The Government's action in seeking out and charging individuals engaged in such reprehensible practices is to be applauded. I urge the Ministers responsible to continue their efforts to track down and prosecute those consultants and lawyers who prey upon the natural desire of people who, because of poor economic or political circumstances in their homeland, seek to come to Canada in the quest for a better life.

MEDICAL CARE

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I rise today on behalf of all Saskatchewan Members of Parliament on both sides of the House. July 1 will be the twenty-fifth anniversary of the introduction of medical care into North America.

It was on July 1, 1962, that the first medical care plan came into effect in the Province of Saskatchewan. Tonight, community health care personnel from across Canada will have a special banquet to commemorate and celebrate that occasion in the city of Prince Albert. The guest speaker tonight will be the very distinguished Canadian, Mr. Emmett Hall.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) would normally want to make this statement, but he is currently making use of medical care. He is recovering from minor surgery, so he asked me to make the statement on his behalf.

On his behalf, and I am sure of all Saskatchewan Members of Parliament, I want to say that Canada owes a great debt of gratitude to the Premier of that day, Premier Woodrow Lloyd; to his Minister of Health, Mr. Allan Blakeney; to the former Premier of the province, the father of medicare, Tommy Douglas; and to Mr. Emmett Hall, who prefers to be called the grandfather of medical care.

Community health care workers who have gathered from across Canada in Prince Albert have asked me to request that pages distribute these little pins I hold here, commemorating this twenty-fifth anniversary, to all Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan.

THE ECONOMY

APRIL TRADE SURPLUS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, once again the confidence of Canada's business and investment community continues to be reflected in sound economic figures. Not only are we hearing of a continuing decline in unemployment figures, increased new housing starts, and higher consumer spending, but Statistics Canada has reported that Canada posted a $1.6 billion merchandise trade surplus in April, the largest surplus since April, 1986.

The merchandise trade surplus—the amount that Canadian exports of wheat, metals, and other goods exceed imports—was up 55 per cent from the $1 billion level in March. Economists see the over-all April figures as a good sign for the Canadian economy.

My congratulations to Canadian producers for increasing their productivity and showing very clearly that Canadian producers can compete very favourably in world markets. This gives added impetus to our Government to secure an enhanced trade agreement.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

1983 BUDGET—SPENDING PROJECTIONS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 8, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who was Acting Defence Minister for the day made a misleading and wrong statement in this House of Commons. The Minister's misleading statement was:

> As a matter of fact the fiscal plan, and it is in the budgets of the former Finance Minister, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, called for no increases in defence spending after 1983.

Then he went on to say:

I think the Hon. Member should check that out before making an accusation.

Imagine the Minister telling a Member of this House to check his facts when he hasn't even done so himself.

I have here the 1983 Budget Papers dealing with National Defence financing, Mr. Speaker. In the fiscal year 1983-84 the defence budget, under Marc Lalonde's fiscal plan, stood at $7.840 billion. In the next year an additional $930 million was added and in 1985-86 another $724 million was added. In 1986-87 another $865 million was added. In this present fiscal year another $766 million would have been added under the 1984 Budget, hence making it more than $800 million higher than the present Conservative Budget in this country.

Really the Budget Papers of 1983 and 1984 proved beyond a doubt, right here, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal defence spending projections called for sustained increases in the defence budget.

Meanwhile, we have the spectacle of two Conservative Defence Ministers running around the country trying to convince Canadians that they are doing such great things when, in fact, they are doing less than the previous Liberal Government whose defence purchases they are even trying to claim as their own. The program is a scam.

AGRICULTURE

REFORM OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE—PRIME MINISTER'S ACTIONS ON BEHALF OF CANADIAN FARMERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, under the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) leadership, Canada has been at the forefront of those nations calling for a new set of rules for international agricultural trade.

As a result of the Prime Minister's efforts, agriculture was raised as Canada's number one issue at the Tokyo Summit, the first time agriculture has been raised at a summit. Agriculture is being considered in the new round of GATT negotiations, and the OECD agreed to the need to reform international trade and issued a communiqué incorporating our Canadian proposal. This week, at the Venice Economic Summit, the Prime Minister took the lead against agricultural protectionism.

The Prime Minister obtained agreement from all seven leaders to consider a stepped up timetable for negotiating solutions to the world grain wars.

I have been asked by farmers in the Peace country to commend and thank the Prime Minister for his understanding of agricultural problems and for his actions on behalf of Canadian farmers.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

UTILIZATION OF FUNDS—MINISTER'S FUTURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the behaviour of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

According to reports in the media, $900 million were squandered at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion over a period of two months. The Minister is unable to tell us why or to deny or confirm this report. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, he is incapable of saying whether $100 million are still missing for other programs. And he is incapable of saying whether funds earmarked for new projects have been frozen.

His responsibility for the development of the Atlantic region has been taken away from him by the Prime Minister.

My question is as follows: Why is the Minister staying in Cabinet, if most of his duties have been taken away from him?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister has indicated in this House on a number of occasions an internal audit and an outside audit are being undertaken. DRIE is in business. It is functioning in its usual manner and capacity. It is honouring all commitments and accepting applications and considering them, as it should be.

REPORTED FINANCIAL SHORTAGES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to specify the situation as we understand it. There have been reports, neither confirmed nor denied, that the Department is $900 million short. There is another report that the Department is short an additional $100 million for new programs. Furthermore, there is a report that there has been a freeze on all new programs in the Department.

The Prime Minister has relieved the Minister of his responsibility for the Atlantic region. Because of the Deputy Prime Minister's responsibility, the Minister no longer has any responsibility in western Canada for the diversification program. This is not just an internal problem. It is now affecting the country.

In these circumstances, why does the Minister remain in Cabinet since he really has nothing left to do?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is acting in a very irresponsible fashion today. He is using media reports as the premise of his questions. He is suggesting that the Minister has been stripped of his duties. Both the reports and the suggestion are false.

FUNDING FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think we can substantiate the particular responsibilities quite clearly. The Deputy Prime Minister has responsibility for the west. There is a new organization in Atlantic Canada taking over the east. The Minister is left with virtually nothing.

I want to add something which undoubtedly the Deputy Prime Minister has had drawn to his attention. Over the weekend the Government of the Northwest Territories criticized the Minister for delinquency with respect to programs in the Territories. Yesterday the Yukon Territory also attacked the Minister. Our citizens north of 60 have already been shabbily treated by the Government on the Meech Lake Accord where they were not consulted at all. Now they find out their regional development moneys have been frozen.

My question is this. Why are the Northwest Territories and Yukon being punished for the delinquency of the Minister? We now have a Department in shambles, and it is being taken out on our citizens north of 60 in particular.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman insists on making careless assumptions today as he did yesterday and the day before. I simply repeat that all commitments are being honoured. Applications are being received. DRIE is in business as usual.

YUKON APPLICATIONS—FUNDING OF PROJECTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In Yukon, an important part of Canada's great northwest, there are 62 applications pending, worth $3 million, under three different regional development programs. These projects will create a large number of new jobs. They will trigger another $6 million in public and private investment. Is there any money available for these projects? If there is, when will Yukoners see it?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to see Hon. Members opposite recognize the validity and usefulness of programs put in place by this Government. I can only reiterate the response of the Deputy Prime Minister to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he suggested that DRIE is in business. The doors are open.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): DRIE has dried up.

Mr. Forrestall: DRIE has not dried up. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition persists in misleading and mischievous questions on the floor of the House. He knows better and he should be somewhat ashamed of himself.

PROPOSAL TO CREATE NORTHERN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, there is no answer for Yukon. Let us see about the Northwest Territories.

On June 9 the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly, by unanimous motion, called upon the Government of Canada to help stimulate and develop the territorial economy. In particular they asked the Government to create a northern economic development agency. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this time what response the Government has to this motion from the Northwest Territories Legislative Assembly?

• (1425)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canadians were pleased by the announcement of the Prime Minister together with the four Atlantic Premiers a week ago Saturday. So will the government leaders in both the Northwest Territories and Yukon be pleased with the plans which will flow very soon from this Government.

REPORTED OVER-COMMITMENT OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to the over-commitment of funds at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. According to one of the internal investigations taking place, as of yesterday the over-commitment had reached $90 million for the fiscal year 1987-88. That figure will probably approach $100 million, if not more.

The most important thing a Member of Parliament can do in this House is scrutinize the spending of public funds. In light of the fact that we are today dealing with the Estimates, would the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether he would agree to have this whole matter referred to a special parliamentary committee so that we can discover why a Minister can allow the over-commitment of nearly $100 million by his Department, which is unprecedented in this country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that Member of the New Democratic Party has been in this House for a long time and has some knowledge of the rules. He knows very well that these kinds of things can be considered by standing committees which have the perfect right to do so. As a matter of fact, the Estimates have been before the appropriate standing committees and standing committees are empowered to engage in any studies they so desire.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Deputy Prime Minister is not opposed. I hope we can now convince the chairman of the committee.

INDUSTRIAL REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—DELAY IN TABLING ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the annual report of the Industrial Regional Development Program was supposed to be tabled in this House on June 1. It is now June 11. Why is this annual report, which details the amounts spent and the dates commitments are made with regard to DRIE's programs, overdue? Is this just another way of trying to cover up what is happening in that Department?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the annual report will be tabled very soon.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Forrestall: It will be tabled very soon. If the Hon. Member or other members of his Party bothered to show up at DRIE meetings once in a while, as members of the Official Opposition do, they would be aware that officials are there, as they will be this afternoon, to answer questions of Hon. Members in detail.

REQUEST THAT LIST OF APPROVED PROJECTS BE TABLED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this Ministry is almost $100 million over-committed after only two months in this fiscal year. That is without precedent in the Government. Most Ministers would be fired immediately by a Prime Minister.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister make a commitment in the House that he will make public and table in this House a list of all the projects which were approved in that Ministry in the last 18 months? Will he make that commitment to Members of Parliament and the people of Canada so that we can get to the bottom of this important issue?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a question similar to that was put to the Minister responsible. I think he has responded to it.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RENOVATION OF OFFICIAL'S OFFICE AND BUILDING OF KITCHEN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and pertains to the latest episode in the continuing saga of the lifestyles of the rich and famous.

In the latest episode of the redecorators His Excellency, Ambassador at large, Dr. Fred Doucet, spent $35,150.37 of taxpayers' money to renovate his office and build a kitchen.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to this House why fast Freddy needs a $35,000 kitchen to cook his hamburgers at noon? Could he explain to the people of Canada why such extravagance is necessary?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the person in question holds a very important and strategic post in the Government. He is involved in very confidential conversations on behalf of the Government.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: It was necessary to renovate his offices to ensure that appropriate security was made available to him.

Mr. Boudria: Most Canadians have never seen a $35,000 kitchen, let alone have one in their office.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF OFFICE RENOVATION EXPENDITURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask why the Prime Minister's friend, Fred Doucet, had to spend $35,000 to renovate his office and install a kitchen.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House why he tolerates this kind of spending, especially considering that in a recent poll, 70 per cent of Canadians indicated they were fed up with the kind of life being led by Cabinet and the Prime Minister? Furthermore, could he inform the House who authorized this kind of spending and what punitive measures will be taken in the circumstances?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition may take the importance of summit meetings for Canada lightly, but in view of the fact that this country is hosting three summit meetings next year we view the involvement of Doctor Doucet as very important. It is essential that he have the appropriate security and surroundings to carry out his functions properly.

MAINTENANCE OF SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week, when I asked about the Minister of Fisheries' small crafts harbour cabinet proposal, the Minister of Transport said that it has been dealt with in a very satisfactory manner. In fact, it has not yet gone to Treasury Board so that no one, particularly not the Minister of Transport, knows what the final figure might be.

Since 47 Newfoundland ports will be closed over the next five years unless adequate funds are found for maintenance, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if the $1.2 million for harbours in the St. John's area that the Minister of Transport announced in the last couple of weeks comes out of the already allocated fund which is less than $8 million for all of Newfoundland? If it does not come from that fund that is already allocated, where does it come from?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the new policy on small craft harbours is fully concluded it will be announced in an appropriate fashion. I just ask my hon. friend to be patient.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this is important to fishing communities all across Canada. They are being asked to be patient while the Government is playing politics with their livelihoods and safety. Why has the Government been so cynical about this issue? Why does it not announce a policy now that will maintain these small craft harbours for the safety and livelihood of Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we know that it is an important issue. That is why we are acting. I am sure the Hon. Member will be fully supportive of the policy when it is announced.

THE CONSTITUTION

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—ABORIGINAL AND MULTICULTURAL CHARACTERISTICS OF COUNTRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the 1987 Constitutional Accord.

One area of the Accord which needs vast improvement is its poor recognition of Canada's multicultural and aboriginal dimension which affects some 10 million Canadians.

Our Canadian society is undeniably made up of the French, English, aboriginal and multicultural dimensions. Clause 1 of the Accord only recognizes the English-French linguistic duality as a fundamental character of Canada. Therefore, is the Government prepared to amend and thereby strengthen Clause 1 by also entrenching the multicultural and aboriginal fact and reality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada so that the Constitution will truly reflect our bilingual and multicultural nature as a country and as a people?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the Hon. Member in that regard because it is important for the Hon. Member to understand that, while we appreciate very much the unequivocal support that has been given to us by the Liberal and New Democratic Parties with respect to the Accord, I would not want his question to be misinterpreted as a correct statement of the Accord and the recognition which it does in fact pay to two very important groups in our society.

I think our Government's commitment to the third of Canadians who are neither of English nor French extraction is manifested in a number of ways in terms of our policies and particular programs that are brought forward by the Government, and by the very make-up of the Government in terms of the heritage of the membership in the Cabinet, and appointments made by this Government to very important positions. This Government has given leadership to the multicultural and aboriginal groups that is unprecedented.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister, who had the responsibility with the Prime Minister to draft this Constitution, is simply skirting around a very important question.

RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM AND ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, without the inclusion of the multicultural and aboriginal dimension, Clause 1 is incomplete and an inaccurate definition of the Canada of today, regardless of what is in Clause 16 at the end of the Accord.

Since the Constitution must clearly define and express the reality of our country and our people, which is unquestionably bilingual and multicultural, why does the Minister refuse to give the undertaking, while not detracting from anyone, to add to Clause 1 the fundamental character defined through multiculturalism and our aboriginal peoples? Why is he continuing to justify ignoring the contributions and aspirations of some 10 million Canadians, one-third of Canada's population?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure of the purpose of the question because it is based on a wrong proposition. The reality is that in the Constitution there is the recognition of multiculturalism as an essential ingredient of our country. There is an important recognition of the rights of aboriginal peoples in this country. Indeed, the provision with respect to the rights of the multicultural society in Canada was moved by the Progressive Conservative Party at the time of the original Charter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We do not need any lectures from the Hon. Member with respect to a commitment, not only in this Accord to reaffirm that very important principle of our country, but also with respect to the record of this Government which is unprecedented.

Mr. Marchi: Absolute garbage.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He should be ashamed of himself for even asking that question.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND CAPELIN CATCH—MARKETING AGENCY QUERY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland will be adversely affected by the lack of an adequately negotiated price for capelin, and that yesterday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans indicated in the House that he was considering a marketing agency to deal with this problem, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how soon the Government intends to act on a marketing agency for the capelin fishery?

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important question dealing with the capelin fishery. Of course the Minister is concerned that we have an adequate market for that species from Newfoundland. I know the Department is actively working on it. Since the Minister is not in the House today, I will bring it to his attention later this afternoon.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a small comfort to the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland, when they expect some action from a Government that has such a massive majority.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to make another positive suggestion to the Government. Hopefully it will act on it. Since the inshore fishermen have not begun fishing capelin and many of them are not receiving unemployment insurance benefits because benefits stopped on May 15 according to the Act, is the Government prepared to extend unemployment insurance benefits to the inshore fishermen of Newfoundland who have not started to fish the capelin?

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course the matter of unemployment insurance benefits is something that would have to be considered not only by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but by the Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I know that they will take the representations seriously and consider that particular matter.

SMALL BUSINESS

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS NOT PUBLISHED REPORT ON NEEDS OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Small Businesses, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In 1985, the Government consulted Canadians to find out the needs of the small business sector. Two and a half years later, we are still waiting for the report. In 1986, the Liberals consulted Canadian business people from Vancouver to Halifax, and today, we are proud to be able to submit our report to the public. Why is the Government hiding a report that was printed in 1986?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister, I will take that question as notice.

RELEASE OF GOVERNMENT REPORT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have with me a copy of the government report entitled "Toward Progressive Action for Small Business". I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister would allow me to release the government report today with my report?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government does not have to take any lessons from Members opposite with respect to our support for small business. We brought down interest rates. We brought in a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. We have done a number of things which have enhanced the profile of small business in this country.

Small businessmen are very proud of what the Government has achieved for them. We are the best friend they ever had.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—MAILING OF CHEQUES TO FARMERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the Special Canadian Grains Program. As the House is aware, farmers have found this program very helpful, but are concerned about the cheques which will be going out on the second mailing. Would the Minister tell us what actions he has taken with regard to those second cheques? And what safeguards will be put in place in case of postal disruptions?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question because it provides me with an opportunity to deliver another good news message to Canadian farmers. I am sure they will take great pride and satisfaction in knowing that throughout this day all the cheques will be mailed to them.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence—

Mr. Beatty: At last.

Ms. Copps: At last he is here.

Ms. Jewett: —whom I welcome back to the House.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you.

Ms. Jewett: As Greenpeace has recently pointed out, and as the Minister must surely already know, his nuclear-powered attack submarines would require highly enriched uranium fuel. Canada has no facilities to create such a fuel. Does the Government plan, then, to export Canadian uranium to the United States or another major nuclear weapons state to have it enriched for his subs? And is this not a blatant violation of Canada's own policy of forbidding the export of uranium for military purposes, including the fueling of nuclear submarines?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do thank the Hon. Member for her question. I want her to know that, when I was on the road, I missed her just as much as she missed me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Because it is the first new comprehensive defence policy in 16 years, I felt an obligation to go out and tell the Canadian people about it. I am pleased to be able to report to the House—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Beatty: —that they are delighted we have a new policy for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Answer the question.

Mr. Orlikow: Get to the point.

Mr. Beatty: The purchase of nuclear-powered submarines is completely consistent with our obligations under the NPT. It will be done in a way which will respect Canada's obligations and our policies with regard to non-proliferation.

What we do have with that purchase is an indication by this side of the House that we are prepared to take the measures necessary to keep this country strong, independent, and free.

URANIUM EXPORTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Minister is not aware, nor, apparently, is the Cabinet, that it is Canada's long-standing policy to export uranium only for civil reactor purposes. That is our long-standing policy. Our agreement with the United States explicitly states it shall not be used for military purposes, so that the Minister is deceiving—misleading the House and the people. He is indeed saying we are staying with our non-proliferation practices.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: Withdraw that remark.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member who is a very experienced Member of this House, knows when a question goes into argument. Please put the question.

Ms. Jewett: Does the Minister have the agreement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Cabinet to this violation of long-standing Canadian policy and practice that we will not sell our uranium for enrichment except for civil reactor purposes?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, certainly Cabinet is in support of the policy contained in the White Paper, which represents the first new defence policy for Canada in 16 years.

Mr. Riis: Answer the question.

Mr. Orlikow: Answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: Any action we take will be fully consistent with our treaty obligations. Any action we take will be fully designed—

Ms. Jewett: Read your own treaties.

Mr. Beatty: I wonder whether the Hon. Member, having put her question, will allow me to answer it?

Mr. Blaikie: You are not answering.

Ms. Jewett: Read your own treaties.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to have a chance to answer this question because I think, for the first time, there will be an clear indication of where Parties on all sides of the House stand on the issue of defending Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair, as Hon. Members will know, has asked the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam to put her second question succinctly, which she did. I ask the Hon. Minister to answer it.

Mr. Beatty: Yes, Mr. Speaker. All of our actions will be fully consistent with Canadian treaty obligations under the NPT. They will be consistent with our policies with regard to non-proliferation, and these reactors will be under Canadian control in Canada.

LEVEL OF DEFENCE SPENDING

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence. For the five years previous to the first Budget brought in by this Conservative Government, previous Liberal Governments had an average of over 7 per cent real increase in defence spending. In the previous 10 years before the election of this Government, Liberal Governments averaged over 4.5 per cent real increase in defence spending.

How can the Minister travel around Canada with his 2 per cent and tell the people what great things this Government is doing? Why did he not make it 3 per cent or 4 per cent? Why did he not make it 6 per cent as was promised by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the last election campaign?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the figures used by the hon. gentleman for the Trudeau years are rather interesting because the average during the Trudeau years was 2.2 per cent. The floor under the P.C. program will be 2 per cent. In addition, as major capital projects come along, we will be adding to that.

The Liberal policy left us without a single minesweeper in the Canadian Navy. It left us without adequate armaments for our CF-18s. The Liberals, over their time in power, ignored the Canadian Forces, and it is too late now for them to attempt to kiss and make up.

SIZE OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is still on his ego trip with his big 2 per cent. What he did not say was that he is using total years. I mentioned five years and 10 years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: —and now he is talking 15 years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: Lets face it, is it not true that the Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is always some latitude, of course, allowed in preambles, but arguments over figures really do take up a great deal of time. I know the Hon. Member has a succinct question and again I would ask that he put it.

Mr. Hopkins: Is it not true that the Government has simply put 15 years together in the White Paper because that is the only way it could make its program look big at a measly 2 per cent per year? That is a fact of life the Minister cannot deny.

Is it not true that the Government is playing a public relations campaign by stretching out the program? The reason why it has to be stretched out is because there is absolutely no firm or big enough commitment on the part of the Government. It has now promised 2 per cent per year when it promised 6 per cent in the last campaign. That is one thing about which the Government will never hear the end.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): I love it, Mr. Speaker. The Liberals have finally discovered the Armed Forces of Canada which they ignored for 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the vice-president of the student council over there shouts across the floor. I want to know whether she feels we are spending too little on defence.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

PERRY NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION IN UNITED STATES—REPORT OF FLAWED DESIGN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question might interest the Minister of National Health and Welfare, although I am not sure. It has to do with the release of a report which has long been secret, having to do with the fact that the Perry nuclear generating station in the United States was built with a flawed design. It has been described as an accident waiting to happen.

Is the Government now prepared to change the view expressed to me, in reply to a letter which I wrote several months ago, that it has confidence in the Nuclear Regulatory Commission of the United States? Is it now prepared to take some more critical action vis-à-vis this reactor and other American reactors on the Canadian border which may be in a similar condition?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are of course aware of the press reports concerning this secret report on the safety of the Perry nuclear reactor. We are looking into it. We will have to study the matter on something more than just press reports before making any further comment.

I remind the Hon. Member that we do discuss these security issues related to nuclear reactors on an ongoing basis, both bilaterally with the U.S. and with multilateral organizations. I will take the matter up with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on his return.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a U.S. official retiring from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has said that it would not be a surprise to him if there were a serious melt-down in the United States within 10 to 20 years—in fact he said it would be a surprise if there were not—I want to ask the Government this.

With respect to the nuclear generating station which I have mentioned, as well as the Hanford reactor about which the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has written to the Government, when will it adopt a more critical attitude on behalf of Canadians—not just for the sake of being critical but a critical attitude toward the increasing evidence of serious flaws in the way that nuclear power stations are being run in the United States, and the ability of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to do anything about it?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have assured the Hon. Member that the types of discussions to which he refers are carried out on an ongoing basis between the two countries, particularly in cases in which the Canadian population could be affected. I am certain that we will have an answer to his question before the end of the 10 or 20-year timeframe about which he talks.

Oral Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN

REPORT ON BATTERED WOMEN—LACK OF SPACE IN TRANSITION HOUSES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Linda MacLeod report on battered women that was released yesterday indicated the shocking fact that one out of two women who go to a transition house or a shelter are turned away because of lack of space. This is not a new problem.

Can the Minister tell us what we have been doing for the last two and a half years about providing for transition houses for women in situations such as this? Bearing in mind the fact that this is International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, will the Minister give us his undertaking that during the current year we will close the gap and provide enough spaces for all women in these circumstances?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question which deals with a very serious topic. He will recall that yesterday in a reply that I gave to the House I mentioned what we refer to as the abbreviated form for application under the Canada Assistance Plan so that people can access transition homes. I also mentioned that, along with my colleague responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing, additional recommendations will be examined in terms of social housing.

In respect to the Hon. Member's specific question, I should say to the hon. gentleman that at the present time there are an estimated 265 centres which currently provide emergency shelter to women and their children. We are cost sharing with approximately 100 of them. I understand from statistics that that is a substantial increase over 1984 when this Government took office. As I said yesterday in the House, I think we still have some distance to go.

YOUTH

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED AND HOMELESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth and concerns the plight of unemployed and homeless youth. The Leader of the Official Opposition and myself met with representatives of various groups that are dedicated to helping unemployed and homeless youth. After explaining how upset they were about the Government's failure to act, they described the growing numbers of unemployed and homeless youth in Canada's main cities. There are between 10,000 and 20,000, depending on whether we are talking about Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver, while numbers are increasing in other Canadian cities. Mr. Speaker, these young people want to know why the Government has failed to take any concrete steps to deal with the plight of unemployed and homeless youth across Canada.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think we have to recognize there is a fundamental rule that applies to youth and their place in Canadian society, as far as employment and every other aspect of their lives is concerned. When the economy in Canada is not working properly, young people are the first to suffer, and when the economy picks up, they are the last ones called back. So for this Government, as I imagine it is for all other governments, the fundamental rule is to make sure the economy can function properly. That is why the youth unemployment rate has dropped 4.3 per cent since we came to power.

Second, I think the Hon. Member will agree there is no miracle solution to this particular problem. Recently, one of Canada's major newspapers published a series of articles on the homeless, and there were constant references to young people who in many cases suffered abuse from parents or other adults, in many cases, and young people who were victims of crimes and violence. These problems are not easily solved. However, we are very concerned.

EXPECTATIONS OF YOUTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I think at least one thing is clear, and that is that homeless youth and the people who are responsible for helping them are amazed at all the pomp and circumstance with which some programs are launched, and I am sure that they would rather have something to put on their own dinner table. These young people would like to know whether the Government is truly concerned and, especially, whether it is prepared to put in place a permanent means of ensuring that someone will be giving their needs and their problems the attention they deserve.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice who has been a Member of this House for some time now is referring to the pomp and circumstance with which we launched certain programs. I am not sure exactly what he is referring to, but I do know that since I was elected to the House of Commons, we had a motion from his party on this subject on one of the Opposition days. Unfortunately, I did not hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice speak that day, and furthermore, if he has anything positive to say to the Minister of State for Youth, I would appreciate that. I would be delighted to hear even one new idea from the Official Opposition.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Before the last election the Conservative Party criticized the science policies of the Liberal Government and promised that a Conservative Government would double support for scientific research and development in Canada. According to Statistics Canada, we are now down to an all-time low. We are only putting in 1.35 per cent of GNP. Will the Minister explain why this is happening despite the promises?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I have told the House before, the urgent priority was to reorganize the apparatus of government in tune with the new realities and the new age that is dawning on us before we made further spending commitments. The fact is that spending has increased very significantly, admittedly because of the significant if not spectacular growth in the GNP. It has not kept pace in terms of the percentages on which the Hon. Member would like to make his comparisons, but he will be pleasantly surprised, and I am pleased the socialist Party is as concerned about science and technology as it has indicated and that it sees it as being as urgent as we do.

CONSORTIUM'S APPLICATION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Government has said that it wants to get the private sector involved. There is a proposal for the formation of a consortium in which Inco, Stelco, Ontario Hydro and Quebec Hydro are involved. They have asked the Government for start-up money in the amount of $10 million. That is precisely the kind of idea the Government has been pushing. Why has the Government not approved that financial support for this group?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is true that such a proposition has been advanced. Knowing that the NDP will support this kind of initiative by the private sector will make the decision that has to be made in regard to that easier for me.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be one single question from the Hon. Member for Mount Royal and that will be the last question. I would like to thank Hon. Members for having taken some pains today to make their questions and responses shorter.

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION POLICY—UNITED STATES CRITICISM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last week on June 5, Senator Bensten, the Chairman of the powerful U.S. Finance Committee, co-sponsored a resolution of the U.S. Senate warning Canada that the implementation of our film distribution policy could result in an absolute bar to the successful completion of negotiations and Senate approval of a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Who is making the film distribution cultural initiative policy, Hollywood, Jack Valenti, the U.S. Senate, or our Cabinet? If the Minister of Communications has not been forced to change her tune, will the Minister bring the film distribution policy into the House now before the end of June, or is the Government bowing to American pressure?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, such decisions always have been and always will be made by the Cabinet under this Conservative Government. The Minister of Communications has already told the House that she is proceeding with the legislation as planned. Since she has told the House that, I do not see why the Hon. Member is so critical of her intentions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the customary question one asks on Thursday; namely, what business does the Government intend to call for the next several days?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with the second reading of Bill C-55, amendments to the Immigration Act. On Monday, we will be dealing with report stage and third reading of Bill C-13, the Bell reorganization Act, and also second reading of Bill C-60, the Copyright Act.

I also wish to indicate that I have been unable to reach an agreement after discussion with representatives of the Parties opposite with respect to time limits on Bill C-18. Therefore, I give notice that I will be moving at a later sitting, pursuant to Standing Order 117, that four hours, the equivalent to one day's sitting, shall be allotted to the further consideration of report stage of the Bill and four hours shall be allocated to third reading stage.

On Tuesday, we will move to the report stage of Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act, followed by report stage of Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act. On Wednesday, June 17, we will call Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act, for third reading and Bill C-19.

Other business will be announced later this week or early next week. We are still working out some agreements with respect to Thursday, June 18, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will be bringing down his statement on tax reform.

I would also like to inform the House that I will be tabling today with the Clerk a motion which seeks the concurrence of the Senate to join the House in the establishment of a special committee to consider and report on the constitutional amendments proposed at the First Ministers' meeting. I would hope that members could be appointed to this committee soon after it is passed. The committee would have most of the usual powers allocated to such committees plus substitution provisions and broadcasting provisions. We are proposing 12 Members from the House and five from the Senate. I know that all Hon. Members would want to join me in support of this initiative and we hope that we can move on it with expedition so we can get into the committee hearings.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, referring to the latter comments made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), I would like to indicate how much we in the New Democratic Party support the proposal presented by the Deputy Prime Minister. We find what is happening in the other place to be outrageous. The hacks, flacks and bagmen over there, the Liberal appointees, are circumventing the process of Parliament.

I simply want to say that this is an issue of Parliament, not of the Senate or of the House of Commons. That is why we feel so strongly about this initiative. It is time to get on with advancing the Constitution and we would hope that the people in the other House, particularly those from the Liberal Party, would put Canada before politics on this particular issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair feels that the House can and will take its own responsibility on the matter.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order on House business. You did not see me even though I rose before the House Leader of the NDP.

My question is on the order of business, and I am very glad the Government House Leader mentioned it and the House Leader of the NDP commented on it. It has to do with the creation of the special committee, and I certainly agree that it should be a joint committee.

So that there will be no misunderstanding and so that no one will be caught by surprise, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if, when the motion is brought in and after discussion with House Leaders on all sides, there will be no collusion of House Leaders to have only one speaker from each Party speaking on whatever motion is brought in.

I would like the House Leader, for whom I have the greatest of respect, to give a public commitment now that when the motion is brought in, in whatever form, it will be an open debate like the free trade debate so that Hon. Members who wish to speak will have a chance to speak and the debate can go into the wee hours of the morning if necessary. Otherwise, Hon. Members will have to stay here to ensure that they take a watching guard to refuse consent on any motion, whether or not it is agreed to by House Leaders.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I will certainly take that into consideration and under advisement when I am discussing the matter with the other House Leaders. As a matter of fact, we have not negotiated any particular time-frame for it to be called. There still may be some negotiations and some refinement, but we will certainly take that into account.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I simply want to confirm what the Government House Leader has said in that regard. I am sure that when the House Leaders meet to discuss those aspects in a constructive spirit, we will take into account the feelings of Hon. Members on this matter. Also, in a constructive vein, I want to say, with respect to the motion which the Government House Leader said he would be putting on the Notice Paper, that I am sure a way will be found to look into this matter through a committee in a constructive way, a way which would give full consideration to the role of the House of Commons. I am very optimistic that that would be the case.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on another point of order. On May 29, the House passed Bill C-204 at second reading. Back in November, 1986, a legislative committee with a chairperson and appropriate members was struck.

Standing Order 93(3) indicates:

> A legislative committee constituted pursuant to sections (1) and (2) of this Standing Order, shall meet within two sitting days after the adoption of the motion for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee—

I simply want to say that almost two weeks have passed and no meetings have been held, and I simply want to flag it as a breach of the Standing Orders. I assume the Government House Leader would see to it that this is acted upon forthwith.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for drawing that matter to my attention. In consultation with the Whip of my Party, I have been informed that the Chairman of the committee is out of the country at the present time and is due to be back next week.

I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion under advisement and hope that we can resolve the matter soon.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1987-88—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 60, DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret:

> That Vote 60, in the amount of $64,443,000 under the Department of Communications—National Film Board—Revolving fund, operating loss, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) had completed his speech. I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to question him. Otherwise, we will resume debate.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

I should like to begin by making a very brief comment that there seems to be some misunderstanding about my position. I am not at all against employment equity in the National Film Board. I think it is excellent. I am a great supporter of the National Film Board. I have said publicly on many occasions that I think it ought to have more money.

My concern in my resolution is apropos a very specific question, that is, the refusal to give an increase to Studio D, which was promised at a previous committee meeting.

I am pleased to see the support for the NFB and Studio D given by the Hon. Member. I note that at committee he was not at all supportive of Studio D. As reported in the committee hearing for May 21, he said:

> I watch sometimes with dismay . . . Studio D, for example, very dogmatic. It is the work of ideologues, some of it, and very sadly. I do not find much of an appeal—in fact, I find it rather offensive.

Then the head of the NFB pointed out that nevertheless it made a certain amount of money, that the returns were good. The Hon. Member was rather surprised by this; he was not a supporter of Studio D at all. I am simply interested that he has changed his tune.

I have a very specific question to ask him. It concerns the statements made by the head of the NFB on May 9, 1985. He indicated:

> It will be a significant and a very important increase—

He was referring to the budget of Studio D, and those are his words. How can the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake reconcile a promise of a significant and a very important increase in funding for Studio D with the figures in the Estimates?

The Government's own Estimates for 1985-86 indicate $2,531,000 for production and $288,000 for marketing. For the following year, 1986-87, there was a decrease to $1,908,000 for production and an increase in marketing to $273,000. For the following year, 1987-88, there is $2,184,000 for production and $228,000 for marketing. That is clearly a decrease. However, the resources for that section, English language production, had increased from $22,960,000 to $24,939,000.

How does the Hon. Member reconcile these figures with the statement made in committee that there would be a significant and a very important increase?

Mr. Gormley: Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to reply first to the comments and then to the question of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

I have made very critical comments in the past of Studio D. I do not see them as being particularly inconsistent with my comments this morning.

This morning, if the Hon. Member were listening to my speech, she would have heard me say that I have had cases where I do not agree with Studio D. I have had cases, particularly in respect of the abortion issue, where I believed that Studio D was unbalanced in its programming. I would go further and reiterate the words which I said in committee when I referred to the work of ideologues being rather dogmatic. However, that does not derogate from the need for Studio D to advance programs by women for women. Neither does it derogate in any way from the work of the National Film Board.

I would not see any great inconsistency in my position on the needs of Studio D, however, with the qualification that sometimes I do not agree with the tilt of some of its programs.

I mentioned this morning that it is because of the very question of how we voice our opposition to something that we are here today. The member of the NDP, with typical NDP double standards, has a difficulty in that she believes the chairman of the National Film Board has not followed through on a commitment made to her, so she asks for the Estimates to reduce the budget of the National Film Board. Every responsible Member of the House finds that absolutely unacceptable.

In answer to the question the Hon. Member has asked about funding for women, I refer to the budget summary for women in the National Film Board. I see in the 1987-898 expenditures the figure of $795,450, which is approximately $220,000 more than the previous year.

If one takes into consideration Studio D funding, funding for women in film production and development, and funding for youth and young women, one sees that there has clearly been a commitment by the National Film Board to see this funding increased. I do not think it is an entirely healthy attitude when one views women in film as somehow being exclusive to Studio D. I do not think responsible people in the film community would say that the budget of Studio D is therefore reflective of the commitment—

Ms. McDonald: Read the Estimates.

Mr. Gormley: Oh, gosh, Madam Speaker, I cannot hear myself think; the NDP is heckling again. We all know how the NDP deals with things it does not like to hear, like yelling at President Reagan. Its Members will not let someone answer; rather, they yell them down.

If I could have a couple of seconds, I will conclude by saying that Studio D, women's programming in totality, and funding for young producers are big commitments of the National Film Board. I do not believe that the chairman of the National Film Board has in any way deceived the committee. I really think that what this Member has been doing is pretty irresponsible.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) was wrong this morning. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) has just been quoting the same figures at which I have been looking. They include the planning priorities of the National Film Board and the priority areas in which Studio D is located, but not the figures quoted by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who pointed out inaccurately that the 1985-86 figure for production was $2,531,000 and that the figure for marketing was $288,000. She pointed out that it was a decrease or an increase; it did not matter how she read it because she was confusing—and I should like the Hon. Member opposite to respond to this—the planning priorities of the National Film Board, including women's programs which cut across all lines, not just Studio D.

She forgot to compare the actual figures of Studio D, as I told her this morning, which went from approximately $363,000 to $795,000 in 1987. I mentioned those figures in the speech which I made this morning. I would suggest that the increase from $504,000 to $1,678,000 for women in the National Film Board is a significant one.

Would the Hon. Member agree that the chairman has not been reneging on his duties?

Mr. Gormley: Madam Speaker, in reply to that question and for the sake of clarification, indeed I confirm that if one looks at Studio D in isolation there is a proposed increase this year of $220,000. However, I should like to refer to something that just an oversight on the part of the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party. She did not refer to the National Film Board renewing its commitment to the federal women's film program. We are dealing with approximately $2 million over the next five years and much of that money will be used through Studio D. I think it is clear to all who follow the work of the National Film Board and the film community in Canada that Studio D has, in fact, received an increase.

The National Film Board is committed not only to its very good level now of the development of women's programming of films but is also increasing that level to bring women to a full position of equality, not only in production and filming but in the management of the NFB, film programming and distribution throughout Canada. Certainly the proposal today by the New Democratic Party to take funding away from the National Film Board is puzzling, rather bizarre and shameful.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the way in which Parliament and its committees work makes it very difficult for Members who do not serve on a committee, such as the one with which we are dealing today, to be as knowledgeable and as aware about the actual workings of, in this case, the National Film Board as one would like to.

I enter this debate because I have been very interested, supportive and impressed by the tremendous work which the National Film Board has done over the years, beginning during the World War II years when it was organized and led by John Grierson and by many of the people whom I have known, some who came from my City of Winnipeg, such as Gordon Burwash and later Bernard Ostry.

We know that films made by the National Film Board dealt with every aspect of Canadian life, even labour management relationships. We saw recently the film the NFB produced about Bob White, head of the Canadian Autoworkers Union. It has dealt with farm problems, with inner-core city problems, and with the problem of racial prejudice.

I remember a film made many years ago which dealt with prejudice and discrimination against black people who at that time lived in Dresden, Ontario, whose grandparents and great-parents came from the United States before and during the Civil War because Dresden was the end of the underground railway for slaves escaping from the U.S. We know how many awards and on how many occasions in national and international competitions at film festivals the National Film Board has been honoured.

We know that at the National Film Board, as at the CBC and in the private film and TV industries, many more women are now involved than there were some years ago. That does not mean we are satisfied that women have yet achieved the important role which they ought to play at the National Film Board or anywhere else.

Let me say something about the whole question of employment equity, not just at the NFB but everywhere. I had the opportunity to spend about 15 years of my life before I came to Parliament and after coming here working with the Canadian Labour Congress on the whole question of the kind of prejudice and discrimination which we had and still have—hopefully to a lesser degree—in this country against people who are non-white, against women, against natives and against handicapped people. It was the labour movement in co-operation with farm groups, co-operatives and church groups which persuaded first the provinces and then the federal Government to enact the fair employment practices Act and the fair accommodation practices Act and later the Bill of Rights.

We have accomplished a great deal, but we have a long way to go. I want to say to the Parliamentary Secretary that one of the very sad things so far as we are concerned is that the employment equity legislation which the Conservative Government is so proud of is flawed. If you compare the Act here and the way it is in the legislation in the United States, Madam Speaker, you will see very quickly that our legislation is very much the way President Reagan would like the American legislation to operate. In other words, our legislation is based on voluntary compliance. That will not work. In the United States where the Americans have had a great deal more experience than we have had with that kind of legislation, the U.S. Manufacturers' Association has said that it is quite happy with the laws as they are. The U.S. law gives them a target. It tells them that they have to move toward hiring more people from minority groups: the non-whites, the handicapped and women. Companies are given goals. A year later they have to report how far they have moved to accomplish the objectives given. There are no misunderstandings, nor misapprehensions.

If you leave things loose and to voluntary acceptance, there will be criticism because there will be something that has not been done that should have been done. Unfortunately, this Government did not take the time to look into the way the system works in the United States and it is following an entirely different course which, as I pointed out, even the Manufacturers' Association in the U.S. says will not work. It will not work in the States and it will not work in Canada.

Having said that, I want to deal with the National Film Board. As I have said, and I have said it many times both in the House over the years that I have been here and in committee when I was a member of that committee, we are happy with the work done by the National Film Board. We would support any proposal by this Government, as we did for the former Government, to increase the budget of the National Film Board to permit and encourage the National Film Board to do even more than it has done. We know at the NFB as everywhere else there are not enough women, certainly not in responsible positions. There are still not enough people employed at the NFB who come from the visible minorities. There are still not enough people who are physically handicapped. That is true of every government Department and agency. It is true of every private sector employer. We want that situation to change. We do not call for quotas, but what we do say is necessary is some reverse discrimination.

Minority groups, whether women, handicapped, ethnic groups or non-white groups are represented in the NFB as in every other employment in this country, but they are under-represented. We do not say, "Hire them just because they are women, handicapped, from visible minorities or are native", but we say, "If they have the qualifications to do the job for which there is a vacancy, then give them a little bit of extra support, because unless you do, we are probably looking at 100 years before they will get their fair share." We are not saying we want precise quotas. We are saying we have to make a special effort, and I do not see that being done by the Government.

I want to say something about the National Film Board and the work it has done for women. We in Manitoba are very proud of the fact that the NFB produced in my City of Winnipeg a series entitled Daughters of the Country. It consisted of four one-hour dramatic episodes. I am proud of the NFB for doing it and I am proud of the NDP Government of Manitoba which helped make the series possible by investing $500,000 in the project through its jobs fund. That was an important series because it depicted the history of the Métis people as seen through the eyes of Métis women. We hope there can be more series like that and we hope to see a great deal more film productions by the NFB in the regions. Whether it be in the Maritimes, the Prairies, or British Columbia, we want to see a lot more of it.

Let me say a word about Studio D. We know it has produced some excellent films. We know it could do more. We have to, as I have over the years, support and defend the CBC and call for more assistance. I have done that even though not infrequently I see a CBC program I disagree with. I expect the same will be true of the NFB. I want the film board to do more. I want it to give women more opportunities. I would be concerned if any Member of Parliament started to interfere with the work the NFB does on specific projects.

I am reminded of the film it made about Billy Bishop. I saw the film, but I must admit I am not an expert on Canadian history, and even less of an expert on Canadian military history. I do not know whether it gave an accurate depiction of Billy Bishop and his involvement in World War I. However, it really disturbed me when Members of the other place made what I considered to be a very vicious attack on the NFB. I hope we let the NFB do its job. If we are not satisfied with the way the board treats Studio D or some other group, that can be discussed in committee, as it should be.

Aside from that, I think on the whole we have a great deal to be grateful for to the NFB for what it has done over the years. I am looking forward to many more great productions and I urge the Government not only to give the support it has up until now to the NFB, but to increase its funding and let it do an even better job in future.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that very thoughtful speech. I think it is very typical of him. He looks at a question not only with his heart but with his head.

I would like to tell him about how the responsibilities of the Minister for the NFB are defined. This will show that the Hon. Member is very right in saying that his colleague has brought before us a motion which is not really in keeping with the relationship between the Government and an independent National Film Board. Under the Act, the board operates subject to the direction and control of the Minister, but it is an arms length relationship. It is based on a blend of legislation and practice. It has never been interpreted to mean that the Government becomes involved in the day-to-day operational decisions of the NFB. It is also a tradition that Ministers exercise direction only on matters of general policy.

Today we are being asked in this motion to subtract $100,000 from the NFB budget. That amount bears a curiously strong relationship to the salary of the chairman of the NFB. All Members of this House are in effect being asked to make a policy decision not only in general terms but in the day-to-day operation of the board. We are being asked to deduct the salary of one person on the NFB because a Member of this House, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), does not agree with his approach to equality of women in cultural matters. She believes he wants the world to be a man's oyster. In fact, he wants the whole industry to be open to women. He is working toward that goal. The Hon. Member has blinders on, as always, and is only looking at a very narrow field. She suggests that we should punish one person, the head of the NFB, who under the Act has every liberty to carry out his mandate. We should not interfere because he is doing a good job. She calls this a symbolic gesture. It is more than that. It is an insidious and very sinister gesture toward silencing someone who has a different approach from her to a very serious matter.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who is a very thoughtful and serious person, how can it be that two such different people should be in the same Party, one who is willing to allow freedom of divergent opinions while being concerned about the emancipation of women, and another who seems to be so autocratic?

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, let me answer that question by relating to the Hon. Member the answer I gave to someone after a two-hour discussion on the question of capital punishment. This person is a member of my Party in my constituency and he disagreed with me very violently on this question. When I realized after two hours that I could not convince him that abolition was a good idea, and I knew very well that he would never convince me that I should support capital punishment, I tried to think of a way to get out of this pointless discussion without offending him too much. I told him that we would never agree on the subject of capital punishment but there was one thing I thought we could agree on. That is, this is a wonderful country because he had stopped his Member of Parliament for two hours, called him all sorts of names and told him how wrong he was, but he knew and I knew that if he went home that evening he would not be fired from his job. He would not be evicted from his house. He would not be put in jail, as would happen in many countries in similar circumstances. I knew that the worst he could do to me was not vote for me in the next election. Therefore, I thought we could agree that this was a wonderful country in which to live.

In response to the question asked of me by the Hon. Member, in our Party, like in every Party, Members sometimes disagree. I can only speak for myself. I tried to explain how I felt about the National Film Board, how it should operate and what kind of support it should have. If the Parliamentary Secretary has differences of opinion with my colleague and friend, the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), she should take it up with that Member rather than with me.

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to make an observation. I do not know if my hon. colleague, the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), felt the same way as I did about the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary who said that it was typical of a man to look at an issue not just with his heart but with his head. It is my view that human beings, men and women, look at issues with their hearts and their heads.

Mrs. Mailly: I said that man.

Mrs. Finestone: I personally took great umbrage with the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary. That may be why the employment equity Bill does not function as well as it should.

The Hon. Member has given this House a very fine review of the outstanding role which the National Film Board plays in bringing Canadians closer to their own reality in order that they can see reflections of themselves. That is somewhat different than what we normally see on the screen, which consists of approximately 97 per cent foreign films.

With regard to the $100,000 which is at issue, would the Member tell us whether the New Democratic Party plans to support the Estimates of the budget of the National Film Board?

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I have some difficulty in answering that question, not because I do not want to, but because to my knowledge that question was not discussed by members of our caucus, although it may have been discussed at a meeting which I did not attend. Therefore, I cannot give the Hon. Member an answer on that on behalf of the caucus.

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Madam Speaker, I am sure Hon. Members will not be surprised to hear that the Government stands behind the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, as tabled on March 2 of this year. Indeed, I find it hard to understand why the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would propose a reduction in funding for an organization which has contributed so much to Canada's cultural development and which has been particularly responsive to the interests and concerns of Canadian women. Were it possible in the current climate of fiscal austerity, the Government would happily increase funding to the National Film Board of Canada, a fine organization of which all Canadians can be proud.

Hon. Members are well aware of the enviable reputation of the National Film Board of Canada. From its founding in 1939, the NFB has built a record both at home and abroad as a producer of films of the highest artistic quality in all areas; features, documentaries, shorts, animated films and videos. More than almost any other institution in Canada, the NFB has allowed Canadian men and women to capture their own cultural identity, to perceive more clearly who and what they are, and to reach a fuller comprehension of the values that shape and define the society in which we live.

Each year, this year being no exception, a number of films produced by the NFB enjoy acclaim both in Canada and abroad. Permit me to cite some statistics from the 1986-87 fiscal year alone. During that period, 146 NFB films obtained prizes; 69 in Canada, 40 in the United States, 30 in Europe and one in Australia. Of these 146 prizes, 57 were awarded to fiction films, 50 to documentaries, 30 to animation films, three to film strips, and six to special projects.

I imagine many Members have seen a film called The Decline of the American Empire, which was co-produced by the National Film Board. It garnered 18 awards, including the Silver Hugo in Chicago and the International Critics Prize at the Cannes Film Festival. It was the first Canadian film ever to receive an Oscar nomination as the best foreign film. It was voted best foreign film by the New York Film Critics' Circle.

I would like to mention a few of the other titles which have received honours and awards. They include Canada's Sweetheart, the saga of Hal C. Banks, Democracy on Trial, Final Offer, Sitting in Limbo, Sonia and The Big Snit.

I should point out, Madam Speaker, that the NFB continued to earn awards, critical acclaim, and wider audiences for its films despite a reduced budget. Like other departments of Government, the NFB has had to contribute its share to cost-cutting in keeping the Government's deficit within reasonable limits. From April, 1984, to April, 1986, the NFB's permanent staff was reduced by 25 per cent, from 947 to 705.

Savings resulting from the reduction of permanent staff and administrative costs were intended to generate more funds for the production and distribution of films and videos. However, cumulative vote reduction in the order of $5.5 million from 1984-85 to the present hampered the NFB's ability to realize these objectives. Yet, today we hear the unusual proposition by the NDP Member of Parliament for Broadview—Greenwood that the budget be further reduced by $100,000.

In addition to its artistic achievements, the NFB places a high priority on contributing to the development and advancement of film technology to the benefit of the film industry as a whole. For example, the NFB contributed to the perfection of the Imax three-dimensional camera and to the making of the first genuinely three-dimensional visual document. This work, called Transactions, was one of the major events at Expo 86 in Vancouver where it attracted 1,700,000 visitors from every corner of North America and the world.

Research and development are being carried out on several fronts simultaneously. Revolutionary new technologies such as computer assisted animation, infography, and many other techniques are being developed in NFB studios.

In co-operation with the private film sector and with university research centres, the National Film Board is working in the field of videodisc, high definition television, stereophony and electronic editing. The NFB remains on the leading edge of new technologies, developing them for its own purposes as well as making them available in Canada and abroad.

The National Film Board takes a dynamic approach to communicating with its audience, an approach which allows it to reach more Canadians and to increase continually its presence on national television during prime time as well as on educational channels. As an example, in 1985-86 audiences for National Film Board productions scheduled during prime time on the French and English national networks increased by 54 per cent respectively over the previous year. Furthermore, the National Film Board has been able to successfully market many of its films abroad. Members of the public who watch PBS stations in the United States can see many National Film Board productions.

The NFB also takes seriously its role in the community and the importance of producing films which can lead to the betterment of life for Canadians. In this context, I want to point to a specific program of video productions aimed at warning children about the serious problems of sexual abuse. The distribution of this series called Feeling Yes, Feeling No, in English and French, is being handled by public organizations across Canada in connection with the NFB.

The latest report indicates sales of some 7,686 copies of these videos in the past few months. Following an agreement reached between the National Film Board and Health and Welfare Canada, 3,500 video cassettes in French and English will be distributed soon in public libraries across the country.

The National Film Board has also taken initiatives to broaden the audience for its films through agreements with public and school libraries. The agreement concluded with the Public Library at Quebec City is a noteworthy example of the validity of this approach.

During the 1984-85 fiscal year, before the agreement was signed, the Quebec Public Library had rented 335 video cassettes and screened 254 on its premises. After the agreement was signed, during the 1985-86 fiscal year, 5,525 video cassettes were rented from the library. In the first nine months of the following fiscal year, the number of rentals rose to 8,070, in addition to 3,700 inside screenings. This means that in less than two years, rentals and screenings in total rose from 500 to 10,000.

Let me turn for a moment to the specific concerns which the Member for Broadview—Greenwood has expressed over the position of women at the NFB. As Hon. Members may be aware, in 1974 the National Film Board created Studio B, a separate unit within the NFB designed to meet the particular needs of women film-makers and audiences.

Since its creation, Studio D has earned an international reputation for producing unique and often controversial films. Its productions include Not A Love Story, an award-winning film on the pornography industry's exploitation of women. They also include If You Love This Planet, an academy award-winning film about nuclear war.

Studio D is unique in the world as a film production unit directed by women producing films by, for and about women. Its mandate is to provide training for women, with emphasis on the film crafts from which women have been traditionally excluded, to increase the employment of professional women film-makers across Canada, to maintain an environment where women can bring women's perspectives to all social issues through the medium of film.

Since its inception, Studio D has produced, co-produced or assisted in the production of approximately 80 films. These included films made under the Federal Women's Film Program, those made under the International Youth Year Training Project Film, the Working Mothers series and the Canadian Children's series.

Studio D was responsible for the creation of the Federal Women's Film Program in 1981. This program is aimed at increasing the number of informational, educational and promotional films produced by, about and for women, as well as increasing opportunities for the creative expression of women. The Federal Women's Film Program produces and distributes films and organizes information campaigns and workshops.

Recently, the Canadian Institute for the Promotion of Culture for Women declared Studio D a "national treasure". Kathleen Shannon, Director of Studio D from 1974 to 1986, received the Order of Canada for her contribution to film-making in Canada.

In November, 1986, the NFB announced the creation within the French program branch of a women's production unit. This unit's mandate is to increase the presence and influence of women in all areas of documentary film-making within the French program branch. This unit will strive to promote discussion and change in social, cultural, economic and political relationships between men and women, and focus on new ways of examining human relationships.

The creation of Studio F is just another example of the commitment by the National Film Board to expanding the role of women in Canadian film production.

In December, 1986, the National Film Board announced plans to begin implementing, early in 1987, an employment equity program designed to increase the participation of women in film production and ensure that women achieve parity with men in all NFB staff and contract positions by 1996. The Hon. Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has expressed her enthusiastic support for the NFB's employment equity program, which is one of the most extensive in any government agency.

All areas of the NFB's recruitment, training, promotion and contracting practices will be addressed in order to ensure that women achieve parity in what is generally still a male-dominated industry. For example, in competition with all other factors being equal, preference will be given to hiring women in occupations where they are under represented. At the NFB, these include management positions as well as positions as film directors, producers and technicians. Conversely, men will be given identical preference in occupations where they are under represented. The only occupation at the NFB where men are under represented is support staff, particularly secretarial and clerical jobs.

This program is based on targets and timetables established by managers, and parity is to be achieved through funding and hiring practices, training programs, film crew selection and procedures, and the sustained support of Studio D and Studio F.

While the NFB maintained a voluntary equal opportunity program, the mandatory employment equity program was established to address inequities that have persisted within the NFB and in the film industry in general.

The chairman of the National Film Board recently told the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture:

> Despite the progress we have recorded and the success we have achieved, it is increasingly difficult for us to provide the material and financial support necessary for a more dynamic development of three production sectors in particular which are vital for the social-cultural equilibrium of Canadian cinema: production of films by women, regional production, and the production of feature films developed from alternative models.

In other words, a cut in the Estimates for the National Film Board would likely result in cuts to production of films by women, and I cannot believe that this is a result which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood would wish to see.

Rather than entertain the Hon. Member's motion to reduce the NFB's funding by a further $100,000, I suggest that the House reaffirm its support for this excellent Canadian institution. In particular, I suggest that we reaffirm our support for the Board's continuing efforts to ensure the fullest possible participation of women in one of Canada's most important cultural industries.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to put some comments on the record regarding this particular motion by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I believe it is important that Members realize what is happening here today.

We have heard many accusations from Hon. Members which I suspect were made with honourable intention. There were suggestions that the New Democrats wanted to see a decrease in the federal support for the National Film Board. Nothing could be further from the truth or more distant from reality. Nothing could be more illogical in relation to what New Democrats have stood for since their inception.

For decades and decades we have been on record on every occasion as recognizing the value of the National Film Board in terms of the strategic role it plays in bringing Canadians together, making us proud of our culture and heritage and recognizing the past achievements of outstanding Canadians. We would like to see the budget for the NFB increased. That is why we are so outraged today when we look at the Estimates before us and see that the significant increases which have been called for by all Canadians have simply not occurred. Once again the NFB, for all intents and purposes, when one factors in the rate of inflation, has fallen under the axe, the knife and chain-saw of the hackers in the Department of Finance when it comes to budgeting.

Let us for once indicate the truthful position. We want to see a significant increase in the funding of the NFB in all areas. I want to focus on one area in particular, and that is the area about which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood made her comments and what precipitated this particular vote. The Hon. Member was concerned about one of the critical areas of the NFB, referred to as Studio D, which is particularly involved with the production of movies, videos and other forms of communication, portrays the concerns of women and develops the talents of women in film production and in a whole variety of other very crucial areas. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood raised this particular issue of Studio D in committee. She put to the president of the National Film Board a variety of questions to find out from his perspective what was going to happen to the funding for this particular sector of the NFB. He said that the objective is to increase the budget of Studio D and to increase the amount of money devoted to film making by women at the NFB. He said it would be a significant and very important increase.

Mrs. Mailly: It was.

Mr. Riis: That was in 1985. I am looking at the Estimates before us today. The Estimates for women's production in 1985-86 totalled $2,551,000.

Mrs. Mailly: That is not Studio D.

Mr. Riis: When I look at the Estimates for 1987—88, I find it has not increased, it has decreased to $2,184,000, with marketing also on the decrease.

Mrs. Mailly: You are looking at the wrong copy.

Mr. Riis: I am hearing embarrassed Members on the Conservative side saying I am looking at the wrong part.

Mrs. Mailly: I am not embarrassed.

Mr. Riis: I am reading the Estimates. We are debating the Estimates. We are debating this vote. If those Members have some hidden little pool they use, then it should be in the Estimates. That is what we are reading today.

Mrs. Mailly: You are reading it wrong.

Mr. Riis: That is what we are debating today. My friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, stood in her place and said there is something haywire here, something has gone awry because the president of the NFB said there would be a significant increase in women's productions and there is a significant decrease. That is not only in women's production, it is in other areas about which Members of Parliament are deeply concerned, that is, the welfare of our young people, our future resources.

Mrs. Mailly: That is right.

Mr. Riis: The most important future resources of our country are the young people of Canada. I look again at what the actual production allocations were in 1985 and I look at what the Estimates for this particular year are, and they are about half. They have been reduced by 50 per cent.

Mrs. Mailly: Because International Youth Year is finished. You know that.

Mr. Riis: Oh, I see, my hon. friend says it is because the national youth year is finished and, therefore, we can forget about our interest in youth, that there is no need to be concerned about film production and marketing for young people. I think it is important that our concern for youth goes on every single year, not just in the national year of young people.

Mrs. Mailly: But you cannot have it every year.

Mr. Riis: We cannot have it every year, the Hon. Member says. I say we can have it every year and I hope in her next breath, as she screams across the aisle, she will ask where we will get the money. In other words, if we are going to increase the NFB because we want to produce more films and videos in support of young people, where are we going to get the money? Increase the budget? No. There are 79,000 profitable corporations in this country which do not pay a single cent in federal income tax.

Mrs. Mailly: Stick to the subject.

Mrs. Riis: I wish she would shut up, Madam Speaker. She has been bugging me. She has been sitting there yapping on, quite frankly.

Mrs. Mailly: It is because you are not speaking on the subject.

Mr. Riis: She is obviously embarrassed by what I am saying.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair is quite surprised at the language used by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). The Chair, knowing how much everyone is being passionate in discussing the issue today, has been rather patient. However, I can assure the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that had he been here this morning, he might have heard someone from his side of the House also trying to get her point across while the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) was trying to get her point across. So I would like to ask all Hon. Members to please be quiet and everyone will get a chance to express his or her view as much as time will allow.

Mrs. Mailly: Point of order.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, if I need to, I would—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first point of order was called by the Hon. Member for Gatineau. I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: I thank you for this clarification, Madam Speaker, but I want to say that I was going to rise on a point of order anyway, because the speech of the Hon. Member is becoming irrelevant. We were debating a motion to cut $100,000, and the Hon. Member has been dwelling on all sorts of other matters. He has been talking about the National Film Board generally. That is not what the motion is about, Madam Speaker, that is not the point.

[English]

Mr. Riis: I also want to suggest to my hon. friend that it is not a point of order, or it is a bogus point of order. I do not know if it is appropriate for her to challenge the work the Chair is doing. However, I want to clarify the record, Madam Speaker, by saying that I was in attendance this morning. I think it is inappropriate for anyone, with all due respect, to refer to the perceived absence of Members of the House of Commons. We have many duties which require us not to sit in our seats all day long—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair does apologize for having made that remark. I must say that when I hear Hon. Members screaming from one side of the House to the other, it sometimes becomes very difficult. I do apologize to the House for that remark. It was not meant in a derogatory way. On the other hand, I would ask the Hon. Member to allow the Chair to decide what is or what is not a point of order. Let us go back to debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I presume your intervention was most appropriate because things seem to have subdued significantly to allow us to continue. I appreciate the interjection of my hon. friend as well. These are important matters we are debating and we have many other items we must debate today under these Estimates. With that in mind, I will wrap up my comments very quickly by simply saying that when I look at the Estimates today, I see the significant decrease in support for children and for youth when it comes to marketing and production for the NFB, a reduction in women's production for NFB for the year 1985-86, and that there are a variety of deductions in what I think are perhaps the most critical areas.

We can debate which are the most critical areas in terms of support for film production of the NFB, but when it comes to women's issues and children's issues, I certainly feel these are areas which ought to receive a considerable expansion of funds as opposed to a reduction of funds. Under no circumstances are we suggesting that the over-all budget of the National Film Board should be dramatically decreased now or in the future. It is exactly the opposite. We are advocating a significant increase in the funding for the National Film Board.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood was simply trying to make an important symbolic gesture to the President of the National Film Board to the effect that when he appears before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and says to its members that it is his intention to significantly increase the budget for Studio D and women's programming, and a number of other areas which I will not take the time to mention, that that is what we assume he means. But when he obviously agrees and then in the final budget analysis does something different, we want to register our concern with that decision.

The National Film Board is something about which we feel very strongly. As a matter of fact, as a youngster going to school I remember those Friday afternoons when we watched films about Canada. It was probably a way for us to run out the week and give the teachers a bit of a break, I suppose, since we were restless on Friday afternoons. But year after year I was introduced to parts of Canada through the National Film Board. I became educated and informed as to the lifestyle and culture of people living in Labrador, parts of Newfoundland and northern Quebec—in fact, all parts of Canada. For that, to this day, I am very grateful.

I certainly wish to recognize the outstanding contribution that the National Film Board has made to international cinema. The awards which it has won in virtually every film festival has put Canada, along with a number of other private producers, on the cinema map of the world. For that we are all grateful.

I simply wish to clarify these two points. The first point is our support for the National Film Board funding. The second is with respect to the concern of the president in terms of what appears to be his commitment to increasing significantly the amount of money for women's productions under NFB.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party that the discussion we are having relates to a misunderstanding, I believe—and I hope it is not a wilful misunderstanding—on the part of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), a member of his Party. In the document to which he has been referring he looked at children/youth and women's production on page 27 of the document entitled "National Film Board 1987-88 Estimates Part III Expenditure Plan". He is looking at planning priorities. It states quite clearly "priority areas" and then states "English Programming Financial Resource Allocation". That is all women's programming, not just Studio D.

The figures which I outlined this morning, and they are figures which I support, come out of a government department, the Department of Communications. For the Hon. Member's information the booklet is entitled:

[Translation]

The briefing notes for the meeting of May 21 1987, National Film Board, Department of Communications, Madam Speaker, and I can hardly think that errors could have been made in that presentation too. In those papers—

[English]

There is Studio D and Studio D. I have said it three times today, I think, and I would like the House Leader of the NDP to understand it. There have been ongoing increases every single year in Studio D. The problem that was being referred to by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood is with respect to the fact that there was an overrun, a budget miscalculation in one year which had to be made up the following year, as well as a carryover of projects and programs that were being developed. It is true, and I said this before, that there were certain producers who could not meet their program objectives because certain fiscal matters had to be attended to first. Whether it is one's mind or one's heart, there are still fiscal matters to which one has to attend.

The facts are clear. The budget for Studio D was not decreased. The women's programming on the English side includes a whole series of programming. Yes, according to the Estimates, programming did go down for the year 1985-86 from $2.5 million to $1.9 million and then increased to $2.1 million. So there has been a realignment of funds. Thus in the total score for women at the National Film Board we have, I am pleased to say, gone from $500,000, approximately, to $1.6 million.

When we look at the issue in terms of productions being at $6.5 million, as well as the $3.5 million on the French side, we are talking about close to $10 million. I do not think that one can chastise the National Film Board in that respect.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member this. Will his Party support the amendment of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood? What is his Party's position with respect to the National Film Board and the $100,000 which members of the New Democratic Party wish to cut from the budget? How does the Hon. Member intend to vote?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's interjection. I think it needs to be said again that the initiative to reduce the budget by $100,000 is symbolic. It is an attempt to send a message to someone, a message which is obviously not getting through to certain people. On the one hand I say that we would like to see the over-all budget significantly increased, but that is another question which we will discuss later. Today we are discussing the Estimates for the National Film Board for 1987-88. That is what we are doing. We are trying to send through this vote, which we will support, a clear message to the National Film Board, and presumably to responsible members of the Government and of the Official Opposition, that we would like to see a significant increase in moneys for women's production.

When I look at what was spent in 1985-86, with all due respect, and look at what the Government plans to spend this year in terms of production—and all I can go on is what is in the Estimates—I see a decrease. What is even more alarming is when I look at the French programming, it is not even mentioned. So if the Government plans to have some new initiatives, then for goodness sake this is the place it should be. In this way Members of Parliament could make an informed decision on whether or not we should support it. And when I look at the French Programming Financial Resource Allocation for 1987-88 and do not see it mentioned as a priority, then I have to be concerned and assume that it is not a priority. I cannot second-guess what someone somewhere might have as a priority if it is not in the Estimates. After all the Estimates estimate where the Government plans to spend money in certain areas. It is as simple as that.

I have listened to the interjections and I respect them. What I am saying is that I hope next year, in the best interest of all concerned, that when we look at the National Film Board we will see Studio D put aside in a special, separate section. In this way we would be able to see specifically what the funding was last year and what it will be this year and next year. I say that because there is obviously some confusion now. I will not make any suggestion as to where that confusion might originate. Nevertheless, it would be a significant way to improve the ability of Members of Parliament to follow through what the Government is actually expending in certain areas of this very important budget.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: I would like to have a division on this matter, Madam Speaker, for I cannot let the Hon. Member get away with that last comment. It is quite clear.

[English]

The Budget Summary is very much part of the Estimates. It was available to all Members of Parliament, including the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). It is very clear. For instance, the Hon. Member mentioned French programming, something which we instituted in 1986. For the budget of 1986-87 it states very clearly $159,000. For 1987-88 the figure is $404,000. It has not decreased, it has increased. The same applies to Studio D. In 1986-87 the figure was $579,880, which has been increased to $795,450 for 1987-88.

I think what has happened is that there is some confusion about the total budget of the National Film Board. The budget for Studio D, the English counterpart of the women's program, is not the whole program for women. The whole program for women at the National Film Board was worth in 1986-87, $1,174,000, and it will be receiving funding in 1987-88 of $1,678,430. That is definitely up and not down.

I believe the confusion lies in the reading of those figures to which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood referred. She came to a different conclusion, but this does not negate the fact that what has been suggested by the Hon. Member in this motion is to cut $100,000 from the budget, one-fifth of the budget allocated to Studio D. That is a large cut.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I would like to reply—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) would have the right to answer. Does he give the floor to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I do not have much to say in response to that. I heard the Hon. Member's comments and I accept them. I expect we should get on with the debate.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I simply want to respond very briefly. It has been stated many times by the Parliamentary Secretary that somehow my response is a personal one and that the head of the National Film Board has a different way of proceeding. She has said that I simply want to be autocratic about this. I wish to respond to the criticisms—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I am somewhat confused. The Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party just said that he had nothing to add in answer to my question, which means that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is now commenting on my remarks instead of the remarks of the Hon. Member who just spoke. I suggest that the debate is over and we could now put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There was one minute left in the questions and comments period after the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) ended his remarks. I therefore allowed, and I think it is quite proper to do so, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to speak during that one minute before we resume debate.

Supply

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, briefly, in the time that is left, I want to respond to the comments that are being continually made by the Parliamentary Secretary indicating that somehow my reaction is personal. The head of the NFB has the notion that he can do whatever he wants and he has chosen—

Mr. Hicks: Madam Speaker, the point made in the point of order which is on the floor is that no one is allowed to begin questioning and commenting on the remarks of a questioner. Under the provisions of the Standing Orders, I believe Hon. Members are only allowed to question and comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member who has just spoken on debate.

Ms. McDonald: I am making a comment. If I may continue with my comment—

Mrs. Mailly: On my speech, not his.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will allow the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to continue with her comment but I will warn her that it would be better for her to keep her comments related to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, in the one minute left, my comment is that the President of the NFB went to committee, made an explicit promise about Studio D and did not fulfil that promise. The Estimates very clearly show that.

Other comments that have been made throughout refer to sub-categories of the Estimates, project money in effect. Looking at the total amounts available, which is what I am referring to in the Estimates, it is very clear that there has been a decrease, contrary to the promise made by the head of the National Film Board to a Parliamentary Committee. I think that is a very serious matter to be fooling around with sub-categories where there is a different kind of trend when the general trend is such an unfavourable one and when I explicitly asked the head of the NFB if he would then grant an increase and he said no.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, but the time allowed has now elapsed. Is the House ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Ms. McDonald) which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 25, DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved that vote 25, in the amount of $662,941,000 under the Department in the Solicitor General—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Operating expenditures, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, be concurred in.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to explain why I put a motion on the Order Paper of the House giving notice of opposition to this vote . . . —when Hon. Members are finished talking, perhaps they would care to listen—Madam Speaker, I moved that $100,000 be subtracted from Vote 25 moved by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for the simple reason that at least a year ago, it was last June, we were asking questions in the House about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and its commitment to follow—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is very difficult for the Chair to understand the Hon. Member's statement. I am sure all other Hon. Members want to hear what their colleague has to say. The Chair would appreciate everyone's co-operation.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, of course the subject I want to discuss this afternoon is whether the RCMP, as a federal agency, realizes that the Official Languages Act applies to all federal agencies, including the RCMP.

Madam Speaker, there are problems in certain agencies, and today I would like to take this opportunity to discuss these and perhaps even try and correct some of the problems that exist at the RCMP.

Madam Speaker, there was a time when public opinion in this country was such that it was very difficult to introduce bilingualism in the public service in general and especially in certain Government agencies.

Today, although some reluctance still exists, I have the feeling, and I think the House will agree, that in our Canadian federation we are seeing a phenomenon that is the exact opposite of what we saw nearly twenty years ago in 1969, when the Official Languages Act was adopted. Today, we see in this country an increasing understanding, respect and generosity within the language groups and as a result, I think we have a far better understanding between the founding groups. Canada's duality is in better shape today.

As I said, attitudes have changed and the public at large has become ever more aware of this reality, acknowledging as well that it is necessary for the federal Government, its agencies included, to ensure full respect for this legislation, the Official Languages Act, and to promote it among Canadians generally.

The situation, Madam Speaker, more specifically with respect to the RCMP, is not particularly encouraging, something we have been witnessing for several months both in committee and in the House. RCMP officers are complaining, they write letters, and I could quote lengthy passages of the letter written and made public by C Division Assistant Commissioner J.E.J. Julien, an important letter which indeed raised a few eyebrows and bore the signature of many people, among others that of the C Division Assistant Commissioner, and which I think reflected the state of mind in Quebec.

In the rest of Canada, particularly here in the national capital, we could tell that the central administration was somewhat ill at ease.

At times it was difficult to make the RCMP Commissioner admit, in committee and elsewhere, that he was in the process of attempting to convince the force to show respect and follow the three major themes: the main theme being the language of service, that is the language of the institution which must serve the Canadian public; the language of work, of course, which is the right of every Canadian individual to work in the language of his or her choice, be it English in Quebec or French elsewhere, a worthy objective; and the third theme, which is fair representation.

Generally speaking, I think we have now reached what might be called an equitable level of about 26 or 27 per cent within the Public Service of Canada, and I am pleased about that.

However, I found it rather strange to hear and read that the RCMP was talking about reducing its objective, which was not 26 or 27 per cent, but 20 per cent, and which it had set in agreement with government authorities a few years ago, to some 12 or 14 per cent of the regular force, and this is why I would like to examine these events chronologically. When we asked questions in the House to the President of the Treasury Board to see whether he was aware of what was happening, he replied that this was simply being discussed at the departmental level and that this plan had not been officially approved.

I asked this question on October 16, 1986, Madam Speaker. The Minister then replied: "This plan has not been approved by Treasury Board, which means that it is simply being discussed at the departmental level. What you have there is a document which should unfortunately not have been made public."

However, I was not the one to make the document public. It came to me and to many others by mail in the Pony Express, which is the publication of the RCMP Staff Relations Branch. This publication said that the 20 per cent target set by the RCMP would be reduced to between 12 and 14 per cent for constables in the regular force. I wanted to know whether the Government had supported, endorsed or approved such a reduction.

According to the President of the Treasury Board, this decision had not been approved. I believed him.

Some time later, I put another question to the Solicitor General about the negotiations between the Treasury Board and the RCMP, which negotiations seemed to be confirmed by some correspondence I had received in an envelope, as I receive many other things, which correspondence was signed by the Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board, Mr. Aquilina. According to this correspondence, there had been discussions at the departmental level about a general plan to reduce the proportion of francophone staff from some 20 per cent to 12 or 14 per cent.

I simply made this correspondence public, and once more, I was told by the Government that these were only negotiations and dicussions between public servants and that there was no agreement in principle to reduce the proportion of francophone staff, in other words that there was no reason for concern.

Once more, I believed the Ministers. During the late show on November 20, I once more asked the same question to the Solicitor General who again confirmed that my concern was unfounded.

In the House, on December 18, I directed a number of questions to the President of the Treasury Board about the inconsistencies I had found in statements made by various Ministers, as reported by newspapers, and the policy of the RCMP; it was not quite clear who was telling the truth. I really wondered about the so-called secret meetings between the Treasury Board and the RCMP.

Madam Speaker, I asked the Solicitor General whether he had approved a comprehensive plan for the RCMP. Could we obtain a copy of it, to find out what the objectives and plans are? He did not give me a definite answer, but the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board told me at the time that he had asked the Solicitor General to prepare one. I said, okay, I'm going to wait patiently.

In the meantime, on January 30, I asked a question; on February 2, I asked another question. On May 5, I indicated to the House that the RCMP's admission and selection tests were somewhat irregular and that the French translation of the text which had been prepared in English could be detrimental to the applicants who wanted to join the police force.

On May 7, I lost patience and asked the President of the Treasury Board to come and say outright how things stood and what the policy or policies were, as well as the comprehensive plan. He replied: I asked . . . I am quoting the Minister, although I am not quoting him verbatim, because it would be too long—but he told me at the time that he had asked the Solicitor General to table a comprehensive plan as soon as possible.

Again, I thought that he was telling the truth and I showed restraint. I told myself: Finally, we are going to get a plan, for the President of the Treasury Board has asked a Minister to provide him with such a plan, and all the doubts raised here in the House and in the committee were unfounded. In Montreal, however, the Solicitor told newspapermen that the Government would reestablish the objective set before for civil servants at between 12 and 14 per cent, to 20 per cent. Madam Speaker, I then asked the Solicitor General why, having denied for six months that there had been a reduction, claiming that there had been nothing but discussions, he had reestablished the 20 per cent rate. Then, I realized that someone was confused. Why should the objective he set again at 20 per cent for the RCMP when it had been denied all along that there had been any reduction. So I draw your attention to an article in the Journal de Montréal of May 14, from which I quote as follows:

> The Conservative minister intends to release the contents of the report—

This is the report he had been asked to prepare by Treasury Board.

> —as soon as it is printed.

So he will release the report. I quote again:

> For the time being, he will give no information other than to mention that he is willing to take steps to increase to 20 per cent the proportion of bilingual RCMP personnel, compared to the 12 or 13 per cent objective set by the management of that police force.

So, I had good reason to worry. This means that what we have been raising in the House for the past six months was based on some element of truth since the Solicitor General has said that he would raise the objective to 20 per cent and that he would release the report, the corporate plan for the organisation for which he is accountable in the House, as soon as it is printed.

Madam Speaker, today is June 11, and I have yet to see the report, I have yet to see the overall plan. I feel the Solicitor General should make it public, tell us exactly where we stand, tell us exactly where we are going on that matter, thereby meeting our most basic requirement, which is to get information in this House. Hon. Members here after all are capable of doing as much work as other people, but we must have the information needed to do our job. When we are being delayed, when we are being deprived of information, we have to insist of course.

In the matter of the RCMP, it is my view that the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Standing Committee of this House on Official Languages, individual Members, not only myself but interested Members from the Committee on Official Languages from all political persuasions in this House, are entitled to a degree of consideration, a degree of information sharing. If, as the Governement suggests, they now have an overall plan and all that remains to be done is to print it—as they suggested almost a month ago—we are still waiting for it. So I told myself: Today is supply day, the last day where we are going to appropriate to the RCMP a substantial amount for operations, some $600 million. I told myself: Darn it, I would like to know where that report is, and from the RCMP Commissionner, what they are going to do to satisfy us as far as overall plans on officials languages are concerned.

So the first thing is this: Where is the report? I am asking this now. If someone in this House can respond on behalf of the Government and meet that request, I will sit down, Madam Speaker, I will read the plan, and along with other Members I would like to discuss it. I am not the only one to ask for some clarification.

I have here the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, the 1986 Annual Report—should you look in the 1985, 1984 or 1983 Report, you would find the same thing—where it says that despite improvements in the RCMP they still have a long way to go. I would like to quote from page 125 of the 1986 Annual Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages:

> Even though the Royal Canadian Mounted Police took a few intersting initiatives in 1986, some of its actions may well delay achievement of linguistic equality.

Madam Speaker, I could read what the Commissioner of Official Languages has to say about the RCMP and the official languages, but I invite all the Members do so it, it is not very long, only about four pages.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, it is clear, Madam Speaker, that there is a real need in some organisations to being the managers up to date. There are some officers, not just in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but also in the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, in the Correctional Service of Canada and in some other agencies, some top civil servants, people in managerial positions who, in 1987, still think that the Official Languages Act passed by this House in 1969 is only some form of regulation to be applied as such.

I do not like having to say so, but this is the law of the land. It must be followed and applied, and along with other Members of this House, I shall insist that it be applied literally and that it be improved.

I shall close by saying, because it is important for Canadians to know this, that this Act has been in existence for 18 years and it needs to be improved and brought up to date. In 1987, it should reflect the views which my friend the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and myself believe Canadians hold today, that is that there should be true equality, not better treatment for one group or another, but equal treatment. I would like the RCMP to understand that I am not singling it out. I am using the RCMP as an example today, but there are many others I could use. The Official Languages Act is not just a series of regulations, it is one of the basic laws of this country. I hope that it will be amended to give it some teeth.

I hope that it can be made to reflect what I believe to be the general view in Canada about the issue of official languages. There is an element of maturity in this country nowadays. There are no, or at least very few, groups which oppose the French fact or the "Frogs" as we used to be called. There are very few of them. The same is true for the Quebec anglophones. I believe that, in the public service in general, as I said earlier, Madam Speaker—

[English]

When we speak about official languages in Quebec, I think that we have some grounds which we can put forward in terms of fairness and gains which can be made. I for one think that the Public Service of Canada, for example, reflects the linguistic balance of the country in terms of per centages. But it is not fair in terms of regional representation. I think that the English in Quebec are not getting a fair shake in the Public Service of Canada. I think that the Francophones outside Quebec are not getting a fair shake in terms of fair representation among the——ranks of the Public Service of Canada. I think much remains to be done, and that is what we want: not more and not less. And when we asked representatives of the RCMP to try and listen to what we had to say, and when they appeared before the committee, on the first day of the hearings held by the Committee on Official Languages—a committee of the House—with a document in one language only—

An Hon. Member: In English only.

Mr. Gauthier: —and we had to say: Just a minute, according to one of the Standing Orders of this House, any document tabled by the Clerk or the Speaker of the House must be tabled in both official languages— A translation was done practically on the spot, but it was a translation of a document that had been prepared in one language only by the RCMP.

That started the meeting off on the wrong foot, Madam Speaker. It wasn't that easy. We had to be firm and tell Commissioner Simmons: Sir, sorry about that but you are a couple of years out of date. So the document was translated. Not a very good translation, since there were seven grammar mistakes and twelve spelling mistakes, but at least we had a translation an hour and a quarter after the committee's proceedings had started.

Madam Speaker, I want to end on a positive note. Today I think there is a new attitude in Canada towards the official languages. I think that when our legislation is amended to reflect the Canada of 1987, not just the RCMP but all Government agencies should act accordingly. And finally, and this was the purpose of my speech, Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud):

> That the motion be amended by striking out the amount of $662,941,000 and substituting the amount of $662,841,000 therefor.

—or a reduction of $100,000, which represents the salary of the RCMP Commissioner.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A period of questions and comments follows the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The Hon. Member for Huron—Bruce (Mr. Cardiff).

[English]

Mr. Cardiff: Madam Speaker, I would just like to make one comment with respect to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He made various comments about the Solicitor General not providing information on official languages. Perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware of this, and I wish to make him aware of it. Is he aware that the SIRC report dealing with this issue will be tabled within the next few days?

Mr. Gauthier: No, I was not aware of that, Madam Speaker. That goes exactly to the gist of my intervention today. It was to ask where this report is, a report which was asked for by Treasury Board and the Minister for the last three or four weeks. I have been promised the report. The Minister said in Montreal some time in May that he was waiting for the report to be printed. That report is very important to me. It gives us the objectives, the plan and it sets forth in the years to come what the RCMP stands for in terms of language policy. That is basically why I oppose what is before us today. It was so that I would have the assurance of the Government that it would indeed make the report public.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I have just a couple of points to make. I participated in the Official Languages Committee when this subject was covered. It is difficult not to support the concept put forward by the previous speaker. The dilemma, of course, is that everyone in the House asks that Parliament be respected and that linguistic fairness and the targets outlined by the Parliament of Canada be respected by not only the RCMP but by all other agencies in the country. So we completely support that principle. We regret that the RCMP has not been able to move in a more satisfactory manner toward linguistic equality.

Back in the early 1980s we saw a period of time in which the country was in a deep recession. At that time very few people left the RCMP and recruitment was very low. Indeed, the Government of the day provided very few resources to enable the RCMP to meet its targets. Unfortunately, the RCMP did recruit quite a number of Francophones during this period of time to the exclusion of many other areas that had to be addressed.

It was pointed out in the committee, and has been pointed out in the country over the past few years, that the RCMP functions primarily in western Canada and in the North. Many Anglophones who had exceptionally good qualifications were denied access to the RCMP while the organization tried to meet its linguistic commitments in a period of very low recruitment.

One must come back to the Government of the day in that period from 1980 to 1984 and ask this. Why were additional resources not put aside so that the RCMP could meet its targets? Why was it not insisted upon that special resources be put aside to recruit and to meet those targets?

The same Government deprived the RCMP of resources to meet other important areas. The RCMP functions in native communities. It provides law enforcement services to native communities in the North and in the western provinces. What we have here is a very serious under representation of native people and of women. The RCMP provides law enforcement in areas in which I think it is absolutely important that the number of women officers be increased. The force deals with issues such as sexual abuse of children and rape and assault.

It is a situation in which the proportion of women for effective law enforcement be increased for two reasons. The first is that in many cases they deal more effectively in that area of offences. The second is that in terms of striking some form of fairness and equality for the participation of women that more initiative has to be put into recruiting women for the RCMP. Indeed, in these years I personally raised matters with officials of the RCMP because in the area of the country I represent there is a desperate need for women members, both with respect to the point of equality and with respect to their ability to deal more effectively in some areas of law enforcement.

We have lost the initiative in three important areas because the Government of the day failed to provide the resources to the RCMP in periods of low recruitment to make those programs work. Indeed, the same kind of shortage of resources is presented today in the Budget of the present Government. The present Government has turned a blind eye to the issue of allowing the RCMP to meet those targets with additional resources, especially with respect to these primary and important areas: increasing linguistic equality and the recruiting of more women and native people so that they can be present in the communities in which the RCMP provide law enforcement services.

I for one support the principle put forward by my colleague who serves on the Official Languages Committee in a very distinguished and effective manner. This point must be addressed and we support it, but we must not lose sight of the need to recruit more women and native people into the RCMP.

Certainly the issue of multicultural representation is critical as well. The Government of the day must provide resources to meet the targets and it must provide resources that are specifically targeted to aid in that area of recruitment.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to that. I think there are grounds for the kind of grievance expressed, particularly by western Canadians. I for one believe that there have been some errors in balancing recruitment over the years, and it goes both ways.

In his comments to the committee, Commissioner Simmonds recognized that indeed the RCMP is a national force and it must recruit nationally, but it must also meet its provincial contract requirements and accept the fact that a large portion of the force is mobile. Many members of the force are called upon to spend two or three years in one place and then have to move either because of the requirements of the force, because of experience or sometimes because of promotions. I accept that. I think over the years there has been some imbalance, but in the last few years the recruitment of Francophones and Anglophones has been pretty well equal to proportional population representation and of course to the workload of the force.

I am told that in 1983-84, 65 per cent of the only 84 members who were recruited were Francophones. Of course, there were only 84 members recruited that year because there was a down-sizing of the force. In the last year, there were 542 recruits and 26 per cent of those were Francophones. There has been a re-establishment of the proportions.

I understand the grievance of the western provinces. I understand they feel that they should be well represented, and I accept that. However, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, we have a long way to go to ensure regional representation and allow both the English-speaking in Quebec and the Francophones outside Quebec to participate fully in this national public service. We understand the difficulty. The grievance is well put and we will try to work toward re-establishing some equity.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) opposing the $662,941 operating expenditures proposed in the RCMP Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988. Given the Hon. Member's long-standing interest in official languages issues and particularly in those matters pertaining to the official languages program of the RCMP, I would like to take this opportunity to provide to the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members some indication of the current status of official languages in the RCMP and of the direction the force will be going in the future.

A balanced assessment of the RCMP with respect to official languages will recognize both accomplishments as well as areas where continued efforts are required. With respect to accomplishments, the force has been highly successful in developing innovative approaches to delivering bilingual policing services to the public in the vast unilingual areas served by the RCMP through the use of the unit bilingual complement concept.

The unit bilingual complement, or UBC, approach ensures that in each of the 276 significant demand areas served by the force, at least one officer is available to provide the public with bilingual service. Approximately 90 per cent of all UBCs are fully staffed with competent bilingual personnel. Efforts are continuing to improve practices so that the public is aware that service is available in both languages in these predominantly unilingual regions of Canada.

In bilingual regions such as northern Ontario, New Brunswick and the metropolitan areas of Quebec where both official languages groups represent a sizeable portion of the population, well over 80 per cent of serving RCMP members are bilingual. These figures reflect a significant commitment by the RCMP to offering, where required, service to the public in both official languages.

I am of course aware that the Government's official languages program consists of more than just service to the public. It also seeks to improve the language of work environment and to provide for equitable participation of both language groups. The status of these other aspects of the official languages program of the RCMP has experienced a gradual but sustained improvement over the last decade. I use the word "gradual" advisedly as incremental change is the only type of change possible in a career organization such as the RCMP. This is particularly so when it pertains to changes to the profile of RCMP members themselves.

Francophone participation in the RCMP stood at approximately 9.8 per cent in 1976 when the official languages program was first established. Since that year, the RCMP, through a vigorous recruitment program in which bilingual skills were given a very high priority, has increased the number of Francophones on average by 0.5 per cent per year. These results were achieved as a direct result of RCMP recruitment efforts and are evidence of the force's commitment in this area.

I should also add that in addition to recruitment, another reason for the advances made by the RCMP in increasing its bilingual resources and Francophone participation has been language training. The recruit official language training program was introduced in 1977, and since commencement, over 400 unilingual recruits, equitably divided between English and French-speaking candidates, have been given training in the other official language.

Having referred to areas in which the RCMP has made substantive progress, including the development and implementation of the UBC concept in unilingual areas, a proactive and progressive recruitment program designed to support official languages objectives and a small but effective cadet language training program, I will now touch upon three areas where further work is necessary.

The Commissioner of Official Languages has commented upon the number of bilingually designated positions in the RCMP in which the incumbent does not yet fully meet the language requirements of the position. In headquarters, for example, just over 50 per cent of bilingual positions are staffed by members who do not meet the linguistic requirements of the position. This can, of course, be explained by the fact that headquarters is made up of members drawn from the regions, most of whom served in English-speaking provinces. Nevertheless, this points to the need for the force to increase beyond its immediate requirements the size of its bilingual resources. A substantial pool of bilingual members is necessary if the force is to maintain a flexible policy of promotions and transfers while at the same time maintaining a high level of bilingual capability at headquarters.

It might also be stated that the Francophone participation rate is both a success and a shortcoming. It is a success in comparison to where the force was in the past but a shortcoming in view of where it wants to be in the future. Francophone members of the force still comprise less than 15 per cent of the regular member category, exclusive of special constables, a considerable distance from the full participation objective of 20.8 per cent for Francophones which the force set for itself in 1978.

These and other shortcomings have been referred to by the Commissioner of Official Languages and by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier during committee hearings on official languages. As the Hon. Member is aware, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) has submitted proposals to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for changing some aspects of the RCMP official languages program.

These proposals are designed to address the shortcomings which I have just mentioned. It is also worth noting that these proposals would build on the successes of the existing official languages program.

I am speaking here of the UBC concept which has been demonstrated as being a flexible and valid approach to providing bilingual service in unilingual areas. I am also referring to the recruit official language training program, and I believe that I can safely say at this point that there will be no dimunition at this time to the long-term commitment of the force to provide for equitable participation of both official language groups.

I am not at liberty at this time to go into the details of the proposals of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). However, I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will be hearing from the Solicitor General concerning these matters in the not too distant future.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment negatived.

The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. de Cotret), which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent for the following proposition: That there be no further debate, and that Motions Nos. 3, 4, and 5, and the amendments thereto, will go on division, presumably with the Government winning the voice vote and the Opposition losing the voice vote. However, that the recorded division that was just taken be applied to the unopposed votes showing on the Order Paper. In addition, that there be no further debate or amendment on any stage of Bill C-65, an Act for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, including Committee of the Whole, but that the same recorded division just taken be applied in all instances where a recorded division could be taken in order that those of us who are here will benefit from an addition to our voting records. When third reading is completed, the House has agreed we will call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that indeed there have been negotiations and I concur with the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

I would like to ask a question of the President of the Treasury Board. Can he assure the House that the Bill as presented is in proper form and in keeping with tradition?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am happy to inform my colleague that the form of the Bill is the same as in previous years.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I was late arriving for the vote and I would like my name recorded with the Government on all the recorded votes to follow.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, essentially I want to concur with the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary. I would like to propose one change, and that is that Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5 as presented receive the vote that we just experienced on this division but that the amendments proposed to 3, 4, and 5 be opposed on division. That would enable Members to obtain three additional votes and I think it is appropriate that we do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, we are in a position to agree with that.

• (1820)

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Madam Speaker, I, too, like my friend from British Columbia, was on the phone. I thought I would be able to participate in the vote. I would like to have my vote counted on the government side for all the divisions that were agreed upon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The votes of the Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) and the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) will be included in the divisions on the government side.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, I too would have voted on the Government side.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The same will apply to the Member for Trois-Rivieres (Mr. Vincent).

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 5, DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 5, in the amount of $133,589,000 under the Department of the Solicitor General—Canadian Security Intelligence Service—program expenditure, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, be concurred in.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, in each case you have just mentioned you read the main motion, but not the amendment, the conclusion being that the amendment must be voted on before the main motion. First we dispose of the amendment and then of the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We realize that after the motion of the Minister there were notices of opposition to certain motions. However, since there was no debate the notice could not be moved as such and therefore we cannot vote on a notice which has not been moved, on a notice which did not become a request for amendment.

[English]

Mr. King: Madam Speaker, I would like to ensure that my vote is recorded with the Government on the subsequent divisions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The vote of the Member will be counted on the government side in the following divisions.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN MAIN ESTIMATES, 1987-88

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, laid upon the Table Monday, March 2, 1987, except the items disposed of earlier this day and less the amounts voted in Interim Supply, be concurred in.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House that there have been discussions amongst the House Leaders of the Parties with respect to today's business. Notwithstanding the fact that yesterday I indicated that we would be dealing with Bill C-55, amendments to the Immigration Act, there has been a disposition to move to another order of business standing in the name of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It is a government motion for the establishment of a Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee to consider and report on the 1987 Constitutional Accord.

When that is completed we could then go on to the other business which was originally designated for today, namely, Bill C-55. I think if you seek the concurrence of the House, you will find that there will be unanimous consent to proceed in that manner.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what the Government House Leader said reflects discussions we have had. If unanimous consent is asked to put the motion to set up the Joint Committee on the constitutional amendments, we will certainly agree.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we concur.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENTS ORDERS

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Justice) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider and report on the "1987 Constitutional Accord, signed in Ottawa on June 3, 1987, by the First Ministers of Canada", copies of which were tabled in the Senate and the House of Commons on June 3, 1987;

That twelve Members of the House of Commons and five Members of the Senate be the Members of the Special Joint Committee, such Members on the part of the House of Commons to be designated no later than seven sitting days after the adoption of this motion;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its Members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings or of proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the Committee submit its report not later than September 14, 1987, provided that, if the House is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons and with the Clerk of the Senate;

That substitution be authorized, for Members from the House of commons, from a list of alternates to be provided to the Joint Chairmen of the Special Joint Committee by a representative of each party at the first meeting of the Committee, such list of alternates to contain no more than twice the number of Members of the House of Commons who are Members of the Special Joint Committee representing each party in the House;

That the quorum of the Committee be eight Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when six Members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, five Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to express my appreciation to Members opposite for their co-operation in allowing this motion to come forth, providing unanimous consent to allow that to happen. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), constantly reminds me of the fact he has more seniority than myself. He tried to assert that again today, but I appreciate his courtesy in yielding the floor to me under the circumstances. I am sure he will have an opportunity to speak later on this day.

I am very pleased to address the motion which is before us this morning. The motion, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is presented in the name of the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who is in Winnipeg this morning on Government business. I, therefore, have been given the opportunity to present this motion on his behalf.

It is timely that this debate commence this morning. As I said earlier, I am gratified by the co-operation and goodwill which has prevailed in this Chamber with regard to this very important proposal. I would like to acknowledge again the support shown by both Opposition Parties, both of which have agreed that this debate take place today. This co-operative action, indeed, underlines the great significance that Parties on both sides of the House can play and are playing in regard to this most historic Accord.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the 11 First Ministers of Canada signed the Constitutional Accord on June 3 and thereby committed the Government of Canada, and the 10 provincial Governments, to a course of action which will effect a set of constitutional amendments and bring Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional family. All Canadians view this as a very important step in the constitutional development of our nation, one which has captured the imagination of all Canadians and one which has received the support of all Parties in this House.

As you know, Sir, the House of Commons has already played a major role in the developments leading up to the signing of the constitutional Accord. On May 1, the day after the Meech Lake Agreement was reached, statements were made in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I should say that at that time the Prime Minister made his position very clear in his response to questions about how we intended to proceed with regard to the process of this very important matter. I draw to Hon. Members' attention his statement which was made in response to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when seeking clarification about the process that would be established. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at page 5615 of Hansard, and I quote:

> At all times the House will be fully advised and there will be full opportunity for participation and debate on all aspects of any proposal.

This debate today is evidence and proof positive that that commitment is being fulfilled.

Again, in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), the Prime Minister said at page 5616 of Hansard:

> We intend to consider any suggestions that will enable Hon. Members and the House to be as actively involved as possible and will also enable the House to provide moral leadership for the country and for the other Governments involved in the decision-making process.

I think those are very, very important commitments and those commitments are indeed being fulfilled.

On May 11 we debated the principles of the Meech Lake Accord. Again I would like to pay tribute to all those who engaged in that discussion and to acknowledge the important contribution made by Members on both sides of the House during the course of that debate. I should also remind Hon. Members here that at that time we were merely debating the principles. The draft which we now have before us in the form of a proposed constitutional amendment is part and parcel of the drafting which took place with respect to the principles and, indeed, incorporated many of the ideas and suggestions which were raised during the course of the debate, both in this House and outside the House.

I wish to say to my colleagues that their respective expressions of support contributed to the cohesion which ultimately prevailed on June 3, 1987. It is therefore fitting and proper that Parliament now review the substance of the Constitutional Accord to ensure a broader understanding by all Canadians of this constitutional initiative. It is only appropriate that Parliament provide a forum where interested individuals have the opportunity to enter into the national discussion.

The Government accordingly proposed that a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider and report on the 1987 Constitutional Accord signed in Ottawa on June 3, 1987, by the First Ministers of Canada. It is proposed that this Joint Committee be comprised of 12 Members of the House of Commons and five Members of the Senate, co-chaired by one Member of each Chamber. It is fitting that we consider the 1987 Constitutional Accord in a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons and fulfil our responsibilities in the spirit of co-operation which led the First Ministers to an agreement first at Meech Lake and finally here in Ottawa on June 3, and within the historic context of the constitutional discussions.

The committee would have the power to strike such subcommittees as are deemed advisable. The committee would have the opportunity to conduct hearings and receive written and oral submissions. It is proposed as well that the committee be authorized to conduct hearings unconstrained by any adjournments which may be called for during the summer months. Further, this joint committee would be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting as is considered appropriate.

We recall that in 1981 a successful contribution was made by a joint committee in relation to our constitutional endeavours at that time. We again want to establish a joint committee to continue this important work. Finally, it is proposed that this joint committee would submit its report not later than September 14, 1987.

The provisions of the constitutional Accord are wide-ranging and thus of fundamental importance to all Canadians. It is no surprise, therefore, that editorial commentary has been extensive and that a wide range of associations have spoken out and that public interest is high. That is as it should be in a democratic country such as ours.

A special joint committee, with representatives from both Houses of Parliament and all Parties, will provide, we believe, the most extensive and appropriate vehicle for this national dialogue on our further constitutional development. Representatives of organized interests and interested citizens alike will have the opportunity to express their views at one time and in one place to a wide cross-section of parliamentarians. I believe this will encourage a continuity and a coherence to the important work of Parliament on this matter. In short, a special joint committee will provide a truly national focal point for our deeper understanding of the constitutional Accord.

I should like to review for a moment the events which led us to this point. Members will recall an earlier historic step in this evolution. In April 1982 our Constitution was patriated from London with its own all-Canadian amending formula and with a Charter which guarantees our fundamental rights and freedoms.

Unfortunately, this achievement was flawed because Quebec, which represents over a quarter of the Canadian population, did not accept the legitimacy of the political accord which had been signed by the Prime Minister and the Premiers of the nine provinces in November 1981.

[Translation]

In a speech delivered in Sept-Îles in 1984 the Prime Minister promised that if his Party were elected to office one of his priorities would be to conclude an agreement which would make it possible for Quebec to join the Constitution with honour and enthusiasm. He also stated he would take a different approach to federal-provincial relations, on the basis of national reconciliation.

[English]

That is the end of that, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Encore.

Mr. Nystrom: Chukay, chukay!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am wondering how our reporters will interpret that comment.

In 1985 the Liberal Party of Quebec published its conditions for adhering to the Constitution of Canada as part of its electoral program. In early 1986, following its election, the Government of Quebec in a major public statement set out these conditions in considerable detail. During the course of 1986 and in the early months of this year, both the Liberal Party of Canada and the New Democratic Party of Canada adopted positions concerning Quebec in the Constitution. These processes generated widespread public interest and comment.

In the year leading up to the Meech Lake Agreement there have been extensive discussions and negotiations among the federal and provincial Governments at the level of First Ministers and senior officials. The next step in bringing the First Ministers' agreement to fruition lies with our federal and provincial legislatures. Unlike the 1982 constitutional amendments when only Parliament had to adopt a resolution before the amendment was passed by the British Parliament, the current proposed changes will be presented for debate and adoption in every provincial and federal legislative chamber.

I would expect that members of all Parties in their approach to the deliberations of the committee to be established by this motion, and in reflecting on the representations which are made before the committee, will not allow whatever concerns they may have with certain particular aspects of the amendment resolution to obscure the main goal which we all share, namely, the voluntary and complete adherence by the Government and the people of Quebec to the Constitution of Canada.

In considering proposals for changes to the amendment resolution or for additional elements which are not reflected in it, we should be mindful that the constitutional Accord itself provides for a subsequent and continuing set of constitutional discussions to address other constitutional issues at annual conferences of First Ministers on the Constitution. The first is scheduled to take place before the end of next year.

We must also not lose sight of the fact that if the amendment resolution is not approved by Parliament and all the legislatures, these subsequent constitutional discussions will not take place because Quebec will continue to decline to participate in them. Canada's constitutional development in these circumstances would be frozen, probably for many years to come, and it would be difficult to overstate the serious consequences to national unity if that were to occur, especially since we have progressed so far in recent months.

A final factor to consider in approaching the deliberations of the parliamentary committee is that by virtue of the amending formula contained in the Constitution Act, 1982, neither Parliament nor any of the other legislatures, nor Governments acting alone, can bring about alterations in the amendments proposed in the constitutional resolution. The amending procedure requires the approval of all legislatures. Thus, if Parliament or any other legislature moved to amend the resolution, the entire process of securing the approval of the various legislatures would have to be recommenced.

The constitutional Accord stands as a tribute to a shared vision of a revitalized and more harmonious federation—a better Canada, one where the Province of Quebec will play an integral part. Indeed, the constitutional Accord is a true reflection of the Government's commitment since 1984 to establish a new period of national reconciliation with greater harmony and co-operation between the two levels of Government.

With this Accord we are indeed a stronger and more united nation. The efforts of this joint committee will require the support and goodwill of both the House of Commons and the Senate. I am confident that the members of the joint committee will receive this support and be equal to their task. I have every confidence that their activities will be guided by the generosity and the openness which have characterized the constitutional deliberations of the House to date. The work of this committee will constitute an important step forward in the constitutional evolution of our nation.

Therefore I urge all Members of the House to support the motion before us today so that this important process can begin without delay.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, it is not my intention to delay the debate, and I apologize to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who I know would like to make a speech. However, I have a concern about the resolution before us. I would like an answer, perhaps not now, but some assurance from the Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) that the committee would be in a position to consider having hearings in the Northwest Territories and Yukon and perhaps in any province which does not set up its own public hearings.

Public participation was a main aspect of what was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his speech to the nation on the Langevin agreement. I believe it is important, especially for the two Territories, that there be an opportunity for citizens who cannot afford to come to Ottawa to make public presentations on their concerns.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the desire has been to try to focus this debate in the nation's capital, as was done before. I think to some extent we are the beneficiaries of some experience that took place in earlier years, where I think the focus of the constitutional process was clearly evident in Room 200 of the West Block. My sense is that there can be provisions made for people who want to travel, if the committee so desires to have certain representatives appear before it.

It is not the intention of the Government to allow the committee to travel, for a number of reasons. We think the logistics and the difficulties in organizing such travel would cause problems which would be almost insurmountable. However, certainly from the standpoint of accommodating people who may want to be heard, I think there can be arrangements made which would hopefully facilitate and satisfy groups such as the Hon. Member indicated.

Mr. Nickerson: Madam Speaker, my question is very much the same, but it is necessary to have it on record.

I am very pleased with the motion before us today. I hope that it receives speedy passage. I think the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is quite correct when he says that it is not necessary to take this committee through the length and breadth of the country and that the debate should and ought to be centered in Ottawa. However, I would like him to give an assurance, on the record, that there is nothing in this motion that would prevent representatives of the Governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon from appearing before this committee and stating their case. As we all know, before the Langevin Accord can be acceptable to the people in the north, there are certain changes which ought to be made.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the short answer to that is, it is almost axiomatic that they would have the opportunity to appear, if they so desire.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I understand that there are a number of provinces in which public hearings may not be held. If all provinces were to have public hearings, then the necessity of taking a committee across the country would seem to me to be entirely alleviated. Can the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) indicate to us at this time which provinces, to the best of his knowledge, will be holding public hearings? Would he entertain a suggestion that in those areas of the country where people will not have the opportunity to come forward and to speak to a level of elected representatives that one might contemplate a subcommittee at least of this committee travelling to that particular province?

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, although well-intentioned, poses a bit of a hypothetical question. As he said, some provinces may not hold hearings. We are not sure of that. There have been discussions—

Mr. Murphy: How about Alberta?

Mr. Mazankowski: The preliminary indication is that that may not take place. But I am not sure that that is the final answer. So it is very difficult to make any assessment as to whether all provinces or some provinces will be holding such public hearings.

To some extent the committee will be the master of its own house. It has the opportunity of setting up subcommittees to do certain elements of work. Perhaps that might be something that may be considered further on down the road.

I want to repeat again that I think it is very important, given the importance of this issue, and to ensure that the focus is centred around a committee that is genuinely disposed of dealing with this issue, to have things concentrated in one area. As evidenced by the experience of the past, it worked quite well. There was a fair amount of accommodation and give and take. I am not sure whether there was any great outcry for the committee at that time to travel across the country, I know that it was suggested. I think that, generally speaking, it was felt that everyone who wanted to be heard during the course of that process was heard. That would be our intention in this particular case as well.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, if I may say so, I find that a rather garbled response.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was a garbled question.

Mr. Johnston: I do not think that it was especially garbled. The point is that when it is learned that there will not be public hearings in those provinces will the Deputy Prime Minister give his support to the concept of sending at least a subcommittee of this committee to those provinces? In this way those Canadians who cannot afford to travel up to 3,000 miles to appear before this committee will have the opportunity to exchange their ideas with their elected representatives.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is a learned constitutional expert. He knows very well that this requires the deliberation of this House. The constitutional amending process has to be dealt with by this House. The constitutional amending process has to be dealt with in each and every one of the legislatures. Is he suggesting that we as a federal Parliament should be interfering with and interposing our will upon the people of the provinces who now, through their Premiers and Governments, may very well express a desire to hold public hearings or not? Why does the Hon. Member want to be so interfering? It is part of his centralist attitude, his centralist heritage. He continues to live in the dream world that father knows best in central Canada. Again, this is a clear example of the difference and division of Canada. He sees it through the telescope of that central vision. We see a more diversified and more decentralized Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, the only conclusion I can draw from the Deputy Prime Minister's remarks is that he does not think Canadians necessarily have a right to be heard. It has nothing to do with a centralized country. This is a big country. People would like the opportunity to make their views known to their elected representatives. If they are denied that right at the provincial level, it seems to me that this committee of Parliament would be perfectly justified in having a subcommittee travel to the regions to hear those views expressed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, that is absolute nonsense. If the Hon. Member behaves he may very well be selected as a member of the committee and he can make that pitch before the committee. But, by the way he has been acting, I doubt very much that his Leader will put him on the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I am rising on behalf of my Party to support this motion. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has made clear, we are in support of the basic purpose of the constitutional Accord which is to have Quebec formally sign and accept the Constitution. Therefore we intend to vote in favour of the Accord. However, we believe that it can be improved upon. It is our intention to propose a number of amendments next fall, or whenever, after the proposed joint committee completes it work, the required resolution to amend the Constitution comes before this House for consideration and debate.

It is in keeping with our view that improvement is needed and possible, that we concur in the proposal to send the Accord for study and for a report to this House to a special joint committee. The procedure that was followed in 1980 and 1981 which resulted in the patriation of the Constitution, along with the establishment of a Charter of Rights, was initiated by the establishment of a special joint committee of the House and the Senate. That committee held televised hearings in Ottawa over a number of months. It heard scores of witnesses and it proposed a number of important improvements to the constitutional proposals at that time.

No one can deny that the special joint committee was a positive exercise in participatory democracy. It is my hope and expectation that having learned from that experience the presently proposed special joint committee will be permitted to proceed and its work will be looked upon with an open mind by the Government and by all sides of the House with similarly beneficial results. We expect that this committee will hear as broad a range of witnesses as its predecessor heard in 1980 and 1981.

We also support this motion in the expectation that if, as in 1980 and 1981, the committee should find that the time-frame set down in the terms of reference is too restrictive the Government will, as was done last time, look favourably upon a request for an extension of its life. I am referring in this case, of course, to the life of the special joint committee, not that of the Government.

It may be that this will not be required. But on an issue as important as the structure of our federal system there is no need—in fact it would be wrong—for the matter to be dealt with in undue haste. There is a definite need for due deliberation. After all, we are dealing with the basic law, the fundamental law of the country, the law on which all other law is based.

The Accord raises a number of issues that the committee will have to address and on which it will have to hear witnesses. We have already raised some of these in the House and we will raise others over the coming weeks.

As we have said, there are implications with respect to the Accord for the rights of our aboriginal peoples. The aboriginal peoples need assurances that this Accord will not mean any backward movement in the progress they expect in terms of their own hopes and aspirations. It should be possible to move these hopes and aspirations forward through the Constitution as it may turn out to be amended by the Accord.

The committee must carefully examine the implications of the Accord for minorities in our country. We believe that the aspirations of Canadians are, for a bilingual and a multicultural society, that while recognizing regional or provincial distinctiveness, especially the distinctive character of Quebec, it should also provide nation-wide guarantees of rights for all regardless of ethnic or national origin.

Similarly, Madam Speaker, we must examine the Accord in the light of the aspirations for eventual provincial status by our northern territories. The people of these territories will want assurances that the Accord does not spell an end to their aspirations for eventual full participation in confederation as provinces.

We will also want to examine fully the implications of the Accord for the powers and the role of the federal Government. There is a national interest that our federal structures, our federal Government, must serve and that the public, that all Canadians, expect to be served by national institutions. To this end as well the committee will have to examine carefully the implications of the Accord for the developmental role of our federal institutions, our national Government. We must make certain that our national institutions, our national Government, remain able to serve the national interest now and as conditions change in the future.

These are but a few of the matters which the committee must address. In the interest of having this motion decided on by the House and in getting the committee going, I will not go into greater detail about the matters the committee must address at this time, but I wish to assure the House that my Party will participate actively in the committee in order to bring forward our views and proposals as to how the Accord could and should be improved.

I also want to say a word about the effect of the vote of the other place yesterday to have its own committee to consider the constitutional amendments arising from the Accord. It is clear that the decision of the other place does not preclude or prevent the other place from taking part in the joint committee being proposed today. There is a clear precedent for this which was established in 1978. The Government of the day at that time proposed a wide-ranging package of constitutional amendments, popularly referred to as Bill C-60. At that time the Senate agreed to take part in a joint committee with the House, proposed by the House, to study the Bill C-60 proposals, but at the same time it adopted a motion to have its own committee study of the matter. It was pointed out that Bill C-60 dealt with a wide range of proposals for constitutional change, including, among other matters, a Bill of Rights, but also including proposals for change in the method of appointment of the Senate and its form and role.

Bill C-60, as I recall, Madam Speaker, proposed that the provinces would have the sole power of appointment of half of the Senators who would be members of what would be called a "House of the Provinces". The Senators felt that since the changes in the form and function of the Senate were very much at issue, they should take part in the joint committee with the House, but also have their own committee.

This is similar to the situation today when the amendments proposed in the Accord would bring changes to the method of appointment and, also perhaps as a result, to the role of the Senators and the Senate as an institution, a result, as I have said, of the proposals in the Accord.

The situation in 1978 and the situation today with regard to proposals for constitutional amendment are very similar since they both touch on the method of appointment to and the role of the Senate. These proposals, I must say, are unlike those involving the resolution which led to the adoption of the 1982 Constitution because that resolution did not deal with the method of appointment to or the general role of the Senate. At that time the resolution for constitutional change was looked at only by a joint committee of the House and the Senate.

We have the clear precedent from the way the Senate agreed to deal with Bill C-60 in the motion it adopted in 1978. It was pointed out in the debate in the Senate in 1978 that there was no known instance where the Senate refused to join with the House in serving on a joint committee with it when requested to do so by the House, even when the Senate decided to have its own committee on the matter.

In my view, Members of this House of Commons and Canadians generally should be able to expect that the precedent of 1978 on Bill C-60 will be followed when it comes time for the other place to consider the request of this House in the motion that we are considering today for a joint committee.

I also want to say that the Constitution itself speaks only of the role of the House of Commons, the Senate and the provincial legislatures in amending that Constitution by resolution. It does not refer in any way and it does not recognize in any way, as a first step, binding on the House of Commons, the Senate and the provincial legislatures as a legal or juridical matter, the signatures of the provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) agreeing to the content of a resolution to amend the Constitution. Also, there is the fact that the Accord itself says only that the Prime Minister and the First Ministers undertake to table the Accord before their legislatures and the House of Commons and Senate.

I mention all this, Madam Speaker, because I thought I heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) say in his remarks that there would have to be unanimity of the provinces and the federal Government in order to have any of the provisions of the Accord amended. That may be so in one sense, perhaps in a political sense, but in terms of the Constitution itself, all the Constitution says is that there are provisions for its amendment, in some cases requiring unanimity of the provinces and the federal House of Commons and Senate, and in other cases requiring only the formula of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population.

I want to say in particular that I hope the Government House Leader, the Deputy Prime Minister, was not saying that because we have the signatures of the provincial Premiers and the Prime Minister on the Accord this means that the work of the parliamentary committee we are setting up by this motion and any debates in the House on the constitutional resolution once it is formally before us, will be only an empty exercise. I hope that is not the case. We must be in a position in this committee that we are setting up today, and in the eventual debate on the resolution, to amend the Constitution on the basis of the Accord to consider any amendments on their merits. This seems to have been and is very much the view of a number of the provincial Premiers who spoke to the press after the meeting in the Langevin Building a few weeks ago.

I want to address very briefly the question of the process of amending the Constitution. The bare bones of the procedure for amending the Constitution are laid forth quite clearly in both the existing amending formula and in the amended process proposed by the Accord. It is silent, however, on the procedure within each House of Parliament or provincial legislature. As well, unfortunately, our Standing Orders are silent on this matter.

Recently we became engaged in an extensive revision of our rules. During that process I said to my fellow House Leaders that I considered it a major omission that the rules did not provide for a set process for dealing with resolutions on important matters like amendments to the Constitution. For Bills which become ordinary statutes, and in some cases very minor statutes, we have developed a complex system of three readings, a committee stage to hear relevant witnesses and a report stage to consider complex amendments in an orderly and reasonable fashion. However, for amendments to our most important and fundamental law, our Constitution, only a resolution is required.

I must say that a resolution to amend our Constitution is as important as any Bill. Certainly, while it is called a resolution, it is in fact the equivalent of a Bill because it amends a statute, the Constitution Act, 1982. However, as I have said, we do not provide a system equivalent to that which already exists in the rules for consideration of a Bill, even one of a very minor and seemingly trivial nature. I believe our experience in the last few days has underscored the need for developing definite and fixed rules for such matters.

I must commend the Government for agreeing to the committee process we are about to undertake, but I must point out that in fact the Government was never compelled by our rules to do so, although it may well have been compelled by public opinion and by the merits of how such a constitutional resolution should be considered. The fact that the Government is able to give notice of a motion to actually amend the Constitution at the very time it gave notice of this motion to establish a committee to study that motion shows that it would indeed be theoretically possible to force upon the House a proposal to amend the Constitution with no committee study at all. I think this would be very wrong according to the expectations of the Canadian people and according to what is required to consider in a due and deliberate manner an amendment or a set of amendments to the very fundamental and basic law of this country.

Even with the committee study to which the Government has agreed, we have yet to work out an orderly system of dealing with any amendments to the actual constitutional motion itself. When the resolution itself comes forward for debate, we must have in place provisions satisfactory to all Parties to ensure that there is time and the method to properly consider and vote on all amendments to the Constitutional Accord set forth in the resolution that our Party and others will bring forward with a view to improving the resolution. This could well involve a committee stage and a report stage equivalent to those required for the consideration of a Bill.

By way of conclusion, I want to say that while we are taking a positive step in creating this joint committee, we must bear in mind that we must in the very near future address other important matters as well. In the short term, we must develop a method for dealing in an appropriate manner with amendments to the motion to adopt the resolution of which the Government is giving notice. Second, in the long term, we must provide for a suitable system in our Standing Orders for dealing with resolutions on important matters, and especially those to amend our Constitution, in a manner that is at least as complete and as thorough as the method by which we deal with ordinary laws.

Having said all of this, I want to repeat that it is the intention of our Party to support this motion. I think we have to get on with the work of giving to the Constitutional Accord the serious and deliberate study it requires and I hope that we will soon reach a positive decision to set up the joint committee proposed by the Government.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask some questions of the Liberal House Leader. If the resolution that is before us at this time passes and is accepted by the Senate, there may be two different committees studying the proposed constitutional amendment. How does the Liberal House Leader feel about the fact that the Senate appears to want to have it both ways? The Senate will have representation on a joint committee which will be listening to witnesses and perhaps proposing changes to the Accord and at the same time Liberal Senators will have their own committee, presumably listening to the same witnesses, and perhaps making completely different amendments.

Does the Liberal House Leader not believe that that is a recipe for deadlock? Does he not believe that there will be one set of recommendations coming out of the joint committee, perhaps with all-Party agreement, perhaps with the agreement of the Senators who serve on that committee, yet we may have a completely different set of amendments coming from a separate Senate committee? I think that could create real problems for us.

I recognize that in 1978 a similar situation did occur. Let us face, however, that those were different circumstances. Right now we actually have an agreement which has been signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the 10 provincial Premiers. I believe that one committee representing both Houses is the best and most appropriate way of dealing with it.

My second question deals with the matter I raised with the government House Leader. I would like the response of the Liberal Party to the request that the joint committee of the House and the Senate that we are setting up should at least go to Yukon and the Northwest Territories so that residents of those two Territories will have an opportunity to have direct input. I raise that as a separate item because the government leader in the Yukon, Mr. Tony Penikett, and his counterpart in the Northwest Territories, Nick Sibbeston, were not at Meech Lake, they were not at the Langevin Block. They do not have the right to have their territorial Governments meet and pass or not pass the Meech Lake Accord. I believe the residents of Yukon and the Northwest Territories are in a very unique situation and I believe it is very important that, since they were not part of the Meech Lake Accord, they do have the opportunity to be heard in their own Territories.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I am quite ready to accept the concept of having a joint committee of this House and the Senate consider the constitutional resolution as well as having a separate committee in the Senate itself. This was a concept that was worked out in 1978 when the constitutional proposals referred to as Bill C-60 were put before the House and Senate. I am not aware of any problem which came up at that time. I was not aware of any opposition to it by the NDP. I do not see the problems that my hon. friend sees.

Bear in mind that we are not formally considering the constitutional resolution at this time. We are considering in the context of a prestudy the contents of the constitutional resolution. A motion to adopt a resolution will then have to be formally put down on the Order Paper and that will have to be fully debated. It is in the course of considering the constitutional resolution itself that amendments will be considered.

I would think that my hon. friend should be willing to look upon the role of the Senate in this matter in the same positive spirit which led his Party to abandon its long-standing opposition not only to a role for the Senate but to the very existence of the Senate in any form and to support this motion. If the NDP is willing to support this motion, it is admitting that there can be a positive and constructive role for the Senate to play.

I see no reason why the Hon. Member should assume in advance that the Senate will not deal with this matter in a constructive fashion. I am sure he would reject any suggestion in the Senate that the House of Commons would not deal with this resolution in a constructive fashion. I do not think we should deal at this stage with that type of hypothetical question.

I would like to conclude by saying that I think we should be willing to examine the idea of the committee going to the Northwest Territories and Yukon. I for one would want to know first if those legislatures intend to have their own committee studies. This is something we can study. We are debating this today because the House Leaders of all three Parties, including the NDP, were willing to agree on behalf of their Parties to this form of motion. Having said that, I am still willing to consider this matter again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—INCLUSION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) if his Department and the Government would be disposed to amending Clause 1 of the Constitutional Accord which would entrench, alongside the French-English linguistic duality, the multicultural dimension and reality as a fundamental character of Canada.

Not only did the Minister refuse to answer directly, but his response displayed an alarming disregard for and ignorance of this integral sector of Canadian society. Canadians who are neither English nor French in origin, despite the ineffective footnote of Clause 16, feel irrelevant in this Accord and believe that they have been ushered to the back of the constitutional bus.

To seek the inclusion of the multicultural character in Clause 1 is not an attempt to seek special rights, official status for a third language, or to deprive anyone or any group of any rights.

The amendment would simply ensure that Clause 1 would fully define and express the make-up of Canada and its people. Clause 1 overlooks 10 million Canadians who are neither English nor French in origin and relegates them to second-class citizenship. It is, therefore, an incomplete and inaccurate expression of Canada, and that needs to be amended.

How can the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Premiers refuse to recognize the contribution and aspirations of one-third of its citizens? It is my hope that the Prime Minister and the ten Premiers will see fit to amend this clause accordingly. Otherwise it would be hypocritical for them to grandstand on multiculturalism before events and individuals of those persuasions.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUPPORT URGED FOR REINDEER HERDING TO ASSIST ECONOMY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, noting that the life of many people in northern Canada is based on government hand-outs, Mr. Arkady Cherkasov, a Soviet northern studies expert, has recently suggested reindeer herding as a suitable and economically viable alternative. This support is welcomed by those of us who have realized that when it comes to reindeer Canada is 3,000 years behind the times.

Unfortunately, the Canadian Government continues to take a rather negative attitude. Mr. William Nasogaluak, pioneer owner of Canada's only herd, has received nothing but grief at the hands of the Government which would unilaterally rescind his grazing rights. It is likely that he will be forced to kill off his animals or sell them abroad.

Public policy ought to encourage reindeer husbandry, not to destroy it as is presently the case.

REFUGEES

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-55

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, through Bill C-55 the Government proposes to violate deliberately Canada's commitment to the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights. That UN Declaration in Article 14 says: "Everyone has the right to seek and enjoy another country's asylum from persecution".

Already democratic Chileans who have been imprisoned and tortured by Pinochet's police and try to escape Chile to find refuge in Canada with their relatives are routinely refused refugee status by our embassies in Chile and Argentina.

Now the Government goes further by twisting and changing Canada's laws to stop real refugees from even coming to Canada to state their claim. For example, Bill C-55 would empower the Government to punish an airline which brings a passenger to Canada who then claims refugee status here. It can punish the airline by seizing and selling its aircraft to enforce fines.

Shame on the Government for Bill C-55. Canadians from sea to sea are demanding: "Withdraw Bill C-55".

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Margaret Thatcher is back.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): That is good for Great Britain because her policies and priorities are working, and so are ours. Her report card is a testimony to her foresight and her determination to do what is right.

Speaking of doing what is right, let us look at our own government record. In Ontario unemployment has dropped from 9.4 per cent in September, 1984, to 6.3 per cent. Housing starts in the first four months of 1987 are up 58 per cent compared to the same period last year. Tourists are flocking to Ontario. There is an 8 per cent increase from last year. People are coming to the nation's capital to see this great city.

The White Paper on Defence is a timely and long overdue initiative. President Reagan and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reiterated their personal resolve in Vienna yesterday to sign an enhanced treaty agreement between our two countries.

The Meech Lake Accord is good news for Quebec. It is now a part of the family of Canada. Mr. Speaker, trying to unite this country without Quebec was like trying to ride a bicycle uphill without a chain.

The National Drug Strategy is more good news. The RCMP role has been enhanced. Yesterday the Liberal Opposition voted against increasing the RCMP budget. I cannot understand that as it is the best police force in the world.

Tax reform is coming next week. It will be fairer and more simple. It will address the problems of those in the greatest need. The poor and the seniors of the country will be very favourably looked upon in tax reform.

This is all good news, Mr. Speaker. Let us be happy. Let us have a good weekend.

George Bell and the Blue Jays are also good for Canada. They are going all the way this year!

EFFECT OF INTERNATIONAL SUBSIDIES—CALL FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, before he left Canada last weekend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) led farmers to believe that he would solve the grain trade wars at the Economic Summit meeting in Venice this week. This trade war between the treasuries of western Europe and the United States has driven grain prices in real terms to levels below those of the 1930s depression period and is driving thousands of Canadian farmers off the land.

We now know that the Prime Minister did not get agreement to reduce these subsidies during the next two years. We also know that the United States Congress is planning to increase its export subsidies during the next two years driving prices even lower, as it did with the recent sales of wheat to Russia and barley to Saudi Arabia.

Now that the Prime Minister has failed to get action on the grain trade wars for the next two years our farmers want to know what the Government is going to do to allow them to survive. I call on the Prime Minister to stop stalling and to make a commitment now to Canadian grain farmers for a deficiency payment for the 1987-88 crop year.

VENICE ECONOMIC SUMMIT—PRIME MINISTER'S EFFORTS TO SECURE FAIR TRADING

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on his success in bringing to the attention of the leaders of the G-7 the harm felt by our farmers due to the unfair subsidy practices of the European Economic Community and the U.S.

As any farmer across the land will tell you, there are no immediate cures for the problems facing the family farm. They will also tell you that government pay-outs do not solve the underlying problem. The crisis today is largely due to Governments around the world attempting to throw money at the problem. This does not work. This was the message which our Leader pressed at the Economic Summit meeting in Venice.

The real answer lies in a new set of ground rules for international farm trade. The Prime Minister and the Government have made fair trade in agriculture a top concern. I wish again to congratulate our Leader for making this point in Venice.

FISHERIES

1987 WEST COAST SALMON ALLOCATION PLAN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in January the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans unanimously passed a motion urging the Minister to assure the Gulf trollers of British Columbia that the commercial troll industry in the Gulf of Georgia would be maintained.

The Minister responded: "The troll fleet is very selective in the species of salmon that they harvest and for that reason alone I consider them an ideal gear to be maintained in the Strait of Georgia".

On Tuesday the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) announced his long-awaited 1987 West Coast Salmon Allocation Plan. The Gulf trollers, a small group of 250 vessels, found they fared no better than last year. In fact, their situation was made worse by the Minister's decree that the season will start on July 1, two weeks later than last year, when the larger and higher quality salmon have already passed. Further, there was no mention of the 100,000 additional sockeye given in 1986 in recognition of the trollers' historical involvement in this west coast fishery.

The Minister, who praises the Gulf troll fleet, has done little to maintain the fleet. Many of those involved in the Gulf of Georgia fleet may be forced out of the industry because they cannot make a living because the Minister has not acted in accordance with his statements.

THE COMMONWEALTH

OTTAWA TO HOST COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE FOR YOUNG LEADERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House that a Commonwealth Conference for Young Leaders will be held this fall. This unique international event, initiated by the Ottawa Branch of the Royal Commonwealth Society, will bring together the Commonwealth's most accomplished young men and women to Ottawa, from September 6 to September 12, 1987.

Delegates will participate in an innovative program directed toward the creation of a generation of leaders equipped with the values, skills, and consensus formation techniques to address complex international problems. They will also focus on the potential for private and public sector co-operation in promoting economic and social development.

Canadian conference organizers are searching for dynamic young Canadians to represent our country. Young Canadians between the ages of 25 and 35 are welcome to apply before July 1. Twenty Canadians will be selected.

Along with providing young people with the opportunity to express their views on the Commonwealth and wider international issues, this event will allow them to make personal ties which will be of long-term benefit to the Commonwealth and Canada. This venture is also an important event in support of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Summit and will contribute to increasing Canadians' awareness of the Commonwealth.

The conference is being financed through a partnership of business, federal Government and voluntary sector contributions. The Government, for example, is providing financial assistance and in kind contributions through the Canadian International Development Agency, Employment and Immigration Canada, and External Affairs.

POLLUTION

WATER CLEAN-UP—QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES' REQUEST

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to comment on the Canadian Government position about water clean-up in Quebec.

Hon. Members know that under the terms of a federal-provincial agreement Ottawa has paid 16 2/3 per cent of the expenditures required to clean up lakes and rivers in that province.

They know as well that a number of Quebec municipalities are asking Ottawa to contribute to the funds needed to help them carry out their depollution projects.

In my opinion, the current water pollution situation is so urgent that immediate action on the part of the Canadian Government is required to assist Quebec municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Quebec is entitled to the same kind of treatment as the other provinces to help its municipalities, and that a federal-provincial agreement should be negotiated at the earliest opportunity to correct the situation.

FISHERIES

SUPPORT PRICE FOR CAPELIN URGED

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, a serious situation has developed in the Newfoundland fishery. The cod have refused to come ashore, the lobster have refused to show up, the Government has refused to pay unemployment insurance for fishermen after May 15, and now the Japanese have refused to pay a decent price for capelin. The boats are tied up and that is creating a very serious situation.

I am addressing this statement to all those Members opposite who are over 51 and who understand the importance of regional development in this country. The younger ones need not pay attention. For those who understand and care about regional development, let me state what must be done. The Japanese must be told that they have to pay a fair price for capelin. The Fisheries Prices Support Board has to be ordered to act on this immediately and support the price of fish. The Government should put in place a marketing agency to make sure that this does not happen again. That must be done immediately.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES CONGRESSMAN'S INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO HELP ABATE ACID RAIN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I was disappointed, as I believe were many Canadians who are concerned about acid rain, that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had an opportunity to take the President of the United States aside in Venice he only chose to discuss his concerns about the free trade pact, the one-way suicide pact he wants to sign with the United States. He did not take any time to discuss with the President anything concerning the President's commitment to a bilateral accord on acid rain.

Further, I recall the day in the House when the Prime Minister embarrassed all of us by making fun of Congressman Jerry Sikorski, deliberately mispronouncing his name and saying that he had not heard of him. I want Members of the House to know that this same Congressman yesterday introduced a Bill in the U.S. Congress which would have the effect of meeting Canada's demands with respect to acid rain abatement, as would a number of other Bills in the Congress.

I hope the Prime Minister and other members of the Government in particular will take this opportunity to write Congressman Sikorski and all members of the U.S. Congress to urge upon them the passage of either the Sikorski Bill or any other abatement Bills before the House that would have the effect of meeting Canada's demands. The Prime Minister should be the first on the list to emphasize that congressional vehicle as a means for meeting Canadian needs.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

LA MAISON D'AMITIÉ—REQUEST THAT NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION BE GENEROUS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this week the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women released a report entitled Battered But Not Beaten: Preventing Wife Battering in Canada. As it happens, I have in my riding a shelter home, "La Maison d'amitié", a non-profit organization established more than 10 years ago to help distressed women and children. This home is partly funded by the NCC, the National Capital Commission, where the rent is geared to the financial resources of the organization. That is the way it is, people do have to seek assistance. Of course the rent and operating expenses constitute a financial challenge.

The meagre resources of La Maison d'amitié partly originate from certain levels of Government, but not the federal Government, and have enabled it to survive this far. However it has just been advised by the NCC that the annual rent, that was $1, will be increased, not to $500 as it was this year but to nearly $3,000 a month. Mr. Speaker, people like battered women and distressed children will no longer be able to find in my riding a place where they can be cared for and given at least a little attention, a little love and a little understanding.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the NCC to continue to be generous and let the Maison d'amitié operate in my riding and carry out its worthy and meritorious work. Like a number of other Government agencies, the NCC should appreciate the fact that one preaches by example, and that the Government must give consideration and assistance to the Maison d'amitié.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY ABOUT WHO MAKES DECISIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I mentioned the extremely serious situation in the town of Murdochville, following lay-offs of a number of workers.

This Government seems to be completely ignoring the priorities of regional development. Several billion dollars have been cut from various programs. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion operations are being investigated, some of the decisions are being made in the Prime Minister's office, and others in the Deputy Prime Minister's office, so that people in the Gaspé are wondering who is making the decisions for regional development in the Gaspé. We have a development project in Matane for a paper mill. Decisions are still pending. Four hundred people lost their jobs in Murdochville, and no decisions have been made. Meanwhile, another Minister is visiting the Gaspé to prepare phase two of the eastern development plan. In 1983, there was a plan with a budget of over $250 million, but today, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) has been unable to convince her colleague at National Defence of the importance of regional development in allocating that department's budget, at a time when it is engaged in consultations for phase two.

I want to ask this Government: Who is making the decisions for regional development?

ACID RAIN—ENVOYS' REPORT—RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING FURTHER RESEARCH

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as time goes by it becomes more evident that it was a mistake on the part of the Government to accept the recommendations of the Envoys' Report on acid rain.

As a member of the Acid Rain Committee, and on the eve of our visit to Washington to meet with U.S. parliamentarians there, I must conclude that Canadians would be in a stronger position had the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rejected the envoys' recommendation of having five more years of research and demonstration.

At this rate of progress, in 1991 Canada will still be waiting for the outcome of U.S. research activities while Canadian officials and their successors will be engaged in smoke and mirror negotiations with their U.S. counterparts.

The Prime Minister did not say to President Reagan, right from the start, that we want the U.S. to cut the massive acid gas pollution which daily crosses the border into Canada. Against this background, while acid rain corrodes human health, water, soil, and forests, the Government looks inept, impotent and ineffective. What a sham!

SPENDING ON NATIONAL DEFENCE—VIEWS OF MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for regional industrial expansion, whoever that is.

Less than a week after the Prime Minister announced the new Atlantic Opportunities Program in St. John's, Newfoundland, and proclaimed that all is right in the world of regional economic development, we now have the Minister of Supply and Services declaring that half of the country is crying and that the Minister of National Defence, who proposes a $183 billion defence budget, is too young to understand. The Minister's problems have less to do with his youth and everything to do with his tired old Tory philosophy. I ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion whether he shares the views of the Minister of Supply and Services who believes that the Defence Department should be prepared to pay a premium on its contracts to encourage economic development in areas of high unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, obviously this Party has no idea what regional development is all about. Since 1984, we have been stressing the need to ensure that regional development is done with far greater awareness of, and sensitivity to, the problems of the regions. Mr. Speaker, that is why last week we announced the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The agency will have a budget of over one billion dollars and thus create many jobs. In fact, this is the kind of initiative that not only the Premiers but the entire population of Atlantic Canada have been waiting for.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services recognizes what this Minister and this Government refuse to see, that indeed half the country is crying and that the regional economic development policy is in utter and total shambles, sacrificed on the altar of free trade.

Will the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who has presided over the financial mismanagement of DRIE, who has failed to speak out for Canada's regions, step aside and resign to allow the Minister of Supply and Services to take up the battle at the cabinet table against the Minister of Defence, the Prime Minister and all of those in Cabinet who believe that Canada's impoverished regions, its high unemployment, are a fact of life which ought to be ignored and hidden?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we are trying to achieve. According to our consultations, all the studies and reports are unanimous. Regional development should be initiated in the regions, and that is exactly the philosophy behind the Atlantic initiative which is getting a budget of one billion dollars, while nothing had been done by the previous government for twenty years.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion stands like a naked newt in this House. The Prime Minister's Office has left him with nothing but a chauffeur and limousine with which to hide his embarrassment.

DEPARTMENT'S EXPENDITURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): I ask the Minister, who now has Price Waterhouse, internal auditors and the Auditor General, all trying to track down $100 million of unaccountable expenditures, when he will do the honourable thing for the regions and for his Department and, for God's sake, man, go, resign?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the amount of deficit this Government had to deal with when we took over in 1984. Members opposite do not even know what the hell is going on at DRIE, Mr. Speaker. They don't even know!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Côté (Langelier): We have to deal with earlier commitments which date from 1975. We have to deal with almost $1 billion in commitments made prior to the time we came into power. We have to deal with that. My colleagues should know that these commitments have to be dealt with. Second, we have initiated both internal and external reports and we are going to get answers from that very shortly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Côté (Langelier): As well, the Auditor General will step in and we will find out exactly what happened there.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EXPENDITURES—EFFECT ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. The fact that the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of National Defence cannot agree on the national interests of the country is deplorable. It was a Liberal Government which purchased 2,761 military trucks with regional development in mind, 81,000 small arms, 300 light armoured vehicles, new frigates for the navy, updated several other ships—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: —and purchased 138 CF-18 aircraft, and many other items, all with regional development in mind and in effect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: When is the Government going to get its act together and have Ministers agree that, beyond a doubt, national defence and regional development go hand in hand, and both are in the national interests of Canada? If the two Ministers cannot agree, one or both should resign.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been following the process in the purchasing of military equipment, he would find that the process has not changed from the days of the other Government, except we are buying more equipment for the Armed Forces than it did.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, that is a farce. They used our programs.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. What an utter shame and spectacle to see the two Ministers of National Defence flying around the country, talking about regional advantages of the White Paper on Defence while the Minister of Supply and Services—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: —who is responsible—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has had, I think, quite a sufficient preamble and I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. Hopkins: —responsible for procurement of the White Paper. Will the Deputy Prime Minister, or some other referee, take charge of the Cabinet until it can agree on its aims and objectives relating to the national interests of Canada? The Ministers are obviously divided and do not know what is in the best interests of the regions of this country. The Minister of Supply and Services says it is a failure.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no curtailment on freedom of speech in this Party, and I notice the same thing applies to the Party across the way. The Liberals have certainly been expressing various points of view.

The fact is there is no difference in the points of view held by the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Tobin: Who are you trying to kid?

Mr. Mazankowski: There is no question that the Minister of National Defence is as concerned about regional industrial development as the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Rossi: You are bluffing, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact is that the Minister of National Defence is 37 years old and has spent his lifetime being concerned about regional development, and the Minister of Supply and Services has said she has spent 37 years being concerned about the welfare of the regions of this country. In total, that is about 74 years of deep concern.

ATLANTIC OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY—FUTURE OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. We have seen the extraordinary experience for the first time, to my knowledge, in Canadian history, that a Department has gone through its total fiscal allotment for one year in two months. It is an extremely serious situation.

The Prime Minister is announcing that a special Atlantic Opportunities Agency is being created for regional development in Atlantic Canada, and there is an unanswered rumour that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion itself is going to be abolished this summer. People in Atlantic Canada, northern Quebec, northern Ontario and the West want to know about the future of this Department. Will the Minister clarify once and for all whether or not the Government plans to maintain a Department and Minister responsible for regional development and accountable to the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House earlier, and as the Minister responsible for DRIE has indicated, DRIE is in business. It is honouring its commitments. It will meet every single commitment it has made for this year, for next year, for the year after that and the year after that.

Mr. Rossi: You won't be there any more.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Insofar as the concern the Hon. Leader of the socialists has about the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, I regret very much he finds disagreement with the thrust of the agency. I think from his vantage point, sitting in Oshawa, he would probably take that kind of view, but I just simply report to him that The Chronicle Herald of Halifax had this to say about the establishment of the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, and I quote:

> At last, with the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, this region will have a single body in place to deliver federal assistance to an eager business sector. The ACDA, with an annual budget of $200 million, will be based in, and controlled from, Moncton. It will be headed by a very senior civil servant, Donald McPhail, who will run his own show—that is, he will control the purse strings without having to consult bureaucrats in Ottawa.

That is what Atlantic Canadians want. That is what we support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I can tell the Minister that I was in Atlantic Canada yesterday. The people in Atlantic Canada are not at all impressed by this misleading Government that has already cut $1.5 billion on an annual basis from going into Atlantic Canada and expects the people there to think that the Government is being generous because it is only giving back $200 million. They can see that this is like a thief taking a thousand bucks and asking people to be happy if he gives $200 back. I can tell the Minister that the people of Atlantic Canada are tired of being conned by this Government. I tell the Minister to go down to Atlantic Canada where he will find that out.

STUDIES OF DEPARTMENT'S EXPENDITURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister to answer some questions about the future of this Department. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville was trying to get answers here yesterday. He was told to go to committee, where he was stonewalled.

Will the Minister assure us that the internal study that is being done in the Department and the Price Waterhouse study that is being done will be made available to Members of the House of Commons so that the people of Canada can see what is going on in this Department?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what Canadians are concerned about, if they look very carefully, is the shallow, misleading rhetoric that is emanating from the Leader of the socialist Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: He had the audacity, Mr. Speaker, in Question Period the other day to say, in reference to the billion dollars that was being earmarked for the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, that that is only a few cents per citizen.

Mr. Broadbent: I said no such thing!

Mr. Mazankowski: In other words, he is saying: "What's a billion?" Remember the expression of C. D. Howe when he said some time ago: "What's a million?" We have the new version here right now.

REQUEST THAT STUDIES BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, neither the people in Atlantic Canada nor anywhere else will be impressed by this very shocking ignoring of the Minister's responsibility to answer a question. I want to ask him again, and I would like him to cut out his silly, misleading rhetoric—

Mr. Mazankowski: Cut out your silly, misleading nonsense.

Mr. Broadbent: —and answer a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Minister a straight question again. I hope that he will give us a straight answer.

There is an internal audit being done in the Minister's Department. There is a study being done by Price Waterhouse of the profound bungling in the Department. Does the Minister not believe that the people of Canada have a right to see those studies? If he does, will he guarantee that they will be made public?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that three investigations or examinations are being done at this time.

We have one internal investigation requested by the Comptroller General. There is a second investigation which we at the Department requested and which is being done by an outside firm, Price Waterhouse. The third investigation is being carried out by the Auditor General. So we have absolutely nothing to hide in this respect.

Today, I can assure Hon. Members I will do everything in my power to ensure that the truth comes out, that all the facts are clear and that a full explanation is given of what happened in the Department.

DECISION-MAKING POWER WITHIN DEPARTMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister and also deals with regional economic development.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that since 1984, regional economic development budget allocations have been cut by several billion dollars, and the Minister himself has now admitted, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to take into account the specific payments made in view of the situation in western Canada as a result of falling wheat prices, those cuts in the regional development funding would be even greater. Meanwhile, the Minister has just stated that not one, or two, but three enquiries are required to shed some light on the management of that department.

In view of this hodgepodge, could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us who is responsible for decisions in the present context at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): I am, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT'S INTENDED PROPOSALS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister what action he intends to suggest to this House in particular, but mostly to the people of Gaspé, and more specifically to the people of Murdochville, in order to help those 400 jobless workers and families. Some of them have already been laid off, and the rest will be by the end of June. I ask the Minister if he could step up the implementation of the second stage of the development of eastern Quebec and implement immediate programs to help the people of Murdochville who are faced with an unbearable situation which actually prevails throughout the eastern part of the peninsula.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the first stage of the Eastern Plan, the first five-year stage, is indeed to be completed soon, and our Government believes in consultation. That is why we spent over the last weekend, with the Minister responsible for that region, more than 60 hours consulting with people in every district and area of the peninsula covered by the Eastern Plan.

What we have here therefore is concern, a consultation process and sensitivity on the part of the Government in that respect.

With respect to Murdochville, a consultation committee has already been set up, and it should be reporting by June 19. I therefore wish to assure people, Mr. Speaker, that we are deeply concerned. Although it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, as my colleague for Energy mentioned earlier, we are always willing to listen to the needs of each and everyone of those areas.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S 1985 REPORT—ERRORS IN RECORDING DATA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I have in my hand a copy of Mr. Dye's report as Auditor General, from 1985. I want to ask the Minister in charge of DRIE why his Department did not follow Mr. Dye's advice when he stated:

> We also verified whether forecast cash flow patterns in the Resource Allocation Management System were accurate. There were errors in the data recorded in nearly all the approved projects. About half of these were serious errors—

In view of the fact that Mr. Dye waved a red flag some two years ago saying that there were very, very serious errors in terms of data, I want to know why the Minister continued to administer his Department in such a way that we now have an over-commitment of funds in this fiscal year of some $90 million. Will he now admit that he did not follow the advice of Mr. Dye despite the fact that he was warned? Why did he not follow that advice?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would say that out of this Auditor General's report there were 21 recommendations that have been dealt with by my Department and answers have been supplied.

My colleague is completely misleading again. He does not know what is going on in this Department.

Mr. Broadbent: He knows more than you do.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): There is no over-commitment. I said that there was a possibility that there could be over-spending for the year 1986-87. We will find that out. Reports will tell us how it happened, when it happened, and how to correct it. That is why we have asked for such a report.

I also said that this over-spending could have an effect in the actual year. Why we want to be very cautious about it is in order to prevent anything else from happening once again.

It has to be remembered that we inherited such a mess from 1984 and we still have to live with it.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF EXPENDITURE STUDIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. The Minister knows that right now, according to information released a couple of days ago, the over-commitment is around the $90 million mark for fiscal year 1987-88, not for three years ago. If that is not the case, then I challenge the Minister to get up in the House and deny it right now.

When he is doing that can he make a commitment to the House, since the Conservative Party promised openness of government and freedom of information, that he will make public the findings of the internal investigation of his Department, as well as the findings of the Price Waterhouse study? Will he do that today? Will he make that commitment? Will he also get up in the House to tell us that there is an over-commitment now approaching $90 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, making that kind of suggestion denotes sheer irresponsibility and lack of maturity. To begin with, and I said so, the Department has to deal with more than 15,000 cases a year, and it is a fact that commitments were not made by this Minister over a two-month period in the current year. Commitments were made a number of years ago. For example, Mr. Speaker, since I became Minister in July 1986 we have made commitments of more than $1 billion and the money will be spent over the years, beginning in 1988-89. Before asking questions, Mr. Speaker, one should get the facts straight and inquire about departmental procedures.

As to the report, a moment ago I gave my colleague some explanations, and I stated that I would do everything I can to shed light on these incidents, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

FEDERAL-ONTARIO AGREEMENT—OBJECTIONS OF OTHER PROVINCES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns yesterday's meeting with provincial Finance Ministers when there was failure to reach an agreement on the regulation of Canada's securities industry.

Nine provinces say that they do not want to be bound by the agreement between Ottawa and Ontario, on which they were not consulted. The tenth Province, Ontario, is saying that it would consider joining the others in a constitutional challenge.

What does the Government propose to do now, bearing in mind that the Ontario-Ottawa agreement is set to take effect on June 30? Will the Deputy Prime Minister make a statement on motions today to clarify the Government's intentions?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, I am advised by the Minister of State for Finance, who is away on government business, that the understanding reached with Ontario in April is a working arrangement in the regulation of securities activities in that province as it pertains to federally regulated institutions.

The federal Government has made it very clear that it has no intention of imposing any such arrangement on any other province unless it is otherwise agreed to.

There was some disagreement with the approach taken, I understand, at the meeting yesterday. However, the Minister of State for Finance has indicated a clear willingness to sit down and work this through with the provinces. He is prepared to meet with them at any time to try to work out a satisfactory arrangement to allow the federal Government and the provinces to work together in reaching agreements on this very important matter.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The Government is again being overtaken by events, because many large foreign investment houses are moving into Canada, including one which has assets more than double the entire assets of all financial institutions in Canada.

Mr. Garneau: That is the problem. We have raised it many times.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance had said that he expected the agreement with Ontario to be a model which the other provinces would follow. In response to their objections, he is now quoted as saying that he will not be "ambushed" by provincial "ultimatums".

I appreciate that the Deputy Prime Minister has been sounding much more conciliatory. Is the Deputy Prime Minister saying that the Minister of State for Finance was misquoted?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that at all. I talked with the Minister of State for Finance last night, and he indicated to me in a telephone conversation that he in no way wanted to impose the Ontario agreement on other provinces.

He is ready and willing to sit down with each of the provinces to work out a satisfactory arrangement. In view of the fact that Ontario had taken the initiative in bringing this proposition to the federal Government—and it was agreed upon—it was assumed that that could very well serve as a model.

Obviously there are some differences of opinion in that regard. I think I can assure the Hon. Member that this matter can be proceeded with in a conciliatory and co-operative way. That is certainly the intention of the Minister.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

EXPENDITURES MADE ON BEHALF OF WASHINGTON EMBASSY OFFICIAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. As he is now aware, the Prime Minister's Director of Communications, Mr. Bruce Phillips, spent over $80,000 on various services when he was representing Canada in Washington.

According to the access to information legislation, he was provided by taxpayers with a 4,491-square foot home which included a bomb shelter, a pool, and a music room. In addition, $21,000 was spent on crystal, china, flatware, small appliances, and a vacuum cleaner. An additional $28,000 was spent on furniture. He was also given his firewood free of charge. He had his bedspread cleaned. A security system was installed and his food processor was repaired—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has a fascinating list, but he should put his question.

Mr. Murphy: I apologize that the list is so long; I hope the Government does too.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain which of these services were essential and how they helped the Government fight the deficit?

Mr. Nystrom: Tory times are tough times, Don.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the issue about the house provided for Mr. Phillips when he was appointed to Washington has been raised by the Hon. Member. I can simply state that the services provided in the acquisition of the house are fully consistent with the practices—

Mr. Broadbent: Of the Government.

Miss Carney: —for that particular class of post.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I can assure him that the costs involved are—

Mr. Rossi: Go back to Disney World.

Miss Carney: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, they are not interested in my answer.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is true that Tory times are tough times for some.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR EXPENDITURES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Prime Minister's Director of Communications communicates well with the Prime Minister's lifestyle.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Who is looking after the interests of the public purse? Who is representing the taxpayers in making sure that real excessive, unnecessary expenditures are being curtailed by the Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Give us some food to process.

An Hon. Member: Take away Broadbent's chauffeur.

Mr. Broadbent: You are getting about as low as you can get.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill has put a question, and I would ask Hon. Members to permit the Hon. Minister to respond.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can further add, in response to the Hon. Member's question, that the furnishings which were purchased for the house of course are the property of the Canadian Government and will be used by Mr. Phillips' successor.

FORESTRY

DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL FORESTRY STRATEGY

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Forestry. Over the past two years the Minister has had extensive consultations with all sectors of the forest industry, the aim being to develop a national forestry strategy.

I wonder whether the Minister could inform the House what is the status of this very important issue.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. The forest sector, including industry, provinces, labour, and academea, asked for a long time to have a national forest strategy developed.

They did not want one which was foisted on them by the federal Government as was done in 1981. They wanted to develop it from the grass roots up.

For that very reason the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers undertook to do that. It held forestry forums on widely represented sectors of the forest industry. Also, this was widely discussed in the National Forest Congress, the largest forestry congress in the history of Canada.

The task force which evolved from that has been working diligently and hopefully will be dealing with that in a major meeting in the Maritimes in July and perhaps having it ratified by the Canadian Council of Forest Ministers in September.

Hopefully we will have a new national forest policy developed from the grass roots up by the fall.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

EXPENDITURES UNDERTAKEN FOR FORMER WASHINGTON EMBASSY OFFICIAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday's episode in the lifestyle of "The Rich and Famous" saw Fast Freddy and his $35,000 kitchen in his office. In today's episode we have Loosey Brucey trying to spend taxpayers' money to the tune of $80,000 to fix up a house for him.

A few minutes ago the Minister responsible said that these expenditures were consistent with that kind of position. How does the Deputy Prime Minister explain the fact that the previous appointee was not afforded such luxuries? Why was it that the house which was appropriate for Mr. Gossage was inappropriate for Mr. Phillips?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the expenditures were made in accordance with Treasury Board guidelines and in keeping with the status of the office.

Mr. Boudria: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, only the Prime Minister can top this kind of extravagance.

REQUEST FOR HALT TO CERTAIN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Precott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Now that we have another episode in the Conservative Party's ongoing spending spree, is the Deputy Prime MInister prepared to make a commitment to the House today that this kind of profligate spending is going to stop? We are hearing new examples every day. Isn't the Deputy Prime Minister himself fed up with this orgy of spending by his colleagues and the Prime Minister's cronies?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon.

Member talks about expenditures. I simply remind him that this Government inherited a deficit mess of $38 billion and a national debt of $200 billion. If you want to talk about extravagance and expenditure, we are looking at it right across the way.

CAPELIN—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister. Fishermen in St. Mary's Cove, Newfoundland, have voted 95 per cent not to take part in this year's Capelin fishery because the price offered by the Japanese is too low. It is not an economic fishery and it will not be an economic fishery so long as an unregulated market, a chaotic market, continues to play one fisherman off against another pushing down prices.

Will the Government finally recognize the seriousness of this situation and guarantee immediately a fair price for this year's Capelin and take action to establish a capelin marketing agency so that this kind of chaos will not happen in the future?

Mr. St. Germain: Buy a popcorn stand.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries, without accepting the socialist solution—

Mr. Broadbent: Favoured by the fishermen.

Mr. Mazankowski: —I can only advise the House and those who ignore the realities of the market-place, such as the Leader of the socialists who is the great advocator of "what's a billion—"

Mr. Broadbent: Why don't you have a holiday?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member. A short question.

Mr. Manly: Perhaps the Minister and the Government will recognize the necessity for marketing agencies before too long, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT FISHERMEN RECEIVE EXTENDED UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government extend unemployment insurance benefits for fishermen since they expired May 15? The waters off the northeast coast of Newfoundland are too cold, the cod are not appearing, fishermen are not earning any money. Will the Government extend unemployment insurance benefits for these fishermen?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Again, Mr. Speaker, without accepting the socialist solution, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister is seized with this very important matter, he considers it a priority and is working toward a solution.

FISHERIES PRICES SUPPORT BOARD—REQUEST FOR CAPELIN PRICE SUPPORT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries on the same topic of the capelin fishery and the fact that, because the Japanese have refused to pay a fair price, Newfoundland fishermen, rightly so, have tied up their boats. Unemployment insurance is cut off, the cod fish fishery is a failure, and so is the lobster fishery.

The Deputy Prime Minister is a Minister over 50 who understands the importance of regional development, unlike the younger Ministers. He has an opportunity to act here. There is such a thing called the Fisheries Prices Support Board. It exists. It is a government agency. He has the power to approach that agency. Will he do that and will he ask it to support the price of capelin this year to make sure that there is a decent price for Newfoundland fishermen?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member in his very constructive way poses a very sensible question and probably a solution that might be considered. I will certainly take that as a representation and convey it to the Minister. I thank him for his suggestion.

REQUEST THAT MARKETING AGENCY BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): I appreciate the Deputy Prime Minister's answer, Mr. Speaker. I want to make sure he understands the seriousness of this situation. He has to act for this year, but for next year will he make sure that there is a Canadian marketing agency put in place to make sure this situation does not happen again?

Mr. Broadbent: A socialist answer.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the socialist solution, but also accepting the fact that I do take the Hon. Member's question seriously because he is very knowledgeable and I accept that—certainly more knowledgeable on the issue than I am—

Mr. Broadbent: Pretty socialist, though.

Mr. Mazankowski: —I will take his considerations into account, convey them to the Minister, and assure the Member that this matter will be looked into. In spite of his earlier comments about age and what not, I think that between the two of us we can probably find a solution.

Oral Questions

RECOMMENDED ADOPTION OF NEW TECHNIQUES

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Economic Council of Canada in a policy statement indicated that there must be a national commitment by government, industry and labour to adopt new technologies more rapidly. Failure to act would mean a loss of prosperity and jobs for Canadians.

Will the Minister indicate the nature of his Ministry's response to this urgent national issue, drawn to the attention of Canadians by the Economic Council of Canada? Has the Advisory Council on Science and Technology, chaired by the Prime Minister, apprised itself of this circumstance and is the council addressing it?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Economic Council of Canada and its advice are entirely consistent with advice that we have received from other sources, which is the advice on which we have structured the new national policy, the new national strategy. We have made the necessary intramural re-organization and re-arrangements to make sure that federal resources are targeted into the areas that are identified by the council. It also points out that the main components of the national policy and strategy are precisely on target and I am pleased with that finding.

TAX REFORM

BRIEFINGS FOR JOURNALISTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the last few weeks the Prime Minister's Office has held a number of lengthy and confidential briefings for journalists that included the subject of tax reform.

Is the Prime Minister's Office aware of the dangers of breach of confidentiality that exist in this area on a subject which is every bit as important as a Budget? Did any breach of confidentiality take place or was this simply an effort by the Prime Minister's office to manipulate the press and to persuade journalists to report that Canadians are getting tax cuts while ignoring the fact that these same Canadians will be paying major increases in sales tax?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any breach in security.

INQUIRY WHETHER TAX WILL BE IMPOSED ON FOOD

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My supplementary is as follows: We wonder whether it is fair to arrange for these confidential briefings with the media, when the Government is doing everything it can to inform Canadians there will be a reduction in income tax but refuses to tell the House whether food is going to be taxed or not.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether food will be taxed or whether the Government intends to go on hiding its true colours?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is patient on Thursday, the document will be unveiled and I hope he will have the capacity to digest it.

Mr. Cassidy: You are telling journalists now.

PETITION SIGNED BY DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. Yesterday the standing committee received a petition signed by over 7,000 employees of the Department of Immigration which stated: "Contrary to what the Minister wrote to all MPs, position cut-backs have had a negative impact on the quality of service to clients. It also testifies our indignation with the Deputy Prime Minister, and we denounce the lack of respect shown to us and the public we serve".

Given this unprecedented vote of non-confidence in the Minister and in the Government and given the confusion in immigration policy that we have witnessed over the last two and a half years, how can Canadians possibly have any confidence in the Department and the Government when over one-third of his employees are denouncing his policy and direction? How will he rectify the mammoth revolution that is taking place in his Department? What solutions is the Minister proposing to get a Department working on behalf of all Canadians?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are down-sizing by 15,000. That was a government announced policy under Treasury Board. CIC participates. Eight hundred and twenty jobs are being affected, most by attrition. Only a handful of people have been laid off as a result of being unwilling to accept alternative employment opportunities.

Mr. Marchi: That is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. There have been over 1,500 jobs lost in the Department.

QUALITY AND DELIVERY OF SERVICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister's own employees are telling him and the Government through this unprecedented petition that the service to the public is being jeopardized, will he immediately order an independent investigation to develop standards to ensure that an adequate quality of service to all Canadians will be re-established and that an appropriate and sufficient number of staff members will be employed in order to deliver the quality of service that all Canadians rightfully expect and demand?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the down-sizing is being achieved with the utmost consideration for employees and client service. I do not need my hon. friend to tell me about the need to improve, or anything about quality of service. He may not be aware of this, but for the last year we have had in place a program to improve quality of service and I can say that we have made dramatic strides in improvement right across the country. Our offices are more accommodating and our officers are more accessible and are giving services that clients want, need, and understand.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED STONEWALLING BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this day, the leader of the socialist party, during Question Period, alleged that the standing committee on the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion stonewalled the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) when he sought information on the Department at yesterday's Standing Committee meeting. I simply want to ensure that the facts are straight. An allegation is one thing; the truth is another.

The fact is that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville is not a regular member of that Standing Committee. He was parachuted in yesterday, as was the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin), but at least the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice had the courtesy to indicate that he was not a regular member and therefore was not fully conversant with matters before that Standing Committee.

The standing committee on DRIE has for several months been examining matters relating to tourism and matters relating to the IRDP program. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville endeavoured yesterday to take us right off that agenda by going after senior staff members from the Ministry who were present to respond to the mandate laid down by the Standing Committee and not to policy questions asked by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. In other words, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville sought to divert the business of the Standing Committee which it had been addressing assiduously and vigorously week after week, month after month.

I want that allegation altered, amended and withdrawn by the leader of the socialist Party.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to the member of the capitalist Party across the way. He has referred to me as being parachuted into a particular committee. I suggest that if you were to check with the Clerk of that committee, Madam Speaker, you would find that I am a bona fide member of the committee. I was there with the proper papers containing the signature of the Whip and I was not parachuted in.

Second, if you would check the records of yesterday, Madam Speaker, you would find that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) suggested, when I asked him about this issue, that I go to the committee to ask my questions. He was not opposed to me doing that and I tried to do that but was stonewalled.

I say I was stonewalled because the witness at the committee yesterday, Mr. Salley, is a Deputy Minister of the Department in charge of policy and one important policy is how one's books and accounts are administered.

In addition to that, as my friend from Kootenay has said, there were people present at the committee yesterday who were responsible for the Industrial Regional Development Program, the major ticket item in DRIE. I asked questions about over-commitment possibilities within IRDP. Those questions were ruled in order by my friend from Cape Breton, the Chairman of that particular committee.

I would suggest with respect that on both counts my friend from Kootenay is strictly out of order. He is only crying sour grapes because the Minister has bungled through an over-commitment in that Department which is without precedent in the history of Canada.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I am also a member of the DRIE committee and my colleague from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) was there on my behalf yesterday because I could not make yesterday's meeting.

I need to say as a full-time member of that committee that Members of Parliament, be they Members who come in occasionally or regularly, have every right and privilege to design their own questions when they appear before a committee. I would suggest to my hon. colleague who I normally find to be a reasonable member of the Conservative caucus and the committee that it is not good enough, it takes all the nerve of a toothache, to suggest that the majority of Conservative members on the committee can dictate and in fact can sanction one way or the other the questions that are allowed to be asked.

Although I am not a frequent defender of our socialist colleagues in the corner, I say that Members have a responsibility, not just a right, to ask questions, particularly when there is a glaring example of a Department in a shambles. This point of order is not only inappropriate but it is an embarrassment to the mind that dreamed it up.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This point of order was raised and one person from each Party has had an opportunity to offer his opinion and the Chair has listened very carefully. It seems to the Chair that it is obviously a point of disagreement and a point that could be debated between the different Parties but it is certainly not a point of order. The Chair would like to move on to Routine Proceedings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between Parties and I believe you would find that there is unanimous consent to the moving and passing of two motions. I will deal with them individually. The first motion is as follows:

That, during the period commencing Tuesday, June 16, 1987 up to and including Tuesday, June 30, 1987, the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a.m. and continue to sit without interruption until 10 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and the House shall meet at two o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, June 17, 1987, and continue to sit without interruption until 10 o'clock p.m., for the purpose of considering Government Orders;

Provided that:

1. Standing Order 9(2) respecting the mid-day interruption, Standing Order 19(3) respecting Routine Proceedings and Standing Order 19(4) respecting Members Statements and Oral Question Period shall continue to apply;

2. For the purpose of Standing Order 19(7) Private Members' Business shall be taken up and considered from 6 o'clock p.m. until 7 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays;

3. For the purposes of this order the adjournment debate shall be suspended and the Speaker shall adjourn the House not later than 10 o'clock p.m.

4. Following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 10(1) shall be receivable on Monday, June 15, 1987.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following motion has also been considered by the Parties. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or special Order of this House, in relation to the hours of sitting in effect on Thursday, June 18, 1987, at 8 o'clock p.m. on that day the House shall revert to Statements by Ministers for a statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the tabling of any Ways and Means Notices of Motion and other documents related thereto; and

That following replies pursuant to Standing Order 19(6)(a), the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, we are ready to give consent to this motion being moved and adopted as we did for the previous motion. I only want to observe that these two motions, particularly the one just moved for extended hours, show that our rules make it possible for accommodation to be given when the Government wants to have its programs considered in a timely fashion without departing from the system of meeting within a fixed calendar to do parliamentary business. The rules accommodate that now as they did before.

I think it should be on the record that these motions, particularly the latter one, enable us not to give up our roles as parliamentarians and members of opposition Parties while, at the same time, enabling the Government to put forward for consideration its business without using measures which undermine the basic concept of the rules that we meet within fixed dates.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I would like to add my comments to those of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). It is interesting to note that both of these motions have been agreed to by the House Leaders and will be accepted by all members of this House.

With regard to the Government talking about sitting in the summer or requesting extended hours, it is important that in the future the Government introduce legislation which it believes to be important early enough in the session that the public will have a chance to know what legislation is before the House and that we will not be forced to pass legislation through all stages, quite often within one half day.

I believe that such situations deny the public its right to participate and involve itself in the legislation which is brought before this House and passed by it in the last few days before the end of June.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I think it is fair to say that most of the items we are and will be dealing with in the month of June have been on the Order Paper for some time. On those that have not there has been sufficient discussion, either at committee level or among the Parties and the critics.

In response to the comments of the House Leader for the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray), I think it is fair to say that the achievement of the government business during the month of June has been as a result of co-operation from both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. The package is coming together nicely due to the co-operation we have received.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins—Chapleau): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to table a duly certified petition which was forwarded to me by Reverend Jackson Strapp, Pastor of the First United Church in Timmins. The petition is signed by Reverend Strapp and 46 members of his congregation including residents of Timmins—Chapleau.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to defeat the motion introduced in the House of Commons on February 16 supporting in principle the restoration of the death penalty in Canada.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present a petition from approximately 100 residents of Spadina in the City of Toronto who point out that there are many people who are in need of refuge in the world and that while Canada has had a fairly good system for considering their claims, the system has broken down and that a new one has been proposed by the Standing Committee which has wide public support. However, recent government actions in turning away refugee claimants from our borders are putting real refugees at risk.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Victoria, B.C., who are concerned that the low-level flight training of NATO pilots at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador, not only disrupts the way of life of the native people there but also that the training of pilots to fly under radar into eastern Europe constitutes a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action which tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) end all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for establishment of a larger base there. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to table a petition from residents in my riding from Notre-Dame, Cocagne, Grande-Digue, Saint-Antoine and Buctouche. Your petitioners are concerned about the Canada Post Corporation's new corporate plan that will create two classes of citizens, and your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 118 will be answered today.

[Text]

SHARED TIME AT TEST RANGE, NANOOSE BAY, B.C.

Question No. 118—Mr. Manly:

Does an agreement exist between Canada and the United States with respect to allotted sharing of time at the test range at Nanoose Bay in British Columbia and, if so, in 1986 (a) what percentage of time did Canada use (b) what percentage of Canada's unused time was taken by the United States and what compensation did Canada receive for unused time?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) 11 per cent; (b) 3.15 per cent—$771,509.

*Canadian usage in 1985 was over 30 per cent. The Canadian usage figure for 1987 will be above the low usage rate for 1986.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider and report on the "1987 Constitutional Accord, signed in Ottawa on June 3, 1987, by the First Ministers of Canada", copies of which were tabled in the Senate and the House of Commons on June 3, 1987;

That twelve Members of the House of Commons and five Members of the Senate be the Members of the Special Joint Committee, such Members on the part of the House of Commons to be designated no later than seven sitting days after the adoption of this motion;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its Members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings or of proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the Committee submit its report not later than September 14, 1987, provided that, if the House is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons and with the Clerk of the Senate;

That substitution be authorized, for Members from the House of Commons, from a list of alternates to be provided to the Joint Chairmen of the Special Joint Committee by a representative of each party at the first meeting of the Committee, such list of alternates to contain no more than twice the number of Members of the House of Commons who are Members of the Special Joint Committee representing each party in the House;

That the quorum of the Committee be eight Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when six Members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, five Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise on behalf of our Party today to support the motion before the House to establish a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons to hold public hearings this summer on the Meech Lake Accord.

[Translation]

It is with pleasure, Madam Speaker, because we endorse the Meech Lake Accord, as do the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Party. It is good to have the consensus of the three Parties here in the House in the case of such an important process. I support the resolution before the House for two reasons.

[English]

First, I support the motion before the House because it will give us an opportunity as Members of Parliament to explain the Meech Lake Accord and promote a better understanding of the Accord to people across the country. I think that is important because it is a complicated document which has ramifications that will affect the lives of Canadians, not just today but for many years to come.

Second, and even more important, I support the resolution before the House to establish a Special Joint Committee because I believe that the people of Canada need some input into constitution-building. Constitutions are not just for Prime Ministers, premiers, Members of Parliament or members of Legislative Assemblies. They are for the people of Canada from all the provinces that make up this great nation.

I want to see as much positive input as possible in suggesting some positive changes to the Accord that is before us. I also hope that all 10 provinces will hold hearings, as the Province of Quebec has done and as I understand the Province of Manitoba is obliged to do so that we may have a provincial and national perspective and the resolutions of the House of Commons and Senate, and the resolutions from the provincial legislatures will be the result of input from all Canadians in this diverse country. We will have a constitution about which we will feel proud as we take this country into the 21st century.

Madam Speaker, I remember very well that five or six years ago we had another special joint committee of the House and the Senate of Canada studying the Canadian Constitution. I sat on that committee with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and I remember quite vividly that we had hearings during two or three months in late 1980 and early 1981. It was a good committee. There was good participation not only by Members of the House, like co-chairman Serge Joyal, but also by senators, particularly Conservative Senator Arthur Tremblay and Liberal Senator Jack Austin.

We had another experiment with a joint committee of the House and the Senate two years ago. Yesterday I spoke with my colleague the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) and she told me the sittings took place in the summer of 1985, the joint committee on Star Wars and bilateral trade between the United States and Canada. Again it proved to be an enlightening experience for Canada and for Hon. Members.

[English]

One thing that has happened that I do not like is the passing of a resolution in the Senate yesterday by which the Senate will conduct its own hearings. It is very unfortunate that the Senate would want to conduct its own hearings at the same time as a joint committee is holding hearings.

Members of the House are elected by the people of Canada. As a New Democrat, with my belief about the Senate being a house of patronage comprised basically of political hacks, it is even somewhat difficult to accept a joint committee. As I said in French, experience has shown me that there has been some good contributions from joint committees in the past. However, I do not like the idea of a group of appointed politicians in the other place pretending to speak for Canada when it comes to constitution-building.

Furthermore, this is basically a non-partisan debate and let me say that I do not like the way they are defying the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. He has taken a strong and courageous stand on behalf of his Party but is now being undercut by people in the other place who were appointed by Pierre Trudeau, who represents a different vision of this country. They will simultaneously hold their own hearings, call their own witnesses, and try to present their own point of view which may result in a deadlock for Parliament itself.

The other place really is a house of patronage and if there ever was an argument to abolish the Senate as it now exists, I believe this is it, and this is the time. The Senate should either be abolished or reformed. There is no place in the 20th century for a House that is not elected but has legislative power. The action of the Senate yesterday is another example of that abuse of power. The Senators, who make up a Liberal majority, are serving another master, Pierre Elliott Trudeau; he appointed most of them to the Senate. Those very senators who are serving Pierre Trudeau are trying to undercut the present leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the Opposition.

I suppose they will also put in a bid to have access to the parliamentary channel in order to televise their hearings. I believe that all Members of the House agree that the parliamentary channel should exist for the elected Members of Parliament so that our hearings may be televised and the people of this country can see who is coming to talk to their elected representatives about the Constitution. It should not be there for appointees from yesterday's Canada.

I have talked about the new and old Canada. The old Canada was represented by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, rigid centralism and confrontation across the country. As a Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan, I know about the alienation that such a vision created in Saskatchewan. That is not the kind of Canada I want, nor do I think it is the kind of Canada that any political Party in this House wants today.

We have a new Canada of co-operative federalism that was talked about years ago by Tommy Douglas, Robert Cliche, Lester Pearson and Bob Stanfield. We have a new Canada of co-operative federalism that is now being promoted by the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and the leader of my party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). That is the kind of Canada about which I have always dreamed. Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Canada is the Canada of yesterday. That is why I am worried about the hearings the Senators are undertaking and promoting in the other place.

My vision of this country involves a strong central Government that is able to equalize conditions among people, regions and provinces. However, my vision of this country also is one in which there must be equality of provinces. There must be strong provinces that can legislate and reflect their legitimate differences.

We must recognize the diversity of this country and have flexibility so that there can be programs in the Town of Kamsack, or the Village of Buchanan that are different from programs in Newfoundland, Montreal or Vancouver. At the same time I see a government that can meet the national objectives and programs that are so important to deliver services across the country.

[Translation]

Also in Canada I believe it is fitting that Quebec be considered as a distinct society because Quebec is different, Quebec needs a different status. It is the reality in Canada. My God, Madam Speaker, it was Lester Pearson who led the way with the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. It was Mr. Pearson who led the way, believing as he did in co-operative federalism. Messrs. Tommy Douglas and Bob Stanfield as well as the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) also took that direction, and now it is the direction taken by the three Parties here in the House. It is the reality in Canada. Quebec is different, and if we want unity in this country we must acknowledge this reality in the Canadian Constitution.

Coming from Saskatchewan and western Canada, I am proud that the Premiers have recognized that Canadian reality. I am convinced that almost all Members of this House agree with me on that.

[English]

My vision of Canada also includes the aboriginal people as a distinct and unique people who need more constitutional protection. I hope that through these hearings we can mobilize public opinion and convince legislatures, primarily in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, that they should include in the Accord recognition of Indian rights to self-government in Canada. That was something which was accepted in principle, certainly by the federal Parliament and by six other legislatures and, I am sure, by the National Assembly in the Province of Quebec.

I appeal to the Premiers of this country to recognize that in order to complete the circle of a strong federal Government and provinces, and the diversity and uniqueness of Quebec, we must also include the uniqueness of our native Indian people with an appropriate amendment which recognizes aboriginal self-government in Canada. We may already have had that, were it not for the intransigence of Premier Devine, Premier Getty and Premier Vander Zalm. I appeal to them once again to reconsider their position and to establish public hearings in their provinces so that aboriginal people have a chance to have some input in terms of constitutional building.

As someone who has a name which is neither French nor English, though half English in ancestry, I want to to go on record on behalf of our Party as speaking out as strongly as possible to ensure that we have multiculturalism recognized in the Constitution of Canada. I am very happy to see in the final Accord, which came out of the Langevin Block, a change to the original Accord, that nothing in the Accord will derogate from the existing rights of multicultural groups in this country. I think that is a very important thing which should be noted and explained to the people.

In this country we have a lot of differences, but I do not think that we should let those differences divide us. I think those differences are what makes this country unique. I come from a riding where there are people of many national backgrounds, such as Ukrainian, Chinese, Russian, native Indian and the odd Scandinavian like myself. We have people of British background, and a few of French background, although not many. In my kind of province we have a cultural mosaic. It is really great to go to a non-Ukrainian wedding in my riding and find that many of the customs are Ukrainian because they have picked up some tremendously interesting and vital customs from the Ukrainian culture. I think we have done that right across this country. We are not the same melting pot as we see south of the border in the United States. Because of those differences I think we are richer and I feel these differences will unite this country in an even greater way.

It is very important that we support this Accord because it is very important to change the Constitution to include Quebec.

[Translation]

And as I said, it is important to recognize Quebec as a distinct society and to have our Constitution recognize that Quebec is different. It is not only a matter of the different language spoken by the majority of Quebecers. They have a different culture. They have the Civil Code. There are many differences.

[English]

Second, I want to comment on the spending power and the powers of central Government. I think Pierre Trudeau has exaggerated to its utmost limit some of the dire consequences which could happen to the central authority or the spending power. I think he has taken the worst case, exaggerating as much as possible.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam pointed out that she was in this House when Lester Pearson was Prime Minister and when he talked about co-operative federalism. The Right Hon. Lester Pearson tried to get recognition of spending power by the federal Government in the Constitution and he could not. Now it is part of the Meech Lake Accord. In fact, there is a reference to the Government of Canada in terms of spending power which was not there before. There is also a recognition in the Accord of national objectives, which was not there before. I suggest that some of the things which were fought for by Lester Pearson back in the 1960s are now coming to fruition.

With respect to the federal spending power and the amending formula, I think in many ways we now have less of a strait jacket, because all we need are seven provinces out of 10. If we look at the history of medical care, unemployment insurance and the Canada Pension Plan, we find that in all those cases we built a consensus for the unanimity of the provinces with the federal Parliament before we went ahead. Now if we have a province such as Newfoundland, Saskatchewan, Ontario or British Columbia, which is intransigent and says, no, it will not necessarily hold back the rest of the country.

We talk here about the federal spending power and we are talking about it in areas of exclusive provincial rights. Those are the rights of the provinces. They do not get compensated for a national program unless their own programs are compatible with national objectives. What is wrong with that? If the program is not compatible with national objectives they will not receive compensation, and if it is a proper and popular program they will suffer the consequences in the next provincial election.

Mr. Caccia: What will you do with the extra billing?

Mr. Nystrom: Extra billing does not fit into this example at all. If there is any Party which knows something about medicare it is the Party of Tommy Douglas which fought for medicare in North America from Saskatchewan some 25 years ago come July 1.

With respect to the Supreme Court and the Senate, I wonder why some people such as Pierre Trudeau and the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and a few others, think the federal Government should have the unilateral right to appoint the Justices of the Supreme Court. This is a federal country. We have two orders of government which are equal.

In Saskatchewan we have had problems with Supreme Court decisions. In our province the Supreme Court struck down legislation by the Blakeney Government to tax foreign multinational oil companies. That was done because there was no input from the provinces in the selection of those judges.

I say in a federal state that both the provincial and federal Governments should co-appoint the Justices of the Supreme Court, and that is what is being done in the Meech Lake Accord. That is co-operative federalism. That is the kind of thing we want in our province. I suggest that the overwhelming majority of Canadians want it as well.

With respect to the Senate, we saw what happened yesterday in that House. In defiance of the Leader of the Liberal Party, it passed a motion to have a study of the constitutional Accord. If we are not going to abolish the other place, if we are not going to have an elected Senate, the least we can do is to ensure that the provinces have some input into the selection of Senators so that the Senators are not obedient to an old master like Pierre Trudeau but will have some responsibility to represent their provinces and their regions in a truly federal state.

I also want to mention the north. There is perhaps one glaring omission in the Constitutional Accord, and that is that northern Canadians become, in a constitutional sense, second-class citizens. Other residents of other provinces have an input through their legislature and in the nomination of judges and Senators. However, citizens of Yukon and the Northwest Territories do not have the same right. I do not think that is fair. I know an important case is being launched, but I think we are going to have to look very hard to find some kind of amendments so we do not create second-class citizens in a constitutional sense in northern Canada.

I am also concerned that the amending formula for the creation of new provinces has been changed requiring unanimous consent. I think we can hopefully all unite in this House to build up some kind of public feeling among the provinces to agree to revert back to the existing amending formula, which is seven provinces out of 10. Because of this glaring oversight, I want to move an amendment which I hope is acceptable to all Members of this House.

I move, seconded by my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West, (Mr. Benjamin), who has been pushing for the idea:

> That the motion be amended by striking the word 'and' at the end of paragraph 9 and substituting the following therefore,
> That the Committee, or a sub-Committee, have power to travel to, and hold at least one public hearing in, each of the two Territories;
> That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of advisors to assist in its work, and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required;
> That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, five Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

In closing, I appeal to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the Liberal Party to seriously look at the possibility of giving this committee the right to travel in northern Canada. I think this is a really special case because they do not have provincial Governments. They were not part of the Meech Lake Agreement. They did not have a Premier sitting down at the table for them. The federal Government represented them, I know, but citizens of other provinces had both the federal Government and their premier, and there is a difference. With the amended formula, they do not get a chance to help select the judges of the Supreme Court or the Senators. There is a guarantee for a Senator, but the federal Government would appoint the Senator from the Yukon or the Northwest Territories. So in that sense I think there is a constitutional double standard.

The other point I want to make is that they may never become provinces if unanimous consent is required. There is a difference when it comes to the north. I think the committee should have the power to travel to the North or to send a subcommittee to the north. If the committee, through consultation, deems it unnecessary, then the committee does not have to travel. We do not say that it has to travel. We are saying that if it wishes to travel then it should have the funds available to do so.

I am sorry that my time is running out. I would like to have made one or two more comments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Hon. Members have heard the terms of the Hon. Member's amendment. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, this is a sad time for Canada, not necessarily because of differences of opinion, on this constitutional Accord, but when we see a Party once regarded as a Party of principle become purely a Party of political opportunism—

Mr. Mazankowski: Exactly right.

Mr. Johnston: —we all know that power corrupts. The NDP has now proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that even the fleeting sniff of power corrupts.

That being said, I wish to ask the NDP spokesperson, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), a question with regard to process. He mentioned the constraint on the spending power that is found in the proposed new section 106A(1) of the Accord, which he views very favourably. He says that to withdraw, provinces would have to meet national objectives in carrying on their own programs. At the present time we know that the spending power as it is generally used requires the delivery of funds to the provinces for them to spend in accordance with certain national criteria, otherwise the funds are not forthcoming. I suggest that this section clearly creates a new situation and the term "national objectives" must mean something. It is a very important consideration, what it means. That is a legal issue. Who establishes those national objectives is another legal issue. We have already heard a number of interpretations.

I would like to advise my friend from Yorkton—Melville and the House that I have written a letter to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and to each of the provincial Premiers, including the Premier of Saskatchewan, Premier Devine. In this letter I have suggested that it would be very helpful if a number of these ambiguities, such as the ones surrounding the spending power, were cleared up by the courts before the resolution is adopted, either here or in the provincial legislatures. That cannot be done through committee hearings. Committee hearings are important in order to have views expressed.

But there is a mechanism for doing this. In the case of the federal level it can be done by reference case under Section 55 of the Supreme Court Act; and at the provincial level, in the case of Saskatchewan, for example, it can be done under Section 2 of the Constitutional Questions Act, Revised Statutes of Saskatchewan, 1978, Chapter 29. This clause, which we are told was of particular concern to the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley, who shares the same political affiliation as the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, can be dealt with by a similar reference made under Section 1 of the Constitutional Questions Act of Manitoba, Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1970, Chapter 180.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether or not he would support that idea, which should not in any way delay the parliamentary timetable but would enable us to determine before we do something to the country and to the Constitution what the impact of it will be by definitive, legal interpretation in some of the obvious areas in which there are concerns. Obviously, the court cannot comment on everything in the Accord, but it certainly can take on the interpretation of these specific ambiguities so that parliamentarians and Members of provincial legislatures will know on what they are voting. That is the question.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I thank my friend from Montreal for his suggestion. I think it is an example of why we need public hearings. His suggestion is worth looking at and studying. I cannot answer his question off the top of my head. It is one of those things about which one would have to think. I think it is well worth studying. Hopefully, over the summer we will have all sorts of other ideas that will come before the committee and we can build up some kind of national consensus. There are ambiguities. But there are also ambiguities in the Constitution which we patriated in 1982. A great many items in the Charter of Rights are left to the interpretation of the courts. So I say to my friend that his suggestion is worth taking a look at.

I wish to make one more comment about his comments concerning our principles.

Mr. Johnston: Which ones?

Mr. Nystrom: On the Constitution. I challenge my friend from Saint-Henri—Westmount to go back over any speech I have made on the Constitution back in 1981, 1982 or 1983. I have always spoken about my vision of the country in a similar way to which I did today. I have not changed my spots. I am not a leopard which changes its spots. We have always believed in a very strong co-operative federalist state. Tommy Douglas spoke about that. Robert Cliche——who was well-respected in that province often referred to the federalist system of those provinces and perhaps Mr. Cliche had much influence on the Prime minister, Mr. Mulroney, because he began his political life with him. And Mr. Cliche was not alone, there were also Mr. Tommy Douglas, Mr. Allan Blakeney and many other New Democrats who dealt with the necessity of having a co-operative system in this country.

[English]

I find my friend's comment, that we do not have principles now because we are becoming very strong, to be rather strange.

The final point I wish to make is that since I am being so co-operative about taking a look at his suggestion, I wonder if he can tell me whether or not he will now support our amendment to have this committee or subcommittee travel to the North. I do not think that our northern citizens, in the constitutional sense, are being treated the same as his constituents or mine.

Mr. Benjamin: They are being snubbed.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to hear my friend the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) refer to Pierre Elliott Trudeau as the man of yesterday. For once, I can agree with him. I find it very difficult to agree with most of his ideas, but that is one on which I can agree. The same is true of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). I do not often agree with him, but today I do although I find it somewhat surprising, something akin to a Damascus road conversion for the New Democratic Party, because I, personally, have always been consistent.

Why did I get involved in politics? Because I felt that the Liberal approach was one of confrontation and division, and I wanted one of reconciliation. I decided to join a party which was going to address this problem. Today, we are solving the problem, and I am very proud of it. But I wonder where the Hon. Member was when he should have supported Mr. Clark, a man with a deep belief in provincial rights who worked very hard to get a foothold in the province of Quebec because he was determined to defend the provinces' rights. What did the New Democratic Party do, Madam Speaker? It sought Mr. Clark's defeat. It even moved the motion which defeated Mr. Clark's Government. I do not see any consistency there, and I wonder also where the New Democratic Party was when Mr. Stanfield, before Mr. Clark, promoted the same approach of respecting the provinces and decentralizing the Canadian Government because it failed to recognize our regional disparities. The Government did not recognize the rights of Quebecers, for instance, who make up a distinct society while being proud Canadians. Where were they? That is why I agree for once with the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount. This looks very much like a conversion and smacks of political expediency. I hope such is not the case, because it would be very sad that a man should have all the right principles for the wrong reasons.

I would like to ask him two questions.

Here is my first question. He was saying a while ago that the new spending powers under the Accord would not weaken Canada. Is he planning to encourage Mr. Pawley to keep his mouth shut when the time comes to deal with this aspect, since the NDP leader in Manitoba was apparently the one who created problems and almost caused the Meech Lake Accord to fail?

Here is my second question. He mentioned the amendment aimed at protecting the multicultural dimension of Canada. He said that we are a mosaic and not a melting pot, like the United States. The Quebec federal NDP leader, Mr. Harney, seems determined to create division and conflict again, saying that the linguistic rights—

[English]

What is going to happen to the minorities in Quebec if Mr. Harney, the federal leader of the NDP in Quebec at the moment—

Mr. Benjamin: You have everything wrong.

Mrs. Mailly: His approach is that he does not care about the rights of minorities because he wants language matters strictly under provincial jurisdiction. What are you going to do about that?

These are two questions that I think have to be answered if you are going to make yourselves the defenders of a distinct and proud Quebec society.

Mr. Nystrom: First, Mr. Harney speaks for himself, I am sure, like the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) will speak for himself.

The Hon. Member asked about spending power. Mr. Pawley signed the agreement, and partly because of his insistence the wording was strengthened with respect to the federal objectives. He made a very useful contribution towards strengthening the federal objectives, making sure they were compatible with the federal Government. We can all be proud of his contribution. I certainly am. I am also surprised that the Hon. Member would make that rather partisan remark.

As to Quebec, this is not a new-found interest in that province. I and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) can give the Hon. Member our policy books and she will find that, with Robert Cliche and Tommy Douglas back in the sixties, there was a recognition that Quebec was a unique and distinct society.

Mr. Benjamin: Go back to the 1940s and Thérèse Casgrain.

Mr. Nystrom: My colleague refers to the 1940s. I was not around the conventions in those days, but Madam Casgrain, a respected woman in Quebec, talked about the uniqueness and difference of Quebec. It is not a sudden discovery by the NDP that Quebec is different.

Mrs. Mailly: You supported the Liberals who were against all these principles.

Mr. Nystrom: Just a last comment, Madam Speaker, please?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is over. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) has the floor.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Madam Speaker, I know other Members want to speak and our time is limited, so I will do something I usually do not do, stay fairly close to my notes.

I listened with a great deal of interest to my friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who always speaks with eloquence and passion. I agree with much of what he said. I am not going to touch on some of the things I fully agree with, especially what he said about the North. However, I want to deal with some of the other items that he mentioned.

This is either the beauty, the challenge or the curse of this debate. In listening to his logic in interpreting the Meech Lake Accord I am almost reaffirmed in my concern about some of the very things he sees so positively, but which I think create real problems. He talks quite rightly about the Machiavellian politics going on in the other Chamber by that muse from Lake Ainslie in Nova Scotia, MacEachen Incorporated. He has come out of his cave of hibernation and is trying to impose himself in the parliamentary process by playing monopoly with the concerns of the citizens of this country.

I said, along with Stanley Knowles, many years ago that I am for abolition of the Senate. One of my first essays in political science dealt with the reform of the Senate. However, what I cannot accept from my hon. friend who just spoke so well is that he laments the hacks, flacks, and all the political patronage in that Chamber down the hall, yet does not raise any questions about how the new method works. There is still going to be appointments of hacks, flacks, and good people, but instead of being appointed only by a Prime Minister after consultation, the appointments will now come from a list provided by the provinces. The form has not been changed.

If my hon. friend, who has been around here for a few years, along with some Premiers who are a little newer to the political game, really believes, given the unanimity rule for amending federal institutions, that there is a snowball's chance in that place down below of making any fundamental reform to the Senate, he is wrong. Triple E goes out the window. Instead of equal, effective and elected, it will be echo chamber, eternal, and ineffective. It is as dead as a dodo bird. Senate reform is as dead as the dinosaurs in Drumheller. Yet my friend waxes eloquently and quite passionately about what is going on down there and how they are becoming very partisan in their deliberations on this very fundamental document.

Quite frankly, I am not going to be partisan today because this document cuts across Party lines and there is real concern in all Parties about the Meech Lake Accord. I agree that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) brought a tremendous feeling of national reconciliation to this country after the election of 1984. We do not have the confrontation we had before. He deserves a lot of credit for getting the 10 Premiers around the table and coming up with an agreement. That is very rare. Yet we cannot be completely blind to the way some people interpret the implications of that agreement. We can all have visions of national reconciliation but we have to know if this constitutional document is going to stand the test of time; not when everyone is feeling very good and very co-operative but when there is stress and strain on the federation, as there is from time to time.

Do not bring the dragon of Pierre Trudeau out and say that is the man of yesterday. He was Prime Minister for 16 or 18 years, and in that sense he is the past, but some of the questions, if not the way he raised them, are very legitimate. I am glad Canadians are going to have a chance to assess those questions now that we have this motion to send the matter to a joint committee. I will not get into that, but I compliment my House Leader for doing that. They will have their chance if the committee gets input from the public, and hopefully the provincial legislatures will have their public input as well.

The amendment suggested by my friend from Yorkton—Melville is interesting and constructive, but the fact is we have to decide whether it is co-operative federalism or whether it is going to be fractured federalism. I am going to refer to something which is central to that question, and that is the spending power. Before I do I want to read into the record a letter I wrote to my Prime Minister on May 12. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) had spoken out, but this was before Mr. Trudeau spoke out. I talked about vision and my basic instinctive concern about what Meech Lake would do. It reads:

> My Dear Prime Minister,
> Notwithstanding your eloquent and sensitive speech yesterday, it is with regret and after much wrenching introspection that I am duty bound to inform you that in all conscience I cannot agree to the Meech Lake Accord. I sincerely believe that in the laudable desire to get Quebec "in", we are so fundamentally changing the future character of Canada that the "one Canada" I believe in will become too loose a Confederation with the Federal Government no longer being first among equals but merely one among equals.
> I am not too disturbed about Quebec's justified claim of being a "distinct society"—but with the opting out process along with compensation, there is no doubt in my mind that in time, and soon, there will be a de facto "deux nations", let alone sovereignty-association status in that Province. Accordingly, I can appreciate why the Bourassa position has been positively received in Quebec, while unfortunately, and dangerously, in a political sense, the rest of Canada is so numb (and bored) over the constitutional process, that the fundamental implications of nation building at Meech Lake are not receiving the proper attention they deserve.
> Therefore, in my view, a one day debate in the House, while commendable, is not sufficient. However, I appreciate that the fine print of the necessary legislation will provide an opportunity for a further debate of the principles of the Accord. Nevertheless, recognizing the reality of the parliamentary and political process and the limitation of time for government business, I feel these principles should be debated now—and surely if these suggested constitutional changes are to stand the test of time, then they should now be able to withstand public and parliamentary scrutiny.
> At a minimum, a parliamentary committee of both Houses should be given an opportunity to seek and hear the public's view.
> This would provide a vehicle for meaningful public input on the principles of the Accord to assess whether the opting out clause might adversely affect the leadership role of the federal Government let alone the provincial veto on national institutions which surely consigns Senate reform to the perpetual backwater of a constitutional strait-jacket.
> Furthermore, the institutionalizing of annual federal-provincial conferences on the Constitution and the economy, with possibly the real agreements being made (necessarily) behind closed doors, will surely render the parliamentary process somewhat redundant and hence the House of Commons, for at least the important national issues, will become a mere rubber stamp.
> I have no doubt, Mr. Prime Minister, of the intensity and passion of our Francophone colleagues in all Parties with respect to their support for the Accord.
> I recall when Premier Bourassa said that Quebec could not agree with the Victoria Amending Formula, he eloquently emphasized that his position was not anti-Canada but pro-Quebec. Likewise, I am not anti-Quebec but pro-Canada and Mr. Prime Minister, I hold my position with as much passion and intensity as do our Francophone colleagues.

The reason I read the letter was to indicate that that was my instinct at a time long before others who had more responsibility in running the country spoke out.

Why is there such concern in terms of the powers of the federal Government? I will not repeat what I said about the Senate. However, we can forget about reform in the Senate and Triple E. Anyone who thinks that there will be fundamental reform of the unanimity rule is whistling Dixie.

I should like to refer to the American experience. They are celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of their Constitution. They started with 13 little States, and they had an amending formula which required unanimity. The whole system bogged down in that more simple day. They had to reframe their Constitution and provide the amending formula which they now have where there is some flexibility.

It is ironic that we took so many years—a hundred or so—to get our Constitution back into the country where it properly should be. It had an amending formula and then, almost out of the blue—although I admit that there was a year-long negotiation behind closed doors—we are to put federal institutions into a constitutional strait-jacket from which they will never be changed.

In terms of the spending power, I should like to say that this is a very complex, complicated situation. I agree with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount that perhaps some of these matters should be considered by stated case in the Supreme Court to get some judicial direction before we put the Constitution into constitutional stone.

This matter is different from the bilateral agreements with provinces. The Cullen-Coutre immigration agreement is a bilateral agreement between Quebec and Canada on immigration. There are many bilateral agreements between the federal Government and the provinces from time to time, which are not frozen in constitutional stone.

The problem with the Meech Lake Accord is that we are taking some of those de facto, ad hoc bilateral situations which require flexibility from time to time and we are putting them into a Constitution which is much more difficult to change.

Let us look at the spending power. The spending power is tremendously different. I know there are different types of arrangements now in the different social plans in the country and that each province must have some variation. However, that is much better than the present document which we are considering. Those who have been seduced by the semantic changes which occurred in a 20-hour session in the Langevin Building illustrate the danger of our moving too fast down the constitutional road without some judicial assessment of the real interpretation.

I can understand; I have an Indian community in my riding. They were here for the constitutional debate on aboriginal rights. Talk about second-class Canadians which members of the NDP mention in rhetoric yet do nothing about in reality!

What if you were one of the aboriginals, Madam Speaker, who came to Ottawa several months ago and found the constitutional conference floundering because the participants would not or could not define aboriginal self-government or aboriginal rights? It is a legitimate question; it is a very difficult thing to define. However, that conference failed because they could not define it. Yet, you got something else—a "distinctive society" with opting out features with compensation. Somehow the Premier of Ontario admitted in Queen's Park that the courts would define that. Don't you think you would have been a little hard done by? Don't you think that that is one of the reasons there is some irritation and quite proper irritation?

We are prepared to leave things to the court on one hand—the Meech Lake Accord. However, on other matters which affect people and their rights, we shy away from them and say that we cannot come to an agreement. I tell you, Madam Speaker, that is hypocrisy of the highest order.

Let me refer to something else which is not on record. Quite frankly, I think the press have been lazy laggards in really assessing the implications of the Accord, the rat-pack journalism which goes on around here. They get mesmerized by Trudeau and they do not do their homework.

I will read another document into the record. It is only one of many which I have. I hope someone follows through on it, so that when we get to the committee, those who appear before the committee to give evidence can be examined.

I should like to quote from a Canadian Press story dated May 11, 1983 concerning the Conservative leadership campaign. It is one of the softest ones. There are others which have much more pejorative terms about what candidates were saying about each other and about the positions of their fellow colleagues running in the race to be leader of my Party. It is part of the confusion.

Four years ago, very responsible, competent, conscientious, serious politicians had something to say about the opting out formula. There is a complete change today. Surely they must come before the committee to be examined on why it was so bad four years ago and is most acceptable today.

I will read one of many clippings; I am not going to bore you, Madam Speaker. The May 11, 1983, CP story reads as follows:

> Joe Clark is playing "fast and loose with the historical truth" when he claims his proposed constitutional concession to Quebec is official Progressive Conservative policy, says leadership candidate David Crombie.
> Crombie says the proposal, supported by the Tories during the 1981 constitutional debate and now opposed by all leadership candidates but Clark, was merely a last minute political ploy designed to embarrass the Government by attracting support from Quebec Liberal Senators.
> The Tories argued then—as Clark does now—that up to three provinces should get full financial compensation if they opt out of a constitutional change that transfers provincial powers to Ottawa.
> Crombie, a member of the all-Party constitution committee, said he and others opposed the idea but voted for the unsuccessful Tory amendment because of pressure from Clark to show caucus solidarity.
> Jake Epp, the top Tory constitutional spokesman at the time, says Crombie is rewriting history to justify why he, John Crosbie and Michael Wilson have changed their minds on the issue.
> "Obviously it is Party policy—caucus voted for it", Epp said Wednesday. "I don't understand the flip-flopping".
> The complicated issue of fiscal compensation may now be, as Crosbie says, "a pretty academic question."
> Yet it reflects a tougher Tory attitude toward Quebec's demands and has added some weird twists to the leadership race:
> —Clark was booed at a Toronto debate, accused of selling out to separatists and criticized by Anglophone editorialists for defending a position held in 1981 first by eight Premiers and then by his caucus.
> —In the heat of the race, three former cabinet Ministers have suddenly revealed a change of mind. Crombie admits he voted for something he didn't believe in. Crosbie was surprised when reminded he once voted for it. Wilson confused compensation with another issue during the Toronto debate . . . Brian Mulroney, who has also savaged Clark's position, says he has his own nine-point constitutional plan but aides can't produce a copy or say exactly what it is . . .
> Ironically, Clark's opponents have landed squarely in the camp of their chief enemy, Prime Minister Trudeau, who says fiscal compensation would amount to "incremental separatism."
> Trudeau said in an interview published last weekend: "I note with a bit of amusement that the people who supported him (Clark) then and booed the Government . . . now are taking our side against Mr. Clark."
> Clark argues his position is consistent with a more decentralized view of federalism and aids all provinces, not just Quebec.
> Crosbie, Crombie and Wilson say they have reassessed their position.

• (1310)

This is another CP story of May 4 which ties in with what I have just read:

Conservative Leadership candidate Brian Mulroney accused the Party Quebecois government Tuesday of preventing Quebec from reaching a constitutional understanding with the rest of Canada.

This is a compliment to the Prime Minister about more or less what happened, but it does not really answer the question about physical compensation. It continues:

"Get rid of the PQ, and as Prime Minister of Canada, I'd negotiate constitutional peace with the people of Quebec just like that," Mulroney said while visiting Tories in northeastern Quebec.

He said it is "practically impossible" to improve relations between Quebec and Ottawa as long as the PQ is in power.

Mulroney has been criticizing his leadership rival Joe Clark for playing into the hands of the PQ by promising to insert in the Constitution a formula allowing the provinces to opt out of amendments with financial compensation.

The Montreal businessman has refused to specify his own views on Quebec's constitutional discontents, saying it would be bad strategy for a future Prime Minister to tip his bargaining hand to Premier Rene Levesque.

Mulroney announced a nine-point "formula for rekindling the kind of alliance between Canadians which Sir John A. MacDonald spoke of more than 100 years ago."

I took the time to read that, Madam Speaker, because that just shows you the difficulty and the complexity of this opting out formula. Does it strengthen Canada or does it make a French Canada?

My friend from Yorkton—Melville can quote Tommy Douglas. Tommy Douglas who started medicare in Saskatchewan never would have had medicare as a national program if this opting out compensation formula were in place. We all know the history.

Premier Robarts of Ontario was dragged into the plan because Prime Minister Pearson said, "you will have four criteria and if you get four criteria you will be part of medicare. If you don't get into the plan, we will test you anyway". That is really political blackmail in provincial jurisdiction, admittedly, but that is what got the medicare plan launched. It would not have happened, in my submission, if we had the present opting out compensation formula that is in the Meech Lake Accord.

I think you are indicating that my time is almost up, Madam Speaker. I will leave the Accord but I would like to touch on one other thing which reflects on Parliament and which bothers me. I do believe in Parliament. I understand there is a de facto form of Government, that is, federal-provincial conferences. They have become very important. To institutionalize them into the Constitution on a yearly basis really makes this place rather redundant. Put a Member on the government side in my position, something that I have nothing to do with, understandably, because I was not there in the negotiations, yet there is a hosanna and a euphoria about an agreement because everyone comes together. Yet if I voice objections to what I have been no party to and on which I never ran an election, I become, in effect, an implied traitor to the cause.

I agree completely with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and, I hope, my House Leader, for whom I have the highest respect who made a light remark about me, about my seniority. Perhaps my seniority will be the only thing I will have left when I sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: These things will come on a yearly basis. We have to change the rules, as the Hon. Member for Windsor West said, so there can be some provision to trigger a debate, such as there is in Manitoba, when constitutional accords are made.

In conclusion, and this is a conclusion, I admit, this stuff all started in recent times with Premier Robarts calling Premiers together for the Confederation Conference of Tomorrow in Toronto in 1967. I just want to say one thing, something that I will never forget because I was then a brand new Member. I would not have even suggested participating in any meaningful debate but it never really came on to the floor of the House. The Attorney General of Ontario, Arthur Wishert, said, in defining the problems of entrenching rights and having a written Constitution, that in the civil law the only rights you have are what is written down, whereas in the unwritten common law they are wide open unless they are taken away.

Just to divorce myself from Pierre Trudeau, I say we have the worst of both worlds unless there are some meaningful amendments to this matter. We have the Supreme Court of Canada de facto legislating on a Charter of Rights, which no one fully understands—that is arguable—it may be good or bad. Now with this Meech Lake Accord institutionalizing constitutional agreements and no one knowing what the Accord really means, we will have the Supreme Court again legislating, doing our work, telling us what we should have written, and I say that is the worst of both worlds.

I am so glad that we have at least got this thing launched in a committee. I really do hope that Members from all sides over a period of time will have a chance to contribute. If we can spend days on capital punishment and days on the Patent Act and drugs, surely Members of Parliament should take the responsibility and in the right place and at the right time speak out on this—whichever way they feel—because constitutions, as someone said earlier, are for people, not just for the leaders of the land.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) that now that he has sat down he has his seniority but he also has his self-respect, and that is terribly important.

My question arises out of his comments that the courts will tell us what we have done. He referred, I think, to a comment of Premier Peterson and he also referred to the over-all thrust of the Accord which will place even greater legislative power, if you like, in the hands of the courts.

I am not sure if the Hon. Member was here earlier when I mentioned that I had written to the Premiers and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and suggested that a number of the ambiguities in this Accord could be cleared up by reference cases, provincially and federally. Would he comment on that as an appropriate procedure, given that some of these issues, not some of the fundamental ones which he raises, such as the institutionalization of First Ministers' conferences—we all know where that could lead, as he has pointed out—but some of the ambiguities in specific sections, whether it be on spending power, distinct society versus distinct identity, or the issue of whether that provision in turn overrides the Charter and so on, it seems to me, Madam Speaker, not only could be but should be put to the courts so they can tell us now, when we look at this resolution and debate it in the House, what those provisions actually mean.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was momentarily out of the House. I did comment on that and I thought it was a good idea.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan). He had a lot of concerns and believed that there are many questions regarding this Accord. I believe those are legitimate concerns and I share some of them. I hope, as a result of the committee process, that we will have a number of people not only addressing those concerns but addressing a number of others which many people across the country have as to the exact wording and meaning of the Accord.

When the Member says that this Accord weakens Confederation—and that is the implication he left—he should also recognize that the constitutional package of 1981, for which I believe he voted, also was a vague package, a package going to the courts which enshrined a Charter of Rights the exact implications of which even at this stage many of us do not know when we passed it in those days. This is not something new. His Prime Minister and the Premiers did not do something new this year. This is an ongoing process and it will always be a problem when we deal with constitutional changes. The Member accepts and agrees with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) that that is a valid position. He is probably quite sincere in his opinion, but he must admit that those are not the same reservations that he himself had in 1981.

The Hon. Member referred to the New Democratic Party and our position on aboriginal rights. He inferred from the motion we have before us, which the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) put forward, that we are concerned about the Yukon and the Northwest Territories being left out. He also somehow inferred that we are not concerned that aboriginal people were also left out. That can hardly be true. The Member has heard us speak on this issue. He knows that on Monday of this week the New Democratic Party had a motion calling for another First Ministers' meeting on aboriginal rights. In that same motion we again referred to the need to recognize the existing rights of the people from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and the aboriginal people. That motion which was put to the House was not a motion of confidence in the Government. We explained that in the first speech that was made by a member of the NDP. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants voted against that amendment. I think there is a contradiction there, and before he criticizes us for putting forward these amendments on a consistent basis, twice this week, he should at least admit that we have been trying but sometimes he has not supported our efforts.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I was very brief in replying to the Hon. Member's first intervention and I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member in a sense. However, let us not kid ourselves and play games. I was in opposition for 18 years. We used to think up dream motions that we knew would be turned down.

The Hon. Member is correct. Because of the questions in the Meech Lake Accord over aboriginal rights and the north, I suppose, to be logical, I would vote against it, and a couple of Members did so. However, the Hon. Member knows as well as I do that that was a Supply motion. He may say that it is not a confidence motion, but the fact is that it dealt with one of the most integral parts of the whole parliamentary process, and that is Supply.

There is another rule that indicates that such a motion was not a motion of confidence, and the Hon. Member has said that it was not, but I have my interpretation. I used to sit on that side of the House and plot motions that would embarrass the Government. The Government would be caught between a rock and a hard place because the motion would be for motherhood. Yet the reality is that it is a vote of confidence.

I had no hesitation in voting with my Party on a confidence motion. While I may have some reservations about the interpretations of the Accord, I hope that the joint committee does resolve some of them and I hope that my fears are unfounded. That is a heck of a lot different from voting against a Government on a confidence motion.

I say to my friends in the NDP that I have the greatest respect for the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He is one of the most active speakers in the House. I do not want to be too partisan because I hope that this matter can be debated in a political but not a partisan way. That is what I resent so much about the Senate.

When the Hon. Member said that he was a leopard that did not change his spots, I had a little dirty thought. I thought, yes, sometimes that fellow is pretty strong and perhaps has some spots. However, in this case, given the history of his Party with the Regina Manifesto, Woodsworth, Coldwell and Lewis, he is a tabby-cat. That Party is a tabby-cat. NDP used to mean "New Democratic Principle". Some of us thought it meant "No Damned Principles", but now it means "No Disturbing Polls". They want to ensure that they do not rock the boat and perhaps they will slip through.

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) has spoken passionately about a Constitution that needs to reflect the essence of Canada and of Canadians. He has said that a Constitution needs to address the aspirations of the country's people and not necessarily of the country's political leaders. He also spoke very passionately about how the Accord treats and addresses the first citizens of Canada, the aboriginal people. I appreciated his passionate plea for bringing down to earth what a Constitution is supposed to be. In essence, a Constitution is supposed to define its country and its people.

Toward that end, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Having spoken to the people, having recognized the aboriginal fact of Canada, and acknowledging the fact that there is both a French and an English heritage in Canada, would the Hon. Member be supportive of an amendment that would add in Clause 1 the fourth indisputable reality of Canada, which is its multicultural nature?

Multicultural Canadians have made contributions to Canada, not only in contemporary times but in fact in history. The aspirations of that sector of society for their children in years to come should be recognized. There is a belief in Canada that Canadians who are of neither French nor English origin have somehow been relegated to a second-class status. These people have been included in the Constitution as a footnote in Section 16. However, Clause 1 at the beginning of the Constitution basically sets out what Canada is. Would the Hon. Member support an inclusion of the concept of Canada being made up of four fundamental characters, the French, the English, the aboriginal and the multicultural people?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would appreciate a short answer from the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Nowlan: It is a very fundamental and important question, Madam Speaker, but my answer can be short.

Just as an aside to my friend from Yorkton—Melville who spoke of the Constitution and of Trudeau and the worst events let me say that the Constitution must cover all events and it must be for good times and for bad.

I think my hon. friend has just raised one of the real questions that must be resolved. I know what he is getting at in the abstract. I will wait and see what will be done through amendments.

I am a political realist and I think the Hon. Member is as well. When 10 Premiers and a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put their signatures to a document, it will take a lot of public persuasion to ensure that these are the necessary changes to reflect the reality of Canada, which I think is what the Hon. Member has suggested that it is.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), has put before us a very important matter that requires some comment. As you know, Madam Speaker, the people who will be appointed to the special joint committee to examine the Accord will have a very noble and important task ahead of them. They will be examining an extremely important, significant and historical document.

What distresses me about the proposal of the Minister of Justice is that he has set out in the rules for this committee a deadline for reporting back to the House of September 14. I find that extremely difficult to understand and actually unacceptable.

The House of Commons can debate for over a year the question of capital punishment. It can debate for six months the question of pornography. It can debate for months and months the question of the cost of prescription drugs and medicine. Yet when it comes to this fundamental, basic document, the super-law of Canada, the Government has set a time limit of three months, including the summer months, for deliberation and examination of such a fundamental document. That I wish to raise in the strongest possible terms as being a ludicrous way of dealing with the Canadian Constitution.

A time limit puts undue and unnecessary pressure on members of the committee to report back to the House on a matter that is extremely difficult and which must be explained. Some of us have enormous difficulties understanding it, and I will mention that again in a few moments. As well, the public needs the time to absorb the issue.

I thought that a columnist here in Ottawa put it very well a few days ago when he wrote that the Accord can be examined not as a sacred text from Mount Sinai but as the flawed work of 11 politicians burning the midnight oil and jockeying for advantage, and that it can be held up to the light to check for cracks. I think that is a good way of describing the substance of this document. It needs a very thorough examination, and the time limit on that process is unacceptable.

As presently written, the Meech Lake Accord, as you must have noticed from Question Period, editorials and articles, raises many questions. I will deal with only a few of them. First, Clause 1 does not really reflect the composition of today's Canadian society. That matter was raised in Question Period by my colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), only a few minutes ago. The description of Canadian society in Clause 1 must definitely be amended in order to provide for recognition of the existence of Canadians whose language is neither English nor French but who are Canadian citizens and make daily substantial and phenomenal contributions to the fabric and substance of this society.

Second, and of equal importance, as has been raised by others, in particular the Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), is the importance of recognizing, not as an afterthought at the end of the document but in Clause 1, the existence of the aboriginal peoples. I congratulate and salute my colleagues for having raised that so forcefully, intensively and repeatedly in the House of Commons in preceding days.

Therefore, it is absolutely necessary to deal with Clause (2)(1)(a) to include the real composition of Canadian society and to describe it in today's reality rather than in historical recollection of the past.

Another aspect which raises many questions is the reference to a distinct society. What on earth does "distinct society" mean? What is a "distinct society" in the Canadian context? I do not know. You must have been to Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker. It strikes me that that society is a distinct society, too, for different reasons. If you go over the mountains to the west you will find that British Columbians as well consider themselves to be a distinct society in sociological, collective, regional and geographical terms. One must then ask oneself whether New Brunswick is not also a distinct society. It recognizes bilingualism in its statutes and has a distinct character. The same can be said of Ontario. Before you know it, you will come to the conclusion that there are actually many distinct societies in this country. Therefore, why should we single one out in this process?

On the same subject I must ask what powers a province which has a distinct society within it would have. I do not know but it is evident that this distinction can lead to a number of powers which have not yet been examined or spelled out. For instance, does a provincial Government, which is a distinct society under the Constitution, have the power to override citizens' rights under the Charter? If it does, should it have those powers? We must clarify this question and many others which flow from the Accord.

As you must have noticed from newspaper articles, Mr. Speaker, there are people like Pierre-Marc Johnson who say that the constitutional Accord will spur sovereignty. The Minister of International Relations in Quebec, Gil Rémillard, says that the Meech Lake Accord will confirm a special status for Quebec in international relations. Is that what was intended by the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? Is that what we are heading for? Is that what we want to have in this country? I do not see that that will be to the advantage of Canada or will make Canada stronger, as the Deputy Prime Minister said when he introduced his motion earlier this morning. This will not make Canada stronger at all.

In many passages the words of the Accord have been left vague. That is another aspect which needs attention. When there is vague terminology in any piece of legislation responsibility is shifted to judges to make political interpretations. Why should we saddle the judges with the task of second guessing what the politicians meant? That is not a good practice for writing legislation, particularly a piece of legislation of this importance. The consequences for the future of Canada of recognizing a distinct society are fundamental and have to be explored in detail and, in the long term, for the reasons I gave a moment ago.

With regard to other aspects of the legislation, I have grave reservations about how it affects immigrants. Immigrants can come into Canada under two sets of rules. Will an immigrant who has been pre-selected to go to Quebec have freedom of mobility? If, two or three days after arrival, an individual decides that he would like to move to another francophone region of the country for personal reasons, will he be bound to remain a permanent resident of the province for which he was selected?

What will happen to an immigrant who comes in under the other set of rules, chooses an English-speaking part of Canada, and decides after a short period of time to move to a French-speaking part of Canada? How will the mobility rights of that individual be affected by the executive proposal in the Accord?

What happens to other rights which are presently in the Charter but are not referred to in the Accord? I am told by people with legal training that courts have a tendency to give precedence to parts of the Charter which may be singled out in the Constitution because of a convention that ordains that parts of the Charter which are not specified are not protected, are less protected. This is an item of extreme importance. Will the Charter be gutted by the fact that certain aspects of the Charter have not been mentioned or singled out in the Accord?

One must inevitably ask oneself whether the nation will be stronger as a result of the measures which the Government is proposing if the proposal is implemented and some of the consequences upon which I have elaborated come into being.

The point with which I will conclude has to do with appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court. Will the nation become stronger through the appointment procedure put forth in the Meech Lake Accord? Would the nation be stronger if Senators and judges were appointed through a process that was initiated by the provinces? I can only state my opinion, that it has a very uneasy impact on me as a citizen because I still believe that while consultation is desirable, the shift, onus and initiative in appointments to national institutions should rest with the national Government and not be devolved or transferred to the components of Confederation.

I hold this belief for the very simple reason that there is an element of accountability. Inevitably, if one is appointed by the national Government, one's major responsibility and accountability will be to the totality of the nation rather than to a region in which one resides. This subtle shift in that accountability is one that I do not like.

Finally, the fact remains that we are witnessing in this Accord a gradual process of decentralization. There are appointments to the Senate, appointments to the Supreme Court, the distinct society and the spending power element which is very important. There is the immigration aspect as well. All of these are wrapped up into a unanimity clause. All of these small elements of decentralization combine to mean much decentralization.

This brings me to the important point concerning spending powers. While Parliament was included in the first Accord, it has been left out in the second Accord. The word "compatible" is so vague that no one really knows how to interpret it. No one knows according to that clause who is to set the national objectives.

One would hope that it would be the national Government, but it is not spelled out in that clause. It does not state clearly and unequivocally who is to set the national objectives. I would not want the Supreme Court of Canada to be faced decades from now with making a decision on this particular point.

Furthermore, I am not definite, but I have spoken to many people about the process of transferring powers which may make it impossible for the federal Government to stop payments to provinces which may decide in the future to introduce extra billing. Presently, the Government can stop payments, as we saw in a press release last week which stated that Ottawa refunded several million dollars to New Brunswick since it stopped extra billing. The federal Government must protect and retain that kind of power.

I do not know what will happen to universality as a result of this particular clause, but I know that it is a clause that is vague and unsatisfactory. It puts to shame those in the House who have fought hard for universal programs, national programs and social security of the same quality and strength from coast to coast.

I want to conclude by putting forward a subamendment as a result of the very unsatisfactory answer given by the Deputy Prime Minister in reply to questions posed by the Hon. Member for St. Henri—Westmount when he asked what will happen in provinces where the provincial legislature will not hold public hearings in that province.

The Deputy Prime Minister sloughed the question off as a kind of superficial question that has no relevance to the debate today. I submit that the question is very relevant and important, in light of the fact that only last week Premier Getty of Alberta was reported to have said that there will be no public hearings in Alberta. I hope he will reverse his decision and hold public hearings, but in case some provinces do not do so in their respective areas, it seems that this committee or a subcommittee of the joint committee ought to hold public hearings in that particular province.

Therefore, I move the following subamendment:

> That in provinces where the Legislature does not hold public hearings or has not officially committed itself to hold public hearings, a sub-committee of the Joint Committee be given powers to travel and hold public hearings in such provinces.

There may be situations in which a province will not be able to hold hearings in the summer. Therefore, the subamendment is written in such a way as to take into account those provinces that will not hold public hearings in the summer months, but will make a public commitment to Canadians that their legislatures will hold public hearings. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair will reserve for a few minutes on the admissibility of the amendment. In the meantime, we will proceed with the question and comment period.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for being able to raise so many important questions in such a short period of time.

At the very outset he questioned the motion on the basis of the time frame within which the public hearings are to be held and report back, as I recall, by September 14. He, like many of us, feels that that time frame is inadequate.

Having had considerable experience in committee work over the years, could he suggest what might be an adequate time frame, so that we do not simply leave it open-ended, but perhaps discuss among ourselves what time frame would be appropriate? Should we wait until we see the representations that people wish to make on the basis of the fundamental principle that as many Canadians as possible should be heard?

I am glad the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is here to witness the concern of parliamentarians that this is too short a time frame. Again, I would urge the Deputy Prime Minister to support this subamendment which will ensure that people from coast to coast will have access to that committee, without having to travel across the country to Ottawa at their own expense.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, I can understand the necessity and the desire of the Government to set a time frame. However, we should consider the length of time it takes us to examine other pieces of legislation. For example, we have been studying pornography for six months and we do not know how much longer we will be studying it. The House knows how long we could be studying capital punishment.

In light of that, on a fundamental piece of legislation like this, there ought to be an opportunity for ample hearings without such a limited time frame. I do not know whether a time frame should be set in this resolution, although I can understand the anxiety on the part of the Government to set a time frame. It has to be one that is practical. It seems to me, however, that as a minimum, there should be an examination of the Constitution, which is to last in its new proposed form—and I really hope there will be substantial fundamental amendments to the way it stands now—in order to give the public the time to absorb what is being proposed. We ourselves, who ought to understand it quickly and readily, have enormous difficulties. It should be given a time frame of six or even eight months and if, in the judgment of the members of the committee, that period of time turns out to be not adequate, then the time could be extended according to the best judgment of the members of that committee.

Since government Members would have the majority on the committee, they would be quite able to determine when that process ought to come to an end. It seems to me that it is not realistic and that it is—I hate to use such a heavy word but I cannot find a better one—undemocratic not to allow this examination. I know that the Deputy Prime Minister has his heart in the right place and he is a democrat, but he does not seem to be consistent with the image I have of him when he imposes a time limit which is so restrictive.

I am sure that if the Deputy Prime Minister were in the Opposition, he would make a more passionate speech, because he is more of a passionate speaker than I am myself, if not to keep it open-ended, at least to give it a breathing space, and three months is not enough.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I wish to support the sentiments expressed by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I want to say I also feel that the amount of time given to this committee is insufficient, given the importance of the questions with which we are dealing. After all, we are dealing with amendments to the Constitution of Canada. I think it is particularly important, in light of the fact we are really travelling in many respects through unchartered territory. There are provisions in the Constitution, as has been pointed out by the Hon. Member for Davenport, which are very ambiguous. I can refer to the opinion of a respected member of the legal profession, J. J. Robinette, who, a week or two ago said he felt that the courts and lawyers would have to deal with these ambiguities and suffer through the consequences of them for many, many years to come.

I think it is important to note that also because there were people who objected to the inclusion of a Charter of Rights in 1981 on the grounds that this would transfer power to the courts, that it would be the courts which would decide what the law of the land was, in the final analysis, and not the legislatures and the Parliament of Canada. I think there is an important distinction to be made between the Charter which was introduced in 1981 and the terms of the Meech Lake Agreement, and that is, that the rights set out in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms are rights which have already been subject to hundreds of years of interpretation, in many cases. It is true that the freedom of conscience and religion have to be refined from time to time in light of changing circumstances, mores, practices and habits in society. But can anyone deny that the freedom of conscience and religion are rights and freedoms which have formed the basis of legal decisions, interpretations and writings for hundreds of years? The same thing applies to the right to life, liberty and the security of the person. The same thing applies, although to a somewhat lesser extent, to the equality rights under Section 15 of the Charter.

Of course, the Charter contains minority language educational rights under Section 23, and those rights were framed fairly precisely. But even the provision such as the one, where numbers warrant, under which minority language groups would have the right to education in the minority language, was criticized precisely because it was said to be ambiguous. Nonetheless, in that case, there was some good evidence and a number of precedents to indicate what such a clause would mean in the final analysis.

Therefore, I would submit that it is incorrect and illogical for those who are advocating changes to the Meech Lake Agreement, and some of the ambiguous changes, to say that this was the precise reason we were objecting to a Charter in the first place in 1980 or 1981. The rights and freedoms set out in the 1981 Charter are rights which were the subject of many years of interpretation, and I would suggest that it is entirely different now to propose concepts which are very ambiguous and many people do not know the meaning of them. Indeed, there are great differences of opinion as to the interpretation of certain clauses of this agreement.

Therefore, prudence dictates that this agreement, and certainly the ambiguous aspects of the agreement, be given full study by a committee of this House and by Parliament. If the Hon. Member for Davenport cares to respond, I would ask him if he does not agree with the distinction I am trying to make, namely that it is a far cry between the rights which were set out in the 1981 Charter and some of the very ambiguous provisions in the Meech Lake Agreement which, again, are subject to radically different interpretations?

Mr. Caccia: In the limited time available, Madam Speaker, because the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) wants to participate in the debate, I would like to give a very brief answer, namely, that I do agree with the question which has been put to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is now ready to rule on the subamendment which was submitted by the Hon. Member for Davenport.

The Chair will have to rule this subamendment out of order. We refer to the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne, Section 438(1) which states that if an amendment is intended to bring up matters foreign to the amendment, the Member should wait until the amendment is disposed of and move a new amendment.

The Chair feels that having hearings in provinces not officially committed to holding public hearings is bringing up a matter which is foreign to the amendment. Therefore, the subamendment is not admissible.

Mr. Caccia: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I would like to put forward a argument on this ruling if—

Mr. Mazankowski: If he wants to challenge the Chair, he should stand up and say so.

Mr. Caccia: Then I am glad to challenge the Chair, if that is the procedure the Deputy Prime Minister wishes me to follow. I thought we could argue the ruling, but if it is the wish of this House that I challenge the Chair, I am prepared to challenge the Chair, and I will do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As I said a few moments ago, the Chair feels that once the amendment now before the House has been disposed of, the Hon. Member could certainly propose, as an amendment, what he has proposed to the House now. However, at this time, as a subamendment, the Chair feels it is not admissible. It is out of order.

It being 2 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES—SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to recognize explicitly the right of Canada's aboriginal peoples to self-government, thereby making them partners in Confederation, and that this House further urges the Governments of Canada, the provinces and the territories to acknowledge that self-government requires a viable economic base, and calls upon these governments to constitutionally commit themselves to negotiate with the aboriginal peoples an equitable sharing of lands and resources.

He said: Madam Speaker, the motion now before the House follows rather closely the debate which has preceded it. The motion could very well have read: "That, in the opinion of this House, the recently agreed to Accord should be amended in order to recognize the right of Canada's aboriginal peoples to self-government". However, that is a fine point.

It is the Constitution Act, 1982, which the First Ministers' conferences on four different occasions have attempted but failed to amend.

In many parts of the world today very serious thought and consideration is being given to the problems and the rights of indigenous peoples who live in settled states or already-established nations. Frequently, the indigenous people to whom I refer live in underdeveloped or isolated parts of the particular country in question. Sometimes, even if they live where there is a population, that is, in an urban environment, they continue to live on the fringes of society. Recently, a very significant world report was presented on the environment and development. It is referred to as the Brundtland report. To its credit this report did not ignore the concerns and the problems of aboriginal peoples. For example, in reference to aboriginal peoples, it states in one of its sections:

Growing interaction with the larger world is increasing the vulnerability of these groups, since they are often left out of the processes of economic development. Social discrimination, cultural barriers, and the exclusion of these people from national political processes makes these groups vulnerable and subject to exploitation. Many groups become dispossessed and marginalized, and their traditional practices disappear. They become the victims of what could be described as cultural extinction.

I am sure, Madam Speaker, that in hearing that you must believe as I do that the people who put together the Brundtland report visited Canada or that they heard from expert witnesses from Canada.

Often for these very same people, no matter where they live—and they live in many parts of the world, not only in North America but also in Australia, the Amazon Basin, Central America and in the forests and hills of Asia—isolation has meant that few of them have shared in national economic and social development. That is reflected in the poor quality of life in many of their communities in terms of housing, economic development and opportunity, educational facilities, and even in terms of nutrition and health.

Strangely enough, if that situation were not serious enough, if a resource is discovered where they happen to live, if there is some opportunity to exploit the environment for material gain, then these people find themselves once again pushed aside and pushed out to make room for the developers. In the United Nations Organization today there is a Working Group on the Rights of Indigenous Populations. The group is chaired by a very remarkable woman, Dr. Erika Daes of Greece. She was an observer at the First Ministers' Conference that was held recently here in Ottawa which dealt with aboriginal rights in the Constitution.

Dr. Daes, after long and very careful research, has concluded the following about the right of self-determination. Self-determination is a term that goes back at least to the days of Woodrow Wilson, and perhaps even earlier than that. We certainly became familiar with the term on a world-wide basis at the time that the League of Nations was created. She said that the right of self-determination as we understand it over that period of time applies equally to indigenous peoples. She adds, however, that it does not mean the right to secession.

During the past 10 years Canada has given some very important, and I would say effective, leadership in recognizing aboriginal rights. It is now generally regarded that our federal system here in Canada is quite capable of accommodating native self-rule. I think most of us in the House realize that all that is really needed in order to accomplish this is some political will, a conviction that if we did so natural justice would be served.

In the Constitution of Canada today aboriginal rights are recognized in Section 35. That section states, among other things: "The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed." Did you know, Madam Speaker, that there are some people, who regard themselves as knowing something about the Constitution, who say that that is nothing but an empty box? They say that there is really nothing in it. Others, for whom I have a greater respect and whose views are more considered, believe that Section 35 is a full box of rights and that what we are undertaking to do at First Ministers' conferences is to draw from that full box of rights certain definitions, certain specific rights and, in particular, the right of self-government or the right of self-determination within the Canadian Confederation.

This process of definition to which I have referred was, in fact, an obligation that was laid upon the Government of Canada and the provinces by the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 37 requires that there should be a number of these conferences in order to define with precision and exactness what are aboriginal rights. More and more the concentration has come to be the right of self-government.

My motion speaks to that very process, the process of recognizing the right to self-government within the Confederation of Canada or, to put it in another way, the process of completing the circle of Confederation. Until we recognize the rights of aboriginal people in Canada to control, to direct and to manage their own affairs within the Constitution and within our Confederation, we have a situation which is incomplete.

There have been a series of these conferences under the glare of television lights with a great deal of rhetoric exchanged among the Premiers, more than one Prime Minister, and the aboriginal leaders. So far we have not succeeded, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have clearly indicated that we must not give up on this endeavour. I agree with both of them. The purpose of my motion is to say that this House agrees with and supports the notion that the endeavour must be continued. Listen to what the Prime Minister said following the last conference:

> I deeply regret that we did not succeed, but I give my hon. friend the assurance that we shall try again to make sure that justice comes about for the native peoples of Canada.

He went on that same day to say:

> —we are still looking for a formula that will make it possible to enshrine the rights of aboriginal peoples in the Constitution of Canada. We did not succeed last week, but the federal Government's obligation is clear. I think the responsibility is equally shared by the provinces, and we intend to examine with them and the leaders of the various aboriginal groups the various alternatives available, in order to try and develop another formula that would meet with the requisite consent of various groups so that this right can finally be enshrined in the Canadian Constitution.

He also said:

> I said with the greatest sadness that this was a moral obligation that has been unfulfilled by Canada, by the federal Government, by the provinces—

I quoted the Prime Minister because I want Members of the House to know that the motion I am putting forward today supports the desire by the Government of Canada, the Prime Minister, and a large number of Premiers, not enough but certain of them, to fulfil the unfulfilled obligation and complete the incomplete task. The motion now before us calls upon this House to lend its support to this endeavour which the Government of Canada has stated is a priority.

On May 28 in the House of Commons the Prime Minister, following the signing of the Meech Lake Accord and responding to questions about aboriginal people, said we have to:

> . . . try to create a climate wherein it is generally recognized and accepted that a sense of justice and equity is required for the aboriginal peoples of Canada so that there can be a constitutional accord on this vital issue.

Through this motion I want to contribute positively to the favourable climate to which the Prime Minister referred. I have to say that that climate does now exist among a large number of Canadians. Some polling has been done to test their attitudes about recognizing aboriginal self-government. Some of our Premiers have been leading spokesmen on this yet unresolved issue. There are other Premiers, however, who remain apprehensive, fearful and hesitant. The Prime Minister said it is important that we try to create a climate so that the next time the First Ministers meet, a degree of success is attainable. Therefore, I submit that if today the House were to see its way clear to approve my motion, we would not be placing an obligation of any kind on the Government or on any province, but we would be helping to create the climate for which the Prime Minister has said there is a distinct need.

I believe this House should be making some effort to help ensure success in the future. On June 8 the Minister of Justice said:

> I share the disappointment. I think all Hon. Members of the House felt that we were unable to strike an arrangement on aboriginal constitutional amendments at the last First Ministers' meeting.

The Minister of Justice went on to say:

> However, that was not the end of it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated at the conclusion of the First Ministers' meeting that it was not the end of it—

He said another meeting would depend upon an indication that progress could be made. I believe this House can play a role by approving this motion to help create the climate in which progress could be made. We are saying as Members of Parliament that we want and expect significant progress when the Prime Minister, the Premiers and the aboriginal leaders meet once again.

On that same day the Minister of Justice spoke of the need to maintain the priority to move toward the ultimate constitutionalization of the concept of self-government and aboriginal rights. That is the first time in my recollection that a senior member of the Government regarded this as a priority. They have always said it is important. They have always said it is a matter that has to be given full and undivided attention. Now the Minister of Justice has established it as a priority.

That being so, it is important that the House of Commons also express itself on this matter so that it remains a priority and in order to provide support to the active endeavours of the federal Government and encourage those provinces which still need further assurances.

Members who have taken the time to look at the motion will realize that I have gone a little further than to simply recognize within the Constitution the right of self-government. That is an essential starting point, but the motion goes on to talk about the need for a viable economic base for aboriginal self-government. It also refers to the equitable sharing of lands and resources. In that regard I want to share with the House a little more from the Brundtland report, the World Commission on Environment and Development. In one of its sections it says:

> Tribal and indigenous peoples will need special attention as the forces of economic development disrupt their traditional life-styles—life-styles that can offer modern societies many lessons in the management of resources in complex forest, mountain, and dryland ecosystems.
> Some are threatened with virtual extinction by insensitive development over which they have no control. Their traditional rights should be recognized and they should be given a decisive voice in formulating policies about resource development in their areas.

I indicated earlier that this report has so much to say to Canada that one would have expected that some important witnesses from Canada had contributed to it. Sure enough that is the case. Louis Bruyere, President of the Native Council of Canada, is quoted in the report as follows:

> Indigenous peoples are the base of what I guess could be called the environmental security system.
> We are the gate-keepers of success or failure to husband our resources. For many of us, however, the last few centuries have meant a major loss of control over our lands and waters. We are still the first to know about changes in the environment, but we are now the last to be asked or consulted.
> The most we have learned to expect is to be compensated, always too late and too little. We are seldom asked to help avoid the need for compensation by lending our expertise and our consent to development.

My motion would be incomplete if I did not talk about the need for sharing of land and resources and for an active say in the policies which lead to the development of those resources.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I should like to address the second part of the motion of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) which "urges the Governments of Canada, the provinces, and the territories to acknowledge that self-government requires a viable economic base and calls upon these Governments to constitutionally commit themselves to negotiate with the aboriginal peoples an equitable sharing of lands and resources".

The recent First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal constitutional matters in March, 1987, did not result in an amendment. Nevertheless, my Government has taken a number of positive steps over the last several years which have resulted in significant actions in relation to lands and resources for aboriginal peoples.

The new comprehensive land claims policy announced by the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) in the House on December 18, 1986 was the culmination of a broad review.

This review was begun in 1985 when the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), established a task force under the able chairmanship of Murray Coolican which reported in March, 1986. This report and the subsequent consultations with aboriginal groups have been important to the development of this new policy.

Let me say at the very outset of my remarks that the Government of Canada, by bringing forward this new policy, has affirmed that the resolution of claims arising from aboriginal title is a major priority, a priority shared with Canada's aboriginal peoples. My Government is committed to the settlement of these claims by direct negotiations.

Some highlights of these changes to the comprehensive claims policy are directly related to aboriginal self-government and the equitable sharing of land and resources.

The federal Government acknowledges that self-government and claims policies are related. The management of settlement benefits and the administration of lands and resources are governmental matters. Changes to claims policy will allow for the negotiation of a broader range of self-government matters concerned with the authority and control over aboriginal lands.

Self-government is often spoken of as the exercise by a community of responsibility for its own members and of authority over the affairs of the community. Another aspect to self-government affecting aboriginal groups is participation in the exercise of powers within the broader framework of public government. This aspect sets self-government in the claims process somewhat outside the community-based self-government negotiations. As a result of the changes in claims policy, it is expected that settlements will recognize a specific aboriginal managerial interest in relation to a number of environmental matters such as water, land use, and wildlife management.

It is not proper, on the one hand, to recognize special harvesting rights for an aboriginal group and, on the other hand, to exclude the harvesters of the resources affected from responsibility for their management.

Under the policy, therefore, aboriginal groups will be able to negotiate membership on a variety of management boards and other agencies with decision-making powers, as well as representation on advisory committees as was possible under the previous policy.

These arrangements must not only acknowledge that public governments have a responsibility to protect the interests of all users of resources, to ensure resource conservation, to respect international agreements, and to manage renewable resources within their jurisdiction. However, such arrangements will also recognize aboriginal groups as having a unique interest in the governance of the resources.

In speaking of environmental and renewable resources, I include marine areas traditionally and currently utilized by aboriginal groups. This is an important matter which has required clarification. The Inuit, in particular, have been concerned that much of their hunting has been traditionally carried out on what is called land-fast sea ice in certain seasons and by boat at other times. Similarly, Indian groups in coastal areas have traditionally relied heavily upon the harvesting of marine resources.

The federal Government is now prepared, in recognition of this use, to negotiate with aboriginal groups matters relating to the harvesting and management of renewable resources in marine areas, not only on land.

My remarks thus far have demonstrated my Government's firm position on the matters of lands, resources, and self-government which have been raised in the Hon. Member's motion. In addition, the motion made reference to "a viable economic base" for aboriginal self-government.

The changes to the claims policy relating to economic benefits have been of particular importance to aboriginal groups. Under the former policy, sub-surface land rights in defined areas could be granted to aboriginal groups, in some instances in order to avoid land use conflicts in key areas and, in other instances, as a means to provide aboriginal people with the opportunity to obtain revenue from the development of such sub-surface resources. This option will continue to be available to claimant groups.

In addition, and under the new policy, my Government is prepared to provide to aboriginal groups a percentage of Crown royalties derived from the extraction of resources in the entire settlement area. I would stress that this option will include not only royalties from sub-surface resources but will also include non-renewable resources extracted from offshore areas which form part of the claims settlement area.

It is my belief that this option will be of special interest to aboriginal groups, as it will assist in providing the tangible means to build the economy not only of the particular aboriginal groups but of Canada as a whole. This policy is proof of our commitment to equitable sharing and our support for a viable economic basis.

My Government believes that commitments are empty without action. The policies of my Government go beyond mere commitments and will result in concrete solutions to the very real economic issues the Hon. Member has raised in his motion. I am optimistic that over the next several months we will begin to see meaningful results flowing from these policy changes.

The agreements resulting from comprehensive claims settlements will be entrenched in the Constitution as existing treaty rights, as provided in Section 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982. The key points I would emphasize are referred to in the motion. My Government is committed to negotiate and to protect constitutionally agreements concluded pursuant to negotiations.

In closing, I want to say that it was an honour for me to speak on the Hon. Member's motion today.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I should like to express appreciation to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) for bringing forward this very important motion. It is important, not because we need to hear more speeches on the question of aboriginal self-government, but because it gives the House an opportunity to express its will and intention with regard to aboriginal self-government. In part the motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution Act, 1982, should be amended in order to recognize explicitly the right of Canada's aboriginal peoples to self-government—

This position is supported in principle by all three Parties and has been for some time, at least since 1983 when the report on Indian self-government was tabled in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member who introduced the motion.

As I said, the report was endorsed by all three Parties in the House. It was the result of travel across Canada by a committee to hear the considered opinion of aboriginal leaders. Then we sat down and thought about it very seriously among ourselves and expressed different partisan points of view. We came to a consensus that what we needed was a fundamental change in the relationship between Canada and its aboriginal peoples, and that the basis for that change should be a recognition of the rights of these people to govern themselves, a right which they had in the past, a right which they never surrendered, and a right which needs to be empowered so that it can become meaningful in the last half of the 20th century. This is not simply a frill, not simply a constitutional nicety, or something that would be desirable if all other things were equal. This is something that is basic to the future of the aboriginal peoples as a people. Without that kind of provision, aboriginal peoples face a form of systemic discrimination, which is unacceptable in Canada in 1987. I want to give just one example which is taken from yesterday's paper. This article reads:

> Natives are denied parole more often than non-natives, in part because of a lack of parole supervisors in rural areas, says a spokesman for the National Parole Board. In Alberta, from January 1, 1979, to December 31, 1985, full parole was granted to 43 per cent of non-natives, but to only 20 per cent of natives, board member Ken Howland said Tuesday.

Here we have a situation where our Government, which is supposed to be looking after the interests of aboriginal peoples, does not provide the kinds of facilities in rural areas which allows Indian prisoners to have the right of parole in the same way that non-native prisoners would have. That is a form of systemic discrimination which could be overcome if there were a form of self-government in place whereby Indian people would be responsible for that kind of service themselves.

As long as we maintain that, we will continue to have native people in our prisons. We will continue to have discrimination showing up in all kinds of ways, in health, education, job opportunities and so on. This, I want to emphasize, is not a frill. It is not something that we can take or leave. It is absolutely essential if we want to see basic justice for the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Over the past few weeks there has been a great deal of congratulation over the very significant achievement reached in the Meech Lake Accord between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the First Ministers. It is significant because it overcomes a very key flaw in the 1982 Constitutional Accord where nine provinces and the Government of Canada agreed on certain constitutional changes that the Government of Quebec was not able to agree to. In a sense, Quebec was left out even though legally it was still part of the Canadian Confederation.

The significant thing about this constitutional Accord is that now for the first time a democratically elected Government of Quebec is able to sign that paper and say, "Yes, we are part of the Canadian Confederation", a very important and significant achievement. Some people question whether or not the price is too high. Every concerned Canadian recognizes the importance of Quebec being a part of that Accord. It was possible because there was a commitment across Canada to seeing that happen. There was a commitment on the part of the Prime Minister and on the part of a significant number of the provincial Premiers so that other Premiers were carried along. Bill Vander Zalm a few years ago said he would be just as happy if Quebec separated because then he would not need to read French on his corn flakes box. He is rather a flaky Premier, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: Even Bill Vander Zalm went along with the Accord because there was a sense that this was the will of the Canadians in 1987.

We need that kind of commitment to the question of aboriginal self-government. We do not have it. We have had a series of constitutional conferences involving the Prime Ministers and the Premiers. Every one of them has failed. Every conference has ended, sometimes with the hope that we will meet again in two years. This last one met without even that. The last constitutional conference called for in our present Constitution has come and gone, and there is nothing to replace it. Now we have an opportunity in this motion this afternoon to declare ourselves as a House of Commons, to say, yes, we want to see the aboriginal peoples of Canada brought willingly into Confederation. The way in which that will happen is if we say yes to their inherent right to aboriginal self-government.

I urge all Members not to talk this motion out. The importance of this motion is not that it gives a chance to debate this issue, we have debated it ad nauseam in the House before. We have a chance to vote on it. I urge all Members to make sure that we take advantage of that opportunity and that we vote.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate and address the subject of self-government by our aboriginal peoples, especially since in the riding of Beauharnois—Salaberry we have the Saint Regis Indian Reserve. I am sure the name is familiar to many of you. They were champion lacrosse players, which led to some interesting games between people on either side of the border and even between Ontarians and Quebecers, but there were also some good fights as well.

I have always enjoyed my visits with these people and every time I go back, I find that, deep within myself, values that are sometimes hard to define surface in conversations with Indians, because of their attitude, philosophy and tradition. I feel privileged and proud to be able to visit and, in fact, to have in my riding a substantial part of this segment of our Canadian population.

The vast majority of native people are economically disadvantaged. Over the years, unlike other Canadians, they have not been able to take advantage of the opportunities offered by our economy, and to a great extent, they are unable to do anything to remedy the situation.

Today, they are demanding self-government so they can be masters of their own fate and become full-fledged citizens.

Since the first Conference of First Ministers on constitutional questions concerning native peoples, held in 1983, a number of questions have been addressed which are of crucial importance to native peoples and to the way they see their place in Canadian society, today and in the future.

As Hon. Members are aware, aboriginal self-government has been one of the major items on the constitutional agenda as it concerns native peoples.

In this regard, I would like to point out that the federal government has played an important role in responding to the desire of native peoples for self-government. At the First Ministers Conference in April 1985, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled a draft political agreement which provided for constitutional recognition of the right of native peoples to self-government, rights that would be defined and their implementation laid down in agreements between the governments and the native peoples.

Governments also would agree to negotiate with native communities with a view to reaching the accords involved.

At a later meeting, Madam Speaker, between federal, provincial and territorial ministers and native representatives, the Canadian Government announced it was ready to enter into negotiation with native groups and provincial governments in order to set down in concrete terms what self-government would be at the regional and community levels. Those negotiations were aimed at setting down the form and content of self-government. That grassroots approach opened up the possibility of tapping, through the transfer to the natives of federal and provincial powers, a wide range of native institutions and service delivery mechanisms in the areas of education, training, culture, economic development, social services and housing. For the first time a Canadian Government was proposing the establishment of a trilateral body to deal with the real problems of Metis and non-status Indians. For the first time also both levels of government were talking with Metis and non-status Indians about their aspirations and special needs.

Further to the invitation sent by the Canadian Government in June 1985, trilateral talks were started in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island. For their part, Ontario, Alberta and New Brunswick also stated they were interested in giving it a try.

Over the last 12 months, the Canadian Government paid almost $0.5 million to help Metis and non-status Indians participate in those trilateral talks. This is our own way of viewing the implementation of the self-government concept. Our responsibility does not consist in holding theoretical discussions on the totally abstract notion of an inherent right.

For its part the Official Opposition seems to prefer that native rights be defined by the courts rather than through negotiated agreements.

I should like to refer to the opening statement of the Metis National Council at a multilateral constitutional meeting held in Ottawa on November 13, 1986. I quote:

> This judiciary proceeding differs from the political process of constitutional negotiations preparatory to the First Ministers Conference on constitutional matters of interest to native people which is scheduled for Ottawa in April 1987. However we would like to emphasize that the approach we favour is one which will lead to a political solution within the process of the First Ministers Conference.

That is indeed the way the Government intends to follow, the political solution rather than the judiciary solution, for that is the way things are done in Canada.

Therefore, negotiating agreements on self-government is indeed the preferred mechanism for defining the structure and powers of native administrations. Proposals for a constitutional amendment aboriginal self-government should provide that the conditions for self-government will be defined in agreements between the federal Government, the provincial governments and the native peoples. The commitment to negotiate such agreements would be enshrined in the Constitution, while the agreements themselves would be constitutionalized by ratification by the federal and provincial legislatures. These agreements have the advantage of providing a mechanism acceptable to all parties for defining the powers of native administrations.

Enshrining in the Constitution the commitment to negotiate agreements on self-government has the advantage of letting provincial Governments and the federal government play a role in defining the forms of self-government.

Furthermore, native peoples would have the assurance that they would have their say about the way self-government will affect their lives. The negotiating process provides a flexible mechanism for the transfer of powers to native administrations.

Madam Speaker, we must accept the principle that achieving aboriginal self-government should be a flexible process, adapted to the situation, needs and aspirations of the various native communities and regions. Consequently, we must also accept the principle that it must be done through agreements negotiated by the governments and the native peoples concerned.

Perhaps I may quote at this point from a statement made by the Prime Minister at the Conference of Canadian First Ministers in 1985, which is still very apt today:

> Canada's native peoples will be asked to make some difficult choices in the years to come. They will have to find the right mixture of traditional and modern views to suit their needs. That is the compromise they will have to make to define the place that is theirs in Canadian society. And they alone will be able to strike that difficult balance between the old and the new.

Those were the words of the Prime Minister of Canada, the Hon. Brian Mulroney.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, first I should like to remind my colleagues in the House that the federal Government has always clearly led the way in this field. Here are the facts. Since the 1985 First Ministers' Conference we have had five multilateral ministerial meetings and five meetings of senior officials, not to mention countless bilateral discussions on a one-to-one basis with the interested parties. These meetings were held from the beginning of discussions until the First Ministers' Conference in March this year. We are responsible for organizing these meetings, drafting proposals, keeping the list of options and proposals up to date, gathering the documents required and, finally, keeping the dialogue going. Nobody, and I mean nobody, can honestly accuse the federal Government of having been partisan or negligent in anything at all in this respect.

Specifically, the federal Government proposed a wide-ranging acknowledgement of the right of peoples, of native peoples, to self-government, far broader than anything the previous Government was ever prepared to consider, let alone to propose.

Here is what Global Network Peter Trueman had to say during the World Report broadcast on March 9, 1987, and I quote:

> Few Canadian Prime Ministers have stood up so firmly for the rights of native peoples nor worked so hard to guarantee them such rights. Criticizing a Prime Minister—any Prime Minister—for failing to bring his provincial counterparts to their senses is about the same thing as denouncing him for being unable to convince rivers to flow upstream.

I would remind Hon. Members that the negotiations concerning the constitutional question as it relates to native people involved no fewer than 17 interested parties. Regardless of what the federal Government is prepared to accept, it still has to expect a minimum of support from the other participants. As it happened, the Government concentrated all its efforts on the quest for a solution which would be acceptable to all.

I should also like to remind Hon. Members of the position taken by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on the question of native people self-government. In his March 11, 1987 address to the native peoples gathered before Parliament, Mr. Turner stated in general terms that he was in favour of an explicit acknowledgement of the right to self-government, and he made it quite clear that the right to self-government should be defined and specified through negotiations. Well, Madam Speaker, that is exactly and precisely what this Conservative Government advocates.

The real question Canadians must ask themselves is whether they want their elected representatives and representatives of the federal Government, the provincial Governments and the native peoples' associations to negotiate agreements acceptable to all parties or whether they would prefer to let the courts define the concept and scope of the right to self-government, without considering the wishes of governments and native leaders. In other words, Madam Speaker, we must decide whether we want to proceed by means of negotiation or court challenges. On this particular point, that of the final and binding aspect, the federal Government has spoken out in favour of negotiation to define the scope and substance of the right to self-government. We do not doubt the integrity or fairness of the courts, but we, on the federal side, are convinced that this kind of right should be defined by the Governments, that is, by the federal government and by the provincial Governments, as well as by the native peoples themselves. It should not be left up to the courts. We have taken this position because the self-government negotiations we have in mind will fundamentally alter the relationship between the Crown and Canada's native peoples.

Some people reacted to our willingness to negotiate this major constitutional reform with the provinces and the native peoples by saying that the federal Government was seeking the lowest common denominator. In fact, we are seeking the highest common denominator, and I hardly think anyone would question that, considering the efforts made by the present Government and other Governments in this respect in recent years.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), in his opening address to the meeting of Ministers responsible for constitutional questions concerning native peoples held in Toronto on February 19, 1987, said the following: "Negotiating is not constantly asking for more, but knowing how to manage the give and take process so that all parties are satisfied and everyone wins."

By negotiating, the present Government wanted to avoid what has now apparently become a fundamental and irreconcilable difference of opinions. We are still determined to see this through and to meet the challenge referred to by Jean-Claude LeClerc in an editorial on constitutional change and native peoples, published in Le Devoir on February 6, 1987, and I quote:

> By taking the initiative of a major change at home, Canada not only would redress historical wrongs and preserve its international credibility, it would also change the dominant culture and make easier the strained if not explosive relationships among other cultural communities in its most populated provinces—it would forge a political model for the whole planet.

Madam Speaker, on this side of the House we feel that goal would best be reached through negotiations between the Crown and Canada's native peoples. New agreements should be negotiated on self-government. The negotiations would deal, as we have proposed, on the following items: first, an express recognition of the right of Canada's native peoples to self-government within the Canadian Federation; second, defining that right through negotiation rather than judicial process; third, a constitutional commitment by governments to negotiate self-government agreements; fourth, the constitutional enshrinement of those agreements, once ratified by the Canadian Government and the provincial legislatures involved; and fifth, a non-escape clause guaranteeing the negotiations will in no way infringe upon treaty rights of native peoples.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, it is clear from the foregoing that this Government is not opposed to recognizing the right of native peoples to self-government. Quite the opposite, we have insisted and will keep on insisting for that right to be recognized in any eventual amendment.

Also, we have insisted and will go on insisting that the Canadian Government, provincial Governments and also Canada's native peoples make a commitment in the Constitution to negotiate self-government agreements.

Finally we have insisted and we will go on insisting that such constitutional agreements in no way infringe upon native ancestral rights nor treaty rights.

All this is a matter of record, and this government stands very proud of it.

We have insisted and will go on insisting, Madam Speaker, that any new basic amendment to the constitutional relationship between Canada's native peoples and the Crown be defined through negotiation.

In short, this is the very definite position which this Government has constantly maintained and will continue to maintain on this important issue.

To conclude, I would like to say that, although it was not possible to reach an agreement at the First Ministers Conference, this Government is as determined as ever to continue its efforts until our aboriginal peoples are provided with the means to take their place within Canadian society. As the Prime Minister expressed it so well at the end of the conference:

> My Ministers and I will remain in close contact with the Premiers and with all aboriginal leaders.
> If I come to the conclusion, as our society and conversations develop, that a new meeting or conference might be useful and prove successful, I shall not hesitate to call one.
> Rest assured that I remain determined to settle with you as we must this issue of human rights and basic dignity for our aboriginal fellow Canadians.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, it is not my intention in rising to make a speech. I would merely like to say that from the remarks of my colleagues on all sides of the House it is very evident that all Parties support this motion. I very strongly urge everyone in the House, in very good conscience, not to talk this motion out but to put it to a vote now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérin: In my opinion, Madam Speaker, it would be wrong for us to vote immediately, when so many Hon. Members have indicated their intention to continue to deal with this motion, and I suggest that you should allow all of those who want to speak to express their opinions freely.

[English]

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure that I speak to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) which calls, in the first part, for the Constitution Act, 1982, to:

> —be amended in order to recognize explicitly the right of Canada's aboriginal peoples to self-government, thereby making them partners in Confederation—

This is a principle to which the Government has been committed since coming to office in 1984. It has, indeed, been a subject of a constitutional process since 1983. It is therefore fitting that I begin discussion of this motion by reminding the Hon. Member and other Members opposite of that constitutional process.

A review of the events leading up to the recent First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal and constitutional affairs will demonstrate the considerable progress which the Government has made in furthering the goal of aboriginal self-reliance.

The constitutional talks on native self-government were set in motion by the Constitution Act, 1982, which provided for the convening of a First Ministers' conference on aboriginal matters to which aboriginal representatives were to be invited as participants. That conference was held in Ottawa on March 15 and 16, 1983, the outcome of which was the signing of the constitutional Accord which provided, among other matters, for another aboriginal constitutional conference to be held in 1984.

For the purposes of the motion before us, other important provisions of the Accord were proposals for the following constitutional amendments: at least two constitutional conferences on aboriginal constitutional matters to be held, the first by April 17, 1985, and the second by April 17, 1987, and that no amendment directly affecting the aboriginal peoples of Canada would be made to the Constitution without first inviting aboriginal leaders to participate in a constitutional conference to discuss the proposed change. These constitutional amendments were passed by Parliament and the legislatures of the provinces and proclaimed in force on June 21, 1984.

In the meantime, however, a First Ministers' conference on aboriginal matters had been convened, once again in Ottawa, in March, 1984. The main focus for this conference was aboriginal self-government. However, the Government of the day put forward a proposal which was met with a less than enthusiastic response from both aboriginal and provincial representatives.

The Liberal Government's 1984 proposal did little to recognize an "explicit right" of the aboriginal peoples to self-government or to make them "partners in Confederation", as is being called for by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior in the motion to which I am speaking. Indeed, the 1984 Liberal proposal merely provided for self-governing institutions and contained no guarantee that self-government arrangements would be constitutionally protected. Thus, by this proposal, the power of the aboriginal governments could have been revoked at will by Parliament and the legislatures in question.

OPPOSITION TO CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many people in southern Manitoba who are presently represented by Conservative Members of Parliament in the House of Commons, but only until the next election.

The petitioners are concerned about the Government's intention to change the Patent Act with regard to the purchase of prescription drugs. They believe this will result in higher costs to provincial Governments through their drug plans. They also believe it is unfair to Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis and this is being done at the expense of average Canadians because of the Government's wish to accommodate the United States in the free trade negotiations.

Therefore, the petitioners humble pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Motions?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair may have moved too quickly. I understand the Government wishes to proceed on a motion. I am sure there will be consent for that.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants to proceed on Motions, I must say that we have already had Petitions which follow Motions. I do not want to create any difficulties here, but I know that if we wanted to revert back to some stage in the proceedings we would not be allowed to do so. I do not see any reason why we should do so at this time.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has raised a caveat on this matter. However, I have considered it. The motion does not require consent and can now be moved on Orders of the Day. I think this is a situation which arises as a result of the new orders.

Mr. Gauthier: Under Orders of the Day?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I had called Orders of the Day. Perhaps I created a problem because I did not realize what motion it was. I thought that the Government wanted to revert back to Motions. I have taken the Hon. Member's caveat as notice.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-18

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for Mr. Mazankowski) moved:

That, further to the notice given on Thursday, June 11, 1987, by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117, in relation to Bill C-18, An Act respecting national transportation, four further hours be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and four hours to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the end of the four hours allotted to the report stage consideration and to the third reading stage consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise to begin the debate on the two-hour time allocation motion with respect to Bill C-18. While I have only recently come to the transport dossier I do not think that in my entire eight years here on the Hill have I seen a Bill that has had more consultation and had more evidence given about it by witnesses than Bill C-18. In my entire eight years I have never seen a Bill that has been so well briefed. I would like to pay a compliment to the members of the Standing Committee on all sides of the House who worked very hard on this Bill.

I wish to emphasize that the Government places a high priority on transportation. Bills C-18, C-19 and C-21 reinforce that high priority. The over-all objective of Bill C-18 is summarized in Clause 3 of the Bill. It is to create the conditions necessary for a safe, adequate, effective and efficient transportation system that best serves the needs of shippers and travellers. The promotion of greater competition among carriers will improve efficiency and effectiveness in the transportation sector. This will make Canadian products more competitive in both domestic and international markets.

I am sure that most Canadians do not appreciate that, on average, our cost of transportation is 1 per cent to 2 per cent higher than costs in other countries and that, on average, the cost of transportation across the country is about 6 per cent. However, in some industries such as potash and other resource industries the cost can rise to as high as between 20 per cent and 30 per cent. I know that in the case of certain types of coal the cost of transportation can be as high as 50 per cent. Thus while we live in a huge country and cannot get away from such costs the fact of the matter is that we can reduce them so that the over-all effectiveness of our system is maximized.

Since I only have 10 minutes I want Hon. Members to appreciate the extent of consultation that has gone into Bill C-18. The reforms were forged as a result of extensive consultation with shippers, carriers, labour, the travelling public and other levels of government. This process commenced in early 1985. The previous Minister of Transport, now the esteemed Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), set in motion a two-pronged process, that is, a policy review and consultation with those interested in transportation.

The result of that long consultation was a position paper entitled Freedom to Move which was released in July, 1985. That paper proposed a comprehensive set of reforms of economic regulation of each mode of transportation. The document was widely distributed. It provoked many critical but thoughtful responses. The Minister and his officials continued to meet with as many people as possible to clarify viewpoints and suggestions. In addition, the Freedom to Move paper was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Standing Committee heard the views of many witnesses, both in Ottawa and across the country. It produced a report recommending modifications and improvements to the White Paper Freedom to Move. Because of the concerns about the regulation of air services for our northern and remote communities the committee subsequently visited the North and produced a further report on that part of transportation. Based on all of this feedback in over 500 individual meetings, innumerable briefs and the committee's report, the Bill was drafted as Bill C-18 and was tabled in the House last June.

The extensive round of consultations was repeated and, after second reading approval in principle, the Bill was sent to the Standing Committee which again entered into a broad process, including hearing from witnesses across the country. Over 400 witnesses who made their views known with respect to this legislation appeared before the Standing Committee. Then, during clause-by-clause study the committee introduced several significant improvements.

As a result, I am personally convinced that this Bill represents a balanced package of reforms. The needs and interests of both the users and providers of transportation services will be well served by this Bill because they have had an opportunity to contribute at each and every stage of its development.

No Bill is ever perfect for all times since the economy and the Canadian way of life are constantly changing. I think one of the greatest additions to the Bill is that there will be annual reports on how the Bill is progressing and how the economy is adapting to it. There will be a comprehensive review at the end of four years. Personally, I think that is all we can do as legislators.

The Bill had enormous consultation before a White Paper was produced. The White Paper was then widely distributed and consulted upon, after which the Bill was introduced. The Standing Committee crossed the country again, heard all the views that were to be heard and then made some significant changes. Surely that is sufficient for the Bill. I think that this time allocation motion will pass. I hope Members will agree with me that the Bill has had sufficient consultation so that we can get on to finish report stage and third reading and get it out as the law of the land. As a result of the annual reports during the first four-year comprehensive review we can make whatever changes are necessary.

As I reflect on these regulatory reforms in transportation I see five or six guiding principles. Safety is the first priority. The committee in all its deliberations directed that safety regulations be improved. Second, transportation exists to serve the needs of shippers and travellers. In the past the nation has succumbed to the temptation that transportation is an end in itself as opposed to merely a service to shippers and travellers, to more efficiently ship goods across the country so that we can put our products at tide water at a price level that is competitive with other countries.

We must never forget that over 30 per cent of our GNP comes from trade with other nations. Every time we spend $10, $3 of it has come from other countries. If we do not remain competitive with those other countries we will lose that $3 and our standard of living could drop by 30 per cent to 50 per cent practically overnight if we do not keep our transportation system running efficiently.

The third principle is that we need greater reliance on market forces and less reliance on economic regulation, a situation that will lead to more innovation and more enterprise, and a more competitive transportation system, both intramodally and intermodally. As a result of past regulation, competition within the various modes and certainly between the various modes has been distorted. This Bill would go a long way toward lessening that regulation-caused distortion.

Another principle is that, whenever necessary, the public interest must be protected through continued economic regulation. That is truer in the North than anywhere else, where there is a much smaller population, and more fragile markets. The Government has accepted the principle that we need to continue regulation in the North.

Wherever there is going to be regulation, another principle of the Bill is that it should be open, accessible, and not costly. All of us have had the occasion to talk to companies which have almost gone bankrupt as a result of bringing applications before the CTC in an effort to bring about more efficient and wider-ranging operations. That is just not the way regulation should operate. Under this Bill, the cost of regulation will be very much reduced.

Widespread consultation with all interested parties has produced a balanced package of reforms, a package which will best serve the needs of shippers and travellers while at the same time providing a good economic climate for efficient well-managed carriers.

Under this Bill, there are no losers. This Bill is clearly a win-win situation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, once again, the Government has taken the easy way out. Once again, it has preferred to cut short debate instead of facing the widespread criticism of this Bill. Once again, it has decided to gag the Opposition. The Government has made a nasty habit of this. It imposed closure to pass a Bill that would benefit the oil multinationals. It imposed closure to pass a Bill that would benefit the multinational drug companies. And now, it is imposing closure for a Bill that is definitely biased towards this country's major shippers.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that because we are talking about deregulation of our transportation industry, the Government's decision is entirely unacceptable. I agree that the transportation industry is of vital importance to the development of the Canadian economy. That is why we say the Government should have consulted more and listened to those who testified against this Bill before the various parliamentary committees, instead of listening only to associations controlled by the big rich shippers, as the Government did. It should listen to the small shippers from the Maritimes and Western Canada who told us, for instance, that confidential contracts on domestic traffic might make them go out of business.

The Government should have listened to the unions that pointed out how many jobs would be lost in the industry if the Government persisted in its single-minded pursuit of deregulation.

The Government should have listened to professionals in the aviation industry, included pilots and others, who testified before the Transport Committee and told us in no uncertain terms that deregulation would unavoidably lead to a reduction in the quality of service and, even more important, in safety.

Representatives of the railway sector—both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific—told the Government that Bill C-18 was a threat to their survival.

[English]

The railroads told us that by opening up the Canadian market to competition from the American railways we would be reducing revenues, and investment in equipment and plant would suffer, leading in turn to a reduction in service and safety.

Did this Government listen? No, not at all.

Instead, he decided to set totally unrealistic deadlines, both for the Committee when it was considering the White Paper "Freedom to Move" and during consideration of Bill C-18 itself. Even now, at the report and third reading stage, we are still being saddled with absolutely unacceptable deadlines. The Government has systematically opted for closure just to please a few big Canadian shippers.

This Government has no regard for the democratic consultation process. Even worse, the transportation industry and thousands of Canadian workers will pay dearly for the Conservative Government's total lack of concern.

Mr. Speaker, when revising a general act that is so fundamental to the socio-economic well being of this country, the Government should have taken a more thoughtful approach.

During the debate on second reading, we in the Official Opposition, we in the Liberal Party said that considering the changes being sought, the Government could at least have taken steps to measure the impact of deregulation on such areas as: traveller safety; consumers, especially in connection with air transportation rates; employment in the industry; acceptable levels of foreign control; and finally, impact on regional development.

In all five areas, the Government has not budged an inch. We hoped it would use clause-by-clause consideration in committee to make some changes. We on our side suggested a number of amendments to improve the Bill. Unfortunately, the Conservative majority on the Committee, obeying the signals from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, systematically refused any changes that made sense in social and economic terms.

On the subject of regional development, for instance, the Government rejected an amendment by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) which would have given some political clout to the statement of principles contained in Clause 3 (d) of the Bill.

As for employment, a measure aimed at protecting workers, which I proposed, was rejected. Regarding confidential contracts, I think we should listen to what was said by Prairie Malt Limited, a small Saskatchewan shipper, when he appeared before the Committee, and I quote:

[English]

> We are of the opinion that the suggested confidentiality in rate setting will work out to the serious detriment of small and medium companies competing within a given industrial sector with large and more powerful conglomerates. Confidential rate negotiations on contracts will almost surely enable physically well-situated and financially flexible industrial entities—especially those with more than one plant site—to utilize transportation contracts, and through them the railways themselves, to serve as marketing tools—or, to say it stronger, as accomplices in power-plays—against smaller competitors.

We tried to deal with that concern, Mr. Speaker, by ensuring that confidential contracting could only occur on transborder traffic. The Government refused.

The Government has been totally inflexible in crafting this legislation, legislation which is totally and unequivocally biased toward the large conglomerates in Canada.

It is a disgrace that this Government has not taken into account the over-all interests of Canadians, whether involving small, medium or large expenditures, taking into account an industry that has, throughout the years, been prosperous.

The transportation industry in Canada is a good industry. It is an industry that provides well-paying employment. Bill C-18 is a threat to the prosperity of the transportation industry. That is a point that has been made by the railways, by the trucking associations, and observers of the airline industry.

Why is the Government moving so rapidly and vigorously in this direction? It is incredible. There is no possibility for us in the Opposition to stop the Government. We are awaiting the result of this catastrophe a few years down the line. When we have another chance to form the Government, we will certainly amend legislation which already will have been very bad for the workers, the transportation industry, and the Canadian public at large.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Government's decision—I bow to the Chair, I see that you have taken over from your colleague, Madam Speaker—the Government's decision to introduce time limitation is the logical result of a process that reflects the lack of courage and political maturity of a Government that is practically hand in glove with the "big guys" in our society.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the whole effort by the Government to deregulate transportation for the past 2.5 years has been nothing but a litany of intransigence. The past and present Ministers have said that the Bill was not engraved in stone, that they would be flexible, that they would listen, and that they were open to amendments, et cetera. As far as I can recall, I think they have accepted one amendment in the House and two amendments in committee.

It all started with Freedom to Move, the government White Paper on transportation. The Government did not want the committee to travel. It took a lot of pressure from scores of organizations and Members of the House to get the Government to agree to committee travel.

The committee went to four places in Canada—Vancouver, Winnipeg, Halifax, and Ottawa. It left out the villages of Montreal and Toronto! It left out all the northern territories and all northern parts of the provinces. It did not go near southwestern Ontario.

It makes one wonder why the Government is in such a hurry. It brought in a Bill in the previous session which remained on the Order Paper for some 13 months. Then, in the next session of Parliament it was given a new number and was placed on the Order Paper again. The Government called it for debate, and we had four partial days at second reading in principle, on closure. It then went to the standing committee, and we had to fight, argue, and plead continually—not only us but scores of organizations, companies, and individuals—for the committee to travel to a number of locations.

The committee went to nine locations—Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, St. John's, Halifax, Moncton, Montreal, and Ottawa. At least 36 places were worthy of consideration to hold parliamentary hearings and hear witnesses. I submitted a list of locations and thought if we could get to at least 16 or 20 of them that would suffice.

Again the Government refused to allow the committee to go to Yellowknife or Whitehorse. It wouldn't go to Labrador or to any of the northern parts of the provinces. The municipalities, the trade union movement, and the forest industry wanted hearings in Prince George and Prince Rupert in northern British Columbia and got none. The southern half of the Province of Alberta was left out, and I think the committee heard from one witness from the Peace River country. There should have been a hearing in Dawson Creek, British Columbia to cover the Peace River country. The committee should have gone to Dauphin or Thompson in northern Manitoba. It should have at least gone to Thunder Bay and Sudbury in northern Ontario.

There have been at least five dozen requests from boards of trade, city and town councils, and trade union groups in southwestern Ontario asking for hearings. They did not get them.

The Government put a time limit on when the committee had to report. It reported within the time limit ordered by the House, and the report sat for six weeks before the Bill was called for report stage consideration. Suddenly the Government is in a big hurry.

The Parliamentary Secretary said that the legislation would increase competition, competitiveness, et cetera. When the Freedom to Move hearings started, there were six relatively large regional airlines and two national carriers. Now we have two, and the Government says that there will be more competition. Those two carriers will control something in the order of 80 per cent to 90 per cent of all airline traffic through their major national networks as well as the operating and licensing agreements for a bunch of little feeder airlines all over Canada. They control it, and the Government tells us that there will be more competition. Competition has been reduced by two-thirds.

The Government talks about confidential contracts and confidential freight rates. If there were anything more anti-competitive than secret deals between large corporate shippers and one or two railroads, I do not know what it would be. No one is about to build another railroad; there are only two of them in Canada.

The trucking industry asked for a delay of at least one year until all things were in place. The Parliamentary Secretary said that safety was a number one priority and that there would be no compromise on safety. We have heard that from both Ministers; we have heard it ad nauseam.

Where is the railway safety board? Where is the rail safety Act? Where is the board on highway trucking safety? Where is the legislation, the regulations, and rules for that? All those things will take at least a year to implement.

The aviation safety board has just been established for a year. It is still setting up, and we do not have all the regulations governing it.

The Canadian Trucking Association pleaded with us not to proceed until all these things were in place—safety, security, proper regulations, and the people necessary to enforce them, such as inspectors and what not.

We have three amendments on the Order Paper, and the Government does not want us to get to them. There is one it will not be able to avoid. I call them the Fred Turner amendments. They would guarantee that never again could the new transportation agency, the air safety board—whoever will administer the Aeronautics Act, or whoever inherits the duties of the air transport committee of the CTC—do what was done to Fred Turner, bankrupt his airline because he was late filing his statistical reports. The Government admitted that there had been 1,600 occasions when airlines or aircraft operators were late filing their reports.

We are anxious to have these matters dealt with in the House, but the Government does not want to deal with them; it is afraid. It refuses to listen to witnesses. It said that it would be open and that it would consult. It heard witnesses but it did not listen.

We want the legislation to establish appeal procedures so that operators have some protection and some rights, so that they cannot be victims of bureaucratic overkill or the Government ignoring them. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) became involved in this one. Mr. Turner has been haunting the House of Commons for almost four months. Members of Parliament from all three Parties support him, but the Government refuses to act. It offered a $15,000 payment without prejudice. It bankrupted the man. He lost five aircraft, his hangar, and all his equipment. He is scheduled to lose his house next month. The Government offers $15,000, which in itself is an admission of guilt. It is a pittance. All Mr. Turner is asking for is an independent arbitrator to hear his case and the government side of the story and make a decision. Mr. Turner has filed a lawsuit in the courts. The Government is now saying, "Well, you can't sue us". First the Government said "Go ahead and sue". Mr. Turner cannot afford a lawyer for one day, let alone the months and months a lawsuit would take. I am confident that with a reasonable settlement put forward by an independent arbitrator there will be no court case. The Government can afford to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars and can spend months and years in court at the expense of an innocent individual Canadian citizen.

It is patent nonsense that all of a sudden the Government is in a big hurry. Three full days on report stage would have finished all the amendments and half a day would have been sufficient on third reading. That would not be unreasonable. We were proceeding with all dispatch dealing with amendments during the one day we have had so far. We have had a dozen or 14 motions dealt with and out of the way. It would take two more days to deal with each one of them. Why will the Government not let us have that time, Madam Speaker? Why did the Government take so long to get to work on the Bill? Why is the Government all of a sudden in a big hurry? It is bludgeoning Parliament into accepting bad legislation while we have amendments trying to make a bad Bill less bad.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to speak today on the subject of Bill C-18. I feel that the issue of this Bill will have a favourable impact for the shippers and for the citizens of my province of Alberta and western Canada generally.

I listened with interests to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and I found it hard to believe that he indeed was a westerner speaking the way he did. This Bill is to the ultimate benefit of ordinary citizens, to small and medium businesses and to the people of western Canada generally. It is about competition and fairness and the restoration of justice. It goes a long way to cap the well known well-springs of discontent in western Canada and it leads toward that noblest of all goals, national reconciliation. I believe that the socialist alliance with the CPR will result in some electoral bringing into account come 1989.

I have received voluminous correspondence from the citizens of Alberta on the subject of this Bill. A typical example is one received recently from an employee of Alberta Gas Chemicals in Medicine Hat, which letter in part reads:

> —we currently ship approximately 90 per cent of our product by rail. As I am sure you are aware competition is the essence of good business. Without competition there is no need to be efficient and you can demand whatever the traffic will bear for your product or service.
> With Competitive Line Rates we will be able to be more competitive on pricing of our Methanol which should allow us to sell and ship more product.
> If Bill C-18 does not pass, we are in a position where without fair competitive freight rates we could go out of business. If we are forced out of business, it will mean a loss of approximately 100 jobs at AGCL in Medicine Hat for a starter. If we go out of business, that means the CPR, locally, will probably also have lay-offs as there will be approximately 400 to 800 fewer rail cars to ship each month from Medicine Hat.

It is employment we are talking about, Madam Speaker. It is also justice in terms of freight rates.

I have a letter from a constituent in Edmonton:

> I have been involved on more than one occasion with respect to encouraging incoming businesses. After the second look at expenses at the freighting end of production the early enthusiasm pales and we are again losers.
> I believe that it is imperative that we have a drastic change in the freight rates for western Canada.

I have a note from the Alberta Government:

> Rail provides the life-force for many landlocked Alberta manufacturers and producers. Their products and distance from markets make them dependent on rail.
> In 1985, Alberta generated 48 million tonnes of freight for CN and CP, 20 per cent of their total business. Sixty per cent of this came from producers that are captive to rail and in most cases captive to one carrier.
> Under existing legislation, rail carriers are comparatively free from market competition. The rates they choose can create winners and losers in Alberta's major commodity industries.
> The results of this are clear. In 1982, Alberta related shipments generated 28 per cent of the total system of traffic that paid over 70 per cent of the total contribution to railway constant costs for Canada.
> The rates applied to Alberta rail shippers for the past several years have been increasing faster than railway costs. Rates offered to captive shippers have received a disproportionate share of this increase.

I will continue with a note from the Hinton, Alberta District Chamber of Commerce:

> We are very concerned, at this time, because it is our understanding that CN, a Crown corporation, and the CP whose relationship within this country parallels the CNs are both amassing a fierce lobby against the competitive line rates provisions of this Bill.
> We are a resource-based community depending on pulp, paper and coal; a western Canadian community whose welfare and survival is dependent upon exporting our goods to national and international markets. Because our community is located in western Canada, we are disadvantaged in our ability to compete due to this fact. The transportation component in exporting our goods to those market does not and will not reflect market conditions as long as the CN and CP have for all intents and purposes a monopoly. Subsidies are not our forte, however, we cannot and will not stand by and see our only hope to enhance our ability to compete in the market-place dashed by a Crown corporation and, if I may say, "A semi-Crown Corporation".

The whole concept of this Bill is to assure employees and shippers that safety will be maintained and that the benefits of deregulation will redound and that the disadvantages will not prevail. Safety we know is a major priority for all those involved in transportation. This legislation is a product of the viewpoints and ideas advanced over a very extensive cross Canada consultative process over the past two years involving contact with over 450 groups and organizations.

I would venture to say that the reverse is the case of that painted by the Hon. Member for Regina West. Consultation has been of the essence in the drafting and in the amendment of this Bill. Those consultations involved labour, users, business, transportation companies, the travelling public and provincial and territorial governments. In addition, of course, there were the hearings of the standing committee to which the Hon. Member referred.

I would like to touch on a submission from Sultran Ltd. based in Calgary. This is not a minor player.

> —Sultran ships up to six million tonnes of sulphur per year from 14 Alberta plants and three northeastern British Columbia plants to Vancouver for export. This volume generates about $200 million a year in rail freight.
> Because of its relatively low value and long distances to tidewater, sulphur is effectively captive to rail transport, and generally captive to one carrier.
> Since there is neither an effective transport alternative nor effective economic regulation control over railway rates, the railways are, at present, free to engage in monopoly pricing. Bill C-18 remedies this condition by introducing competitive provisions which attempt to limit the monopoly power of railways over captive commodities and at locations served by only one carrier.

This new policy statement in the Bill provides that all carriers must meet acceptable safety standards, that competition and market forces are to be the prime agent in determining price and service levels, that government intervention will occur only when necessary to protect the public interest, but carriers are to be fairly compensated for any imposed public duty, and carriers pricing policies are not to be discriminatory.

Canadians have imbued within them an innate sense of fairness and Canadians react in a rather forceful manner when they feel that they are being discriminated against. This piece of legislation responds to that sense of discrimination which has bedevilled western Canadians, and I submit, other Canadians for the past century. It gives, for the first time, to western Canadians the opportunity to compete on a level playing field with their brothers and sisters in central and eastern Canada. Thus, I am saddened when I hear Members opposite decrying this legislation. The Minister has responded to Members opposite and has agreed to a number of amendments. These amendments have accommodated the major objections that were raised when the Bill was first introduced.

This piece of legislation will bring to Alberta and to western Canada a response to the needs of users of transportation services. Our ability to expand markets will depend upon our ability to produce goods and services at the lowest possible costs.

Of particular importance to my province are the provisions of the legislation relating to railway freight transportation. The long distances to markets for exports and the dominance of one major carrier in the northern part of the province and another in the south has limited alternatives available to shippers for transporting products. The current National Transportation Act provides rail carriers with considerable pricing freedoms and little incentive to compete while provisions to protect shippers against excessive rail rates have proven ineffective. As a result, the province incurs a significant freight rate burden.

If Alberta is to maintain its position in increasingly competitive world markets, this burden must be reduced. The provisions of this Bill to increase competition between carriers and to provide shippers with more effective mechanisms for resolving rate disputes with carriers go a long way toward allowing this to be accomplished.

In view of the criticism the Bill has received from railways, labour unions and the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), there are a few points that I would like to address in concluding. First, there is no direct causal relationship between deregulation and safety in the Canadian context. Regulations pertaining to safety are not changed adversely in this Bill. In fact, they are augmented. Recent changes to strengthen aeronautic safety and the proposed new rail safety Bill should address safety concerns.

Second, there is the principle of the railway's desire to reduce costs. However, with the exception of branch lines which are covered in the new legislation, the railways have not been specific on what legislation or regulation they believe should be changed.

The legislative package contained in Bill C-18 addresses concerns of westerners expressed since the time of the 1973 Western Economic Opportunities Conference. We in the West believe that the quick passage of this legislation is vital. A key provision in the legislation for many shippers in Alberta and indeed in the rest of Canada is the mechanism for competitive line rates. This provision will allow shippers who are now captive to a single carrier to gain access to a competing alternate carrier for the movement of goods. Removal of this provision from the Bill would have eliminated a large part of the industry's support of the legislation and removal of such a proposal from the Bill as suggested by Members opposite would have gutted this piece of legislation.

In conclusion, I submit that this Bill should pass swiftly through all stages. The people of the West are waiting to see how the the House disposes of the Bill and are watching with great care to see how Members on all sides vote on this vital piece of legislation which will go a long way toward realizing the destiny of western Canada.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to offer some comments at this point in the debate on Bill C-18. I have something more than a passing interest in the initiatives that are proposed because I do believe that the strengthening and augmenting of the transportation system of Canada is one of the primary responsibilities of any national Government.

Because of our geography and the peculiar nature of our economic system, it is very important that a national Government maintain a clear and overriding responsibility for the way we move people, goods and services across Canada. This should be done in a way that not only maximizes efficiency but also ensures that there is a maximum of service. That is why I find it so dismaying that the Government would impose a closure motion on this very important topic. This is a matter that requires a continuing and ongoing examination by Parliament in order to ensure that the legislation is right. It should not be approached in a way that would simply ensure that it meets the parliamentary timetable, but in a way that would ensure that the vast array of important interests across Canada are properly and effectively reflected in the legislation.

We do not change the Transportation Act that often, so when we do it we had better make sure that what we are doing is carefully conceived and integrated into a package that will respond, not only to contemporary needs but to future needs. That is why we object so strenuously to the fact that the very important evidence that was brought forward during the hearings of the Transport Committee was ignored in the Bill. We were not given the time or effort required to reconsider, re-examine and redefine the legislation.

Let me tell the House of one example of this that comes to mind. Three or four weeks ago I had the opportunity to meet with the national executive of the organization representing the physically handicapped in Canada. When I was Minister of Transport I felt that one of the most important contributions the national Government could make to alleviate the disadvantage suffered by those with various handicaps would be to ensure that the transportation system reflected their needs and concerns and was adapted in a way that would give them the kind of mobility they require to pursue their occupations and their rights as Canadians. We set forward a series of guidelines that we felt should be incorporated in the transportation system, and those guidelines should now be reflected in the legislation. However, they are not. It was clear from my discussions with the group representing the various organizations that speak for the handicapped that this would be an opportunity lost.

Members of Parliament should reflect on why they would support a closure motion to forestall any further examination of the legislation when it is clear that a major constituency is being ignored and in fact rejected as evidenced by the lack of measures put forward in the Bill. We must ask ourselves why the representations made by these organizations across Canada were treated with such indifference. We must ask why there was not a willingness during the consideration of this legislation in the House to take account of those representations and, even at this late date, to provide for a modification. It seems that we are in an unfortunate position. The imperatives of political timetabling are taking precedence over the necessity for passing good legislation. It seems to me that what is before us is an indication of what has become all too common and frequent. It seems to be important to acquire a so-called list of accomplishments without really examining the substance, the details and the ramifications of those accomplishments. It seems to be far more important to get the headlines than to get the substance right. As my seatmate, the transportation spokesman for my Party, has said, the decision of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to impose a suffocation of the consideration of this Bill by the House stands as evidence of a clear and unmistakable calumny on the part of the Government, as evidence of its unwillingness to take its responsibilities seriously, considering the importance placed on this matter during the last election.

I will point to another reason why we should be examining this legislation with more thorough care than we will be able to because of the closure motion. Through a wide variety of activities we are observing the serious reduction of the powers and abilities of the national Government to form successfully an economic union to meet the imperatives of international competition. As I said earlier in my remarks, transportation is not only a clear responsibility of the national Government but should be even more seriously recognized when we are talking about giving the provinces further powers, when there is serious consideration of severe limitations of federal powers as a consequence of free trade negotiations, and when there is a move toward the privatization of various Crown corporations.

The collective impact of these initiatives is an erosion of the capacity of the national Government to meet effectively and successfully the national goals and objectives. That will not become apparent overnight, but in the months and years ahead as the country tries to respond to new demands this incredible move by the Conservative Government to disband the national Government's role in the economic and social life of the country will be decried. The Government may have to pay a price for that in the judgment of historians, but it should certainly be more carefully examined now.

I raise this concern, particularly in the field of transportation, because I can recall the discussions and negotiations of which I was a part when we were beginning to consider our own form of reforms in this field. One of the most important questions that we raised at that time was with regard to safety and whether deregulation afforded sufficient protection to maintain high quality standards and maintenance of the transportation system. We did not want to have the continuing problems with which we were faced in the rail, air and trucking industries with regard to the continuing incidents of danger and disaster. Yet there is nothing in this legislation or in the corollary of complementary moves of the Government to give assurance that there was a fair recognition of those facts.

Similarly, when we were considering the role of transportation we had to consider the role of regional development. That role cannot be judged only by the criteria, the accounts or the economists. We knew from the history of the country that if we were to maintain a national fabric we had to ensure that all parts of the country were involved. I must say that those have not been involved.

In the short time I have remaining I must say that this is an unfinished piece of legislation which requires much more examination and work. We can only regret the fact that the Government seems to be unwilling to give the people of Canada that opportunity.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I always considered the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) to be the father of this legislation. I thought that in his speech he would apologize to the House and the country for his sponsorship of the attempts by the previous Liberal Government to introduce a regime of deregulation in Canada.

I have a number of concerns with what is happening in the House at this time. Despite what you have heard from a number of the previous speakers, we are not actually debating Bill C-18 at this time. We are involved in the process of time allocation which limits debate on report stage and third reading of this very important piece of legislation. As you know, Madam Speaker, time allocation is just another way of saying closure. It is a way of cutting off debate, limiting the number of people who can participate in the debate, and guaranteeing that only a few of the proposed amendments are debated and voted upon by the House.

This is a very difficult process for the House. The Government cannot claim that we have instigated a filibuster on this piece of legislation. When this Bill was finally brought back to the House for debate we in the Opposition announced that we would move quickly to introduce all of our amendments in order that we could have a recorded vote on them in the House. We believe this is necessary because we have been told by government spokespersons that the Government is willing to accept some of the amendments standing in the name of the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and in the name of one of the Liberal Members. However, the Government has refused to tell us which of those amendments it is willing to accept.

We are in an ironic situation. The Government, which says that it will accept some of the amendments but will not tell us which, is now introducing time allocation which will not allow us to reach some of the amendments which the Government may or may not favour. Talk about parliamentary democracy. I hear a voice from the wilderness, that of the Parliamentary Secretary, saying that we are stalling. We are not stalling. We have said that we would move as quickly as possible through the amendments. We said that we would forego debate on some of the amendments.

The first speaker from our Party on this time allocation motion, the Member for Regina West, pointed out that with two or three days at report stage we could deal with every one of the amendments. Two or three days debate is not very much to change fundamentally the way in which the transportation industry is regulated. That is the purpose of Parliament. We should ensure that our amendments, some of which are acceptable to the Government, are debated and voted upon. The Government's insinuation that we have been stalling is patently not true.

As the Member for Regina West said, the reason that this legislation is before the House in the latter half of June is because the Government stalled. The Government took a year before finally introducing this legislation in the House. It took a second session of the House before the Government finally brought the legislation into the House for debate. After committee stage the Government delayed for weeks and weeks before introducing it for third reading. All of that speaks of the Government delaying this legislation, although it knows the legislation will be passed. What the Government is doing now is preventing a full debate and decision by this House.

One of the things we discovered was a government memorandum talking about lowering the public profile on free trade. The Cabinet had papers which suggested the Government should do all it could to make sure there was no public debate, that the public was not aroused or made aware of the implications of free trade. The Government was afraid that if that happened there would be even more opposition to the attempt to negotiate a free trade pact with the Americans. Obviously some industries and towns are going to be hurt and some people are going to lose their jobs under free trade. That was the Government strategy. It is following that same strategy with deregulation.

The Opposition has said it is not going to stall the legislation but we want to introduce the amendments and have them debated for a short time and then make a decision. Yet the Government, for its own reasons, has moved time allocation. It is completely unnecessary. This is a major piece of legislation. The Opposition has indicated a willingness to co-operate—not to bend over and play dead but to co-operate. That is the most the Government can expect when we are opposed to a piece of legislation. We are willing to co-operate but we are not willing to rush the legislation through the House.

We recognize that this legislation will fundamentally change the way the transportation industry works. It is ironic that in the long time it has taken the Government to move forward with this legislation—not the Opposition but the Government—we have seen less and less competition in Canada. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West talked about the air transportation industry. We have had merger after merger lately, the most famous and most recent being CP and PWA getting married to form CAI or Canadian Airlines International. We know during that same period of time more and more management agreements came into place. CAI has agreements with Calm Air in northern Manitoba and Time Air in parts of Alberta and B.C. Air Canada has management arrangements with a number of other feeder airlines. This has been done in such a way that competition is being further and further reduced.

Conservative Members speak about how we are going into a market economy and deregulation will expand the number of operators. We will have more service. Yet the facts show the exact opposite. By the time this legislation is passed we will be down to one or two airline conglomerates for the most part.

We have seen examples of how service can be altered. Just after the announcement that CP and PWA were merging, we had CP cutting its service to Yukon. Obviously; why should they compete against each other? The management and feeder systems in that airline are such that if you are coming from one of the more remote parts of Canada it is almost impossible to make connections with other airlines. You have to stay within that management system. That is good for their business and you expect them to do it, but it is going to get worse and worse.

It is not a matter of all of a sudden freeing up the system. There are problems with the CTC and over-regulation in some areas. There is no question about that. Yet we are taking away the protection of Government regulation and giving control to a small group of owner-operators, especially in the airline industry. We move from one monopoly—Government regulation, which at least allowed a number of different operators to be involved in a competitive sense—to a monopoly of the large airlines which will control the air transportation industry.

At the same time we know the Government intends to do what it can to privatize Air Canada. We have no idea what form that will take. Will the Government allow CAI to buy Air Canada? Will a system be in place such that Air Canada will not really be competing? Will those parts of Canada now served by Air Canada, on what may or may not be profitable runs, be in a situation where those runs will be cut once Air Canada is privatized?

Those are all legitimate questions which should be addressed and answered in this House before the legislation is allowed to pass. That is one of the reasons we are seeing a rush after so many months and months of delay. The Government wants the legislation passed before it has the courage to announce what it is doing with Air Canada.

I recognize I am out of time; that is one of the problems with this process. There is a lot in the transportation industry that concerns me and my constituents. I am afraid that the process the Government is using for its own political agenda is actually destroying the input of Parliament on a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, there is a time for talk and there is a time for action. In my view we have talked enough about the Bill and it is now time to see what the Bill will do.

Every illustration the Opposition gave happened in a regulated society, not under Freedom To Move. Yet they want more regulation, particularly the NDP. Of course that is understandable. Socialists love regulations. They love to tell people what is good for them. That is part of their philosophy. The philosophy of this Party is to let the people speak and then carry out their wishes to the greatest possible degree. That is what we are trying to do.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) said it took us too long. "There have been a lot of delays!" The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) said we are going too fast. Which is it, too slow or too fast? I do not think it is either. I think we are going at just about the right speed.

The Hon. Member talked about delays. What do they expect? We had week after week of committee meetings. We listened to everyone who came along. Then we sat day after day going over the scores of amendments brought forward by the Opposition, as well as some from the Government. That takes time. Should we not have done that? Is that what they are complaining about? Every amendment they presented was discussed. Then they complain because they cannot bring them back to the House. How much time do they want to waste? We set up a committee to go into the details, not so we could bring them all back here again. If we are going to do that, why have committees at all?

This Bill is an example of what should happen under a free enterprise Government. It removes not all but many of the shackles which have stopped free enterprise from working. That is why the NDP particularly is opposed to it. They love regulation. They want to tell the people what to do, when to do it, how to do it, and where to do it. This Government does not do that. We believe the people are mature and can make up their own minds. We will give them the opportunity to go into business without Government regulations and red tape. That is what this Bill does.

The Hon. Member from Regina, who is a member of the Committee, said we did not travel enough. Let me tell the House that in 1985 we travelled to Vancouver, Winnipeg and Halifax. I do not know how many briefs we received at every one of those hearings. That was under Freedom to Move. The Opposition says that we did not go to the North. In 1986 we went to Churchill, Rankin Inlet, Cambridge Bay, Yellowknife, Inuvik, and Whitehorse. This year we had hearings at Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg, to say nothing of the days and days of hearings here in Ottawa. How much travelling does the Opposition want? Does it want to spend the whole year travelling at Government expense, or a whole month?

I think the Government has been pretty liberal in providing us with the amount of time it did, and I think the people of Canada appreciated it. We were thanked by the people who came to us from various places. They did not complain, because what we were doing was trying to give the people of Canada a chance, to the greatest possible degree, to say what they thought about Freedom to Move. A majority of the people want Freedom to Move to come into being as fast as possible.

I wish I had with me today the letters and wires I received so that Hon. Members could see just how high the pile is, and they all say in effect, "Move it. Do not talk anymore. We want some action. The time for talking is over". I think Freedom to Move will be wonderful for the country. In the first place, it involves all modes of transportation from the pipelines to trains, from small airplanes to the mighty jets, from small trucks to 18 wheelers. It includes every type of transportation. One correspondent said this country is very far flung, in fact it is flung too far. But whatever way we look at it, Canada is a vast country and transportation is probably the number one essential which keeps our country together. We want transportation to be efficient.

We want transportation to not only do the job, we want it to cost the lowest cost possible to the consumer. The consumer is the one who pays in the final analysis. This Bill will help the shippers give better prices to the consumer. We are doing our utmost in this Bill to eliminate monopoly and replace it with competition. That is exactly what the Bill is designed to do.

This is the first time in the history of this nation that transportation for the regions has been included in a transportation Bill. We are not only concerned about the country as a whole, we are concerned about the people in various parts of the Maritimes, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They have transportation problems and this Bill is designed not to ignore the problems but to look after them. There are regions in the west as well, in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba and in British Columbia, with regional transportation problems.

The Opposition said we did not listen to the North. A number of these submissions we received told us not to go too fast in the North because it has a sparse population and vast distances. They told us to go a little slower in the North, so the Government went a little slower. We established a line, and north of that line there will continue to be regulations, for the time being. We will work gradually into a Freedom to Move atmosphere. That is the principle upon which we are working.

We have set up a transport board which will look into all of these items and ensure that there is fairness and competition, and that we give every mode of transportation a chance to compete. Many times I have seen a regulated society stop people from investing their money in a service they thought they could provide better than anyone else. A transport board told them they could not do it. Under the regulated society the franchise would be give to one trucking firm and it could add truck after truck after truck and no one else could get in. It was not just a franchise, it was an monopoly. I have seen it happen scores of time. Individuals and small companies which wanted to go into the trucking business could not because the board would not let them. The Government bureaucrats said "No, you cannot do it. We have enough trucks in the system".

The new Bill will give the people a chance to act. If I want to invest my money in a small plane or truck or even a train, if I want to take a chance and compete with the big boys, all I have to do is meet the safety requirements. I must have proper insurance and meet safety standards, but if I have those, the Government will not say I cannot invest my money. The Government will say, "You make sure that you protect the public interests and that safety is looked after and then you can go to town and invest your money". I would have the right to lose and I would have the right to gain. Everyone who goes into business under a free enterprise system has that right. It is a right to win and a right to lose. They take the chance and if they lose it is on their own initiative, not on the initiative of some bureaucrat sitting in some office who perhaps never operated a business, never had to meet a payroll and never had to toe the mark in order to stay alive in the free enterprise system.

Let me say once again that this is good legislation for Canada. It removes some of the shackles which have stopped free enterprise from working. Watch it over the next few years it is going to do great things for our nation.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I regret that the Government has seen fit to introduce closure on report stage of this particular Bill, a move which removes from consideration a number of very serious, reasoned and careful amendments which had been put down by my Party in order to improve this Bill. The Bill is designed to revamp the National Transportation Act and its stated purpose is to increase competition in the transportation sector by removing certain regulations which hindered the ability to compete. It will affect rail, air and trucking.

The major economic benefit expected from the legislation is that Canadian goods and products will get to market more efficiently, faster, and in a less expensive way. This will include Canadian exports to the U.S. which the Government says will reach their destination at a lower cost, and therefore will be more competitive.

This is very laudable but, unhappily, the Government in its rush to get this Bill through has sacrificed consideration of amendments which would have improved the Bill. The Bill reflects, perhaps, a certain commitment to ideology over practicality. I want to mention some of the things about which we have concerns and on which we have amendments which the Government will not now consider.

To begin with, there is the introduction of confidential contracts. Under this Bill the railway companies, CN and CP, will be allowed to enter into confidential contracts with large bulk shippers. In other words, the rates charged by the railway company to the shipper remain confidential and do not have to be published. Any rebate or allowance provided by a railway company on a published rate must also remain confidential.

We in the Liberal Party were in favour of confidential contracts for transborder movements. We thought it would help to reduce the competitive advantage enjoyed by U.S. railways over CN and CP in transborder shipping rates and therefore enhance the competitiveness of our goods in U.S. markets.

We are not in favour of confidential contracts for domestic rates. It seems to us that what will happen is that the large bulk shippers will clearly benefit. They will be able to negotiate favourable low rates for their voluminous shipments. Railway company revenues will decrease and there will be a tendency to fill that gap at the expense of the small and medium-sized shippers who will end up cross-subsidizing the rate decreases to the large bulk shippers.

CP Rail, Canada's only other railway company apart from the federal Crown corporation CN, is of the view that in competing with CN to offer the lowest rate to shippers through confidential contracts it will not be able to absorb as much lost revenues as CN will be able to absorb and may in fact be forced out of business by the year 1992.

Our other concern is with respect to the trucking industry which is already suffering as a result of the Government's large increases in gasoline prices. Canadian trucking companies are already at a disadvantage in terms of competing with American trucking companies. They will certainly face unfair competition in this respect since they are not entitled to negotiate confidential contracts.

Another concern I have is with respect to foreign ownership since this Bill has no limitations on foreign takeovers of Canadian transportation companies. There are two guidelines in this respect. First, mergers and takeovers over $20 million and involving over 10 per cent of the voting shares of a Canadian transportation firm will be reviewed by the Governor in Council. Takeovers or mergers below those ceilings would be reviewed by Investment Canada. This means that very large takeovers will only be subject to political review, which leaves the potential for patronage decisions rather than decisions based on clear criteria which Canadians know, understand and accept. There is quite a risk that many good Canadian companies will pass into foreign hands.

Nowhere in the Bill is much concern shown for regional development. The concern is for competition, for market rates. In a country as vast as Canada clearly what will happen is that the centres that are profitable, such as those in the Montreal, Toronto, Windsor corridor, will be well serviced, while isolated communities in which there is not much traffic will increasingly find themselves with less and less service as time goes on, and as the only motive is profit. The history of our country shows that our transportation system has been used to aid regional development, and as a way of opening up communications links and trade links. This Bill will put an end to that.

Before us is a measure that has been protested by the Premiers and, in particular, the Council of Maritime Premiers. The Government has decided to ignore their recommendations.

We also have a great many concerns about safety. As an example, before us we have the U.S. deregulation of airlines. No one can say that travelling on an American airline these days is a comfortable experience. As more and more companies get into the airline business the service gets less and less. It becomes more of a no-frills service. Inside the passenger cabin that is not such a problem. But when economies are made on safety one has to be very worried.

The figures in the United States give cause for concern. For instance, in 1979 the Federal Aviation Administration had 2,000 inspectors monitoring 237 air carriers. In 1984 it had 1,300 inspectors for 407 air carriers. In Canada, the Auditor General reported in 1985 that Transport Canada was unable to inspect all air carriers in its jurisdiction once a year.

If the Government encourages small aircraft companies to come into existence, not necessarily well-capitalized ones with new equipment, and not necessarily well-staffed, what guarantees of safety will we have? The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has been telling Canadians that airfares on Canadian airlines will drop as a result of deregulation. How will airline fares drop? Clearly, only if staff are laid off and if services are reduced. There is nothing in the Bill to guarantee that there will be the same concentration on air safety as we have had in the past.

For all those reasons I regret that the Government has chosen to introduce closure on this Bill. I hope that even at this stage it might reconsider and be prepared to examine some of the very thoughtful and careful amendments that have been laid before the House.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. I want to start out by indicating that I think the questions that need to be put to the House are these. Why is the Government moving to cut off debate? Why is the Government using the heavy hand of closure in order to rush this Bill through the House? Why is it limiting debate? Why does it no longer want to hear from Members of Parliament with regard to transportation and deregulation? Why does it not want to hear from Canadians? Why has it closed its ears instead of giving this legislation the type of thorough and full debate that it needs? Is it simply trying to sweep the potential consequences from this deregulation package under the rug? Does it not want to look at possible implications of what it is doing before it gives it the full force of law?

This leaves one with the impression that what it has tried to do is force-feed Canadians with its particular brand of free enterprise deregulation ideology instead of encouraging a full and comprehensive debate on the legislation that is before the House, instead of allowing for public input and instead of allowing for this legislation to be examined in a full and complete way.

Just what is the approach that the Government is taking to deregulation? I think there are a number of options that the Government could look at. One of the ways it might approach the question of regulation of transportation, whether it is in the air, by way of trucking or other means, is to simply maintain the status quo.

Not being an expert in the transportation field, I am unaware of the number of years that the present legislation has been in place. Certainly after legislation has been in place for a number of years there is probably a need for review. Circumstances change. The economy changes. The needs of people change to some degree.

The Government could have taken the approach of freezing things as they now stand and simply continuing the status quo. Another approach would be to eliminate any effective regulation. It is this latter approach that the Government has adopted. In doing so, it has dressed it up with the fine-sounding slogan, "freedom to move."

Obviously, every Canadian is a lover of freedom. Rather than being frank with the Canadian public and coming straight out and telling the public that it is eliminating any effective regulation in the transportation sector in order to meet the concerns of the industry itself and the consumers of transportation, it attaches a nice public relations-type slogan to the Bill, calling it Freedom to Move.

So, we have those two approaches, continuing the status quo, or eliminating any effective regulation in transportation. But, were those the only choices available to the Government? Are those the only routes available?

When listening to the government Members one gets the impression that it was a choice only between the status quo, no change at all, and radical change, a radical cutting away of the regulatory environment relating to safety and service, consumer needs, and the needs of the industry itself.

I suggest that the Government had another option. It could continue the debate on this measure in the House; it could continue the examination of the regulatory environment that exists in this country.

The whole subject could be approached from the point of view of re-regulation. In other words, we could examine the present regime in the light of present-day requirements. Such a course would result in a rational and reasonable approach to the regulation of the transportation sector. Instead of Bill C-18, we could have had a participatory approach. The Government could have said to Canadians, "We have confidence in your opinions, and in the opinions of your representatives. We want to ensure that all Canadians have an opportunity for input into the whole question of regulation of the transportation sector. To that end, it is our intention to canvass the opinion of Canadians, regardless of where they live."

That is an alternate approach to the one taken by the Government. Instead of looking for the alternative, the Government has decided to close down debate. It has chosen to try to force-feed Canadians a particularly ideological point of view on regulation.

Ordinary Canadians do have some legitimate concerns when it comes to the transportation industry in this country. There are good and valid reasons why the present regulatory regime has been built up. There are good reasons why we seek to regulate transportation in this country. One reason, of course, is the whole question of safety.

As a consumer, one cannot check out every carrier that one may want to use for vacation or business travel. One simply cannot investigate each carrier in order to assure oneself of one's safety in transit. One of the legitimate purposes of regulation is to ensure the safety of the traveller.

When regulation is virtually eliminated and there is put in its stead an Adam Smith survival-of-the-fittest approach to competition, an environment of cutthroat competition, there is a great deal of temptation on the part of those seeking to survive to cut corners. Someone has to be looking over the shoulders of the industry to ensure that, in cutting corners, the safety of the traveller is not jeopardized. We need to have someone who will ensure that safety standards are of the highest possible.

These are the kinds of concerns that must be dealt with in the debate on the regulation of the transportation sector. The cutting off of debate can only result in there being an inadequate response to these concerns.

Canadians are concerned about the whole question of price. The Government indicates that we are going to have a honeymoon with regard to price; that we are going to get very low air fares. The impression is that one is going to be able to travel almost free. Well, while there may be a honeymoon with regard to air fares between such centres as Toronto and Montreal, the high density areas of the country, I doubt very much that there will be any such honeymoon in respect of regional centres such as Winnipeg. As well, a honeymoon is a short-term proposition. We all know that. What about the long term? What are the long-term consequences for price in a deregulated environment?

In that regard, let me quote from an article which deals with some of the research on deregulation in the United States. I quote from an article in Traffic World of April 20, 1987:

> Deregulation has spurred rail, motor and airline carriers toward an "oligopoly in each of the modes," said L. Leslie Waters, Indiana University professor emeritus of transportation and business history—
> Up to now, there has been "an enormous volume of rate cutting and many have been pleased; we as shippers have been enjoying a lengthy period of reasonably good service at moderate rates in relation to the economy," —But he warned, "shippers had better enjoy it, because the forces of oligopoly will prevail, and even without overt collusion, rates will increase and shippers will be lobbying for reimposition of regulations—just as some are now in the case of railroads."

What Professor Waters is saying is that while we may get lower prices at the beginning of deregulation, given that the ownership of the industry will fall into fewer and fewer hands, which is what I understand the term "oligopoly" to mean, prices will eventually increase.

These are the kinds of questions that have to be answered before this Bill passes into law. In terms of the situation south of the border, we hear that the Americans are getting a good deal on price. Well, the U.S. presents a much different circumstance from that which exists in Canada. We are walking blind if we think that deregulation will have a similar impact in Canada to that in the U.S., with its much larger population and much different geography.

In summary, what I am saying is that the Government, rather than closing off debate on this measure, cutting off the input of Canadians, should be opening up this legislation to further examination. Canadians have real concerns in the area of safety, in the area of price. The Government should permit the continuation of the discussion until those concerns are met in an adequate way, rather than pushing this legislation through.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I should like to relate the importance of the economic benefits which will follow the passage of the transportation Bills, but after listening to Hon. Members opposite, I am mindful of the ancient quote, "Nero fiddles while Rome burns".

I do not have to say anything to Hon. Members of the House about the great economic benefits and importance of freer trade to Canada as an exporting nation, nor do I have to point out that our higher standard of living is primarily based upon our export trade. We in this country are, perhaps more than any other country, concerned about the cost of transporting our goods to market, be they manufactured goods or raw products. Goodness knows, many of us are still hewers of wood and drawers of water, vendors of raw resources. The problem is that the world around us is becoming much more competitive. As each country becomes more competitive minded, it looks at ways and means of reducing its costs. Canada cannot do otherwise. Canada must do likewise, because the cost of getting goods to market is of extreme importance.

These reforms are needed because the existing economic regulatory scheme for transportation, introduced over 20 years ago, now impedes rather than helps our competitive growth. Competition has been stifled while the regulatory process has become cumbersome, time consuming, and costly. Put simply, the market-place demands that economic regulation catch up to this reality.

If we did not manufacture and produce or sell what we manufacture and produce, perhaps we would not have to be concerned about the carrier. However, the shippers are saying, "Get on with the job that you started over two years ago". The Coalition of Concerned Shippers and shippers generally, particularly rail captive shippers, cry out, "How long will we continue to be so captive?" In their great numbers they are saying, "We support the Government in its desire to introduce regulatory reform so that transportation will carry our goods to market at a cheaper, more economic cost".

Undoubtedly shippers whole-heartedly support the early passage of Bill C-18. Shippers, industrial associations, and exporters urge early passage of the Bill. Every day that the Bill is not the law of the land means additional cost to them.

Mr. Benjamin: Baloney.

Mr. Reid: I have heard that comment before.

I am somewhat nonplused by the air deregulation comments of the Official Opposition in particular. We are already embarked upon a smooth, final approach to the deregulation process. No new drastic change is anticipated in the way that Canadian carriers will do business safely and efficiently.

While on the other side of the river in the United States the consolidation or rationalization process may have caused some concern, it should not do so here. Canadian Airlines International Limited has simply replaced Canadian Pacific Airlines. Along with Air Canada it is assembling rival networks and is acquiring feeder lines to establish two main national carriers. This consolidation started to take place prior to the introduction of Bill C-18 with the implementation of regulation and the encouragement and otherwise of a former Minister of Transport who is now in the Official Opposition. The process was initiated and ongoing, and now it is being openly proposed by the Government in this Bill. It seems somewhat inconsistent to hear the former Minister of Transport urge Members of Parliament to delay the process which he started.

Deregulation has taken place in all modes of transportation in the United States. Each day the Americans draw business away from our carriers. The provisions contained in the Bill will make our railways more competitive with one another. Indeed, we hope that with the passage of the Bill they will be more competitive with that major U.S. carrier, Burlington Northern, which is competitive when it comes to carrying our resources.

As the Bill will show, shippers will have more competitive access to our railways. There will be a continuance of the economic viability of Canadian railways. The Bill strikes at the right, fair, and just balance.

Turning to truckers, that segment of the transportation industry will be dealt with more fully in Bill C-19. However, let me say that in Alberta they have played successfully with the deregulation process and Canadian truckers have not done badly in trans-border markets. One southern Ontario carrier, an established truck carrier, put it the following way: "Deregulation as proposed would eliminate much of the unnecessary red tape and the delays in getting licences and will create a more efficient transportation system".

I should like to conclude by referring to a factor of national concern—safety. It has been raised time and time again by members of the Opposition. There is no doubt that those persons who operate in any segment of the transportation industry will put safety first. As the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the earlier Minister of Transport both said, safety will be a priority concern of the Government. No step in the reregulatory process will endanger any safety factor in any segment of transportation. We have acted and will continue to act in the interests of improving air safety. There is no question; safety will not be impaired by reason of the passage of these transportation Bills.

I urge, along with other members of the Government, the early passage of Bill C-18 so that our carriers can have an equal opportunity to be competitive with national carriers of the United States and our shippers, whoever they are, will be able to get their products to market at a competitive price.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, may I call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

DAY CARE

URGENT NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, this morning on Parliament Hill a presentation of petitions to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) signaled the end of the "Countdown to Childcare" campaign launched in mid-April by three national organizations, the Canadian Daycare Advocacy Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. In addition, 14 national organizations supported this campaign to make the Government aware of the urgency to take action with respect to daycare centres. The "Countdown to Childcare" campaign was designed to make Canadian men and women more conscious of the problems faced by our children and their parents. The petition was circulated throughout Canada and many thousands of signatures were gathered in the course of activities in various communities.

If the Government is prepared to invest several billion dollars for nuclear submarines and other military hardware, and these figures may prove to be very conservative, what are we waiting for to invest in our own children? Daycare services are in a crisis. We need additional space in daycare centres. Time is of the essence.

REFUGEES

OPPOSITION TO PROVISIONS OF BILL C-55

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, across Canada, church people, trade unionists, immigrants and other ordinary Canadians are joining together to defend justice for refugees and to oppose Bill C-55.

In Victoria a thousand people signed a petition against Bill C-55 and presented it Friday to their Member of Parliament.

In Calgary, yesterday, the Cathedral Church of the Redeemer made special prayers for refugees and heard a Salvadoran family speak of gratitude for protection Canadians have given and also of their longing to be able to return home.

In Hamilton yesterday a Salvadoran priest celebrated a special Mass for refugees. The mayor declared Refugee Day recognizing the many benefits brought to Canada by generations of immigrants, including, recently, South East Asians, Caribbeans, and Central Americans, and the Nansen Medal given last year for the Canadian people's humane care for refugees.

In Thunder Bay, members of a dozen congregations have helped 50 refugees to cross the U.S. border since February 20 and have provided them with food, shelter and clothing.

Canadians are welcoming refugees, and ask the Government to do the same by first withdrawing Bill C-55.

ECONOMIC REGIONAL DISPARITIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, since September, 1984, over one million new jobs have been created and unemployment has fallen by 3 per cent. Unfortunately, these figures also underline the growth of economic regional disparities in our country. The Atlantic provinces and the west lag dramatically behind southern Ontario and Manitoba. The figures show, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, two Canada's, one rich and promising, the other underdeveloped and underemployed.

What can we about it? A trade agreement with the United States, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and the soon to be announced western economic diversification program will all help. But I believe we can do something more as well. We need a government purchasing policy aimed specifically at creating jobs in regions of traditional high unemployment, a policy with all criteria known in advance of tendering. The Americans do it now with their defence procurement budget. Understandably, many benefiting from the current government policy will not like it, but we must close the gap between the haves and the have-nots. We must have one Canada with equal opportunity for all.

POSSIBILITY OF MAIL CARRIERS' STRIKE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the headlines today are full of references to a possible strike at the Post Office. I must say that this is of concern to most Canadians.

Are we as parliamentarians or is the Government simply powerless in this situation? Do we simply have to stand by and suffer the consequences of a strike on small business, on the public, with reduced service? Are we to end up blaming the unions or management, whichever we choose, and allow the Government simply to take pot-shots at the NDP because we believe in collective bargaining? Or is there an alternative? Is there a way of taking effective action in this situation? If the Government would read the report of conciliator Swan, it would see that he points out specifically that the deadline for financial self-sufficiency by next spring has forced the management of the Post Office to take long-term goals and make them into short-term objectives.

I suggest an option for the Government. The Government could say to the Post Office: "As long as your trend line is down with regard to the deficit, that is fine". This would offer some elbow room to the Post Office to negotiate a settlement rather than leaving us on a collision course leading to a postal strike.

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—CALL FOR INCREASED MAINTENANCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, once again the federal Government has ignored the worsening state of our harbours and wharfs across the country. On May 12, 1987, the Deputy Minister of Fisheries and Oceans informed the chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans that over the next five years the possibility of 30 wharfs in the Province of Nova Scotia would be closed down as a result of lack of funds. The budget for small craft harbours is simply a drop in the bucket.

Dependable and well maintained harbours and wharfs are absolutely essential. The Government's neglect is a threat to the safety of Canadian fishermen and boaters. While the Government bails out banks and squeezes low and middle-income taxpayers for every last cent, the real needs of Canadians are ignored.

In my own constituency, the fishermen in Lingan, South Bar, Glace Bay, the Barrachois Cove, Louisbourg, Main-à-Dieu, Gabarouse, L'Archeveque, Port Morien and all other ports are waiting patiently for much needed moneys to make repairs to their wharfs. I urge the Government and all Members of Parliament to fulfil their responsibilities and to allocate some new, badly needed assistance to the harbours and wharfs across Canada.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, last week while in my riding I finally came across someone who had been phoned by one of those polling organizations. She told me she was asked the usual unbiased question which went something like this: "Despite the Conservative Government's problems and their mistakes, you really wouldn't want to vote Conservative in the next election, would you?" Her reply was interesting. She said of course she would.

She told the pollsters that the Vancouver Island unemployment rate was 17 per cent two years ago. Now it is down to 10 per cent under a Progressive Conservative Government. She said that British Columbia's share of federal Supply and Services contracts had doubled over the past two years from 16 per cent to over 30 per cent. She then told the pollster that housing starts are up 50 per cent since the 1984 election and that that was good news for the foresters of Nanaimo—Alberni.

Finally, she informed her caller that she had seen more federal cabinet Ministers on Vancouver Island in the last two years than she had seen in the past 20 because the Conservative Government obviously cares.

This lady is obviously very knowledgeable and very positive. She saw the glass as being more than half full, not half empty as the media would have us believe. I am proud to have her as a constituent and she is proud to have a dynamic Progressive Conservative Government in Ottawa.

RESEARCH

OFFICIAL OPENING OF MAURICE LAMONTAGNE INSTITUTE AT MONT-JOLI

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that last Friday, June 12, the riding of Matapédia—Matane which I represent was the site of an event which will be recorded in the history of my region, namely the official opening of Mont-Joli's Maurice Lamontagne Institute specializing in the sciences of the sea. My colleagues the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) attended the ceremonies.

Mr. Speaker, I was able to see how proud and pleased the people were, and I believe they had every reason to be because this research centre is a success, or better still, I should say a masterpiece.

Mr. Speaker, it would be appropriate to point out that this project of more than $50 million was entirely financed by the federal Government. The economic impact of the research centre will go a long way towards curing the aching sore of high unemployment in my region. I might add that this is proof positive of the significance our Government attaches to regional development.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

LOW PERCENTAGE OF NATIVE PRISONERS GRANTED PAROLE IN ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last week Ken Howland, a member of the National Parole Board, gave details of a study which showed that in Alberta between 1979 and 1985, full parole was granted to 43 per cent of non-native prisoners who applied but to only 20 per cent of natives because of a lack of parole supervisors in rural areas. This lack of services means that native prisoners have less than half the chance of being paroled of non-natives.

This kind of discrimination goes a long way toward explaining why there is a much higher percentage of natives than non-natives in the prison system. It helps to explain the feeling among many native peoples that they are not equal under the law. It should also explain to all of us why aboriginal peoples want Canada to recognize their right to self-government with adequate finances so that they can provide proper services to their own people.

This kind of built-in discrimination must end. It will end only when aboriginal people get the right and the resources to control their own lives.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR COMMITTEE'S TRADE DEVELOPMENT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to draw attention to the Second Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. This report concerns the trade development function of the Department of External Affairs. I support the recommendations of the committee and would particularly urge the Government to ensure that trade development receives the highest possible priority in the Department and that the programs offered by trade development be made better known to Members of Parliament.

We, the Members, are willing and able to promote trade, particularly in our ridings, with the right kind of information in a readable and practical form. I also urge Canadian business and private sector associations to do more to promote export trade. They should not rely entirely upon government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

THREAT TO SERVICE BETWEEN OTTAWA AND MONTREAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on September 25, 1986, CN Rail sent a letter to some of its employees saying:

> In the context of the rationalization of our rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being potential candidates for abandonment in the coming years.
> Any effort to attract new traffic on these lines is to be abandoned immediately.
> For the traffic already on these lines, we must consider either, and preferably, converting this traffic onto the intermodal system—

Two of the lines identified in this document are in the Alexandria subdivision, which is the only rail line linking Ottawa and Montreal. That would effectively end all train passenger and freight services between those two cities.

Other lines identified in the same document are the Alderdale and Beachburg subdivisions linking Ottawa to North Bay and Sudbury. That would effectively eliminate all train service between Sudbury and Montreal, including the cities of North Bay, Pembroke and Ottawa.

Someone should tell CN Rail to smarten up. This afternoon we are having a meeting of interested eastern Ontario municipalities in the Railway Committee Room and we intend to adopt resolutions there and bring this to the attention of the Government. Hopefully the Government will tell CN Rail to sharpen up and stop attacking eastern Ontario.

CHILD CARE

DELAY IN REACHING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, today there was a child care lobby outside the House of Commons. Part of the reason for that lobby was the Minister of National Health and Welfare's (Mr. Epp) declaration that there would not be a federal-provincial agreement on child care prior to the end of June.

This is an issue about which many Canadians, especially women with young children, are concerned. They believe the Government promised there would finally be some action. They are very disappointed that the Minister said there will be no agreement between now and the end of June. Many of those people wanted to present a petition to the House and I would like to read from it.

> WHEREAS there is a child care crisis in Canada; and
> WHEREAS tax credits will not create an accessible quality child care system; and
> WHEREAS an accessible child care system is an essential element for women's equality
> WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide the Provinces and Territories with immediate short-term funding to strengthen and expand non-profit child care while a new cost-sharing agreement is being negotiated; and further, to take this measure as a first step toward the public funding needed to create a system of quality, non-profit child care, accessible to all parents who wish to use it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN SHIPYARDS UPHELD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, there is a story in this morning's Globe and Mail date-lined London, England, about a series of interviews held with so-called British experts. The experts questioned the ability of Canadian shipyards to build nuclear submarines, the capacity of the Canadian Navy to recruit and train crews, and the expertise of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. to supervise safe installation and operation of reactors.

I think that is a bunch of nonsense.

I think Canadian shipyards are capable of building any vessel that can float.

Canadian mariners and submariners are among the best in the world.

The engineering capability of AECL and other members of the Canadian nuclear engineering fraternity is of a world standard.

Quite frankly I do not think we need a bunch of foreigners to tell us whether or not we can build submarines in Canada.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW SECURITY PROCEDURES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is in the process of introducing questionable and Draconian security practices in its larger operations. It appears that on the same day that in Calgary searches of inside workers leaving and coming to the job were being started, Canada Post was opening in Dryden, Ontario, a pick-up outlet for parcels where security of the mails, which after all is the main objective, left a great deal to be desired.

• (1415)

Canada Post is setting itself up for a confrontation with its unions. It has not undertaken any sensible or intelligent discussion with those unions in regard to security procedures that may be desirable to protect the mail. This sort of provocative action, contrasted with other measures which, in effect, diminish the security of mail, will stand as a stain on the corporation's record if not erased.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sort of at a loss as to whom in the Government of Canada one directs questions on general matters today.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The holidays haven't started yet.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I take no comfort from the sudden, belated arrival of the Minister of Justice.

I have a question on the White Paper on National Defence and do not know to whom I should address it. If I direct it to the Acting Minister of National Defence I am sure Canadians will sleep better knowing that he—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Here's the big shot now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It's just a matter of waiting, Mr. Speaker. I was going to say, in the Prime Minister's absence, that if the Acting Minister of National Defence delivers defence the way he is delivering the mail, the country is in real trouble.

I have a question for the Prime Minister. The debate about the White Paper on National Defence produced by the Minister of National Defence has provoked some extraordinary comments from Conservative cabinet Ministers and Conservative Members of Parliament.

However, the paper has produced some very intelligent criticism. The world's leading submarine experts have said that the Government's plan to spend billions and billions of dollars on a nuclear-powered submarine fleet is, to use the words of these experts, "incredible", "totally unreal", and "political posturing".

How can the Government justify spending up to $16 billion on a nuclear-powered submarine fleet plus unlimited maintenance costs when this project has already been labelled "unnecessary" and "rubbish"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the White Paper on National Defence was designed specifically, among other things, to invite discussion and debate among Canadians and others as a result of 16 years of very substantial neglect by our predecessors in regard to this vital aspect of our national well-being.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's a Green Paper, not a White Paper.

Mr. Mulroney: Everyone and his brother will have an opinion on various variables of this very important matter. We are satisfied that the effect of the White Paper will strengthen Canada's sovereignty and will make a major commitment to the well-being of our Armed Forces which can serve Canada in a strengthened and very important way both here and around the world.

WHITE PAPER—EFFICIENCY—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear powered submarines project proposed by the Minister of National Defence, to use the Prime Minister's words, is not a subject for discussion but rather a subject of ridicule on the international scene.

Does it not embarrass the Prime Minister that one of the great world experts on naval matters, Captain John Moore, qualified the White Paper as rubbish? Couldn't the Prime Minister find a better way to spend billions of dollars than spending it on a project that is of no use either to Canadian sovereignty or national defence?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not the slightest bit concerned about the opinions of all and sundry on the scope of the White Paper. It is a national document and its purpose is to make up for fifteen years of lost time and lost spending, as a result of which the previous Government left Canada in such a deplorable state in terms of our national defence. We have made proposals which will not necessarily meet with unamimous approval but the White Paper's objectives and what it intends to achieve are, in fact, to strengthen Canada's position as a military power, a military power that has certain responsibilities to its alliances and its partners, but especially to Canada's sovereignty and to the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Turner: It appears that some very large egos in Cabinet have gotten in the way of common sense in producing this paper.

VIEWS OF AMBASSADOR FOR DISARMAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The latest person to attack the White Paper on Defence produced by the Minister of National Defence is Canada's Ambassador for Disarmament, Douglas Roche, who was, as Hon. Members know, a distinguished Conservative Member of Parliament and is the Prime Minister's personal appointee to this post. Why has the Government introduced a defence policy which is inconsistent, in the opinion of Ambassador Roche, with Canada's arms reduction policy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already indicated that the White Paper, which is a major initiative on the behalf of Canada's defence, will provoke commentary, not all of it unanimous or favourable, from different sources, which is quite normal and natural in a democracy.

The fact is that we are trying to make up for 16 years of lost time by the predecessor Government where the Canadian Armed Forces fell into a shameful state of disrepair and neglect. This Government is making up in a profound commitment to NATO, NORAD and to our alliances to ensure that Canadian men and women who serve in the Armed Forces are given the instruments they need to do so at all times with courage and pride, which was what was lacking because of the neglect of the previous Government.

My right hon. friend says that the ambassador stands here and some expert stands there. The Liberals will be given an opportunity to tell the Canadian people where they stand on the question of national defence.

DEFENCE EQUIPMENT PURCHASING POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, with the speed at which this Government is working, I hope we do not hit a crisis.

The Minister of Supply and Services has strongly condemned the Minister of National Defence for not understanding what regional development is all about. She went on to state that she will be requesting approval from Cabinet for a new federal purchasing policy for defence equipment which will relate to regional economic development because she does not feel that the Government is doing enough.

Will the Government support the Minister of Supply and Services for such a policy? Or will there be another split in Cabinet with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Supply and Services holding the fort for regional development in this country? Where does the Prime Minister stand on that question?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any doubt where this Party stands; it stands behind the White Paper and what it stands for. We are not too sure about the Liberal Party, given statements made by the Hon. Jean-Jacques Blais, former Minister of Defence for the Liberal Government, in favour of the nuclear submarines about which the current Party seems to have some questions.

On the question of defence purchases, getting full value for the dollar is the fundamental goal of defence. There is no question that the Government recognizes that defence spending is an important economic tool, and there is also no question that regional development and those factors will be, as they were in the past, taken into account when these major purchases are made.

Mr. Hopkins: There is an obvious split in Cabinet given the words of the Minister of Supply and Services and of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs right now.

STATEMENT MADE BY MEMBER FOR SCARBOROUGH EAST

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks of the Minister of Supply and Services about the Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Member for Scarborough East has been quoted as saying: "I hope the PM would shove a dish rag in her mouth." The Hon. Member for Scarborough East is Chairman of the NATO Parliamentary Association. He is also Chairman of his Party's caucus committee on national defence.

Will the Prime Minister be asking the Hon. Member for Scarborough East to apologize to the Minister of Supply and Services for these unfortunate remarks or is he in agreement with them? Will he confirm by his refusal to answer that there is indeed a serious split in his Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course there is no split in Cabinet at all. The Minister of Supply and Services fully endorses the position of the Government in regard to the White Paper and has so conveyed that in answer to questions from the media.

In regard to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East, he has written to the Minister to withdraw his statement, which I think all Members of Parliament would agree was unfortunate.

FINANCE

TAX REFORM—DEFERRED TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions about some promises the Government has been making for the past seven months. First, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. According to the latest figures from Statistics Canada, Canadian companies owe $28 billion in deferred taxes. Could the Minister guarantee that these companies will not receive a retroactive reduction of these taxes as a result of his tax reform?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said from time to time here in the House that Hon. Members should wait for the White Paper on tax reform to be tabled. I think I said all the questions the Hon. Member has asked will be answered.

MINISTER'S IMPENDING ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I heard what the Minister had to say. I hope that he will at least begin to clarify his approach. He talked about his approach in the past before the day of his White Paper.

Since corporations in Canada, according to the most recent figures, owe some $28 billion in deferred taxes, and since any tax reform will not give retroactively a benefit to individual taxpayers, will the Minister guarantee the people of Canada that any general corporate tax reduction that he may announce on Thursday will not enable those companies to make any retroactive saving on the money that they now owe to the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that the Hon. Member has said from time to time about which we can agree. There need to be a number of changes made to the corporate tax system, which is one of the objectives of tax reform.

As I stated in my previous answer, I think it is important for him to be a little bit more patient and to wait until the White Paper comes down on Thursday. It will deal with a number of these questions in a very full way.

DELAY IN ANNOUNCING POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the other aspect of my general question about promises for June, of the Prime Minister since the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the House.

The people of Canada, in particular those who were looking forward to the implementation of the child care promise made by the Prime Minister at Christmas and by his Minister of National Health in the House, that a national policy would be announced before the end of June were deeply disappointed to hear from the Minister on the weekend that this will not be coming until the fall. Will the Prime Minister tell the people of Canada why this solemn commitment, that the Minister described as being urgent a couple of months ago, is now being put off once again?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Government, as the Hon. Member knows, has made a very strong commitment to child care. There is no question that it is an urgent situation. The Prime Minister has said as much, as has the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as have I.

This was first declared an urgent problem in 1971—

Mr. Broadbent: Right!

Mrs. McDougall: —by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. What is important to point out is that we have spent two years making progress on this issue. We are working toward coming up with the best quality system possible.

That is the commitment of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. And, believe me, under this Government the delay will not be 17 years.

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE—OPPORTUNITY FOR PRIME MINISTER TO ACT AS CONCILIATOR

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We all know that negotiations between Canada Post and the unions are not going smoothly, which means that we may be faced with a strike as of midnight tonight. Thousands of Canadians may be deprived of a service they consider essential, and thousands of small businesses may be faced with problems that may lead to lay-offs and even the outright loss of jobs.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he realizes that he now has a golden opportunity to demonstrate that his much vaunted reputation as a conciliator is based on fact, and that he could take the kind of action that is needed and take it now—the kind of action that most of his Ministers have refused to take so far—and intervene directly in the negotiations between Canada Post and the unions to forestall a strike that nobody wants.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member just said, negotiations are going on, and I think that any comment at this critical stage in the negotiations would be inappropriate and inopportune.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Government's policy seems to be to watch the negotiations from an arm's length position and to wait until we have a strike on our hands before it will act.

This is a golden opportunity for the Prime Minister to prove to the Canadian public that there is a basis for his reputation as the so-called "great conciliator". I urge him to get involved personally in an attempt to avoid a strike by the letter carriers. Let's not wait until there is a strike before action is taken.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. friend that the Prime Minister is an excellent conciliator. That is a matter about which there is no doubt.

At this point we are following the negotiation process. As provided by the Canada Labour Code, the Government, through the Department of Labour, has appointed a conciliator and a commissioner. A report has been tabled. The parties are now negotiating head to head, a very critical stage in the process, and we should not intervene at this point other than by way of encouraging the parties to come to an agreement.

REQUEST LEGISLATION BE INTRODUCED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that parents are very concerned with the delay in taking action on child care. The children are getting older as the weeks go by. I should like to ask—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: I do not think many parents consider this a laughing matter. Child care is urgently needed.

An Hon. Member: It is your statement that is the laughing matter.

An Hon. Member: Only Tories think it is a laughing matter.

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Government introduce the federal legislation outlining the national objectives for a national child care program, and will it do so before we recess for the summer?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, both at the First Ministers' Conference and at the Symposium on the Family sponsored by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, outlined the principles for a day care program supported by this Government, those principles being affordability, accessibility, flexibility, and quality.

Mr. Broadbent: And delay!

Mrs. McDougall: Those are principles about which we care a great deal. We have been working very hard on a child care program. While we considered the June 30 deadline an ambitious one, it was one that we had hoped to meet.

This Government's commitment to a child care program remains, and we will have a system in place that all Hon. Members will be able to support.

Ms. Mitchell: If those are the principles, why can't they be put into a Bill to be introduced in the House? In that way the federal objectives would be clear, thus facilitating the negotiations with the provinces.

PETITIONS SEEKING SHORT-TERM FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Today, thousands of petitions were presented to the Government and to the Prime Minister personally, requesting that the federal Government provide immediate short-term funding to strengthen and expand non-profit child care while the new cost-sharing agreement is being negotiated.

What is the Prime Minister's response to those petitioners?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the petitions that were presented have been organized for the Prime Minister and for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This Government is strongly committed to child care and is moving toward that goal.

Throwing money at the problem is not the answer. We must first have in place a policy and an agreement with the provinces. We must know what it is we are paying for. That is what Canadians want.

REQUEST FOR RESPONSE BEFORE JUNE 30

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister.

Several newspapers state today that the Government will not table its response on daycare before next Fall. We have been listening to the answers of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, and since the Prime Minister himself has made a commitment to make this a priority item, I would like the Prime Minister to tell me whether or not the answer will be tabled by June 30. It is a very important question and also a very simple one to answer. Are we or are we not going to have an answer on the matter of daycare before June 30?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already said that we will not be meeting the June 30 deadline. That is not to say that we are not making progress on the issue or that we will not have a commitment in place for the Prime Minister when he meets with the First Ministers in November.

INQUIRY HOW MUCH MONEY GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO ALLOT FOR QUALITY DAYCARE SERVICES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I would also like the Prime Minister to tell me how much money his Government is willing to spend on quality daycare services, considering that the Government is willing to spend several billion dollars to track submarines. Given those circumstances, is the Government ready to tell us how much money it intends to allot for quality daycare services?

[English]

We want to know where the Prime Minister stands on this issue.

Ms. Copps: Absolutely.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member stating a policy of the Liberal party against the provisions of the White Paper on National Defence? That would be most interesting. If it is the position of the Official Opposition, we would be very interested to know about it.

[English]

Ms. Copps: What is your position on day care?

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: With respect to daycare, we have inherited, as the Hon. Member knows, a very difficult situation. We are amending, developing and identifying with the provinces a new position which will be proudly acknowledged by all Hon. Members including the Hon. Member for Outremont when our great national project on behalf of women and children in Canada is submitted to the House.

INCOME TAX

DEFERRED CORPORATE TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance relates to the impact of tax reform on the $28 billion's worth of deferred taxes owed the Canadian Government by Canadian Corporations, since a 20 per cent reduction in the corporate tax rate could put $6 billion in the pockets of those corporations.

We know that where a Canadian would have taxes owing Revenue Canada, he would pay the full 100 per cent. Would that policy apply to corporate deferred taxes, or does the Minister intend to retroactively grant corporations a tax reduction worth $6 billion?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if the finance critic for the New Democratic Party were to collaborate with his Leader before Question Period, because that is the precisely the same question that his Leader just put to me.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my simple reason for asking the question is to determine whether deferred corporate taxes will be paid in full, or whether the Government intends to give a retroactive tax cut to corporations through a corporate tax cut which would apply to deferred taxes.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF TAX CUT ON CORPORATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, taking three companies alone, Canadian Pacific, Bell Canada, and Imperial Oil, they have among them $5.4 billion of deferred taxes sitting on their books.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: If the tax rate on corporations is cut by 20 per cent, those companies will realize a windfall of $1 billion by way of tax savings.

• (1440)

Is it the Minister's intention to give these three companies a windfall of $1 billion, or will he ensure that tax cuts are only available in the future and that corporations do not get a retroactive tax cut as well?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is exactly the same as the one I gave to his Leader a few minutes ago.

The White Paper will be brought in on Thursday evening. At that time this question and a number of other questions which the Hon. Member has been putting to me in relation to the taxation of corporations and individuals will be answered.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REPORTED DESIGN FLAWS IN UNITED STATES PERRY NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to whomever might be answering for him.

In light of the very serious allegations made last week in respect of design flaws in the Perry nuclear generating station in Ohio, just some 50 miles south of the Canadian border, will the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether, since the allegations were made public, we have had discussions with the United States specifically about the matter?

Will he also advise the House if the Canadian Government feels confident that we can rely on the word of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission to protect the welfare of Canadian citizens, in light of the allegation that they have covered up the situation in recent weeks?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to that question on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Clearly, Canadians are increasingly concerned with nuclear issues, and since the Chernobyl accident especially those concerns have been increasing.

Mr. Speaker, I have checked and it has been proven that officials from the Department of External Affairs have made known to the US Department our concerns in that respect, and we are expecting reports on that incident or allegations.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSTPONEMENT OF FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. His office confirmed this morning that the scheduled meeting of First Ministers to discuss Canada-U.S. free trade negotiations has been postponed several weeks into July.

It is a surprising development considering that negotiators on both sides have indicated that major political decisions must be taken by the end of the month on crucial matters such as investments, subsidies, services, and others.

Does the postponement for several weeks of these meetings indicate that the Government of Canada intends to go it alone and make these decisions on crucial issues without active involvement with or consultation by the provincial Premiers so that they will be able to determine and indicate what is their stand on these very vital matters in the negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not at all; quite the contrary.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is so forthcoming, perhaps he is prepared to tell us why it is the meetings were delayed so long and why decisions will be made in the negotiations involving these major issues without the involvement of the First Ministers of the provinces.

Is it an example of the new federalism about which the Prime Minister is talking, that matters involving crucial issues affecting the provinces will be undertaken without their consultation or involvement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is referring to the new federalism whereby the Auto Pact was negotiated without so much as a by your leave of the Government of Ontario under the previous Government, then of course we are doing things quite differently. There is a much greater degree of consultation, as my hon. friend knows.

He says: "Why has the meeting been delayed so long?" It has not been delayed so long. It has been rolled over for a couple of weeks, simply because the Americans have yet to respond in concrete terms to a number of very important issues put forward by Canada.

In the absence of any kind of specific response on these matters, it was felt prudent to await their tabling of answers in the coming days so that we can then seize the First Ministers with tangible realities as opposed to opinions which sometimes come from the newspapers and via the newspapers.

I think my hon. friend would agree that a postponement, even of modest duration, in the circumstances would be extremely prudent and helpful not only to the negotiations but to the consultative process involving the First Ministers.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COST OF ACQUIRING NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the proposed purchase of nuclear-powered submarines.

I should like the Prime Minister to explain to the people of Canada how his Government expects to pay under $500 million each for nuclear-powered submarines for which the Royal Navy today, in 1987, is paying $530 million?

In the White Paper it is proposed that the purchase of our submarines would be over a 10-year period. What would the price be over the 10-year period? What is the estimated price?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Defence has pointed out, the anticipated price is about 1.6 times the cost of conventional submarines. We stand by those figures. They are not wild guesses. They are not inaccurate. The person quoted in the newspaper happened to be a consultant employed by DND on conventional submarines.

These figures are quite accurate. I might point out to the Hon. Member that no decision has been taken to purchase British subs. The French are also in the game.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We on this side of the House are finding it increasingly difficult to get factual answers to a very serious question. Both Ministers are away again today.

GOVERNMENT'S PROJECTED COST

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence has stated that the total cost, including infrastructure, will be about $7.5 billion over the lifetime of the contract, which would be about 15 years. However, the editor of Jane's Fighting Ships, one of the great experts in the world, says that it will be at least $11 billion, and other experts put it as high as $16 billion.

When will the Government tell the people of Canada what is its cost estimate as of now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Minister of Defence has—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No, he hasn't.

Mr. Andre: The cost of nuclear submarines is approximately 1.6 times the cost of conventional submarines; support services, about 1.8. In exchange for that we get a submarine which is several times more effective in terms of allowing Canada to meet its defence commitments.

The facts are there. If the Hon. Member does not want to accept them, that is his problem, not the Government's.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILLING TO ASK NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION TO REVERSE DECISION ON MAISON D'AMITIÉ

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Public Works, but in his absence I will put it to the Prime Minister.

According to a report published last week, one out of eight women suffers psychological, economic, sexual or verbal abuse. At a time when the Government should be acting rather than enforcing, it is forcing a friendship centre in my constituency out of existence by hitting it with a more than $3,000 monthly rent increase. Can the Minister, or in his absence the Prime Minister answer the question?

Is he prepared to ask the National Capital Commission, owner of the building, to reverse that decision—enjoin the NCC to keep on subsidizing the Maison d'amitié, and as in the past, until we have a national policy on abused women, to keep on not only subsidizing but put forward a national policy along with its provincial counterparts in order to reach a solution on such a difficult problem?

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the case of the friendship residence is very well known at the Public Works Department. For ten years it has been rented for $1 a year with a goal to encourage that cause. Recently however the National Capital Commission took the view that it was not its responsibility to directly subsidize that kind of activity and it has urged people to get funding from more adequate sources. It is not a matter of cutting funds, but simply of restoring profitability to a property that had not been reviewed for the past 10 years.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Maison d'amitié pays all the costs of a usual tenant. It does not pay rent on the basis of the market value of the building, but the previous Government accepted for ten years to subsidize that undertaking because it meets a serious need in the Ottawa—Vanier constituency.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONVENE NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SUBJECT OF BATTERED WOMEN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): My supplementary question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister again. Will the Prime Minister take it upon himself to convene a national conference on the question of battered women? Will he ask his provincial counterparts when they meet in November to put that question on the agenda so that we can come to grips with this most difficult and serious problem?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the problem of battered women in Canada represents one of our most serious social and legal challenges. As a country we have not come to grips with what is not only a societal problem but a very serious malady which is affecting women, families, and children, the fibre of our society. The response collectively of this country, provincial, federal and so on, has been inadequate to a very grave, damaging problem.

I want to give my hon. friend the assurance that we are working with all levels of government and will commit all the resources required to ensure that women so affected by these violent crimes receive full justice in Canada—

Ms. Copps: Start with the National Capital Commission.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be working with my hon. friend and other Members of Parliament on this very sensitive matter to ensure that Canada deals effectively and firmly with the problem affecting battered women in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FILM INDUSTRY

DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM—OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns film distribution policy in Canada and his Government's objectives. Is it the Government's objective that film distribution in Canada be under the ownership and control of Canadians? Yes or no?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will have noticed we have indicated that we intend to bring in legislation which will help to correct a situation which has existed in this country for far too long where the domestic distribution system is, in fact, controlled from outside the country. We want to take steps to correct that.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. What answer has he given the American Senators who, on June 2 of this year, sent him a scathing letter denouncing film distribution policy in this country? What reply has he given? Wouldn't the best reply be to introduce that legislation, which I understand is ready, and proceed with debate so that we can actually have something happen to improve the situation concretely?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, again I would say to the Hon. Member that we have indicated the steps that we are prepared to take. Certainly the decision of the Government is to introduce legislation. I want to assure the Hon. Member, however, that the legislation will be introduced as quickly as possible.

Last week the Member was protesting when I brought in copyright legislation. That was long overdue as well. I want to be able to take these steps one by one. I hope the Hon. Member will not have the same negative reaction when I bring in the film legislation.

Ms. McDonald: That is untrue, Flora.

UNITED STATES EXPORT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last week at the Economic Summit we learned that there will no let up in the grain and agriculture trade wars at least for the next two years. We also know that the U.S. Congress recently passed legislation to put another billion into the Export Enhancement Program and broaden the number of countries on which the U.S. can use that program.

In the Prime Minister's meeting last Thursday morning with the President of the United States did he raise the matter with the United States about using its Export Enhancement Program against Canada's traditional grain customers, such as Russia and Saudi Arabia? Did he get any commitment from the President that the Americans would not use this Export Enhancement Program against Canada's traditional grain customers, a program which is having a devastating impact on the price of wheat and grain for Canadian farmers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I raised this matter with the President and with other leaders at the Venice Summit.

I know my hon. friend will have been pleased by the results in agriculture where we reaffirmed the strong commitment to agricultural reform agreed to at the OECD and Canada's proposal for a mid-term review to implement these commitments. I think the leadership taken by the Government of Canada at Tokyo, where agricultural problems were placed on the agenda of the summit for the first time, and now the thorough airing which resulted in some concrete steps, will be of a nature to encourage western and eastern farmers. I know my hon. friend will want to applaud that very sincerely.

With regard to the specific problem involved in American agriculture, yes, indeed, I brought that to the attention of the President, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury. This is part and parcel of the reforms that we hope the seven have agreed on to improve the conditions of agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma, a short supplementary, please.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister say whether or not he got a commitment from the United States administration that it will not use the increased Export Enhancement Program against Canada's traditional customers? Would he mention that because obviously there is not going to be a drawback by the European Community of those subsidies for at least the next two years? Surely we can get a commitment from our best trading customer, the United States, that it will not use that Export Enhancement Program against our traditional customers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have received no specific commitment in regard to action that the United States is contemplating in the next couple of weeks or months.

Clearly the communiqué and the results of the discussions are very encouraging in that they deal with the acceptance by the United States and Europe of the fact that the debilitating war of subsidies cannot go on. It is killing all the participants. It is damaging countries such as Canada, such as representatives of the Cairns Group who are free and fair traders in agriculture and who are being driven out of traditional markets by artificial subsidies granted to American and European farmers.

I made that case, very, very strongly and strenuously in Tokyo and in Venice. One of the results finally is an acknowledgement that this situation cannot go on and we have to sit down at the GATT and together deal with it to bring it to an end. In the process of so doing, we hope that Canada will recapture its traditional market shares without these debilitating subsidies being carried on the backs of the Canadian taxpayers.

AGRICULTURAL POLICY—INTRODUCTION OF NEW PROGRAMS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. After the Ottawa round of the Cairns Group, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board announced that Canada would participate with the Cairns Group to stop subsidizing agriculture production and begin subsidizing incomes, something which the Prime Minister translated fairly closely into supporting farmers rather than farming, at the Venice Summit.

Since Canada's Minister of Agriculture has always advocated a market oriented approach to subsidization, with payments being based on production, what kinds of programs does the Government intend to put in place in order to meet this new policy commitment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the programs that the Government will introduce on behalf of agriculture—we have introduced many as my hon. friend knows—will be adapted to the circumstances and designed to help Canadian farmers who work so hard, make so many sacrifices and who are now being unfairly penalized. We will be working with farmers. I will be out meeting with farmers and farm groups again and with provincial Governments, and the policies, we hope, will be adapted to the well-being of Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, a short supplementary.

REVIEW OF DOMESTIC PROGRAMS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, given the international commitment, can the Prime Minister tell this House what the Government has done with regard to studying the existing domestic programs in Canada which have been, as he knows, following the theory that the market and production are things that should determine the level of subsidization. Does he have a study under way which will determine which programs, if any, meet the Cairns criteria—which of our own programs?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, you can rest assured—

An Hon. Member: Hold on.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was so taken with the opening comments of the Minister that I too would like to hear the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Mr. Merrithew: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and Mr. Prime Minister.

The whole matter of subsidies to our own farm groups and farmers around the world is one of great concern to the Minister. We have undertaken a complete review of all the programs for subsidies. They are presently being reviewed again. Undoubtedly there has been no firm decision on any programs which would need to be cut in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that this will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

CHILD CARE

DEADLINE FOR GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the status of women. Earlier in Question Period she said the Government would not meet the June 30 deadline for making a response to the report of the House of Commons committee on child care. The new rules of the House indicate that such a response must be made within 150 days, an extension of the 120 days in the previous rules.

Will the Government make a commitment right now to meet that deadline of 150 days as of July 30, and if not, why not?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has been working too hard, or I have, or someone has. I understood that he mentioned in the question June 30. The response is due in July, as I understand it. If the Hon. Member would like, we could reconvene in July.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House indicate that when the committee requests that there be a comprehensive response by the Government, it is due within 150 days of tabling the report. The original rules indicated that it was due within 120 days and that is why we were speaking of a June 30 response. We have added another 30 days to the deadline according to the interim rules which we have just made permanent, so I would like the Minister to tell us whether or not the Government will meet the new deadline and if not, why not.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there shall be a response within the time frame and there shall be in Canada a comprehensive child care program.

WAYS AND MEANS

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would ask with regard to Ways and Means Motion No. 16 that an Order of the Day be designated.

REFUSAL TO ACCEPT PETITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order with regard to a petition I tried to present today. If I may, I would like to indicate to the Chair the contents of the petition so the Chair will be able to understand of what I am speaking.

The petition is that, whereas there is a child care crisis in Canada and whereas tax credits will not create an accessible quality child care health system and whereas an accessible child care system is an essential element for women's equality, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to provide the provinces and territories with the immediate short-term funding to strengthen and expand non-profit child care while a new cost-shared agreement is being negotiated, and further, to take this measure as a first step toward the public funding needed to create a system of quality non-profit child care accessible to all parents who wish to use it.

According to the rules of the House of Commons, I tried to present that petition to the Clerk of Petitions and I was refused permission to do so on the grounds of Beauchesne's Citation No. 685(3) which reads as follows:

> The House will refuse to receive any petition that directly asks for a grant of money out of the public revenues unless such grant has first been recommended by the Crown. But the House does not reject petitions which ask simply for legislation or for "such measures as the House may think expedient to take" with respect to public works.

I respect the Citation in Beauchesne's cited by the Clerk of Petitions in refusing my petition. However, I believe that in the history of petitions presented to the Crown there has been an effort by petitioners to make it clear that they wish the Government to act. I believe it to be historically correct that many petitions received by the Crown and later by Parliament have in fact required the expenditure of public funds. I believe it goes against the principle of the public petitioning Parliament to be told that petitioners cannot do so when there is a requirement for an expenditure of funds.

I would like the Chair to review the Citation, to look at the precedents and the present necessity and to recognize that people who sign petitions of their own volition and who ask Parliament or the Government to act are making a request of Parliament. They should have a right just like any other group of citizens to have their petitions heard. I hope you would so rule, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have heard my hon. friend's comments and I have no difficulty with them, and in fact would encourage you to review my friend's case. I am looking at the citation my colleague cited and I would hope that in 1987, we would not bear too heavily on a precedent listed in Beauchesne's as being set in 1869.

As my hon. friend has said, Members of Parliament are often presented with petitions which are general in nature. I would suggest that the citation is probably specific in nature. Perhaps you might take a look at the petition and, if it is general in nature as are petitions received by all Members from time to time, perhaps you could bring down a ruling which would be of assistance to the Clerk of Petitions when considering future petitions.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further Hon. Members rising on this point of order?

I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). The matter is one of interest and is perhaps one of importance. I am intrigued because the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) has risen in support of the position the Hon. Member for Churchill is urging on the Chair, which is specifically that a ruling in Beauchesne's should be considered very carefully as to whether it is applicable when petitions are presented to the House which may involve the expenditure of public money but which are general enough in nature that they do not specifically refer to a particular grant to a particular person, organization or group. I think that is the distinction the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has fastened onto with appropriate cogency.

The Chair will consider the matter and will report back to the House as soon as possible. I will look very carefully at the ruling, keeping in mind what the Parliamentary Secretary has pointed out about its date, and keeping in mind what the Hon. Member for Churchill has said about the right of Canadians to present petitions to this place, a right which undoubtedly is important and should be interpreted as broadly as possible. I thank Hon. Members.

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-18

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council):

> That, further to the notice given on Thursday, June 11, 1987, by the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117, in relation to Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, four further hours be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and four hours to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill; and
> That fifteen minutes before the end of the four hours allotted to the report stage consideration and to the third reading stage consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, government propaganda would have us believe that because of Bill C-18, we in Canada will in time have an efficient and low-cost transportation service. It would have us believe that it will provide a balance between the interests of the shipper on the one hand and the transportation carrier on the other. Government propaganda would have us believe that Bill C-18 will give us a more flexible and competitive transportation environment. However, when I listened to the Government's very carefully prepared message indicating that Bill C-18 will achieve an efficient, low-cost transportation system, I was aware that to a significant extent this thesis is based upon the results of deregulation in the country to the south of us, our neighbour, the United States of America.

It has been said by some that the Staggers Act of 1980, for example, is working well in the United States. It is working well, it is claimed, with respect to the relatively low increases in railway freight rates. It is working well, its advocates claim, with respect to increased rail sensitivity to shippers' needs. It is working well, its advocates say, because there are significant gains in railroad economic efficiency. All of these conclusions are supported by the Economics and Finance Department of the Association of American Railroads.

If the propaganda ended there I think we could promptly support C-18 and we would see no reason to oppose a time allocation measure. However, many Members of this House know there is another side to this story of deregulation, and that other side has at least three facets. There are probably many more but since my time is limited I mention only three: safety; impact on regional development; and the effect upon jobs in the transportation industry.

Many Members have said there is nothing to be concerned about with respect to safety. They have asked us to take their assurances on that. The Standing Committee on Transport was given no mandate in its terms of reference to deal with safety in a deregulated environment. Indeed, witnesses repeatedly expressed their amazement that the committee was attempting to comment on deregulation in the total absence of any analysis of safety standards. No less a reputable organization than the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association said:

> Even in Freedom to Move itself, safety is mentioned but in passing, with unsupported statements to the effect that economic regulatory reform will not be permitted to be detrimental to safety standards.

CALPA also said:

> Safety concerns had so grown by last year that the U.S. Secretary of Transportation ordered a "white gloves" safety audit which resulted in 16 of 43 airlines, both old and new, being disciplined. Since that time, in-depth inspections have resulted in further action, the most notable being the record $1.5 million fine recently levied against American Airlines for numerous safety deficiencies.

When Hon. Members tell us that we should not worry about safety, that we have looked into it sufficiently, that we should accept their assurances, I say no, we cannot. There are concerns about safety and we need more evidence before this House gives its approval to C-18.

My second point is with respect to regional development. There is growing concern in this country that the Conservative Government is abandoning its role in regional economic development. I do not have the time now to cite all the evidence to support that concern, but C-18 as amended offers no more than a weak and feeble nod in the direction of concern for regional development.

I am aware that the original Bill was amended in committee. I am aware that Clause 3(1)(d) now says that transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development and commercial viability of transportation links is balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential economic strengths of each region may be realized. I say that is weak and ineffectual.

I compare that to the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). Rather than saying commercial viability must be balanced with regional development, the Hon. Member argued that where a service or facility is required for the achievement of national or regional social and economic development objectives, these objectives should take precedence over the objective of commercial viability whenever the two are in conflict.

Thus on the one hand in the amendment to the Bill which was accepted we have no more than a tacit recognition that somehow regional development may be important. Through this Bill we are opening the door to a more efficient and competitive industry but we are paying a price with respect to nation building. We all know we cannot build a nation if we simply write off the regions of this country. The federal and provincial Governments must be able to take combined action in order to maintain and build transportation facilities if it is in the public interest to do so.

For many years the Governments of the maritime provinces have advocated that the National Transportation Act should endorse the following regional development principles: First, transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development; and second, where there is a conflict between regional economic development objectives and commercial viability, regional economic development must take precedence. Without a commitment to that second principle the development objectives of the first bear no weight and are of no significance whatsoever.

My third point has to do with jobs. Again we have to look at deregulation in the U.S. Some 30 labour organizations in Canada appeared before the committee and each expressed fear that the deregulation proposals would result in significant job loss, displacement or wage reduction. There is very little hard evidence available in Canada about the effects of deregulation. We just do not know what they will be. However, we do have the American experience.

It is indicated that in the U.S. some 40,000 workers in the airline industry have lost their jobs since 1980. Over the same time 150,000 jobs were lost in the railway industry. The trucking sector is somewhat more difficult to assess, but it is estimated that employment was reduced by as much as one-third. Somewhere between 250,000 and 300,000 union members were put out of work in that sector and they have not been replaced.

Direct job loss is one aspect of deregulation, but only one. Those who were able to retain their jobs have been under tremendous and persistent pressure to make concessions, to reduce their wages, to give up their hard won benefits, and to relax the standards of working conditions. As companies seek to cut costs in order to compete with one another the first people they turn to are their employees. The reduced cost to shippers being held out as a carrot by the proponents of deregulation is being paid for in very large part by the workers in the transportation industry.

There is no doubt that a new regulatory regime will create job dislocation and it is therefore imperative that this legislation, Bill C-18, contain some measures to deal with that. Because it does not, I say that this time allocation motion is not one that we on this side of the House and in this Party can accept.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 3.19 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 117 have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

The question is the following one. Mr. Hnatyshyn (for Mr. Mazankowski) moved:

That, further to the notice given on Thursday, June 11, 1987, by the Deputy Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117, in relation to Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, four further hours be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and four hours to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the end of the four hours allotted to the report stage consideration and to the third reading stage consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) which was agreed to on the following division:

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are two motions standing on the Order Paper and Notices in amendment to Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada. One stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the other in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). They will be grouped together for debate but voted on separately.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like some clarification from the Chair with respect to this issue. The Chair has just announced that the two amendments will be dealt with together. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): They will be grouped together for debate but voted on separately.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I respectfully suggest that these are two separate issues. Clause 7 and the amendment which I have proposed to it deal with the possibility of Bell Canada and its affiliates moving into the communication, cable and broadcast field, whereas Clause 12 deals with information required by the CRTC with respect to Bell Canada and its affiliates.

I respectfully suggest to the Chair that these motions are not related and that they should be debated separately.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. As the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has just said, my motion is quite different from hers. I think it would be appropriate that they be kept quite separate since they deal with different aspects of the legislation and different clauses.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, in an attempt to help you and enable the House to get on with its work, could we not begin the debate on Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)? While you take the matter under advisement, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member might begin her remarks and perhaps later you might let us know what your ruling is in this case.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has considered the interventions of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It is true that the motions apply to different clauses of the Bill. However, as both relate to a change in the definition of a person vis-à-vis an affiliate, they are sufficiently related that they can be debated concurrently. There will, however, be separate votes.

Mrs. Finestone: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. May I ask how you are planning to deal with the time allocation with respect to the debate on each of the motions?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is no time allocation. It will depend upon the number of Members who will participate in the debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-13, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. Neither the Company nor any affiliate of the Company shall directly or"

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-13, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 36 to 39 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"in respect of any affiliate in the same manner and to the same extent as if the affiliate were the Company."

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, at the outset I wish to point out that I regret the decision of the Chair in respect of these two motions. I do not think the decision allows for the kind of debate that these motions deserve. I sincerely regret the decision of the Chair. Nonetheless, I shall comply with it.

Clause 7 of Bill C-13 would prohibit Bell Canada or any company controlled by it from operating a broadcasting undertaking.

This is a continuation of the prohibition contained in the 1968 Bell Canada Special Act. Parliament has consistently opposed Bell Canada entering the broadcasting field. Due to the recent reorganization of Bell Canada, it is now in a position to circumvent the prohibition contained in Clause 7.

Consider the following example: the new holding company, Bell Canada Enterprises, could incorporate a subsidiary such as Bell Canada TV and, for very little cost, connect the transmission facilities of that subsidiary, through its affiliate, Bell Canada, at a very reasonable rate, to virtually every home in Canada. Such a transaction would not run afoul of Clause 7 as it now reads.

The problem we are looking at here, Madam Speaker, is the endeavour by Bell Canada Enterprises to become involved in cable and broadcasting. The Canadian Cable and Television Association, the CCTA, has voiced its concern about this gap in Clause 7 of the Bill, a gap which could have a very important and negative impact on its members.

The broadcasting industry is fragmented at the base already. It has the fragmentation of the advertising dollar and a fragmentation of audience. The last thing it needs is further competition.

We are in the midst of examining and evaluating the impact of a changed Broadcasting Act on our society, and it would be most ill-advised to bring a new player into the game at this juncture. I know that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) has been spoken to. She has made statements supporting the cable industry, statements contrary to the view of Bell Canada. However, she has not translated those views into action.

The Minister has obviously not been listening to the cable companies, and has perhaps had her arm twisted or her ear bent by Bell Canada.

It is significant that the CRTC, in its April, 1983 report to Cabinet on the proposed reorganization of Bell Canada, concluded that the Bell Canada group should continue to be prohibited by law from holding broadcasting licences.

There was an extensive review, an exhaustive review, with public hearings and a great deal of public discussion, all indicating a concern over the degree of concentration of control and conflict of interest that could arise in the Canadian broadcasting industry if affiliates of Bell Canada Enterprises were allowed to hold broadcasting licences.

The commission concluded that the public interest would best be served by the separate, and to some extent, competitive evolution of the cable and telephone industries as separate entities. The conclusions of the CRTC are as valid today as they were then.

I should like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members what the commission had to say. I quote from the 1983 report of the CRTC, as follows:

> The Commission is of the view that Bell and the other members of the Bell group should continue to be subject to the limitation prohibiting the holding of broadcasting licences, which under the Broadcasting Act includes licences to operate cable television systems.
> At this stage of rapid evolution in the communications industry, the Commission would be concerned with the degree of concentration that could arise in the industry if the Bell group were allowed to enter the broadcasting field.

The commission went on to point out that the book value of the telecommunications assets of Bell Canada at that point was in excess of $13 billion, whereas the book value of the assets held by the private television, radio and cable industry was around $1.2 billion. So we are looking at a giant ready to gobble up an industry.

It would be most unhealthy for Canadians if such acquisitions by Bell could take place. I urge the Minister to consider the proposed amendments favourably. I know that she has made certain observations in this regard. I should like to underscore that the CRTC has assessed the situation on a number of occasions and has consistently affirmed and reaffirmed its resolve that Bell Canada and other members of the Bell group of companies be prohibited from applying for or holding broadcast licences.

I draw the attention of Hon. Members to the fact that 60.7 per cent of all telephone lines in Canada are in the hands of Bell Canada. In other words, of the 11.2 million telephone lines in Canada, including business and private, 6.8 million are in the hands of Bell Canada.

Given the strength of Bell Canada in the telephone field, it should concentrate its efforts on that area. It should not concern itself with competing in the broadcasting field, where we have other interests and other concerns. It would be in the best interests of Canada to prohibit, by statute, the holding of broadcasting licences by Bell Canada, including licences to operate a cable television system.

My amendment would restore Clause 7 of the Bill to the way in which it read when Bill C-19 was introduced in this House in December of 1984 by the previous Minister.

Spokespersons for Bell Canada have made the argument that there are adequate safeguards already in place. I suggest to you that the CRTC is not in agreement.

Mr. John Lawrence, the Vice-Chairman of the CRTC, at page 5 of his remarks to our legislative committee, presented on April 28 last, stated:

> With respect to the removal of the word "affiliate" from Clause 7 the CRTC is already on record, both in terms of the Bell Canada Reorganization Report,

1983, and in submissions made to this legislative committee reviewing Bill C-19—

And now again in the review of Bill C-13.

—that Bell Canada and all the other companies within the Bell family of companies should continue to be subject to the limitation prohibiting the holding of broadcasting licences.

Because you have limited the time, Madam Speaker—and I think in a most repressive way—I should like to bring to your attention the fact that I cannot now read into the record the words of the Minister of Communications. However, she did make a very strong statement on May 5, 1987, to the Canadian Cable Television Association acknowledging that there was a serious concern and that she intended to deal with the issue of mixing television, cable and broadcasting with the telecommunications companies through the issuance of a directive.

I do not think the issuance of a directive is the answer. The Minister pointed out that she was very proud of what cable companies do, yet she noted their monopoly in the area. She also said that the cable companies were protected from intrusion into their market by Bell Canada and other common carriers, which otherwise would be presumably only too eager to expand their range of services.

If the Minister acknowledges that the telephone companies would only be too happy to intrude into this field, I do not understand why she has not acted and used her directive to indicate that she was serious in her intent.

Cable television undertakings should be the privileged users of broadcasting in this area; it is not the place for telephone companies. The issue has been clearly defined and articulated by cable people, and it was acknowledged by the Minister. She supported the observation that it was not the place for telephone companies.

I wish the Minister, who spoke so loudly to the cable people, would put into action what she says she meant, would retain Clause 7 of the original Bill C-19, and would accept my amendment. I think it would be in the best interests of all not to use the directive power under Section 22. It is obvious that the Minister has not used it yet and has had plenty of time to do so. It is very important that the matter be addressed and that the amendment be adopted.

In the end we are left very uncertain about the predicament of not knowing how, if at all, the Minister will exercise her discretionary powers, and they are only discretionary. If the Minister truly believes that BCE should not be involved in the cable business, and if she recognizes its strength in general to go into that business unless so prevented, I suggest that she should take the opportunity to set her intentions in legislative form and accept my amendment.

I was about to deal with Clause 12, but since you are indicating, Madam Speaker, that I have no time left I cannot do so.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I should like to deal with both Clause 7 and Clause 12. The difficulty with the piece of legislation is that in effect the Government is writing policy without having any long-term goals. We are left rather perplexed with technological change and the possibility of fibre optics coming in. The Government itself is not sure what roles should be played by the telephone companies and by the cable companies. It says that it wants to keep telephone companies out of broadcasting, yet it does not seem to favour an amendment to the legislation which would make very clear that they could not be involved.

The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has been holding hearings on broadcasting questions. We have had representations made to us that because of technological change and fibre optics technology—running new fibre wires into houses—telephone companies might be the appropriate carriers for broadcasting undertakings. We are very perplexed now about what is the right way to turn. It is unfortunate that we must make decisions on these immediate matters without some long-term policy to guide the decisions.

The purpose of my amendment to Clause 12 would be to have the clause, as amended, read as follows:

The provisions of the National Transportation Act and the Railway Act that provide for the obtaining of information by the Commission for the purposes of carrying out its powers, duties and functions in relation to the Company apply for those purposes to and in respect of any affiliate in the same manner and to the same extent as if the affiliate were the Company.

With this reorganization we want to ensure that there is not an escape clause so that the affiliates will be able to do what the parent company was unable to do or what would have been prohibited under the old Bell Canada Act. It would be simply to ensure that there would be no organizational way around it.

I note that a number of organizations made similar recommendations. For example, the Public Service Advocacy Centre recommended that a simple amendment to the Bill was required to ensure that Bell Canada could be effectively regulated in the interests of its subscribers. It wants Clause 12 to be amended to encompass the obtaining of information relevant to the mandate of CRTC from all Bell Canada affiliates, not just its parent.

It is absolutely essential for the CRTC to have full financial information. Information does not get out to the public at large. It is essential that the CRTC be able to get the information on the affiliates as well, so that rates can be regulated in a manner which is fair to consumers. That is the purpose of the amendment to the clause.

The proposal of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) deals with a different matter. It seeks to amend Clause 7 to make it very clear that telephone and broadcasting activities are kept strictly separate. If this amendment does not go through, the difficulty will be that the CRTC could be pressed very hard by telephone company affiliates to permit them to become involved in broadcasting undertakings. It is true that such a matter could be regulated under the Broadcasting Act. However, without an actual statement to the contrary, the CRTC could be under a lot of pressure. A company could say: "If Parliament has not said that we cannot do it, you do not have a good reason for saying 'no' when an application is made".

In committee I asked representatives of the CRTC what they would do if they received an application. Mr. Lawrence, speaking for the commission, said the following:

> The commission holds public hearings. In the course of those public hearings, we hear arguments that often determine an issue . . . In this case, we would be looking for what interveners would tell us about how we should conduct ourselves in this situation. A situation was posed to me and I said I thought Bell might say, on public policy grounds, that the commission should not refuse a licence or refuse allowing BCE or an affiliate into that cable market.

Clearly the commission is anticipating that it might get this kind of proposal and that it would be very hard to say "no". We need some direction in the legislation.

The commission would be left having to decide under a great deal of pressure from an extremely powerful corporation saying that Parliament had not said that the commission could not do it and that it was a change in legislation from the old Bell Canada Act to the new one which clearly allowed them the opportunity to enter that market.

I think the Government is talking out of both sides of its mouth on the issue. We are not entirely clear what it wants. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture is concerned about seeing that the lines of division are kept clear, yet we are aware that with technological change there may be new elements in the situation which will have to be taken care of. We need some long-term telecommunications policy to address the issues.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, two amendments have been put before the House at report stage of Bill C-13. The first one, in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), deals with the question of whether or not those who control the means of delivering a message, that is telephone companies, should also have the liberty of controlling the message itself. That is the gist of her amendment.

It has been a long-standing principle of communications policy in Canada that these two areas should not be mixed. Consistent with this policy, Clause 7 of Bill C-13, prohibits Bell Canada, the telephone company, and any person controlled by Bell Canada company from holding a broadcasting licence. I have also taken steps—this was indicated to the committee when I met with it on May 1 and subsequently reaffirmed, as stated by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Finestone), in a speech that I gave to the cable associations of Canada—to request the Governor in Council to issue a directive under Section 22 of the Broadcasting Act that will clarify the role of telephone companies and their involvement in broadcasting. That directive allows the flexibility that is needed in a situation like this. It allows the situation to change as we go into the further development of telecommunications technology, it allows for a response that is flexible to the exigencies of the time. It also gives, I may say, the CRTC the policy guidance that it requires and that it has requested. When I spoke to the committee and later to the cable associations of Canada the response was, I think, quite favourable in following this path. I believe that this message of addressing the issue of the broadcasting prohibition meets the concerns that have been raised.

I would remind you, Madam Speaker, that the CRTC has broad powers under the Broadcasting Act, and obviously with regard to any directive, to evaluate applications for broadcasting licences. The commission must be satisfied that the application is in the public interest before granting a licence. I expect that any application for a broadcasting licence from Bell Canada Enterprises or any of its subsidiaries would be fully addressed by the commission, and that any potential problems or conflicts could be dealt with through the licencing procedure. For that reason the Government cannot support the amendment as proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

With regard to the second amendment that has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), I would say that the CRTC already has very broad powers under the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act to require that information be provided for regulatory purposes.

Moreover, the CRTC is granted the powers of a superior court in respect to the appearance of witnesses, the production of documents and such other matters as are necessary in the conduct of its regulatory business. These are very extensive powers, Madam Speaker. Clause 12 as currently drafted reinforces these powers as they apply to the persons that control the company, Bell Canada Enterprises. In other words, the Bill as currently drafted permits the CRTC to request information from any BCE affiliate, so long as the information is relevant to the regulation of Bell Canada. Moreover, the Bill provides that the CRTC may determine what information is relevant and request it in any form.

The proposed amendment would radically extend the commission's powers beyond those provided in Clause 12 to include all the unregulated activities of BCE subsidiaries, many of which are completely unrelated to the activities of Bell Canada. This could open the way to what you might call fishing trips, requests for information that are irrelevant to the regulation of the telephone monopoly. This means that many of the internationally competitive activities of BCE subsidiaries would be exposed to regulatory scrutiny. Only Canada's competitiveness in international markets would benefit from this exposure of BCE affairs in this way.

The logic of the Bill is precisely to leave the competitive affiliates of BCE unregulated, while ensuring the CRTC has the power to regulate the telephone monopoly. The powers in Section 12 maintain this balance and ensure that the commission can gain all the information it needs to regulate the monopoly.

When this Bill was in committee, the CRTC itself indicated that Clause 12 as drafted was sufficient to the commission's needs. For these reasons the Government does not support the proposed amendment. Clause 12, as currently drafted, together with the other powers available to the commission, is more than adequate to permit the CRTC to regulate Bell Canada effectively and at the same time protect the interests of its subscribers.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am taking part in the report stage debate because the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who spoke before me has asked me to explain why the Liberal Party will not support Motion No. 2 of our colleague from Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), whose amendment reads as follows:

"in respect of any affiliate in the same manner and to the same extent as if the affiliate were the Company."

Indeed, this amendment would give the Company powers which, in our view, are now amply covered by the CRTC.

[English]

I would like to start by saying that we will support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) to Clause 7 because it gives us—I think I mentioned it at second reading—some assurance that Bell Canada will not become involved in the cable or broadcasting industry. That is the purpose of the amendment, and I would like to support that.

Speaking to Clause 12, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has proposed an amendment which I understand was suggested to the legislative committee by CN-CP Telecommunications. CN-CP observed that Clause 12 would give the CRTC power to compel production of information in the possession of the parent company, Bell Canada, but not information in the possession of Bell Canada's affiliates, for example, Northern Telecom. CN-CP recommended that Section 12 be amended to include affiliates of Bell Canada. The Member for Broadview—Greenwood now proposes an amendment of similar effect. I want to explain why we will not support the motion.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal was concerned about whether Clause 12 gave the CRTC sufficient powers to demand information from Bell Canada's affiliates. She wanted to ensure that the CRTC was given and is given sufficient regulatory powers to gather information from all the members of the group to ensure that the CRTC had the power to detect intercorporate subsidies, known as cross-subsidization among the members of the Bell group. In other words, the Member for Mount Royal was concerned about the possibility of the Bell group assigning to Bell Canada some unprofitable and high risk activity so that any losses incurred by the company would be subsidized by charging higher rates to Bell Canada's telephone subscribers.

The Member for Mount Royal was concerned, as is the Hon. Member from Broadview—Greenwood, that Bell Canada would be allowed to cross-subsidize its competitive businesses from revenues derived from its monopoly in the telephone business. For example, the Member for Mount Royal wanted to know from the CRTC if it was in a legal position to examine the recent acquisition by Bell Canada of BCSI, Bell Communications Systems Incorporated. She wanted to find out if Bell Canada paid a fair price to the members of the Bell group and if Bell Canada had to cover any of Bell Communications Systems Incorporated financial losses. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, was concerned about ensuring that the CRTC had the legal right to obtain information about the $1.5 billion contract between Bell Canada International Incorporated of Ottawa and the Government of Saudi Arabia to determine whether telephone subscribers in Canada were or could be subsidizing Bell's work abroad. Therefore, when the CRTC appeared before the legislative committee, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal asked about the CN-CP proposed amendment to Clause 12 of the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal put to the witnesses the amendment the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has put to the House today and asked the representatives of the CRTC if in their opinion they thought it was necessary. The Vice-Commissioner of CRTC Telecommunications, Mr. John Lawrence, and legal counsel for the CRTC both told the committee in unequivocal terms that not only was the amendment my colleague is proposing today not necessary but they went so far as to say that due to a recent decision of the Federal Court of Appeal, such an amendment could restrict rather than expand the right of the CRTC to gather information.

I requested and received transcripts of those two meetings. Pages 219 and 220 of the transcript of the April 28 committee meeting read as follows, beginning with the Hon. Member for Mount Royal speaking:

—I wonder if the amendment that would be useful for you would be an amendment in clause 12 that would state something to the effect that: . . . "and to and in respect of any affiliate of the company engaged in a telecommunications activity in the same manner and to the same extent as if the person or affiliate were the company". Is this what you require in this particular amendment in Clause 12? What would be required to ensure that you first of all get the required access to the necessary information organized in a way that is useful?

MR. J. LAWRENCE: Under the present provisions of the National Transportation Act regarding Bell Canada as interpreted in the Interprovincial Pipe Line case in the Federal Court of Appeal, it was held that a parent company can be required to disclose information from all of its subsidiaries in a form required by the regulator. By virtue of this interpretation of the provision of the National Transportation Act, we think the present provision in clause 12, which in effect says that BCE will now be treated the same as Bell Canada would under those provisions, is going to be adequate without adding the word "affiliates" into the clause.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal then went on to ask another question which was answered as follows:

MR. ALLAN ROSENZVEIG (LEGAL COUNSEL, CANADIAN RADIO TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION): It was appealed as far as the Federal Court of Appeal. The commission considers this is good law; we are not worried about it; we are confident about it. The same question arose in the Senate committee discussion on consideration of this bill and we said we were satisfied with it at that time.

Further, dealing with the Saudi Arabia question of whether or not offshore contracts would be subsidized by domestic telephone users, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal asked the following question:

Saudi Arabia—we went there. I want to know how much we cost the Canadian telephone user. Can you get the information organized in the way you want?

MR. ROSENZVEIG: We feel we could with clause 12. If it was enacted it would then allow us to get information through BCE from anyone BCE controls, namely, Bell's affiliates. If we add the word "affiliate" we think it might wash backward and disturb the principles expressed by the Federal Court of Appeal in the Interprovincial Pipe Line case to the effect that a regulator can get the information it requires to regulate the utility through anyone controlled by the utility. Clause 12 would put us in the same position vis-à-vis BCE and anyone it controls.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal went on to say:

I see. You feel if we leave the provision as it is, it would capture the concerns we might have.

MR. J. LAWRENCE: That is right. As presently interpreted by the court—and that is a court ruling of the Federal Court of Appeal. It is a very high court.

I wanted to put that on the record to ensure that Hon. Members understand that evidently the CRTC is happy with Clause 12 as it now stands and advises against any amendment. The CRTC has considerable experience in regulating Bell Canada. If the CRTC is happy with that clause, I for one am prepared to accept it and to pass judgment on it by voting against the amendment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Horner)—Narcotics—Increase in drug abuse—Government position; the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Situation of francophones—Inquiry whether Solicitor General has action plan. Reduction in francophone manpower; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Parole—British Columbia experiment using electronic monitoring ankle bracelets.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-13, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motions No. 1 (Mrs. Finestone, p. 7100) and No. 2 (Mrs. McDonald, p. 7100).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion No. 1 (Mrs. Finestone) negatived.

Motion No. 2 (Ms. McDonald) negatived.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find that there is unanimous consent to proceed with third reading at this time, and at this time Hon. Members who wish to make comments on third reading stage may do so.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, there certainly is agreement that we proceed, provided that there is an understanding that the time be shared equitably among all three Parties between now and 5 p.m.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I think we could give that undertaking on behalf of the Government. We would hope to clear third reading stage by five o'clock and that would mean speeches of 10 minutes per Party. There has been an understanding among the Parties that we would be successful in achieving third reading today. I would hope that we could do that, and we are certainly agreeable with the NDP to split the time equally.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, although I appreciate the communication here, I think it could be improved if we could take just a few minutes behind the curtains to talk about the proposal which, as I understand, is to pass this Bill before 5 p.m. by sharing the time between 4.30 and 5 p.m. equally among all Parties. My understanding is that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has some hesitation and I would like to discuss it with her if I could.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I think we would be in agreement with that. The motion could be moved for third reading and the debate could commence. The Minister could initiate the debate and we will have the meetings which my hon. colleague has suggested.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

She said: Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to move third reading of Bill C-13, the Bell Canada reorganization Bill. The issues addressed in this Bill have been examined and commented on in committee and in the House several times already. I would like to take these few minutes to stress the importance of this legislation. It is important, both for Bell Canada and its affiliates, as well as for the general public.

Bell Canada, as we know, is the largest telephone company in Canada. Like the rest of the industry it provides an excellent standard of service that we sometimes take for granted. Until very recently telephone service has been provided on a monopoly basis in Canada and elsewhere. To prevent the abuse of this monopoly power the industry has traditionally been subject to stringent regulation of its rates and services. It appears certain that for the foreseeable future many of the basic services offered by Bell Canada and other telephone companies will continue to be operated on that monopoly basis. Therefore, the services will continue to be regulated by the CRTC.

At the same time we know the telecommunications industry is experiencing a period of rapid and accelerating change. These changes are occurring both domestically and internationally, and they have been brought about by advances in technology, by new and varied user requirements, and a belief that competition will spur further innovation and growth.

Because many of its activities are now subject to growing international competition, in 1982 Bell Canada reorganized to create a new parent company, Bell Canada Enterprises. Bell's objective in this reorganization was to distinguish clearly between its regulated monopoly activities and its non-regulated competitive activities. As a result of its reorganization the telephone part of Bell Canada became a subsidiary of Bell Canada Enterprises. This resulted in a very uncertain regulatory environment because questions were raised about the ability of the CRTC to regulate effectively the monopoly activity of Bell Canada.

Because of these changed circumstances the Government asked the CRTC to report on the reorganization, which it did in 1983. It concluded that specific legislative amendments would be necessary to clarify and confirm its authority to regulate Bell Canada effectively within the reorganized group of Bell companies.

The Bill before us takes into account the specific recommendations of the CRTC and the concerns expressed by a wide variety of interest groups. The legislative powers in this Bill will permit the CRTC to regulate the company effectively. This Bill reaffirms the long-standing provisions of Bell's special Act and confers three specific new powers on the CRTC which will enable it to carry out its mandate to regulate the monopoly telephone service of Bell Canada. This Bill will ensure the continuation of the high quality level of universal telephone service to which we are accustomed, establishing a clear and unambiguous regulatory regime.

Equally important, the provisions of the Bill allow BCE to engage freely in a wide range of unregulated activity on a national and international basis. BCE and its affiliates are major players in the international information technology revolution and they must be allowed to compete without undue regulation.

In the last session Bill C-19, which was almost identical to the present Bill, was subject to a thorough examination by the standing committee and this Bill has again been looked at by a legislative committee of this House. I should point out that only one amendment was made to Bill C-13 by the legislative committee and that involves a rather technical provision that was overlooked by Bell in its original recommendation in drafting the Bill.

Bill C-13 has been subject to a great deal of scrutiny over the last number of months, as was its predecessor. I want specifically to thank the standing committee, members of the legislative committee and those who have worked on this through a series of reviews, for the very diligent work carried out. At this point we have gone over this Bill so many times that I think the best thing to do is to give it speedy passage.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, this is not the first time a Bill concerning the reorganization of Bell Canada was introduced to Parliament by the Government. In the last session the previous Minister of Communications introduced an almost identical Bill called Bill C-19. That Bill died on the Order Paper when the Government chose to prorogue the session.

Before embarking on an analysis of Bill C-13 it may be useful to review the history which led up to its introduction. In view of the importance of the Bell group of companies and the potential impact its corporate reorganization under the Canada Business Corporations Act could have, the CRTC was directed on October 25, 1982, by the then Minister, Francis Fox, to conduct an inquiry under Section 15 of the National Transportation Act into Bell Canada's proposed reorganization. The CRTC was directed to report its findings by March 31, 1983, so that the Government could take its recommendations into account in its over-all analysis of the reorganization. The Liberal Government also called for consultation hearings to be open to all interested persons.

Mr. Fox indicated that the general form of the reorganization was consistent with the Liberal Government's attitude toward increased competition and industrial development in the high technology telecommunication sector. He stressed that the Government had been indicating for some time that all Canadian companies should make changes to enable them to be more competitive in the international as well as the domestic markets.

The Bell Canada group of companies forms a vital part of the telecommunication sector in Canada. While Bell Canada is most readily identified with the provision of telephone services in Ontario and Quebec, the Bell group is also involved in many other activities. Therefore, this most major corporate reorganization of this important group of companies is obviously of great interest to the Government.

At that time Mr. Fox pointed out that the proposed reorganization had raised questions and concerns regarding the impact on Bell's subscribers and on the ability of the CRTC to continue to regulate Bell's monopoly in the provision of telecommunication services. That refers to our telephones in particular. He added that the Government must be satisfied that the reorganization was in the over-all public interest. It was in the over-all public interest that I put forward an amendment, and I will come back to that in a moment because I personally believe it is not in the over-all public interest to have rejected that amendment.

The CRTC held its hearings in February of 1983 and many points of view were expressed on the issue. On the basis of briefs and recommendations submitted to it, and on the basis of its own study of the matter, the CRTC made its recommendations on April 18, 1983. It recommended that the proposed reorganization be implemented on condition that certain legislative provisions be adopted to strengthen and clarify the CRTC's powers over Bell Canada and its affiliates, thereby protecting the interests of the subscriber. That is the bottom line, protecting the interests of the subscriber.

On April 23, 1983, the Liberal Government announced its intention to study the CRTC recommendations and draft the necessary legislative provisions to protect the interests of Bell Canada's customers. We had first reading of Bill C-20 on February 8, 1984. It was an omnibus Bill which covered a number of other issues.

The Bill we are speaking to today, Bill C-13, has some of the legislative provisions initially recommended by the previous Liberal Government. It should be noted, however, that the present Government has introduced some changes which I do not think are in the public interest. The Government says that the purpose of Bill C-13 is not to increase the regulatory powers of the CRTC but to recapture the powers lost due to the reorganiztion of Bell Canada.

I am not going to go into detail on Clause 6(2)(c) with which I was not particularly pleased which relates to telephone subscribers paying in advance. Suffice it to say that I think that whole clause should have been dropped. The matter is in the hands of the CRTC and has been dealt with in a series of regulations which I think are quite clear. I doubt that we need that regulation. Nonetheless, it is there and I will not argue with it.

I remember questioning the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) with regard to the regulation about payment six months in advance. The Minister said:

[Translation]

"I have gone through a whole scenario on that, which I do not care to bore you with again. However, the CRTC brought to our attention at the hearing the other day that they are already regulating the amount of the advance payment. They pased a regulation that does not require a six-month advance payment.

Do you or the deputy minister believe there is any reason to keep paragraph 6(2)(c) from the bill and leave it up to the CRTC? They have already issued that regulation."

I'm sorry, this was my question to the Minister, not the Minister's answer. The Minister answered that she felt it made sense to leave it as is, so I thought it would not be very useful to argue that point and that it would be better to focus on Clause 7. I still think we should have been more careful about Clause 7.

[English]

With respect, the commission had strongly recommended on three different occasions that we prohibit Bell Canada and all members of the Bell group from applying for or holding a broadcasting licence. I mentioned that 60.7 per cent of all the telephone lines in Canada are held by Bell Canada. What better way to indicate one's intention and wishes than to have dealt with Bell Canada and the potential conflict of interest, the potential conflict of control over content and carriage, and the potential of common ownership and control with one company controlling both ends of the stick, telephone on one side, cable on the other. It seems to me that that is where we should have put some energy, closed the gap, and indicated directly to the telephone company.

I find that the Minister's failure to have issued a directive under Section 22 as an Order in Council directive is an abrogation of her responsibility to indicate the pleasure of the Crown in this instance.

As the Minister said, "Generally I do not favour telephone company investment in broadcast undertakings, whether directly or through affiliated companies. Yesterday I had the opportunity to speak to the CCA in Montreal. I said at that time that with the advent of optical fibre in the local distribution network, which is expected in the next 20 years, the phone companies will have the capacity to carry television signals to the home. We are not against this development. We are concerned, however, that the entity licence to carry these signals remain amenable to broadcasting regulations."

"In our view, cable television undertakings should continue to be licensed for this purpose and not the telephone companies. We will be diligent about ensuring that broadcasting receiving undertakings are not taken over by telephone companies."

[English]

I hope that we will see that action and that the telecommunications companies outside of Bell Canada will not feel a sense of discrimination. If it is good enough for Bell Canada and covers them in Section 7 of this Act, it should certainly cover B.C. Tel and others.

We are left in a predicament and I find it most regrettable that that is the case with this particular statute. I would like to understand why the Minister would not prohibit by statute the holding of broadcasting licences. Why was the former Minister of Communications concerned enough to use the wording I am proposing today for Clause 7 while the current Minister is not? Why is there inconsistency between two Ministers of the Government with regard to the same clause of the Bill?

Nonetheless, it looks as though this Bill will be passed. The CRTC, Bell Canada, and the Minister of Communications will be happy. I guess that as the world turns so shall Bell Canada. Let us hope that it shall continue to be in the best interests of the subscribers and the telephone industry in Canada, particularly with such a large force which provides such fine dollars to another corporation which seems to be using them in a very rentable manière.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, we are dealing with Bill C-13 with regard to the reorganization of Bell Canada and Bell Canada Enterprises which, of course, is an enormous company. In terms of ownership the Financial Post lists Bell Canada Enterprises as number four in sales at $13 billion a year; number one in profit, of which it has over $1 billion; and number two in number of employees, of which it has over 100,000. It is a massive company which has, so far, managed to thumb its nose at the CRTC.

Bell Canada had excess profits in 1985 and 1986 estimated by the CRTC at over $200 million. It has refused to comply with the direction of the CRTC to pay back some of these excess profits. Instead it has gone to court to fight the case. Meanwhile, the CRTC is preparing another view of Bell's revenue requirements for this and coming years in conjunction with its review of Bell's application for rate rebalancing. The saga goes on.

We are dealing with this Bill because Bell Canada managed to reorganize itself. Bell Canada Enterprises is a fait accompli. There is much I do not like about the situation, but now that we have it there must be regulation. We need legislation to ensure that the CRTC can get the information it needs to regulate the monopoly telephone-telecommunications aspects of Bell Canada's business.

Bell Canada is an enormous provider. It is the largest telephone company in the country with a monopoly. Monopolies make money hand over fist. This one has been enormously profitable in the past and we are naturally concerned that unfair advantage is not taken of the subscribers in this monopoly situation. People need a telephone. It is an absolute essential in today's life and people will pay the rate demanded of them.

Therefore, the rates must be fairly set. If Bell can increase them, it will and make money hand over fist, which money, if there is not proper regulation, can be taken out of the company and put into other affiliates or the parent company in a way which will take very unfair advantage of the monopoly situation of the company in the telephone-telecommunications business. That is what we are trying to ensure will not happen.

The question with regard to Bell and broadcasting is a more complex one. The amendments to Clause 7 have already been overturned. It is debatable whether the prohibition against the mixing of functions and business should be done through this Act or by some other means. It can well be argued that if it is in this Act with regard to Bell Canada it will not take care of B.C. Tel or other telephone companies and that it will be a limited and discriminatory policy to put it in there. It has to be addressed elsewhere in legislation. It has to be absolutely clear so that the CRTC is not put into a position of being asked for approval of a sale, for example, being told there is no prohibition against it and being put under a great deal of pressure to okay it, because if Parliament has allowed it, why should the CRTC step in? If Parliament wanted to forbid the access of telephone and telecommunications companies into broadcasting, Parliament would have said so. Therefore, this is something we are going to have to pronounce, and we should do so before very long.

I am concerned about some other policy questions. We are dealing with this Bill somewhat in a vacuum. We still do not have long-term policy decisions in the telecommunications area. We still have not received answers to questions on competition, on the role of the telephone company as a utility, what should be the principles in regulating it, what should be the responsibilities to consumers and subscribers, and should a telephone company be a major investment firm? Should this kind of expansion be appropriate for a utility which is providing an absolutely essential service? Who is going to develop fibre optics? What about technological change? We have some long-term issues to address, and this Bill does not really take us anywhere in addressing these long-term questions and what kind of policy should be made for Canadians in this absolutely vital area of communication. These are basic essentials for Canadian families and for business enterprises, so they can have first-class services and the innovations which are being developed. Yet there is a great deal of uncertainty as to what the appropriate principles should be for guiding development in this area.

I simply want to flag some of these problems the Bill is intending to address such as cross-subsidization, the need for long-term policy and the utility role. I think we have to get on with addressing these kinds of very important questions. In the meantime, this legislation is vital. We have to get it through. We are not holding it up. We are flagging concerns which have to be dealt with in due course. In the meantime, the reorganization has already taken place. It is essential for consumers in areas which now have services that it be possible for the CRTC to regulate and to have access to financial information from Bell and its affiliates, however defined, so that they can do a regulatory job which is in the interests of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

COPYRIGHT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Madam Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to rise in this House and speak at second reading of Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. I realize we are beginning the debate on this very important Bill with just five minutes left before we enter into Private Members' Hour. However, I trust that given the importance and significance of this Bill, we will be able to continue the debate at second reading tomorrow or the next day and that we will be able to move it through debate at second reading very quickly so we can get into committee to give the opportunity to witnesses to present their views. We can then bring it back into the House for quick passage so that the changes which so many people want to see enacted through the amendment to the Copyright Act will be in place at the earliest possible day.

This Bill is good news for creators and artists. It is good news, indeed, for the economy. As I am sure Hon. Members know, our present Copyright Act has been outdated for a good many years in a good many areas. It no longer offers the protection it should to products of the mind and spirit. The Copyright Act was first passed in this country in 1924 and has not been significantly revised since that time. It clearly does not respond to the needs of our transformed cultural and technological environment in this communications age.

Creators have an essential right to control the production of their minds and to be rewarded for that production. However, this right is not clearly protected in many present circumstances because of major social, technical and cultural transformations which I suppose the drafters of the 1924 Act could never have envisaged.

The Bill before the House will respond in part to this situation which has been created over a number of years by addressing several specific areas in which there is broad agreement among Canadians as to measures which can be taken to safeguard the rights of our artists and creators. This will, I am sure, encourage cultural activity and thus bring about social, economic and cultural benefits to all Canadians.

I would like to mention that this particular set of amendments presented in this Bill deals with certain specific aspects of copyright. It is not the total package the Government will be producing because we have undertaken to revise the total Copyright Act. There will be a second package with regard to revisions to the Copyright Act which we hope to introduce later this year. They are presently in the drafting stage.

I would like to speak briefly about the various measures which are being addressed in Bill C-60. The first has to do with collectives. Modern reproduction technologies like photocopiers and video cassette recorders have made it increasingly difficult to ensure that authorization is obtained from individual copyright owners whenever a book, a play, or whatever it might be, is copied. Indeed, the tendency is for a great number of different users to want immediate access to a wide variety of protected works all at the same time. Monitoring potential infringements on an individual basis in such circumstances becomes almost impossible. That is why Bill C-60 explicitly encourages the creation of new collective societies of copyright owners.

This system has been in operation for about 50 years for musical performances and is working well. Under our present Bill, the practice which now pertains to those who provide musical performances would be expanded to other areas to be covered by copyright and would result in collectives of authors, visual artists and so forth.

A collective licensing body is basically a group of copyright owners who form an association responsible for exercising, on their behalf, some aspect of copyright such as photocopy reproduction rights.

This group, representing a substantial number of copyright owners, negotiates with users, on behalf of its members, a general licence fixing the royalties and the conditions under which the licence is valid.

Provided the licensee observes the conditions of the licence and pays the royalties, he is free to exercise the right in question.

The collective approach has many advantages—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Minister.

It being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener) moved that Bill C-216, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, the central issue of my Bill, Bill C-216, is the following. Is a foetus a potential life or a life with potential? If it is a life with potential, then we must protect that life with the full weight of the law.

My assumption in saying this is that we can only then take that life if the fact of the pregnancy will, according to a therapeutic abortion committee, endanger the life of the mother by the continuation of that pregnancy to term. In this case the rationale for taking the unborn person's life is self-defence, to protect the life of the mother.

Further, this Bill would not allow abortions for reasons of health. My rationale here is that one simply cannot take a life on grounds of physical, social or mental health unless there is a demonstrable and direct threat to the mother's life per se.

The World Health Organization has defined the word "health" as follows:

> Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity.

That is exactly where much of the problem in this abortion debate begins.

In 1969, the then Minister of Justice, who is now the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), introduced the present law on abortion. In defending the wording of our present law he stated as reported at page 8398 of Hansard:

> The word "endanger" —imparts or connotes the elements of hazard, peril or risk . . . It appears to us that the elements of seriousness, directness and impairment are all present when a person's health is said to be in danger. The word "danger" in itself implies the existence of direct peril or risk.

However, if we look at abortion rates since 1969 we have to ask some serious questions. In 1985, there were 60,956 abortions. Does that mean that all of these mothers were in real "hazard, peril or risk" to their lives or health?

Why is it that today, with all our modern advanced medical knowledge and technology, so many mothers are in such real danger to life or health while pregnant? I think that part of the answer can be found in what the present Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said in 1969. At that time he was the Minister of Justice. He said the following:

> —there are those on the one hand who abhor abortion for any cause. There are those on the other hand who would make abortion wholly permissive or at the personal option of the woman. We have not reached a consensus between those views. We have reached only what I call an accommodation.

There is the rub. The present law is an accommodation to allow those who want abortions, for whatever reasons, to obtain them. Of course those who are opposed to abortions will obviously not seek them.

There can be no accommodation between life and not-life. Either one believes that the unborn child in his mother's womb is a human being and one protects it, or one does not believe it is a human being and one aborts it at will.

When I was a board member at the Kitchener-Waterloo Hospital we conducted an in-depth study of abortions at the hospital. We found that there were 66 combinations of various interpretations of the word "health" that were used to approve abortions. The 66 ranged from history of post-partum reactions, to interruption of education, to failure of contraception or failure of sterilization. I ask Hon. Members: What have those got to do with health?

Responsibility for this state of affairs cannot entirely be laid at the feet of the doctors, nurses or the hospital therapeutic abortion committees—although they do bear some complicity given their medical knowledge as to the nature of the procedure being performed. Rather, I would suggest that the primary culprit is the law itself. The real question in the abortion debate is whether or not we are dealing with a human life and the need for our abortion laws to conform accordingly.

If we are talking about a human life, then we must protect that life, since a life cannot be taken except in self-defence. However, if we are not dealing with a human life but rather with a piece of tissue, then we should take abortion out of the Criminal Code and treat the foetus in the same way we do infected tonsils or appendices.

Let us not hear ridiculous arguments in this debate today such as the unavailability of access, socio-economic disadvantage, freedom of choice and so on. One does not kill people for reasons such as these. The only way in which such arguments can have validity is if those arguments and those arguing in their favour are prepared to claim that the foetus is just a piece of worthless tissue and that therefore abortion should be taken out of the Criminal Code. At least then there would be some measure of honesty and some consistency to this debate instead of the hypocritical games that are usually played when this topic is raised in the House.

I am convinced that from conception to birth we are dealing with the life of a new human being. Surely, when we speak of abortion we are talking about two lives—the life of the mother and the life of the child. Why else would we call a pregnant woman a mother?

Further, when we look at the medical, scientific and legal facts surrounding abortion the evidence is overwhelmingly on the side of the life of the unborn. From the very first day after conception the unborn child is a complex and rapidly growing organism with its own unique genetic endowment. By the end of the first month the child completes the period of relatively greatest size increase and the greatest physical change of a lifetime.

As early as the seventh week we can observe a well-proportioned baby that bears the familiar external features and all the internal organs of an adult. The brain already sends out impulses that co-ordinate the functions of the other organs. At eight weeks it is possible to record individual electroencephalogram readings of brain activity. Today, the absence of signs of brain activity is taken as evidence of death. Why then do we not also consider signs of brain activity in the developing child as evidence that human life is present?

Keeping pace with scientific knowledge of development within the womb, the law has increasingly recognized the rights of the unborn without attempting to draw lines at any particular stage of its development. For example, within tort law it is now clearly recognized that the unborn child in the path of an automobile is as much a person in the street as is the mother. It has even been held that constitutional rights of the parents in the free exercise of religion must give way to the unborn's need for a blood transfusion. The property rights of the unborn are well established.

Finally, when the West German Supreme Court was asked by its equivalent to our House of Commons when does the foetus gain the civil rights to life, I think its answer is highly instructive. It said:

> Life, in the sense of historical existence of a human individual, exists according to definite biological-physiological knowledge, in any case, from the 14th day after conception (nidation, individuation).

In other words, from conception to the fourteenth day, the fertilized egg could divide, leading to a multiple birth; but after the fourteenth day, it is purely a question of growth. So, at the very least, we have life from the fourteenth day after conception. That is even before a woman knows she is pregnant!

Surely the medical, scientific and legal facts unanimously move in the direction of life and not mere tissue. I respectfully submit that our actions had better start catching up with the facts. We need to begin to do what our laws surely must do, that being to protect every life, particularly the defenceless within our society, and we can do so by having our Criminal Code reflect these facts.

It is my hope that as Members debate this issue, they will deal with the question of whether or not we are dealing with a life. If in fact we are dealing with a life, it should be protected; if we are not, abortion should be removed from the Criminal Code.

I urge Hon. Members to avoid bringing into the debate all of the other nonsense. If we focus on the issue of whether or not we are dealing with a life, we will have a good debate. If we focus on other aspects, we will have the debate we usually do on abortion in this House.

I commend to you, Mr. Speaker, the second reading of the Bill and its referral to committee.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Madam Speaker, Bill C-216, presented by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), concerns a very important and indeed very sensitive issue. As you know, I have some very definite views on the subject of abortion. Like so many Canadians, recent events such as the Mortgentaler case have made me think about abortion. However, I do not want to use the time of this House to discuss the principle behind a Bill that seeks to amend the provisions in the Criminal Code concerning abortion. We are all very much aware it is an important issue and one that has aroused considerable interest. I am convinced that the Hon. Member's initiative a rises from the conviction that such amendments are necessary.

Madam Speaker, I would like to repeat in today's debate what I said on June 2 of this year, in the course of a debate on Motion M-37, and I quote:

> Our time should be spent developing a true family policy, a policy concerned with the prevention and support that the State should be bringing to families or women pregnant with an unwanted child, in order to help those women, through adequate action keep their child until he or she is born instead of having an abortion.

Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kitchener is proposing to amend the Criminal Code which reads, and I quote:

> Every one who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of a female person, whether or not she is pregant, uses any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.

Madam Speaker, here again, the onus is on the woman, and the man who contributed to this unwanted pregnancy, unwanted since the woman wants an abortion, what kind of sentence should he get, since after all, he made his contribution one night, perhaps with his partner's consent, but it is clear neither partner wanted a child, after all! So if the Hon. Member's motion to deal with the consequences of that sexual act were accepted, it would be the woman who would face a criminal charge. And that is a serious matter.

I would like to take the next few minutes to discuss two aspects of the abortion issue. First, the attitude of Canadians to this question and second, the manner in which the provisions of the Criminal Code on therapeutic abortion are applied across Canada.

To get a thourough understanding of the situation with respect to abortion, we should first take a broader look at the reaction of Canadian men and women on this question. In the past few years, the Canadian way of life has undergone several major changes which have had an impact on the basic standards of the population. Those changes dealt with the number of children that people want to have, their sexual behaviour and the patterns of use of contraceptive devices.

As our country developed from a rural society into a highly industrialized state, different social expectations and improved standards of living have resulted in drastic changes in people's activities, in their expectations in life and in their attitude to planned abortion. Although attitudes in that respect are no longer what they used to be, there is no consensus on the present situation or the action to take in the future.

Since abortion may become an explosive subject, as this House has seen in the past two months, I humbly submit that the public has chosen to ignore that debate. It has not tried to find efficient and direct solutions to those deep differences of opinion. Some people have chosen to say: "Let us ignore the problem, it will disappear eventually". Other people with different views have retaliated and said: "These are our facts, this is what we must do".

Between those two positions, there is a whole range of deep feelings, which are not always easily expressed, but which recur steadily, whatever the region, the religion, the partisan considerations, the language spoken, and other social characteristics of the people concerned. Those opinions insist on the one hand on preserving the life and physical health of the mother, and are concerned on the other hand with the whole social environment of women and family situations. Each of these two attitudes, shared by a great many Canadian men and women, is based on a different notion of the family and the changing role of women within the Canadian society.

Madam Speaker, because the abortion issue is deeply rooted in moral principles, the professional ethic is highly charged with emotion. It will continue to be so, for there is no easy solution. As is the case for other major issues involving the concepts of life and death, the abortion issue is of concern to many people who would have preferred to avoid it.

It is one of the delicate choices which any woman of child-bearing age may have to consider. A large number of women who have had an abortion have been ostracized and have experienced pressures which have left them in a permanent state of anxiety. Which brings me to the second aspect of the general abortion issue.

In 1975, the Government of Canada established the Committee on the Operation of the Abortion Law. Among the members of this committee were Denyse Fortin Caron, Marion G. Powell and Robin F. Badgley, its chairman, who was asked to carry out a study to determine whether the Criminal Code provisions concerning therapeutic abortion practices were applied equitably everywhere in Canada. Madam Speaker, I am sure that, as a woman, you have read the Badgley report just as I have.

The Committee found that the abortion law was not equitably applied throughout Canada as all sorts of provincial guidelines and regulations had been added concerning the establishment of therapeutic abortion committees in hospitals. Moreover, hospital administrators and members of the medical profession have different ways of interpreting the prescriptions for allowing this procedure. These factors have resulted in profound inequalities in the distribution and accessibility of therapeutic abortion services, regular trips by Canadian women to the United States to secure an abortion and long waiting periods for women who have an induced abortion in Canada.

Madam Speaker, these social inequalities do not result only from our abortion legislation. They reflect the manner in which Canadian society reacts to a delicate social issue which can lead to ostracism and fear.

No law can offer easy and effective solutions to those inequalities, as long as the matter is not addressed with more frankness and a deeper sense of social responsibility in the face of something that has affected over these last few years many hundred thousand Canadian women, a figure that is multiplied many times over if we include the partners and the families involved.

While the abortion legislation specifies the procedure to be followed, its assessment criteria are flexible enough to meet a diversity of needs and experiences of people from across the country. It is not the law nor its implementation that led to existing unjustices and to significant inequalities in the access to therapeutic abortion from city to city, region to region and province to province—Canadians, their health care services and the medical profession are responsible for that situation.

The social cost paid by women who use abortion has been the tolerance of widespread, deep-rooted social unjustice, and for some physicians and hospitals an excessive work burden.

Madam Speaker, abortion is a subject that a majority of people would rather avoid, wether it be the women involved, health care specialists or the public. But the problem is here to stay, only the dimension can change.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I appreciate and I recognize the value of the legislation put forward by the Hon. Member, but I share a conviction with most Canadian women, especially Quebec women I know, that a true family policy that would encourage pregnancy as opposed to abortion would solve the moral problem many people have with abortion.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on the Private Member's Bill of my colleague. As I read it, it would have the effect of allowing for the issuance of a certificate to enable an abortion only when the life of the female is in question, not when her life or health were endangered. I appreciate my hon. colleague's concern for the issue. I compliment him for the way in which he has always brought forward that concern. I know he is vitally interested in it.

However, I must tell the House that I hold a different viewpoint, which I have reached through a great deal of personal thought and consideration and which I have discussed with my wife and others at length. I am sure my colleague will accept my comments in good faith.

There exists in Canada today a very profound divergence of views on the question of abortion. These views are strongly held and often emotionally charged. While the depth of feelings on the issue must be understood and respected, the very fact that opinions on abortion are so widely divergent poses a problem for Members of Parliament.

I remember during the deliberations on the Constitution Bill and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1980 and 1981 that the rights of the unborn were raised on several occasions. Some argued that the Charter should clearly include the right to life of the foetus. Others contended that a woman's right to privacy and security of the person should not be put in jeopardy. Because of the fundamental differences of opinion on the issue, the decision was made not to entrench one view or the other in the Constitution.

It was felt that the question should be left as a question of criminal law, for Parliament to decide in the context of criminal law, which is where it is today and which is what my colleague seeks to change. I believe the decision not to entrench was the correct one.

Public opinion over the years has shown a growing acceptance of choice as the view of most Canadians on abortion. I believe that public opinion is possibly split in thirds—a third of Canadians feel that the present law does not go far enough, a third believe that the law is correct as it stands, and a third believe that it has gone too far. It is prudent for Parliament to allow for an adjustment to existing laws rather than to entrench, as was suggested a week or so ago, a single view to which a larger segment of the population is opposed. I would use the same argument in speaking to this particular Bill and say that a third of Canadians believe the law is correct as it stands and a third would have it widened.

Abortion is not an abstract concept. It represents one of the most difficult, painful choices which can confront a woman. As a man, I would suggest that the men involved find the decision no easier. I cannot believe that a decision to have an abortion is ever taken lightly or ever forgotten. We should not be forcing people to take sides if we believe that each of us is entitled to his or her viewpoint on the subject.

Surely it is possible to accommodate the views of the many thinking, feeling Canadians who believe, as I do, in the right of women to exercise control over their own lives. However, having said that, it concerns me that nearly one-quarter of the abortions performed in the country involve women under the age of 20 years. Obviously our methods of educating and preparing young people to handle their sexual maturity are not adequately meeting their needs. I lay no blame on any political Party or on any level of government. I just say that somewhere we who are charged with those responsibilities are not making our point.

The impact on all society of teenage pregnancies is serious. It interrupts, perhaps forever, young people's education, putting their future economic security on a very shaky footing. In many instances it also places upon them burdens which are too heavy for a young person to carry.

Certainly studies have shown that the babies of these early pregnancies face a very high risk of abuse, poor health, and poor development.

Discussion and debate is healthy when they provide a frank and expansive airing of views. Therefore, when my colleague brings forward this subject and we focus debate on it, I think it is helpful. The issue must be faced with an open mind and, more important, with an open heart. We must work at mitigating the circumstances which lead women to face this most difficult of choices. At the same time, having made their choice, Canadian women should be able to count on appropriate access to the necessary caring and safe services.

In the final analysis, I believe the current law should not be changed. Women must be allowed to make their own choice and decision. No one on either side of the issue suggests that the choice is easy. However, we as legislators must allow that choice to be made by the person most intimately involved and concerned with the results of the decision—the woman.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, in rising to speak to the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), I must say that I do so with some regret and disappointment.

This is not the first occasion upon which male Conservative Members of Parliament have risen in the House and made suggestions which I believe are deeply offensive to Canadian women in respect of the fundamental question of abortion.

I think, for example, of the remarks made recently by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). He rose in this House approximately a month ago—a Conservative Member of Parliament from Toronto—and suggested that he was concerned about the number of abortions in Canada because had these abortions not taken place, in fact, school classrooms would have been filled with children, and teachers would have been hired to teach those classrooms full of children. The arrogance of that approach, which reduces a woman effectively to a machine to produce children and which totally denies the individuality, the humanity and the uniqueness in that woman herself, is breathtaking.

Another Conservative Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Gray—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), went even further. He suggested that those women who choose to have an abortion—and my colleague who just spoke pointed out that this is a decision which is never an easy decision, it is often an agonizingly painful decision—and who do so when their own life is not being threatened should be charged with murder. That Conservative Member of Parliament went further. Not only did he suggest that they should be charged with, and presumably convicted of, murder, but that Tory Member of Parliament who has such reverence for life, such respect for life, suggested that those women should be executed as murderers. So much for the respect for the life that this Conservative Member of Parliament so piously proclaims. He is prepared to sacrifice the life of the woman, the mother of that child, to protect the foetus.

When I rose in the House today, as I have risen on other occasions, to speak on this question, it is with a certain sense of anger at the arrogance of those men in this House who would tell the women of this country that they have no right, after having agonized over this difficult decision, to make for themselves the fundamental decision on abortion.

What does the Bill, which the Conservative Member of Parliament is proposing here, say? It says that no longer can a woman whose health is being threatened seek an abortion. No longer, Madam Speaker, can a woman who might suffer serious physical harm, who might, in fact, be disabled, seek an abortion. What right does this Member or any other Member of this House have to tell a woman, who is crying out in desperation, who has been told by her doctor that if she carries that child to term she will be permanently disabled, that her health will be deeply affected? What right does that Member have to tell that woman, "No, you must bear that child even if it means that your health will be permanently damaged as a result".

That is what this Member is telling the women of Canada. He is repealing the requirement in the Criminal Code which states that if a woman's health is threatened, she is entitled to make that difficult choice and she is entitled to have an abortion. Just so that it is clear beyond any doubt, the Member goes on to say this in his Bill:

> —the life of a female person is endangered where her life is in actual physical danger, irrespective of any consideration of her mental, social or economic condition.

Once again, let us look at the situation of a young woman who is pregnant in Kamloops, British Columbia or in Corner-brook, Newfoundland and is 14 or 15 years of age. She goes in to see her doctor and her doctor makes it very clear that for this young woman, this girl, to have a child means she would suffer terribly, whether it be mentally or physically—her health would be threatened. This Member who proposes this Bill would say to that young girl, "You must bear this child. We don't care about your health. We don't care about your mental well-being or your physical health. We place above that the value of the foetus." This is arrogance and insensitivity that surely we in this House must reject, Madam Speaker.

This Bill refuses to deal with the reality of the life of a woman. It basically reduces the life of a woman to her physical existence or the physical functioning of her body. To remove the question of a woman's general health, her mental health, her social relationships or her economic situation from the consideration of her life is simplistic to say the least, and is degrading and dangerous in practice. There must be more to a consideration of danger to life than merely physical harm. I find incredible the suggestion by this Hon. Member that that is not the case. Over and over again we hear a similar argument made by those who would deny choice to Canadian women.

I am pleased that the significant majority of Canadians reject this destructive, dangerous and arrogant approach. For example, the Reverend Dr. Robin Smith of the Family Ministries Division of the United Church of Canada, in speaking to the motion which was introduced previously by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe said this:

> —this motion precludes consideration of the rights and situation of all other members of a family. It robs women entirely of responsibility for their own bodies and their moral action. For many this could mean serious hardship. It takes no account of the life and needs of siblings, which can be deeply affected.
> Finally, this motion gives absolute value to one element in a complex moral situation: the right to existence of the foetus. It thereby reduces all other factors to insignificance. While life is sacred, it is not, as many of our national policies and practices illustrate, of absolute value.

Yes, Madam Speaker, our abortion laws clearly need attention. Recently in the Supreme Court of Canada, for example, the Supreme Court justices questioned these laws. In questioning counsel, Justice Willard Estey said this:

> So you've got zones in this country where there is no access. You've got whole provinces that are carved out of the process. Is this some kind of local option which has slid into the Criminal Code? I can't think of any other section of the Code which lays itself open to this practice.

Rather than restricting access even further in the manner proposed by the Hon. Member for Kitchener, I suggest that we should recognize the weakness of the existing law, the fact that women in Prince Edward Island are denied access totally to safe therapeutic abortions. Even those women whose lives are threatened, which is the concern of the Hon. Member for Kitchener, cannot have abortions in Prince Edward Island. Women in Newfoundland, women in Kamloops, B.C., where the hospital board has adopted a very narrow approach, cannot.

I would suggest, in closing, that we as parliamentarians listen to the voice of the people in Canada who have spoken through their juries which have refused to convict those doctors who have courageously assisted women in seeking access to safe therapeutic abortions. I suggest that we place emphasis on sex education, on birth control awareness and availability and on economic support for women and particularly those poor women who in some cases actually decide that they cannot support their children.

I reject the Bill of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kitchener. I hope that Members of the House as well will reject this Bill which fundamentally denies the reality of Canadian women.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak to the private Member's Bill of the Hon.

Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). This Bill is of great moral and ethical significance to society today. The Bill seeks to protect the life of the unborn except where the continuation of a pregnancy would or would be likely to endanger the life of a pregnant woman.

This Bill is very important because it recognizes that a human being does not just become a person the moment he or she is delivered from the security of his or her mother's womb but that he or she is a member of the human race from the moment of his or her conception. Self-defence is the only rationale given in this Bill to end the life of an unborn child. Proof must be given that the female person is in actual physical danger irrespective of her mental, social or economic condition. The addition of Section 8 gives a more succinct reason for ending the life of the unborn. No longer would women be able to use the excuse of mental strain or of not having the financial capabilities to raise children as a reason for ending the lives inside them.

I believe that life begins at conception, and I have stated previously and in letters to my constituents that I cannot support abortion unless the life of the mother is in danger. I would like to explain my reasons for this stand.

The United Nations Declaration of the Rights of the Child states that the child, by reason of his physical and mental immaturity, needs special safeguards and care including appropriate legal protection before as well as after birth. Why do some people believe that an unborn child is not a human being until it is born? Do they not recognize that even at its earliest development, say at one or two weeks, the unborn child is simply at one special stage in a whole series of steps which will eventually lead him or her to old age?

The only difference in the existence of a child at one or two weeks or at two or three years old lies in the process of maturing and aging, in other words, in developing. By assuming that one only becomes a person when one is at full term or is capable of sustaining life independently of the womb, we might as well say that the nine months the unborn child spends inside its mother's womb is irrelevant to the rest of its life because it was not a person anyway. Of course, this is a ridiculous assertion.

What of the full-term infant who is not capable of sustaining life independently due to some physiological deformation or serious health problem? Do we then not consider him a person either? Have we the power to say that this is not a life as we perceive it and therefore we can disallow this non-person's existence? We can certainly see how deep this issue goes when it comes to moral and ethical decisions.

From a fertilized egg will come 100 trillion cells, the average number of cells in an adult. Before it is even 30 days old, an unborn child is one-quarter inch long and has all the genetic programming which will determine his height, eye colour, hair colour, the shape of his nose and all the characteristics he has inherited from his parents. At 60 days, the same unborn child is the size of a thumb and responds to painful stimuli. At 16 weeks, he is 5.5 inches long and weighs less than a pound. At 40 weeks, he weighs over seven pounds, is 20 inches long and is ready to be delivered. At what point in this continuum can we say that this unborn child became a human being?

The British Columbia Government has permitted communities to run local hospitals with elected boards, and their guidelines have resulted in dramatic decreases in abortions in some hospitals. Despite this, however, there are still many abortions being done in other hospitals around the province. In 1984, there were 11,509 abortions in B.C. In 1985, B.C.'s abortion rate was 50 per cent higher than the national average. For every 100 live births, there are 26.1 abortions. What makes this figure even more horrendous is that 25 per cent of these were repeats.

A repeat abortion means that the woman having an abortion has had a least one other. The number of repeat abortions has risen dramatically over the last 10 years on the national level. In 1975, 8.6 per cent of all women who had abortions were repeats. In 1985, that figure was 20.3 per cent. In fact, more women were repeaters in 1985 than the total of all the officially recorded abortions in 1970.

Prior to 1969, doctors performed abortions on rare occasions when they believed the mother would die if the pregnancy continued. It is only since 1969 that induced abortions have come to mean a deliberate decision to terminate the life of an unborn child. We should make the changes to the Criminal Code which will protect the life of the unborn child except when the continuation would endanger the life of the pregnant woman.

The number of Canadian hospitals with therapeutic abortion committees is given as either 250 or 253. Of this figure, 39 hospitals have reported a total of 45,369 abortions or 74.4 per cent of the Canadian total. In other words, 15.6 per cent of hospitals with therapeutic abortion clinics are performing three-quarters of the abortions.

This makes one wonder about the use of the word "therapeutic". In The Concise Oxford Dictionary, it is defined as the branch of medicine concerned with the treatment of disease and the action of remedial agents in disease or health. I think we could all agree that pregnancy is not a disease and abortion is not therapeutic. It heals no disease but kills human beings.

When therapeutic abortion committees were originally developed, the intent of the law was to ensure that all alternative methods of preserving the mother's life or health would be used before the drastic step of aborting a child was permitted. I do not believe that the 11,509 abortions performed in B.C. alone in 1984 were to preserve the life and health of the mothers. It is hard to accept that the women of British Columbia are that unhealthy.

A few weeks ago, the B.C. Ministry of Social Services conducted the province's first-ever apprehension of a foetus. This seizure occurred after a woman, 36 weeks pregnant, told doctors at the Vancouver Grace Hospital that she did not intend to consent to medical treatment for her child after it was born. The doctors used the word "child" when referring to the foetus. The social worker conferred with a supervisor and superintendent and all three of them agreed that the child should be apprehended. The province's Family and Child Services Act empowers the Government to seize any child in need of protection.

The B.C. seizure is not the only case in which the rights of the foetus have been recognized. Two months ago, a judge in Ontario ordered a 36-week-old foetus made a ward of the Belleville Children's Aid Society after its mother, who planned to give birth in the underground parking lot in which she made her home, refused medical treatment. I think these are landmark cases.

The Bill we are debating today is very important. The unborn child, the foetus or whatever one wants to call the person who is developing in his mother's womb, deserves the protection of all Canadians. Only in situations where the mother is in actual physical danger should an abortion even be considered. I fully support this Bill to change the Criminal Code as it relates to abortion.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity, as I did last week, to take part in a debate that I consider very important. Madam Speaker, the question at issue is still the same: Can we be for or against abortion? I don't think we have a choice. No one in this House can be for abortion. We are necessarily against abortion. However, since we live in a society that always judges in terms of punishment, what kind of punishment should there be for an act that from the outset is deemed to be reprehensible? The same attitude is reflected in all our social and political relationships. Sometimes you meet people for the first time, and they start in right away saying, rather condescendingly; By the way, what's your salary bracket? We are always trying to classify and categorize people. He earns more than somebody else. That job is better than this one. Policemen in Montreal have to earn more than their colleagues in Beloeil school. Teachers academic standards are high or not so high . . . Our society has always tended to categorize. And this, of course, works both positively and negatively.

Madam Speaker, I am a practising Catholic. I have no negative feelings about my religious upbringing. I remember that as a boy, at school, we spent whole catechism classes discussing whether a given sin was venial or mortal. It was practically a sin, the way we were thinking what kinds of sins would be venial and what kind would be mortal! I don't hold it against my religion that I was raised that way. It was the system. The system classified faults as major and minor.

What we have before us today, Madam Speaker, is much the same. I am against abortion. But not to the extent that I want to see someone who wants an abortion declared a criminal. Some women use abortion as a contraceptive. I find them silly, if I may say so. Women who had five, six, seven abortions are not those are I was refering to, but does that make them criminals automatically? That is the basic question. That has always been the basic debate. So I should make them criminals but then, what kind of society I am going to have? I do not want a permissive society, a society where anyone can do anything. The sense of values has been lost. When children were raised in a closed circle, within the family, it was easy to transmit the right values. But today, the best mind-shaper in the world, because often the father and mother desert the home, is more often than not television.

But try to think at what happens on TV. What kind of values does it carry? We will realize we will have to adapt our values to a larger context. Try and imagine for a second what it means for a four year old child to look at TV and to see someone being killed, an actor that is being killed one way or another in a program. The following week he sees him alive in another program. Try and imagine how that child will be raised. What does that mean a murder to him, what does death means? It is not the same as for me. That child tells himself: He is being killed, blood spills, etc., he falls down. Nothing serious, he will come back. The kind of education and values we tend to give him today are completely destroyed by other, violent values.

I remember it was in Nicaragua I think, two or three years ago, an American TV newsman was killed before the cameras. It appeared on the 6 o'clock news. Really terrible! When the regime was toppled in Haiti and Duvalier fled, I saw people being killed with machetes. It was broadcast on the 6 o'clock news. That is our kind of society.

Is society more permissive when making murderers out of those who get abortion, or when allowing that kind of thing to be viewed?

An Hon. Member: Come back to conservative values.

Mr. Hudon: No, not conservative values.

But there is something else, Madam Speaker. We are a bit cautious in this worthy House of Commons, with a majority of male Members. We are prudent. We do not refer to those 100,000 incest cases in Canada. No, we must not refer to that! We do not refer to those 100,000 incest cases. Women who are raped twice, we do not refer to that. They are raped once on the street, and the second time in court because we are never sure if they did not entice the male in the first place. We do not refer to that. But contrary to my pal across the aisle, from Burnaby maybe, who spoke earlier, the one from the New Democratic Party. Not one of them is here to listen to us, of course. I am not accusing them of being conservative. He patronized earlier "those conservatives". I am happy, Madam Speaker, to be part of a political party that lets people of whatever faction to be heard, to put their views forward and to debate something in a democratic way. We can talk about a House of Commons with right or left leanings, but I reject the accusation of conservatism. There are in this House people from the 10 provinces. Who do they think they are in this so called democratic party to believe that everybody should think the way they do. I do not know what the sexual orientation of my friend is, but if it departs from the conventional norm, he could not expect everybody to be the same.

Here is the New Democratic Party, trying to force its values on everyone! Madam Speaker, I am glad to belong to a Party which allows it members to speak, to understand, to state their views, to discuss and then says: "Good, we are now going to vote to see whose value is most acceptable." If, in the New Democratic Party, they have found the truth and are able to mass produce it, I am very happy for them. However, I have my doubts, and we suspect, considering what is happening in Quebec presently, that their beautiful unanimity is coming to an end.

So, Madam Speaker, here we are, as members of a society, of the highest Chamber in the land. I believe we should look after things which challenge our values rather than try to grade the various categories of punishment for those who commit some crime. I repeat my first sentence, Madam Speaker: Can we be for or against abortion? I think we must be against. But executing somebody for that is another kettle of fish.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this debate goes straight to the fundamental issue of what we believe life to be. I know many Canadians on both sides of the issue. I like and admire them. They are honest, decent, ethical and moral citizens. Indeed, many countries differ on this issue as well. The harshest restrictions on abortion exist in countries such as Ireland, Portugal and the Philippines. In those countries there is no exemption from the absolute prohibition against abortion, not even for the narrow purpose of saving the mother's life. Less restrictive nations permit abortions for medical reasons affecting the mother. However, the restrictions are usually minimal, and countries with those minimal restrictions are Japan, the U.K., the Scandinavian countries, and the countries of eastern Europe. Abortions are legally performed there for such reasons as difficult domestic situations, often too many other children, financial hardship, unmarried status, or ill health. The least restrictive type of abortion law permits abortion upon demand, although that is usually within a limited time. Countries with such laws are the People's Republic of China, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Tunisia, the Soviet Union, the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, and the United States. People on both sides of this issue cover all political persuasions in other countries, as they do in ours.

It is obvious that each of us must speak entirely on a personal basis. Having read and thought about this a lot, there is no doubt in my mind, not a shadow of a doubt, that life starts at birth. We are then faced with the question of where we draw the line between the historic right of the mother to make certain choices about herself and her body, and the right of the child to have the protection of law. Our ancestors decided on the date of natural childbirth as the cut-off. Clearly that is unsustainable in our modern society. At six or seven months we can take a child out of the womb, operate on it, and put it back in the womb again. When the child is out of the womb it has all the legal rights of any person. When it goes back in the womb again it suddenly loses those rights. We have to move the cut-off time forward, the question is how far. I look forward to debating this further so I can present my views to the House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

NARCOTICS—INCREASE IN DRUG ABUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, on May 20, 1987, I rose in this House to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with regard to when the National Drug Strategy would be brought forward and what it would contain. Usually to take part in the Adjournment Debate, according to the Standing Orders, one must be dissatisfied with the response of the Minister. I want to go on record as saying that I am certainly not dissatisfied. As a matter of fact, I am very, very satisfied. I only wish to expand and make some recommendations.

In the Throne Speech of October 1, 1986, one reads:

> A national drug strategy and a comprehensive program dealing with impaired drivers will be brought forward to support the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse.

This was one of the commitments of the Government and was applauded by almost everyone as a positive step. An exception was the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) who said on October 3, 1986:

> It seems that when Ronald Reagan has a drug problem Canada gets an epidemic.

I think this is a very cynical view which was not shared by most Canadians.

On May 25, 1987, and during the following week a group of Ministers of the Crown made statements. Statements were made by the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The program that was brought in was a new strategy which includes a public education campaign in concert with the provinces, support for both prevention and treatment initiatives at the community level, increased federal funding for drug and alcohol treatment and rehabilitation, development of training programs and resources for professionals and volunteers, greater availability of information through such means as telephone information lines, new legislation to replace the Narcotics Control Act and the Food and Drug Act, and a task force to consider the creation of a national focus to ensure that expertise in the drug abuse field is shared for the benefit of all.

Once again the Liberal Party was not satisfied and attacked. I would like to quote from an editorial in support of this initiative in a Toronto paper. It says:

> We have to save a generation.
> We could argue that this detailed plan of attack is late, but never that it's a waste. Nonetheless, and to no one's surprise, Liberal health critic Sheila Copps did some shrill carping.
> She thinks Epp has put this together "because he wants to make a name for himself at the United Nations."
> Spare us from such nonsense.
> All parties should unite behind this complex and thorough anti-drug program. There's no room for party politics in the war on dope.

Another Toronto newspaper, the name of which I will not mention, which makes no bones about its support for the Liberal Party, carried an editorial headlined: "Fuzzy message on drug abuse". This was no "fuzzy message". This is a strict stand which the Government is about to take which will do something about our greatest natural resource, our youth. The Government has a superb record in the initiatives it has taken and those it is currently working on.

We can talk about the Meech Lake Accord and freer trade with the United States. We can talk about our anti-pornography legislation, our White Paper on defence or tax reform. But what good is any of this if we do not protect our most important and valuable natural resource, our youth? We must support this initiative, and I thank the Minister for bringing it forward.

In conclusion, I feel that improved enforcement is necessary for the initiative. However, it is somewhat like locking the stable door after the horse has gone. I believe that most of these funds should be allocated for public education. I want to say I am very supportive and proud of the Peel Board of Education, which is the largest school board in Ontario. It did a survey last year of views of students, educators and parents on alcohol, drugs and tobacco. It was a very comprehensive review at its own expense. I think some of these funds should be allocated to the people who have hands-on experience working with youth who abuse drugs and alcohol. The Peel Board of Education will implement a program "Not so Tough to Say No"—I think that is a great name for a program—in all senior elementary classes no later than September 1988. The Peel Board of Education recommends the expansion of a Values, Influence and Peers program to all grade six classes not later than September 1988.

I support what this Government has done. I believe it is a very worth-while initiative and I look forward to seeing it implemented in the years to come.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for his representations and support for the Government program on drug abuse. I must say that while I am not directly involved with justice and Solicitor General issues, I did spend two and a half years as chairman of the committee on which my hon. colleague served very well indeed. That committee put through some 14 justice Bills and, I believe, two or three Solicitor General Bills. By hard work we were able to get through a lot of legislation which has been helpful to the nation at large.

On May 25 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) outlined the main features of this Government's action on drug abuse. Specific components of the plan were announced by other Ministers over the course of that week. The focus of our national drug strategy, for which the Government will be committing over $210 million, is an emphasis on education and prevention as the key line of defence against the harm caused to individuals, their families and our communities by the abuse of drugs.

I think all Canadians agree we have to move on that. When Members opposite were trying to belittle the program, they just brought themselves into disrepute and looked silly because all people want to have actions taken which will save the next generation. At the young age which most get started, they really do not appreciate the damage they are doing to themselves and ultimately to our whole society.

My colleague referred to the Peel Board of Education. I must say to him that I do not know offhand the mechanism which will be used to gain access to the $210 million. However, I would strongly encourage him to send a copy of today's Hansard to the Minister and solicit the Minister's response because it may well be that that would be the very best application of the $210 million, so that the school boards and educational boards could handle the problem. Indeed, the Minister today, in terms of our international effort, is in Vienna signing an international treaty or agreement to act co-operatively around the globe in fighting abuse of drugs.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—SITUATION OF FRANCOPHONES—INQUIRY WHETHER SOLICITOR GENERAL HAS ACTION PLAN—REDUCTION IN FRANCOPHONE MANPOWER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, again I rise to say how disappointed and somewhat disillusioned I feel with respect to the linguistic situation in Royal Canadian Mounted Police services. Again I am very sorry that I have to raise the issue, for it would seem some people are reluctant to discuss this matter.

Incidentally, Madam Speaker, tomorrow the Committee on Official Languages will be hearing the Solicitor General, the man responsible for these cases, be it the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, or Correctional Service Canada. As I said, tomorrow we will have an opportunity to ask the Minister a few questions and perhaps, at least I hope, secure a commitment about his taking the necessary corrective measures and making whatever arrangements may be required with the deputy heads of the various agencies so they will not only report to him on progress made but also ensure that they will rectify and change their attitude concerning the linguistic question.

Madam Speaker, the problems experienced by the RCMP with respect to the official languages are not new, everybody knows that. I raised them in the House 13 times in the past seven or eight months, and I am not the only one doing that because the Commissioner of Official Languages had this to say in his 1981 annual report, and I quote:

> —the RCMP's foot-dragging in the areas of language of work and Francophone participation among police personnel is disquieting.

This was in 1981, and things have not changed since then. The problem is not new, we are in 1987 and the problem is just as disquieting and worrying.

In August one could read in the Pony Express—an official internal RCMP publication—that they were planning a reduction in the number of regular officers hired by the RCMP from the 20 per cent established, on the basis of figures set a number of years ago already, and this was to be done as a result of an agreement between the Government and the RCMP, a reduction to 14 per cent.

There was a flurry of activities at the time, several questions were raised in the House, there were debates, and when we know how the government machinery works . . . I thought that the day when I received from the President of the Treasury Board a firm commitment that the Solicitor General was going to get personally involved in this question, this problem, and set everything straight by means of a comprehensive plan which was to be submitted to him in the very near future . . . In fact, in his answer to me in early May he had told me: Within a week! Here we are, June 15, and I have been waiting for this RCMP comprehensive plan for more than a month.

When I raised this question last week, Thursday when speaking on the supply motion, to make this Government understand that what we want is to obtain firm guidelines, specific policies, clear objectives, I was told: A report will be released. Sure enough, they released the report of the internal group on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, and I read it. Tomorrow we will have time to put questions to the Minister, I hope, concerning this famous report, and I am grateful to the Government for making this report public.

What I am concerned about and what I should like to get is the official comprehensive plan of the RCMP, approved by the Solicitor General and delivered, at his request, to the President of the Treasury Board. I want this plan because it was promised to the House and because it might help us to better understand and appreciate the objectives of this Government concerning official languages.

Madam Speaker, this is a serious problem which means that today we are in difficulty, and not only for the language of work, because the RCMP is almost entirely anglophone.

There have been problems obtaining services in French; we have received complaints; the Committee has examined several. Instead of ensuring an equitable participation of both linguistic groups to reflect Canada's respect for both these groupes and for our duality, the RCMP wanted to reduce the proportion of francophone staff from 20 to 14 per cent. I protested vigorously. Apparently, there is now a trend to a more generous policy. Madam Speaker, I just do not understand why, again today, on June 15, the Government is still so reluctant to make these linguistic guidelines, policies and plans public.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I want the House to know that I wrote the Prime Minister a four-page letter. I must confess that I was feeling quite discouraged. I was getting nowhere with the Minister: one day he was telling me one thing, and the next something else. I therefore wrote the Prime Minister a well thought out four-page letter in which I described step by step how this issue had developed. I received first an acknowledgement. Then, a little later, specifically on May 25 (I had written the Prime Minister on May the 5th), I received a letter signed by Mr. Donald J.M. Cummer, which stated:

> Further to your letter dated May 5, the Prime Minister has asked me to thank you for your comments on this issue—

—concerning the RCMP, the Security Intelligence Service of Canada, and the Correctional Service Canada. I quote further:

> —and to send a copy of your letter to the Hon. James Kelleher, that it may receive the undivided attention it deserves. Rest assured that Mr. Kelleher will contact you shortly.

Madam Speaker, when I write the Prime Minister and ask him to do something about a minister whose resignation I have been seeking because he is unable to manage his own affairs, I find it quite insulting to be told: "Your letter has been forwarded to the accused and he will reply himself." Madam Speaker, I find that totally unacceptable because this letter asked the Prime Minister to give particular attention to the serious problems which exist in the RCMP, and I would have thought that the Prime Minister could have written himself to say: Jean-Robert, do not worry, I am taking care of this; we are going to do something. Madam Speaker, nothing has happened, absolutely nothing. Tonight, I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary first what has happened to the RCMP report which was supposed to be submitted to the President of the Treasury Board and, finally, when we will have answers to our questions.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has again raised the question of the future direction of the Official Languages Program of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The question is an important one, and the Hon. Member is to be commended for the perseverance and tenacity with which he has pursued this important issue.

As recently as last Thursday, June 11, 1987, the Hon. Member was assured in the House that the Minister had submitted certain proposals to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) with respect to the Official Languages Program of the RCMP. It was further indicated at that time that these proposals would include the initiatives which would allow the RCMP to achieve the long-term objective of becoming a more bilingual institution, representative of the two official language groups in this country.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is also aware that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) will be appearing before the Joint Committee on Official Languages tomorrow afternoon. As a member of that committee, the Hon. Member will have the opportunity at that time to pose his questions directly to the Solicitor General.

The Solicitor General has placed the Official Languages Programs within the RCMP and CSIS high on the list of his immediate personal priorities. Indeed, when he became aware of the complaints by CSIS personnel in respect of the use of the official languages in that organization, he pursued an initiative undertaken by his predecessor, who asked the Security Intelligence Review Committee to examine closely the entire question. The Security Intelligence Review Committee submitted its report to him, and the Minister endorses its recommendations.

The RCMP submission on official languages was considered by Treasury Board last week. I do not wish to pre-empt the Solicitor General in any statements or announcements he may wish to make concerning this submission when he appears before the Joint Committee on Official Languages tomorrow; however, I can assure the Hon. Member that he will be pleased with the official languages initiatives to be undertaken by the RCMP. I am sure he will find himself agreeing that the areas of concern previously identified by him and his colleagues on the Joint Committee will have been addressed.

PAROLE—BRITISH COLUMBIA EXPERIMENT USING ELECTRONIC MONITORING ANKLE BRACELETS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, what sort of summer jobs did you have when you were a student? I suspect that at least some of them were involved with the theatre. However, personally, I had quite a variety of summer jobs.

I remember, for instance, working for two summers in what was then called the IBM department of Imperial Life. It was a department which used at that time things called punch cards and huge machines called sorters, collators, and calculators. You remember that sort of thing, Madam Speaker.

Of course times have changed and they have changed very rapidly since that time. Now we have smaller and faster machines, machines with greater capabilities and greater capacity. Those machines are not now called calculators but are called computers.

Computers have a great many functions and uses. In fact, no office can be without one. You may have one in your own office, Madam Speaker. You certainly have a word processor and an electronic mail machine. Industry cannot be without them.

Recently I have found even relatively small industries in my constituency using computers. For example, Erno Manufacturing, which makes office equipment, has computerized machinery. Dorothea Knitting Mills—and you probably have a Parker sweater, Madam Speaker, which was made in my riding by Dorothea Knitting Mills—has computerized knitting machines.

The Government has computers for sending out tax bills. Computers are used to send out water bills and hydro bills. The Government has econometric models for calculating the effects on the economy of different problems. Of course we have computers in our homes. For instance, it was interesting the other day to find out from the architect of the Dome Stadium in Toronto that it would have been impossible to build the retractable roof on the stadium without computers to make all the mathematical calculations.

With all these computers being used, it is no wonder that someone has thought of applying the computer to our parole system. This concept provides that offenders who are nearing the end of their prison terms can actually volunteer to be fitted with a tamper-proof bracelet around the arm or ankle and, when they finish their sentence, they finish it at home rather than at a half-way house. There is a tiny computer in the bracelet which is linked to a central computer. It records every time the offender strays outside a 50-metre range of his or her home telephone. That is how the electronic arm or ankle bracelet works. Officials are immediately notified by way of the transmitter and computer of a possible escape or a possible curfew violation by the offender on parole.

It has the effect of cutting the costs of looking after prisoners. For instance, it has been estimated that it could cut costs down from $70 per day to a mere $10 per day. It also reduces the overcrowding which we have in many prisons.

People scoff at the idea of electronic arm or ankle bracelets. When I asked the question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) in the House not long ago, opposition Members actually laughed at the idea. They said it was a ridiculous idea and that people could be excused from parole violations perhaps by a battery failure.

Some members of the Opposition oppose the concept. The John Howard Society in Toronto actually opposes it as well. It feels that it would be a violation of personal freedom. Many other civil rights groups and prisoners' groups feel that it would be a violation of civil rights, perhaps a violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and a violation of the freedom of movement concept. Ole Instrup, the Chairman of the National Parole Board, says that he is fundamentally opposed to the concept. However, we know that the concept is in fact in use in 20 different jurisdictions in the United States.

Presently there are some 900 prisoners who are released with this sort of electronic surveillance which the Americans call an electronic leash. As well, British Columbia is starting to experiment with this system. Just this very month, the Province of Ontario says it is considering putting an experimental model into use by the end of this year. Fortunately, our own Solicitor General has indicated that the Canadian Correctional Service's mind is not closed to the concept and that it is going to be watching these other experiments very closely.

I do not know whether this idea will work or not. I cannot help but think of the case that I brought to your attention before, Madam Speaker, of Leander Savoury. You will remember that he was the prisoner who was released on parole back in October, 1984. Before he was killed in a police shoot-out in January, 1985—he was three short months on parole—he had committed nine armed robberies and killed one man. While he was on parole he apparently was in contact with his parole officer once in person and he spoke to him twice on the telephone. Of course, he was warned to stay in regular contact with his parole officer, but in spite of all of that, he committed nine armed robberies and killed one man.

Would electronic monitoring by way of an electronic leash or bracelet on the ankle or the wrist have prevented those armed robberies? Would it have prevented the killing or the death of Leander Savoury himself in the police shoot-out? I do not know, Madam Speaker. You probably do not know right at this stage but I think it is worth trying to find out. I think it is worth trying this experiment.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us tonight that he agrees and that the Canadian Correctional Service will be getting involved and utilizing this experiment to see if it will improve our parole system and help to solve this sort of problem.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak further to the question put to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) concerning the possible use of electronic bracelets to help supervise federal inmates on parole.

The Correctional Service of Canada has at this time no plans to introduce such a program. However, it will be monitoring those in the United States and in British Columbia to see whether they yield any positive results.

While there may be potential applications of this concept to federal inmates, the Correctional Service would first want to satisfy itself as to all of the various ethical and legal ramifications of using monitoring technology. Moreover, it would not consider using this type of system for high risk offenders or those not willing to wear the device. It also would not view electronic supervision as eliminating the need for the continuing face to face contacts that parole officers have with offenders.

On balance, the Correctional Service of Canada is not currently in favour of implementing an electronic monitoring program and the Parole Board shares this position. However, the Solicitor General and his agencies will be keeping an open mind on the issue and for that reason will be watching to see what emerges from the various initiatives now under way, including that in British Columbia, so that we can ultimately decide if and how the federal jurisdiction should proceed in this area.

SECRETARY OF STATE

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the first report of the Standing Committee on Secretary of State.

This report is the culmination of seven months of work from coast to coast in reviewing the funding criteria of the Women's Program of the Department of Secretary of State. I would like to make some brief points.

The report crosses Party lines and represents all regions and linguistic groups in Canada. This can be considered an overwhelming endorsation by a majority of members of all Parties in the House in terms of strengthening our recommendations to the Government.

Fairness in Funding is anchored on the principles of equality and democracy. As in the Meech Lake Accord and the Venice Summit, nobody got everything they wanted but everybody got something.

We could not have arrived at such a consensus without the invaluable and oft-times moving testimony by many hundreds of witnesses from all 10 provinces and two Territories. The thrill the committee experienced travelling across this great country was intensified by the knowledge that many women travelled unbelievable distances to make their views known in whatever region we touched down. I know that I speak for all committee members when I say, "We thank you. We heard you, and we hope that you will feel that this report made your efforts worthwhile."

Finally, I would like to pay tribute to colleagues on all sides of the House who contributed mightily to our Fairness in Funding report. To my government colleagues, my namesake, the Hon. Member for Victoria—Haliburton (Mr. Scott), my friend the mediator, the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz)— the Hon. Member for Matapédia—Matane (Mr. Joncas) as well as the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez)— —and also for the vigorous participation by our alternate but always present Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson); to our colleagues from the Official Opposition, the distinguished Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin). The committee also expresses thanks for the very constructive co-operation of the two New Democratic Party members who bracket this national report at the western end of the country, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). To them I also say "Thank you".

I hope that the Government will seriously consider the recommendations in the report which create objectives and criteria which will work toward the full participation of women in the Canada of the 1990s and beyond into the 21st century.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On behalf of the Deputy Chairman of the committee, the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez), and myself as a full participant of the hearings across the country, we would like to append a minority report to the report just submitted.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) has in that report matters of importance. However, I have to advise the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that an attempt to file a minority report is not recognized in our rules and is without precedent. Reluctantly I have to advise the Hon. Member that his request is out of order.

VETERANS APPEAL BOARD ACT

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-66, an Act to establish the Veterans Appeal Board and to amend other Acts in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, the petition being signed by residents of Hinton, Jasper, and Edmonton, Alberta; Ottawa-Hull, Quebec City, Montreal, South Slocan, Slocan Park, New Denver, Winlaw, Kaslow, Nelson, Argenta, Johnson's Landing, and Gray Creek.

The petitioners are concerned about the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides, chemicals that are proven to have harmful effects on human health. In addition, the petitioners believe that these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms, soil and water.

These chemicals have in past years been registered and approved as safe for their various uses, and the petitioners believe that new chemicals are constantly approved under the same guidelines as the now-proven harmful ones were.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the petitioners ask the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration, regulation and the use of pesticides and the examination of alternate ways of controlling pests, such as biological controls and plant-derived pesticides.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO ROAD SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by residents of the Province of Prince Edward Island. These petitioners call upon Parliament to amend the existing Canadian safety standard for rear seat-belts in passenger cars.

The petitioners believe that rear seat-belts in passenger cars are inadequate and that the suffering of crash victims could be reduced or avoided through improved seat-belts. They also believe that the cost of medical care for car-crash victims can be reduced or eliminated with improved rear seat-belts.

For these reasons, the petitioners urge Parliament to institute mandatory installation of three-point adjustable lap/shoulder seat-belts for rear-seat passengers. As well, the petitioners request the mandatory installation of front seat air-bags.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The House resumed from Friday, June 12 consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons be appointed to consider and report on the "1987 Constitutional Accord, signed in Ottawa on June 3, 1987, by the First Ministers of Canada", copies of which were tabled in the Senate and the House of Commons on June 3, 1987;

That twelve Members of the House of Commons and five Members of the Senate be the Members of the Special Joint Committee, such Members on the part of the House of Commons to be designated no later than seven sitting days after the adoption of this motion;

That the Committee have the power to appoint from among its Members such sub-committees as may be deemed advisable, and to delegate to such sub-committees all or any of their powers except the power to report directly to the House;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House of Commons;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee be empowered to authorize television and radio broadcasting, as it deems appropriate, of any or all of its proceedings or of proceedings of its sub-committees, pursuant to the principles and practices governing the broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons;

That the Committee submit its report not later than September 14, 1987, provided that, if the House is not sitting, the report will be deemed submitted on the day such report is deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons and with the Clerk of the Senate;

That substitution be authorized, for Members from the House of Commons, from a list of alternates to be provided to the Joint Chairmen of the Special Joint Committee by a representative of each party at the first meeting of the Committee, such list of alternates to contain no more than twice the number of Members of the House of Commons who are Members of the Special Joint Committee representing each party in the House;

That the quorum of the Committee be eight Members, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, so long as both Houses are represented, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings, to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof, when six Members are present so long as both Houses are represented; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it to be advisable, five Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee; and the amendment of Mr. Nystrom, (p. 7051).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Nystrom:

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after paragraph 9 the following:

"That the Committee, or a sub-Committee, have power to travel to, and hold at least one public hearing in, each of the two Territories;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of advisors to assist in its work, and that it also be empowered to retain the professional, clerical and stenographic help as may be required; and"

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Nystrom) which was negatived on the following division:

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, June 4, consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 21A.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 16 to 21 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"rehear any application before deciding it."

• (1200)

He said: Madam Speaker, Motion No. 21A, as well as Motions Nos. 54A and 52A, are what we call the Fred Turner amendments. Motion No. 21A deletes language which allows the new National Transportation Agency to review decisions only if there has been a change in the facts. Our amendment removes that restriction.

In fact, Bill C-18 is worse than the existing review procedure which allows the CTC to review its own decisions without a change in facts. Many have been critical of the present procedure because any review that the CTC undertakes is a review of its own work.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is paying close attention because the proper method, especially on matters of enforcement, would be to have the matter forwarded to the independent aviation tribunal which presently reviews Transport Canada air regulations. I say to my hon. friend opposite that there is no way the Fred Turner case could have happened if this procedure had been followed.

In the absence of any interest on the part of the Government to change the presently unfair system, at least this amendment would prevent even more barriers being put in the way of an agency evaluating a decision. Mr. Turner, a fully licensed operator, lost his licence for being late in filing statistical reports. His licence was cancelled and the next day the bank seized his five aircraft, his hangar and equipment.

This morning I received from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board a case of an operator from Schefferville who was involved in the death of eight people. He was operating without a valid operating authority and is still licensed to fly. He was not late filing his reports, but eight people died.

There is a double standard when one loses one's licence for late filing of statistical reports, but only fined when operating without a valid operating authority or safety licence from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

Let me give another example. Spur Aviation was operating without a valid operating certificate and was fined $19,500. Mr. Turner appeared as a witness for the Government. However, Spur did not lose anything else and still has its aircraft. There must be a review of such situations.

Motions Nos. 52A and 54A, which we will be debated later, apply to this kind of situation as well. We must bring equity into the entire licensing process.

Mr. Turner lost his licence because he did not file statistical information on time. On the day that he appeared as a witness for the Government, his licence was cancelled. The airline that was being charged, and at which Mr. Turner appeared as a witness for the Government, is still operating without a valid operating authority. I invite the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) to consider the fact that it is flying without a safety certificate from Transport Canada.

We are told by the Government that there will be no compromise on safety, yet is it revoking the licence of that company? No. I suppose the Government will allow it to continue flying until it commits the great offence of not filing statistical information on time.

On September 30, a Beechcraft carrying seven passengers and a pilot crashed near Schefferville, killing all onboard. There was no operating authority, but did the Government pull the licence? Why should it when the operator was up to date in filing statistical information? That is the safety standard about which the Government says there will be no compromise. It is more concerned about the amount of fuel burned and the number of passengers than with how many were killed. The Government must get its priorities straight on aviation licensing.

These amendments are permissive because they state "may" rather than "shall", in allowing agencies to establish regulations regarding an appeal process. Hopefully, a Fred Turner case or one like it will have an element of natural justice because the person who made the original judgment cannot judge the appeal.

I believe that our amendment would guarantee that another case such as Mr. Turner's would be impossible. It allows offences such as failure to file paperwork to be dealt with under the Aeronautics Act, and would provide for fines or suspensions rather than cancellations.

According to Transport Canada regulations, licence cancellations are only issued for the most serious of offences. The reason Turnair's operating authority was cancelled was not because the punishment fitted the crime but because, as an agency, the CTC was not given the authority to fine.

Clause 107 gives that authority. Our amendment to Clause 107 guarantees that these specific clerical contraventions will be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000. That will better enforce the current regulations on filing documents because the penalty is believable as well as enforceable. Smaller airlines will want to avoid these fines and large airlines will not feel exempt from them due to their size. Would any CTC bureaucrat cancel Air Canada's licence for not forwarding a form, without first picking up the phone? I doubt it.

It is also more meaningful because some airlines have chosen to operate without an operating authority. Mr. Turner had a valid operating authority, but could not operate because his planes were seized. This latest incident, the documents about which I received this morning, I believe proves the case for these amendments, beginning with Motion 21A. I hope the Government will agree that such a procedure should be available.

The appeal should not come before a tribunal which judged the case in the first place. It should be before another body so that the operator will have a chance, especially when the issue has to do with something so flimsy as the late filing of statistical reports, when those who have accidents which kill people, and without an operating authority, are still operating.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak in favour of Motion No. 21A as well. Section 41 limits review of agency decisions or orders to situations where there have been changes in facts and would in practice, I submit, result in virtually no opportunity for review. Instead the NTA would merely be modifying its decisions or orders in light of these changed facts. When the review process circumvents any critical inspection of the agency's conduct, Madam Speaker, where does this leave the individual—and it could be you, me or any Canadian, subject to NTA regulations?

The section as is would mean no review of the agency's exercise of discretion, no review of the procedure followed in making a decision and no review of possible errors in fact or law. The end result is that an individual adversely affected by NTA regulation would have no administrative avenue for review or appeal save for the very expensive and slow route of the Federal Court system. How can we expect small businessmen or businesswomen, subject to these regulations, to challenge the agency in federal court? Is justice only to be available to those Canadians with sufficient funds to obtain it, those with very deep pockets?

The case of Fred Turner, to which the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) referred a moment ago, and his now defunct company Turnair, exemplifies the nightmarish predicament in which an individual may find himself or herself due to the lack of availability of review. In April, 1984, Mr. Turner's air carrier licence was cancelled by the soon to expire Canadian Transport Commission for failure to supply the agency with data of a purely statistical nature. A review of that cancellation order was warranted because many air carriers fail to file such data on time yet continue to hold licences. Is that equal justice for all? There are even licensed carriers with safety violations known by the CTC who have not been subjected to cancellation. Why did Turnair require such drastic treatment, especially since the records containing the required statistics were at the time in the hands of the RCMP due to the investigation by the CTC of another carrier? The details of that investigation were mentioned a moment ago by the Hon. Member for Regina West.

There may be no change in facts here, but the arbitrary and capricious manner in which the CTC exercised its discretion against a northern Canadian demands review. Who knows the procedures the agency followed which caused it to single out Mr. Turner and cancel his licence? I do not know, and I am sure very few people, if any know. Should a person who has lost his rights to earn a livelihood not know? Should we all not know? Yet Mr. Turner's requests for review were denied.

The result, sadly, is that Turner and his company are financially ruined. A year after the cancellation order, the Privy Council properly reinstated his licence. However, a year out of business caused the loss of all his business assets. He has begun a suit in the Federal Court but I understand he does not have the funds to complete it. In fact, as of August 2 of this year, Turner will have his home seized by the Royal Bank in Yellowknife.

Ironically, even if Turner had the funds to proceed in the courts, the CTC is claiming that no claim against it can be brought. It insists that Mr. Turner's remedies are limited to review and appeal processes within the agency regulations, including an appeal to the Governor in Council and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). Any honest, hardworking citizen like Fred Turner should have the right to appeal to an ultimate authority when an agency like the CTC is about to bankrupt him. Bill C-18 must include review processes which are effective and accessible when grounds for review exist. Limiting these grounds only increases the potential for "Fred Turner treatment" of other regulated individuals anywhere in the land. Availability of review, I submit, is necessary to uphold the principles of natural justice under which an administrative agency is obliged to act. In my view, Madam Speaker, all Hon. Members should vote for the amendment now before us.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I want to rise at this time to support the proposed amendment to Clause 41 because I also believe that the review powers of the new transportation agency created by Bill C-18 should be changed so that a decision of the new agency might be reviewed, rescinded of varied at the discretion of the agency without the need to limit the scope of this review to very specific circumstances. I too believe it is imperative that the agency be able to review as it sees fit because all Members of the Standing Committee on Transport have experienced that drama through which Mr. Fred Turner is now living.

I believe that the two speakers who rose before me—both the spokesman for the New Democratic Party and the representative of the Progressive Conservative Party—and I speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party we are aware that, faced with the whole administrative apparatus of the Government of Canada, this huge government machinery, it often happens that individual rights are crushed by the heavy government machinery. Mr. Turner's experience speaks for itself, I should think.

This is the case of a man who was the victim of such circumstances that the spirit of the law has been applied by officials with undue vigour and rigour. I am not here to judge the attitude of these officials. I believe they acted consciously with uncommon and perhaps excessive zeal. The aftermath of their decision is that an individual acting in good faith and operating under harsh conditions in Canada's northern regions had his licence revoked, which in turn led his business to bankruptcy. Mr. Turner may have made a few minor mistakes, but the consequences and the sanction are disproportionate. All of us Members of the Standing Committee on Transport felt that the consequences imposed to Mr. Turner are infinitely greater than the negligence or lapse which might have taken place with respect to the Canadian Transport Commission regulations. We had hope that a settlement agreement might be reached to enable Mr. Turner to resume his operations. This is why I chose to intervene personally in the House last May 15 by presenting a petition on behalf of many people who felt that the Government of Canada had inflicted an extreme injustice on Mr. Fred Turner by wrongfully depriving him of his right to earn a living through the operation of his family business. And the petitioners hoped the Government would appoint an independent arbitrator to investigate the details of this case, thus ensuring a settlement that better reflects the true nature of Mr. Fred Turner's loss. However, this petition received no response from the Government.

I remember, it must have been around the same time, in mid-May, that I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) about what could be done by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to try and find a way to agree on satisfactory compensation for Mr. Turner's loss of business.

We felt, and I say we, in referring to members of the Standing Committee on Transport, a group of Members representing different political factions but nevertheless anxious to find a solution to this problem, Members from all sides of the House, both Government and Opposition, we felt that one possibility would be to appoint an impartial arbitrator. And I think it is unfortunate, in the circumstances, that a way has yet to be found to deal with this flagrant injustice.

Some of our colleagues sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), asking him to intervene. The letter was signed by a dozen Members of the House of Commons and Senators who wanted the Prime Minister to intervene, not on the basis of law but of basic elementary justice, and find a way to make an ex gratia payment, with the authorization of Treasury Board, to compensate Mr. Turner. The letter, this petition that was sent to the Prime Minister, read as follows:

We believe the licence cancellation was wrong and unfair. The government apparently shares this opinion since on May 30, 1985, the Governor-in-Council, by order, reinstated Turnair's licence. Furthermore, on March 26, 1986, the Governor-in-Council authorized the payment, on an ex gratia basis, of $15,000 to Mr. Turner. In our view, this financial offer is a recognition by the government that Mr. Turner has suffered financial loss as a result of the Air Transport Committee's decision. This sum, however, does not reflect the magnitude of Mr. Turner's financial loss.

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister, in his answer to the Members of the House of Commons and the Senators who were the joint senders of the letter, said that the case was now before the courts and would have to be settled by the courts.

Now, I feel that this is the kind of case that should not be settled by the courts. We have here one man whose financial resources have dwindled to practically nothing. How is he going to stand up to the Government apparatus? Obviously, if the Government goes into its legalistic stance and says: "Let the law take its course, let Mr. Turner go before the courts, let him win his case before the courts", what it will cost the Government of Canada in legal expenses to defend the arbitrary and extreme position of its officials will, as far as I can tell, be a very substantial amount that could otherwise be used to compensate Mr. Turner and give him a chance to start up his airline again.

Why spend this money on legal costs? Why take this legalistic stance, since the Government could perfectly well admit its officials had been overzealous and that Mr. Turner should be given the benefit of the doubt and given a fair break?

I believe that the proposed amendment, if it is accepted, will give the new agency that is to replace the Canadian Transport Commission greater flexibility to review decisions. I think that with a little more goodwill and a little more discretion on the part of the Canadian Transport Commission, the Turner case could have been reviewed, not by the Government but by the existing Canadian Transport Commission. However, instead of agreeing that officials probably had been too severe in Mr. Turner's case and letting the Canadian Transport Commission revise its decision, the Government says: We can't do that. If Mr. Turner doesn't like it, let him go before the courts.

I think this is not the right approach. And I hope that the new agency will be able to act with far greater discretion and discernment and especially with far more flexibility.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I feel compelled to say a word or two about Mr. Turner's case in order to respond to the Hon. Members who have referred to his case in terms of this particular amendment.

The Turner case is a very complex case, as Hon. Members will appreciate, since it deals with the Canadian Transport Commission which not only has certain powers but has incredible responsibilities which Parliament has pressed upon it by statute in order to protect our fellow citizens. The CTC operates under a set of rules that are imposed upon it. It has the obligation to protect you, Madam Speaker, myself, and our fellow citizens.

The problem with Turnair started under the previous administration, and carried on into the term of the previous Minister of Transport and is now in the hands of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). The three Ministers tried to do what they felt was fair with respect to the over-all circumstances. However, never has any Minister admitted any question of liability in terms of the conduct of the Government of Canada or the Canadian Transport Commission. Any legal person who has looked into the matter on behalf of the Government, including the Ministers, have come to the conclusion that there was no legal liability.

Notwithstanding that, in order to save the time, the trouble and the costs of a lawsuit, which costs could amount to tens of thousands of dollars to the taxpayers of Canada, on a without prejudice basis the Minister said to Mr. Turner, "I am prepared to recommend to my colleagues the sum of $15,000".

When I looked into the matter as the Parliamentary Secretary I explored, on an entirely without prejudice basis and without any admission of liability at all, the possibility that perhaps an increased sum could be considered. Figures of $25,000, $30,000 and $40,000 were used. Mr. Turner started at $2 million and tried to work down from there.

I think Hon. Members have to appreciate that every time there is an air crash in Canada the CTC is attacked for not performing its duties. In the year in which we are talking about with respect to not filing information there were over 200 suspensions sent out. All those companies which received suspensions, with the exception of six, filed the appropriate information. Thus there were six actual suspensions after the sending out of some 200 letters asking for more information. Six companies did not provide the information and were suspended. Mr. Turner and Turnair fell into that category. In the case of Turnair there was no suggestion that there was a safety problem.

I ask Hon. Members to think of this. If the CTC had sent out a letter demanding information which was not provided, there was a crash and people were killed, then where would the CTC be? And where would we be as Members? We would be standing in this House, and quite properly, roasting the CTC for not following the rules and regulations that we ourselves set down in the statute and in the regulations.

I plead with Hon. Members to understand where the CTC is coming from on this. In our society, when an agreement as to liability cannot be achieved, the remedy is to use the courts. Mr. Turner in fact did use the courts. He brought an action for some $2 million, an action in which the Government of Canada has now filed its Statement of Defence.

If in fact Mr. Turner is impecunious, those who have some sympathy for his situation should look to assisting him in engaging a lawyer, who can then look at the liability and negotiate on a "without prejudice" basis with the lawyers for the Government of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Will you provide the money?

Mr. Thacker: It was not my friend from Regina West but another member of his Party who, during the time we were trying to negotiate with Mr. Turner on a "without prejudice" basis, stood in this House and revealed the nature of the discussions. There is no way that we can even talk with Mr. Turner because of what some of the members of the NDP have done. The only solution is for Mr. Turner to put his case into the hands of a lawyer, who can then look at it from the point of view of liability law.

I believe in his part of the country, the laws of Alberta apply, and under the laws of Alberta there is provision for contingency agreements. A law firm could take on his lawsuit under a contingency agreement whereby it would share in the proceeds. If Mr. Turner is correct in his position, a law firm could be riding that case for 30 per cent. Law firms are prepared to invest money for that type of possible return if in fact they feel there is a case to be made.

Mr. Benjamin: The case will be heard in Ottawa.

An Hon. Member: Where is the justice?

Mr. Thacker: There are remedies available to Mr. Turner. The long and short of it, Madam Speaker, is that the CTC is in a very difficult situation. If it does not follow the rules and problems develop, then we in Parliament end up roasting the CTC for not having followed the rules, as we should. No one has suggested that the CTC has not followed the rules. It has followed the rules set down by Parliament in the regulations. It is not an easy situation. That is where we find ourselves, and I ask Members to vote against the amendment.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: As the Hon. Member has not yet used up all of his 10 minutes of allocated time, perhaps he would accept a question.

Would he agree that this amendment does nothing more than to provide a proper review and appeal process before an agency other than the agency that made the original decision? That is all the amendment does. It does not deal specifically with the Fred Turner case. It only sees to it that there will not be another one like it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Would the Hon. Member care to answer?

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, let me just read Clause 41. It states:

> The Agency may review, rescind or vary any decision or order made by it or may rehear any application before deciding it—

That would be all that would be left after the NDP amendment, if it were accepted. Clause 41 continues:

> —if, in the opinion of the Agency, since the decision or order or the hearing of the application, there has been a change in the facts—

Surely there would have to be some change in the facts or the circumstances such that the agency would be convinced that a rehearing was in order.

With great respect to my friend from Regina West, I would rather have the clause as worded. Any change in the facts or circumstances could be used as justification by the agency for a rehearing.

Even under the rules of natural justice, if a tribunal makes a decision, it will not reconsider that decision unless it can be shown that there has been some change in facts—which sometimes is difficult to prove—or circumstances, which opens up the whole ball of wax.

With great respect, I think the clause is better the way it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 21A, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-18 be amended by deleting Clause 43.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I do not want to spend much time on this motion. The proposed amendment would eliminate Clause 43 of the Bill, which is a cost-recovery clause in respect of the services provided. As a matter of principle, and as part of our ongoing fight against this type of cost recovery, we would like to see Clause 43 deleted from the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 22, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consideration of Motions Nos. 27, 31, and 32, which will be debated together but voted on separately.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

"by the matter submitted, and

(ii) the amount of revenue at issue is not, of itself, the factor which determines public interest, or

(iii) one or more carriers in the same mode of transportation as the carrier that is party to the arbitration submission, offers or is able to offer, either individually or jointly, competing service for the traffice at issue, or

(iv) the award of the arbitrator may impair the economic viability of the carrier or shipper, or

(v) the matter relates to the movement by rail of trailers or containers on flat cars, or less than carload traffic, and

(vi) the matter should be investigated by the Agency pursuant to section 59;

(c) the parties have not first availed themselves of mediation proceedings pursuant to section 46;

(d) one or more of the carriers participating in the movement are not subject to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator unless all participating carriers agree, in writing, to be bound by the award of the arbitrator.

(4) A determination by the Agency subject to subsection (1) that a matter be referred to final offer arbitration shall not bar the arbitrator from finding that there is alternative, effective, adequate and competitive transportation service for the traffic at issue."

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 48 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 21 the following:

"(5) Where the Agency finds that a shipper is not in a position to enter into an agreement as described in subsection 4 for any reason which is not likely to frustrate the arbitration, the Agency may allow the shipper to provide a written bona fide offer to ship the goods to which the arbitration relates in accordance with the decision of the arbitrator, as compliance with that section."

"(6) A notice of the submission to the Agency under subsection (1) shall be publicized, specifying the name of the shipper, the name of the carrier, the commodity and the origin and destination of the movements, and providing 30 days for interested parties to make submissions to the Agency before any decision is made on whether the matter should proceed under arbitration or should be investigated by the Agency pursuant to section 59."

He said: Madam Speaker, these three motions have to do with the final offer arbitration clauses. In all three motions we are attempting to provide additional reasons why the agency shall not allow for final arbitration. That is, Motion No. 27 relates to the number of reasons a shipper may feel captive and, therefore, eligible for final offer arbitration.

Many transportation companies have expressed the concern that this is a shippers' Bill. I think they are partly right, because it allows shippers to force transportation companies to cut their own throats when there is no one else around prepared to do it.

The problem is that the phrase "captive shippers" originated many years ago when there was little or no trucking industry and when there was no air cargo or air transport industry. Therefore, a shipper was a captive of one railroad. Nowadays a shipper might have only one railroad, but he has 50 trucking companies which are available to transport his goods and/or air cargo or air express services.

I think the term "captive shipper" is badly over-used. Quite frankly, there are shippers claiming captive status who should not have the nerve to claim it any more.

Motion No. 31 amends the clause which insists that the shipper guarantee movement and abide by the arbitrator's decision prior to the arbitration beginning. Surely that must be backwards. Government drafters blew it on that one.

That is all very well, except the customer really dictates whether or not the goods shall move. Because the customer is not and cannot be a party to the arbitration, the amendment would allow for a bona fide offer to move the goods. The assumption is that if the deal falls through, it will not be due to bad faith on the part of the parties to the operation.

Motion No. 31 is particularly important to small shippers, and the transportation critic of the Official Opposition Party also mentioned it. It concerns a company called Prairie Malt which handles malting barley and supplies a number of organizations in the country that bottle stuff for football and baseball games. It is of particular significance for small shippers.

A large shipper which moves thousands of carloads or truckloads per year is in a position to make a very good deal with a transporter, whether it is a railway or a trucking company. However, the small shipper which might only ship from 50 to 200 carloads will not get the same kind of deal.

Motion No. 32 opens up the amount of information available about an arbitration; more information would be available. The assumption is that if there is enough public knowledge, other competitive solutions will be brought forward and other interested parties would at least know that an arbitration is ongoing.

We are proposing to open up the final arbitration process, upon which the Government insists in the Bill, in terms of information available. We are trying to make an even balance between the interest of the shipper and the interest of the transporter, which would give the arbitrator even more solid ground on which to make a decision.

We think these motions would improve the legislation. We have consulted with numerous organizations and individuals who have asked the Government for these amendments. I hope the Government will decide that they are acceptable.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I wish to take part in this debate to express the concern of the Liberal Party about the whole section on arbitration contained in Bill C-18.

We had expressed reservations about these provisions in Committee since it seemed obvious, as we tried to show the Government, that there was a weakness in the new procedure under which, if a shipper is dissatisfied with the rates applied or proposed by a carrier or the conditions associated with the movement of his goods and there is no possibility of an agreement between the shipper and the carrier, the matter can be referred to the Agency for arbitration.

It seems to us that this procedure will become extremely costly, especially as the inevitable consequence of Clause 48 will be that such matters will be negotiated before the arbitrator by legal representatives. It would be unthinkable that railroad companies and those who oppose their proposals go before the arbitrator themselves to make their own representations.

This will give lawyers and law firms throughout the country a lot of business, and shippers, who were expecting that the new procedure would reduce their transport costs, will see very quickly their legal fees increase by 500 per cent. What they gain thanks to lower shipping costs, they will probably lose in higher legal fees.

In my opinion, this arbitration proposal, which could have been interesting, will very quickly become a very costly procedure which will make no one happy. In fact, the arbitrator will have considerable power to determine in the last instance the transport rates for products and goods and the conditions under which carriers will deal with their customers.

Such intervention by a third party in the process seems extremely dangerous to me. We can hope that the chosen arbitrators will be experts who do a faultless job, but I am not at all certain that such will be the case. I believe that no one is better qualified to judge these matters than the employees of the transport companies or the administrators of shipping companies who work on the field and know exactly what is going on.

I would like to underline one last time to the House that this whole arbitration process seems extremely dangerous to me, and I suspect that, within a few years, we shall have to repair the damage done by this procedure as it is not one of the better ideas of this Government.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, for the information of the House, we find ourselves unable to accept Motion No. 27 but Motion No. 31 is quite acceptable and I would ask Hon. Members to vote for that if they will. We cannot accept Motion No. 32.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 27 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 31 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 31 (Mr. Benjamin) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 32 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to debate Motions Nos. 33 and 34 which will be debated together and voted on separately.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 50 by adding immediately after line 15 at page 22 the following:

"(3) Within fifteen days of the Agency referring the matter for arbitration, the parties shall exchange the information which they intend to submit to the arbitrator in support of their final offers.

(4) Within seven days of receipt of the information referred to in subsection (3) each party may direct interrogatories to the other which shall be answered within fifteen days of receipt thereof.

(5) If a party unreasonably withholds information that is subsequently deemed to be relevant by the arbitrator, such withholding shall be taken into account by the arbitrator in his decision."

"(2) Unless the parties otherwise agree, in rendering a decision the arbitrator shall have regard to the factors set out in section 3(1)."

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, very briefly, I would explain for the record the purpose of the two motions. Motion No. 33 opens up the arbitration process by allowing for a reasonable exchange of information prior to an arbitration. The purpose is to inhibit the arbitration from being a shell game.

Motion No. 34 insists that the arbitrator consider the policy objectives of the Bill when making a decision. Our primary interest is in the safety aspect. We want to ensure that arbitrators can consider the detrimental effects of any decision based on lower tariffs and on the shipper of higher tariffs. We want to make sure that that is in the Bill so that the arbitrator can consider those.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Carried.

Mr. Fennell: No!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, it is a little late now. You cannot call twice for those in favour. No one said no until he hollered over here and he is not in his seat.

Mr. Fennell: No, he didn't holler, I hollered. He hollered before—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Obviously the Chair did not hear at that time but had not yet gone through the yeas and the nays. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, surely it is a fundamental rule of the House that when the Speaker does not hear, the Speaker rules accordingly. You did not hear, you just admitted that. Therefore, that motion carries.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, just briefly, Your Honour will be aware that there have been precedents of this nature before in which the Speaker has declared an amendment carried. Following the declaration that an amendment is carried, clearly it is quite improper to suggest that we then revert in effect to the yeas and the nays. The Speaker is in a position to call for the yeas and the nays prior to declaring a motion carried, but once having declared the motion carried, surely Your Honour recognizes that we should move on to the next order of business and the Government should graciously accept.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I apologize in this case but what happened was when they yelled "agreed" we did not act quickly enough. You said "carried" and then we said "no". I apologize for that, but unfortunately it was done a little too quickly. The next time around, I would ask the Chair to please look at us for the nays.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is in some difficulty. I must admit that, not having heard any "nays", the Chair has declared the motion carried. After listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), I am willing to admit that the Chair might have been a bit too hasty. However, I believe that all the Hon. Members should be more careful and try to reply clearly so that the Chair can hear them.

Consequently, I declare Motion No. 33 carried.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

The next question is on Motion No. 34 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

CALL FOR CHANGE IN ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, June 13, two years after the Canadian Jobs Strategy began, the Government finally saw the light and changed the program to permit greater participation by immigrant and native women.

For many months the Community Coalition on the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, the Association of Canadian Community Colleges, the Ontario Government, and the Liberal Opposition in Parliament condemned the unfairness of the entry requirement that you must be unemployed for 24 weeks out of the last 30 in order to qualify for the program. Finally the Government changed that for immigrant and native women.

Why is the Government going only halfway? Why keep this inflexible entry rule at all? What about all those people who are out of work and need training but have not yet been unemployed for 24 weeks? Must they wait around for five or six months before they get help? Or must they continue to accept unskilled, part-time, short term and low pay employment? Since the Government has now admitted that the original program was flawed, why not go the full distance and change the entrance requirements for all applicants?

CREATION OF JOBS THROUGHOUT COUNTRY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, since September, 1984, when Canadians opted for sound economic management, some 840,000 jobs have been created in Canada.

The best the critics can do to detract from this good news is to say that all the jobs are in Ontario. The fact is the jobs are spread around. There are 388,000 in Ontario, 220,000 in Quebec, 92,000 in British Columbia, and 50,000 in the Atlantic region. Even on the Prairies, despite record low grain, oil, potash and uranium prices there are 88,000 more people working.

Wherever the jobs are in Canada, I applaud the Government for creating an environment in which private sector initiative and entrepreneurship have been able to put over 840,000 more Canadians to work.

I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the success of their economic policies which have given all Canadians greater access to more jobs regardless of where they live.

REFUGEES

CRITICISM OF PROVISIONS OF BILL C-55

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, CLC President Shirley Carr sent a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) two weeks ago calling Bill C-55, the Government's refugee legislation, a betrayal of trust and a mockery of fundamental rights. Flaws she noted were denial of universal access, denial of appeal, and denial of those coming from so-called safe countries such as Central Americans applying from the U.S. She also objected to the philosophy of the Bill which blames refugees for problems in the refugee determination system and seems designed to keep refugees out of Canada.

At the same time, a telex from spokespersons for the Anglican, Baptist, Christian Reformed, Mennonite, Presbyterian, United and Roman Catholic Churches, along with the Religious Society of Friends, the Salvation Army, and the Canadian Council of Churches, made the same points. They said "The Bill is being promoted on the false premise that it will protect genuine refugees. It is clear that the effect of this Bill will be to turn away refugees."

"The 'alleged abuse', which is the pretext for this flawed piece of legislation, is primarily the result of prolonged government delays in reforming the present drawn-out and cumbersome procedure." They demand a Bill to help refugees.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

SIZE OF CORPORATION'S DEFICIT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, judging by the just released 1986 annual report of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation it has evidently been living through some very interesting times. Highlights are the $1.25 billion deficiency in the deposit insurance fund and the $1 billion loan from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

The corporation estimates that even with no new demands on the insurance fund it will take until 1994 to eliminate the deficit with the current one-tenth of 1 per cent premium rate. Therefore, whether we like it or not, there is no real alternative except to approve the provisions of Bill C-42 which would authorize increased premium rates and a higher ceiling on government lending to the corporation.

THE MINISTRY

IMPORTANCE OF ANSWERING QUESTIONS PRECISELY

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, last June 11 I directed a question to the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) concerning the plight of homeless youth.

I asked the Minister what steps he intended to take in an attempt to improve the lot of thousands of Canadian youths faced with this serious problem. Instead of answering the question, the Minister chose to censure me for not being in the House when my Party moved an opposition motion dealing mainly with education, training and employment.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that this kind of reproach on the part of a parliamentarian is unacceptable and uncalled for. All the more so because on several occasions last March we had to put off a question period on youth because the Minister of State was away from the House most of that month. I knew he must have had excellent reasons not to attend.

On May 7 I had a personal commitment which I simply could not defer. The Minister's display of arrogance last Thursday compels me to set the record straight.

This being International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, Mr. Speaker, it was utterly deplorable that the Minister should behave that way in the House instead of answering questions precisely, if only to show that he is genuinely concerned over the plight of young Canadians.

POLITICAL PARTIES

THE CCF AND THE NDP

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): In 1932, Mr. Speaker, a group of Canadians, significantly linked through geographical circumstances, decided to establish a political Party, the Canadian Commonwealth Federation, or CCF. From 1932 to 1961, Party activists could not manage to develop principles, let alone national programs. Opportunism being their forte, they attempted to fool the people by changing the name of their Party, not a particularly challenging initiative when the name does not reflect the truth.

From the smoking ashes of the CCF sprang the NDP in 1961. The activists of this Party have yet to set forth a major policy. Their opportunism has taught them to change on a daily basis to mirror the colour of the day. The only qualifier which would fit every last one of them, their leader included, is the word socialist. How else could anyone appear at the International Socialist convention under another hat?

Since the Rhinocéros Party is now defunct, another rare, and excentric animal whose colours match the surrounding foliage should be their inspiration in the quest for a new name, the Chameleon Party.

CHILDREN

EFFECTS OF POVERTY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recent surveys show that increasing numbers of Canadian children are going to school hungry. Teachers report that these children are less attentive, fall asleep in class, are irritable and more aggressive. They are sick a lot, and are often late for school or do not show up at all.

Poverty affects one in five Canadian children. Most will continue the poverty cycle. Children do not get enough to eat because welfare rates are too low in every region of Canada. The federal Government cannot sit idly by and say this is a provincial matter. It must take initiatives to combat child hunger and poverty.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) must guarantee that there will be no sales tax on food. He must increase and fully reindex the child tax credit and the family allowance. Tax reform must restore full indexation to the income tax system as one means of counteracting child poverty.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPRESENTATION OF CLIENTS BY ARRESTED IMMIGRATION CONSULTANT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and his Department for initiating action against those so-called immigration consultants whose specialty is to prey on human misery. These individuals have caused untold human suffering within the Portuguese community by promising unsuspecting individuals an easy road to becoming landed immigrants. Thus the Minister's action was thoroughly endorsed and appreciated by the Portuguese community.

However, the positive aspects of the action are beginning to fade. Two days after the arrests took place Joe Raphael, one of the consultants charged and an individual who is notorious for counselling people to circumvent Canadian immigration law, was again representing clients in front of the Immigration Appeal Board.

By continuing to represent clients Mr. Raphael is continuing to project the image that he is above the law and can deliver on any immigration matter. Until their cases are heard a cease and desist order should be issued against these individuals. The Government must make it clear that no immigration consultant is above the law.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR IMPOSITION OF FULL ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, today is the eleventh anniversary of the Soweto uprising and yet there continues to be a terrorist Government in South Africa which is supported by being recognized by other countries around the world. That self-same Government has over 5,000 children in detention without ever having charges laid against them.

This House passed an all-Party resolution on September 30, 1986, calling upon the Government to impose full economic sanctions against South Africa. I urge the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), whose efforts were spurned in Venice, to move ahead with full economic sanctions so that Canada can be a leader rather than a follower in the fight against the heinous regime which currently calls itself the Government of South Africa.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY WEEK

CANADIAN SOCIETY OF SAFETY ENGINEERING—CONGRATULATIONS ON INITIATIVE

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to extend my best wishes to the Canadian Society of Safety Engineering on the occasion of their 1987 Canadian Occupational Health and Safety Week.

All of us in this House must be increasingly concerned with Canada's record in respect to work-related injuries and illnesses. In addition to the immeasurable human suffering there is financial cost to the nation amounting to billions of dollars each year. Legislation on its own cannot prevent accidents and illnesses, but legislation combined with labour, management, and government sharing responsibility can indeed improve an unacceptable situation. Organizations such as CSSE have an important role to play in this process.

I invite all Hon. Members on both sides of the House to join with me in congratulating this organization on its safety week initiative and in wishing it success in all endeavours in the months ahead.

HIGHWAYS

NEED TO UPGRADE TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this week the Canadian Construction Association called for $500 million annually of federal assistance to highway construction.

This call is timely in view of the poor state of our highways, especially the Trans-Canada Highway through northern Ontario.

The call also follows on some federal recognition of responsibility for highway improvement in Atlantic Canada, Quebec and the western provinces. Every province except Ontario now has an agreement with the federal Government on highways improvement.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has not, however, responded favourably to requests I have made, as has the Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), to assist the Province of Ontario in the upgrading and twinning of the Trans-Canada Highway through northern Ontario.

Northern Ontario contains one-quarter of the total length of the Trans-Canada Highway. The Province of Ontario is only now beginning to recognize its responsibility to make this a first-class highway.

I call upon the Minister of Transport to respond favourably to Ontario's request for federal assistance for improvement of our Trans-Canada Highway.

NATIONAL PARKS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND NATIONAL PARK—SUGGESTED RENAMING OF RUSTICO ISLAND AS ROBINSON ISLAND

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, one of the ideas behind establishing National Parks in Canada was to maintain our country's and our people's heritage.

Rustico Island, in Prince Edward Island National Park, should rightfully be called Robinson Island, after the Robinson family who purchased, settled, and farmed it in 1815.

The Robinson family had been on Prince Edward Island since 1778, arriving there with other Loyalists from the United States. While many of those Loyalists returned to England, the Robinson family stayed, and worked long and hard to develop their island, their province and their country.

The island the Robinsons settled was known as Robinson Island until the Government took over the land now known as the National Park. Even after the National Park was established, the Island was known to most as Robinson Island. In fact the 1968 official road map of Prince Edward Island refers to that island as Robinson Island.

It is only fitting that Rustico Island should once again be called Robinson Island in honour of the family who pioneered it.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF TOWN OF MOUNT ROYAL

TRIBUTE TO MAYOR REGINALD DAWSON AND VOLUNTEERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, one of the municipalities in my riding, the Town of Mount Royal, is proud and delighted to be celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary this year.

Last week, many activities were organized to mark this event, including exhibitions by artists, concerts by the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, the Metropolitan Orchestra and the Mount Royal Choir.

[English]

Many citizens of varied faiths and from 30 countries enrich the fabric of this very special town. Sunday's anniversary services brought moving greetings and song from its nine religious institutions. Tuesday's colourful multicultural day gave the visual, artistic and culinary reflection of this fascinating cultural diversity.

I was delighted to share in a number of these activities with the people of the Town of Mount Royal, and I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the many volunteers without whom these festivities would not have been such a resounding success.

[English]

I send warmest greetings to its outstanding mayor, Mr. Reginald Dawson, who has been a warm and caring chief magistrate for 35 years. His superb reputation has been acknowledged beyond the physical boundaries of his city.

Diamond Jubilee Festivity Week was a time for the expression of civic pride and was certainly enjoyed by all.

NECESSITY NOT TO IMPEDE GOOD NEGOTIATING PRACTICES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post's letter carriers are on strike as of midnight last night. Unfortunately, no settlement could be reached to prevent this work stoppage which is adversely affecting all Canadian citizens. Especially in regions like Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, taxpayers will feel the absence of postal services as a particular burden since they have so few alternatives and distances are far greater than in urban areas.

However, it is encouraging to hear that negotiations are continuing, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that no one will do anything to keep them from proceeding as they should. I have a special message for Mrs. Shirley Carr, President of the Canada Labour Congress, whom I would urge not to get involved in this dispute. In some statements she made recently, Mrs. Carr prejudged the direction this dispute might take, and I can only deplore this attitude.

I feel we should put our trust in the Parties concerned and the democratic negotiating process, and avoid making unfounded statements of this kind.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, everyone deplores the strike at Canada Post, but even worse, Mr. Speaker, is what happened this morning in Montreal, when Canada Post Corporation launched an appeal to all workers willing to replace the letter carriers. As a result of this appeal—

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: —a Conservative Member just said: hear, hear, but as a result, in Montreal there was some rough stuff and people got hurt.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who has some experience in negotiating and mediating, to call the President of Canada Post immediately and ask him to drop this strategy which only leads to provocation and will not resolve the dispute. Ask the President of Canada Post to negotiate and to settle the dispute instead of indulging in provocation.

NATIONAL PARKS

BREAKDOWN OF NEGOTIATIONS TO CREATE PROPOSED SOUTH MORESBY NATIONAL PARK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The first promise made by the Minister of the Environment when he was sworn into office was the creation of a national park in South Moresby in the Queen Charlotte Islands. On May 14 of this year when the House was addressing the issue, the Minister of the Environment had this to say, and I quote:

> We owe it to ourselves, to the world community as a whole and to generations yet unborn to save what is the most internationally significant wilderness treasure in all of Canada. South Moresby is a litmus test of our values as a society.

Those were the Minister's words and I endorse those words heartily. Does the Prime Minister stand by the first promise made by his Minister of the Environment? And will there indeed be a national park in South Moresby?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable sadness that I have to report to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and through him to the House, that negotiations between the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia on the establishment of a national park in South Moresby have broken down.

For our part, the federal Government has offered to the Province of British Columbia a package which is unprecedented in its generosity. Over $100 million was put on the table by the federal Government toward that end. I regret that in its wisdom the B.C. Government thought the amount was not sufficiently large to merit its continuation of negotiations with us. However, I can assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that our offer, generous as it is, stands.

If in the light of day the Province of British Columbia has second thoughts on the question, we will send a high-level team of officials, representing the federal Government and the people of Canada, anywhere that B.C. would like us to have them meet, for any purpose surrounding the park.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the Minister considers this of such importance within the domain entrusted to him by the people of Canada through the Prime Minister that he would want to prevail upon the Leader of the Government, the Prime Minister, to intervene directly with the Premier of British Columbia to persuade the province and the federal teams to return to the table in order to save what is an absolutely priceless treasure, one which can never be restored if action is not taken immediately. I would hope the Prime Minister would see it that way and make an undertaking to this House that he would be in immediate communication with Premier Vander Zalm.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if a national park in South Moresby is not established, it will not be for lack of trying on the part of the Government of Canada much less the Prime Minister. I can tell the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the House, and the entire country that, just as I have had the support of all Parties in this House in connection with the establishment of a national park, I have had the full backing of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government caucus, including the B.C. caucus on the government side.

Our offer of $106 million toward the establishment of this park is more generous than that offered by any previous Government for any park in any province or territory in the Dominion of Canada. In fact, with one exception, this $106 million is more than the federal Government has spent on all other national parks combined.

REQUEST FOR EFFORTS TO REOPEN NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is perfectly correct when he says that he has the support of the House. On May 14 he had the support of every single Member who was in the House for the creation of a national park, for the protection of the rights of the Haida people, for a moratorium on logging, and for reasonable compensation to loggers who may lose their jobs. He had the total reinforcement of the House of Commons.

The Government of Canada has always refused to reveal what its negotiating strategy was with the Province of British Columbia. Initially, when the Minister was sworn into his portfolio, and then on May 14, he promised a fruitful result. We have failed. The Minister has failed.

Understanding the jurisdiction of the Province of British Columbia in this matter, by what date will the Minister, through the Prime Minister, the full force of the federal Government and the mobilization of public opinion in the country and of the Province of British Columbia, persuade the Premier to return to the table with his own Minister and get a positive result to save South Moresby?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the South Moresby file turns out to be a failure it will not be a failure only of this Minister of the Environment. It will be a failure not only of this Government but of all of Canada. As I pointed out on the floor of the House of Commons on a previous occasion, whether or not we can screw up the courage and the will to save this magnificent wilderness treasure will be a litmus test of our values as a civilized country.

Having said that, we have put on the table not only $106 million, but we have put to the Province of British Columbia our generous offer of compensation to the two main forestry companies concerned, Western Forest Products and MacMillan Bloedel. We have offered to compensate in an unprecedented way the logging contractor, Frank Beban. We have put together a package that would be generous to the loggers themselves. We have offered to involve the Haida in the establishment of a national park and in the administration of it, not just as lowly paid assistant wardens but as leaders and interpreters of the heritage values in South Moresby. There could not be a more magnanimous offer by the federal Crown to the provincial Crown than that which we have put on the table.

I urge the Leader of the Opposition, his Party, and every Member of the House to use all our resources to bring wisdom to bear on this very important international question.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—HAIDA PEOPLE'S ABORIGINAL TITLE CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister knows, the Queen Charlottes are the home of the Haida people. They claim aboriginal title to these islands because they have lived there for many thousands of years. In fact, their claim was recognized by the federal Government in 1983.

Since the Government has now failed in its efforts to establish a national park in South Moresby how then will the Government fulfil its constitutional obligations to the Haida people before this precious heritage is decimated?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one of the strengths of the approach that the federal Government has taken to this issue is that we had in mind the establishment not of a national park per se but of something even more precious in one sense—a national park reserve which had the advantage to the Haida people of not prejudicing their negotiations with the federal Crown in connection with their legitimate interests in the Queen Charlotte Islands, specifically in the context of land claims.

The Hon. Member, in his question, said that the negotiations have failed. While we have reached an impasse and negotiations have broken off, we have said, for our part that our offer stands.

We hope that the people of British Columbia and their Government will see the wisdom of the offer that was put on the table. It isn't over until it is over.

Next week the B.C. Government, I understand, will be considering the possibility of establishing a provincial park, of much smaller boundaries than those we had in mind for a national park. That decision has not, however, yet been taken, and until it is we remain in the game, and we hope that British Columbia will be in the game, too.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, who tried to negotiate this deal.

It seems that this Government is always having sand kicked in its face. Is it not true that the Government of Canada is simply giving up on trying to preserve South Moresby and the rights of the Haida?

Can this Government not stand up to Bill Vander Zalm? Or is this an example of the new federalism that is being talked about across the way?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is not the "new federalism", but the people of Canada certainly do not want the old federalism as practised by the Liberal Party.

I would hope that the spirit of non-partisanship that characterized the opening question of the Leader of the Official Opposition would prevail during this most delicate period, or at least pan-partisanship, without which we are not going to have any success in negotiating this very difficult agreement.

COMPENSATION ISSUE—REQUEST FOR ARBITRATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question also relates to the matter of the South Moresby Islands, a national treasure of Canada.

As the Minister of the Environment has indicated, on May 14 last the people of Canada, through their elected representatives, indicated a commitment to establishing the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a national park. That commitment came in the form of a motion unanimously passed by the House.

We all appreciate the efforts put forth by the Government and the various Parties to facilitate that, and we were disappointed this morning on learning that the negotiations had in fact broken down.

We hear from British Columbia that the negotiations broke down because the two parties were unable to agree on what would be adequate compensation for the projected losses involved in South Moresby becoming a national park.

Would the Minister entertain bringing in a third party to conduct an independent audit of what the projected losses would be, and would he be prepared to abide by the results of that audit, on the premise that he cannot afford not to afford turning South Moresby into a national park?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the question of compensation to third party interests was a highly salient one in the negotiations. However, it would not be correct to say that that was the most important issue in contention.

At the outset of the negotiations the B.C. Government insisted that the federal Crown put on the table $100 million for the establishment of a trust fund, and that is a position it maintained right through to the point negotiations were broken off. That is $100 million even before the federal Government spends a solitary penny on the establishment of the park itself: in other words, the compensation to third party interests, the investment in tourism infrastructures and other facilities necessary to the establishment of a national park.

For various reasons we considered that position unacceptable. While the B.C. Government did come back with an offer that superficially looked like a compromise, the fine print indicated that it was just the old offer rehashed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister.

As the Minister of the Environment has indicated, while negotiations have essentially broken down, it is not over until it is over.

Recognizing that the B.C. Cabinet will not meet until next week on the question of establishing South Moresby as a provincial park—something which would not be in the nation's best interests—would the Prime Minister consider dealing directly with the Premier of British Columbia on this matter?

It may be that the two of them, in the absence of the bureaucracy, in the absence of the negotiators, can resolve the present impasse.

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we have a very attractive and substantial offer on the table. The Deputy Prime Minister was personally involved, as was the Minister of the Environment, in considering all aspects of a very complex and sensitive matter and, in the process, I think reflected pretty well and pretty generously the views of all Parties in the House in trying to come to an equitable solution of the matter.

I think I am satisfied, as would be any reasonable Member of the House, that the position put forward by the federal Government is very much a generous one, very much persuasive of the objective being sought, and very much in the national interest.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—BANK OF MONTREAL'S REFUSAL OF TERMS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the Bank of Montreal reaffirmed its decision not to approve the bid by Amoco Canada to take over Dome Petroleum. As a major creditor of Dome Petroleum, the refusal of the Bank of Montreal to accept that bid pretty well kills the Amoco Canada deal to take over Dome Petroleum. What could possibly happen, very shortly after June 30, is that Dome Petroleum could be forced into bankruptcy.

When will the Government realize that new bids have to be made and the way has to be open for the new bids to be made so that a more acceptable deal can be put on the table for the sale of Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member's question is wishful thinking, but the Senate is not the place for banking institutions to formerly put their views forward. They can make their views known publically. But if banking institutions, if the Bank of Montreal in particular wants to reject the proposal made to it, its decision should be announced to Dome. To my knowledge, it did not do so. Therefore, as long as formal decisions are not made in the right forum, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what the Hon. Member elaborated in this House is not true at this point.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy just does not understand the situation.

Ms. Copps: That's right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: The Bank of Montreal does not have to notify anybody. It stated that it would not approve it. It is not a question of turning it down; it is a question of the Bank of Montreal not approving it. I have said that the Bank of Montreal is not going to approve it, so the deal is dead.

What will the Government of Canada do? Does the Government want Dome Petroleum to go into bankruptcy? Is that the idea? It is no longer a hypothetical question; it is a question which is before us right now. We have until June 30 to decide what will be done. Is the Government willing to let Dome Petroleum go into bankruptcy? If not, what will it do to stop it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Montreal, however large it may be, is only one creditor among dozens of others. And that matter will not be solved in this House, it will be solved where it should be, that is between Dome and its creditors, rather than through oral questions in this House.

LETTER CARRIERS' STRIKE—ACTIONS ANNOUNCED BY MANAGEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the postal strike. The whole country would like to see the mail being delivered. As the Prime Minister knows, to have that as a possibility there must be flexibility on both sides of the negotiating table.

Last night at 12.01 a.m., before any strike action was taken, the management of the Post Office informed the letter carriers of two things: first, they planned to hire strike-breakers at seven cents an hour more than the best paid letter carriers were getting—additional pay for crossing picket lines—and, second, they extraordinarily announced the abolition of Article V in the agreement which protects workers from discrimination based on sex, religion, and age.

Does the Prime Minister think that such action by postal management is unnecessarily provocative?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation as of midnight last night is that the union is in a position to strike legally and the Post Office is in a position for a legal lock-out, although it has not taken that route. I understand that legally the existing contract is no longer in place.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party is talking about specifics of the particular negotiations and the tactics being used on one side—and there are tactics being used on the other side—trying to bring about pressure so that a negotiated settlement can be reached.

I do not think it is of benefit to that agreement, to either of the parties, and certainly not to the public, that we try to carry on those kinds of discussions and negotiations on the floor of the House of Commons.

They are discussing things now at the Chateau Laurier Hotel. I think we should encourage them to continue discussing them and to reach a negotiated settlement as soon as possible.

REPORTED ABOLITION OF COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT DISCRIMINATION PROVISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say with total sincerity that if we were discussing normal, bargainable items, I could not agree more with the Minister. However, in a House which has adopted the Charter of Rights and is currently discussing constitutional improvements, does the Minister find it acceptable, even if it is legally possible, that an agency of the Crown should say to its workers that it will now abolish, because it has the legal authority to do so, a clause designed to protect its workers from religious, sex, and age discrimination? It seems to me that these fundamental rights ought to belong to any worker in Canada in the public or private sector.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, those rights belong to any and every worker in Canada, every citizen in Canada. They are guaranteed under the Charter of Rights.

The Post Office, like everybody else in the country, must obey the law. It would be absolutely unacceptable to have any discrimination based upon any of those factors about which the Leader of the New Democratic Party talked.

If he has evidence of the Post Office acting in a discriminatory fashion, contrary to the Charter of Rights, contrary to the direction which the House would unanimously give it, I ask him to please raise it, and I will certainly raise hell with management of the Post Office if that is the case.

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF PROVISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister—and I heard his words with care; I accept his commitment to carry it out—has now committed himself to doing something.

There are now more than 400 cases based exactly on that clause which are up for consideration. That is precisely why the clause was put there, to protect the rights.

I have heard what the Minister just said. When it comes to fundamental rights—and, in fairness, whatever else they may do in the bargaining is up to them—will the Minister go back to management and say that this kind of action is unacceptably provocative and that they must put back into place Article V to protect the workers from this kind of discrimination?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the benefit of the old agreement in front of me to look at Article V, but I believe the Hon. Member is referring to the article dealing with the filing of grievances and so on.

As of midnight the entire agreement is no longer in place. The Post Office has indicated that it intends to follow the spirit of the agreement.

I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party is making mischief if he is suggesting that putting aside the grievance procedure now—and there are some 16,000 grievances filed each year—until a contract is negotiated is somehow an attempt by management to discriminate based upon religion, sex, or racial background; that is a malicious and false accusation.

Oral Questions

LETTER CARRIERS' STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. By forcing Canada Post to balance its books by the end of this fiscal year instead of the five-year period recommended by the Marchment Committee, and by refusing to intervene in the labour negotiations, the Government has imposed a postal strike on Canadians.

Now that the Government has its own strike, what next? Is the Government ready to do something in an attempt to prevent rotating strikes from turning into a full-fledged national strike that could affect every business and individual in Canada, or does the Government want to continue simply sitting on its hands watching the world unfold?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday with respect to intervention through the Canada Labour Code and the Department of Labour, a conciliator was appointed, a commissioner was appointed, and a report has been tabled. The parties were negotiating yesterday. They are still negotiating today and I think we should again encourage the parties to come to an agreement.

INQUIRY CONCERNING CONCRETE ACTION PROPOSED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (St. Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is confirming the Government has been attempting to have its job done by others, which has not worked. Conciliation did not work. We have reached the point where, unless the Government does something, we will end up with a national strike, a full-fledged national strike that may lead to violence, that may affect everyone in this country, including the economy. I would like to have an answer from the Government. What concrete steps will they take to end that strike, instead of constantly answering: We will let them negotiate. To this day it has not worked. What will you be inventing?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly the question put by the Hon. Member, he is blaming us for implementing the Labour Code. Is the Hon. Member speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party, and is he suggesting we should abolish the right to strike?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF FIRM IN MISSISSAUGA

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is very difficult for a Member representing a riding like Mississauga North to complain. Mississauga North has benefited greatly from Conservative policies since 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Mississauga North has 7,000 thriving businesses. Mississauga North has—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Speaker: And the Hon. Member for Mississauga North will put his question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister is aware that this morning at nine o'clock a large pharmaceutical manufacturing firm in Mississauga, Smith Kline & French, announced that it was closing its doors and moving to another country. Can the Minister tell me what he can do about this unfortunate situation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, in this situation there is nothing that can be done. However, I think it would be informative to know why this company is closing. As the company said in a letter to me today, its action is the direct unfortunate but necessary result of compulsory licensing in Canada. As the House is aware, Bill C-22 will correct that situation to ensure that there are no further closings of this kind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY RULE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The eleventh anniversary of the Soweto massacre has been marked by the extension of emergency rule and by the failure of a commitment at the Venice Summit. It has also been marked today by a plea by Archbishop Scott for further Canadian action against apartheid.

What will be the Prime Minister's answer to Archbishop Scott, to the children of South Africa, and to the victims of the holocaust in Mozambique?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the failure of the commitment at the Venice Summit. That of course is both wrong and misleading. The Venice Summit, at the request of Canada, actively considered on at least three occasions during our sittings the very troubling and tragic issue of apartheid in South Africa, and asked the chairman to issue what has been described as a very full and serious denunciation of the policies of the Government of South Africa in regard to apartheid and its denial of human rights. The Summit did consider it, not perhaps as fully as Canada would have liked, but it was another important step along the road followed by all civilized nations which are concerting to bring an end to the tragedy of apartheid in South Africa.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF COMPLETE MANDATORY SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should know the difference between denunciation and commitment. Two years ago he promised to impose complete sanctions against the South African regime. He has the support of a year-old report from a House of Commons committee, he has the support of the Canadian people, and he has the pleas for action of apartheid's victims. Will the Prime Minister not keep his promise and impose complete mandatory sanctions against South Africa before the House recesses for the summer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated on behalf of the Government that we did not exclude that course of action at all at an appropriate time. We have maintained and continued to maintain a dialogue in the hope that Canada and its partners can be of assistance in securing that fundamental degree of justice for the black citizens, the deprived citizens of South Africa.

Canada's next steps will be taken at the Sommet de la francophonie in Quebec City and at the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver where it is hoped that, in concert with the equivalent of about 100 nations representing all walks of life and all areas of the world coming together under two common thrusts of action, these will be important levers, together with more action from Europe and the United States, to bring about the pressures which will ultimately cause the system of apartheid to collapse so that justice can come about for all the citizens of South Africa.

SECURITIES MARKET—SAFEGUARDING OF NATIONAL INTEREST

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance who knows that on June 30 the Government of Ontario, with the blessing of the Government of Canada, will open up the securities market to foreign participants. Since the Government is opening up the doors to foreign ownership without having concluded the Canada-U.S. trade agreement and without any apparent effort to negotiate reciprocity for the Canadian securities industry in other countries, will the Minister tell the House what he is doing to safeguard the national interest?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is currently discussing all aspects of reciprocity with relevant countries. That is the first and most important part of my answer. The second part is that our policy toward the entrance of foreign securities dealers and the participation of Canadian financial institutions in the securities business was laid out in my announcement of December 18.

REGULATORY CONTROL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on June 30 our securities industry will find itself in competition with international giants. For example, one Japanese firm which just bought a seat on the Toronto Stock Exchange has assets more than double those of all Canada's financial institutions combined. How does the Minister propose to regulate in this new market considering that the industry has traditionally been regulated provincially and he is mired in a jurisdictional dispute with nine of the 10 provinces?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows the answer to that question. First, the provinces have responsibility for regulating securities subsidiaries. The federal Government has responsibility for regulating securities activities in-house in federal financial institutions. That is the division of labour. Above all, entrance to this country by these institutions will be in federal hands and its pace will obviously be affected by the reciprocal treatment we receive abroad.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT SYSTEM—AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY LAY-OFFS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, 180 workers at Ford's export office in Windsor have just been told they are losing their jobs. The letter from their union indicates they believe this is happening because the prospect of free trade is pushing companies in Canada to move their operations back to the U.S. Given this continuing damage to our workers, will the Minister for International Trade confirm that at the most recent round of negotiations the U.S. insisted on a voluntary system of dispute settlement which will leave Canada subject to U.S. trade law? In short, we have lost our key demand in these talks with the U.S.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm the Hon. Member's allegation. The negotiators are returning from Washington tonight and I will get a report. I have received no information or report which would give any substance to the Hon. Member's charge.

As to the lay-offs, I think it is strange that he is talking about lay-offs months before a free trade deal is negotiated, processed, or has even come into effect. I suggest he go back and take another look at his arguments.

Mr. Langdon: These lay-offs are to be phased in over the next two years so they coincide exactly with the supposed coming into force of the free trade pact.

ANNOUNCED LAY-OFFS AT FORD EXPORT OFFICE IN WINDSOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister for International Trade cannot deal with my question I will direct my supplementary to the Minister responsible for industry. Will the Government launch a public inquiry into this lay-off which is cutting key export jobs? Will it also in turn try to push Ford into keeping this operation active and viable for our community in Windsor?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, Ford did not simply decide to reduce its activities in Canada. Many of the operations of this division were directed toward Latin America markets. An increased number of companies are having the products used in these countries manufactured locally. This is why we are developing policy for the automobile industry which can ensure a prosperous future for Canadian workers.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

HELP FOR BATTERED WOMEN AND THEIR CHILDREN—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I referred yesterday in this House to the serious problem encountered by the Maison d'amitié shelter for battered women and their children. Threatened with a $3,000 monthly rent increase, the Maison d'amitié is crying for help. The Prime Minister told me yesterday, and I quote:

> The problem of battered women in Canada represents one of our most serious social and legal challenges.

He also said that:

> The response collectively of this country, provincial, federal and so on—

—had been inadequate.

I therefore ask the Government: When can we expect positive concrete action from the Government to help the millions of battered women and their children in Canada? What is the Government going to do to show some leadership in this matter?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Minister responsible is not in the House today because of other business. I can assure the Hon. Member, as I am sure he already knows, that the Minister understands his concern and has already indicated he will proceed with appropriate action.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE INSTRUCTIONS TO NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Public Works. Is it the Minister's intention to practise what the Prime Minister told us yesterday, that is, to care for battered women? Will he instruct the NCC to change its decision and not increase the rent by $3,000 a month on the Maison d'amitié, a home for battered women? Will he do something and show us leadership? Does he care what happens to battered women?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the rent paid by this association for the past two or three years has been $1 a year. They were advised that on a very gradual basis we would be increasing the rent with a view to accommodating their situation. They are now paying $500 a month. They are being given ample notice and every opportunity to get new sources of funding. We will be very co-operative to try to accommodate their particular situation.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO EXPRO COMPANY OF VALLEYFIELD

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can he confirm that the federal Government is providing assistance to the Expro Company of Valleyfield in the form of an $8 million subsidy and a guaranteed loan of $20 million to modernize its explosives plant and reduce pollution and that 600 workers could be laid off because of this modernization? Why is the Government subsidizing lay-offs instead of creating jobs in that region?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not very familiar with this issue. I shall inquire this very afternoon and keep the Hon. Member informed.

USE OF GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): In his response, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister tell us whether the Government will intervene, either to make sure that the company will not lay off the employees involved or to withdraw the subsidy since gifts, federal dollars, must not be used to create unemployment in Quebec or elsewhere in Canada?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I will look into this case but, as a rule, Department contributions are indeed for expansion and modernization, not to eliminate jobs but to create them, and this is what we have been doing in this country since 1984. More than 878,000 jobs have been created, Mr. Speaker.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURAL AND ABORIGINAL CHARACTERISTICS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the constitutional Accord. Last week in answer to my question the Minister of Justice failed to address adequately the growing concern across the country over the lack of meaningful recognition in the Accord of this nation's multicultural reality. Canada is unquestionably a bilingual and multicultural country. Clause 1 of the Accord recognizes only the English-French linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. Therefore, will the Prime Minister agree to amend Clause 1 by including the multicultural and aboriginal characteristics as fundamental characteristics of this country? The clause would then express fully and accurately the true fabric of Canadian society and not leave on the outside those 10 million Canadians whose origins are neither English nor French.

• (1500)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer that question, I thought the responses given by the Minister of Justice last week to the questions of the Hon. Member were outstanding.

Mr. Nunziata: Don't make a joke about it. It's a serious matter, you jerk.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I find that absolutely outrageous. I know the Hon. Member for York South—Weston takes a diametrically opposed position to that of his Leader on this very important issue. However, I don't think it is worthy of him to be shouting.

Mr. Nunziata: Sit down.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister could not find the dignity to address this glaring omission. I will ask him the question again. Since Clause 16 is an inadequate footnote and does not do justice to the aspirations and contributions of one-third of our population, what legitimate reasons does he offer for not including the multicultural and aboriginal characteristics in Clause 1? How can he continue to promote a definition of Canada which is offensively incomplete and totally inaccurate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only is what the hon. gentleman said absolutely false and misleading, it is at profound variance with the position enunciated by the Leader of the Liberal Party and by the Leaders of all the other Parties in the House of Commons.

Mr. Marchi: That's not true.

Mr. Mulroney: It is at variance with what took place.

This document with regard to Meech Lake reflects as well the comments of the Premier of Ontario who was one of the leaders in seeking this improvement in the text which our other colleagues were happy to accommodate. Clause 16—

Mr. Nunziata: That's not good enough.

Mr. Mulroney: —says:

> Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Right Hon. Prime Minister except to say that a question has been put. The Right Hon. Prime Minister is answering it, and I know Members would want him to be able to complete his answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this document which was agreed upon by the 10 First Ministers and the Prime Minister of Canada reflects, as all Canadians would want, the recognition of the rights of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians, but reflects as well the great honour and contribution made to Canada—indeed the indispensable contribution—by the multicultural communities of the country. This document strengthens and reflects that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is therefore to all those, except those who refuse to see, that this document strengthens Canadian unity, that it brings together English and French-speaking peoples—

Mr. Nunziata: What about the rest of us?

Mr. Mulroney: —but does not exclude in any way the multicultural richness of this country. Indeed, it makes certain that forever and ever and a day the multicultural strength of Canada is honoured and recognized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: That's not true.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will remind Hon. Members that Motions Nos. 37, 60, 61, 62, and 63 have been grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 63 disposes of Motions Nos. 60 and 61. A negative vote on Motion No. 63 necessitates votes on Motions Nos. 60 and 61. Motions Nos. 37 and 62 will be voted on separately.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 37.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 62 by striking out lines 36 to 41 at page 27 and substituting the following therefor:

Mr. Ouellet: Dispense.

Mr. Benjamin: No. Who said that? It's my motion. Read it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that his colleague, the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) said "dispense". I have not decided to dispense.

Mr. Benjamin: It's not his motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will with pleasure read the amendment presented by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you. It's five lines.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It reads:

"(2) In conducting the investigation, the Agency may take into consideration the contents of any confidential contract that has been filed with the Agency in in-camera proceedings as referred to in section 22(1)(b)."

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I appreciate your reading the motion because it makes so much sense and is only five lines long.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair wishes to apologize. As I have just said, the five motions are being grouped for debate, and they should be put on the record at this time.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I apologize for missing your first remarks about amendments to this Bill. I take it that the ruling of the Speaker of May 25 has been amended and that item 20 has been changed. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is the ruling of June 4 which applies and it stands as it was given to the House. We will now move on to Motion No. 60.

Mr. Benjamin: Hold it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I beg your pardon.

Mr. Benjamin: I beg your pardon.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 120 by striking out line 4 at page 56 and substituting the following therefor:

"120. (1) A Canadian railway company may enter".

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 120 by adding immediately after line 45 at page 56 the following:

"(6) Subsection (5) shall not apply to any investigation under the Act, provided that disclosure of confidential information is restricted in such manner as may be prescribed by section 22(1) of this Act".

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 120 by adding immediately after line 8 at page 57 the following:

"(7) This section does not apply to a movement of traffic following a continuous route wholly within Canada."

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 120.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, at the present time, the Railway Act prohibits railway companies and shippers from concluding confidential contracts for the transportation of goods by rail in Canada.

According to Section 275 of the Act, tariffs are to be published and filed with the Canadian Transport Commission, and Section 269 provides that railway companies shall charge only the tolls specified in the tariffs.

According to Section 381, any departure from such tolls would be an offence under the Act.

And finally, under Section 380, granting unpublished rebates would be an offence.

Madam Speaker, these conditions differ very sustantially from those existing in the United States since the Staggers Rail Act was adopted in 1980. This legislation authorizes U.S. railway companies to engage in confidential contracting with shippers.

As we know, this situation has harmed Canada's railway companies competing for transborder traffic with U.S. railway companies. The latter were in a position to offer better rates than those published in Canada and were thus able to short-circuit Canadian railway companies by detouring traffic through the United States. The previous Government became aware of the situation and asked the Canadian Transport Commission to look into the matter and make recommendations.

At hearings before the Transport Committee, most witnesses were in favour of the concept of confidential contracting for transborder traffic, in order to make up for the weakness in the existing regulatory system. When the question was being studied by the Canadian Transport Commission, experts reached the same conclusion. Something had to be done to keep U.S. railway companies from having an edge over Canadian railway companies in the area of transborder traffic.

The solution was entirely in line with the views of the previous Liberal Government, and that is what we need, no more. Unfortunately, the present Conservative Government wanted to go much further. Here again, it was led by its constant urge to follow the U.S. model in every respect, to copy everything that is being done south of the border.

The Government has extended confidential contracting to domestic traffic, thereby copying the U.S. Staggers Rail Act. We in the Liberal Party do not favour confidential contracting on domestic traffic, because we feel that such contracting will soon become a barrier to healthy competition. It will certainly not be in the interests of the small and average shipper. It will put the Atlantic provinces at a disadvantage and be a serious threat to the trucking industry in Canada, especially in the long-haul east-west sector. And we also believe that with the introduction of domestic confidential contracts, the railway freight companies will try to recover the business lost as a result of increased competition in this sector and do so at the expense of the small "captive" shippers.

We think that drumming up business at the expense of small and average "captive" shippers, which will benefit the big conglomerates that are free to do as they please, is totally unacceptable. I have said so before and I say it again, Madam Speaker, that we are not alone in this respect. A number of interveners, who testified before the Standing Committee of the House of Commons that examined these clauses, objected to the preferential treatment the Conservative Government wants to give the big Canadian shippers. Several interveners told us that a system that would allow confidential contracting on domestic traffic would have disastrous repercussions.

[English]

In fact, in one of the most compelling representations before the Committee, a small Saskatchewan malt producer, Prairie Malt Limited, of Biggar, told us that the Staggers Act has resulted in disastrous consequences for those shippers not large or powerful enough to compete effectively with the larger and more powerful conglomerates.

I want to quote part of the submission that was presented:

> To give the Staggers Act its credits due, it must also be mentioned that larger corporations, holding a dominant position within their given industrial sector on account of size and general financial and economic clout, are more than satisfied with the law as it stands.
> In consequence, efficient, but economically weaker or geographically disadvantaged competitors within the industry can be driven out with comparative ease, since they are not able to wield the same amount of influence with the railways as larger corporations with their widely dispersed interests and plant sites.

Confidential contracting could allow the larger, more powerful shippers not only an advantage over smaller competitors, but also to utilize transportation contracts and through them the railways themselves to literally push out the competition.

[Translation]

And according to the Minister of Transport himself, this legislation on deregulation is aimed at boosting competition. Well, here is a small shipper who is telling us that, far from increasing, competition will decrease.

One of the other most flagrant shortcomings of this legislation and of this part of the law is the fact that it throws the doors of the Canadian market wide open to the American railway companies, yet the Staggers Rail Act does not include similar provisions. It is quite clear that these clauses are detrimental to Canadian railway companies.

[English]

This kind of one-way free trade that the Government favours is totally unacceptable to us. We in the Opposition have tried to bring amendments to protect the Canadian interests and Canadian railways from the unfair competition by the American railways that will be possible.

Under the confidential contracting provisions currently in this legislation, we will see a situation where American railways could run freight in Canada based on confidential contracting on trans-border traffic. Burlington Northern, for instance——is a company which serves New Westminster in the direction of the United States and carries Canadian lumber towards the State of Washington, thence through the United States to Port Huron in Ontario. This kind of situation is not in the interest of our railroads, and it harms small shippers as well for they will not be in a position to negotiate confidential contracts as lucrative as those of major shippers.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, it is finally for all these reasons that I want to tell you that we are against these clauses of Bill C-18, and this is why we support the amendments to Bill C-18 provisions concerning confidential contracts. So I can tell you that I will support Motion No. 38 of my colleague, as well as Motions Nos. 60 and 62 which I moved on behalf of the Liberal Party, and of course I will vote for Motions Nos. 61 and 63.

In our opinion, Motion No. 60 offers Canadian carriers protection against unfair American competition, and we hope the House will endorse Motion No. 60. Secondly, Motion No. 62 would limit confidential contracts to transborder movements only to enable our carriers to compete efficiently against American companies, and more particularly to protect small shippers. This is why I urge the House to support these amendments to the Bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I want to speak to four motions, two moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and two moved by myself.

Motion No. 37 is designed so that in conducting investigations under Clause 59 on a matter of public interest, investigators will not be frustrated by secret information but would be allowed access to that information. Under the provisions of the Bill presently before the House, someone who investigates a confidential contract would not have access to all the confidential information.

In Motions Nos. 60 and 62, the Hon. Member for Papineau has expressed views we can support. I believe the Chair has ruled that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 63 obviates the need to put the questions on Motions Nos. 60 and 61, which means the vote on Motion No. 63 must be called first. A negative vote on Motion No. 63 then means that Motions Nos. 60 and 61 must be voted on.

My Motion No. 63 deletes the entire clause of the Bill referring to confidential contracts. I never thought I would live to see the day where a Progressive Conservative Government, which advocates private enterprise, market forces, competition, and so on, would bring in measures which are anti-competitive. It means that those with corporate power, whether railroads, trucking companies or airlines, or those large shippers who ship thousands and thousands of carloads or truck loads a year, can get a confidential contract. But a company such as Prairie Malt Limited in Biggar, Saskatchewan—and there are thousands like it all over the country—which may ship a few dozen or a few hundred carloads or truck loads, do not get the same deal as the large shippers. Anyone in this House who thinks they do is dreaming in technicolour. It is an anti-competitive provision. I do not understand why the Government would hold still for a confidential contract.

Even on an appeal on a confidential contract, the poor shipper who thinks the other guy has a confidential contract with a railroad or trucking company, has no choice under this Bill but to automatically appeal. But he cannot find out because it is confidential. Not even the investigators can find out. What kind of an appeal is that? What kind of natural justice is that?

The primary amendment in that grouping of four motions is to delete the entire section on confidential contracts. We should be enlarging, enforcing and playing a watch-dog role—and by that I mean a Government agency or the Department of Transport—on the system of agreed charges. Any shipper, large or small, who agrees, for example, to ship 75 per cent of his traffic by a certain carrier should be eligible for that reduced rate. The same opportunity should apply to every shipper. In order to get that rate all he has to do is to agree to ship a certain percentage of his traffic and it can start at 100 per cent or 50 per cent because there is a graduated rate. Those agreed charges should be public information. Every shipper, large or small, would then have exactly the same opportunity.

The bureaucrats in the nether regions of the Department of Transport have dreamed this clause up at the request of the largest shippers in the country, and it flies in the face of one of the underlying principles of the Bill, that is, regional economic expansion. The small manufacturers, processors and shippers in Atlantic Canada, out west or in northern Ontario are automatically ruled out when it comes to confidential contracts. There is no way any so-called self-respecting private enterprise government which believes in free market forces would put confidential contracts into its legislation.

When one is dealing with a public utility, a public service or with a transporter, confidential contracts should be equally available to every shipper and passenger in this country. They should not be discriminated against because of their size, where they happen to be located, where they happen to be producing their goods or where they happen to be travelling from or to. To use the language of the Reaganites over here, that should be a "level playing field". Small shippers, people who travel from small and middle sized locations in Canada, should have the same opportunity for discount fares, seat sales or anything else offered by an airline. This Bill should require every transporter to make available the same opportunities to every shipper, every receiver, every passenger, no matter where they live.

The Government flies in the face of its own free enterprise, free market forces principles. Why would it not want a small shipper, manufacturer or processor in Atlantic Canada to have an equal opportunity of access to competitive or compensatory rates as the large shipper in downtown Toronto or Montreal? Why would one want legislation which would prohibit that? I do not understand the Government.

Surely to goodness Motion No. 63 which would delete the entire clause dealing with confidential contracts would—and as a democratic socialist I hate to be helpful to the proponents of free enterprise market forces across the way—help the Government out. It would reinforce and restate the principles for which Members opposite claim to stand. It is a heck of a note when a democratic socialist has to give lessons to free enterprisers about sound business practices and about treating people across the country in exactly the same way no matter where they live.

Surely that is what this legislation should do. No one should be discriminated against. This is something which Canada has tried to do since 1881 to ensure that transportation is distributed in a reasonably equitable manner no matter where one lives. We have not reached that goal but we have proceeded along the way to reaching it. Confidential contracts fly in the face of our history. They fly in the face of the so-called principles and policies of the Progressive Conservative Party.

This is a crucial area of this legislation. I do not know of any self-respecting Progressive Conservative in my City of Regina—as few as they are—who is in favour of these confidential contracts. I do not know one. In fact, they want a fair shake. When they are bidding against someone in Winnipeg, Toronto or Vancouver for freight rates they want to have an equal chance.

The small implement manufacturers in the prairie provinces come to mind in this regard. There are about two dozen of them who ship a few hundred truckloads or carloads a year. If anyone on the government side thinks that they can compete with J. I. Case, Massey-Ferguson or International Harvester, which companies ship thousands of carloads a year, then they are discriminating against the small farm implement manufacturers in western Canada.

The same applies to every commodity that can be named when it comes to the difference between the economic, power, clout and influence as between a small processor and manufacturer and a large one. Confidential contracts are an anathema to this Party. They should be an anathema to anyone who believes in a free society, a free chance, an equal chance, an equal opportunity.

I wish that Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier were here today to see the actions of this Government and its Reaganomic nonsense which fly in the face of everything the country has been trying to do since 1867. Members opposite are hypnotized. They have not thought the process through. They do not know what the hell they are doing.

Motion No. 63 must be accepted. It will obviate debate on the other three amendments. Failing that, let us adopt the other three.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak this afternoon to the amendment which has been proposed to the Bill on transportation before us.

You will recall, Madam Speaker, that the Government has brought before us this legislation which would create for a number of people tremendous upheaval and tremendous difficulties. The whole area of deregulation, including the confidential contracts that are referred to here, would create a climate of uncertainty in the transportation area, a climate of uncertainty for many rural constituencies across this great country.

During the election campaign the Government made several promises. A number of them were made in the area of transportation. I have in my hand the great book of 338 Tory promises. If you would like a copy of it, Madam Speaker, or if any Canadian would like a copy of it, all that needs to be done is to write me a letter, postage-free—no stamp necessary—and I will gladly send out a copy of the 338 Tory promises. You can rush right over to my office, Madam Speaker, and I will gladly give you one.

In the book of 338 Tory promises the following are some of the words said about transportation. The Tories promised that they would make VIA Rail more accountable to the public and re-establish passenger services. They would upgrade rail transportation through the acquisition of new modern equipment. Further, they would declare war on all level railway crossing facilities. Part of that promise has already been forgotten. I think the Government has decided to declare war on the railways. It forgot the rest of the promise—

Mr. McDermid: Oh, come on!

Mr. Boudria: That is perhaps the problem with the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) who is heckling me.

In the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell CN Rail has launched a vicious attack against my constituents. That is what it has decided to do, and I invite the member of the Tory Party opposite to pay attention because we will ask questions later. We are marking this today so I invite the Hon. Member to be attentive.

What CN Rail has decided to do is to embark upon a strategy of demarketing, a strategy of chasing away some of its customers so that it can later on close down the CN rail line between Montreal and Sudbury. This is a very serious situation. I say this to the Hon. Member across the way who seems to be confused. I will speak slower so that even he can understand.

Mr. Benjamin: It won't help.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) says that it will not help. However, I will do my best. I will speak as slowly as possible for the benefit of Conservative Members in the House.

In reference to this amendment in particular here is what CN is planning to do. Hon. Members will see how it links directly, not only to the amendment which is before us but to the Bill in total. In my hand I have a memo dated September 25, 1986. It is a memo sent by Mr. R. P. Langlois, Regional Manager of Marketing, one of the folks who is trying to market this new idea of rates organized secretly with certain people while shutting down service on the so-called unpaying lines altogether. Mr. Langlois wrote to his people:

> In the context of the rationalization of our rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being potential candidates for abandonment in the coming years. A preliminary plan has been prepared and attached you will find the sections affected.

I will get to that section a little later, Madam Speaker. The memo states that any effort to attract new traffic on these lines is to be abandoned immediately. We can now see the deliberate policy with respect to some lines to abandon any effort to attract new customers.

If that isn't bad enough, listen to the following sentence:

> For the traffic already on these lines, we must consider either, and preferably, converting this traffic onto the intermodal system,—

In ordinary language, that means trucks. To continue:

> —or else, adjusting rates to minimize our present losses.
> You will shortly be convoked to a meeting in which the particulars of the application of these measures will be discussed in more detail. In the meantime, I would ask you to treat this with discretion.

In other words, this was supposed to be a secret memo. I say to Hon. Members opposite, and particularly the Minister, the minute they put the "secret" stamp on documents, they might as well send a copy to my office, as I usually end up receiving such documents in any event.

So, here we have a secret memo from Mr. Langlois suggesting that certain lines be shut down. The proposed line shut-downs would occur in the St. Lawrence region, which comprises the eastern part of the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec. The proposed line shut-downs include the Alexandria Subdivision, a distance of 57.7 miles.

The Alexandria Subdivision of CN Rail is the track that links Ottawa to Montreal. There would be no train between Ottawa and Montreal—and not only no freight train on which the secret contracts we have been talking about could be negotiated, but no track at all, not even to accommodate passenger trains.

Mr. Thacker: Not so.

Mr. Boudria: The Member opposite says "not so". In doing so, he is disagreeing with quite a few of his Tory colleagues from the national capital area.

Mr. Thacker: VIA can take it.

Mr. Boudria: That is absolutely preposterous. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. If you will give me sufficient time, Madam Speaker, I shall try to better inform him—and I know it may take a lot of time.

This particular line would be completely shut down. As well, the rail line between Ottawa and Sudbury, the Alderdale and Beachburg subdivisions, would also be closed.

With respect to that shut-down, it might be said that it is acceptable because there is a CP line serving the same areas. Well, it isn't that simple. From the western Quebec community of Portage-du-Fort, 2,000 rail cars per year of wood products are shipped on the CN Rail line, all of which would end up on the highways of eastern Ontario and western Quebec. Meanwhile, on the profitable line, the Montreal to Toronto corridor, the secret rates would be negotiated, keeping that line profitable. It is the regions of the country that will be losing out in terms of rail service.

Toxic chemicals are shipped from a factory in northern Ontario to Montreal, and that traffic too would be rerouted via Toronto in the event that this line were shut down. We would have yet one more train load of toxic chemicals going through the Toronto area en route to Montreal. As well, there would be a great deal of traffic diverted to the highway system.

Through this Bill the federal Government is trying to transfer its responsibility to the provincial level of Government. What this Government is saying is, "It doesn't matter if we shut down the rail lines, the provinces will take care of the increased traffic on the highways."

Well, that is not the solution. The federal Government is simply passing the buck on to the provinces. That is what this Tory Government does, as you well know, Madam Speaker. Being the non-partisan person that you are, you will know how the Tories are totally ruining the economies of the regions of our country.

If you think me partisan, Madam Speaker, as unlikely as it is that you would think that, let me give you one example.

A company in my riding, Alexandria Moulding, with 220 employees, had embarked on a $25 million expansion involving a facility to be built right alongside the railway line in Alexandria. It progressed to the point of putting the foundations in and then stopped work on that project, all because it became aware of this CN Rail internal document saying that the line linking Ottawa and Montreal should be shut down.

That is the disgrace with which we are faced right now, Madam Speaker, and it is only going to get worse with the passage of Bill C-18. While this amendment would make the Bill slightly better, the only acceptable solution is to change the Bill drastically. That is what is required.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, perhaps I may also make a short contribution to the debate on these motions, to try and explain the position of our Party. We are in favour of confidential contracting for transborder traffic, so that Canadian railway companies, including Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, can compete with U.S. railway companies who, at the present contracts. But that is where our generosity ends, because we object to confidential contracting on domestic traffic. I think the testimomy heard by the Transport Committee was practically unanimous on the point that big shippers would benefit from confidential contracting. In fact, we would see a rather bizarre situation where small shippers would actually be subsidizing the conglomerates that would most certainly benefit from the price war resulting from confidential contracting.

I must say this is a distressing possiblity for the regions, both in eastern and western Canada. I would like to point out that once again, witnesses from the Atlantic provinces testified before the Standing Committee on Transport that the economy of their part of the country is based to a large extent on the small business sector. The people of the Atlantic provinces believe that through a form of cross-subsidization, their part of the country might very well be forced to subsidize the low-cost confidential contracts resulting from the cheap rates that would be charged in central Canada.

The Government of Alberta had similar concerns about the impact of confidential contracting on western Canada.

[English]

I would have a question, Madam Speaker, for the proponents of these confidential contracts. As I understand it, when it comes to matters of public transportation, tariffs have always been posted. Why is there a need for confidential contracts? What is the motivation?

I can certainly understand the reasons for giving a large shipper a preferential rate, or for coming to a special arrangement with a large shipper of merchandise. There certainly are economies of scale that a larger shipper can benefit from in negotiating lower shipping rates, particularly if that shipper is able to get the goods to the departure point, thus permitting the railways to avoid some of the costs that they have to assume when it comes to picking up small pieces of merchandise from different parts of the country.

Why should the contracts be confidential? Why should they not be public? Why should other shippers not be able to become aware of the nature and contents of the contracts so as, perhaps, to be able to organize their affairs in a similar fashion, and hope to benefit from the same advantageous treatment if they are able to do so? It seems to me that this is the way in which a free and open market should operate.

The burden of proof should be on the proponents of these confidential contracts. From what I have heard in the debate today, they have been unable to defend their case or to make a strong case for such contracts.

Under the legislation, Canada will be opening its markets to U.S. companies. As far as I understand it, there is no corresponding obligations for the Americans to open their market to Canadian railways.

We have the rather bizarre situation where the Government is almost down on its hands and knees offering all kinds of advantages to the Americans in the hope that at some point we will be rewarded for our generosity. It is a rather peculiar way of negotiating and trying to come to a conclusion which will benefit Canadians rather than Americans.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me on amendments to Clause 120 in particular which has to do with confidential contracts.

In fact, through this provision the Government is attempting to fashion our transport industry after the American model. We would operate according to this model without really knowing what kind of impact it will have on the Canadian transport industry.

We in the Liberal Party believe that confidential contracts will not be to the benefit of Canadian consumers. And we believe as well, Madam Speaker, that confidential contracts will not serve the interests of remote regions either, quite the contrary.

Why? Very simply because most confidential contracts will be awarded to the big shippers, shippers who have huge volumes of goods to ship practically the year round. And, of course, such big shippers are few and far between in remote regions. If I may, Madam Speaker, I would refer to the Atlantic region where most of our shippers and manufacturers operate small and medium-sized businesses. So it stands to reason that these people will not be able to benefit from confidential contracts. Besides running small operations, they will find themselves unable to compete because major shippers will always be one step ahead with their confidential contracts and, of course, in a position to reduce the costs of their products.

Also, having granted large concessions to the major shippers, the carriers will have to recoup their losses from smaller shippers. Then we have the case of the remote regions.

As recently as last week, Madam Speaker, I learnt through the Le Matin daily that in a small New Brunswick town within my Kent riding, a distillery was going to close, resulting in the loss of some 28 full-time jobs and perhaps also a dozen part-time ones. Well, at the time, some people told me: What are 40 jobs? Madam Speaker, 40 jobs in a town such as Richibouctou would represent something like 1,000 jobs in Moncton and 35,000 jobs in Montreal.

I mention the case of this small distillery simply because it is handicapped due to its location in that area. In addition to facing excise taxes which are much too high, have been greatly increased these past few years... These tax increases, therefore, have had a much bigger impact on this New Brunswick plant than on all those situated near urban areas. Why? Because plants situated in distant areas are faced with transportation costs which are far higher than those applicable to plants situated near major centres. If this plant, therefore, must compensate carriers for the advantages which will be given major shippers through confidential contracts, several small and medium size firms in remote areas will be compelled to close.

Madam Speader, we suggest that these confidential contracts will benefit mainly American carriers. They will be in a position to cross the border, enter Canada and offer contracts to Canadian firms to move goods through the United States, something which will cause Canadian carriers to suffer because they will not be able to move these goods. Reciprocal advantages are not guaranteed to Canadian carriers, because they are not in a position to benefit from the same advantages made available to the Americans under this clause.

For all these reasons, Madam Speaker, I will support the amendments moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first question is on Motion No. 37, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (1600)

The next question is on Motion No. 63 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 62 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 40—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Motions Nos. 60 and 61 are deferred automatically. The next question—

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, you mentioned Motions Nos. 62 and 63 earlier, but not Motion No. 60. I just want to be sure that there will be a deferred vote on Motion No. 60 as well as on Motions Nos. 62 and 63.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All the different questions have been put on the record and as far as Motions Nos. 60 and 61 are concerned, the votes have been deferred until tonight when we will go through all the different motions again taking the deferred votes.

Now we can move on to Motion No. 40.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 64.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, to explain very briefly the purpose of the motion, the current Clause 64 allows the Governor in Council to vary or rescind orders made by the agency. We think that if we are to have an independent body to review transportation matters, its decisions must either be final or any further appeal mechanism must be in the public framework.

The way the current clause reads is that if the agency makes a decision, then anyone could go to Cabinet in secrecy and convince the Cabinet to modify or toss out the decision of the agency. There would be no further public hearings. As we all know, the proceedings of Cabinet are secret, so we would not even know why a decision had been made to change it. We feel that this clause gives too much power to the Governor in Council and goes against the whole process of public consultation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 40 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motions to be debated are Motions Nos. 44 and 2.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 71 by striking out lines 17 and 18 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) holds a Canadian aviation document, and has demonstrated the capability and the willingness to meet the highest possible standards of safety; and".

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 13 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"meets the highest possible safety".

He said: Madam Speaker, if there was ever a crux of this legislation, it is these two amendments about which Members from all sides of the House have shown and expressed concern. It deals with the safety of airline operations and the capability and capacity of airline operators and aircraft operators to meet those standards on which the Government itself has said there will be no compromise. Our amendments attempt to and we believe will ensure those standards of safety.

Motion No. 44 requires that a new licensing agency must look at the ability of a new carrier to meet high safety standards before a licence is issued. That has been one of the problems until now.

As I informed the House earlier today, Motion No. 21A is what I call the Fred Turner amendment. There are licensed carriers now operating without a valid operating certificate. Those certificates are testimony from Transport Canada that it is satisfied with the carriers' level of safety and maintenance. It is my understanding that when this House brought in the new amendments to the Aeronautics Act in 1985, a direct link between economic licence and the operating authority was inadvertently broken. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to pay close attention. That broken link means, as we have seen, that an air carrier can retain its licence and operate while having no operating certificate. This morning I referred to the crash at Schefferville in which eight people were killed. The airline's operating authority had been suspended in October of 1983, but it was operating on September 30, 1985, when these tragic fatalities occurred. Even today that airline still does not have a valid operating certificate. It has a licence to fly but no certificate. There are other carriers operating today without that certificate. If the Government is serious about safety, this House will adopt Motion No. 44 and Motion No. 2 because they go to the very heart of what the Government itself said was a fundamental principle of this Bill.

You cannot have people operating airlines and carrying passengers without authority to do so. Yet they are doing it now. I do not care whether it is Wapiti or Spur airlines or this airline in Schefferville which I understand now has a new name.

If the Government wants deregulation, if it wants complete ease of exit and entry, all right, that is government policy. I do not like it, but so what? However, no Government worthy of the name can allow any airline to operate without proper safety, maintenance and pilot checks. The problem is that the air traffic committee of the CTC has one licensing authority and the Department of Transport, under the Aeronautics Act, has another. The two do not get together. We cannot allow that to continue.

This airline in Schefferville killed eight people and we did not cancel its licence. Yet poor old Fred Turner in Yellowknife is late filing his reports about gasoline used and the number of passengers carried and his licence is cancelled. He went bankrupt and lost five aircraft and is now losing his house. That cannot be justified under any circumstances. We cannot allow people a licence to fly and give them authority to carry passengers until they have met all the standards which this Government says must be met regarding safety and maintenance. That has to be in place before we pass this Bill.

This motion acknowledges the fact that we are all concerned about safety and maintenance. There are also other areas we should be concerned about. Bill C-19 should not be passed until the new national safety code is in place. Bill C-18 should not be passed until the new national rail safety rules are in place. Both those Bills should not be passed until all the boards, agencies, regulations and inspectors dealing with licensing, safety, security and maintenance are set up. Then if you want to deregulate and let anyone and everyone go in and out of air, trucking or railway operations, they will at least have to meet certain standards. Until they do, you do not give them a licence.

My hon. friend from Prince George, who flies in the north quite a lot, knows whereof I speak. I have been on some of these jerkwater outfits that fly with a minimum of maintenance, pilots who are flying extra hours because if they do not the boss fires them. I am not a white-knuckle flier but I do not want any amateurs or anyone played out, or a plane which is unfit, carrying me anywhere in this country.

The Government can do no less than accept these amendments. They do not do violence to the basic principles of the Bill dealing with deregulation, competition and market forces. Therefore, I hope my friends opposite will persuade the Parliamentary Secretary to get up and say he accepts them both.

Mr. McDermid: Yet you do not support drug testing for airline employees.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, the amendment now under consideration allows us to focus on the hypocrisy of this Government. Every time we have spoken about safety, the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and his predecessor have told us that the Government had no intention of jeopardizing transport safety in Canada. All that we have had are nice speeches. The Minister of Transport and his officials have never taken any specific action to ensure that safety will not be jeopardized.

This amendment would simply add to the the interpretation provisions of the National Transportation Act the principle of striving for the highest possible standards of safety.

Yet, the Government is refusing to approve this amendment, thus proving its insincerity as it does not want to spell out in the objectives of the new National Transportation Act that there will be an effort to provide the highest possible standards of safety for transport services in Canada. If the Government is not willing to accept this amendment, it should not try to make the population believe that it wants to protect the safety of travellers as it is refusing to take the necessary action to ensure this safety.

I have here a report prepared by the Clerk's Office of the City of Toronto, which report was submitted to the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and is quite symptomatic of what people think of the desire of this Government to hasten passage of a law which will radically transform transportation in Canada and certainly jeopardize the safety of our transportation system.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I would like to quote a few passages from the brief submitted to the Government and to the Standing Committee on Transport during its consideration of Bill C-18, and I quote:

> While a lot of the concerns raised by these Bills deal with the loss of services in small communities and remote areas, this transportation policy will also adversely affect major transportation centres such as Metro Toronto. First, safety risks will increase because of more flexible entry standards and the absence of detailed and adequate inspection mechanisms.

As the Metro Toronto Residents Action Committee stated in its submission to the Standing Committee on Transport of the Canadian Parliament in November, the lack of specific provisions dealing with public safety is one of the major weeknesses in the Freedom to Move position paper. In the United States, where transportation has been deregulated for nine years, there has been a significant drop in public safety. The number of accidents has increased on American highways, because the equipment is used more often with less maintenance, and truck drivers work longer shifts and haul heavier loads than they used to.

The Committee mentions a whole series of statistics showing a significant increase in the number of accidents and crashes which have been taking place on U.S. highways since the transportation system was deregulated.

The submission goes on with these words:

In the city of Toronto, safety concerns are of a double nature: the transport of dangerous goods. It is a cause for deep concern in densely populated areas such as Toronto where huge quantities of chemicals and other dangerous goods are transported every day by rail, by truck and by plane. People realized the threat of disasters with the Mississauga derailment which forced evacuation for six days of some 225,000 people. That accident is probably at the origin of the submission by the City of Toronto to the federal Government urging that any reform of the transport sector should clearly state that safety must be a top priority item and that an inquiry board directly responsible to Parliament should be created. However, the Government has not followed up on those recommendations. It has ignored the briefs submitted first to the Government following the publication of the Freedom to Move document, and later on in connection with the study of Bill C-18, which is not specifically concerned with the basic problem of safety.

That is why the Opposition wants to have that amendment. That is why the Liberal Party tried in committee to move an amendment to this bill which was rejected by the Conservative majority in the committee. And that is also why I support wholeheartedly this amendment standing in the name of my colleague from the New Democratic Party, and which is to ensure—that is no big deal—that there is clear recognition in the new National Transportation Act of the fact that in those national transportation targets, the highest possible safety standards will be specified. That the Government is unwilling to accept that goal is to me illogical, incomprehensible and certainly unjustified.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I cannot let the comments which the Hon. Member just made go by unchallenged. He said that nothing was being done with regard to rail safety after the accident which took place in Mississauga. Nothing is further from the truth.

Mr. Ouellet: That's not what I said.

Mr. McDermid: The present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) started a hearing—

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: —on safety and we now have a Bill which—

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In deference to the Hon. Member, I do not think he understood what I was saying. That is not at all what I said. I think he should look at the record tomorrow. I do not know if the interpretation was incorrect, but he is going in exactly the wrong direction in assuming that that is what I am saying. I am talking about the current legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I think both Hon. Members are engaging in debate rather than a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I just want to review what has been done with regard to safety. The Hon. Member's Government was very involved in this. The Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, over which we sweated for many long months, was finally passed by the House of Commons.

At this very moment there are some very, very serious studies taking place with regard to the safe transportation of dangerous goods through the Metropolitan Toronto area. I attended some public hearings last week in my constituency. Such public hearings are taking place throughout Toronto.

I think it is very unfair for the Hon. Member to say that no action is being taken on the transportation of dangerous goods in the Metropolitan Toronto area. In fact, action is being taken quite actively and vigorously.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I want to continue the debate on a very important aspect of the process which we are going through as well as on the final wording of Bill C-18. The purpose of the two motions standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is to ensure that there is recognition within the Bill of safety in a context which is not found elsewhere in the legislation.

During our hearings on Bill C-18, and when we were dealing with the Government's White Paper Freedom to Move, one of the areas on which my colleague and I focused in considerable detail was safety, particularly air safety. We tended to ask the witnesses who appeared before us their opinion on what faces the last passenger on the final flight of an airline company that is going bankrupt. For instance, how many corners have been cut in the maintenance of the aircraft and how many times during the week had the pilot been forced to fly longer than humanly reasonable? Did the company overlook mechanical problems? Was it carrying out maintenance to the minimum standard as opposed to keeping maintenance safely within government and industry specifications?

As a result of our deliberations we concluded that in a system in which there is no guarantee of economic survival and the market-place forces the owners of the company to stretch resources continually, that safety could be compromised by an operator who, perhaps not intentionally, was forced to take unnecessary risks due to the aggressive competition within the industry. Such risks might include such requests as asking the pilot to fly one or two hours longer, to asking the mechanic to turn a blind eye on certain repairs that may not be mandatory but could be crucial in the event of a problem.

Motions Nos. 44 and 2 attempt to meet those concerns. Motion No. 44 basically adds to the requirement for domestic service. Clause 71(1) states:

A person shall not operate a domestic service unless, in respect of that service,

(a) holds a domestic licence;

(b) holds a Canadian aviation document; and

(c) has prescribed liability insurance coverage.

Motion No. 44 would change Clause 71(1)(b) to read:

(b) holds a Canadian aviation document, and has demonstrated the capability and the willingness to meet the highest possible standards of safety;

We believe that amendment will accomplish a number of things. First, when a group applies for a certain certificate in order to operate a domestic service, not only must it prove that it has liability insurance and a domestic licence, it must also have a proven track record for safety and the capability and willingness to meet the highest possible standards of safety.

One might ask how a new entrant can have a proven track record. One of the most ludicrous suggestions we heard in the committee was that the banks should decide whether or not a new airline company is healthy and has the proper equipment and safety and maintenance procedures in place. I suggest that it is the responsibility of the Government to ensure the protection of the people who use those services which are approved or authorized by the Government.

This amendment will require the agency to consider all new applicants and determine whether or not they have the resources not only today but in the future to maintain their standard of service and employment for an extended period of time. It must not be a company that provides such working conditions and wages as to have a continual turnover of personnel.

We have seen examples of such "fly-by-nighters", as my colleagues refers to them. These companies seem to have a continual turnover of pilots because of poor working conditions and low wages, which means that people with little experience are piloting these aircraft.

There must be a system in place so that the Government, through its agency, can determine not only whether those carriers are safe on the day the licences are issued but will remain safe because they have the economic wherewithal to maintain their services to the flying public.

That stability existed under the old regulated regime in which there was built in cross-subsidization. A carrier could be assured of a reasonable return on its investment in less lucrative runs and therefore not be forced into making economic decisions that could ultimately lead to disaster. Earlier, my colleague referred to a report from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board in a letter of June 15 in response to an inquiry from the Member's staff person regarding an aircraft accident in Schefferville, Quebec, in September, 1985.

I have a copy of the investigation report and engineering report LP250/85. The covering letter indicated that the aircraft in question did not have a valid operating authority. In fact, it had been suspended in October, 1983.

Clearly, there are carriers who are not qualified to be operating. We believe that this amendment will help to ensure that there are no blind spots left between the aviation safety legislation and the National Transportation Act. I urge the Government seriously to consider accepting this amendment. If our wording is not totally acceptable to the Government, perhaps there is a way in which the clause can stand until later so that it can be studied. If that is not possible, I look forward to hearing the Government's response to this amendment.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this motion deals with Clause 71 of the Bill and is essentially tied to Motion No. 2 that relates to Clause 3 of the Bill. That is the declaration, which I think it is important for Members to read. The declaration in Clause 3 states:

> It is hereby declared that a safe, economic, efficient and adequate network of viable and effective transportation services making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to serve the transportation needs of shippers and travellers—

It goes on to state that the national transportation system meets the highest practicable safety standards. That was added at the committee stage, so, with great respect, it is not necessary, and would be totally redundant, to add it to Clause 71.

• (1640)

In order for a person to fly and have a licence, there is an absolute prohibition. A person shall not operate a domestic service unless, in respect of that service, the person, first, holds a domestic licence, second, holds a Canadian aviation document and, third, has the prescribed liability insurance. One does not receive an aviation document unless one complies with all the requirements of the Aeronautics Act which has a very real element of safety. So it is quite redundant and I would ask government Members and other Hon. Members to kindly vote against it.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the amendment we are considering, and in fact I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary, who says he is satisfied with the clause as it is written, why he refuses to clarify what Clause 3.1(a) contains. It says that the national transportation system "meets the highest practicable safety standards" —the qualifier is "practicable".

Madam Speaker, I think the word practicable could be interpreted in many different ways and that this term could be harmful to the safety standards we want to establish in our national transportation system through this legislation.

Therefore, I fail to see why any Member here in the House should rise to object to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Madam Speaker, throughout these hearings, we have had many people testify before the Committee, and most of the testimony showed that people were concerned about the safety factor. Of course, they are just as concerned as you and I who often have to use public transportation systems, and if these systems do not meet the highest safety standards, we are putting our lives and those of all Canadians at risk.

As I see it, the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West would merely put more emphasis on safety. Earlier, a reference was made to a report submitted to Toronto City Council. It referred to a heightened awareness of the possibility of disaster, as a result of the derailment and chlorine spill at Mississauga which led to 225,000 people being evacuated for a period of six days. The report goes on to say that the M-TRAC statement on the measures taken by the railways after the Mississauga derailment is a very clear indication that we cannot depend on voluntary compliance in this area.

This is in response to the Hon. Member on the Government side who said that all the necessary measures had been taken.

And in this late May report, May 22, 1987, they said: "It is really saddening to point out in connection with respect for safety regulations by railway companies that one year after the Mississauga derailment—" and in fact more than a year later, "—the companies involved failed to install monitoring devices throughout that very sensitive and densely populated region until ordered to do so by the Canadian Transport Commission in the course of an inquiry and a public hearing."

That, Madam Speaker, is one more argument in favour of the amendments we are proposing. Quite simply we want people who deal with the transport industry to appreciate the fact that safety is indeed one of our top priorities.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 44 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I should tell Hon. Members that the vote on Motion No. 44 will dispose of Motion No. 2.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consideration of Motion No. 46.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 46

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 72 by adding immediately after line 28 at page 34 the following:

"(c) it is satisfied that the proposed commercial air service is and will be required by the present and future public convenience and necessity."

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague on his excellent amendment—he would not let me get away without saying that. I will be very brief because I see by the clock that we have about 70 minutes left before the bells begin to ring, ending the closure on report stage, and we do have some other Members who want to speak on the motion.

What this motion does is to add to the clause which deals with the issue of a licence, a requirement that the agency be satisfied that the proposed commercial air service is and will be required by present and future public convenience and necessity. That phrase "public convenience and necessity" is really the opposite of deregulation. It is a process which ensures that a carrier is there not just for the purpose of making money for the owner or operator, but to ensure that the service it provides is for the public, that it is needed and is convenient. We think that should be one of the tests which is considered, along with the fact they must be Canadian, hold a Canadian aviation document and have liability insurance. The agency must require that public convenience and necessity are part of the components which are necessary for that service to be established. I do not think I have to add much more. This is an appropriate place for me to stop.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 73.

He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to say only that Clause 73 would give the Minister the authority to make qualified exemptions. We wish to have that clause deleted because it would exempt someone who otherwise does not qualify because he or she is not Canadian. There have been too many loose issues with respect to licences. I do not think that the Minister needs any more looseness to exempt someone from the requirements of the law. I hope the Government will accept this amendment so that the Minister will not have to worry about that sort of thing. He already has enough trouble as it is.

Motion No. 47 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 80 by adding immediately after line 48 at page 37 the following:

"(3) Where, on application by a carrier for a reduction in the basic fare by 50 per cent or more, the Agency will review and approve said application."

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, Motion No. 49 is a trigger mechanism which would prevent an air carrier from doing itself in. In the United States we saw a great deal of cutthroat competition in which fares were slashed and safety was jeopardized. Fares were slashed to such an extent that service for those who travelled on the airlines slashing them was very poor. This put the carriers into a risky financial situation and ultimately lead to their bankruptcies and mergers with other air carriers.

Motion No. 49 might be perceived by consumers as being unpopular or unfair to them since everyone wants this great break, a 50 per cent reduction in air fares. We just saw a situation last week in which Canadian Airlines International announced a very unusual seat sale for the summer months to a number of Canadian centres at a time when volumes are normally high. It left out a number of communities, including Thunder Bay. Through its policy of automatically matching where possible challenges in terms of seat sales by Canadian Airlines International Air Canada, CAIL's only competitor decided to match CAIL. It did not propose to provide service to Thunder Bay.

If this amendment were accepted by the Government in an instance where there is more than a 50 per cent reduction in basic fares, air carriers would have to apply to the agency for permission. The agency would then be able to say: "First, yes, because of the size of the airline you can afford to do this, but not very often. Second, you have to be fair to all of Canada. You cannot just offer this seat sale in areas where you are planning to offer it. You have to make sure that communities such as Thunder Bay also have the advantage of these cheap seats".

That is what this Bill was supposed to give to the people of Canada—cheap transportation, even though we have been told time and time again by the experts in the field and by the carriers themselves that by and large we have bottomed out and all we have to look forward to are higher fares in the future with the odd aberration such as a seat sale. At the very least it would ensure that if a company is prepared to provide that type of break, then the agency would be in a position to review it to ensure economic stability as well as fairness.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 92 by

(a) striking out line 4 at page 42 and substituting the following therefor:

"92. (1) The Agency may, on its own motion or in response to a complaint from any person, suspend or"

(b) striking out line 14 at page 42 and substituting the following therefor:

"under this Part; or

(c) has failed to provide adequate service between the specified points.

(2) In assessing the adequacy of the service pursuant to subsection 92.(1)(c), the Agency shall give primary weight to the views of the affected communities.

(3) Where the Agency cancels the scheduled international licence of any person pursuant to subsection 92.(1), the Agency shall immediately invite persons to make application to serve the route pursuant to section 88."

He said: Madam Speaker, the intent of this motion is to strengthen the reasons by which an international schedule licence may be suspended. The motion would add consultation with communities as a primary weighing factor. This amendment, Madam Speaker, I submit, would make Clause 92 more meaningful as it would make available the power to deal with international airlines or international schedule licences, be they charter or otherwise. The record of some of these carriers is not always what it should be. I need mention only Arrow Airlines as proof of that.

It is my hope that the Government will give this amendment favourable consideration.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 102 by adding immediately after line 30 at page 45 the following:

"(f) respecting appeal procedures regarding decisions made by the Agency;"

He said: Madam Speaker, Motion No. 52A is another "Fred Turner" amendment. While it has nothing to do with the Fred Turner case itself, it does have to do with the ramifications of it.

It is designed, as a previous amendment was and a subsequent will be, to ensure that what happened to Fred Turner does not happen again.

It is a permissive amendment which would allow the agency to establish regulations regarding an appeal process.

The assumption is that with such an option in the legislation, the Government would be too embarrassed to do anything but the right thing.

We think the opportunity for redress and appeal by anyone who feels aggrieved should be in the legislation, and to that end we hope that the Government will accept this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. de Corneille: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) on a point of order.

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I have received, as have other Members of the House, a communication from the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped relating to a proposed subsection 35(5) which would call attention to the problems facing the handicapped. The proposed amendments, in addition to ensuring accessibility for disabled persons, would strengthen the concerns of the handicapped in respect of bus transportation and—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I must advise the Hon. Member that the proposed amendment is totally out of order at this point. As notice was not given, it is now impossible for the Chair to receive the proposed amendment.

Mr. de Corneille: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

Mr. de Corneille: Madam Speaker, I was requesting the consent of the Chair to seek the unanimous consent of the House to deal with these amendments.

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, while I appreciate the sentiments reflected in the proposed amendments, given the lateness of their receipt, their having been received only yesterday afternoon, we simply have not been able to run them through the system, including review by Department of Justice lawyers.

I want to assure my colleagues opposite that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is more than willing to discuss such amendments with his advisory committee, a committee which includes members of the disabled community.

It may be that the aim of the amendments can be achieved through regulation or policy direction, or perhaps an amendment to the statute.

While we are very sympathetic, we are simply unable to give unanimous consent at this late hour to the consideration of this measure.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, given that the proposals of the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped were received only yesterday and are only now undergoing review within the Department of Transport and the Department of Justice, certainly we on this side of the House would be more than willing to give the Government sufficient time to consider these amendments, though certainly they are not new, having been the subject of discussion during committee consideration of Bill C-18.

At the third reading stage, the Parliamentary Secretary could advise the House as to the Government's position with respect to these amendments, and certainly if it is the wish of the Government to have the Bill so amended, we would certainly be disposed to agree.

If it is the wish of the Government to assist the handicapped in this way, it should do so in the legislation itself, and not in the regulations. What the handicapped want is a guarantee of accessibility, and the best guarantee is one provided in the legislation itself.

I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to consider these amendments. If it is the wish of the Government to accommodate, I can assure him that we on this side would be more than willing to give our consent.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I provided the Parliamentary Secretary and other Members of the House with a copy of the requested amendments of the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped. There are three amendments. As I said in committee this morning, if the Government were to agree to move these amendments, or have some member of the Opposition move them, we are prepared to give unanimous consent to their incorporation in the legislation.

I appreciate that the Parliamentary Secretary is trying to run this request for amendment through the bureaucratic mill and the Minister's office. I can assure him that, from our reading of the proposed amendments, they do not do violence to the principles of Bill C-18. We believe the amendments to be in order, though we leave it to the Chair to make the ultimate decision.

It may be that we could commence Private Members' Hour now in order to allow the Government more time to consider the proposed amendments. We are willing to co-operate fully in order to have these amendments incorporated into the legislation.

• (1710)

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, it is just not that simple. I appreciate the position of the Opposition. I am sure that if we were over there, we would be doing exactly the same thing.

Opposition Members would like to be able to go out and have the handicapped rise up and say that the Government is cold, insensitive, and all that. It is a clever political ploy on its part, and I am sure that we would do the same thing.

However, with the greatest of respect, we are unable to give unanimous consent. There are three amendments and they always have ramifications here and there. They must be checked carefully, and we are simply unable to do it at this late hour. We have less than an hour left.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As there is no unanimous consent, we will proceed to Motion No. 52B.

Hon. Frank Oberle (for the Minister of Transport) moves:

Motion No. 52B.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 102 by striking out line 33 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"rates, charges and terms and conditions of carriage for international service".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Crosbie) agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 53

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 106 by striking out lines 26 to 28 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"may refuse to issue to the individual".

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 106 by striking out lines 37 to 39 at page 47 and substituting the following therefor:

"public interest to do so,".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I should like to explain briefly the intent of Motions Nos. 53 and 54.

Currently in the enforcement section the agency may terminate a licence, and the agency may not issue another licence for up to 12 months. Our amendment would allow the agency to disallow the issuance of a new or additional licence to a carrier or an individual with a poor track record.

The purpose of Motion No. 54 is basically deletes the restrictive 12-month maximum on the issuance of a licence to a company or person who has been seriously in violation of the Act. We would be giving the agency the power to point out the bad actors and to ensure that they are not out there being bad actors.

Perhaps it is similar to the section of the Criminal Code which allows the designation of an individual as a dangerous offender who can never be put back into society. In some ways the amendment would give the agency the power to ensure that the operator of an aircraft or an airline company would not be allowed to operate because of a series of infractions, not just wait for the one event which would probably be too costly in terms of human life.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 53 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The question on Motion No. 53 applies as well to Motion No. 54.

The next question is on Motion No. 54A.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 107 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 48, the following therefor:

"(2) Notwithstanding subsection 107(1), the Agency shall, with the approval of the Governor in Council, by regulation,

(a) designate any regulation or order made under this Part or any term or condition of a licence issued under this Part (in this section referred to as a "designated provision") concerning the collection of statistical information or the filing of required documents on the ongoing operation of a carrier, as a regulation, order, term or condition the contravention of which shall be dealt with under and in accordance with the procedure set out in sections 6.7 to 7.2 of the Aeronautics Act, and

(b) prescribe, in respect of the designated provision, the amount not exceeding one thousand dollars that is the maximum amount payable in respect of a contravention of that provision."

He said: Madam Speaker, very briefly, this amendment guarantees that another case such as the one of Mr. Fred Turner would be impossible.

Motion No. 54A allows the offences of not filing paperwork to be dealt with under the Aeronautics Act. It would allow for fines or brief suspensions instead of cancellations of licences.

Under Transport Canada regulations, licence cancellations are only issued for the most serious of offences. The reason the operating authority of Turnair was cancelled was not because the punishment fit the crime. It was because the CTC, as an agency, was not given the authority to fine. Clause 107 of the Bill would give that authority.

Our amendment to Clause 107 would guarantee that these specific clerical contraventions would be punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000. This would better enforce current regulations on filing documents. The penalty would be believable and fair.

Small airlines will want to avoid these fines; a thousand bucks is no small item in their day-to-day operations. Large airlines will not feel exempt from them due to their size.

Would any CTC bureaucrat cancel the licence of Air Canada if it were late filing reports? Who is kidding whom? There is no way; nor would it cancel the licence of Canadian Airlines International if it were late filing reports about how many gallons of gas it used and how many passengers it carried.

This is more meaningful because some airlines have chosen to operate without an operating authority. We received documents this morning concerning an aircraft disaster in Schefferville which killed eight people. That airline was operating without an operating authority, and nobody has cancelled its licence to fly. However, Fred Turner's licence was cancelled because he was late filing reports.

It is also more meaningful because some airlines are doing it now. Although the Government tells me that there will be no compromise on safety, some airlines have chosen to operate without an operating authority. In Mr. Turner's case, he could not continue to operate without an operating authority because the day after his licence was cancelled his aircraft, his hangar, and his equipment were seized. The next thing to happen is that his house will be seized next month. However, other companies continue to operate without an operating authority, and some of them have killed people.

I invite Hon. Members to look at some of the examples before the air traffic committee of the CTC and the Aviation Safety Board, if they do not believe me.

We presented the Government with documentation this morning involving an outfit and eight people who died, and its licence was not cancelled even though it was operating without an operating authority.

This amendment will not let another Fred Turner case happen just because he did not file how many gallons of gas he used. He will not get his licence cancelled in the future, nor will any other operator. They will be fined or subjected to a temporary suspension, but that is all.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of the amendment. I think the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has stated very succinctly and very fairly the reasons I think the amendment deserves the support of Hon. Members on all sides of the House. I appreciate that as soon as some Hon. Members hear the names Fred Turner and Turnair, their auditory systems turn off. However, this is a nation of people, of individuals. It was built by individuals from all parts of Canada including the North. I submit that people should not turn off as soon as they hear the name of an individual mentioned with respect to an amendment.

This motion has been called the Fred Turner Amendment No. 3, and I support it fully. I think it is one that all small business people, all small airlines and all small entrepreneurs can identify with closely. All people who have concern for the rights of individuals to earn a living and to feed their families could support this amendment.

As I understand it, the motion would deny the CTC or its successor agency, the NTA, the right to take away someone's livelihood for not filing a document saying, as I think was the case with Mr. Turner, how many passengers he had flown in the previous six months, how much fuel he had used and information like that, information which is important only to bureaucrats, and I used to be one. It is not information that is important to men, women and children.

My friend the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out this morning that sums of money had been offered. I believe that $25,000, $30,000 or $40,000 were discussed for damages. If we passed an amendment like this, we would not have to see a man like Fred Turner being away from his family for 12 weeks. He is here in Ottawa while his wife and two children are living in a house that is about to be repossessed by the Royal Bank on August 1. There would not be a tragedy like that before us today. The Parliamentary Secretary would not say that he had discussed sums of $40,000 on a without prejudice basis as the Government is not admitting liability.

When the men and women outside this building hear that the Government has properly offered a sum of money, they do not believe anyone who says that the Government is not admitting liability but will offer $15,000 on an ex gratia basis. I used to work in the Justice Department and we used to do this constantly. Everyone assumed that when we offered money, it was because we knew that a court would eventually find the Government liable.

As I am sure all Hon. Members are aware, it would probably take a minimum of two to three years for this matter to get through the Federal Court and the Federal Appeal Court. This process has been attempted before. A Quebec aviation company got through to the Federal Court and eventually, as I understood the judgment, the court decided that the company could sue the CTC but it could not collect damages from it. What is the point of allowing someone to sue the CTC if at the end of it all the company cannot get damages?

I believe the amendment of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is a good one. As you may have guessed, Madam Speaker, I support it.

I hope my friend the Parliamentary Secretary will reply. He indicated this morning that if we had allowed Turnair to operate, there might have been an accident or he made some such connection to the question of safety. To my knowledge, in all of the documents involving this particular airline, there was never a suggestion that safety was in issue. No one has ever suggested that this airline was operating other than safely. I put to one former lawyer as another former lawyer that only when one has no case does one fall back on something like safety, which in this case is not relevant to the facts as I think most people who have looked at the facts would suggest.

To conclude, I would urge Hon. Members to support this amendment on the basis that we all are or should be independent thinkers.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, there is in Motion 54A a germ of a good idea. It is quite true that the suspension or removal of a licence in reaction to minor infractions is something like using a sledge-hammer to break an egg. If a licence is rescinded or suspended, it very often creates much difficulty for the customers of an airline. They find themselves with no way of flying.

For certain infractions, it might be better if there were provisions for fines which would only affect the operators and not the customers. Therefore, there is in this motion a germ of a good idea, but then the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) went and blew his case. He lost it.

The Hon. Member not only referred to minor statistical information that might be collected by the agency or some successor thereto but he went on to talk about the filing of required documents on the ongoing operation of the carrier. That would include documents relating to insurance. I am sure that even the Hon. Member for Regina West would say that it is absolutely essential that an air carrier be covered by insurance and be able to send documents to the agency demonstrating that it has that insurance coverage. The Hon. Member had a good idea, but unfortunately he went and blew it.

My final comment with respect to this matter is to point out some of the inconsistencies brought forward by members of the NDP. Motion No. 54A is a good idea in general terms. There should be a bit more flexibility and better ways of dealing with things. However, we have just dealt with Motions Nos. 53 and 54 which have entirely the opposite effect. If the agency were to be given the powers the Hon. Member for Regina West wanted to give it in Motion No. 53, then we would have Fred Turner cases around the clock.

Mr. Benjamin: No, you read it wrong.

Mr. Nickerson: We certainly would, Madam Speaker. There we have the inconsistency of members of the NDP. If the Government wants to make it easier, they want to make it more difficult. If the Government wants to make it more difficult, they want to make it easier. There is no middle road for members of the NDP. They are always on one side of the issue or the other side of the issue. They are unable to think straight. All they do is to oppose everything the Government proposes.

Mr. Benjamin: This is a compromise, you nut.

Mr. Nickerson: At any rate, that was all I wanted to say about this. I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for having some good ideas, but I wish that he had not just destroyed them.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Very briefly, Madam Speaker, I want to say that I support the proposed amendment and I echo the remarks of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). I think he very eloquently explained the reasons which militate in favour of this amendment we should accept.

The next question is on Motion No. 56.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 112 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 53 and substituting the following therefor:

"the rail division of Canadian National Rail; and".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, this motion changes the wording of Clause 112 which deals with rates by deleting the words "the Canadian rail division of Canadian Pacific Limited" and puts in place instead "the Canadian National Rail", or the rail division thereof.

The entire clause indicates that the company shall compute the costs of capital in all cases by using the costs of capital approved by the agency as appropriate for the railway in question. Our amendment ensures that the publicly owned railway is the model for any cost comparison as opposed to a private sector company over which we have no direct control. It would go a long way toward changing the manner in which the railroads are operated and their costs computed.

"(5) The Agency shall, on completion of an investigation conducted pursuant to subsection (1), determine whether the rate in respect of which the complaint was made is compensatory and, where the Agency determines that the rate is not compensatory, it shall make an order disallowing that rate and requiring the company to substitute for that rate a rate that is compensatory."

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 57.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 113 by striking out lines 47 to 49 at page 53 and lines 1 to 6 at page 54 and substituting the following therefor:

"rate is not compensatory, shall make an order disallowing that rate."

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 57A.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 113 by striking out line 2 at page 54 and substituting the following therefor:

"ing competition or significantly harming a competi-".

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, under the existing regulatory system, Section 276 of the Railway Act requires that all railway freight rates be compensatory. The purpose of this provision is to protect shippers and competitors of railway companies, whose commercial interests might be harmed by non-competitive activities.

This provision aims at ensuring fair and loyal intermodal competition.

Essentially, Section 276 of the Railway Act aims at giving some protection to companies such as the ACE Inc. Maritime Transport Company which have suffered from unfair competition on the part of the railways. This company provides container maritime transport services between Central Canada and Newfoundland and is thus in direct competition with the Terra Transport Division of the CNR.

In 1979, the Canadian Government gave the CN $77 million to transform its railway car transport system into a container service. As soon as the containers became operational in 1982, the CN launched a rate war by setting substantially lower rates than its variable costs.

Because of this practice, ACE Inc. had to lower its own prices to the level of the non-compensatory rates set by the CN. Despite its efforts, the company lost many contracts and had to serve many of its remaining customers at a loss.

The company filed a complaint against the tariff practices of the CN as soon as its administrators found that they could not avoid losses on their markets. The complaint filed with the Minister of Transport was referred to the Canadian Transport Commission, which was asked to investigate. The Commission finally established that a large number of the CN's tariffs for Newfoundland were lower than its variable costs, contrary to the provisions of Section 276 of the Railway Act.

ACE Inc. will have lost several million dollars because of its inability to charge rates high enough to cover its costs, due to the CN's harmful tariff practices. It now owes its survival to a subsidy from the Canadian Governement, which recognized the unfairness of the CN's practices and tried to preserve a competitive maritime transport service while the Commission was pursuing its investigation.

What Clause 113 of Bill C-18 would do is exempt railroads from applying compensatory rates where they establish that the rate is not significantly reducing competition or eliminating a competitor, and was not designed to have that effect.

In all fairness, we can wonder what purpose the Government had in mind when choosing to abolish the protection afforded by Section 276.

Indeed, in the view of many agencies that appeared before the Committee on Transport, both at the time of the examination of the White Paper Freedom to Move, and during the discussion of Bill C-18, the elimination of provisions ruling out unfair practices makes no economic sense.

The Montreal Chamber of Commerce had this to say on the matter:

[English]

"There is no economic motivation for non-compensatory rates but to lessen competition. The law should encourage intermodal competition in a fair and even-handed manner. It should not pit the financial resources of one transportation mode against another."

[Translation]

Moreoever, the present wording puts in doubt the implementation of the clause. Clearly, the new agency would have all the difficulty in the world basing a decision on the working criteria of that clause. I am quoting on that the Luscar Company, which also appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport, and I quote:

[English]

"Subsection (5) creates an unnecessary and undesirable exception to the requirement that railway freight rates be compensatory. What constitutes a substantial lessening of competition is not only subjective, but is also an onus that may be easily met. For example, elimination of one competitor or one competitive mode with other competitors or modes remaining may not be deemed to be a substantial lessening of competition. Moreover, competition from other sources may be argued to be a sufficient retention of competition to meet the onus of the Section.

Whether or not a freight rate was designed to limit competition is also subjective. Numerous arguments could ensue relating to whether the rate was a legitimate competitive action or an action that was intended to reduce competition. It is instructive that the only successful predatory pricing complaint under the Combines Investigation Act involved the actual giving away of product by one competitor."

[Translation]

On this side of the House, in the Liberal Party, we are urging retention of Section 276 for three major reasons: It contributes to the railways' financial stability, by preventing them from getting into a price war below compensatory rates; It serves as a verification mechanism in case of prohibitive rates. Finally, it prevents railways from entering into unfair price competition to the detriment of healthy intermodal competition. Moreover, it is important to emphasize that on that matter, even the Committee on Transport, when reviewing the Freedom to Move document, favoured retaining Section 276. Indeed, in its report Freedom to Move—Change, Choice, Challenge, the Committee had this to say:

Both the trucking industry and CP Rail are particularly concerned that CN Rail might be inclined to price its services below cost to a greater extent than its competitors in the absence of Section 276. They believe that CN enjoys special financial advantages as a Crown corporation as a result of which it would be able to undertake predatory pricing practices.

Several witnesses indicated that in the absence of Section 276, the Combines Investigation Act would not provide sufficient protection.

We agree that this Act is not adequate protection against predatory pricing. Indeed the Committee has concluded that the only effective mechanism currently in place to deter predatory pricing on the part of our railways is Section 276. Therefore, Section 276 should be maintained, and not repealed in five years as proposed by Freedom to Move. We see this as the first of a package of safeguards for shippers and competitors of the railways whose commercial interests might be harmed by anti-competitive behavior when confidential contracts are introduced.

The Committee also feels that clause 276 should be strengthened by providing a new legislation with penalties for the levying of non compensatory rates.

In concluding, I find it rather sad to note that on such a fundamental issue, the Tory members of the Standing Committee on Transport altered their opinion to satisfy the whims of the Minister of Transport. When the paper entitled "Freedom to Move" was considered, they agreed to maintain Clause 276. A few months later, when Bill C-18 was examined, those same Tory members who has suggested that Clause 276 should be maintained, ask us to remove it.

This is the reason why we are asking our colleagues to support this motion which responds to the concerns not only of the Montreal Board of Trade, but also those of the Luscar Company, the ACE Company as well as the Saskatchewan Government, the Canadian Pacific, the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto and many other witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Transport and asked us to have Clause 276 in the current National Transportation Act maintained in Bill C-18.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, on behalf of my Party, that we agree with Motions Nos. 56A, 57 and 57A. We hope they will all carry.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this grouping of motions we are unable to accept Motions Nos. 56A and 57. However, Motion No. 57A, which is part of this grouping, is quite acceptable. I think Members will see the logic of the argument and be persuaded by it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): I will remind the House that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 56A disposes of Motion No. 57 and that a negative vote on Motion No. 56A necessitates a vote on Motion No. 57. Motion No. 57A will be voted on separately.

Therefore, the question is on Motion No. 56A. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

As Motion No. 57 has been disposed of we will now move to Motion No. 57A.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Until the deferred vote is held you cannot decide whether Motion No. 56A has been agreed to or negatived. Five Members having stood, we have agreed to defer the vote. I believe you must call Motion No. 57 as well as Motion No. 57A.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Motion No. 57 is deferred.

Mr. Benjamin: Automatically?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Automatically.

Mr. Benjamin: Okay, you talked me into it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. The question is on Motion No. 57A. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McDermid): Motions Nos. 58 and 59 have been grouped for debate but will be voted on separately.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 58.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 115 by striking out lines 14 to 18 at page 54 and substituting the following therefor:

"115.(1) A railway company shall issue a tariff in respect of the transportation of traffic on any railway operated by the company and, for all tariffs other than confidential contract rates, shall publish the tariff."

Motion No. 59.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 119 by striking out line 45 at page 55 and substituting the following therefor:

"shipper, for goods other than grain covered by the Western Grain Transportation Act, in lieu of the rates set out in a tariff".

He said: Madam Speaker, very briefly, Motion No. 58 ensures, with no doubt at all, that railway tariffs shall be published and made public and accessible to the public at all times. It continues a longstanding practice which has always stood customers of railroads and freight traffic managers for many corporations in good stead. It refers, of course, to tariffs other than confidential contracts. This is a compromise of what we tried to do in committee.

Motion No. 59 specifically excludes grain from the possibility of confidential contracts or agreed charges under this Bill. We and our legal advisors are not sure whether this Bill takes priority over the Western Grain Transportation Act. We know that the Government does not intend that grain will be affected by Bill C-18 and it may be tempted to say that this amendment is unnecessary. However, what the Government may intend now will not necessarily apply the day after this Bill is proclaimed.

It was the opinion of a number of witnesses that this amendment is necessary to tighten up the legislation and provide an assurance that the Western Grain Transportation Act cannot be affected by any agreed charges or confidential contracts. On behalf of western grain producers I submit that this reinforces the benefits they have under the Western Grain Transportation Act. I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to encourage his colleagues to accept Motions Nos. 58 and 59.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 58 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 59 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 64:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 127 by striking out line 47 at page 59 and substituting the following therefor:

"may complain to the Agency that the".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I hear words of agreement from the other side. For the record, the change is from having the parties complain to the Minister, to having them complain to the Agency.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motions Nos. 67 to 78 that have been grouped for debate.

An affirmative vote on Motion No. 68 disposes of Motion No. 67; a negative vote on Motion No. 68 necessitates a vote on No. 67. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 70 disposes of Motion No. 69; a negative vote on Motion No. 70 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 67. Motions Nos. 71 to 78 inclusive will be voted on separately.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 134, by striking out line 11 at page 64 and substituting the following therefor;

"the shipper, by transporting not less than 75 per cent of its total tonnage over a 12-month period ending on the date of the shipper's submission to the Agency for assistance, at the point of origin or destina-".

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 134.

Motion No. 69:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 135 by adding immediately after line 41 at page 65 the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection 135(3), upon application by a shipper, the Agency may allow a competitive line rate for movement of containers on flat cars if the Agency is satisfied that:

(a) the container is owned by the shipper or reserved for the exclusive use of the shipper by lease and,

(b) the container is only utilized by the shipper for the movement of the shipper's goods, and

(c) the shipper has no reasonable alternative to rail transport for the movement which the competitive line rate would apply".

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 135.

Motion No. 71:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 136.

Motion No. 72:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 137.

Motion No. 73:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 138.

Motion No. 74:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 139.

Motion No. 75:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 140.

Motion No. 76:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 141.

Motion No. 77:

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 142.

Motion No. 78:

That Bill C-18, be amended by adding immediately after line 12 at page 70 the following:

"143. Competitive line rates shall not be established by the Agency with respect to movements that form part of a continuous movement of traffic by rail, where any part of such movement is outside Canada, unless;

(a) such a movement is on the lines of a Canadian Railroad Company which are located outside of Canada, or,

(b) competitive line rate is ordered for such a movement by the Governor in Council following receipt of a recommendation to introduce such a rate in the review report under section 266".

He said: Madam Speaker, this is one of the crucial parts of the Bill. Some transportation economists have said that it is a licence to raid railway revenues, namely competitive line rates. We urge the Government to accept these amendments.

The first in this group would make certain that a competitive line rate will not be established for a shipper who does not ship a substantial amount of goods by the route in question. In other words, 75 per cent of their 12-month tonnage must go by the route in question.

Motion No. 68 is the crux of the matter. We want the whole competitive line rate section of the Bill deleted.

Failing that, we urge adoption of Motion No. 69. Let me say that trailers and containers on flat cars are not eligible for competitive line rates primarily because the mere presence of the goods in such a container would prove that the goods were not captive and could be transported by truck. This amendment addresses the reality that some goods are captive due to extreme financial costs of other modes when leaving the shipper, but may be delivered by a different mode.

Self-owned containers are the only answer. This amendment would protect truckers from anyone using this section to get the edge on them in the trucking industry. For example, Prairie Malt says that it must ship by rail from their door, but many customers must receive by truck. The conflict in that clause of the Bill passes all understanding. I hope the Government will agree to accept these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being 5.54 p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, June 15, 1987, the four hours allotted for further consideration of the report stage of the Bill now before the House have expired.

Accordingly, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the Bill.

The first question is on Motion No. 68 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 70 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motion No. 67 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order to assist the House, I think you might find unanimous consent to call for the yeas and nays on Motions Nos. 70 to 78 inclusive rather than calling each one separately, if that suits the Chair and my colleagues.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motions Nos. 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77 and 78.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, to facilitate the business, I wonder if we could make the same assumption for all the motions standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)?

Mr. Benjamin: Except if there are one or two the Government wants to accept.

Mr. Thacker: The Government is inclined to accept the Hon. Member's Motion No. 87.

Mr. Riis: We can do Motion No. 87 separately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think it will be easier for everyone if we proceed with Motion No. 71 through to Motion No. 78 and then look after the other motions.

The question is on Motion No. 71 to Motion No. 78.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motions will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded divisions on the proposed motions stand deferred.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Transport) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 145 in the French version by striking out lines 27 to 46 at page 72 and substituting the following therefor:

[Translation]

"(5) Si une compagnie de chemin de fer fournit des installations de transport par rail de véhicules automobiles ou de remorques exploités pour le transport de marchandises à titre onéreux par une compagnie dont elle a le contrôle, la compagnie de chemin de fer doit offrir à toutes les compagnies qui exploitent des véhicules automobiles ou des remorques pour le transport de marchandises à titre onéreux des installations semblables à celles qu'elle fournit pour les véhicules automobiles ou remorques exploités par la compagnie dont elle a le contrôle aux mêmes prix et aux mêmes conditions; l'Office peut rejeter tout prix ou tarif qui n'est pas conforme au présent paragraphe et ordonner à la compagnie de chemin de fer d'y substituer un prix ou tarif conforme au présent paragraphe."

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 79

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 150 by striking out lines 6 and 7 at page 77 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canadian railway company are intersected or crossed by those of another Canadian railway company, or on application for leave".

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, you may find an inclination in the House to apply this vote to Motion No. 79 to Motion No. 83 inclusive.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreeable to all Members?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 80

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 152 by striking out lines 24 and 25 at page 79 and substituting the following therefor:

"Canadian railway company connects with a line of railway of another Canadian railway company, the".

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 152.

Motion No. 83

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 158 by adding immediately after line 11 at page 84 the following:

"(2) Any rail line conveyed to another company subject to subsection (1) shall remain within the jurisdiction of the federal government."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motions will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded divisions on the proposed motions stand deferred.

The Chair feels that the House should be told that Motions Nos. 80 and 81 have been grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 81 disposes of Motion No. 80. A negative vote necessitates a vote on Motion No. 80. That is for further reference.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Transport) moves:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 158 in the French version by striking out lines 18 and 19 at page 84 and substituting the following therefor:

[Translation]

"voie de cour de triage, une voie d'évitement ou un épi qui n'est pas un embranchement ou une autre voie auxiliaire d'une",

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moves:

Motion No. 83B

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 158 by adding immediately after line 44 at page 85 the following:

"(7) The railway company which has conveyed the line shall, for the purpose of sections 134 to to 142 inclusive, be deemed to be local carrier for any shipper located along the line."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Transport) moves:

Motion No. 84

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 174 in the French version by striking out line 1 at page 100 and substituting the following therefor:

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, it has been a very busy day. I know that we do not like to negotiate on the floor of the House. However, I was under the impression that with a slight amendment to this clause it would be acceptable to the Government as well as to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) in whose name this motion stands. The House would be inclined to give agreement to the Hon. Member's motion on the understanding that we would complete Bill C-19 at both stages tonight. I wish to confirm whether or not that is the understanding of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I have indicated to the Parliamentary Secretary that, indeed, we on this side of the House would be inclined to dispose of report stage of Bill C-19. In fact, this is something that I confirmed with the Hon. Member's Whip in discussions earlier. I regret if the Hon. Member is under the impression that the agreement dealt with both the report stage and the third reading stage. There has been no time allocation motion moved with respect to Bill C-19. The Parliamentary Secretary must understand that he is getting quite a lot already by having us agree to dispose tonight of report stage of Bill C-19. The Government will get third reading tomorrow or the day after. It will be a short debate at third reading. I know that the Government is anxious to expedite this legislation and the Opposition is co-operating. I do not think the Government should ask too much.

Certainly, these amendments which have been presented in good faith should not be the subject of that type of wheeling and dealing. If the Parliamentary Secretary is willing to accept the amendment then he should accept it and we will do our best in relation to debate.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, subject to the condition that it will be a short debate as indicated by the Hon. Member, I must add the proviso that I spent some years in opposition when his Party would not accept even one amendment which we proposed. I really think we are going a long way and have been very generous indeed.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I simply want to confirm that there have been considerable negotiations throughout the day. With respect to the point made by my friend, the Hon.

Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the understanding is, indeed, that we will complete Bill C-19 at report stage today and tomorrow, assuming that all progresses according to plan, we will complete third reading stage.

Again, to make my point in response to my friend the Parliamentary Secretary, considering the extent of this Bill and the incredible comprehensive changes that will result from its passage, the fact that it has been dealt with in a matter of hours is quite extraordinary.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, with respect to Motion No. 95, if the Hon. Member were to seek the unanimous consent of the House to delete the words "—and the need for a special labour adjustment plan" the Government would be amenable to agree to the motion.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, it is with a breaking heart that I will seek the unanimous consent of the House to delete the words "—and the need for a special labour adjustment plan". I appreciate that the Government is ready to accept the first part of the amendment. I cannot win all the wars in one battle. I will accept winning a small battle today and prepare for the next battle on another occasion. I therefore move:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "and the need for a special labour adjustment plan".

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, since this is a motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), I would like to point out that I think he has just allowed his motion to be gutted. However, if he is willing to accept the change suggested by the Government then we are prepared to agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 95 (Mr. Ouellet), as amended, agreed to.

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 269 by striking out line 37 at page 147 and substituting the following therefor:

"purposes of the administration of this Act or the Statistics Act;"

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (1820)

Mr. Ouellet: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, during committee consideration of Bill C-18, the Government introduced an amendment to what was then Clause 273 of the Bill but which is now Clause 272. That amendment was portrayed as a technical amendment and one required to facilitate the transfer of the Canadian Transport Commission to the new agency, the National Transportation Agency. We have since become aware that the amendment in question is more than technical in nature.

I have raised this matter with the Parliamentary Secretary, who in turn has discussed with the Government the implications of the amendment. With unanimous consent, I understand the Parliamentary Secretary is willing to move an amendment that will go a long way toward clarifying the situation.

In the interest of a smooth transfer of the functions of the Canadian Transport Commission to the National Transportation Agency, we are prepared to provide the necessary unanimous consent.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, at the outset, let me thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for having raised this question. We are prepared to accept an amendment that would add a Subclause (11) to Clause 272 of the Bill. I believe you have a copy of the proposed amendment, Madam Speaker. If you would put the amendment to the House, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport) moved:

That Clause 272 of Bill C-18 be amended by striking out lines 7 to 9 on page 151 and substituting the following:

"this Act.

(11) Notwithstanding subsection 10, the Governor in Council may, by order, authorize or provide relief of a form described in that subsection".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

● (1840)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first question is on Motion No. 3. Mr. Benjamin moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 15 to 18 at page 2.

The House divided on Motion No. 3 (Mr. Benjamin), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have been extensive discussions and a great deal of co-operation between the Parties. I think you will find the House in favour of applying the result of the vote on Motion No. 3 to all the other motions with the exception of Motions No. 21A, 5, 52A and 54A which need separate votes.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I wish to confirm that discussions have taken place and that we on our side are prepared to accept the proposal.

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my vote to the following votes.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, does that mean I am going to lose the whole damn works?

Mr. Mazankowski: You are a born loser, Les.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The only reason the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is going to lose all these votes is because his 19th anniversary is coming up shortly.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not a retirement announcement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. With the exception of Motions Nos. 21A, 5, 52A and 54A, may I declare all the motions lost?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

National Transportation Act, 1986

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 15 to 18 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) competition and market forces are, whenever feasible, prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services, provided that each carrier or mode of transportation establishes and maintains fares, rates and conditions that do not constitute unfair or destructive competitive practices,".

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Benjamin), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 5.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 29 to 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"to regional economic development and commercial viability should be an objective both in the operation of transportation services and in the provision of facilities and services in direct support thereof, and where the Government of Canada decides or the Government of Canada and one or more provincial governments jointly decide that any such service or facilities and service is required for the achievement of national or regional, social and economic development objectives, that decision requires that those objectives take precedence over the objective of commercial viability whenever the two are in conflict.

Where the Government of Canada decides or the Government of Canada and one or more provincial governments jointly decide that the achievement of national or regional social and economic development objectives requires that these objectives take precedence over the objectives of commercial viability, the benefits and costs involved should be identified and any relevant additional costs assumed by the government or governments concerned,".

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills, to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Bill S-5, an Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons; and Bill S-10, an Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. In order that the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) does not lose his Private Members' Hour, I think if you seek the consent of the House you will find that there is unanimous consent to proceed to Private Members' Hour for 60 minutes and then revert to Orders of the Day, at which time the Government will call report stage of Bill C-19.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Will all Hon. Members who are not participating in Private Members' Hour please go behind the curtain.

It being 7.18 p.m., pursuant to order made Friday, June 12, 1987, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek) moved that Bill C-244, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (grain handling) be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Canada has a mammoth handling and transportation system which moves grain from the Prairies to market. The well-being of much of western Canada hinges on the continued flow of this grain, particularly wheat, to export through the system by rail, road, river, canal and sea.

There are some 37 unions involved in the handling of grain between the farm gate and the port. They are involved in the country elevators, the railways, grain terminals, in the Seaway, in the St. Lawrence, the ports of Thunder Bay, Vancouver, Churchill and others.

They represent grain handlers, grain trimmers, grain inspectors, weighers and samplers, Seaway workers, lake carrier deck hands, mates and engineers, port stevedores, longshoremen, pilots, tugboat operators, railway trainmen, locomotive engineers, non-ops, shop craft workers and rail traffic controllers and various country elevator and grain service unions.

Obviously, there are a considerable number of employers as well, grain companies, railways, Seaway and port authorities, and so on. Any one of these groups represents a link in the chain, a link which is capable of breaking down and thus curtailing and upsetting the movement and flow of grain.

Canada exports more than 80 per cent of its wheat crop. It enjoys a reputation as an exporter and supplier to the world of high quality wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board, as the sole marketing agency for prairie export wheat, has been doing a good job in maintaining, and even expanding, Canada's share of the world market in the face of unfair and cutthroat foreign competition.

The European economic community and the United States are offering substantial export enhancement bonuses to reduce their surplus grain stocks and these programs have seriously undermined world grain prices. This in turn has devastating affects on our nation which is so heavily dependent on exports. It is a buyer's market. Importing countries value the quality of Canadian wheat, but they can get wheat elsewhere. Buyers do not have to put up with uncertainty of supply and delays in delivery. Should interruptions in our grain handling and transportation system occur which cause Canada to be unable to meet its obligations, then other grain exporting nations are quite prepared to step into the breach. Indeed, even the threat of labour or management induced interruptions in grain movement could lead to lost sales.

The Canadian Wheat Board, in effect, sells wheat to make sandwiches. The wheat has to be there to make tomorrow's bread. The nature of the business is that importers require large quantities on short notice. If the product is not on the shelf, then it simply will not be sold. In fact, the Canadian Wheat Board Commissioner Kristjanson is quoted last fall as saying: "The stoppages at Thunder Bay had resulted in a million tonnes of lost sales". He is further quoted as saying: "As things drag out longer, you lose more. There is no question in our minds that we lost sales, and substantial sales".

The major cost of these interruptions is lost sales opportunities. Other costs involve demurrage on the back-up following the stoppage, as well as additional rail costs in the case of seaway closures. Given the past history of stoppages in this country, this legislation—this Bill—or some derivative thereof, is absolutely necessary. There is nothing to be gained by adhering to the status quo. Inevitably, the parties, labour or management, will resort to government intervention, but only after weeks of misery, hardship and frustration inflicted on the rest of Canadians.

We can no longer allow management and labour to play out these games at the expense of the farm community and, indeed, all Canadians, particularly in times like these. Let no one in the villages, towns and cities of Canada think they are immune to the farm-income crisis. The viability of countless small businesses in the farm service sector depend on the prosperity of the farm community. Indeed, through lost tax revenue and increased farm support programs, a greater burden will fall on other Canadians to pay for the essential and necessary services expected from governments at all levels.

The question then is how much misery, how much cost and how much damage must the rest of us in Canada endure before a settlement must be imposed? Should it be two weeks, five weeks, six weeks? Obviously, there must be a point at which almost all Canadians will agree there has to be a better way. In seeking that better way, I put forward this Bill, not with any illusion that it is perfect or that there may not be better alternatives, but rather to stimulate some much needed debate.

Incredibly, Mr. Speaker, I found this topic has not been debated in this House other than during the usual back-to-work legislation imposed after the damage has been incurred. I believe the matter should be debated in the absence of the emergent conditions and not under the gun in reference to any particular crisis.

The purpose of Bill C-244, in essence, is to declare the handling, storage, transportation and shipping of grain an essential service. It would outlaw strikes and lock-outs in the grain handling and transportation industries and substitute instead a process of binding conciliation. The present mechanism for resolving grain handling disputes works this way: Section 180 of the Canada Labour Code lays out the regulation governing labour disputes in Canada's grain handling and transportation industry. Under the legislation, no union can strike and no employer can declare a lock-out when the normal collective bargaining process has broken down, unless a number of steps are taken, or at least considered by the federal Department of Labour.

If the process does break down, it is mandatory that the parties inform the Minister of that fact. The Minister may then appoint a conciliation board or a conciliation officer. If the resolution of the dispute is still elusive, the Minister may appoint a conciliation commissioner. The Minister may decide not to appoint a conciliation board or officer, or he may appoint a conciliation board or officer and not appoint a subsequent conciliation commissioner, if the over-all process is not aided by such an appointment.

The Minister may also decide to appoint a mediator without the invitation of the parties involved. In any event, the union attains the right to strike and the employer the right to lock-out seven days after either the Minister has notified the parties of his intention to appoint no conciliators in any form, or the Minister has released a copy of the report of the conciliation commissioner to the parties involved in the dispute.

Bill C-244, in brief, would amend the Canada Labour Code by adding a new subsection (3) in Section 180 forbidding strikes or lock-outs in the handling, storage, transportation and shipping of grain. A new Section 171 would make a conciliation report binding on the parties upon the release of the report to them by the Minister. A new Section 164.1.1 would enable either side to request the Minister of Labour to appoint a conciliator. There will obviously be those who oppose this Bill because they will see it as tampering with the right to strike, a right which some see as basic and inalienable, a right which others see as the tyranny of the few. I believe the time has come when this so-called right to strike—

Mr. Benjamin: How about the right to lock-out?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): —or right to lock-out, as the Hon. Member suggests, has to be viewed against the background of a society which has come a long way from the days of the sweat shops and child labour. I think we have reached a point where the actions of a few can cause considerable harm and damage to the rest of society. It is clearly time that we reviewed the process.

I am not anti-labour. I am not anti-union. However, I think I have to be against work stoppages which cost all Canadians time and money.

Mr. Benjamin: So are the communists and fascists.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): It is interesting that the critic of the New Democratic Party, who no doubt will have his say and expect his time to be uninterrupted, is so keen to interfere with mine. I guess it indicates that the position of the NDP is such that those Members not only need their own time but everyone else's as well. I suggest the Hon. Member nip out and answer a phone call from Bob White who will probably tell him what to say in the next few minutes.

Other critics will say this Bill is dangerous because conciliation may produce something worse than what the parties themselves will eventually conclude. These critics usually quote, erroneously, I believe, the Seaway settlement of 1966 as an example. It is a fact that the Seaway settlement in June 1966 gave a 30 per cent increase to Seaway workers. Because the Seaway was then a Crown corporation and had to have Government appropriations to remain in business, the settlement required Cabinet approval. Cabinet of the day approved the 30 per cent increase, an increase which was unheard of at the time, and the Seaway settlement made any attempt to settle other outstanding disputes between the railways and their non-ops impossible. The result was a disastrous string of fat wage settlements which set off the inflationary spiral in this country throughout the 1970s.

It is important to note that this all stemmed from a Cabinet decision to approve that particular wage settlement. It had nothing whatever to do with the conciliation process we are talking about here today.

Are you indicating, Mr. Speaker, a time problem?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is only a couple of minutes over his time now. It is 10 minutes per speech.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): With respect, I believe that under the new rules I am entitled to 20 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, you are the first speaker. The first speaker does have 20 minutes. Every other speaker has 10 minutes.

I think we should bring to the attention of the House that this is under the new rules. Even the Chair sometimes has problems with these new rules which keep coming up. The first speaker on Private Members' Hour has 20 minutes. The balance of speakers have 10 minutes.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-244 does not change the conciliation process which is already in the Canada Labour Code. It is a process which surely can be no more dangerous tomorrow than it is today. We are not talking about changing the process. We are simply suggesting that it be brought forward. The question therefore is: Should resort be had to the conciliation process later or earlier? I suggest that the time to bring it on is sooner in the process.

It has been suggested that this is not the time to bring on a Bill to amend the Canada Labour Code, that this could be misconstrued in light of current labour difficulties elsewhere. With respect, I can only suggest that at the rate we have stoppages in this country it will be impossible to find the right time.

This Bill was first read in January. It was drawn in the Private Members' lottery in April and it is now being heard. If anything, I believe the current letter carriers' dispute points out the problem that strikes, work stoppages and lock-outs occur far more often in the country than we can tolerate and emphasizes the need for us to find a better way.

I am not saying that this Bill is the best answer, or the only answer. I know only that the present system is fundamentally flawed. Obviously, the issue here is of fundamental importance and requires more than one hour of debate. Frankly, I would welcome a motion during this hour to refer the subject matter to a parliamentary standing committee for further study and recommendation. It may be that the Agriculture Committee would be the appropriate one in the circumstances. What is at stake here is Canada's international reputation as a supplier to the world of high quality wheat.

Many important farm organizations have pointed out the seriousness of the problem and have asked the Government to find a solution. The Keystone Agricultural Producers of Manitoba at its annual meeting of delegates adopted a resolution calling for the handling and transportation of grain to be declared an essential service. The United Grain Growers at its convention last fall called for the Government of Canada to make Canada's grain handling system an essential service. It also asked the Government to implement a system of binding arbitration with no strikes or lock-outs.

The President of the Western Canadian Wheat Growers recently issued a release in which he states:

> We must ensure the system which moves our product does not break down. Strikes or lock-outs will mean losses, either in reputation or, when stoppages are long, in sales. In this highly competitive market we can't afford either.

Today, we have a system that is subject to hostage-taking. Unions know that they will be able to play catch-up with large quantities of overtime. There may be times when it suits management to play these games as well. Past history indicates that governments will allow interruptions to last three, four or five weeks until everyone is ready to welcome a government-imposed settlement.

The fact is that strikes and lock-outs have occurred on such a regular basis in Canada that all of the players act in expectation of government intervention. The system is pre-programmed. I suggest it causes the parties to abdicate their responsibility. That being the case, let us have the Government intervene before the damage is done, before the movement of grain is disrupted, before Canada's reputation suffers, and before vital sales are lost. Surely, our society today ought no longer to tolerate a system held ransom to the demands of a few.

We have here a fundamental clash. It is whether the so-called freedom of a small group can be made to override the freedoms of everyone else in the country. Were the damage restricted to the parties alone, one could sit back and let them scrap. The fact is that the misery falls on the backs of all Canadians, primarily on the grain farmer who loses sales and pays demurrage, but also on all Canadians who will wind up having to pay more to help the grain sector survive.

We live in a highly sophisticated society. Our medical people are able to undertake organ transplants. Our scientists are able to put satellites into space. Our high-tech industry has displayed astonishing systems achievements. Yet in the area of the resolution of labour and management problems we are back in the Dark Ages. In the midst of our modern technology and sophistication we see the sad and lamentable spectre of management and labour beating each other on the forehead with rocks until one, or both, fall down.

The issue here is important. I believe it is deserving of more than one hour of debate. There may be better options put forward than Bill C-244. This Bill represents but one approach. There are a great many others. There are in existence specialty courts such as family courts, tax courts, criminal courts, and so on. It may be that we require labour courts. Perhaps we should resort to a two-envelope sort of system wherein the most reasonable of the two competing final positions is chosen. What is important is the recognition of the problem and the potential damage to the Canadian grain farmer and to the nation that flow from work stoppages in the system.

Should Members agree with me on this I urge them to pass the Bill or, in the alternative, to refer the subject matter of it to the appropriate parliamentary committee. I do not intend to use my full time because I know other Members want to speak and I am most anxious to hear what they have to say.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I think all Hon. Members can understand the frustration of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) when a strike takes place in an area such as one which deals with the movement of grain. It is a frustrating experience. In some cases it becomes very serious because it affects peoples' lives, their income and their entire future. I can understand why the Hon. Member would propose such an idea even if it is flawed somewhat, both in its premise and in its actual wording.

What I object to in the Bill is that the Hon. Member proposes two things. He says that the Minister shall appoint a conciliation officer, or a board, or a commission, and that the report shall be binding. He then says that no trade union of employees engaged in the handling, storage, transportation or shipping of grain shall declare or authorize a strike anywhere in the country. In other words, no shipper of grain, which includes not only rail but ships, trucks and everything else, involved with the transportation of grain can authorize a strike, and that the report of the conciliation officer shall be binding.

According to the Bill, the Minister would appoint the conciliation officer. So what do we have? For example, we could have a case of a railway about which the Hon. Member is talking and which the Minister can order to cut its expenditures. He could order that CN should decrease its deficit. The Minister could order that after receiving approval from Treasury Board. He is the one who has to make sure that CN meets the projections of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who presents in his Budget the decrease of the deficit of the transporter of grain. Then the Minister would turn around and decide who will be the conciliation officer who will present the binding report. The employees have absolutely nothing to say about this. In other words, the right to strike is removed.

No matter how we look at the situation the right to strike has always been a powerful tool that unions have to force action from governments and employers. So in the case of, say, the Post Office today, or Canadian National today, there are similar situations. There is Treasury Board and the Minister concerned organizing cuts in CN and in Canada Post. Then there are those corporations having to carry through with those cuts in their negotiations with their unions. But it is not the corporation that has decided on the cuts, it is the Minister who has decided upon them. It is Treasury Board that has decided on the cuts. Then along comes this Bill and the Hon. Member says that the Minister will then appoint the person who will decide what happens in the dispute. The Minister cannot appoint someone who is going to suggest the complete opposite to what the Labour Department has announced.

That is a basic flaw in this Bill. It is particularly flawed in the hands of a government in power such as we have today, the Progressive Conservative Government. The Progressive Conservative Government has a policy of "deficititis". That is what this Government suffers from: a policy of deficititis.

This Government orders transporters of grain to make cuts. It orders the transporters of grain to insist upon double shifts for their employees, to insist upon no wage increases. It issued the same order to Canada Post. Canada Post was told to tell its employees that there would be no wage increase this year; that next year they may get 2 per cent. Also, Canada Post employees have been told that any new employees are subject to a lower wage scale and will never achieve parity with present employees.

This Bill would replace the right to strike with binding conciliation. And who would appoint the conciliator? The Minister concerned. That would be completely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, under any Government, even a Liberal Government, and particularly so under a Tory Government.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to join in the debate on Bill C-244, the Private Member's Bill of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), to amend the Canada Labour Code (grain handling).

During this debate I will speak on behalf of my Party and as one who, along with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), represents the grain handling port of Thunder Bay, or the Lakehead, as it is known. The Port of Thunder Bay is where the last labour stoppage occurred, that having taken place last fall, when the members of BRAC, the grain handlers union, struck the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and, in turn, were locked out by the remainder of the companies with operations at Thunder Bay.

I will be speaking against C-244. I think it is a simplistic solution to a very complex problem. It would be a fine world if we could just legislate labour-management relations. However, we cannot just wave the magic wand and have labour and management immediately agree on salaries and working conditions.

While agreements are sometimes achieved in the absence of strike or lock-out actions, the strike weapon must be available to protect workers from the whims of the company. Workers must be able to resort to the age-old right of withdrawal of services, which is what a strike is. It is a collective withdrawal of services arising from dissatisfaction with a given situation.

One of the trade marks of this Government has been its penchant to deal with important and necessary matters in entirely inappropriate ways. When skilful surgery is required, this Government tends to rely on a sledge hammer; when decisive action is required, this Government tends to become mired in confusion and indecision.

Consistent with this tendency is Bill C-244, a Bill which proposes to outlaw strikes and lock-outs in the grain handling industry in Canada. While the stated objective of the Bill—the stated objective being to protect Canada's farmers from even more financial hardship—is laudable and can be supported by everyone, the method chosen to meet it is unfair, poorly thought out, and unnecessarily confrontational.

The solution to the massive problems in our farming sector will not be found by creating hardship for other workers. Labour disruption, while unpleasant and extremely difficult for everyone concerned, is a crucial element in the free collective bargaining process.

I have yet to meet a striker who wants to be on strike. Strikers would prefer to be on the job providing their services in exchange for a regular salary. At times, however, the strike proves to be a necessary element in our system of free collective bargaining, a system which has drastically improved the working conditions and standard of living for most Canadians. By interfering in the collective bargaining process, Bill C-244 would do nothing but create a situation in which the parties do not have to bargain seriously, and that is in the best interests of no one.

In the last month, the Seafarers' International Union reached an agreement with the shipping companies operating on the Great Lakes. That agreement was achieved with the assistance of a mediator appointed by the federal Government. Yes, they rattled their swords and talked tough—but they achieved an agreement. The workers did not have to use the strike weapon; the employers did not have to use the lock-out weapon. But those options were available to both sides, thus forcing both to bargain seriously toward an agreement acceptable to both.

It is quite clear that the effect of Bill C-244 has less to do with protecting the interests of the farmer and more to do with union bashing. Since 1917, a span of 70 years, there have been only three work stoppages by grain handlers. Clearly, this is not where the threat to the incomes of farmers comes from. Instead of avoiding the issue by making grain handlers the scapegoat for the problems of our farming sector, government Members should be directing their energies to ensuring that this Government gets serious about treating the farm crisis as the real crisis that it is.

You will well remember the marathon debate that we had in this House this past spring, a debate which brought the country to focus on the plight of the farmers of this country. It was pointed out that while the Government was doing some good things, more was required. Instead of introducing legislation which would make the interests and the welfare of grain handlers secondary to those of other workers, government back-benchers should be encouraging this Government to begin treating all workers fairly and equitably, thus creating a climate in which workers and management can work co-operatively for their mutual benefit.

Not too long ago, we had a situation on the West Coast where the companies locked out their employees. While that lock-out was not restricted to the grain industry, the prairie elevators with terminals in Vancouver participated in that decision. They were part of the Employers' Council which decided to shut down the Port of Vancouver. That was a decision that hurt not only the worker but the farmers who wanted to move their products.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek might want to spend some time talking with the policy-makers for the pools, the management of the pools about their approach to labour relations. Perhaps he can find out why we no longer have any producers or any grain handlers managing those grain companies. Instead, we have accountants and bookkeepers, and personnel managers. We do not have people who got dirt under their fingernails raising and handling the crop over many years. Therefore, there is not the same kind of understanding about what makes an elevator tick or about what makes good working relationships between management and labour.

In conclusion, I hope the Bill will be rejected in principle by the House. I recognize that it will not come to a vote, but let us try to do something positive. Let us try to ensure that Canadian grain farmers can receive an adequate income, a fair price for their products, and can move those products at a reasonable price and in a way which will keep us competitive in the world. Let us not take it out on grain handlers who are only asking for a decent day's pay for a decent day's work.

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in the debate and to support Bill C-244, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). I think it indicates the importance which western Canadians know must be given to the grain handling system. We in western Canada depend upon a reliable and efficient transportation system to move our grain and oilseeds to market.

As world wheat supplies continue to increase, and as other Governments continue to subsidize wheat exports, Canadian farmers are under increasing pressure to maintain, let alone to expand, their share of the world wheat market. In this very competitive environment, our grain transportation system has proven to be one of Canada's greatest assets.

The system is in a constant state of change. No matter at what part of the system one looks—the railways, the grain terminals, the transfer elevators, or lake transportation—new facilities are added, old facilities are closed; new handling and transportation concepts are introduced and old handling and transportation concepts are ended.

These changes improve Canada's ability to move grain quickly and efficiently from prairie farms to world markets, making the system an important link between producers and world grain markets. Of greatest importance to the changing grain transportation system are the men and women who keep the rolling stock rolling. Many of these people come from farm backgrounds, especially those in the Prairies. They have family and friends who are farmers. They live in communities which are dependent upon the movement of grains and oilseeds to export position as quickly as possible. Their job prospects and their incomes are closely tied to the ability of grain producers to compete in world markets and to move grain to foreign customers. Yet, Canada's grain handling system is beginning to appear unreliable to our foreign customers.

Work stoppages, such as those instituted for Great Lakes shipping, and the increasingly strong threat of strikes or lock-outs threaten to undermine the reliability of Canadians to deliver grain.

I should like to quote from a Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association press release dated April 22, 1987. In part it reads:

> The Association is supporting the legislation because it does not believe farmers can afford any disruptions in volume movement for their product.

Bill Duke, Chairman of that association, said the following:

> Prices for our products are at all-time lows. Our only consolation is volume movement. This situation is likely to continue for some time. We must ensure the system which moves our products does not break down. Strikes or lock-outs will means losses, either in reputation or, when stoppages are long, sales. In this highly competitive market, we can't afford neither.

Under the present mechanism for resolving grain handling disputes, Section 180 of the Canada Labour Code sets out the regulations governing labour disputes in Canada's grain handling and transportation industry. Under the legislation, no union can strike and no employer can declare a lock-out when the normal collective bargaining process has broken down, unless a number of steps are taken or at least considered by the federal Department of Labour.

Section 180 of the Canada Labour Code goes some way toward decreasing the likelihood of a strike or a lock-out, but it does not give security to producers, customers, and western Canadians generally who are dependent upon grain exports.

As other speakers before me have mentioned, and as the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek has said, this topic is too important to cover in one hour of debate in the Chamber. My colleague who introduced this Private Member's Bill mentioned that it may not be the perfect solution. It is certainly not the be-all or end-all, but his purpose in introducing the Bill was to raise the problem and begin discussions because the present system was not working.

The failure of the present system is evidenced by the present rotating mail strikes we are experiencing at the present time, as well as the tie-up in the movement of grain last fall.

In order to ensure that this very important and timely topic gets the full consideration it deserves, I should like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

> Bill C-244, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (grain handling), be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. I will accept the amendment and recognize the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) on debate.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my support to the motion which has been presented. Bill C-244, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), strikes at something which should be addressed by the House in a longer length of time than the one hour available to it today.

I believe the Hon. Member's opening remarks more than adequately presented the case. I do not want to take the time of the House to repeat what he said, but I should simply like to endorse it.

We are in a highly competitive world. International prices for commodities mean that we have little control over them. We need to maintain every advantage that we have.

Our farmers are the most efficient and productive in the world. Our disadvantage is in transportation—the difficulty and distance in getting a product to tide water.

The concept presented in the Bill is not anti-labour or anti-union. In fact, as was mentioned earlier, last year's labour dispute was a lock-out imposed by management. There is a difference when a strike closes down a whole system within a country and spreads the hardship far beyond either the company or the union involved. A work stoppage may be an effective way to settle a labour dispute between two parties when the battlefield is limited to the pocketbooks of the two sides and the public has access to alternatives. However, when there are no alternatives, surely there is a better way that is less costly for Canada and for society as a whole.

I support the notion that this matter should be studied by a parliamentary committee where all alternatives could be examined more closely than we are able to examine them in the one hour available today.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in debate on this proposal which attempts to end industrial stoppages in the grain trade. I particularly appreciate the opportunity because I am a Member of Parliament from the Lakehead where we do a great deal of the grain trade.

In the Lakehead, the activities of Lodge 650 of the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks, known familiarly as BRASC, has been very important in the advancement of wages and working conditions of grain handlers. The proposal put forward by the Hon. Member to bring strikes and lock-outs in this industry to an end seems to me to be a misguided effort to achieve certain objectives and specifically to ensure that the costs involved to producers in moving grain are restrained.

The suggestion that strikes or for that matter lock-outs have been used excessively in the grain trade to drive wages to levels which are out of this world and represent an unfair draw on the system seems to me to be quite an unfair suggestion for anyone to make. In Thunder Bay, the reality of which I can speak with some authority is that Lodge 650 of BRASC has been a responsible union representing the interests of its members, workers in the grain trade. In all the years back to the end of the Great War in 1917, there have been only three strikes brought about by the union. That on the very face of it is evidence of a responsible union.

To recognize the fact that the union has been forced to strike occasionally in those years, and on one occasion which was not very long ago, is to recognize that relations that exist in this industry have not always been of the sort that they should be. I think particularly of the fact that several grain companies in Thunder Bay sought two years ago to involve the Government of Canada and Parliament in the industrial relations context, and that was one of the most objectionable features of the situation.

There is nothing gained when there is a breakdown in industrial relations. We want responsible action on the part of the union and on the part of the employer. We want a fair meeting of the two sides at which the union considers what the membership needs and gives due regard to the situation in the industry and the possibility that the industry is able to afford increases in wages or improvements in the benefits package. The union pays due attention to those matters because, after all, if it miscalculates, it can have a disruptive effect on the industry. The union will itself have resources including economists and others to help it put forward a sound case.

On the other side, we expect the employers to give due attention to the situation faced by their workers at the same time as they consider their own potential ability to pay for an improvement in wages or benefits packages. To propose that this proper development in industrial relations should be disrupted in the way put forward by the Hon. Member by outlawing strikes and lock-outs is to impose on workers a peculiar kind of slavery in the workplace that I believe has no place in a free society. After all, the right to withdraw one's services in order to make a point in the mind of one's employer surely must be one of the fundamental rights that workers have always had. To deny the workers the right to stop work and ask their employers to consider their situation, to recognize the fact that wages need to be improved, is surely to depart from the kind of liberal-democratic society we are trying to build and foster in Canada, the kind of society that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of 1982 was surely designed to strengthen.

One might note in passing the lamentable fact that the courts have refused to recognize the right of association and its consequences as being quite fundamental to society. They have refused to recognize that if the right of association is to mean anything at all, it must include the right to strike, the right to step away from the workplace and tell the employer to consider the situation and improve salaries, benefits and working conditions. To deny that right is surely to subject workers to some kind of slavery.

As someone who grew up on a farm, I would suggest that the imposition of that kind of subjugation in the workplace comes particularly poorly from those who speak for farmers. Obviously farmers work incredibly hard for part of the year and, particularly if they are involved in grain farming, have an opportunity to step away from it, to enjoy curling in the winter or whatever it may be. To demand that the workers at the grain elevators in Thunder Bay, Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Churchill should be subject to the call of their employers without any right to ever break off work in order to consider what they are being subjected to is surely not a principle that anyone would really want to put forward seriously.

I really do believe that the private members of the Conservative caucus who are speaking in support of this proposal are forgetting the principles to which they spoke so strongly in opposition. Very often, they presented themselves as the stoutest defenders of Parliament's rights and of democratic principles. To refuse to recognize the implications of those principles, to try to deny them to workers in Thunder Bay and other cities, seems to be manifestly unfair, particularly when this sort of interference in industrial relations prevails. It is to deny the kind of respect that the former President of Lodge 650 who is now the President of the national union, Frank Mazur, gained over the years from the company and for that matter the kind of respect that he felt for many of the people in the industry with whom he had to deal. They had worked out a good relationship, the kind of relationship that can be evidenced by only two work stoppages in the past two decades. The fact that that only occurred twice was an indication of good industrial relations which, it seems to me, is a real accomplishment.

One of the reasons that I found the lock-out and strike so objectionable that fall was that the employers were very clearly looking to the Government to pull their chestnuts out of the fire, to try to save the situation, to impose something on the worker. That is something we should never do. We should ensure that relations remain between employers and unions at the workplace without any interference of the type which the Member has put forward this afternoon.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the original purpose of a strike was to force the employer to be more reasonable. The original purpose of a lock-out was to force employees to be more reasonable. The difficulty is that while strikes and lock-outs today may hurt the employer or employee a little, they hurt third parties a lot.

That is the difficulty with the strikes which have taken place in the grain handling industry. They hurt the farmer who has no way of forcing the people to work or settling their arguments, yet is the one who takes the loss, sometimes permanently. As a matter of fact, as a result of one of the strikes, the prairie farmers lost their pearl barley market and never got that market back. It was lost permanently because of that strike at the West Coast. The producer is the one who is really hurt.

Consequently, in my view in cases like this grain-handling should be considered an essential service. Four or five thousand farmers should not suffer because a handful of people cannot settle their differences. I think compulsory arbitration is the real answer. This is an essential service and there should be neither lock-outs nor strikes. They should be required by law to settle their differences through compulsory arbitration. The farmers are the ones who are hurt and they should not be hurt. People who have nothing to do with the causes of the strike or the lock-out should not be hurt.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. As the Official Opposition has pointed out, we do not support the Bill which is presently before the House. However, what is wrong with referring it to a committee for further discussion? Surely to goodness no Member in the House would object to that, unless perhaps members of the NDP.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this Bill. As my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), pointed out, it is interesting to hear how much those on the government side have changed ground since they were in opposition. I think all Members of the House know that if we made strikes by grain-handlers illegal, illegal strikes would take the place of legal strikes because workers in that industry have very real safety concerns to deal with.

I represent a number of grain-handlers. Grain moves from the Peace River country, northeastern British Columbia and northwestern Alberta, as well as from other areas of the Prairies, through Prince Rupert. Safety questions have long been a pressing issue for grain-handlers in Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Thunder Bay and other parts of the country where grain is handled. The points being made by the government side are well understood. The Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has pointed out that in many situations farmers end up as the innocent victims severely hurt by protracted strikes.

Speakers on the government side seem to have forgotten what this place is for. When there are protracted strikes in the grain-handling sector or others this place has the responsibility to deal with that. Government Members want to pass legislation saying that grain-handlers and the rail trade are essential services and cannot strike. How far would private Members of the Government go toward banning strikes and defining essential services? That is something upon which we must reflect.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The debate is on an amendment to refer this matter to committee. I would appreciate if the Member would sit down and allow Members to vote on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order and I am surprised to see the Hon. Member rising from that part of the House. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has the floor.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That certainly was not a point of order, as those of us who have been around here for a while are well aware.

I want to take a few moments to deal with the real issue which is most often the most contentious one in negotiations between employers and employees in the grain trade. As I said, safety is a very real issue when dealing with large and heavy locomotives and boxcars which are being unloaded, even at the state-of-the-art grain terminals such as the new one in Prince Rupert.

At the old terminal in Prince Rupert, older cars used to be unloaded from the belly. The dust problems which existed for more than half a century at that elevator were only dealt with when very strong action was taken by the workers in that facility who knew of the problems with the build-up of grain dust. Many workers have lost their lives because of explosions at elevators in Vancouver. There have also been difficulties over the years in Prince Rupert.

The point which must be decided upon is whether a piece of legislation should be passed making grain-handlers an essential service and making it illegal for them to strike. When serious issues such as safety matters and others such issues are not being properly addressed, the only option left to the workers would be to have an illegal strike. In that situation the whole issue would end up back before the House anyway.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would now like to rule on the report stage motions in amendment to Bill C-19. There are 10 motions on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings.

[Translation]

First, since Motion No. 1 was voted on and rejected in Committee, it will not be selected for debate.

[English]

Motions Nos. 2, 2A and 3 seek to amend Clause 8, which deals with the issuing of trucking licences for extra-provincial undertakings. Therefore, these motions will be combined for debate but voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motion No. 4 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 seek to add new areas which can be regulated by Governor in Council, namely, terms of credit for payment of freight charges and penalties relating to predatory activities in transportation.

Motion No. 7 adds a new clause to the Bill which would allow provincial transport boards to carry out investigations into tariffs. This clause also contains new definitions. The provisions in these three motions clearly go beyond the principle of the Bill as read the second time and introduce new concepts into the Bill. I must, therefore, rule the motions out of order. In doing so the Chair is supported by citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition to which I refer Hon. Members.

[Translation]

Motion No. 7A will be debated and voted on separately.

• (2020)

[English]

Finally, Motion No. 8 was moved and negatived in committee and will therefore not be selected for debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 2:

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 36 and 37 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"satisfies the board that there are reasonable grounds to believe, the operations of the".

Hon. Robert de Cotret (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 2A:

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 8 in the French version by striking out line 38 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"camionnage extra-provinciale faisant l'objet de la demande de licence est susceptible".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan) moved:

Motion No. 3:

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 15 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"taking or not, while at the same time accounting for the impact on the continued viability of existing motor carrier undertakings; and".

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Prior to debate on the amendments, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think we have agreement for the following proposition: That debate will now commence on report stage of Bill C-19, that all recorded divisions requested this evening will be deferred until 3.15 p.m. tomorrow; that consent will be given to proceeding to third reading on Bill C-19 tomorrow, and upon the completion of report stage this evening the House will adjourn until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I just want to confirm that we participated in these discussions and are in agreement with the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the arrangements that are proposed are acceptable, but I would have to check with my critic for just 30 seconds before I give my full consent.

Mr. Lewis: I think that is agreeable. I can understand that perhaps this evening that may not have been finalized. I suggest that we commence debate on the amendment. I will confirm it with my colleague and make an intervention when the Member has finished.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there consent for us to commence debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, the clause under debate is Clause 8.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that the first motion we are dealing with is in my name.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Angus: Perhaps, as a matter of process, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) should be allowed to introduce his motion by speaking to it, and then other Hon. Members can speak to it.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, I did not see the Hon. Member stand. If he wishes to stand, I will certainly yield.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair certainly did not mean to keep the Hon. Member for Regina West from introducing his motion. As was noted by the Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), the Hon. Member had not risen. I will gladly recognize him now.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, it is the one and only occasion when my hon. friend was quicker on the draw than I.

In any event, this Bill should not be before the House. Those who appeared before the Transport Committee which studied this Bill, including the Canadian Trucking Association, which is the major player in this legislation, pleaded with the Government not to proceed with this Bill until a new highway safety code was in place, until a national highways board was in place, and until all ten provinces, the territories and the federal Government arrived at a common and reciprocal agreement.

All members in the committee agreed that it was nonsense for a trucker to be required to get licences and operating authorities from 10 provinces and two Territories and from the federal Government if he was going across the line. I understand the federal Government vacated that requirement and turned it over to the provinces. That is what will theoretically happen according to Bill C-19.

The Canadian Trucking Association asked to have the national standards and safety provisions agreed upon and implemented by the provinces, the territories and the federal Government. Subsequently, if the Government wants to deregulate the trucking industry, it can do so.

Furthermore, the trucking industry which is comprised of responsible, long-established carriers, made several complaints to the committee in several locations in Canada.

I will never forget one senior officer of a major national trucking company in Canada who told me in Vancouver that he is yet to have a provincial or federal government inspector come to check his mechanics, his garages, his bookkeeping, the hours of work of his drivers or anything else.

He wanted them to ensure they were doing everything properly. More important, he wanted an inspection of the fly-by-night operators who can start business under deregulation, simply by conning a banker into giving a loan, then renting some tractors, buying insurance and hiring laid-off drivers at one-third their previous pay. Then they are in business. They have no mechanics or garages. That is what the Government calls "fit, willing and able". But, Madam Speaker, they are unfit. Because they are unfit, the willingness has nothing to do with it. Because they are unfit, they are not able to be on the highways of this country. Look at the record in British Columbia. Last fall the RCMP and the British Columbia Department of Transport, and its Highway Traffic Board, shut down Highway No. 1, the Trans-Canada, near Golden, British Columbia, and checked every truck and one third of those drivers had to be taken off the road.

The Government has no business proceeding with this Bill until all these other matters are in place. There can be no justification for proceeding with this legislation. The amendments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and myself do nothing more than try to preserve and protect that kind of safeguard in highway transportation. Surely that is not too much to ask. By the way, it is not just the Canadian Trucking Association asking for this. Many others have said: "Look. Do not do it". The last head of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the United States appeared before our committee as a witness. He said: "For goodness sake, do not make the mistakes we did. Put all these other things in place before you deregulate". The difference between Canada and the United States is that every individual state under its constitution can regulate every trucking company.

Because of this legislation, plus the previous Bill C-18, what an American trucker can do in Canada, a Canadian trucker cannot do in the United States. We can go to the State of New York and Washington, D.C. and talk to Canadian truckers and have them tell us what happens to them when they enter those states. It has nothing to do with the U.S. administration. It has nothing to do with Congress, the Senate, or the House of Representatives. The State of New York places strictures on the Canadian trucker that the Government of Canada cannot do on the U.S. trucker. That is what is going on. Why would the Government be so stupid as to bring in this kind of a Bill now?

Witness after witness, as well as members of the opposition Parties, and some great friends of the Progressive Conservative Party said not to do it yet. They said to put all the other things in place, get all the regulations nailed down, the 10 provinces, the two Territories and the federal Government, and not to bring in Bill C-19 until all those other things are established. Would you believe, Madam Speaker, they will need 200 or 300 more inspectors. The federal Government has agreed to put up a lot of the money, but none of it is in place. There are no inspectors. By the way, one does not pick them up at your average Canada Employment Centre. We do not get those people off the shelf. We have to have someone who knows the difference between an axle, a differential and a diesel engine. Those people cannot be put in place overnight. In fact, that could not happen in less than six months, if we are lucky.

This Bill has no business being called now. It is not the first time the Government had a Bill on the Order Paper for a year, let it die there and put it on again the next year and still did not deal with it until the end of the second year.

Here is an instance where I would agree with the Government. If it takes this Bill off the Order Paper, we will wait another year. That is what was asked for by the Canadian Trucking Association. That is what was asked for in committee by numerous witnesses. This is not the time.

If the Government will not tell us now that it will not proclaim this Bill until all those things I have mentioned are in place, then we have no alternative but to oppose the Bill. If it holds off proclamation until all those other things are in place, the Government might have less trouble tonight and tomorrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Speaker, there have been further discussions among the Parties and I think we have a proposal which will meet the agreement of the House. I will start from the beginning, if I may. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, the taking of any recorded division deferred at the report stage of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, later this day, shall be further deferred until the completion of "Routine Proceedings" on Wednesday, June 17, 1987;

That upon completion of the report stage of the said Bill, the House shall proceed to Government Orders;

That should a recorded division be demanded on the motion for third reading of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, on that day, it shall be deferred until the completion of "Routine Proceedings" on Thursday, June 18, 1987;

That the Order for third reading of Bill C-19, An Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be called on that day, and that, should a recorded division be demanded on the motion for third reading, it shall be deferred until the completion of "Routine Proceedings" on Thursday, June 18, 1987;

That upon the completion of the debate on the motions at the report stage of Bill C-19, later this day, or at 10.00 o'clock p.m., whichever comes first, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day;

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, this may sound complicated but it is indeed the agreement which was reached through the great co-operation of all three Parties. I would just like to ask one question. The vote on third reading on Bill C-19, when it is deferred tomorrow evening, will the House stand adjourned at that time?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Madam Speaker, my friend has picked up an element of the transaction which was agreed to and which I omitted, that is, the items of business tomorrow would be Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 at third reading stage, and the Government would have no intention of calling any other business. The House would then stand adjourned when the debate on Bill C-19 was completed.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I just want to indicate that we are in agreement with that proposal. Perhaps that would allow certain long-term Members of this House to spend their time appropriately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have consent of the House to introduce this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, now that we have gone through all this procedural stuff—

Mr. Gauthier: We have not finished. You had better sit down.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, I just wanted to ask, once all these procedural agreements are over with, can I get to give my speech again?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there agreement of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT ACT, 1986

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra provincial undertakings, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Madam Speaker, the amendments under debate at this particular moment in time have to do with Clause 8. There are three separate motions, as I read it, under debate. This is a Government which purports to be working with the provincial Governments, a Government which purports to be working with the transportation industry. This is from a Government that says it will consult and that it has consulted. It states in Clause 8 that the provincial transport board in each province "may" issue a licence. That is the first part of Clause 8.

• (2040)

It must be kept in mind that the provincial Departments of Transport have said no to this Bill as it stands without a national safety code included. The clause does not state that it can issue a licence, or that the Government will not object if it does issue a licence but that it "may" issue a licence. In fact, this is the federal Government speaking to the provincial Governments which have not agreed to this legislation unless a safety code is put in place.

Clause 8(2) states that the provincial transport board in a province "shall" issue a licence. In effect, this is from the federal Government which is passing a law affecting the provincial Governments when the provincial Governments have said no to the Bill unless a safety code is brought in.

If that were not bad enough we must contend with subclause (3) of Clause 8. It is stated in that clause that the provincial transport board is "authorized" to hold a public hearing. I ask Hon. Members to imagine the Government saying to a provincial transport board: "Yes, you can hold a public hearing". It then states that the board shall not hold a public hearing with respect to an application for a licence referred to in subclause (2). This is legislation put forward by the federal Government which does not have the agreement of the provincial Governments to bring in such regulations. It goes so far as to say that the board, that is, the provincial transport board, shall not hold a public hearing. This is from a Government which says: "We consult. We agree with what the provinces say".

If that were not bad enough, there is Subclause (4) of Clause 8 to contend with. That subclause states that the provincial transport board is not required to issue a licence referred to in subclause (2). This is again from the federal Government which is telling a provincial board what it has to do when it does not have the agreement of the provincial governments.

Then in Subclause (5) it is stated that a provincial transport board "shall" and in Subclause (6) it states that the provincial transport board "may not".

What is wrong with this Bill? It is obvious what is wrong with it. It is a gigantic intrusion into provincial jurisdiction without the approval of provincial boards.

I could not care less if it were without the approval of the provincial Governments but with the approval of the people affected in the provinces. Here we have the Government pointing out that there shall not be public hearings, that a province may, a province shall, a province ought to. The Government has done this without the approval of the provincial Governments, without the input of local truckers or the input of the local people who have to pay for their services.

In effect, this is a Bill which will say to poor Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. and British Columbia—the extremities of the country: "You will no longer have the control that you had over who delivers goods and services in your area of the country. You are going to accept what we say. We even lay down for you what your provincial boards can and cannot do. We will not stop there. We will say whether you can have public hearings or not".

That is an outrageous intrusion not only into provincial jurisdiction but into the jurisdiction of the public. The jurisdiction of the public deals with having a say over what its transportation network will be like, whether or not it will have to pay more for the transportation of its goods, whether or not there will be one trucker left in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or British Columbia.

When there are large trucking outfits that can travel the country it is obvious that under this legislation they will be controlled by federal jurisdiction which is imposed at the provincial level. Basically, I would have to say that with the three amendments that are put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) the Government of Canada is surpassing the bounds of good judgment when it comes to relations with the provinces and relations with the people who live in those provinces.

The board referred to in Clause 8 is normally referred to in most provinces as a public utilities board. There are different names for it in different provinces. A trucker will go in and apply to that board for a licence. Sometimes within provinces the board has already issued licences to companies that are established in that area, or to companies which normally provide service in that area.

The boards also work with the Departments of Finance to regulate the movement of trucks. That is what this board referred to in this particular clause in each province does. These boards even make regulations pertaining to a trucker buying gasoline.

A trucker cannot fill up his truck with gasoline in the State of Maine and go through four or five provinces without paying sales tax on the gasoline in that truck. That is what the weigh scale stations are for. We often wonder what they are for. They are not just to weigh the commodities in the trucks. They are there to measure the amount of gasoline that is in a truck's tank. The people at the weigh station ask the truckers where they are going in their particular province. If the trucker says: "We are going on this particular road for x-number of miles and we are not going to buy any gas or oil for the truck", then the department in the particular province will compute the amount of tax one would have to pay if one had purchased one's fuel in that particular province. Every trucking company knows about that.

The reason this is done is that it might be possible to find some trucks with a couple 100-gallon tanks on either side and the trucker has gassed up in the State of Maine. In Maine we do not have to pay the taxes that we pay at the provincial and federal levels in Canada. The price of gasoline is much cheaper since the oil has been exported by Canada to the United States to be refined.

In this clause the federal Government makes a massive intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. What we strongly object to is that it is without the approval of the provincial government and without the adoption of a national safety code. The federal Government says: "No public hearings. You will not have a say, general public, in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island or British Columbia. It is the Government of Canada. Here is what we are dishing out. Take it whether you like it or not".

• (2050)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the points raised by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

The whole question of motor vehicle transport in Canada has always been a complex one, given the federal-provincial jurisdictional split. Over the years, as our society has become more sophisticated, motor vehicle transport has become increasingly complicated.

All of the studies done over the years indicated the need for a federal-provincial agreement in this area. I am referring here to studies done by the Economic Council of Canada going back to 1978, interdepartmental studies conducted under the auspices of the previous Government, as well as the many studies conducted by the provinces.

In February of 1985 we had a memorandum of understanding signed by the federal Government and the provinces as to how this matter should be resolved. It was an 11-government agreement. All parties agreed that we had to get our act together.

In the light of that, I cannot understand the remarks of my hon. friend, the Member for Gander—Twillingate. Bill C-19 flows from that 11-government agreement.

While we have always had safety guidelines in place, they have been diverse and diffuse. Again in this area all of the 11 Governments came together, with a memorandum of understanding on a national safety code being signed in March of this year. There was unanimous agreement that when Bill C-19 comes into force on January 1, 1988, over 50 per cent of that national safety code will be in place—and that, in itself, is an enormous improvement over the existing situation. There is agreement that the balance will come into effect by January 1, 1990.

It is in that context that Hon. Members should be considering Bill C-19. To be quite frank, I am at a loss to understand some of the points raised.

It is true that the Canadian Truckers' Association, the driving force behind the unanimous agreement, has expressed some doubts with respect to the national safety code. It is the view of that association that it may be that it would be best to have the entire code go into effect at the same time.

However, the Government, with the concurrence of the committee, believes that the wiser course would be to put it into place as it is ready. It can always be added to or amended over the course of time.

This Government has lived up to its commitment to make safety the number one priority. Hon. Members will be aware that we now have a new Aeronautics Act and a new Canada Shipping Act. As well, we now have in place regulations governing the transport of dangerous goods. In 1984, there were 1,030 safety inspectors in place. Today, we have 1,156, and there will be more added as time goes on.

We are in the process of drafting a new rail safety Act. We have the response to the Foisy report. We are drafting a new transportation accident investigation board Act. As well, the new National Trucking Safety Code will be 50 per cent in force on the proclamation of Bill C-19, with the rest coming into force within a few months following its proclamation.

The concerns with respect to safety are misplaced. They got into problems in the U.S. because they chose to deregulate everything, everywhere, and all at once, all in the absence of having any agreements in respect of safety in place. That is not the case in Canada. We are not doing that at all.

Mr. Benjamin: You sure are; you are just doing it slower.

Mr. Thacker: We are not doing that at all. Bill C-19 is, in effect, the safety code. It will place the standards of the national safety code under federal jurisdiction. Surely that is a sensible move.

The provinces will have identical powers to those of the states of the U.S. with respect to interprovincial transport.

During committee consideration of the Bill, the Hon. Member for Regina West put forth an amendment in respect of the treatment of Canadian truckers in the U.S., and that amendment was accepted by the committee. While our truckers have been very well treated in the U.S., Clause 17 was added to the Bill, giving to the federal Cabinet the right to retaliate in respect of any actions taken against Canadian truckers in the U.S. That is an enormous lever.

The committee did very good work on this Bill. A number of amendments were accepted. Regretfully, other than the one additional amendment from the government side, we are unable to accept the amendments proposed this evening. I repeat, the committee did good work, and I am proud of it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Winnipeg North, Winnipeg being a city to which transportation, whether it be by air, by rail, or truck, is of utmost importance, I could not let this debate come to a close without saying a few words.

In bringing forth this Bill, we see a Government so blinded by its ideology that it ignores the warnings and the questions raised by every sector of the community. The trucking industry has raised serious objection to this Bill. It has urged that deregulation not be proceeded with until a number of very important questions have been answered.

The Province of Manitoba itself has raised some major concerns in respect of Bill C-19.

Deregulation in the trucking sector, as deregulation for the railways or the airlines, may bring benefits to the major centres of this country, but not to the regions. While it may result in cheaper rates and better service in the Quebec City-Windsor axis, while it may result in benefits in terms of the traffic between Calgary and Edmonton, it will do nothing for the northern communities of this country, the farming communities, the cities off the mainstream, such as Lethbridge, all of which will suffer very seriously as a result of this mania for deregulation, regardless of its consequences.

The Parliamentary Secretary has implied that all the provinces have agreed to the provisions of Bill C-19. I have here a letter from the Manitoba Minister for Highways and Transportation analysing the defects in the Bill and raising some very serious questions about it, questions which were ignored by the Government in bringing forth Bill C-19.

The letter is addressed to the federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and is dated August 8, 1986.

I shall take a moment to go over some of the questions raised in the letter. Before doing so, let me again point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that not one of the questions raised by the Minister of Highways and Transportation for the Province of Manitoba has been answered by the Government or dealt with in the Bill. As well, he knows very well that the provincial and national trucking associations have raised serious objection to this Bill, for a variety of reasons, none of which have been satisfied.

I remind the Hon. Member that the trucking companies in Manitoba headquartered around Steinbach are among those who have raised very serious objection to this Bill. These are people from whom, in my wildest expectations, I would never expect a vote for the New Democratic Party.

• (2100)

Let me just put on record some of the observations of the Manitoba Minister of Highways and Transportation. In his letter he wrote:

—the new National Safety Code and Fitness Entry Test are not adequate on their own to ensure an appropriate level of highway safety—

The Parliamentary Secretary said that safety would be ensured, but this was from a Government which cut back on the number of public servants in every area. We do not have the same number of people to inspect trucks to ensure that they are structurally sound or to ensure that truck drivers, in their need to meet competition, do not drive 18 hours or 20 hours at a stretch. It is this situation in the United States which has led to many accidents.

Also the Minister wrote:

—small and remote communities and small shippers will not receive adequate service and will be subject to excessive price discrimination, without intervention—

If we let anybody and everybody who has a truck compete for some of the rural communities in the Interlake part of Manitoba or in The Pas-Flin Flon-Thompson area represented by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), it will not be very long before prices are so competitive that some of them will go out of business and we will have no regular, assured service.

Also the Minister wrote:

—American trucking giants are likely to dominate Canadian and trans-border trucking markets to the detriment of our national interest—

Canadian trucking companies, which did relatively well in getting business in the United States when it deregulated, now realize that the American companies have a market 10 times the size of the Canadian market and are being forced, because of deregulation in the U.S., to operate under cut-throat competition. They would be very happy to move into the Canadian market. They are so much bigger than Canadian trucking companies that our companies are frightened, with justification, that they will be driven out of business.

Then the Minister indicated:

—cutthroat competition will result in instability in the trucking industry and undue exploitation of trucking employees.

The reasons for the Minister saying that are obvious. That is precisely what will happen if we have free, unfettered competition.

With the desire to stay in business, prices will be cut, safety will be ignored, and the hours which truckers drive without stopping will be lengthened, and we will have the inevitable results—more and more accidents.

I should like to refer to some of the other concerns expressed by the Manitoba Minister, none of which were answered in the Bill.

He wrote that the following be considered:

—all shippers, particularly small shippers and those located in small and remote communities of Canada, receive adequate service at rates that are not excessively discriminatory—

Obviously the Minister is worried about small communities. If, in order to keep some of the business, trucking companies must cut their prices between main centres in Canada or between main centres in Canada and the United States, obviously they will make up their losses in that very competitive market by increasing prices or cutting services to smaller remote communities. He also wrote:

—the Canadian trucking industry is sufficiently stable and viable.

That needs to be assured before we proceed with deregulation. He went on to say:

—the Canadian trucking industry is in a position to compete on even terms with foreign carriers—

That should have been assured before we proceeded with deregulation. He continued by indicating that a minimum level of Canadian control of the trucking capacity in Canada should be assured.

We have had thousands of takeovers, and there will be increasing take-overs by American companies of Canadian trucking companies. Canadian sovereignty will be lessened. Then the Minister suggested that we needed the following:

—an appropriate balance of trade in trucking services with foreign nations—

We are sitting a few miles from a country which has a population 10 times the size of Canada's. He also indicated that appropriate working conditions and levels of remuneration for those employed in trucking and an appropriate level of highway safety in Canada must be assured.

I know that our time is limited, but I should like to say that the Bill does not meet any of the necessary conditions mentioned by the Manitoba Minister of Highways and Transportation before we proceeded with it. This is why we are opposing the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I just want to try to reassure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that it is not as grim as he pointed out. First, he mentioned that there were fewer inspectors. In fact, there are 126 more inspectors. It is one area in which there have not been cuts—

Mr. Ouellet: Order, Madam Speaker; he can't speak twice.

Mr. Benjamin: Let him go.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has already spoken.

Mr. Thacker: That is a good point.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With unanimous consent of the House, I could let him make some explanations.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Let him have unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a word or two. I probably will not say it as well as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) would have.

I know a little about the trucking industry, particularly in the Province of Alberta. I want to assure the Hon. Member who just spoke and the rest of the House that our truckers are not violently opposed to the Bill. As a matter of fact, Alberta truckers support the Bill.

Alberta truckers are probably the most knowledgeable of freedom to move of any truckers in the country, because for a number of years Alberta truckers have been virtually operating under freedom to move. They have one of the finest trucking associations in the country, bar none.

When people stand up and say that all these terrible things will happen, I do not know what they are talking about. We are not under a freedom to move system yet. All the things about which they are talking have happened under a regulated system, not under a deregulated system. Besides, this Party and this Government are not out for holus-bolus deregulation. We do not believe in regulating everybody's lives; of course we do not. That is part of the NDP philosophy. We believe in the Government reflecting the thinking of the people in its legislation and in its administration.

I want to talk for a few moments about the United States taking over all our trucking. For a number of years, U.S. trucks have been able to move into Alberta and Alberta trucks have been able to move into the United States. There has been free movement back and forth. It has not resulted in the Americans taking over our trucking, not at all. It has resulted in benefits for the U.S.A. and benefits for Canada, benefits for Alberta. It has been a mutually beneficial thing, because when Alberta truckers go into the United States, they respect its laws, and American truckers respect our laws when they come into Alberta or elsewhere in Canada.

They are truckers, and I want to say a word or two about truckers; I have had a lot to do with them. They are not illiterate and they are not immature. They are a mature group of people. There might be an odd few who will try to work 20 or 24 hours, as the Hon. Member just mentioned, and there might be the odd few who will take pills to try to stay awake, but they are the exception. That type of exception may take place under any system. However, the vast majority of truckers in Canada are sound, mature, able, and efficient operators. I say that with double strength because I know what I am talking about. They are not out to beat the consumers, they are out to give a service and to make an honest living. I think we should recognize that our truckers are excellent people.

People are saying that we will suddenly see an era without safety. What have our Departments of Highways and our motor transport boards been doing for the last 25 or 30 years? They have been building up a safety system in every province. Now trucks are operating from British Columbia to Montreal, from Edmonton to Halifax, going through every province and observing the rules of every province. It is very difficult for truckers to operate across Canada because every one must get the consent of each motor vehicle transport board to move through the province. It is like 10 Balkan states. This legislation will enable us to become a united nation. I hope the day will come very soon as we advance with this type of legislation that someone with a licence in Alberta who is qualified and has the proper insurance will be able to travel any place in Canada as a nation without having to stop in every province to get a permit.

A few years ago, the situation was even worse. Some Alberta truckers wanted to bring frozen beef to Montreal. The only way they could do that was to go through the United States because the licence fees for an Alberta truck to go through Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and then into Quebec were so high. These truckers had to get a permit from every province. When there are interveners, these permits can cost as much as $20,000 or $25,000 and sometimes even more than that, depending on how many accountants and lawyers are required, how much travelling must be done and how many people oppose it. It is done on the basis of convenience and necessity.

Under the old system, one trucker would get a monopoly and then add truck after truck so that no one else could get into the market. There could be no competition. That is still evident in some places in Canada. We want competition but we do not want monopolies. By working with the laws in this Bill and in Bill C-18, we will be able to get our Canadian truckers to operate across the nation. They will become a viable competitor of the railways and of the airlines and that is the way it should be.

I recall a few years ago when the railways went on strike, they said that truckers could not haul cars. Well, the truckers soon showed them. They got their lowboys out and hauled cars across the nation. They did it cheaper than the railways ever did. Truckers are a viable competitor and we want every mode of transport to have a chance to contribute to the country.

There are some things that the trains can do best. There are some things that truckers can do best. There are some things that the airlines can do best. There are some things that the pipelines can do best. Some things can even go by ship around the country and have cheaper and better service. However, every mode should have the opportunity to compete fairly and that is what we are aiming at.

Before we began to deal with freedom to move, there were at least 18 or 20 trucks in the United States to every truck in Alberta. Now it has gone the other way. Under freedom to move, it is almost one for one. Our truckers have healthy businesses in the United States and they employ Canadians.

The trucking industry will thrive under this legislation. It will give truckers the first chance they have had for years to compete ably. I am not afraid at all of American trucks taking over our trucking industry. As a matter of fact, I asked an American who appeared before our committee if he was afraid of the Canadian trucks taking over the American trucks and he said that maybe I had something there. Our truckers are just as wise, knowledgeable and efficient and perhaps even more so than any American trucker. Our truckers are one fine group and I am not afraid at all that they cannot compete ably and provide a service to Canada.

I support this Bill. What about all these wild dreams about the roads becoming unsafe? The roads being built today are built well with good gradients, good sight distances, good curves and they will improve. They will get better and better. We have excellent engineers in Canada and our truckers will be able to operate ably because they will be well trained.

We will not stop training truckers and we will not stop checking motor vehicles because we are changing the system. We will do it more so. It will be in the truckers' best interests to keep their vehicles roadworthy and to give their drivers proper wages and hours of work. In that way, they will make a contribution to Canada that they have never been able to make before, a contribution they have been denied the right to make. I congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary for sponsoring this Bill and I think it will mean great things for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). No one would oppose much of what he had to say. Everyone supports a system that would bring some kind of redress to the Balkanization of the permit system in Canada, but what the Hon. Member and the Government have not addressed is the point raised by my colleague from Regina and my friend from Thunder Bay.

I believe we must look pretty carefully at what this Bill really means. The Hon. Member has said that this kind of competition will be good, but anyone who has taken a close look at the implications of what happened in Australia and various places in the United States like California as a result of deregulation would scratch his head and wonder why the Government did not bring in the safety criteria and the regulations first so that truckers knew what they would get.

As I said earlier this evening, the Members on the government side were always the ones who went after the Liberals whenever they brought in a Bill that had a clause like Clause 8 which provided that the Governor in Council could make all the regulations after the Bill is passed. It provides for Trojan Horse regulatory powers. The Hon. Member for Bow River has always fought against that in the House but he seems to be overlooking it this evening.

This Bill will lead to competition that will lead to monopolies. I would like to put a few facts on the record indicating what this really means for small truckers from Skeena, Newfoundland, northern Ontario and some of the regions where small routes have been developed over time. In those areas, truckers move a little bit of this to there and another commodity over there and back-haul something else. They just manage to find themselves a niche and can keep one, two or ten trucks on the road.

The Hon. Member speaks of fit, willing and able. We know what the definition of that is in the Bill. Anyone who can get a bank or credit union to give him the financing to get a couple of tractors, some insurance and a couple of drivers will be considered under this legislation to be fit, willing and able.

Let us look at the Canadian trucking sector. Trucking accounts for 50 per cent of all the transportation revenue in Canada. That amounted to about $5 billion last year, not including revenue raised by fleets owned by companies that do their own hauling. Some very substantial hauling is done by those fleets. For example, earlier this evening we were talking about a large hauler like Canadian Tire and what happens when Canadian Tire takes a large amount of product from Toronto.

Let us say they take it to Terrace or Gander, Newfoundland, and drop it off where historically a small regional trucking operator would be hauling various commodities in the province and perhaps beyond the province into another region. They cannot possibly compete when Canadian Tire is getting from the consumer the cost of trucking. They simply pay the driver and pay for the rubber, the diesel, the gas and so on, for an empty back-haul. That opens a whole new era of trucking in Canada for such corporations.

Let us take a look at the safety questions. Important evidence was put before the Transport Committee which was not listened to by the government side. In the event of an accident involving a car and a truck, the driver of the car is 40 times more likely to be killed. Twelve Canadians a day are dying right now on our highways. Competition at the expense of safety was blamed for a 40 per cent increase in accidents in California after deregulation there in 1980. It is exactly that kind of competition which the Canadian industry is now alarmed about.

In British Columbia just a few months ago there was a landmark coroner's inquest into brakes and safety matters with regard to large tractor trailer operations. The loosening of front axle brakes on tractor trailers has been proliferating, particularly in British Columbia. Evidence was given by the manager of fleet safety for the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Mr. Fergus Savage told the inquest that 60 per cent of the heavy trucks on B.C. highways are operating without those brakes "the highest per centage in Canada", and that most drivers wrongly believe that they are better off without them. The evidence he gave included a report by NBC in the United States which attributed thousands of road fatalities on U.S. highways to the lack of such brakes on heavy trucks.

The Government says that this is only to break down the Balkanization of the permit system. That seems to be its selling line for this legislation. The fact is that the key issue, which is safety on the highways and safety of the truckers, has not been addressed.

Some of the other evidence in relation to Bill C-19 is very worthy of consideration. Predation should have been more directly addressed in Clause 8. It includes the entire sequence of issuance of licences, public hearings, how to file objections, implementation, limitations and regulation. Predation is clearly an issue which the Government has not fully thought through. If it has, it has simply opted in favour of the very large Canadian trucking operators which will pick up a lot of the smaller rural forward and back-haul routes.

After 30 years of deregulation in Australia three trucker/forwarders control 70 per cent of the interstate transportation market-place. In the United States the degree of concentration in the LTL industry since 1980 has surprised everybody. The fact is that not one new general freight carrier has been able to enter the market-place since U.S. deregulation.

Government Members get up and say that this will create a whole new era, that all kinds of new corporations will be formed, there will be all kinds of new profit, that prices will come down, consumers will be better served, and truckers will be free to haul beef from Alberta to Toronto without having to go through the U.S. and so on. The fact is that that which happened in California which has roughly the same population as Canada and roughly the same amount of traffic tonnage movement was quite different.

There are no new entrants into the market-place. There is no long-term competitive downward pricing for the movement of commodity which is supposed to be to the benefit of consumers. Instead new monopolies which were not there in the past have been created. The monopoly structures get rid of the independent truckers which have always been in the market-place, the small guy, the Ma and Pa operations with one, two, five or ten trucks. Those are the ones which will disappear and there will be massive expansion of the big ones such as Canadian Freightways.

Another thing which should have been looked at more carefully in Clause 8 which the Government likes to skate around is that which has happened in relation to U.S. carriers coming into the Canadian market. The largest U.S. carrier that has been in the Canadian market the longest, Canadian Freightways, while dominant in the western Canadian general freight market, has certainly not been a cut-rate operator. Indeed, Canadian Freightways have been exemplary in creating a separate Canadian identity.

The trouble is that few, if any, of the more recent U.S. entrants have shown similar tendencies. Rather, they seem to regard a few sectors of the Canadian market as nothing more than convenient extensions of their U.S. operations where marketing policies are determined from outside Canada and possibly beyond the purview of BCP in any practical sense.

Let us take a look at what has happened with those carriers. A submission to the standing committee in 1985 relied in large part on the Boucher study which claimed that the big U.S. carriers are complementary to Canadian carriers and no threat at all to domestic carriers in short-haul international LTL or domestically. Approximately two months before BCP's presentation to the standing committee one of the largest U.S. general freight carriers, Yellow Freight, sought and obtained multipoint operating authority throughout Quebec. Two months later another of the U.S. mega carriers, Roadway, obtained broad-based authority throughout Ontario. Now all three U.S. continental giants have broad-based authority in the key Canadian markets.

What has the Government done? It has been in office since 1984. There has been no movement on safety and no movement to deal with the penetration of U.S. carriers. The Member for Bow River says that to haul Alberta beef from Alberta to Ontario we have to go through the U.S. and meet all of their interstate criteria. This is not the way to deal with the Balkanization of permits. No Member of this House should knowingly vote for this Bill telling truckers that that is what it is for. We should be dealing with a different kind of permiting system and with safety first.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I want to deal with the amendments which have been introduced by my colleagues which go directly to the root of this legislation, Bill C-19, which has been vigorously opposed by the truckers' associations. It is surprising that the Government has gone ahead to deal with such legislation while those concerned are so vehemently opposed to it.

I will quote representations made before the standing committee by the Ontario Trucking Association which to me, more than any other, echo the concerns of truckers across Canada and identify the three principal areas of concern, those being, first, that all of the essential ingredients for implementing and enforcing a uniform national safety code will not be in place by the proposed date of regulatory change, second, that there are no measures at hand in the Bill to combat unsafe or predatory pricing and, third, that Canadian carriers will be at a significant competitive disadvantage with U.S. carriers because of more onerous taxation and social policies.

Let me first deal briefly with the issue of the uneven playing field with which Canadian truckers have to contend and which places them at a significant competitive disadvantage to their American counterparts. I would like to quote from a letter sent by the Canadian Trucking Association to members of the standing committee. I heard my colleagues who spoke earlier, particularly the very important member of the standing committee, the very venerable Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Indeed, he knows a lot about the trucking industry and has a very distinguished career in the Province of Alberta dealing with transportation matters. Therefore, he should be aware of the feeling of the Canadian Trucking Association.

• (2130)

I am sure that he must have received this letter. I was a little surprised by his presentation and I just want to refresh his memory by quoting the letter from the Canadian Trucking Association that was sent to all members of the standing committee. It states: "It is not simply a question of whether U.S. truckers will have a long-term cash flow advantage over Canadian truckers. If the disparity is as great as it appears, the Canadian truckers who are serious about long-term participation in serving an integrated continental transportation market-place will increasingly be persuaded to relocate their international operations in the United States, operating back into this country using U.S. equipment and U.S. employees".

It goes on to state: "The implication of that scenario goes far beyond the immediate interests of truckers".

Yet the Government has failed to move. Numerous representations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) only met with disinterest. One hopes that when the Minister tables his long awaited White Paper on taxation Thursday night he will address the concerns of the trucking industry, particularly with regard to the issue of compensation for loss of value of operating authority.

I am a little skeptical of the desire of the Government to move so quickly with Bill C-19. It was even asking that we deal not only with report stage, but third reading tonight. Is that because on Thursday night the Minister of Finance will forget the Canadian truckers? Is it because government Members, the Parliamentary Secretary and the Deputy Government House Leader know something we on this side of the House do not know and want to be sure that this legislation is disposed of before the truckers realize Friday morning that the Minister of Finance has forgotten them, thereby putting them in deep trouble in the face of competition from the American truckers?

The Parliamentary Secretary is shaking his head and I suspect that he is saying that he does not know. I hope I am wrong and that indeed the Minister of Finance will not forget the Canadian truckers Thursday night.

At any rate, I support the amendments that have been moved by my colleagues from the New Democratic Party and hope that these amendments are accepted because at least they will improve very bad legislation.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I will not spend much time but since one of the motions is in my name, I feel I should contribute to the discussion.

The motions in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and myself refer to fundamental matters in Bill C-19 and, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), attempt to make a bad Bill better.

We have great concerns about the direction in which the country is heading in terms of truck transportation. We believe that while there needs to be a re-examination of regulation and the manner in which we require motor carriers to operate, the Government has gone too far too fast with this legislation. The whole question of safety has not been addressed to the extent we believe appropriate.

I want to read into the record a letter from the Canadian Trucking Association that was sent to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). It is dated June 2, 1987, and is a follow-up to their appearance before the Standing Committee on Transport which was charged with the responsibility of reviewing Bill C-19.

The letter states:

Re: Safety of Commercial Highway Vehicles

During the hearings before the Standing Committee on Transport on Bill C-19 where CTA stressed its concern over highway safety implications of deregulation, we were accused by shippers of having raised a "phoney" issue on grounds that there was no evidence of a connection between motor carrier deregulation and safety deterioration from the U.S. experience. Shippers are still saying that. Indeed, your own departmental advisers appear to have adopted much the same approach.

On the basis that the debate over whether we are going to deregulate is now over, I would like to take this opportunity to hopefully set the record straight based on comprehensive documentation that has come out of the United States relating to the commercial vehicle safety problem.

The attached booklet on highway safety and the relationship with deregulation was prepared on behalf of the Coalition for Sound General Freight Trucking which I take it is a coalition of U.S. trucking associations including American Trucking Associations. The point here is that these U.S. trucking interests are not raising the connection between safety and deregulation for the purpose of turning the clock back. There would be no point in that and the same holds true here.

An objective overview of the attached material can lead to only one conclusion; namely, that there has been a marked deterioration in highway safety for particular segments of the U.S. trucking industry in recent years and the position continues to deteriorate despite serious attempts to introduce more effective highway safety enforcement.

We have a huge job to be done in Canada on safety and time is of the essence, as we tried to tell the Committee.

Due to the erosion of the regulatory process in recent years, the Canadian trucking industry has come under much the same pressure as its U.S. counterpart and the position is anything but satisfactory as things stand. It can only get worse. In that regard, you may be aware that the Quebec Department of Transport recently introduced a comprehensive on-highway enforcement crackdown on highways leading into Montreal and Quebec City. The initial results from that exercise show that well over 50 per cent of vehicles inspected were in violation of either safety or licensing requirements.

May I add that this is under a regulated system. The letter continues:

More and more Canadian carriers operating in the U.S. are now being picked up for serious safety violations there.

CTA and its provincial affiliates are coming under pressure from individual carriers who are not at all happy with the position we have taken on safety. The fact is that there are established fleets operating on a regular basis that push their drivers beyond 20 hours in a shift. If one carrier does it, everyone has to do it to remain competitive. It is just as simple as that.

In that regard, industry executives who attended the recent CCMTA Safety Code meetings remain concerned over the seeming lack of urgency in getting on with implementation and enforcement of key elements of the National Safety Code.

Extra provincial hours of service regulation is a fiasco as things stand and will seemingly remain so until about 1990. In addition there may be a jurisdictional problem which CTA raised the best part of two years ago concerning private fleets and the issue has still not been addressed as far as we know. Last week at a CTA Conference and Annual Meeting, grave concerns were raised about the delay in getting on with comprehensive enforcement of essential elements of the Safety Code. Clearly the most critical aspect is hours of service followed closely by vehicle inspection, all requiring an effective enforcement regime.

Concerns are heightened due to the exemptions that CCMTA proposes to incorporate into any new hours of service regime.

It is difficult enough to obtain reliable records on hours of service without riddling the regime with loopholes and exemptions. These should be kept to a minimum otherwise it makes effective enforcement virtually impossible.

There is only one way to address the fundamental problems and that is through meaningful and ongoing safety enforcement that treats everyone equally. Having 50 per cent of a paper regime in place by the beginning of deregulation in 1988 will do very little to improve things.

What is required now is hands-on federal involvement in the process of getting the Safety Code in place by assisting the handful of dedicated provincial officials who have taken on this responsibility. Federal funding alone will not do the job.

It is signed by A. K. Maclaren, Vice President, Government Relations, of the Canadian Trucking Association.

I think its letter to the Minister expresses very clearly the concerns of the industry. I know my time is running out, but I just want to say to Members of the House that we are very concerned about safety and about the impact of this Bill regardless of our philosophical problems. We are going ahead much too fast and the industry and the provinces need the time to put the mechanisms in place to ensure our highways will be safe.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to the order made tonight, the recorded division stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 2A standing in the name of Mr. de Cotret for the Minister of Transport. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to the order made tonight, the recorded division stands deferred.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 9 by adding immediately after line 16 at page 6 the following:

"(f) to prevent unfair pricing practices by an extra-provincial truck undertaking;".

He said: Madam Speaker, very briefly, I would like to say that unfair pricing practices are a matter of serious concern to the trucking industry in Canada. Obviously, in an open market where competition is the name of the game, there will be a tendency for shippers to seek out the lowest possible rates. That is of course one of the great benefits of deregulation—

[English]

We must be very careful, indeed, because testimony before the California Public Utilities Commission in February, 1987, provides significant insight into the dangers of unfettered price competition. Volume discounts and rate reductions have become the order of the day in California. Several carriers have not had any increase at all in their rate levels since 1980. Moreover, a price floor has never been achieved in California. Some carriers have always been willing to cut their rates further to get a shipment. Indeed, transportation is a perishable product and a missed load could never be recaptured. That seems to be the prevailing philosophy in California and I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that it could be the prevailing philosophy in Canada after deregulation of the transport industry takes place.

[Translation]

We feel that the acceptance of Bill C-19 as it now exists would seriously damage the highway transportation industry in Canada. Major American carriers will be among those who will apply for the more readily available licences. According to Canadian industry representatives, foreign take-overs of Canadian highway carriers will multiply over the next five years. Since 1981, the operating costs in Canada have increased by 28 per cent, due mainly to the high tax on fuel and the tremendous costs of liability insurance. Over the same period, the traffic has increased by only 5 per cent. As a net result, the profit margin is now down to 3 per cent, one of the lowest since World War II.

Well, major American firms, sometimes with individual gross sales higher than those of the whole Canadian industry, could enter the Canadian market, lower their rates, offering predatory rates, absorbing losses for a couple of years and finally purchasing completely exhausted Canadian highway carriers.

That is the risk of introducing such fitness criteria at a time when the Canadian industry is operating with a 3 per cent profit margin and when the very survival of the Canadian trucking industry is at stake.

Our major concern is that the Combines Investigation Act would be inadequate to prevent this kind of competition.

[English]

In all the history of the provisions, which date back to the early 1950s, only six cases have come to the courts. Only one conviction has been obtained. That was for goods given away in large quantities for a period of one year. The reasons for such an ineffectiveness are clear. Predatory pricing is a criminal versus a civil offence under the Competition Act. All elements of the offence must be satisfied by the criminal standard of proof which is proof beyond a reasonable doubt, and all criminal law defences are available, including now the Charter of Rights.

The pricing inquiry into Canadian newspapers is a good example of how illusory our Competition Act could be. Marshalling sufficient evidence to meet the criminal standards of proof is very difficult and is the reason most often cited by the Director of Combines for discontinuing inquiries. The courts have said that the evidence must be strong in order to convince them to intervene and convict. As Mr. Moore in his book, How Much Price Competition?, said: "The battle is likely to be over before the case is completed".

[Translation]

It is to remedy these major shortcomings that we have moved motion No. 4, which would allow the Governor in Council, following consultation with the government of each province, to make regulations in order, and I quote:

"to prevent unfair pricing practices by an extra-provincial truck undertaking;"

I hope, therefore, that my colleagues in the House will accept this motion which I feel is essential to reinforce Bill C-19 as well as the Canada Competition Act.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I know we have a ten o'clock deadline we have agreed to, but I would just like to say that one thing many of us as Members have always agreed on with the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) are his comments vis-à-vis the sugar refinery case under the Combines Investigation Act which had a criminal standard. However, the one thing the Government has done since 1984 is to change the Competition Act where the test is now a civil test, a balance of probabilities. Therefore, there will be far more convictions and charges laid for that type of offence. As well, the National Transportation Act has inquiry mechanisms, as does the Competition Bill itself. So I think there are a lot of ways of meeting the needs.

In terms of the Hon. Member's comments vis-à-vis pricing, a recent study completed for Transport Canada by a consultant, which is a subsidiary of an Alberta trucking company and which operates in Canada and the United States, shows that Canadian carriers have approximately a 10 per cent cost advantage over the U.S. carriers. That is certainly good news for us at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to order made earlier tonight, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 37 to 40 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"33.(1) This Act except this section and sections 3 and 9 shall come into force on a date prescribed by the Governor in Council after the implementation of regulations respecting the safe operation of extra-provincial bus undertakings or extra-provincial truck undertakings including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, regulation respecting audit, inspection, entry on premises and the provision of information, in at least 7 provinces.

(2) This section and sections 3 and 9, shall come into force on January 1, 1988 or on an earlier date as may be fixed by proclamation."

He said: Madam Speaker, very briefly, in order to meet our timetable, I want to say that this motion is before us because the Canadian Trucking Association indicated to all the members of the committee who studied Bill C-19 that the reverse onus test is equivalent to full deregulation as it is, for all intents and purposes, meaningless as an entry test. Therefore acceptance of Bill C-19 as it is with extended reverse onus for a five-year period means—and I hope the Government and all Members of the House will realize this—a move to full deregulation immediately.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) indicated that he and the Government will do their utmost to ensure that safety on the road will be paramount and that they have been dealing with the provinces to reach an agreement to have a national safety code in place, we have now been made aware of a letter sent to the Editor of The Toronto Star by the Minister of Transport which states that most of the components of the national safety code will be in place by 1990. I think my colleagues will remember that the Minister of Transport appeared before the committee and said that it would be ready and in place for 1988.

In other words, the Minister of Transport came before the committee and made us believe that it would be ready in 1988. Some of the Conservative members of the committee were ready to vote with us, the members of the Opposition, in order to ensure that a national safety code would be implemented before we move into total deregulation. On the words of the Minister these Conservative members turned down our amendment. We have now been made aware of a letter from the Minister of Transport to The Toronto Star which states that not only will it not be ready for 1988 but some of the components of it will not even be in place by 1990.

At this very moment we know that some provinces have not yet signed the so-called unanimous agreement about which the Minister was talking. The bottom line is this. Should we accept enactment of this Bill as it is, we will be accepting full deregulation without a national safety code in place. This is why I have moved my amendment. It is to ensure that the Government will not play with the safety and security of people on the road. Thus I hope this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, there are members from all three Parties on the committee who feel some chagrin and somewhat misled, or at least led astray, as a result of the statements made by the Government with respect to the implementation of a national safety code by January 1, 1988. An amendment which we moved in committee to put the date ahead to January 1, 1989 was pooh-poohed. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), has just said, and as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) know, we questioned the Minister carefully on this matter. It has all turned out to be a pile of you-know-what, Madam Speaker.

In accordance with the requests of the Canadian Trucking Association and in light of the fact that several provinces have not yet even got around to arriving at a consensus for a national trucking code having to do with licensing, permits and safety, the amendment of the Hon. Member is perfectly reasonable. It does nothing more than require—and I guess this is the old stage of the Constitution—at least seven provinces out of ten to agree, and then there are the two Territories which have been snubbed totally throughout all of this. The committee could not even travel up there. The committee would not let us go to Yellowknife or Whitehorse. The people of the Territories have been snubbed again with respect to the Constitution. All we are asking is that until seven provinces have their regulations and their boards, by agreement with the federal Government, in place this Bill will not take effect. We tried that in committee. We were assured that everything would be ready by January 1, 1988. We will be lucky if it is ready by January 1, 1990.

The Government should try to quit kidding itself, as well as the rest of us, because it is not fooling anyone with respect to this issue. If it was smart it would take this Bill and just not deal with it anymore. It would not call third reading tomorrow. It would leave it sit until next year when we could finish dealing with it. You will be surprised to hear this, Madam Speaker, but we will not be ready to finalize it because the provinces are still horsing around on it. You can bet on that,

Madam Speaker, and I am not a betting man, especially when I think I might lose.

This amendment would impose a partial safeguard for what the Government told us repeatedly would be in place by next January 1. Everyone in this House knows that it will not be ready by January 1. The implementation of this legislation has to be delayed at least one year, if we are lucky. I hope that the Government will support this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 7A standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to the order made earlier tonight, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (2200)

Mr. Thacker: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, there have been some serious allegations made against the Minister based on an article in The Toronto Star. I want to assure Hon. Members that the article in question totally misquotes the Minister. In fact, the Minister said that "most would be in place by January 1, 1988". That was not included in the article. It was simply a misquote.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not even a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Normally at this time the House would proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extraprovincial undertakings, now before the House. However, pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the recorded divisions will stand deferred until tomorrow after the completion of Routine Proceedings.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF GROUP OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND VETERANS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, over the last several years I have had many inquiries from veterans denied War Veterans Allowance because of a technicality. When the definition of "theatre of war" was extended in 1981 to include persons who had been transported by ship or aircraft beyond Canada's three-mile territorial water limit while on duty, those veterans of Canada's forces who had crossed the Northumberland Strait became eligible.

However, one class of veterans was left out. These veterans, after preliminary documentation in Charlottetown, had received government warrants to travel from P.E.I. to the mainland. However, years later, when they applied for War Veterans Allowance benefits, they were told they were not considered forces because they had not been attested, or sworn in, in Halifax. But these men had in fact crossed the Strait on orders of the Department of National Defence. They were no longer civilians.

For years, I have written letters and made representations on their behalf.

• (1405)

One veteran, Mr. Douglas Maclaren, did not take no for an answer. He took his case to court. I am indeed pleased to learn that yesterday the Federal Court ruled in his favour.

I hope the Department of Veterans Affairs will now act quickly to give those veterans the benefits which should have never been denied in the first place.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF QUEBEC GAMES FINALE IN VAL-D'OR

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, for the past few years the CBC has had to cope with even stricter financial restraints, and programming choices are increasingly more difficult to make.

Quebec Games President Claude Poirier-Defoy heard that the broadcast of the Quebec Games finale, to be held from August 7 to August 16 this summer, was definitely not a sure thing.

I immediately got in touch with the CBC and, with the support of the Val-d'Or organizing committee and the President of the Quebec Games, we made strong representations to CBC Vice-President Franklin Delaney so that 4,000 young Quebec athletes might be able to perform before the viewers in the Province of Quebec and before their friends and relatives.

It was in a difficult context that the CBC reconsidered its decision and, following this new examination, President Pierre Juneau assured me on June 11, 1987 that the French network will telecast the 1987 edition of the Quebec Games finale in Val-d'Or.

I can only commend the CBC team, and I thank Mr. Pierre Juneau.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

OPPOSITION TO REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, today the national leaders of the youth wings of Canada's three major political Parties issued an unprecedented joint statement urging Canada's Parliament to vote against the reinstatement of the death penalty. In part they said:

> We are young Canadians, active in the political process, who have come together to express our opposition to the reinstatement of the death penalty. Although we differ on many issues, there are those, crossing all party lines, in which there is clearly a right path and a wrong path to take. While we do not—claim to speak for all those we represent in our respective party organizations, nonetheless, we are allowed, as you are, freedom of conscience and expression as individuals. We agree with the Leaders of our Parties that the death penalty has no place in the Canadian system of justice.

The statement is signed by Elaine Fox, Chairperson of the Youth Steering Committee of the New Democratic Party; Johnathan Schneiderman, President of the Young Liberals of Canada; and Irene Porter, President of the Progressive Conservative Youth Federation.

All Members of Parliament should salute these young people for their courage and should take heed of their very important message.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

LETTER CARRIERS' STRIKE—EFFECT ON PUBLIC AND BUSINESS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada gave the workers of Canada Post the right to strike, and now we have a legal strike that can continue indefinitely or until agreement is reached.

In the meantime, Canada Post, the workers, and their families are inconvenienced, but the real sufferers will be the people of Canada—individuals, families, and small businesses.

The last long strike by Canada Post employees caused several businesses to go bankrupt. In other words, a strike injures the innocent third parties, in this case the people, the industry, the farmers, and the businesses. Strikes and lock-outs once had their place, but today the wrong people suffer because of them.

Businesses, industry—everybody depends on getting and receiving their mail, and the country cannot operate without a good postal system. Canada Post is an essential service. Once this legal strike ends, I recommend that the right to strike and the right to lock out workers by Canada Post be withdrawn and a system be set up that will be fair to the workers, the employer, and to the Canadian people.

SEAMANSHIP

NOVA SCOTIAN'S TRIUMPHANT GLOBAL VOYAGE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons, Nova Scotians, and all other Canadians will want to congratulate John Hughes, a Nova Scotian who, on Sunday, arrived back in his home port of Halifax-Dartmouth. He had successfully achieved his goal of travelling around the world by sea, a trip of 27,000 nautical miles.

Mr. Hughes was voted as the most courageous and inspirational participant in the race for the BOC Spirit of Challenge Award. What made his voyage outstanding was his ability to overcome an enormous obstacle—the loss of his mast—by fastening a jury-rigged sail. With his makeshift mast, only 80 square feet of sail, John Hughes travelled from the southeast of New Zealand for an incredible 4,400 miles around Cape Horn to the Falkland Islands. His achievement is outstanding.

By the time he reached his final destination, his trip totalled 224 days, 13 hours, 55 minutes, and 24 seconds. John Hughes arrived in Newport, Rhode Island, in time for the awards dinner on May 30, 1987. His perseverance and courage in his yacht, The Joseph Young, were recognized by the playing of the Canadian National Anthem.

TAX SYSTEM

TAX REFORM—OBJECTIVES

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in a few hours the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will table the long-awaited tax reform project. Once again, by revamping the tax system, we will honour one of the major election commitments made in September 1984.

A number of tax reforms have already been made over the past two years. However the present system still weighs too heavily on individual taxpayers, a situation we have inherited from the previous administration. The only way to improve the situation is to strengthen our economy and create jobs. This happens to be one of the first objectives of the reform.

Canadians want a fairer, less complicated and more understandable tax system, a system which more faithfully reflects our commitment to economic growth and social justice. We can achieve our objectives by taking a concerted and comprehensive approach to the removal of unproductive tax privileges, the review of corporate taxation and federal sales taxes, and through reform propositions based of past progress.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SOUTH KOREA—LIST OF VIOLATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Canada can no longer continue to promote vigorous trade ties with South Korea while ignoring the brute force imposed by the vicious dictatorship of President Chun Doo Hwan. We cannot turn a blind eye to the scores of human rights abuses documented by Amnesty International, or to the military force used to suppress the cries of students, religious leaders and others who are fighting for democratic reform, freedom of the press, the right to assembly and other civil liberties that we in Canada take for granted.

In 1985 South Korea had a $831 million trade surplus with Canada and a two-way trade of $2.38 billion. About 85 per cent of its exports to Canada, led by the sale of Hyundai passenger cars, are job-creating manufactured products. How long do we continue to provide preference for the products of a country where injustice cheapens wages at the expense of Canadian workers?

How can we meet a commitment to send our athletes to the Olympic Games in a country where oppression sustains national unrest?

How long will the Government pursue a policy of silence before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaks out for an end to repression in South Korea?

350TH ANNIVERSARY OF CITY OF SILLERY

TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS AND CONGRATULATIONS TO CITIZENS

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, one of the oldest towns in North America is celebrating its 350th anniversary with ten days of festivities. I am referring to Sillery, which is in my riding.

I want to congratulate the organizers under the leadership of Mr. Jacques Ouellet and Mayor Margaret Delisle, as well as their team of advisers, on the beauty and simplicity of these festivities and the many cultural events that are being offered. Everything is being done to show Canadians the breathtaking beauty of our natural sites, and to tell them about the various historic events that took place and especially the people who made those events.

During the last two centuries, the town has been famous the world over for its shipbuilding industry. The climax of the festivities will undoubtedly be the signing of a document, twinning Sillery with the small town of Sillery, in France.

I want to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations, on behalf of the Canadian Government, to all the people of Sillery.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian people should censure this Conservative Government for the way it is behaving in the Post Office dispute.

First of all, the Conservative Government is responsible for the confrontation and for the postal strike we are having now, because of the cutbacks introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Second, it is absolutely disgraceful that this Government and its Prime Minister, who was personally involved in labour relations, should side with the Canada Post Corporation, a Crown corporation that is fooling the unemployed into thinking they will get jobs with Canada Post.

Third, this Government is guilty of aiding and abetting the confrontation we are seeing on the picket lines.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge Conservative Members, who I know disagree privately with the Government's attitude, to make their views known to the Prime Minister and urge him to bring Canada Post into line.

STATUS OF WOMEN

BATTERED WOMEN—ACCESS TO SHELTERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, a recent study estimates that about one million Canadian women are psychologically and often physically abused by their husbands or boyfriends. Services for battered women have increased dramatically over the last five years and yet, for every woman staying in a shelter, another is turned away.

Moreoever, existing shelters, including one in my hometown, are experiencing financial funding difficulties. Although church and community volunteers have laboured hard in the past to provide such services and initially without any government financial assistance, the extent of the problem is now such that Governments at all levels must accept a continuing role to ensure that shelters and services are available on a reasonably uniform basis. For that reason I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and his provincial counterparts to act quickly to ensure that women's shelters have the necessary core funding to guarantee both urban and rural women access to shelters and well-trained counsellors.

While we continue to wish the problem of battered women did not exist, the reality is that it does. Therefore, Governments at all levels must respond both quickly and adequately.

Oral Questions

NATURAL SUGAR SWEETENER INDUSTRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, sugar-beet and high fructose corn producers need a natural sugar sweetener policy to bring some stability to the industry and hope for the future. The Tariff Board recently released its report on the industry. It studied three possibilities—a minimum floor price, stabilization, or buy-out schemes.

The researchers did not think a floor price of 12 cents a pound was necessary because they believed raw sugar prices are on the upswing and will eventually approach this figure. However, they did not consider cyclical price variations, nor did they address the issue of countries dumping sugar on Canada's doorstep and depressing our price.

The report expresses fear of increasing the price to industrial users and having it passed on to consumers, yet it did not worry about the fact that the price of products with a substantial sugar content has increased substantially since 1981 even though world sugar prices have plummeted. Nor did the researchers they explain why U.S. sugar products sell at less than Canadian prices even though U.S. producers have a substantial floor price.

HEALTH

REHABILITATION SALON

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity today to bring to your attention a first for North America, namely, the Salon de la réadaptation which was held at Quebec City from June 3 to June 5 this year, thanks to the co-operation of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada.

By electronic and direct means, the Salon has given people a chance to become better acquainted with products and services designed to improve the quality of life of those who are functionally handicapped and of their family and those who care for them.

Mr. Speaker, the Salon also gave us an opportunity to appreciate some very good paintings and sculpture made by artists with functional handicaps, which proves that art overcomes all barriers.

I would like to pay a special tribute to artists from the Quebec City area who met this challenge, and I am referring to Mrs. Ginette Chalifour, Solange Laliberté, Lise St-Hilaire and Yves Bussières, who made the magnificent sculpture in the entrance hall of the François Charron Rehabilitation Centre.

I also want to take this opportunity to emphasize the dedication of all hospital workers in the greater Quebec City area, including the Saint-François d'Assise and l'Enfant-Jésus hospitals and the François-Charron Centre, located in the beautiful riding of Québec East.

TAX REFORM

CONSULTANTS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what is the Prime Minister doing about the fact that today 20 leading tax consultants have inside information about tomorrow night's tax reform statement and documents? What is the Prime Minister doing about the fact that these lawyers and accountants, whose firms make millions of dollars from providing tax advice, are in Ottawa today reviewing that White Paper? Why do some wealthy Canadians have privileged access to information which Members of Parliament and average Canadian taxpayers do not yet have? What is the reason? What is the justification? What is he going to do about it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that surprises me coming from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I understand that when he was Minister of Finance this same sort of thing went on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members would let me continue? Experts are brought in and asked to take the same oath of secrecy that public servants take. Then they provide guidance to departmental officials on the technical aspects of the proposals put forward on a range of issues.

• (1420)

As I said, this has been going on for a number of years. It was increased following the 1981 Budget because of the problems which arose at that time, in order to avoid the glitches which can come into this type of proposal.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this incident is unbelievable, unjustifiable and very alarming for the country. These tax reform propositions to be unveiled tomorrow are so important that the Minister of Finance will wait until all Canadian stock markets have closed down before making his presentation tomorrow night. They are so important that he will make them public in a country-wide televised speech. How can the Prime Minister justify the fact that the Minister of Finance has held secret meetings where 20 accountants and lawyers specializing in tax matters were able to scrutinize these confidential propositions ahead of the Canadian people and even ahead the Members of this House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the same process as that followed by previous administrations, including the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if I am not mistaken. The process is the same, we invite tax experts to avoid the kind of problems we had with earlier budgets, so the situation is the same as in the past.

[English]

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not the same procedure at all. Previous Ministers of Finance, myself included, sought all the advice possible, decided how their Budget was to be written, and then closed the doors. This document has already been put to bed. These tax experts can give the Minister no advice now. The document has already been written.

They have been co-opted by the Minister of Finance to try to sell the message across the country. In return for that they get an advantage over their competitors and over every other Canadian. That is exactly what happens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister can look for precedents but he will look in vain because this is absolutely unprecedented.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How does the Prime Minister respond to this outrageous conduct on the part of the Minister of Finance? Does he not feel that with regard to the importance of this tax reform paper that Minister ought to be fired?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw one single fact to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition. This is not a Budget. It is a White Paper. It is a proposal on tax reform.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why have a lock-up? Why have national television?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to have a lock-up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We are trying to allow people from the opposition benches as well as the media to become aware of the range of things in the paper in order that they can make appropriate comments based on more than just hearing me speak from my place at eight o'clock tomorrow evening.

The Hon. Member may want to think back to what happened when he and every other Minister of Finance was in office.

Mr. Gauthier: Not after the fact.

• (1425)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can give him chapter and verse that, when previous Governments were in office, throughout the year they took the advice of experts from the tax community, whether it be lawyers or accountants, in order to make the process work better and to make the product better.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY TAX REFORM WILL BE KNOWN BY EXPERTS BEFORE BEING MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is trying to play with words. Nobody, including the Leader of the Opposition and myself, is blaming the Minister for seeking expert advice.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I see that, 48 hours before public release, a supposedly confidential document has been given to experts who simply cannot be expected to advise the Minister since the documents have all been printed.

So I would ask the Minister why 20 experts, friends of his, are meeting in Ottawa today to study a document which will be released only tomorrow night to the Canadian people and the Members of this House?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Members for their applause.

An Hon. Member: It's not for you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me remind the Hon. Member that this is a White Paper, not a Budget. That is a very clear distinction that the Hon. Member should recognize.

These people have been involved in this process for, I believe, some six or seven months. They have added immeasurably to the process in order to look at the detailed technical aspects from a practical standpoint so that we have the combination of advice from the officials of the Department and the advice from these experts from the private sector, acting as a sounding board. I think that makes a better process and that Hon. Members opposite should be applauding me for proceeding in this way so that we can have a better process.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance does not seem to appreciate the gravity of the situation. We are not talking about consultation. We are talking about a paper that has already been written and its privileged access to a few tax people, who are probably friends of the Party, who are allowed to see the paper and seek special advantages for themselves or their firms.

If they are allowed to see the White Paper today, why do Members of this House not have the same privilege? Why should we have to wait until tomorrow to prepare our answer to the Minister when people outside the House have read the paper? Why did the Minister not wait until tomorrow and give the same advantage to all people at the same time? Why this special treatment for your friends?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear. It is not special treatment for my friends. I do not know many of those people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think I know three or four of them. They are technical advisers to the Department of Finance officials. I met with a small group of them on one occasion, but they have been meeting with finance officials on an ongoing basis to provide technical advice, as a sounding board, on a range of alternatives, some of which might be in the White Paper, some of which might not.

The answer to the specific comment that the Hon. Member made is that they have not read the White Paper as a whole.

ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is about the propriety of the situation of which we just learned, that the Minister of Finance has given privileged access to information about his tax White Paper to a group of professionals in the hope of inspiring favourable comment on the tax reform when it is made public in a couple of days.

Is it appropriate in a parliamentary setting that the Prime Minister's Office should have drawn aside groups of journalists from CTV and CBC and other places to try to ensure that they give favourable treatment to the tax White Paper, and that the Minister of Finance should be doing the same? Where does Parliament come in all of this, and why is Parliament not put first?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Parliament has been a part of this. Parliament has been involved. I think the Hon. Member himself has been part of briefing sessions—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —from finance officials on various components of the tax reform. If the Hon. Member is referring to backgrounders which are being given to members of the media, that is exactly the same process, with the possible exception that the Hon. Member has been getting more detail than the members of the media.

[Translation]

INQUIRY IF IT IS POSSIBLE TO GIVE DETAILS OF WHITE PAPER TO EXPERTS WHILE EXCLUDING PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance.

In the past few days, the experts, acountants and people in the investment industry have all had the details on tax reform in the White Paper prepared by the Minister of Finance and his department. Meanwhile, Opposition Members have to stay in a lock-up tomorrow until noon to get the details on the tax reform proposals prepared by the Minister of Finance and his department during the last two years.

My question is as follows: Is it fair for the Minister of Finance to give all these details to the experts and try and influence the opinion of professionals, while at the same time excluding parliamentarians from this process?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has got it wrong, all wrong. These experts have taken an oath of secrecy. I do not believe the Hon. Member would submit himself to an oath of secrecy on this particular issue.

This group of experts, a small group of experts, has been asked by the Department of Finance to act as a sounding board for a range of proposals, some of which may be in the White Paper and some of which may not. That is the basis on which they are doing this and it is a practice which has been followed for years and years by the Department of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not true.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not true.

Mr. Crosbie: You are really desperate now. Why don't you get an issue with substance? It is a nightmare to come back and listen to you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why don't you go back to Paris and stay there?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: Just because it was done by the Liberals doesn't make it right to be done by the Progressive Conservatives.

Ms. Copps: False, false, false.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONSULTATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My question is about the ordinary Canadians who have not been consulted in this way by the Government. Did the Government bounce off its ideas on people from the trade unions, on farmers, on fishermen, on small businesses? Did the Government consult them? Or did it just consult tax lawyers and accountants and ask them for their opinions? What kind of equity is there in that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the development of tax policy—and I am not trying to make a distinction between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party—

Mr. Riis: There isn't any. You can't do it. Don't even try.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —I am just saying that this is a practice which has been going on for years within the Department of Finance. The officials of the Department of Finance have found it useful to bounce ideas off a group of experts—

Mr. Cassidy: What about ordinary Canadians?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —so they can understand the technical impact of these proposals to make sure that when the proposals are brought in in the form of either a White Paper or a Budget, they are going to be far sounder than was the case of instances in the past when this sort of advice was not taken as fully as it might have been. That is the purpose for this exercise.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE MANOEUVRING ROOM TO SETTLE LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

The Government caused the postal strike by putting impossible restrictions on the Canada Post Corporation. Union members would be willing to settle for the status quo plus protection against inflation, but the Canada Post Corporation cannot even give them that, because the Government has put it in a financial straitjacket.

If we want to settle this dispute, we will have to deal with the crux of the problem, and the question is: Is the Government prepared to take the only step that would help solve this problem, which is to reconsider its priorities with respect to postal services and give Canada Post the financial flexibility it needs if it is to pursue these negotiations with any hope of success?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Marchment Committee pointed out in its study released last year, the previous administration left the Post Office in a terrible mess—

Mr. Gauthier: Baloney to you, too.

Mr. Andre: —and its virtual survival is in question. This House agreed unanimously in 1981 to the creation of a Crown corporation with the intent that the Crown corporation, under the direction of its board of directors, would manage that operation in a sound fashion. That is what it is trying to do. The Hon. Member, by bringing issues from the table onto the floor of the House of Commons, is going against the position taken by his Party, the New Democratic Party, and this Party.

Mr. Gauthier: Quit cheerleading.

Mr. Andre: No one wants a strike. Everyone wants to see a resolution negotiated at the table. But it is not healthy to have the Hon. Member bringing forward false, misleading, inaccurate information—

Mr. Gauthier: That is not true.

Mr. Andre: —before the House, claiming he knows what needs to be done.

[Translation]

ROOM FOR MANOEUVRING IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post is very far out to lunch. If he had read the Marchment report, he would remember that it recommended giving the corporation until 1990 to balance its budget, not just until the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, the worst of it is that the Government, by using replacements to deliver the mail, is manipulating the unemployed and forcing them into confrontations with regular workers. This can only lead to violence and deterioration of the system—

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You are going to get the question. Don't worry about that.

Mr. Crosbie: That's a relief.

An Hon. Member: It will be in Chinese for you, John.

Mr. Rossi: Hey, Crosbie, go back to sleep.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question, please.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the solution is not to use temporary workers but, and I am sure Hon. Members opposite are anxious to hear what I have to say . . . The question is simple: Will the Government give Canada Post the flexibility it needs to continue negotiations and have some hope of reaching a settlement? That is the kind of action we expect from this Government. Nothing else will work.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again the question is based on the totally false premise that the Government is somehow initiating the strike, or the Government is somehow involved.

Mr. Gauthier: You sure as heck are. Exactly.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member was here in 1981 when the Canada Post Corporation was created. He knows that right into Bill was incorporated the mandate that it should operate in a fiscally sound, break-even manner.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): In 1990.

Mr. Andre: He knows that this House has provided in that mandate for collective bargaining which can lead to strikes. He knows that what is happening is perfectly legal and understandable. The economic stakes have been raised by both sides. Is he now asking for this House to overturn the decision taken in 1981—

Mr. Gauthier: No, Sir!

Mr. Andre: —and legislate an end to strikes in Canada Post? If so I think it would be useful. The House would benefit from that position on behalf of the Liberal Party, if that is the Hon. Member's position.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We told you what to do.

SECURITY CHECKS FOR CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I am sure he is aware from newscasts this morning that the Post Office is hiring casuals to deliver the mail without proper security checks. They are given keys to apartment blocks and they are handling family allowance and pension cheques. Will the Minister take a hand in this situation and make sure that there are some limits here, that the security of the mail will be respected while these work stoppages are going on?

• (1440)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I heard those reports I inquired of the Post Office. I was informed that the procedure being followed in regard to replacement workers is exactly the same—

Mr. Murphy: Off the streets!

Mr. Andre: —as in regard to regular carriers—

Ms. Copps: That is false, completely false!

Mr. Andre: If the New Democratic Party would allow me to answer, as well as the vice-president of the students union over there, I will.

A reliability check is undertaken on all employees following their hiring. That reliability check is being undertaken in terms of replacement workers as well. If any workers fail to pass the test, so to speak, they will be dismissed immediately.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for his assurance that the Post Office is following those regulations. I hope that if evidence turns up that, in fact, they are not, he will take action on his commitment here in the House today.

My question relates to the conciliator's report—

Ms. Copps: Scabs are okay, eh?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if I could have some order in this place—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has called on the Chair for assistance. The Chair, without naming the Hon. Member, will ask her for her assistance, too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORPORATION'S DEADLINE TO ATTAIN FINANCIAL SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister responsible for the Post Office is this. The conciliator's report acknowledged that the kind of policy framework that the Government puts in place for the negotiations has an impact on those negotiations.

Is the Minister prepared now to reconsider the deadline that he has put out for financial self-sufficiency by next spring in light of the fact that considerable progress has been made with regard to deficit reduction? As long as the trend line of deficit reduction is downward, will he not give the Post Office some elbow-room so that it can negotiate in a real sense? In this way there can be some give and take at the bargaining table and we can get the postal workers back to work and avoid a national strike.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I point out that in addition to stating in the legislation of 1981 that the Post Office should break even within two years, that deadline was postponed until 1984-85. It was postponed again by our Government to 1985-86. It was postponed again to 1987-88. How many postponements are necessary before it becomes ridiculous?

The important point is that it is not the restrictions of the corporate plan which are causing the difficulties. The Hon. Member knows that it is not on financial matters that the negotiations are difficult. It has to do with work rules and flexibility. I do not think that we should get into that type of debate on the floor of the House of Commons.

It is simply false for anyone to claim that it is an artificial fiscal discipline that this Government has imposed which is the cause of the difficulties in resolving this particular negotiation.

SECURITY OF MAIL—ADMISSION OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES TO APARTMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government has announced the closure of thousands of rural post offices and the replacement of letter carriers by supermailboxes. Today, we witnessed the dangerous erosion of the security of our mail.

I ask the Minister responsible for the Post Office this. Does he not realize that Canadians do not want hired hands off the street, who have passed no security check because they have refused to sign release forms for the RCMP to do the check, to handle the keys to their apartment buildings, their private mail and their personal cheques?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, in dealing with the Hon. Member's preamble, it is false to claim that thousands of rural post offices have closed. It is false to claim that letter carriers are being replaced by superboxes because not a single letter carrier has been replaced by a superbox anywhere in Canada ever in history, nor will that occur at any time in the future that I can see.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: As I said in reply to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, all proper security checks are being conducted. I can assure the Hon. Member that I will keep in touch with the Post Office to ensure that the security of the mail continues. I will take whatever action is necessary should it be threatened. However, I do not think that it will be.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, mail boxes certainly have been replaced with supermailboxes. In these negotiations the Post Office wants to replace the mailman with a supermailman who does not need a lunch hour, who does not need a wage increase, who does not need public transportation, and who can deliver mail twice as fast. It is not a bird, it is not a plane—it is supermailman.

Will the Minister not admit now in the House that the Government, through the postal plan and these negotiations, is deliberately taunting the mail carriers to launch a strike?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as usual, supermouth has got it wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Perhaps I should remind the Hon. Member that it was in 1974 under the Liberal administration that a freeze was placed on future door-to-door delivery in suburban areas. It so happened that prior to each election in Liberal ridings that freeze tended to thaw a little bit. But that was the policy of the previous Government.

I can assure Hon. Members that, contrary to statements being made by numerous people, the Government absolutely does not want a strike. No one wants a strike. What we want is a settlement. What we want to see is a Post Office that operates efficiently and delivers the mail that is turned over to it for delivery, on time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX REFORM

CONSULTANTS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the elite group of tax lawyers and tax accountants who, reports made clear today, are having an opportunity to view the tax documents as late as today. Is the Minister of Finance saying that if this elite group of tax lawyers and tax accountants find problems as they act as a sounding board for his proposals for tax change, he is prepared to make changes between now and his speech tomorrow night?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance then explain to the House and, more appropriately, to the people of Canada why he feels that it is appropriate for 20 elite corporate lawyers and corporate accountants to have an opportunity to view the documents concerning this very critical matter today, hours before the Minister will make it public? Will he explain why they have this privileged information when he has not provided even the same sounding board opportunity to ordinary Canadians, small businessmen and farmers? Why will the Minister not extend the same opportunity if we are going to have this privileged peek in terms of a sounding board? Why on earth would he provide this inside information to this handful of elite people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can only think of one instance in the past when there was a change made as recently as the day before a Budget or a White Paper was tabled. That was when a previous Minister of Finance spent $200 million more of Canadians' money because someone looked over his shoulder at the time he was staging a photo opportunity.

Mr. Riis: These people are viewing the entire document, not just one page.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question has been asked a couple of times before. These are experts who have been used from time to time over the years by Department of Finance officials as a sounding board. I presume—

Mr. Riis: Why today?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The reason why they are in today—

Mr. Speaker: We will probably move ahead somewhat better if the Member who asks the question encourages his or her colleagues to allow the Minister to answer.

• (1450)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have answered the question two or three times. These people are here to act as a sounding board for the Department of Finance on technical matters relating to tax reform. We are not trying to do tax reform in the way it has been done in the past, when problems have arisen. We are trying to anticipate the problems as much as we can through the advice of technical people working with the officials on an ongoing basis. That is the basis for their being here today.

REASON FOR CONSULTANTS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Several of these privileged tax experts have admitted that the fact that they are being given privileged access to the tax reform documentation today gives them an advantage over their competitors.

A Mr. Allan Taitz, a tax partner with Thorne Ernst & Whinney, chortled: "This gives us a bit more time to digest it . . . don't forget, every firm in town is going to write a report for their clients."

My question for the Minister is: Isn't the real reason for this privileged free information to give a select group of tax experts a head start on the tax reform package to the advantage of their clients and at the expense of their competitors, in return for which they are co-opted to sell the Minister's message across the country?

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a member of the same profession and has in fact practised with a number of these people, or I presume he has practised with them. He knows them, and I think he probably respects their integrity. I presume he would respect—

An Hon. Member: It is your integrity that is being questioned.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I presume he would respect the nature of the relationship that these people have with the Department of Finance and that he would not call into question the motives of these people—

An Hon. Member: It is your judgment that is being called into question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the motives of these people in coming to work with the officials of the Department of Finance—

An Hon. Member: It is your integrity.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —to provide advice and to help make the tax policies of this country better.

PURPOSE OF ACCESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): We are trying to get at the real purpose for this peekaboo head start. The books are closed. The Minister has admitted that the books are closed. In response to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap he has admitted that, no matter what advice they might give him today, he will not change his mind or amend the document. Their presence seems superfluous. For what other reason are they there than to give them a head start, at the expense of the ordinary taxpayer and at the expense of their competitors?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should thank the Leader of the Opposition for putting the spotlight on tomorrow night at eight o'clock. When people turn on their television sets right across the country, they are going to have one thing on their minds, and that is whether or not the advice that was given to the Minister of Finance was good advice and is it reflected in the quality of the White Paper.

An Hon. Member: Good for whom?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think people across the country are going to decide that, yes, it is reflected and it was good quality advice.

NATIONAL PARKS

FEDERAL OFFER TO ESTABLISH SOUTH MORESBY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The demand by the B.C. Government for $200 million in compensation for designating South Moresby as a national park reserve bears no relation to government or independent evaluations.

Since knowledgeable Canadians and British Columbians know that the federal offer of $106 million is realistic, and since this House just one month ago unanimously adopted a resolution calling for the designation of South Moresby as a national park reserve, including MPs from all three Parties, from British Columbia as well as the rest of Canada, will the Prime Minister take on the political role of finding a political solution to this national issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am gratified by the observations of my hon. friend that indeed the offer put forward by the federal Government is realistic and is supported by him and, I presume, by members of his Party, as it is no doubt by members of the Official Opposition.

It is indeed a very realistic and powerful commitment to the environment that the federal Government, on behalf of all parliamentarians, has sought. It is our view that this offer is one that ought to be accepted by the Government of British Columbia.

I have strongly urged, in private, the Premier of British Columbia and his colleagues to ensure that this matter is resolved on behalf of all British Columbians and all Canadians.

As described yesterday by the Minister of the Environment, we put on the table an offer of unprecedented generosity to ensure that British Columbians and Canadians benefit from this magnificent habitat forever.

That is the way it was done, and we believe that the Government of British Columbia will indeed endorse that concept.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER COMMUNICATE WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Prime Minister is aware, more Canadians have written to the Prime Minister and to his cabinet colleagues on this issue than on any other environmental issue in the history of Canada.

The Minister of the Environment has done his best to bring this about, as has the Deputy Prime Minister. This Parliament has unanimously expressed itself as wanting that area set aside as a national park reserve.

Knowing that one week from today the B.C. Cabinet is going to make its final decision, I would ask the Prime Minister to contact Premier Vander Zalm and express to him one more time the view that from co-operation comes co-operation in this nation, and on this issue he should understand that very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have met with Premier Vander Zalm in the past on this issue, and on other matters affecting British Columbia. Most recently, we dealt with each other on the Meech Lake Accord. He played a very positive role in the elaboration of that instrument, an instrument that is very beneficial for Canada.

This environmental question in British Columbia is one that has national implications. I have spoken with the Premier on it, and I shall do so again. I shall use every lever to persuade the Premier of British Columbia that this is an issue that should be resolved, not only in the interests of British Columbians but of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the existing perilous state of the negotiations on the free trade deal with the United States.

Just a few days ago a group of key Congressmen, representing members of the major trade commissions of the U.S. Congress, said that they would not agree to any free trade arrangement that did not include major revisions to the Auto Pact.

Yet today we have in front of us a letter sent to the Prime Minister by the Premier of Ontario saying that he could not agree to any free trade deal that in any way tampers with the existing arrangements on duties or safeguards under the Auto Pact.

My question for the Prime Minister is: What is the Government's position on this issue? Is it the Government's position that there will no change or modification to the existing formula of duties and safeguards under the Auto Pact, and will he give us the assurance that the Auto Pact will in no way be affected by the ongoing negotiations?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Government's position on the Auto Pact has been stated many times in the House. We shall repeat it once again for the Hon. Member's benefit.

This Government has not requested that the Auto Pact be on the table for negotiation. To date, neither has the American side requested that it be part of the negotiations.

If they do put the Auto Pact on the table, we naturally will take a look at what their proposals are. But, the proposals, insofar as Canada is concerned, should increase employment for Canada and assure the strengthening of the auto industry, an industry which is so important to this country.

ONTARIO PREMIER'S LETTER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary to the Prime Minister.

He has been quoted several times in the past, in Venice and elsewhere, as saying that the U.S. administration must convince the Congress of the necessity of accepting a free trade arrangement. Yet we have a clear condition put down by members of that Congress that they will not accept such an agreement unless there are changes to the Auto Pact. We also have the Premier of Ontario saying that he cannot accept changes to the Auto Pact.

I do not want any more of this gobbledegook about whether or not it is on the table. I want the assurance today from the Prime Minister that the negotiators for the Canadian side will not accept any changes to the Auto Pact, as requested by the Premier of Ontario.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the record will show that from the very beginning the Hon. Member opposite has done every conceivable thing he can do to sabotage the free trade talks with the United States of America.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

An Hon. Member: So has the U.S. Congress.

Mr. Mulroney: The record will show that his contributions to this debate have been spurious and negative right from the very beginning. And today is not—

Mr. Axworthy: Are you going to answer the question?

Mr. Mulroney: I will answer the question. He has been consistent right up today—

Mr. Axworthy: And you haven't. That is the problem. Why don't you try being consistent.

Mr. Mulroney: In reference to the letter sent by the Premier of Ontario—and it was a confidential letter, by the way—the letter I received from Premier Peterson is headed: "To the Prime Minister. Confidential." And now I see in The Toronto Star today "that some industry sources say the letter, apparently drafted by deputy industry minister, Patrick Lavelle, raises an old bogyman without bringing the issues into focus."

• (1500)

This is a quote from The Toronto Star. If it is from The Toronto Star, it has got to be dead accurate. Indeed, this is a mischievous attempt if indeed—

Mr. Axworthy: Did you get a letter or not?

Mr. Mulroney: Of course I got a letter from Premier Peterson. I get all kinds of letters from Premier Peterson and from the other Premiers—

Mr. Axworthy: What was your reply to him?

Mr. Mulroney: That is question number four. Let's go for question number five.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's go for question number six.

Mr. Mulroney: What is the question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF SOUTH-WEST SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the Special Canadian Grains Program, a program which was recently modified to permit payments to irrigation farmers in certain designated areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Southwestern Saskatchewan has over 40 per cent of the irrigated land in Saskatchewan and is not one of the designated areas.

Could the Minister explain to irrigation farmers in southwestern Saskatchewan why they would be excluded from the program? Could he undertake to re-examine the situation in conjunction with the western advisory group under the Special Canadian Grains Program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate and understand the interest which the Hon. Member has taken in this particular subject. He realizes that the guidelines, the rules, and the criteria were laid down by farm leaders in concert with ourselves. We have established the advisory group to ensure fairness and equity.

The Hon. Member has raised a rather unique and particular problem in respect of his own region of the province. I want to give him the commitment today that I am taking his recommendation under advisement and that I am placing some priority on it. I am arranging a meeting this afternoon with the advisory committee to deal with that specific problem, and I invite the Hon. Member to attend.

PRIVILEGE

TAX REFORM CONSULTANTS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege of which I gave you notice earlier today. It relates to the principle of secrecy of fiscal matters, whereby information relating to proposed tax changes is revealed first only to the House of Commons. This has been, in my submission to Your Honour, breached by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The reason for this principle is to ensure that no one is able to use inside information for personal advantage.

I rely in part upon a report in this morning's edition of The Globe and Mail by Jan Wong, which has since been confirmed by telephone calls from our office. It indicates:

> An elite group of tax lawyers and accountants today will get a privileged first peek at the new White Paper on taxation in Ottawa—one day before the rest of Canada does.
> But this hand-picked group of 20 already has a pretty good idea of who wins and who loses. They have been on the inside of the process since last fall. So, before most people have time to read through the five volumes of tax proposals, they will hit the road, giving speeches and seminars.
> All have signed sworn statements pledging not to divulge any secrets until Finance Minister Michael Wilson reads his speech to the nation on Thursday night. Still, they admit their insider status gives them a coveted head start on the competition.

During Question Period I read one or two citations from those favoured few.

The Minister of Finance goes to the trouble of scheduling a full presentation in the House tomorrow night at eight o'clock. He deliberately waits until all stock exchanges in the country have been closed in order that no information revealed in the paper can adversely affect individual interests on the exchange or in the money markets; in other words, the full panoply of a budget presentation is attached to this economic statement.

We do not know whether or not there will be budget changes announced in the paper. Of course the Minister has been ambiguous in earlier replies to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). In any event, the Minister has given notice of a Ways and Means motion which implies that there must be something affecting the Ways and Means of the country either in terms of tax changes or in terms of expenditure changes.

The story in The Globe and Mail and the facts we have substantiated substantiate that people actively involved in giving the Government tax advice have been provided on a systematic basis with information on the Government's final tax proposals which has not been made available to the public at large, including their own commercial competitors.

I am not taking issue with the Minister of Finance requesting, seeking, and obtaining the best advice he can get on his tax reform proposals. What I am complaining about and where I believe the privilege of Members of the House has been breached is that after the books were closed, after the Minister and his departmental officials had drawn their own conclusions and made up their minds, 20 of these experts were given privileged, advance access to the material. This was at a time when their advice was no longer relevant, because the Minister admitted in the House this afternoon that the books had been closed and that, no matter what advice was obtained during this 24 hours, no changes would be made to the paper.

It is clear from the story that these people not only intend to use this information for their immediate personal and professional advantage, but their competitors are already vocally complaining that this unfair advantage has created preference in the professional world of the tax accountant and the tax lawyer.

The precedents show the importance of the principle of secrecy surrounding fiscal matters.

In 1936 in Britain, a Minister was obliged to resign from Cabinet because a friend to whom he had casually mentioned some of the details of the pending Budget used the information to make an advantageous investment.

In 1947, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer was obliged to resign because he told a reporter one small item in his Budget when he was on his way into the House to deliver it, which resulted in premature publication of the information. That was the famous case when a well-known reporter at Westminster saw the Chancellor of the Exchequer walking into the House and smoking a cigarette, and the Minister said, "I hope you bought a number of those before my getting up". That was a budget leak which cost the Chancellor of the Exchequer his job.

This is not the first time that Ministers of Finance have felt it necessary to consult persons outside their Department about tax changes. The most memorable occasion revolved around the 1963 Budget. I was then the Hon. Member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and it was brought to the attention of the House by the then Hon. Member for Port Arthur, Douglas Fisher, who is now a member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery. That promoted and provoked a very serious crisis for the Pearson Government of the day, and I say justifiably so.

However, I want to suggest that at that time there was a major difference. The outside specialists in 1963 retained by the Department of Finance under the authority of Walter Gordon were not only sworn to secrecy but were removed from their commercial activities while the Budget was in preparation; that is to say, they took leave of absence for a specific period of time from their respective firms. For several weeks following the Budget presentation they were kept in Ottawa and were not allowed to return to the practice of their professions, either in accountancy or in law, and one of them was an investment banker. It was made certain that none of the three gentleman concerned at that time could take any professional advantage out of the special relationship they had been given by Mr. Gordon in his capacity as Minister of Finance.

What we have here are people who have been consulted extensively and in detail while they have continued to carry out their own business activities that are directly related to the proposals on which they are working. They have advance information in the course of their regular practices. Not only did they have the opportunity of discussing with the Minister and his senior officials the ideas which were being bruited about, but today they see the final document which can no longer be changed, and the Minister says it will not be changed. They have an advantage over the country, over Members of Parliament, and over their competitors.

The quotes which The Globe and Mail reporter retrieved from various of these experts make it quite clear that they have every intention of advertising their information and using it for their own commercial advantage. This flies in the face of the letter and spirit not only of financial secrecy but of commonly accepted conflict of interest post-employment principles.

This has been done flagrantly, openly, and even boastfully in full contempt of the traditions and practices of the House of Commons.

• (1510)

You, Mr. Speaker, sit in the most revered chair in Canadian democracy. You are the Speaker of the House of Commons. When Parliament became an institution as it evolved in British practice, there were two reasons for people wanting to unite. One was to approve expenditures proposed by the King and the Crown, the other was to approve or disapprove taxes imposed by the Crown.

Nothing is more fundamental to the institution of Parliament, nothing is more relevant to the privileges of Members of this House, than that we as representatives of the Canadian people have the first opportunity in a privileged way, not to be shared with anyone else, to see what the Government proposes in the way of expenditures and taxes. That privilege has been breached by the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would submit that we are dealing not merely with a White Paper but with something that approximates an actual Budget presentation. It anticipates an entire overhaul of the tax system. It involves the personal affairs of every individual Canadian. It will affect the course and conduct of business in Canada for the next generation.

The special order of the House governing tomorrow's presentation clearly refers to the tabling of Notices of Ways and Means, notices of immediate tax changes. This means that we must consider this matter in the full context of a Budget presentation.

I submit to Your Honour that there is a prima facie case of privilege here. I submit that there is nothing more fundamental to the role of Parliament than the review of Ways and Means, expenditures on the one hand and proposed tax changes on the other. Enveloped as it is with all the sanctity, all the paraphernalia and all the panoply of a Budget presentation, nothing goes more to the heart of the privileges of every single Member of Parliament than this breach that I submit has been perpetrated by the Minister of Finance.

If you find that there has been a prima facie breach of the privileges of the House, I would of course be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an unfortunate thing that has occurred today. As the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has indicated, the White Paper that will be presented tomorrow is a very special White Paper. It is one that touches upon the lives of every Canadian. For all intents and purposes, it is being treated in the same way as a Budget. As a matter of fact, it is being treated even more importantly than have some of the Budgets we have seen in the past.

Tomorrow's lockup will last for a full eight hours, the assumed time required for Members of Parliament and others to be fully apprised of the contents of the document. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) decided that the appropriate time to make a speech outlining the high points of the changes to the tax laws of Canada would be after the stock-market closed, and that means obvious things.

As a matter of fact, when asked on a number of occasions to justify why it was necessary to present the White Paper at eight o'clock at night after the markets had closed, a satisfactory explanation was never given, other than to say that the markets in western Canada would be fully closed at that time. Obviously we are talking about changes to the income tax system of Canada that will have profound implications for all Canadians.

Today there have been people quoted in the media who presumably were participants on a panel of 20 tax lawyers and tax accountants, an elite group of tax advisers, which has now had access to the final documents regarding the tax changes. I think it is only appropriate that since this matter has been raised today this list be made public. It has been referred to by the Minister of Finance throughout today's Question Period and it is only appropriate that the people of Canada know who have been included in this assembly of experts with special information, acquired before Members of Parliament, the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada, have had an opportunity to be apprised of the contents of the tax reform statement.

In today's newspaper, a Mr. Boulanger who worked with the Finance Department from 1978 to 1982 said that he knows how those people are picked, that they are usually the guys who get their names mentioned in the paper, that it is strictly political. Another individual said that he was very flattered because his peers think he is worth talking to, peer recognition being a big thing in this business.

It has been made clear on a number of occasions the value of peer recognition when it comes to tax advice. These 20 special people will now have an obvious advantage when offering advice to corporate clients, and that is something about which we as Members of Parliament must be very concerned. We are concerned about confidentiality and about fairness when it comes to divulging this information.

It is perfectly clear that what has happened is that the Minister of Finance, through the admission of people who know the system well, has politically appointed 20 people who have received special and privileged information. Earlier the Minister of Finance was asked if he would be prepared to make changes to the documents if this so-called sounding board was to identify problems. He responded by saying no. One must ask what was the purpose of this panel of 20 reviewing the documents of the tax reform if the Minister of Finance had no intention whatsoever of changing his mind on any of the aspects of the tax reform proposal.

It is obvious that these people now have privileged information and they will be in a position to take advantage of that privileged information on behalf of their corporate clients.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A 24-hour head start.

Mr. Riis: As the Leader of the Official Opposition has indicated, they will have a 24-hour head start. The fact that the statement will be made after market hours and the fact that there is an extensive lockup involved indicates that this is very important information and those people who are able to take advantage of this information of course stand to gain substantially.

I believe that this is in fact an infringement on the privileges of Members of Parliament. It is perfectly clear that it has always been the tradition in Canada that the first people to view the final documents after the Minister of Finance has put his final stamp on them are the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada. That a handful of politically chosen elite tax advisers have been given preliminary information and know exactly what the new tax Act will be 24 hours prior to Members of Parliament having an opportunity to be apprised of it is obviously an infringement on the privileges of Members of Parliament.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to the arguments of Members opposite and I think I should draw to the attention of Hon. Members just exactly what we are discussing here. We are discussing the lead- up to a White Paper, we are not discussing a Budget. It is a White Paper and a White Paper is a proposal. It does not represent Budget policy. I believe that is a fundamental point that must be made here.

Some Hon. Members: Why the Ways and Means Motion?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has said that under no circumstances should this information be made available to anyone prior to the time it is presented in the House of Commons. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that there are Members of Parliament who are privy to this information prior to my rising in the House of Commons. Members of the Press Gallery are also privy to information—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The matter that has been raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is a serious one. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has taken the same position. The Chair is listening to argument on a matter which all Hon. Members know is a serious one and I must say that it is easier for the Chair to pay attention to the arguments that are being made if Hon. Members would refrain from arguing with each other across the floor.

• (1520)

I noted that when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was giving his precise and cogent arguments he was received with respectful silence. I ask that all Hon. Members give the Minister the same courtesy when he is responding.

If Hon. Members have something to add in opposition to what the Minister is saying or may say, they know the Chair tends to be generous and always tries to be gracious in making sure those points of view are heard. I will recognize Hon. Members if it is appropriate to do so.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate your comments.

I believe when I was interrupted by Members opposite I was talking about the fact that there are people who are given information prior to my standing up in the House tomorrow evening. That is understood. We all understand the importance of helping Members of Parliament and members of the media make themselves knowledgeable about what is in the White Paper.

I want to make this point in the context of the discussion paper of May, 1985, called the Canadian Budgetary Process, Proposals for Improvement. This was a continuation of a Department of Finance paper put out in 1982. The comment was made in the 1982 paper and quoted again in the 1985 paper that when a political controversy might be precipitated by a budget leak, however trivial it might be and regardless of how it occurs, meaningful pre-budget consultations are naturally inhibited. Budget secrecy impedes consultation when it prevents groups from knowing which options the Government has under serious consideration.

What we are trying to do with this process is take advice from knowledgeable people in advance of making the final decision so we can get the benefit of their technical ability, using them as a sounding board so we are not making budgetary policy in a vacuum. As I said, that process was started many years ago. After the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition took exception to the fact that I said technical advisors were advising the department during his term of office as Minister of Finance, I checked and, yes, that is true. The same types of advisors were providing advice to officials in the Department of Finance at that time.

There is nothing new here. These people take the same oath of secrecy as do members of the Public Service. They are then given a range of things under consideration by department officials. They are asked to give their advice as to what problems or technical questions there might be in certain elements of the proposals being considered. They are asked for their opinion and they continue on through the process. This has been going on for the better part of six or eight months.

I think it has been a very useful process. They report directly to the Assistant Deputy Minister of taxation in the Department of Finance. I know the advice he received from them is greatly appreciated. Certainly he hopes this process will be able to continue unimpeded by the type of controversy that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is trying to generate today with his question of privilege.

In response to the comments of the NDP House Leader, these people are chosen by Department of Finance officials. I was not asked to designate people who might participate.

Mr. Orlikow: Who are they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As a matter of fact, I think I know about one-fifth of them. Some of them I never heard of before I was involved in this process. It is casting aspersions on the integrity of these individuals for the NDP House Leader to suggest that they are political appointees. That is not true. They are chosen by officials in the Department of Finance based on their professional competence.

I listened carefully to what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was saying about how we had chosen these people to give them a head start. I would love to have more people involved in the process, but there is a certain limit, still making it a useful process. There has to be sufficient dialogue with the people involved, so there is a good understanding of the range of proposals which would be involved and decisions can be taken accordingly. To say they are political appointees, or to imply that they are doing this so they can get a head start on their competition casts very serious doubt on the motivations of these people. They are serving as advisors without pay—

Some Hon. Members: Poor them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because they are good Canadians. I think the Right Hon. Member should think very carefully about whether he should be casting the motivation of these individuals in doubt, because again—Mr. Speaker, Members opposite cannot keep their mouths shut. They will not listen to the argument on this side of the House.

Mr. Frith: Who are they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members would care to listen they might learn something.

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members will want to hear the Minister. As I said, there may be points he makes that Hon. Members will wish to comment on. I indicated I will recognize Hon. Members for that purpose. I ask Hon. Members to allow the Minister to finish.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I draw this to your attention because I feel it is a very important consideration in the whole process. We have to be able to have the appropriate consultation during the budget process in order that the best advice can be given to the Government to make the whole process of tax policy a better one which will result in fewer problems. That is why I think it is important that Hon. Members refrain from casting aspersions on the motivation of the people involved or the whole process.

As I said, the thing I found difficult to follow in what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was saying was whether he was concerned that these people got a head start, or whether there is something new in this whole business of seeking advice from this type of individual. It should not be a matter for consideration by this House of whether or not one group of lawyers, because of their involvement in this process, is involved before the actual paper is brought down. The facts are that there is a rotation. I know people who have been involved in this process in the past and who were not involved in the process prior to this White Paper. That is an important consideration.

Both the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the NDP House Leader made an important point of the fact that this is being done at eight o'clock after the markets are closed. Why are we doing it then? I want to point out that the timing of my three Budgets was 4.30 in the afternoon. That is when markets close. If we stayed at 4.30 then there might be some reason to say why then and not at three in the afternoon because we had chosen that time as precisely the time when markets close so we would not have that problem with this statement tomorrow.

The precise reason for choosing the time of eight o'clock for the statement is, as many Hon. Members have said, that tax reform is going to affect a large number of Canadians. In fact, every Canadian will be affected by tax reform in one way or another. For that reason I believed that eight o'clock, when the White Paper proposals could receive maximum exposure, was the best time to choose in order to serve our constituents well.

I know Hon. Members opposite may not like that because they are afraid that there will be a lot of good news in this White Paper on tax reform. That concern is very valid. The point is that that was the reason for choosing the time of eight o'clock.

The Leader of the Opposition has referred to the fact that I have given notice of a Ways and Means motion. It is quite clear that a Ways and Means motion will be tabled tomorrow evening. However, I want to make it very clear that the people who have been involved in this process have not in any way been party to the details of anything that will be in that Ways and Means motion. That is a statement of fact.

The point of the matter which we are discussing is related to whether the Department should expose itself to advice from experts. I think it is very important that we have this advice and recognize that the advice is on-going. The advice from the people who have been involved did not stop two or three weeks ago. It continues today and will continue into the future after the presentation of the White Paper. We have asked them to participate in order to learn whether technical elements in the White Paper will cause problems of which we can be aware as soon as possible after the presentation of the White Paper.

That is the substance of my presentation, Mr. Speaker. However, I do want to underscore one point very clearly. This is a White Paper of proposals on tax reform. It is not a Budget. That is the fundamental difference which is at the heart of what we are talking about.

In addition, it is very important that we be careful, in order to maintain the validity of the consultation process, not to use the opportunity to make political points which will undermine the integrity of this consultation process thus setting ourselves back a number of years and reverting to the bad old ways of making Budgets in a vacuum, which leads to the problems about which the Party opposite has a good deal of knowledge.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) to make a short point.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a small point to the comments. It is important that we put on the record very clearly that no one is suggesting that the Minister of Finance ought not consult with people from all walks of life in developing a package for tax reform. We are suggesting, however, that to consult with those people virtually hours before making the tax reform public, after all the t's have been crossed and the i's have been dotted, is simply to give a preview and advance notice of what is in the documentation.

The Minister of Finance has not responded to my request for a list of the participants. There is a quarter-page ad in the newspapers today which says:

> On June 18, he'll—

—that is the Minister of Finance—

> —present his white paper on tax reform. On June 19, we'll explain it in black and white.

They will move very quickly. That is an ad by Wood Gundy.

Another firm, Financial Concept Group Inc., is going to hold a seminar to explain the new tax reform proposals, the impact on investments and retirement planning, and what is next, starting at seven o'clock tomorrow night. In other words, at a seminar which will begin an hour before the Minister of Finance stands in this House to deliver his proposals, advisers from Financial Concept Group Inc., Mr. Don Bridgman and Mr. Brian Costello, will be commenting on the new tax changes.

I think it is important that the list of the 20 experts be made public. If that list includes Don Bridgman or other people from Financial Concept Group Inc., it means that they are prepared to start talking about this privileged information before the Minister of Finance even stands in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has alluded to a matter which, understandably, is giving me some concern. Perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can clarify this.

As I understand it, the oath which this group of advisers has taken would forbid them from releasing any information which they have acquired in the course of their advisory work for the Government of Canada and the Department of Finance until after the Minister of Finance rises in this House at eight o'clock tomorrow night.

I want to know whether I understand completely the effect of that oath. Perhaps the Minister of Finance can give some confirmation of that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the oath these people have taken is the same oath as members of the Public Service take. They are sworn, therefore, not to release any of this information and not to take advantage of this information in any way prior to the time that I stand in my place and announce it in the course of my presentation tomorrow.

As a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, these are lawyers and tax accountants. One of the firms mentioned by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party is an investment dealer. I believe the other is an investment advisory firm. This type of firm has not been involved in this process, only lawyers and accountants have been involved.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I think the question at issue here is far more serious than many Members of this House would care to believe, especially those on the Government benches.

I had the privilege of working on tax matters for seven consecutive years. I have brought down seven budgets in a legislature, and I am aware of what has to be done to surround ministerial decisions with the greatest possible confidentiality to prevent certain groups and individuals from taking undue advantage of Government decisions.

Mr. Speaker, what is at stake here is Members' privileges, my privileges and the privileges of all Members of this House. I listened carefully to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and to the explanations he gave, and I think he does not understand what is at stake here. No one is saying that a Minister of Finance cannot consult with any number of experts and various groups, including chambers of commerce, social partners, tax experts, people in the financial sector and others in the social sector. No one is denying that the Minister of Finance is free to hold such consultations. The reason why the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) rose on a question of privilege is, that after the Minister and the Government made their decision, an elite group of about twenty people met here in Ottawa today to be told, before the Members of this House and before the rest of the Canadian public, about the contents of the tax reform proposal that will be tabled tomorrow at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister says it is happening behind closed doors. I have a very simple question for him: Will these people who are given preferential treatment today remain sworn in and behind closed doors, to the extent that they cannot and will not be able to get in touch with their offices, their wives and their children, that even when they go to the washroom they will be accompanied by guards, as is the practice when they are in a Budget lock-up, or tomorrow when Members will gather in a room to examine this question and kept incommunicado until 8 p.m.? Will these 20 privileged people mentioned in today's newspapers be allowed to sleep at home tonight, or will they be locked up in the same room, unable to communicate with the outside world? Mr. Speaker, I have already been led to believe that some of them did in fact get in touch with their offices.

What we are questioning here, Mr. Speaker, and I am not suggesting that these people have revealed the contents—

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he seems to be indicating that he has some information that some of these people who have sworn an oath of secrecy have already contacted their offices. This puts the Chair in a great deal of difficulty. If that is so, then somebody has breached their oath.

I want to be sure whether that is, in effect, what the Hon. Member is putting forward as a fact, other than perhaps some rumour that he has heard.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, what I said is this, and I want to repeat it: I did not suggest that these people had revealed the contents.

[English]

I never said that they talked about the content. My argument is in the context of the lock-up. Tomorrow, some of our colleagues will be in a lock-up with research people. We will be kept there from noon until eight o'clock. We will not even be able to go to the bathroom without a guard. That is the rule of the lock-up.

Today, there are 20 specialists who received the privilege of reading the White Paper before any other Member of the House. I am asking the Minister whether the same rule that we are going to follow tomorrow will apply? Will those people stay in their hotel room or a room somewhere on Parliament Hill or in the Minister's office? Will they be there under guard, with no communication?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I submit, the question of privilege I am raising is that 20 people are now aware of a document which will not be made public until tomorrow, and it is to that extent that I believe the privileges of the House have been breached.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred to consultations a few times. Consultations may open the way to a number of options, and the difference between consultation, with which I agree, and what is going on now is that the people who are consulted have no idea what the Minister's decision will be. While today, the 20 privileged individuals who have gathered somewhere in the Department of Finance are not there to give advice, but to get acquainted with the decisions which have been taken and in that sense they are violating the privileges of this House, since no member, except the Minister or perhaps members of the Cabinet, but certainly no private member of this House has looked at that document.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is a breach of the privileges of this House. It is an extremely serious matter and the Leader of the Opposition has raised several points of order and quoted several precedents. Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put to you the following question: Why today and not tomorrow? Why have those privileged individuals met today instead of being subjected to a confidential in camera meeting tomorrow with all the others. Why give them that privilege? I think that we cannot question the intellectual honesty of those people, the tax specialists who have been consulted. If we can question something, it is the judgment of the Minister of Finance who allowed those highly qualified persons to be placed in an untenable position. So I rise on a point of order and I believe that there has been a breach of my privileges and if I must question the judgment of someone, it is unfortunately that of the Minister of Finance who allowed such a thing to happen.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will not take too long in this debate because I believe the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has made most of the relevant points. However, I want to reiterate one or two points.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has alleged that there are newspaper articles indicating that certain professionals have advance information and that they are going to seek to use this to undue advantage. He went on to cite what we all have come to know as various political controversies over whether or not a budget leak has occurred and whether anything politically harmful has been flowing from that budget leak. I compliment him on his excellent research, but there is absolutely no guilt by association and there is absolutely no question of privilege.

My hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance, has indicated that he is bringing forward a White Paper. No one in the House knows why there is a Ways and Means Motion connected to it and I am sure that this will become evident tomorrow. I am sure there are reasons for that, knowing the Minister of Finance. He is bringing forward proposals for consideration by the taxpayer, by the public, and by this Parliament.

I do take exception to one thing. As a professional, both a chartered accountant and a lawyer, I am sure that the individuals who the Hon. Minister of Finance asked to come to Ottawa to assist in this process could probably have made a lot more money elsewhere and could probably have spent their time doing other things.

Ms. Jewett: So what?

Mr. Lewis: The "so what" is that if we are to have the best advice of the professionals of the country, then we should bring them to Parliament and not castigate or smear them for political purposes. I take objection to that as a professional.

Mr. Riis: Make the list public.

Mr. Lewis: I will deal with the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) in a minute. If Members of Parliament want the best advice, whether it is at committee level or at the ministerial level, I think we must treat people properly.

My hon. friend, the former finance critic of the New Democratic Party, has suddenly discovered that on the night and the day after the presentation of a financial paper, accountants and lawyers hold meetings with clients to discuss it.

Mr. Riis: Before his speech begins?

Mr. Lewis: One might have a cup of coffee or a cocktail or even dinner before it happens. I cannot believe that my friend spent two years as finance critic of the NDP and did not realize that those meetings went on shortly after or even during the budget presentation.

Mr. Orlikow: How about before?

Mr. Lewis: Welcome to the world of finance. While we heard an outpouring of emotion over the question of a breach of privilege, there was one thing missing from the presentations across the way. That missing element was precedent. Unfortunately, it has fallen to me to give the Chair the precedents.

First, let me quote from a paper that was written by Mr. Joseph Maingot, Q.C., Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, House of Commons. He states:

> Furthermore, parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of members, not in their capacity as ministers or as party leaders, whips, or parliamentary secretaries, but strictly in their capacity as members in their parliamentary work.
> Therefore, allegations of misjudgment, or mismanagement, or maladministration on the part of a minister in the performance of his ministerial duties do not come within the purview of parliamentary privilege. And neither does an allegation that a minister permitted a budget leak constitute a matter of privilege.

In November, 1981, when a budget leak was raised as a possible question of privilege, the Speaker stated, "I will not pass judgment on whether it is or is not a leak or whether the words chosen were wise or cautious". The Speaker went on to state, "I do not feel that in this particular case I can make any kind of pronouncement or judgment on the fact that the secrecy of the Budget may have been breached".

Let me refer to another precedent by Speaker Jerome on April 17, 1978. It is a reference to a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) regarding a leak of budget information.

After allowing a brief discussion, the Speaker intervened to defer the matter. He said, "It awaits the presentation of the Budget this evening and will be subject to further discussion at this time tomorrow". The following day the matter was raised and there was a finding that there was no question of privilege. One of the comments of the Chair was, "The Chair has serious doubts as to whether the convention of budgetary secrecy falls within the area of privilege at all".

The Opposition has, in an effort to smear the whole question of the White Paper, tried to raise a question of privilege. I think the argument has gone well beyond prima facie and I have no difficulty with that. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that based on the precedents which have been decided in this House and elsewhere there is absolutely no question that the allegation of a budget leak does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I could ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. It seemed to me that at least part of the alleged question of privilege which was raised was that some information which was to be given to all Members tomorrow night had been given to some people outside this place earlier. It seems to me that there was some suggestion that that in itself is a breach of privilege. I am not for one minute putting aside the other issue. However, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could address that. I am familiar with the precedents he has helpfully cited on the other matter, but perhaps the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary could just address that particular point because I would like to hear his view.

Mr. Lewis: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, given the time of day and what my hon. friend is quite rightly basing his case on, that is, comments in the newspaper, I think at that point then the Chair is in a position of having to decide for itself as to whether or not the evidence brought forward in support of the prima facie case of privilege is sufficient for the Chair to decide that those individuals had an advantage over Members of Parliament.

I guess you could go beyond that, Sir, to suggest whether or not that position of privilege is being exercised to the detriment of any Member of Parliament. I just raise that in answer to your question. I appreciate that it is sometimes difficult to make a prima facie case at this point. One has to lead the best evidence one has to lead, and my right hon. friend obviously did that.

Based on the precedents, if the issue is a question of budget secrecy being breached, which is what has been suggested, then it seems to me the precedents say that no matter how annoyed one might be, it is a question for another forum, and not a question of a breach of privilege to be sent to the Committee on Privileges, Elections and Procedures.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and will come to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) in a moment.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in my many years as a Member of this Parliament I have never experienced a situation similar to this. What the Minister has been promising for months now are not some minor changes in our tax system. What he has been intimating is that we are going to get a very fundamental reorganization of the whole system. It has been said, indeed, reported, that we are going to see that the system will be simpler and fairer, that income tax rates will come down, that consumption taxes such as the business transfer tax will go up, that corporation taxes will go up, and many of the loopholes in the present system for corporations and individuals will be plugged.

If these reforms take place, as has been intimated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and other members on the government side, they will be very important changes which will affect, as the Minister said a few moments ago, virtually every Canadian.

So what we have here is that 20 tax lawyers and accountants have been consulted. I am certain that they have not just given some advice on minor technical points. I am certain that in the period during which they were being consulted they expressed their views on some of the proposed changes, whether they were in agreement or whether they thought they would be detrimental.

A couple of things happened as a result of that. First, these 20 tax lawyers and accountants obviously have an advantage. I am not saying they are going to use their knowledge before eight o'clock tomorrow night, but at eight o'clock tomorrow night when all the Members of Parliament, tax lawyers and accountants are beginning to study what is in the report, these people will have had days or weeks of advantage over all the other tax lawyers and accountants who are in the same business.

I have another major concern. I am sure that the kind of accountant who does my income tax was not consulted. So what we have are 20 lawyers and accountants who, I am certain, have as clients some of the biggest corporations in this country, expressing their views to the Minister and his department. If they are there to express their views and the views of the corporations they represent, where were the representatives of ordinary Canadians? Where were the representatives of the workers, the farming community, the consumers? Are their views, their feelings and philosophical approach to taxation and their desire to see a fair tax system not as valid as these 20 so-called experts? It seems to me that that is a question the Minister ought to answer.

If the Minister wanted consultation, and we all agree that consultation is a good idea, why did he not have consultation with a wide spectrum of our society? Why did he go for advice to representatives who, I am certain we will find out when we receive the list, represent big business? I think that is a very important question to which the Minister should address himself.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by addressing briefly the point made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) with respect to precedents. Obviously, I have not had the time to get out the precedents and study them, but the second precedent quoted by the Parliamentary Secretary, I think is relevant. He said that the Speaker in making his ruling said only that he had serious doubts that budgetary secrecy is a matter of privilege. He did not rule conclusively that budgetary secrecy is not a matter of privilege. Therefore, I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that that precedent, at least, is one the Chair does not have to consider binding upon itself.

The Minister of Finance himself has argued that the issue as to whether we have a prima facie case of privilege turns on, among other things, whether or not this group of 20 experts looked at material which was part of a budget. The Minister of Finance himself argued that that was a very relevant consideration and in effect he was saying that if the group of 20 experts did not look at material to be contained in a budget then we are not dealing with a prima facie case of privilege. However, if the group of 20 experts was looking at material which was to be contained in a budget, that would be a different matter.

What did the Minister of Finance himself say in this House in answer to the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on this point? At first he said the White Paper is a proposal, it does not represent budgetary policy. But later when trying to explain why he had this group of 20 experts looking at material that he originally said was to go into a White Paper, he said, "I am getting technical advice so we are not making budgetary policy in a vacuum".

• (1600)

The Minister of Finance has therefore admitted exactly what it is he will be presenting to the House at eight o'clock. This is confirmed by the fact that he will at that time, as he admitted a few minutes ago, table a Ways and Means motion.

Why else would he be tabling a Ways and Means motion if his so-called White Paper was not in fact in the nature of a budget? Is he trying to get us to believe that he is tabling a Ways and Means motion about something completely unrelated to the White Paper and is just choosing this convenient opportunity tomorrow night to table it?

The Minister of Finance has made some valiant attempts to convince people of the unbelievable. But I am sure that even he will not take seriously that type of effort, if that is what he intends.

The evidence from the Minister himself is clear. What he is submitting tomorrow at eight o'clock is in the nature of a budget. If that is the case, then on the argument of the Minister of Finance himself what he has done by allowing this group of 20 to have access to the material to be presented in his document tomorrow night amounts to a prima facie breach of privilege.

There is a second point I wish to make in support of the motion of the Leader of the Opposition which is this. If we are talking about harm to the role, that is to say the privileges of Members of Parliament, then it is clear that we have the evidence of this, again from the mouth of the Minister of Finance, since he has admitted that this group of 20 is looking at the very material that is to be presented to the House at eight o'clock tomorrow night. They are looking at it today, a full 24 hours before the group of Canadians elected by the people of Canada as Members of Parliament to receive the material from the Minister of Finance have had a chance to receive that material formally in the House of Commons.

He has offered no convincing explanation as to why this group of 20 should today see this material to be presented to the Members of the House of Commons tomorrow night. He has said that the books are closed. He has said that no matter what advice this group of 20 gives him it will be too late.

What we see here then is an attempt to put a group of private citizens in a superior position, a position to which they are not entitled by law or by custom, over the position of Members of Parliament elected to receive the type of information the Minister is presenting to the House and to other people in the country. I again say that out of the mouth of the Minister of Finance himself we see the admission at least of a prima facie breach of privilege.

The Minister, and I believe the Parliamentary Secretary, have asked why Members on this side of the House should be concerned about this group of 20 getting this information today. After all, the Minister says, they are all honourable people. I am not getting up to challenge that. However, what we are dealing with here is appearances. Appearances count when it comes to what happens in the House of Commons, when it comes to the conduct of Members of Parliament who happen to be Ministers. After all, the report by Jan Wong in The Globe and Mail quotes one of the people in this group of 20, a Mr. Allan Taitz, a tax partner at Thorne Ernst & Whinney, as saying about the advance look at the material he has, compared to that available to Members of Parliament: "This gives us a bit more time to digest it—every firm in town is going to write a report for their clients." I do not understand why the Minister of Finance is not concerned about what is allowed to happen in terms of the appearances of the matter for himself and his advisors in the Government and this group of 20.

I conclude by saying that I think on the facts and in the absence of clear, convincing and binding precedents to the contrary upon Your Honour you are entitled to find that there is in fact a prima facie breach of privilege. I wish to underscore that point by saying that we are talking not simply about a press report but about what the Minister of Finance himself has admitted in the House in reply to the motion of the Leader of the Opposition, that this group of 20 are looking at the document today in advance of elected Members of Parliament.

For all these reasons the Chair is well entitled to find that there is a prima facie breach of privilege. I hope and say this with the utmost respect, Sir. In view of the importance and significance of this issue, I hope it will be possible to hear from Your Honour, in the difficult decision you have to make in this matter, before the Minister of Finance presents what he calls a White Paper, but what we now know will in fact be a budget with all the consequences for the people of Canada and all the consequences for the Minister because of this inappropriate and questionable release of information to this group of 20 today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I raised some questions with the Minister today on this matter of privilege which is of utmost importance for the House of Commons because I was deeply concerned that the Government had shared its intentions with a group of senior consultants, accountants and lawyers with an expertise on tax matters, people who had previously been hired without pay to act as a sounding board for the Minister.

However, now that they have the advantage of being privy to every intention of the Minister 48 hours before the Minister himself makes those intentions known to the general public, I am somewhat concerned with this matter of privilege in view of the fact that I had a conversation yesterday with the Minister and I asked him why he insisted to designate the people from the New Democratic party who may take part in tomorrow's lock up to review the draft White Paper.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister insisted that some experts whom we wanted to involve in that process would not be allowed to do so, but that we should have at least four Members of the House out of eight people allowed to take part in the process.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the private sector is entitled to bring in 20 experts who are the trusted friends of the Minister and who will be fully informed of the contents of that Paper. This is clearly indicated for instance in the comments of Mr. Couzin, a lawyer with Stikeman Elliott. He said specifically that the task of those experts will be to provide their colleagues and their clients with an explanation of the Governments' intentions. It is indeed clear why those people accepted to work without pay, since they will be deriving virtually boundless benefits from that process. It means that they will get an appreciation of that Tax Reform Paper well in advance of their colleagues who will get to know the details after 8 p.m. tomorrow when this White Paper is disclosed.

[English]

I have to admit somewhat personally—

• (1610)

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain), on a point of order.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I take umbrage at the remark of the Hon. Member. Individuals who might be persuaded to participate in the political process in any way should not be subjected to the accusation that it is being done only for personal benefit. The Hon. Member's remark is improper. It is critical of individuals who have no opportunity to defend themselves. In the face of such accusations, who would want to participate in an advisory capacity to governments in any way, shape or form? This is a rank case of impropriety on the part of a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it is an impropriety on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is the problem before us right now.

In response to the comments made by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has drawn to the attention of the House his concerns about some individuals who are acting in an advisory capacity to the Government of Canada and the Hon. Member has indicated that, as much as is possible in this place, unless it is very much in the public interest, there should be no aspersions cast on the motivation of those who are in a position of assisting the Government of Canada.

The Chair has noted the point, and I would ask the Hon. Member to be careful.

At least one of the individuals concerned has made it quite clear that he looks upon the information gained as providing some kind of an advantage in the world in which he moves. However, I would ask Hon. Members to avoid that aspect of the matter.

The point that the Chair has to decide is whether or not there has been a breach of privilege. While some of the comments are of interest and may be matters of considerable concern in another context, I would ask Hon. Members to concern themselves with the matter of privilege only.

As the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has said, the finding on a question of privilege is a difficult one for the Chair. However, it is that which I have to decide. I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre will assist me in that regard.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the point that should be made is that when we look at questions which might involve conflict of interest, it is not a matter of proving that a conflict exists; rather, we need to prove only that there is the appearance of conflict.

What we have to decide here is whether there is the perception that there can be some potential advantage in the hands of someone in the private sector. That is a matter on which you, Mr. Speaker, will have to reach a judgment.

I should like to speak for a moment about the question of process and about how, as the complexity of legislation increases, it is possible in fact to deal with a question like this.

If the Minister of Finance felt he wanted to get a device from the private sector, it seems to me that he did have some avenues open to him which would have avoided the charge of breach of privilege which has been made in this House today.

For example, he could have raised this matter with the House Leaders in order to get all-Party consent to a procedure whereby certain people from outside government, people with technical or other forms of expertise, could have been consulted. That, unfortunately, was not done.

As well, he could have raised the matter with the Finance Committee. He could have sought the advice of the Finance Committee, explaining to the committee what he wanted to do and why he wanted to do it. He could have cited the problems experienced in 1981 by the then Minister of Finance, whose proposals, on being made public, were found to be unworkable and unacceptable. He could have sought the advice of the Finance Committee on proposals to avoid a recurrence of that type of outcome. As a member of the Finance Committee, I can tell you that that was not done.

It is, of course, open to the House, through resolution or other means, to agree to change what have been the accepted practices in the past. It is regrettable, in my opinion, that the Minister of Finance did not seek such a resolution.

One recalls what happened in 1963 when the then Minister of Finance brought down a dramatic Budget, a Budget which incorporated a number of very substantial changes designed to reinforce Canadian nationalism. In formulating that Budget, the then Minister of Finance had the aid of "the four wise men" as they became known. These were experts from private sector accounting and tax law firms who were brought in to assist the Minister.

You will no doubt recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition of the day, the Progressive Conservative Party, was extremely critical of the fact that those persons had been bought in. The view was expressed that, regardless of the fact that they had taken an oath, they had confidential information.

To what extent the precedents have changed between then and now, I am not sure, but it seems to me that when there is room for legitimate doubt and question, as there most definitely is in this case, the Minister of Finance ought to take the necessary steps to gain consent.

Had our consent been sought, we might have suggested that in addition to consulting with tax lawyers and accountants the Minister might have sought the views of farmers, of fishermen, of the small business community, of women, of immigrants, and others. All sectors of society are affected by potential tax changes. Rather than confine the consultation to the in camera type of consultation that it was, the confidential consultation that it was, the Minister might have consulted more widely.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that far more was revealed in this confidential consultative process than was revealed to me as a member of the Finance Committee. In the one briefing that the Finance Committee had on this, no secrets were revealed. Yet, this group of 20 has been privy to secrets from last fall up until the present.

It seems to me that a better process for consultation might have been worked out. It is regrettable that one wasn't.

It is also my concern, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance has applied a double standard when it comes to his dealings with Parliament and his dealings with outside groups. It is not unremarkable that the media, which has a lot of columns to fill, a lot of air time to fill between eight o'clock on Thursday evening and the next day, is being allowed almost unlimited access in terms of the number of journalists who may participate in the lock-up. As well, they are permitted to bring in outside tax experts.

My office did not ask for that, Mr. Speaker, when we negotiated with the Minister. We simply asked for some modest increase in the number of people that we could get into the lock-up. The Minister, in his great generosity, said that we could have eight people go in, rather than the six or seven who were permitted for the last Budget lock-up; but then, when we asked for access for five of our researchers along with three MPs, he refused, saying that he would decide who would make up the eight. So, the Minister, in his wisdom, chose to tell each parliamentary caucus who would represent it at the lock-up. And, of course, while the experts from these private sector firms are looking at the documentation today—

Mr. Lewis: What does this have to do with the question of privilege?

Mr. Cassidy: —we will not be able to look at it until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While the Chair understands the point the Hon. Member is making, it seems to me that it is a point to be made at another time and place.

The issue before the Chair relates to the fact that there is apparently a group of 20 people who have access to the tax reform papers in advance of the Minister of Finance rising in his place and outlining his White Paper on tax reform. All of these people have taken an oath of secrecy not to reveal anything they learn as a result of that advance look until the Minister of Finance has delivered his statement tomorrow evening.

There is the suggestion that the members of this group of 20 may have some advantage as a consequence of what they have learned in the course of their giving advice to the Government, not just today but over a period of time. That may well be. However, there does not seem to be any suggestion that any member of this group of 20 has wrongfully revealed any information he or she may have, or that the oath of secrecy has been violated. I want to be absolutely sure that I have interpreted the comments of all Hon. Members correctly. It seems to me that no one is making that suggestion. I want to be absolutely sure that that suggestion is not being made.

As well, I want to be absolutely assured that all Hon. Members are confident that I have grasped the point of the question of privilege, the point being that these advisers, notwithstanding that they have taken an oath, are being given information which is being withheld from Members of Parliament. That seems to me to be the essential basis upon which it is being claimed that there has been a breach of privilege.

If I have not fully appreciated the point, I would ask Hon. Members to ensure that I do.

I see that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is rising.

Mr. Cassidy: May I conclude, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there is no allegation from this quarter of the House that, on the facts as we now know them, any of these 20 people have breached their oath. The Minister of Finance has admitted, however, that at the meetings being held today they are getting advance information. The issue is not that they have breached their oath—nobody suggests that from this quarter—but that they have a 24-hour head start over the rest of Canadians in the use of that information. By the time they are allowed to publish it, they have a lead and an unfair advantage over their competitors, over other Canadians, and over Members of Parliament.

• (1620)

The second submission, just in a word, is that the very fact they have been allowed to see this fiscal information,—and I will not argue the point of budget or non-budget—to be followed by a Ways and Means motion, and the fact that they heard this information prior to any Member of the House of Commons in our regular lock-up and prior to the media participating in that lock-up, in so far as Members of Parliament are concerned is a breach of our privileges. As the custodians of the Ways and Means of the country, the power of Parliament to review taxation or proposed taxation or proposed expenditures, our rights have been infringed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to support the point made by the Leader of the Official Opposition that the actions and attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) breached our privileges.

Mr. Speaker, I could blame the Government for not consulting senior citizens who had been misled by this Government and on two occasions forced the Minister of Finance to backstep in the matter of OAS pension deindexing, and in the matter of unemployment insurance for older workers.

Mr. Speaker, I could easily blame the Government for not having consulted families. But my purpose is to prove clearly that this Government is in breach of privilege.

First, this is no accidental but intentional in my view. To begin with, the Minister of Finance announced that on June 18, there would be a reading at 8 p.m. on tax reform.

Second, he informed—that decision was planned—that on June 18, at noon, reporters and representatives of each Party would be locked up. And this is where there has been a serious breach of privilege—and it is your role, Mr. Speaker, to uphold the rights of all Members, not only Opposition Members but Progressive Conservative members as well—at the same time, this Government, this same Minister of Finance summoned 20 people for privileged information, not to be consulted but to hear privileged information, and that was on June 17. He went through that trouble, everything was planned, it is not an accident or an error.

Everything was planned, it was done on purpose to infringe upon Member's privilege. And the Minister of Finance, in answer to questions today, never denied that that was his plan, his scenario.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I could easily have blamed workers, senior citizens, the absence or the lack of these people there. And the Minister of Finance answered questions and said it was not a budget, it was a paper and it was not urgent. But what was it? That answer proves again that the Minister is wrong. If there was no urgency, why select 20 people, 20 accounting firms selected from across the country, and have them meet beforehand? If the Minister wanted to be fair, he could have waited until next week until Friday, to meet all businesses, all accountants, tax experts, to brief them, in order to correctly inform the public.

I do hope that the Chair will protect the privileges of the House. We could accept excuses and understand that, overwhelmed by his great many responsibilities, the Minister could have made a mistake. This time, however, this is clearly a decision not only of the Minister of Finance, but also of the Cabinet on such an important issue.

This may have serious consequences. Let us assume that you are the customer of an accounting firm and you discover suddenly that it has no privileged connection with the government, contrary to the firm next door which had an opportunity to secure privileged information from the government even before the other ministers and ordinary government members and opposition leaders. Under these circumstances, it is clear that you are going to turn to the other accounting firm to get more benefits and opportunities. The Minister has certainly goofed. If the Prime Minister chose this strategy, he goofed too. But the real issue here, Mr. Speaker, is about the privileges of the House.

Today, a ruling is necessary to protect all Hon. Members, because if this planning strategy is accepted today, I feel Hon. Members will become irrelevant, for there would be no point fighting for a seat and asking people to lect them as their representatives, because 20 tax specialists in the country would enjoy advantages accountable Parliamentarians would not have.

Mr. Speaker, I rely very much on your ruling to protect the privileges of the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will come to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) in a moment. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment on a point of order. I understand that I am not allowed to make any further comments on the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: May I correct the Hon. Minister. I did not suggest that the Minister could not make another point on the question of privilege if it was important in respect of anything which has been said in argument. I would not close off the Minister. I will certainly hear the Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point of order I want to make is pursuant to something which I said in my remarks and something which the Hon. Member for Carleton—Charlotte (Mr. McCain) said.

The Hon. Member has drawn a distinction between an accounting firm, one of whose members is part of this group, and another accounting firm, one of whose members is not part of this group.

It gets right to the heart of the point I was making, when people draw politically advantageous conclusions or try to make political points on something like this at the expense of the integrity of the people involved in the process. What the Hon. Member is implying is that the accounting firm, whose member is involved in this process, is allowed some inside information and is using that inside information for the benefit of that accounting firm's clients and to the disadvantage of the people in the other firm.

If that is the case, the Hon. Member is saying that the accounting firm, whose employee or partner is part of this, is breaching the oath of secrecy, and that is quite contrary to what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said.

I ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that because it is an entirely wrong conclusion to draw and it undermines the total process we are trying to use here of drawing good people into the process so that we can have proper consultations in advance and avoid mistakes of the past.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair may not have taken quite the same point as have others in the Chamber. I thought we had clearly established that there was no suggestion by anybody—and I must say that I am not sure I got that suggestion from the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)—that any one of the 20 persons who took an oath of secrecy has breached that oath of secrecy.

There is a suggestion that even if they have not, their firms get some kind of advantage because of the earlier information which they have and some other firms do not have. That may or may not be the case. I will consider it carefully, but it may not go to the question of privilege at all.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie may wish to clarify this, and I would ask him to do so as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the Minister by saying that maybe the interpretation—or maybe I was not very clear: I never meant to blame these 20 people; I simply wanted to explain, and I am sure the Minister will concur, that the public will feel it is in its interest to do business with someone who appears to have the upperhand a head start. I am blaming those 20 people, but I do blame the Minister who is guilty of creating the impression that those 20 people have a privileged status above the Leader of the Opposition, other Members of the House and even Ministers. It is the Minister who is to blame, not the 20 people.

• (1630)

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have been following the comments made this afternoon. Understanding the importance of the question of privilege that has been raised, I must admit to the fact that I am perplexed by the contributions of many Hon. Members sitting opposite. I say that because, from the outset, they have questioned whether or not there should be any consultation involved in the preparation of this White Paper. Indeed, that has been the basis on which they have laid their arguments, skate around it as they might.

If Hon. Members had been listening for the last number of weeks and months to the intent of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who will be presenting the White Paper on tax reform, they would have known that he was consulting widely, and he has re-emphasized that day after day. He has been consulting with farm groups, with labour organizations, with business groups, with women's groups, with social groups and with groups right across the board. He has been dealing with these people so that the process will be better informed than it has been in the past.

The method of consultation is a two-way street. It benefits the Minister of Finance and his officials in their undertakings and it benefits those who will be most affected by tax reform policy. That is the one thing that he has been saying.

He has also made it clear today and on other occasions that the Department of Finance would draw on experts from the community involved with tax policy, including accountants and tax lawyers, in order to better inform the process within the Department. That is what has been occurring over a number of weeks and indeed months.

Experts have been sworn under oath to work with the Department in the preparation of this material. The question arises, has that given them any kind of special advantage? Obviously if we are to say that there should never be experts attached in any way to the Department of Finance or indeed any other Department when preparing policy, then we are saying that all the answers reside solely within this Chamber or solely within the expertise that can be offered by officials. We have not seen the situation that way.

We know that in the past, tax reform policy has been presented to the House inadequately studied, inadequately researched and inadequately informed by expertise. In fact, a previous Minister of Finance, having introduced tax reform policy in the House just a few years ago, made so many mistakes in the way he went about it that he set the whole question of tax reform back by many years. Canadian people were the ones who suffered as a result of that.

The Minister of Finance has explained clearly that there has been use of experts in the field who have been under oath. These experts have honoured that oath and there is nothing more to it than that. It might be that members of the Opposition do not want to see that process carried on, but they should be honest enough to say so and not try to impugn the characters, integrity or motives of people involved in this process.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) asked whether or not this process could be skewed somehow or other by the introduction of a Ways and Means motion. He has been in this House long enough to know that Ways and Means motions are introduced a good many other times than at budget time and because a Ways and Means Motion is introduced, that does not automatically signal that whatever then happens is a budgetary process.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I will try not to be too long. I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) as well, touched on one of the central points here. The question is not whether people broke their oaths, the question surely is whether some people, advertently or inadvertently, are in an advantaged position.

The tradition for the secrecy surrounding budgets is based upon the notion that no individual should be in an advantaged position, that the knowledge that might be gained from a budget or related documents before those documents are made public would put them in an advantaged position. Through the years, a tradition has arisen whereby there is the utmost secrecy surrounding the budget so that no individual would be put in an advantaged position. Whether an individual takes advantage of that position or not is a second matter.

Throughout the years, Ministers of Finance have had to resign when inadvertently aspects of budgets became public or known to a few unauthorized people. We are dealing with a most serious situation.

Twenty individuals who are highly knowledgeable in the field of taxation have, over some months, been in constant consultation with the Department or the Department has been in consultation with them. They have known the intricacies of the papers and material the Minister will be making public tomorrow. They have given advice to the department. It is not a question of whether these people have given advice on a little area here or there or have given advice on broad social or policy areas. These are experts in law and in the tax system. They have been asked to advise on the wording of particular measures, how particular aspects of the documents that will be released tomorrow will actually work when implemented.

I am sure the Department of Finance will have asked these people what effect it will have on the market if the document is worded in certain ways, what opportunities will there be—

Mr. Speaker: I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member and I will certainly let him continue, but the Hon. Member has been putting forth a series of rhetorical questions. The Chair would like him to address the question that is before it, and that is, under what circumstances can a Government go into the private sector, swear people to secrecy and take their advice and their efforts as help in the preparation of matters of finance. Is the Hon. Member saying that that cannot be done under any circumstances or is there something about this particular matter which goes to the question of whether or not there has been a breach of the privilege of Members?

Perhaps I am not completely understanding the Hon. Member, but I felt that the effect of what he was saying is that no Government could go to outside sources even though those sources are sworn to secrecy, because what they learn may in one way or another give them some advantage over someone else at some future time.

I am having some difficulty in understanding how you can ever have a situation where, one way or another, for at least a short period of time, these advisors will not have some kind of advantage over others in their field. It seems to me that advantage goes with the fact they have been selected to assist. The Chair is having a little bit of difficulty understanding how you could ever have a situation where you seek advice and the advisor does not then have some knowledge that someone else did not have. I am having difficulty with that being a barrier to receiving advice.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the point I wanted to establish very clearly is that these people are now in a position of advantage. That is a very crucial and important point. They will know the intricacies of the document long before Members of Parliament, the general public, and their professional peers.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt again but we have been listening to a good deal of discussion, all of which is helpful. But let us assume for the moment that they are in a position of advantage. Please direct your thoughts and argument, which is cogent and helpful, to whether or not that is a breach of the privilege of Members of this House. Perhaps the Hon. Member could help me on that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, that was the second point I wanted to deal with, the role of advisors to the Government. I do not object to that. In fact, I encourage and congratulate the Minister for having wider consultation than the previous Government. That Government ran into quite a few problems because it did not do that. I think of the scientific research tax credit where the Department of Finance did not consult and did not have the street smarts to deal with the people who took advantage of this measure at a cost to Canadian taxpayers of well over $3 billion. That is a prime example of the need for outside consultation.

I would now like to ask this question. What kind of consultation can there be 24 hours before the document is released? That is the key question. I understand consultations from time to time, but to see the final document is to know what advice the Government has or has not taken. These people are now in a position of being more than just advisors and consultants. They now know what the final decision is. They have seen the complete document.

My second concern about their advisory role is what further role is there for them? My understanding is that they are to fan out across the country—their role as advisors is not finished. They are to give seminars and explain exactly what is in the package and what the Government means. Therefore, is the Government expanding the very needed role of advisors to that of propagandists for the proposal? In that sense surely there is a breach of our privilege.

On the one hand these individuals have been used as advisors in the preparation of these documents. On the other hand, we in the Opposition will not have had detailed information, yet we will be required after only eight hours in the lock-up to respond to the document. We may very well be facing people who have had knowledge of these documents many days before.

Mr. Cassidy: Or months.

Mr. de Jong: Or months. That puts the Opposition in a very disadvantaged position.

I ask you to consider these two vital elements. There is no disagreement that the Government should have advisors. Yet is their role of advisor finished and another role begun when they see the documents 24 or 48 hours before they are released? Second, what is their role in fanning out across the country to speak on these documents? Those are the two important factors you have to consider and I submit that our privilege has been breached and that the Government and Minister seriously erred in this procedure.

If the Minister wishes to institutionalize the practice of having advisors, which I encourage him to do, he should do so by consulting with the House as a whole so we can help him do it while ensuring that our privileges are not breached and that these people will not be in a position of having an unfair advantage.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of precedent. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), as a former Minister of Finance, sought advice in the process of developing and framing a Budget. From the day the consultative process begins I suppose it can be assumed that anyone party to that process may be in a position to take advantage of the knowledge accumulated by virtue of the agreement or disagreement displayed on the subject matter discussed. There are indicators in the consultative process which those advising the Government could take advantage of.

However, I am very disappointed that this has been presented as a precedent. I am deeply disappointed that we should cast aspersions on any person who has been part of that process at any time unless we have unqualified proof. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a distinguished lawyer and is certainly familiar with the fact that proof is required. None has been offered, either in verbal or documentary form.

Neither do I think it proper to cast aspersions on the consultative process. That is part of the development of virtually every policy of Government, whether it be budgetary or anything else. Experts have been consulted, sometimes they are paid and sometimes they work for nothing, and I do not think we should cast aspersions, because we need them very badly. If criticism is deserved, and I do not believe it is, it should be levelled purely and simply at the Minister, and not on those employed to advise. The possibility of a breach of confidence has always existed. If we prove breach of confidence at a later date, and it apparently cannot be proven now, then it becomes a very serious matter.

There have been historic examples of opportunity. Did they call their office today? I think that is an irrelevant question because they are under oath. There is no reason why they should not call their offices although there is a major reason why they should not discuss the subject matter on which they were sought as advisers. That would be a gross breach of confidentiality and should be punished as such. However, it has not been suggested that there is proof that such a thing happened. There has been no suggestion that they broke their oath. There has only been an assumption that they could break it. That assumption could have been made for years with regard to the consultative budgetary process.

Was it withheld from Members of Parliament? That has been the subject of discussion in this House for many years but it has never been placed in the rules of the House as an obligation of any Minister of the Crown. If there were a rule of this House which stated that Ministers of the Crown are obligated to make their statements within the House first, there would be a breach of privilege. However, there is no such rule of the House. Therefore, there has been no breach of any rule or any practice of the House with regard to traditional behaviour of cabinet Ministers, including Finance Ministers. While we may possibly wish to adopt a rule, there is no such rule of this House which has been breached.

The only difference between this and other questions which have arisen in the House, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), is that these people who are under oath, not the newspapers, have been given a copy of the work to which they have made a contribution. If it can be proven that they have taken any advantage of the information or have disseminated it in any way, I believe they are subject to criminal prosecution.

The question is not whether there is precedent for what has happened, because there is indeed precedent. The question is whether the House is of a mind to adopt rules which would deny Ministers outside advice because we question the confidentiality. Are we treating outsiders as we treat Members of the House? We have breached confidentiality in this House. I have not, but others have. I say unequivocally that I have not, but other Members of this House have breached in camera confidentialities. They have gone to the press with them and that has been discussed in this House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Name them.

Mr. McCain: If we want to assume that everyone outside of this House will breach confidentiality, as has been charged, I suppose it is just that we raise this as a question of privilege. However, I am very concerned about the aspersions which have been cast and the innuendoes which have been made. It is not in the best interests of good government or the consultative process to question the ability of advisers to keep a secret.

Mr. Speaker: I may be able to help the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) whom I am going to hear. It is the clear understanding of the Chair that, whether or not these 20 have some advantage, there is no suggestion being made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), or any of his colleagues, that these 20 people have broken their oath or done anything illegal or contrary to the position of trust which they are in. There is a suggestion that because of what they know they will have some advantage. However, that does not go to the question of moral turpitude.

As I understand the position of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and members of the New Democratic Party, they are not making an accusation against the honour or integrity of these people. They have made the suggestion, for me and others to consider, that apart from integrity they may well have some advantage in the commercial world in which they move as a consequence of what they have learned.

There is no doubt in the mind of the Chair that that is the position of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and others. I see them nodding. I want Hon. Members to disabuse themselves of any concern that the Chair is in any way moved by any suggestion, innocent or otherwise, that there is any wrongdoing or lack of moral propriety and honour on the part of these 20 people. I would like to exclude that from the debate entirely.

I ask the Hon. Member for Papineau to close the debate as I believe the Chair has heard most of the points, although I think the Hon. Member for Papineau may have one very key point which I should hear.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, naturally, I quite appreciate your latest intervention following the comments made by the Conservative Member. Basically, both this Member and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), in coming to the defense of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), are trying to lead the discussion to a very different subject matter than that raised by the Leader of the Opposition. The subject of our concern is not the group of twenty friends of the Minister of Finance, but the Minister of Finance himself, and I submit that the Minister has abused my rights and privileges as a Member of Parliament, as well as the privileges of all the Members of this House, both in the Opposition and in the Government.

As Members of Parliament, we must wait until tomorrow evening to hear the Minister announce his decisions. Some of us will have to spend part of the day locked up in a room to receive information on the document which will be made public tomorrow evening by the Minister of Finance.

We have now learned that twenty friends of the Minister of Finance will be able today to learn that we shall hear only tomorrow, without knowing who these twenty friends are. My colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has asked the Minister of Finance to publish the names of these twenty privileged people. The Minister of Finance did not have the courage to give us these names.

Second, we do not know where these twenty pals will go this evening. Where will they sleep? What will they do when the lock-up is imposed on those who, tomorrow—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau is repeating an argument which was heard earlier. These 20 persons are not on a jury. They have taken an oath covering the period of time during which they have been in a particular relationship with the Department. Once the oath is taken it is not the practice to follow the people around or keep them enclosed in a special room or building.

Mr. Gauthier: They do it to us. They do it to the press.

Mr. Speaker: The lock-up is, of course, something else. No oath is taken in that situation.

I know the Hon. Member from Papineau wants to assist the Chair. Perhaps he could put aside that argument and get back to the question of privilege which he is addressing very effectively.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate naturally that the twenty pals of the Minister of Finance are sworn to secrecy. In fact, all our argumentation on the violation of parliamentary privilege is based on the fact that the Minister of Finance will disclose to an elite group information which will be given to the public only tomorrow evening, and to a few Members of Parliament and media representatives only tomorrow afternoon, and on the fact that these Members of Parliament and reporters will be confined to a room where they will have to wait until the last minute, right up to the time when the Minister is ready to make his statement, to discuss the contents of the White Paper.

We have never questioned the need for consultation. Yet, the Minister of Communications, who is trying to help her colleague, the Minister of Finance, and who has a long experience in this House and is well aware of our Standing Orders and parliamentary traditions, is attempting to invent an argument to get the Minister of Finance out of this mess. Speaking about consultations is perhaps a way to shield the Minister of Finance, but the fact is that we have nothing against the consultation process. We have never opposed the fact that the Minister of Finance might want to have consultations. What we are object to is that, on this very day, as we are objecting in this House to the attitude of the Minister of Finance, twenty pals of the Minister already know what the Minister will say tomorrow evening.

Mr. Speaker, in our opinion, this constitutes a serious abuse of the privileges of this House of Commons.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think there is a discretion on the part of the Chair to say that after a very lengthy discussion on an important matter I would ask Hon. Members to bear with the Chair and close off the debate. I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. I think that the answers that some Hon. Members have been able to give to some of my specific queries will be of help to the Chair. I shall try to return to the Chamber as quickly as possible and see if my comments will be of assistance to Hon. Members.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that you want to end the debate, but I want to add one point that might help with your deliberations. There was a precedent concerning this kind of outside adviser. I believe it was when Walter Gordon—

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's contribution, but that point was made. It was in 1963 and the point has been referred to in argument by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), I believe, and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in his earlier address.

Some of us were not in this place but, nonetheless, we can well remember exactly what happened at that time. I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution. I am closing off debate, I shall reserve and return as soon as I can.

PATENT EXTENSION (ASPARTAME) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-259, an Act to extend the term of a patent relating to a certain food additive.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to have this Bill adopted as soon as possible since the date limit is July 8 and it will require Royal Assent before it can become law.

Is there any possibility that it be adopted tomorrow?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and, indeed, my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Hinton, Alberta; Edmonton, Alberta; Kaslo, New Denver, Ainsworth, Meadow Creek, Nelson, Winlaw, Slocan, South Slocan, Fruitvale, Johnsons Landing and other centres.

These petitioners are concerned about the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides that have been proven to have harmful effects on human health. They believe that these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms, soil and water.

They call on the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides, and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant derived pesticides.

• (1710)

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED EXPANSION TO DORVAL AIRPORT

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by many members of the riding of Lachine.

This petition supplements an earlier petition to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) signed by more than 1,300 residents. They are concerned about a proposal made by the Department of Transport to expand the Dorval Airport, which would mean taking over the Dorval Municipal Golf Course which has acted as a recreational buffer zone between their community and the airport for 27 years. The petitioners are concerned that the loss of this green space will negatively affect the quality of life in their community.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reconsider the present development plans and to maintain the existing golf course which guarantees an adequate buffer zone between the Dorval International Airport and the neighbouring residential area.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to table the reply to Questions Nos. 123 and 132.

[Text]

MR. KURT WALDHEIM

Question No. 123—Mrs. Finestone:

1. Since June 1, 1986, did the Government issue instructions to Canada's ambassador to the United Nations with regard to halting payment by the United Nations of an annual retirement allowance to Mr. Kurt Waldheim and, if so, what were the instructions and what specific steps have been taken by the ambassador to halt payment of the said retirement allowance?

2. Since June 1, 1986, has Canada consulted with other nations about the Kurt Waldheim dossier and, if so (a) which countries (b) with what results?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Canadian mission to the United Nations in New York was instructed to find out and report if it was possible for the UN to cancel the retirement allowance of an ex-Secretary General.

The Mission reported that Mr. Waldheim's pension was established by a resolution of the United Nations General Assembly. To rescind that pension a resolution to that effect would be required. This being a budgetary item, a two-thrids majority would be needed. It is very doubtful that such a resolution would carry a sufficient number of votes.

2. Yes. (a) U.S.A., Austria, Israël, the U.K., Yugoslavia, the Netherlands, France, Australia, New Zealand, Greece. (b) These consultations have helped to keep the Government abreast of developments and were helpful in determining Canada's position.

ASSISTANCE TO NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO FARMERS

Question No. 132—Mr. Howie:

In 1986, did the Government assist New Brunswick farmers with payments for the potato crop and, if so, what was the total amount paid?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, $3,130,000.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all notices of motions for production of papers on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question with regard to a matter which was on the Order Paper on June 10, 1987. On page 6963 of Hansard, I put a motion as follows:

That a humble address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the Cape Breton Development Corporation's five-year plan.

That motion was agreed to by the House. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader indicated that the five-year plan would indeed be given to the House. What I received instead was a summary of the five-year plan. I indicated to the Government office that that was not satisfactory, that it was not what I was asking for in my motion. I would think by the very fact that the House has actually passed this motion that I am entitled, and the House is entitled, to a complete five-year plan and not an office summary.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I have given the Parliamentary Secretary some notice of this.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have investigated my hon. friend's suggestion. We are talking about terminology here. Summaries of five-year plans are customarily tabled in the House. In fact, I believe this one was tabled on May 26, 1987. It is my understanding that that is the normal practice, and that has been done.

My hon. friend has asked for something which I understand has Privy Council confidences in it. We are unable table the complete five-year corporate plan referred to by my hon. friend. I think it is a matter of terminology. I would be glad to take another look at it for my friend and see if we cannot come up with a compromise.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to delay matters because I realize we have a lot before the House this afternoon. However, I would ask the Speaker if this is not strictly a matter of the Parliamentary Secretary looking at what the Government may or may not wish to make public?

I would submit that by the very fact this motion has been passed by the House, which calls for a copy of the Cape Breton Development Corporation's five-year plan, that indeed this House has said it will be given to us. There is no reference to a summary. There is no reference to which items the Government wishes to give. The House has indeed spoken and that motion was agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 16, consideration of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra provincial undertakings, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order made Tuesday, June 16, 1987, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at report stage of Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra provincial undertaking.

Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

● (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps Your Honour might inquire as to whether or not the House, in the interest of proceeding with business, would be willing to apply the same vote to Motions Nos. 3, 4, and 7A.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I think we would be in agreement, with the condition that the name of the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) who just came in is added. Otherwise, her vote would not be counted.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a point of order. That would require unanimous consent. I would be glad to add my consent, provided my vote is counted with the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I notice that a moment ago my colleague from Montreal—Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) referred only to the absence of Conservative Members. I would like to have my name recorded on the division list with the Liberal Party.

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I wish to have my name added.

[Translation]

Mrs. Vézina: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to have my vote recorded.

Mr. Hamelin: I would like my vote to be recorded for the next four divisions, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is unanimous consent to apply the results of the vote on Motion No. 2 to Motions Nos. 3, 4, and 7A, with the addition of Hon. Members who have asked that their names be counted.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, the next question is on Motion No. 3. Mr. Angus moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 15 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"taking or not, while at the same time accounting for the impact on the continued viability of existing motor carrier undertakings; and"

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Angus), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 7A. Mr. Ouellet moved:

Motion No. 7A.

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 37 to 40 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"33.(1) This Act except this section and sections 3 and 9 shall come into force on a date prescribed by the Governor in Council after the implementation of regulations respecting the safe operation of extra-provincial bus undertakings or extra-provincial truck undertakings including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, regulation respecting audit, inspection, entry on premises and the provision of information, in at least 7 provinces.

(2) This section and sections 3 and 9, shall come into force on January 1, 1988 or on an earlier date as may be fixed by proclamation."

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Ouellet), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

When shall the Bill be read the third time? Later this day, pursuant to the Order made on Tuesday, June 16, 1987?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AND DUTIES RELIEF ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Customs Tariff and the Duties Relief Act, laid upon the table on Wednesday, February 18, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hockin moved that Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and the Duties Relief Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, of course I regret that I have not been here for the last several days to listen to all the points made by my hon. friends in the Opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure all Hon. Members would want to listen with great care to the speech of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: However, I am happy to say that I have been most capably represented by my Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who has done a first-class job. He is a gentleman upon whom I intend to continue relying heavily because he is a man of great talent and great capacity.

While speaking on third reading of the Bill, I should like to say a special word about the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). He deserves special recognition because it was his drive, vision, and comprehension of the national transportation system of Canada which provided the genesis of the reforms that are known collectively as Freedom to Move. Much, if not all, of the credit for the work now before the House, which will pass in the next day or two, is due to him.

In addition, I want to thank the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) for his fine work in this connection. I should also like to thank all members of the committee, including those of the Official Opposition and those of the unofficial opposition or the New Democratic Party. They all attended diligently to their responsibilities and made many worthwhile suggestions.

Of course I also thank the government members of the committee for their hard work. I do not know whether I have the full list of their names, but I want to thank the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) who was a constant attender. As well I thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who is an enduring miracle and an expert in the field of transportation. For many years he was the Minister in Alberta. Also, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) was a diligent worker on the committee, as was the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher). I think I have covered all government members of the committee but in any event—

Mr. Ouellet: London—Middlesex.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, we mustn't forget Middlesex.

I would like to put on the record as well the names of government officials who I think deserve special mention in connection with the tremendous work put into this Bill over a period of two and a half years. Mr. Keith Thompson was certainly one of the architects of this legislation. Mrs. Margaret Bloodworth, the Acting General Counsel to the CTC, is a very capable woman who did a marvellous amount of work on this legislation. Mr. Nick Mulder, Assistant Deputy Minister for Policy and Co-ordination; Mr. Jim Miller, the Director General of Strategic Policy; Mr. John Pringle, Director of Motor Carrier Policy; and Mr. Jacques Pigeon who was Legal Counsel to Transport Canada and is now with the Treasury Board, all helped out as well. Of course, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East who attended committee meetings very diligently on behalf of the Government.

I do not want to take too long because this has been a long process in any event. The White Paper containing the Freedom to Move proposals was released almost two years ago. During the fall of 1985, it was studied extensively by the standing committee which held hearings across Canada. Its findings were a key element in shaping Bill C-18. This spring, the committee studied the Bill in depth again, heard witnesses, received briefs and travelled from coast to coast.

I do not think that anyone can say that this legislation has been hurried or rushed through the House. It was carefully thought out and everyone interested has been given every chance to put forward views and to have them considered.

I think the committee examined this matter in the spirit of parliamentary collegiality. We benefited from its analysis of the issues and I believe the committee provides another example of the success of parliamentary reform and the rules that give committees more power. The amendments proposed by the committee have made the Bill a better Bill.

I would like to reiterate the principles of the Bill. The first and overriding principle is that our transportation system must be safe. Our commitment to this is firm. Clause 3 of the Bill enshrines that principle in legislation for the first time. Safety is part of the entry test and the ongoing operating requirements for carriers in every mode.

As well, and this has to be repeated time and time again because opponents of the Bill are constantly putting out erroneous information on this, a uniform national safety code for trucks and buses has been implemented by both the federal and the provincial Governments. It will be incorporated in regulations under Bill C-19, the Bill which accompanies this Bill. Those Bills complement other initiatives the Government has taken to improve safety.

Hon. Members will recall major safety amendments to the Aeronautics Act and the Canada Shipping Act. In the fall, we will bring forward a rail safety Bill and a Bill to create an independent board to investigate accidents in rail, air and marine travel. We are improving safety requirements in all modes.

What about economic regulation, the focus of this Bill? We are adding two important principles to complement the long-standing objective which has been to have an efficient, effective and adequate transportation system. This Bill adds several other important principles to that.

First, transportation systems exist to serve the needs of shippers and of travellers. That is one important principle. Second, competition and market forces wherever possible should be the prime agents in providing for or spurring on viable and effective transportation systems. Those principles are not new, they are not foreign, but they do represent a major shift in the philosophy of regulation for transportation in Canada.

The current regime was put in place in 1967. Since then, the world economy, the Canadian economy and Canada's transportation industry have changed significantly. The regulatory regime simply did not keep pace. As a result, at the present time it impedes rather than supports growth and development, it stifles competition in all modes of transportation, it reduces the competitiveness of producers and it hinders the free movement of goods and people. That is why the Freedom to Move legislation has received such widespread support.

Bills C-18 and C-19 will affect air travellers and shippers throughout Canada and businesses of all types in all regions, from the small family-operated concern to the large integrated corporation, from the manufacturers of goods to resource producers. All will have new choices in getting their goods to market.

The Bill will increase competition in air, rail and trucking. The objective is to provide the best service at the best price to shippers and to air passengers through competition. We need an efficient transportation system for economic growth in all regions of Canada. This is part of the Government's over-all economic framework and its commitment to put Canadians back to work.

Enduring, meaningful jobs will be created or maintained in all regions wherever transportation service at a better price will make a resource producer, a manufacturer or any other business more competitive in the market-place. This Bill and the principles behind it are badly needed and more than warranted in the cause of regional economic development. The producers and those who have had to deal with non-competitive conditions in transportation will be most benefited.

There were a number of amendments made to the Bill by the Standing Committee on Transport. First, the Bill as tabled recognized the principle that transportation is a key to regional economic development. However, committee members felt that that statement in the Bill should be strengthened, and I agreed. The question of commercial viability of transportation links will be balanced with regional development objectives so that the economic strengths of each region can be realized. That principle will be part of the definition of public interest to be applied by the new agency in the decisions it makes.

Bill C-18 will give us what is required for lasting economic development in all regions and for an efficient, effective and competitive transportation system. As well, to ensure that the agency takes full account of regional needs and opportunities, the legislation will now require that at least one member of the agency be from British Columbia, and that there be one from the prairie provinces, one from Ontario, one from Quebec and one from the Atlantic provinces. The Bill now provides that if the agency establishes regional offices, one will be in Atlantic Canada and one will be in western Canada.

The Government is also ensuring that disabled persons have access to the transportation system. That commitment is reflected in the policy statement contained in Clause 3 of the Bill. A year ago the Government announced its intention to fulfil this commitment through human rights legislation. Transport officials and the Advisory Committee on Transportation of Disabled Persons have been drafting accessibility standards to be adopted as regulations. Representations were made to me and to the standing committee arguing that transportation legislation rather than human rights legislation should be used to enforce these accessibility standards, and I have agreed.

I am pleased to inform the House that accessibility standards when finalized will be adopted as regulations pursuant to transportation legislation, either new or existing. We make a commitment to consult with the disabled in all aspects of that work. In the meantime, the disabled will not lose any rights they now have for access to the transportation system. The Bill has been amended to remove any uncertainty on this point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The standing committee heard a great deal of evidence concerning competitive access provisions for rail. Manufacturers explained why they need extended inter-switching limits and bulk-resource shippers explained why they need competitive line rates. These competitive access provisions are Canadian solutions to Canadian problems.

The committee was not persuaded nor am I that lower rail rates arising from greater competition between Canadian railways or with American railways on transborder traffic will threaten the viability of our railways. I believe Canadian railroads can and should compete.

I agree with the committee that we should proceed with the inter-switching and competitive line rate reforms. I appreciate as well the committee's wisdom in adding a safety net just in case rail revenues are too hard hit or the U.S. Government takes steps that disadvantage our rail carriers.

To accomplish these ends the Bill now authorizes the Governor in Council to suspend the competitive line rate provisions if the annual or four-year reviews of the Act show that the financial viability of Canadian railways is in jeopardy as a result of these provisions. It provides the Governor in Council with the authority to take appropriate retaliatory action if the U.S. Government engages in unfair, discriminatory or restrictive practices against Canadian railways and consultations fail to result in the elimination of those practices.

The Bill has also been amended to delete the third competitive access provision, that being terminal running rights. It would have benefited a few shippers, but the committee was persuaded it should be deleted because of the serious problems it might cause for small railways and the type of short line railway we hope to encourage as an alternative in some cases to branch line abandonment.

Concern has been expressed, especially in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, that new branch line abandonment procedures might result in the loss of many branch lines soon after this legislation is proclaimed. Obviously it is in the interests of a more efficient transportation system to deal first with those lines which incur the greatest losses. This is also the most understandable approach for shippers and affected communities. From a practical point of view the new National Transportation Agency can only deal with a certain number of applications at any time. In view of those factors the committee added a provision to limit abandonments by any railway to 4 per cent of its total mileage in any of the first five years after proclamation. I think that should provide the necessary safeguards for those in Quebec and eastern Canada who are concerned about it.

As well the Bill, when introduced, did not recognize that it may be necessary to continue operating passenger service and branch lines no longer needed for freight operations. Therefore the Bill has been amended first to give VIA an opportunity to acquire a line which is to be abandoned but is currently used for rail passenger service. Second, it was amended to remove any obligation on VIA to provide freight operations should it acquire a rail line. Third, it has been amended to protect VIA's interest in the event that another railway acquires the line. These and other amendments are contained in the revised version of Bill C-18 reported to the House by the standing committee, and certain other fine tuning has been done by the House during report stage.

As we all know, our job is to seek the best balance among competing interests if we are going to achieve reforms that will best serve the interests of Canadians in all regions. There is always strong pressure on every side, particularly in the field of transportation, from conflicting and competing interests. I believe this Bill has successfully achieved the best balance among all those competing interests. If it has not, and if in the future it turns out we have gone too far in one direction or another, then the annual and four-year reviews will point that out and the Government can ask the House to pass any amendments that may be found to be necessary.

We sought a balanced package. We sought to advance the interests of all Canadians by removing obstacles to growth in international trade. We believe Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 achieve that. The work of the standing committee gives me even greater confidence that that belief is correct. The need for these reforms is clear. The benefits are clear. Now is the time to complete the job of making these reforms a reality.

I might say that the Government is responsible for the Bill now before the House. We have listened to all of the competing interests. We have listened to Members on both sides of this House. We have listened to the standing committee and acted on many of the changes it suggested. That is the proper process, but we remain responsible for the Bill. We stand behind it. We believe it is going to mean a great breakthrough for success in transportation, giving us a better, more efficient and viable transportation system. It will help our shippers and help economic growth, and regional development. We persisted in this direction despite a great deal of opposition, some of it from my good friend from Regina West who has been very active and vociferous in committee and in the House in opposition to the Bill. We know there are strong groups, including organized labour, who have not been supportive of the Bill. However, I believe history will show that this has been a great move forward in the history of transportation in this country. When people look back in 15 or 20 years they will say that the Deputy Prime Minister, who initiated this, and the people who supported it did a great job for Canada and that is has worked well.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition Critic, I would normally have the right to speak now for an unlimited period. However, as many Members of this House are aware, we are celebrating a very important anniversary today, that of the Hon. Member for Regina West, (Mr. Benjamin), who has now been sitting in Parliament for nineteen years. There is a reception the Hon. Member will have to attend very shortly, and with the consent of the House, I would like to give him the opportunity to speak now, without of course waiving my right to speak subsequently, for an unlimited period.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend from Papineau for allowing me to speak now. I also thank government Members for agreeing that the Hon. Member for Papineau retain his right to the time he is allowed under the rules as the second speaker even though he is speaking third.

For some two years now we have been engaged with the issue of deregulation. We started with a paper called Freedom to Move in the summer of 1985 and we are now in the summer of 1987. I want to say at the outset that as far as we are concerned, there is a three-part package being put together: Deregulation, privatization, and free trade. They are all inextricably linked. That is why the Government, as well as the previous Government, is and was in such a hurry to try to deregulate, privatize, and what-have-you. It has little or nothing to do with the welfare and good order of Canada and her people. It has to do with pacifying and satisfying the United States on things it does not like about the way we do things in Canada.

The U.S. does not like our freight rate programs. It does not like the Maritime Freight Assistance Act, the Atlantic Provinces' Freight Assistance Act, or the Western Grain Transportation Act. That Act in itself was a betrayal of the Crowsnest Pass rate. The U.S. does not like our marketing boards, including the Canadian Wheat Board. These efforts to deregulate and privatize are essentially to satisfy American complaints about the way we do things because the Government is desperate to get a free trade agreement. I submit that that is the is the main agenda behind this Bill and others like it.

• (1810)

The Americans do not like compulsory public medical care plans. They do not like the Canada Pension Plan or our unemployment insurance plan. They say that our fishermen are subsidized because they are eligible for UIC. I do not give a damn whether they like it or not.

Mr. Crosbie: Neither do we.

Mr. Benjamin: Yeah, it sounds like it. It looks like it. If I have ever seen an example of supine acquiescence, grovelling, and crawling on hands and knees to Washington, it is the Government, which is even worse than the previous one.

Mr. Crosbie: Bunk. Absolute bunk.

Mr. Murphy: Okay, you are just as bad.

Mr. Benjamin: The United States' conditions for a free trade deal mean that they will demand things of Canada which will be a direct interference with our sovereignty and independence. This Bill is one of them. The attitude over there is to do anything to make a buck. They will go to any length on an ideological binge that competition and free market forces will be the end-all and be-all. The Tories are working hard to prove that Karl Marx was right that capitalism and free enterprise will destroy itself.

There is a perfectly good reason why there are rules and regulations in Canada and in the United States about cartels and monopolies. There are regulations to control stock markets, corporations, et cetera, because when the market is open wide to a free enterprise jungle it becomes dog-eat-dog, what's in it for me, to hell with everybody else, and I don't care what happens to my country as long as I can make a buck. That is the attitude behind this Bill and others like it.

I for one, Mr. Speaker, do not want to be party to the kind of thing which makes us nothing more than a fifty-first state, a groveller and sniveller to Washington.

Mr. Crosbie: Such trash. We don't grovel or snivel to anyone. I don't. I certainly am not going to grovel or snivel to that kind of talk.

Mr. Benjamin: You have been doing that for a long time.

Mr. Crosbie: Cut it out and get to the Bill.

Mr. Benjamin: This attempt to—

Mr. Crosbie: That's political garbage.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. gentleman talks about competition and the market forces. How has it been working so far?

Mr. Murphy: The Minister is leaving.

Mr. Benjamin: He has not been around for most of the Bill anyway so it does not matter. I wish we would get a Minister who is interested in it.

The Minister and the Government talk about competition and free market forces. There has been more concentration in the airline industry. We used to have eight large airlines, six regional and two national, and we now have the two. Both of them have operating and licensing arrangements with small feeder airlines which ensure that between the two of them they will control between 80 per cent and 90 per cent of all airline traffic in the country, and these guys talk about competition.

The market is only large enough for a certain number of airlines. When it is thrown wide open one of two things result. There are either a whole lot of new entrants which take turns going broke, or mergers, takeovers, bankruptcies and concentration. There were new entrants, which are now all tied in with the two majors. There are very few left which are not tied in because they could not survive by themselves out in the jungle in competition with the big boys.

The Government talks about market forces. A good free-enterpriser in the free market lets the market decide whether you have to cut the cost down to damn near nothing or charge all you can get. If the Government believes that, why are there confidential rates? That is probably the most anti-competitive thing that can be done.

It is inevitable that small shippers and not-so-small shippers in the Atlantic provinces and western Canada, such as small manufacturers of farm implements in western Canada which might ship 50, 100, or 200 carloads a year, will be unable to negotiate a confidential contract in competition with J.I. Case, IHC or Massey-Ferguson which ship thousands of carloads a year. When the Tories say that they will be able to do that, they are dreaming in technicolour. It is anticompetitive. The very principles expressed at the beginning of the Bill are destroyed by the subsequent sections of the legislation.

Canada will always have a higher cost of economy, particularly in transportation. It is interesting to note that for years railroads in the United States have benefited from a better tax environment. As a consequence, they have higher levels of investment which has led to younger fleets of rolling-stock and has assisted them in other plant investment. That comparative tax environment is changing, but the U.S. continues to have a major advantage over Canadian railroads. U.S. railways have a much higher traffic density than Canadian roads which provides a larger base over which to spread their fixed cost load, particularly Canadian Pacific Rail's two main competitors, Burlington Northern and Conrail.

In addition to that, joint line rates are nothing more than a licence to raid the revenues of Canadian railroads, both of which have been in some financial difficulties for the past year or two and will continue to be for another year or two. To allow American railroads to do things in Canada which Canadian railroads cannot do in the United States is more grovelling and snivelling to Washington.

The Americans do not allow competitive line rates, but we do. Therefore, Burlington Northern, Conrail and Milwaukee Road, with their connections at the Canadian border, can move their trains on Canadian tracks at less than the fixed costs of Canadian railroads. What kind of competition is that?

Deregulation leads to another kind of extension of the jungle, the ease of entry and exit in the case of the airline and trucking industries. If you can get a loan at the bank, lease some tractors or second-hand aircraft, hire laid-off crews at one-third the pay, and get your insurance, you are in business. That is why there are so many jerkwater, fly-by-night trucking companies and airlines operating in the United States today, some of which are trying to operate in Canada. The reputable, long-established transporter who has good maintenance and safety practices, infrastructure, mechanics, and employees in all categories, are given a bad name because of this.

The whole Bill is an appeal to mediocrity and a decrease in the quality and frequency of service for Canadians. It destroys job security. We have lost tens of thousands of jobs in the transport sector, particularly on the railroads. Both railroads have told us that by 1991 they want to get rid of another 15,000 miles of track and another 15,000 employees.

They forget that transportation is a public utility whether publicly or privately owned. It is there to provide a service. Transportation is the foundation of any economy which will grow and thrive. To turn it into a deregulated jungle will be doing a major disservice to the people of this country.

We are not objecting to getting rid of obsolete regulations that no longer apply. We are not objecting to making the CTC function better so that it is more responsive. However, the lengths to which the Government has gone prevents that from happening. We need constructive regulations that balance the public interest, the interests of the shippers and receivers with the requirements of the transportation industry to be economically viable. That is an economic imperative.

The transportation industry must relate to the size of our country, our geography and our climate. It must relate to the size of our markets, the viability of the carriers and to the rights of the public the and employees.

This legislation is another classic example of union busting by contracting out and leaving employees, who are highly trained technical people, feeling insecure about their jobs. Men and women who worked from 20 to 30 years at the Moncton shops were kept on the edge for three years until the axe fell. Employees of their calibre cannot simply be found at the downtown Canada Employment Office.

Constructive regulation must make both the publicly and privately-owned transportation sector compete under a deregulated regime. Otherwise, reputable railways, airlines and trucking companies will have to make the bottom line their top priority. These reputable companies with good business practices and standards will be forced to cheat. Corners will be cut and safety, security and maintenance will not be the prime requisite in the transportation industry. It is not good enough for the parties to agree that there will be no downgrading of safety, maintenance and security, and that safety will not be compromised. While safety pays, it also costs money and reduces the bottom line, particularly if companies are forced to cut one another's throats by reducing the cost of freight rates or airline tickets.

That is the worst kind of risk management because it not only places transporters at risk, more important, it places the employees and the public at risk.

No sector in the transportation industry in Canada for the last 150 years, whether private or public, has been able to start up and continue functioning without public funding for the infrastructure and capital.

I suggest that no private airline would be operating in this country if it were not for the public purse. Last year, the deficit on airports was almost $700 million because the public provides the navigational and meteorological aids, the airports, the fire-fighting and rescue services. The airlines would be unable to function if they had to provide such services.

An Hon. Member: That is the same in all modes.

Mr. Benjamin: Exactly. All of them are and continue to be subsidized. Those who believe that these industries can operate in a deregulated free market regime with minimal regulations and be able to provide the same quality of service to Canadians are dreaming in technicolour.

Canada has always attempted to find mechanisms which try to equalize as much as possible the delivery of transportation service no matter where one lives. There is still too much discrimination against people because of where they live, where they produce or manufacture their goods. I would be a fool to invest $100 million in a manufacturing plant in the Prairies, in Atlantic Canada, or up North rather than near Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver. This legislation is designed to inhibit regional and economic growth.

The railroads have already indicated the length of line they want to remove, and even want to remove a thousand miles of tracks in the Laurentian Division, mostly in the Ottawa Valley from North Bay to Montreal. I suspect that CN wants to do this in order to force the Government into buying the track and giving it to VIA Rail, thereby relieving Canadian National of the responsibility.

It wants to get rid of all the track in Prince Edward Island and would like to eliminate the Newfoundland Railway if a deal can be made with Newfoundland. However, that railway comes under the 49 Articles of Confederation with Newfoundland. Yet the railway is in jeopardy if a deal can be made to remove the tracks and build some roads in Newfoundland.

We are scheduled to lose not less than 3,000 more miles of track in the prairie provinces.

Air Canada has already pulled out of six or seven cities. Today, I read the application by Air Canada to pull out of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Before Pacific Western Airlines took over Canadian Pacific, it pulled out of eight locations in northern British Columbia and Manitoba. These are the areas taken over by the jerk water fly-by-nighters who do not even have mechanics or the proper equipment.

An Hon. Member: And the accidents.

Mr. Benjamin: As I indicated yesterday during debate on one of the report stage amendments, an airline operator can lose his licence and go bankrupt, while there is an airline in Schefferville in which seven passengers and a pilot were killed. That operator had no operating authority but had the licence to fly. That airline still has no operating authority, yet eight people were killed. One must wonder with this deregulation whether the Tory transportation agency would consider cancelling the licence of Air Canada or Canadian Airlines International for filing late statistics with respect to fuel consumption and the number of passengers carried. It boggles the mind.

This legislation is based on a bad principle and poor philosophy. We attempted to move 107 amendments to make this bad Bill less offensive.

It is ironic that today's paper contains a front page headline: "U.S. Airlines Reeling From Deregulation". Let us consider what is happening to the travelling public in that country. The last six times I visited the United States, I was in 12 different airports. I have yet to find a clean airport, let alone arrive on time. One never knows whether one has a reservation or must stand in a long line trying to get a boarding pass. That is deregulation. That is the Tory version of competition and the role of free market forces. American airlines cancel flights at will and feel no responsibility to the travelling public because the bottom line is its primary motive of operation. There are not enough inspectors and insufficient regulations.

The Canadian Trucking Association, which is not made up of a bunch of socialists, is pleading with the Government not to bring in deregulation of the trucking industry for at least another year. Until those national safety regulations and the safety board are in place we should not bring in deregulation. We do not have a railway safety Act or a railway safety board. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board is understaffed. It is only a year old but it is under-equipped and it cannot do the kinds of inspections it should do. But the Government wants to bring in deregulation and throw it wide open for competition. That is an invitation to disaster. It is a compelling reason for otherwise reputable transporters to cheat. It is an invitation to disaster and it will cost hundreds and hundreds of Canadian lives.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if my hon. colleague, who has travelled so extensively, both nationally and internationally, having travelled on airlines, buses, cars and whatnot, would explain why since 1978, with the beginning of economic regulatory reform, the airlines are so safe?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had finished his speech so I will allow that comment in the question and comment period. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West would like to reply.

Mr. Benjamin: The two remaining major airlines in Canada are still safer, more efficient, the cleanest, and still have a reliable reservations system far ahead of all the airlines in the United States, and we are inviting them to join the ranks of that mediocrity south of the 49th parallel. I am not about to agree to that and neither are my colleagues.

The other tragedy in this country is that we do not have decent passenger trains because this Government starves the passenger service, treats it like an orphan. We have had, relatively speaking, a good transportation system. That does not mean that it does not need a lot of improvement. It needs billions of dollars more of investment over the next 10 to 20 years. However, we used to lead the world, and now in many areas we are running 20 or 30 years behind. It does not matter whether it is rail, the trucking industry or our highways, we need a massive amount of public investment to keep our status as one of the leading countries in the world in transportation. We need that investment to make sure that Atlantic Canada, the North and the West receive equitable treatment compared to the three or four major market centres in Canada.

I invite my hon. friends to talk to the people in southwestern Ontario, who sent in scores of requests for the Transport Committee to come there. The Transport Committee did not go to Yellowknife or Whitehorse. It did not go to Prince George or Prince Rupert. They should talk to the mayors of those two towns and all the municipalities around them. The Transport Committee did not go to the Peace River country or talk to the folks in Dawson Creek, British Columbia or Grand Prairie, Alberta. This thing has been a sham. The deck has been stacked and loaded ever since the White Paper Freedom to Move came down. That is why I submit it is an ideological binge which is going to cost this country dearly.

Mr. Clifford: Mr. Speaker, I am just delighted to have the opportunity to address the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) formally because I really believe the Hon. Member has missed the point. Bill C-18 is an invitation to Canadians to access. It is an invitation for the Canadian public to travel in at least 20th century style. I hope the Hon. Member for Regina West can understand this.

He talks about Bill C-18 and the market-place and all the worries Canadians should have. I want to tell him that there are no worries in southwestern Ontario. The people there did not get the luxury of having the Transport Committee go there and listen to them, but they are really pleased because action is a lot louder than going to a meeting hall. There has been action on the part of this Government to move ahead with Bill C-18 and offer opportunities to the good burghers in southwestern Ontario so they can finally travel in the style of the 20th century before we get into the 21st century.

Let us just talk about London, Ontario and the opportunities which have arisen there. A year and a half ago Members opposite all said to me: "Air Canada is pulling out. There go the jets. There goes the service. Nothing else will happen in southwestern Ontario because the lights are going out". I did not know how I was ever going to travel between Ottawa and London. But what has happened in the interim? We did not just have one airline come forward and say that it wanted to provide that service. We did not have two come forward or even three. Yesterday it was announced that the fourth airline has come forward in southwestern Ontario. It wants to be a part of Bill C-18 and the future of transportation in Canada. I am sorry the Hon. member for Regina West missed this page. I am sorry about that.

We are frequently seeing all kinds of airlines coming to our community and giving us this opportunity to travel. It is like the Americans in 1978 when they passed their legislation. We expect 51 per cent more travellers to have access to this kind of transportation. They should not all have to walk and carry a lunch pail. They should have the opportunity to fly. They should have time on their hands and be able to move silently and quickly in the skies of Canada.

The jets are back in London, Ontario, and those Members opposite said that they would never come back. The market-place brought the jets back. We now have the regular service of jets, and safety came with them. Members opposite said we would never have safety, that safety would be finished because of this new Bill C-18. I want to tell those Hon. Members that Amertek brought in state-of-the-art fire crash rescue equipment to Canada and to the world. It came first to London, Ontario. We have it there to protect our travelling public. We have the best. We have all kinds of frequency of service. We are a model for Canada. We have all kinds of airlines which want to come into the market-place. They want to provide cheap transportation and state of the art technology for Canadians, and they want to do it with safety. The Minister has ensured that the standards will never be surpassed by any country in the world. So we have it all, and this Government should be congratulated.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Regina West what this is all about? What is this bogeyman? What is wrong with the market-place deciding? What is your problem? What happened to Regina West? Does no one want to fly out there?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that was a combination of the Hon. Member's third reading speech, I guess. I thought the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was scheduled to be the next speaker.

I want to tell my hon. friend from London that what happened in Regina is going to happen in London. The Government threw it open. We got one airline and then a second airline. We were told we had to have more competition, and we got a third airline. The market is not big enough for three airlines, so one of them stayed for a year and then pulled out. Then we have to become an international airport, so we get Frontier Airlines which flew to Saskatoon, Regina, North Dakota, Denver, and so on. That lasted 14 months. Frontier Airlines is now belly-up. It is bankrupt.

We see this chamber of commerce syndrome, champagne ideas in a beer market. Mark my words, all these little jerkwater airlines will end up merged, taken over or entering into an operating agreement with one of the majors. The result will be that air fares will not be reduced. The going rate will have to be paid, something which has taken place in cities the size of London and cities even bigger than London in the great U.S. of A.

• (1840)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) point out that the transportation system is a good, safe system. Can the Hon. Member produce any evidence with respect to differences in attention given to safety between the publicly-owned Air Canada and the private sector operation of Canadian Airlines International? Since 1983 or 1984, whenever deregulation in the air industry commenced, has there been any diminution of the airlines' concern for safety? Is the Hon. Member's concern with respect to the majors in the industry? Or is he saying that the smaller airlines are less conscious about safety? Why does the Hon. Member respond with such concern when there is a rationalization or consolidation of the airlines industries under major carriers which have as an obvious concern the safety of their passengers?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was not complaining about being down to two airlines. That is about all that Canada can handle. I was not complaining about that. I was just pointing out how that occurrence came about under the aegis of the so-called deregulation which threw the doors wide open to free enterprising market forces. It is inevitable to see either bankruptcies or mergers in such cases. It is one or the other. There cannot be too many fellows trying to warm the same spot on the bench.

When it comes to safety procedures, Air Canada has received an international medal for safety three years out of the last six or seven. It is one of the most efficient and safe airlines in the world. We rank in the top 10 airlines in the world. It still remains that way.

The same thing applied to Canadian Pacific and Pacific Western. Rate setting, exit and entry requires cutting costs to the bone, as any good corporate manager will do. It is inevitable. It has been shown and proven many times. The Arrow Airlines accident was a deregulation accident. The Florida Air airplane which hit the bridge in Washington was a deregulation accident. Because there are not very many accidents that is no reason to sit around all self-satisfied and say: "Well, we have not had any accidents lately". What are Members opposite doing? Begging for one?

The operations of an airline and the amount of money it needs for capital investment and so on will perhaps be reduced when put into deregulated regimes. They have to cut corners, and they will cut them.

I do not believe for one minute that Air Canada or Canadian Airlines International will cut corners on safety. I do not believe it. I do not think they will. But they will cut a great many other things. They will reduce the number of places they serve. The ones I worry about are the ones that are called the Schedule 3 or Schedule 4 operators which do not have the wherewithal to carry on a safety and maintenance regime, something which a big airline can do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the House that the period for questions and comments is over.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When the Hon. Member quotes the differences between the United States and Canada, is he in a position to point out figures to back up his statement as to air carrier fatalities in the United States versus air carrier fatalities in Canada?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To conclude the intervention of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), would Hon. Members consider allowing the Hon. Member to have one minute in which to complete his remarks? We will then proceed to the speech of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I only wish that I could join with the Hon. Member for Papineau in his unlimited time. If I had that I would be glad to read a whole book to the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). I would be glad to recite all these statistics to the Hon. Member. Much of this information he received from witnesses and in submissions given to the Transport Committee, something which he and his colleagues chose to ignore.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak at this point in the debate on third reading of Bill C-18. Bill C-18, an Act respecting National Transportation, has been the subject of comments and debate and has aroused the attention of the public in general far more than many other Bills.

At this stage, I think it would be interesting to go back in time to provide a brief historic overview and see how we got to where we are today, when we are debating the last stage of a Bill that will most certainly cause disruptions in Canada's transportation industry. In my view, there will be a disastrous impact on safety and on several sectors of our economy. The transport sector and our regulatory system have helped to strengthen the unity of this country since Confederation.

Except for coastal regions and the centre of the country, where maritime transport was possible, railway companies at the time had a nearly exclusive monopoly on freight and passenger transport, except perhaps over what can be considered short distances.

This had two important consequences. First, the railway companies developed major sectors and, second, the Government got involved in regulating their operations, obviously in the public interest because these companies had control over economic activities, and over the industry and the regions which depended on them.

[English]

The 1920s saw massive government expenditures in the field of transportation. The federal Government unified several financially-troubled railways into CN Rail, advanced massive funds for improved shipping, expanded other enterprises and provinces greatly expanded their network of highways.

This was also a period of legislation imposing public duties on railways. For example, the Crow grain rates were extended by law across the West and subsidies were begun for Maritime provinces transport.

[Translation]

About the middle of the century the monopoly of the railway companies began to weaken as a result of progress in the trucking industry, particularly with the advent of powerful diesel engines, road construction, competition from ships plying the new seaway between the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River, new pipelines carrying oil to regions where railway companies used to deliver coal, and the growth of airlines and bus companies transporting passengers who were once railway customers. From then on, shippers and travellers then had several options. They abandoned the train and turned increasingly to transport by truck, bus or even airplane when speed was of the essence, cost not a significant factor, and in the case of goods, the weight not too high.

Of course, what followed was to be expected. The railroads focussed on the sectors they found most profitable because of their very nature, such as the transport of heavy goods over long distances, while local interest services and passenger service were losing ground to other means of transport.

Unfortunately, the heavy regulation which had been necessary to control the monopolizing expansion of railway companies in their glory years was not relaxed soon enough to take into account the evolution of transport in this country. The Governments continued to regulate railway freight transport. The railroads had to interfinance their various services to continue to meet the commitments imposed on them in the name of national interest many years before, especially the transport at regulatory rates of grain and grain products for the export market,the maintenance of unprofitable passenger services, and the provision of local services which they could abandon only under very strict conditions.

These circumstances led to the creation of the MacPherson Royal Commission on Transport, which examined this issue from 1959 to 1962 and did some very useful work. I submit that the latest major reform of the National Transportation Act came as the result of a royal commission which took two years to examine the issues involved. We of the Official Opposition are shocked to see how quickly the Conservative Government is imposing this measure which will fundamentally transform the whole transportation sector in Canada.

I would remind the House that the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission led to passage of the National Transportation Act in 1967, to the decision of the then Government to subsidize directly railway companies in compensation for some of the commitments imposed on them by the national interest, such as passenger service, and even, to a certain extent, to passage of the Western Grain Transportation Act in 1983 which set new tariffs for grain transport.

With the adoption of the National Transportation Act, the Canadian Government ceased to be actively involved in rate setting within a rather wide margin which existed between the minimum rate as set under section 276 of the Railway Act and the maximum rate set under section 278 of the same Act. The legislation thus allowed the railways to set their freight rates as they saw fit, after due consultation and agreement with their clients, of course. At the same time, the Act defined a procedure for the abandonment of local services and provided mechanisms to compensate railway companies which were not allowed to drop certain services.

The results of this legislative review were impressive. New specialized freight services were offered and Canadian railways became more and more competitive. In effect, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that this National Transportation Act which was put in place by the Honourable Jack Pickersgill in 1967 has been a great asset for the Canadian economy over the last 20 years. The transport industry is not ailing. The Canadian rail, air, and sea transportation industry as well as the trucking industry provides a decent livelihood for vast numbers of workers throughout Canada.

Some changes are indeed required to accommodate a new situation. Some of the regulations of the National Transportation Act must of course be streamlined. But the Government is not trying to streamline or to accommodate. It is in fact litterally trying to do a hatchet job and destroy everything we have now to start again from scratch and it is willing to do so in fact just to accommodate a request by the large Canadian carriers and shippers.

The bill before us is the Government's response to the pressing demands of large Canadian shippers. Although the provinces, most transportation companies and the public in general as well as workers in the field of transportation in particular, oppose this bill, the Goverment has decided to stick with it and go ahead in forcing this new transportation act upon Canadians in spite of all the objections that have been put forward.

People often say: If it works, why change it? And we should indeed be asking ourselves at this moment: why is the Government insisting to overhaul the National Transportation Act and jeopardize thousands of stable and well-paid jobs with transportation companies throughout Canada?

As I said earlier, the Canadian transport industry is not static. It is indeed a dynamic, developing industry which changes constantly. As everything else, its reactions to change may be good or bad. But the change which we are undergoing is in many ways a technological change. Sometimes, it takes the shape of a competitive challenge from our neighbours south of the border, and it is indeed this change, those developments and those challenges which prompted the previous Liberal Government at the time to review the industry's regulatory framework. In fact, in 1984, my colleague, the Honourable Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), the then Minister of Transport, first suggested that some deregulation might take place in the transport industry. I am saying "some deregulation" on purpose, for what our Government had in mind at the time was the implementation of a more flexible regulatory framework, a framework that would be more in keeping with new economic structures and with the changing face of the transport industry. Our purpose at the time was to set up a regulatory framework to ensure the full development of that industry, thereby improving our competitive position.

But the major difference between us and the current Tory government is that if our policy was future-oriented, it was also deeply rooted in the best traditions of the transport industry in Canada, in both realism and pragmatism which have demonstrated their usefulness in the past.

So, the government is asking us to approve this very heavy and all transforming bill. It had expressed its views in its White Paper entitled Freedom to Move.

• (1900)

Well, Freedom to Move means going full speed and without any limitation towards full, urgent and complete deregulation. My colleague, the former Liberal Minister of Transport, on the contrary, had proposed a strategy of regulatory flexibility which we had described as small-step progression. At first, this strategy was directed to the air transportation industry. We meant to soften the impact on the Canadian economy. This Tory government, by electing to change the whole transportation industry all at once, has caused a wind of panic to blow on several sectors of our economy.

I must say that the small-step approach adopted by the former Liberal government had already started to be felt, resulting in a reduction of the rates granted to the travelling public by the airlines of the day.

Guarantees have been provided for services in distant areas of this country to make sure that those with vested interests, such as those held by various airlines, would be protected by the measures announced by the then Minister of Transport.

Well, we need only look at what has been happening for the past two years to realize to what extent the hasty and misdirected action of this Tory government has resulted in a disturbingly large number of small airlines being taken over by major carriers. Also, the trucking industry in Canada is starting to experience a disturbing concentration. When he introduced his bill, the Tory Minister of Transport told us: the purpose of this deregulation is to favour and encourage competition. Well, both in the air and highway transportation industries, we see the opposite happening. We do not have more competition, but a larger degree of concentration in the hands of a few big carriers, and the danger is clear—more concentration leads to lesser competition and greater disruption of market forces. And needless to say, it is clear the transport industry in Canada is very much concerned by the Conservative Government's Bill C-18.

So, while accepting the major thrusts of the bill, the Liberal position is quite different from that of the New Democratic Party. While the latter want no change, we say: A degree of de-regulation is needed, existing rules must be made more flexible. We therefore support the principle of Bill C-18. But while accepting the major thrusts of the legislation, we cannot support the way it was put forward by the Conservative Government, nor the hasty legislative process chosen by the Government that to us is totally unacceptable and shameful in the circumstances. Indeed, the importance of the transport industry to our Canadian economy's development is clear. The Government itself recognizes that in the policy statement included in Clause 3. And it is because of that basic importance that we feel the Government should have used a much more balanced approach. And that same basic importance leads us also to suggest the Government should have held wider consultations, it should have listened to the many representations it received when it tabled the White Paper, the Freedom to Move document, and also when Bill C-18 was discussed. What is unfortunate is that apparently the Government only listened to associations controlled by large, affluent shippers in Canada. Clearly, it should have listened as much and perhaps more so to small shippers, small shippers from the Maritimes and some small shippers from Western Canada who made representations and submitted that confidential contracts for domestic traffic in particular may force them out of business.

When small and medium size business people in Canada appear before a commons committee, they make urgent representations, saying: Be careful, if you provide for confidential contracts as proposed in your bill, this may force us into bankruptcy, please do not do that. It seems to me that a Government that has the public interest to mind, a Minister who finally wants to have the best possible legislation, should listen and accept that kind of representations. We cannot understand that the Conservative Government turned a deaf ear to the many urgent representations made by small and medium size businesses that opposed major aspects of Bill C-18.

Evidently, I do not have to tell you that if the Tories did not listen to small businessmen, they listened even less to the unions which also appeared before the Committee on Transport and made very insistent and eloquent representations about the inherent dangers of the legislation for a number of jobs which could be lost in the transport industry if the government blindly proceeded with total deregulation. Some statistics which I find indisputable were given by Canadian unions which appeared before the Committee on Transport and which told us explicitly that to copy the Americans as this Tory government wants to do in the deregulation of transport would have in Canada the same results as the deregulation of transport has had in the United States, that is the loss of many jobs in that industry. However, the government has been entirely relentless as far as those representations were concerned.

The government could have also consulted, Mr. Speaker, all aviation professionnals, pilots and others, who appeared before the Committee on Transport and clearly told us that deregulation would inevitably lead to reduced service and what is more important, reduced safety. We are not imagining those things, this is what those experts, the pilots who earn their living in that field and are the first ones on the line told us: "Take care, what has been done in the United States resulted in decreased air safety." Now the present Minister of Transport as well as the former one told us time and time again that everything would be done to maintain total safety. At one point, the Prime Minister even said that we were going to be number one on safety. We were going to make sure we would have the best safety record. However, if we take a closer look and analyze what the Government has done, we realize that these were just empty promises. We have nothing in our legislation to protect safety standards, and as for the Department of Transport and the various agencies that would be created to monitor Canada's new transportation system, they do not have the person-years and will therefore be unable to provide for the necessary resources to monitor and enforce the most important safety standards.

Only yesterday, when we were considering the report stage of this Bill, we tried to amend the legislation to ensure that the most important safety standards would be enshrined in the text of the Bill. However, the Government would not accept our amendment.

So we have nothing tangible here at all. When the Government talks about safety, it is just talk, since no concrete action has been taken in this respect.

Furthermore, the Government should have listened to our Canadian railway companies when they told us that Bill C-18 constituted a threat to their survival. The railway companies, both CN and CP, testified before our Committee and told us that the new constraints imposed by Bill C-18 would be a threat to their survival, lead to a substantial drop in revenue and business, and force them to cut back severely their operations across the country.

The Government was unmoved by these representations. In fact, it preferred to impose time frames that were entirely unrealistic. For instance, when the Transport Committee was to study the White Paper Freedom to Move, we were handed the document and told to submit our report within two months. We would be able to hear a number of witnesses, but the report had to be tabled in Parliament before Christmas. Next, when we got the Bill, we were told the Bill had to be reported back to the House before Easter and that it was all very urgent.

Mr. Speaker, I may remind the House that the last time the legislation was revised, a Royal Commission of Inquiry sat for three years before any changes were made in the National Transportation Act.

In fact, in addition to the very short time frames, the Government even had the gall to impose time allocation on consideration of the report stage, and we are now limited to a maximum of four hours at third reading. I think this is hardly the way to deal with a sector that is one of the most important components of our economy. And I think it is hardly acceptable and entirely inappropriate to make such radical changes in the legislation that regulates transportation in this country.

Gagging the Opposition may be something the Government can afford to do in the circumstances because of its crushing majority, but although the Government may be able to gag us here, although it may be able to force Parliament's hand to pass this legislation, it cannot gag the general public. It cannot gag the workers in the transportation industry who will be affected by this Bill. It cannot gag the transport companies whose activities will be seriously disrupted by this new legislation. I am convinced that within a very short while, we of the Official Opposition will have to repair the damage done by this Government which has set its mind on forcing us to adopt a bad piece of legislation much too quickly. I have no hesitation in predicting that, within two or three years at the most, the Government will have to deal with a new Bill to correct the harmful impact of Bill C-18 on our transport industry.

We of the Liberal Party are vigorously opposed to many of the provisions contained in this Bill as we believe that they will seriously harm the economy of Canada for several years. We regret that this Bill does not contain the provisions required to provide such things as serious and credible safety standards for air travellers; adequate services for handicapped travellers; measures to protect jobs in the transport industry; and guarantees that the national transportation network will remain the cornerstone of regional development in Canada.

In a few words, those are the major points on which we of the Official Opposition have tried to suggest improvements, and I am thinking especially of my college, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) who has proposed several amendments. We have not been as successful as we had hoped.

We believe that the review of such a blue-print legislation, which is essential to the socio-economic balance of this country, deserves a much more responsible approach than that taken by the Conservative Government. I emphasize that, in such a major review, much more care should have been taken to measure the impact of the deregulatory process on such matters as passenger safety, consumers, especially as far as rates are concerned, jobs, the acceptable level of foreign control, and finally, regional development.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the next few minutes to try to point a picture which we Liberals want to be as objective as possible of the harmful effects of comprehensive deregulation such as proposed by the Government in Bill C-18 now under consideration at the third reading stage.

I would also like to review some of the most noteworthy comments made on these issues before the transport committee. To some extent, we Liberals want to act as spokesmen for all Canadians whose views were not taken into account by the Minister of Transport when the Bill was being prepared, and later when the Opposition proposed amendments on their behalf. In so doing, we wish to join those Canadians in denouncing a piece of legislation which, while it may have been based on a sound principle, has become very bad in its various provisions.

First, I would like to deal with the issue which is of greatest concern to the users of our various means of transport. In my opinion, when they hear the word "deregulation", people are most worried and scared about the safety issue.

We Liberals regret that this Bill contains no provision to prevent situations which could actually reduce air safety. The American experience has shown that this is a real danger.

I will not refer to trucking safety—I will get back to that when dealing with Bill C-19—which is also a source of deep concern. Nor will I say anything about safety in rail transport because, as we see it, the Government has proved to be utterly unrealistic by failing to provide adequate financial backing to the railway companies, and particularly the two Crown corporations—CN and Via Rail—for which the Government has the responsibility to meet minimum safety standards in the railway sector.

Every week or every two weeks we are told about derailments, we are told about railway accidents, a clear indication that the Government has failed to take urgent action to revamp a defective system.

But here is where our fears are the greatest and what I want to emphasize again, three fundamental observations in the field of air safety. First, deregulation encourages the arrival of new companies on what is supposed to be a free market. Oftentimes these new airline companies have inexperienced workers who have not been properly trained in aircraft maintenance. Second, one of the effects of deregulation is that carriers are forced to exact concessions from their workers, which often results in longer shifts, stress, lower wages and fatigue, so many factors which can translate into human errors. Sadly enough, more carriers does not automatically mean more inspectors.

As we have seen, in 1979 the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration had 2,000 inspectors for 237 air carriers.

Well, five years later, in 1984, it had 1,300 inspectors for 407 air carriers. The same situation is bound to develop in Canada.

The Government is imposing budget restraints on the Department of Transport. Since the number of inspectors will not match the increase in air traffic, it can be expected that the same shortcomings which prevail in the United States will also prevail in Canada.

In our opinion, these three situations speak for themselves. It is inconceivable that these direct consequences of deregulation might lead to anything other than reduced air safety.

• (1920)

[English]

There is more. Indeed, in the U.S. the number of near misses has increased steadily over the last five years, from 311 in 1982, to 776 in 1985. In the first five months of 1986, 305 were recorded, an increase over the same period in 1985. While the number of commercial flights has grown by 31 per cent from 14.7 million in 1980 to 19.2 million in 1986, the number of air traffic controllers has declined by 13 per cent. While the number of aircraft increased by 68 per cent between 1980 and 1984, the percentage of operating revenues spent on maintenance has declined from 8.9 per cent in 1980, to 7.6 per cent in 1984. Clearly that indicates the American skies are not as safe today under deregulation as they were before 1978.

Earlier today my hon. friend from Regina West was asking for statistics. I am giving him uncontested statistics which are a clear indication that deregulation has created a lowering of safety in the U.S., and it is predictable that exactly the same thing will happen in Canada.

[Translation]

Indeed, in the United States air travel is not as safe as it was before deregulation. Accident and mortality rates are on the rise, and I would like to quote Mr. Ronald Cape, President of the US Cetus Corporation, who has this to say: "Commercial flights are less safe now than they were before deregulation". The President of Bache Prudential Securities, Mr. Harry Jacob Jr., stated: "Air travel is now much more dangerous". To us in the Liberal Party, and not only to us but to a countless list of organizations that appeared before the Committee on Transport, the US deregulation experience should have been more closely studied by the Conservative Government. That American experience should have led the Conservative Government to be more cautious before acting with such haste to de-regulate air transport. I cannot understand such haphazardness, such irresponsibility from this Government. I would like to quote from the evidence given by Mr. John Nance, professor, author, and himself a former Braniff Airlines pilot, who appeared before the Committee on Transport. Here is what Mr. Nance revealed, and I am quoting from his evidence before the Committee on Transport:

[English]

"The most serious objection of all, and the one taken with the least degree of seriousness on Capitol Hill, was the issue of airline safety. It seems obvious to the technically adept members of the airline industry that price wars will lead to cost cutting, and cost cutting will lead to cut-backs in the amount of money available within any carrier to fund training programs for pilots, flight attendants, maintenance workers, operational line workers, and hundreds of others, and would lead to cut-backs in the funds available for maintenance personnel and parts.

With abject ignorance of the realities of the very delicate balance in the human systems of airline operations, the proponents of the deregulatory experiment assume without justification that safety standards will not be compromised as long as the Federal Aviation Administration maintains its surveillance of the airline industry in order to prevent a decline in standards. In addition, they reason it is not good business to denigrate safety standards and cause crashes which kill people and destroy public confidence in one's airlines. Therefore, the natural propensity of airline managers will be to maintain their safety standards regardless of cost pressures.

Based on those two incredibly naive assumptions, the Congress promised that deregulation will never be allowed to lower the level of safety then enjoyed by the people of the U.S., and the government agency charged with maintaining that promise would be the FAA".

That is exactly what the Minister is telling us. That is what the officials in the Department of Transport are telling us. Do not worry. We will continue to carry on business as usual. There will be no problem. We will not compromise safety. That is exactly what was promised to the U.S. Congress and it never materialized. That is exactly what will happen here, to the peril of the Canadian public.

• (1930)

I will cite another part of the text submitted to us by Mr. Nance. He said:

Congress never understood these basic truths:

A. The level of safety in the airline system of the U.S. in 1978 was, and historically always has been, far, far above the minimum standards mandated by the Federal Air Regulations;

B. The FAA was empowered to enforce only the Federal Air Regulations, also referred to as the "minimums" in airlines operations—the lowest level of compliance to which any carrier would be allowed to drop before the FAA would be empowered and required to step in and take action to prevent further decline.

Since it was obvious that deregulation would bring massive cost-pressure to bear on established carriers in the sure-to-result feeding frenzy of competition, and since existing carriers would have to find ways to cut their costs to match the lower costs of new entry carriers with overheads no greater than a PSA or Southwest, airline leaders were sure to notice that their level of compliance in many areas of maintenance, training, and operations was far above the minimums mandated by the FAA. Since the FAA was powerless to stop or even influence the decision of any carrier to cut its previous level of standards as long as it remained above the minimums, the FAA would thus be powerless to prevent a general decline in the standards of safety—as long as those standards did not sink below the FAR minimums.

Thus, from the very first, the promise of the Congress to absolute guarantee that there would be no cost-pressure generated decline in the levels of safety of the U.S. airline industry was inoperative and impossible to keep. Furthermore, through ignorance and refusal to do their homework, Congress virtually guaranteed that those standards would have to drop in order for the existing carriers to have a fighting chance to remain in business.

I want to point out to the Ministers and government Members that the same situation could prevail in Canada. My colleague, the Member for Westmoreland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), says that that is exactly what will happen, and he is right. Mr. Nance was saying that Congress was naive in thinking that safety would be preserved. I submit that the Ministers and the government Members are naive to think that safety will be protected. I am afraid that there will be a repetition of the terrible American experience.

I will continue quoting Mr. Nance's remarks as follows:

But what of the natural propensity of airline managers to have and maintain the highest level of safety available? Once again ignorance plays a role in the story of the U.S.'s experience.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, ignorance cannot be pleaded by the Minister and the Government because they know of the American experience. It may be that the U.S. Congress could plead ignorance, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who knows what happened in the U.S., does not want to look and see the danger. He continued:

Because of the entry into the business of thousands of bright and honorable business school graduates and other managers with no exposure to the nuts-and-bolts operational realities of the human system we refer to as an airline system, the incorrect idea was sure to grow rapidly that the highest level of airline safety and the FAA minimums were actually one and the same, and that as long as an airline complied faithfully with the minimum standards the public trust had been upheld. Therefore new entry carriers run by non-airline people were certain to enter the business at a lower level of safety compliance (fewer hours of training, lower maintenance stocks, lesser quality of operational experience in the people hired) than the major carriers whose routes they were determined to raid.

Since cost control would now become the arbiter of who would succeed and who would fail, arguments on the Vice Presidents of Operations or Vice Presidents of Maintenance for extra funds over and above the minimum necessary were increasingly discounted even in the established carriers, and never considered in too many new entry carriers. While there was and is no doubt that the national propensity of airline managers is to have the greatest level of safety possible—

—and I think the same is true in Canada—

—the definition of what was possible was arrived at through cost analysis and examination of the subterranean FAR minimums, and thus the overall level of safety of the system began to decline.

This is exactly what we think will happen in Canada. The new entries will try to compete and take away some of the routes of the existing companies. The danger is grave that we will have a lower level of safety in Canada.

[Translation]

In his book Blind Trust, Mr. Nance had this to say:

[English]

The airline business is a human business. Humans think and act subjectively, try as technology may to mold us into objective perfection, humans fail in the cockpit, on the ramp, in the executive office—and in Congress. Such failures are predictable, and if we do not build in enough of a safety buffer that is being thinned drastically and dangerously by the free-market forces of cost accountability unleashed by deregulation.

[Translation]

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, we simply want to ensure that we do not take the same route. On the other hand, we want for Canada a safe, comfortable air transport system, with fair rates and a high quality of service, and we sincerely believe that on those matters, Bill C-18 fails miserably. This leads us to the matter of air fares over the last two years.

The Minister of Transport attempted to promote his de-regulation proposal by suggesting to Canadians that Canada's air carrier rates would be reduced because of de-regulation. In the meantime, both the President of Air Canada and the President of CP Air stated in evidence before the Committee on Transport that air fares had reached their lowest level, that was the bottom line, there would be of course competition between the main airlines but across Canada air fare reductions were no longer to be expected. In other words, the Canadian consumer was misled by the Minister who wanted him to believe air fares would fall significantly because of de-regulation. Indeed, the former Minister of Transport attempted to tell the same story. But to his credit, I must add the Deputy Prime Minister had the courage in June, 1986 to admit that the new National Transportation Act would have no impact on rates.

[English]

So much for lower fares, Mr. Speaker. It is clear that again the Government has lost one of its reasons for bringing total deregulation in the air industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government was elected almost three years ago by promising jobs, jobs, jobs. Those were the three commitments made by the Conservative Government and, at that time, by Mr. Mulroney. Jobs, jobs, jobs! Unfortunately, he has been forced to admit that, in this area as well, the Government has not delivered. We believe that this bill will have a detrimental effect on the employment level in the transport industry. Far from creating employment, Bill C-18 will bring about a drop in highly paid full-time employment in the transport sector. Workers in the air transport industry face important layoffs and displacements. The United States transportation industry was deregulated in 1978. From 1978 to 1985, 40,000 workers in that industry lost their jobs. We think that repeating the American experience here would have the same effects. It is obvious to us that in their effort to rationalize their operations, the air carriers would cut down on their staff. This is already being felt ever since CP Air has been taken over by Pacific Western and there is talk of rationalizing operations. And I predict that we will see between 1,200 and 2,000 layoffs or job losses in that Canadian company alone.

And I am not talking about other companies which could be affected by the bill but about the new company which is now called Canadian Airlines and which, in a context of deregulation, has benefited from the happy-go-lucky attitude displayed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who is responsible for competitions policy in Canada, in allowing an excessive degree of concentration in the air transport sector which will directly result in the layoff of hundreds of workers of the former companies, that is to say Quebecair, Nordair, Pacific Western or Canadian Pacific, or even Eastern Provincial.

What will happen as a result of the consolidation of these five companies into one? Jobs will be lost. It is bound to happen. What we in the Liberal party find is wrong with this legislation is that it does nothing to protect jobs in the air transportation industry. Nothing is provided to force air carriers to compensate workers who would have to move in order to keep their jobs or give them proper notice in case of lay off. We consider that the increased competition will lead the companies to cut their costs, to take up a strategy of bare minimum, to abandon certain routes and to run a greater risk of bankruptcy. All those consequences will result in less job opportunities and more lay offs.

This legislation does not include any provision able to counter the likely negative impacts deregulation will have on the work force in the transport industry, while we have before us the most eloquent example of problems generated in the United States by deregulation.

Allow me to quote from the brief presented by the Brotherhood of Railways and Airline Clerks before the Standing Committee on Transport at our hearings in Vancouver last March. We would have hoped that the Government had paid careful attention to that brief submitted by that union which had done an outstanding work to bring to the attention of the committee members some very relevant points of view, and I quote:

• (1940)

[English]

However, one fact about deregulation that we will not dispute is that the airlines will use it as an opportunity to cut costs. The supporters of deregulation have clearly indicated that the major portion of this cost-cutting will be achieved at the expense of workers.

At a hearing of this Committee in November, 1985, when asked "what specific steps would an organization" such as his take in order to change the profit picture, Donald Carty, (then President of CP Air), provided the following action plan: 1. "go from three-fleet types to two" 2. increase the use of "automation"; and 3. make changes to "our labour contracts."

It would appear accurate to suggest that such cost-cutting measures would have a negative impact on both present and future workers of any organization. The recognition of who will suffer most in the implementation of deregulation has also been highlighted by transport economists. Professor Tretheway of UBC has suggested that, "some of the gainers from deregulation, consumers, may have some obligation to the losers, the employees—"

While the proposed Canadian legislation has followed the U.S. direction of recognizing the needs of shippers, consumers and carriers, it has failed to follow the U.S. legislators in at least attempting to provide for the needs of workers in the transportation industry. The Transport Minister has suggested that the Canadian Bill is an improvement on the U.S. law as "We (learned) our lessons from what has happened there." One improvement which we believe Canada should have made on the U.S. legislation, is a more effective employment protection package . . . To ignore this issue is to fail to recognize that the elements which have created the stable industrial relations system in the airline sector are a natural product of having operated in a regulated environment.

The results of such a failure for Canada can be extrapolated from the U.S. experience. For as Professor John T. Dunlop has asserted in reviewing the U.S. scene: the inadequate consideration given to the question of "how deregulation would impact on the relevant labour markets and the process of collective bargaining "exacerbates the industrial relations problems created by deregulation.

[Translation]

It is clear that the government has failed to take into account this proposal made before the Transport Committee. And this is regrettable because there is no doubt that Canadian workers, in the transportation area, deserved more protection.

Now, I should like to deal briefly with the issue of foreign control over our industry. Always anxious to kowtow to our neighbours to the South, the government introduced a bill without any provision limiting foreign control over Canadian transportation companies. Mr. Speaker, this is surprising, when we know that even in a country as powerful as the United States, there is a 25 per cent limit on foreign takeovers in the transportation industry. We fear that a great many Canadian companies will fall into foreign hands. We said so to the government. We have tried to move amendments to protect against this possibility. But the Tory government has decided to live dangerously.

While disregarding the need to safeguard Canadian control over our transportation industry, leaving everything to the discretion of the Minister responsible for Investment Canada, and failing to set any statutory limit to foreign control, the government, we feel, has left the door open to foreign control over this industry which is so important to the economic well-being of Canada.

We have tried to move an amendment which could have offered a certain protection to the workers within the transportation industry by incorporating to Bill C-18 the provisions of the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refresh the memory of some of our colleagues on this major legislation which was adopted by Parliament in May 1982. The purpose of this legislation, which comes under the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is to extend protection through income support to some workers who have been permanently laid off by industries designated by the federal government, who are no longer entitled to collect unemployment insurance benefits and who have no employment outlook. These last resort benefits, authorized by the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act, are aimed at people who have been laid off and who, because of their age or particular qualifications, could not avail themselves of the manpower placement programs and who experience therefore tremendous adjustment problems.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that many railway and other Canadian transportation employees who worked for 20, 25, 30 or even 35 years in the industry will soon loose their jobs as a result of this deregulation process.

If in its great wisdom, the Government could in the past offer benefits to laid off workers of designated industries until they reached the age of 65 so they would not rely entirely on welfare assistance, if the Government could offer such a useful program to textile, shoe, and mine workers in many areas of Canada, I think that it would only be fair to offer a similar treatment to transportation workers because these Government measures will undoubtedly create absolute chaos for many experienced workers.

If, for example, such a program had been set up for the workers at the CN shops in Moncton, we would not see as we do now, a Conservative member of Parliament being contradicted by his own Government after having declared that the Minister of Transport abdicated his responsibilities by allowing the Crown Corporation to go ahead and lay off many good workers from Moncton who spent many years working for the government. Well, these adjustment benefits have been in existence for several years and are helping many Canadians. In reality, these adjustment benefits account for about 60 per cent of the average weekly insurable earnings, based generally on the last 20 weeks of employment preceding the lay-off. These benefits are entirely geared to the inflation rate and are paid until the beneficiary finds a job or reaches the age of 65.

I therefore submit that the Conservative gouvernment has a responsibility towards all these workers that could be laid-off in the transport industry. The amendement I had moved which would have made it possible for these workers to take advantage of this program was of course rejected by the government. Yet, I think that sooner or later, in view of the slump that this bad legislation will eventually create, the government will have to intervene and I think that this program, however imperfect, could meet to a large degree some of the pressing needs of these workers who will be faced with unemployment and no job opportunities.

Another striking deficiency of Bill C-18 is the fact that it includes no qualification tying the enforcement of the legislation to the aims of regional development. We are now told at the very most that the commercial viability of transport services is to be weighed against the aims of regional economic development. It is an amendment which I introduced in the Committee on Transport, amendment that was reintroduced as such by my colleague the Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) and that was also introduced at the same time in the Committee on Transport. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot but be pleased to see that the amendment was accepted. However, while I was pleased to have my amendment approved by the government, I must indicate that I find it insufficient. The amendment is not strong enough to compel the government and its officials to take regional development into account when decisions are made and transport policies are drawn up.

Mr. Speaker, history has clearly shown us that if we want an efficient regional development policy, all federal departments must take it into account. If the aims of regional development are only weighed against the commercial viability of transport services, there is no guarantee. It is too vague, too general for a minister or his officials to take that into consideration. The aims of regional development must prevail over commercial interests when both are in conflict. Such was the view of several witnesses which were heard when the Standing Committee on Transport visited the different regions in Canada. Indeed, that opinion was almost unanimously held in the Atlantic provinces. For example, let me tell you what the Leader of the Official Opposition in New Brunswick and very soon the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Frank McKenna said in Moncton on April 1 last and I quote:

• (1950)

[English]

It is essential that Bill C-18 be amended to ensure that economic development objectives will take precedence over commercial viability when the two objectives conflict.

There is bi-partisan agreement across the Maritimes on this fundamental point. In its present form, Bill C-18 does not offer this assurance. It is not acceptable to Maritimers. It is not acceptable to New Brunswickers.

The inclusion of this clause will reaffirm transportation as an important instrument of economic development.

It will clearly indicate that the federal Government will not allow commercial viability to be the sole determinate in any decision affecting the transportation service.

As it now stands, Bill C-18 stresses the right of the market place to regulate itself through competition. The point of the included clause will be to insist that the transportation services essential for our economic development will not be endangered by the more competitive atmosphere.

It will ensure that we will continue to enjoy full access to these services even if they cannot prove commercially viable. It will ensure that we are recognized as equal Canadians even though we do not live in central Canada.

[Translation]

One could say that this is a Liberal speaking and playing politics but, Mr. Speaker, it is not only the Leader of the Opposition in New Brunswick who said that but also the present Premier who appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport on April 1 last and said:

• (2000)

[English]

The federal government's reluctance to date to incorporate into Bill C-18 satisfactory protection against the possible downside effects of the proposed legislation has increased the province's concern regarding the potential negative impacts of the new act on transportation services in New Brunswick, and in the Maritime provinces in general.

This is why New Brunswick is adamant that paragraph 3(1)(d) of Bill C-18, recognizing transportation as a key to regional economic development, be expanded to include the statement that regional economic development objectives will take precedence over commercial viability objectives when the two are in conflict.

[Translation]

On of the best briefs presented to the Committee on Transport was that of the Harmon Corporation of Stephenville, Newfoundland. This is what they had to say:

[English]

Section 3 of Bill C-18 contains the statement of policy governing the whole of the proposed legislation. The Section accentuates commercial viability. In subsection (d) it states that transportation is a key to regional economic development. Sprinkled throughout the bill are provisions relating to the maintenance of essential rail and air services, however, it is not a positive commitment to foster economic development. There is no evidence of a positive commitment whereby regional economic development is given greater status than commercial viability.

It was a condition precedent to British Columbia joining Confederation that a railway be built through the mountains.

It was a condition precedent in the Terms of Union with Canada that a ferry and rail link be continued between Newfoundland and Canada. One of the key reasons for these conditions was economic development.

The Canadian Premiers, in 1985, met in St. John's, Newfoundland and stated that they desire economic development objectives to have supremacy over the objective of commercial viability where the two conflict.

It is therefore the position of Harmon Corporation, in accordance with its mandate in the public statement of Canada's provincial Premiers that Section 3, subsection (d) of Bill C-18 be amended to read as follows:

"(d) Transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development and where commercial viability objectives conflict with regional economic development objectives the latter objectives shall prevail."

• (2010)

[Translation]

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, all those evidences should have moved the minister of Transport and touched the Conservative members sitting on the Transport Committee, because I want to underline that the governments of Nova-Scotia, Prince Edward Island and that of New Brunswick which I just mentioned, as well as several other witnesses, all approved that amendment to the Bill. They wanted that section to be amended. They clearly wanted a firm undertaking that regional development would be preserved. Such a position had also been expressed by the Transport Commission of the Atlantic Provinces and by the Atlantic section of Transport 2000. I repeat, all those parties wanted and still want that regional development objectives to prevail over the commercial viability whenever the two are in conflict.

We think as Liberals that the priorities and understandings concerning regional development should never be jeopardized by transport policies that do not take into account the special needs of the most distant, the most remote regions of this country.

In the absence of such a declaration in the act, it is clear that the impact on regional development will be negative, because until now it is through regulations that we could alleviate a number of difficulties linked to regional economic development.

In a framework devoid of any transport regulation, Government intervention no longer will be possible. The Conservative Government would not recognize the importance of regional economic development. Such a position is totally unacceptable in our view, and points to a lack of awareness of the fact that Canada is a nation with a population that is relatively sparce and scattered over the second largest country in the world.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend my colleague the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), who worked very hard to put the case submitted by all Maritime representatives, who himself moved a very important amendment that incorporated almost word for word the agreement reached between the then Minister of Transport (Mr. Otto Lang) and the Maritime Premiers after Mr. Lang submitted a draft that met the aspirations and hopes of Maritime representatives and was committed to include in the National Transportation Act, when that act would be amended, the very clause we attempted to have accepted by this Government, and that we Liberals, had we been in Government and had we put the legislation forward, would have enacted.

I must say that the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent did everything to convince his Conservative colleagues on the Committee on Transport to accept his amendment that met the expections of Atlantic witnesses who appeared before us. It was a splendid fight, but unfortunately Conservative Members closed their eyes, pinched their noses and blindly followed the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary by rejecting the motion. Nobody was more embarrassed than the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—

An Hon. Member: —Annapolis Valley—Hants!

Mr. Ouellet: —Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), Mr. Speaker, who as Chairman could of course not vote, but probably was at a pain when he called the vote and saw his colleagues, especially the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin), the Committee Vice-Chaiman, vote against such an important move to Canada's regional development. But we now realize why the Government refused that amendement. It is because the Government does not believe in regional development. As we just found out, the Minister in charge of Regional Development is being stripped of everything. Like a strip-teaser, he is stripped of one responsibility after another. Very soon he will be stark naked, without any power to look after the interests of Canadian regions. Not only is the Conservative Government rejecting an amendment that would protect regional development interests under the transportation legislation, but it is also dismantling the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion which had been set up in the best interests of Canada and specially for the prosperity of the regions of Canada. We cannot help become indignant when we see this Government destroy what was built by the Hon. Jean Marchand and created out of a deep concern for social justice to allow Canadians wherever they live to share in Canada's prosperity. And the main mandate of the regional development department is to ensure that this prosperity enjoyed by major urban centres of Canada and some wealthy areas of the country be spread around in the interest of everybody, in all regions of Canada.

I say this: the Government has rejected our amendment. That is reason enough for us to vote against Bill C-18, because a fundamental pillar of the Canadian economy is missing, that is the recognition of an economic development opportunity for all Canadians who live outside the big cities of Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary and Edmonton.

Outside those large cities, there are people who are entitled to an opportunity to work and prosper, and we have tried to amend the legislation. The Government did not go along. We will vote against the bill because we believe it is totally unacceptable under the circumstances.

I wish to revert to the suggestion made repeatedly by the Minister of Transport to the effect that this legislation is the result of successful consultations with the provinces. Such a statement is absolutely unfounded. We know how deeply the Premiers of the Maritime provinces are disappointed and aggravated by this lack of understanding on the part of the Minister of Transport. But let me tell you a little about the reaction of the Quebec Minister of Transport on Bill C-18.

As free trade negotiations are underway between Canada and a partner which spares us no blow, what with restrictions on lumber, pork, potash, etc., how can we justifiably give free access to our railway system without any counterpart? This is what the Quebec Minister of Transport, Mr. Marc-Yvan Côté, was asking his Federal counterpart, Mr. John Crosbie, when he submitted a paper outlining the official position of the province of Quebec with respect to Bill C-18, a Bill to redraft the National Transportation Act.

We should remember that under this Bill, a shipper may enter an agreement with a company which does not serve his area, including a U.S. company, for the purpose of transporting his goods. The province of Quebec as well as several western provinces have seriously questioned the relevance of such a concession, for it is obvious that, although those shippers might benefit from it in the short term, it might have a negative impact on the economy in the long run.

The submission sent by Minister Yvan Côté to Mr. Crosbie was drafted in line with a decision of the Cabinet, and therefore represents the official position of Quebec on this matter. Here is a brief outline of some of the amendments to Bill C-18 suggested in that memorandum:

Specifying the powers of the Governor General in Council and providing for early consultations with the provinces on matters of concern to those provinces.

Extending the funding provisions for modal conversion to include the rehabilitation of lines that may be taken over by other companies.

Establishing at net salvage value the sale price of businesses and lines abandoned by a railway company when an interested party is willing to take over.

Including in the branch line grant mechanisms some form of incentive for businesses to try and upgrade their revenues and services.

Provide for the preservation of unused branch lines for five years, with a possible further delay as required.

Giving provinces which may subsidize or take over services which are about to be abandoned an assurance that they will be provided with the cost and market data of railway companies.

Granting provinces a right of appeal to the Governor in Council with respect to maintaining services subsidized for reasons of public interest.

Establishing a consultation process with the provinces with respect to the reciprocal agreements on international air transportation.

Finally, use accessibility rather than geographic criteria to identify protected areas in the North under air regulations.

Mr. Speaker, not only the federal Minister of Transports has not studied carefully the representations from his provincial colleague, or taken them into consideration, but he has not accepted a single recommandation from the Quebec Minister of Transport. Nevertheless, the federal Minister would have us believe that he has the support of the provinces to proceed with his Bill. He does not. Provincial Premiers are very upset by the attitude of the Minister.

One of the biggest aberrations of this Bill deals with the competitive line rates. I do not know whether people watching us understand what is involved in this Bill C-18, which is divided in several parts. The first one deals with the new National Transportation Agency; the second with air transportation, about which I was talking just now; the third part is about railway transportation and includes a section about railway lines which sets out various terms and conditions for the railway companies regarding their lines. A fourth part concerns motor vehicle transport, and has a section on trucking, although there is a separate Bill C-19 also about motor vehicle transport. The fifth part is about northern marine resupply services, the sixth about commodity pipelines, the seventh about acquisitions of Canadian transportation undertakings. The last part contains a series of general and transitional provisions and related and consequential amendments.

One of the most complex and difficult sections in this Bill is the one about railways and the new constraints the Government has decided to impose on them. Whereas, on one hand, he recommends a comprehensive deregulation of air, road and sea transportation industries, he says he wants to deregulate rail transportation but at the same time, he is imposing conditions and commitments on both Canadian railways, which is hard to believe. It is for good reason that Minister Côté referred earlier to the free trade negotiations with the Americans when he said: You are about to give everything to the Americans in the transportation area without asking for anything in return. In particular, it is true for rail transportation. American railways will enjoy benefits that their Canadian counterparts will not have. In order to please a few major shippers, the Government is jeopardizing the future of both Canadian railways, but to whose benefit? To the benefit of American railways and trucking companies that will soon be under U.S. control.

One of the worst nonsense which we heard of is the section on competitive line prices. An American expert, Mr. Dempsey, has appeared before the Committee on Transport, and what he had to say is very significant. I will quote him because this will enlighten us about the lack of concern and the recklessness of the Minister, who was fully at the mercy of a few officials of the Department of Transport who had decided to play a dirty trick on the railways. And if, on one hand, the Liberal Party has no objection and indeed supports this process, namely that we should enable major Canadian shippers to have better prices, we are not prepared on the other hand to go as far as undermining at the same time the very viability of railway companies. As I said in the second reading debate, some officials of the Department of Transport are vengeful or have a hidden agenda. They want to hurt railways, and they used this legislation on deregulation to substantially undermine their viability and prosperity. This is entirely unacceptable, I find it hard to believe that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has not been perceptive, brave or competent enough to see what was happening. Mr. Dempsey said the following:

• (2020)

[English]

We do not have anything in the United States comparable, as you know, to your proposed competitive line rates. It might be or it might not be and I pass no value judgment on it—

He is an American citizen who obviously does not want to put his nose into Canadian activities. The President of the United States and some Congressmen are not following his example, and they should. Indeed, sometimes we wonder who is running this country, whether it is the President of the United States or the Prime Minister of Canada. However, he said:

It might be or it might not be and I pass no value judgment on it, a good thing to have a rail system in the United States that is like the interstate highway system. It might be a good thing to have railroads compete with one another like supermarkets do. All that I can say about it, without passing a value judgment, is that it would wreck the system in the United States, it would just wreck it, that is all.

He is one of the authorities in the United States who is telling us that competitive line rates in the U.S. would wreck the system.

However, the Minister of Transport of Canada joyfully goes ahead with the competitive line rates idea and imposes it upon Canadian railway companies. It is absolutely unacceptable.

CN, which is a Crown corporation under the umbrella of the Minister of Transport, despite the obvious displeasure of the Minister, had the courage to say the following about competitive line rates:

Nowhere in the world is the arrangement of physical access to one railway's line from another forced by legislation.

Some of us have called the provision a confiscation of assets, because our railways, respectively, have spent millions upon millions in building roadbeds, tunnels, bridges and other infrastructures to win freight and intermodal customers.

Others refer to the idea as turning the railways into a communal right of way over which anyone could move without guaranteed proper recompense to the owner.

Certainly the view of CN is shared by CP. The idea of competitive line rates is unprecedented; nowhere has it been done. As Mr. Dempsey said, it only means one thing: it means big, big trouble for Canadian railways.

We are wondering why the Government wants to do it. The Canadian Industrial Transportation League has been following the testimony, advocating the passage of the Bill without amendment, urging us to speed up the process, and advocating the change. Obviously the league had the ear of the Minister much more than the workers and the companies. Here is what the league had to say about it:

> The CITL believes that competitive joint line rates will only be used as an exceptional safeguard procedure for the following reasons: Imagine yourself a shipper who is local to one Canadian railway after Bill C-18 has become enacted. If you wished to apply for competitive line rates, you would have to go through a formal legal proceeding which might take several months, whereby the specific CLR which you would pay would be argued before the National Transportation Agency, as well as whether your designated routing was "cost effective" or to the "nearest" interchange, et cetera.
> Once you have endured these additional legal expenses and delays to obtain your competitive line rate, the merchandise might be further delayed by a day or more per shipment due to the local railway's resistance in adjusting their work schedules for an hostile interchange with the competing railway which was obtaining the long haul.

I did not invent these words. These were the words submitted to us on April 3 by the Canadian Industrial Transportation League.

On one hand, the railways do not want it and, on the other hand, those who might benefit from it are saying that it is unworkable, too costly, and unproductive.

Why on earth is the Minister of Transport insisting upon bringing in legislation with measures that are not satisfactory to anyone? I submit that the Minister, who unfortunately has not been very studious, to say the least, about Bill C-18, did not know what he was doing and what he was pushing. I also believe that he has been badly influenced and misled by some of his officials in the Department of Transport who wanted to get at the railway companies. Again this is an aspect of the legislation which is terribly bad.

[Translation]

This policy, by substantially reducing the revenue of railroads, will provoke abandonment of many branch lines in Canada. I must say that, in this regard, both our railroad companies, that is the CNR and the Canadian Pacific, were very frank with the members of the parliamentary committee. When they appeared before us and were asked this question, they replied quite honestly that, in the case of the Canadian Pacific, over one third of existing lines would be abandoned. Even more, the CNR will abandon half its lines. There is no doubt that the railway companies have no other option than to abandon branch lines throughout Canada.

The Hon. Member for Jonquière—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): The most beautiful riding in Canada!

Mr. Ouellet: The Hon. Member from Lac-Saint-Jean in Quebec says it is the most beautiful riding in Canada. Even though he interrupts me constantly—

Mr. Robichaud: He thinks he is a Minister.

Mr. Ouellet: —he will probably pay attention to what I am about to tell him—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): It will be the third time you say it.

Mr. Robichaud: Not at all. You are not listening.

Mr. Ouellet: —because the documents clearly show that the Canadian National in particular is about to abandon important services. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) that he should take notes and have enough courage to take part in this debate later on, because the only thing he seems to be warming up right now is his backside, not his brain.

The Department of Transport in the province of Québec contemplates a whole string of actions to counter this now almost irrevocable decision by the CN. Indeed, according to the document made public by the Quebec Minister of Transport, Mr. Côté, many applications are anticipated from the CP for the abandonment of the following subdivisions, that is the Chaudière Line (Valley-Jonction to Lac-Frontière) and the Tring Line (Tring-Jonction to Courcelles). And as for the CP, Chandler Line (Sainte-Adélaïde to Gaspé), Taschereau Line (Cochrane to La Sarre and Miquelon to Chapais), in the Danville area, Charny to Plessisville Line, and in the Val-D'Or area, Senneterre to Rouyn Line are all at stake.

I recognize that the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien) has been the only Conservative member to make active and sound representations for the sake of his own region, so that Val-D'Or would not be deprived of its Senneterre to Rouyn line. And because of his representations, we have heard evidence from representatives in the Abitibi region who appeared before the Transport Committee in an effort to have some amendments made so as to protect concerned regions from those unilateral abandonments of railways by the CN.

Some colleagues in the Opposition are tempting me with a sandwich in order to make me conclude now. I feed myself with all those documents we have been handed in the transportation committee. They contain a wealth of good sense and ideas on how to amend this piece of legislation.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of Transport is not with us now. He did not show up often neither in the committe when we considered this bill. He could have found food for thought in all those briefs submitted by various people and we could have made use of them to make this bill acceptable. Unfortunately, because the Minister of Transport was so uncompromising, so eager to sabotage the transportation sector in Canada, none of those briefs have been considered and accepted. Now, the Department of Transport of Quebec is protesting against those abandonment orders at a time when the Federal Government itself admits that the present system is obsolete by proposing a reform of the corresponding economic regulations.

In all those instances, the track could be dismantled, and it would then be very costly to put it back in place. In the case of the above-mentioned CN subdivisions, the request concerns a section of transit line which would then become sidings and which would be less useful for inter-regional transport. Moreover, the great flexibility given to railways in this regard could lead to requests for the abandonment of lines which are presumed viable now.

In this respect, the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please!

• (2030)

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was just wondering if my friend opposite would like to put in his order for breakfast because we are having bacon and eggs brought in. I wondered if he wanted his eggs over easy or straight up.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the kindness of the Parliamentary Secretary who allowed me to take a few seconds' rest to continue with more enthusiasm to criticize this bad Government legislation.

I was quoting from a memorandum prepared by the Governmment of Quebec—

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray).

[English]

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if my hon. colleague from Papineau could give some indication to the House of the length of time he will be speaking. What he has been saying we spent the last 16 years living and I wonder if he intends to go for another 16 years.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that on third reading the spokesman for the Official Opposition has unlimited time. Considering that the Government wants to speed up things and has imposed time limits, we were prevented from discussing properly a series of amendments we would have liked to introduce, we had to vote without debate on a number of significant amendments introduced at the report stage. Since debate on third reading will be limited to four hours, I feel perfectly free to speak for as long as I wish.

Moreover, I am not really speaking for myself, I am merely speaking for the thousands of Canadians who made representations to the Standing Committee on Transports and were ignored by the Government. I am sure that they are glad to see that, through me, their objections will be on the official record of proceedings of the House of Commons Debates.

I was talking about a document put out by the Quebec Government which says, and I quote:

"A leaked internal document from the CNR, about ceasing all marketing efforts for about 1,600 kilometers of lines in the St. Lawrence area, has the Quebec Minister of Transports worried and he is asking the federal Minister of Transports to act to prevent the CNR from destroying a rail system which is very useful to Quebec."

It is essential, before these transport infrastuctures are finally withdrawn from service, that all parties involved have access to a range of alternative services better suited to the present needs of the economy. This underscores the need for an abandonment policy flexible enough to take into account the different requirements of the various regions of Canada.

Obviously, this Government which is tightening the budgets of its Crown Corporations and is litterally starving a company such as the CN will do nothing to convince it not to abandon some of its branch lines.

So, it must be recognized that in spite of our efforts and the amendments we have presented, the Government decided to go ahead. Our railways will have problems because American railways and trucking companies will take a large share of the Canadian market, and all the Government has to say is this: You are going to incur losses, but if you wish, you will be allowed to abandon some lines in order to save on maintenance costs.

This is a short-sighted policy which is indeed contrary to the national interest and which is not only going to impede regional development and disadvantage the most remote areas of the country, but also completely strangle Canadian railways in the short or medium term.

Furthermore, this is a bad and deficient legislation because this Government refused to establish clear accessibility standards for the disabled in the National Transportation Act.

We have witnessed some kind of a tragi-comedy in the Transport Committee when the time come to vote on the amendments that our party moved—there was also one amendment from the NDP—relating to the legitimate requests of the associations for the disabled.

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister felt suddenly in a minority position because a few tender hearted Tories were ready to support our amendments, which would have allowed us to amend Bill C-18 as requested by the groups representing the disabled.

At the last minute, the Parliamentary Secretary said: No, do not vote now, I would first like to consult with the Department's officials and legal advisors to make sure that this amendment is in order and meets the requirements of the Justice Department.

Instead of being passed in the morning, the amendment was deferred to the afternoon sitting, when the Parliamentary Secretary came back with a new wording which was, I must admit, more atuned to some of the concerns expressed by the associations of handicapped people, although it did not go exactly as far as a legislation on transportation services accessibility standards for handicapped persons. Consequently, we were satisfied with the amendment because it was better than nothing, although the handicapped certainly expected more than that. Of course, we agreed to the amendment in the afternoon, and the Conservative Members, who felt good about it, voted in favour.

Since then, we have received a letter-

• (2040)

[English]

We have just received a letter from the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped. They said that Bill C-18 was coming back to the House for third reading and they wrote to request that we move further amendments which will permit the enactment and enforcement of accessibility standards. That is what we were ready to do in the morning. The amendment would have been accepted in the morning except at the last minute the Parliamentary Secretary saved the day for the Minister and the Government and said "do not vote immediately, wait until the afternoon". We have an amendment which has been accepted, but it is imperfect. The Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped is now telling us that what we did is far short of what they were expecting. They are absolutely right.

The letter goes on to say that these standards have been under development since 1983. They are concerned that it may be many years before the Act is open again. They say now is the ideal time to make legislative provisions for standards which are nearing completion. The Minister has been informed through the chairperson of the Transportation for the Disabled Implementation Committee of its support for these amendments. They ask that we contact the Minister and indicate our support for this objective and agree to work in a co-operative fashion to develop a mutually acceptable set of amendments.

Last night, in the spirit of co-operation, I rose in the House to indicate to the Parliamentary Secretary that if he wanted to bring in the amendments referred to in this letter, we would accommodate the Government and allow it to implement the change requested. The Parliamentary Secretary said no. He refused the offer of the Liberal Party, seconded by the NDP. If the Government had wanted to do so, with the help and support of the two opposition Parties, it could have amended the Act to favour the handicapped.

They also refer to an enclosed letter to Transport Canada official Jim Miller which makes clear that these amendments were under active consideration by the Minister. The Minister's executive assistant, and they even give his phone number, (613)-996-7501, indicated the Minister was still hoping for an all-Party agreement which would allow for this insertion prior to third reading. It said that senior officials in Transport Canada support the intent of the amendment and the Minister is known to be personally supportive.

Either the Parliamentary Secretary did not know what he was talking about last night, or the executive assistant to the Minister has misled the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped. It is one or the other. According to this letter and the Minister's executive assistant, he was ready to accept the amendment. In fact, he is supposed to have been studying these amendments since 1983. Surely they should be ready to be implemented now.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): 1983?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes. We have no difficulty in saying that the Liberal Government was ready to implement in legislation amendments that would guarantee appropriate enforcement of accessible standards for the handicapped.

I do not think the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary, or the Government have come clean with the handicapped on this issue. I think it is a shame. This is a major and regrettable flaw in the legislation and there is no doubt that the handicapped have been, to say the least, short-circuited by officials or the Minister's staff. That is not the way to treat the handicapped and I regret it very much.

To conclude, I would like to refer to the new agency created under Bill C-18 to replace the Canadian Transport Commission. It has been said and repeated time and again that this new agency will not enjoy the same authority and independence as the former CTC. The latter had an exceptional expertise and could count on conscientious and dedicated employees and commissioners who looked after the interests of transportation in Canada.

On behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal party, I want to thank all those who worked for many years at the Canadian Transport Commission and who well served their country. I must say that I deeply regret that the Government, in its desire to dismantle, to change and to rebuild everything, has decided to abolish the Canadian Transport Commission. Clearly, the Conservative Government could have made a few changes in the best interests of orderly operations at the Canadian Transport Commission. But there was absolutely no need to abolish the Commission to meet their new need for deregulation. There was a research team, an outstanding pool of expertise which could have carried on and be quite useful to the new National Transportation Agency. However the Conservatives wanted to start again from scratch,they wanted to start afresh, they wanted to do everything over again and consequently they abolished an organization which in my view has played an important and useful role in the transport sector in Canada.

I hope that several of the employees and even some of the present members of the Commission will be transferred to the new National Transportation Agency.

I thank the Parliamentary Secretary who on behalf of the government agreed, following my request last evening, to introduce an amendment which to some extent will protect the employees of the Canadian Transportation Agency.

As I said yesterday, at the very last minute, before the proceedings of the Committee on Transport ended, the legal adviser of the Department of Transport introduced an amendment to clause 273 of the bill which, with all the adjustments, became section 272. Moreover, he added a subsection which was liable to frighten greatly the employees of that agency. I refer specifically to section 272 to which was added at the very last minute that clause which stated: Exclusion from compensation. The persons appointed as Members of the former authority, the former Canadian Transport Commission, are in no way entitled to claim or receive compensation for damages, indemnity or any other form of indemnification from Her Majesty in right of Canada nor her agents by reason of the abolition of their functions under subsection 9 and under this Act, except for any indemnification the Governor in Council may authorize or provide for by order in council.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this was much more than a minor technical amendment, it was purely and simply carte blanche for the Government to fire outright people who, in good faith, a few years ago, three or four or five years ago accepted to leave their jobs or their communities and come to Ottawa to work for the Canadian Transport Commission and take a position for a specified period of time.

Mr. Robichaud: —to work for Canadians.

Mr. Ouellet: And as my colleague for Westmorland—Kent suggests, to work for Canadians.

Clearly, that amendment allowed the Government to decide the next day that a Member of the Commission was fired, he had to go, because the Commission no longer existed, and he was stripped of everything he became entitled to when he accepted that appointment.

This is a kind of retroactive legislation that should not be done, and if there is something that is ignominious it is to pass a retroactive legislation that strips individuals from rights and privileges that were freely and properly conveyed to them. I commend and I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for accepting that we add subclause 11 to clause 272 of Bill C-18, thereby inserting an exception to subclause 10, the preceding paragraph, which states that notwithstanding subsection 10:

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize or provide relief of a form described in that subsection.

I therefore take for granted that this is an indication of magnanimity from the Government. I am very grateful to the Parliamentary Secretary for having very rapidly corrected the situation, and I hope that good intention that is now inserted in the act will be reflected in concrete steps, appropriate, fair and proper settlements for all those who are now employed by the Canadian Transport Commission and who, because that Commission is abolished, will not be unfairly and rudely treated by the Government.

In conclusion, let me say that the Liberal Party not only has reservations on Bill C-18 and that desire for quick deregulation, but is also concerned about what this Government will want to do with its Crown Corporations. We also believe that regional development is a major component of any transportation policy, that transportation in Canada must be complemented by Crown Corporations. We cannot leave Canadian transportation in the hands of private enterprise alone.

That is why the Liberal Party has always believed in the usefulness of such Crown corporations as the CN, Air Canada and VIA Rail. We are concerned about this desire to privatize at any cost which seem to haunt the minds of Tory ministers.

One of the finest success stories in the area of Crown corporations is Air Canada. When it marked its 50th Anniversary, the Liberal Party emphasized the important role played by this Crown corporation. Together with my colleagues the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) and the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (M. Tobin), we prepared a press release to demonstrate that we continued to believe in the important and crucial role played by this Crown corporation in the development of our country, a role which we felt it should continue to play, especially in the light of deregulation.

It was as a response to that persistent rumour to the effect that the Tory government was about to privatize Air Canada that my colleague, our party's critic in the area of privatization, and my other colleague, who is associate critic in the area of transportation, and I prepared this document and insisted on emphasizing the raison d'être of Air Canada, our national carrier.

From the time it was established to this day, Air Canada has provided the travelling public with transportation services from sea to sea, while reflecting the federal government's commitment to the principles of bilingualism, employment equity and regional procurement policy.

A privatized Air Canada would no longer pursue the same objectives and there would be a definite danger of certain routes and regions being abondoned, because they are not so profitable as some others.

Henceforth, the objective of a universally accessible air passenger transportation service, for which Trans-Canada lines were first created, would become out of reach.

We wanted to emphasize that Air Canada has played a significant role in the past and that it will have to play a similar one in the context of deregulation. For as the Tory government is about to adopt Bill C-18, which will bring about the complete deregulation of the air transportation industry, we must wonder what is the wisdom and the need at this time to privatize Air Canada.

We suggest that Air Canada is a profitable and well administered corporation. It was awarded in the past on several occasions a number of international prizes. We believe that this Crown corporation, especially in view of the great concentration which seems now to happen in the air transportation industry, ever since the government implemented its deregulation program—it is becoming more than ever essential for the Government to retain, through its own Crown corporation, a vehicle to provide services, maintain and even further develop services in some regions which would be completely abondoned by the private sector which would concentrate its operations in the most lucrative centers in the central regions of Canada where the costs of operation are lower and which are more densely populated.

I said a moment ago that Canada is a country with a small population scattered over an immense territory. Air transportation is therefore a necessity for many Canadians, and not only for travelers but also to move goods to people who need them in remote areas. Air Canada, a Crown corporation, is essential in the new context of deregulation, because the Government will have a company to provide transportation services to those remote areas.

Of course, this may not be the opinion of the Governement and of the Conservative Party. Tories want to privatize all Crown corporations. The Governement does not believe in regional development. It is not aware of all those essential services remote areas need.

That is why we fear that Air Canada will be sacrified for the sake of deregulation and privatization.

I will conclude with a word of warning. The battle the Minister had to fight to get Bill C-18 through is nothing compared to what he should expect if he ever tries to privatize Air Canada. We are going to oppose such an initiative systematically and relentlessly, because we think that public interest dictates that we keep this Crown corporation.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of listening to my friend, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), for some two hours. He has been very successful in turning off every television set on the parliamentary channel. I simply want to ask if he intends to make us numb on both ends in this exercise he is going through?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have had the opportunity to give not only my point of view, but also the point of view of all my colleagues in the Liberal caucus, and to say that we are deeply concerned with this hectic, hasty and thoughtless deregulation process by the Conservative Government.

In the few moments which I have been able to use, I have not only given the views of the Liberal caucus, but also acted as the spokesperson for countless Canadians who do not approve of that decision by the Government, and in particular thousands of Canadian workers in the transportation sector who feel that their jobs are threatened by Bill C-18. I have been very pleased to be able to put that disagreement on the record on their behalf, for the Government has proceeded with such haste, has refused to let the Parliamentary Committee travel to all those areas of the country, all the cities, all the villages which requested hearings of the Transport Committee, which would have liked the Committee to visit them and hear their views.

I wish Members from both sides of the House had been able to travel throughout the country to listen to what the people have to say about this Bill. Since that was not possible, I have tried tonight in their name to exercise the privilege of an Opposition Member who feels frustrated, thwarted, and stifled by this Government which has restricted the time for this debate, I have tried at least, as I said, to convey the disagreement not just of one person, but of a very large number of Canadians throughout the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, now that we have heard all the speeches by the Members of the NDP and the Official Opposition, and I am thinking of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), I think we can say that today in the House, and I say this as a junior Member of Parliament who was elected in 1984, that two hours of the precious time of Canadians have been wasted, listening to the foolishness we have just heard from the Liberal Party. Mr. Speaker, as politicians from every part of this country, we feel this is a disgrace.

We have had some very serious messages from NDP Members who told us they were against the Bill and against deregulation.

As usual, the Liberal Party told us it was for but then again it was against. And it took the Hon. Member two and a half hours to put his case.

Mr. Speaker, as a very good Conserative, I would like to take at least five or six minutes to give you some idea of what the Government, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and our Transport Committee have been doing.

• (2110)

For the people who have been listening this afternoon, I think it is important that we understand what has been going on for 20 years. We listened to the Official Opposition for the 16 years when it formed the Government. It did absolutely nothing for our transportation sector. We have taken charge now and it is important for all Canadians, carriers, users and consumers, to know the impact of Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. My Hon. Colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), said we were bullying through the Bill. There was a three-year Royal Commission in 1961. The former Liberal Government had 16 years to do something about that and it did nothing.

On February 21, 1985, the then Minister of Transport for the Conservative Government stated the Government's objectives regarding economic regulatory reform. When we talk about economic regulatory reform in transportation, there should be no fear placed in the hearts and minds of Canadians because of a couple of Opposition Parties which do not believe that we should advance and develop in our country. After extensive consultations with the former Minister of Transport and our present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), we set up a committee and travelled across the country with our Freedom to Move.

[Translation]

Aller sans entraves, in French. The committee was set up in July 1985. We consulted the Canadian people across the country, from East to West.

[English]

I come from the riding of Bonaventure—Îles—de-la-Madeleine and I know the importance of transportation to our economic development, and it will become even more important to Canadians with Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. In the past we have always gone with the carriers, and I allude to the reference made by the Hon. Member for for Papineau in his hour and 45 minute speech. He was saying the lines from—

[Translation]

—Chandler to Ste. Adelaïde in Gaspé were closing. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. As vice-chairman of the Committee on Transport, I spoke on that matter and CN has given a written in a letter, guarantee, that the line would remain open for us. What the Hon. Member says is false, Mr. Speaker. For him to spread false rumours is not doing Canadian men and women any good.

[English]

Our transport committee travelled in May of 1986 to the North. You know as well as I, Mr. Speaker, that transportation in our great North is a problem because of our isolated regions. I come from an isolated region. That problem is covered in our Bill. The Minister of Transport and all Members of the Government will continue the commitment we as Conservatives made in 1984 to the Canadian population. We are not only interested in talking in the House of Commons. We want to take action, and we are doing so.

On November 4, 1986, after we had our discussion in committee on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, we heard from other witnesses who came to Ottawa. We remodified our Bill. We listened to Canadians from the West Coast and the East Coast. This Bill is made in Canada.

It makes me angry when I, a Member who spent 16 years on the government side, stands up and uses a reference from the United States. We looked at how deregulation has affected the United States and we have a made in Canada policy for us, and that is important for all Canadians.

The over-all objective, as summarized in Clause 3 of Bill C-18, is clear. The objective is to create the conditions necessary for a safe, adequate, effective and efficient transportation system which best serves the needs of shippers and travellers. That is what we will do with this legislation. In total, the various transportation Bills will reform the economic and safety regulation of each and every mode of transportation within the federal jurisdiction. They will remove obstacles to economic growth and make the system safer for everyone. They will put Canadians in a position to meet the challenges of the late 1980s and the 1990s. We will be competitive.

I would like to briefly mention four points with regard to Bill C-18 and Bill C-19.

[Translation]

The first concerns mostly safety. The matter has been raised several times in committee and even here in the House. What I want to say has been said before by our Minister of Transport and also by his predecessor. There is no question that safety will never be neglected, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport said that safety is and will remain the first concern of our Government. That commitment was set forth in our national transport policy, in clause 3 of the Bill, and it is reiterated every time we talk about transportation in Canada.

Allegations that the National Transportation Act will jeopardize air safety are unfounded. For all modes of transport, individuals or corporations applying for a licence will first have to prove the safety of their methods of operation. This is important, Mr. Speaker. The air transport industry has always given the highest priority to safety. Under the new safety regulations, the Government will ensure that this remains a priority concern by requiring any new carrier to implement the training, inspection and application programs of the Government. This remains our priority.

[English]

Point number two is a greater reliance on our market forces. We have spent the last 20 years with absolutely no development in our transportation system. We know that to get to markets we must have an efficient transportation system. Greater reliance on market forces and less reliance on economic regulation is a very important factor. This will lead to more innovation and enterprise and to more competitive transportation services and prices. It will give a fair and level playing field for everyone.

My third point is that widespread consultation has been done and will continue to be done, and we have produced a balanced package of reforms in our legislation. I have already mentioned point number four. A gradual relaxation of regulation enables all concerned to adapt to change with a minimum of dislocation. That is very important because our country is vast and our transportation system must adapt to what we have in 1987, and what we will have in 1990 and the year 2000.

The Minister of Transport, my honourable colleague and friend from St. John's West, in his usual eloquent style has said that it is important for Canadians on all the four points I have mentioned. With the cost of transportation as it is in our country, we must compete. We must have fair prices in the transportation market.

The increased competition between railways which will result from Bill C-18 will have a significant impact on the relationship between shippers and carriers. This impact has implications for the role of the regulatory agency.

Currently, all rail rates are in the public domain, and any shipper may take advantage of them. Under Bill C-18 confidential contracts will be permitted, that is, a shipper will be able to negotiate with a railway for a rate and terms of service unique to his circumstances. We have not seen that in the past. Shippers have been unjustly prejudiced because they have not had fair rates for the transportation of their products. We are addressing that problem.

This new way of doing business may in some instances lead to difficulties between the parties in reaching an agreement. To resolve any such private disputes, Bill C-18 introduces the concept of mediation and final offer arbitration. It is important that the federal Government, with 10 provinces and two Territories, says that it is willing to listen to the people who use our modes of transportation.

If a shipper and carrier are having difficulty reaching agreement on a rate or service conditions, they may jointly request a mediator from the proposed national regulatory agency. The mediator is simply a facilitator of communication between the parties. If the two parties reach a true deadlock, with or without the help of the mediator, the shipper may ask the agency to appoint an arbitrator. Arbitrators will be independent persons knowledgeable in the transportation field.

The arbitration process will be quite straightforward and speedy. That has not been the case in the past. The arbitrator will assess the parties involved and choose one or the other of them. Unless they have otherwise agreed, the parties will be bound by the result for one year.

I could go on to talk about the number of hours that we spent in the Transport Committee. I would not be fair to the committee if I did not pay tribute to its work. As the vice-chairman of the committee, I commend the work of the chairman, the Minister of Transport and the Parliamentary Secretary. To push it to the limit, I even have to mention members of the Opposition in this regard. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, we know where the NDP stand. It is against development. The Liberal Party does not know where it is. I congratulate the people who had a positive input into our committee. I can guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian population, if they have not already been put to sleep by the former speaker from the Liberal Party, an efficient, safe and secure transportation system for Canada under a Progressive Conservative Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his speech, the Hon. Member told us that he was concerned about the regions as he is himself from Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine which could itself be called a remote region. He also tried to suggest that he is concerned about regional development.

My question is very simple. How can he explain to the people of his region that he voted against Motion No. 5 which dealt with regional development, as my motion would have provided for a mechanism to save jobs and protect our transportation system, especially in remote areas? How can he explain to his constituents that he voted against this motion which dealt with regional development?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to reply to the question asked by my colleague for Westmorland—Kent.

As I mentioned earlier, if we look at Bills C-18 and C-19, we find, as the Minister himself and his predecessor have both pointed out, that the transportation system is a key to regional development.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add something. I was elected in 1984 in the constituency of Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine. The situation I inherited on September 4, 1984 in the Gaspé peninsula and my own constituency of Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine included an unemployment rate of 28 per cent and the transportation network of the former Government supported by my colleague for Westmorland—Kent and others.

Within twelve months, the Progressive Conservative Government had lowered unemployment from 28 per cent to 18.4 per cent in Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine. Is that not wonderful, Mr. Speaker? It is. This was not done by myself as a Member of Parliament, but by the Government. The proof is there. We wanted change.

My hon. friend for Westmorland—Kent is saying that I am voting against regional development. His party did nothing for sixteen years. We lowered unemployment by 10 per cent and brought in a new transportation network. Indeed, the old Liberal transportation system is finished. Bills C-18 and C-19 will address the problem, and because of this, there will be regional development in the Maritimes, in Newfoundland, in Eastern Quebec and everywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: I realize now the reason why, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine voted no. He is trying to convince us an 18 per cent plus unemployment rate is acceptable.

So now I can understand what frame of mind that Member was in when he voted. But he did not answer my question, namely, how he would explain to his people why he voted against the motion that dealt with regional development.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I think that at the same time the Hon. Member wants to play with figures. But as I said, during 16 years 28 per cent unemployment rate was acceptable in my area, at home. Never will I say that 18 per cent is acceptable. It will never be as long as I am a Member in this House.

But under the Liberal Government, such was the situation—28 per cent was okay. Because we, in the Gaspe Peninsula, in the Madeleine Islands, we did not count. That is not the situation, Mr. Speaker.

As far as regional development is concerned, since he is mentioning that in respect of transportation, we voted for the clause under which transportation is a key to regional development.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague says that I am against regional development, but past experience shows that his own colleagues have always been against any development.

But, Mr. Speaker, we in the Progressive Conservative Party are in favour of our regional development.

[English]

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) on his excellent address to us concerning Bill C-18 and also the balanced explanation that he has given of the Bill that is before us. What I would like to ask the Hon. Member is this. He will recall that when representatives of CN and CP appeared before the committee, they drew attention to the fact that they felt that their revenue was at risk. Yet, under questioning, we heard their freight would not be at risk, that there would not be any lessening in the amount of goods that would have to be carried because of the two Bills under discussion.

• (2130)

Would the Hon. Member care to comment in terms of whether or not we have been able to strike a reasonable balance between the interests of the shippers and the carriers in the Bill that is before us.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Insofar as the railroads are concerned, the evidence is clear that there will be no lack of volume of traffic. There is always the matter of competition.

This Bill strikes a balance between the interests of the users and the carriers. In the past, our transportation system has always benefited the carrier. Under Bill C-18 and Bill C-19, not only will the carrier benefit, but so too will the shipper and the consumer. This country is made up of not only carriers, Mr. Speaker, but users and consumers, and this Government is ensuring fairness for all sectors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on a question or comment.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, no Member of Parliament from Winnipeg, regardless of the Party to which he or she belongs, could do other than take a vital interest in the question of transportation and the need of the Canadian people for an efficient and safe transportation system.

Transportation is the reason that Winnipeg became an important city. It is a city that has had an historic role in terms of the evolution of road, rail and air traffic in this country. Even before Winnipeg became a city, the lakes and rivers of Manitoba served as important highways for goods moving from eastern Canada to the West.

Winnipeg is home to a large number of CNR, CPR and VIA employees. As well, it is home to a large number of airline employees—and this despite the fact that Air Canada, in the Liberal Government years, saw fit to move its headquarters and most of its main operations from Winnipeg, where it started, to Montreal. As well, Winnipeg is the historic centre of the Canadian grain industry.

We would support any legislation, Mr. Speaker, which enhanced the role of transportation in the West, and in Winnipeg in particular. But in looking at Bill C-18, we see that it fails spectacularly in terms of meeting the coming needs of the Canadian people for the efficient and safe movement of goods and people. Bill C-18 does nothing, Mr. Speaker, to make good on the many promises which have been made concerning rail safety.

I remind Hon. Members that in recent years we have had the disastrous crash at Hinton, Alberta; a major failure of equipment in Mississauga which could have led to a tremendous loss of life; and in the City of Winnipeg, a major spill along the main line of the CPR. This Bill does nothing to stop the pending lay-off of air traffic controllers, 17 of whom work in the Winnipeg area. This Bill does nothing to meet the problems caused by deregulation in the air transport area, problems that are documented almost daily in the United States.

What we see in the U.S. as a result of airline deregulation is lateness, overcrowding, poor service, dangerous flying conditions, and galloping mergers which limit rather than promote competition. Coincidentally, Mr. Speaker, in today's Globe and Mail, the Globe and Mail of June 17, 1987, we have an article headed: "U.S. airlines reeling from deregulation." This is the kind of thing that this Government invites in passing Bill C-18.

Let me just read a couple of sentences from that article. I quote:

> Lineups, sloppy service, flight delays, missed connections and unexplained cancellations have plagued U.S. air passengers since economic deregulation of the airlines went into effect in 1978.

Further along in the article, we read the following:

—there were 1,144 flight delays daily in 1986 and 367,000 delays throughout the year.

Let me ask Members of Parliament who live away from Ottawa and who try to get home on a fairly regular basis how they would like to have the kinds of delays that U.S. passengers experience. They will, Mr. Speaker, experience these types of delays once Bill C-18 comes into force.

Bill C-18, Mr. Speaker, does nothing to meet the concerns of the Canadian railways in terms of opening their traffic to U.S. competition without any reciprocal concessions from U.S. carriers. That is typical of this Government, Mr. Speaker. It bargains when it shouldn't bargain; and when it bargains, it bargains badly when it comes to the interests and concerns of the Canadian people.

This Bill does nothing to meet the concerns of Canadian truckers, who are aware that U.S. deregulation in that sector has brought intense competition for truckload shipments but very little for less than truckload shipments.

Steinbach, which is a few miles from Winnipeg, Mr. Speaker, is headquarters for many of the major trucking companies in Canada. I know the owners and managers of those companies, and no one could be further away from the philosophy of the New Democratic Party than those owners and managers. For the first time in my years in Parliament, Mr. Speaker, I find myself advocating the same position, the same point of view, as the owners and managers of the trucking companies.

The Manitoba Trucking Association, the Ontario Trucking Association, and the Canadian Trucking Association have all voiced opposition and criticism in relation to major clauses of this Bill. The New Democratic Party is opposed to this Bill, Mr. Speaker. We are totally unconvinced of the Progressive Conservative ideology that the free market offers solutions. We are totally unconvinced that deregulation will lead to a comprehensive and efficient transportation system for Canada.

Let us look at some of the problems which should be dealt with by this Bill but which are ignored. Let us start with railway safety, something which has been a long-time preoccupation in Canada. We have tens of thousands of miles of rail lines in Canada. We have a small population. The rail lines are used frequently. We have had too many accidents, some of which, Mr. Speaker, have been very serious.

The lack of safety provisions, Mr. Speaker, in Bill C-18, the lack of provisions which would force the railways to operate as safely as they should, the fact that the need for competition will cut back on the already too few safety precautions taken in terms of the maintenance of rail stock and rail lines in this country, means that we are going to see more rather than fewer accidents.

The fear that there will be more accidents and more problems has been voiced by many people in the railway workforce—carmen, maintenance of way, shop crafts, and operating crews. In order to cut costs and to reduce personnel, the railways are moving to substitute, increasingly, technological solutions for safety problems.

I should like to quote just a couple of paragraphs from an article which appeared in the May 1, 1987 edition of The Toronto Star entitled "Layoffs signal rail disaster unions charge" and written by Pat McNenly. In part the article reads:

Canadian National Railways without fanfare has switched the inspection of freight trains and their hazardous cargoes from experienced carmen to members of the train crew at many check points across Canada.

It continues:

Since 1980 the reassignment of inspection duties and the installation of rail-side electronic devices to detect "hot boxes" (overheated wheel bearings) have cost 2,250 carmen jobs in CP Rail and another 1,900 CN jobs.

It goes on to explain that carmen serve a five-year apprenticeship and knew what they were doing. CN has now cut back on carmen, and the prediction is that there will be many more accidents.

Let us look at what is happening with air traffic controllers. Perhaps no issue is more controversial or vital to the travelling public. A few minutes ago I spoke about what was happening in the United States as a result of deregulation. We have seen a dramatic increase in U.S. air traffic, and we have seen a similar increase in Canada. Each deregulated airline in the United States wants to fly at the optimum peak period time. They want to get as many customers as they can.

U.S. air traffic controllers are understaffed and greatly overworked as a result of the firing of air traffic controllers a few years ago by President Reagan. What is happening in Canada? The same conditions are now being replicated with lay-offs of air traffic controllers at a time of increasing air traffic.

I should now like to quote from an article which appeared in the June 3, 1987 edition of the Winnipeg Free Press entitled "Job-cut proposal angers air traffic controllers". I want Hon. Members on the government side to keep in mind what I pointed out is happening in the United States. In part the article reads:

A federal consultant's report recommends Transport Canada eliminate 17 of 99 air traffic control jobs in the Winnipeg control area.

It continues:

CATCA vice-president Carl Fisher said the proposed cuts come at a time when controllers in the Winnipeg control area have handled 27 per cent more traffic in the first quarter of this year (57,543 aircraft) than in the same quarter of 1984—

Then the article goes on to say:

"It is only a matter of time before we have a major disaster on our hands," said Jack Butt, president of the 19,000-member CATCA. "There is Russian roulette in air traffic control."

If that is happening in Winnipeg, one can imagine that the situation in Toronto is much more serious and much more dangerous. There has been a number of near misses in many Canadian cities.

We are following the American example. I do not mind following American examples when they are successes. What bothers or disturbs me is how often the Government follows American examples even when there is ample evidence that they are a failure.

Let us look at the U.S. experience; perhaps it is the biggest fallacy of all. The success of deregulation in the United States is supposed to solve all our problems in Canada, but we must ask ourselves: Was the American experience a success? It was not a success if we measure consumer complaints, safety, and corporate concentration.

Even as pro business a publication as Business Week in the United States showed the defects of the U.S. experience in its December 22, 1986 issue, when it found considerable fault with the United States airline, railway, trucking, and telephone system. I should like to quote a couple of paragraphs from the Business Week article. With regard to airlines, it indicated:

> The six largest carriers control 84 per cent of the market, vs. 73 per cent in 1978. Consultant Lee R. Howard of Airline Economics Inc. foresees by 1990 a "tight oligopoly" with a share of more than 90 per cent.

That is the real effect of deregulation. It is not more competition but less competition. With regard to railroads, the same article indicated:

> Mergers have reduced the ranks of large rail freight carriers from 13 in 1978 to 6 huge regional systems—3 in the West and 3 in the East—that carry 86 per cent of the rail freight and earn 93 per cent of the profits.

Our railways, CN and CP, will have to compete with those giants that can compete for Canadian traffic. However, American law will not permit Canadian railway companies to compete for American business.

We say that the Bill is a mistake of colossal proportions. We also say that the people of Canada will get less service and that we will see more accidents on the railways, airlines, and trucking systems. Consumers, particularly consumers in small and isolated areas, will pay through the nose for the folly contained in the Bill brought forward by the Conservative Government.

We intend to vote against the Bill, and time will show that we are right.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to be the first to offer best wishes to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on his twenty-fifth anniversary in the House of Commons tomorrow.

I thought he would speak until midnight so that we could celebrate it then. However, we are ahead of time and we wish him a good start to his twenty-fifth anniversary in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 9.48 p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, June 15, 1987, the four hours allotted to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill now before the House have expired.

Accordingly it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of Bill C-18.

[English]

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Order made Tuesday, June 16, 1987, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred until the completion of Routine Proceedings on Thursday, June 18, 1987.

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings, be read the third time and passed.

• (2150)

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, it is a very great honour for me to move on behalf of the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) third reading of Bill C-19, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, 1986. This Bill will bring Canada closer and closer to nationhood.

Bill C-19 is a companion to Bill C-18, the new National Transportation Act which is close to being passed by the House and will likely be passed tomorrow morning. It contains the reforms to economic regulation of trucking and buses.

The Bill has undergone some changes since it was first introduced last November. Members of the Standing Committee on Transport have worked hard and are to be commended for their diligence in revising the Bill. They have listened to Canadians from coast to coast express their satisfaction and in some areas their dissatisfaction with this Bill. Provincial Governments have also expressed their views, both to the committee and to the Minister. We have listened carefully, and when appropriate, changes have been made.

Over three decades ago, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act of 1954 gave the provinces responsibility for trucking regulation in both their own and federal government jurisdictions. That delegation worked reasonably well at the beginning when interprovincial and international trucking was an immature industry but now, the for-hire trucking industry generates close to half the total surface freight revenue in Canada. Furthermore, trucks carry over 50 per cent of our exports to the United States.

If the industry has grown, so have economic regulations. Since 1954, different regulations have sprung up across the country. Each province has its own requirement for entry, for rates, for commodities, for safety regulations and so on. Instead of a nation, we now almost have 10 Balkan states.

These inconsistencies from province to province have placed a burden on truckers, the costs of which are inevitably passed on to their customers, the consumers. For instance, costly and time-consuming hearings are required to obtain an operating licence in each province a carrier wishes to serve or even to drive through. Needless to say, such practices have frustrated both carriers and shippers alike. Effectively, services have been restricted and unnecessary costs have been imposed on the industry, its customers and ultimately on the economy as a whole. In the final analysis, the consumer pays it all.

It became increasingly evident over time that this was no way to meet future needs and no way to build a nation. An efficient, flexible transportation system is critical to Canada to link up East and West, to connect us to major markets in the United States and to provide good transportation in the far North and to every nook and corner of this vast country.

The origins of this Bill are to be found in the February 1985 Memorandum of Understanding agreed upon by provincial and federal Governments. It was the source of three main initiatives.

First, all jurisdictions agreed to eliminate public convenience and necessity as an entry test and to move to a reverse-onus public-interest test as soon as possible. That date has now been established as January 1, 1988.

Second, all jurisdictions agreed to implement a uniform fitness entry test. They subsequently agreed to make it effective January 1, 1988, as well. The latter test requires that all applicants have insurance and demonstrate that they can operate safely. It was approved by all provinces eight months ago. While the test will apply to all extra-provincial traffic, most provinces have agreed to apply it intra-provincially as well.

We hear many people decrying the accidents that will arise out of this legislation. We must recall that the provinces that have been administering this have been working on it for a number of years and are now presenting an excellent if not a perfect package.

Third, the federal and provincial Governments have agreed in principle to the elements of a uniform national safety code, its implementation and its cost sharing.

Using these building blocks and several concepts from the existing law, this Bill contains these basic principles: first, it will shift the regulatory emphasis from entry and price control to safety performance. That is an excellent move toward better and safer highways and streets. Second, it links entry into the industry with safe performance, not simply necessity. Third, it will provide the Governor in Council the power to make national safety regulations for trucks and buses. That is something we need as well, national regulations that will be effective across the entire nation.

Fourth, it will continue the delegation of administrative responsibility to the provinces. The provinces are becoming more and more mature. They have grown greatly in the administration of motor vehicle laws over the last 15 or 20 years and now they are becoming mature and can work with the federal Government to put in place an excellent system across the nation. Fifth, it will provide a transition period for existing transportation companies to adapt to change.

Many people have said that we are doing the same thing as the United States did. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) mentioned that a few moments ago. This is a Canadian-made policy. They may have deregulation in the United States but we are not going into it holus-bolus without preparation. We will provide existing transportation companies time to adapt to change, and that is important.

As I said earlier, this Bill has undergone some changes since second reading. The transition period during which economic regulation will be phased out has been extended from three years to five, to January 1, 1993. The provinces have generally been relaxing economic controls on the industry for some time so this gradual approach to change is already under way. The extension of the transition period will give truckers well over a decade to adjust to a less regulated environment.

That transition period will vary from province to province. Those in the Province of Alberta have been working under a more or less deregulated system, a Freedom to Move type system, for a number of years. Other provinces have not, but they will have a good long time to adapt to change. There will not be suddenly one thing one day and then the next day a complete change. It will be done gradually and effectively.

Some shippers feel that this may be too long to wait. Some of the people who appeared before the committee cried about the fact that the Minister of Transport had extended the transition period. As we indicated in Montreal, the provinces will administer this. Why should we go against their wishes when we want to have a safe and gradual approach to this change? The change was made because we listened to the provinces. The Government has listened to the provinces and the trucking industry. A five-year transition represents a reasonable balance of opinions as well as a consensus among the provinces that will be implementing the reforms.

The Minister met with the provinces and they came to these agreements. I believe they even signed written agreements indicating that they want these things to be done and done gradually. After all, the provinces are the ones that have had experience in administering this for the last 20 or so years.

In response to uneasiness expressed by a few provinces concerning the final step to fitness only, Bill C-19 now includes a provision to study the effect of the reform in the fourth year of the transition phase, which will be 1991. I am confident this study will not show serious problems but if it does, the Governor in Council has the authority to extend the transition period.

I see your sign, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave now to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 10 p.m., pursuant to order made Friday, June 12, 1987, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 10 p.m. the House adjourned.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO ROAD SAFETY MEASURES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling a petition signed by residents of Moncton, New Brunswick, who are asking for changes in our road safety regulations.

The petitioners believe that rear seat-belts in passenger cars are inadequate and that the suffering of crash victims could be reduced or avoided through improved seat-belts.

They also believe that the cost of medical care can be reduced or eliminated.

For these reasons, your petitioners call upon Parliament to institute mandatory installation of three-point adjustable lap/shoulder seat-belts for rear-seat passengers. As well, petitioners request the mandaroty installation of front seat air-bags.

SUPPORT FOR THE RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present on behalf of the citizens of the Province of Ontario and indeed Canadians from all across Canada 2,318 signatures calling upon Parliament to pass a motion favouring the return of capital punishment in Canada. These signatures which now total 8,320 represent the strong will of the Canadian people on this very important issue.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present on behalf of the citizens of Erie riding in the Province of Ontario 1,980 signatures calling upon Parliament to pass a motion favouring the return of capital punishment. These signatures represent the strong will of the Canadian people on what we believe to be a very important issue.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present on behalf of 1,971 citizens of Canada, from eastern Canada right through to the West Coast, who feel that Canadians have consistently supported the reinstatement of capital punishment in principle and in practice and they are calling upon all Members of Parliament to vote in favour of the motion that calls for the return of capital punishment.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present on behalf of the citizens of Alberta and Canadians from all across the country over 2,000 signatures calling on Parliament to pass a motion favouring the return of capital punishment in Canada. These signatures represent the strong will of the Canadian people on this very important issue.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, through the co-operation of the Ontario Police Association, the Canadian National Police Association and the Coalition for the Return of Capital Punishment in Canada, I am pleased to present 1,913 signatures from people in the Peterborough federal riding and from right across this nation. This brings the total number of signatures as of today to 10,233 and it is the intent to honour these petitions as long as they keep arriving at the House of Commons.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present on behalf of over 400 residents of my constituency a petition as follows. Whereas troubles in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada; whereas Canada has established standards of refugee status determination but our existing procedures have broken down under unexpected strains; whereas the Standing Committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force; whereas this proposal has support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals; whereas procedures recently adopted are turning away refugee-status claimants from ports of entry and putting real refugees at risk, therefore we the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

REQUEST FOR DOOR-TO-DOOR POSTAL SERVICE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to present on behalf of a number of residents of the southern part of Winnipeg, and this should be of some interest to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) since it includes many of his constituents, this petition. Whereas we the undersigned feel that as taxpaying Canadians and supporters of the postal system, through stamps and other services, it is our right to receive mail delivery to our own door, and whereas we as yet do not have postal delivery to our door, and we do not have any intention of accepting supermailboxes as an alternative to door-to-door delivery, and whereas approximately 80 to 90 per cent of our development has door-to-door delivery, we feel that that courtesy and right should be extended to the rest of us, therefore, we the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instigate door-to-door postal service to the remaining few homes in the area of Vista South in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

TRANSPORTATION—ECONOMIC REGULATORY REFORM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a third petition on a different topic. This petition contains the signatures of several hundred employees of the airlines resident in the Winnipeg, Montreal and Toronto areas. The petitioners say that the experience of airline deregulation in the United States has resulted in a diminution of safety standards and practices and an over-all reduction in services to many communities and cheaper fares but these effects are already apparent in Canada in the form of airline mergers and the deterioration of labour relations within the industry. The social fabric of Canada is based on an accessible transport system which is jeopardized by deregulation. Wherefore, the undersigned your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to defeat this legislation and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of residents of Kamloops, British Columbia, and residents of Nakusp, Beaton, Revelstoke and Trout Lake and the communities of Hinton, Jasper and Grande Cache in Alberta.

These petitioners are calling upon Parliament to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant-derived pesticides because the petitioners are of the opinion that increasing numbers of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides are being proven to have harmful effects on human health.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of my constituency of Burnaby who note the very high level of unemployment in western Canada and particularly in the Province of British Columbia and urge the Government to reject any proposed legislation designed to eliminate federal contributions to the unemployment program, to weaken that program in any way or to reduce UI benefits for unemployed Canadians.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise that Question No. 136 will be answered today.

[Text]

DOMESTICS DENIED REFUGEE STATUS

Question No. 136—Mr. Kaplan:

Since September 4, 1984, by month, were any domestic applicants denied refugee status in Canada and, if so, of these, how many (a) remained in Canada (b) left Canada, and on what basis?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): If the term "domestic applicants" means household domestics or people who receive permission to enter and remain in Canada as maids, nannies, handymen or butlers, there is no cross referencing between that category of person and those who claim refugee status.

If, on the other hand it means how many people were denied refugee status after making a claim to refugee status in Canada, the following data is relevant:

1984		1985
Sept.	102	Jan.	245	July	333
Oct.	194	Feb.	227	Aug.	349
Nov.	188	Mar.	243	Sept.	196
Dec.	213	Apr.	167	Oct.	195
		May	187	Nov.	203
		June	247	Dec.	295

1986		1987
Jan.	303	Jan.	490
Feb.	290	Feb.	563
Mar.	188	Mar.	627
Apr.	332	Apr.	458
May	150	May	N/A
June	156
July	104
Aug.	195
Sept.	180
Oct.	257
Nov.	297
Dec.	535

(a) and (b) It is not possible to report on how many of these people left or remained in Canada, because the majority were eligible for consideration under the administrative review of the backlog which was commenced on July 15, 1986; almost 85 per cent of the 25,000 persons in the process will be granted permanent residence.

Those who have been refused under the administrative review remain at various stages of the current claim process. Those who cannot substantiate a claim to refugee status will be moved as expeditiously as possible into the immigration enforcement stream.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed from Friday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate today—

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

That the Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) be now heard.

Mr. Nystrom: I was speaking.

Mr. Speaker: On Orders of the Day, resuming debate was called and the Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who, in the opinion of the Chair, was clearly speaking.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has risen and moved a traditional motion that another Member be now heard.

It is important that all Hon. Members and the public that is watching understand exactly what this procedure is, because it is a very difficult one for the Chair.

I am going to refer to what the procedural law is in this matter so that there is no misunderstanding. I am referring to a ruling of Speaker Sauve on October 27, 1983. It is as follows:

—Members may on a point of order ask that an Hon. Member be now heard as long as no other Member has the floor legitimately. Beauchesne states that a motion that a Member be now heard must be moved before the Member recognized has begun speaking. If the Member recognized has simply said "Madam Speaker," that is enough to be in possession of the House and, therefore, under those circumstances a motion that another Member be now heard is not in order.

• (1150)

There is always a difficulty for the Chair in these cases, because there is what amounts to a physical contest for the floor. However, in this case, clearly the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) had begun to speak, and I must advise the Hon. Member that he is out of order. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with today is a very important decision about the future of our country. Our decision will tell us how civilized our country is and what kind of country it will be for our kids.

Many Canadians have said there should be capital punishment. They say that because there is a lot of crime. They see violence on television and hear about it all the time. For these reasons I want to ask the Canadian people and my fellow Members of Parliament about 12 questions today with respect to whether or not we should reinstate capital punishment.

The most important question, of course, is if capital punishment is a deterrent, is it going to protect our society? Even those who believe in capital punishment have never been able to prove that it is a deterrent. They have not been able to prove it is a deterrent in this country, or in any other country. Therefore, if it is not a deterrent, why do people want to bring back capital punishment? If capital punishment is not a deterrent, then why bring it back?

I suggest the only reason for bringing back capital punishment is pure and simple revenge. It is vengeance. It is a belief that we must have an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. It is a belief that if someone robs you, you have the right to rob them. It is a belief that if someone were to punch you in the eye, you have the right to punch them in the eye. It is pure revenge. It is a vengeful vendetta. I suggest that basing the argument for capital punishment on revenge and retribution is not right.

My third question asks, if we bring back capital punishment, what kind of society will we have in this great country of ours called Canada? What kind of society will we be if we give the state the legal right to take a life, the right to kill someone? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that would not be a very nice society.

Bringing back capital punishment may indeed provoke even more murders, even more violence and killing. In his speech the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) outlined in detail some statistics on what we call the brutalization effect, that is, when a state legally kills someone it can provoke someone who is sick and demented to go out and kill someone or commit an act of violence.

The Hon. Member in his speech before the House cited some studies made in New York State and in South Carolina where indeed when the state did murder someone, there was concrete evidence that it provoked more killings and violence in those particular states. That evidence proves that there is a strong chance that if we bring back killing by the state, capital punishment, all we will do is create more violence and murder.

We have seen evidence time and time again that violent acts on television may provoke some violence of one kind or another. I remember when I was a young boy that a cousin of mine was always watching westerns on television. He saw how they kept hanging the bad man, and that in the next show the bad man came back. This little cousin of mine, who was about four-years old, went out to the barn, took his favourite cat and he hung the cat. This is the kind of message he was receiving from the television set.

I suggest that Canadians should be influenced by the fact that by executing people, we in turn may be provoking more violence and killings by sick and demented people.

My fourth question asks, are we going to get as many convictions for first-degree murder if we have capital punishment? Are juries going to convict people as readily of first-degree murder if we have capital punishment? I suggest that is highly unlikely. We will have more convictions for second-degree murder and murderers will be running around our streets a lot sooner if we have capital punishment rather than a 25 minimum first-degree sentence.

I refer again to studies which show that out of some 30 juries, at least 29 would have been affected by the fact that capital punishment was the law of this land. There are many Canadians in Canada who would never convict someone of first-degree murder if they knew that the conviction would result in someone being executed. As a result there would be more convictions for second-degree murders and murderers would be out on the street in a position to do more harm and violence to our society. I ask Members of Parliament to think a lot about that.

In my Province of Saskatchewan a couple of years ago Jo-Ann Wilson was murdered. We had the conviction of Colin Thatcher, a very prominent citizen of Saskatchewan. It was a very difficult case. The jury, if I remember correctly, took some five days to make a decision. I wonder whether Colin Thatcher would have been convicted of first-degree murder, which he was, if capital punishment was in force. I rather doubt it. The decision was difficult enough without the issue of capital punishment. With capital punishment, it would have been made a lot more difficult.

I believe if we had capital punishment, there would be millions of Canadians sitting on juries who would never knowingly send someone to the gallows and have blood on their conscience for the rest of their lives. That is an absolute fact. There are a lot of Canadians who would not convict someone if they knew that person had to face the executioner.

A Conservative friend of mine back here is laughing. I suggest it is no laughing matter. We are talking about something very serious.

My fifth question asks, can an innocent person be executed if we had capital punishment? I think the answer is very clearly yes. Again, the Conservative Member of Parliament from Ottawa West put some statistics on the record which proved that where they have capital punishment, over history, many, many innocent people have been executed. I do not want this to happen in this country. I could not have that on my conscience. So I ask Members of Parliament to think very seriously about the possibility of an innocent person being executed.

Along that line, I would like to refer to a letter in the Prairie Messenger, which is a newspaper of the Roman Catholic Church in the Province of Saskatchewan. It was a letter written recently by Mr. Robert Eisler of Regina. I wish Members of Parliament who are leaning towards capital punishment would listen to Mr. Eisler's arguments. He says in part:

> As long as we are human there is always the danger of putting an innocent person to death. So long as that possibility exists it completely destroys all arguments in favor of the death penalty.
> How can I in all conscience vote for a return of the noose? In so doing, and should an innocent person be put to death, I would be compelled to spend the rest of my life with blood on my hands.

That is what Mr. Eisler wrote in the Catholic newspaper in Saskatchewan.

With the return of capital punishment, it is only a matter of time before an innocent person is put to death, and once someone is put to death there is no way of making amends or issuing apologies. Once that person is dead, that person is dead, and it is much too late. So I ask Members of Parliament to think very carefully about that issue before they rise in this House and ask that people be put to death in this country.

I refer to the Donald Marshall case recently in Nova Scotia. He was convicted of murder and after a number of years it was proven that Mr. Marshall was innocent. This was second-degree murder, but it is only a matter of time before someone is convicted of first-degree murder and put to death. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa West said, this has happened hundreds of times throughout history in countries and states which have capital punishment. Again I ask Members who want to vote for capital punishment, for hanging, to think twice before they do so.

My sixth question asks, if we bring back capital punishment, who is going to be executed? There was a study done of all the executions in Canada since we became a country back in 1867. It was found in this study that in the main it was the poor people who were executed; it was the disadvantaged who were executed; it was the native Indians who were executed in great numbers; it was the eastern Europeans, people of Ukrainian descent who, historically, were more likely to be executed than Anglo-Saxons. In the United States it is blacks who go to the gallows much more often then white Americans. That is so because they do not have the money to hire the best lawyers. They do not have the privileges that the wealthy have in our society.

Once again I say to Hon. Members, if we bring back capital punishment we will be bringing in a law from which the rich will once again be protected to a greater degree than the poor, the deprived and the disadvantaged. I ask some of my wealthy friends in the House who are intending to vote for capital punishment to think very carefully about who, in the main, they will be sending to the gallows.

My seventh question is this. Will we save money by bringing back capital punishment? I have heard some people say, "Hang them, execute them, you will save money. Look at how much it costs to keep someone in jail. It costs thousands of dollars to keep someone in jail". Once again I say that that is a wrong argument. It is wrong to even base this type of argument on financial matters.

However, even if it is based on financial matters, I argue that it would cost the state more to bring in capital punishment than it would to keep someone in jail. There would be appeal after appeal, and millions and millions of dollars would be spent in the appeal process which would, once again, cost the Canadian people a great deal of money.

The next question I want to ask my fellow MPs who are thinking seriously about voting in favour of the return of capital punishment is this. Even if we bring back capital punishment, even if we bring back the hangman, will people be executed anyway? My answer to that is probably not. I cannot foresee any Prime Minister of Canada in the next number of years who will want to have on his conscience the fact that he had not commuted the death sentence for some Canadian. When we pass a Bill on capital punishment I assume that the power to commute a death sentence would rest with the Cabinet.

I cannot see the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ever agreeing because he believes in abolition. He does not believe in vengeance. He does not believe in capital punishment. In my opinion the present Prime Minister would never in effect, sign a death warrant, to have blood on his hands by agreeing to have someone sent to the gallows. That would not happen if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) were Prime Minister. It would not happen if the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) were Prime Minister. It did not happen with the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau. It did not happen with the Prime Minister before that, the current Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

I am also proud to say that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has strongly hinted to the people of Canada that he would have to reconsider staying in his post as Minister of Justice if capital punishment were brought back and if he was faced with the possibility of having to send someone to the gallows.

Again, if we pass a resolution to establish a Bill to bring back capital punishment we will be setting up a process whereby legally we will have capital punishment but the final result will be that we will not send people to the gallows.

I ask another question of Hon. Members. Supposing someone in the family of an Hon. Member was convicted of murder, what would they do? I suspect there is not a single person in the House who would not fight as hard as possible and use all the money they had to try to free that particular person. I want once again to quote Mr. Eisler's letter as it appeared in the Catholic Church's Prairie Messenger:

> I have one question for those favouring a return of the death penalty. God forbid, but if some member of their family were charged with murder, would they still be in favour of capital punishment? Or would they be willing to spend their last dollar to prevent the ultimate? If not, I would hesitate to refer to them as caring and loving parents.
> How can I promote capital punishment for someone else's son or daughter when I refuse to accept it for one of my own?

I think that is a very strong and compelling argument. There are a great many other arguments. There are a great many churches and a great many people who want to make those arguments. Because of that I want to move an amendment to the motion before the House, an amendment that will give the churches and the people of Canada more time to present their cases. My amendment is seconded by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and it reads as follows:

> That the word "three" in lines 5 and 14 be deleted and that the word "six" be substituted therefor.

This amendment would mean that instead of having three months to study the issue of capital punishment the committee would take six months to study it. The people of Canada, namely, the churches, which have shown tremendous leadership on this issue, would have more time to talk to Canadians about how wrong it is in a decent and civilized society to bring back capital punishment, to provide the same laws in our country as exit in the Soviet Union, China, Iraq, Iran, Libya, Chile, and other countries in South America. Surely to goodness we can strive for higher ideals and higher moral values than there are in some of the countries I have just named. I appeal to my friends in the House not adopt the same mentality as those in the Soviet Union, Chile, South Africa, Iraq or Iran. For God's sake, we are a more decent, democratic and civilized society than some of those countries.

I say that it is not morally right to have capital punishment in Canada. It is not morally right, and the churches have said that to us. The Catholic Church has said time and time again that it is not right, as has the Anglican Church, the Lutheran Church, the United Church, the Mennonites and other churches. Representing the moral leadership of the country they have said no, no, no to capital punishment on moral terms. This House should be saying no, no, no to capital punishment as well.

I want to conclude by asking a few more questions. Can I ever vote for a Bill on capital punishment? Obviously, my answer is no, for the nine or ten reasons I have already given. If I cannot vote for capital punishment, then how can I pass a law which will state that another Canadian must make the decision to kill? If I cannot kill myself, if I cannot be the hangman myself or the executioner, how can I pass a law that will make it mandatory for another Canadian to do that job? How can I pass a law that states that a jury must make a decision on life or death? I cannot pass such a law.

How could I pass a law which would state that a judge must make a decision on life or death? I cannot morally do that. I do not know why I should then pass that decision on to a judge or a jury.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it fair to expect, if capital punishment is returned, to have a medical doctor stand and verify that somebody has been hung by the neck until dead and then pronounce that person dead? Should we expect a medical doctor to do that whether the method of execution is by hanging, electric chair or lethal injection? Is it fair to force the people in the medical community to go through that type of uncivilized act? It is not fair. I would not do it. How can I pass a law saying that we expect doctors to do it?

Is it fair to expect a minister of the cloth, a reverend or a priest, or what have you, to be there when someone is executed and to give them their last rites, to be with them and try to comfort them? That is not fair.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it morally right to leave someone who is condemned on death row year after year after year while the appeals go on and on, while the date of execution is pushed back and back? Do Members of the House really believe in that kind of torture? I ask them if they believe in that type of torture for someone who is condemned?

I also ask if Members of the House really believe that it is fair to the family of the condemned woman or man, to see their brother, sister, father, mother, cousin or loved one on death row waiting week after week and month after month and year after year while appeals are being exhausted and retried and exhausted once again?

Finally, I ask whether any Member of this House of Commons would volunteer to be the hangman? Someone has to pull the trigger, someone has to push the button. I suggest that there is no one in the House of Commons who would do that.

Mr. Gagnon: Yes, there is, right here.

Mr. Holtmann: Yes, I would.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) would do it, and so would the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann). They are exceptions. They would volunteer to be the hangman, to push the button.

Mr. Gagnon: We had a million people go serve in the war who do not want to fight against crime.

Mr. Nystrom: Almost no one in the House would do it. If we would not do it or they would not do it, how can they vote for a Bill that forces someone else to do it?

Mr. Holtmann: As long as you were standing there we would do it.

• (1210)

Mr. Nystrom: We have had hangmen in this country who have committed suicide because of the job they had to do. These are people who lived a life of sheer hell because of the job they had to do.

Mr. Speaker, if we would not do it ourselves, how can we pass a law that obligates another member of our society to be the executioner, to be the hangman?

We live in a civilized society. We have a great country. I believe we now have to reach for higher morals, for a higher standard in society. History will judge us on how we vote on this issue. Years down the road, when I am asked where I stood on this very historical debate, I will be able to say with pride that I stood on the side of decency, that I stood on the side of higher morals in our society, that I stood on the side of a democratic society, a just society; that I did not stand on the side of those who want to bring back the noose, taking us closer to the kind of society we see in the Soviet Union, or China, or Iraq, or Turkey, or Iran, or Chile, and other countries of South America, or South Africa. I do not believe in the kind of society that exists in those places. I believe that Canadian people reflecting on this issue will overwhelmingly come down on the side that capital punishment is morally wrong and dangerous for Canada as a country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of Mr. Nystrom's amendment. The Chair finds the motion for amendment in order.

Questions or comments?

The Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson), on debate.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to rise in the House today to speak on the issue of capital punishment, an issue on which there are deeply held convictions on both sides. It is wrong for those on either side of the issue to claim the high moral ground. Those on both sides of the question have deep convictions. It is wrong to impute that one side has the high moral ground and the other not.

In the debates that I have had with the former Solicitor General, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and Mr. Edward Greenspan, it was generally agreed that the statistics will not conclusively prove either side of the issue.

I am in favour of capital punishment for first degree murder, or premeditated murder. I believe the courts must have the capital punishment option. The Government must make it clear that society will not tolerate the premeditated taking of a life. The clear message must be that the sanctity of life is foremost in our considerations.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we see a focus on the rights of the accused as an individual. But, what about the collective rights and the protection of society as a whole? Are those rights not deserving of consideration and protection?

We hear that the guilty party is a product of his or her environment and is therefore not responsible for his or her actions. I believe that we are all ultimately responsible for our actions, and must be held accountable. When are we going to see a focus on individual responsibility and accountability in our society?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jepson: I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that responsibility fosters a just society; an undue focus on individual rights fosters rebellion. Our criminal laws must be based on justice, and under those laws a person must be responsible for his or her actions.

The 1978-79 statistics show that the average time served in prison for attempted murder before being granted parole was four years and nine months; for manslaughter, two years and nine months; for kidnapping, two years and six months; for rape, two years. What kind of a message do those statistics send to society about the sanctity and value of life, about justice in our society.

In looking at the issue of capital punishment, it is important that we look at the over-all justice system. And in looking at the plea bargaining system, at the parole system, at the bail laws, and all other aspects of justice, we see that there has to be a tightening up, there has to be more accountability. We must send a stronger message to society. It must be made clear that we will not tolerate blatant abuse of the laws of our land, blatant abuse of the protection and rights of all Canadians.

The abolitionists in this debate have a concern about error, about the possibility of an innocent person being executed. Since Confederation, there has not been one person executed who was later found to be innocent. Yet, since 1920 there have been eight murderers released, with the resultant loss of 11 more innocent lives. Many of those victims had a full life ahead of them, with expectations and dreams. They were simply snuffed out.

We speculate about the margin of error in the court system, with no concrete evidence that in fact it works against the innocent. We do, however, have concrete evidence to support the fact that 11 innocent lives have been snuffed out by repeat offenders, by murderers who had been released.

I have faith in our judicial system. I have faith in the men and women of Canada who are involved in the judicial system. I have faith in the due process of law, with the exhaustive appeal system that is in place.

Those on the other side of this issue are constantly throwing out this red herring about the possibility of an innocent person being executed. They cite the Donald Marshall case as an example of a situation where an innocent man could have been taken to the execution chamber. We know better than that. Donald Marshall was charged with, and convicted of, second degree murder, not first degree murder. What I stand for is capital punishment for first degree, premeditated murder.

We hear the Biblical quotation "an eye for an eye, a tooth for tooth" as justification for vengeance.

Mr. Speaker, what that scripture is saying to us is that we must have sentences that are commensurate with the crime committed. It is not that the punishment for cutting a person's arm off is to cut off the arm of the perpetrator of that act; that the punishment for killing a person is necessarily that the perpetrator of that act should be killed.

What we are saying is that we must have punishments commensurate with the crime committed, and I do not believe we are seeing that in the operation of our judicial system today. I repeat the statistics cited earlier. For attempted murder the average prison sentence is four years and nine months; for manslaughter, where a life has actually been taken, the average time in prison is two years and nine months. I find such sentences hard to comprehend in our society today.

We also hear those on the opposite side of this question quoting scripture, "Thou shalt not kill". What the scripture says is, "Thou shalt not murder". It cannot be said that the state, in carrying out an execution, is murdering or killing; what the state is doing is executing judgment.

Romans 13.1.6 tells us that God places Governments in authority over the people, to provide for the protection of society. Those who commit no wrongdoing or evil have nothing to fear; but those who do break the law, those who do commit crimes of violence, have to fear the "execution of the sword", as it is quoted in scripture. In other words, they have to stand fully accountable under the law.

Furthermore, Genesis 9.6 says, "Who so sheddeth a man's blood by man shall blood be shed."

I believe scripture very clearly states that capital punishment is in order for first degree premeditated murder.

We heard the New Democratic Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) talk about the stands of the various churches. There is no question that the executives of the United and Anglican Churches, as well as the Conference of Catholic Bishops, have stated that they are against capital punishment. There is no question about that. However, they are not speaking for their memberships. If they were speaking for their memberships, it would be clearly reflected in the polls, yet we see that for a number of years the percentage of Canadians in favour of capital punishment has hovered between 60 per cent and 70 per cent. It is quite obvious that they are not speaking for their memberships; they are speaking as executives of the respective churches.

• (1220)

Turning to the question of deterrence, I agree with my friend from Saskatchewan who spoke before me that it cannot be conclusively proven that capital punishment is a deterrent.

However, it cannot be proven conclusively that there is not a deterrent factor.

If capital punishment does not deter crime, why do criminals fear it more than any other penalty? Why does almost every criminal sentenced to death appeal for life imprisonment? Life is irrefutably the murderer's most valuable possession.

According to J. Edgar Hoover, a Director of the FBI, professional law enforcement officers are convinced from experience that hardened criminals have been and are deterred from killing based on the prospect of the death penalty.

If we reflect back to 1971 and the Kingston Prison riots, at that time capital punishment was in effect for the killing of prison guards. Although 12 lives were lost in that sad event, not one prison guard was killed. In fact, the prisoners murdered two inmates and dressed them up as prison guards, hoping to fool the media and those with whom they were negotiating to try to bring it to an end which was to their satisfaction.

I find it ironic that we live in a day and age when we see 66,000 unborn babies murdered each year. Yet, we see a Party like the NDP to my right, which is kind of ironic, standing for abortion on demand, to continue the wanton killing of innocent lives. At the same time, as a bloc, as a Party, it stands against capital punishment.

In conclusion, may I say that I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on this important issue. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Jepson), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) on a point of order.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to say that I would have voted against the motion, like my Party colleagues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, your vote will be recorded.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

ANNOUNCED TERMINATION OF RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, following the failure of the most recent First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "That was not the end of it . . . I deeply regret we did not succeed but—we shall try again to make sure that justice comes about for the native peoples of Canada".

All Hon. Members can applaud, approve and wholeheartedly support that affirmation of the Prime Minister of Canada. That being so, I ask this House if it is not curious, therefore, that the Government is terminating its constitutional funding to the national native organizations for aboriginal rights research and negotiation, with special reference to the right of self-government?

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has no reply except to say that funding will end as of June 30. I ask him and I ask the Prime Minister is it not really the case that aboriginal issues have been pushed off the agenda of the Government and the hope is that a few good words and nice sentiments from time to time will suffice as those unresolved rights are permitted to disappear from our sight?

SUPPORT FOR REINSTATEMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I believe the death penalty for people who deliberately plan and then murder a human being is a deterrent. However, whether it is or not, I support the execution of such murderers. Why? Primarily because Biblical evidence in both the Old and New Testaments supports capital punishment.

"Whoso sheddith man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed . . . "(Genesis 9:5,6). No later statements in the Holy Book cancel this principle of civil government.

Again, Paul the Apostle endorsed capital punishment when he said: "If I be an offender or have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die: (Acts 25:11). And when God gave us the Ten Commandments to guide our behaviour in life, the verse says: "Thou shalt not kill" (Exodus 20:13). But if we disobey this commandment then we are punished, and for premeditated murder under the Mosaic Law the punishment was death.

When Christ was on the cross he forgave the sins of the thief, but He did not stop the execution and He could have, had He chosen to do so.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FEDERAL FUNDING OF WOMEN'S GROUPS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Secretary of State has recommended that the budget of the Women's Program be at least maintained at current levels, indexed to the cost of living and, if possible, be increased to meet the needs of new groups and address emerging priorities. The Women's Program gives the Government excellent value for its money in terms of volunteer hours and staff dedication.

Additional funds are required for projects aimed specifically at improving the status of women who are doubly disadvantaged, such as women who live in remote regions, those who are disabled or are members of a visible minority. Government must not pit established groups against new groups in a futile battle to divide up a pie which isn't large enough to go around. Instead, we must recognize that until economic, social and political barriers to equality have been removed, the Women's Program will require government support.

I would ask that the budget for the Secretary of State's Women's Program be increased so that women's advancement toward equality may continue.

DRUMMONDVILLE SIXTH WORLD FOLKLORE FESTIVAL

INVITATION TO ATTEND

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to a special event which will take place in my riding, the sixth edition of the World Folklore Festival. I extend an invitation to all my colleagues and to all Canadians to attend the festivities. During the July 3-13 period we will be welcoming groups from every corner of the world: Africa, Asia, Europe and North America. Spend 10 days with us and discover the popular traditions and culture of various nations through songs, music, dances, and a wide variety of most enlightening activities.

S. O. 21

In five years Drummondville's World Folklore Festival had become the most important folkloric event in North America. More than 600,000 visitors attended last year's festivities. We have various activities, including craft exhibits, more than 400 dance shows, religious events, public events, and day and night parades.

I should like to commend the Mackinaw folkloric ensemble for their outstanding contribution in first hosting this festival. I expect to see you at the World Folklore Festival between July 3 and July 13, for this is a unique event.

CHILDREN

REPORT ON ABUSE OF CHILDREN SUFFERING UNDER APARTHEID IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Defence for Children International, a Swiss based organization dedicated to children's issues, has just released a report "Children under Apartheid" detailing incidences of child abuse in South Africa. This report outlines massive evidence that members of the South African Government's security forces are abusing the powers granted them under the state of emergency in effect since last June, and children are being arrested and detained without cause.

The South African Government has admitted it is guilty of these allegations. Since 1985, police have shot and killed more than 300 children and wounded more than 950 children with gun-fire.

The report also alleges that an estimated 10,000 children under the age of 18 years are held in custody without trial in South Africa.

• (1405)

The Canadian Government has known for a long time of the brutal treatment of innocent black South African children. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has been reluctant up until this point to impose full economic sanctions against South Africa. But his other avenues of recourse are not stopping the cruel and oppressive treatment of South African blacks.

It is good that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has condemned the treatment of blacks by the Botha Government. Will he now commit his Government to helping innocent children? These children deserve a future, not one that is marred with a loss of dignity, torture, and even brutal slaughter.

MULTICULTURALISM

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—FOUNDATION OF MULTICULTURAL IDENTITY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House with respect to the provisions for Canada's multicultural community in our constitutional Accord.

It is with honour that I allay misgivings expressed in this Chamber and in the media that the large number of Canadians of neither French nor English background may be overlooked in the Accord. In both spirit and actual wording our rich cultural language of ancestral traditions and heritage languages is portrayed and assured of protection.

Canada's respect for its multicultural roots has always been government policy and it will be further entrenched next autumn when the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) tables Canada's first ever multiculturalism Act. More than ever, our unique multicultural identity will be seen as a fact of law, not just as a fact of life.

Our constitutional Accord serves as a firm foundation by which the Government upholds its cherished multicultural character. The new Act will further affirm this symbol of Canadian ancestral pride.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVISIONS OF SASKATCHEWAN BUDGET CRITICIZED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Saskatchewan the Conservative Government of Grant Devine brought in a Budget. In this Budget the Government increased the flat tax, increased the sales tax from 5 per cent to 7 per cent, brought back the gas tax, and brought in all types of other taxes. During the campaign members of the Conservative Party promised not to increase taxes. They have now brought in tax after tax after tax.

Once again this action shows us that Tory times are taxing times; that Tory times are tough times.

In addition, medical care services have been cut back, as have dental care services, nursing homes, and services to ordinary people.

The present Government of Saskatchewan is similar to the Government of R. B. Bennett of the 1930s. That was the Government that brought us the Great Depression. I learned as a little child that Tory times are tough times. After R. B. Bennett the Conservative Party disappeared in the West for about 35 years. It was not until Diefenbaker revived it that it reappeared.

With this latest Budget of Grant Devine and with the help of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), once again the Conservative Party will become extinct in the West and the legacy of John Diefenbaker will disappear.

Tory times are tough times.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN NATO—POSITION OF NDP

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, as official spokesman for the socialist Party in matters of defence, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) should clarify his position concerning Canada's NATO participation in the defence of the interests of western communities.

We know that all Members of his Party, including their leader, are systematically opposed to Canada's participation in NATO, and we know that the resolutions which have been in force since the 1985 socialist convention confirm the policy concerning Canada's withdrawal fron NATO and other military alliances, as evidenced by Resolution 43 of the Convention of 85.

At their latest convention in March of this year the delegates and the leader of the socialist Party were not honest enough to include this question and explain their position to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians support the western world's common defence system.

This bunch of leftists and Kremlin sympathizers must forthwith state their official position on our defence policy.

The leader of the socialist Party should listen to me. Is he going to throw out the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn)? Is he going to ignore the resolutions of his delegates? One way or another, Mr. Speaker, as usual he will have to flip and flop.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

DAMAGE TO REYNOLDS PLANT AT CAP-DE-LA-MADELEINE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT OFFER HELP

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as most of us already know, the fire earlier this week at the Reynolds plant at Cap-de-la-Madeleine has caused serious damage.

This is very unfortunate for our region, and although long term lay-offs do not seem likely, the tragedy will have an impact on the region's economy, at least for some time.

That is why I hope the Government will do everything it can to help that industry overcome the adverse effects of the fire as soon as possible.

I want to ask all departments concerned to take action immediately and offer government assistance to Reynolds' management.

Since many people in my riding work at the plant, I want to take this opportunity to say they have my full support.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF RABBI DAVID FEUERWERKER

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Canadians commemorate this week the passing of Grand Rabbi Dr. David Feuerwerker, Z.T.L., on June 20, 1980.

This Lamed Vav was more than a builder of our communities. He was the guide and master of many generations.

We cannot omit some reference to the work of Grand Rabbi David Feuerwerker who saved thousands of human lives from the horrors of the death camps.

Chamir, FFI Captain, co-founder of the Combat movement, Rabbi of Tournelles, director of the Cercle d'Études du Marais, General Chaplain, professor at the Sorbonne and at the University of Montreal, author of L'émancipation des Juifs, Grand Rabbi of the Canadian Jewish Cultural Association, he rests in peace beside the judges of the Sanhedrin at the foot of the Temple in Jerusalem.

With his wife, Antoinette Glück, we publicly sanctify the name of God and declare that the chain of tradition is intact, and we shall recite, with all God's peoples, a fervent Kaddish in memory of Grand Rabbi Dr. David Feuerwerker, Zichon Tzadik Livrocho.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND CAPELIN FISHERY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in St. John's, fishermen and processors could not reach an agreement on the capelin fishery. In a press release issued yesterday, the Minister of Fisheries stated:

> —it appears unlikely that production of capelin product in excess of 15,000 tonnes would be of benefit to the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador. Given the current unsold inventory of capelin in the Japanese market, and the increase of production in Iceland in 1987, the previously established harvesting quota of 69,000 tonnes seems far in excess of market demand for this year.

Since the Minister can clearly identify the problem, one wonders why he has failed the fishermen of Newfoundland miserably by not having the courage to come through with a solution. He has rejected any form of price supports—"the free market must prevail at all costs."

He has failed to create any form of marketing boards or use existing infrastructures to help this ailing fishery and, finally, he has refused to move quickly on the industry's call for a reduction in the capelin quota to more appropriate levels.

No wonder Newfoundlanders call this a 100 per cent failure.

THE CONSTITUTION

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—ABORIGINAL AND MULTICULTURAL DIMENSIONS OF COUNTRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians whose origins are other than French or English have serious concerns over their status within the present constitutional Accord.

When I raised this issue on Tuesday with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), rather than dealing with the issue with the sensitivity and seriousness that the matter deserves, he preferred, instead, to suggest, very falsely, that I was at odds with my Leader and with my Party by raising these concerns.

It should be made very clear to the Prime Minister that at our policy conference last November, unlike the present Accord, in the preamble of our constitutional resolution, a resolution that was adopted very enthusiastically, we suggested that Canada is defined by its French, English, aboriginal, and multicultural dimensions.

Furthermore, on May 11, my Leader in the House of Commons, three times in the body of his speech, repeated the concerns about the lack of any "multicultural" reference in the Accord. Moreover, in his national address on CBC to the country, he voiced regret that the Premiers and the Prime Minister did not go further and recognize, fundamentally, the contributions and aspirations of our indigenous and multicultural community in Canada.

The Prime Minister has not given good reasons for rejecting, in Clause 1, the addition of a very integral part of Canadian society.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY DEPARTMENT STORES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, almost two months ago a parliamentary committee recommended that the major department stores reduce their charge card rates to the level of the bank-issued credit cards. Almost two months later, with the banks having lowered their rates significantly, store chains like The Bay, Canadian Tire, Eatons, Sears, Simpson's and Woolco are still charging 28.8 per cent on outstanding balances.

THE HONOURABLE STANLEY KNOWLES

CELEBRATION OF SEVENTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to mark an important occasion. Today, a very special former parliamentarian is celebrating his seventy-ninth birthday. I refer of course to the Hon. Stanley Knowles.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, Stanley Knowles likes to tell the story of how goat's milk saved his life when he was a child. He grew up to be a man whose kindness and strength of character are legendary, and we hope to celebrate many more anniversaries with him.

[English]

When Stanley was 21 years old, his father wrote to him and said the following in his letter:

I note how your soul is burning with the vision and zeal of youth to carry the message of good news to the peoples of the earth that will make this earth more heavenly and certainly a better place to live in.

Well, Stanley followed that up.

[Translation]

The wisdom that comes with age has in no way diminished Stanley's vision of a fairer and more compassionate world. He has worked very hard to realize this vision for Canadian men and women. Ever since he was elected Member for the riding of Winnipeg North Centre in 1942, he has led the fight to improve living conditions for the poor and the needy. And he keeps reminding us that the fight is not over yet.

[English]

Over 60 years ago when Stanley first visited Ottawa in 1924, the Peace Tower had not yet been completed. Today, the image of Stanley personifies Parliament as indelibly as the Peace Tower for Canadians from coast to coast.

I should like to ask all Members of the House to join with me in wishing Stanley a most happy birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

TAX REFORM CONSULTANTS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Speaker: I am now prepared to rule on the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) concerning the principle of secrecy as it relates to fiscal matters. Yesterday I allowed extensive argument on this matter because I recognized that it was one of overriding importance. Because it affects a major fiscal issue which is to be brought before the House later today, I have decided that I should not delay my ruling.

The question of privilege of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was based to some extent on a report in yesterday's Globe and Mail. The right hon. gentleman supplied the Chair with a copy of that report, and I have read it very carefully. There is no doubt that the report gives the impression that the 20 experts engaged by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to study the final text of his White Paper are a privileged group who will be able to provide advice to their clients with the benefit of advantages that others working in their field will not have.

The facts, as I understand them, and which are not disputed, are as follows. Twenty experts have been engaged by the Hon. Minister of Finance to give technical advice on the White Paper which is to be presented to this House tonight. They have been involved in the process for a matter of months but have been given a preview of the final text, or parts of the final text, of the White Paper prior to its tabling in the House this evening. These 20 people have all been sworn to secrecy and have taken the same oath as that administered to members of the Public Service.

The complaint of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, which was supported by a number of Hon. Members who participated in the discussion, is that these 20 individuals have been given a special privilege of which they could take advantage. I emphasize the word "could", the conditional tense, because it was not suggested by any Hon. Member that any of these people had in fact breached their oaths of secrecy or were likely to do so. The integrity of these individuals is not in question, and Hon. Members will remember that I intervened several times during the discussion to establish this point. I want it to be clearly understood.

The question of privilege is based exclusively on the suggestion that the privileges of Hon. Members of this House have been breached because 20 individuals have been given access to the final text of the White Paper before it has been made available to Members of the House. The Hon. Minister of Finance made the point that the White Paper was not a budget, that it is nothing more than a proposal and that it does not even represent budgetary policy. While I appreciate the distinction, I feel that the White Paper nevertheless has very important budgetary implications.

The Hon. Minister of Finance also made the point that there was nothing new in the Government hiring experts to advise it on budgetary matters. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and those who supported him saw a distinction between the hiring of experts during the formulation process and giving those same experts access to a final document before its presentation to the House.

I have examined the precedents available and have come to the following conclusions. Budgetary secrecy is a matter of parliamentary convention. Its purpose is to prevent anybody from gaining a private advantage by reason of obtaining advance budgetary information. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to two British cases which involved the resignations of Ministers, in one case a Chancellor of the Exchequer because of a budget leak. However, the issues were never raised as matters of parliamentary privilege.

In this House, issues of this nature have in the past been raised as questions of privilege. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) referred to two such cases. In a ruling relating to one of them given on April 17, 1978, Mr. Speaker Jerome expressed serious doubts as to whether the convention of budgetary secrecy fell within the area of privilege at all. I must inform the House that in these circumstances I have arrived at the same conclusion.

I do not believe that this issue was one of privilege because Hon. Members of this House, and this is very important when one considers what is privilege, have not in any way been obstructed in the fulfilment of their duties by the fact that these 20 experts were given a preview of the White Paper. I must emphasize, however, that I am not ruling on the issue of propriety. The limits of parliamentary privilege are very narrow and it is not a responsibility of the Chair to rule as to whether or not a parliamentary convention is justified or whether or not the matter complained of is a breach of that convention. That is a matter of political debate and not one in which the Chair would wish to become involved.

I draw to Hon. Members notice of the fact that during argument yesterday, Hon. Members rose to say that they were not rising against the principle of a Government consulting with people in the private sector. I must therefore rule that on the evidence presented to me, I cannot accord this matter precedence over all other business. I stress, however, that I am ruling on this matter only as it relates to parliamentary privilege.

I would also emphasize that nothing which has been said in this House implies any reflection on the integrity of the 20 individuals to whom reference has been made. In that regard, I am indebted to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who made that point abundantly clear toward the end of argument yesterday and was supported by other Hon. Members, keeping in mind my admonition that I have I asked Hon. Members to remember that we must always guard the reputations of those outside this Chamber and respect their integrity and innocence in these matters.

I thank Hon. Members for their interventions yesterday, interventions which were lengthy but which I believe were important.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TAX REFORM

TAX SPECIALISTS' ACCESS TO ADVANCE INFORMATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we of course accept your ruling on the question of privilege on the basis of our knowledge and your knowledge of the facts as they are now available to us. We note that you left the question of propriety open, so my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

As a result of a letter written today by the Minister of Finance to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, who is currently quarantined, we know 31 specially privileged lawyers and accountants were given advance information on tax policy. I suggest in the strongest terms that was wrong, unfair, and unethical. It is as simple and clear as that. What is not clear is whether the Government knows the difference between right and wrong and, if it does, whether it really cares.

Did the Prime Minister know that 31 leading specialists in tax law and accounting were to be given privileged access to the White Paper in advance of Members of Parliament and other Canadians, and did he personally approve?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend of course knows it is not wrong, not unfair, and the conduct was not unethical. Surely he just heard the Speaker purport to speak in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition where, as I understand it, he, the Right Hon. Member, did not suggest there was anything improper or unethical regarding the conduct of those people who participated. The question then becomes is this kind of consultation conventional? I think it is.

The tradition for some considerable period of time has been that, given the progressive complexity of tax legislation on the social policy, labour and legal sides, Ministers of Finance reach out to various experts from all walks of life to seek guidance and counsel in the application of tax policy. That is what was done by the Minister of Finance and the Government, and I think it is entirely proper and helpful.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does not understand or is not willing to understand. The Speaker left open the question of propriety. He left it open to debate and to the judgment of the Canadian people. His Honour dispensed with the question of privilege but left open the question of propriety.

Mr. Shields: He said it was political debate, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are not questioning the ethics of those who accepted the invitation from the Minister of Finance. We are questioning the ethics of the Minister in giving an unfair advantage to experts at the expense of the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, how unfortunate that the Prime Minister should be unable to understand this question.

INQUIRY WHY 31 PRIVILEGED PERSONS WERE ENABLED TO EXAMINE DETAILS IN ADVANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The question is this: Why did the Prime Minister allow these 31 privileged persons to gain advance knowledge of some of the details of the tax reform, ahead of Hon. Members and ahead of other Canadians? Can the Prime Minister tell us why he did not chastise the Minister of Finance for inviting these experts and giving them preferential treatment, thus completely ignoring all other Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows full well that nobody was given preferential treatment, that it was a perfectly normal practice, followed by other Ministers of Finance, to consult experts in this field in an attempt to come up with a tax policy which is consistent with the interests of all Canadians. This process dates back to a few years. The Leader of the Opposition is asking me why the Prime Minister allowed . . . Yes, but as far as I know many Prime Ministers before me not only allowed but even urged their Ministers of Finance to consult even more, and I would suggest that is precisely what the Minister of Finance did under perfectly normal circumstances.

NATURE OF OBJECTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we did not say the Minister of Finance had no right to consult experts. No. We do object to the fact that the Minister gave these experts an advantage after making his final decision. That is the difference which the Prime Minister fails to understand.

• (1430)

[English]

The books were closed and these gentlemen had a cosy advantage over the rest of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government sinks into more disrepute with every answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A small dose of frankness would do wonders.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not recognize that his Minister of Finance has breached a centuries-old tradition of tax secrecy which ensures that all the citizens of the realm are treated equally? If he does, why is his Minister of Finance still the Minister of Finance today?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend says that he is not questioning the integrity of the outside advisers and then proceeds to do precisely that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He proceeds to imply very categorically that they had a "cosy advantage" which they were going to abuse notwithstanding their oath of secrecy and position of trust which this Government and other Governments have used with regard to—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give me a precedent for this particular situation.

Mr. Mulroney: I will give a precedent on giving out tax information. When Marc Lalonde was Minister of Finance the Budget was put out to all Canadian people. When they were caught they changed it, which cost Canadians $200 million. That is a fundamental violation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHOICE OF MEMBERS OF SPECIALISTS GROUP

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is on the same subject. The Prime Minister says that the chosen few, the group of 31, were not given an unfair advantage. Canadians do not believe that and the facts suggest otherwise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Question.

Mr. Nunziata: How were the chosen few in fact chosen? How was this elite group of 31 put together? Can he explain why, for example, the major firms of Laventhol & Horwath, Peat Marwick, and Samson Belair were not invited to participate in this elite group? Can he explain how the others were chosen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only tell my hon. friend that which has been conveyed publicly, that is, that the officials of the Department of Finance who have dealt with tax matters over the years under successive Governments have consulted with people from the private sector. I was not aware of who was being consulted. If some people have been left off the list, I am sure we would be happy to correct it.

Ms. Copps: I bet you would.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, perhaps when the Prime Minister is correcting the list he might want to invite the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Labour Congress, the poverty organizations, and all the other major groups in the country who have an interest in the White Paper.

CRITERIA USED IN SELECTING GROUP MEMBERS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, is it mere coincidence or pure happenstance that the firms of Ernst & Whinney and Thorne Riddell contributed over $164,000 to the Conservative Party between 1984 and 1985? Was it mere coincidence that they contributed this amount of money and were subsequently invited to select two people to participate in this elite group?

Mr. Penner: Now we know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will of course understand that that question does not go to the administration of the Government or any particular Department thereof. It is, of course, in the hands of Ministers whether they wish to answer the question.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps I can rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Gauthier: How were they chosen?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has indicated that he is prepared to accept my admonishment and rephrase the question.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, we in the Opposition and indeed all Canadians would like to know how this list was put together. I will direct the question to the Minister of Finance.

What criteria were used to choose the major firms invited to participate in this elite group? Can he explain why certain major accounting firms and certain major law firms were not invited to participate? Would he not agree that those invited to participate would have an unfair advantage in the situation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear why these people were invited to participate. They were invited by the officials of the Department of Finance on the basis of their professional qualifications. These people are seen by the tax community as the best tax experts in the country. If the Hon. Member wants to ask around about the qualifications of these people in their community, I think he would find that that is exactly the basis on which they are regarded by their peers.

Ms. Copps: What about Peat Marwick?

CHANGE MADE TO BUDGET BY FORMER MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I preface it with the observation that the Speaker has said that he ruled the question of privilege out of order because privilege is defined in very narrow and strict terms. However, he went on to say that the White Paper "has very important budgetary implications".

With regard to the Prime Minister's answer about Marc Lalonde, I suggest that the conclusion is the opposite to the one he reached. Is it not the case that Marc Lalonde changed the Budget precisely because it was discovered that he had done something wrong?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that British parliamentary practice calls for the Minister's resignation when information with regard to a Budget is made public. As I understand it, with regard to the case of Mr. Lalonde that information was made public. The Minister did not resign, in violation of British parliamentary practice. He changed the Budget and then came back into the House and said he did not have to resign because the information was different from that in the document which had been filmed.

I think my hon. friend would agree that that is a complete violation of British parliamentary practice while the present Minister of Finance is in total conformity with British parliamentary practice.

• (1440)

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say with respect that I think the Prime Minister has drawn the wrong conclusion again. As I understand the case, the Hon. Marc Lalonde would have had to do one of two things—either change the budget document in respect of the information that was revealed to the public, or resign. He changed the document. In this case a Minister gave privileged access to budgetary information—

An Hon. Member: It is not budgetary.

Mr. Broadbent: —information that has direct budgetary implications, as the Speaker has said. The Minister in question neither changed the document afterwards nor submitted his resignation. When will he do the right thing?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that Mr. Lalonde had to do one of two things. That is where we part company. Mr. Lalonde should have done one thing, that is, resign. He made that Budget public and the photographic evidence was obtained. There is a fundamental difference. He did not have two options. Pursuant to parliamentary practice that is cited so well by a former Minister of Finance, who is presently the Leader of the Opposition, there was one inevitable conclusion which Mr. Lalonde ought to have made. He chose not to, and changed the practice, and changed his Budget.

Ms. Copps: You are doing neither.

Mr. Mulroney: The White Paper is not a Budget. It is something entirely different from a Budget, as White Papers have traditionally been since this country was founded. My hon. friend knows that.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, those were not my words, they were the words of the Speaker who said that this White Paper is not merely a discussion document of some kind. He said it "has very important budgetary implications".

Perhaps a difference between the Marc Lalonde situation and the present one is that at least all the people in Canada had access to the particular point that Mr. Lalonde incorrectly revealed, whereas this Minister just gave it to a handful of people.

Miss MacDonald: They are under oath.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the Prime Minister not agree that there is an important distinction to be made between consulting people before preparing a document, whether it is a White Paper or a Budget, and giving them the information after the document has been prepared, which is this case? If he agrees that they should not have privileged access, why were the documents not taken back and held for at least 24 hours to make complete changes, or why did the Minister not do the correct thing, which is indeed to resign under the circumstances?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will agree that he has asked a number of questions. Let us deal with the fundamental issue.

A White Paper is not something that is truly exceptional. We are considering one tonight and there was one some two weeks ago on the question of national defence. It is the same kind of instrument that is used in a parliamentary democracy for a Government to put forward plans and invite debate and consideration of a great national issue. It sets forth the general thrust of government thinking, but it is not a Budget in the sense that it does not, per se, take effect the very same day pursuant to a Ways and Means Motion.

I think my hon. friend would agree that there is a world of difference between the White Paper on national defence or a White Paper on tax reform, and a formal Budget which has its own conventions and has acquired its own traditions and requirements over the decades and centuries.

I am asked for a view in regard to what took place with Mr. Lalonde who was presenting a Budget. There was clearly no option. That required the Minister's resignation because that was an impropriety of the highest parliamentary order.

What has taken place here is consultation pursuant to the publication of a White Paper, as happened with the White Paper on defence two weeks ago. Surely my hon. friend would agree that there was nothing improper two weeks ago, and there is really nothing improper today.

CONSULTANTS' ADVANCE ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I do not see how the Government can get away from the characterization of this White Paper as a document in the nature of a Budget. That is clear from answers given by the Prime Minister today and from answers that the Minister of Finance gave yesterday.

Consultation is fine until the preparation of the final document. However, what precedent is there for giving privileged access of final documents to members of the public before the document is revealed here to Members of Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this particular question has been answered. It was referred to in the Speaker's ruling. These people have taken an oath under the Official Secrets Act in the course of their work advising on the preparation of the White Paper. That is the substance of the position they have taken.

Mr. Kaplan: Parliamentary tradition is clear that members of the public not be given that type of access whether or not they take oaths.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister claim to rest on long established precedent, what precedent is there for giving members of the public under any circumstances—oath or no oath—privileged access to the contents of the document before the revelation of a Budget here?

An Hon. Member: It is not a Budget.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the former Prime Minister and former Ministers of the Crown would know that in any Government there are dozens of consultations going on that involve highly sensitive information about which Canadians are invited to assist the Government, pursuant to the Official Secrets Act. There is nothing new in this.

It took place most recently in regard to the White Paper on national defence which was designed to put forward a position paper that Canadians could then debate more fully in public. There were intimate consultations involved in that before.

There is nothing new in this, and the Minister's conduct in this regard has been consistent with tradition and perfectly proper, as one would expect from this Minister of Finance.

QUERY CONCERNING PRECEDENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I think we all agree that proper consultation on matters such as tax reform is very appropriate. However, I want to indicate to the Prime Minister that this is a White Paper which is government policy by definition, and our information is that it will be accompanied by the tabling of a Ways and Means Motion. It goes far beyond a simple statement of intent by the Government.

The Prime Minister indicated in his response to my Leader that there were all sorts of precedents regarding this matter, where public individuals had access to the final document, whether it was a Budget or a White Paper on taxation to which people from the private sector, not on the payroll of the Department of Finance, had access the day before its tabling in the House of Commons. To what precedent was he referring?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must realize that there is a wide range of precedents of people being involved in the process leading up to a White Paper. I think this has been the case with previous Governments and certainly has been the case with this Government. That is the basis on which these people have been invited, as part of an ongoing process of advice which started last November and will continue until the completion of the process.

ACCESS TO WHITE PAPER CONTENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister because it was the Prime Minister who indicated that there were many precedents for this particular action by the Government.

We have no quarrel with advice being received leading up to the drafting of a White Paper. The point concerns private sector individuals having access to the White Paper in its final form. The Minister of Finance said no changes would be made.

The Prime Minister indicated that there were many precedents of people seeing the final draft. Will he name one precedent in Canadian history where individuals in the private sector had access to this kind of draft?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is precisely the question that was dealt with by the Chair.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it isn't.

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed, it was. In his response the Speaker said that, in regard to the question of propriety, it is a matter of political debate.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what it is.

Mr. Mulroney: As a matter of political debate you can have your opinion and I can have mine, and I disagree with you.

Mr. Broadbent: What an answer.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

LETTER CARRIERS' STRIKE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government has consistently denied the role that it has played in bringing about the postal strike. However, a certain Harold Dunstan, General Manager of Labour Relations for Canada Post, sees it differently. He said this morning, and I quote:

> The agency is still looking for the flexibility it needs to implement a sweeping restraint program ordered by the Conservative Government.

He also said he is getting fed up with the unions' refusal to accept at least some of the concessions the agency needs to wipe out Post Office deficits by next March as the Government wants.

• (1450)

Will the Prime Minister recognize now that his Government has in fact caused the strike? And will he do the proper thing, which is to remove the handcuffs and shackles the Government has imposed on Canada Post and allow it to make reasonable offers which would bring the strike and the violence to an end? This is what we want to know.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Crown corporation was created in 1981, it stated right in the Bill the object was for it to operate on a fiscally break-even basis. The then Government set that for 1982-83. It was extended to 1984-85. Our Government extended it to 1985-86 and then there was an extension to 1987-88. The fact is there have been a lot of extensions to that corporate plan, but more fundamental is the question of whether these negotiations, as they are going on, are restrained by the fiscal or corporate plan or whether in fact it is a matter of the usual kinds of conflicts one sees in many collective bargaining situations in the search for power between the union and management. We have here, in my view, that normal situation.

The corporation made an offer at ten o'clock this morning, or at noon. There has been an indication by the union that it will make a counter offer this evening. The process is proceeding as envisaged by the collective bargaining process. I think that we should let that proceed and ought not to interfere in those talks by continually raising these issues on the floor of the House of Commons.

[Translation]

SERIOUSNESS OF SITUATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says the situation is normal, while television has shown us some incredibly violent scenes where people got hurt. I suppose someone will have to die before the Government decides to intervene.

Is the Government going to wait until the social climate further deteriorates in this country before it takes the only reasonable action it should take, which is to take away the constraints it has imposed on Canada Post—constraints the Corporation admits do exist—and let the Corporation make reasonable offers and thus put an end to a dispute that is getting dangerous, that may lead more violence and even totally paralyse our postal services?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member. There is no place for violence. I have asked Canada Post and, indeed, before I made the request, it had already instructed its managers across the country to avoid situations which have the potential for violence. I hope Mr. McGarry, if he has not yet, will ask his members to avoid violence and I hope we in this Chamber will all counsel that violence be avoided. It is unnecessary.

As I just indicated, negotiations are going on as envisaged by normal collective bargaining. An offer has been made and there is an indication that a counter offer will be made. The Hon. Member is not serving the process well, or the country, by implying that in fact all the blame is on one side and there are distortions in the process.

Mr. Gauthier: It's on your side.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It's the government strike breakers.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member may consider that to his partisan advantage but—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF HAY PRODUCERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, compared to most of the questions from the Opposition this afternoon, my question—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Taylor: —my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Next?

Mr. Speaker: The Members cannot compare the Hon. Member's question with other questions until we have at least heard it. Would the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Taylor: In view of the fact that subsidies paid for the production of barley and greenfeed enable the producers to sell these products to the feeders at a price which undercuts the price of hay, and since the subsidies paid to U.S. farmers for the exportation of compressed hay to Japan stops Canadian hay producers from selling to that market, will the Minister qualify Canadian hay producers for assistance under the Special Canadian Grains Program?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the problems of Canadian agriculture. However, the Hon. Member will know that the rules, guidelines and criteria were established by ourselves in close co-operation and concert with 35 or 40 farm leaders across the country.

The Hon. Member will know as well that to be eligible for the Special Canadian Grains Program market prices must have been directly and detrimentally affected by the U.S. Farm Bill and the Export Enhancement Program. It was the decision of the farm leaders that, of course, hay would not meet the criteria. The Hon. Member will know as well that we established advisory groups in both eastern and western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wise: They have considered and, indeed, reconsidered, and have decided that it would not meet the guidelines.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SECURITY OF MAIL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. He assured me yesterday that security of the mail would be taken care of and that replacement workers would have to meet the same kinds of standards as regular post people. We find now that in fact a member of the CBC was able to get a job as an alternative worker with just a telephone number and an insurance number, whereas the regular workers have to be bondable, finger printed, and checked out before they actually touch the mail.

Will the Minister now admit that he is playing fast and loose with the security of the mail and is giving out keys to people who have not been properly checked?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I checked with Canada Post Corporation and was informed this is standard practice and that permanent employees, when they are hired, start on salary and the security check by the RCMP, in terms of criminal record, is subsequently undertaken as quickly as possible. If it is found they are unsuitable for employment in the Post Office, they are dismissed. That is the same procedure that applies in this case.

Mr. Manly: Just like Roch LaSalle's office.

Mr. Andre: Obviously, in this circumstance, where we are talking about a lot of people in short order, there is not a guarantee that 100 per cent were done within first half hour they started work. Every precaution has been taken and anyone who steals from the mail will be committing a criminal offence and will be taken care of.

TRAINING OF PERSONNEL AND SECURITY CHECKS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Obviously the Minister and the Post Office should not be hiring these replacement workers anyway because of the provocation that presents. But I must point out to the Minister that when a regular post person is hired, they are trained for a couple of weeks—

Some Hon. Members: order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair always tries to accommodate Members with preambles but I think the Hon. Member has laid the foundation for the question and I would ask that the question be put.

Mr. Keeper: Is the Minister not aware that a regular post person when hired has a training period during which the security check can take place before the person actually goes out and delivers the mail, not the way it is happening now with these casual employees where someone can just walk in off the street, is given the mail, and there is no basic security for the mail?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, responding to the preamble of the Hon. Member, he is quoted in a Canadian Press article that he hesitated when asked if an NDP Government would move to ban the use of non-union labour during a legal strike. He said: "Frankly, I really don't know. It's difficult for me to know what we would do if we were in office".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact the Chair had to make a ruling at the beginning of Question Period, I would ask the co-operation of all Hon. Members to continue for another five minutes. I say this, realizing that some Members and perhaps some Ministers may have to leave. I would ask for as much co-operation as we can get.

TAX REFORM

WHITE PAPER—COMPOSITION OF CONSULTANTS GROUPS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the matter of the privileged access of the 31 big-name accountants and lawyers to the White Paper on taxation.

The Minister of Finance said earlier in Question Period that the people on that committee were the best qualified to serve. Will he tell us and the country what is wrong with the qualifications of firms such as Laventhol & Horwath, Peat Marwick and Samson Belair? Why are they less qualified? What is wrong with them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Guy Lord of Samson Belair is a member of this group.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Norman Guerin, also of Samson Belair, is a member of this group.

I would like to qualify what I have said, if I might. I do not want to say that these are the only good lawyers and accountants in the country. They are among the best. They are understood to be among the best. There is some rotation among members of the group depending on their specific technical qualifications. That has resulted in some firms not being represented because, maybe, their top person is not particularly qualified for a particular function for which he is required. But these are clearly among the best in the country.

ACCESS TO CONTENTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister said that the consultation involving this group of 31 was just part of the normal process of consultation that goes on all the time with White Papers and other similar documents. I wish to ask the Minister this.

Were there representatives of workers, low-income Canadians, senior citizens, farmers and fishermen sworn and shown the White Paper in the Department of Finance yesterday in exactly the same way as this group of 31 was shown it? If that is not the case, if they were not given exactly the same access yesterday, then is this a form of privileged access on the part of this group of 31?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had full consultations with representatives of social groups, labour groups, business umbrella groups, sectoral groups, the provinces, and farm associations. This is probably the widest range of consultations that we have had with respect to any document in the Department of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can assure the Hon. Member that the views of these groups have been very carefully taken into account in the production of this White Paper.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING CONFEDERATION OF NATIONAL TRADE UNIONS COUNSELLOR

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Two weeks ago, a union advisor with the CNTU in Quebec, Mr. Marc Boivin, was arrested by the Quebec Provincial Police.

Could the Prime Minister confirm to the House that Mr. Boivin was an informer or a secret agent for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service since 1984, and if so, how can the Prime Minister justify this shocking infiltration of a democratic organization in Quebec, the CNTU, considering that this action was criticized yesterday by Mrs. Paule Gauthier, a member of the committee monitoring the CSIS?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, obviously criminal charges have been laid with respect to this matter. I think it would be improper for any comment to take place at this time. I certainly recommend to the Hon. Member that he be very, very careful in making allegations on the floor of the House of Commons, under its protection, with respect to a matter that is before the courts.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, curiously, no charges have been laid against Mr. Boivin arising out of this incident.

POLICY OF CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that CSIS can plant informers in any democratic organization in Canada without even obtaining a judicial warrant, and given the history of abuses by the security service in the past in failing to distinguish between subversion and dissent, I wish to ask the Prime Minister this. Will he not instruct the Security Intelligence Review Committee to review urgently CSIS policy with respect to planting informers? Meanwhile, will he tell CSIS to stop spying on the labour movement in Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as you know, it is not our practice, my practice or the practice of the Solicitor General to comment with respect to any particular set of circumstances under investigation which is before the courts.

I would only say to the Hon. Member that in general terms CSIS operates under legislative mandate approved by Parliament. There is a very exhaustive set of scrutiny processes involved in that legislation which involves the observation of its activities to ensure that it does in fact operate within the law. In this particular case I think that the Hon. Member would agree that there is a very, very good set of safeguards available to ensure that Canadian interests are protected.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise Hon. Members that there will be one question only from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie and also one from question from the Hon. Member for Drummond. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

ENERGY

EXPORTATION OF ELECTRICITY BY QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Today we heard that unfortunately the National Energy Board turned down an application by Hydro-Québec to export electric power to New England. Because of the time, I have only one question, Mr. Speaker, so I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he intends to ask the National Energy Board to review its decision, to support the application by Hydro-Québec and accelerate the process. I would like to know what explanation the Minister has for the decision to turn down the application, supposedly because there was no evidence the power was surplus to the needs of the other provinces, who, in fact, are themselves exporting power to the United States.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is up to Hydro-Québec to lodge a complaint.

TAX REFORM

EFFECTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and has to do with the White Paper on tax reform which he will make public this evening. Can the Minister assure the House and the Canadian people that tax revenues after this reform will not exceed current taxes, that it is not a trick which will yield more revenues for the public treasury to reduce the deficit, something which would put a heavier tax burden on small wage earners?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can comment on that in a general way and repeat for the benefit of the Hon. Member one of the key objectives that we established for ourselves last October in tax reform, that is to say, that it would not be a revenue grab. We would take the same amount of revenue as a percentage of the total size of our economy after tax reform as before.

I have also indicated that I think that it is important that corporations as a whole pay a greater share of our revenues than would individuals. These are two objectives that I think the Hon. Member will see fulfilled later on this evening.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that there may be some representations from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition with respect to two of our colleagues who have given some considerable service to this place. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF MR. GRAY (WINDSOR WEST) AND MR. ORLIKOW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have occasion again this week as Your Honour has so generously suggested to recognize two Members of the House for dedicated and long service to the people of Canada and to this Chamber. I rise to pay particular tribute to my seat-mate and friend, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and the opposition House Leader for celebrating today the twenty-fifth anniversary of his first election to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I use the same privilege you have accorded to me to extend the same good wishes and admiration to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who has served this House with distinction in a very historic seat in a great tradition from that city, in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1510)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): Mr. Speaker, we are in a happy mood, and you ought to take advantage of it. I hope the Clerk of the House will transmit to Stanley Knowles our best wishes, from this quarter of the House, on his seventy-ninth birthday.

I want to say to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), whose seventy-seventh birthday it was yesterday, that he is looking better than ever; that he is sounding better than ever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: It is his first seventy-seventh, too!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As a matter of fact, the Minister of Veterans Affairs has a younger approach to life than does the current Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

An Hon. Member: He is not nearly as stuffy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sure the House will allow me a personal remark or two in tribute to my friend from Windsor West (Mr. Gray). He has served this House and Canada as Minister of National Revenue, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and President of the Treasury Board. In all of those capacities, and in his capacity as a Member of Parliament, he has fought assiduously for his constituents in Windsor West and for the rights of individual Canadians.

The cause that the Hon. Member is most noted for is his passionate dedication to a strong independent Canada. I reckon that no one in the House can question his unequalled record as a defender of the independent sovereignty of this country over the period of his public life.

I shall have the honour tomorrow evening to attend a dinner in tribute to the Hon. Member for Windsor West, attended by a few hundred, or perhaps a thousand, of his closest and intimate friends, and I am privileged to count myself among those.

While there may be some disagreement around the House about this, the House Leader and I think we make a great team: he does all of the work and I get all of the publicity. Recent events have prompted me to say, why don't we exchange roles?

Let me be personal for a moment.

[Translation]

—I had the honour to introduce the Hon. Member, when he was first elected to the House, to his wife Sharon, and we are very glad and privileged to have the Grays among our best friends.

[English]

He has served in this House under six Prime Ministers, seven Opposition Leaders, nine Speakers and, because of the nature of things, countless Ministers of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I point that out, Mr. Speaker, only to reveal the depth of understanding and appreciation that the Hon. Member has for this institution and the love he has for Parliament.

We in this House, and indeed the people of Canada, owe him a great debt for his unstinting service to the traditions, to the honour, to the privileges of this House, and particularly to the people of Windsor, whom he has served now for 25 years. Lest there be any doubt about his current intentions, he told me privately, before I rose in my place today, that he has every intention of serving another 25 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join with the Leader of the Opposition in paying tribute to two quite distinguished colleagues, the New Democratic Party Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and the Liberal Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), both of whom have served their constituents and this country for a quarter of a century.

A few words first about my colleague. Many Members here will know that the Member for Winnipeg North has worked hard as a Member of Parliament. I have had the pleasure to serve with him for some 19 of his 25 years here. But, what many Members will not know is that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North was in municipal politics, in a variety of capacities, for some 14 years before becoming a Member of Parliament.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have here a man who has truly served the community in which he grew up with incredibly fine and durable distinction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to make two particular points about the Member for Winnipeg North. First, he is one who knows what some of us don't learn—and I think perhaps it may be why some are eventually defeated as Members of this House—that we must always remember those who vote for us. The men and women in his particular constituency are the people who elected him here, and their concerns are front and centre when it comes to his participation in this place.

One does not normally talk about what goes on in caucus, but I can tell Hon. Members that when there are matters that may affect the City of Winnipeg, those matters are brought to the attention of our caucus and this House by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North. He remembers those who vote for him.

I should like to pay particular tribute to David Orlikow, if I may so refer to him in these formal procedures, for his commitment to the principles of social democracy. There have been few men and women in this interesting historical period of our country who have more passionately devoted themselves to that philosophic framework, that commitment to improving the human condition by achieving a better mix of liberty and equality in our country, and beyond. The Hon. Member has reached beyond his commitment to the people of Winnipeg to include Canada, and beyond Canada, the people of the world, in terms of his very serious commitment to the improvement of the global family, if I may put it that way.

I thank him from the bottom of my heart for the work that he has done for the New Democratic Party and for the work that he has done here in the House of Commons on behalf of all of the people of Canada.

Let me turn now to the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Given that he is a distinguished opponent, I of course cannot say something that is too positive, and particularly since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has just assured us that he plans to be a Member for another 25 years. So, I shall choose my words with care and will perhaps be less fulsome than the circumstances warrant.

In all sincerity, there is no Member who has devoted himself to the cause of an independent Canada, a sovereign Canada, and for a working out of economic and social arrangements that are of a higher and more just order, according to his principles, as the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: He has held many Cabinet portfolios, with a wide variety of obligations, and he has carried out his duties with a great dedication to work.

Both Hon. Members are known readers—and that is a refreshing aspect to their respective natures. Most Canadians, I am sure, would probably appreciate it if more Members of Parliament spent more time reading the type of material that is reflected in what these two Members have to say in the House. That is something that the two have in common.

Let me conclude with a personal wish for the Hon. Member for Windsor West, and that is that he succeed abundantly in all of his personal endeavours.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister and my colleagues on the government side of the House, it truly is a pleasure to join with Members opposite in paying tribute to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of their election to this great institution.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that these two men have been returned to this place in each election since 1962 speaks volumes for their integrity and abilities as parliamentarians and the high regard in which they are held by their constituents.

Of course, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the tribute that he paid to the Member for Winnipeg North. I can attest to the fact that in the 19 years that I have been a Member of this House, he has always served his constituents well. He has stood for the interests of Winnipeg, for Manitoba. Indeed, he represented himself as an outstanding Canadian and an outstanding fighter for the issues which affect western Canada.

In offering my congratulations, I also want to say that in the 19 years I have been here I can truthfully say that I have never witnessed, on any occasion, either of these gentlemen not acting in the best traditions of this institution. Clearly they are men of integrity, and clearly they act in the best traditions of the House. They are men of integrity and honour who have always placed the nation's welfare and interest high above partisan gain.

To the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)—and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party have already referred to his very distinguished career as a parliamentarian—may I say on a personal note and as one who negotiates with him on a week-to-week basis with regard to the legislative program of the House, that he is certainly a man of integrity. He is a man of his word. He is a good and fair negotiator. He has always worked toward facilitating the business of the House in the best parliamentary tradition. I want to thank him and assure him that indeed that kind of co-operation is appreciated by the Government and, I am sure, by all Members of the House.

Parliament and Canada are indeed fortunate to have men of such calibre and dedication. I am sure they will continue to retain the confidence of their constituents and return to this place for many years to come.

In conclusion, I want to join with other Members of the House in congratulating the Hon. Stanley Knowles on the occasion of his seventy-ninth birthday. I do not think we could itemize all the tremendous contributions which this gentleman has made to Parliament and to Canada. It is always a pleasure to have him in our midst. We always sense that he is a sort of guardian angel that presides over this institution and one who sort of provokes us into doing those things which are clearly right and clearly in the best interest of the parliamentary tradition.

To my great friend and colleague, a truly great Canadian, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), who celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday on Wednesday, let me say that I agree with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that he is getting younger and better looking every day. I am sure he will be around for a long time to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) who must rise on this day each week to ask the usual question of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I know, after all the marvellous things which have been said about him, that today's exchange will be an absolute model of civility.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will permit me to postpone asking the customary weekly question about the business the Government intends to call, so that I may have a minute or two to respond to the comments of my Leader, the Government House Leader, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

First, I want to join with the good wishes extended already to the Hon. Stanley Knowles and to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) on the occasion of their birthdays. May they go on for many years to come.

Using the precedent of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, may I say in a personal sense, in respect of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who entered the House in the same election as myself in 1962, that frankly it does not seem all that long ago that I first arrived here. Perhaps it is because—and I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North would agree with me—I have had the marvellous privilege of being able to serve in the House of Commons and the marvellous privilege of being able to serve the people of my community, of the City of Windsor, and the people of Canada as a Member of Parliament and also as a Minister. Very few people have had that kind of opportunity. I am deeply grateful to all those who have helped me achieve what I have been able to achieve, no matter how little it may be.

I express my thanks to my own family. I express my thanks as well to the thousands of people in my own community who have worked with me and have supported me over past years to enable me to have the privilege of serving in the House of Commons as a Member of Parliament and, from time to time, the privilege of working as a Minister.

I think I can say that whatever I have done and whatever I hope to do in the House of Commons, the people of my community share with me in these efforts and, hopefully from time to time, in some achievements. In a sense they are here with me, because I feel very much that I am here working with and for them.

Certainly I have been privileged to be able to work for and speak out on behalf of individual Canadians, ordinary Canadians and their families, as workers, consumers, and small business people. I have been privileged to be able to speak out and work for the preservation of Canada as a strong, sovereign, and independent country.

I am grateful for the words of my Leader in that regard, but I want to say to him that I am not sure I am even ready to consider rushing in to accept the offer he made a few minutes ago. I think I would like to see the present situation continue, hopefully crowned with even greater achievement and success in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say how much I appreciate the great privilege of being a Member of the House and representing thousands of electors, thousands of constituents who have allowed me to serve them as their Member of Parliament and, from time to time, as a Minister. It is a great privilege and a challenge to work for one's country, to do one's best to build it, and to make a better life for its whole population.

[English]

I thank very much those who have spoken for their kind words. I hope, with the support of the Almighty and my electors, to be able to continue to try to live up to the sentiments expressed in those remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), and of course the Leader of our Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) for the kind words they have expressed.

It has indeed been an honour and a privilege for me to have been able to be here for 25 years, to be able to do the things I want to do, and to be able to express the views and to push for the ideas in which I believe.

I want to recognize and thank the people of my part of Winnipeg for letting me do this. I have not been too surprised, because it is a tradition which goes back to 1900.

In 1900, the first Labour Member of Parliament in Canada, Arthur Putee, was elected in Winnipeg. In 1925, Winnipeg North sent a Labour Member, Mr. Heaps, to Parliament, who stayed here until 1940. We had one Liberal for one term in 1945, then we elected a CCF Member, Alistair Stewart, who stayed here until 1958. We had a Conservative Member for one term, and after that I was elected. The people of my part of Winnipeg support our Party consistently.

I want to thank the people of my constituency. I want to thank the members and supporters of our Party. I want to thank particularly members of my family, some of whom, to my great surprise, are here today. I know I speak for all Members of Parliament when I say that it is our families who sacrifice when we are Members of Parliament. Every Member of Parliament knows how little their families see of them because of their work.

It has been a great honour for me to represent what I consider to be one of the finest constituencies in Canada which has representatives of every racial, religious, and ethnic group in Canada living in it. We have native people, the original inhabitants of our country and we have representatives of some of the newest ethnic groups including Koreans and El Salvadorans. We have people from every economic group, from people who are on welfare through to a few people who are quite wealthy.

I am proud of the fact that I have been able to represent these people. I am proud of the fact that I have been able to speak for a vast majority of them in a way of which they approve. I hope to be able to continue to do that for some years to come. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the best way I could confirm what I said a few minutes ago is to seek your permission to ask the government House Leader what business the Government intends to call for the next week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will call Bill C-55, amendments to the Immigration Act. Tomorrow we will debate the motion respecting capital punishment, as we will on Monday. Tuesday it is proposed that we will deal with Bill C-63 in all stages, the Small Businesses Loans Act.

We will deal with third reading of Bills C-15 and C-41 and second reading of Bills C-53, C-61 and C-54 as well as the resolution respecting Pentecostal schools in Newfoundland. We will be working with Parties opposite to work out the best arrangement as to when those Bills will be called so that we can ensure that the Ministers and the official critics are available in the best time slots to expedite the business for those days. Wednesday the House will not sit.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DIVULGENCE OF COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place on a point of privilege that arises from what I happen to believe is a very serious and erroneous act of one of the Standing Committees. It concerns the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism, a meeting of which I attended this morning.

The committee is in the process of preparing a very thorough and long-ranging report on the status of multiculturalism policy in Canada for the next decades to come. The report is completed and is at the printers. We expect to table the report in the House of Commons on June 29, the day before we break for the summer.

However, I found out this morning at the committee meeting that the committee has given an advance copy of this report to the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who is also the secretary of State. I believe that that act runs counter to the spirit of parliamentary reform and to the independence of the Government and of Ministers enjoyed by committees.

I would suggest that the supplying of the report to the Hon. Member for Rosedale is an affront to the rights and privileges of all 282 Members of Parliament. The report is still confidential. It was to be tabled on the floor of the House of Commons for all Members and therefore for all Canadians on June 29.

We can all concede that once the report is tabled, we would hope that the Government, and particularly the Minister responsible, would take a very serious look at the report and would try to implement those very concepts that have been articulated in and recommended by it. However, I find it completely unacceptable as a Member of Parliament who has worked on this confidential report that it be sent before it is tabled in the House of Commons to the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism (Mr. Della Noce). I believe that I have worked on no other committee that has followed such a course.

The fact remains that there are still two weeks left and the Government could have waited to see what was recommended in the report rather than trying to justify that it is proper and fit that the Department and the Minister ask the committee for an advance copy before it is tabled and deposited with the House of Commons.

I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Citation 647 of Beauchesne's which reads as follows:

> No act done at any committee should be divulged before it has been reported to the House.

It goes on to read:

The publication of proceedings of committees conducted with closed doors or of reports of committees before they are available to Members will, however, constitute a breach of privilege.

Without taking any further time, I would request that you, Mr. Speaker, look into this matter, because I think it sets a very dangerous precedent. It undermines the independence of a Standing Committee of Parliament. It undermines the privilege of all Hon. Members of the House to know of the contents of the report at the same time the Member for Rosedale and Minister responsible for Multiculturalism do. I believe this is a sad day for the independence of a committee and a sad day for parliamentary reform. If you rule in favour of a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move a motion accordingly.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in assisting you in coming to a conclusion on my hon. friend's prima facie case, I would like to draw your attention to two items which I think should be brought into play. First, breaches of privilege in committee may be dealt with only by the House itself on report from the committee. Therefore, I would submit that if there has been a breach of my hon. friend's privileges as a member of that committee, it would first be required that the committee itself report that breach to the House.

There is no proof before the House of what my hon. friend has suggested. There are no committee minutes, there has been no reference to it in the media, there is no correspondence and there is nothing to show that in fact the Hon. Minister, either in his capacity as a Minister or in his capacity as a Member, received a copy of the report.

Obviously I am prepared to entertain the comments of my hon. friend who would not mislead the House. He has said that the Hon. Minister has in either capacity received what I would guess would be a draft copy of the report because there can be no final copy of the report until it is presented in the House.

The second point I want to make deals with the citation to which my hon. friend referred, Citation 647 of Beauchesne's. In this case, I believe we should read the heading of that citation which is "Premature Disclosure of the Report". The full citation reads as follows:

No act done at any committee should be divulged before it has been reported to the House. Upon this principle the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, on April 21, 1937, resolved "That the evidence taken by any select committee of this House and the documents presented to such committee and which have not been reported to the House, ought not to be published by any member of such committee or by any other person".

It is the publication of the proceedings of committees which are conducted behind closed doors which constitutes the breach, not the giving of a report to another Hon. Member of the House.

I would suggest that were that report to be published in the media as a result of the actions of any Member, my hon. friend would be absolutely correct. However, since the report has gone to a Member of the House in his capacity as a Member, there is no breach until it is published.

Drawing upon my meagre experience as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee at one time, when we were drafting reports it was the nature of the beast that from time to time Members would take draft reports for consideration prior to returning to a meeting for a final rewrite. That was done on the understanding that all Members of the House are honourable Members and that it would be a very serious breach for the committee report in draft form to be published before it was presented in the House.

I would suggest that until such time as the report is prematurely disclosed and published, there can be no breach of my hon. friend's privilege.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has raised a matter which is obviously of concern. As I take his representations, his complaint is that it was his understanding, and perhaps that of others, that at this stage a report being prepared would not be divulged to anyone other than committee members. That may very well be a serious complaint in the context of all that has been happening in the committee. In this case the Hon. Member has advised the Chair and other Hon. Members that he has learned the report was given to a Minister.

I have listened with care to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, who I think has very properly pointed out that having given the document to a Minister, or for that matter to some other Member of this place, that is not—also in the opinion of the Chair—that sort of publication which would be the basis of a question of privilege.

The Chair is also concerned about another procedural rule, which Hon. Members will recall, that the Chair, except in some exceptional circumstances, ought not to entertain a question of privilege with respect to proceedings in a committee until the committee has brought the matter to the Chair.

Under the circumstances, perhaps the Chair could suggest to the Hon. Member for York West that the complaint, which is certainly real enough, ought to be taken back to the committee and then, depending on what happens there, he might want to raise the matter again with the Chair. Indeed, depending on what happens there, the Chair may be seized of the matter as a consequence of a report coming from the committee.

I would say again with respect to the affairs of a committee, there has been a long-standing tradition that it is not for the Chair to meddle in the internal workings of a committee. At the same time the Chair does ask all members of committees and committee chairpersons to take appropriate steps to ensure that there are a minimum number of complaints with respect to the proceedings in committee. Inevitably, if there are complaints, those complaints are brought to the Chair primarily because it is to the Chair that an Hon. Member can at least air the grievance, even if in procedural terms the matter may have to go back to the committee.

I ask the Hon. Member to abide by the long-standing rules of this place and take the complaint back to the committee. I would hope that it could be properly dealt with there.

I thank the Hon. Member for his concise and well-reasoned argument and I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for quite properly pointing out that there are procedural rules, traditions, and judgments by which I am bound in this case.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

Hon. Gerry Weiner (for the Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-55 now before this House for second reading. I do so encouraged by the broad public support the people of Canada have already shown for this proposed legislation, less because it excludes those who seek to abuse Canada's generosity than because it confirms our country's determination to do everything possible to help the genuine refugee in need of our protection. We can take pride that 75 per cent of those taking part in the recent Goldfarb poll on this issue responded positively to this long-standing commitment which lies at the very heart of this Bill.

Bill C-55 is about one thing. This Government will protect the genuine refugee in need of that protection, period. That is what C-55 is about, and that is all C-55 is about. Yet it has been opposed by many of those who share with us this one important principle.

It was John Locke who wrote almost 300 years ago that new opinions are always suspected and usually opposed without any other reason but because they are not already common. I do not question for one moment the sincerity and conviction of those who have criticized C-55. They speak with a voice that comes from the heart, from values and beliefs which go right to the core of what we Canadians are, what we as a society and nation stand for. It is precisely because these values are so important to all of us that we must not belittle them, either through intemperate rhetoric or actions which only serve to divide us, or through our inherent distrust of new ways and new ideas of achieving the same objectives that the old ways and the old ideas failed to achieve.

I understand the concerns about access, review, and the concept of safe third countries which in particular led to opposition to and criticism of this legislation. What I ask those critics to understand, however, is the intent of C-55, an intent which I believe answers those concerns.

[Translation]

We want it to enable us to process the cases and give the same importance to the factors speed, justice and equity. We want it always to give the benefit of the doubt so as to ensure that genuine refugees who really need our protection will indeed get that protection.

That is our only objective. There is no other, absolutely no other. However, the points we are debating and the reasons why it has been necessary to design a new refugee status determination process are more complex.

Consider these reasons for a moment: the ever increasing world-wide pressures of migratory movements of an economic nature; the shameful manipulation of people desperately seeking better conditions elsewhere, which led to the mushrooming number of false claims; the adoption of new immigrant and refugee legislation in the United States and in certain European countries, with the resulting scramble here in Canada to obtain landing rights or some sort of official status.

[English]

Clearly the old refugee determination system is unable to handle these and other new realities. It was never intended to. It was designed for circumstances and for a time which, while only a few short years ago, today we can look back at as being far more innocent and far less sophisticated than our own. We could all wish it were otherwise but we cannot turn the clock back. We simply do not have that luxury.

The reality is that before we introduced control measures on refugee claims in February those claims were being made at a weekly rate equal to the annual rate just six or seven years earlier. Those control measures have been a temporary answer to the most blatant abuse, but they are not a solution.

It is the Government's view, and one I believe is implicit in Bill C-55, that such a solution will not come about unless we adhere to one principle above all others, namely, that Canada's refugee determination system be able to distinguish between the genuine refugee in need of our protection and all other claimants not in need of that protection.

You may call it maintaining the integrity of our refugee determination system, although the expression seems to set off alarm bells. "Integrity" has become a dirty word. However, I have no trouble with the idea of preserving the integrity of our system and process here in Canada if it means this principle will be met.

I have no trouble with that at all because distinguishing between need and no need, between genuine and false claims, is not dumping, orbiting, or any of the other practices by which some nations may be reneging on their obligations and commitments. We place no limit, in theory or in fact, upon refugees in real need whom we will help today or tomorrow.

This, of course, goes to the heart of one major concern of those who oppose Bill C-55—access. Yet, who is denied access under this legislation?

If the claimant is already recognized as a refugee by another country he or she will be denied access unless they can demonstrate a fear of persecution in the country which accorded them protection. If the claim has no credibility it will be denied access to the refugee determination system. If it is a rejected claim that has not been 90 days outside Canada, it will also be denied.

However, the legitimate refugee with no prior possibility of protection from another country will not be prevented from obtaining that protection in Canada and access will not be denied on the basis that the claimant simply passed through another country on the way to Canada. It will not be denied if there is the slightest danger of refoulement. The legitimate refugee in need of our protection is who we are obliged to help, who we want to help, and who we will help.

Every claimant will have an opportunity to argue why his or her claim should be heard. It is not correct that the initial hearing before an immigration adjudicator and a refugee board member is a prescreening. It is an integral part of the fair and impartial process which we intend to establish.

This question of screening or prescreening is more than a matter of semantics. It is unfortunate that materials released at the introduction of Bill C-55 used the expression because to me screening is what happens before the first stage. If there is a screening it is the initial examination by an immigration officer at the port of entry, an examination which cannot by itself exclude any claimant.

If you want screening, look to the border police of many European countries with records of humanitarian assistance equal to our own. Some can turn claimants around and send them back from whence they came in a matter of hours. Others have set aside a budget greater than Canada's federal government grants to NGOs for settlement services. That $5 million plus a year is to buy airline tickets to launch claimants back into orbit.

In one or two cases they put armed police on aircraft as they arrive to check papers and make summary decisions on any doubtful cases, decisions which expel such cases before they even set foot on the soil of the countries concerned, without formal hearings, without counsel, and without translation.

That is not the way in Canada. Under the initial hearing before an immigration adjudicator and the refugee board member there must be absolutely no doubt that the claim is false for the claimant not to be allowed to proceed—not some doubt, not hardly a doubt, but no doubt, none.

[Translation]

Never will we even take a chance of returning a legitimate claimant to a country where he might be persecuted or experience a worse fate still. This is why the provisions of Bill C-55 to set up an official list of safe third countries have been more carefully drafted than those of any other country where a similar procedure is followed.

The notion of a third country is definitely not a way of turning our backs to those refugees whom we would not be prepared to welcome here. On the contrary, mindful of the fact that genuine refugees often are educated people with good training and superior motives, I believe that many of them are precisely the type of people Canada would like to attract during a period when immigration is given more importance. As it happens, we are at the beginning of such a period.

But here is the important point, the distinction to make: a person who already enjoys the protection of another country or who has had enough means and opportunities to obtain such protection should not be able to enter Canada as a refugee status claimant. That person can very well file a standard immigration application and stands very good chances of being selected.

On the other hand, a refugee who is already under protection elsewhere may be sponsored by the Government or a private group for relanding purposes. Once Bill C-55 has been adopted we will continue to reland refugees with the same determination, without lessening our commitment in that respect. This year alone we expect to admit 18,000 refugees this way.

At the risk of repeating myself, I say again: By adopting the concept of safe third country, we want to extend through Bill C-55 all the resources of our refugee determination process to those who have nowhere to go and really need our protection. It is not a hard-noses means to exclude those we do not want to accept.

If such had been our goal, we would not have subjected the list of safe third countries to so many stringent criteria.

First, the Cabinet is directly responsible for that list. This is very important because if someone goofs or an error happens, or if pertinent information is not taken into account, the Cabinet will be responsible rather than the process.

[English]

Knowing the degree of scrutiny which attends its every single decision, I cannot think of a better safeguard than to give this responsibility to Cabinet. The Members of this House, the NGOs, the media, and the people of Canada themselves will know exactly who is accountable. It will not be some faceless bureaucrat and not the system, but the Ministers of the Government themselves.

You may be certain, therefore, that the list and the document centre which will be created to support it will be recipients of the most up-to-date information possible. It will come from our own External Affairs, from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, from the Refugee Board itself, and from many other sources. It will be accurate and comprehensive.

It will not become a complex and impossible system to manage, as some have suggested, because of our absolute insistence on criteria of the highest standard and because under such criteria the number of potential safe third countries is, sadly for the world, pitifully small. We have stated in our announcement that a safe third country for one group of nationals may not be safe for another.

In actual operation, however, our safeguards will go even further because the third country provision will not work successfully unless we have some degree of understanding, an arrangement with the countries themselves. We do not intend to act as have some and use the process to place refugees in orbit. The possibility of de facto protection and safe return must be entirely clear or it shall not be exercised.

I am confident that this kind of insistence, this kind of quality, which I believe and know is built into both the intent and the actual operation of Bill C-55, will not fail us, neither today nor tomorrow.

• (1600)

We knew we had to create a determination system to meet the present crisis, but also one which would withstand future pressures equally well. Our obligation on both counts, therefore, was to insist that quality be the hallmark of the proposed new system, and quality there is. It is in the third country list. It is in the initial hearing which, in my opinion, puts the odds greatly in favour of the claimant going to the full refugee board if he or she has any grounds whatsoever for a legitimate claim. Of course, there is quality in the new board itself.

Hearings before the board will be oral. They will be non-adversarial. The claimant will be entitled to counsel, provided, in many cases, at government expense. The claimant will also have full access to the document centre. The board itself will be fully and completely independent.

The board members must be hand-picked for their knowledge and expertise in refugee issues. They will be trained further upon appointment. I can assure Members of the House that in seeking the best qualified people to serve as members of the new refugee board, we will not hesitate even to look to those communities active in refugee issues which are most vocal in opposition to Bill C-55.

Why would we do this? Because, again, as far as the intent of C-55 is concerned, in its one central purpose of helping those who truly do need our help, we are not in disagreement with the non-governmental organizations, the Members opposite, the churches or anyone else in Canada who shares this objective.

Again, I appeal to our critics to look at the over-all intent before they judge the specifics. Before they ask why there is no review of fact, for instance, look at the system as a whole, as it has been designed. Look at the insistence upon quality and the insistence upon fairness. Look upon the benefit of doubt given at every stage, which is itself review.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Looking around the House, I do not believe that we have a quorum in the Chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do now have a quorum.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, only one of the two board members at the board hearing need find in favour of the claimant for the claim to be accepted.

Yes, there are many "what ifs", and I am aware that a review process would satisfy many of the doubts about Bill C-55. But where would it end? How long before there would be the demand for a review of the review? How long before we would be back with the same year upon year impossible process we have now? Justice has an obligation to be accurate, but also to be swift.

If new circumstances unfold during a hearing itself, they can be taken into consideration right there. If the process itself has not been adhered to, then leave to appeal on a point of law will be granted.

Finally, let us not forget that at any time, if the facts merit it, permission to remain in Canada on humanitarian grounds may be granted by the holder of my present office.

It is my belief that within Bill C-55 lies not only a workable but also a fair refugee determination system.

Surely I do not need to explain to any Member of the House who disagrees with the opportunity afforded by the legislative process for debate, for the gathering of evidence or for the proposition of amendments.

Bill C-55 calls for swift determination because speed in this case is an agent of justice. Refugees want and need to pick up the pieces of their lives. But accuracy will not be sacrificed.

Bill C-55 upholds the idea of integrity because without it the system cannot work. Integrity is important because without it we cannot for long maintain the support of our partners in this undertaking, the people of Canada.

Public opinion is important, and I applaud the people of Canada who support this Bill and who share our determination to assist the refugee in legitimate need of our protection. Let none of us who is privileged to sit in this Chamber ever forget that it is the people of Canada, not we ourselves, who have built the great traditions of humanity which we all honour and in which we all take pride.

[Translation]

Refugees are sponsored by Canadians. It is because of them that immigration is such an essential and decisive factor to build the open, welcoming society in which we live. They make relocation a positive, successful experience.

And Canadians in the final analysis pay the bill. It is with their taxes that we discharge our obligations and commitments internationally to help both development and refugees. In both cases Canadians are generous.

Canada will remain true to the remarkable reputation it has built up since Wold War II in the area of help to refugees by allowing more than half a million refugees to relocate on our soil.

We will continue to do so because we are aware of our heavy responsibilities. Because we respect the commitments we freely undertook under the Geneva Convention, which to us is neither a condition binding us to admit refugees from certain countries, nor a set of restrictions applicable even to refugees we accept, denying them for five years the right to work, restricting their freedom to move and forcing them to live in camps even though they have parents in the same country.

We will keep on showing our traditional humane attitude in our will to put an end internationally to political agitation and economic depression, injustice and intolerance, racism and persecution.

And we will maintain the same attitude in our personal commitments aimed at improving all our mechanisms and institutions which make it possible for us to govern and enforce the law.

Bill C-55 is part of this process. It is not an end in itself. It is not a universal remedy for all ills, under any circumstances, something which would be immutably and forever engraved in stone.

[English]

But within it there lies that fundamental commitment upon which we should and must agree.

Almost two generations ago the fledgling United Nations issued a proclamation which began with the following words:

> Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.
> Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights have resulted in barbarous acts which have outraged the conscience of mankind, and the advent of a world in which human beings shall enjoy freedom of speech and belief and freedom from fear and want has been proclaimed as the highest aspiration of the common people.

As we approach the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, we can number the world's refugees in the millions; 10 million, 15 million, perhaps even 20 million.

In this age of cynicism there is no great difficulty in finding grounds upon which to distrust the world's commitment to the refugee and to human rights.

But I say to Members of the House and to the people of Canada that they will not find such grounds within the actions of this Government.

[Translation]

As we were able to see last week or the week before at the Venice Summit, a voice continues to place human rights at the top of all agenda.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) continue to fight against tyranny and injustice wherever they show their ugly heads. They made every effort to convince their opposite numbers that there is no room for compromise when human dignity is at stake.

Under their guidance, we are seeking solutions, whether abroad through our diplomatic action and development assistance, or even here in Canada, through our settlement programs which have never been so successful.

But we should have no illusion. Whatever its refugee status determination policy may be, Canada cannot solve this problem all by itself.

Yet, our first concern should be to help all those who need our assistance and protection.

As far as all the other people are concerned, whether they are recognized in other countries as refugees or economic migrants, Canada will always be prepared to entertain applications from thoses who meet our immigration criteria.

• (1610)

[English]

We hold that possibility open to all peoples of all races, all colours and all religions. We want new people, we need new people, and this Government is actively working to find those people. We have already increased immigration levels from what they were when we took office by almost 50 per cent. We are now working to see that actual landings correspond to those levels. For the future, we are seriously considering raising both levels and landings. These are not the policies of a Government which is anti-immigrant or anti-refugee. They are the policies of a Government which welcomes both and is committed to both.

Bill C-55 is an integral and honourable part of this commitment, a part which will work swiftly, fairly and justly. To the refugee in genuine need of our protection, it will say but one thing, welcome.

What have we actually done by bringing forward this refugee process? What is it that our process will do?

Mr. Berger: Bring shame on Canada.

Mr. Weiner: I am sure the Hon. Member does no justice or service to the real refugees, the people whom he and I would like to help, by his very unhelpful interventions.

The purpose of this Bill is to provide protection to those who need protection, a safe home to those who have no home. For people who already have a home, a roof over their heads, indeed, there is less priority and they should be applying as regular immigrants to this country. We have brought forward a process which is fair, quick and which balances reason with compassion. It is a very practical solution because in a very decisive manner it identifies and welcomes real refugees. However, abusers will be kept out. There is no room for fakes in this particular system. We are managing our resources effectively to the benefit of the real refugees. This is a real world, not a theoretical world. It requires subjective criteria not subjective opinion. We are putting common sense to what we are doing.

Mr. Berger: We have heard that before.

Mr. Weiner: Of course you have, and you are going to hear it again. I know the Hon. Member does not like to hear it, but the majority of Canadians understand and know that what we are doing is about to be for the benefit of all real refugees. I hear a lot of naivete, but we have a realistic solution. We are creating a hospitable environment where genuine refugees will benefit.

We cannot take the public attitude for granted for the support which is needed to build broader refugee programs with the type of refugee problem the world is facing. We must continue to build that feeling in Canada. We must build a broader immigration policy because of the benefits immigrants and refugees bring to this country.

We have built a lot of safeguards into the process. Those are the strengths of what we are doing. We have given the benefit of the doubt to the claimant. Every claimant will be seen and heard by an independent, objective convention refugee board member. This person will be represented by counsel at all stages at quality hearings. All of those things will be done. With respect to a Third World country, we will be very, very careful. The human rights record of that country will be carefully examined, its record in protecting refugees and all nationals. We are going to seek the widest possible advice in building that list. We will be consulting the very people who have worked for years in the refugee community, the organizations, our own embassies and high commissions abroad and the international humanitarian agencies. A documentation centre will be set up, and indeed I have underlined that there must be an ad hoc arrangement. The country we are going to be asking the person to go back to and seek protection in must be willing to receive him back. What we are doing is good for the refugee, it is good for the community and good for Canada. I will repeat the words of the Montreal Gazette, and say that this Bill should be passed speedily.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to rise and address Bill C-55 at the beginning of second reading. It is ironic to a certain degree that Bill C-55 in its second reading has come up in this year of 1987 which has been designated by the United Nations as the International Year for the Homeless. It is an effort of the international community to reach out to those who do not have a home, those who are looking for a roof over their heads for themselves and their families.

I cannot think of any individual or group who better defines the homeless than those who are refugees. It is ironic that when we put a magnifying glass to this piece of legislation, it really translates, for these refugees who are searching for their new home, that the Government is playing Pontius Pilate. It is washing its hands of responsibility, which runs counter to the traditions of past Governments and this country. In fact, in large measure, to be a Canadian means to have initially been a stranger, to have left the familiar for the new. That is what it means, in large measure, to be a Canadian. Waves upon waves of immigrants have sought a new opportunity, a new chance, and Canada has allowed that new lease on life. At the same time these refugees have helped to build and develop a country which is second to none in the world.

When we talk about our immigration program, we talk of family reunification, extended family reunification and independent categories of individuals, such as entrepreneurs who wish to come here and invest their capital and know-how, students wanting to access our educational system and, after they leave and return to their own homelands, become ambassadors, if you will, for this country. And we also talk of refugees. In terms of refugee legislation, Canada has played a leadership role in the international community. It is not every day that in competition with the big superpowers of this world, we can lay claim to being the leaders on one particular issue. But if there is one area in which Canada can hold its head high, acting as a trigger for other countries, it is in the area of refugees. Successive Liberal Governments have had the courage to lead and not follow.

The Minister is right when he says that it is not the Government or Members of Parliament who build countries, that it is not necessarily Members of Parliament or governments who have to be thanked for allowing people to come to a country. It is Canadians and public opinion which have wanted those policies to happen.

I submit to the Minister that we need a Government that is also prepared to lead. We need a Government that is prepared not to manipulate public opinion for its own political and partisan reasons. We need a Government which will educate, lead and articulate what it means to be a landed immigrant and what it means to be seeking refugee status. We have to deal with those matters legitimately. It is morally bankrupt and intellectually dishonest to confuse the two and to play one against the other.

The greatest frustration in Canada vis-à-vis immigration, or one of them, is probably the inability of Canadians to sponsor family and relatives to come here. Many of us in this place go home on Friday evenings and have our constituency days on Saturdays. How many immigrant-related cases do we see? How many individuals do we interview in our offices who cannot understand for the life of them why their uncle, their aunt or their nephew cannot come here where they would have shelter, financial, and linguistic and cultural assistance from their families? They would probably even be given a job. They cannot understand why they cannot come into the country. Unfortunately, some of them look to the refugee back-log and ask themselves: "How come the Government is prepared to let refugee A in but not my nephew?" That is a legitimate question, but it is a different one. It would behove the Government not to answer that question and not to solve the problems by addressing the need for family reunification. Right now the percentage of family reunifications is much lower in percentage terms than it was under past Liberal Governments.

We must begin to debate whether we should not be giving more points to people who have family in Canada in order to come to Canada. We must begin to debate the expansion of the definition of family class. That is how we must do it. That is how we must begin to try to solve the problem for Canadians who cannot have their families join them here legitimately. Stepping up our refugee legislation does not provide an answer to them, a move which creates the perception that Canadians cannot bring in their family members because there are too many refugees coming in already. That strategy is wrong. It is morally wrong. I ask the Government in its marketing strategy to begin to deal with those two classes independently and responsibly.

With respect to immigration and, in particular, refugee legislation, we have a responsibility to the international community under the Geneva Convention. We cannot deal with refugee legislation in a vacuum. We cannot deal with refugees in isolation. We must recognize, as past Liberal Governments have recognized, that if we are to solve the problem, we will solve it in concert and in co-operation with other countries. We cannot deal with legislation as regressive as Bill C-55 in isolation and expect the problem to go away. It will not go away.

The Government also has a responsibility to educate with respect to the evolution of refugee legislation. It is simply too easy to say: "Well, the past Liberal Government left us with a mess. Here it is and we are trying to clean it up. What was there before and how did we select refugees?"

I submit that what we are dealing with is a new phenomenon in terms of refugees. In the 1960s and the 1970s we had the luxury of sending our visa officers to various postings to select refugees on the basis of certain criteria. The community then had a chance to sponsor refugees and lodge them within their own neighbourhoods in different parts of the country. That system was very orderly. It was very clean and effective. But then in the late 1970s and early 1980s, these refugees were not waiting in the camps for the visa officers. They were in fact coming to our country by various and different means and claiming refugee status. Therefore, we had to adapt from the old structure and the old system of doing things to a new one. That is where the problem originates. It was not in terms of any one Government leaving a mess for another Government.

I think that lending our support and our assistance to those less well-off is something for all Governments to undertake regardless of political stripe. However, I think that there is a transition in terms of the phenomenon of refugees that has not been expressed honestly and candidly by the Government. We are now into a different phase of the system which requires a different system and a different mechanism within the country to address expeditiously, fairly and humanely those who are in Canada and those who are asking for refugee status. That is why the Plaut report was commissioned by our Government in the dying days of the previous administration. It was to try to come to grips with how we would move in this important watershed of world refugees.

Then the present Government came into power. The Plaut report was a very substantial and significant report suggesting a certain direction. It took three or four different Conservative Ministers of Immigration, after they had received the Plaut report, to make a pronouncement on it, to make a decision on it with respect to what they were going to do and what they were going to implement.

Therefore, there was a delay in the formation of this Government. There was the promise by different Ministers that the Plaut report, or the spirit of it, would in fact be translated into legislation very quickly. We were told that this would be done by 1985. We were then told it would not be until 1986. We are now into 1987 and we are just getting ready to give second reading to the legislation. I submit that there has been a procrastination within the Government to come to grips with the Plaut report, after the standing committee has laboured for long hours and with great effort.

What did we get at the end of this three-year consultation process? We got a betrayal of the consultation process. Not only did we have a long delay before the Government responded officially, but when it chose to respond it did not listen to the results of that three-year consultation process. The Minister spent 40 minutes this afternoon saying how fair the system was, how great it was and what type of leadership role he and the Government are taking with Bill C-55.

Where is the support within constituencies to support those claims? I ask the Minister to name one non-governmental organization that at the very least leaves an indication that it might be in support of this legislation. I underline the word "might". Where are those individuals who have been inherently involved in the process and who have congratulated the Minister? Sure it is great. He holds up Goldfarb and says: "Eighty-three per cent of Canadians support our legislation". But Goldfarb also said that 75 per cent of Canadians want a fair system. He knows and I know that perhaps Canadians have not had the time or the luxury to read through the Bill. If they did, then that 83 per cent figure would plummet like dead weight in terms of people thinking that this is a fair system. They have indicated through their vote that they want a fair system. The key question is: Is this Bill fair?

Those who have taken the time and trouble to read the Bill have given their verdict. And what is that verdict? What are people saying?

Tom Clark, a tireless worker for the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, said:

> Instead of access there is a screen, instead of bringing Canada a notch ahead of European countries, the immigration minister has brought it down to their level. It's despicable.

Michael Schelew, Amnesty International said:

It's an about-face on Canada's humanitarian record, that may place people fleeing persecution in jeopardy.

Elie Wiezel, the winner of the Nobel Prize, said:

"I believe that a society can be measured and judged by its attitude towards strangers . . . I would hope that Canada would like to be measured according to these lofty rules. I say Canada should lead by example.

Lorne Waldman, of the Canadian Jewish Congress said:

The long-term aim of the immigration department is to eliminate all refugee claims within Canada. The Government has spent millions of dollars and innumerable hours consulting on this problem, and everyone's recommendations have been ignored altogether.

And Gunther Plaut, the author of the Government Commission Report, had this to say:

It does not do justice to our international obligations to protect refugees. Nazi Germany would qualify as a safe country under Canada's proposed new refugee rules. I don't think I would have been let in. I came in the 1930s from Nazi Germany. The Government is building a Berlin Wall around the country.

Mr. Speaker, those organizations and those individuals have fought, and continue to fight, for the plight of refugees. They have looked at Bill C-55, and that is their verdict. I suggest to the Minister that, on behalf of the Government and of Cabinet, he has the responsibility to defend and promote that constituency. He has an obligation to stand up in Cabinet and fight for those constituencies.

Certainly we cannot have the ideal, a piece of legislation that is perfect for every single one of the 25 million people in this country. That is impossible. I agree with that. But it is also irresponsible to push ahead stubbornly with a piece of legislation that every major constituency group—every individual involved, every church leader, every community group leader—describes as unfair and unbecoming in the traditions of Canada.

He has a responsibility to listen to his constituency as well, rather than hide behind a poll that can be interpreted in 101 different ways.

Canadians believe in the integrity of a Government to give it a fair system. They do not believe in a Government that says one thing and does another.

Mr. Speaker, we have tried to do our part. We are only 40 in the Liberal Party. We know that we are going to lose every single vote, until 1988. Canadians know that. But what we are not prepared to do is to lose the debate. What we are not prepared to do is to lie down and allow this Government to introduce a piece of legislation that Canadians do not want.

We have tried to be responsible. That is why we have used Question Period and two Opposition Days to focus on the immigration policy over-all and specifically on Bill C-55.

The communities have tried to do what they can. We start the debate on the motion for the second reading of this Bill at the end of a major one-week national campaign by church groups, by community groups, by volunteers, to try to mobilize and sensitize Canadian public opinion and Canadians as to what is contained in Bill C-55—something that the Government does not have the courage to do outside this Chamber.

In every city, people have collected petitions, people have gone on hot line shows, and people have written letters. With deep emotion, we had re-enacted, at Harbour Front in Toronto, the arrival of the St. Louis in Canada. The refugees were in a boat, and we met them in a boat—all in an effort to bring this issue a little closer to the people of Canada. That is the sort of effort that has been made by people across this country, and by the Opposition. But what has the Government done? What has been the role of the Government? The role of the Government has been to try to create and fabricate a crisis. It has tried to create the impression that Canada is being swarmed by refugees. It is doing so in parallel with what it has tried to do in the capital punishment debate, that being to use one issue to climb the political ladder of popularity. Well, that is something that is not working very well in either instance. I suggest to you that that ladder will crumble; that the Tories and the Minister will take a fall—because that ladder is built on quicksand. It is not built on Canadian tradition; it is not built on what the people of my riding and the people of Toronto, and elsewhere in this country, want to see come about. It is not built on the foundation of what has been achieved by past Governments, with the concurrence of Canadians, in terms of refugee policies.

There is a backlog of refugees. I readily admit that. But it is a shame that this Government is trying to use that backlog to suggest that there is a crisis and that in light of that crisis, this legislation is required. It is trying to legitimize what is essentially a regressive piece of legislation.

In past years, Canadians supported Governments in accepting refugees into this country. In 1947, the Government of the day permitted 186,000 in as part of the post-war European movement. In 1958, 37,000 Hungarians were allowed in; in 1968, 11,000 Czechoslovakians; in 1972, 7,000 Ugandans; in 1973, 7,000 South Americans, following a purge on that continent; from 1975 to 1979, 9,000 Vietnamese/Cambodians were granted refugee status; and in 1982, following the Polish uprising, 9,000 citizens of Polish descent were granted refugee status. And the list goes on, and on, and on.

Canadians have accepted refugees in the past, and they are prepared to accept refugees in the future. That is the type of policy that Canadians have supported in terms of government leadership.

Trying to fabricate a crisis out of some 50 Chilean individuals in Argentina is not only wrong but borders on being scandalous, given the numbers that Canadians have accepted with open arms in past years.

Is it any wonder that Canadians are losing confidence in the policies of this Government, when we have a petition signed by 7,000 employees of the Immigration Department, 7,000 individuals who work for the "big boss"? The representatives of that group appeared before the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration and essentially said: "We don't have confidence in the direction and policy of this Government".

Is it any wonder that Canadians are losing confidence in an immigration policy which is confusing in its definition and questionable in its direction, when 7,000 employees put their jobs on the line by signing a petition to the effect that they are losing confidence in this Government's immigration policy?

Mr. Speaker, why are all of the church and community groups saying that Bill C-55 should go back to the drawing board?

There are a number of very good reasons, and I should like to go through some of them right now.

The first one is that while the Government finally designed a refugee board which meets with the approval of most Canadians, it is not prepared to allow that board to work unfettered with the refugees. It built a barrier around that new refugee board, and the barrier is called a pre-screening process.

• (1640)

The Minister and the Government will now have two officers at border points who will make the determination on whether a refugee or claimant can go from the border to the refugee board to be heard by two competent members of the board. That is where they are washing their hands; that is where they are not allowing individuals to come forward, rightly or wrongly, to present their cases and to live with the decisions. They have two officers to do the pre-screening or the selection, as it were.

Upon what criteria would it be based when the two individuals do not have any discretionary authority under the legislation as printed?

Obviously there is a vacuum or a gulf of difference between what the Minister says and purports is in the Bill and what is in the actual piece of legislation. There may have been a breakdown between the Minister and what he wanted to do and government drafters in the Department and what they wanted to do and to control. Those two officers—and one can call them what one wants—are pre-screeners. The Minister knows that. I know that. The constituency know that. There is no need or requirement for them. In fact, they are building a separate bureaucracy across the country at various border points.

The Government should allow the claimants to come directly to the refugee board. I will support the board. I think Parliament would support the board. The constituency would support the board, but why will the Government not support it? It is because the Government is saying that the system will be more efficient by limiting refugees.

It is tantamount to hospital administrators saying that they will make hospitals more efficient by limiting the number of patients. That cannot be done. Either a patient is sick or not. If a patient is sick, he or she should have access to the hospital. Efficiency must be built upon reasons other than limitations and accessibility handicaps. Limiting access was the centrepiece of the consultation process.

The second aspect is the safe third country concept which has been floating around for a month and a half. I have yet to hear the Minister in the House, in committee, or elsewhere in the country defend with any degree of satisfaction what in the name of God is a safe third country. How will it be determined? How will it meet new uprisings in the world? How will the list be drafted?

The Minister suggested that Cabinet would consult and draft the list of safe third countries. Let us consider the reversal of policies. Under a Liberal Government we had devised a B-1 list, a list of countries to which Canada would not deport people because of human rights violations. Clearly the onus was on the safety of life. We were not prepared to take the chance of sending someone to persecution and probable death. We were prepared to have those people remain here. Not only did the Conservative Government remove the B-1 list on February 20, which means that it is open season for everyone everywhere, it also instituted the safe third country concept—a list of countries to which the Government is prepared to deport people.

Where are the guarantees or the safeguards that those countries will in fact respect refugees? Where are the guarantees that once a person goes to Germany or Great Britain he or she will have access to becoming a citizen and entry into the refugee system? This piece of legislation does not guarantee that. Admission does not guarantee that.

I could be admitted to West Germany on one day and be booted out on the third day. There is no guarantee whatsoever. This is where the Pontius Pilate theory comes into play. They have sent people adrift. It is like a ping-pong game; they are sent to a country which sends them somewhere else, and then everyone does it.

In Question Period the Minister was prepared to say that he would get agreements with those countries. In Hansard on May 7, 1987, in answer to my question, the Minister said:

> I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be very careful with every individual and will have an agreement in place before we do anything.

Some people might say that if we have an agreement with a country, that country must honour the agreement. However, what did he say last week in committee? He was not prepared to say that he would live up to an agreement. He said that Canada would follow an arrangement, which is even more nebulous or ambiguous than the safe third country concept. The Government prefers to be everything to everybody by being ambiguous. However, that is not a guarantee for a legitimate refugee. That is not a guarantee for the refugee constituency who are asking themselves: "What is a safe third country?"

The Minister has refused to answer. Is the United States, which deports Guatemalans or Salvadorans, a safe third country? Is Great Britain, which deports Tamils, a safe third country? Of course they are not, not for those individuals. Is the Government prepared to keep the United States of America and Great Britain off the safe third country list? Of course Great Britain and the United States will be on a safe third country list, because it would be an embarrassment to Uncle Ron and Aunt Maggie not to be on the safe country list of Canada.

This is where the international political games take place. There will be manoeuvrings to get on that list. Who at the cabinet table will remember, rushed with other agenda items and crises, the legitimacy of the individual who is fleeing persecution, torture, and death? That is the problem with the safe third country concept.

How quickly will that list change? How quickly will it change when there is a new uprising in a certain part of the world recognized on the list? When screening officers say, "I am sorry, Bermuda is still on our safe country list", the refugees will say: "I am sorry but we just had a revolution in Bermuda". How long will it take for the Government or the bureaucracy to react to that crisis? How many people, by the time it reacts, will have been sent back? How many people will suffer the consequence of that tardiness, which is natural in any bureaucracy or any government operation?

Third, what about the appeal system, a system which can be measured by sensitivity and compassion? The Government has suggested that the appeal system should be with leave to the Federal Court of Canada on points of law. The Federal Court has been unable, in the opinion of all, to render responsibility to refugee claimants and their stories. They will not be able to present individual circumstances; they must be points of law. To make the matter even worse, it has been suggested that the person who appeals to the Federal Court must leave the country and then he will be called collect if his appeal is successful.

What kind of humanity is that? An individual who is fleeing persecution can appeal to the Federal Court. Canada sends him back. Two or three months later, they might call the individual, but where will he be? Is there any guarantee that he will not be persecuted, tortured, jailed, or killed? Of course not.

Those are the holes in the legislation to which the Minister, in his 40-minute remarks, did not address himself. Those are the life and death shortcomings in the piece of refugee legislation with which the Government must begin to deal responsibly.

The fourth problem is with the refugee board. The Minister said that the refugee board will operate independently and unfettered. That is not true. Bill C-55 provides that there will be a government lawyer presenting evidence, and therefore the process will no longer be non-adversarial. A government lawyer will have at heart government interests and not the interests of a refugee claimant.

The other question that begs to be asked is, from where does the government lawyer get information? Then we can draw the link back to the pre-secreening officers. That is where the government lawyer will pick up the information that in the end of the process will be used against refugees. Is that a fair system? Is that a non-adversarial system? The answer to those questions is clearly, no.

The fifth problem has to do with our international responsibilities. What will be the repercussions of this Bill? Canadians know that we cannot accept the 10 million to 15 million refugees who are looking for homes. Every Member of Parliament knows that as well.

What will happen if other countries in the international community begin to legislate the safe third country concept? Canada will be one of the first countries to do that. What would happen if Great Britain, Switzerland, the United States and every other country would legislate a pre-screening provision and a safe third country concept? The answer is very simple and obvious. There will be an international corridor of locked doors. Every door on which any legitimate refugee will knock will be closed. The legitimate refugee will be told, "I am sorry, you are from a safe third country, go somewhere else". That is not responsible. The abuse of the system will be greater.

The Government has tried to market this legislation on the basis that it will curb abuse as if this Party, this Hon. Member or any Canadian agreed with abuse. Of course we do not agree with abuse. No one wants to see abuse in the refugee system, in the workers' compensation system, in the pension system, or in the UIC system. Everyone wants to work against abuse, but we do not fight abuse on the backs of legitimate refugees and we do not curb abuse by being more restrictive and rigid as this legislation is.

As the Conservative administration has moved toward closing the door tighter, the schemes and scams to get people in have increased proportionately. When legitimate refugees who are fleeing from death and persecution are pushed against the wall, they have no options. No human in this world would rather go back to certain death or persecution than try to enter a country. They will try to enter a country because of their human spirit, and if they cannot get through the front door, they will enter through the back door.

We have seen people entering through the back door in greater numbers with every more rigid piece of legislation that is passed. Therefore, I ask the Minister what favour he is doing Canada and the international community by closing the door tighter. Does the Minister not realize that other countries will do the same and that if such is the case, then we will really have a legitimate crisis on our hands? Fifteen million refugees the world over will be desperately trying to enter any country by any means. Then those low-lifes who make a career out of desperate individuals will surface, as we have seen with great frequency.

I see you are signalling that I have only two or three minutes left in debate, Mr. Speaker. I would like to be able to continue because there are other areas into which I would like to delve.

Those are the criteria by which this legislation must be measured. Those are the criteria this Minister ought to use to build refugee legislation that looks not only to the next year or two, years when the Minister may still be here in that capacity, but to the long term. He must measure his legislation in comparison to tradition.

After this Minister is long gone and after I am long gone—MPs and Ministers come and go, Canada always stays—this Minister will have to live with himself. He will have to live with his community. He will have to be able to account to his community for his actions and for the direction this policy is taking. I submit to him that it would be very difficult to look in the mirror or to his community for approval for this piece of legislation. He knows that and he is under pressure.

I respect the pressures that we are all under, but I also respect individuals. I respect Ministers who will stand up in Cabinet and in Parliament and be counted for the long term. I respect Ministers who move in directions in which they are proud to move and who lead Canadians to a progressive vision of things to come. All of us share in the commitment that is Canada. Every Canadian wishes to have a system that is expeditious and is fair to those who are seeking our assistance.

Every Canadian is compassionate. Every Canadian is humane. Very many Canadians know about the opportunities they have had to start anew in this country. My family knows it and the Minister's family knows it as well. In all justice and fairness, we cannot enter Canada and then say: "Now that we are here, let's lock the doors". The building of Canada does not stop here. Future generations will be made up of immigrants. Our birth rate is dwindling and our aged population is growing. Because of our small population, this country will once again be built by continuous and massive waves of immigrants and refugees.

Yes, there has been some abuse. Yes, the odd individual tries to circumvent the system and get into Canada the wrong way. The Government must stand up and say that the vast majority of immigrants and refugees, however, are individuals who do not cheat Canadians or the system and that they too, once they take their oaths of citizenship after three years, are as proud, as loyal and as hardworking as every Member of Parliament in this Chamber.

In conclusion, I hope that the Minister, at second reading or at committee stage, in partnership with witnesses, refugee groups and the churches, who will once against have to come to Ottawa to plead their case, will listen and will do two things. I ask the Minister to drop the pre-screening and to drop the safe third country concept. If he does that, he will make a bad Bill a liveable Bill into and he will have my support. Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I forgot to add that I would like to move an amendment in conclusion.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member had ended his speech. Certainly our procedures allow ample opportunity at later stages for a member of his Party or for any other Member of the Chamber to move a motion.

I think the Hon. Member had clearly terminated his address. He may indeed rise on a point of order to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to have the floor once again for the purpose of introducing a motion, but if that were to be the case, then I think I would find myself predisposed to denying that unanimous consent at this point.

The Hon. Member is simply the second speaker on a very major piece of legislation. Nothing in our rules or procedures precludes the opportunity at a later stage for someone else to introduce a motion, but I think it would be inappropriate and might set a dangerous precedent for the future if someone who has given up the floor is allowed all of a sudden to reclaim it for the purpose of introducing a motion without the unanimous consent of the House.

• (1700)

Mr. Kaplan: May I rise on the same point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need to hear the Hon. Member on the same point of order. I had given the floor to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), and I will allow him to resume.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your understanding. In that spirit I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I seek a little clarification. If this motion is found to be in order, what does it do to the length of time allowed for speeches? Are we now debating an amendment? Does the third Party in the House have the right under our Standing Orders to a 40-minute speech at a later date when we come back to the main motion? Or do we now proceed to 20 minute speeches on the basis of the amendment? Just what is the result?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the motion in order. As far as the time allowed for speeches is concerned, it is the understanding of the Chair, and I will verify this, that the first three speakers get 40 minutes each without questions regardless of whether an amendment is moved by any of those speakers.

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has the floor.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your interpretation of that last point.

I am not going to say I am happy to debate this Bill because I am very, very sorry the Government brought it forward. I am very sorry that in the last six months the Government broke with a policy of consultation which it had continued until December. Until then there was open discussion between the Government, opposition Members, and the public about what sort of Bill this should be. It is very sad that around that time the Government shut itself off, refused to communicate, and began to carry on a secret course of action. It is of course legal for it to do that, but I am very sorry it ceased to act in the spirit of good will and good faith which had continued until then.

Until that time we seemed to be making progress in identifying the problems and the best possible solutions. There was until that time grounds for understanding that we all basically agreed, both Members of Parliament and the people of Canada, about what we had to do about a very serious problem. That is not the problem of abuse, it is the problem of the great need of many, many people in the world. The problem of abuse is a secondary problem. There can be abuse of any good program and there will be abuse even of the program the Government has put forward if it becomes law. The Minister himself said that nothing is perfect.

Our committee, when it studied this matter for hundreds of hours—and the former Chairman of that committee sitting across the way will corroborate this, I am sure, when he speaks—found that of all those who had been examined until that time, the abusers were in the minority. Under the old system, which had been slightly modified to the extent allowed by law, about one-third had been found to be refugees, and an unknown further number were found to be worthy of humanitarian consideration. We would not send Iranians back to the Ayatollah Khomeini's Government. We would not send people back to the Soviet Union if they said they were afraid to return. We would not send people back to Poland, whether they fitted the definition of refugees or not. We would not send people back to El Salvador, Chile, or Guatemala if they were afraid to go back for the same reason.

When we considered that the Supreme Court of Canada found that the system by which people were being judged was unfair, contrary to the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, then the committee judged that the majority of the applicants, even under the old and cumbersome system, had a good claim on Canada's protection, either technically as refugees or practically on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. These were people who should not be sent back to civil war or similar kinds of disturbances which have the same effect as individual persecution.

We based that partly on the many, many witnesses who appeared before the committee during the six months we held hearings. Many, many witnesses told us they wanted a favourable approach to refugees. They also are reflected in the 75 per cent referred to in the Goldfarb poll who said we should admit legitimate refugees. They did not define what legitimate refugees are in that poll; they simply understand them as being people whose lives are in danger because of their politics, religion, membership in some social group, or for any other reason which requires them to, as the UN said, seek and enjoy the protection or asylum of another country. That was the essential decision of our committee.

I regret that the Government, against so much public opposition from informed people, has decided to move ahead with this very destructive Bill. I have been one of those who have called for the simple withdrawal of this Bill. What I wish to do now is to point out the need for withdrawal and, second, to enlarge on the approach of the Canadian people over and beyond the approach of Canada's Parliament. Third, I want to show how the action of the Government over the last few months has been in the opposite direction. It has gone contrary to the Canadian people's policy, and contrary even to its own policy before that time. Finally, I want to show how the Canadian people are reaffirming their original orientation on this issue.

One reason for withdrawing this Bill is that to spend the time necessary to debate it and consider amendments is much more wasteful of time, and much more likely to allow the situation to grow worse, than if the Government were to make a clean break and admit that the Bill is irrevocably flawed and withdraw it. Then, in consultation with the people who have worked on this subject for several years, it could draft a new Bill.

Of course we have a crisis but this Bill, if passed, will not solve the crisis for at least several months. It probably will not solve it even then, because we have been warned that lawyers who are competent in this matter will voice their objections where it will count, in the Federal Court and the Supreme Court.

The Minister has said, "Trust me". He has said, "Trust the intent of the Government". You and I, Mr. Speaker, know that if this comes to a vote you will not ask me and the other Members of the House whether we will vote for or against the intent of the Government. That is not possible because it is not on the agenda. The Government did not put its intent on the agenda. It did not put forth a discussion paper or White Paper. We begged the Government for a year to put a White Paper before us which could be discussed. It would not do that. Instead we are asked to vote for Bill C-55.

The Government's intent makes no difference whatsoever, and it is mischievous of the Government to pretend that by voting for its intent we will be voting for something better than the Bill, something without the faults of the Bill.

We know that there is considerable trouble with the backlog. We know that the backlog is a small reflection of a world-wide problem of 10 million or 15 million refugees. We also know that every lawyer in the private sector who has spoken on this Bill has spoken against it. I believe that within a day or two the Canadian Bar Association will say that officially and collectively.

It is a little ironic that the Government praises the private sector, calling it the engine of recovery, and brings private sector accountants and lawyers into a privileged position in the budget process. Yet, when lawyers from the private sector criticize this Bill, the Hon. Minister, contrary to his statements of respect for them, attacks their motivation. I heard him in Montreal a couple of weeks ago accuse his opponents of being "street-corner lawyers", whatever that means. He obviously did not mean it in a favourable sense.

It is reported that when he was in Winnipeg he attacked a leading refugee and immigration lawyer there, accusing him of being concerned merely with the revenue he gets from refugees who usually arrive penniless. The Minister had the effrontery to make that accusation, and he repeated it in Montreal a couple of days ago, according to the Gazette. He said that the lawyers who criticized the Bill are simply looking for fees for defending refugees.

What a contemptible piece of slander the Minister indulges in by condemning all the lawyers in the private sector who have spoken against this Bill as being only interested in private profit! It is a strange philosophy for a Conservative politician to condemn lawyers for doing their work because they might be paid by someone for doing it.

This Bill has no credibility with those in the public who have studied it. If you ask people on the street whether they want to admit real refugees, they will say, yes. If you ask whether they like the Minister's Bill, they will say, yes because the Minister has put out tens of thousands of dollars worth of false propaganda which says that this Bill does what this Bill does not do. Of course he has succeeded in deceiving the public to some extent, but not for long.

Le Devoir, which was originally willing to buy the Bill, published a second editorial two weeks ago which called it une loi de refoulement and said that this Bill is not what it first appeared to be. I heard Mr. LeClerc speak to this last Friday night. He believed that he had been taken for a ride after first consideration of the Bill, and he is now solidly opposed to it.

I want to illustrate the Canadian response, not only to people who have been proven to be refugees but to people who come to the doors of our country asking for a chance to prove that they are refugees. Two days after the Minister introduced those harsh regulations on February 20, I attended a rally at Fort Erie spontaneously organized by the people there who had been helping refugees.

These were not "street-corner lawyers" making a fortune on the backs of refugees, as the Minister would like to suggest. These were the townspeople of Fort Erie who, in the last two years, have billetted 500 refugees. They had put them up at their expense, fed them, clothed them, and given them shelter for a short or a long time. They helped them after they came across the bridge.

These 500 people, through that rally, were telling the Canadian Government not to be afraid of the welfare system for refugees breaking down because they are looking after them. That is the kind of attitude there is in Canada, not only at Fort Erie but in Quebec and other places as well. Residents of Quebec sent a truckload of clothing and food to Plattsburg for refugees who had been turned back from Canada. At Thunder Bay several dozen people are engaged in meeting refugees at the border and helping them to make their way to and through immigration officials. On the Prairies and in British Columbia the same things are taking place.

Canadians are helping these refugees. They are presently doing it legally, but I know they are studying the sanctuary movements in the United States and respect the heroic clergy of those movements who will go to jail rather than send a refugee back to torture or death.

Canadians have been learning compassion. We have had our faults in our immigration policies over the past century and more. There are some things of which we are not proud. I do not want to take time to go into those today. However, support for refugees from the Canadian people primarily, not from this or the previous Government, was what won the Nansen Medal Award.

This law will not go with the Canadian people. If it is passed, the Canadian people will ensure that it is overturned. The basic sense of justice of Canadian people was reflected in the Singh decision two years ago which the Government has done its best to ignore. The Supreme Court of Canada said that when a person's life is at stake, the people who are to decide whether he or she is or is not a refugee must be competent people and must look him or her in the eye. He must stand in front of them so that he can judge their credibility, because nine-tenths of a refugee's case is based on the story he or she has to tell and their ability to convince the judges that the story is true.

The Supreme Court said that it cannot be done on paper or by intermediate officials. Those who are to decide whether to send a person back to possible death must do it face to face with the refugee. That was the Singh decision and that is what is backed by the Canadian people and the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the reports of which the Government never answered. The report on the refugee system and that on the backlog have been shamefully ignored by the Government to this day, as it has ignored other reports since then.

There are several fundamental faults with this Bill which the lawyers who have looked at it say cannot be reformed by amendment. That is why we asked for withdrawal.

First and foremost is that the Bill begins with the principle that a person is guilty until he proves himself innocent. Furthermore, it does not give him much time to prove it. He is guilty of being a liar, a cheat, and a queue jumper by illegally trying to get into Canada. That is what the Minister says.

Therefore, we begin the whole process by bringing him to an inquiry. An inquiry is the procedure for examining why a person should not be deported. The onus is on him to prove that he should not be forced to leave the country. That is the way this refugee claimant is treated from the outset, because the Government has chosen to found the whole Bill on the philosophy of the abuser rather than on the philosophy of refugees.

The Government delayed the first Plaut report for half a year and has suppressed the second Plaut report. It has ignored the reports of the committee. It has put in arbitrary regulations in February which have sent away many legitimate refugees. It has refused to examine the refugees in the airplane that was stopped improperly in Buenos Aires. It has refused to examine the evidence about those refugees, which was brought by a competent lawyer sent by the private sector to Buenos Aires to examine them.

It simply scorned any evidence from the people who know something about real refugees. It has pumped out misleading propaganda about the Bill which follows on a policy of several senior officials for several years in trying to instill in the public the idea that most refugee claimants are phonies.

The Government published the ministerial overview which makes claims about the law which the law itself denies. The Bill itself, as printed, denies the main claims of the ministerial overview.

Most people do not have time to read the Bill and most people are not lawyers and cannot understand 60 pages of legalese. Therefore, they read the ministerial overview and form the opinion that the Bill is good and support it. However, the ministerial statements are false and misrepresent what is exactly in Bill C-55.

The Minister's statement that no one with a shred of genuine fear of persecution will be sent back to the country he is fleeing is false. The Minister cannot possibly support it by reference to the law.

Any time that I or anyone else has asked the Minister to discuss the actual words of the law, the Minister slides out by saying that if there are some fine points to be considered, they can be taken up in the committee hearings later on.

It is not fine points with which we are concerned, it is the fundamentals of the law. The Minister has refused ever to talk with individuals or groups and come to grips with the fact that his statements are contradicted by the Bill he is asking me and other Members of the House to support.

One way in which this Bill treats refugees as guilty until proven innocent is in Clause 93 which provides the Government with the power to seize an aircraft of an airline that brought someone to Canada who is considered to have inadequate travel documentation, in other words, someone who is a refugee claimant.

This law goes further than the present law which provides for fining the airline. The Europeans have already begun to copy the existing law for fining airline companies, and presumably then will copy the proposed legislation if it passes and seize aircraft in order to force payment of the fine. According to this proposed law, if an airline brings someone here under existing law and the United Nations declaration for the protection of refugees, including anyone who lied in order to claim refugee status and might be found to be a refugee afterwards, the fact of having brought that person without adequate documents will be an offence for which the airline may have its aircraft seized. This is the principle of guilty until proven innocent.

There is also the principle of safe country about which there has been much talk. The Minister has never given a serious and safe answer to that principle.

In the press conference, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said: "People with refugee status elsewhere and people arriving from safe third countries who had reasonable opportunity to claim protection will be returned to those countries". That is not what Bill C-55 says. Instead, Clause 48.1(1) states:

> A person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have the claim determined by the Refugee Division if
> (b) the claimant came to Canada from a country that has been prescribed as a safe third country for all persons or for persons of a specified class of persons of which the claimant is a member and would be allowed to return to that country, if removed from Canada, or has a right to have the claim determined therein;

In other words, the fact of being allowed to return is enough by itself. It does not say that he will also have the right. The clause states: "The right to return or the right to have his claim determined". It does not say both. It does not say what happens after he returns to that country.

The point is that these two officers, the refugee board member and adjudicator, according to this law, do not have the power to send that person on to the refugee board if he is ineligible by reason of coming from a country that is described as a safe country for that class of person.

Contrary to what the Minister has repeated again and again in the House and outside the House, this law states that a person who claims to be a Convention refugee is not eligible to have his claim determined by the Refugee Division, he is not eligible to have those two officials send him on to the refugee board, which is the express and only meaning of this clause, he is not eligible if he came from what we are told will be described as a safe third country.

We have never been given any description in the law of what is a safe third country. The Cabinet is simply given a list which it approves as safe third countries. We do not know what considerations go into that decision because the Minister has refused to explain it or put it into this legislation.

There is also the matter of the humanitarian and compassionate factors. The Minister said that a Minister will be able to do as he does now, but the law is entirely silent on the matter and we have no guarantee that the Minister or his successor will respect the promise he has made today.

There is also the matter of credible claims. Again, the Minister likes to talk about discretion because it is so vague. The law states that the person cannot be sent on to the board unless he is determined to have a credible basis for the claim. Clause 48.1(4) states:

In determining whether a claimant has a credible basis for the claim to be a Convention refugee, the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Division shall consider any evidence adduced at the inquiry or hearing regarding

It goes on to list two points, the wording of which means only two points. Rather than "including" two points, it states that they shall hear evidence "regarding" two points. One is the record with respect to human rights of the country that the claimant left and the other is the disposition under this Act or the regulations of claims to be Convention refugees made by other persons who alleged fear of persecution in that country.

In other words, if Canada has not received many refugees from that country or believes that it has a good human rights record, for which there is no definition, then that person must be accused of not having a credible basis for his claim and will not be allowed to appear before the refugee board to make his claim, because he is not eligible. That is what the law says, not what the Minister says. I cannot vote for the twaddle I hear from the Minister. I am asked to vote for the law and I will vote against this law. I believe that if Members of Parliament would read Clause 48 and consult their consciences, they would have to vote against it as well.

Another major fault in this law is that the Federal Court is not only limited by its own nature, but it cannot review the merits of a decision. It cannot review a bad decision made in that first screening, nor a decision made in the later hearing, if there is one for that person. It cannot review the merits. It cannot ask if his story was true. It can only look at certain points of procedure and can only do that after there has been a written appeal. By experience we know that fewer than 5 per cent of written requests for permission to appeal are in fact granted. So the chance is very, very small of getting any sort of review.

There is also Clause 48.3(3) which introduces into the refugee consideration the idea that even after an individual is found to be a refugee, he will not be landed if the officers examining him think he will be unable or unwilling to support himself. We have refugees who are children, unaccompanied. We have refugees who have been so badly tortured in the country they left that their mental or physical health does not permit them to earn a living, at least at the beginning. Those people would be excluded by this law. They will be told: "You are a refugee, but, sorry, we do not want you. You are not financially advantageous to Canada".

Another reason that this Bill should be withdrawn is that there is, and has been for many months, a better way to handle this refugee determination. The standing committee, acting on the directive of the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, spent hundreds of hours examining this subject, looking at the report from Rabbi Plaut, listening to the officials of the Immigration Commission and to members of the public who have had experience in the matter, and came up with a system to which the Government has never yet replied, even though the Standing Orders directed it do so.

It would be a system in which the first step from the border would be a meeting with two members of the refugee board, after about a week in which the refugee claimant could orient himself and find a lawyer, if that is what he or she wanted, which is the right of everyone in Canada. The refugee board would decide either that he is a refugee and should be processed with a view to landing, or that he is not a refugee, in which case a senior level of the board would not do a rehearing but would do a paper review.

The hearing would be examined in order to catch a possible error. The senior level of the board would be able to receive further evidence and would give an answer to the refugee claimant so he would know what the accusation was against him, where he failed on his claim. He would then be able to explain a point which was misunderstood or to add further evidence he did not realize at first was needed. But none of that is allowed at this pre-screening on safe third country or credibility. In most cases the board members do not have to give their reasons and will not do so because they will be too busy. They will not do it unless the law requires them to do so.

The system we propose would require that the reasons be given so that the refugee claimant has a normal chance on paper to state his response to the reasons for being rejected. That review committee would then have the responsibility for either upholding the original decision that he is not a refugee or saying there should be a rehearing. Perhaps in a very few cases there would be a rehearing since, as the Minister has said, nothing is perfect and no one is infallible.

This is based on public support. There are hundreds of organizations in Canada which have gone on record as supporting this approach and as opposing this Bill. Some of the largest are the Canadian Labour Congress and at least 11 of the major churches in Canada, the Jewish Congress and the active members of the Canadian Bar Association, immigration section. Within a couple of days I believe they will make their position generally public. There is a growing campaign. There are church services devoted to the welcoming of the refugees and to opposition to Bill C-55. There are public rallies devoted to opposition to Bill C-55. There is a growing petition campaign from Nanaimo to St. John's, Newfoundland. People are saying, "Do not put this Bill into action. This Bill does not help refugees. This Bill would turn refugees away."

I want to say a few words in closing, not about Canadian opposition to this, but to the international meaning of it. A previous speaker mentioned the international line-up of countries which will be inclined to follow Canada's lead and close all the doors. These are the countries primarily of western Europe and North America. Yes, our officials for several years have been consulting with their officials for this purpose, leading the way in devising ideas for locking out refugee claimants. Most of the refugee claimants nowadays come not from eastern Europe, as they used to, but from the Third World, from the non-white peoples. This law, whatever is the good intention of the Minister, if it goes into action, will be a racist law because it will turn away the huge majority of refugee claimants who in fact are non-white people coming from former colonial countries. This is because there has been a shift of labour policy. Our countries for some decades welcomed cheap labour from the Third World countries, people who could be brought into work at minimum wage or a little less, at least for a few years. We welcomed them in the United States, Canada and western Europe. The multinationals and the banks would now rather have the manufacturing done in those Third World countries. Not only manufacturing but data processing is more and more being done in the Third World countries where the wages are perhaps one-tenth of the wages in Canada.

The wages are held down by the actions of terrorist Governments such as the Governments of South Korea, El Salvador and Chile, where the death squads rule untouched and unrestrained by the government of the day, unrestrained by the dictator in Chile or by the so-called President in El Salvador who shows he has no power over them. By killing off the trade union leaders in those countries, they are able to keep the wages down.

When I was in El Salvador in the first week of May, I had an interesting meeting with the Vice Minister of Planning. I asked him what he was going to do about 70 per cent unemployment in his country. He replied: "I want you Canadians to invest in our cheap labour". It was not a translation. He spoke very good English. He said: "We want you to invest in our cheap labour. Send your wood and cloth down here and we will make furniture and clothes and sell it to the United States. We will get the wages and you get the profits". Those were his words. In other words, this law, Bill C-55, is part of an arrangement adopted by the First World countries to shut Third World people out from our countries. We no longer want them as cheap labour here. We want them as cheaper labour in their home countries where they will be policed by terrorist squads, death squads, aimed particularly at leaders of trade unions and co-operatives who are trying to raise the living standards of their members above starvation level.

It is an evil law. Whatever is the stated intention of the Minister, this law is an evil law. It is evil in two ways. I am now speaking about what the words of the law state and not what the Minister said in his statement since I cannot vote for the stuff that he says. I have to vote yes or no to Bill C-55 and the words that are written in it. What is written in it will harm refugees. Whether or not it will keep the abusers out, I do not know. But I know that it will harm refugees by shutting them out.

Second, this law is an evil law because it purports, and particularly with the interpretations circulated at the taxpayers' expense and carefully drafted to misrepresent the law, to be something that it is not. It purports to be helping refugees when in fact it lays the foundation for shutting them out.

Even if this law goes through second reading, through committee, report stage and third reading and is proclaimed law it will not work. We know that there will be resistance of all kinds, legal and illegal resistance, by Canadian people who will not stand the injustice that this law would present. This law will be not only unjust but it will be unworkable. This was a warning given to the previous Government when the present Immigration Act was being considered. It was warned that it would be unworkable. Those who made the warning were laughed at. At that time they said that there should be an oral hearing for every claimant. The Government said that that would be too expensive. Well, after millions if not billions of dollars of expense the Supreme Court has said: "Give them an oral hearing". This law does not do that. This law would deny what the Supreme Court meant by an oral hearing to the majority of people who come to our ports. Just having them heard on a narrow point by one member of a board is not the oral hearing that the Supreme Court spoke about. Because of that fundamental injustice, Canadian people will have to block this law.

It would be much better if the Minister would withdraw it now and enter into consultation with all those concerned in order to bring us a much truer law that would actually help refugees through a system that would be quick, which is what the committee and what the churches proposed. It would take about three months to determine the cases and there would be no more attraction for these rip-off artists, such as the ones that the Minister has been so slow to prosecute in the case of the Portuguese and now in the case of the Brazilians. The only remedy for this law is to withdraw it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there not time allotted for questions and comments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, there is not. That provision does not apply to the first three speakers. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) that mine is the first speech that will be open for questions and comments and I would welcome some at a later stage.

I have served for many hours on the committee with the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). On many things over all those many meetings and many months we have come to a common understanding and a common sense of agreement. That comes out of a deeply felt commitment to the refugees in the world. That is where we have our area of agreement.

However, with the Hon. Member's concluding comments I find myself in complete disagreement. If I were to have to stand in the House today and vote on Bill C-55 as it is currently written I would find myself voting against it. However, I think it is a Bill with the kinds of characteristics that are needed by the refugees of the world and by Canadian society.

What we are being asked to do, and what we are debating here today is to consider whether or not the House should take the decision to move Bill C-55 to committee. Once in committee expert testimony can be heard. Witnesses can be heard and amendments can be moved. The Bill can be strengthened to do the types of things that the Government would so clearly like it to be able to do.

This Bill is something that many of us in the Chamber have been looking forward to for a long period of time. I would like to congratulate the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). This problem came up five Ministers ago, two in the previous Government and three in the current Government. The present Minister is the first Minister who has been able to produce a Bill for the consideration of the House. It is a Bill which the Minister has said again and again Cabinet intends to be a piece of legislation which will make the world a better place, which will make the world a safer place.

During the Minister's speech I was particularly disturbed by the heckling from the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) who I think will be speaking after me. The Hon. Member may indeed want to read which of those heckles got into Hansard and may indeed want to apologize not only to the Minister but to the House. It is possible in this Chamber to get carried away with heckling. However, I found the remarks of the Hon. Member for Laurier to be particularly offensive and not in the least in keeping with the kind of standard of conduct that the electors of the country would expect from their representatives in this place. This is the place which is the bastion of freedom. This is the place where, surely, comments directed so clearly at a Member's racial or religious background are inappropriate. I hope that upon further reflection we will hear an apology from the Hon. Member before this debate is concluded.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise because the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) insinuated that I made comments which reflected upon the Minister's religious or ethnic background. It is perhaps possible that I got carried away in some of the comments I made. However, in Parliament, and if one looks at the tradition of Parliaments, not just this one but of British parliamentary democracy, one will see that there is a tendency to call a spade a spade. I will check the record and it would surprise me if I were to find that I had made any veiled references or unveiled references to the Minister's ethnic or religious background, any detrimental references, which I did not.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I heard the word "ovens" thrown out across the Chamber more than once. Given the circumstances of the debate we are on and the background of the Minister, that is what I find offensive and inappropriate.

It is somewhat prophetic perhaps that Bill C-55 is presented on a day which began with a domestic discussion of capital punishment. All of us in this Chamber feel that debate very keenly. It is a matter of life and death. Some Members feel strongly that the reinstatement of capital punishment is important to protect the lives of potential future victims. Others think that it is reprehensible to put capital punishment back into Canadian law and deliberately to have the state take a human life. Those differences are felt, and they are felt strongly by the Members of the House and by our constituents.

It is perhaps a little more difficult to see that the fine print of Bill C-55, if it becomes the law of this country, will deal with that very same issue, the issue of life and death. It is the life or the death of strangers. It is not Canadian citizens that we are talking about, not landed immigrants in Canada, but strangers, people who live outside of our borders, but who live in a country-specific situation where, through the arbitrary nature and action of the state, their lives are potentially forfeit.

It is those people, Mr. Speaker, who make their ways to our shores by one means or another and ask for the protection of this country and the protection of its people. They do so, Mr. Speaker, because if they are sent back to their country of origin, they face death, torture, and persecution.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, the fine print in Bill C-55 is something that should engage everyone who has an interest and a background in these matters. That is why, Mr. Speaker, there are people in this country who represent groups working with refugees who are urging Members of this Chamber to reject the Bill in its entirety. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we have had protests.

Mr. Speaker, in many ways, those groups are reacting to a history, to a history that really began for them in 1976, that which has been mentioned by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

In 1976, there were very few people in this country, very few lawyers in this country, who had experience in refugee matters. The Parliament of the day, in its time and in its place, passed a law, and it is that same law that is in place in Canada today. Under that law, Mr. Speaker, there was no adequate opportunity for those claiming refuge in this country to tell their story orally in front of the decision-makers who got to decide their fate.

As a new Government, we inherited that law, that situation. The Supreme Court was seized of that matter, and the Supreme Court ruled that there should be an oral hearing.

This Government changed the Immigration Act to allow refugee claimants refused on the basis of a paper review to appeal orally and in person before the Immigration Appeal Board. We have had a year's experience with that new regime. And what does it tell us, Mr. Speaker? It tells us that 8 per cent of the claimants, on the basis of the oral hearing, are judged to need the protection of Canada, and the board rules that those people should be granted refugee status in this country.

That tells us, in the first instance, that the oral hearing, the chance to tell one's story, is important. It is not just a theory; it is a reality, a demonstrable reality, in the Canadian mosaic.

It also tells us, Mr. Speaker, that 92 per cent of those appealing denial on the basis of a paper review are found not to need the protection of Canada by a three member panel in an oral hearing. It tells us, clearly, that there are abusers. There are those who seek to use the court processes in this country to advance their own selfish ends, regardless of the difficulties that that may cause for legitimate refugees, those who care about them and those who serve them.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, when a poll is done on Bill C-55, there is such overwhelming endorsement of it. The average Canadian does not know what is contained in the 62 pages of the Bill. The average Canadian does not have the background, the experience, the training to determine whether the fine print will get the job done or not. What the average Canadian is responding to, Mr. Speaker, is the notion that those who need the protection of this country will be found to be bona fide refugees and will be granted that protection, and that those who abuse the system will not be granted that special privilege and will in fact be deported.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that that is what Canadians want. The only issue for the House in relation to Bill C-55 is whether or not these proposed amendments to the immigration law of Canada have enough going for them that they are worth detailed study and examination by committee to ensure that what Canadians want will indeed come about.

Mr. Speaker, I was deeply disappointed to hear the speaker on behalf of the Liberal Party immediately move what we refer to as the sixth month hoist. He did that before hearing the lead-off speaker for the New Democratic Party or a second speaker on behalf of the government side. To move the six month hoist is to assume that the Bill is unsalvageable and would make no contribution to the lives of refugees or to Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, the kindest thing I can say about that action is that it is premature. I move from words like "premature" to "poorly thought out", "ill-conceived", "unwise", and "damaging".

Mr. Berger: It is the same reaction that we have seen on the part of all of the groups across the country.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) says that it is the same reaction on the part of all of the groups across the country.

Mr. Berger: Yes. The store-front lawyers.

Mr. Hawkes: That, Mr. Speaker, is an example of the kind of rhetoric we have come to expect over the past eight years.

It is not the reaction of all of the groups in the country; it is not the reaction of all of the people of the country. It is not my reaction, to start with. I can talk about what I believe and what I think.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-55, I believe, has the potential to achieve what Canadians want, that being the protection of those who need this country's protection in as fail-safe a manner as is possible in any system that requires human decision making, while at the same time bringing about a significant reduction in the potential for abuse of the system.

Had the previous Government tackled this problem when it first arose five or six years ago and not left it to this Government to provide the oral hearing—which it did by way of a prior piece of legislation—we would not now be dealing with something of this complexity in an environment where there are thousands, and even perhaps tens of thousands, of abusers. Had the Liberal Party shown as much concern in the early 1980s as they would profess to have today, we would not be engaged in this debate.

Mr. Berger: In 1980, there were 1,800 in-land claimants. In 1983, there were 6,100.

Mr. Hawkes: What are the problems with this Bill, Mr. Speaker? Part of the problem, insofar as the small print is concerned, is that we have not had the opportunity to hear witnesses and to examine those witnesses on the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I see that it is time for Private Members' Hour. I believe I have some time left and that I shall be recognized following Private Members' Hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-65, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among the Parties and the House Leaders, and I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent for the House to deal with the Bill introduced yesterday by the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), Bill C-259, an Act to extend the term of a patent relating to a certain food additive.

The Hon. Member for LaSalle will rise on the motion for second reading to explain the purpose of the Bill. Then it would be our intention to have the House deal with the remaining stages of the Bill without debate, so that it could be sent to the Senate this evening.

In order for the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), whose Private Member's Motion is up for debate this evening, not to lose the full benefit of one hour of debate, it is our suggestion that the time for the debate on his motion be extended by whatever time it takes to deal with Bill C-259 at all stages.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It being 6 p.m., pursuant to order of Friday, June 12, 1987, the House will now proceed to Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

[English]

The House has heard the terms of the proposal of the Government Deputy House Leader. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PATENT EXTENSION (ASPARTAME) ACT

EXTENSION OF TERM OF PATENT

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-259, an Act to extend the term of a patent relating to a certain additive, be read the second time and, with unanimous consent, referred to a committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking Hon. Members for granting us this unanimous consent and for understanding the very essence of a debate that is not a debate in the controversial sense but which could have been, and whose purpose is to observe the principle of equity with respect to the intellectual property of a company. I greatly appreciate the co-operation we have received, as expressed in this unanimous consent, from the two opposition Parties, the NDP and the Liberal Party. I also wish to thank my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party for their show of confidence.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore welcome this opportunity today to introduce a Bill that will extend by five years the Canadian patent on the food additive aspartame, more commonly referred to as nutraSucre or nutraSweet, in English.

First of all, I should say that the case of aspartame is unique. The sale of aspartame was first approved by the U.S. Government in 1974. However, before it was put on the market, approval was withdrawn because of concerns about the safety of this product. The situation in the United States forced the Canadian authorities to be careful not to expose Canadians to any undue health risk. In 1981, after a complete and complex investigation, the Searle Company was finally authorized to market aspartame in Canada. Searle, after having had only six years to reap the benefits arising from its patent, is asking today to have the patent extended by five years, to compensate for the time during which its product was kept off the market due to circumstances beyond its control.

The Searle Company has already obtained an extension of the term of its patent for aspartame in the United States, Great Britain, South Africa and Australia and filed applications for an extension in New Zealand. If a five-year extension were granted in Canada, Monsanto Canada, the parent company of Searle and NutraSweet, would invest $10 million in a new plant located in the beautiful constituency of LaSalle. This pilot plant would create about 30 new jobs and pave the way for improvements in manufacturing processes and for the development of new technologies which Searle could apply throughout the world. Monsanto has indicated that this measure would eliminate imports from the United States and create export opportunities to European markets, and lead to a search for possible export markets in Asia. This measure is consistent with the objectives of our Government to promote technological innovation and reduce the dependency of Canada in the field of science and technology.

So that there can be no confusion about the nature of aspartame, I would like to underline once more that this product is a food additive and not a drug. It is the only low calorie sweetener which can be added to food products and beverages in Canada. It is widely used by diabetics and the weight-conscious. It is important to understand that it is not a drug. Generic product manufacturers can obtain a license at any time to produce and market equivalent products. Consequently, consumers will soon be able to find equivalent products containing aspartame or its equivalents at very good prices.

Let me repeat that this Bill is a special answer to a unique problem. Searle has had to face exceptional circumstances surrounding the initial marketing of its product, and it is normal that Canada now extend its period of protection as it certainly did not benefit from the 17 years of protection its patent should have provided under the 1932 Act.

It is in the interests of this government and of all Canadians, especially Quebecers and LaSalle residents, that fair protection be given to those who put their scientific knowledge at the service of consumers. It is in this spirit that we should give our support to this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! Excellent!

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask this House to continue in this fine spirit of cooperation so that we may give passage to this Bill as quickly as possible as the patent will expire on July 1st.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee by unanimous consent, reported, read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

THE ADVISABILITY OF CREATING A SPECIAL DEDUCTION FOR ALL VETERANS AGED 65 AND OVER

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act for the purpose of creating a special deduction for all veterans aged 65 and over, thus recognizing services rendered to the nation in wartime.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion of the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer will be debated during 60 minutes beginning now.

• (1810)

Mr. Isabelle: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the House that this is not a partisan motion. It is nothing more than a tangible reward we should give to all those who fought during at least four years to defend the freedom we all enjoy today.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to read the motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act for the purpose of creating a special deduction for all veterans aged 65 and over, thus recognizing services rendered to the nation in wartime.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear from the outset that I did not specify any amount in this motion. This is precisely why it reads: "That the Government should consider the advisability". I am sure it will examine the motion and that some of my colleagues will comment on this.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that during the last two world wars more than 1,300,000 people joined the armed forces and fought overseas for the freedom of people which was threatened.

I would also like to say that, out of these 1,300,000 plus, 650,000 are still among us, both men and women, of course. The number of veterans decreases by 25,000 each year and, by the year 2025 or thereabouts, perhaps 1,000 at most will still be living.

The average age of World War I veterans is 89, that of World War II veterans is 66, and that of Korean War veterans is 57, or an over-all average age of about 66.

Mr. Speaker, after joining the armed forces these people experienced difficult years, years of horror, years of distress, but they were always motivated by the courageous decision to leave their families to go and fight in foreign lands to defend freedom.

There is no doubt that this motion would contribute to reduce some of the taxes they have to pay. They are all pensioners, as I said earlier, and we know that the average income of pensioners, that is those who have retired, is about $12,533 a year. So we can say that the only income of most veterans is roughly the same as the national average income of all pensioners.

We must also remember that some of those veterans were prisoners of war, of course, and as such they receive an allowance, a kind of pension. And then there are others who were wounded, others who were handicapped when they came back and who receive a pension for their injuries and their disability.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is above all to compensate, on an individual basis, all veterans aged 65 who served the cause of freedom. Over the years we have always admired and congratulated our veterans on Remembrance Day, we have built monuments, we have given them recognition, as a group, for their valour, courage and bravery in the wars, as people who gave this country the freedom we enjoy today. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have been particularly attentive to those who fought for so many years, who suffered so that today's generation could have that freedom we cherish.

We can say that little or nothing has been done on an individual basis, and that is why I have just announced that I would like to see some tangible compensation for those who fought during the terrible war years, who willingly gave up the best years of their lives, their youth, to go and fight so that this generation and future generations would have the freedom we all enjoy today.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure we could have a long discussion on the amount of this special deduction. Personally, I would suggest a deduction of $400 per veteran. In most cases, a $400 deduction would result in a fairly substantial income tax deduction, in other words, they would be paying $184 or $200 or $400 or $500 less in income tax. I believe that this would totally cancel the amount they would have to pay in taxes since, as you know, Mr. Speaker, when you have $1,000 or $2,000 in taxable income, you have to pay $100 or more in taxes. We also know that this is more symbolic than anything else as these people still want to feel useful in society. They want to give some meaning to their life because they have done something tangible for Canada. I do not think that future generations will be willing to sacrifice their lives as did Canadians between 1914 and 1917 and between 1939 and 1945.

There are also military decorations, and I am thinking mostly about the Distinguished Service Order, or DSO, to which is attached a small monetary award of 10 pounds sterling, or about $40, which is not very much. However, for those who have been given this decoration, this monetary award is a matter of pride in what they have done. It represents much more than the money as it confirms that they have served their country, Canada. Churchill said: "Never have so many owed so much to so few." I believe that Sir Winston Churchill said those words after the battle of London, and I think that such deeds should be emphasized in our history books so that this generation and the ones to come will understand that there were great acts of bravery and courage during the Second World War.

Mr. Speaker, you have to know some of the veterans to realize that most of them live at about the poverty line. I am not speaking about those who receive pensions, and even in their cases, pensions and allowances do not mean much, since, especially in the case of allowances, every Canadian becomes eligible for the income supplement at the age of 65. As veterans' allowances are given as supplements, those who receive them simply change over to the system provided for all Canadians at the age of 65.

This morning, we had the privilege of welcoming the Association of Former Prisoners of War. We heard some of the stories these people had to tell, Mr. Speaker, and it is enough to make your hair stand on end. It is impossible to imagine that men and women can have suffered so long during the war and not receive anything in return except our sympathy. As for me, I believe that those who came back, who were not wounded, who were not prisoners of war, who were able to rebuild their life, perhaps a very ordinary life, should receive something tangible in return. Some may say: this is impossible because of the high costs involved. Mr. Speaker, if those people had not been where duty had them at the time, I think it would have taken our country much more than just money to give those veterans a new sense of hope, a new sense of pride in belonging to this country for which they fought, for which they defended the freedom enjoyed by all those who lived in Canada at the time. People can obviously take pride in mentioning in their income tax return that they are veterans, and once again, we have to understand them, understand that they are proud to have served in the wars, and that they genuinely deserve a reward.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up too much of our time. I believe my motion is quite straightforward. It is not cast in concrete. There is room for improvements, and maybe we will be pleasantly surprised tonight to learn that consideration has been given to veterans in the tax reform, though I do not know anything about that, but I believe that it is of the utmost importance that this generation show consideration for the generation of those who suffered for us.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that veterans have always been considered as a group. Of course, some minor efforts are presently being rewarded on an individual basis a specific segment of those veterans, and I am referring the VIP program, or Veterans Independence Program through which veterans who were wounded or live on some pension, instead of being isolated in hospitals, clinics, or foster homes, are indeed able to stay at home, to stay within thier communities, to say where they spent all their lives, where they have been happy. I therefore submit that this program should be extended to other categories of veterans. It is an encouraging sign, but once again, I think we should read, and maybe all Hon. Members should do so, the terrifying and totally amazing stories of what those veterans went through during the First and Second World Wars.

I recently had the opportunity to visit France with a few of my colleagues. We were entertained in Reims and in Châlons-sur-Marne, and in a number of other places in France, in the south, in Avignon, in Nice and I can assure you that we always got a very warm welcome from those who entertained us, but all their speeches were along the same line, they would thank us for the huge services we rendered to the Allies as well as to the French families during the two World Wars.

Mr. Speaker, when you see those valleys, those fields of poppies, you are constantly reminded of all the war movies. That is why we have to give a kind of new faith to those who fought and, naturally, honour them. The Department of Veteran Affairs wants to honour their memory by building monuments. During the centennial year of our national parks, in 1985, the Department erected about 12 monuments in parks. Nice things can be engraved on steles, reminding us of those who gave their lives, who are buried on various continents or in the seven seas. But for the survivors, there is only bitter memory of lost years, lost income and of the one thing they won like everybody, freedom. It is up to us to add something to that and I think that what I propose in the motion is worth considering, if not in total, at least in part.

I have always had a lot of respect for veterans. I saw one yesterday who spent 14 years in the Royal Canadian Air Force. He had to get out because of various personal problems, but after 14 years, Mr. Speaker, he has no pension, nothing. In 1938, he was making $33 a month, he fought throughout the war, but he got no pension, no veteran's allowance after the war because he did not have 20 years of service. He was in the regular forces and now he must rely on social welfare. He is frustrated as are many others, not because he fought to give us a future, but he is frustrated when he realizes that Canada is not very grateful for what they did.

Mr. Speaker, I know that much has been done for veterans. However, I think that the tremendous service they rendered Canadians will always exceed all services which could be made available to them at any cost. I hope the House will pass this motion which obviously is not binding on the Government since it asks the government to consider the advisability to do something in accordance with the substance of the motion.

Moreover, on behalf of the veterans, it would be quite difficult I think for the Hon. Members to do otherwise. And I am sure that perhaps some of our friends . . . I see the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) wriggling in his seat. No doubt he would like to rise. I hope that he will not try to bury us under heaps of figures because the purpose of this Bill is not to resolve an equation, but merely to try to reward those people who rendered services to all of us as a community and whom we still cherish.

I hope that there will be no more war, but for those who were eyewitnesses of those disastrous wars which have become necessary to defeat the enemy and regain our freedom . . . I would like us to find a small tangible way, Mr. Speaker, to improve the lot of those who are 65 years of age and over, since most of them live near the threshold of poverty.

• (1820)

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) should be afraid of mathematics or a series of figures when he knows that an engineer will respond on behalf of the Minister of Finance. He should not be afraid, and I believe that our Government has shown that we have as much compassion as rational sense, with both feet on the ground.

[English]

I would like to take this opportunity, as did the Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), to pay due homage to the veterans of Canada in general and to the wonderful riding of LaSalle in particular. I have an opportunity today to air the problems of these veterans. When I go to Legion 212 these veterans, most of whom are now aged, tell all sorts of horror stories to which the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer just referred.

The Ladies Auxiliary of Legion 212 maintains the morale of the active members and of the members who are hospitalized in Sainte-Anne de Bellevue Hospital by greeting them a few times a year so that they are not forgotten. La devise of Quebec is Je me souviens and it is translated at the Legion as "Lest we forget". Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to extend my best wishes to the members of all Legions of Canada and, in particular, those in the riding of LaSalle.

[Translation]

And speaking of horror stories, Mr. Speaker, we are too young to have been directly involved in World War II, but we did have, if I may put it this way, the opportunity to take part in the Korean War or in other wars, in other peacekeeping missions undertaken by Canada throughout the world. I must recall the pathetic death of a member of my community, more specifically, when I was young, Private Jacques Lefebvre who fell in Normandy and whom I had gotten to know very well on my home street. This was a young man who went to war, who saw action and did not come back. Parents had to live with this kind of situation for many years, and I want to pay tribute to all those soldiers who fell on the battleground, who were killed in action, but particularly to the one I knew, Private Jacques Lefebvre whom I still remember as representing the sacrifice many Canadians had to make, namely sending healthy sons away so they would maintain peace in the world.

Still, notwithstanding the compassion we must show for our veterans, we have to keep both feet on the ground and deal with this tax problem with appropriate objectivity.

Mr. Speaker, the motion urges the Government to consider the advisability to amend the Income Tax Act for the purpose of creating a special deduction for veterans, thus recognizing services rendered to the nation in wartime.

First, it is important to emphasize that the income tax due by an individual is based on that individual's ability to pay. In that sense, the tax legislation must be general and uniform. This means the past or present occupation of a taxpayer has no impact on the amount of tax he or she has to pay. In that light, it does not seem appropriate to grant individuals a general exemption in recognition of past services. This is a matter of general policy.

Many groups in our Canadian society are in need and would certainly deserve our help. Some assistance already has been given to retirees, by increasing and indexing the Old Age Security pension, and also the guaranteed income supplement, as well as to war veterans directly and their families by increasing the veterans' allowance and the veterans' disability pension. The numerous amendments made these last few years to the tax legislation substantially increased available income, and thereby the purchasing power of small- and medium-income people.

The Canadian Government is aware of the debt Canadians as a whole owe our war veterans and it is attempting to help them within its resources. A number of federal acts already provide for the payment of pensions, allowances and various benefits to war veterans. This includes the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the Pensions Act. Benefits paid to war veterans under those acts are not included in income, which means they are tax exempt. That approach has the merit of recognizing the special contribution of War Veterans to the protection of our country, our heritage and world peace in general.

On the other hand, where a war veteran has other sources of income such as employment, business, investments, etc., it seems reasonable that he pay the same amount of tax as other Canadians with similar income and circumstances.

The tax reform initiated by this Government, the outline of which will be made public in a few minutes, will reduce the tax burden of low income families, and thereby of many veterans who are in that particular situation.

To sum up, the Income Tax Act already grants preferred treatment to war veterans, and in view of the measures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will be announcing later tonight, establishing an extra income tax deduction for war veterans may not appear needed or even appropriate.

Such a deduction that needless to say would reduce employment, business or investment income would favour war veterans to the detriment of other Canadian taxpayers who might be just as deserving.

Nonetheless, it is not to be ruled out that the Government might increase its help to War Veterans. Simply, it does not seem appropriate that such additional help be provided through the tax legislation. The Minister of Veterans Affairs is best able to identify and dispense help to war veterans in need. That role should not be relinquished to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Speaker, this measure is quite in keeping with this Government's leitmotiv, which is to help the people most in need, which means unfortunately that we have to mitigate the benefits extended to those who are less in need.

• (1830)

What the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) is proposing would afford an advantage to people with high incomes and little advantage, if any, to people with no income. This is in total conflict with any social measure one can imagine. We believe that those in need, including veterans, are not getting enough compared to what they have contributed.

However, we must realize that we will certainly not give more to those who are most in need by collecting less revenue from those who are able to pay.

So, given all these considerations and with due regard and compassion, of course, for these brave fighting men and those who sustained their action away from the front lines, we believe that this motion should not be encouraged by our Government since it is almost anti-social and would certainly not help those who need it most.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) for giving the House an opportunity to discuss matters affecting Canada's veterans. All too often the House does not have an opportunity to discuss policy matters as they affect those individuals who, at great personal sacrifice, fought for Canada and world freedom, especially in the last two major wars.

I have been associated with the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer for quite a number of years through our joint activity on the House of Commons Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I know he brings a great deal of knowledge and experience to this debate. I have a tremendous amount of respect for the Hon. Member and for the effort, energy, and enthusiasm which he puts into those matters affecting Canadian veterans.

As I understand it, the intent of the motion of the Hon. Member is to provide a benefit through the Income Tax Act to those Canadians who served in Canada's Armed Forces in time of war. As I understand it, this benefit would be in the form of a tax credit and would be designed to give recognition to those Canadians for the sacrifice they made on Canada's behalf during wartime.

As will undoubtedly be pointed out in the course of this debate, those veterans who were wounded during the war, suffered through illness as a result of wartime experience, or were prisoners of war, will have benefits available to them under various programs administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I understand that this motion would provide a degree of recognition to those Canadians who were not prisoners of war and do not receive any other additional benefits under the various programs provided by the existing veterans legislation. The Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer is attempting to tell those veterans that while fortunately they are ineligible to become a recipient as a result of a war injury, illness or of being a prisoner of war, the federal Government and indeed Parliament wants to extend an extra recognition to them for the service they gave to the country during periods of armed conflict. In that sense, I think it behoves all of us to give full consideration to the sentiments being advanced by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer.

The Hon. Member, like myself, is not a tax accountant by any means. We are simply Members of the House who want to recognize the value that a number of Canadians have given to this country over the years. We are interested in the sentiment and recognition expressed in the motion.

The motion also gives us an opportunity to examine how we are treating a number of others in our veteran population. There is some urgency to the Hon. Member's motion that we give some additional recognition when we consider that Canada's veteran population is declining at a rate of some 25,000 a year.

I am sure the Hon. Member who moved the motion does not want to leave the impression that nothing is being done because I have heard him say on many occasions that all of us appreciate the efforts of the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) to the pressing problems facing our veterans. In fact, I have said in the House that since I came here in 1980 I do not know of any other Minister of Veterans Affairs who has moved so quickly in such a short period of time to resolve many of the outstanding problems facing veterans, even going back to the 1914-18 war.

I could not believe it when one of the first pieces of legislation the Minister of Veterans Affairs introduced in the House corrected a grievance that had existed since the 1914-18 war. Numerous delegations from the Canadian Legion appeared before the Veterans Affairs Committee over the years to seek correction of that injustice. The Minister took that action. I do not know why previous Ministers of Veterans Affairs had such difficulty in resolving many of these simple problems.

While I support the intention of the motion and praise the work done by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, it does not mean that there are not other matters that must be addressed soon on behalf of veterans.

One matter which I want to raise specifically concerns an issue that defies logic. It is a policy dealing with Canadians who served overseas during the war and, at the termination of the war, elected to remain in the country in which they served rather than return to Canada. According to the legislation, before these veterans can become eligible for the War Veterans Allowance, they are required to reside in Canada for a 12-month period. These are people who made a great sacrifice to themselves and their families and volunteered to fight not only for Canada but on behalf of free people everywhere in the world. While serving in those countries they may have met their spouse, married in the country in which they served and raised families. Many of them now are at an age when they are infirm and need some extra financial assistance in order to lead as normal a life as possible.

The Department of Veterans Affairs has indicated that it is willing to give these people assistance but, before doing so, they must uproot themselves from their family and return to Canada for 12 months to receive the benefits under the various pieces of legislation for veterans. I, nor those veterans, understand the logic behind that policy. I know that the Minister is quite sympathetic to the problem facing these veterans. I believe it is time for action, but I also understand and appreciate that it involves a cost to the treasury.

I have proposed a suggestion to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Canada is very generous to allied forces who are not Canadians but come to Canada and reside here for 10 years. After that 10-year period they become eligible for benefits under our veterans' legislation, quite properly so. I have suggested to the Minister that perhaps negotiations should take place with the United Kingdom and other European countries on the basis that we treat their veterans very generously in Canada and perhaps a reciprocal agreement with those Governments could be arranged to ensure that Canadian veterans living in those countries are treated as well as veterans who decide to live in Canada.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer for giving us an opportunity to discuss this important matter. It deserves all the support that the motion calls for.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate because the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) is entirely in keeping with the approach this Government has taken with respect to veterans.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) will probably go down as the most popular and effective Minister of Veterans Affairs that this country has ever seen. It has been a great pleasure and honour for me to have served as his parliamentary secretary.

When I visit Legions and Army and Navy units across the country, representing the Minister at Veterans Affairs functions, I hear nothing but the highest praise and respect for the Minister, particularly for the advanced legislation that he has brought forward over the last couple of years.

I am a life member of the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans. In my Legion in Winnipeg, every time I visit, I am asked about my Minister. It is the same in the Charleswood Legion in my riding. They often comment on the Minister's advanced legislation.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs made two very important announcements when he took office. The first announcement was that veterans were very special Canadians and that they would be treated as such by the Department of Veterans Affairs and by the Government of Canada. Following this was a second announcement that the overriding policy at the Department of Veterans Affairs would be summarized in three words: courtesy, generosity and speed. Those statements were strongly endorsed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and, indeed, by the entire Government. Since that time, I am confident all Hon. Members would agree, the Government has honoured the commitments given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs in September 1984.

It might appear easy today to say this is no big accomplishment. However, that was certainly not the case when we took office. Those of us who were here in the last Parliament can recall only too well how dreadful things had become at the Department of Veterans Affairs. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, constituents' complaints about Veterans Affairs ran second only to complaints about the Post Office. That is how badly the Department had slipped. In fact, matters were sufficiently serious to cause the previous Government to establish an independent committee of inquiry to try to sort it all out. The new Government scrapped that committee, rolled up its sleeves and went to work on behalf of Canada's veterans. The result in a very short time of less than three years has been dramatic.

Unquestionably, the number one complaint across Canada was delays in the pension process. Some veterans were waiting up to five years just to get a final ruling on their claims, and their chances of getting a favourable decision were not good at all. Thanks to this Government, delays in the pension process have been slashed by at least half and, in some cases, by over three-quarters. No one wants to hear the statistics anymore because there is no news in good news, yet our accomplishment is not only incredible but a source of real and genuine pride for all associated with it.

I use the word "incredible" and I know it is a very overworked word. Nonetheless, the slashing we have done with pension processing times has been achieved in the face of an almost two-fold increase in caseload. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, cutting turnaround times by well over half while almost doubling one's workload. At the same time veterans' claims are receiving far more thoughtful and considerate attention than was the case previously. Favourable decisions are running at over 50 per cent at first application, 60 per cent at first appeal and over 40 per cent at final appeal. This is the kind of generosity veterans have every reason to expect.

We also came to power with initiatives in mind and our legislative proposals have turned these initiatives into law. Widows of veterans no longer see the married rate of pension reduced within a month of the pensioner's death. Bill C-28 passed in early 1985, continued the married rate for a full year, thus giving the surviving spouse a chance to recover from his or her bereavement. The same principle was extended to exceptional incapacity and attendance allowance payments. Bill C-28 also settled once and for all the very legitimate complaint that veterans and veterans' organizations have raised with regard to the basic rate of pension.

It was always intended that the basic rate of pension, which is the rate payable to single pensioners whose disability assessment is 100 per cent, should be equal to the average take-home pay of four categories of public servants. Unfortunately, no mechanism was ever put in place to make sure the basic rate stayed in line with what these categories of public servants were receiving. The result was an endless circle of veterans falling behind, Parliament voting to raise the basic rate, veterans falling behind again, and on it went. We put an end to that by pegging the basic rate to the average wage I just mentioned while, at the same time, keeping veterans' pensions fully indexed. Veterans can now rest totally assured that the basic rate of pension will never again fall behind.

Action was also taken to remove a very discriminatory practice insofar as former prisoners of war were concerned. What was happening is that former prisoners of war were being denied any POW benefits if their disability pension was paid at the 100 per cent rate. Similarly, POW benefits were reduced if the payment of the full benefit, combined with the veteran's pension, would bring the total over the 100 per cent ceiling. This section of the Act caused hundreds of veterans to lose all or part of their compensation and it hurt the most severely disabled veterans the most. In fact, it was the Hong Kong POWs who were most affected by this unjust and inequitable measure.

Bill C-100, passed in March 1986, put an end to this discrimination. The legislation said plainly and simply that former POWs would receive all the compensation they were entitled to regardless of how much pension they were receiving. That legislation also acknowledged the fact that the Dieppe POWs were being unfairly compensated under the Act. Their compensation was increased from the equivalent from a 20 per cent pension to a 25 per cent pension.

This Government has always been active on the non-legislative side to assist veterans and their dependents. Eligibility for the Veterans Independence Program has been expanded four times since September 1984 and significant improvements have been made in the quality and extent of health and medical benefits.

We have also raised the casual earnings and interest income exemptions for war veterans allowance recipients, to say nothing of the almost twofold increase in the amount of education assistance provided under the Children of the War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. More recently the Minister announced that an 11 year injustice done to Canadian veterans held prisoners in North Africa during the Second World War had come to an end. These veterans will be receiving prisoner of war compensation and it will be paid retroactive to 1976, the year they should have started receiving this benefit.

This Government has further initiatives in mind and announcements will be made in the coming months in that regard. Our record to date is one in which I take personal pride because no one fought harder than I did in the last Parliament on behalf of Canada's veterans. We as a country owe veterans a tremendous debt and they richly deserve the very best we can provide. Our Prime Minister and our Government very sincerely believe that, and we have proven our sincerity in word and deed for the past two and a half years.

The Hon. Member's motion has been drafted in exactly the same spirit and I commend him for it. For my part, I would be very glad to see the Hon. Member's suggestion given every consideration by the Minister of Finance, who has himself demonstrated a long standing interest and concern in Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) is giving me the opportunity to pay tribute to the men and women of the riding of Lévis who have fought in the last wars. Many of them never came back from overseas. Therefore, I want to pay tribute to them as well as to their families and to those who are still living. Each year in November, I meet a number of them. I am pleased today to mention the dean of those former defenders of our country, Mr. Lévis Brochu, a citizen still very active in our riding and who took part in the First World War of 1914-18. He told me personally what life was like in the trenches at that time. Therefore, I pay tribute to Mr. Brochu who on every occasion and at every celebration of Remembrance Day manages to come and see me in order to explain what happened during the years 1914 to 1918 and during the subsequent wars.

The purpose of the proposal of the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) is to give to former servicemen and veterans a unique status in terms of our tax system. That suggestion, I think, could have been made between the years 1965 and 1984, when the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer was a member of the Government in office, except for a short period in 1979.

The Hon. Member was also Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He was also Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) where he was in a privileged position to encourage that course of action for veterans. Therefore, in that sense, may be the proposal comes too late. In another sense, I think that it may be less appropriate today because this Government, in particular this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will announce to Canadians new proposals for a major tax reform, the most extensive one since 1971 and maybe since 1917, when the general tax legislation was passed.

Mr. Speaker, maybe this is why one should wonder whether it is advisable to act immediately on the proposal of the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer. I reflect on the meaning of his proposal considering the two aspects of the Government's role. The first duty of a Government is to collect taxes to finance state expenditures in terms of goods and services. At present, that financing costs $116 billion to Canadians. From that amount, this Government allocates $57 billion to the protection of disadvantaged people and to bring their standard of living more in line with that of Canadians in general. Fifty-seven billion dollars in our budget are already allocated to the underprivileged, and the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer would recommend that the money allocated to those people be increased through tax expenses. You have to have money to be able to redistribute it to Canadians, and tax expenditures are a loss of revenues for our Government, they already amount to $35 billion a year. So, I do not feel it is appropriate to increase those tax expenditures by such an amount, to increase them by $35 billion.

There is also the fact that the tax system applies to all Canadians and must be fair. Most of the benefits paid to veterans are tax free. This is already a tax assistance which is given to them and which nevertheless protects the integrity of the tax system. It is directly related to payments made in consideration of military service.

Moreover, veterans benefit from other programs and tax breaks like the old age deduction, that is $2,640 in 1987 for those 65 years old and over. There is also the deduction for disabled people, that is $2,890 in 1987, which is now available to a larger number of taxpayers, a deduction for medical costs including the cost of a nursing home insofar as the costs exceed 3 per cent of the net income.

Finally, the pension income deduction: a maximum of $1,000 on payments received from private retirement funds.

Deductions in the calculation of taxable income benefit high income taxpayers, which might not be the purpose of the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer, while they put low income taxpayers at a disadvantage. The tax reform we will announce officially tonight at eight o'clock proposes to change those deductions into tax credits. Any increase in a deduction aimed at lowering taxable income, Mr. Speaker, favours Canadian men and women in the higher tax brackets. Any tax credit that is granted favour Canadian men and women who pay little in taxes. That is why our tax reform will recommend tax credits. The most destitute veterans, whom we take for granted the motion seeks to help, will effectively benefit from measures that will be put forward tonight at eight o'clock.

The adoption of a special deduction for veterans would make our tax legislation even more complex than it is and you know our Government is trying in every way it can to demystify and simplify the whole legislative process in effect in Canada, including the tax legislation process.

So the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer's motion would make the tax legislation even more complex than it is, since it would require that several provisions be drafted to single out eligible taxpayers.

Finally, if such a deduction were to be granted to veterans without regard to their needs and their ability to pay, the government would probably be flooded with claims from groups as much entitled to a similar deduction as the veterans. That would result in a significant erosion of the tax base and a weakened personal income tax system.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, such a reduction of our revenues is altogether contrary to our need to balance the expenditures and revenues of this country. We have been trying to achieve such a balance since 1984. When we came to power, the annual deficit amounted to $38 billion and, according to the technocrats of the day and depending on the way government's planned legislation was being interpreted, it was estimated then that the deficit would reach $40 billion, or $45 billion or even $50 billion a year. Since we came to power and as we want to balance revenues with expenditures, we decided to reduce the deficit year after year and we must keep that objective in mind while addressing the proposal of the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer. Moreover, given the fiscal reform to be announced tonight, I suggest the motion is premature.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) for the superb job that he has been doing. The 11 Legions in my riding of Timiskaming certainly respect the job that he has done for them.

I would like to review some of the comments made in regard to further tax treatment for veterans. A couple of the areas which we would like to look at include the disability deduction of over $2,890 which is now available to a large segment of the population. Along with that deduction in respect of medical expenses, nursing care—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise to give the House notice that, at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the order of the day for resuming debate on Motion No. 5, standing in my name, regarding capital punishment, and on the amendment proposed thereto, I shall be moving a motion that the debate shall not be further adjourned, pursuant to Standing Order 57.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee and the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed Private Members' Hour. It is always a bit disconcerting to have one's presentation interrupted. I understand I had three or four minutes left on my allocated time.

The first point I made is that the current law needs changing. To my mind, the better course at this stage is to have Bill C-55 referred to committee. Once we have the opportunity to hear the testimony of the experts in this area, we can then amend the Bill such that it will achieve what Canadians and Members of this House would like to see it achieve. Before concluding, I should like to leave Hon. Members with a sense of the major issues to which the legislative committee should direct its attention.

The Minister has said that the Bill is not cast in stone. He has said, clearly and consistently, that the refugee board member who conducts the oral hearing at the first stage shall have discretion as to whether or not the case should proceed to a later stage. That is an important principle. If the Bill is not clear in that respect, if the testimony before the committee indicates that amendments are required to make that clear, then I would urge that those changes be made.

There is a lot of concern about the issue of appeal, of review. The words vary from place to place. What is really involved is that in any situation where the object is to protect life, there must be a way of correcting an error. Whether that ability exists in the legislation by virtue of the humanitarian and compassionate grounds allowed the Minister or whether there needs to be wording changes is a point for discussion. In any event, we must not bring the Bill back before the House without there being some principle in it which will allow for the correcting of an error.

It is inconceivable that the two-person panels across the country would be capable of adjudicating these matters day in and day out, year in and year out without error. There will be mistakes made, and we must have a mechanism to correct such errors.

I would urge Cabinet to be a little less sanguine about the responsibility of naming safe third countries. The Cabinet has a complex task, a complex job. In terms of international relations, it is not unknown to have linkages. Cabinet must deal with trade concerns, concerns about peace and war, concerns related to alliances.

In naming safe third countries, we are dealing with human rights issues. I suggest to the House that we examine the idea that the expert body, the board itself, might propose to Cabinet safe situations, thus giving the elected representatives of this country the final say. I suggest that that might be a better body to propose safe third country situations than that which has previously being considered.

The fourth item relates to the whole issue of abusers. I have read and reread the legislation, and I am still not certain how this whole process begins. Under the current law, an individual claiming to be a refugee is referred to an inquiry. The inquiry is adjourned and another hearing takes place, with evidence taken under oath, and it then moves on to later stages.

Under Bill C-55, the process may start at the same beginning point, where a claim is made and an inquiry starts, and it then has to be adjourned, with a refugee board person then being brought in. That process may result in a backlog. It is that administrative process that may cause a backlog. It may be the mechanism that might benefit abusers. I would urge the committee, and those preparing to testify before the committee, to take a close look at that process.

If what I fear is correct, the solution may be to split the situation so that the refugee hearing is separate from the Immigration Board inquiry. That may be administratively sounder; it may be fairer to the refugees; and it may be cheaper from the taxpayers' point of view. It simply may work best.

People talk about visitor visas. That is the screen that keeps refugee claimants out of this country. It is a broad and brutal brush. I have seen it in operation.

Bill C-55, with careful scrutiny and necessary arrangements, will produce a situation which, I am convinced, will be fairer to bona fide refugees than any system that exists in any country in the world. But, it needs to go to committee. We need the expert testimony and the wisdom of those who work so hard in this area to enable us to understand the complexities of this issue. We cannot achieve that in the House. The Bill must be referred to committee. I would hope that the Liberal Party might reconsider its position and in fact help us get the Bill before the committee, where we can do the job that needs doing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), to be followed by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to what the former chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has had to say, and I am heartened by the movement that he has displayed over the course of his 20 minute speech on the motion for the second reading of this Bill. He has articulated, I think very genuinely, some of his concerns with respect to the Bill, and the fact that he, together with the opposition Parties, would like to see some very significant amendments in order to make the Bill supportable.

I am unsure as to what he meant in the last portion of his remarks when he said that it was his wish that the Liberal Party allow the Bill to go to committee. I do not think the Liberal Party has the liberty of stopping it from going to committee. We will certainly be there and we will be moving amendments and calling witnesses. We are certainly going to play an active part in committee consideration of the Bill.

I heard the Hon. Member speak of his concerns about the safe third country concept, as well as the appeal process. I may have missed the portion of his remarks wherein he discussed the prescreening stage. I am wondering what his views on that are. The Minister seems to suggest that it is not a prescreening. The constituency, on the other hand, feels very strongly that this does is in fact undermine the effectiveness of the refugee board in doing the work that we all want it to do.

I am curious as to how he views the role of the two officers at the border point and whether he favours a removal of that provision, or whether he favours a provision which would call for both Members to be from the refugee board as opposed to one being from the immigration team.

I am wondering whether he would care to share with the House his views on that very fundamental and important first step, a step that could be the last step for many refugees, if those provisions are allowed to stand.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Let me say at the outset that the motion which the Hon. Member moved, if passed by the House, would halt progress of the Bill through the House. It would never be considered. That is why I urge the Liberal Party to rethink its position on it.

The more important issue which the Hon. Member raises is the matter of the first stage hearing. The advantage that this legislation provides is the fact that we would have, for the first time, an expert body, a group of people whose sole concern would be refugees, a group of people who are knowledgeable about country-specific conditions, handling these matters. If that board has discretion, then, in my view, there is universal access to an oral hearing in stage one. If that board is not to have discretion, then it amounts to a screen.

There are lawyers who tell us, very clearly, that the way the fine print now reads, it is a screen. The Minister has said many times in the House that that discretion is there for the board person. But if it is the expert person who is deciding and the decision is that there is not the slightest bit of evidence that the claimant needs the protection of Canada, then that is an absolute decision; or the decision could be that there is some doubt as to the matter, in which event it proceeds to stage two.

I believe that a properly functioning board person, with that kind of expertise and that kind of discretion, would always err on the side of sending the matter forward for a more complete examination, thus providing more time for the claimant to produce the necessary evidence to substantiate the claim for refugee status.

It is at that stage when the board itself hears the case and says that there is not the slightest scintilla of possibility that the person needs the protection of Canada. If that is what they are doing, then I say that it is universal access and it is a hearing. A fuller hearing can take place at stage two if there is any possibility that a person may need the protection of Canada.

I think that would work. The more I think about it, the more convinced I am that the discretion lies at the heart of it.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have three questions. I will try to list them quickly and ask the Hon. Member to respond.

I am certainly interested in his expression of concern or sympathy with some of the objections raised with people in the public who have expertise about the Bill.

My main question is: when this goes to committee, does the Member envisage that the committee and the majority members on the committee, namely members of his caucus, will be willing to allow the time to go into the amendments which have been suggested by the public thoroughly and to deal with them fairly, or will they just say: "Well, a couple of meetings, then back to report"? That sort of thing has happened not on all Bills, but on some Bills.

Second, when he says that Cabinet should be less sanguine about naming third countries and perhaps give the first round to the refugee board, would he go so far as to advocate amending the law so as to include in it the criteria of the safe third country?

For example, must a safe third country be one which guarantees not to refoule the person to the country from which he says he is fleeing, or is a safe third country that will give the person a refugee hearing which meets Canadian standards, with of course the guarantee not to refoule if he is found to be a refugee? What other criteria, less than that or more than that, would the Member consider for the safe third country? Would he be willing to write those into the law?

My third question is on abusers. Would the Member be willing to see the process begin without the presumption of guilt, that is, without the inquiry first to stamp the person as either an abuser or a probable abuser with the issuance of a deportation order or a conditional deportation order? Can we start the actual refugee hearing without putting that stigma on the claimant?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with those three questions in the order they were presented.

Recent history tells us clearly that a law which is not legally sound or in accordance with the Charter and all those things is a bad law. The courts will turn it down. We have had that happen to our Immigration Act in recent history. That is the reason which led to a lot of the changes in the Immigration Appeal Board.

I believe that no one in this Chamber wants to put in place a law which will be struck down. To be as sure as we can be that it will not be struck down requires expert testimony from government official and private sector people about the fine print.

I do not think in this particular case, given the complexity, the history, and the problems, that there is any danger of cutting off debate. What I do think—and I may differ from the Hon. Member who raised the question; I am not sure—is that we need expert witnesses. I do not think we need witnesses who want to attest the Parliament of Canada about their concerns about refugees. I think that is a given shared by all Members. What we need is expert testimony about the fine print.

Turning to the third country concept, it is possible to entertain some amendments which would bind that. I have an immediate reaction that that might not be the wisest course, that what we might want there is simply a test. If we are returning to another country, we want to be sure that they do not need the protection of Canada but that they do indeed have the protection of the country to which they are returning. It may be a test rather than an attempt to bind. Sometimes when we attempt to bind things we leave out some things and later, in retrospect, we wish we had them in there; sometimes we put in things we did not intend. We may not have all the wisdom; it may be that some other kind of legal concept would be helpful.

This is why I suggest that the board itself, in its expert wisdom and using what it does to judge individual cases, might indeed be the best body to judge country cases. That might be the more important thing to put in the law.

When it comes to the issue of inquiry first, refugee hearing first, the inquiry is important to stop abuse, and it should happen quickly; that is my view. The hearing on whether somebody might or might not be a refugee is what I see as a separate thing.

In our committee report in October 1985, we drew the distinction between immigration concerns and human rights concerns. I want as pure a process as we can see for the human rights concern, not for it to be fouled up with the immigration concern. However, I think we would be inviting trouble if we said that Immigration could not proceed to make the decisions which Immigration must make.

It may be that doing the two in the same hearing is better. I have not heard the testimony pro or con or all the reasons. However, I think it might not be the best way. It is the separation, the clarity on the two sides, which concerns me more, not the time.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, there are two very different aspects to Canada's refugee policy. First, there are refugees we select abroad and, second, there are those who make claims in Canada.

The refugees we select abroad are part of a controlled, predictable movement which allows Canada to select the cream of refugees through relaxed immigration criteria. A minority are convention refugees. I want to emphasize that immigration criteria dominate the selection of refugees abroad.

First, we determine whether the claimant is a convention refugee. Second, we determine whether the applicant is capable of becoming successfully established in Canada. We take into consideration, in so doing, all factors used in assessing independent immigrants.

The needs of the refugee are secondary in a process which is shaped by our domestic immigration needs and our domestic policies. Through immigration we seek to foster internal growth by adding skills which are in demand in Canada. We seek to further social goals such as reuniting families. This is all done within the policy goals of Canada and according to our domestic needs.

When we select refugees abroad, Canada's needs are looked after. However, this does nothing to respond to the needs of the refugee who may have to pick up and go quickly, who has no time to apply, whose life may be in danger by lining up at a Canadian embassy or consulate to apply to come to Canada as a refugee judged by immigration criteria.

Selecting refugees abroad, according to immigration criteria, is no help to those who are jumping away from the fire, as Rabbi Plaut put it several weeks ago when he spoke in Montreal. This is why we have the procedure of allowing claims in Canada.

Under the 1951 UN Convention, Canada has undertaken to protect persons who are physically present in Canada, who claim to be refugees, and who seek asylum here. This flow is much less controllable and does not allow for the selection process which is used when we select refugees abroad.

• (1930)

On February 20, the Government introduced a series of measures designed to prevent refugees from coming to Canada to make their claims. These measures include transit visas, abolishment of the non-deport list and the holding of claimants at the U.S. border. The Government wants refugees to come to our embassies abroad where we can select them according to our own interests and according to our own immigration criteria.

Bill C-55 which we are debating today for the first time introduces the troubling concept of the safe third country. A claimant who comes to Canada from such a country will have no opportunity to be heard on the merits of his or her claim. As there are no refugee-producing states on our borders or in close proximity to Canada, it is not hard to figure out that as many as 80 per cent to 90 per cent of refugee claimants will be excluded as a result of this provision.

To understand the significance of the administrative changes of February 20 and of Bill C-55, I would like to say a few words about the UN Convention. That Convention was a milestone in the history of the treatment of refugees because it addressed the rights of individuals and the obligations of states. Given the overwhelming tragedy of World War II with hundreds of thousands of people becoming victims because they had nowhere to go, because no country would accept them, it was felt necessary to provide individuals with the capacity to effect some salvation on their own, to move spontaneously to a safe haven. The Convention was a significant deviation from the principle that a sovereign country had absolute control over who it permits to enter its borders. The Convention of 1951, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are parts of what has been described as a revolution in international law. Traditionally international law recognized only states. Since the Convention and the Declaration, individuals are recognized under international law.

Prior to the Convention, the capacity to move to a safe haven did not exist. The victims of the Holocaust had no such capacity. Without the Convention, all a refugee has is what the Government wants him to have. The Government wants refugees to apply to immigrate to Canada or to another country from an embassy within the refugee's own country or perhaps a bordering country. If turned down, the refugee, of course, has the right to suffer.

Through the measures of February 20 and Bill C-55, the Government is saying: "It is our right to choose". This violates the UN Convention because the moment we talk about choice, we introduce elements which have nothing whatsoever to do with individual rights. When one chooses, one does not look at the needs of the person involved. It is domestic policies and politics which prevail.

Keeping Jews out of Canada in the 1930s and the 1940s was very popular domestically. Today, in his opening comments and practically in his very first sentence, the Minister referred to the fact that Bill C-55 is popular in Canada, and so it may be. However, the question I put to the Minister is does that make it right? Is legislation right just because it responds to what many Canadians see as being a problem?

Perhaps many Canadians are concerned that there have been too many refugee claimants coming to Canada in recent years. Perhaps they feel that our system is somehow being swamped. Whether they are right or wrong, does that make it right to introduce legislation which responds to public opinion but which may be morally unfounded?

What criteria will be used to choose refugees? Again, Canada chose not to take Jews in the 1940s. This clearly was not based on the needs of the victims. I suggest to the Minister that it is wrong to assume that when he or any Minister chooses, those who are most in need will be chosen or they will be chosen according to fair criteria. That is why it is so important and indeed essential that people have the capacity to present their claims. That is why the convention exists.

We do not need a Convention to tell people to line up abroad. It is essential that people have the capacity to have their cases presented and judged on the basis of Canada's international obligations under the Convention and developed through decisions rendered over the past 35 years. That is why the thrust of the recommendations made by Rabbi Plaut, non-governmental organizations, church groups, human rights organizations and the standing committee is that the claimant should be given the opportunity to be heard by an independent tribunal which would inquire into the substance or merits of the claim for protection. Bill C-55 violates that basic principle because it establishes procedures under which claimants have no opportunity to be heard if they come from a safe third country.

If a claimant comes from a country which is on a predetermined list, established by Cabinet, a list which may have nothing whatsoever to do with personal circumstances, he is out. He is sent back home. The Minister cannot say that no genuine refugee will be returned when he has not established a procedure that will inquire into whether a person is indeed a refugee or not.

In the procedure proposed by the Government, there will be no opportunity for a claimant to present a case if he comes from a country which is on the list of safe third countries. There will be no opportunity to refute the assumption that the country the Government proposes to return him to is indeed safe. The inquiry will be limited to determining from where the person had come. There will be no discretion on the part of the two people who will preside at the initial hearing. The undeniable effect is that we will return people who need protection. It is false for the Minister to say that no genuine refugee will be returned to a country where he or she may face persecution because the procedure he proposes provides no opportunity for the refugee to make his or her claim.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) said that we should study this in committee and hear what the experts have to say about it. I would ask him if he has even read the legislation. I believe any first-year law student could tell him that no discretion is given to those who will preside at the initial hearing. Every lawyer to whom I have spoken who has read this Bill feels that there is no discretion in it. How can the Government now tell us that a refugee will in all cases be given the benefit of the doubt? How can the Minister say as he had said umpteen times, and that is what is so infuriating about his attitude, that even when there is a shred of evidence supporting the claim, the claimant will be entitled to a hearing? That is a lot of garbage. It is just not so.

The Government suggests that the opponents of this Bill are advocating an open-door policy, a policy of taking in millions of refugees. One would think that hundreds of thousands of people were standing in the pipeline, as Rabbi Plaut put it several weeks ago. You would think that 155,000 Tamils had come to Canada last August. Last year we had 18,000 claimants, no more than would fill an average size hockey arena.

• (1940)

The NGOs, the churches, human rights organizations, lawyers who work with refugees, Rabbi Plaut, and the standing committee all called for a process which would discourage abuse by dealing with claims quickly. There is abuse today because the process is cumbersome. Anyone who comes here today is assured of two to five years of procedure and appeals. A person can get married and appeal to the Minister on compassionate grounds. There is an incentive to abuse the system. However, if the process turns these people around in three months there will be no incentive to abuse. That is the way to deal with abusers, not by imposing an arbitrary screening procedure such as is proposed in this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the real question is how many can Canada accept? What evidence is there that the Canadian society cannot absorb any more refugees or immigrants? Have we reached our saturation point? All signs point to the contrary.

May I remind you of what Canada did five or six years ago to help refugees from Indochina. At the time, the Government had appealed to the generosity of Canadians who then organized refugee sponsoring groups in various parts of the country. We opened our military bases and we chartered planes to bring in refugees from Indochina. Since 1979, we have received over 100,000 such refugees, including over 60,000 in 1979 and 1980 alone. Seven or eight years later, all these people are contributing something to our country.

In fact, since the war, Canada has received over 500,000 refugees. But can anyone claim sincerely that Canada is doing more than its share compared with other countries, especially those which have common borders with the refugee producing countries? I should like to quote a few figures, Mr. Speaker. Today, Pakistan has some 2.7 million refugees from Afghanistan within its borders; Sudan, 1.2 million; Somalia, 700,000; Hong Kong, 200,000; Thailand has welcomed hundreds of thousands of refugees from Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. Today, there are still some 250,000 refugees in camps situated along the Cambodian border. Mexico has some 175,000 refugees; France, 174,000; West Germany, 134,000; England, 135,000. Who, then, can say that Canada has done more than its share?

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that Canada is the second largest country in the world. We have a very small population, compared to most other countries. Our natural resources are unbelievable. Which country will maintain a generous attitude toward refugees if not Canada? Canada should play a leading role in the protection of refugees. And it is not with the type of a bill introduced by this Tory Government that Canada will assume its responsibilities.

[English]

Therefore, in conclusion, I wish to indicate that I support the amendment proposed by my colleague from York West for a six-month hoist. I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Calgary West that this Bill merits second reading.

I would like to make an additional comment. The Minister and other spokesmen for the Conservative Party have said very few countries will be on the list of safe third countries. The Minister tells us to have faith in him because he is a good guy. I remind him that the basis of protection is in law, not in speeches of the Minister. When the people who preside at the initial hearing have to decide the case they will look at the Act, the regulations and the manual. They are not going to look at the speeches the Minister made all over the country trying to promote his Bill. This law will be applied long after the Minister is gone. I ask him, why have a provision if it is not going to be applied?

It is incredible to suggest that the public, legislators, and people who work with refugees should rely on the Minister's good faith and not on what the law says. That is what the Minister has been telling us for the past few weeks. I say to him in all sincerity that that kind of an argument is totally unacceptable. We cannot pass a law on the basis of the Minister's good intentions. We have to study, judge and pass a law on the basis of the very clear language in which it is written.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his remarks. He was very interested in this issue long before this legislation arrived here for second reading. No one in this Party wishes to stop this legislation from going to committee. Obviously we look forward to having another round with witnesses who can again make their representations on this legislation. What has worried us the most is that after three years of consultation a major segment of what was proposed by the NGOs were not listened to. As a result, we are afraid that the same process will take place in committee for a second time.

We heard from the Hon. Member for Calgary. We heard from NDP Members. Both myself and the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) have spoken as well. All of this was in the hope that the Government will pay attention to the needed reforms and amendments and show some movement so that everyone can be happy with the legislation.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he can share with us his views on an appeal mechanism based on points of law rather than on the circumstances faced by the legitimate refugee in his homeland.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member say on a number of occasions that the determination process is only as good as the appeal process. If you do not have an appeal on interpretation of fact, there is no appeal. This recommendation was made unanimously by all groups which have been heard from in the past several years as well as by the standing committee. It points to what the Minister is asking us to swallow.

• (1950)

I have heard him say publicly on a couple of occasions that this Bill is not perfect. I heard a Conservative Party member speak at a conference in Montreal last Friday night on the right of internal asylum and say that the Bill is not perfect. However, the Minister was quoted in the papers yesterday as saying that he will not amend the Bill. Perhaps he was misquoted.

What are we supposed to believe? He goes around the country saying he is a nice guy. Six months ago he told people that if a Bill was presented which he could not accept, he would resign. This Bill violates every basic principle which has been laid down and talked about for the past few years, yet he does not resign. He says, "I'm not perfect but I won't amend the Bill".

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is making all kinds of statements about things I am alleged to have said or not to have said. Why does he not answer the question and not try to enter into debate on something on which he has no evidence or facts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair believes that is a matter of debate. The Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) has the floor.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is incredible that the Minister would go around the country saying that the Bill is not perfect and that maybe we can improve it, then say the next day that they will not amend the Bill. He wakes up one day and is Mr. Nice Guy. The next day he may have been kicked by his wife in bed and tells us that he will not amend the Bill. Is this the kind of basis upon which parliamentarians are expected to evaluate and judge a Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question and make a few comments to my colleague from Laurier (Mr. Berger), for I know he is open-minded about the immigrant and refugee issue.

Keeping in mind the fact the the Minister of State responsible for immigrants—and keeping in mind the open-mindedness of Montrealers and the ever generous welcome they extend to refugees, particularly in Montreal West, I should like to ask him this: How can the people of Montreal and the people of Dollard understand their Member now, when we know that the people of Montreal West have always been very generous with these people, always welcoming them, and now a former mayor of Montreal West who today is the Minister responsible has been making speeches in the Montreal region and trying to make people believe he has an open mind, whereas in fact here he is the most hard-hearted man for refugees, a man who has changed completely?

I wish my colleague from Laurier would tell me: Is it because the Minister is under supervision here, he does not carry any weight—all he has is a limousine and the extra $40,000—he is powerless and has been given orders, or is it simply that he is showing his true colours here and showing his other face in his riding? I would like to know the opinion of my colleague on this.

Mr. Berger: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It should be said that the people of Montreal West are not the only ones who have been generous to refugees and immigrants in the last several years. As I have already said, only a few years ago, in 1979 and 1980, Canadians welcomed with open hearts thousands of East Asian refugees.

The Minister makes generous speeches. He says that he is meeting all the expectations of the population and that he will treat refugees fairly. This is a spurious statement and this is why the government is deceiving the Canadian public.

Let me just quote the words of a Toronto lawyer who met with the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and with various groups representing refugees in Montreal and other organizations from throughout Canada who were in Montreal a few weeks ago. This lawyer said: "You know, Mr. Minister, there are two Bills C-55. There is the Bill tabled in the House which we now have before us, and then there is the other Bill C-55 to which you refer in your speeches."

He added: "We have not seen this second Bill". As for us, Members of Parliament, we have to deal with the Bill which was introduced in this House on March 5. It is a fact that the Canadian public welcomes the speeches of the Minister because they deal with a bill that does not exist, except in his imagination.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé).

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a brief contribution to the debate on Bill C-55, a very important Bill, which is concerned with equity, justice and compassion for refugees. And at this point I would like to extend special greetings to the refugees in the riding of Chambly, who are very well received, need I add.

Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand why the Official Opposition, the Liberals and the New Democrats, are opposed to this Bill or want a six-month hoist on referring the Bill to committee, while claiming at the same time that our Bill does not go far enough in facilitating the admission of refugees to Canada. They should make up their minds once and for all and decide whether they would rather deny refugees the right to enter Canada, so we will have to go on working with boards and hearings and calling additional witnesses while we know that the existing system is already much too slow. And that is why it is so important for this Bill to have these important provisions that facilitate the entry of refugees in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to have Bill C-55 adopted, not for our own benefit as parliamentarians but for the benefit of refugees. We want to make things easier for them. And when we talk about public opinion polls, it is obvious Canada was built thanks to the refugees who came to our shores, Mr. Speaker. I think the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) is the first Minister of State for Immigration among the last five we have had who has managed to table a valid and serious piece of legislation that will make refugees better aware of their rights and make it easier for them to enter Canada. That is essential, and I think we have a duty to let this Bill, Bill C-55, go to committee as soon as possible. Of course there may be a few minor changes, but I think that on the whole, in this Bill the Minister wanted to take quick action to facilitate refugee access to this country and enable Canada to maintain its international refugee policy.

Mr. Speaker, our purpose in tabling Bill C-55 was certainly not to turn our backs on refugees. In fact, we want to offer genuine protection to those who need our help. However, if we are to focus our efforts on protecting bona fide refugees, we must rationalize the process and clamp down on abuse.

Mr. Speaker, I see I have very little time left, but I am glad to give up my time so that Canadians, once again thanks to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Conservative Government and our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will experience a historic moment in their lives: tax reform.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Order made Friday, June 12, 1987, the House will now revert to Statements by Ministers. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, tonight I am proposing sweeping changes to Canada's tax system. These changes will directly affect all Canadians for many years to come.

Our tax system should be a strong force in meeting the challenges that face our country.

It must help individuals and businesses deal with the challenges of the 1990s and into the next century.

It must reinforce our ability as a country to continue to provide the social programs needed by our people.

It must generate the hope and opportunity that will motivate Canadians to build a strong country in a very competitive world.

But to do this, the tax system must have the respect of Canadians. We know that it does not. And we know why.

We all know that the tax system allows many profitable corporations to avoid paying a fair share of tax, year after year.

We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax than the average Canadian wage-earner, year after year.

We all know that it allows those who are able to use special tax breaks to shift the burden to others less able to carry it.

Canada needs a tax system that raises revenues in a fair and reliable way; a system that supports our national effort to promote economic growth and create more and better jobs.

Over the years, our tax system has become a crazy quilt of special incentives, special deductions and special write-offs.

Each special incentive gives a break to someone. But each special tax break means that taxes have to be higher for everyone else. Special breaks have made the income tax more and more complicated, and less and less fair.

During the past two years, I have acted to strengthen the integrity of the tax system. Many tax breaks have been eliminated. But further action is needed to restore faith and trust in the system, to ensure that it works for the benefit of all Canadians. Tonight I am taking that action. I am proposing sweeping reforms to the personal and corporate income tax system. Beginning January 1, 1988:

We will reduce or eliminate many special tax breaks. Those high-income individuals and profitable corporations who currently pay little tax will carry a greater share of the tax burden.

We will further increase the fairness of our personal income tax by converting tax exemptions and deductions to tax credits, with particular benefits for lower-income and elderly Canadians.

We will reduce the burden of taxation on those who have not been taking advantage of special tax breaks. As a result, 80 per cent of Canadian households will have lower personal income taxes in 1988. A typical family of four earning $30,000 will pay about $500 less in taxes. Federal income tax will be completely eliminated for 850,000 Canadians, 250,000 of whom are senior citizens.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADA

Tax reform is much more than simply fixing what has gone wrong with our tax system.

We have an opportunity to build a new tax system that will be fairer and more progressive.

A tax system that will assist, rather than hinder, our ability to grow and prosper.

A tax system that will complement and support important initiatives that will shape our future.

A tax system that will keep Canada competitive in a freer trade environment, one that is compatible with new approaches the government is planning on child care, and that reinforces other key priorities.

The reform proposals are far-reaching in their scope and impact. They are explained in the documents that I will table tonight. Tomorrow, booklets and pamphlets will be available in most supermarkets and shopping malls across the country. I would urge Hon. Members and all Canadians to study the tax reform package carefully.

The proposals have benefited from ideas, suggestions and recommendations from many people and groups across the country and from members of this House. I have also had constructive consultations with provincial ministers of finance.

This package reflects these consultations. It reflects basic principles of good and fair taxation, and in a way that recognizes Canadian reality and Canadians' priorities.

[English]

The proposals will be implemented in two stages. Income tax changes will take effect beginning in the 1988 taxation year. In the second stage, the existing sales tax will be replaced by a new sales tax system. The existing sales tax has long been recognized as unfair to Canadian industry, workers and consumers. The new sales tax will be linked to the personal income tax through an enhanced sales tax credit to improve the fairness of the tax system.

• (2010)

I want to emphasize that the reform proposals I will table tonight are a package.

They work together in a consistent, comprehensive way.

They strike a responsible balance among the many objectives that our tax system must serve in addition to raising revenues: objectives such as targeting assistance to those who need it most, promoting regional equality and encouraging greater investment in Canada's future.

Some will argue that the government should have wiped out more tax incentives. But I am not prepared to abandon key national and regional priorities. The incentives that will remain in the system are there for good reasons.

Others will argue for retention of some of the tax breaks being eliminated. But let us not forget that they are asking for special tax breaks for some which mean higher taxes for many others.

Our reforms are designed to be neither a revenue grab nor a windfall. On balance, the reformed system will raise about the same revenue as the current system.

But, by shifting more of the tax burden from individuals to corporations, and by lowering rates and removing preferences, the reforms make fundamental changes in who pays and how much.

Those who have made extensive use of tax preferences will pay more tax. Many corporations and some individuals will pay more. Most individuals and some businesses will pay less. Corporations will carry a bigger share of the total tax load. Sales tax revenues will be increased.

Canadians want personal income taxes to be lower. They will be. We will have both lower rates and a fairer system.

PERSONAL INCOME TAX REFORM

Federal personal income taxes will be reduced by about $2 billion in 1988 and more than $11 billion over the next five years.

Most Canadians will pay lower taxes because of two far-reaching changes: a new structure of federal income tax rates and the conversion of exemptions and deductions to tax credits.

Currently there are 10 rates of federal income tax, rising with income to a top rate of 34 per cent. Beginning in 1988, there will be only three rates: 17 per cent on the first $27,500 of taxable income, 26 per cent on the next $27,500 and 29 per cent on taxable income over $55,000.

Despite having only three tax brackets, the personal income tax system will be more progressive.

The key to making the system more progressive is the conversion of exemptions and deductions to tax credits. This will completely eliminate federal income tax for 850,000 Canadians, 250,000 of whom are senior citizens. Let me explain how credits make this happen.

If the Government were to introduce a program to help the elderly or the disabled, and if the program were set up so that richer people got a bigger payment than poorer people, most Canadians would think that was unfair. And they would be right.

But, that is exactly what our current system of exemptions does.

For example, we now have a deduction of $2,670 for Canadians 65 and over. For a senior citizen with $15,000 of income, this is worth about $455 in lower taxes. For another senior with $100,000 of income, the same deduction would be worth $910—about twice as much.

Exemptions reduce the amount of income that is subject to tax. This makes their value greater for those with higher incomes because higher-income people have higher tax rates. Credits reduce tax payable. They are worth the same regardless of income.

We will replace exemptions with tax credits. In the case of the age credit, it will be worth $550 in tax savings to all seniors.

The new credits will ensure that the vast majority of Canadians pay lower income taxes.

This will mean, for example, that nine out of 10 Canadians 65 and over will pay less federal tax in 1988. A typical elderly married couple with $25,000 of income will pay about $650 less.

Tax credits also support the objectives we set in the February, 1986, Budget—to target assistance more effectively to those with lower incomes and reduce the after-tax value of transfer payments to those with higher incomes. Converting exemptions to credits does just that, while maintaining universal access to family allowance and old age security payments.

[Translation]

The personal income tax reforms reflect a number of priority areas for this government.

We all want our younger Canadians to receive a good education. This is critical to Canada's future. The new education and tuition credits can be claimed either by the student or a supporting spouse, parent or grandparent. This will substantially augment the availability of tax assistance for students pursuing a post-secondary education.

Our communities are strengthened and enriched by the contribution of volunteer organizations. The new tax credit for charitable giving has been designed to provide a substantial incentive for donations, particularly for low-and middle-income earners.

The tax reform proposals will continue to help Canadians become more self-reliant by saving for their retirement. The fairer and more flexible system I announced last October will not be changed. However, the $15,500 limit for RRSP contributions will be phased in more slowly.

[English]

Tax reform recognizes the important role of agriculture in Canada. The farm community will continue to benefit from the existing $500,000 capital gains exemption for farmland. I am also proposing new rules to increase certainty about the tax treatment of farm losses. These rules will provide objective tests to determine when farm losses should be restricted for tax purposes.

Canadians have created 840,000 jobs since September, 1984. Much of this is the result of the efforts of individual men and women, each striving to build and grow in their own way.

To reinforce the job-creating potential of the small business sector, I am proposing that the $500,000 capital gains exemption for shares of small businesses become effective on January 1, 1988 rather than January 1, 1990.

• (2020)

This Government has encouraged small business, risk-taking and entrepreneurship, and will continue to do so.

But the most effective tax incentive is lower tax rates. Lower rates mean more reward for that extra effort.

And to provide that incentive for all taxpayers, we must restrict and remove a number of tax deductions and exemptions.

Self-employed Canadians are entitled to deduct expenses they incur in earning income. But some deductions are for expenses which represent an element of personal consumption. To recognize this, the deduction for business meals and entertainment will be restricted to 80 per cent of expenses incurred. In addition, where home offices and automobiles are not used exclusively for business purposes, deductions for these expenses will be limited.

The lifetime capital gains exemption for all property, other than qualifying farm property and small business shares, will be held at the 1987 level of $100,000. To reduce tax shelter possibilities and to better match deductions with income, capital gains will qualify for the lifetime exemption only to the extent they exceed net investment losses after 1987. This will not reduce an individual's lifetime exemption limit.

The taxable portion of capital gains will rise from one-half to two-thirds in 1988 and three-quarters in 1990. The dividend tax credit will be reduced to directly reflect the reduction in the corporate tax rate. The tax system will continue to give preferential treatment to capital gains and dividends in recognition of the risks associated with investment.

Currently, those who receive investment income or make extensive use of tax preferences pay consistently lower taxes than others. After reform, they will pay more. About 1.5 million households will have an average tax increase of about $665. They will continue to pay lower average effective rates of tax than those with similar income derived mostly from employment. But the gap will be narrowed.

CORPORATE INCOME TAX REFORM

Corporate income tax reform will meet three major objectives.

The jobs of many Canadians depend on a corporate income tax system that is competitive with other countries, particularly the United States. Tax reform will improve the overall competitive position of Canadian business and industry.

Tax reform will return the profit motive to investment by rewarding success. It will encourage investment decisions to be based far more on the imagination and creativity of research, engineering and marketing experts, and far less on the advice of tax specialists.

And it will ensure that profitable corporations carry a bigger share of the total tax burden. Federal corporate income tax revenues will increase by about $5 billion over the next five years.

To maintain a competitive tax system, corporate tax rates will be reduced, effective July 1, 1988. The general federal rate will fall to 28 per cent. The rate for small business will fall to 12 per cent and the manufacturing rate will be reduced by 1991 to 23 per cent.

Income tax revenues from corporations will increase because these lower rates will apply to a broader tax base with fewer special incentives. Capital cost allowances will be reduced to bring them more in line with actual rates of depreciation. The rate of tax on capital gains will be increased. Deductions for meals and entertainment expenses will be limited. Small manufacturers will be taxed at the same rate as other small businesses.

Many profitable financial institutions and real estate companies are paying little or no tax because of existing tax provisions. New rules will be introduced to ensure that they pay their fair share of tax. I am also announcing changes, effective immediately, to reduce the tax advantage available to non-taxpaying companies that issue preferred shares.

More balanced development across all regions will continue to be strongly supported through the tax system. The reform proposals retain the investment tax credits in the Atlantic and Gaspé regions, Cape Breton, and special investment tax credit regions across Canada. The rates of credit will be reduced in line with lower tax rates, but the relative incentive effect will be maintained.

The mining industry is important to regional economic growth and to isolated communities across Canada. Earned depletion, which provides a tax write-off in excess of actual costs, will be phased out by mid-1989. Flow-through shares and the ability to write off all investment against the income from a new mine will be retained.

The average tax rate of the mining sector will remain one of the lowest. And for a new investment in mining, the tax rate will be lower than in any other sector.

The reform proposals also recognize the strategic position of Canada's oil and gas industry. The industry will benefit over all from tax reform. The lower tax rate will more than offset the slightly broader tax base. The industry will continue to have access to flow-through shares.

In current world oil markets, many major projects with long lead times face very high risks. Accordingly, as in the past, the government will consider what adjustments in non-tax assistance would be appropriate to encourage major oil and gas projects which provide important regional or national benefits and which are fundamentally economic.

The agriculture, logging and fishing sectors are important sources of employment and income for many regions of Canada. After tax reform, they will have the lowest average tax rate of any sector.

[Translation]

The changing composition of our economy and the importance of adjusting to technological change make it essential that our reform proposals look to the future as we prepare for the 21st century. The reformed system will strongly support two key priority areas for this government: research and development and labour-intensive economic sectors.

Firms engaged in R&D in Canada will continue to benefit from one of the most favourable tax regimes for R&D in the industrialized world. The current tax incentives for R&D costs will not be changed, with the exception of buildings claimed for R&D.

Canada's wholesale and retail trade and service businesses are leaders in employment growth, yet they are the most heavily taxed of any corporate sector. By lowering their taxes, tax reform will encourage new investment in these sectors in all parts of Canada.

The further reduction of the low tax rate for manufacturing will maintain its competitive position.

[English]

In recent years, tax planning in Canada has become more sophisticated and aggressive. Canadians quite rightfully resent it when they find that others avoid paying tax by bending the rules of the tax system. We must be assured that the tax burden will be fairly shared. The reforms I have outlined will make our income tax system substantially fairer than it now is. Lower rates and fewer preferences will reduce the incentive and opportunity for tax avoidance.

• (2030)

But further action is required. Over the past two years, I have dealt with an increasing number of complicated transactions designed primarily to avoid tax. I am proposing legislative changes that will provide a stronger basis for reassessing artificial tax avoidance transactions. Information reporting requirements for investment income and tax shelters will be strengthened to help identify avoidance and evasion. Penalties will be increased for chronic offenders.

In reform of the income tax, I have set out to make the system fairer and more efficient while retaining its fundamentally sound principles. No such reform is possible within the current federal sales tax. It is beyond repair and will be replaced by a new system in the second stage of tax reform.

[Translation]

SALES TAX REFORM

A fair and effective sales tax is an essential part of the overall balance of Canada's tax system.

The present tax is fundamentally flawed. It is a hidden, arbitrary and capricious tax.

Many Canadians are unaware of this tax because it is normally applied when a product is manufactured and is hidden in the price of goods which are eventually sold to consumers. By the time it reaches the consumer, a dollar of tax paid by a manufacturer can raise the price to the consumer by a lot more than a dollar. And the purchaser does not know by how much.

The existing sales tax hurts our economy. It puts more tax on Canadian-made goods than it does on competing imported goods. It puts a hidden tax on our exports that makes them less competitive. That does not make much sense for a country that trades as much as we do in tough, competitive, world markets. That extra tax penalty is costing us jobs and creating them in other countries.

[English]

These problems with the sales tax are not new. They have been known for 40 years. They have been growing worse. What has been lacking has been the political will to fix them. It is time to get on with the job.

The existing sales tax will be replaced by a new sales tax that will apply to a much broader base. The result will be a lower tax rate and a fairer system.

Sales tax reform will eliminate the hidden tax in the prices consumers pay. It will remove the tax burden on exports and will treat our domestic producers on the same basis as their foreign competitors. It will make us more competitive in world markets and will enhance our trade initiatives.

The new sales tax will be fairer for low- and middle-income Canadians. It will be accompanied by important changes in the personal income tax system to achieve this goal. The most important of these will be to substantially increase the refundable sales tax credit introduced by the government in 1986 and to extend this credit to many more Canadians.

The new sales tax credit will be paid regularly and in advance.

The level of the credit and the income threshold for eligibility will be established to more than offset the impact of the new sales tax on low-income Canadians. In addition to the credit, when the new sales tax is introduced, the personal and corporate income surtaxes will be removed and there will be further income tax cuts for middle-income taxpayers. These measures will make the combined personal income and sales tax systems, after tax reform, more progressive than they now are.

Compensation will be provided to small businesses to help offset the cost of complying with the new system.

The Government is considering three alternative forms for the new sales tax. One is a National Sales Tax which would replace both the present federal sales tax and provincial retail sales taxes with one national system. Two federal-only sales taxes are also being considered: a Goods and Services Tax and a Value-Added Tax.

The discussion about which of these forms to implement will have a direct bearing on three important decisions that remain to be made: the level of the tax rate, the scope of the tax base and the design of the sales tax credit.

The new sales tax must raise enough revenue to replace the existing sales tax and provide for additional income tax cuts and the enriched credit.

Decisions about the tax rate and the design of the tax credit will depend on how broad the tax base is. The decisions are closely linked. A broader tax base would result in a lower tax rate for everyone and require a bigger tax credit for those who need it. With a narrower tax base, involving exemptions for such things as food and clothing, the tax rate would be higher on the remaining items and the tax credit could be smaller.

The Government is committed to sales tax reform. It will proceed after consultation with provincial governments and other interested Canadians.

FISCAL RESPONSIBILITY

Responsible tax reform must be fiscally responsible. Our progress in reducing the deficit is essential to our success in reducing interest rates, increasing growth and lowering unemployment.

Sales tax reform will follow the reforms to our personal and corporate tax systems. In the interim, we must make the existing sales tax more reliable. We must deal with its worst competitive distortions. And we must raise more revenue, in conjunction with corporate income tax increases, to help fund the personal income tax cuts.

I am proposing a number of changes to the existing sales tax, effective January 1, 1988.

To reduce competitive distortions and protect against avoidance, the tax will be applied to marketing companies which do not operate at arm's-length with a manufacturer. It will also be moved to the wholesale level for a limited range of products.

To raise revenue, the tax will be extended to most telecommunications services at a rate of 10 per cent. The charges for basic residential telephone service will be exempt from tax.

To further protect lower-income Canadians from the impact of these changes, the existing refundable sales tax credit will be increased from $50 to $70 for adults, and from $25 to $35 for children.

• (2040)

Finally, in order to improve cash management and to offset some of the transitional revenue effects of tax reform, I am proposing to accelerate the payment of sales and excise taxes, effective April, 1988. The remittance of personal income taxes deducted at source will be further accelerated, effective January, 1990.

These two measures will not increase taxes on Canadians. They will ensure that the Government receives money it is owed on a more timely basis. This will reduce our need to borrow and will yield ongoing savings in interest costs.

The proposals I am presenting tonight are fiscally balanced. The personal income tax reductions are made up by increases in corporate and sales taxes and the acceleration of tax collections.

ECONOMIC AND FISCAL OUTLOOK

I am tabling with the tax reform proposals an updated economic and fiscal outlook.

[Translation]

Our economic prospects for this year are little changed since my February Budget. I am very much encouraged by the strong employment growth and declines in the unemployment rate we have seen in recent months. Since September 1984, Canadians have created 840,000 jobs. The unemployment rate, at 9.1 per cent, is at its lowest level in more than five years. But what is most encouraging are the indications, from both employment data and recent surveys of investment intentions, that growth is becoming better balanced across the regions of Canada.

[English]

Over the medium term our economic prospects will depend greatly on the success of the industrialized countries in reducing the large international trade and fiscal imbalances that cast a shadow over world growth. Canada is playing a constructive role in this regard. Much progress has been made in recent months. The recent economic summit in Venice underlined the determination of the major industrial nations to continue that progress. Canada shares fully in the commitment expressed at that summit to take further action to achieve our shared economic objectives if that proves necessary.

Our prospects will also depend on what we do at home. Making further progress on tax reform, on our trade initiatives and on the deficit will strengthen investment and growth in all regions of Canada. This will provide us with greater strength and resilience to cope with an uncertain world and with a better capacity to sustain needed social programs.

Our fiscal outlook continues to be encouraging. The most recent estimate for the fiscal year just ended suggests that stronger revenue growth at the end of the year will result in the deficit being about $31 billion, $1 billion lower than I forecast in February.

As I stated in the Budget, I expect the deficit for this fiscal year to be $29.3 billion. It will decline moderately over the next two years. The deficit and financial requirements show substantial declines in the medium term. The debt-to-GDP ratio is expected to stabilize by 1991-92. This is a key objective which the Government has set for itself since coming into office in 1984.

I wish to table this White Paper and the related Ways and Means motion and supporting documents.

CONCLUSION

Tax reform is a major and complex exercise. It goes far beyond changing some sections in the Income Tax Act. The results must be judged not only in the tax savings of individual Canadians. They must also be judged on how we can contribute to a stronger, more just and more vibrant Canada, in the 1990s and beyond.

The package I am now placing before Parliament and the nation respects our needs today and will help us build a better tomorrow. It reflects the concern we share for our senior citizens and the challenges facing our young people and our entrepreneurs. It respects the importance of our farmers and our resource industries. It recognizes the competitive battles being fought daily by our manufacturers and the challenge of the future for our technology and service sectors. It provides tax savings to individual Canadians and gives them the freedom to spend, save or invest as they see fit.

Some are being asked to pay a greater share through a reduction in tax preferences. In making these decisions, I have considered carefully the key goals of greater fairness and competitiveness. And where the impact is substantial, the change will be phased in over time.

But in the final analysis, this package will be judged on whether we have given to our senior citizens more peace of mind and security; to those in greatest need, a fairer and reduced tax burden; to our young, a greater sense of opportunity and hope; and to our working people, more incentive, stability and freedom.

I believe we have met these tests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to tell you that I do not take any joy in what I am about to say, because no amount of applause from the Tory benches can disguise the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not delivered a White Paper on tax reform tonight. He has delivered a budget, and he has violated the long-standing tradition of budget secrecy. Because he has done so, parliamentary convention and tradition demand the immediate resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Today in Question Period the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the statement of the Minister of Finance was going to be a discussion paper in the same way the White Paper of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) was a discussion paper. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance know that there are important differences. The White Paper of the Minister of Defence asks Canadians to discuss a proposal for nuclear submarines. Those submarines may never be built.

At the other end, the budget statement of the Minister of Finance which was just delivered in the House clearly outlines in a Ways and Means motion that we had the opportunity to see during the lock-up this afternoon specific tax changes, some of which are effective at midnight Wednesday, last night. Tax changes affecting farm property, passenger vehicles, limited partnerships, research and development, dividends received by financial institutions, life insurance reserves, multinational insurers, these and other tax changes will take place immediately. Other tax changes to take place at a later date were also announced by the Minister of Finance in the Budget Speech and the documentation he tabled with his speech.

How can the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance pretend that the Minister's statement is only a discussion paper? Tonight the Minister of Finance has delivered a Budget. It is a Budget that has been available to a select 31 individuals at least a full day before its official release. If the Minister of Finance does not understand his responsibilities in these circumstances, the Prime Minister must assume his responsibility and remove the Minister of Finance from the important public office he holds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that it is not a matter for public debate. The Minister's duty is clear. It is a question of restoring public confidence in one of the most sensitive and important ministries of any Government. As a former Minister of Finance, I am well aware of the propriety expected of such an office-holder. I say with regret that I know, and the Minister of Finance knows in his heart, that he has committed an unforgivable breach of his duty and he must go, and go now.

I believe that all Hon. Members know that I am not one to make such statements lightly or without good cause. It is important that the House debate and debate fully the tax changes announced in the Government's Budget this evening. However, such an important debate cannot properly occur in the shadow of the loss of confidence in the Minister of Finance of Canada. I say to the Minister of Finance, if this evening the Minister has still not clearly understood the action expected of him now, that I hope for his sake that he will have submitted the proper letter to the Prime Minister by tomorrow morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister may laugh but he knows in his heart that he committed a mistake, a very important one, and he does not deserve to serve as Minister of Finance in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what we had this evening was not a White Paper but a Budget. A Budget that contains tax increases, including some that will be effective as of midnight yesterday evening, not even tonight. There are 17 or 18 tax measures, in fact there are more in this evening's statement than there were in the Budget Speech last February, a Budget we said was not a Budget but a Minister's Statement. And today the reverse is true. Today, we had a real Budget Speech. Mr. Speaker, I think that with this Budget Speech we had a few statements on tax reform.

An Hon. Member: Name them!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I am being asked to name them. I may refer the Hon. Member to the Motion of Ways and Means, where he will find they are all listed with the effective date as midnight last night.

Mr. Speaker, in the tax reform which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has unveiled this evening, except for the measures which will be included in a real Budget, everything else is related to a question of credibility. The Minister is telling us that the sales tax which will be imposed eventually will be fairer, more equitable for everybody. The Minister of Finance claims that the changes he is making in the personal exemptions system through tax credits will benefit the Canadian taxpayer. I will get back to this question.

But first I will tell him that his credibility with respect to what can happen in the future is not very strong.

[English]

In fact, this tax reform is related to the trust that one can have in the Minister of Finance. What has the Minister of Finance said in the past before the election of 1984 about tax increases? On March 6, 1984, a few months before the election, he said, as reported at page 1827 of Hansard:

> We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He said that?

Mr. Garneau: He said that on March 6, 1984.

[Translation]

"We will cut spending, we will not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high", he said.

[English]

On August 8, 1984, a month before the election, the now Minister of Finance said to CITY-TV in Toronto: "We have no intention of raising income taxes to Canadians".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Garneau: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He said that?

Mr. Garneau: On August 8, 1984. That was before the election.

Let us see what he said after the election. In November of 1984 he said: "Our immediate goal is to reduce the deficit through expenditures and not through major tax increases".

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance told us: "Our immediate goal is to reduce the deficit through expenditures and not through major tax increases." That is what the Minister said before the election. Let us see what he did immediately after his election. Mr. Speaker, if we take the lists one after another, and you can see I have a few of them: the 1986 announcement about the deindexation of the tax system at a cost of $635 million to the Canadian taxpayers; the elimination of the Registered—

[English]

The elimination of the Registered Homeownership Savings Program effective May 22, 1985, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $105 million. The elimination of the federal tax reduction which benefited low-income earners effective 1986, a cost to those Canadians of $650 million. Changes to marital exemptions for years of marriage, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $20 million.

An increase in excise taxes on cigarettes and tobacco effective May 24, 1985, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $320 million. A 2 per cent increase in excise taxes on alcohol effective May 24, 1985, a cost to the taxpayer of $20 million. An increase of two cents per litre in the excise tax on gasoline effective September 3, 1985, a cost to the taxpayer of $930 million.

An extension of the sales tax on candies, soft drinks, etc., effective July 1, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $400 million. A general 3 per cent surtax effective July 1, 1986, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer in one year of $1,200 million.

A general 1 per cent increase in sales tax effective October 1, 1984, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $1 billion. A general 1 per cent increase in sales tax, another increase, effective January 1, 1986, a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of an additional $1 billion.

A general increase of 1 per cent in sales tax effective April 1, 1986, the third one, an additional cost of $1 billion to Canadians. Equalization of sales taxes on leaded and unleaded gasoline, another $30 million in taxes. An extension of the sales tax on snack food effective July 1, 1987, $60 million. An increase in taxes on alcohol and tobacco effective February 27, 1986, $150 million. Increase in tax on cigarettes and tobacco by 4 per cent effective February 19, 1987, $70 million. Increase in air transport tax effective May 1, 1987, and August 1, 1987, a one-year increase of $45 million. An increase of 1 cent per litre excise tax on gasoline effective January 1, 1987, $450 million.

Some Hon. Members: Stop!

Mr. Garneau: It is not finished. An increase of 1 per cent in the excise tax on gasoline effective February 19, 1987, $450 million. There was also a 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax effective for part of 1986, $500 million.

There was also some tax reduction. The lifetime $500,000 capital gains. That was goodies for the rich. They received a gift of $700 million.

That is the man who said to Canadians before the election that he will never raise taxes. If we add all those taxes they amount to $22 billion. It took three years for the Minister of Finance to raise personal taxes by $22 billion and he will take five years to return $5 billion with tax reform.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, when we look at the tax increases plus tax reform, what is the net result? That man made great publicity about his tax reform. He was supposed to transfer part of the tax burden from individuals to corporations. In 1984-85 when that man became Minister of Finance, the total personal and sales taxes paid by individuals amounted to $36.8 billion. After tax reform in 1988-89, probably the election year, the total amount of taxes paid by individuals will have risen to $59.1 billion according to the figures we have in the White Paper. That is an increase of 93 per cent.

Let us look now at the corporation side. In 1984-85 corporations paid $9.4 billion in taxes. At the end of the five-year Tory mandate they will pay $11.1 billion, an increase of 7 per cent. A 93 per cent increase for individuals and 7 per cent for corporations.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Even after reform.

Mr. Garneau: Do you think that is fair?

[Translation]

Do you think it is fair to have a 93 per cent increase in revenues coming from individuals and an increase of only 7 per cent in revenues coming from corporations?

Mr. Speaker, let us look at the consequences for individuals, one by one. The Minister did not spare any expenses, he has a lot of paper to advertise. The figures given, Mr. Speaker, reflect the impact of the three Budgets tabled by this Minister of Finance, 1985, 1986, and 1987. I already mentioned those figures in the House during the Budget debate and nobody challenged their validity.

If you take a married man with an income of $15,000, whose wife stays home to look after their two children, for this man the last three Budgets mean an increase in taxes of $489 in 1987. That is the cumulative result of the three Budgets. Let us look now at what it will be after the fiscal reform, in 1988. To give you an example of how devious those documents are, they give as one figure the benefits for both federal and provincial income taxes.

It is then very difficult to compare, but the Minister cannot claim that he is lowering taxes that are not his.

That person whose taxes have gone up $489 in three years, will see them decrease, after the fiscal reform, by $270. In short, his taxes have gone up for three years, but now he is given some slack, he gets an electoral break of $270.

If we consider now a family of four where the bread-winner has an income of $30,000, Mr. Speaker, do you know that the last three Budgets meant for that family an increase of more than $1,000 in taxes?

When we look at that tax reform, despite all the computations he gave, his tax reduction will be $370. So after his taxes were increased by more than $1,000, they reduce them by $370 and people are saying hear! hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Garneau: They refer to senior citizens. The Minister said in his Budget speech, because that was a Budget speech, senior citizens would benefit from that thing, that speech.

Mr. Speaker, I submit again the Minister is hiding the truth or does not want to tell it all. A single individual aged 65 or over with a $15,000 income saw his income tax increased by $383 since the Conservatives came to power. That same single individual earning $15,000 will recoup only $66, or thereabouts, in tax reduction after tax reform. First a $383 increase then he recoups $66, and they are saying hear! hear! across the aisle.

[English]

I am convinced it will be very easy for us to explain to the Canadian people that the Government is hiding something. It is just like——just like that merchant who raises his prices two weeks before he announces a sale. He raises his prices 25 per cent, 30 per cent and then he advertises: Come to my sale, all prices slashed 10 per cent. This is a scam, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the Minister of Finance that in all the examples he gave in his Budget documents nowhere is the increased sales tax taken into account. Nowhere. They are only showing the benefits from the income tax side, and which are minimal anyway. But nowhere is reference to be found to the $1 billion the Minister is quietly getting from that tax reform.

We have been told this evening that Canadian taxpayers will pay $1 billion more in 1988 in federal sales tax and it has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that this tax reform is expanded solely for discussion purposes. I say calmly about the statement made by the Prime Minister in the House: either he did not know what his Minister of Finance was doing, in which case he made a serious mistake, or else he did not want to say . . . And we know certain unparliamentary terms prevent me from saying the truth about the matter. And I truly question the sincerity of the Prime Minister this afternoon when he answered the questions of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He also misled the Speaker.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some other aspects of the tax reform which will have substantial effects in several regions. However before this I should like to raise another aspect of the tax reform. The Minister, who was then applauded by Tory members, said:

[English]

He gets a round of applause because 850,000 Canadian taxpayers will be taken off the tax rolls. I have people who have been working on that. Because of the 31 people who were informed of the Budget before tonight, we had all sorts of leaks in the paper this morning. One of them was exactly that, that we were supposed to have 850,000 people taken off the tax rolls.

• (2110)

What a coincidence. People who have been researching the matter for me sent me a note just before I rose to my feet. They tell me that many more than one million taxpayers have been added to the tax rolls because of the last three Budgets. This will be proved tomorrow through further research but they have researched the fact that the Conservatives have added more than a million taxpayers to the tax rolls since they have been in power. Now— big deal—they are subtracting 800,000.

This tax reform will affect regional development. The changes in the flowthrough shares will affect the mining industry. The earned depletion allowance is affected.

Some Hon. Members: Bye-bye, Mike.

Mr. Garneau: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister told me he would have to leave before the end of the day.

With regard to regional development, not only will the mining regions be affected but also the Maritimes, the Gaspé and other regions which, until now, were benefiting from tax credits. The tax reform in this Budget will affect regional development once more.

There is nothing in this tax reform which will help women who have to look after their children and work at the same time. There is nothing in this tax reform to help single parent families. The tax credit for the increase in sales tax is not sufficient. Since none of the tax credit is reimbursable, this scheme does no good for the poor and the middle class.

Many people close to me know that I am a history lover. When I heard that the Minister of Finance was going to table his White Paper on tax reform on June 18, I recalled that June 18 is the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo. That battle took place on June 18, 1815. The World Book Encyclopedia says the following: The Battle of Waterloo—

> —fought on June 18, 1815, was the final battle of the French military genius, Napoleon Bonaparte. It put an end to his political ambition to rule Europe. His defeat was so crushing that, when a person suffers a disastrous reverse, we say the person has "met his (or her) Waterloo."

I suggest that the Minister of Finance has met his Waterloo.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday 30 experts who were signed on by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who were prepared to work for free apparently, were given an advance look at the White Paper. These were tax experts, tax lawyers, and accountants who move comfortably in the world of taxation which is much more understood by people in corporations on Bay Street and St. James Street than by ordinary Canadians.

If the Minister of Finance had had the good sense, which he did not, to give 30 farmers, fishermen, working men and women, housewives or pensioners an advance look at his tax reform and ask them for advice in order to find out whether or not he was on the right track with tax reform, they would have told him to take his tax reform back and have another go at it because this is not tax reform to benefit ordinary Canadians.

The fact is that we do need real tax reform in this country. We did not get it tonight in the announcement of the Minister of Finance. I regret the lost opportunity and I want to talk about what Canadians were looking for in the tax reform package, what they failed to get, and what we did get tonight in the Finance Minister's paper.

The answer to the question of whether this was a budget measure is self-evident. I have lost count of the number of specific tax measures which take effect tonight or tomorrow as a consequence of the Ways and Means motion tabled by the Minister of Finance. That issue was dealt with today by you, Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons and will be dealt with tomorrow in the House of Commons. Tonight we are talking about whether Canadians got the fairness and frankness to which they were entitled in the tax reform measures which were announced.

Canadians have been waiting a long time for tax reform. I guess it was naive to expect real tax reform from a Conservative Government. Our mistake was hoping that somehow, despite the general direction of the Government, some good tax reform would come from the Finance Minister with his Bay Street background and the Party he represents in this House of Commons.

People always ask me whether I can say anything good about things coming from the Minister of Finance. I can say that his rhetoric was just great. In terms of calling for a simple, fair, and progressive tax system and of condemning the archaic sales tax and so on, the Minister of Finance was right on the money. The problem was that he failed to match his rhetoric with reality. In other words, he has maintained the faults of the present tax system and has not made the fundamental changes which Canadians were seeking.

I can sum it up by saying that the average family will get a tax cut in the first round of $295 per year or $6 per week, not now, not in December, but sometime in July or August of 1988. That is a fat lot of help for people who need the help right now. Three-quarters of the Canadian families earning $100,000 or more will get tax cuts as well. The tax cuts for those rich Canadian families will amount to $4,365 per annum on average or $85 per week.

Therefore, tax reform for the average family means a couple of Big Macs and maybe fries on the side every week. Tax reform for the wealthy Canadian family means dinner at Winston's or the Beaver Club, candlelight, imported French wine, tournedos and those kinds of things. That is the disparity which the Government is perpetuating with its tax reform.

One asks oneself why wealthy Canadians who benefited in last year's Budget, who got the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption in 1985, and who seemed to always come out on the winning side in Budgets of Liberal Governments, should come out on the winning side yet again in this tax reform proposal of the Minister of Finance.

If Canadians were looking for fairness, they are disappointed in what they heard tonight.

[Translation]

As for equity, analysis shows that the Conservative tax reform means that three out of four wealthy families will pay an average of $4,365 a year less in taxes, that 60,000 profitable companies will continue to pay not one cent in taxes and that the average Canadian family will pay about $1,000 a year more in taxes than in 1984. I submit to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) that, since 1984, the taxes paid by the average Canadian family have increased by some $1,300. We are now asked to believe that this is a real tax reform, that this same average family might pay $300 less in taxes in 1988, while wealthy families will benefit from a tax decrease 14 times higher than that of low-income earners.

As for integrity, the Conservatives have unfortunately decided to keep the bad news for after the elections.

The new sales tax, whatever form it takes, will nearly cancel out the tax rebates for average families. In addition, the Government will probably be taxing for the first time ever basic necessities such as food and housing. By itself, the tax on food products would mean $300 more for the average family. Canadians deserve more honesty. They deserve to get the full picture this evening. Once more, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives have taken some good ingredients, but they have used the same recipe which benefits the rich and spares big companies. The final result is still the same: The average family will foot the bill.

• (2120)

[English]

PC tax reform means favouring wealthy Canadians, favouring thousands of profitable corporations that will continue to go tax free and it means allowing average families to pay more while not getting anything back in what they have paid in increased taxes since 1984. At the same time, the Conservatives are hiding the bad news in that sales tax increase which will wipe out any income tax cuts for the average Canadian family.

It is quite clear that the Government intends to proceed with the tax, including the tax on food and other household essentials, despite overwhelming adverse reaction. I have talked to my constituents and I have received telephone calls from across the country.

Mr. Hockin: You just heard the speech.

Mr. Cassidy: We knew this would be in the speech. We have been asking the Government to back away from tax on food since the announcement by the Minister of Finance just over a month ago about what would basically be contained in this package tonight.

Did the Conservatives back away? No. Were they even prepared to admit that there was a problem? No. Instead, they reiterated their belief that food should be taxed so that when people go to Woodward's, Safeway, Loblaws, the A&P, the IGA or Boushey's grocery store in my constituency, they will have to pay a 6 per cent tax on food.

That is very clearly sketched in this package. My friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was with me in the lock-up and we were frankly shocked at the way the Government continues to ignore the advice it receives from ordinary Canadians.

I say to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) that he should tell his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that while Dalton Camp was hired at more than $100,000 a year to advise the Government on how to keep out of trouble, he failed because he did not persuade the Government and the Minister to abandon the sales tax on food.

I understand that even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appealed to the Minister of Finance not to put this in the White Paper. He also failed in having it removed. The Government is making a tragic mistake. We realize that the Government is low in the polls and experiencing problems. We know it will continue to stay down in the polls if it threatens in 1989 to take back this reduction in income tax with the sales tax they propose on food and other items.

Let me point out the figures which the Government has put into its estimates of revenue on sales tax for 1988 and 1989. It indicates that sales tax revenue in that year will increase not by the $1 billion that was announced by the Minister tonight, but by $2 billion over 1987. In fact, in 1988, the Conservatives will have doubled the sales tax burden on average Canadians since they came to office. Canadians tell us that they are prepared to accept taxation on the basis of the ability to pay. That means on the basis of their income, not on what they buy.

Let me deal with personal income tax. We welcome the conversion of the Conservatives to the tax credit system. It is long overdue in our tax system and we welcome that. However, I deplore the fact that in implementing the tax credit system the Government failed to make it essentially any more progressive than it is now.

Mr. Hockin: It is much more progressive.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of State for Finance says that it is much more progressive. Let us look at the cuts in taxation for the winners. People earning less than $15,000 will receive a $140 tax cut in 1988 or thereafter. Those earning $15,000 to $30,000 will receive a $405 tax cut. Those earning $30,000 to $50,000 will receive a $470 tax cut. This is a system which rewards those who have, not those who need because as one's income goes up, one wins more.

Mr. Hockin: They are paying more in tax.

Mr. Cassidy: Those in the $50,000 to $100,000 income range receive a $700 tax cut. When we get to the blue circle people earning over $100,000, we see that they receive a tax cut of $4,365. That is a tax cut which is 30 times the tax cut for people who earn under $15,000.

What kind of tax reform is that? Why can we not have tax reform that benefits poor Canadians and ordinary Canadians rather than putting money into the hands of the rich?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: What sophistry.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of State for Finance has obviously not been privy to the secrets of his colleague, the Minister of Finance. Otherwise, he would realize what a paltry job has been done with this particular tax reform.

The real measure of tax reform is the amount of cash that goes back into people's pockets. The amount of return to people earning under $15,000 is equivalent to eight-tenths of a per cent of their income. That is not exactly revolutionary. The amount of return for those in the income level between $15,000 and $30,000 is 1.4 per cent, somewhat better.

The amount of return for those earning $30,000 to $50,000 is again eight-tenths of a per cent, the same as those earning less than $15,000. Apparently, people in the $40,000 bracket need as much back in proportional terms as poor people.

Those in the $50,000 to $100,000 range are not quite so well off since they only receive back six-tenths of a per cent.

Our wealthy friends earning over $100,000 receive back in proportion to their income an amount equal to 1 per cent of their income. This means that tax reform that is meant to make the system more progressive puts a higher proportion of income back into the hands of the very wealthy than it does to the very poor. That is Tory tax reform, not real tax reform. I believe it is a pitiful excuse for the kind of reform Canadians were expecting. It is no wonder that average Canadians ask why, under Liberals and Conservatives, wealthy Canadians get a break in every budget while poor Canadians do not get any breaks.

Ordinary Canadians wonder why they have had to pay $1,300 more a year while wealthy Canadians receive the breaks. Average Canadians will wonder whether it is simply a coincidence that 850,000 Canadians will be taken off the tax roll when, according to our calculations, that is the number of Canadians who have been put on the tax rolls by the Conservatives since they came to office in 1984. What a coincidence.

The personal tax system yields approximately $42 million or $44 million in revenue a year. While the Minister's announcement that some 800,000 people will be taken off the tax rolls seems good, it is not so remarkable when one considers that those Canadians pay some $300 million to $350 million in tax. The Minister's grand gesture which is designed to dress up his tax reform amounts to less than 1 per cent of total revenues for personal income tax. Big deal.

Mr. Hockin: Would you tax them?

Mr. Cassidy: Average Canadians wonder why the Government continues to favour capital gains. If the Government acknowledges the principle that capital gains should be treated like any other income, why does it continue to tread on eggs and give special treatment to people with investment income and people with capital gains?

Now that the Government acknowledges that its $500,000 capital gains tax exemption was one of the most stupid measures to be included in this country's tax system, Canadians will wonder why it has left part of it in the tax system rather than following the advice of the tax experts and removing it completely.

My Party supports exemptions for farmers and exemptions for the transfer of small businesses. My Party does not support, however, this continued belief that somehow capital gains of any kind are a sacred trust that should be honoured by the Progressive Conservatives because of their constituency.

• (2130)

My Party wonders as well about what we call the "T. Eaton" amendment which appears will allow Timothy Eaton's heirs, grandsons, great grandsons, that whole clan, to benefit from the small business amendment on capital gains exemption just as much as someone who makes a few dollars because of a gain on a very small family-owned business which does not have to be public traded.

Average Canadians will wonder why is it this Government, in putting forth what was meant to be a progressive tax reform, continues to maintain deindexation, this time of the credits rather than the deductions, so that over time those credits will be worth less and less and, therefore, the system will systematically become less and less progressive and more and more regressive.

I guess what Canadians are wondering is if there was a tax reform package which had made the wealthy really pay their fair share, then moderate and low income families could have had real tax breaks. Average Canadians ask why could they not have had those kinds of tax breaks rather than the kind of tax things they are getting from the Government now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as far as corporate taxation is concerned, the Canadian taxpayers will ask why a minimum income tax has not been introduced for those thousands of profitable companies which do not pay one cent, so that they assume their fair share of the tax burden. After this so-called tax reform, there will still be 60,000 profitable companies not paying one cent in income tax. And this issue, Mr. Speaker, has been raised by the NDP. We are the ones who told the House of Commons that some 79,000 Canadian corporations did not pay any income tax. In other words, 25 per cent of all Canadian companies do not pay any income tax at all.

Now the Government recognizes that there were not 79,000 but rather 110,000 profitable companies in this situation. And the Government will somehow reduce that proportion, but there will be nevertheless 60,000 of them without any tax to pay, which indicates that this system is unfair. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we do need a minimum tax on corporations and it is unfortunate that such a provision has not been imposed or proposed in this tax reform. Taxpayers will ask also why it is that the total increase of income tax on corporations is only $470 million, less than one quarter of the tax increase resulting from the U.S. fiscal reform and half the amount received by Olympia and York through a tax loophole in 1985 under the Conservatives. They will ask why this minimal increase does not even cover the $6 million that will be saved on differed taxes by corporations such as CP, Bell and Imperial Oil.

[English]

I wonder about this. We are told by the Minister of Finance that it is wonderful he is raising corporate taxes by $5 million over five years. He has not mentioned that the reduction in tax rates is the largest in any field for corporations, from 36 per cent to 28 per cent, and he has not mentioned that that one cut will save large companies such as CP and Imperial Oil $6 billion because of the reduction in taxes on deferred taxes they have on their books. So over the next five years, those big corporations will save $6 billion. At the same time the Government will be getting $5 billion more in taxes from corporations. As I perceive it, that means a balance of a deficit of $1 billion over the next five years. That is not tax reform. That is moving backwards.

Average Canadians believe and know that corporations should be paying their way. They should be paying a fair share of the tax system. They are not paying it now and they will not be paying it under the tax reform proposals tabled by the Minister of Finance in this House tonight.

Canadians will also wonder about the sales tax changes which have been introduced. I really wonder about the Minister of Finance who says that the sales tax as we have it now is a hidden, arbitrary and capricious tax and then proceeds to impose new sales taxes, according to the present system, which, of course, will also be hidden, arbitrary and capricious.

When we reach out and touch someone by telephone, we will be paying a 10 per cent tax. It will not be to Ma Bell this time, it will be to Uncle Michael Scrooge over there, who has now imposed this particular tax on telecommunications services. If we try to pretty up our house we will have to pay extra tax on the wallpaper. If we try to provide equitably for your cat, we will be taxed on its kitty litter. Games and toys for kids are going to be additionally taxed.

The Government has made it very clear that its proposals on sales tax are no longer options, that it is intent on pushing forward with a tax which, in its view, ought to include a tax on food. The Minister's paper on tax reform states that the Government proposes to replace the existing federal sales tax with a broad based multi-staged sales tax which extends the retail level. This multi-staged tax will be a form of value-added tax. The Minister of Finance is saying quite specifically that taxable sales will include sales of most goods and services in Canada. The Minister's White Paper indicates that he understands that the taxation of food is an emotional and controversial issue, and then proceeds to explain why the Government is intent on rolling over the objections of Canadians in order to tax food.

The Minister of Finance tries to indicate that the people who earn below average incomes spend less over-all on food than people with above average incomes. There is a good reason for that. They have less income to go around. However, the lower one's income goes, the more of it one will spend on food. If a sales tax is imposed on food, we therefore have a regressive tax which will cost more to ordinary Canadians with lower incomes than it costs people with higher incomes. It is not fair to tax people not according to their ability to pay but according to their need to consume, which means that average and below average earners will be hit harder by the tax on food than the people who have high incomes and can afford to pay.

The Government's arguments in this White Paper are specious and wrong. The New Democrats are going to oppose them in this House, in the committee on finance and everywhere else those arguments are proposed.

The Minister of Finance is just plain wrong if he tries to impose that kind of tax. He is mean and wrong. It appears he wants to go ahead. He wants to do it in 1989 because of electoral politics. Canadians out there should understand very clearly that they should not go and spend the $200 or $300 the Minister tells them they will receive next year because the Minister is going to take it right back in sales tax increases in 1989. That is his plan and he is trying to hide it from Canadians by means of a two-step tango.

The Minister of Finance should have had, of course, one package rather than two but he did not and what he has done instead is to bring in a little bit of a sales tax credit, trying to say that that will alleviate the burden for ordinary Canadian families. Canadians should know that the sales tax credit only applies to people far below the poverty line. It only applies to people with incomes of less than $16,000 or $17,000 a year. Above that level, one still has $6,000 or $7,000 to go before one reaches the poverty line for a Canadian family living in a major Canadian city. So thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of Canadian families below the poverty line, will pay that tax on food and get nothing back.

Thousands of working families where there are possibly two spouses working in order to make ends meet, to pay the mortgage, to pay the rent and put food on the table, are going to find they are hit with this tax and will receive no recompense at all.

The Minister is not being frank. He is not being fair, and his tax system is not simple, either. I have here the 1986 General Tax Guide and Return for residents of Ontario which I had the privilege of filling out this year. It was about 84 pages long. The Minister says his new system is simple because he has put in three rates rather than 12 rates which applied before. In the back of my book there is a federal and Ontario tax table. I always calculate my tax that way. There could be a hundred different rates, it would not make any difference to me. The fact is that the tax return form in 1988 and 1989 will be just as complex and just as long as what we have now. The Minister has not simplified the system. In fact, he has probably made it more complex because of the new bells and whistles he has put into his particular system.

I want to close off by saying that I welcome some of the concessions that have been made by the Minister of Finance. For years we have been condemned by Liberals and Conservatives for saying that it was wrong to give special privileges for capital gains; for saying it was wrong to give special privileges for investment income; for saying it was wrong to give special privileges for dividends and give them tax concessions; for saying it was wrong for corporations to be able to transfer dividends tax-free; and for saying it was wrong to continue to have deductions when we advocated there should be tax credits. Suddenly everything we were saying that we were told was wrong is right. The Minister is bringing in tax credits. He is acknowledging that the dividend tax credit is wrong. Except he is not taking it away. He is only taking away a bit of it. He acknowledges that we were right to say that capital gains should be taxed just like any other kind of income. Except he then kind of loses the thread—he will only tax capital gains a bit more heavily than now. But he will still favour those kinds of income over the income that is earned by the sweat of the brow of workers, farmers and small business people who pay income tax on all their income, as all Canadians should pay tax on all of their income.

So the Minister accepts our arguments but only in principle. When it comes down to cases, when it comes down to practicalities, he does not accept them enough. When the people judge the Minister of Finance on fairness, they should not just judge him on his rhetoric, they should judge him on his results. Any proposal that can cut taxes on average Canadians by $6 a week but cuts taxes for the wealthy by $85 a week is not real tax reform.

Any White Paper that leaves 60,000 profitable Canadian corporations not paying tax is not real tax reform. Any fiscal package that leaves companies paying a lower share in 1990 of federal government revenues than they paid in 1984 is not real tax reform.

But wait, some Hon. Members will say, the corporations are paying more. Surely that is what the Minister of Finance said. That is what he said, but his figures say otherwise.

In 1984, corporations provided 20 per cent of federal government revenues from income and sales tax. In 1990, after these reforms are in place, it will only provide 17 per cent. In other words, rather than moving forward to a more equitable system we are moving backward.

Any tax package that gives tax cuts to a majority of Canadians in 1988 but then clearly intends to take those tax cuts back in 1989 by means of a sales tax change is not tax reform. Any proposal that hands back to rich Canadians more of their income than is handed back to people who are poor is not tax reform—it is tax fraud.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will meet this Minister on the hustings. We will meet him in the House of Commons. We will meet him in the Finance Committee. We will meet him out across the country. This is a fraud on Canadians. It is not real tax reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It being 9.43 p.m., pursuant to Order made Friday, June 12, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m. in accordance with Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 9.43 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

APPLICATION OF THE PROVISIONS OF S. O. 57 TO THE DEBATE ON THE REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given you notice relating to the extraordinary motion moved by the government House Leader yesterday under Section 57 of the rules of procedure imposing closure on the resolution to support in principle the re-establishment of capital punishment and to provide for the establishment of a committee to examine that question. In moving that motion yesterday—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kaplan: I believe a question of privilege has priority.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would just let the Chair hear a bit more and then I will return to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in moving that motion, I submit that my privileges and the privileges of Members of the House of Commons, particularly members of the Opposition as I will argue in a moment, have been violated. They are violated—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is raising a question of privilege apparently based on something that was done pursuant to one of the Orders of the House. Obviously an experienced Member of the House like the Hon. Member is entitled to be heard, but I do not want to be taken for an overly long time along the lines of an alleged point of privilege which is based on something which has been done according to the rules of the House, if it has been I am having a great difficulty following the Hon. Member. Perhaps the Hon. Member could help me. I think I can anticipate that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was perhaps wondering the same thing. I am a bit troubled by this.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think I can do so and I can do so by referring to your own ruling of April 14, 1987, in which you indicated, dealing with another rule of the House, that there was a legitimate use of the rules of the House as well as an illegitimate use of the rules of the House and that it was the function of the Speaker to ensure that there were no illegitimate uses of the rules of the House.

A rule was used yesterday, I grant you, but I submit, and I hope that I will have a few minutes to make the case, that the use of the rules made by the Deputy Prime Minister and government House Leader yesterday was an illegitimate use of the rules of the House. That is my submission.

When you established that concept in your ruling of April 14, you did so in the following context, and I refer to your ruling which appears at page 5119 of Hansard:

> It is essential to our democratic system that controversial issues should be debated at reasonable length so that every reasonable opportunity shall be available to hear the arguments pro and con and that reasonable delaying tactics should be permissible to enable opponents of a measure to enlist public support for their point of view. Sooner or later every issue must be decided and the decision will be taken by a majority. Rules of procedure protect both the minority and the majority. They are designed to allow the full expression of views on both sides of an issue. They provide the Opposition with a means to delay a decision.
> They also provide the majority with a means of limiting debate in order to arrive at a decision. This is the kind of balance essential to the procedure of a democratic assembly. Our rules were certainly never designed to permit the total frustration of one side or the other, the total stagnation of debate, or the total paralysis of the system.

I want to argue that the use made of the rules yesterday was illegitimate because the rules were used in a way which prevent precisely that which you suggested you had the authority to protect, namely, that there should be a debate of reasonable length and that there should be an opportunity to hear the arguments pro and con.

• (1010)

Further on in your ruling at page 5121 of Hansard you said:

> When interpreting the rules of procedure, the Speaker must take account not only of their letter but of their spirit and be guided by the most basic rule of all, that of common sense.

The ruling I have just referred to of April 14, 1987, was used to limit interventions by the Opposition. I want to argue that exactly the same logic used in that ruling should lead you to intervene to prevent the majority from suppressing the minority and give the minority precisely what you said you should interpret the rules to protect, namely, the right to hear arguments pro and con.

I want to make a second argument—

Mr. Lewis: I hope it is better than the first one.

Mr. Kaplan: —that you should have regard to British precedent. Our rules of procedure provide under Standing Order 1:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

The use of closure is almost unprecedented in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: You have brought it in.

Mr. Kaplan: It is not entirely unprecedented and its use may be legitimate. It is used quite commonly in Great Britain so I want to suggest that we should be guided by British precedent, where the experience is greater, in the use of closure motions.

I would like to draw your attention to page 452 of Erskine May which covers the question of closure and indicates there is a role for the Speaker. The intervention of the Chair regarding closure is restricted to occasions when the motion is made in abuse of the rules of the House or infringes the rights of the minority. In deciding whether, given the importance of the subject, the amount of time already occupied by the debate is adequate, the Chair is guided by certain considerations. The considerations are set out there.

I want to put before you the considerations I urge you to apply in deciding on the illegitimacy or premature use of closure, and I want to refer to statements made by the Government House Leader and the Parliamentary Secretary on the subject on which closure is being imposed, that being the reinstatement of capital punishment.

When the subject was introduced on February 13, 1987, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said at page 3413 of Hansard:

> The intent behind the motion is to permit a full parliamentary debate to be concluded by a free vote on the capital punishment issue.

That is the characterization the Government gave with respect to the motion relating to capital punishment. The Government House Leader went on to say he wanted an open debate:

> This issue is a matter of national importance and one that a majority of Canadians want Parliament to consider. It should be debated openly and voted upon in a free manner without impeding the independence of Members of Parliament.

On February 2, 1987, at page 3000 of Hansard, the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary said:

> —I submit that in any debate about capital punishment the process by which the debate proceeds is vital to a full and fair resolution of the issue.

At the same time he said:

> Every Member of the House, no matter what is his or her position on the issue, owes it to society to debate the issue on as high a level as possible.

What have we had from the Government in the way of debate?

Mr. Lawrence: Opposition delays.

Mr. Kaplan: We have had delays, the Member opposite says. We have had four days of debate, and the last day was interrupted. We have had only 20 speakers. I would like to recall for you that in 1976, when the abolition of capital punishment was debated, it went on for 30 days with 120 speakers.

Mr. Lewis: And 20 hours on second reading.

Mr. Kaplan: On second reading we debated for 21—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. Along with some other Hon. Members, I was here not only for that debate but for an earlier one. The Hon. Member refers to British practice. I think there were two debates on capital punishment in the British House of Commons in recent years and I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell me how many days those debates lasted? If one is to borrow willy-nilly from other practices, I am not so sure that that particular argument helps the Hon. Member.

The difficulty the Chair is in is this. The Hon. Member referred to a ruling I made on April 14. The circumstances were that there had been the use of procedural tactics for an extended period of time which the Chair felt, for much of that protracted period of time, were by and large justified given the importance that some Hon. Members placed on that particular matter. However, that ruling was to try and find a way through the unenviable position in which the Chair found itself, not having any clear direction from the House with respect to the Standing Orders.

I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member Standing Order 57. I do not rise to remind the Hon. Member of this because I am in disagreement with what he has been saying as to the number of days needed for a debate on this vital matter. That is not the issue. The issue is that the Hon. Member has raised a question of privilege and says one side has no right under these circumstances at this time to move a motion according to a rule which is clearly and succinctly set out. It says this:

> Immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming an adjourned debate is called, or if the House be in Committee of the Whole, any Minister of the Crown who, standing in his or her place, shall have given notice at a previous sitting of his or her intention so to do, may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned—

I understand that notice has been given. What will flow from that notice I do not yet know. However, the Hon. Member is objecting to the fact that notice has been given under the Orders. It is very difficult for the Chair, no matter how sympathetic it may be to the argument the Hon. Member is putting forward, to be able to entertain extensive argument on the thesis that somehow or other an Hon. Member's privileges have been breached by the implementation of a Standing Order by another Hon. Member or, in this case, the Government.

• (1020)

The Chair is not altogether ingenuous in this matter and understands fully the point the Hon. Member is making. I am troubled because it would seem to me that it is very much a question of legitimate debate. I am having a very great deal of difficulty being able to accept it as a question of privilege.

The difficulty I am in is that while the Hon. Member has a view, which he has put forward very well if I may compliment him for that, other Hon. Members have a different view and the Hon. Member will probably soon be interrupted by other Hon. Members who will tell me that there is a clear order, that there is no question or doubt about what the rules are, and that when the rules are followed in this place it is hardly up to one Member or another to say that that is a question of privilege. That, specifically, is the problem I have to face.

I ask the Hon. Member to put aside completely the merits of his case, which I think he has put forward very adequately in terms of debate. How is the Chair to continue a long debate on a question of privilege which the Chair is having a very great deal of difficulty accepting as a question of privilege, even though I realize I have not heard all of the very persuasive argument of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, you have asked me, and I agree, not to dwell on the merits, but I cannot refrain from observing, in just a sentence or two, that from my recollection of the British experience on that subject closure was not imposed but the debate was limited. The Government itself has said that it wants every Member to be able to participate in this debate on as high a level as possible.

I want to respond to you, Mr. Speaker. You have indicated that you see a clear rule and you feel you have no alternative but to apply it. I remind you that in the order you made on April 14 there were also clear rules on which you intervened. There are clear rules giving opposition Members of the House the opportunity to participate by raising the points which they were raising. Your intervention quite reasonably, I will concede, limited the clear rights they had under the rules on which they were relying for their interventions.

At this point the Government is asking you to rely on a rule and I am making a similar argument that, although the rule is there, just as this ruling authorized you to intervene and suppress rights set out in the rules of procedure for the benefit of private Members and opposition Members, you have the authority which you have given to yourself through your ruling of April 14 to intervene there.

You made the point that some Members are in favour of this debate continuing and some Members are against it. I agree. However, I think you will find that those who are in favour of closing the debate down tend to be members of the majority and those who would like to see the debate continue tend to be members of the minority. Therefore, we come back to the very issue which you yourself raised on April 14—the balance between the rights of the majority and rights of the minority.

You have a right to ensure that there is a reasonable debate on this subject. Erskine May makes it clear that in Great Britain, where closure is frequently used, the Speaker has to ensure that it is not used unreasonably or prematurely or, to use your expression, Mr. Speaker, that it is not used illegitimately. If there ever was such a case, this is it.

You can look back upon how the subject has been dealt with before by the Canadian Parliament. There were hundreds of hours of debate during which over one hundred Members spoke. In this case, in which closure is being applied prematurely and illegitimately, in my submission, there have been less than 20 speakers and less than four days of debate. The Government itself adjourned the debate on the fourth day so there have only been three and one-half days of debate.

If closure is going to be part of the arsenal of this oppressive Government, the Speaker has a clear duty and a well-precedented responsibility to step in and ensure that there is a reasonable debate. Just as the rights of the minority can sometimes be denied in the House on the basis of common sense, as you said yourself, in this case common sense surely demands that the Opposition be given what the Government said it would be given, a full opportunity for debate, an opportunity for all Members to discuss this subject on the highest level.

I am not asking you, Mr. Speaker, to invent a proper length of debate out of whole cloth. I am asking you to look at the precedent in Canada, which is the debate of 1976, to look at the promises of the Government, and to do the fair thing now as you did on April 14 to the disadvantage of the rights of the minority.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I can assist the Chair and perhaps my hon. friend.

Mr. Penner: What arrogance.

Mr. Murphy: You're resigning?

Mr. Lewis: If my hon. friend cares to look at Standing Order 57 he will see that it says that notice must be given before a motion is moved. There is an essential difference between notice and a motion. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) gave the House notice. That is the essential difference. Surely no one's rights can be breached by notice.

If I may say so, my friend is premature. We have called the previous motion on capital punishment for debate. It was our intention that the first 27 minutes of today would be occupied by a legitimate debate on the issue. We have continually made the point that we are prepared to negotiate shorter speeches on our side, if one wishes to distinguish between our side and their side. We are prepared to extend the hours. However, the Opposition refuses to negotiate.

Allow me to put the mind of the Opposition at rest and state very clearly the intentions of the Government for today and Monday. It is the intention of the Government to have debate on the issue.

Mr. Riis: You adjourned the debate yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: I am telling my hon. friend the intention for today. If my hon. friend, who implored me last night for information, wishes to hear the information now, he will let me tell him.

We intend to call the motion for debate today. There is absolutely no intention on the part of the Government to move the motion under Standing Order 57 today or Monday. There is absolutely no intention on the part of any member of the Government to extend hours today or Monday. We intend to have a normal day's debate which would have included from ten o'clock until 11 o'clock and from 12.15 until two o'clock, Private Members' Hour beginning at two o'clock. We intend to call the motion for debate after routine proceedings on Monday and continuing until 10 o'clock at night with the exception of the normal Question Period and normal Private Members' Hour.

It is up to the Opposition to decide whether it wants delay or debate.

An Hon. Member: We want our right to speak.

Mr. Speaker: I am, of course, intrigued by the words of the Parliamentary Secretary. Since the Chair has the obligation to ensure that the rules of this place are followed, I point out to Hon. Members that although the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's words were of interest I am not at all sure that they went to the heart of the matter which is raised by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). However, they do indicate that at least for today there seems to be a firm commitment by the Government that debate will continue.

The Hon. Member for York Centre wishes to rise again, perhaps to comment on some of the statements of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. It may be helpful if the Chair indicated its disposition at this time, in view of what the Government has just said. It would be to just adjourn this matter, let debate proceed, and suggest that Hon. Members discuss this matter among themselves. I will then hear further argument on the matter at any moment at which the Hon. Member for York Centre feels it appropriate to raise the matter further. In other words, I will not cut this off. However, the Hon. Member for York Centre has a comment.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the remedy which I was proposing to urge on you was that you not receive the notice. I feel that I need to say another few words in order to explain, but if the adjournment now is without prejudice to an argument which might convince you not to receive the notice, then I would be sympathetic to adjournment.

However, I want to indicate why a notice, pure and simple, can be a violation of rights of Members. The reason is that this is not a notice like other notices. Other notices provide for a debate, and for a vote. A notice under Standing Order 57 precludes the possibility of debate. Since there is no debate on it, if the matter is taken at face value, merely receiving the notice, settles the issue of how long the debate will take on the substantive matter being closed and when it will be finished.

It is the notice that I submit is the violation of the rights of the Opposition and not the matters that follow subsequent to it.

The Parliamentary Secretary has made an offer. I want to make a counter offer in the interests of trying to resolve this matter. It is that he withdraw the notice. He can always bring it back.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the Hon. Member for York Centre is a very respected Member of this place and a respected Member of the same fraternity from which I came. He is skillful and always persuasive. However, I think that at this moment it is in the better interests of this place that I adjourn this application on the part of the Hon. Member.

I am inviting Hon. Members to discuss the matter among themselves because this is clearly now becoming a negotiating session across the aisle and, while it certainly would not be the first time it has happened, I suggest to all Hon. Members that it is not appropriate at this moment.

I am asking the Hon. Member for York Centre that he accept my suggestion that this matter be adjourned for now. I invite Hon. Members to have a discussion about the matter and, of course, I will hear the Hon. Member if he feels it is necessary to carry on this discussion at another time.

I am prepared to meet with Hon. Members from both sides if there is anything the Chair can do to assist in this matter. I would ask Hon. Members to accept the Chair's view that at the moment this has gone far enough, given the clear undertaking of the Parliamentary Secretary, at least for today.

Mr. Kaplan: And Monday.

Mr. Speaker: At least for today, and I will hear Hon. Members further if Hon. Members feel it is necessary. I urge Hon. Members to have a discussion on this issue.

I want to make it very clear to Hon. Members, and the public listening to this, that in taking this position the Chair is mindful that the Chair's obligation is to administer and interpret the rules as they are. It is not for me at the moment to say whether this rule is a good rule or a bad rule. However, it is pretty clear.

Having said that, there is nothing in what I say that is intended or in any way should be taken as diminishing the substantive argument that the Hon. Member has put forward with respect to the vital issue that is before the House. The Hon. Member makes very legitimate arguments, and other Hon. Members may make equally legitimate arguments the other way, as to the importance of the debate and the length of the debate.

I want it clearly understood that in closing this off at this time I am not in any way taking away from the substantive points the Hon. Member for York Centre has made. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I hope on a different matter.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, certainly in view of the suggestion that has been made, that the debate on this question of privilege is merely being adjourned and Your Honour is not in any way ruling with respect to the merits of the question of privilege, I do not intend to make the argument which myself and colleagues, including our House Leader and Whip, wish to make as well. We certainly feel very strongly that the precedents in Erskine May and elsewhere with respect to the use of this Draconian device of closure are very real.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby is also a very skilled and persuasive Member of this place. The Hon. Member for Burnaby will have every chance to argue this matter further, if it is in fact necessary. But I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair.

At the moment, in view of what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary says, I think it is in the interests of this place that the very debate Members are asking for be allowed to take place.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. It is also a very fundamental question on which I seek some assistance from the Parliamentary Secretary. I do not intend in any way to pursue the question of privilege.

In view of the fact that the Government has given notice on this matter, another difficulty arises. Having given notice on this question, the Government can in fact introduce this motion at any time and then that same sitting, after a full debate, there will be a vote at one o'clock in the morning according to Standing Order 57.

In view of the extraordinary gravity of the issue, which is literally a question of life and death, and in view of the importance that all Members be in a position to be in the House for a vote on this very important question, I seek the assurance from the Parliamentary Secretary that now that notice of closure has been given under Standing Order 57 that Members of the House on all sides be given adequate notice, at least a day's notice ahead of time, should the Government decide that it wishes to pursue this matter, in order that all Members can at least be present for the vote on this very important question.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Burnaby for accepting my suggestion to move away from the question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Burnaby is clearly now on a point of order which goes directly to the heart of what are the Government's intentions in this debate. Of course, the Government is under no obligation to respond, but under the circumstances I would certainly hear the Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary may want to say that that is a matter for private discussion.

However, I accept what the Hon. Member for Burnaby has said as a point of order on an important matter.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to say that we have consistently suggested that there would be a free vote on this matter. That is government policy.

I am prepared to say that along with the free vote goes adequate notice of the time of a free vote. I would give my undertaking to that extent. I hope that in return, my hon. friend would undertake not to delay the taking of that free vote once adequate notice is given.

Mr. Speaker: It is not for the Chair to comment as to whether or not the exchange that has just taken place is satisfactory to both parties. But it is probably sensible for the Chair to suggest that both Parties might discuss the matter a little further, although there seems to be some disposition to co-operate in this matter.

POINT OF ORDER

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS—ORDER OF PRECEDENCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very different point of order which deals with the technicalities of the way in which Bill S-10 has been placed on the Order Paper. Bill S-10 is a Private Member's private Bill originating in the Senate. It is an Act to Revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

With the substance of the Bill I am in complete agreement. However, I have some queries as to how it finds itself as an item having precedence No. 11 on the table on page 31 of today's Order Paper dealing with the order of precedence of Private Members' business.

You will know, Sir, that precedence is established pursuant to Standing Order 31 which deals with the draw and items which do not have to go through the draw process are dealt with under Standing Order 41. If I might be permitted to read into the record Standing Order 41(1) which states as follows:

> The order for the first consideration of any subsequent stages of a Bill already considered during Private Members' Business, of second reading of a Private Bill—

And here we come to the operative part.

> —and of second reading of a private Member's public Bill originating in the Senate shall be placed at the bottom of the order of precedence.

Therefore, Sir, had Bill S-10 been a private Member's public Bill, it would, in my opinion, quite properly appear where it does today. However, because this is a private Member's private Bill, I would submit that this might have been improperly done and might require unanimous consent of the House to have it where it presently finds itself in the order of precedence.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add to what the Hon. Member has said, that we on this side of the House would be ready to try to help the people of the North which we believe have been so often neglected by the Government. We are happy to see that someone on the Government side is putting something forward which will be constructive and, in that sense, we would be agreeable.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in the same spirit, we too agree to this proposal.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member for Western Arctic would allow the Table Officers to consider the matter and then I will come back to the House with what resolution we can. However, I just want to put on the record that there is unanimous consent of the House to the suggestion of the Hon. Member.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed from Thursday, June 18, consideration of the Motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

And on the amendment of Mr. Nystrom, (P.7307).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I enter into this debate with a concern my colleague has just expressed, why it is there seems to be such an inordinate and unacceptable ambition on the part of so many Members of the Government to limit debate on this issue. One of the most crucial decisions every one of us will be taking in this House at some time is on the matter of the restoration of capital punishment. It has been initiated by Members of the Government Party. The onus is on them to prove their case.

All we can assume is that those Hon. Members believe they are losing their case and, therefore, want the debate to come to an end. Therefore, this House, in part, is debating this motion under a cloud. There is a gun being put to our head. If we do not behave ourselves and limit our remarks, the Government at some point will bring in closure.

We certainly appreciate the decision you have made this morning, Mr. Speaker, that at the point in time at which there is an intention on the part of the Government to bring in closure, we will be able to resume our argument and be able to once again show that any attempt to limit the rights and freedoms of Members of Parliament to speak on behalf of their constituents on this crucial issue should not be permitted. If it gets in the way of the Government's timetable or its agenda or its fear of public reaction, then at least we can show that Parliament itself will not be victimized by those crass kinds of motivations.

It is interesting to note that this attempt to limit, restrain and circumscribe debate takes place at a time when I think Canadians want more debate. Over the last two months, I have been invited to countless numbers of schools, churches and organizations at which people wanted to hear the arguments for and against.

It is also interesting that at virtually all of those meetings where Conservative Members of Parliament were invited to share the platform, they refused to come. They did not show up on the platform in my province. They did not want to debate the issue in a public forum. It was a matter of some great regret that we were always debating with an empty chair, but that fits the same kind of attitude we have seen prevail, yesterday and today.

Those Hon. Members are afraid to debate. They have their own minds already made up and are afraid to face the kind of dynamic process which should take place in Parliament and across the country where free men and women are allowed to present arguments and then allowed to decide. I wonder sometimes if Government Members are learning their parliamentary tactics from South Korea rather than from the British tradition, because that is the kind of attitude which prevails day in and day out in this House.

Members of the Government are not trying to expand freedoms in the way they use Parliament, but are trying to restrict and circumscribe. They are afraid of debate and that is the first tell-tale sign of an authoritarian mind. They are afraid to put their own ideas and commitments out for public view and a free exchange of deliberate debate. They do not want to hear the other side of the case, and once we allow that to happen we are well on the road to a very different kind of Government, one which none of us would want to see exist in this country.

In part, we are engaged in the wrong kind of debate. If the Government was trying to read the public mood, it misread it. I participated in those forums and discussions everywhere from a grade 7 classroom in my constituency to the church forums. It is true that people are concerned about the increase in violence. It is true they are concerned about the problems in the penal and judicial systems and the fact that sometimes people are out on the streets who should not be there. In my own City of Winnipeg, there has been a substantial increase in violent crimes. Only the simple-minded would regard capital punishment as the panacea. Instead of debating capital punishment, we should be debating the root causes behind the increase in violent crimes. There is a fear and uncertainty in the minds of Canadians in respect of the increase in crime, and we should be trying to determine the cause for that increase, thus enabling us to come up with the right solutions.

That is the type of debate that Canadians would like to see this Parliament engage in. Canadians want to know how to deal with the issues that have led to the present situation. But, we are not being allowed to do that. The Government has said that it is capital punishment that is the answer; that it is the death penalty that will solve the problem. And it does so in total contradiction to all of the available evidence. The advocates of capital punishment have not been able to prove a cause-and-effect relationship between the absence of capital punishment and the increase in violent crimes, the increase in the murder rate and in heinous crimes generally.

During the course of the debate thus far, Mr. Speaker, all kinds of statistics have been paraded out on the floor of the House. The advocates of capital punishment cite the increased crime figures in certain cities of the country. Of course, we on the other side of the question can just as easily say that in jurisdictions where there is capital punishment the murder rate has increased exponentially, geometrically.

What we have to look at are the differences in such cities as Miami and Detroit, where there has been an explosion of violence, and places like South Dakota, where there is no such explosion. It may be that it has more to do with the stability of a given society than anything else. It may be that it has more to do with the fairness of the system in place. It may be that it has more to do with the way in which a particular community deals with the strains and stresses of every-day living.

Taking the City of Winnipeg as an example, one of the fundamental sources for the increase in the incidence of violent crime in that city is the tremendous increase in the stresses and strains of every-day living in the inner city. People are living in poverty, without the kind of educational and housing support they require. That situation is the reason for the increase in the incidence of violent crimes, not the absence of the death penalty as a punishment.

But, the Government's motion does not permit us to debate the root cause. It seems to me that the resolution should be for the establishment of a committee of the House to study the serious problems that exist in the inner cities across this country, the fact that the native and aboriginal people of western Canada are mistreated and discriminated against and do not have a fair chance, the fact that there is tremendous turmoil and turbulence in our urban areas. It is that situation which should be debated and studied, with a view to changing society to eliminate those stresses and strains.

Such a debate would be a valuable contribution to the public interest of Canada; such a debate would make good sense. That is the kind of debate, the kind of examination that Canadians would like to see their Members of Parliament engage in.

The role of Parliament on this issue should be one of the educator, one of the examiner. Parliament should be holding these problems and issues up for public examination. Parliament should not be responding to prejudice and emotion; rather, it should fulfil its responsibility to provide a forum for the full articulation of the issues facing society. In that way, the people of the country will know what are the choices and the options. Such a course would provide Parliament with a noble role to play in society, which is something that the resolution now under debate does not permit.

It is important to underline why this debate has taken such a perverse turn. At this point in time in our society, I think Canadians were ready for something better. I think they wanted a different kind of examination of the issue of violent crime. It is not my impression that Canadians wanted to retreat to the dark ages, to the kind of primeval instincts that are being fanned by so many of the advocates of capital punishment. Canadians wanted something different from that, and hopefully it will be achieved.

To the great credit of many citizens of this country, members of the bar, members of the church organizations, the contrary arguments are being put forward. It is those who are responding to the claims being put forward by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and others who favour capital punishment, and they are winning that debate in the various forums.

In order to ensure that the advocates of a more civilized, a more enlightened point of view are given the opportunity to win the debate on this issue, Parliament itself must be permitted to continue the debate. What is at stake, and what Parliament must fight for, is the right to continue the debate in that fashion. If the debate is allowed to continue, we will ultimately be able to secure the right choice in this House when we rise in our places to vote.

As the American experience shows, the reintroduction of capital punishment would lead to inequity and unfairness. When it comes to capital punishment, the law is not evenly applied. People do not have equal access to the better lawyers. Very often one's social standing, one's economic standing comes into play. The probability of a convicted murderer being executed is much higher where the murderer comes from a certain social, economic or ethnic group.

Is that what Canadians are prepared to accept in 1987? Are we prepared to build into the most irrevocable decision the state can make an implicit unfairness? Are we prepared to allow that to happen? Are we prepared to allow our legal system to become completely immobilized because the decision-makers will not want to take the ultimate step of invoking capital punishment?

One needs only to look at the situation in the United States, where we have thousands of people being kept on death row because no one wants to make the final decision. Yet, there these people sit, with this great uncertainty hanging over their heads.

We know from past experience in this country the amount of anguish that was expressed in the Cabinet room when it came to making a decision to invoke capital punishment or not. And how many sentences were plea-bargained down, or evaded? Consider how distorted the legal system becomes when capital punishment is available.

That is one of the clear results that we would bring about were we to pass this motion. Not only would we be doing the wrong thing, but we would be committing our legal system to an incredible degree of distortion and immobilization, to say nothing of the element of unfairness that would be built in.

These arguments have not been refuted, Mr. Speaker. All we seem to get is capital punishment for the sake of capital punishment—for the sake of capital punishment.

In that respect, it is interesting to note that virtually every religious organization and spokesperson across Canada has come out against this resolution. Those organizations speak with a unified voice on this issue. In terms of the fundamental moral beliefs, if it is the motive of the proponents of capital punishment to wreak vengeance, I remind them of the fundamental Biblical invocation, "Vengeance is mine, sayeth the Lord". Only God has the right to make the ultimate decision. It is not for us, being as fallible as we are, to be making that kind of choice.

We entered into this debate, Mr. Speaker, with the belief that we would be given the time and opportunity to make our case. Once again, that faith is about to be broken. The threat of execution on the House and on further debate is the problem we face. It is double jeopardy, double capital punishment in both ways.

• (1100)

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as I say to Members opposite, if they really believe in what they are doing, then let the debate continue. Let every Canadian have the right to be heard because, in the end, right will prevail. Not only that, but justice and goodness will prevail if we are given the chance and time to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX REFORM

FUTURE OF POOR AND ELDERLY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, again yesterday people were misled by this Government.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, in its last three Budgets the Government chose to raise taxes to the tune of $20 a week for every Canadian. Yesterday the Minister came back and said: Well, I made a mistake, I am giving you $6 back. However, as of next year I will take $2 from you, but that is not all because, beginning in 1989, I intend to recuperate the other $4 I gave you.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Budget is a shameful trick played on people. It is a shame because there are four million poor Canadians and most senior citizens did not benefit at all from this Budget. People will remember this during the next election campaign.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

EDMONTON—CANADA PLACE TOPPING-OFF CEREMONY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 2, I had the honour to participate in a topping-off ceremony for Canada Place in Edmonton. Canada Place is the location of the new federal government offices which will do much to consolidate many of the federal offices in Edmonton.

A topping-off ceremony is a traditional ceremony signifying that a building has structurally reached its full height. It is a tribute to the Trizec Corporation, Ellis-Don Management Services, and the hundreds of workers who have erected Canada Place in only 18 months.

The building of Canada Place has added much to the economy of Edmonton. The $190 million structure is being built by some 365 workers who have put in 676,000 man-hours of work. That represents a lot of money. All but six of the workers are Edmontonians. Also, 35 of the 38 sub-contractors are from Edmonton.

This beautiful building for the federal Government will not only enhance downtown Edmonton but will provide impetus for greater growth in our fair city.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO IMPOSE CLOSURE ON DEBATE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, last night the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) gave the House notice that he intends to gag Parliament on a fundamental question of life and death on the issue of capital punishment. The last time this Draconian sledge-hammer abuse of the rules took place was on October 23, 1980. At that time I was in the House. I remember that Conservative Members of Parliament stormed the Chair. They stormed the Chair in protest and outrage over the use of closure under the Standing Orders.

The same Party which now forms the Government transforms this issue now, an issue which is supposed to be a question of conscience, a question affecting each and every Member of the House, a Private Member's initiative. The Government has now taken the initiative to the extent that the Tory Chairperson of the Justice Committee has said: "It seems to me it detracts from what it's supposed to be—a free vote".

Yes, it detracts all right from what it is supposed to be. What we now have is a betrayal of the promise of the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader who said: "We are not committed to managing the debate with a heavy hand or forcing a vote by a certain date".

The Government has betrayed that promise. It is trying to shut down Parliament on an issue that goes to the very heart of what this nation is all about.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MR. GAËTAN LUSSIER

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I demand the immediate resignation of the Deputy Minister and President of the Employment and Immigration Commission, or his transfer to the Privy Council until such time as an impartial inquiry has been made into allegations that Mr. Gaëtan Lussier committed perjury before the Federal Court of Canada Chief Justice.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that a bureaucrat would lie before a court and, until an inquiry by the Standing Committee of Labour sheds light on this matter, I simply cannot accept this incident.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I table a copy and request the dismissal of Mr. Lussier.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am very sorry, but later perhaps it might be possible for the Hon. Member to discuss the subject of his remarks with the Chair.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

IMPACT OF CLOSURE OF ATLANTIC DISTILLERS IN RICHIBOUCTOU

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, recently, the New Brunswick daily Le Matin announced some very bad news, namely that Atlantic Distillers at Richibouctou was closing its plant.

This plant closing means that forty workers will be laid off in one of the few industries that employ people year round. It will have a severe impact on the region, the community and especially on the families concerned.

The industry has been severely affected by tax increases, and more particularly by increases in the excise tax which were among the causes of diminishing sales. The problem was brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on several occasions.

Many of my constituents sent me letters which I then transmitted to the Minister of Finance. In their letters, they mentioned the number of jobs that had already been lost, and wondered whether they would be next. Well, now it has happened. Those jobs are lost.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be able to provide some kind of solution to deal with the loss of these jobs in the town of Richibouctou.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—WINDSOR INTERNATIONAL FREEDOM FESTIVAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, today begins the twenty-ninth annual celebration of the International Freedom Festival in Windsor. It will culminate in the joint observation of the Freedom Days, July 1 and July 4, as approved by resolution in this House. No Canadian city has such an intimate relationship with its American cousins, and that may frequently be taken literally, than does the City of Windsor.

We are as likely to cheer the Detroit Red Wings and the Tigers as the Maple Leafs or the Blue Jays. Yet there are no people so jealous of our Canadianism, so sharply aware of this country's unique democratic values, or who share a deeper understanding of America than we.

It is as equals that we join in celebration of a special relationship, a special relationship that is often tested and taken too much for granted by our neighbours, and perhaps even by ourselves.

This largest of international festivals in the words welcomes you, Mr. Speaker. Come and see the brilliant lights of freedom light up the sky of Detroit and Windsor, and hear the mighty roar of two free and separate peoples as they pledge their friendship.

TAX REFORM

WHITE PAPER—PROVISIONS AFFECTING SENIOR CITIZENS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, we have all recognized that tax reform is essential to bring fairness and equity into the tax system and to devise a system which will provide a greater sense of opportunity and encourage competitiveness. But of particular concern to many of us is the financial situation of our senior citizens—Canadians who have contributed so much to our community and who deserve a sense of financial peace and security in their retirement years.

So among the many areas that I would select for compliments in the tax reform package, it is the positive impact on our seniors that I particularly applaud. As a result of tax reform nine out of ten Canadians 65 years of age and over will pay less federal tax in 1988. A typical elderly married couple with $25,000 in income will pay about $650 less.
