has been dismissed by many experts, and I will name mine, although he did not name his this afternoon. They include the Canadian tax foundation, the financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, and indeed the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which in its submission to the government forecast a gross physical output in 1959-60 of approximately 1 per cent, not 7 per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What date is that?

Mr. Pearson: That was two months ago when they made their submissions to the government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They do not disagree with mine now.

Mr. Pearson: Let us look at the figures. For the first quarter of 1959 the estimate is a 4 per cent increase. To achieve 7 per cent for the whole year, Mr. Speaker, that 4 per cent would have to increase to 6 per cent in the second quarter, 8 per cent in the third quarter and 10 per cent in the last quarter, without any increase in prices. Let us hope the minister's calculations in this regard are not as far out as they were last year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Or yours.

Mr. Pearson: My calculations on this point last year, as stated in my budget speech, were that the minister was too optimistic. The minister estimated a gross national product increase of 2 per cent, and with stable prices what did he get? He got 0.6 per cent, I think. How much further out could you be than that? The minister always forgets the qualification of stable prices when he is arguing about that. Let us hope for the good of the country that he is not as inaccurate this year as he was last year. He does not give us any basis for his optimism. He does not say it is due to an increased level of investment, because if he did say that he would be contradicted by his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill)—although that is no new experience for ministers of this government—who in his departmental report on private and public investment in Canada for 1959 said that the level of investment would likely be down 1.2 per cent in 1959-60. He could not surely have based his optimistic calculation on exports, because although the government has made a great deal of the export situation during the year which has just passed, the figures for the first three months of 1959 show a decrease of 3 per cent, whereas imports are up 5 per cent.

There are some very dangerous features in our export situation. In particular, one of the most important export products we have in this country is uranium. What have we learned about that recently? The other day in the house the minister said that for the first time in a year he had been able to go down to Washington to see the head of the atomic energy commission of the United States in regard to a product the importance of which is indicated by the fact that during this current year, if all goes well, we will be exporting to the United States about $325 million worth. That $325 million, or whatever the amount may be, depends on a contract made by the previous Canadian government with the United States.

That contract comes up for renewal in 1961, and in April, 1959 the minister at last goes down to Washington to discuss this matter with his opposite number in the United States government. He spent a whole day in Washington. I hope he had a profitable time, but I have some doubt about the profitability of his visit when I realize that within five days of his return a senior official of the atomic energy commission makes a public statement in Colorado, the centre of the United States uranium production industry, to the effect that after 1962, 80 per cent of the United States requirements for uranium will be met from United States sources.

To say the least, that is a discourteous way to treat a Canadian minister to make such a statement, only a few days after he had been down to Washington, I hope to impress upon the United States government, not only the importance of this export trade but also the fact that the United States government has a moral duty to take up those contracts. Because it was not many years ago when they got down on their knees and begged the Canadian government to spend all its energy and resources in order to develop this product for United States consumption. Now, having found uranium in their own country, are they going to do what they have done with other base metals, namely turn off the tap when they find a tap of their own?

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: I will, but I was not permitted to ask any myself.

Mr. Churchill: It is a short question. The hon. member has just said—and I hope I am correctly reporting him—that the statement in the United States was to the effect that 82 per cent of the United States requirements for uranium were supplied from United States sources. Does he stand by that statement, because it is incorrect?

Mr. Pearson: Canadian supplies will be cut by 80 per cent, so from our point of view it will have the same result exactly; they will take only 20 per cent.

Mr. Churchill: Who made that statement?

Mr. Pearson: That statement was made by an official of the administration.

Mr. Churchill: Then that is incorrect, again.

Mr. Pearson: Thus our export trade will be in some difficulties which I hope the government will be able to surmount. I wonder if it is consumer expenditure on which the government intends to rely for its 7 per cent increase? It might be well to remember that the rise in consumer incomes will be partly offset by increased taxation and higher prices and that it cannot in any event be sufficient to provide a 7 per cent increase in real terms of gross national product. The minister also touched on the changing role of inventories. I suggest that his prediction of a 7 per cent increase may well be too optimistic, and that if the hon. gentleman is wrong in this calculation the effect on employment opportunities in 1959 and 1960 in this country will be very bad indeed.

Let us look at the effect on employment. When in the budget debate a year ago, we did our duty by calling attention to some of the discouraging possibilities in the employment picture we were sneered at, as we were this afternoon, by the Minister of Finance as being prophets of doom and gloom. A year ago we told the government that the unemployment level throughout 1958 would remain high, and we were laughed at. This government optimism of that time is proving to be false, and our forecasts, which were dismissed then as expressions of doom and gloom, have shown themselves to have been correct.

The action taken by the government last year to meet the employment difficulties was both too late and too little, as the establishment of the winter work program showed. Employment in this country varies closely, though of course with an inevitable lag, in accordance with the physical volume of our gross national product. In 1958, on an average, 6.6 per cent of our labour force was unemployed during the year. The estimated increase in our labour force for 1959 is 2.5 per cent. Therefore, if our gross national product remains constant, 9 per cent of our people will likely to be out of work in the current year. If only a 4 to 5 per cent increase in the volume of the gross national product is achieved—and that is the estimate of the tax foundation—that would mean that during the current year we would have, on the average, more than 300,000 people unemployed in this country which would be the second highest level in the post war period. Thus, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's facile optimism on this score, the problem of unemployment remains and is likely to remain throughout the year.

Along with this there is a second serious problem—though one would never know it from the minister's budget statement—and that is the problem of increasing prices along with persistant unemployment. Though inflation remains a problem parallel with that presented by unemployment, the minister, in a somewhat brief reference in his budget speech to inflation, said merely that he was against it, but that he did not see any evidence of overt inflation in the coming year. The danger, he said, was only that of potential inflationary pressures. Believe me, in the light of the fiscal and monetary situation of this country and the amount of money that the minister, according to his own calculations, has to raise this year, that danger of potential inflationary pressures is a very real one indeed.

The minister tried to make us feel a little happier about this by pointing out—and he was quite right—that the consumer price index had declined slightly since November. I think that is the case. But he did not point out that since November the wholesale price index has been rising—1.7 per cent—and the wholesale price index has a better coverage and is a better reflection of the movement of prices and costs than the retail price index though it usually precedes the retail index in its changes. The minister has once again in this budget rejected the doctrine of the inevitability of creeping inflation and yet—and I know I will be told that I am a prophet of doom and gloom when I say this—even if we have a boom in 1959—and we are not going to have a boom in 1959—I believe that prices will rise in the current year. There is a great deal of evidence, unfortunately, to support that view.

The increased taxation imposed by this budget will mean—indeed, it has already meant—an opportunity for further increases in the prices of goods and services to producers; and any further increase in the money supply—and there is a real danger of that—will certainly expedite that process. Last year we had a tremendous increase in the money supply. I think it amounted to $1,400 million. The full inflationary effect of that increase was not realized because the recession had reduced what the economists call the velocity of its circulation. This year, however, any progress toward recovery—and we are making progress toward recovery—will serve to remove any such brake, and inflationary pressures will consequently be greater.

To sum up, last year we had mounting unemployment and some inflation in the midst of recession. This year there should be less, but still serious, unemployment and a greater danger of inflation. The paradox of this dual problem, this double dilemma, will persist and will remain a challenge to a government which has not yet shown that it has any effective plan to meet this challenge.

When we on this side talk in this way someone on the other side usually interjects to ask: what would you have done or what else could the government have done? I would remind the hon. gentleman that I went into this matter in considerable detail in the speech I made during the debate on the address, a speech which the minister conveniently forgot this afternoon when he twitted me for not having found alternative policies.

But I say to the minister and his colleagues that they could, a year and a half ago, have introduced into this house a budget making provision for a planned program of expenditure designed to extend possibilities of employment and which could later have been quickly and easily readjusted so as to meet conditions as they changed. The ordinary expenditures of government could have been kept down—but they were not kept down—and increases in the expenditure of government—and there would have had to be some increases, of course, one and a half years ago—could have been directed to areas where unemployment was greatest and to capital projects which would have had the maximum effect in terms of jobs.

One and a half years ago the government could have realized, as we on this side realized, that unemployment would be high all through 1958. They could have worked out a winter works program in the spring of last year, not in the fall of 1958, just as they should be working out such a program now for the current year.

What did they do? They charged along piling up promises and commitments, and increasing departmental commitments and expenditures, without developing, as the Toronto Globe and Mail pointed out to them, any overall fiscal policy whatever. All that the Minister of Finance could say to us in reply to that charge was: "What kind of policy would you adopt?"

Last year the fiscal proposals of this government were based on electoral necessity. This year they are based on inescapable financial necessity. As a result we have the worst of three worlds abnormal unemployment, rising prices and higher taxes. The minister, of course, has made a virtue of the fact that people seem resigned to the new Conservative policy. If that resignation exists I assure the minister, if he needs any assurance, that it will turn to bitter anger if in spite of these higher taxes both serious unemployment and higher prices persist throughout the current year.

The amount of the minister's new taxes is $352 million and this will have a serious impact. He has taken some credit for the fact that it is spread over the community in a way in which those who are most able to pay do pay. But of the $352 million the sum of $84 million will come from corporation income taxes which now in most cases can be transferred to the ultimate consumer and which is becoming more and more assimilated in our economy to a sales tax. The sum of $75 million of the $352 million comes from an additional old age security tax, 1 per cent of personal incomes. That will certainly fall most heavily on the lower income groups. Of the $352 million the sum of $93 million is sales tax, and how the minister when he was on this side of the house used to criticize sales taxes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And how your government used to defend them.

Mr. Pearson: Of course, that is quite right. The minister made that point this afternoon. But what has changed his mind about the sales tax?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What has changed yours?

Mr. Pearson: We are not attacking this particular tax in the way the minister is defending it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, no?

Mr. Pearson: Surely, when the minister became Minister of Finance we had the right to expect that he would bring to his new portfolio the economic and financial principles for which he argued so strongly on this side of the house. That is what he said. That is the position he took. That is why we have the right to be suspicious of the bona fides of this government when it introduces a budget of this kind. How can we dissociate the former views of these men from the views they hold at this time without accusing them of hyprocrisy or inconsistency?

Let me remind hon. gentlemen opposite of what the Minister of Finance said in 1950, and repeated every year since then. I refer to a statement of the minister reported at page 713 of Hansard of September 13, 1950:

I wish to put myself on record—

And I will put the minister on record again.

I wish to put myself on record, as I have on similar occasions in the past, with regard to taxes of this nature—

That is sales taxes.

—by saying that they are not the kind of taxes that ought to be encouraged by the House of Commons. They are discriminatory against people of small means.

Are they?

They are hidden taxes—

Are they?

—and in the third place the consumer pays for more than the tax. The consumer pays the original tax plus the wholesalers' mark-up on the tax, plus the retailer's mark-up on the mark-up on the tax. In that way you will find that in most cases what the consumer pays, by reason of the imposition of the tax, is just about twice as much as the government receives by way of tax levied at the manufacturer's level.

Those words were spoken by the Minister of Finance in 1950. If the minister still feels that way about sales tax why did he bring in the kind of budget he did? The minister is a very determined person and does not change his mind easily. Why did he not do away with increased sales taxes? What could have convinced him to change his mind?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Certainly not the Liberal party.

Mr. Pearson: The minister told us in his budget speech and again this afternoon that decision of his government about expenditures, about the deficit and about taxes result from the systematic application of a sound and considered fiscal policy. I say that the evidence shows that that is nonsense, and that these decisions embodied in this budget result from fiscal necessities, brought about by electoral irresponsibilities.

The minister attempted to rationalize all of this in his budget speech. I quite admit he did try to make a kind of academic argument for the change which apparently someone brought about in his way of economic thinking. He tried to rationalize his thinking in a very odd intellectual exercise, considering his past views and past assertions. The minister has now become a follower of the man who used to be laughed at so often in this house by the minister and those who sit on that side of the house. I remember that the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) as he then was, who is now Minister without Portfolio, used to laugh along with my friend the Minister of Finance. The minister has now become a follower of John Maynard Keynes and he now talks about flexibility.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Are you referring to me?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I am talking about the Minister of Finance, flexibility Fleming. While the minister talked a great deal in his budget speech about flexibility, he used to laugh at us when we talked about it. But in the course of his budget speech as reported at page 2415 of Hansard the minister also said:

> Government expenditures are in large measure analogous to the overhead expenses of private business; they cannot be greatly changed on short notice.

That seems to represent a temporary reversion to his earlier thinking.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, that is an answer to your nonsense about having two budgets in one year.

Mr. Pearson: There was not much flexibility displayed in that particular observation. Again, at page 2415 of his budget speech, the minister made a statement that was remarkable for one with his rigid economic background, as opposed to his present flexibility, and remarkable in the light of what he used to say. This is what he said the other evening. It seems to me I have heard these words spoken by some of the Liberal predecessors of the minister in the office of the minister of finance. I do not know what the explanation would be; perhaps the same man wrote this paragraph.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not Professor Lamontagne, anyway.

Mr. Habel: Do not worry so much about that gentleman.

Mr. Pearson: The minister said:

> There are times when a substantial deficit is clearly the right policy;—

We have had three of those. I continue:

> —there are times when some provision should be made for the orderly retirement of debt;—

Those times have gone. They went out with the Liberal administration.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not part of the speech as recorded.

Mr. Pearson: The minister then went on to say:

> —and within these ranges there is always the question of degree. The problem of timing the adjustments in budgetary policy is not an easy one, and yet good timing is often of crucial importance.

I wonder what kind of timing the minister could have had in mind when he used that expression, economic timing or political timing? Perhaps by the time electoral timing becomes important the minister may have been elevated to a great, new sphere of international activity—which may have been in the minister's mind in this connection—where, I cannot forbear to add, I hope he will not employ the violent, vigorous, histrionic, verbal tactics he sometimes displays in this house and which, if he used them in that capacity, could convert a cold war into a less cold war.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, in 1959, a new disciple of Keynes is born, a convert who was once one of the most violent of unbelievers. But how can we possibly have faith in the minister until he publicly recants his former views? The Minister of Finance is now on record as being in favour of anti-cyclical budgets. He has caught what he used to call a disease. Paul Samuelson described the impact of "The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money", published by Keynes in 1936, as follows:

> The general theory caught most economists under the age of 35 with the unexpected virulence of a disease first attacking and decimating an isolated tribe of south sea islanders. Economists beyond 50 turned out to be quite immune to the ailment. With time, most economists in between began to run the fever, often without knowing or admitting their condition.

The minister, Mr. Speaker, belongs to the last group.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is what you say.

Mr. Pearson: He did not know it but all during those years he has been running the Keynesian fever and he now at last admits it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: However, I say to the minister that he probably is about the last convert because, if Keynes were still living, he would today, I am sure, reject most of the doctrine he put forward in "The General Theory" 23 years ago. The minister may be a shaky Keynesian but he is a true Conservative because the essence of Conservatism is to adjust years later to changes made by Liberals, to adjust years later to changes made by Liberals after the compulsion of new conditions make further reforms necessary and the old adjustments meaningless.

The government, however, and this is my concluding section of my remarks on the budget, Mr. Speaker, still makes excuses for all its trouble by the fable of its evil inheritance, that hoary old canard which really should be dropped by them. The minister says that the recession began in the spring of 1957 and we concealed it from the people. The Prime Minister repeats the fable at every possible opportunity, that a recession which in the fall of 1957 they claimed after four months in office did not exist began in the spring of 1957 and was concealed from the country and from them.

Mr. Speaker, let us dispose of this transparent fallacy once and for all by quoting from the government's own considered and expert analysis of the situation in the report "Economic Prospects for 1958" which the Minister of Trade and Commerce did his best to conceal from the house and from the country. If you want a good reason for that feeling about it let me quote this paragraph which disposes of this argument, surely, once and for all. This is from the minister's own report:

> Overall physical activity reached a peak during late 1956 and early 1957 and the changes to the third quarter were quite minor, but have since become somewhat more pronounced. Total employment, on the other hand, continued to increase somewhat longer with employment in manufacturing reaching a peak by the middle of 1957 and total non-agricultural employment declining only in the fourth quarter of last year.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. Now let us deal with the position as we see it at this time. The economic position in this country is better than it was; otherwise we would be in a desperate situation indeed. I agree with the minister, and I have never denied it though he accuses us tonight of denying it, that there are some bright features in the economy which do presage recovery. The minister gave all the details. He selected his own figures but when we do that he accuses us of picking out figures for gloom and doom. The minister gave his evidence. I could give lots of evidence which would emphasize the dangerous features in the situation but it would not convince the minister. I think I have given him some evidence, however, that there is lots of trouble ahead. It is possible to exaggerate; it is possible to minimize both the extent of the recovery that has been achieved and the dangers that still lie ahead. But let us take the views of people from outside the country, which certainly should be unprejudiced. This is what the London Times had to say after the minister's budget was introduced in this house. Nobody can accuse the London Times of taking anything but an objective view of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Why not quote some Canadian views?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I could give some Canadian sources but the minister would say they are prejudiced. The London Times had this to say:

> Canada is having more difficulty than other countries in shaking herself free from the bog of recession into which she plunged last year. Consequently, the austerity of the Canadian budget proposals contrasts bleakly with the stimulus of those introduced in Britain on Tuesday.

Then, from across the line the U. S. News and World Report of April 13, had this to say:

> U.S. business activity has regained just about all the ground lost in the recession. But the same is not true in Canada.

We do not now at this time and we never have argued that there would not have been economic difficulties whatever government had been in power in this country. We do state, and this is the burden of our argument, that the government had no planned policy for dealing with those difficulties.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Certainly, you have not.

Mr. Pearson: It increased those difficulties by the narrow political approach established a year ago. Let any member of the government deny that they were not influenced by political considerations in their economic policy. The government increased those difficulties by approaching them in a hit and miss, piecemeal and confused fashion and in that sense they must bear the responsibility which is attached to the government, not perhaps for creating a situation in which we are but for making the situation worse than it would otherwise have been.

One of the editors of the Financial Post, John Macdonald, had this to say on March 28, and this is a very good description of what has happened to the government and to the country through the policy of the government. This man said:

> The government is in the position of being obliged to throw water upon the inflationary fires of its own making.

Surely, no member of the government, no member on the other side, will deny that if action had been taken a year and a half ago, in the summer of 1958; if a budget had been introduced in the fall of that year; if there had been an accounting to the people of Canada; if there had been a statement of the economic difficulties, economic possibilities, economic dangers in this country; if action had been taken at that time to meet some of those problems we would not have been in the situation we have been in in the last year. It cannot be denied by any honest member of the government that at that time the government was more concerned with the forthcoming general election than with the economic and financial position of the country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, some of the fires that the government are trying to put out now—and we will give them full credit for the efforts they are making—are, as the Financial Post man said, of their own making.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might complete my remarks by reading a paragraph from a Canadian paper because the Minister of Finance reproached me a few moments ago for taking my quotations from outside Canada. Here is a paragraph from the Peterborough Examiner. I apologize to the Minister of Finance for ending on what may be an unduly personal note. He knows that I do this in no unfriendly way.

> The hon. member for Eglinton, the Minister of Finance, is a man who deserves our respect and admiration; he is as supple in his opinions and in his economics as a pitchman selling kickapoo—joy-juice.

I do not know what that is, Mr. Speaker, and I hope it is not alcoholic. Then the editorial goes on:

> In flexibility he stands head and shoulders above his cabinet colleagues and for plugging a hole he is swiftly off the mark. It is being said in Toronto that his budget is aimed at the self-indulgent and rich; actually it calls all sections of the country to relieve the treasury from its financial plight.

That financial plight, is in large part at least the result of both bad management and bad faith on the part of the government. That is why we on this side have moved this amendment on which we will now proceed to vote and which we on this side will certainly strongly, sincerely and enthusiastically support.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources took exception to the interpretation put on certain statements of his and I promised him an opportunity before the vote to make a correction.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is most important for the accuracy of the Hansard record that I make very clear precisely what my two points of privilege were. The first was that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) was trying to mislead the house with regard to the facts as stated by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Habel: You have got a lot to learn yet.

Mr. Speaker: I would hope that no member would try to mislead the house.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I would hope so too but unfortunately that does occur. I want to make it clear for the record—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —that when the Leader of the Opposition referred to the answer I made in the house on April 8 the inference was very clear that he was taking the percentages in this answer which referred only to approximately 2 per cent of all the land under permit in the northern areas. He said that the percentages he quoted with respect to United States companies or Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies applied to the whole northern area. I have to say flatly that that was not only incorrect but can only be excused by abysmal ignorance or a complete attempt to mislead.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Nine forty-five.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My second point of privilege was this. When I asked through you, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Nine forty-six.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): —if the Leader of the Opposition would read my answer he proceeded to read the questions quickly.

An Hon. Member: Nine forty-seven.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will speak very slowly at this point, Mr. Speaker, and Hansard will bear me out that he started to read my answer but he left out several words at the beginning of it. His voice was heard to come in on the words "sale on March 9" and he left out the words, "assuming that the information required is the one", which is followed by the words "sale on March 9", that sale being just under three million acres. I therefore submit—

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I submit that if the minister wants to go ahead he needs unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was not really hearing the minister on the question of privilege. I gave him the opportunity to make his correction. I take it he is now satisfied that he has corrected the error.

Mr. Rouleau: He is never satisfied.

Mr. Speaker: It being 9.45 o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 5 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Benidickson) which was negatived on the following division:

(The following occurred before the recording of the vote)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I rise at this time to make a rather unusual request. I do not believe the rules forbid anyone who has voted leaving the house thereafter, but naturally we do not follow that course because of the difficulties that would ensue if each and every one of us were to do so. In view of the fact the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has an appointment at 10.30, I suggest that the house will understand if he leaves.

Mr. Speaker: The house can, by unanimous consent, endorse any irregularity. I take it that the house is in a mood to give the hon. Minister of Finance leave to leave.

Mr. Pearson: I think the minister ought to be allowed to leave.

Mr. Speaker: I would not want the house to be under any misapprehension about the rule because subsection (2) of standing order 12 says:

> When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the house, or make any noise or disturbance.

On motion of Mrs. Fairclough the debate was adjourned.

It being eight minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

MARTIN F. RUSSELL

Question No. 150—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Was Martin F. Russell, of Shippegan Gully, Gloucester county, New Brunswick, recently dismissed as temporary guardian for the range lights at Shippegan Gully?

2. If so, on what date did this dismissal take place and for what reasons?

3. What is the name and address of the guardian presently in charge of the said range lights?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

1 and 2. Following advice from the Caraquet chamber of commerce of a shift in the channel, it was necessary to make changes to the Shippegan Gully entrance range. A new structure for the front light was installed and the back light was relocated. At the same time, opportunity was taken to change both lights from oil to automatic battery operation. A Mr. Martin F. Roussel had been part time lightkeeper for these lights but with the change to automatic operation a lightkeeper was no longer necessary and his services as part time lightkeeper were for this reason terminated effective October 1, 1958. A caretaker was considered to be adequate for the protection of the lights, and Mr. Roussel acted in that capacity on an entirely temporary basis from October 1, 1958, to January 15, 1959.

3. As the shipping season has been closed, a permanent caretaker has not been selected up to now.

R.C.M.P. RESIGNATIONS

Question No. 279—Mr. Howard:

1. Have any members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police resigned since July 1, 1958?

2. If so, for each month (a) how many; (b) of what rank; (c) in which province or territory was each member assigned; (d) what reasons were given for the resignation?

Answer by: Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice):

1. Yes. Commissioned officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police may resign. Other ranks may retire voluntarily for the following reasons;—

(a) retirement to pension, (b) retirement at the end of a period of engagement or re-engagement, (c) purchase of discharge.

2. (a), (b), (c), (d). See attached statement, in which "number resigned" and "resignation", include voluntary retirement as explained above.

3. Yes.
4.(a) Participation in politics; (b) the hon. member for Gaspe.
5. Yes.
6. Yes.

STABILIZATION BOARD PURCHASES, PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Question No. 318—Mr. Argue:

1. What products have been purchased by the agricultural stabilization board from the three prairie provinces from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?
2. What is the estimated total purchases of each of these products acquired from the three prairie provinces by the board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?
3. What is the estimated amount of money paid for each of these commodities acquired from the three prairie provinces by the board from April 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Butter, eggs, pork.
2. Butter, 1,805,000 pounds; Eggs, 2,965,000 dozen; Pork, 10,067,000 pounds.
3. Butter, $1,155,000.00; Eggs, $1,215,000.00; Pork, $3,492,000.00.

TRANSPORTATION ALLOWANCES, RENOUS NAVAL DEPOT

Question No. 322—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Is it proposed to make changes in transportation allowances for civilian personnel engaged at the Renous Naval Ammunition Depot, Renous, New Brunswick?
2. If so, what changes will be made and when will they be effective?

Answer by: Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence):

1 and 2. The transportation allowance regulations for civilian personnel employed at the naval ammunition depot at Renous, N.B. are under review. Until this review is completed the present regulations will remain in effect.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 22, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STARRED QUESTIONS

HILLCREST HOUSING COMPANY, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Question No. 54—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has the Hillcrest Housing Company of Summerside, Prince Edward Island, made any arrangements with the Department of National Defence or any other department to provide rental housing for personnel of the armed forces?
2. If so, what is the nature of these arrangements?
3. Has the said company received a loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in respect of these housing units?

Hon. Henri Courtemanche (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the three parts of this question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. From vote 732 of the 1956-57 supplementary estimates an amount not to exceed $870,015 was made available toward the construction of housing units. The terms and conditions relating to the financing of the construction and leasing of 100 housing units for personnel of the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, are set forth in orders in council P.C. 1958-29/1386 and P.C. 1956-2/1368.

3. No Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loan has been made. However, the corporation as agent for the Department of National Defence under authority of order in council P.C. 1956-1495 of October 3, 1956, disburses and administers the Department of National Defence loan as set forth in order in council P.C. 1958-29/1386.

C.N.R.—REMOVAL OF FACILITIES FROM SMITHERS, B.C.

Question No. 55—Mr. Howard:

1. Are steps being taken by the Canadian National Railways to move any part of its facilities or equipment from the present location at Smithers, British Columbia, to some other place?
2. If so, what specific facilities, equipment or machinery is to be moved, upon what date and to where?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the management of the Canadian National Railways advise me that the answer to part 1 is no, other than that the railway is contemplating moving from Smithers to The Past the stationary boiler used for heating purposes and replacing it with an automatic furnace.

Part 2 is answered by the answer to part 1.

ECOSOC—CANADIAN OBSERVER AT MEETING

Question No. 56—Mr. Cardin:

1. Is an observer in attendance for Canada at the 27th session of ECOSOC in Mexico City?
2. If so, who is the observer and for what duration will he attend?
3. Has any such observer any other person to assist him in his task?
4. Has Canada had such persons in attendance on other occasions when Canada was not a member of ECOSOC?
5. If so, who were they and at what sessions were they present?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of this question is yes. The answer to part 2 is that Dr. R. P. Vivian, the hon. member for Durham, is attending the meetings for the period of the main discussions.

3. Yes; Mr. John Hadwen, a member of the staff of the Canadian permanent mission to the United Nations in New York. Officials of our embassy in Mexico City are also available to assist if required.

4. Canadian observers have been present at previous sessions of the economic and social council when Canada was not a member. All such sessions were held at United Nations headquarters either in New York or Geneva. The sessions were followed by the Canadian permanent representatives in New York and Geneva, and by members of their staffs.

5. During the period that Canada was not a member of ECOSOC (1949, 1953-55 inclusive) the Canadian permanent representatives in New York and Geneva were as follows:

New York: 1949, General McNaughton; 1953-55, D. M. Johnson.

Geneva: 1949, Paul E. Renaud, (deputy representative); 1952-53, Bruce M. Williams, (acting permanent representative); 1953-55, Hector Allard, (permanent representative).

REPORT OF DR. CLARK—RECOMMENDATIONS

Question No. 59—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

Has the government received from Professor Clark recommendations either verbally or in writing arising from the study into old age security?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Starred Questions

CONSUMER PRICES ON DAIRY PRODUCTS

Question No. 60—Mr. McIlraith:

What was the average price to the Canadian consumer (basis Montreal market) for each of the following commodities, during period January 1, 1958 to March 12, 1959: (i) cheese; (ii) skim milk powder: (a) spray process; (b) roller process; (iii) egg powder; (iv) egg melange; (v) shell eggs?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): This question apparently is asking for the average retail prices in Montreal for a variety of agricultural products. This is a statistic which we do not have in the department. It would involve, of course, taking the daily prices in all the stores in Montreal in order to secure it, and I think it is apparent that this is the kind of thing we cannot produce. I think the hon. member could get this information for himself fairly well by looking over the pages of the Montreal newspapers, and looking at the advertising of the groceterias there, which would give the prices of those commodities from day to day. He could get the information perhaps better in that way than in any other way.

There is one thing I would point out, Mr. Speaker, namely that as far as egg melange is concerned, it is not sold to the retail trade; it is sold to bakeries.

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NFLD.—PROTESTS TO MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Question No. 61—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland received any communications protesting against the failure of the government to send Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements to Newfoundland? If so, how many?

2. What is the nature of reply, if any, made by the minister to such communications?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will note that this question asks the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Browne) whether he has received communications protesting against the failure of the government to send Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements to Newfoundland and, if so, how many. The second part of the question reads:

What is the nature of reply, if any, made by the minister to such communications?

Although the Minister without Portfolio might wish to reply, this question seems to me to be outside our practice and I would not like to have it put and create a precedent. I wish to give the house my views on the question by referring them to paragraph 1 of standing order 39, which provides that:

Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from ministers of the crown relating to public affairs; and from other members, relating to any bill, motion, or other public matter connected with the business of the house, in which such members may be concerned.

[Mr. Monteith.]

In citation 178, in his fourth edition, Beauchesne comments on this rule as follows:

Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible.

In citation 171, paragraph (x), the same author states:

A question oral or written must not deal with an action of a minister for which he is not responsible to parliament.

Then turning to May 16th edition, this is said at page 356 under "Questions to Ministers":

Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to matters of administration for which they are responsible. Within these limits an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of their opinion upon matters of policy. A question should be addressed to the minister who is primarily responsible, and misdirected questions are transferred by the clerks at the table on the notification of the departments concerned.

Then Campion at page 151, under the heading "Responsibility of Minister", observes as follows:

A question should be directed to a minister officially responsible for the subject matter with which it deals.

A little later on he says that one type of prohibited question is:

Putting to a minister a question for which another minister is more directly responsible or asking one minister to influence the action of another.

Finally Redlich, who is a very authoritative commentator, says in The Procedure of the House of Commons, volume 2, page 243:

A question must be precisely formulated and must be addressed to the minister who is officially connected with the matters to which it relates.

While this is perhaps not a serious matter, I feel we should keep our practice within the established limits rather than going beyond them, and it is therefore my view that a question relating to this subject matter of the R.C.M.P. ought to be addressed to the Minister of Justice. The question in this form does not appear to me to be appropriate.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Would Your Honour allow me to make one observation? I would not, of course, want to challenge the decision or interpretation of the rule which Your Honour has given but, if I may, I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to citation 178 in Beauchesne, fourth edition, which I think can perhaps be interpreted in more than one way. It reads as follows:

Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament—

I do not think there can be any doubt but that this question does relate to a public affair with which not only one minister but all ministers are officially connected, as well as to proceedings pending in parliament. It is true, sir, that the last part of the citation reads as follows:

> —or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible.

Within that term the minister would not be called upon to answer the question. With that I agree, but in so far as the other two points are concerned it would seem to me that he does, and I think the "or" puts a different interpretation on it. I simply wanted to bring this to your attention.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): If I may comment on the point that has been raised, I think Your Honour might give some consideration to where this ruling will inevitably lead, because I think we should give some thought to what responsibility a minister without portfolio in a cabinet may have. I agree with the hon. member for Laurier that if the hon. gentleman to whom he has referred has anything official to do in the cabinet it surely must be to represent the province from which he comes and to make representations about public matters affecting it.

I believe it is the right of parliament to ask for communications that have been sent to any minister of the crown. If a wide interpretation is to be given that a minister without portfolio does not have to produce communications sent to him, it would seem to me that this could abrogate the practice we have followed that parliament can ask for the production of such correspondence. Certainly parliament would not look kindly on any back-door method by which correspondence could take place with a member of the cabinet and for that reason outside the area within which parliament can ask for its production. I think parliament has a right to have the communications that are sent to any member of the government. The question is, how do you get them when they are sent to a minister without portfolio.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their views. It does not seem to me that any proper rights of parliament are restricted or abrogated by the view I have taken of this question. There is no difficulty in asking the Minister of Justice questions about the subject matter of this question, that is the sending of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police reinforcements, unless there is some other obstacle in the way of that being done by reason of pending litigation. Parliament is not precluded from seeking information on that question.

The effect of my view as to this question is that it is improper to ask the Minister without Portfolio for his personal correspondence. I take the view that the word "official" as it is used in the citation quoted by the hon. member for Laurier means official in the sense of being responsible for a department. The other citations make it clear that it is the Minister of Justice who is responsible for the department involved in this question. If the hon. member for Assiniboia were right, then personal correspondence would be involved in the question, and I do not think any member of the house would assert that the privilege of asking oral questions relating to a minister's responsibility extends that far, or that the asking of questions of private members extends to personal correspondence.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to make one comment, Mr. Speaker, upon what you have been good enough to say. It seems to me that if a narrow interpretation were to be given to this regulation it would mean that it would be difficult to secure any information from a minister without portfolio, and therefore that would be a violation of the principle of the collective responsibility of the cabinet. Furthermore, you will be aware that the practice in the past has been to give a wider interpretation to this rule than has been given this afternoon. I recall that when we were sitting on the treasury benches, every single member of the government was asked to stand up and answer oral questions regarding his personal or official communications, verbal or written, with the C.B.C., and no exception was taken to that procedure. There seems to have been a broader ruling then than you have given this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated my views on this question. It seems to me, notwithstanding the comments I have had from members of the house, that it is the correct view. I am afraid, therefore, I cannot allow this question to proceed in this form.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Under the circumstances, perhaps, as it is now recognized that the minister is without portfolio, without responsibility and without voice—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I might be permitted to remove the question from the order paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That remark, coming from one who has no responsibility but who has much voice, is entirely out of order.

Question withdrawn and order discharged.

MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

Question No. 62—Mr. Carter:

1. How many municipal winter works projects under the Department of Labour have actually been in operation up to date, in each province?
2. What is the estimated cost of the federal treasury, in each province?
3. What is the estimated number of additional jobs provided, in each province?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this question is in three parts, and I should like to give the answers in three parts for each province. They are as follows:

British Columbia	292	$1,191,000	3,059
Alberta	238	1,494,000	4,557
Saskatchewan ..	123	481,000	2,050
Manitoba	76	661,000	1,322
Ontario	641	3,565,000	10,486
Quebec	254	1,818,000	5,561
New Brunswick .	208	242,000	2,324
Nova Scotia	205	445,000	7,184
Prince Edward Island	—	—	—
Newfoundland ..	26	49,000	416
Northwest Territories ...	8	12,000	96

INDIAN RESERVE, WEST VANCOUVER

Question No. 63—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Was any part of the Indian reserve in west Vancouver sold or leased since June 21, 1957?
2. If so, what is the description of the property, and what were the terms of the sale or lease?
3. Was the sale or lease approved by the band, and, if so, by what means?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I presume this question refers to new leases and not renewals of leases.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct.

Mrs. Fairclough: In that event the answer to the first part is no. The answers to the second and third parts do not apply.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD—APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN MEMBER

Question No. 57—Mr. Eudes:

1. Have any representations been received by the government to appoint a woman member to the national parole board?
2. If so, from whom have any such representations been received and what action, if any, is contemplated?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Since this question involves the necessity of circularizing my colleagues I would ask that it be made an order for return.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

ARMED FORCES—EDUCATION OF DEPENDANTS

Question No. 338—Mr. Regier:

1. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958, what was the cost to the government of Canada of education for dependants of members of the armed forces?
2. How many dependants were thereby provided with educational services?
3. How many of these dependants received their education (a) in Canada; (b) overseas?
4. How much of this total expenditure was spent on behalf of dependants (a) in Canada; (b) overseas?
5. What was the over-all cost per pupil of this program (a) in Canada; (b) overseas; (c) for all of them?
6. How many of these dependants were supplied with educational services (a) in schools supplied by the federal government; (b) by way of grants to existing educational institutions?
7. What was the average per pupil cost of grants made to existing educational institutions on behalf of the education of these dependants for each of the ten provinces of Canada?
8. What is the estimated over-all cost per pupil in the regular school systems of other Canadian children in each of the ten provinces?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

POSTAL CONTRACT, HALET-MALARTIC, QUE.

Motion No. 92—Mr. Dumas:

For a copy of all communications exchanged since July 1, 1957, to date, between the Postmaster General or any officer of his department on the one hand, and any other person and organization on the other, regarding a contract for the carrying of mail between Halet and the railway station Malartic via Norrie and Malartic, province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

CHAIRMANSHIP, BOARD OF REFEREES, ROUYN DISTRICT

Motion No. 93—Mr. Dumas:

For a copy of all communications exchanged since July 1, 1957, to date, between the Minister of Labour or any officer of his department on the one hand, and any other person and organization on the other, regarding the chairmanship of the board of referees for the Quebec regional division (district of Rouyn, Quebec) under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this motion is agreed to subject to the usual reservation with regard to confidential and privileged correspondence.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservation expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FREE PORT, NEWFOUNDLAND

Motion No. 94—Mr. Carter:

For a copy of all communications received by the Minister of Transport and officers of his department, or any other minister or official, since January 1, 1954, regarding the proposal to establish a free port in Newfoundland, and the replies thereto.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to the passing of this motion with the usual reservation regarding the consent of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the limitation expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RE-EQUIPPING OF R.C.A.F. SQUADRONS IN EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has any comment to make on reports which appear in the press today regarding the re-equipment of the Canadian air division?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the re-equipment of all our forces is constantly under review by the officers of the forces concerned, and the air force is now considering the replacement of the equipment of the first division of the R.C.A.F. in Europe when that equipment becomes obsolescent.

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the white paper ready for distribution yet, and if so could it be distributed tomorrow?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): As I have announced several times in the house, the white paper will be distributed shortly before the estimates of the department are considered. The estimates of my department have not yet been called.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder if the minister could tell us if they are likely to be called soon?

Mr. Pearkes: That question should be directed to the leader of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FURTHER STATEMENT ON REPORTED BAN ON PHOTOGRAPHING DESTRUCTION OF PARTLY FINISHED PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct a statement I made yesterday in answer to a question by the hon. member for Fort William regarding the dismantling and destruction of partly finished CF-105 aircraft, as reported at page 2880 of Hansard.

At that time I stated that no aircraft were being dismantled, but I am advised that in fact the operation of dismantling and reduction to scrap has already commenced.

The five partly finished aircraft on the assembly line are now being dismantled and those parts which can be used in other programs salvaged. Those items which can be sold at better than scrap prices are being removed and disposed of separately, and the remainder are being cut into pieces which can be handled and will be sold as scrap. As already announced, the five finished craft have not been touched but with respect to No.'s 6 to 10 inclusive, dismantling has commenced and the reduction to scrap got under way according to a report received at ten o'clock this morning.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

OPENING OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—SITTING OF HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday members of the House of Commons received an invitation from the St. Lawrence seaway authority of Canada and the St. Lawrence development corporation of the United States of America to attend the official opening of the seaway on Friday, June 26 by Her Majesty the Queen and the President of the United States.

In view of the fact that, according to the invitations, replies must be received in Montreal not later than May 10, would the Prime Minister assist the members of the House of Commons who might want to reply to this invitation by saying whether or not the House of Commons will be sitting that day? It does make a difference as to how we will be able to reply to this invitation. I am certain the Prime Minister will understand the reason for my question. We do not know how to reply unless we know whether the House of Commons is going to sit.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I think the co-operative spirit here in the house might give an answer to that question. If the hon. gentleman and those associated with him, together with the other members of the opposition and the members on this side of the house, are able to achieve the completion of our program by that date, then the question is answered. However, in the event that we do not do so, then if the house is agreeable—and all hon. members will naturally have the same anxiety to be present on this momentous occasion—no one would be particularly critical, providing there was unanimity, if the house should adjourn on that date.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

WEST INDIES FEDERATION—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN GIFT OF SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of one I asked the other day. Can the minister tell the house whether the plans and specifications for the two new ships which are being given to the government of the West Indies are in preparation, or are ready?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think I gave that answer last week in the absence of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Chevrier: I will look up Hansard.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

RETAINING WALLS, QUEBEC PROVINCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, and ask him when I may expect an answer to question 108, which I asked at the beginning of February, and which has been submitted as an order for return.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Minister of Public Works): I am not sure that comes under the Department of Public Works, but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

Mr. Dupuis: It refers to certain protection walls.

BRIDGES

PEACE RIVER—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister give the house a progress report on the construction of the bridge which is being built across the Peace river to replace the one destroyed in October, 1957? Can the minister say when the bridge will be open for traffic?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I am informed that a contract for the construction of the substructure and approaches for the new bridge was awarded on July 29, 1958 and this work was completed within schedule on April 15 of this year.

A further contract for the construction and erection of the superstructure was awarded on October 20, 1958 and the completion date for this work is November 15, 1959.

In answer to the hon. member's second question, it is expected that traffic should be moving freely across the new bridge by January, 1960.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

GASOLINE—ALLEGED PRICE DISCRIMINATION IN SOUTHERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, notice of which was sent to him earlier. Has the minister received any requests for an inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act into the charge that price discrimination is being practised by certain oil companies during the present so-called gasoline war in southern Ontario and, if so, what action is contemplated?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. I find that a telegram dated April 21 has been received by the director of investigation, to which he has replied. I can advise the hon. member that in view of the request received from the Toronto area this matter is being carefully considered, and whatever facts the investigation discloses will be followed up in the usual way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BOBBIE CHAPMAN—INQUIRY AS TO EXERCISE OF CLEMENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Hicks (Fraser Valley): I should like to inquire from the Solicitor General if a decision has yet been reached and, if not, when will it be reached, regarding the Bobbie Chapman case. I am sure that many people, hundreds of whom the minister has heard from, hope a decision will be announced as soon as possible.

Mr. Winch: You can say "thousands", not "hundreds".

Hon. Leon Balcer (Solicitor General): I wish to thank the hon. member for the interest he has shown in this case all along. I know it is not the practice in this house to disclose the particulars of individual cases, but I think I can go as far as to say that the case is under study at the present time and that a decision will be announced in a day or two.

An hon. Member: Don't go too far.

Mr. Speaker: I think, if I am correct in my recollection, that it is not customary to ask questions of the ministry about the exercise of the prerogative of clemency. I did not object to the question at the time, but I do not think it would be proper to go into detail.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): It has been customary to ask questions provided the case was not before the courts. Is this matter still before the courts?

Mr. Speaker: I am speaking from memory, but I think it is quite clear that the royal prerogative of clemency is not a subject for questions to the ministry.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General tell us if any consideration is being given to announcing the commutation of sentences from death to life imprisonment earlier than a few hours or a couple of days before the time the death sentence is to go into effect as pronounced by the judge?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Vancouver East, I am sure, heard me state earlier that it was not a matter for the house to inquire into the exercise of the royal prerogative of clemency. I refer again to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 160, where he makes reference to the Canadian Commons Journal, volume 53, and states:

> Parliament does not appear to have any part to play in the matter of clemency which is a prerogative of the crown that should not be interfered with by proceedings of the House of Commons while the subject is under consideration by His Excellency and his advisers.

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I apologize for not sending him notice but it only came to me a few minutes ago because of some previous remarks made by the Prime Minister.

In view of the Prime Minister's previous statement regarding the value of a cooling off period on the Newfoundland issue, will the Prime Minister tell the house if he now considers the political temperature of this issue sufficiently tepid to warrant further action by his government?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to engage in a controversy as to relative degrees of heat and the like, but I hope the legislation regarding Newfoundland will be before the house very soon.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister spoke about legislation concerning Newfoundland being before the house shortly, was he referring to the legislation concerning our financial relationship or the legislation concerning which disallowance has been asked?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly obvious, of course, that I was referring to the legislation affecting Newfoundland in reference to the amount of the grant and the like.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST BERLIN—SUGGESTION BY CANADA AS TO UNITED NATIONS ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to report what consideration has been given to the important proposal put forward by Canada, namely that the United Nations presence could be most helpful in solving the Berlin situation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman asked a similar question on Monday. The wording of his question at that time was as follows:

> My question arises out of his statement—

That is, my statement.

> —of April 17, as to Canada's position that the United Nations should be asked to play a useful role with regard to the Berlin problem. In view of the reported rejection of the United Kingdom's position, is the Prime Minister able to say whether the very useful and important proposal which he put forward has met with success?

With the indulgence of the house I wish to make a statement in this regard and in answer to the hon. gentleman's question. The newspaper story to which the hon. member referred—and there is a similar one to be found in the Montreal Gazette today, datelined London, April 21—went further than the facts would justify. These stories came to the conclusion that final decisions on the western negotiating position have been taken, whereas in fact western policies are still very much under discussion. This was emphasized in the United Kingdom House of Commons by the foreign secretary, Mr. Lloyd, when similar questions were raised there last week. He replied, in part, as follows: "We are still in the process of preparation; no decisions have been made."

A committee of experts on which the United States, the United Kingdom, France and West Germany are represented is now meeting in London to prepare proposals for the western side. In its deliberations the committee will consider the suggestions of other member countries of NATO, including the suggestion regarding the role of the United Nations in Berlin which I mentioned in the house on March 19 and which was developed by the Minister of National Defence at the NATO ministerial meeting in Washington. The house was informed of the general content of this suggestion in statements by myself and the Minister of National Defence on April 7 and 8 respectively. When the committee of experts has finished its work in London it will report to the NATO council in Paris and subsequently to the foreign ministers of the four western powers.

As this process continues, the position of the western powers will take more definite shape and it is to be expected that speculation will increase. However, I think it would be more in the general interest and more helpful to the house if I were to withhold comment until we know finally what the western negotiating powers decide they can officially make public prior to the opening of the negotiations.

The western foreign ministers are scheduled to meet with the Soviet foreign minister in Geneva beginning May 11 and, depending on developments, a subsequent meeting of heads of government will take place. The Canadian suggestions regarding a possible role for the United Nations were intended, as hon. members are aware, to be complementary to a four power agreement on Berlin, and they cannot therefore be given practical application until such an agreement has been reached. I have no doubt, however, that in the meantime the four western governments are continuing to keep before them the possibility of a significant role for the United Nations in the solution of the Berlin problem.

I express the hope once more that it will be possible to achieve that degree of agreement which will permit of that role for the United Nations as suggested by Canada being implemented and carried into effect.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

WEST BERLIN—REFERENCE TO HIGH ALTITUDE FLIGHTS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if in view of the fact that Canada as a member of NATO is now sharing responsibility for the defence of West Berlin, Canada was consulted by the United States government before the decision was taken in Washington to use the Berlin air corridor above the ceiling of 10,000 feet?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): In regard to that question I think I had better look into the record very carefully before giving an answer, rather than depend on memory at the moment. I will, accordingly, let the hon. member and the house know as soon as I have examined the record in detail.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce having to do with the Bracken royal commission which was to inquire into box car allocation and obtain a satisfactory formula for such allocation. As a result of his inquiries can the minister say when this report will be delivered to him by the queen's printer and when it may be tabled in the house?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the report will be tabled in the house tomorrow at 2.30.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1957-58 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very welcome answer given to me a few moments ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce I am encouraged to ask whether he can tell the house when the final payment on last year's wheat account may be announced. Has the wheat board yet recommended such a payment?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, one piece of good news per day should be sufficient for the hon. member for Assiniboia, but I will have an answer for him tomorrow on this question.

TRADE

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SPONSOR MEETING OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I directed the following question to the Prime Minister:

—has the government received a request from the Canadian Petroleum Association to sponsor a meeting of the industry to consider present market problems? If such a request has been received, is it the intention of the government to sponsor such a meeting?

In reply the Prime Minister stated:

Mr. Speaker, I will bring this to the attention of the minister and have a reply as soon as he returns.

I wonder if I could have a reply to that question?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the reply is that such a brief has been received from the Canadian Petroleum Association within the last few days, requesting that the government sponsor a meeting of the Canadian domestic oil industry in order to consider solutions to certain marketing problems. The implications of the proposal suggested in this brief appear to be both far reaching and complicated, and will be given appropriate consideration.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to deal with a matter that has become somewhat controversial in the last little while, concerning recent changes made in the immigration regulations and various statements which have been made in this house and out of it with regard thereto.

At the very outset I should like to state that I have been very deeply disturbed about the misunderstanding which has gone abroad with respect to these regulations and the intent of the government in that regard. First of all I propose to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), who had some rather harsh things to say in the house the other day during the course of this debate. Referring to the changes in regulations, he termed them at one point as cruel and inhuman. At another point he called them stupid, cruel, silly and inhuman. Mr. Speaker, I have sat in this house now for quite a few years, during which time changes have been made in the Immigration Act and in the regulations which pertain thereto. I should think hon. members would agree that if we are going to talk about cruelty and inhumanity we could very well look at some of the things that were done under the former administration.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Stupidity, too.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the stupidity could be taken for granted with regard to the operations of the former government. I am sure hon. members will agree with me that nothing much could be more cruel—if we are going to deal with cruelty to immigrants and prospective immigrants—than to promise and not to fulfil. Yet this was the policy of the former Liberal government. If we need any testimony to that effect all we need to do is look at the mounting backlog which testifies to the cruel and inhuman policy which led to the acceptance of applications which could not be handled for two years or more.

The backlog, Mr. Speaker, has now grown from some 77,158 at December 31, 1955, to 131,785 at February 28, 1959. In Italy alone from some 12,000 at the end of 1954, and 23,000 at the end of 1955, to about 63,000 at February 28, 1959. I have a small table, Mr. Speaker, showing the backlog for five years. May I have the permission of the house to have this placed on Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. lady leave to have this table placed on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table above referred to follows]

Immigration—Backlog
(all countries)

	Sponsored	Unsponsored	Totals
December 31, 1955 ..	26,332	50,826	77,158
December 31, 1956 ..	47,178	69,957	117,135
December 31, 1957 ..	63,659	88,962	152,621
December 31, 1958 ..	73,540	47,774	121,314
February 28, 1959 ..	75,847	55,938	131,785

Mrs. Fairclough: Probably because the largest backlog was in Italy this country has been seized upon by the hon. member for special mention. I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the constituency I represent in the city of Hamilton has many thousands of people of many racial origins. The largest single group is of Italian origin, quite likely, I would think, the largest Italian group in any constituency in Canada. I have grown up with those people. Long before I was a member of the house I knew hundreds of them; they were my friends, and they are still my friends. What has happened to them and their applications for sponsorship of relatives has been just as frustrating for me as it has been for them in experiencing long delays and uncertainty, which has grown even greater and which has been the result of the increasing backlog.

I said I had known those people for a long time. I am sure anyone who has had the privilege of associating with people of Italian origin knows what a warm-hearted and loyal people they are. They have integrated well into our country and into our citizenship. I have great admiration for them, and the very last thing I would do, Mr. Speaker, would be to bring in any regulation which would injure them in any way. Therefore I must state as emphatically as I can that there is no truth whatever in the charges that this amendment was designed to curtail immigration from Italy. As a matter of fact it will eventually permit application to be accepted from a much broader range of persons in Italy and thus will achieve a more diversified and representative movement from that country, since it is the intention in any event to deal with all applications now on hand as conditions in the Rome office permit.

I may say that if we start now to deal with all the applications, or continue to deal with those applications which are now on hand, at a rough estimate it will take two and one half to three years to handle them. It is possible now to accept as unsponsored applications those which were formerly sponsored. Taking into account these two sets of circumstances I cannot see how the regulation can be called discriminatory, a word which has been bandied about quite a bit lately. I do believe though, Mr. Speaker, that discrimination existed in the past in that well qualified Italians who wished to migrate to this country had little or no chance of having their applications considered unless they were in the sponsored categories.

"Cruel", my hon. friend says. What is more cruel than deliberately to misconstrue and misrepresent the intention of the recent amendment? Yet that is precisely what the very highly efficient propaganda machine of the Liberal party is doing right now.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is working on the natural emotions of persons of various ethnic origins, exploiting their sorrows and increasing their heartaches. I said it would take two and one half to three years. These long delays, as the hon. member well knows, lead to a breakdown of sponsorship, because the willingness to sponsor today may develop into the incapacity to do so in two or three years. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that if there is cruelty it is in bringing to this country strangers who have neither the means to sustain themselves nor the opportunity for employment within a reasonable length of time.

I think the hon. member has a fixation on cruelty, and probably with good reason. The previous government knew all about cruelty. I do not think anything could ever have been more cruel than the treatment accorded by the Liberal government to Canadians of Japanese origin during the last war.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was supported by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Green).

Mrs. Fairclough: It was a blot on Canada's history which will never be completely erased. There is cruelty, also, Mr. Speaker, in the exaggeration which has gone into those reports, an exaggeration in the propaganda which has extended even to the point that the press has been led to believe that the entry of such close members of the family as husbands, wives and children is forbidden. Last week end I noted also that one paper said that mothers and fathers would now be forbidden to enter this country.

Mr. Brassard (Lapointe): Who wrote that speech?

Mrs. Fairclough: Who wrote the speech? I am wondering who wrote the speeches and disseminated the propaganda from the moment the order in council became public. Even more insidious, though, than the press reports is the whispered propaganda which has been reported to us as circulating among the various ethnic groups alleging discrimination and restrictions, alleging separation of families. I have had letters coming into my office asking me if under the circumstances their applications must now be abandoned for brothers, for sisters, for children, for wives and husbands, as a result of those whispers which have been circulated among persons from other countries.

I deny these allegations categorically. It is the policy of this government to re-unite families. It is the policy to encourage the entry of the immediate family first and it will be noticed that the amendment has not disturbed that. More distant relatives, we believe, should follow as their capacity to sustain themselves is established. What the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) had to say is very significant. Speaking of discrimination he said that it must exist. Then he went on to say, as found on page 2711 of Hansard for April 15:

I am not suggesting it was the discriminatory character, but it was the restrictive character of this recent order that was at fault.

Of course he could not object to this discrimination. It was he who put it into the act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. lady does not want to be unfair.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I am rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state his question of privilege?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is simply that I was not in parliament when any amendment was ever made to the Immigration Act so I could not possibly have been responsible for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The order in council in 1956.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, not any amendment to the Immigration Act.

An hon. Member: You are wriggling out of that one, Jack.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member was not the minister on May 24, 1956, then I am in error.

Mr. Fraser: He was the little man who wasn't there.

Mrs. Fairclough: I maintain that this discrimination was put into the act by order in council P.C.-785 of May 24, 1956, to which I shall refer in a moment. It established the discriminations which he and his party propagandists are now attacking. It is evidence of the same kind of discrimination that prompted the utterances about Canadian babies. Oh yes, the hon. member has a lot to forget and plenty to cover up. The present propaganda smokescreen is specifically designed to achieve that purpose. The hon. member had good reason for hoping, as he said on April 15, that I would not come into the house and say "the Liberals did this" and "the Liberals did that." His record and the record of the Liberal party are not such that he is anxious to have them exposed to close scrutiny.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no apology to make for it whatever.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am very pleased to hear that the hon. member still stands behind the discrimination he put into the regulations to the act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do.

Mrs. Fairclough: The public have been led to think that this amendment established a new procedure or revoked rights and privileges which always existed under the former administration. This is not the case. With the permission of the house I should like to have inserted in Hansard at this point P.C.-2856 of June 9, 1950.

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me that the hon. lady should read this document because then it is easier to follow the argument.

Mrs. Fairclough: Very well. If you wish me to read it I will. It reads as follows:

P.C. 2856

At the Government House at Ottawa

Friday, the 9th day of June, 1950.

Present:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

His Excellency the Governor General in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and pursuant to the powers conferred by section thirty-eight of the Immigration Act, is pleased to revoke and doth hereby revoke order in council P.C. 2743 of 2nd June, 1949, prohibiting the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations, with certain exceptions, and is pleased to make the following order which is hereby made in substitution for the order hereby revoked:

Order

From and after the 1st July 1950, and until such time as otherwise ordered, the landing in Canada of immigrants of all classes and occupations is prohibited, except as hereinafter provided:

The immigration officer-in-charge may permit any immigrant who otherwise complies with the provisions of the Immigration Act to land in Canada, if it is shown to the satisfaction of such officer-in-charge that such immigrant is:

1. A British subject or a citizen of Ireland entering Canada, directly or indirectly, from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa or the United States of America who has sufficient means to maintain himself until he has secured employment; provided that for the purpose of this regulation the term "British subject" shall mean a person born or naturalized in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Australia, New Zealand or the Union of South Africa, or a citizen of Ireland who has become a citizen of the United Kingdom by registration under the British Nationality Act, 1948.

2. A citizen of the United States of America entering Canada from the United States of America who has sufficient means to maintain himself until he has secured employment.

3. A citizen of France, born therein, and entering Canada from France, who has sufficient means to maintain himself until he has secured employment.

4. A person who satisfied the minister, whose decision shall be final, that:

(a) he is a suitable immigrant having regard to the climatic, social, educational, industrial, labour, or other conditions or requirements of Canada; and

(b) is not undesirable owing to his peculiar customs, habits, modes of life, methods of holding property, or because of his probable inability to become readily adapted and integrated into the life of a Canadian community and to assume the duties of Canadian citizenship within a reasonable time after his entry.

5. A person who, having entered Canada as a non-immigrant, enlisted in the Canadian armed forces and having served in such forces, has been honourably discharged.

Provided that the provisions hereinabove set out shall not apply to immigrants of any Asiatic race.

An hon. Member: Who was the minister.

Mrs. Fairclough: It does not say.

Mr. Pearson: When was that order revoked?

Mrs. Fairclough: It will be noted that in this order in council there is no reference whatsoever to the admission of any classes of close relatives. In fact, this order in council revoked the previous order in council which provided for the admission of close relatives. From July, 1950 to May, 1956 there were no provisions as such in the regulations then in force for the admission of close relatives. Of course this does not mean that close relatives were not admitted any more than the recent amendment means that relatives such as brothers and sisters will be prevented from being admitted to this country. The difference between what happened in 1950, what happened in 1956 and what is being done today is that the admission of relatives under the former regulations was controlled administratively, which means that the department itself established the admissible classes of close relatives, while by the recent amendment this was done by regulation as provided in the Immigration Act.

It is interesting to note how the Liberal government curtailed the immigration of certain close relatives. In 1952, despite the fact that the administrative regulations provided for the entry of a fairly broad range of close relatives from most countries in Europe, the government of that day curtailed the entry of close relatives from Italy to such relatives as husband, wife, unmarried children under 21 years of age, father and mother. Because this change was accomplished administratively without a formal order in council there was relatively little publicity.

Judging from the sequence of events which occurred in 1956, I believe that one can properly conclude that if it had not been for the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Brent case the regulations which had been in force from July 15, 1950 would not have been changed and admission of close relatives would not have been provided for by the order in council of May, 1956 and the then government would have continued its secret policy of discrimination, "cruel, inhuman and stupid" though it was, to quote the hon. gentleman.

I come now to the next order in council and with the permission of the house I should like to have it inserted in Hansard at this point.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady read it too, please.

An hon. Member: A waste of time.

Mr. Hellyer: We lose the context otherwise.

Mrs. Fairclough: This is P.C.-785 of May 24, 1956. Since the hon. member is determined to have me use up my time by reading orders in council, I will read only the amendment to section 20 which has created the controversy. Section 20, which was then amended by this order in council, reads:

20. Landing in Canada of any person is prohibited except where the person falls within one of the following classes of persons who may be landed in Canada if such person meets the requirements of the act and of these regulations:

(a) a person who is a British subject by birth or by naturalization in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, or the Union of South Africa, a citizen of Ireland, a citizen of France born or naturalized in France or in St. Pierre and Miquelon islands, or a citizen of the United States of America if such person has sufficient means to maintain himself in Canada until he has secured employment therein;

(b) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Austria, Belgium, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden or Switzerland or who is a refugee from a country of Europe, if such person undertakes to come to Canada for placement under the auspices of the department or, if the department has given its approval thereto, for establishment in a business, trade or profession or in agriculture;

(c) a person who is a citizen by birth or by naturalization of Egypt, Israel, Lebanon, Turkey, or of any country of Europe or of a country of North America, Central America or South America if such person is the husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister, as well as the husband or wife and the unmarried children under 21 years of age of any such son, daughter, brother or sister, as the case may be, the father, the mother, the grandparent, the unmarried orphan nephew or niece under 21 years of age, the fiance or fiancee, of a Canadian citizen or of a person legally admitted to Canada for permanent residence who is residing in Canada and who has applied for any such person and is in a position to receive and care for any such person; or

(d) a person who is a citizen of a country other than a country referred to in paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) or in section 21, if such person is the husband, the wife or the unmarried child under 21 years of age, the father where he is over 65 years of age, or the mother where she is over 60 years of age, of a Canadian citizen residing in Canada who has applied for and is in a position to receive and care for any such person, but no such child shall be landed in Canada unless his father or his mother, as the case may be, is landed in Canada concurrently with him.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the members especially section 20 of this order in council which I have just read, and have them compare that order in council with the one I have previously read into Hansard, P.C. 2856 of June 9, 1950. I should like to invite hon. members to read carefully the text of subparagraph (c) of this section 20. A reading of this subparagraph may lead one to believe that all the classes of persons therein mentioned were admitted so long as they were of good character and in good health. Hon. members know that this was not the case. For instance, according to subparagraph (c) of the regulations of 1956, brothers and sisters from Israel were said to be admissible, but in fact a person in Canada who applied for his brother was promptly told that the department did not have the necessary facilities in Israel and therefore could not deal with such an application.

As hon. members know, this situation was corrected on August 22, 1958. Applications then on file with the department and since received have been processed or are being processed. Israel was not the only country where the facilities were not available. There are many of the countries listed in subparagraph (c) from which immigrants cannot be admitted because of lack of complete facilities. I might have time to read them. They are Spain, Malta, Cyprus, Andorra, Iceland, Monaco, San Marino, Liechtenstein, Vatican City, Israel, Lebanon, Turkey, Mexico and the countries of Central and South America.

By the wording of subparagraph (c), the country was led to believe that the former Liberal administration was generous, but persons with relatives in certain countries have learned since that notwithstanding this apparent generosity in the regulations they could not bring forward their relatives. In other words, Mr. Speaker, though the Liberal government turned on the tap, no water came out.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising again on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I hope it is a question of privilege and not just a question of disagreement.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the minister is misrepresenting the facts, but if the hon. lady would prefer me to reserve my remarks until she has concluded, I would be very glad to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I think it would be better if the hon. member made his statement at the end of the minister's remarks.

Mrs. Fairclough: So, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is against restrictions. I should like to ask him what he was doing when he laid the foundations for the backlog which is today so frustrating to prospective immigrants. I should like to know, and perhaps he can tell us when he makes his speech, what he was doing when he pretended there would be entry for immigrants where there were no facilities for examination? Apparently the only restriction he is against is the honest one. He does not mind restrictions if they are hidden in administrative detail and subterfuge. He does not mind the hidden, dishonest restriction.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will withdraw that word "dishonest".

Mrs. Fairclough: I did not apply it to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, but to the spirit of the restrictions.

Mr. Speaker: The inference was very clear. I hope the hon. member would be good enough to withdraw it.

Mrs. Fairclough: I was referring to the restrictions, but if Your Honour thinks there is an inference I can assure you and the hon. member that the inference was not directed to him, personally.

There are many things in this act that I do not like. Since this government has taken office, Mr. Speaker, we have initiated a thorough review of the Immigration Act, the regulations, the procedure and the policy. We are still hopeful that from certain countries it may be possible to facilitate the admission of relatives of persons who cannot now come to Canada, but whatever will be the result of these efforts I can assure the house that it is not the intention of the government to deceive the people of Canada by making them believe that their close relatives are admissible if, in fact, this is not possible.

When the proposals are drafted it is my intention to consult with the representatives of the various ethnic groups, with the ethnic press, which is an important line of communication to those of ethnic origin, and I hope to have the advice of the immigrant aid agencies. In fact, I have long felt that there is not a sufficiently close liaison between my department and the agencies whose help is of such inestimable value to the newcomer. I hope we will have the advice and co-operation of labour, of business and of the church and welfare groups. I think it goes without saying that close examination of the proposed revisions will be made, and also I expect that the broad experience of hon. members of this house who, themselves, are of ethnic origins will prove invaluable.

Out of all this it is my hope that we can produce a new deal in immigration matters; positive approaches, democratic programming, raising of standards, flexible practices for selective immigration to replace rigid restrictions in the present act and regulations. In the meantime I had hoped to establish a more orderly procedure by reason of the regulation which has become so controversial. I could not see that anyone would be hurt because all applications now on hand would be dealt with in any event. If immigration is to be properly planned, and if immigrants are to be successful, it is necessary to maintain broader selection in the classes of immigrants admitted to Canada, in terms of skill, training, personal qualifications, and the needs of the country. The recent amendment was designed to make possible this broader selection without affecting the majority of those who formerly came under the sponsorship procedure.

As I said, I hoped I could achieve this. Unfortunately, I have not succeeded; not because the result would not have been achieved; not because prospective immigrants and their sponsors would not have been in a more advantageous position; but because the propagandists of the Liberal party have created an atmosphere of distrust and apprehension in which it is impossible to work.

Mr. Pickersgill: How childish can you get.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is interesting to note that the members of the Liberal party in this house think that is very funny. Since their laughter cannot be reproduced in Hansard, I think I must draw attention to it. This is a highly sensitive department, as hon. members know, and the reaction of human beings to any proposal is always unpredictable. Without co-operation of all concerned, no plan of procedure can be completely successful. I want to say once more how deeply I regret the misunderstanding of the intention of these regulations.

I would like to say something else of a personal nature. When I accepted the Prime Minister's (Mr. Diefenbaker) invitation to this portfolio I hoped my tenure of office would be classified as humane and sympathetic. I have no aversion to changing my mind if circumstances make such action advisable. Therefore, taking into consideration the fact that I hope to suggest revisions to the act in a few months' time in any event, I am asking my colleagues to rescind order in council 1959-310 until such time as the discriminatory section 20 placed into the regulations by those now in opposition can be replaced. I trust the revisions which I will then propose will be understood and will have the approval of all those interested in immigration.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel I should say one word about the Prime Minister's remarks in the house on April 7 last. At that time, unfortunately, I was not in the house and the Prime Minister answered for me a question which was put with regard to these regulations. Towards the end of his remarks at the top of page 2296 of Hansard for that date he said:

> I, for one, intend to have this looked into, because the section indicates that the one passed in 1956 had whatever objections can be raised against the present amendment.

I think that that has been amply demonstrated in the remarks I have made today and in the portions of these orders in council which I have read into Hansard. But I do want to take this opportunity to thank publicly those representatives of the ethnic press and the ethnic groups who got in touch with the Prime Minister, with myself and with other members of the government, and whose representations were responsible for the investigation which the Prime Minister indicated in his remarks in the house on April 7. I would just like to say that their thoughtfulness and co-operation is greatly appreciated, and I hope as time goes on we shall continue to have their help in matters affecting this department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I did promise the hon. member an opportunity to make a correction, if the hon. member felt one was necessary, to correct something which had been said by the hon. minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do feel there is one correction, and only one, which is necessary, but perhaps the hon. lady would permit me to say that I am very pleased she has taken my advice and rescinded the order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady said, according to the copy of the press release I have which she gave to the press before she started to speak, that there were many of these countries specified in section 20, subsection (c) of the regulation of May 24, 1956, in which there were no facilities. Now, in a very limited, narrow, restricted sense that statement is perhaps not exactly incorrect. There are no immigration officers in those countries, but we are represented either by representatives of the Department of External Affairs or, where there are no Canadian missions, by the British consulates. I would like to express my appreciation of the help they gave me when I was minister—and I am sure they are still giving this help today—and the hon. lady is quite wrong in saying that there were not facilities commensurate with the very small number of applications which there were from those countries.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think possibly I need only cite Israel and what has happened there to show the difference between a country in which we do have complete facilities and one in which we do not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the hon. lady—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady has made an even grosser mistake, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This process of correction cannot be carried on to a debate. I think I should terminate it here.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, before I go on with the few remarks I should like to make about the budget, I want to point out that this house made a fine gesture last night when allowing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to leave the sitting before the end. Indeed we were thus afforded another opportunity to witness the minister's ability to answer the interesting questions tossed to him by distinguished members of the press gallery, and particularly to parry any question that proved embarrassing. On the whole, sir, he gave, as we say back home, a fine display of fancy skating.

When, on Thursday evening April 9 I listened to his review of the economic situation and heard him announce a tax boost and a third consecutive deficit, I couldn't help thinking what a disappointment it would be to Canadians in general, and particularly to those who, temporarily attracted by glittering promises, had put their trust in the Conservatives. Then too, and this is characteristic of the Minister of Finance whenever he finds it hard to introduce or to defend a case which, in his heart of hearts he knows to be wrong, he waves his arms, bangs on his desk and shouts at the top of his voice. I am making this remark in the hope that, if he takes it in good part, he will profit by it and, in future, will not let his opponents see through his game; this might help him defend his case with greater conviction, and without impairing his health considering that, as he said a while back, he has to work sixteen or eighteen hours a day.

I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, that people have been sadly diisappointed. I do not wonder, because throughout the 19 years that I have been sitting in this house, our friends now occupying the government benches and their friends regularly and solemnly promised on the hustings that, if they were elected, they would put a stop to waste and extravagance, that they would decrease taxation and extend social security, while introducing a balanced budget. Well, as in 1930, people unfortunately were taken in by those glittering Conservative promises. During the October 1957 session, taxes did come down, but only by a third of the amount promised by the Conservative party. They were increased—and the minister shakes his head in denial, but if he cares to go over the figures, he will see what was being promised at the time, when it was stated that the Liberal government of the day was overtaxing the people of Canada by 500 million dollars which, therefore, added up to $120 per family.

Now, the tax reductions in December 1957 meant only $47 or $48. That is why we are right in saying today that taxes at the time were reduced by only one third. Old age pensions, pensions for the blind and pensions for disabled persons were increased, but family allowances were not, even if Conservative speakers, particularly in the province of Quebec, and I think that nobody can deny it—

Some hon. Members: Yes, yes.

Mr. Bourget: —were out-promising one another.

Well, it was a fine thing at the time, Mr. Speaker; it was the honeymoon. The members sitting on the government side, as well as their friends, waxed vocal, proclaiming all over the place, especially during the 1958 election, that the Conservatives had done more in seven months than the Liberals in 22 years. They had finally found, they said—

Some hon. Members: And they had!

Mr. Bourget: They had? Let me finish my speech and you will see that they had not.

Their contention was that they had found the magic formula that would solve all problems, minimize all troubles. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the picture today is quite different. The people now realize they were misled and that the honeymoon is over. It took the government only a year, to the day, that is from March 31, 1958 to April 9, 1959 to prove that it had misled the people.

In fact, in his budget speech of the 9th instant, the hon. Minister of Finance shattered the fine dream and, to quote his own words,—he must remember them,—it was an icy and depressing wind that he caused to blow on the taxpayers this year. To the tax cuts he had granted in 1958, amounting to about $204 million, he now substituted new higher taxes whereby the government was going to take away from the taxpayers $245 million for this fiscal year and $352 million for a whole year. Moreover, according to the minister's forecasts, despite this tax boost, the deficit he anticipates for the end of the fiscal year will reach $393 million, which will mean another record-breaking deficit after the $617 million deficit we had last year.

Mr. Speaker, in his budget speech of April 9, the Minister of Finance made the following statement, and I quote from page 2415 of Hansard:

> I have already referred to the important results achieved by the government in providing increased security, including old age security and hospital insurance. These programs have been well received. They cost money and must be paid for. We have also, as I have previously indicated, spent large sums to meet the problem of unemployment.
> As far as I can judge our Canadian public has been well informed about the underlying facts of the situation. Evidently most people have been expecting some tax increases this year. Many may be not unpleasantly surprised that the increases I shall be proposing are as moderate as they are.

Well, sir, everybody agrees with him that those programs cost a lot of money and have to be paid for.

But what the people won't accept and what I for one do not admit, is to have him say that the underlying causes of the situation had been explained to the Canadian public. The Minister of Finance never talked along those lines during the last electoral campaign. Neither did the present Prime Minister when, in a broadcast from Vancouver on May 24 1957, he said:

> The Liberals tell you it is not possible to lower taxes and raise pensions at the same time. Give us a chance—we'll show you.

Well Mr. Speaker, the government was given that chance but we realize today that this chance served only to prove the claims of the Liberals. After a single year in office, the government takes more from the taxpayers than it gave them.

Under this budget taxes are to be increased in the following manner: first, the contributions to the old age security fund will be increased by changing the present 2-2-2 formula to 3-3-3. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that that is a 50 per cent increase which will be paid by the commercial corporations and the individuals, regardless of their income. That increase will add $196 million to the old age security fund and you will remember that in 1957 the increases in the old age security did not cost $196 million, but some $100 million.

In the second place, there will be a 2 per cent personal income tax increase for those with a $3,000 taxable income, which, in the estimation of the Minister of Finance, will produce $54 million a year.

In the third place, the income tax rate for corporations with an income over $25,000 will be boosted from 45 per cent to 47 per cent, which will bring in $56 million.

In the fourth place, the excise tax increase on cigarettes, spirits and other items will amount to $46 million.

All those new taxes, Mr. Speaker, represent a total increase of $352 million for a full year.

In some quarters, it has been indicated that the new taxes will not affect people of small or modest income. I would be only too happy if this were the case, Mr. Speaker, but when you analyse table 8, supplied by the Minister of Finance on the evening of his budget speech, as recorded on page 2425 of Hansard for April 9, you find that such a statement is entirely untrue. Indeed, revenue forecasts after tax changes reach the figure of $352 million. Of this amount, over $214 million will be paid by all private taxpayers, whatever their income, because $75 million will be levied on the basis of the 3-3-3 formula for the old age security fund, while $93 million will be provided by the increase in the sales tax and $46 million by the increase in the excise tax on cigars, cigarettes and spirits.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that 60 per cent of the total tax increase will be shouldered by the general public, with the lower income class paying like everyone else. Moreover, it is known that in practice—as the Minister of Finance will recall if he refers to the speech he made in April 1954, in which he mentioned invisible taxes, or hidden taxes as they are called—such taxes are always higher than the budget indicates. Let us take cigarettes as an example. We find today, Mr. Speaker, that the tax increase on a package of cigarettes is not 2 cents, but in fact 3 cents. In my view, this shows that citizens in the low income brackets are spared no more than other classes of society.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention certain examples the Minister of Finance gave us in order to give the people an idea of the increase or the reduction in taxes—mostly an increase—which could be expected, I quote from page 2417 of Hansard for April 9:

> For purposes of comparison, let us consider the position of a typical married man who is the father of two children of family allowance age. At an income level of $3,000 a year, under the new rates this man will pay a total of income tax and social security contribution of $56, an increase of $4 from the 1958 level. He will, however, be paying $34 less—

And I wish to stress this part of his remarks, Mr. Speaker.

> He will, however, be paying $34 less than he paid before the reductions were introduced in 1957.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Minister of Finance wanted the people to believe that, as a result of the new tax increases, the taxpayers would pay even less taxes in 1959 than they used to pay under the Liberal administration in 1957. However, in saying that the Canadians, even after the tax increase, would pay $34 less, he forgot to add other taxes—

Mr. Asselin: Which ones?

Mr. Bourget: Which ones? Here they are: the excise tax, the tax on cigarettes—

Mr. Asselin: Luxury.

Mr. Bourget: Luxury taxes! When you spoke of taxes during the 1957 and 1958 election, you did not talk about luxury taxes and yet, you boasted about abolishing taxes without mentioning any increase. That is what you were talking about.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be disturbed by the interruptions of my good friend from Charlevoix. Nevertheless, I would like to show that as a result of the tax increases, taxpayers will pay more taxes in 1959 than in 1957, and I explain. We must not forget to add here the increase in the tax on cigarettes, and I want to be conservative—not for long, however—

Mr. Denis: Shame!

Mr. Bourget: —and say that from now on, if a man buys a package of cigarettes every day, he will pay 4 cents more a day, or close to $15 in a year.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bourget: If the hon. member would let me—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The government has not increased the price of cigarettes by 4 cents a package. The companies have taken advantage of the tax increase to raise the price by 4 cents, and the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) should be more accurate in his statements.

Mr. Habel: Why don't you say something about Mr. Duplessis' tax?

Mr. Pigeon: We are not concerned here with provincial politics.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the brilliant member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) I would ask him to read over what I have quoted a moment ago, to read over the speech made by the Minister of Finance who, when he was in the opposition, spoke of hidden taxes. Just read over what he said, as recorded in the 1954 Hansard.

An hon. Member: He cannot do that, since he is spending his time preparing speeches.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The former government levied taxes to subsidize the public, to please the Americans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, there are too many members speaking at the same time at present. I believe it would be preferable for hon. members to speak just one at a time. An hon. member has risen on a point of order and I would ask the house to allow him to repeat what he said. It rests with the Speaker to determine if the point of order is justified or not. For the time being, I suggest that the hon. members allow the hon. member for Levis to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. Bourget: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to prove that we Canadians are going to pay more taxes in 1959 than in 1957.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Levis. In fact, I allowed him to speak and he was quite justified in proceeding with his observations. But, so that we may proceed in an orderly fashion. I think that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had already risen on a point of order. Therefore, it would perhaps be better to allow the hon. member to state his point of order before permitting the hon. member for Levis to proceed with his remarks. This is strictly a matter of procedure.

Mr. Pigeon: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Levis did not quote the exact figures.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Levis said that, because of the higher government tax, cigarettes had gone up 4 cents a package. I submit it is due mostly to the rash ambition of certain companies. In my opinion, he should have mentioned that. The responsibility for such an increase does not lie at the door of the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Again I point out to the hon. members that there are too many speakers in this house. In my opinion, the point of order raised by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is rather a matter of disagreement and, therefore, the hon. member for Levis has the floor.

Mr. Bourget: In my opinion, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is a little bit mixed up. I can understand his position, he is a bit jittery, since the parliamentary secretaries have not been appointed yet. At any rate, I shall go on with my remarks.

If we assume, Mr. Speaker, as I said, that a man smokes a package of cigarettes a day, he would be paying $15 a year in additional taxes.

As far as alcoholic beverages are concerned, well, I would not like to take the case of someone who overindulges, but rather the case of a man who buys two 25 ounce bottles a month. In his case, it would mean 50 cents a month, or $6 a year.

Now, the sales tax is supposed to bring in this year $93 million, which means, according to the instance I chose, an average of $18 per year. If we add up all those taxes that the minister forgot to mention in the example he gave, we realize that instead of paying $34 less in 1959, we are going to pay $5 more. In this case, the taxpayer has an annual income of $3,000.

Let us take now the other example, example No. 4. Here the taxpayer has an income of $7,500 a year and he said he would have $2 less to pay than in 1957. Well let us add, in this case too, $15 for cigarettes, $12 more for liquor, which is not excessive, since one who earns $7,500 a year can certainly afford two more bottles a month. There is also the sales tax; this taxpayer would naturally buy a lot more than the one with the $3,000 income. Let us add then a sum of $30 to be paid in 1959. Thus, owing to this increase, the taxpayer will be paying $55 more in 1959 than he had to pay in 1957.

According to Hansard of April 9, page 2415, the Minister of Finance says that our tax policy for 1959-1960 will be based on two principles and I quote:

> (a) To provide a broadly based source of revenues to meet the new and additional forms of universally available social welfare benefits and
> (b) To reduce the budgetary gap in a degree that will not interfere with the desired rate of recovery, but will hold out a prospect of a balanced budget at the appropriate time.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I might call the minister's attention to the fact that his principles are as unstable and varying as the weather; they change according to time, place and circumstance.

He probably remembers that, during the election, he was not speaking the same language. He and his friends, throughout the country, in the province of Quebec, as everywhere else, promised to improve social security legislation without a tax increase. They were very definite on that point, because they knew they would not get so many votes if they told honestly and frankly to the people that if they wanted increases in social security, they would then have to pay more. That is what everybody realizes following the budget introduced in April.

I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, that during the last election, the Conservatives based their publicity on the following slogan, which was reproduced in a small newspaper in my constituency in a headline which read as follows: "Let us vote Conservative for a happier Canada with lower taxes for Canadians." Well, we find now that Canada is less happy and that Canadians face heavier taxes. Canadians realize that because of the poor administration we have had since June 1957, a tax increase was necessary, but they will not forgive the government for having deceived them during the last election. As I said a few moments ago, the hon. minister stated in his speech that the increase in social security benefits had been welcome, but that we now had to pay for it. People will generally admit, I think, particularly since the last budget, that we must logically pay for what we get. But I want to point out to the minister, and more particularly to my honourable colleagues in the Quebec Conservative party, that in this year's estimates there is an amount of $160 million for hospital insurance a large proportion of which will have to be paid for by Quebec taxpayers, while not a single one of them will benefit from it.

In fact, you no doubt heard, Mr. Speaker, that, not very long ago, our premier in Quebec stated flatly that he could not agree to participate in that program. In that case it might be a good thing to ask the honourable federal ministers from the province of Quebec to arrange a meeting with the head of the Union Nationale, i.e. the premier of our province, and ask him whether he would not change his mind so that Quebec people might benefit from this legislation when they need it. Mr. Speaker, as a member of this house, you probably have had people come to you, as they do to me, who cannot pay their hospital bills. Unfortunately, in my case I have to tell them: "Well, you know that in the province of Quebec hospital bills are paid only during election time."

In the course of his remarks, the hon. minister said the following words, as reported on page 2416 of Hansard of April 9. I quote:

> The measures which I propose are designed to safeguard the credit of the country—

Mr. Speaker, a lot could be said on the subject, because I think I am right in stating that the credit of our country has never been as unsteady as it is today. As I said on television on the night of the budget speech, because of his financial irresponsibility, the present Conservative administration has broken an impressive number of records that it would be advisable to have printed in Hansard. In fact, government expenditures have reached their highest level since Confederation. The deficit is the second highest in peacetime after last year's. It is the third consecutive deficit of the present Conservative administration. We now have the highest interest rate ever recorded in Canada. Unemployment is at its highest level since statistics were compiled. It is also, I must point out, the first time taxes have been raised in peacetime since the days of another Conservative government, that of Mr. Bennett.

With regard to Canada's credit position, allow me to quote the following article which appeared in the financial page of Le Devoir on April 20, 1959:

> Canada's rising interest rates make borrowing an expensive proposition.

Then we find:

> Investors reluctant.

I have been told, Mr. Speaker, that the word "investisseur" is not very good French, so I shall use the French word "acheteurs" instead. I quote:

> Is Canada ready for an increase in its money supply?
> The Bank of Canada discount rate has been rising for five consecutive weeks, reaching a record peak of 4.86 per cent last week, or four times the rate of 1.12 per cent recorded nine months ago. It was 4.67 per cent last week.
> This means that the government has to pay more to borrow money, a factor which increases the interest on the national debt. The cost of money has generally risen to such a point that a large proportion of the people and of Canada's business community now have to shoulder the heavier cost of servicing the national debt.
> The budget brought down last week by the Finance Minister Fleming, which involves heavier taxes, apparently has hardly led people to invest more money into government bonds.
> The prices of bonds, which registered a drop last year, show no evidence of recovery. An investment broker has indicated that investors feel sure the government, despite its intention to reduce the deficit for 1959-60, will need considerable funds to finance its operations this year.

Well, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Finance, with the new measures he has proposed, will be more successful.

I see that my time is running out; I will then refrain from making certain remarks that I would have liked to make on that matter.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer briefly to the financial position of our municipalities. Hon. members no doubt remember that, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in particular, showed fatherly compassion over the fate of municipalities. May I quote from Le Droit of February 25, 1958:

> Mr. Diefenbaker said that the government realizes the difficult financial position in which the municipalities of this country find themselves. "We will see—

And these words are between quotation marks.

> "We will see that they are granted a reasonable share of taxes, said the Prime Minister, so that they can meet the new needs created by their rapid growth." According to Mr. Diefenbaker, this sharing will be carefully discussed between the governments concerned. The federal government is prepared to adopt a program of assistance to municipalities based on that study and on the recommendations of the provincial governments.

That statement, sir was made during the March 1958 election campaign. It was a nice promise to make during an election campaign. But, actually, what has happened since then?

Are municipalities better off financially? Has the Conservative government increased the incomes of the municipalities across the country? I have no hesitation in saying no, because the financial situation of our municipalities today is perhaps worse than it was under the Conservative regime of Mr. Bennett in 1930.

Last October the executive of the federation of mayors and municipalities met with the Prime Minister here in Ottawa, and explained their predicament. The Prime Minister merely said: "We cannot do anything".

Such was the help given to municipalities. It will perhaps be argued that an attempt was made to do something when, in October, $15 million were voted for unemployment work projects. But, the federal government, far from helping the municipalities, was laying on their shoulders the heavy burden of expenses required to implement those projects. This has been proven. I myself have referred in this house to the case of the city of Quebec which had to pay over 100 per cent of the cost of those projects. I hope we will not be given as an example this $15 million voted to the municipalities in order to relieve unemployment.

It will be said, in any case, that the Conservative government helped the municipalities. Far from it! They have been thrown into deeper debts, to solve a problem which, according to what our friends said when they were in the opposition comes under the federal government.

What has been done about it? Municipalities were given the difficult task of solving the problem and, ran deeper into debt. That was the assistance given to municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that, as far as the financial situation of our country, and more particularly its credit, are concerned, the discount rate of the Bank of Canada, which can be considered as a yardstick, has increased sharply since last year. In fact, from 1.12 per cent on July 31, 1958, it now stands at 4.86 per cent, while it is only 3.07 per cent in the United States.

It is therefore reasonable to conclude that, far from improving under the Conservative administration, the financial position of our municipalities is getting worse from day to day. Besides, I am not the only one to note this state of affairs, because I had the opportunity recently to read an article entitled "Financing Handicapped" in the Winnipeg Free Press. I quote:

(Text):

The criticism has attracted attention here for two reasons. In the first place, Mr. Gardiner has no party axe to grind. He is a prominent Ontario Conservative considered to be very close to Premier Leslie Frost.

(Translation):

I shall only quote the final paragraph of the article, where Mr. Gardiner refers to the present position of the greater Toronto council, and to the position of Canadian municipalities in general. This is what he said:

(Text):

But Toronto Metro is experiencing great difficulties in financing municipal projects. Federal policy, says Mr. Gardiner, has had the effect of increasing interest rates on financing while, at the same time, reducing the amount of money available for borrowing purposes. In 1954 Metro was able to borrow at 3.5 per cent. In March of this year the rate was 5.4 per cent.

(Translation):

There, sir, is further evidence of the plight of Canadian municipalities who would borrow to carry out their projects.

Mr. Speaker, I have to hasten, because my time is almost up, and I would be grateful if you allow me a few more minutes.

It has been said that the Minister of Finance has shown a lot of courage—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him that his time is up. I even allowed him two additional minutes.

Mr. Noel Dorion (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to offer my humble congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). His task is both thankless and complex. In a country as varied and as diversified as ours, where finance is conditioned by a great number of factors on which the governing authorities are far from having complete control, where trade, agriculture and industry depend not only on the domestic market but also and mostly on the international market, it is not easy to hold the strings of the nation's purse. Consequently it was often and rightly said that the budget is the expression, if not the most truthful and the most accurate, at least the most tangible and the most palpable expression of the conditions prevailing in a country.

Indeed, you can trace back in the budget, through financial results everyone can see, the mistakes and errors of the past, as well as the justification of the hopes one may entertain for the future. It can be said that there is no legislation, no institution, no event which would not have an impact on the budget, however little importance they may have in the national life.

The opposition members who took part in this debate mostly dealt with the budget as if it were a separate, artificial operation which can be isolated from its context. That may be a smart move bringing a temporary success, but it is above all a move which does not take into account the consistent and inevitable sequence of facts and events preceding it, facts and events for which they are responsible for the most part, since they took place while they themselves were entrusted with the administration of the nation's business.

Instead of the opinion of those so-called economists, who anyway have not been able to present a really positive criticism, I would rather accept the opinion of generally well-qualified and well-informed people who agree that the Minister of Finance acted with wisdom, know-how and ability. Thus, for Mr. Harvey Perry, director of the Canadian tax foundation the budget is:

Just about perfect for this period of adjustment.

Mr. David B. Archer, president of the Ontario federation of labour, said that this budget is:

Prosaic and orthodox.

Mr. John S. Proctor, president of The Imperial Bank of Canada said that this was:

A sensible budget, aiming definitely at reducing the deficit.

And Mr. Allan T. Lambert, general manager of The Bank of Toronto and M. J. R. Wadsworth, general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce said about the same thing.

At this stage, I would like to say a word about an argument which has particularly impressed me and which has not yet received an answer from our opponents. It was expounded very eloquently and in a very informed manner by my excellent friend, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Morissette).

Comparing the economic situation in the United States and that prevailing in Canada under nearly identical conditions, he pointed out that the way we managed our affairs had brought results much more tangible and concrete than in the United States, and at less cost.

What impressed me more in the speech of the Minister of Finance is the fact that 22 per cent of the money coming from the taxpayers will be redistributed to the provinces, that is a sum of $1,212 million out of $5,660 million, which is the estimate of expenditures for 1959-60. In other words, were it not for those payments to the provinces, instead of a deficit of $393 million expected, we would have a surplus of $819 million. Those are figures which give us cause for reflection and which call for a close examination of the fiscal relations between the federal government and the provinces. Of course, out of that amount of $1,212 million, there are certain payments which the government cannot forgo, either because it is bound by the constitution or by amendments thereto, or because it has concurrent jurisdiction with the provinces, or again because it has signed agreements with most provinces for the rental of some of their taxation fields. Such payments account for a total of over $774.3 million.

In a country such as Canada, which differs so markedly from one section to another, and where natural wealth is unequally distributed, efforts must be made to ensure that the national income is spread over the various provinces, without affecting the fiscal freedom of any province, a freedom that is a requisite for the exercise of their constitutional powers. On this score, the $25 million paid to the Atlantic provinces in the form of economic adjustment subsidies, and the funds provided for tax equalization and for the financial stabilization of the less richly endowed provinces, which amount to a total of $166.7 million, are, in my view, justified. The same applies to the $22.5 million paid to municipalities in lieu of property taxes on federal properties.

There are a number of other grants that could be questioned, and indeed are so, with respect to the distribution—as defined in the constitution of 1867,—of the legislative powers as between the provinces and the central government. While some of those grants can take on a legal character on the basis of section 92 paragraph 10, which applies especially to works which are declared by the federal parliament to be to the advantage of two or more provinces or to the general advantage of Canada, there are others, such as grants to university education which, in my opinion, definitely go beyond the constitutional powers of the central government and constitute interference in an essentially provincial field.

Of course I am fully aware that the preamble of section 91 which empowers federal legislators to pass laws for peace, order and good government has developed into a blanket formula most convenient to those who would justify the craving for centralization, which tends to grow within any federal government. In this connection, let me quote an argument in point, namely the opinion stated on page 57 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations, Book I. While considering this construction put on the said preamble, the commissioners remarked, and rightly so:

> The exclusive sphere ensured to the provinces by section 92 might, if the Dominion so desired, become very small indeed.
> ...the bare assertion by the federal parliament of a general or national aspect in the subject matter of the legislation would, of itself, justify the legislation under the "peace, order and good government" clause. That clause would then confer tremendous power on the federal parliament ... The power of the dominion parliament under the "peace, order and good government" clause would become so overwhelming that the federal character of the constitution would be open to grave doubt.
> Indeed, under these conditions, the constitution in its working, would approach the legislative union which some of the fathers desired but which, as they recognized, they could not secure by agreement.

Mr. Speaker, from time to time also, an argument is predicated on the power which rests with the federal government to resort to any taxation system, and the inference is made that it can, on that basis, levy monies even for purposes beyond its field of action. I had the opportunity last year to probe the matter from that particular angle and I do not want to be repetitious. No doubt, the remarks made by the commissioners I just quoted, apply to the same extent, if not to a greater extent, to this argument which is all the more specious for its failure to take into account the function of the tax which, far from being a purpose in itself, is but a means entrusted to the government to carry out the tasks in its own realm. That education, at every level, should come within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces; that, by inference, it should remain with them to look after it and to provide grants to that effect, that is obvious to me. In 1938, when some legislation passed by the Ontario government was referred to the Supreme Court, Hon. Justice Lyman Duff, who was unquestionably one of the most brilliant minds on the Canadian bench, said as follows:

(Text):

> It is well not to forget, in examining the constitutionality of enactments of the character of those before us, that by section 93 (subject to provisions having for their purpose the protection of religious minorities) education is committed exclusively to the responsibility of the legislatures; and that, as regards that subject, the powers of legislatures are not affected by the clause at the end of section 91. We should perhaps also recall that section 93 (as is well known) embodies one of the cardinal terms of the confederation arrangement. Education, I may add, is, as I conceive it, employed in this section in its most comprehensive sense.

(Translation):

For the information of my hon. colleagues opposite, it is interesting to note that the leading figures of the Liberal party around 1920, spoke in a similar vein. One instance will be enough: when taking part in the debate on federal grants to provinces for their technical schools, as found on page 3795 of Hansard, volume IV, for the year 1919, Hon. Ernest Lapointe made an argument in point, as follows:

> The question of education is a very delicate question in this country. Suppose this government does in the matter of national schools what it proposes to do in the matter of technical schools, and grants subsidies to the provinces, provided those moneys shall be spent on the establishment of national schools, would that be fair? Some of the provinces would refuse to accept the money. Would it be fair for this parliament to ask the citizens of those provinces to pay for education in other provinces, when education is a matter of exclusive provincial concern?

Now, Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that those grants to industrial and technical education came in the wake of a report made by the commission of inquiry set up in 1910 by the federal minister of labour with the explicit agreement of every province.

How this doctrine has changed as time went on. To realize it, it is enough to remember the comments made by Hon. Jean Lesage, then member for Montmagny-L'Islet, the day before the Liberal convention in January 1958. He said:

> I am positive that the Liberal party as such is prepared to endorse the principle of free education at every level.

And he went on to say:

> I think that all governments, federal, provincial and even municipal, could all together take steps to achieve this desirable objective.

As compared with grants to industrial and technical grants, grants to university education have a much more questionable background. They date back to the recommendations made by an investigation commission appointed and set up by the federal government alone, without the co-operation of the provinces.

Let us see the language used in the recommendations as found on page 355 of the report:

> We therefore recommend:

(a) That in addition to the help already given for research and other purposes the federal government make annual contributions to support the work of the universities on the basis of the population of each of the provinces of Canada.

(b) that those contributions be made after consultation between the government and the universities in each of the provinces, and that they be distributed to each university in proportion to the number of students registered.

(c) that those contributions be such as to allow universities in Canada to carry on their work according to the nation's needs.

(d) that all institutions that are members of the national conference of Canadian universities may have access to the above-mentioned federal grants.

As will be noted, Mr. Speaker, the members of the commission toned down their recommendations by making a significant reservation: the contributions were to be made only after consultation with the government of each province. Why such reservation, if it did not mean an implicit recognition, in such a serious matter, of the provinces' right to say the last word? Otherwise, what could have been the purpose of a previous consultation? Alas! That advice was to be ignored, pushed aside, and the federal government was to take action, without considering the likely results in a province like Quebec, which for reasons of an ethnical and cultural nature, looks upon its own education as the essential condition for the preservation and survival of a group that the province has the responsibility to defend and protect.

It is true, that, later on, one of the commissioners tried to justify the federal government's unilateral attitude by making a singularly specious distinction between education and culture, a distinction which might well cover every abuse of power. In 1956, in a lecture entitled "The dilemma of contemporary education", delivered before the Canadian Institute for public affairs at Ste. Adele, the French historian Irénée Maron referred in this connection to the meaning and the order of those two words: education and culture. I quote:

The problem of education cannot be separated from that of culture, culture being the purpose of education.

The fact that nine out of ten provinces have accepted those grants does not change the basic principle in any way. But some one is sure to say, by way of objection: "Why did the Conservative government persist and still persists in that course traced by the Liberal party? Why did you not yourselves, last year, voice your opposition?" To that, as far as I am concerned, I reply that, being a federal member, I could not afford to ignore the nine other provinces which had raised no objection in principle and felt no inconvenience of a regional nature in accepting the grants. I could not afford to ignore the fact that the universities and colleges of those provinces had drawn up their budget and their development projects in the light of the precedent of 1952, which has been firmly established ever since. Nor could I afford to ignore that, in those provinces and within those colleges and universities there are fellow compatriots of mine, of the same origin as my own, who have derived and still are deriving from those grants, unquestionable benefits without which their institutions of higher learning would have found it difficult to survive. Nor could I afford to ignore that, among the ten provinces of the confederation, there are some which, unfortunately, are not financially in a position to provide for the maintenance and development of their own institutions of higher learning.

I know that nothing is harder to uproot than a precedent. Let me, in that connection, quote a remark made by the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux when, in 1917, during a debate here in the House of Commons, he recalled this page from the history of England:

The minister states, however—at least, that is what I gathered from his remarks this afternoon —that this income tax is only temporary, that when the war is over it will be either revised or wiped out. Personally, I do not share the optimism of my hon. friend on this point because as a student of history, I remember that when the first income tax was introduced in England by the younger Pitt at the time of the Napoleonic wars, a distinct pledge was given that it was only for the duration of the war, but Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Gladstone, and all the other great chancellors of England had to admit that the thin edge had been introduced into the taxation system of the United Kingdom, and the income tax was there to remain. In spite of the hopes of my hon. friend, bright as he thinks they are, I really believe that the income tax has to-day entered into the politico-economic system of Canada, to stay there for many generations.

Whatever may be the value and strength of the precedent, in a federated country such as ours, the rights and powers conferred by the constitution are not subject to prescription. They never lapse. And this tenet is all the more to the point since the province of Quebec has never failed to abide by section 93 in its entirety. Therefore its position is absolutely unassailable and every effort of this government, in co-operation with the government of Quebec, should aim at finding as soon as possible a way to settle this thorny problem and to make it easier for the province to exercise its powers most freely in this field.

What could be that solution: to change the equalization formula so that it might include amounts meant for university education in the province? Increase the 13 per cent exemption for provinces that would like to collect on their own the amounts needed for that purpose? It is certainly not my responsibility to find a concrete and definite solution; the responsibility is solely that of the authorities concerned. However, those are proposals that could be looked into and discussed in a spirit of fairness and good will in order to insure peace and harmony, those essential conditions to sound national unity.

Soon there will be, Mr. Speaker, a federal-provincial conference of provincial and federal treasurers. In my opinion, it is an excellent way to collect data on the fiscal problem in Canada, to get a detailed knowledge of the various factors and thus, to pave the way to broader discussion. It is indeed, I believe, the first step to a conference between the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers, a conference which would be beneficial and which, we trust, would be the preliminary to a larger and more comprehensive agreement between various authorities which, under our constitution, must participate in their own fields, to the administration of the future of our country.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, that the conference will discuss every aspect of that problem of federal grants to university education. I know there can be no doubt of the right hon. Prime Minister's intention to find a solution in keeping with the spirit of the constitution. Last May, speaking to the Canadian Teachers Federation, whose members had come here to ask the federal government for additional help, he rejected their request in strong and accurate terms which deserve to be quoted:

> The sections of the British North America Act, —said the right hon. Prime Minister—which grant to the provinces the exclusive jurisdiction in the field of education must be kept unchanged. Such constitutional rights are not to be amended.

Then, in the same line of thought, he continued by giving this remarkable advice which all hon. members, of whatever party, may well follow:

> All Canadians must agree on the necessity of respecting the constitution in that field.

Those remarks are sufficiently clear and definite to eliminate any doubt on the intentions of the present chief of the government on that point. As far as his co-operation is concerned, I only have to refer to the following portion of his opening speech at the 1957 conference, which reads:

(Text):

> The purpose of each of us here today is to come together in a spirit of amity to endeavour, while maintaining the spirit of the federal and provincial governments, to discharge their respective constitutional functions. The spirit of confederation requires that provincial governments by their demands upon the federal treasury shall not undermine the strength it requires to sustain its own proper burdens, and that the dominion government shall not take advantage of the legitimate needs of the provinces to undermine the essentially federal nature of our constitution. We are here at this time primarily to listen and to learn. We want to learn about your problems, those problems that bear upon ours. We want to hear your suggestions. We, of course, know something from the public record of the past. We wish to hear directly from you of things "as they now are and as you see them."

(Translation):

Under the circumstances, it was not surprising to read in the January 1958 number of the review Relations, the following observations by the Reverend Father Arès, whom an opposition member quoted the other day:

> For the last fifteen years, fiscal conferences have practically all followed the same pattern: the federal government drew up a plan, called the provinces to Ottawa and submitted this plan to them, saying that, under the circumstances, it was the best for everyone. After some attempts at resistance, the provinces mostly resigned themselves to comply with the wishes of the federal government. Five years later, the same thing happens again.

Later on, the same writer, drawing conclusions from that 1957 conference, added:

> During that meeting, the government thoroughly practised the art of making friends. It was all kindness, prepared to go to any length of generosity, it kept the provinces in the limelight, treating them as equals, urging them to talk freely, to outline their grievances and submit their plans; it listened to them with sympathy, without missing any opportunity of trying to convince them of its goodwill, with the result that the conference went on in an atmosphere of utter cordiality. The first lesson to be drawn from this is that in a federative regime, the democratic methods, more concerned with men than with things, are still those that lead to the best and most lasting results.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker—and I close my remarks with that statement—that, faced with the importance of that problem of federal grants to university teaching; faced with the conflicts of opinions which they arouse in the province of Quebec; faced with the resistance shown by the Quebec government, in order to fully retain the exercise of a right all its own; faced with the deep-seated reasons motivating its attachment to that right, its will to defend and maintain it, I do hope the problem will be on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference; that it will be approached and discussed with frankness and in a spirit of co-operation and, above all, I do hope it will be solved through some agreement, that will take into account the very basis of federalism, which may be summed up in two words: unity in diversity.

Mr. Cardin: May I put a question to the hon. member for Bellechasse?

Mr. Dorion: Surely.

Mr. Cardin: I did not want to interrupt the hon. member during his interesting and significant speech. I believe the hon. member is probably the best qualified person to answer a question that I consider objective and quite important. Does the hon. member think that this government is justified in considering, as indicated by table No. 1 at page 2410 of Hansard, that the collection of direct taxes by the province of Quebec is a federal contribution to the provinces?

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the problem put by my excellent colleague for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) is complicated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dorion: The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) may laugh, but I have heard him say certain things that should have been thought over before they were said. Now, as I am in the habit of thinking before replying, I regret being unable to give an immediate and exact reply to the question asked by my good friend, particularly since I am unable to remember what the budget speech said on this particular point.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) has been reading his speech throughout. Does he have to have a prepared speech in order to answer a question? Perhaps his speech has been written by Mr. Duplessis?

Mr. Johnson: Do not answer that, it is not worth answering.

Mr. Pigeon: We have no Maurice Lamontagne in our party.

(Text):

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I am not going to take up too much of the time of the house and of course you can verify that by looking at the clock. In the few moments at my disposal I should like to comment on a part of the sales and excise tax regulations which were just brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and which I feel discriminates against a group of our citizens, in this case the small retailers or small business men. In saying this, of course, I put myself in the same position because I am a small business man. Surely it was not the intention of the minister to deliberately discriminate against this group but as I understand the implications of the regulations they do just that. I propose to read from the minister's budget speech and then the actual wording of the regulations to which I have reference.

In dealing with this subject in his budget address on April 9 as reported at page 2422 of Hansard the minister said:

> I am proposing some technical amendments which will affect the application of the Excise Tax Act to toilet goods and pharmaceuticals. These amendments will go some way toward implementing one of the recommendations contained in the report of the sales tax committee of 1956.
> Briefly, they will extend the definition of manufacturing to the packaging of toilet preparations and pharmaceuticals except where this is done in a retail store for sale directly to consumers and will also extend the definition of manufacturer to any person who markets private brand toilet preparations and pharmaceuticals except a retailer who sells directly and exclusively to consumers.
> This amendment will apply to both the sales tax and the special 10 per cent excise tax.
> After careful consideration, I am convinced that a serious degree of inequity exists at present in the application of the excise tax to toilet goods and pharmaceuticals. This is why I am proposing these amendments. In some instances, one domestic manufacturer is being treated unfairly in comparison with another, merely because of the way his business is organized. In other important instances products of domestic manufacture are being taxed more stringently than comparable imported products. The amendments I am bringing forward are designed to rectify situations.

The proposed amendment to the Excise Tax Act as recorded at page 2426 of Hansard of April 9 is as follows:

> 4. That the definition of "producer or manufacturer" be extended to include any person who packages toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics or pharmaceuticals for sale except where they are packaged by a retailer in his retail premises for sale therefrom directly to consumers or users.
> 5. That the definition of "manufacturer or producer" be extended to include any person who markets, except by sale at retail directly to consumers or users, toilet articles, preparations, cosmetics or pharmaceuticals manufactured under his own brand.

I shall attempt to analyse the import of these regulations as I understand them and try to show where they work a hardship on small retailers and their customers and thus play into the hands of the large retailers to their benefit. These regulations pertain for the most part to the cosmetic and pharmaceutical field but as I am more closely concerned with pharmaceuticals I shall deal with them more fully.

Let me take a concrete example of what I mean and show how this can take place in two different situations. A retail pharmacist could buy from a manufacturer a quantity of a pharmaceutical preparation for repackaging in his own store and for resale directly to his customers. Let us say this preparation is a vitamin formula. He would pay the sales tax at the manufacturer's level and bottle the pills in quantities of 50 or 100 for resale. According to the act he, being a retailer, would not pay this extra tax as a packager. However, very few drug retailers can afford to buy in the quantity required by the manufacturer and most prefer to buy the same preparation from the wholesale jobber already packaged in much smaller quantities. This is where the catch comes in as I shall attempt to illustrate.

The wholesaler in order to supply his many retail customers buys a larger quantity of the same preparation, bottles it in smaller quantities and then sells it to his retail outlet. The wholesaler would pay the sales tax to the manufacturer in his purchase price but as the packager he is regarded under these regulations as a manufacturer and therefore would be forced to levy a tax at his wholesale level which would be passed on to the small retailer at an increased price, due to the added tax. This, I feel, is a double tax or a tax on a tax which is a disadvantage to the small man.

Let us now take the other side of the picture to illustrate how, under somewhat different circumstances, the extra tax would not be applicable. If some large chain retail organizations with stores from coast to coast, whose names are probably familiar to all hon. members, could through their drug departments buy the same pharmaceutical preparation, repackage it either in their own warehouse or their own retail stores and sell it directly to consumers, they would not be liable to the extra tax. It would be the same organization and would have its own retail stores and therefore would not be liable for the tax which would put the merchandise in its retail outlets at a lower price than that which could be offered by the small business man. This permits them to sell at a lower price because of the lower cost to them. This would allow them to sell at a lower retail price to consumers and thereby create an advantage to the detriment of their smaller competitors.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

If I am correct in my contention I can see that this is a disadvantage to the small business. It is a cause of further concern and adds to the already large fortunes of vast businesses. I contend this is another slap at the small business man who is already faced with enough competition without further advantage being given to the already vast operators.

Even if I am only partly correct in my observations, this to me is an outstanding form of inflation. The increase in sales tax reflects not only on his buying but also on his selling price. Every article he buys now is increased by the tax and he, therefore, must pass this on to get the same profit as previously, and the consumer is the one who pays in the increased cost of merchandise which is reflected in the purchasing power of the dollar.

The hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken) in an appealing speech before the budget was presented, asked for a reduction in taxes on cosmetics particularly in the field of lipsticks. I am afraid this legislation works in the opposite way from what she wanted, as it actually increases the tax on those articles instead of reducing them in price as she had requested. I do not know whether I agree with the hon. member in her remarks with respect to lipsticks but I do agree that her remarks had no effect on the Minister of Finance.

Inflation is an evil everyone is conscious of and is attempting to defeat, but the government is adding to this problem by automatically increasing costs which are at the same time increasing selling prices to the consumer. Any machinery, bottles, cartons, labels, and so forth, bought by the packager are increased by the tax and eventually this increase is passed on all along the line until it reaches the consumer at an increased cost to him. This is adding to inflation which this government says it is trying to control.

Let me deal with another subject for a few minutes. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken before and will continue to speak on the plight of small business. I hold in my hand a clipping from the St. John's News of January 28, 1959. I will read it in toto:

Best Solution: Employment

There is little to be gained by paying any workman unemployment insurance, or any other form of dole, for unemployment relief. The best possible solution for unemployment is employment.

Winter always brings us a peak of unemployment and the federal government annually sponsors a campaign to encourage home owners and industry to improve the employment picture by choosing the winter season for structural repairs and alterations.

In addition to this campaign, the government engages in the time-honoured practice of starting large public works projects at times of greatest unemployment.

Bridges, highways, post offices and other works are necessary and admirable yet their value to the economy often ends with their completion, when the jobs they created are terminated.

There is another way in which jobs could be created and the economy strengthened to increase and maintain employment. With only a modest financial commitment, according to the Canadian retail merchants' association, the government could implement capital expansions, totalling as much as $8 million annually, throughout Canadian communities.

For more than two years, the association and the Canadian wholesale council have been urging the government to sponsor facilities for the loans, through the chartered banks, available to small business concerns, for capital expansion and modernization made necessary by the changing times. A large number of parliamentarians have spoken strongly in favour of such a move and those engaged in the business of Canadian distribution are hoping that this session of parliament will implement the necessary action.

Many small businesses are in difficulties even though they are operated efficiently, Mr. Gilbert says. Times change quickly. Many retailers find their customers are moving away from them into the suburbs, but cannot get the finances to follow. Others face competition from large chain stores and shopping plazas and, though their personalized service may be far better, they must have refrigeration for frozen foods and other modern facilities to match those available in the larger stores if they are to compete.

The difficulty is not that these businesses are unsound or poorly operated, he says, but that store buildings and equipment, good will and demonstrated ability are not acceptable collateral for loans. And without some form of suitable loan facility, an enormous number of small retailers will be forced to vacate the field, leaving the retail trade to a few large corporations.

The retail merchants' association and supporting retail and wholesale trade associations recommend that the government set up loan facilities by guaranteeing 10 per cent of approved long-term loans with a possible limit of $25,000, repayable over five years. There would be no expensive organization to set up, and losses would be negligible —loans would be made through the chartered banks, and bankers in each community would make loans according to their own business judgment.

The idea is not new, for similar assistance already is available for home improvement, national housing, farm improvement, fisheries improvement, and some other activities.

Small business is the backbone of Canadian economy, employing approximately 700,000 persons in 250,000 establishments and accounting for a turnover in dollar sales of more than $14 billions each year. They guarantee the competition on which our economy is based and are essential to smaller communities, where the turnover is not sufficient to attract the larger companies.

Statistics indicate that more than 14,500 retailers and more than 8,000 service stores in Canada need capital assistance. Taking an average of $15,000 with approximately 550 loans a year, an annual amount of $8 million would be involved. Over a five-year period loans would total $20 million, with government involvement at $2 million.

I might add to this statement that the Department of Labour could well include this idea of guaranteed loans in their "Do It Now" program which they advertised during the winter months. So far this has applied only to the renovating or repairing of homes, but, in view of what I have just read, many a storekeeper would take advantage of this loan arrangement and do much remodelling in the winter months, which would further employ this type of labour when the slack season is in evidence. Also, if the Department of National Revenue would approve, these renovations could be allowed accelerated depreciation which would permit the retailer to save a few more tax dollars which he could deduct from his annual return.

In an address in Vancouver on June 10 last, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) had this to say in speaking to the retail merchants' association of Canada:

The federal government is proceeding at once to set up a small business section in government aimed at helping small businesses solve their problems, Justice Minister Fulton said tonight.

He said his department's combines branch is carrying out investigations in two fields: an inquiry into loss-leader selling in cigarettes, electrical appliances and the hardware and jewelry trades, and a study of whether some types of grocery stores receive unfair price preferences from suppliers.

In an address to the retail merchants association of Canada, Mr. Fulton said these steps are being taken to remove artificial obstacles to small business in Canada.

The small business section mentioned by the minister was promised by the Progressive Conservative party in 1957 and 1958 election campaigns, and was announced in the speech from the throne.

Mr. Fulton said the section will study problems of small business, provide a government-business liaison and recommend measures to help small business including the terms of a loan fund.

He urged retail merchants to co-operate in presenting their case, bolstered with plenty of facts. "One of the problems is the insufficiency of accurate information at the moment on which to base policies."

The government wanted to know how a small business should be defined, and whether there should be variations in the definition for various types of business. About half of Canada's entire domestic trade is in the small business field, he said. "A segment of the economy of this size and importance should not be dealt with on the basis of inadequate information or snap decisions."

Mr. Fulton's speech indicated the government is considering possible changes in the law against loss-leader selling and discrimination among businesses in the supply of goods. There have been repeated complaints to the government against loss-leader selling of goods, especially cigarettes, to attract customers, and claims that large retail grocery outlets get preferential price treatment from food suppliers.

Mr. Fulton said the law against loss-leader selling forbids selling goods at unreasonably low prices with the aim of substantially lessening competition or eliminating competitors. But there were difficulties in determining whether a certain price is unreasonably low and what its effect is on competitors. He said he hopes the current investigations will show whether the present law is an effective weapon or whether other remedies must be sought.

"In the latter event, I may say, we have one or two alternatives under study."

He goes as far as to say that a loan fund should be established for this purpose. In the speech from the throne this sort of study and assistance was announced but I am sorry to say that the committee set up has not made any momentous decision to date and cannot be expected to function very efficiently when just $30,000 was allotted to it. I should like to see more action from the government in this direction as the small retailers are appealing for help.

Hon. members will also have noticed that in the report I just read the Minister of Justice mentioned legislation to prevent loss-leader selling, which is very prevalent at present and becoming more so, and he has assured the house that this legislation will come down this session. It is certainly not the intention of his combines branch to allow such haphazard merchandising which in turn is causing unlimited concern to small business. I urge the Minister of Justice to implement this legislation as soon as possible and try to bring about some form of orderly merchandising for the benefit of all concerned. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) outline the legislation he intends to introduce this session, one item of which is amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. I hope these include loss-leader selling and will cure this evil.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it is with great humility that I rise to take part in the debate on the budget, fully aware of the great privilege that has been accorded me by the citizens of Lethbridge constituency, and at this time I wish to put my thanks to them on the record of the house. I am a farmer, Mr. Speaker, and I may say that to be rising to speak in the house for the first time amid such a goodly company is, as I stated before, a wonderful feeling. Suddenly to climb off a tractor as I did last spring and come to Ottawa as a member of parliament was almost unnerving, and now I find my first opportunity to speak. If I may, I should like to take a moment to say how much I have appreciated the help you and other members of the house have given me, particularly the older members, some of whom have gone on before us.

To take advantage of this opportunity I must at this time bring before hon. members some of the hopes and prayers of the people of Lethbridge constituency as well as the rest of Canada. I will be brief, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that in order for hon. members to understand some of the problems I wish to mention I must describe the area to some extent. Lethbridge constituency encompasses Waterton lakes national park, nestling in the southwest corner of the province amid the matchless beauty of the Canadian rockies, adjoining the wonderful Glacier park of Montana and combining to form the international Waterton-Glacier peace park.

We have the Blood Indian reserve with a population of some 2,500 of our first citizens of the highest order and, I might add, also with problems of the first magnitude. The Indians on the Blood reserve are a very fine and proud people, particularly proud of one of their own, Senator James Gladstone. This appointment did a great deal for the Indians of Canada, giving them a renewed interest in the government of Canada and a new zeal to become more useful, better informed and respected members of the Canadian family.

The Indians of the Blood reserve have many problems, as I mentioned before, and I should like to take a moment to point out some of the troubles of this band. With these people, as with most of us, the chief social interest, of course, is the education of their young people and the need of increased facilities for improvement and refinement in the manner in which this is carried out. In my maiden speech in the House of Commons I should like to point out something that is now and has been for some time of great concern to our friends on the reservations in Canada, namely that educational standards are almost completely and entirely those of the white man, neglecting to consider the fact that these people on the reservations have a certain culture and way of life that is very important to them to retain, and for us to aid them to do so would be most welcome.

We also have the greatest concentration of Hutterian Brethren, commonly known as Hutterites, in the province and probably in Canada. It is one of the few groups in Canada with special privileges allowed by a written contract with the Dominion of Canada. Some hon. members may wonder why I make mention of the Hutterian Brethren in my area. I do so simply because these Hutterite communities have become a problem in Alberta and I wish to mention the problem here and call the attention of the house to the matter. Twelve years ago, some of you will recall, the province of Alberta enacted legislation making it mandatory that a new colony must be set up no closer than 40 miles from another colony and, furthermore, may not have more than an established number of acres in certain areas. This was necessary to preserve certain small communities in southern Alberta, and needless to say there has been much resistance from some sources, the sect itself in particular.

If hon. members will visualize for a moment a map of Alberta showing a large concentration of colonies in the southwestern portion, which was the case only a few years ago and, incidentally, the land was undoubtedly the best land in Alberta and probably in Canada, and then look again at the map of today showing the same concentration plus the added colonies that saturate the provincial map at the 40-mile intervals, you can see what the map would look like in our area if the 40-mile restriction had not been put in effect. You can very well see that our small communities just would not be there. There would not be room.

You may ask, "Why, is anything wrong with that?" This is a free country and there are many objections to regulation of minority groups. But I must say, as I have on many occasions, that this is necessary to preserve our small communities and some of our best land for ourselves. We cannot meet the competition that the colonies give for several reasons, some of which I wish to mention at this time.

The Hutterites enjoy almost if not complete freedom from income tax because of their many exemptions and, believe me, they love and cultivate their exemptions. They contribute no time, and almost no financial aid to community enterprises such as the Elks club, the Lions, Kiwanis, Rotary and many other organizations that devote a great deal of time and energy to improvements within their community. The Hutterites sacrifice almost no time or effort toward educating their young people to take any part in our society in the capacity of teacher, doctor, lawyer, dentist, councillor, M.L.A. or M.P. There is not one of these people sharing these responsibilities of maintaining our Canadian way of life, either outside or inside a colony, for that matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we have to live that sort of life to accumulate enough money to look after our young people and start them on the road in their chosen life work, I shudder to think to what our nation would revert. In the opinion of a great many people, a point it would be well to consider is this: When the Canadian government accepted these people many years ago it was expected, generally speaking, that these people would become Canadians in every sense of the word. However, after 60 years it is apparent they have little intention of doing so. I do not believe, therefore, that a method of zoning, if you like, to allow us to save at least some of the land we love and cherish is out of line.

In my constituency, too, will be found one of the oldest, if not the oldest, irrigation companies in Canada, founded by the early Mormon settlers. Our immense ranches and farms are located in probably one of the richest agricultural areas in Canada. In the heart of this district we have the fair city of Lethbridge, which is well known as the irrigation capital of Canada.

The great sugar beet area of Lethbridge and Medicine Hat constituencies contains three large sugar factories and nearly half a million acres of the finest irrigated land in Canada. These two constituencies, I might add, are the only two constituencies in Canada that are primarily interested in irrigated agricultural industry. I will not at this time try to describe the many ramifications of irrigated farming as compared to dry land farming, because I know you will shortly interrupt me, Mr. Speaker. I hope I may have permission to continue discussion of this subject at another time.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, particularly on his maiden speech. I hope he will have an opportunity of concluding his remarks at another time.

It being 5.45 o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to section 6 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the main motion.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Fleming), which was agreed to on the following division:

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being after six o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of this house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is to be for the rest of the week?

Mr. Green: Tomorrow we shall resume consideration of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and then take the estimates of the Department of Transport.

It being 6.05 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

U.S. DEFENCE PRODUCTION CONTRACTS IN CANADA

Question No. 189—Mr. McIlraith:

1. What is the total value of defence production contracts placed by the United States in Canada during the year 1958?

2. What was the nature and value of each contract comprising such total?

Answer by: Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production):

1. The net value of United States prime defence contracts placed in Canada through the Canadian Commercial Corporation and Defence Construction (1951) Limited in 1958 was $68,180,000. This value includes increasing and decreasing amendments to contracts placed prior to 1958 as well as new contracts issued in 1958.

2. A large number of these contracts fall in the classified and restricted categories. Regarding the remainder, it is not the practice to make public the details of such contracts, but the breakdown of the over-all total, by programs, is as follows:

Questions

Aircraft	$26,990,000.
Ammunition and explosives	757,000.
Electronics and communication equipment	12,756,000.
Construction	25,631,000.
Other	2,045,000.
	$68,180,000.

AVRO LIMITED, TORONTO—CONTRACTS AWARDED

Question No. 233—Mr. Rouleau:

1. Have any contracts been awarded to Avro Aircraft Limited, Toronto, Ontario, since August 10, 1953?

2. If so, how many, what is the nature of each contract and what was the amount of each such contract?

Answer by: Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production):

1. Yes. Prior to August 1, 1954, Avro Aircraft Limited was the aircraft division of A. V. Roe (Canada) Limited.

2. The Department of Defence Production awarded 209 contracts having a value of $317,705,442.46 from August 10, 1953, to February 28, 1959. The nature and value of each contract of $10,000 or more are shown in the attached lists.

Formerly Classified Procurement Contracts for $10,000 or more awarded to Avro Aircraft Limited (formerly the Aircraft Division of A. V. Roe Canada Limited) Toronto, Ontario, by the Department of Defence Production from August 10, 1953, to February 28, 1959.

ACCIDENTS, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 297—Mr. Argue:

1. Has there been more than one accident at the same place on construction sites of the St. Lawrence seaway at Beauharnois, Cote Ste. Catherine and St. Lambert, caused by the same or similar hazards, since work started on the seaway?
2. If so, who were the persons involved in each accident?
3. What steps were taken in the interval between each accident to eliminate the hazards involved at the accident location and at other locations where similar hazards existed?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Information regarding contractors' and St. Lawrence seaway authority employees is only available in respect to accidents which resulted in grave or fatal injuries.

The following are the persons who received grave or fatal injuries in accidents caused by the same or similar hazards:

(i) G. Lippe and L. Laflamme fell into openings on the Cote Ste. Catherine lock.

(ii) W. Bedard and Howard Roach were drowned at St. Lambert. F. Belanger and J. Bilodeau were drowned at Cote Ste. Catherine.

(iii) The following persons were crushed by either a truck, tractor or bulldozer while working at St. Lambert: G. Sauvageau, P. Dumaine, R. Decarie, V. Ferracane.

(iv) Armand Leduc and G. Labonte fell from heights of over 75 feet while working at Beauharnois.

3. Remedial action was taken to protect the lock openings at Cote Ste. Catherine, St. Lambert and Beauharnois. The openings were either covered or a form of guards was placed around the openings.

ACCIDENTS, SOUTH SHORE CONSTRUCTION, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 298—Mr. Argue:

1. Have there been any fatal accidents at south shore construction sites of the St. Lawrence Seaway since work started on the seaway?
2. If so, what are the names of the men killed, and the site of the accident?
3. Was an inquest held in any of these cases?
4. If so, (a) in which cases? (b) on what date was each held and where? (c) what were the findings reported at the inquest in each case?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. Yes.

2. W. Bedard, St. Lambert; V. Ferracane, St. Lambert; G. Sauvageau, St. Lambert; R. Decarie, St. Lambert; P. Dumaine, St. Lambert; K. Wallace, St. Lambert; H. Roach, St. Lambert; F. AMBULANCE SERVICE, SOUTH SHORE, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 301—Mr. Argue:

1. Were specific arrangements ever made since the start of work on the St. Lawrence seaway for ambulance service at south shore locations in case of serious accidents?

2. If so, what was the nature of the arrangements, and on what dates were they made?

3. Were ambulance services required at any time since the start of work on the seaway as a result of accidents at the south shore location?

4. If so, (a) what was the date on which each such service was requested? (b) at what specific site was each ambulance required? (c) what was the nature of the accident and the name of the man injured, and the extent of injuries? (d) from what place did the ambulance have to come to reach the site and how many miles? (e) what length of time elapsed between the occurrence of the accident, the time the ambulance was ordered, and the time it actually arrived at the scene of the accident?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:—

1. No.

2. Answered by 1.

3. Yes.

4. Information is only available in respect to accidents which involved authority employees as follows:—

(i) (a) 6th August 1956 (b) St. Lambert (c) fall—T. Parks—fracture of left leg and left elbow and a back injury (d) Montreal—7.5 miles (e) The ambulance arrived at the scene approximately one half hour from the time of the accidents.

(ii) (a) 8th July 1958 (b) St. Lambert (c) explosion — M. Arsenault — second degree burns (d) Montreal South—3 miles (e) The ambulance arrived at the scene approximately one half hour after the accident occurred.

INJURIES AND FATALITIES, ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Question No. 302—Mr. Argue:

1. Have any men employed on construction work on the St. Lawrence seaway been injured or killed by falls into unprotected openings at Beauharnois, Cote Ste. Catherine and St. Lambert since work started on the seaway?

2. If so: (a) what was the name of each man? (b) what position did he hold? (c) at what place did the accident happen and on what date? (d) what was the nature of the hazard which caused the accident? (e) what was the extent of each man's injuries? (f) which men have returned to work? (g) which men are still incapacitated and what medical treatment are they receiving? (h) which men are receiving workmen's compensation, and what is the amount awarded to each? (i) how long will it be before each of these men will be able to resume work?

3. Are any of the men involved in any of these accidents so badly injured that it is expected they will be unable to work again?

4. If so, which of the men are so affected?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport):

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

Questions

1. Yes.

2. (a) Lippe, G. (b) electrician foreman (c) Cote Ste. Catherine lock, October 3, 1958 (d) hatch opening in top lock wall (e) death (f) (g) (h) (i) answered by (e).

(a) Laflamme, L. (b) instrument man (c) Cote Ste. Catherine lock August 18, 1958 (d) hatch opening in top lock wall (e) has not returned to work (g) still incapacitated (h) full salary paid to January 31, 1959. Workman's compensation payments are 75 per cent of salary from that time. (i) Unknown. Not stated by attending physician.

3. No medical opinion available.

4. Answered by 3.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS, 1949-59

Question No. 331—Mr. Denis:

1. How many immigrants entered Canada, and from what countries, during each of the last ten years?

2. How many, by countries, during each of these years?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1 and 2. See table.

Questions

JEAN GABUS

Question No. 347—Mr. Argue:

1. For what purpose was Mr. Jean Gabus employed by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources between March 25, 1958 and March 24, 1959?

2. Has Mr. Gabus yet submitted a final report on his recommendations?

3. If so, on what date was this submitted and to whom was it presented?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

1. See report tabled in response to motion No. 71.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 23, 1959

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION ON ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTHDAY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while roses are usually associated with St. George's day, I rise, I hope with the unanimous consent of the house, to express to the Leader of the Opposition the warmest of felicitations coupled with the hope that health and happiness will be his during the years ahead.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I trust hon. members will allow me to associate myself with the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) in extending to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) not only our congratulations but our best wishes on his birthday. On behalf of the members of this party—and I am sure all hon. members will want to join with me in doing so—I should like to wish him good health and many happy returns of the day. May I also express the hope that the youthful look that always seems to light up his face, will remain with him for a long time to come. I also add the usual wish: Ad multos annos.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we in the C.C.F. are very happy to make the appropriate words of the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Laurier the unanimous expression of our best wishes to the Leader of the Opposition at this time.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am touched and very grateful to the Prime Minister, the leader of the C.C.F. party and my friend and colleague the member for Laurier, for their kind good wishes on this occasion. It is another evidence, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that personal friendships transcend party differences in this house. I am conscious of the fact—if I were not the Prime Minister reminded me—that this is also St. George's day, and I am also aware of the fact that St. George in his time killed the dragon.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, these anniversaries have their gloomy significance. This one reminds me that I am now only three years away from the normal date of retirement on pension. If I were inclined, however, to get too gloomy over this reminiscence I am encouraged by the fact that the Prime Minister is even closer to that date.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—STATEMENT ON PRICE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the price stabilization program for dairy products for the coming year.

A relatively small surplus in the production of milk in Canada has been going chiefly into the manufacture of skim milk powder. The result has been that a very considerable amount has accumulated in the hands of the stabilization board. During the last calendar year, 1958, production of this product totalled approximately 187 million pounds, of which 103.3 million pounds was surplus to domestic requirements and purchased by the stabilization board. Present board holdings approximate 62 million pounds. The useful life of skim milk powder is limited; thus it is a product which cannot be stored and held indefinitely.

There have been only two means of disposal open to us during the past year, sale as feed and turning over as gifts to international relief agencies. From time to time we sold as feed our older powder as it became apparent that if we did not do so the powder would soon deteriorate and become unusable. The disposal of surplus dry skim milk powder has created very serious problems, particularly in international trade. We offered 30 million pounds of this powder as gifts to international relief agencies in January of 1958. To date only 18.8 million pounds of this have been taken.

In view of the impossibility of selling any considerable quantities of skim milk powder on foreign markets and of the limited amount which can be disposed of as gifts, it is apparent that our production of skim milk powder must be reduced. The support program for dairy products for the dairy year commencing May 1 has been designed to cut down production of skim milk powder and increase production and consumption of cheese and the production of other dairy products such as casein.

The agriculture stabilization board has been authorized to support dairy products for the 12-month period commencing May 1, 1959, on the following basis:

The support price on butter will continue at 64 cents per pound Canada first grade basis delivery Montreal and Toronto.

The support price on cheese will be 32 cents per pound first grade f.o.b. warehouse in Ontario, 31½ cents per pound delivered Montreal for Quebec cheese. In addition, cheese producers will receive a payment of 25 cents per 100 pounds of milk delivered for the manufacture of cheese on the same basis as other milk delivered for manufacturing purposes. The support price, plus 25 cents per 100 pounds for milk, will provide an effective support price for cheese of 34.8 cents, that is, eight-tenths of a cent higher than the present support price.

The support price on skim milk powder will be reduced from 15 cents per pound to 10 cents per pound for the period May 1 to September 30, after which date the support price for powder will be discontinued. In lieu of the reduction in the support price for powder the stabilization board will make a payment to producers of 25 cents per 100 pounds of milk for all milk delivered for manufacturing purposes, with the exception that no payments will be made to producers who sell a portion of their milk within the fluid milk market. The net result will be to reduce producers' returns by approximately 15 cents per 100 pounds on milk used for manufacturing purposes.

Price support on skim milk powder is being continued for the five-month period to the end of September to provide the dairy industry with a period of readjustment so the diversion of milk now used for the manufacture of powder to the production of cheese, casein and other manufactured dairy products may go forward without serious dislocation in the dairy industry and loss to individual producers.

The total effect of the change in the dairy price support program will be:

1. The farmer who delivers cream for butter only will get the same return as last year.

2. The farmer who delivers milk for cheese-making will receive a small increase in his return.

3. The farmer who delivers milk for manufacturing into products other than cheese will receive a small decrease, about 15 cents per 100 pounds less than in 1958.

4. The farmer who delivers to the fluid milk market and who has been receiving a price in some cases of up to $5 per 100 pounds for this milk, will not be paid any subsidy for the milk which he diverts into manufacturing. Thus the returns to the dairy farmers who have been delivering to different types of markets will be brought closer together than they have been in the past.

5. The Canadian consumer of cheese and dry skim milk will be able to secure these products at reduced prices.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture will have an opportunity, I presume, when his estimates come before the committee very shortly, to amplify this statement; likewise those of us on this side will have an opportunity to make comment in greater detail than I now propose to do. But it is noteworthy that the announcement of the minister today does not fully meet the representations made, for instance, by the Ontario milk producers' co-ordinating board and other farm organizations, such as the dairy farmers of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, who made representations with regard to this matter during the course of the last few months.

At that time these organizations asked for a support price of not less than 64 cents per pound for butter; a support price of 15 cents a pound for spray processed milk powder; a support price for roller processed milk powder of 13 cents per pound, and a floor price of 35 cents per pound for No. 1 cheddar cheese.

To the extent that the government has increased some support prices to meet the request of the milk producers of Ontario, a possible Ontario election undoubtedly has served to supplement the representations made by the dairy farmers.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): The government announcement this afternoon shows that it has no effective method of dealing with surplus agricultural products other than to cut prices. I think the Minister of Agriculture will find out that merely reducing prices for farm products is not going to move the growing surpluses of many agricultural products into the market. There is a disturbing trend in the government's whole policy, and this announcement has further underlined it, to cut prices rather than implement well known election promises to provide support prices based on parity.

We do not feel that this proposal will meet the representations that have been made by the milk producers' association. We feel that the government support prices in general should not be reduced, and that effective steps should be taken to move these products into markets both at home and abroad.

[Later:]

DISTRIBUTION OF STATEMENT ON DAIRY SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement he just made to the house with regard to support prices, does the minister think it proper, or is it possible, for him to have copies of this statement distributed to all members of this house before his estimates come up this afternoon for study?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of Agriculture): I made the statement, Mr. Speaker, and I should have thought hon. members would be able to take down any figures they wanted in connection with it. I certainly have not taken steps to have this reproduced so I could give a statement to every member of the house, particularly as the statement will appear in Hansard. I do not think there is any necessity for this.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question. Does the minister not think, in view of the fact that he will be dealing with his estimates today, and as this is a matter of great importance, that he ought to furnish the members of this house with as many copies as he has available? If not, we will have them run off by the national Liberal federation.

[Later:]

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of previous questions put to him. Do we understand from what the minister said that his estimates are not going through this afternoon?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is rather seeking to enter into a controversy over this subject instead of seeking information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I know, wish to accommodate the opposition just as the previous administration accommodated them. The question raised by the hon. member for Megantic is a legitimate one. I ask the Minister of Agriculture if he will not—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Essex East is dealing with the question of the hon. member for Megantic as a point of order I will hear him on that, but if he wants to ask a question himself it is a different matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I submit with great respect, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member was not looking for an argument when he asked an important question as an hon. member of this house. We are about to have the agricultural estimates before us. The announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture today deals with an important aspect of agricultural policy. Hon. members who did not have any notice of this statement cannot be expected to appreciate all of its implications. We are simply asking the minister if he will not accommodate us by letting us have available copies so that today when these estimates are before us, and not tomorrow, we might be prepared to examine very carefully his statements on price supports as they affect dairy products.

Mr. Speaker: If that is the question I have no objection to it being asked. We have been over the ground before.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I might say that immediately upon the request being made I sent a note to my private secretary asking him to send two copies to the Liberal party and one to the C.C.F. party, if available, or more copies if they could be obtained.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you very much.

[Later:]

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the request a few minutes ago for copies of the statement on dairy products, may I say that I think members of the opposition have six or seven copies now, and here are about 20 more which I will put on the clerk's table.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to thank the minister but the national Liberal federation has already reproduced it.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND OPERATION, APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

INVITATION TO CUBAN PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has invited the Prime Minister of Cuba, Dr. Fidel Castro, to come to Ottawa during his visit to Montreal and Toronto, which according to press reports he is to make next week?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Dr. Castro found it necessary to return to Havana earlier than had been anticipated. His visit to Montreal will therefore be greatly curtailed, and the arrangements for Ottawa and Toronto will be entirely cancelled.

The Prime Minister of Cuba offered to come to Ottawa to meet with me on Sunday, April 26, but unfortunately it was impossible for me to find a mutually convenient time. He was informed yesterday that it was hoped that it would be possible for him to come to Ottawa at some time in the future for a visit in respect of which plans could be made in advance and which would permit a full discussion on matters of interest to Cuba and Canada.

I am informed that Dr. Castro has acknowledged the invitation and that he looks forward to an opportunity to come to Canada at some date in the future.

WEST BERLIN—STATEMENT ON HIGH ALTITUDE FLIGHTS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me the following question:

May I ask the Prime Minister if in view of the fact that Canada as a member of NATO is now sharing responsibility for the defence of West Berlin, Canada was consulted by the United States government before the decision was taken in Washington to use the Berlin air corridor above the ceiling of 10,000 feet?

The first of these flights took place on March 27. The second, on April 4, resulted from the necessity of the aircraft to go higher to avoid bad weather. The third was on April 15. In so far as the first flight was concerned, there was no knowledge by Canada in advance. In so far as the flight on April 15 was concerned, we were advised a few hours in advance.

WATER RESOURCES

CHICAGO DIVERSION—MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND MEMBERS OF U.S. CONGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister be good enough to tell the house whether he received Senator Paul Douglas of Illinois this morning in order to discuss with him the question of the diversion of water from the great lakes basin into the Chicago drainage canal; and would the Prime Minister say, if he met the senator, what was the result of the interview?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Essex West also intended to ask this question. Some few days ago the United States ambassador suggested that it might be possible for me to meet with United States Senator Douglas and Congressman Yates, one a member of the Senate from Illinois and the other a member of the House of Representatives, from the same state. They were here this morning and I met with them, though they were not here in any sense as an official delegation, because the suggestion had been made that the meeting might provide an opportunity for them to place before the government the views which they hold respecting the bill which would provide for an additional diversion of water from lake Michigan at Chicago.

I listened to the expression of their views and we had a very interesting talk together, but I may say without any equivocation that I was unable to offer them any hope that as a result of the expression of their views the known opposition of the government of Canada to the bill would in any way be diminished.

That is clear enough, I think, to make it understandable to all that while I was very happy to meet with these gentlemen, their views did not alter the views expressed in the message to the acting secretary of state of the United States, sent by this government on April 9.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON 1957-58 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Albert Horner (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister now in a position to advise this house when the final payment will be made on the 1957-58 wheat crop?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I find that our members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba are very keenly interested in this problem and continually ask me questions about it. I am pleased to answer this one in the house. I have talked to the Canadian wheat board with regard to this matter and have been advised that the 1957-58 wheat pool account will be closed during the course of the next few weeks, and the house will be advised immediately the pool is closed and of the amount of the final payment.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RUSSIA—INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF LONG RANGE JET BOMBER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the Soviet union have a long range jet bomber known by the code name "Bounder"?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have seen press reports referring to an aircraft supposed to be under development in the U.S.S.R. and going by that code name.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister believe from the most recent intelligence reports that this airplane is actually under manufacture at the present time by the Soviet union?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member is not so naive as to expect me to confirm or deny such a press report from intelligence reports received by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, perhaps a further supplementary question. Does the minister credit the statements of high ranking officers of the United States air force, who say there is such an aircraft and that it is in fact under production at present?

Mr. Pearkes: I have no further comment to make.

REPORTED STATEMENT OF U.S. AIR FORCE GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I direct another question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I have given him. Will the minister comment on an article which appeared in last night's Ottawa Citizen reporting United States air force General Curtis E. LeMay as stating that the U.S.A.F. is clinging to manned bombers and fighters for a common sense reason because, and I quote, "Our ballistic missiles have not yet demonstrated the type of reliability or accuracy which is required to ensure the most effective use of the relatively small yield warheads which they carry"?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the article to which reference was made, which alleged that certain statements were made by the United States air force officer, General Curtis E. LeMay. I do not think it would be at all appropriate for me to make any comment on an alleged statement made outside this country by an officer of a foreign service concerning equipment which is maintained as part of the weapon inventory of that country.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that our defence policy, as announced by the Prime Minister, is now so closely integrated with that of the United States, will the minister get a copy of General LeMay's speech and peruse it before his estimates are brought before the house in order that we may be able to discuss the relative implications of the statement?

Mr. Pearkes: Mr. Speaker, Canada has no bombers, and while I may be shown a copy of the speech, or may be able to obtain a copy, I have no intention of making comments, as I said before, on a speech made by a United States officer regarding equipment of the United States air force.

AVRO ARROW MARK II—REQUEST FOR TEST FLIGHT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister arrange that the Avro Arrow mark II be test-flown in order to allow it, should its tests prove out as anticipated, to capture for Canada the world speed title?

Hon. G. R. Pearkes (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have been so unhelpful to the hon. member today, but the disposition of the Avro Arrows was announced by the Minister of Defence Production yesterday and there are no mark II Avro Arrows in the first five which remain intact. I am afraid I cannot consent to the request.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO TREASURY BILL AND BANK INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it true that the new treasury bill rate is now 4.72 per cent, and that the bank rate has reached another unprecedented record high of close to 5 per cent?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not the precise figure for this week's rates, but I would say that the movement in the rate on treasury bills lately has been attributable directly to the tremendous demands for commercial loans which are being made at this time on the chartered banks, reflecting the very great expansion in the economy of this country which is under way at present.

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING TO INDUCE MORTGAGE LENDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Finance. Has a meeting been held or been called by the Department of Finance or the Bank of Canada calling in the life insurance companies and other financial institutions to urge them—and I hope "urge" is the right word—to buy more government securities and make more mortgage money available?

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such meeting of the insurance companies. My colleague the Minister of Public Works answered a similar question a couple of days ago as it applied to loans for housing purposes under the National Housing Act.

SMALL BUSINESSMEN—INQUIRY RESPECTING PROTESTS AGAINST HIGH INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Toronto. In the light of his statements in this house on March 19, 1957, I should like to ask him whether he has received any protests from small businessmen or anyone else complaining about the high interest rates prevailing in our country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is in the order of the question which was dealt with yesterday, and which was asked of the Minister without Portfolio from Newfoundland. It would seem to me it could be more correctly directed to the Minister of Finance, whose responsibility it is.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): On the point of order, I am sure Your Honour will also have noted that the question, in the terms in which it was asked, was based on a statement alleged to have been made by the Minister without Portfolio in March of 1957. It does seem to me that hon. members opposite are getting pretty far away from the rule of urgency with respect to the asking of questions. I can understand that their memories may go back to 1957, but several changes have taken place since that time.

Mr. Speaker: I have already ruled the question out of order.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

SUGGESTED CONTROL OF SHIPS BY NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the congestion as well as the confusion which is likely to arise with ships entering the seaway because some are under the control of the Montreal harbour and others are under the control of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, is the minister giving consideration to placing the whole of the harbour of Montreal, including the south shore, under the jurisdiction of the national harbours board so that all ships using the seaway will be under the control of one body?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have been in constant touch with the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the harbours board regarding preparation for the opening of navigation on Saturday in the Montreal area. I am glad to assure the hon. member that both the harbours board and the seaway authority are working very closely together, in complete co-operation. We do not believe there is any need for the move the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question was not directed so much to the opening of the seaway which is to take place on Saturday. My question was directed at future operations. I wondered whether the minister was not giving consideration to taking the south shore under the jurisdiction of the harbours board.

Mr. Hees: No, Mr. Speaker, we do not see any need for such a move.

SHIPPING

GREAT LAKES—INQUIRY AS TO PILOTAGE ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if in relation to the seaway opening and the difficulties experienced last year between the seaway authority and the great lakes pilots association in Canada an agreement with the United States has been reached and confirmed in the interim period.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Transport): Although the hon. member did not send me notice of his intention to ask this question, Mr. Speaker, I anticipated that such a question might be asked and I am pleased to give an answer.

It had earlier been my hope that the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act would have been approved by parliament prior to the opening of navigation on the great lakes, and that a full scale system of pilotage in Canadian waters could have been established in accordance with the provisions of the legislation.

However, as soon as it became apparent that the legislation would not be in effect at the beginning of the navigation season, we took emergency steps to try and establish a pilotage system which could at least operate on a voluntary basis, so that pilots would be available to those ships which wished to use them.

We have been carrying out an emergency program of recruiting a number of great lakes pilots as federal employees for this purpose and arranging for a dispatch system, also to operate on a voluntary basis. Our primary objective at this time is to try and have in operation by next week a voluntary scheme of this sort which will take care of pilotage requirements in the most difficult area involved, namely from the beginning of the Welland canal at Port Weller, through that canal to lake Erie and onward, through the Detroit and St. Clair rivers to the beginning of lake Huron.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give any indication as to the relative numbers taken on from the two pilotage groups that have been in conflict, the great lakes and the Port Weller-Sarnia pilots?

Mr. Hees: No, I do not have those figures.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ROYAL VISIT COMMEMORATIVE STAMP—SELECTION OF ARTIST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Did the Postmaster General give consideration to the selection of a Canadian to do the design for the stamp to commemorate Her Majesty's visit to Canada? If so, what prevented such a selection?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there are only a comparatively few portraits of the Queen which have been approved by the palace for publication or use in such a way as on a stamp. The selection was made of the Annigoni portrait, which is the one which appears on the commemorative stamp to be issued in June commemorating Her Majesty's visit, because it was one of the few available, and was then and now considered an extremely fine representation of the Queen.

Mr. Denis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Postmaster General said there were only a few portraits of Her Majesty available for this purpose. How many portraits are required to produce one stamp?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Perhaps it might be well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member sought out my predecessor on this point, because it was under the Liberal administration that this portrait was chosen and the plate prepared.

Mr. Pearson: The portrait was painted only two years ago. You will have to correct that answer tomorrow.

REPENTIGNY, QUE.—STATEMENT ON REPORTED THEFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. A few weeks ago I asked him if a burglar alarm was installed in the post office at Repentigny where a theft occurred, and he told me that he would get the information and give it to the house. As a few weeks have passed I hope he now has the information. Second, I also asked the Postmaster General if he intended to have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquire into the theft. He could not answer at that time, but I suppose he now has an answer to give to the house.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I am sorry for the delay. I brought the answer with me into the house on two or three succeeding days, but I missed the hon. member in his seat and it slipped my mind. The post office, which by the way is not at Repentigny but at Le Gardeur, is a small one with a total revenue over the entire year of perhaps $1,500. It is located in a private building for which the proprietor is responsible, and under these circumstances we do not instal burglar alarms.

I might say that when the robbery took place the people who operate the post office were in the building, came downstairs and disturbed the thieves at their work, which rather proves that a burglar alarm would have served no useful purpose, with the possible exception that it might have saved the husband of the postmistress from being knocked over the head. There were two thieves at work and when he entered the room he was attracted by one of them escaping through a window. He attempted to stop him and was hit over the head by the other. Both men escaped.

Under the circumstances, and in view of the fact that the Quebec provincial police accept responsibility in such cases, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have not been called in.

Mr. Denis: On a question of privilege, the Postmaster General has been good enough to give me an answer but at the same time he insinuated that he tried to reach me in the house and I was not here. May I add that I miss the Postmaster General more often than he misses me.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It may be a matter of privilege but it is a relatively minor one, almost as minor as the question and answer with which we have just been spending time.

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

A.V. ROE COMPANY

REPORTED EMPLOYMENT OF FORMER SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. According to today's Globe and Mail 25 Canadian scientists, all formerly with the A.V. Roe Company in Toronto on the Avro project, have been assigned to the Mercury man in space project at Langley Field, Virginia. My question is, are these scientists proceeding there at any expense to the government of Canada?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I have not seen this article and I will have to check on it. We are keeping a nucleus of engineers and technicians at the Avro plant. Some of this nucleus of technicians are making studies in the United States on different projects, and it might be one or the other; but I will get the information and let the hon. member know.

[Later:]

Mr. O'Hurley: Mr. Speaker, I should like to supplement my reply to the hon. member for Welland. I have been informed that the engineers who are working on the Mercury project are paid 100 per cent by the United States national advanced space agency, and not by Canada.

IMMIGRATION

ITALY—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF SECOND OFFICE TO CLEAR BACKLOG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the regrettably huge backlog of would-be immigrants in Italy, the onus for which the minister yesterday so ably pinned upon the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), is the minister giving any consideration to opening a second office in Italy, perhaps in the south in Naples, in order to clear the backlog?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what steps may be taken to deal with the backlog will be made known to the house when the matter has come to a finality.

TRADE

URANIUM—REPORTED STATEMENT BY U.S. ATOMIC ENERGY OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Following up the question which I asked the Prime Minister on the subject on April 20, has the Minister of Trade and Commerce any comment to make on a speech made by the director of the division of raw materials, United States atomic energy commission, on April 17, shortly after the minister visited Washington, in which Mr. Johnson said that 84 per cent of the uranium which the commission is committed to buy for the period June 30, 1962 to December 31, 1966 will come from United States sources, and that there is no commitment to take up the Canadian options which expire on March 31, 1961?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yes; I would be very glad to answer this question, because in the course of his remarks the other night the Leader of the Opposition got the whole matter twisted around and gave an incorrect impression of what was said on that occasion. In the course of his speech he talked about requirements during that period, and Mr. Johnson who made this speech in the United States was talking about commitments. He indicated in his speech, with a chart which accompanied it, the commitments of the atomic energy commission of the United States with respect to supplies they are getting from United States uranium mines, supplies they are getting from Canadian sources, and supplies they are getting from other countries. All he indicated in that speech was the nature of their commitments running up to 1966. He showed that the firm commitments in so far as Canada was concerned ran to 1962, with a small portion going to 1963. Firm commitments with the United States uranium mines run to 1966. He did not indicate in that speech the requirements that might be needed by the United States authorities in the period 1962 to 1966, but he did show that the commitments to buy from United States sources amount to about one half the present requirements.

He also stated that no commitments had been made to exercise at this time the options which expire on March 31, 1961. There is plenty of opportunity for discussion during the course of this year with regard to those options, and there will be plenty of time to discuss—if the information can be obtained —the requirements for the period 1962 to 1966.

The picture is not as gloomy as the Leader of the Opposition attempted to show in his speech the other night, or as he is perhaps attempting to convey by means of this question. Negotiations will be going on with the authorities in the United States with regard to the entire uranium supply and uranium requirements in the course of the next few years. It is a vital matter to Canada, because our exports of uranium in the course of this year will reach or exceed the figure of $300 million, and we are very much interested in arranging for or having some consideration given to our sources of supply following the time when the present contracts run out.

On the basis of—I think the Leader of the Opposition mentioned this in the course of his speech the other day—the special efforts that were made by Canada in a period when uranium was in very short supply, and on the basis of joint defence, I think Canada will deserve the most serious consideration on the part of the United States authorities with regard to their sources of supply of uranium and when they are discussing their requirements in the future.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope the minister is right in his optimistic conclusion in this matter. Will the minister comment on the other statement I made, which Mr. Johnson made in his speech, that there was no commitment legally or morally—and the "legally or morally" are my words—to exercise these options that expire on March 31, 1961?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned this just a moment ago. These options expire on March 31, 1961. Mr. Johnson said in the course of his speech that at this moment no commitments had been given to take up these options as of March 31, 1961.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

DELEGATION FROM NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADIAN UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Toronto. Did he receive a short time ago a delegation from the national federation of Canadian university students, who submitted a brief on aid to education? If so, what was the result of that meeting?

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Minister without Portfolio): I received the brief, and I am in communication with the students as well. I am still expecting to hear further from them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN RADIO PATENTS LIMITED

INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST AGAINST U.S. ANTI-TRUST SUIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister if he is in a position to answer the question I put to him Monday last namely, if a formal protest had been made by the government of Canada regarding the anti-trust suit involving Canadian radio and television manufacturers?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I took the hon. member's question as notice. I find that on February 4 motion No. 8 was agreed to, that motion calling for the production of all correspondence between the federal government and officials of the United States concerning the action in United States courts in this regard. Included among the papers was note No. 836, dated December 19, 1958, which the Canadian charge d'affaires delivered to the acting secretary of state on that date expressing the Canadian government's concern over the action taken by the United States department of justice. Since that time no other formal protests have been made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the Prime Minister aware that The Netherlands' government has since made a formal protest in so far as infringement of its jurisdiction is concerned?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out the entire situation.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

R.C.M.P. REINFORCEMENTS, NFLD.—PROTESTS OVER FEDERAL ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I wonder whether I could ask the Prime Minister how soon he hopes to be in a position to comply with the order of the house adopted on March 25, four weeks ago, requesting the production of communications protesting the refusal of the government to reinforce the R.C.M.P. in Newfoundland.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I shall certainly have that looked into, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $747,531.

Mr. Argue: I believe I have about five minutes of my time remaining and I want to use that time to comment on the announcement made by the minister this afternoon and also to comment further on the question of deficiency payments on western grain.

The announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon as to the government's policy with regard to dairy products does not meet the requests submitted to the government by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and by the Ontario milk producers board. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in its presentation to the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet on February 24, requested the maintenance on the spray powder support price at 15 cents and an increase from 12 cents to 13 cents in the roller powder support price, to bring it into proper relationship with spray powder. The government has gone completely contrary to this request and has announced today that within a few months the support price on skim milk powder will be removed completely. This announcement almost certainly will be greeted with keen disappointment by the dairy industry all across this country.

This announcement demonstrates that the government has no policy to deal with the tremendous agricultural surpluses that are beginning to pile up in this country. Although the minister has not stated so, I welcome the fact that there will be no reduction in the support price for butter; yet the government seems at a loss to be able to deal with the very large surplus stocks of butter that are on hand. Figures given to me in a return showed that on December 31, 1958, the agricultural stabilization board held over 79 million pounds of butter. The government may, by this policy, as it is endeavouring to do, direct dairy production into channels other than skim milk powder, but in the absence of any over-all agricultural policy to move surpluses it will be transferring one problem in one particular branch of the dairy industry to another branch.

Although the agriculture estimates have been before this committee for five days, we are still waiting for a statement from the government on its position so far as the request of the farm delegation for deficiency payments is concerned. The Minister of Agriculture, speaking on this item the last day it was before the committee, April 10, placed on the record a very long letter he had received from an individual farmer in Saskatchewan. This man, according to the submission quoted by the minister, said he had had an annual net worth gain of approximately $6,700. This man farms a section, and if he had 600 acres cultivated and if he were able to market a 7-bushel quota for wheat, he would be able to market 4,500 bushels, the return from which would total less than $6,000. Obviously, therefore, there is some gross error in the submission this gentleman has made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have waited for the government to place its position on deficiency payments before this committee. We have waited for an announcement by the government as well on the presentation made by the mass delegation. We have not had an announcement from the government as to what its position will be. However, we have had some very disturbing statements in this house and over the radio by members of parliament representing prairie constituencies. The Conservative members representing prairie constituencies have been saying that they are opposed to deficiency payments. They are now holding up their hands.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is not true at all.

Mr. Argue: We are hearing from the Horner brothers now. I hold in my hand a copy of the Western Producer for April 23, containing a very sharp castigation of the hon. member for Jasper-Edson for the ill-conceived and inaccurate speech he made in this chamber some time ago.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And inaccurately reported.

Mr. Argue: Western Canada today is being betrayed by members of parliament of the Conservative party who represent them, in that they are opposed to the legitimate requests that have been made by the mass delegation.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Nasserden: In rising to take part in this debate today I will speak on that most controversial issue, how best to take care of the delicate situation which has been presented to those engaged in the grain growing industry in western Canada during the past several years. In doing so I should like to make a comment on what has been said concerning the conduct of members of this house from western Canada. No one has betrayed the western farmer more than those who during the years, not only this session but in past parliaments for the last 10 or 12 years, have taken stands in parliament that were so far from what the western Canadian farmer wanted that they engendered ill-will from the other parts of this nation.

Now, in approaching this situation I should like to take you back to a statement made by the late Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King toward the end of the last war, to the effect that if the new order that was to emerge was not already well on the way before the cessation of hostilities, we might well look for it in vain. Those words were often repeated by the late Mr. King and by Liberal members in the House of Commons in order to set them above all others in their appreciation of the need for action. These words, spoken by the late revered leader of those who now form the opposition in parliament, are eloquent of the position in which the western Canadian farmer found himself prior to the election of 1957.

The Liberal party not only failed to recognize the increasing spread between costs and returns to farmers in the grain growing area, but they even went so far as to lower the initial price of oats by about 5 cents a bushel at a time when farm costs in western Canada were rising as they had never risen before. They took this action notwithstanding the fact that they had given lip service to a price support program under the old prices support legislation. They were so blind to the problems of the western grain grower that even during the election of 1958 they tried to bribe the grain grower with 10 cents of his own money by promising to raise the initial price of wheat by 10 cents per bushel. Anyone who wants to talk about insults can remember that one.

Last year this government moved to recognize the difficult income position of western grain growers. The provision of the acreage payment plan was not the result of neglect, nor was it the result of an unsympathetic consideration of that problem. Indeed, its very terms gave emphasis to the immediate needs of those to whom this government pledged to provide long term legislation. If I may be permitted to say that the $200 payment was not regarded as sufficient to meet the losses of prairie grain growers, I hope western Canadian grain growers will remember that if the former government had been alive to their needs, as was this government, they would have received something like $1,000 since 1953 when the situation was first actively recognized.

I took the stand last year, and I see no reason to change it now, that the people of my constituency want a policy that will last into the future. They know, as do the members of this house, that if we, as the governing party, were to go back and endeavour to rectify by cash grants or payments all the inequities that have resulted from Liberal shortcomings we would have neither the time nor the money to build the sound national policies that those engaged in agriculture request and need for the future.

Last month a delegation of people from the prairie provinces presented a brief requesting deficiency payments on wheat, oats and barley for the past three crop years. Their spokesmen, and members of that delegation, rejected the acreage payment plan. However, correspondence from my constituency indicates that there are many people who really believe the acreage plan to have been a good one. Most of these people point out, however, that $200 does not equal the losses they feel they have been taking in producing grain.

I attended the annual meeting of the farmers' union in Saskatchewan last fall, and after listening to the deliberations I came away with the conclusion that this organization appreciated the benefits of the acreage payment plan. The efforts of this government to stabilize wheat production in those areas must not be forgotten. The long range plans of the government, including credit legislation, crop insurance, and trade and marketing programs, together with the benefits available under the stabilization act, should all contribute to a speedy transition from a straight grain economy to a more stable, diversified farm program in many parts of the prairies.

To assist in this process I believe the acreage payment plan has proven to be worthy of being continued. There is room for some improvements, gained from the experience of last year. There should be a floor on the amount paid to farmers with very small acreage, and this is a fair request when one considers that there is also a ceiling on the amount which can be received. I would also suggest that a payment based on a farm of average size should raise the maximum payment above the $200 level of last year.

This action alone cannot satisfy the legitimate demands of grain growers who see livestock producers and producers of other commodities protected by the umbrella of the farm price stabilization legislation. Grain growers in the wheat board area are the only Canadian producers excluded from these benefits. They remember the Prime Minister during the election campaign as he went about championing the elimination of the inequities that might exist, or come to exist, as between one segment of the economy and another.

I am one who believes that this government has sought to follow this through in the legislation it has brought before parliament. Indeed, I believe that for the first time in the history of this country western members of parliament were willing and able to support the measures taken during the last session designed to assure Canadian labour and Canadian industry of the Canadian market in so far as it required their production. On that same premise, people in the grain growing areas look for an equal measure of protection in the domestic market with regard to their sales of wheat to Canadian consumers. And while it might be argued that a two price system for wheat sold on the domestic market might be inequitable to the producers of oats and barley, I am satisfied that the grain growers in the Rosthern constituency, the grain growers of Saskatchewan and the grain growers in all western Canada would accept it as an act of good faith on the part of the government.

Then there is the matter of the subsidy on the export of flour, which is presently being absorbed by the Canadian wheat board and deducted from the final returns to producers of wheat. Surely there is no need for argument against a situation such as this continuing. Of course these measures would not have been necessary had wheat, oats and barley been placed under the stabilization legislation in 1957. Those who ask for deficiency payments still want these grains dealt with separately, and on the face of it these producers have every moral right to request these deficiency payments under the stabilization act. I was one of those who questioned their stand in asking that wheat, oats and barley be excluded. However, in the light of experience I am convinced that the government was thus given the leeway necessary to make the consideration of acreage payments possible and to make possible the two price system for wheat consumed in Canada.

When the farm delegation was recently in Ottawa, Jack Wesson, president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, presented the brief outlining the economic problem, and he was followed by a number of people who outlined the social problem in the grain growing areas. It seemed to me that they gave the answer, and what must be the answer of any responsible government.

For the greater part of the last 12 years, the last eight of those years, anyway, grain was the only commodity in Canada which had the benefit of a stable price, namely an initial price and the final price paid through the pool formed under the Canadian wheat board. If we were so bold as to grant the requests put forward in the western brief it would only add fuel to the fires which have threatened community life in the prairies. Indeed, I would not be surprised if the very people who presented this petition and brief should find it necessary to come back in less than 10 years and beg us to solve the problems created by bigger and bigger grain farms. The preservation of the family farm and of the unit of average size is good for the community. A diversified program on such farms deserves encouragement, just as much encouragement as straight grain growing.

This difference of opinion, which I understand is torturing the minds of thinking people on the prairies, is a good thing at this time. For this reason the campaign for signatures, and the coming of the delegation, can be justified. No one need feel embarrassed unless he deserves to feel embarrassed. That goes for those who sponsored this delegation as well as for those of us who serve here in parliament. Each of us has responsibilities to our people, and under our democratic system of government we will be called to account by those who sent us here.

For my part, I am satisfied that we placed before parliament our program pledged to protect the people just as soon as it was humanly and physically possible to interpret those pledges into measures worthy of the people and worthy of our future as a nation. The name of our Minister of Agriculture will go down in the annals of agricultural history because of his achievement in bringing before parliament agricultural stabilization bill No. 237. This is the bill the C.C.F. and the Liberals fear more than anything else this government has done. For the first time agricultural people in all parts of Canada have a common interest that serves to strengthen their understanding of each other's problems. The eyes of every farmer, and of many other people as well, follow the day to day administration of this act of parliament; and I venture the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that the stabilization bill will be recorded as one of those acts which brought Canadians closer to that spirit of unity which has been the cornerstone upon which farm people have built from the very earliest times.

On a number of occasions there has been reference to the delegation of people from western Canada to Ottawa. During the course of these remarks some compliments were paid to Saskatchewan people and Saskatchewan institutions. There was the hon. member who thought the Saskatchewan wheat pool was to blame for the Liberals not having a sound agricultural policy. I have heard some fantastic reasons for their not having an agricultural policy, but I certainly do not think, sir, that the farmers of Saskatchewan deserve such an atrocious charge. Was it not the same Saskatchewan wheat pool that organized the delegation to Ottawa in 1942? If my memory serves me correctly, the prime minister of that day was Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, and the minister of agriculture was none other than Saskatchewan's own Right Hon. James Garfield Gardiner.

That delegation met that most Liberal of Liberal governments. The membership of the Saskatchewan wheat pool is composed of many people, and when the delegation was down here we saw former members of parliament, former members of the legislative assembly, members of all political parties and affiliations, and these people reserve the right, as do other like organizations, to meet the government regardless of the party in power. I recall one hon. member who thought the western farmers would be whipped into a frenzy. I attended the mass meeting at Saskatoon where over 2,000 people tried to crowd into the lobby and ballroom of the hotel Bessborough. I did not see any soap box orators. I did not see any wild gesturing. I did not hear any wild condemnation of this government or its policies. What I did hear was what I considered a well reasoned plea for unity in presenting the income problem of the western grain grower to parliament and the nation.

The platform on that occasion was graced by leaders of various religious denominations. Members of all parties were represented, even the member who formerly sat in this house for Rosthern constituency. His colleagues here in the opposition will be interested to know that he went to the platform with a smile, anticipating the embarrassment that the coming of the delegation and the holding of the meeting would cause the present government and the present member for Rosthern constituency. I need not remind hon. members of the opposition, whose faces were red, that the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool traced the events that led to the sending of a delegation in 1942, and followed that presentation with a recital of the conditions that had existed in the interval since then which had placed grain growing in its greatest hour of challenge. The mayor of Saskatoon presided. The committee in charge invited me to sit on the platform but I declined that invitation, sir, with the assertion that I would remain with those among whom I number myself.

And who were these people who had come many miles on a winter day to hear the leaders of farm unions and wheat pools? Well, someone has said that they were the C.C.F. and the Liberals, and I must confess that there were those who would gladly cut our political throats if and when the opportunity presented itself. But the ones who interested me were those who had come from Rosthern constituency, those who had manned the polls in the March 31 election. They were almost a constituency convention in themselves. I remember seeing many of those who supported the hon. member for The Battlefords, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and last but not least the hon. member for the city of Saskatoon. At Prince Albert on January 10 the situation was much the same. The chairman, Mr. L. A. Boileau, director of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, introduced me from the floor of the meeting; and I am happy to assure you, sir, and to assure the members on the government side of this house that there was a wealth of good will in the applause, not for me personally but for our dynamic leader and for this party as well.

In the earlier debates mention was made of Charlie Gibbings. The Charlie Gibbings I know is the second vice-president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. The Charlie Gibbings I know will some day be president of that organization. There are many who say he should be president at this time. That is a decision which the directors, 16 of them, will make. I imagine they have found it difficult to overlook the experience acquired in the 23 years their present president has served in that capacity. When Charlie Gibbings speaks, he speaks for over 90,000 farm families in the province of Saskatchewan. He speaks for over 1,100 farm committees in the province of Saskatchewan. He speaks for the five to eleven men and women who comprise these committees scattered throughout the settled areas of the province of Saskatchewan.

You may be sure that these people are alive to protect the non-political status of their organization. Any man who took his politics as such into the organization and into the office would not last very long. I make no apology for coming to the defence of the Saskatchewan people and institutions. If, however, I have said today some things that shatter the sensitivity of some of those whom I am proud to call my colleagues, I make this apology for so doing.

I believe, as I am sure the Prime Minister does, as the Minister of Agriculture does, and as the majority of our members do, that the measure of achievement in regard to agricultural policy, as evidenced by actions taken or now in the process of being taken, do not commit our defence of those policies to the level of attacking personalities. Both the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Assiniboia have indicated during the earlier proceedings of this house that the coming of this delegation held out the prospect of political advantage for their parties. Indeed, I got the impression that they hoped that as a result they might indeed save their parties from utter extinction in the agricultural west. The hon. member for Essex East will hate to hear this, but he cannot possibly make political hay out of the coming of this delegation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one is trying to.

Mr. Nasserden: The farm people of western Canada remember all too well how Liberal members of the House of Commons returned to their ridings pleading for patience and asserting that they had to humour their colleagues from other parts of Canada to get even the meagre consideration for which they had fought down through the years.

Nor need the C.C.F. members lift up their heads in anticipation, for it is a known fact that both the C.C.F. and Social Credit candidates of years gone by never failed to appeal except on the basis of a regional cry. The C.C.F. slogan in the last three general elections in grain growing areas was, "Fight for the west." What it was in other parts of Canada I do not know but I am aware that thinking people in Saskatchewan and particularly farm people acknowledged with the dynamic power of their ballots that there was not room for this kind of representation here in the House of Commons.

It is noteworthy that the delegation of western farmers as such came to Ottawa without any banners, placards or other trademarks of irresponsible organization. It remained for the C.C.F. to meet them with these things and to provide them with C.C.F. literature. It was indeed the cheapest type of tactic they could have devised.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Nasserden: As soon as I am finished.

Mr. Argue: Very well.

Mr. Nasserden: It is for these various reasons that I have been deeply disturbed at the outright rejection of the acreage payment plan by both opposition parties and by the delegation in their presentation. In effect they are saying that we should forget the needs of the small farmer and of the average size farmer. They are asking us to ignore the trend toward larger and larger grain farms and the detrimental effects this trend is causing on community life on the prairies. They are asking us to forget our responsibility to those who need help most by virtue of the inequitable share of farm income that they are presently receiving. They are asking us to turn away from a program aimed at the building of a diversified family farm wherever possible to the end that those areas and farmers who of necessity must and can produce wheat on an economic basis will be assured of the free movement of their product to market.

There are a number of other things to which I would like to refer briefly, one of them being the unfairness of the present freight rate structure on rapeseed going into commercial channels. This is an important crop and one that has helped to reduce in a very direct way the acreage seeded to wheat. This matter has been before the responsible officials for some time now and to this date no effective or legitimate excuse has been offered for the discriminatory rate now being charged the producer of rapeseed. The Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport all have an interest in this matter and I urge them to get together and work out a solution that will eliminate the present excessive rate in favour of one comparable to that for flax which is handled in a comparative manner.

I believe there should be some revision concerning assistance under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and there is a need for an upward revision of the grants to farmers for the construction of dugouts and earth dam work undertaken by them under the assistance program established through the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

The Prime Minister and many of those about him are dedicated to national policies not only for agriculture but for other industries and callings in this country. The principle so clearly enunciated by the Prime Minister and his colleagues during the election campaign championed the elimination of those inequities that might exist or that might come to exist between one segment of the economy and another. We who come from Saskatchewan uphold the wisdom of that approach in dealing with the problems of grain growing. Our policies, as I see them, have been designed to help the small farmer lift himself out of a depressed condition and bring himself into that group of average size farmers with better income who are able to show some progress over a period of years. I must say that our policies have been and can be of benefit to the larger operator as well. The larger operator is better able to take care of himself, a fact which is borne out by his income tax return.

In conclusion I would say I would be remiss in my duties as the hon. member for Rosthern were I to forget the people in my constituency whose prayers go with the Prime Minister in his daily task to which they attach such importance. To have been told by people, many of them in humble circumstances, of their intense belief in his sense of mission have certainly added to the privilege of being associated with the right hon. Prime Minister in this parliament.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Rosthern was speaking I interrupted to ask whether I might direct a question to him. At that time he said he would be pleased to answer my question if I would wait till the conclusion of his remarks. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member for Rosthern the following question based on that part of his speech wherein he criticized the welcome that was given to the mass delegation as they arrived at the station in Ottawa. I am wondering if the hon. member is aware of the fact that the mass delegation in meeting the C.C.F. in the railway committee room not only had no criticism of the kind of welcome which we had given them but moved a unanimous vote of thanks to C.C.F. members of parliament for what they described as the tremendous welcome afforded them at the station?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Of course, they were all members of the C.C.F.

Mr. Nasserden: May I answer the hon. gentleman's question?

The Chairman: Order. I must ask the hon. member to resume his seat when the Chairman is standing. This is not actually a question but more in the nature of a statement and must be considered as such by the Chairman. I must also inform the hon. member for Rosthern that his time has expired.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that has been raised I consider it a very proper question. Not only is it proper but I had the permission of the hon. member to ask the question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It was a statement.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: It is a long standing practice of this house that when an hon. member is speaking he may be interrupted by another hon. member to ask if he will yield the floor in order that a question may be put. When hon. members interrupt me I have without exception immediately yielded the floor and dealt with the questions when asked unless of course they were too numerous. The hon. member for Rosthern was very fair. He asked me to wait until he concluded his remarks. I asked him if he were aware of this fact. I believe this is an important question and that he would consider it as such.

Mr. Korchinski: How would he know? He was not at your C.C.F. meeting.

Mr. Grafftey: That is tantamount to asking someone if he has stopped beating his wife.

(Translation):

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this opportunity slip by without saying a few words on the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness). The brief remarks I propose to make concern mainly dairy products.

Mr. Chairman, this morning, while reading Le Devoir, I was somewhat surprised to find a report announcing a probable change in support prices within a few days. I was still more surprised, of course, to hear the Minister of Agriculture announce early today, certain changes in respect of support prices—and I wonder why he chose the 23rd of April to do so.

The minister obviously knew that his estimates would come up today, and for his sake I wish they will not be again taken up tomorrow—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am very much afraid they will be.

Mr. Roberge: —but I have great doubts, as the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) just said, that the minister will be able to get through with them today.

At any rate, I think the minister would have been well advised to wait until his estimates had been considered before making that statement. Hon. members would thus have been able to express their views, not only on support prices, but on other issues connected with his department, because it has been recognized that members of this house must be the spokesmen of the people in their ridings and, in fact, of all Canadians.

Now, it appears that many organizations in this country do not in the least approve this afternoon's statement made by the minister in this house, and I shall, to this effect, refer to the brief submitted on March 18, 1959 by the Ontario Milk Producers Co-ordinating Board. On looking over this brief we find that it does not at all agree with the minister's statement. As a matter of fact, the Ontario producers' brief asked, amongst other things, for a support price, and this is what it said:

(Text):

A support price of 15 cents per pound for spray process powder be retained and that the support price for roller process powder be 13 cents per pound.

[Mr. Argue.]

(Translation):

We now find that the Minister of Agriculture ignored the request of those producers, as he did the remarks made here by hon. members.

I understand the government has announced that the support price for dry spray processed milk is to be reduced from 15 to 10 cents a pound, and that the support price on any roller processed milk will be reduced from 10 to 8 cents a pound. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, time did not allow full consideration of the hon. minister's statement, for the simple reason that he did not send copy of it to the hon. members of this house, as he did to newspapermen.

Also, if I am not mistaken, the hon. minister's statement announces a lower support price on cheese.

The Ontario farmers' council asked that the support prices established last year be extended for at least another year. However, that body was not the only one concerned with hog prices; in fact, when those delegates came to Ottawa, they were also supported by several other associations.

I also remember that when we met with a farmers' delegation in our caucus chamber, Quebec farm representatives were in full agreement with the suggestions made by those of Ontario.

It is noteworthy, Mr. Chairman, that I have received from a single parish in my constituency—and I do not mean to say that others could not have done likewise—a petition signed by 75 farmers urging the government to continue support prices from May 1, 1959 to May 1, 1960, at the same level as those of 1958-1959. Those farmers asked, more specifically, that support prices for milk, hogs, butter and milk powder be maintained at the same level as those of last year.

Why is the government changing its position at this time? I wonder also if that decision is not in line with a speech made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture last September or October to a group of farmers, when he told them that they should reduce their production because they probably would not receive any government help in the way of price support. Besides there might well be a certain connection between the round the world trip undertaken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the support prices that the Minister of Agriculture has announced today.

If I remember rightly, according to press reports dealing with the Prime Minister's journey, he was said to have offered, among other things, to the countries of south-east Asia our surplus of milk powder. Moreover, if I rightly remember those press reports, those countries were not too anxious to accept that milk powder surplus, but preferred the money that the democratic countries were making available to them, to help them organize their own economy and their own industry.

If, last year, there was overproduction of those products, particularly of milk powder, it is probably due to the lack of foresight of the government which let the farmers produce too large a quantity of milk powder in the hope that the countries of south-east Asia would become a good market for that product. But their hopes were frustrated, because those countries of south-east Asia preferred the money offered to them by the democracies. Obviously, we are involved; everybody knows that we, on this side of the house, have always advocated this development of south-east Asia, but not to the extent of increasing production in our country and creating a surplus for our farmers.

Mr. Chairman, I will not extend my remarks because I know that other members wish to deal with this matter, but, nevertheless, I will ask the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider the decision he announced today in the house, in order to enable farmers engaged in dairy production to secure a price equivalent to that obtained by producers in other fields of our national economy.

(Text):

Mr. Rogers: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to refer to the western farm delegation. I must admit that prior to their coming to Ottawa, as a westerner, I was somewhat disturbed at a delegation of this size coming to the government. I can say now that as a westerner it was with a deep sense of pride that I watched this delegation in action and their performance throughout their stay here in Ottawa. I might say too that I was proud of the Prime Minister and the reception he gave the delegation. His sincerity and the pattern he set were followed by all concerned. In essence I would say that the farm delegation made a favourable impression on the government, all members of the house and certainly Canada as a whole.

Let us not have any misunderstanding. The agricultural industry has a problem and a big one. Agriculturists have been sitting right in the middle of the price squeeze watching wages and machinery costs pyramid year by year and they simply are not able to do anything about it. As a matter of fact, it seems to be an established fact that farm prices are the first to go down and the last to go up. So I say there is a problem.

The problem did not just come about two years ago when the government took office. The problem stems back to surpluses and to the time the quota system was initiated. What did this mean? The terminals were filled, the elevators were filled and the producers had to put out money to provide granary space or dump the grain on the ground. What happened? Thousands upon thousands of bushels were sold at fire sale prices ranging from 55 to 85 cents a bushel to feed mills and feeders. Grain was traded for cars and machinery. It stands to reason that if a farmer cannot make out today at present prices he certainly could not make out at those prices.

The point I want to make is that there is a problem, in the business world, using good business sense, vision and forethought, the only time to rectify the situation and solve the problem is before it gets too big. I suggest that the government at that time did nothing about the problem. On the other hand, when the present government took office they did bring in a number of corrective measures which have been referred to here before.

I wish to discuss two corrective measures at this time. The first is interest free advances on stored grain and the second is the stabilization board. Let us look at the first, interest free advances on stored grain. I submit that if the government at that time had had any vision and initiative we would not have the problem we have today because the farmers would have had interest free advances at very little cost to the taxpayers of the country. However, the result was that grain was sold at ridiculously low prices and the effect is being felt today by many farmers whereas with interest free advances they would have had enough money to take care of their operating costs.

As to the second point, I do not think we need say too much about the stabilization board. It has sold itself right across the country. When it was initiated it was not supposed to be perfect although it was made as workable as the government could make it. However, you have to learn by experience and there is one thing I should like to mention today. As a matter of fact I brought it up in a campaign speech. When the government raised the support price on hogs I said at the time I did not think it was a good policy and I still think that is so. It is easy to look back but experience simply shows that if the method the Minister of Agriculture is using today, deficiency payments, had been used instead of raising the support price the situation we now have probably would not have come about. The raising of the support price allowed the big feeders to get into the business. After all, the big feeder who feeds 3,000 hogs and makes $5 each is getting a lot of money. On the other hand, the ordinary farmer who is feeding 100 hogs only makes $500.

I come back to the point I have tried to make, that if the government then in power had had the vision to tackle the problem and establish interest free advances on stored grain I doubt if we would have had these big feeders in operation. I doubt that we would have had to do away with support prices and establish deficiency payments on hogs. It is quite easy, Mr. Chairman, to look back. The question arises, how are we going to solve this problem. When we look into the future and consider the potential of the communist countries our export picture is not too bright. Every Canadian has been taught to believe that exports are the lifeblood of our country. I do not think there are too many who would quarrel with that concept up to the present time but I submit we have got to look a bit further than that. In my opinion our most important market is our home market.

That brings up the matter of getting more people into this country. Having regard to our export situation in the years to come, I think it is most important that we take a very serious look at the immigration situation. We have to build up our home market. With the unemployment situation as it is today there are people who will say that to do so would simply create more unemployment. I doubt that very much. I have had a lot of experience with new people coming into the country because I have helped to establish quite a number of them. These people are eager. They see opportunities that we do not see because we are too close to the situation. They start small businesses and make work. In addition, it costs money to raise a Canadian from childhood to the point where he is capable of looking after himself and ready to enter the labour market. These new immigrants are ready to go to work, and I think we would be well advised to spend a little money in this regard.

[Mr. Rogers.]

Australia is certainly doing just that. They have adopted a plan whereby immigrants up to 4 per cent of their population may enter their country in a year. I think we have to do somehting like that too in the light of the fact that Russia's exports were considerable last year. Russia has more acreage under cultivation than United States and Canada combined so the potential is there. The Russians do not have to worry about prices. We know something of the cold war and we will certainly know something about the economic war.

With respect to the western grain grower, I think we will have to go to the two price system. After all, why should the people of Canada consume farm products purchased at prices giving a return to the farmer below his production costs? So far as I can ascertain we do consume about 45 million or 50 million bushels a year. If we add a dollar a bushel it would only mean about two cents per loaf to the consumer of local bread. This $45 million to $50 million, spread amongst the wheat growers, would contribute considerably.

I have no intention of taking up too much time. However, I know that patience is a virtue, so perhaps if I did take up time it would be good for the Minister of Agriculture. I expect to speak again on supervised farm credit, which is another solution to our pressing problems.

Mr. Michaud: Mr. Chairman, I should like to avail myself of the opportunity which is now afforded to the committee of this house, to make a few observations relating to agriculture, as applied more particularly to the province of New Brunswick and the maritime provinces. Bearing in mind that the dairy industry has been the backbone of agriculture in New Brunswick, as well as in the rest of the maritimes, I should like at this time to quote from the annual report of the department of agriculture of New Brunswick for the year ended March 31, 1958, which was the last available report. Under the chapter headed "Dairy Branch" here is what is stated, in part, at pages 50 and 51 of that report:

> The price received for butterfat for manufactured dairy products was slightly higher than the previous year, but was not sufficient incentive to increase production to any extent...
> The figures attached to this report on production, volume and value of dairy products manufactured are for the calendar year 1957. The figures reveal that creamery butter production decreased about 500,000 pounds, while the cheese output was about 231,000 pounds greater. Ice cream production was also down about 50,000 gallons owing to the very cool weather prevailing throughout the summer months. Despite the lower production of butter and ice cream, the total value of dairy products totalled $7,000,323, an increase of $106,756 over the previous year...

The Canada agricultural prices support board, which was later changed to the name of the agricultural prices stabilization board, continued to apply a floor price of 58 cents per pound to first grade butter in solids delivered to Moncton and Saint John cold storages. To some extent this price regulated the butter prices throughout the year. However, the threatened shortage of butter had the effect of prices increasing considerably above the floor early in the month of August, and continued to improve, and accelerated still more, when the selling price of solids to the trade during the fall and winter months was set at 63 cents per pound in solids delivered to the distributor. Very little butter was sold to the stabilization board during the year, but about 70 carloads were required to supplement winter production...

At the time of writing, the agricultural prices stabilization board has announced that the floor price on creamery butter in solids for the year 1958 will be 64 cents per pound delivered to cold storages, which is six cents per pound higher than for the year 1957.

What is the general inference then, Mr. Chairman, to be drawn from that report? It clearly indicates that while prices for dairy products for the last fiscal year were generally higher in New Brunswick, yet that was not sufficient incentive to increase production to any extent. It would indicate also that an increasing number of our rural population, year after year, are abandoning farms. Some might be tempted to say that in the light of these circumstances this is a desirable situation. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that any situation favouring any disproportionate dislocation of our rural population toward the industrialized centres of the country is not economically sound. Such a situation entails the disintegration of our rural community which should remain a vital part of the whole economic structure of the country.

Here is one strange aspect of the true economic picture in the maritimes. While we have the largest relative number of unemployed on the one hand, on the other hand we have a deficient agricultural production in almost every field, with an ever-increasing acreage of fertile land lying idle. A comprehensive study of local market conditions was published in 1957 by the Canadian Department of Agriculture, which is entitled "Atlantic Provinces Agriculture". I should like to give some of the findings and recommendations which resulted from that study. In 1950 there were 10,000 farms in Prince Edward Island; 23,000 farms in Nova Scotia; 26,000 farms in New Brunswick. Fifty-two per cent of the farms in Prince Edward Island had produced in 1950 which sold for over $1,200, while in Nova Scotia just over 28 per cent of all farms were in this category, and only 29 per cent in New Brunswick. Almost 90 per cent of the farms in Newfoundland produced less than $1,200 in produce in 1950.

Maritime agriculture produces insufficient crops and livestock for the needs of the people of the region, and for the Atlantic provinces in general. During 1955 only potatoes, some animal products such as hides, wool and by-products, apples and live cattle were a net export. During 1955 a net of 85,000 tons of canned goods were also imported. Of the major crops and products grown in the maritimes, potatoes, apples and blueberries were considered surplus; wool, strawberries, eggs and ice cream were almost in equilibrium with the total consumption. Milk and butter were in a deficit position, while poultry meat, cheese, honey, concentrated milk and red meats were markedly deficit. Two of the three maritime provinces are deficit areas with respect to red meat production in relation to consumption. Prince Edward Island produces double its needs; New Brunswick is 47 per cent self-sufficient and Nova Scotia only 37 per cent.

The dairy industry has been the backbone of agriculture in the maritimes. The production of a major portion of the beef has been as a by-product of dairying. This has resulted in the lower than average quality of beef. The aim of dairy farms should be toward marked expansion of milk cows, and for all livestock farming in general it would seem desirable to institute more research designed to determine the best rotation crop methods for beef and for dairy production on each of the major soil types in the Atlantic provinces. Hogs and poultry have been very useful as major sources of supplementary income, and in expanding total output on a limited land basis they should be expanded only to the point where the Atlantic provinces' needs are satisfied.
