WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), I have the honour to lay upon the table copies of a ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act. Pursuant to Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from petitioners of Edmonton, Alberta; Denman Island, British Columbia; Pitt Meadows, British Columbia; Lillooet, British Columbia; Salmon Arm, British Columbia; Sooke, British Columbia; and Vancouver, British Columbia.

They are concerned that the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides are being proven to have deleterious effects on human health and believe that these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms in soil and water. They indicate that these same chemicals in past years have been registered and approved as safe for their various uses.

They call upon the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration, regulation and use of pesticides and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant derived pesticides.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—PUBLIC INPUT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106(4). This petition is presented on behalf of residents of Ontario and Quebec. It concerns the subject of the Meech Lake Accord.

These citizens believe in a strong Canada where all Canadians are treated equally, fairly, and enjoy the same rights and protections regardless of the province in which they live. They believe that the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord threaten our freedoms under the Charter of Rights and place in jeopardy future national programs which may benefit Canadians from coast to coast.

They call upon Parliament to present to the people of Canada the true implications of the Meech Lake Accord and provide all Canadians with a formal opportunity to respond to the constitutional changes proposed by the Meech Lake Accord.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have the privilege of presenting several petitions signed by hundreds of residents of the province of New Brunswick who call upon the House to turn down Canada Post's new corporate plan that creates two classes of citizens by installing superboxes on a permanent basis in rural as well as urban areas, and by closing rural post offices and thus depriving Canadians of the sole federal presence and reducing vital postal services in rural communities.

Thus your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament reject Canada Post's plan and urge the Corporation to deliver the mail to all Canadian taxpayers, without exception.

REQUEST TO INCLUDE A NEIGHBOURHOOD OF MONTREAL IN NEW ELECTORAL DISTRICT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by 200 residents of a section of the City of Montreal, located in the existing federal ridings of Saint-Jacques and Laurier and bounded to the north by Mount Royal, to the east by Saint-Laurent, to the south by Sherbrooke and to the west by Park. The petitions refer to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and state that although they agree with the principle of the change proposed by the Commission, in the past there has been no interaction between the undersigned residents and the residents of the proposed federal riding of Saint-Henri—Westmount.

Thus your petitioners humbly play that Parliament agree to include this section in the new riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie, and not in the riding of Saint-Henri—Westmount as proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from people of the Province of Manitoba who are presently represented in the House by Conservative Members of Parliament. They are from the communities of Fannystelle, Brandon, Thornhill, Darlingford, Pine River, Morden and a number of other communities in the southern part of Manitoba.

They express their concern with the federal Government's intention to change the Patent Act. They believe it will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on a regular basis. They also believe this is just another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the Government's free trade negotiations with that country.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): moved for leave to introduce Bill C-257, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (independence of Parliament).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gottselig: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to clarify the conflict of interests rules of the Senate and House of Commons Act by making express provisions for the right of Members of Parliament, who are members of a class such as farmers to participate in Government assistance programs on an equal basis with other members of that class who may qualify for such assistance.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROVISIONAL AND PERMANENT STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Jelinek, moves:

That all the provisional and permanent Standing Orders of the House in force on the date of notice of this motion, be amended as follows and be adopted as amended as the permanent Standing Orders of the House; provided—

Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since the Government wants to proceed unilaterally on amending these rules, we will insist that Standing Order 70(1) be applied today.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I also want to register the concern of the Party I represent, that since the Government has decided to use this unilateral and rather dictatorial approach to change the rules to its satisfaction only, ignoring the roles of the Official Opposition and the other Opposition Party, we too expect that the entire motion will be read in both official languages.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Mazankowski, seconded by Mr. Jelinek, moves:

That all the provisional and permanent Standing Orders of the House in force on the date of notice of this motion, be amended as follows and be adopted as amended as the permanent Standing Orders of the House; provided

No later than June 30, 1987, the said motion shall be proposed for debate during Routine Proceedings, and no later than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion; and

4. that the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print a revised edition of the Standing Orders of the House, renumbering as may be deemed necessary and making such technical and consequential changes as well as such changes to the Order Paper and Notices as may be required.

That paragraph (a) of Standing Order 2(5) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) Any Member who wishes to be considered for election to the Office of Speaker shall, not later than 6.00 o'clock p.m. on the day preceding the day on which the election of a Speaker is expected to take place, in writing, so inform the Clerk of the House who shall prepare a list of such Members' names and shall provide the same to the Member presiding prior to the taking of the first ballot;"

"3. (1) The House shall meet on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11.00 o'clock a.m., on Wednesdays at 2.00 o'clock p.m. and on Fridays at 10.00 o'clock a.m. unless otherwise provided by Standing or Special Order of this House."

(d) be free of erasures or interlineations;

(e) have its subject matter indicated on every sheet, if it consists of more than one sheet of signatures and addresses;

(f) contain only original signatures and addresses written directly onto the petition and not pasted thereon or otherwise transferred to it; and

(g) contain at least twenty-five signatures, together with the addresses of the signatories, from persons other than Members of Parliament."

That Standing Order 116 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"116. When a Minister of the Crown, from his or her place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a public bill, the Minister may propose a motion, without notice, during proceedings under Government Orders, setting forth the terms of the said proposed allocation; provided that for the purposes of this Standing Order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages of a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 114(13). During the consideration of any such motion no Member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion. Any proceeding interrupted pursuant to this Standing Order shall be deemed adjourned."

That Standing Order 117 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"117. A Minister of the Crown who from his or her place in the House, at a previous sitting, has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 115 or 116 in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee, and has given notice of his or her intention so to do, may propose a motion, during proceedings under Government Orders, for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage; provided that the time allotted for any stage is not to be less than one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this Standing Order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 114(13). During the consideration of any such motion no Member may speak more than once or longer than ten minutes. Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion. Any proceedings interrupted pursuant to this Standing Order shall be deemed adjourned."

That the following new Standing Order be inserted immediately before Standing Order 132:

"131.1 (1) A petition for a private bill may be presented by a Member at any time during the sitting of the House by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

(2) Members presenting petitions for private bills shall be answerable that such petitions do not contain impertinent or improper matter.

(3) Every Member presenting a petition for a private bill shall sign his or her name on the back thereof.

(4) Petitions for private bills may be either written or printed; provided always that when there are three or more petitioners the signatures of at least three petitioners shall be subscribed on the sheet containing the prayer of the petition.

(5) On the next day following the presentation of a petition for a private bill, the Clerk of the House shall lay upon the Table the report of the Clerk of Petitions thereon and such report shall be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. Every petition so reported upon, not containing matter in breach of the privileges of this House and which, according to the Standing Orders or practice of this House, can be received, shall then be deemed to be read and received.

(6) No debate shall be permitted on the report but a petition referred to therein may be read by the Clerk of the House at the Table, if required."—The Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to introduce this motion after it was clearly and articulately read in both official languages. Perhaps our viewers out there will get a clear impression of what we are trying to do here in entrenching a system of rules and procedures into our permanent Standing Orders.

The motion I have presented to the House has as its principal objective the enshrinement of the parliamentary reform process which has been experimental and provisional for the past two years. The adoption of this motion will make all of those reforms permanent Standing Orders. In so doing this motion confirms the Government's commitment to meaningful and very thorough parliamentary reform.

It is fair to say that Members on all sides of the House have expressed their desire to see these changes continue. I think there is also general agreement that the reforms have succeeded in making the House more workable and in enhancing the role of Members in policy formation and examination. We believe, therefore, that now is the time to enshrine these provisional orders into the permanent Standing Orders.

Today's debate is very important, indeed, historic. Moreover, it is very positive for the future of parliamentary democracy as it has evolved in this country. The election of the Speaker by all of us in this House by ballot is made permanent by the motion, with two changes. The 5 per cent of vote minimum requirement for each candidate as proposed by the committee is adopted with a change to require Members wishing to be a candidate for the speakership to write in their candidacy rather than, as was the case last September, to write that they are not candidates.

Here again, as with any system of parliamentary order and rules, we learn through practice, and establish our rules and regulations by precedent and by the application and interpretation of those rules.

As well, the legislative committees are made permanent with no change in their powers and mechanisms except for the priority and queuing process which all Parties agreed to last September after many Members, particularly those in the opposition caucuses, realized that the system was becoming overloaded. We are satisfying this concern of the committee's April 7 report which examined the reforms. I think we all recognize that the government caucus could have placed an impossible burden on the opposition caucuses by having a dozen legislative committee meetings all at the same time. We recognize that that would have ultimately been damaging to the institution, so we have agreed to the queuing procedure.

Then there are the major reforms provisionally in place since the spring of 1986 which we propose to make permanent with minor changes which, I submit, will lead to improved workability. The standing committees would remain, with all the new powers the House gave them, but with some minor changes dealing with when they are struck and how membership can be changed. Committee scrutiny of Order in Council appointees and nominees would be made permanent with a clear mechanism for obtaining curricula vitae for committees calling such people before them. The review of delegated legislation, which members have used only once, will become permanent as well. Later this year we will revise wording to suit the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

I want to touch on the types of so-called procedural reforms proposed by the McGrath committee in Chapter 7 of its final 1985 report. These were largely, but only provisionally, implemented in our current rules. We are making a change to only one of them and that is Routine Proceedings, and I will come back to that later because, unfortunately and regrettably, the Opposition have not been able to agree with this element of the motion before us today.

We propose no change to the new process for Private Members' Business except for two improvements. One is to double the time for the speech by the Hon. Member moving any item to 20 minutes from 10 minutes. Second is the provision of a mechanism to allow private Bills, those from petitioners in the country, to be debated and, as the House wishes, enacted. The committee requested this, too. The special order agreed to by the House last December respecting how non-votable items may be relocated in the precedence list when a Member cannot be present has worked well and it, too, will become a permanent order.

The opposition House Leaders could not agree on behalf of their caucuses on either doing Private Members' Business at the end of each opposition or allotted day or somehow blending it into the day, so this is one proposal of the committee which we cannot accept. We will keep the status quo and not conduct Private Members' Business on those days.

The purpose was quite clear. Private Members' Business is not conducted on the 25 allotted days and the procedural committee and we, in our discussions, tried to find a way in which Private Members' Business could be conducted on days allocated for opposition debate. Unfortunately, I regret and I am sure many Private Members regret that we were unable to work out a solution which would accommodate that worthy objective.

As well, the motion proposes to remove any appeal to the House on a Member's request for an emergency debate. There is a provision where an appeal can be made if a Speaker finds a prima facie case of emergency under Standing Order 29. We sense that that was somewhat repugnant in as far as it applies to the stature of the Speaker, and any challenge would constitute a challenge to the Speaker. Therefore, we have removed that.

If the Speaker rules and finds an emergency under Standing Order 29, the debate will proceed on the basis of his or her assessment. It is made clear that once the decision is made and the Speaker rules on it, the debate is on.

If there is a debate on Friday, it will continue for up to four hours as on other days and will remain open to an extension by Standing Order 9(4), as provided for in the current provisional rules.

We have agreed to loosen up the format requirements for the presentation of petitions, again as the procedure committee requested.

With respect to the business of supply, my opposition colleagues agreed with us that it would be appropriate to move some of the spring opposition days to the fall and winter supply periods in order to give more balance to the timing of those debates. I believe we all have recognized what we have gone through in the last month or so, with 13 opposition days compressed into a very short period. We tried to work out a more suitable arrangement to even out those days.

Therefore, included in this motion, is a provision to provide six allotted days in the fall, the supply period ending December 10; nine days during the winter months, the supply period ending March 26; and 10 days rather than 13 days in the spring supply period which ends June 23, for a total of the 25 allotted days as currently exists.

With respect to comprehensive responses to committee reports, I want to thank the Opposition for agreeing to the extension of 30 days for the time allowed for a comprehensive reply by the Government to a committee report. Currently, the time allowed for a comprehensive reply is 120 days. The Government requested 180 days and we negotiated a compromise of 150 days. I want to thank the Opposition House Leaders for their support and co-operation in that regard.

The motion also sets out the mechanism to give effect to the substantive, consequential changes to our current rules. As one can appreciate, this requires a lot of work and I want to thank, on behalf of all of us, the Clerk's Office, the people at the table and our own respective staff for their precise assistance in putting together the details of the motion.

These minor changes to the parliamentary reforms have been arrived at after some 15 months of experience and considerable consultation with all Members, particularly Members opposite. Members in various quarters of the House will know that we have extended, by special order, the expiry of these rules from December, 1986 to April 15, 1987, then again to May 29, and finally to June 5.

My hon. friend, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, will know especially that the increasingly smaller extensions were made at his request and supported by my friend, the Liberal House Leader and myself, to in effect force us into doing the work and making the decisions to enable us to "fish or cut bait", as the expression goes. We believe that the time is appropriate to move, and I think there is a genuine desire to see that these provisional rules become formalized, fine-tuned, and modified to take into account the experience that we have gained over the last 15 months.

It must be pointed out that throughout there has been an extended and thorough consultative process. After the December extension last year, the House Leaders agreed that at the end of January our staffs would meet to review the rules, operations, and any changes that might be considered or proposed from various quarters. We also wanted to survey our caucus concerns and wait for the review and the report of the procedural committee which came down on April 7. By mid-March, we agreed to have an exchange of documents or positions, and they were examined and dealt with by April 1. On April 2, our staff met and proposals from our side were identified.

We then extended the reform rules expiry date from April 15 to May 29. By early May, I undertook to have all the Government's proposals shared for discussion among the three Parties' leadership and caucuses. The Opposition received the full written proposals on May 15 and the House Leaders' staffs were to meet to exchange and develop positions.

By the end of May, House Leaders were scheduling more frequent meetings to explore possibilities or concerns growing out of the Government's proposals. The time expired and we made a one-week extension from May 29 to June 5 to allow all caucuses to be fully apprised.

Last week we had meetings almost daily, and sometimes twice a day, in which there was a good deal of negotiation. I say to my colleagues that I believe everyone acted in good faith and that in those areas of disagreement, naturally the concerns are genuinely felt.

There were several areas in which agreement could not be reached in the original package that was presented to the opposition Parties for their consideration. However, many of those proposals were dropped. On the other hand, there were areas where we believe changes are necessary, notwithstanding the absence of agreement.

The motion before the House today provides for moving time allocation on Bills during Government Orders rather than under the routine proceeding called Motions. There was not full agreement worked out among the Parties of the House on this change, but we believe it is necessary in order to encourage the orderly disposition of the business of the House.

The proposal in today's motion to move the presentation of petitions down the sequence list daily, and to split Introduction of Bills into two separate routine proceedings—the first for Government Bills and the second for Private Members' Bills—and to provide that the first category will all be called each sitting day, is the best way we envisage overcoming the possibility of another procedural impasse of the sort we worked our way through last November on Bill C-22.

The Chair's rulings at that time, while a guide to the House, are not able to prevent a recurrence, given the way the routine proceedings work and the limited time we have for them each day.

As the Speaker and his predecessors have said, the rights of the Opposition to be able to delay by use of procedure, but chiefly by length of debate rather than repeated dilatory tactics, have to be balanced by the fundamental right of a government to be able to propose its business to the House.

• (1230)

If a government, despite its numbers in the House, is not able to introduce a Bill, subject to due notice period and subject to two possible recorded votes, before the clock runs out every day for Routine Proceedings, I submit that all Members will have abdicated their side of the balanced responsibility which is at the heart of the parliamentary system.

I quote the Speaker's own words in the ruling of April 14 on an impasse on the same difficult Bill:

Our procedures are being used for purposes for which they were never originally intended, and the public could be pardoned for believing that our rules have no logical basis at all.

The Chair continues:

Routine proceedings are an essential part of House business and if they are not protected the interests of the House and the public it serves are likely to suffer severely.

Furthermore, the Speaker said:

No procedures should be sanctioned which permit the House to be brought to a total standstill for an indefinite period. Division bells are no substitute for debate.

Finally, the Chair made a request of the House which I think goes to the substance of what we are trying to do here, and it was summarized as follows:

I would hope that the difficulties of the Speaker in this situation will encourage Hon. Members to reconsider the present rules with a view to making changes which would secure the sanctity of Routine Proceedings.

That is precisely what we have tried to do in this proposal. Our view is that for any Member to oppose the motion before us today would be for such a Member to sanction such questionable parliamentary conduct and the Chair has set out the choice just that starkly.

Our proposal will not restrict dilatory motions; quite the opposite. Such motions can still be used as a legitimate procedural tool to delay introduction of a Bill. However, the Bill will be introduced before that day is concluded. The debate may then begin, which is what we are all here to do.

These changes, I submit, are consistent with the spirit of parliamentary reform to make the House a more orderly, workable and effective institution. There are many Members of this House, on all sides, who have dedicated themselves to that purpose. I know the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the House Leaders of the two respective Opposition Parties, as well as Members on this side, have on many occasions cast aside their partisan or political differences in order to work towards improving the rules and procedures of this institution because it is an institution of which we are all proud. It is an institution which brings us all together and really reflects all the dimensions of Canada.

We believe the rules which are proposed in the contents of this resolution maintain a good balance between the Government's ability to get its legislation through the House and the Opposition's ability to oppose it. The motion before us today in its timing and content attempts in a fair manner to pull as many things together as are important at this time and in these circumstances.

My hon. friend, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, has kept pressing for a deadline to make the reforms permanent and today's motion does that. It makes the reform of Parliament permanent, the opposite of which will be the case if such a motion is not disposed of.

The motion implies we will defer until later this year a number of minor improvement changes recommended by sources in the House and sources supporting the House. Many of these proposals are under study by the procedural committee which has been preoccupied with other items and tasks with respect to redistribution and has not been able to devote the kind of attention to these proposals that it will once that business is disposed of. I expect those proposals will be made permanent as well when they come forward.

Other administrative issues are still before the Board of Internal Economy. The House Leaders have had many clerical improvements identified in their talks. We do not see them as difficulties but we did agree to hold off going ahead with them until the procedural committee has worked them all out.

Therefore, adoption of this motion is not the end of reform, but the guarantee of a solid permanent base with more to come. To reject this motion this week or later would be to jettison very many good, hard-earned things. I can strongly recommend this motion to the House. We are all ready to live by its terms as quickly as it calls for.

Notwithstanding the fact that there are some difficulties and differences of opinion, I am pleased to indicate to you, Madam Speaker, and to the House, that since this debate started, there have been discussions among all Parties to see during the course of the debate today whether in fact some of the outstanding issues may be resolved and worked out in such a manner that we could move this motion ahead on a positive and more unanimous basis. There are some outstanding issues which we are still prepared to negotiate. I understand there is the establishment of a bit of a ad hoc committee composed of representatives of all the Parties which will be meeting at one o'clock, and perhaps later on this day, to see whether in fact we can work out some of the difficulties and overcome some of the disagreements which may be inherent in this motion.

We stand willing as always to work in that sort of conciliatory, co-operative fashion. I hope that throughout the course of the day these particular problems might be resolved and that we can move this motion ahead with the unanimity and support which I believe the motion clearly deserves.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, when the Government House Leader began his speech, he said that the principle objective of the motion before us was the enshrinement, the making permanent, of the interim rules under which we are currently operating. If this were the case, we would not be having this debate. Unfortunately, this is not the case. There is a lot more in the motion before us than simply making permanent those portions of our rules which are here on an interim basis.

The Government wants permanent changes in the rules which were not in the interim rules and wants permanent changes which were not in the McGrath Report. It wants permanent changes which were not in the report of the committee on procedure which was tabled in this House only a few weeks ago.

The Government House Leader has described at some length changes in the rules described in his motion arrived at by consensus, by agreement, among the House Leaders of the Parties in this House. It shows that the Opposition Parties have not simply been negative when it comes to further changes in the rules. They have not been obstructive when it comes to further changes in the rules, including changes to which the Government was favourable. However, the current Parliamentary Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure only reported in April, and it was only after that that we learned with certainty exactly what the Government wanted to achieve to suit its purposes on matters such as Routine Proceedings and time allocation and other issues as well.

The Government House Leader finally admitted in the concluding minutes of his speech that the Government is acting in the way it is with respect to Routine Proceedings and time allocation because of its unhappiness over the time taken by the House in the consideration of only one Bill out of many, Bill C-22, the Bill on prescription drugs. The time in question was certainly not excessive in view of the importance of the Bill to millions of Canadians. The time was certainly not excessive in view of the fact that the Bill is now law.

The Government is now in a position to move on to other elements of its legislative program, but it is not doing that. Instead it is taking the time of the House with this motion that flies in the face of our tradition of bringing about changes in our rules, a tradition that this is done by consensus and not by the Government attempting to force rules changes on the House with its majority.

Beginning in 1982 successive committees have had our rules and procedures under active consideration. As a result, both recommendations, as well as constructive non-partisan consultations by the House Leaders of all three Parties, a great deal of progress has been made toward making the House of Commons more modern and more effective as a democratic institution.

When I say "effective" I do not mean merely efficient. We have all come to accept that the House deals with the business that the government places before it. We in opposition may disagree with government measures. We may seek to alter or delay their proposals. But we recognize that the House, in the fullness of time, does deal with these measures, though this does not mean that we must ultimately, as opposition Parties, approve them.

In fact the record of this Parliament clearly demonstrates that we have been willing to deal with government legislation such as it is. We have opposed, generally vigorously, that legislation which we have considered bad. But the legislative record of this Parliament, in terms of its quantity at least, has not been, by comparison, bad.

Although we differ in our interpretation of the benefits to our country of the amount of legislation proposed by the Government, the governing Party, the Conservative Party, has already trumpeted exactly this fact in its own propaganda, its own information that it conveys to its supporters and to the country.

We do not believe that this Government has presented much in the way of good legislation. But it has been able to get a large quantity of its legislation—good, bad or indifferent—through the House. Therefore it can be said with certainty that this has not been an obstructive Parliament.

I referred to the need of the House to be an effective democratic institution because it is not here merely to serve as a mill for government legislation. Parliament is here to study, to present improvements and, at times, to oppose government legislation. But also one of the most important roles of Parliament, a role just as important as legislating, is to hold the Government to account. To accomplish this we have developed in Parliament an adversarial system. The principal responsibility to hold government to account is given to the Official Opposition. Obviously, that is the role of other opposition Parties as well.

Governments are in office because they hold a majority in the House. By virtue of that majority they can, and in the long run do, control most of the legislative business of Parliament. There are rules to assure this outcome. As I have already said, these rules have worked effectively to this end during this Parliament.

We must bear in mind that the rules are already overwhelmingly stacked in the Government's favour. The Government controls the agenda of Parliament. The Government has the power to limit debate. This Government especially does not shrink from doing so.

Also the Government—in the final analysis when it comes to information it has to be said—controls much of the information with which Parliament must attempt to work. However, along the way, in order to fulfil its function of holding the government majority to account, the opposing minority must have ample opportunity to criticize and to alert the public to government measures or actions that it deems to be hostile, contrary to the public interest.

This requires debate. Sometimes it requires delay. The rules of the House have been purposefully designed to this end. They are not devices for playful or blind partisanship. They exist to hold governments to account and to permit the public to have an ongoing say as to how it is governed.

In this Parliament we in the Opposition have used the instruments that the rules give us to enable the public to have time to become aware of and to have its say about government legislation. We have sometimes been more active in this than on other occasions. However, every time we have used the rules it has been for the democratic purposes for which they were designed. We may have, on occasion, vexed the Government and its supporters, but I suggest that has happened only when there have been either serious differences of opinion as to what is the best course for the country, or all too often on those occasions when the Government has breached or crossed the fine line from use to abuse of power.

I do not apologize for using the rules to express legitimate dissent when it comes to government legislation, policy, conduct, or to seek correction, generally of government misbehaviour, or to get time to say what is wrong with government legislation or to give to the public the time it needs to understand the implications of government proposals and to have its say about them. But what we have not done in this Parliament is simply to obstruct.

That is why I do not understand why the Government has chosen this time to act in a unilateral and arbitrary manner in an attempt to curtail even more the already severely limited devices by which the Opposition may act to hold the Government to account, to have some checks and balances in a system already strongly tilted toward the government of the day.

Early in this Parliament a special committee under the able chairmanship of the Hon. James McGrath took a long and, if I may say so, idealistic look at the way Parliament operates. The result was a comprehensive report recommending sweeping changes in our procedures. Some of us were skeptical about the value of every element, every part of the report. I confess that I was among the skeptics. Nevertheless, in what can only be described as a true leap of faith, we undertook to experiment with a new set of Standing Orders based on the report of the committee.

By and large those of us who were skeptics have really had our skepticism alleviated and softened because the rules, with some fine tuning here and there have, generally speaking, worked. We have now reached the stage where it makes sense to conclude the experiment and to give a final seal of approval to a generally sound system. Without question there is room for more fine tuning. But, I ask, is it not time to make these provisional Standing Orders permanent?

Insofar as fine tuning is concerned, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure has taken a good look at the rules. As I have said, it made a useful, in fact an excellent, report in April on issues of some importance. I understand it is to make another report later this month on lesser issues.

I want to say that in this report the members of the committee did not find it necessary to recommend the changes the Government is trying to force through the House, in the motion before us, to Routine Proceedings or Government Notices of Motion. I submit that is the Government's real objective in the motion which we are debating today.

It was with a view to making the experimental rules permanent that the House Leaders of all Parties have been meeting for the last several weeks. We have discussed the rules in much detail and have reached the consensus, as the Government House Leader has reported, on a number of useful matters of a fine-tuning nature.

We agreed on some lesser changes about such things as the method of electing the Speaker, the taking of divisions, certain arrangements concerning Private Members' Business and committees, the system of dealing with the business of supply, the form of petitions and other matters that have come to our attention either through the Standing Committee report or by becoming obvious in the day-to-day operation of the House.

When I left for my constituency late last Friday afternoon I felt reasonably confident that we had almost worked out, by consensus, arrangements satisfactory to all Parties whereby the experimental rules could be made permanent with more fine tuning to be done in the future. It was, therefore, a considerable surprise to me to learn that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had given notice late on Friday of the motion we now have before us. We in the official Opposition cannot support this motion as it now reads. We believe that changes to our rules ought to be made in a spirit of consensus and, therefore, ought not include matters to which one or more of the Parties cannot reconcile themselves.

It may be argued by government speakers that there have been exceptions to this, but I submit that they have been very rare and have dealt with situations which have accumulated over months and years and not because of the Government's pique or irritation about not having its way as quickly as it wanted with one Bill.

We certainly cannot support the Government's unilateral, inexplicable and indefensible encroachment upon one of the principles of parliamentary reform since 1982, that being the fixed parliamentary calendar. The Government has made no case at all for any departure from our practice of adjourning on fixed dates including the adjournment at the end of June until after Labour Day. It was this Government that decided last August to end the parliamentary session and take an extra month off, the month of September. We in the Official Opposition objected to that action at that time. Since then the Government has set the parliamentary agenda and cannot, on the basis of the record of legislation dealt with, make a case of Opposition obstruction.

If the Government has mismanaged—and it has—its own agenda, it should not attempt to blame the rules or the Opposition in an effort to repair self-inflicted damage. We do not see before us any legislation that is so pressing that the rules of the House have to be altered. We certainly oppose this part of the proposal.

We are not talking about a routine step which existed before the rule changes in 1982 whereby at the end of every period of the year, especially before adjournments in the summer and at Christmas, we negotiated on whether or not we were to sit for longer periods. The change the Government wants to make to enable the House, at the Government's will, to sit after the end of June is as much a change in the rules as is any other part of the motion.

If the Government can force through a change in the foundation of the rules with regard to the parliamentary calendar through this motion, what will be next? Will it be Question Period? Will it be having three readings on Bills? Is the Government really signaling to us that it wants to tear down the essential concept of serious and deliberate parliamentary consideration of legislation? Is it really signaling to us that it wants to sweep away the embarrassment it faces daily through that fundamental check and balance in our system, the daily Question Period?

We also oppose the Government's proposal to alter radically the method by which the House deals with its routine business. The Government seeks to justify this attack on one of the limited methods by which the Opposition may call public attention to the Government's legislation which it believes is harmful to the public interest, or to the Government's misbehaviour. It is doing so on the basis of one isolated incident regarding Bill C-22.

I recall that when the governing Party was in Opposition it used the same procedure involving Routine Proceedings when it was unhappy with the Bill of the Government of the day to change the system of freight rates, which we called the Crow Rate. In spite of that the Bill eventually passed, but the Government of the day did not rush into the House and attempt to change the rules on Routine Proceedings out of annoyance with the way the then Opposition, the Conservative Party which is now the Government, used the rules to get more time to consider and make the public understand the implications of the Crow Rate legislation.

The Government has given no explanation of why it has to operate differently all of a sudden. Perhaps the perspective of being temporarily on the Government side has a wonderful effect on judgment, but it certainly has not improved the judgment of the Conservative Government.

As I have said, the incident with regard to Bill C-22 was resolved in the Government's favour and has not been repeated. The usages which the Government seeks to end by modifying Routine Proceedings have been so rare that no one can justly refer to them as abuses. Similarly, I am astonished to see the proposed limitation of the length of the first speech in opposition to the third reading of a Bill. This, too, is a device which, while having been used on occasion, has not been abused. It is a particularly important device for registering differences of opinion on legislation, and, most important, because of the existence of the time allocation rules it cannot in itself derail a government program.

Indeed, this is of such insignificant bother to the Government, or should be, that the Deputy Prime Minister never once raised it in our House Leaders' discussions. We learned of the point for the first time when we read the motion which the Government tabled without giving notice late last Friday afternoon.

As I said earlier, the current rules of the House are stacked in favour of the Government. Even the most determined Opposition cannot, when the day is done, totally stop the Government from obtaining passage of its legislation unless, of course, public opinion is raised against it to such an extent that the Government itself cannot ignore it, as happened when the Government tried to cut the old age pension.

We can and on occasion must make the passage of legislation we deem to be objectionable in the public interest a difficult process, but in doing so we are carrying out a role essential in a democracy. We are ensuring that the views of the public are heard and, hopefully, considered by the Government. Similarly, when we perceive that the Government is acting contrary to the public interest we must have devices by which we can put pressure on the Government, or at least demonstrate to the public the Government's misconduct or lack of concern and consideration for the public interest.

May I call it one o'clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I was just about to ask the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) whether he wished to continue for a few minutes or wished to have the floor again at three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF FUTURE ENERGY DEVELOPMENTS ON ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Brundtland Report on the Environment and Development says that energy is necessary for daily survival. Future development crucially depends upon its long-term availability in increasing quantities from sources which are dependable, safe, and environmentally sound. At present, no single source or mix of sources is at hand to meet this future need.

Choices must be made, but in the certain knowledge that choosing an energy strategy inevitably means choosing an environmental strategy.

Patterns and changes in energy used today are already dictating patterns well into the next century. The key elements of sustainability which must be reconciled are sufficient growth of energy supplies to meet demand needs; energy efficiency and conservation measures, such that waste of primary resources is minimized; public health, recognizing the problems of risks to safety inherent in energy sources; and protection of the biosphere and prevention of more localized forms of pollution.

RIGHT TO LIFE

SUPPORT URGED FOR MOTION TO PROTECT RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, after many weeks of waiting I understand that the Private Member's Motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), will be voted upon this afternoon. This is a truly historical occasion, as Members of the House have not had the opportunity to vote on an item concerning the rights of the unborn child for many years.

Hundreds of thousands of pro-life Canadians will be watching the actions of all Hon. Members this afternoon. Voters have made their views known over the last several months by letters, telephone calls, petitions, and personal visits to Members of Parliament. There used to be a myth that standing up for the rights of the unborn child might be committing political suicide. The vote this afternoon will dispel that myth once and for all. Support for this motion from many areas of the country has been overwhelming.

Passage of the motion will allow the House to continue discussions on the legal rights of the unborn child. I urge all Hon. Members to be in the House this afternoon and to vote in favour of Motion M-37. It is literally time to stand up and be counted.

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, the Government has put down a motion in respect of changing the Standing Orders of the House. If no agreement regarding the motion can be arrived at sometime today, the motion will be passed unilaterally.

I bring to the attention of the House and the public that the last time the Standing Orders were changed unilaterally was in 1969 when the Liberal Government brought in the current time allocation provisions by the use of the old closure motion. I think the time before that when the Standing Orders were changed unilaterally was back to 1913 or something like that.

If this unilateral motion goes ahead, we will be looking at a very serious set-back for both the spirit and substance of parliamentary reform. I have been part and parcel of that reform process since the setting up of the Lefebvre committee in 1982. In the last five years we have seen a great deal of progress in Parliament. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been very good since 1984 in encouraging that process.

I would certainly hope that the Government will think twice—and I know that it is thinking twice—and will be open to suggestions, negotiation, and improvement, so that we will not be forced to spoil the spirit of parliamentary reform which has existed in this place in recent years by having a unilateral change in the Standing Orders imposed upon Parliament.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ITALY—ANNIVERSARY OF REPLACEMENT OF MONARCHY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, today, June 2, is National Day in Italy. This special holiday commemorates the day in 1946 when the Italian people voted in a national referendum to replace the monarchy with a republic.

Since the Second World War, Canada and Italy have grown progressively closer in many respects and today enjoy a truly special relationship. This special relationship is largely the result of the many thousands of Italians who chose to make Canada their home.

Italian Canadians embody all the best that Canada has to offer. While maintaining and promoting their Italian heritage, they are fiercely Canadian and embrace with a vengeance all the country has to offer.

The Italian population in Canada have added greatly to the diversity and development of our country. Their entrepreneurial spirit is much the same as the first pioneers who settled Canada. Their continued drive and determination to succeed has benefited us all.

In April I had the opportunity to participate in bilateral discussions with Canadian and Italian representatives, which culminated in the signing of the Second Cultural Agreement.

I know all Canadians will join with me in celebrating Italy's National Day.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

TRIBUTE TO EIGHT CANADIAN AND QUEBEC AUTHORS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Last week in Toronto, Mr. Speaker, eight Canadian and Quebec authors were honoured by Madam Jeanne Sauvé. The 1987 Governor General Award was presented by Madam Sauvé to Northrop Frye, Régine Robin, Alice Munro, Al Purdy, Sharon Pollock, Cécile Cloutier, Anne Legault and Yvon Rivard.

On behalf of all my colleagues, I extend to them our sincere congratulations. Among these seven award winners, Mrs. Legault and Mrs. Régine Robin are Montrealers, and Mr. Yvon Rivard lives in the City of Outremont. He is well-known in Montreal and Quebec literary circles and was singled out for this award for his third novel, Les silences du corbeau. His readers, both men and women, have come to acknowledge that his vast talents are reflected in his style, the poetry of his language and his skillful use of the French language. Les silences du corbeau attests as well to the depth of the sentiments and ties which seem to bind the author and his main character.

Mr. Rivard and the other award winners do Canadians and Quebecers proud. They epitomize the quality of our culture. Again I congratulate them, especially Mr. Rivard who hails from the magnificent riding of Outremont.

THE ENVIRONMENT

MAJOR CONTRIBUTION OF QUÉBEC EAST

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, to promote the quality of the environment through information, education and research, the Government has designated the first week of June as "Environment Week" throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, let me single out the major contribution of two leading industries located in my riding of Québec East which did not skimp and invested millions of dollars to improve the quality of our environment. I am referring to Reed Company which, since 1981, has spent in excess of $40 million for water and atmospheric treatment by acquiring, among other things, a water purifier designed to clean sewage and eliminate toxic waste.

Thanks to a grant of $800,000 from the Conservative Government, the Québec Urban Community has invested more than $3 million over the past three years to improve air quality and fight pollution.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting to mention the efforts made by my Government to reach a mutually satisfying acid rain agreement with the Americans who, of course, are doing irreparable damage to our agriculture and forests.

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), today is the first time that the Government of this country has tried to change the Standing Orders since 1969 without the co-operation of the two opposition Parties.

In that previous debate one of the more eloquent Conservative speakers said it would be the rape of Parliament if the Government changed the Standing Orders of this place without the consultation and co-operation of the two opposition Parties.

We in both opposition Parties are negotiating, trying to have a package deal with the Government so that the Government's right to proceed is matched by the public's right to be informed on the legislation and to be involved in the discussions and debate of that legislation through the committee process. If we do not get that co-operation from the Government it sends a signal to the whole population of Canada that it is not part of the process and that parliamentary reform is dead.

TERRORISM

INTERNATIONAL MEETING ON MEASURES TO CURTAIL TERRORISM

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday officials from Canada and the seven most industrialized countries, the United States, Britain, Italy, Japan, West Germany, France, as well as officials from Denmark and Belgium, met in Paris to discuss international terrorism. This was the first ever anti-terrorism summit to formalize co-operation between Governments in the fight against individuals who have no regard for human life.

If terrorism is to be eradicated from the face of this planet all nations must ensure that all available information on groups bent on overthrowing or undermining democratic countries or getting attention for some cause, be accessible.

Co-operation in Europe has already produced concrete results. France has managed to curtail Middle East terrorism while Italy has broken up the Red Brigades. Last week the French, acting on Italian intelligence, helped break up a network of the Red Brigades in Paris.

Now for the first time Canada, the United States and Japan will be part of this link to curtail terrorism. This is the only way to assure our citizens that individuals such as Francesco Piperno, a convicted Red Brigade terrorist seeking refugee asylum in Canada, will be immediately returned.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

NEED FOR INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, this week the Federation of Canadian Municipalities is holding its annual convention in Ottawa. In a recent statement the Federation said that "municipal infrastructure in Canada is in crisis" and cited the need for greater intergovernmental co-operation to repair and maintain the roads, sewers and bridges in towns and cities across Canada. However, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has chosen to ignore the Federation's recommendations.

This is a national problem, from coast to coast. For instance, in the community of East Royalty, P.E.I., the sewer system is in a disgraceful condition and threatens to become a serious health hazard. A proposal was made by the community council to repair the sewers by using the UI Job Creation Program. At least 40 jobs would have been created. However, the Department of Employment and Immigration rejected this proposal.

Despite his supposedly tough stand on waste disposal, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) seems unconcerned by the dangerous situation in this community, which, indeed, is in his own riding. The people of East Royalty have been betrayed three times by the Conservative Government.

• (1410)

I urge the Ministers to reconsider their shameful disregard for public health and safety and to help these municipalities immediately.

MINES AND MINING

GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on May 20, 1987, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) released a comprehensive policy designed by the Government of Canada to coordinate all federal measures dealing with metals and minerals.

The aim of this new policy, which provides for a flexible form of Government intervention to support the minerals and metals sector, is to promote the development of this industry as a basis for regional economic development and to assist workers and communities that have been affected by industrial restructuring.

While pursuing these objectives, the Government of Canada recognizes and respects the primacy of the provinces in managing their natural resources. Recognition of the need to work in co-operation with the provincial Governments is a fundamental principle of federal activity in the minerals and metals sector.

Mr. Speaker, that is what this Conservative Government is doing for Canada, for Quebec and for Abitibi and Témiscamingue.

STANDING ORDERS—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of the House of Commons and the institution of Parliament are to serve all Members of Parliament. The rules and regulations of Parliament are designed to serve all Members of all Parties and are not designed to serve only the Government and Progressive Conservative Party members. This is why opposition Members of the House of Commons are outraged today at the fact that the Government has decided to change the rules of Parliament unilaterally to suit its plans.

Parliament must not be made subservient to the Progressive Conservative Government. Parliament must continue to be responsible to the people of Canada. That is the parliamentary tradition we have grown to treasure, and we must defend it today by stopping the Government's unilateral and quite frankly dictatorial approach which is to ram changes to the rules of Parliament through Parliament by using its 210-Member majority.

The Government cannot blame its failures and its inadequacies on the rules of Parliament. The Government has clearly proven to the people of Canada that it cannot govern adequately and that it cannot conduct the business of government within the traditional parliamentary calendar. It therefore seeks to blame parliamentary rules for its abysmal failure.

The Government, with the largest parliamentary majority in Canadian history, cannot conduct the business of the House of Commons by following the time-proven practices of Parliament and therefore has been forced to stoop to the bully-boy tactic of forcing its will through Parliament. This is certainly a very dark day for the parliamentary traditions of Canada.

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

NEED FOR ACTION BY ALL CANADIANS—TRANSBOUNDARY POLLUTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, we are in the midst of Environment Week and it must not be spent merely dusting off our nature books and counting four-leaf clovers. Environment Week should signify the need for action by all Canadians. Preserving our fragile environment must become our national sport.

As Chairman of the federal Special Committee on Acid Rain, I am attending the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Union Conference in Vancouver this weekend. It will afford a valuable opportunity to buttonhole American Congressmen to express Canada's dissatisfaction with transboundary pollution in North America.

While we in Canada are not without fault in polluting our own backyard, the U.S. should be made aware that we are in fact working hard toward acid rain abatement in our own country. It is up to this generation to fix the errors of its forefathers, so ensuing generations may enjoy life unencumbered by the ravages of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide.

In this, the eleventh hour, we are learning that acid rain is threatening human health as it has already claimed many subspecies. Let us not become the lemmings of the 20th century. It is crucial that there be 52 environment weeks every year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL FROM AFGHANISTAN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, are Canadians softening to the sweet talk of Mikhail Gorbachev? Remember the Helsinki Final Act of 1975 in which all adhering states, including Canada and the Soviets, pledged "to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms . . . "? Four years later the Soviet Communists invaded Afghanistan, ruthlessly killed women and men, and as the Canadian Ambassador told the United Nations "used butterfly-shaped bombs to kill children".

• (1415)

No thoughtful Canadian wants war and certainly not a nuclear war. But remember the people of Afghanistan did not want war either and the Hungarian people only wanted freedom when Communist tanks rolled in.

Unilateral disarmament does not work. It will be time enough to stop Cruise testing in Canada and to reduce our Army, Navy and Air Force after the Communists withdraw completely from Afghanistan and get out of Ukraine, Hungary and Poland.

It will be time enough to let down our defences and disarm NATO after Gorbachev denounces the Communist objective to rule the world. Until then let us keep our powder dry.

AIR CANADA

INTEREST RATE CHARGED ON CREDIT CARD TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the Parliament of Canada was effective in pressing the chartered banks into reducing interest rates on credit card transactions. It is now time for the Government of Canada, particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), to look at Crown corporations and their interest charges on credit transactions.

Air Canada, through its En Route credit card, has been charging 19 per cent and more for credit card transactions. First, it does not incur the expenses of financial institutions on credit card transactions, and second, it gets special consideration from the Government of Canada with respect to the use of the En Route card.

It is time for Parliament and the Government of Canada to make Crown corporations practise what the Government of Canada has been preaching. I call upon the Minister of Transport to investigate Air Canada, determine what interest rate it is charging, and put an end to onerous interest rates.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Prime Minister. I carefully read the answers given by the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday on the subject of the procedure to be followed by Parliament once an agreement is concluded between the Prime Minister of Canada and his provincial counterparts.

The Deputy Prime Minister admitted that in 1982, amendments to the Constitution had been proposed by Parliament, but he did not say whether the Government would allow any amendments to the agreement expected to result from today's meeting. I therefore want to ask him very specifically: Will the existing precedents on constitutional matters be followed? Will it be possible to amend the accord or will the Government use its overwhelming majority in the House to block constructive amendments that would reflect the concerns of many Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to discuss details on something that is being negotiated at this very hour. Surely the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would accept that.

My answer is the same today as it was yesterday. We are hopeful an agreement will be concluded this afternoon. If that is the case, I will be prepared to sit down with the Right Hon. Member's seat-mate, his House Leader, and the NDP House Leader, to work out a satisfactory arrangement so this matter can be debated by Parliament in such a manner that all Members would have an opportunity to deal with this very important issue.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is confusing what is happening behind closed doors between the Prime Minister and the Premiers. We are not asking about how it is going or what the substance is. We are asking him about the procedure to be followed if an agreement is reached. I want to refer to what the Prime Minister told the House of Commons on May 4 as reported at page 5689 of Hansard. When asked about parliamentary amendments to the Meech Lake Accord the Prime Minister said:

> —by and large, this is what we are going to bring forward into the House of Commons and this is what will be ratified by provincial Legislatures.

Which is the correct position? Does the Government have an open mind about amendments, as the Deputy Prime Minister seems to have suggested yesterday? Or does the Government have a closed mind and will use its huge majority to block any amendments to the Accord which may be presented in the House of Commons?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if there is any attempt to confuse the issue, it is coming from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. That does not surprise me, given the signals that are coming from that Party. We are not sure where they really stand on the issue of constitutional reform or on this particular Accord.

I am glad that he quoted the Prime Minister. As I said yesterday, and as the Prime Minister has indicated from day one, this is a very important issue. We are open to full parliamentary debate on the issue. I am prepared to sit down with the House Leaders to work out a satisfactory resolution to that. I am sure it will be done in the interests of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and of all other Hon. Members of the House of Commons.

NATURE OF DEBATE IN PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are asking the Deputy Prime Minister a very clear question not only in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister of this country but as Government House Leader.

We are not talking about the substance, we are simply asking the Deputy Prime Minister about the procedure. Constitutionally, this Parliament has the right to amend any accord. Politically, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister, with their massive majority in the House of Commons, have the opportunity to block any reasonable amendment to the Meech Lake Accord.

Will we have a meaningful debate on the Accord, if it is successful, or is this going to be a charade? He can answer that question, if he has the authority to do so.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that clear question has had a clear answer. I have responded to it before.

This issue was reported to the House on May 1. On May 11 we had a debate. We were prepared to extend the hours of debate and engage in a lengthy debate on the Monday when this matter was introduced. We were prepared to extend it for two or three days. Hon. Members opposite were really not interested and really wanted to limit it to one speaker per Party.

We invited them to participate because we wanted their views and their comments to be taken into consideration prior to the final drafting. We asked for their advice at that time, and I am sure we will do so again. The fact is that the process has not been clearly established, but I have expressed a clear willingness to work with my counterparts to establish a satisfactory process that would be in the interests of all Hon. Members of the House.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are asking about parliamentary debate, but we are also asking about committee hearings which give an opportunity to Canadian people to speak through the committees of Parliament.

Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister refused to indicate whether or not there would be committee hearings. On May 26 in the Senate, Senator MacEachen asked the Government House Leader:

> Can I conclude from what the Leader of the Government has said that, in any event, there will be committee study, whether undertaken separately in each House or jointly?

The reply by the Senate Government Leader was:

> Yes, honourable senators.

Was the Government Leader in the Senate speaking for the Government when he said there would be committee hearings? Will there be committee hearings?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find it strange that everyone is negotiating on behalf of the House Leader of the Liberal Party while he sits idly in his seat. I am not sure whether his job is under attack or whether he feels threatened, but one must wonder what is going on over there.

As I said before, I am sure the distinguished House Leader of the Liberal Party will be prepared to sit down with me, as will the Hon. House Leader of the New Democratic Party, to work out a satisfactory resolution. I certainly do not want to close off any option at this particular time.

POSSIBLE PASSAGE OF RESOLUTION BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope one option will be closed off. It is the option in the statement made by the Government Leader in the other place who said, on the same day:

> Let me state it as my personal opinion that I hope and believe that it will be possible for all legislatures to have passed these resolutions in their respective legislatures before the summer recess.

Does the Government seriously intend that this important change in Canada's Constitution be settled and concluded before the summer recess? Surely not.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to make representations to his House Leader, as part and parcel of the negotiations that will take place, I suggest that he do it either in his caucus or through some other format rather than on the floor of the House of Commons.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

UPGRADING OF INFRASTRUCTURES—GOVERNMENT'S REJECTION OF REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Can the Minister explain why his Government rejected so quickly the proposal by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities for upgrading public works such as sewer and water facilities in our cities—to be funded in its proposal by the three levels of government—especially in cities such as Halifax and Dartmouth in the Minister's own Atlantic region where 80 per cent of wastes are simply dumped into the surrounding harbour?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the previous Government abolished the program which led to infrastructure spending in provincial jurisdiction. We are not resuscitating that program. I think the Hon. Member knows that the debt equity ratio of municipalities is about one-third of the federal Government's debt compared to its revenues. We are just not in a position to move further unless there is a particular federal purpose which makes sense.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment suggested to the municipalities that they finance this by increasing their water bills. The President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities pointed out this would cost $1,000 annually in water rates. In its submission to the Government, the FCM based its proposal on a study done by Informetrica, that any federal contribution would be recovered through increased taxation, lower unemployment insurance and social assistance costs on the 280,000 person-years of work which would be created. Why does the Government not pay some attention to that proposal by Informetrica?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that the municipalities say they do not have the money to invest in water works at a time when they are charging their consumers one-half of what the Americans charge their consumers for water, and at a time when the Europeans are charging their consumers four times what Canadian municipalities are charging consumers for water. If the municipalities need revenues to invest in municipal works within their jurisdiction, not within federal jurisdiction, they might well be advised to seek revenue from that source.

COSTS OF UPGRADING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would advise me how to answer a letter I received from the Mayor of Moncton, New Brunswick, who, to my knowledge, is not a New Democrat. He states, and I quote:

> Municipal infrastructure is the foundation upon which all economic activity is built. If our transportation, water and sewer systems fail, so also our economy will fail.

He points out that the proposal would only cost the federal Government $1 billion a year and would bring tremendous benefits by way of employment and improving the environment.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the amount the Federation of Canadian Municipalities attaches to the total cost of waterworks within provincial jurisdiction is $12 billion, not $1 billion. That is $12 billion which the federal Government does not have, nor do we have the jurisdiction. It is provincial jurisdiction, not federal jurisdiction. If the provinces want us to pay for works within their jurisdiction, are they going to offer to pay for works within our jurisdiction, for example, airports, national defence and other obligations we must meet with a deficit of about $30 billion left over from the previous Government?

INCLUSION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In 1982 we recognized certain aboriginal rights in Section 25 and Section 35 of the Constitution and provided for three federal-provincial conferences to consider the entrenchment of Indian self-government. Would the Deputy Prime Minister assure us that nothing agreed upon today would derogate from those aboriginal rights in the Constitution and that aboriginal rights will be on the list of those matters to be considered in the second round? Would he assure the House of that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would share the view that this Government has worked very hard and very vigorously in trying to resolve that particular issue. With one member of the Canadian family left out of the constitutional framework, it has been very difficult to deal with that issue. Naturally, we hope that the success of today will pave the way for success in considering the other very important matter which the Hon. Member has raised. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are as determined to address that issue today as we have been over the last two years.

CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, that is hopeful. We will be giving close attention to whatever happens today.

The Northwest Territories and Yukon have asked that the unanimity rule for amendments not apply to the creation of new provinces. Surely the federal Government and the provinces can accept that request. Will the Minister confirm that? It is a simple enough matter.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that Yukon and the Northwest Territories have chosen to take legal action in this regard. I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment as a result of the action which is being taken.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON AMHERSTBURG

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The largest employer in Amherstburg, a small town in my constituency, General Chemical Company of Canada has released a position paper on free trade in which it states: "—the tariffs on (its products) are vital to its survival". It warns that over 1,600 jobs will be lost by its "probable" need to close under free trade. This would be a human tragedy for a small town of 8,500 people. Is the Minister prepared to meet with company and town representatives and to listen to their very strong representations about how free trade would hurt the town of Amherstburg?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's suggestion into account. But I must point out that the whole history of Canada has shown that as tariff barriers come down jobs grow and Canadian companies thrive. It is only when the barriers are erected that Canadian companies have trouble.

I think that the Hon. Member's constituents should be reassured by the performance of Canadians generally and Canadian companies which are world-class competitors among the world's largest trading nations.

EMPLOYMENT

COMMUNITY FUTURES PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the details of this case are documented in black and white in a company document which makes it clear that its survival as a company and the 1,600 jobs involved are very much at stake.

I ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to immediately start negotiations, discussions, with town and company officials to make Amherstburg eligible for the Community Futures Program of his Ministry so that this immense human problem can be avoided.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since the New Democratic Party has not really looked upon the Jobs Strategy as a valid one, I am surprised that the Hon. Member is suggesting this way of including that industry in the program. However, our criteria are fair and equitable, and since we look at all the applications we receive across the country, if the community in question meets those criteria, its application will be taken into consideration.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—PROCESS OF RATIFICATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Again today the Deputy Prime Minister has refused to answer a very basic question with regard to the constitutional Accord. When the Leader of the Opposition asked him whether the House will have the fundamental right to amend the legal text the Minister's answer was, and I repeat: "We are ready to negotiate this with House Leaders of Parties".

The following question begs to be asked. Will the Government now say clearly that Parliament will enjoy its traditional right, or will it admit that what it wants to do is use its huge majority to steamroll the text of the Accord through the House as a fait accompli? What is it that the Government wants to do?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply whistling in the dark. The answer to his question is the same as it was earlier today and the same as it was yesterday.

AMENDING CONSTITUTIONAL TEXT—CITIZENS' RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I'll say where we stand, we of the Opposition. We are not about to negotiate the rights of citizens to come and be heard before a committee. That is an inalienable right. We are not about to negotiate the right of Canadians to amend the text that is tabled in the House through their Members. That is a fundamental right.

Where does the Government stand on the issue? Will the rights of Canadians be protected? Or does the Government want to use steamroller tactics and get this agreement through the House as is, at any cost? It has a choice, and now I want to know what that choice is.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member may not have confidence in the ability of his House Leader to negotiate something that is fair, reasonable, and protective of the rights of members of the Liberal Party, I can assure him that I have confidence in his ability to do that. Why does the Hon. Member not allow his House Leader to take up that challenge? I am sure he will be pleasantly surprised when he sees the final result.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II—COMPENSATION ISSUE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. The Minister is responsible for the redress Japanese-Canadians were promised by the Prime Minister in June of 1984. However, as offered in a number of meetings, it is no more than a community fund of $12 million, ignoring non-monetary items. Does the Minister believe that compensation equal to 48 cents per Canadian citizen can possibly represent a fair compensation to Japanese-Canadians whose lives were disrupted and who lost all their property during and after the Second World War?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Government's position on this matter was, of course, outlined in a letter to the National Association of Japanese Canadians. The Hon. Member has a copy of that letter.

I have since met with the association. We have agreed that we will continue to meet over the next couple of weeks. At that time we will discuss all the issues to see if there is any common ground.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister considered the precedent of the federal Government's UFFI compensation program under which 53,091 individuals received some $225 million to rectify a mistake the Government made in its insulation program before ruling out individual compensation as part of the Japanese-Canadian redress package?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, throughout the 20 to 25 meetings I have held over the last months on this issue there have been a number of historical analogies raised with respect to injustices experienced by other Canadians at other times. The Hon. Member raises for the first time an analogy with respect to urea formaldehyde foam insulation. I suppose, off the top of my head, I would have to say that it is probably inappropriate. If he would like to write me a letter on the matter, I am willing to give it further consideration.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF INJUSTICES—AMENDMENT OF WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one to the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. Will the Minister advise the House and the Canadian people if, notwithstanding the lack of a settlement with respect to the question of compensation to Japanese Canadians, he and the Government will proceed with an apology to Japanese Canadians and with changes to the War Measures Act?

• (1440)

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that is a good question and it was raised the other day in my meeting with the National Association. We have agreed upon non-monetary items, the most important two of which are the acknowledgment of the injustice and the changing of the War Measures Act in order that the injustices will not recur. I was willing to proceed with those. We are proceeding with regard to the War Measures Act because there are other Ministries concerned with changes to the War Measures Act.

With regard to the acknowledgment of the injustices, or the apology as the Hon. Member refers to it, I have indicated that I was willing to proceed with that but I have been asked by the National Association of Japanese Canadians not to proceed with the apology or acknowledgment.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

AWARDING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and pertains to the Prime Minister's buddy and campaign co-worker, Roger Nantel, who has been receiving approximately $4,250 a day for each of the 1,000 days since the last election or, if you prefer, $4.25 million in advertising contracts without public tender.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree with me that this is a very expensive price to pay for putting the friends of the Prime Minister at the public trough, even if they were good campaign workers? Is this another case of a friend in greed being a friend indeed?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to clarify the situation. Roger Nantel and Nantel Communications are not registered with our Department of Supply and Services, therefore, they have never been awarded advertising contracts. We have awarded contracts to Media Canada Inc., which is a firm devoted to placing ads in various media. Mr. Speaker, could anybody blame the Government for following the normal process and obtaining the best value for its dollars? That is what we got from Media Canada Inc.

AWARDING OF ADVERTISING CONTRACTS—HOLDING OF PUBLIC HEARINGS BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a whole file of contracts awarded to Mr. Nantel and his companies. It is clear that being a friend of the Prime Minister can be a rewarding experience. Is the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to authorize immediately the holding of public hearings by a Parliamentary committee to bring about a more equitable distribution of advertising contracts instead of having them awarded to "pals" of the party in power?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have just explained that Media Canada Inc. is not an advertising agency but a firm devoted to placing ads in various media. The Liberal Government had such arrangements itself. Media Canada Inc. is a decentralized organization, and we get the job done at a lower cost than with the agency chosen by the previous administration. Can anybody blame us for carrying out a decentralization and getting the best value for our money?

VIOLENCE IN SRI LANKA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Approximately 2,000 Canadians of Sri Lankan origin demonstrated outside this building earlier today. Will the Minister tell us what information he has obtained from Colombo and whether Canada will be prepared to perform a mediation role if invited to do so?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not been invited to perform a mediation role. It would be inappropriate for me to comment on an invitation we have not received. We are deeply troubled by the continuing violence in Sri Lanka, and in particular by the killing of some 29 Buddhist priests. We hope both parties will agree to return to negotiations that have been disrupted and which were based on proposals made on December 19.

I expect that the Hon. Member, who has taken an interest in these questions for a long time, had an opportunity to meet with interested Canadians and others who were demonstrating today. I would welcome hearing from him directly any recommendations he may want to bring to my attention.

SERVICE TO BUSINESS COMMUNITY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I am sure he is aware that in places like Winnipeg, Manitoba; London, Ontario; and Hamilton, Ontario the Post Office is cutting back on service to the business community. Instead of delivering mail, as it has up until now, twice a day in the downtown business districts, delivery has been reduced to once a day.

Is the Minister prepared to intervene to restore this service, or is this just a natural consequence of his orders to the Post Office to eliminate its deficit and not be involved in any revenue-generating activities?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Canada Post Corporation was formed as a Crown corporation in 1981 with the agreement of all Parties in the House it was for the purpose of eliminating political interference so that we would not have situations of Ministers interfering to do this or that according to the political exigencies of the day. I think that is a good policy and it is a policy that I am following.

My recollection of the conclusions of the Marchment Committee Report is that the most important thing that people wanted was assurance that the mail would be delivered on time. The Post Office is working toward that goal and is making some progress. As I have pointed out in the House before, independent auditors will report to this House and the country once every three months on how well the Post Office is succeeding.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister recognizes the difference between political interference and his responsibility to provide policy direction for the Post Office.

BUSINESS COMMUNITY PETITIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that not only do people want their mail delivered on time, they want good service. We have begun to receive petitions which indicate quite clearly that the business community is fed up. People living in Winnipeg and Hamilton want service. They are fed up with the cost of postage going up at the same time as mail service is declining.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, the information I have is that postal service is in fact getting better. We will have independent third-party auditors. I do not know what system the Hon. Member would prefer to that. Independent third-party auditors will report to the House on a quarterly basis on the level of service. Wild accusations about what is happening serve no useful purpose, as I believe the Hon. Member knows.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATION OF HIGHWAYS AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCE OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister is aware of the interest in Nova Scotia in the new highways agreement between the Government of Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia. Can the Minister give us a status report on the negotiations with the Province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been such negotiations. I believe I will be in a position to announce something in that direction before too many suns go down. I know of the Hon. Member's intense interest in this subject and in particular in the roads in his own area. He has made my life, in that connection, a nightmare during the last several months.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

GOVERNMENT'S ALLEGED FEAR OF BACKLASH IN WEST—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for official languages. I wonder if . . . Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister could reply. The tabling of amendments to the Official Languages Act has been delayed once more. We have been waiting for them for two and a half years. According to Senator Lowell Murray, the introduction of the Bill has been deferred until next fall. Mr. Murray has told us that this delay is the result of the fear the Government has of a backlash from Western Canada following the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord.

Could the Minister or Ministers involved indicate to us why the Government fears such an adverse reaction from Western Canada about our official languages?

[English]

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the process of consultation and revision with regard to the Official Languages Act continues. I met last Sunday with Alliance Québec. I am meeting in the coming week in Thunder Bay with the Fédération francophone du Québec. That process will continue. The Government is very interested in and concerned about bringing the Bill in. As I said, the process continues.

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting for three years already. I believe that the Bill is ready to be introduced. I am concerned about the backlash from Western Canada, because newspapers have been referring to the linguistic plan of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources as a "program for apartheid". What is worse, the Hon. Member for Calgary has been referring to it as "outright discrimination". The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources himself has been described as the "Canadian Peter Botha", emphasizing "racist programs" and so on. I ask the Government, which is doing nothing to deny these allegations, to stand up and say where it stands, to defend the Official Languages Act and to introduce this Bill in the House for us to study. Who is right, the Hon. Member for Calgary or the Government, which is doing nothing?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there is no backlash which I have experienced at all. I think the Hon. Member should be a little careful before he raises those kinds of questions in the House.

I might say, as well, that I spoke with Alliance Quebec and all its representatives last weekend. The Anglophones in Quebec are very supportive of the Bill. This is also true with the Francophone communities outside Quebec.

I can tell the Hon. Member and all Members who have an interest in this matter that we will proceed with the appropriate consultation and do it right. I agree with him that we have been waiting for three years. We have been waiting longer than that. It was this Government which at least had the gumption to take on the task.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

MAINTENANCE OF SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Last week the Minister announced that there would be $270,000 spent to extend the breakwater at Torbay, Newfoundland. There is no doubt that the work was needed, because small craft harbours are a disgrace all across Canada, and particularly in Newfoundland.

Since the Minister seems to be having more success in getting money for small craft harbours than the Minister of Fisheries, will he add his support to getting the funding proposal for small craft harbours through Cabinet where it has been stalled for at least three months?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this will be bad news for the hon. gentleman, but the small craft harbours proposal has been dealt with in a very positive manner. At the appropriate time and place it will be announced. It will be announced in more than one place. It will be announced in place upon place, harbour upon harbour. Across this great Dominion there will be announcements about the small craft harbours program.

As a matter of fact, tomorrow I intend to announce that $900,000 will be spent to repair the main breakwater at St. Bride's, Newfoundland, in the district of St. John's West, which was badly damaged by storms during the past winter. It is just the first of many such announcements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we appreciate those announcements. I hope the Government does not have to spend more money on public relations than it is to spend on the harbours themselves.

AMOUNT OF FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, departmental officials have said that unless the funding is upgraded from $48.5 million, which it is now, to $120 million per year, 150 small craft harbours will be closed across Canada in the next five years, 47 of them in Newfoundland alone.

Can the Minister assure the House and communities across Canada that there will be adequate funding so that all small craft harbours will be maintained and the communities will not lose their harbour facilities?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to thank and to congratulate my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who is not here today and who is too shy and unassuming to take any credit for the tremendous work he has done on behalf of fishermen, ports, harbours, and facilities in the country.

I can promise the hon. gentleman that, without any assistance from him whatsoever, there will be a fine program of improving harbours and fishery facilities across the country.

The hon. gentleman is no better informed than his candidate in St. John's East who appeared before a Senate committee the other day and did not know that $40 million was to be spent on drug research at Memorial University in Newfoundland when our new legislation passes the House. He is just as well informed as his candidate who is going down to ignominious defeat in that district.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CLOSURE OF A GM CENTRE IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On March 31, 1987, the Canadian Government and the Quebec Government made a $220 million loan, interest-free over thirty years, to General Motors Corporation. That $600 million gift over 30 years was made under the proviso there would be no loss of jobs at GM in Quebec. This morning, it was announced that GM Corporation will close its truck centre in Montreal, a loss of 131 jobs in Montreal. What is the Government prepared to do to prevent the shutdown of that GM truck centre in Montreal and to protect the 131 jobs that have been there for 25 years as well as the families of the employees involved?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is fully aware no doubt that some industries, especially the automotive industry, are facing difficulties of international competition, for which reason rationalization decisions must be taken such as in the case unfortunately of GM in Sainte-Thérèse. I have assured the Corporation and I would like to assure the Hon. Member of our concern in this matter and our intention to look carefully at how the Government can help again those workers. Again I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker, that since September 1984 this Government created numerous opportunities, and I think our overall assistance to General Motors in Sainte-Thérèse points to this Government's concern not only for maintaining jobs but also for creating new opportunities, not only in Quebec but across Canada.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT OF REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, certainly with those $220 million, interest-free loans over 30 years the small business sector would have created more jobs than that.

Here is my question, and I would like to know if the Minister can give a yes or no answer. Is the shutdown of that truck centre caused by the opening of a Volvo-GM Heavy Truck Company plant in the United States? Are our Canadian jobs going down to the United States? Is that this Government's free trade policy?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I think indeed that our effort in the case of GM's Sainte-Thérèse plant, a $110 million assistance, not only as I said maintained existing jobs but also helped increase certain jobs in Quebec, in Ontario and in each of the regions especially in the regions involved, at GM in Sainte-Thérèse. There again one of the regions where Government help was needed to build the industrial base that is essential to their economic welfare.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—UNION WORKERS FIRED UPON BY MILITARY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Thursday, according to telephone reports, in El Salvador the United Workers of El Salvador were demonstrating peacefully for the release of hundreds of political prisoners illegally held in Mariona Prison, when the military opened fire on them, seriously wounding Julio Portillo, the Secretary-General of the union, in the back.

I would ask the Minister whether he will request the Duarte Government to account for this violence and for the growing attacks during the last few months by the Duarte Government against trade unionists.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member has brought to my attention on the floor of the House information I did not previously have. I will look into the matter and will report back to him.

I can report to him, with regard to the question he raised the other day, that my officials here had no information in Ottawa in respect of Antonio Hernandez. We have requested our Embassy in San José to make inquiries. I will advise the Hon. Member of the results of those inquiries as soon as I receive them.

Mr. Heap: I thank the Minister for the information on the previous request. The request I have just given was sent yesterday to the Minister's office, but perhaps it has not arrived yet.

An Hon. Member: Did you send it through the Post Office?

Mr. Heap: No, it was sent from my office to the Minister's office, not by way of Alberta or any of the loons out there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: That is good for the NDP!

Mr. Andre: Ray Martin says thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

An Hon. Member: He was referring to Tory MPs.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, my reference was only to members of Alberta who are present in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Too late.

Mr. Heap: I would like to ask the Minister further—

An Hon. Member: Keep it up; you are doing well.

Ms. Copps: What about the NDP MLAs in Alberta?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could get straight to the question.

BOMBING OF OSCAR ROMERO COMMITTEE OFFICE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister inquire about the bombing on the same day last Thursday of the office of the Oscar Romero Committee of Mothers for the Detained and Disappeared with the wounding of two mothers, the destruction of all their files, and the threat made the next day by the Minister of National Defence to break up their weekly peaceful marches asking for news of their husbands, brothers and sons who have disappeared?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will make that inquiry and I would hope that the Hon. Member will demonstrate in this House some of the moderation that his Party sometimes proposes to others of us.

I should say to him, just as I will pursue those inquiries so will I ensure that his reference to myself and the other residents of Alberta are not lost upon the electorate and the public of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL PARKS

EXPANSION OF PARKS SYSTEM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. We are disappointed that the release today of the report by the Task Force on Park Establishment was not accompanied by a statement in the House by the Minister, considering that the establishment of future national parks is a matter of great importance because of the potential that if offers to future generations of Canadians, especially as this is Environment Week.

Briefly, since the Minister received this report in November last year, does he now have a long-term plan for expanding the national parks system for the benefit and the enjoyment of future generations of Canadians?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it is something akin to a disgrace if not a scandal that over the years when the Liberal Party was in power this great country of ours, which borders on three oceans, did not have a single marine park. For the first time in our history, thanks to the present Government, we have a national marine park policy, which I released last summer.

Concerning terrestrial parks, we are working very hard, for example, with the Government of B.C. on the establishment of a national park on the Queen Charlotte Islands at South Moresby. We are accelerating negotiations with Saskatchewan for a Grasslands national park, and our other priorities include the establishment of a national park in the Bruce Peninsula in Ontario. Those are among our priorities in the context of our total commitment to complete as best we can, within our own mandate, the entire national parks system, which is only half completed.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is rewriting history on marine parks because, if he knew his facts properly, he would know that the foundations for a national marine park system were laid by the previous Liberal Government.

FUNDS FOR ESTABLISHING NEW PARKS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The question I would like to pursue, Mr. Speaker, is one that relates to a recommendation in this report, namely, that Canadians be asked to reach deep into their pockets, in addition to paying taxes, and make donations to the Government of Canada to acquire future parks. Considering the fact his colleagues are willing to dole out $5 billion for nuclear submarines, why can the Government of Canada not fund the future network of parks by drawing that money from present revenues, namely, general revenue, that the Government of Canada receives from the average taxpayer?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this Government, for example, established with the Government of the Northwest Territories the framework for a national park at Ellesmere Island. That park was funded, and will be funded, entirely from the general revenues of the Crown. We intend to do the same thing with the Bruce, with Grasslands and with the other priorities that I have identified.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

ALLEGED USE OF DENIGRATORY WORD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising from Question Period. You no doubt heard the comments of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) which are a denigration of the postal workers in Alberta. Certainly as Members of Parliament on this side of the House we do not dump on people who are delivering the mail by calling them goons. In fact we believe the Member should withdraw, should apologize to this House and should also apologize to the postal workers in Alberta, and to all Albertans.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, considering the hearing difficulties of the Hon. Member who has just spoken, I am glad to have a chance to clear up what was said.

Having received an interruption from one of the Hon. Members from Alberta distracting the question away from El Salvador to Nicaragua, I said that I had not sent the information by any "loons"—not goons, "loons"—from Alberta and then explained that I was referring to those Albertans who are in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: There was no reference to postal workers, and I wish the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) would wash her ears.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the "blues" will show whether the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) referred to Albertans as loons or goons. In any event, regardless of what phrase was used by the Hon. Member, it was used in an extremely derogatory fashion. One would expect, whether Albertans were called loons or goons, that an apology should be forthcoming.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament for Alberta, I would say that we have had some strange defenders before—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —but I am prepared to let the record stand, because we have an indication of the view of the people of Alberta by a spokesman of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, sitting quite close to the Member from the New Democratic Party I could hear exactly what he said. He called the people of Alberta "loons". I have a point of privilege here. It is not appropriate for a Member of the NDP to describe the people of Alberta in that way.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as someone who was born—

Mr. Crosbie: Thank God for that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: If we all try very hard we may be able to improve this exchange. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: I hope there was no question about that fact, Mr. Speaker.

As an Albertan by birth, I want to make it perfectly clear that in spite of some of the fun that some Members have had in terms of whether certain unparliamentary words were used to refer to a single Member in the House who was interjecting and interrupting during Question Period—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Riis: —I want to make it perfectly clear that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) was referring to a single Member of Parliament—

Mr. McDermid: Sneaky.

Mr. Riis: —who was not behaving in a particularly parliamentary fashion by doing what everybody in the Conservative Party is now doing, that is, yelling and screaming, to interrupt the person speaking at the moment.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will admit that I did not realize what would flow from this. Certainly I did not think that any question would be raised as to whether the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) was born or brought by another kind of bird than the one I mentioned.

Therefore, I request the permission of yourself and the House to withdraw entirely the reference to loons from anywhere whatever.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members. I am sure no offence was meant against any particular species of bird.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO ANSWER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like to correct the record for yesterday. As reported in Hansard at page 6592, I answered a question. It is not the fault of the Hansard reporter, but it is an important answer so I just want to correct it. The sentence reads:

> The power of nations, their circumference, nothing matters to us—we will see that the law is administered to them—

There should be a full stop after the word "them". Then it should read: "In the disputed area we have to abide by international custom, by international law". The answer does not make sense as it now stands. Since I always make sense, I want to have the record attest to the fact that what I said was sensible.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I seek some direction from the Chair. The Hon. Member would have had an opportunity yesterday, upon receipt of his "blues", to send the "blues" back to the Hansard people to correct the record. I would suggest that it is inappropriate for him to raise the matter today in order to try to clarify the record. To allow that to happen would set a dangerous precedent for lazy Members who do not read their "blues" and do not send their "blues" back for corrections. I would ask the Hon. Member from Newfoundland to start reading his "blues" and acting a little more responsibly.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, may I make a comment on this point of order? The House would want to seek your guidance on the approach taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). I understood him to say that he wished to rise to correct the record of Hansard because the answer he gave did not make any sense. I would like to ask you if it is appropriate to correct answers in Hansard if, as an afterthought, the Hon. Member who used the words decides that the words in question do not make any sense. This may be very useful for the Minister of Transport in particular, but I wonder if this is an appropriate reason to correct Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose the only helpful thing the Chair can say is that it shows some good sense to want to correct the record rather than to leave it as it is.

With respect to the practice to which the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) referred, it has not been unusual in the past for an Hon. Member to rise the next day to make the correction, but the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, of course, is completely right. All Hon. Members, if they have the opportunity and if they are able to check the "blues", would be able to make those corrections before the next day and, as a consequence, not take the time of the House. I thank Hon. Members for interventions.

(i) the motion must relate to the business then being considered provided that proceedings in any Committee of the Whole may be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of proposing a motion under the provisions of this Standing Order;

(ii) the motion must be proposed in the hour preceding the time at which the business under consideration should be interrupted by a lunch or dinner hour, Private Members' Hour or the ordinary hour of daily adjournment;

(iii) the motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment."

That Standing Order 11 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"11. Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when the House rose at one o'clock, the current rules of the House are stacked in favour of the Government. Even the most determined Opposition cannot, when day is done, totally stop the Government from obtaining passage of its legislation unless of course public opinion is raised against it to such an extent that the Government itself cannot ignore it. I was using as an example of that the way public opinion, together with the efforts of the opposition Parties, caused the Government to back down from its totally wrong attempt to cut the old age pension.

We can and on occasion must make the passage of legislation that we deem objectionable a difficult process. However, in doing so, we carry out a role essential in a democracy and we are also making sure that the views of the public are heard and hopefully are considered by the Government of the day. Similarly, when we perceive that the Government is acting contrary to the public interest, we must have devices by which we can put pressure on the Government or at least demonstrate to the public the Government's misconduct.

Never in this Parliament has this Opposition abused the extremely limited rules available to it for these purposes. Indeed, in agreeing to the provisional rules, we even gave up the device that, in the minds of many, had been abused by the Opposition before the last election, and I am talking about the tactic of bell ringing.

I also want to reiterate how important it is for all Members of the House that the rules of the House continue to say without change or derogation that this House operates on a fixed calendar. This was one of the great, important and fundamental reforms that came into effect in 1982, and I want to say again, contrary to what is one of the purposes of the motion before us, that fundamental aspect of our rules should not be swept aside just because a government has not been able to manage properly or effectively its legislative program and is therefore not able to get completed as much of that program as it would like within a particular legislative period. Those portions of the rules stipulating that we sit according to a fixed calendar are as much a part of our rules and Standing Orders as the provisions for a daily Question Period, as the provisions for three readings of Bills, and as the provisions for taking votes in connection with the making of decisions on Bills.

I submit that in the motion before us, the Government is making an unseemly, unjustified and unreasonable power grab which is not, in the long run, in the interests of either side of the House or, more importantly, in the interests of our country. We in the Official Opposition oppose this power grab and will do so with all our vigour.

The Government must realize that in spite of its current parliamentary majority, this is not a one-Party state. The parliamentary majority of the Government has not made this country into a one-Party state. The House has not become an appendage of the Government. It does not belong to the Government. The Government's majority has not turned this House into nothing more than an instrument of the Government's will. The House of Commons belongs to all the Members elected to it and to all the Parties represented in it. Therefore, it belongs ultimately not to the Government but to the Canadian people.

What the Government is trying to do with this motion is completely unacceptable to the Official Opposition, and it breaks the long tradition of changing the rules and procedures of this House on the basis of consensus. In the meantime, we do believe it would be wrong at this time to abandon the current experiment in parliamentary reform altogether. Regrettably, the Government's ill-advised initiative makes fine tuning of the interim rules difficult at this point in time, but with a view toward salvaging at least the progress made so far, I conclude by moving, seconded by the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the first semi-colon and by substituting the following: "and

That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print a revised edition of the Standing Orders of the House, renumbering as may be deemed necessary and making such technical and consequential changes as may be required."

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With permission from Hon. Members, the Chair would like to take under advisement the amendment that has just been tabled by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and in the meantime, to pursue the debate by recognizing the Hon. Member from the third party. I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, this is a very dark day for parliamentary democracy. It is a very bleak day for Canada's Parliament. We are forced to debate a motion that the Government introduced in a roundabout way to change the rules of the House of Commons. It is a unilateral, dictatorial, we know best, big brother approach to Parliament. It says the Progressive Conservative Party forming the Government of Canada knows what is best for the country. It knows how a Government of Canada ought to proceed with changing the rules of the House of Commons.

It is very important to recognize, as you do from your chair, that you are a servant of this House, Madam Speaker. You are as much a servant of opposition Members as you are a servant of government Members. You serve all Members of the House on an equal, fair and just basis. So, too, do the rules and regulations and traditions and procedures of the House of Commons serve all Members. They are not in place to provide service to the Government only, to enable it only to facilitate its business.

Parliament recognizes the role of the Official Opposition and other opposition Parties in the development of the business of the House of Commons. The tradition in Canada has always been that whenever the rules and regulations of the House of Commons are changed, it is only after considerable negotiation and discussion among all of the players. The government Party and the opposition Parties get together and spend weeks or months until they come to an agreement on changes which benefit this House. Those changes are then introduced as changes to the Standing Orders.

Today such is not the case. Today we see a Government which has decided what is best in the way of rules and regulations for the House of Commons and then acted unilaterally. It has done an end run around the negotiating process and imposed a set of regulations on the House of Commons.

I want to say how shocked I was, after spending many, many weeks with my colleagues on both sides of the House trying to negotiate and come to an understanding, to find when I opened up the Order Paper for Monday that the Government decided to introduce what it thought were appropriate changes to the Standing Orders. No agreement, no understanding, no consensus, no coming together. I very much regret that the Government decided to move in that fashion. I am pleased to say there is still some hope that a negotiated settlement can be achieved, but I think this motion illustrates how the Government really sees Parliament.

That ought not to come as a shock or surprise to the people of Canada. That is the very same political Party, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, that stormed the Speaker's chair. I remember sitting in my seat when Members of that Party went up to the Chair and screamed at the top of their lungs at the Speaker in order to disrupt Parliament. They did not like a particular piece of legislation. However, that did not work so they decided to abandon the House of Commons and close it down for around 16 days. No business was conducted because the Progressive Conservatives decided that they knew best. They decided they could overrule the House of Commons. They could overrule the traditions and practices and rules and regulations of Parliament. I think it shocked Canadians to their souls to learn that the Progressive Conservatives, who often gave the impression of being staunch supporters of democratic traditions, were prepared to storm the Speaker's chair and close down Parliament for days.

I want to read some very important and appropriate words to the House of Commons:

> We on this side of the House in more than one party believe that a fundamental issue is at stake—perhaps the fundamental issue.
> I refer to the right of parliament to control itself and thereby to control the government. This question has arisen before and we know it is an issue over which passions can be aroused on both sides of the house. It is also, in the context of this country at this time, an issue which can become obscured and partisan and, indeed, the subject of passionate debate.
> All hon. members know that legislatures do not today everywhere enjoy the high repute in which we would like to see legislatures held. There is now a popular impression in some quarters that legislatures are an obstacle to good government. That impression offers to those who genuinely seek reform the natural temptation to change more than is needed and a temptation to change the purpose of parliament in the name of improving its procedures.
> This impatience with legislature, therefore, requires special vigilance on the part of defenders and friends of parliament. I assume that all of us, being here, would support and defend the purposes of parliament.
> It is not a simple task, in an age impressed by urgency and efficiency, to defend an institution whose purpose is to deter legislation that is bad, sometimes to delay, and sometimes indeed to oppose to the end bad legislation. It is not easy to make Canadians, who are accustomed to their freedoms, aware when these freedoms are under threat. I would hope that no one on either side of the house would use the weaknesses of legislatures in the public esteem to weaken parliament further.
> The great majority of the members of this house know that if parliament becomes a rubber stamp it becomes useless.
> That is the main reason for being here, and one weapon we possess is our ability on occasion to compel the government to reassess its measures and force it to change or even to halt a course of action which we believe to be inadequate or wrong. If that were not necessary parliament would not be necessary. But governments make mistakes, even governments with computers. A government which knows it must face an effective opposition will take more care than will a government which has the power under its rules to disarm the opposition.
> Members of a government are subject to fault like the rest of us. The function of the opposition is by our probing to reveal and correct those faults, by our presence and by our powers to make the government more careful, to make the government more compassionate, to make the government more responsive to the needs of the people of this country.
> There are some facts to establish about parliament and about parliamentary reform. The first is that the problems that frustrate Canada were not created here in parliament, and they will not be solved by a mere amendment of the rules of parliament. It was not the rules of parliament that caused inflation, created a crisis in housing, or slowed the sales of grain. It is not the reform of parliament which will produce a satisfactory foreign policy, bring growth to our economy, reduce unemployment, end the alienation of the young or reduce the strains within Confederation. Parliament is not the cause of these frustrations, and parliament ought not to be the victim or the scapegoat of them.
> —there is no magic in procedure, no magic that will cause the government to draft more and better laws quickly, above all, no magic that will produce policies and solutions where there have been none produced to date.
> If this government had no opposition at all to face it would still be behind. It would still face a backlog of things it should be doing and problems it has not been able to solve. That, after all, is the fate of governments in a changing and complex time, in a changing and complex country. We are not going to transform the capacity of this government simply by amending the rules of parliament. There is no magic wand, and there should be no attempt to suggest that these or any other changes to the rules will suddenly and as if by magic make the government efficient.
> The third fact is that the purpose of parliamentary reform is not simply to serve efficiency, as the hon. member who introduced the motion seemed to believe, important though efficiency naturally is. The purpose, rather, is to work out a process of debate and legislation which is consistent with the democratic values of the Canadian people.
> We do not simply need a procedure which passes laws. We need a procedure which also passes the demanding test of free and adequate debate. It is not enough to be concerned merely with the efficiency of the process. I would assume that the legislative process in the Soviet Union is very efficient. But we are a different kind of country and the rules of our parliamentary debate must reflect and protect that difference. We must not demean the importance of debate.
> there must also be time for adequate discussion here. The right of discussion and debate, the associated right of inquiry and the consequent capacity to arouse and inform public opinion, is the single most important safeguard the country has against arbitrary, secret or unresponsive government. This is the place in Canada where grievances can be raised with most effect. To arbitrarily limit the right of members to speak is to limit the capacity of the government to understand and respond to the problems of Canadians.

We believe that government has the right and responsibility to govern. The rules of parliament should help the Government to govern well. We support the reform of parliament. We support it enthusiastically and out of conviction. But we draw the line at certain fundamental and unnecessary changes which would deform parliament and make it ineffective.

We draw the line at proposals which would put parliament in the hands of the government because that, we believe, would reverse the appropriate relation. Parliament must not be made subservient to the government. Parliament must continue to be responsible to the people through parliament. That is a parliamentary tradition and we defend it today, not because it is an old tradition or even because it is a British tradition but because it is a good tradition and the best safeguard we have against arbitrary government. It is, in the final analysis, the only safeguard we have.

I could go on and read much more of this very important debate that occurred on December 10, 1968. It was a speech uttered by the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, Leader of the Opposition at that time. Mr. Stanfield was concerned that the Liberals of the day were bringing in changes to the Standing Orders which he felt would facilitate the Government's plans at the expense of the role and effectiveness of the Opposition.

Nearly 20 years have elapsed and today we see a repeat performance by the Conservative Government of the day because it has been unable to complete its business in the traditional calendar time.

I point out that for decades Governments have been able to complete their business in the traditional calendar year. As my friend, the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), points out, the Government did not even recall Parliament until October of this year and as a result of an extra four weeks of summer recess and because of its hopelessness, abysmal record, inexperience and unwillingness to co-operate, the Government cannot complete its agenda within the prescribed calendar year and wants to extend the sitting into the summer.

I humbly suggest that if we sat for 12 months of the year, sat through Christmas and Easter, I suspect the same problem would exist. The Government would indicate that it is unable to deal effectively with the challenges and issues facing Canada. It simply cannot run the Government effectively and efficiently.

As the Hon. Robert Stanfield, the then Leader of the Opposition said in 1968, the rules of the House of Commons do not make a Government effective. It is the Government itself.

I also want to quote some words of the Hon. Stanley Knowles who said, during that debate: "If we are here to make a shambles of it, we can do it no matter how good the rules are. If we are here to do the business of the people of Canada, we can do that even if the rules are not as good as they might be. Nevertheless, we think there are reforms that must be made.

Today, we reflect that precise view. After participating with other Parties in parliamentary reform for many weeks, months and years, and recognizing changes in society, it is obvious that changes in the House of Commons are appropriate and necessary. However, we must remind members of the Government that the rules are only as good as the players. A speed limit of 90 kilometres on one of our highways is only as effective as the willingness of the people to co-operate with the rules.

Let us consider the reason for these changes. The Government has indicated on a number of occasions that it wants to conduct the business of the House, referring to the so-called drug Bill, Bill C-22, when the Opposition stalled the passage of that Bill for some time. That is what we did, but it is our job. We did not stop the Bill or prohibit the Government from completing its agenda to change the patent laws for prescription drug companies. However, we wanted to focus the attention of Canadians on what we believe is a very Draconian and punitive piece of legislation. We believe we have accomplished that goal and that Canadians are aware that the Government introduced a drug Bill that will give a monopoly to a foreign drug company for ten years so that it can charge whatever it wants before any competition is permitted in Canada. That would obviously drive up the price of prescription drugs in the future, and we believe that is inappropriate. Therefore, we used the procedures of the House of Commons to focus attention on that particular issue.

The Government is wrong to suggest that it was prohibited from completing its agenda because, unfortunately, the Bill did pass through the House. The Government's arguments that the Opposition has been able to keep it from conducting its business are hollow.

While we have many concerns about reform, I believe this is not the place to negotiate changes to the Standing Orders or to the rules and procedures of the House of Commons. However, it is an opportunity to reflect on the procedure that has been used and on the process of parliamentary reform to improve the rules and regulations of the House.

Many of us were shocked and aghast at the fact that the Government decided to make an end run, circumvent the process and do what it felt best in terms of changing the rules of Parliament rather than complete the round of negotiations we had been undertaking for so many weeks and months.

While we are concerned about the process, we are still hopeful, since this motion has not passed, that there is still time for the three political Parties in Parliament to work together to attempt a negotiated settlement with which we can all live and in which there will be give and take on both sides. We remain optimistic and we are here to co-operate as an effective opposition in Parliament. We believe that part of our role is to keep the Government honest, to keep it on the straight and narrow, to focus attention and oppose whenever we believe it is appropriate.

We hope the Government will see fit to negotiate a final conclusion to this particular stalemate in reforming the rules, regulations and traditions of the House of Commons.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I appreciated hearing my distinguished colleague's remarks with respect to the proposed changes to the Standing Orders. I have a couple of questions I would like to put to him and I would like to ask him to elaborate on a few of the points he made. Let us face it, Madam Speaker, those Canadians who are watching this particular debate with respect to the Standing Orders are not sitting on the edges of their seats gripped with excitement at the contents of the debate. Yet I think it is important that members of the public understand clearly the implications of these proposals by the Government on this important institution of Parliament.

With that in mind, I would ask the Hon. House Leader for my Party to tell us whether, to the best of his recollection, there has been any time since he was elected, and I believe he was elected in 1980, that any Government, whether the former Liberal Government, the former Conservative Government or this Government, has made any attempt to use this kind of heavy-handed process to impose changes to the Standing Orders on the House of Commons.

I think it is important that Canadians understand clearly the history of this place and that these kinds of changes to the Standing Orders which govern this House are traditionally made by way of discussion, consensus, agreement and give and take. I would like the Hon. House Leader to indicate the history of this particular matter with respect to the imposition of changes in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could also indicate why it was that this Parliament in fact moved to a fixed parliamentary calendar. He will recall, as I certainly do, the days not that long ago when Members of Parliament never knew from one day to the next or from one week to the next when the House would adjourn. He will know of the particular burdens that placed on Members of Parliament who were attempting to have some sense of their own personal agendas, which, obviously, is of some importance as well.

I would ask the Hon. House Leader to amplify on those two particular concerns, first, with respect to the way in which the Government is seeking to change the Standing Orders of this House and, second, why he has placed, quite properly in my view, such importance on the changes with respect to the fixed parliamentary calendar.

Mr. Riis: I thank my hon. friend from Burnaby for those various questions. I will answer them in order as best I can. First, the decision to extend the hours of Parliament into the summer, in my opinion, is a reflection of the inability of the Government to do its business. It has the largest majority in the history of Canada. One would think that if there was any Government which could do its business in the time prescribed, it ought to be this Government. Presumably that is not the case.

Any effective individual, family, business, farm, fisherman, and so on, who wants to conduct his or her affairs in the most positive way must do it with some ability to plan ahead. It was in that spirit that Members of the House of Commons from all Parties agreed that it was in the best interests of us all to know when the session ended and when it began. From that came a calendar year so that we could all plan our lives in order to be the most effective and efficient Members of Parliament possible. We might now see that changed.

The second question was with respect to the process. I have only been a Member of Parliament for seven plus years, but in that time I have seen the tremendous interest of all Members in parliamentary reform. The very prestigious McGrath committee spent a great amount of time, reflecting the views of all political Parties, on what it felt were appropriate changes to the parliamentary rules and regulations. We also had the appropriate standing committee headed by the distinguished Chairman, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). Working with his colleagues from all political Parties he came up with some extremely thoughtful recommendations in terms of what was felt should be changes to the rules and regulations of Parliament. All of us have felt comfortable with that process and supportive because we knew the quality of the members of the committee and of their commitment to parliamentary reform. When they made their recommendations, it was with very little debate that the House of Commons supported the principle of the changes they proposed.

It is for that reason that the frustration exists as it does today. After all of that work for all those years by so many Members of the House of Commons, we arrive at the point where we find on the Order Paper that the Government has taken unilateral action while negotiations, I might say, were in process. In fact, we were so close to completing the negotiations, that the House Leader for the Government even suggested we extend the deadline we set for ourselves twice so we could complete the negotiations. We all left last week feeling that we had finally reached the end. We felt satisfied that there had been give and take on both sides. That is why there is such a high level of frustration today.

I suspect that if Members of the House were reflecting their views as they actually feel them and reflecting their feelings as they actually see them, they too would feel a certain element of frustration that the process, I would say, nearly broke down, when there was still optimism and hope that the process would be completed to everyone's satisfaction.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, The Hon. Member has suggested that the process of Parliament has broken down. The process has not broken down at all, Madam Speaker, but is really functioning the way it is supposed to function. The Hon. Member also made much of the fact that the Government has an enormous number of members and in that way can force through any type of legislation. I think what he has failed to realize is that the process of getting legislation through, the process of even getting some of the Bills on the Order Paper, has been at times frustrated by members of the Opposition, even at first reading.

Would the Member not agree that the motion before us would facilitate at least getting an orderly part of the Government's business onto the floor of the House of Commons in the way which is envisaged in the motion before us?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, what I do not want to be drawn into, and I appreciate the legitimacy of the intent behind the Hon. Member's question, is a discussion on what the House Leaders and various Members interested in parliamentary reform have been doing for many months and years, and are still doing today. All I can say in response to the Hon. Member's legitimate question is that just in the last little while we have passed many Bills. Many Bills have been introduced into this House. I am holding only a small portion. Every single one, with the exception of one, has been introduced with no difficulty whatsoever. With respect to one single Bill out of hundreds, there was a couple of days before the Government could introduce it.

In the tradition of Parliament, which recognizes the rule of an Opposition by its very definition of being "Parliament", and recognizing the role of the opposition Parties to focus attention on Bills they have deemed not to be in the best interests of Canada, to have focused their attention on one single Bill out of perhaps hundreds for a few days, is that inappropriate? By his question I suspect he is saying it is. As a parliamentarian, I say that it is not inappropriate.

If the Opposition had been holding up every single Bill, or the vast majority of Bills the Government was attempting to introduce, then I would say, yes, they have a point. However, one single Bill out of so many was, if you like, slowed down for a few days. It has been subsequently introduced, went through all stages and was passed. It is signed, sealed and delivered. That is the way Parliaments are supposed to function. I think what the Hon. Member is saying to me is that if he had his way there ought to be no Opposition, just a Government, so it can do things in the fastest and most efficient way possible. That might work for some countries, and they need not be named, countries which only believe in doing government work in the most efficient fashion and having no opposition whatsoever, certainly not an opposition with any power. That is a tradition, of course, that this country has never accepted, and I hope it never will.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would like to start off by saying that the Hon. Member doth protest too much. With respect to the Hon. Member who just spoke, it is interesting to note that over the past two weeks there were continual meetings regarding the change in the rules. However, the Hon. Member was only here for one of those meetings.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am surprised at the insensitivity and the unparliamentary nature of the language of my hon. colleague. He well knows the traditions of Parliament. An Hon. Member does not refer to the absence of another Hon. Member. The implication is that Members of Parliament are always carrying out their responsibilities and duties in a responsible and honourable way. For the Hon. Member to attack someone on a personal level obviously indicates that the substance of his argument is extremely weak.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) will be a little more careful in his remarks.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I was not referring to the Hon. Member's location, to his absence from Ottawa or to what he was doing. I was not referring to that. I was only talking about meetings.

I would like to make a point with respect to the bell-ringing episode to which the Hon. Member referred so much in his speech. The Hon. Member will recall that this was a very important incident in parliamentary history. It had to do with an omnibus Bill being imposed upon Parliament, something that had never happened before. The bell-ringing episode, much and all as it was regrettable, brought a stop to that practice. So the bell-ringing is important because it allowed us to stop that omnibus Bill. It was eight weeks that we spent down in the basement of this building trying to work out the details of the broken up portion of the National Energy Program that, as Hon. Members know, and as the western group that got together in Vancouver was quoted in The Globe and Mail today as saying, it was one of the things that really hurt the West.

Mr. Manly: That's not why they're getting together in 1987.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): What about Bill C-22 and its effects?

Mr. Fennell: Bill C-22 happens to be very popular legislation in my riding. I have not heard one argument against it. I have heard many arguments for it. Members opposite can yell about it all they want, but in my riding it is very popular. At last there is some research going on in my riding that was not going on before. There are millions of dollars being spent. Lilly and Anca and two others are all spending millions of dollars on research. That helps Canadians. It stops the brain-drain from Canada.

Mr. Manly: The price of drugs is going up!

Mr. Fennell: This is something which is terribly important. However, we are not talking about Bill C-22. We are talking about the importance of administration in the House of Commons.

We used dilatory motions. I will admit that we used some of the same tricks ourselves when I was in opposition, and I was ashamed.

Mr. Gauthier: You wrote the book.

Mr. Fennell: I was ashamed of some of the tricks.

Mr. Manly: You should be ashamed of what you are doing now.

Mr. Fennell: That is the reason we changed the rules. We changed the rules so that we could work and manage this House and manage the affairs of the nation effectively. That is precisely the reason we did it. It is important to Canada to have a responsible Government. We came in with a majority and we should use it. The people of Canada said that they want us to rule the country as it has never been ruled before. The economy has never been better. We promised the Canadian public that we would create jobs. We have created 800,000-plus jobs.

Mr. Robinson: In Ontario!

Mr. Fennell: We promised the Canadian public that we would lower interest rates. Interest rates went down.

What I am saying is that we are fighting for the Canadian public, not for the individuals who sit on the other side of this House.

One thing Members opposite have put more emphasis on than anything else is the fact that in this motion they might have to sit—might—into the month of July. The motion does not state that we will sit. It leaves the option—

Mr. Manly: Where were you last September?

Mr. Fennell: I was down here.

If there is an important piece of legislation, we can deal with it here during the summer months and not have the nation shut out from dealing with important legislation. It is only a stall on the part of Members opposite. If they really want to stall, they can stall themselves into July very easily.

With respect to the petitions that are presented day after day—

Mr. Manly: The right of the people!

Mr. Fennell: They have to work hard to get that many petitions. One has to work extremely hard to get that many petitions, or else get one's workers to work very hard. One has to go around to canvass people from door to door.

Mr. Manly: People have the right to be heard.

Mr. Fennell: I am not against petitions. I am against the misuse of the time of the House of Commons.

Many things that have been agreed to in this motion are very important. The details with respect to Fridays are very important. I do not recognize many of the people from the NDP who are ever here on Friday. Perhaps one Member from—

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is parliamentary for the Hon. Member to refer to the presence or absence of Members of any particular Party on any given day. It is absolutely certain that New Democrats are here on Fridays every bit as much as other Members are, while others are travelling to their ridings.

Mr. Fennell: I am not arguing about members of the NDP, the Liberals or the Conservatives. I happen to have been a Member of the House for eight years and I have always sat on Fridays. That was my—

Mr. Gauthier: Duty day.

Mr. Fennell: That was not my choice, that is what was imposed upon me. I got to enjoy Fridays. As my colleague, the Whip of the Official Opposition, understands, we used to have an interesting time on Fridays. We always had a chance for debate. It is a great day.

Let me refer to the shortening of the hours on Friday. The hours are not being reduced. They are being changed so that we would sit through lunch. We will still sit five hours. However, instead of sitting from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m. we will sit from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. That is something that was approved by all Members of the House as a result of a petition carried out by one of my colleagues. So it is a good idea.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): No one objected to that.

Mr. Fennell: We dealt with cleaning up situations with respect to Private Members' Bills. For instance, why should the mover of a Private Members' Bill not have the opportunity to talk for a longer period of time than everyone else? He is the man who wrote the Bill. This is just cleaning up some errors that were in the original rules. It will allow the mover of the motion or Bill to start with 20 minutes and everybody else to follow with 10. I think that is equitable.

I would now like to talk about Opposition Days. I know that it has been a hardship for members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party during the past month in which we have jammed in 13 Opposition Days all at once in this supply period. What we have tried to do is to allocate the days so that they are more evenly spread out over the year. Instead of 13 days there will be 10. I think that makes sense. It is hard when members of the Opposition have to prepare for Opposition Days day after day after day. It is hard to get speakers and to get the right material together and to be aware.

There is a change in the rules with respect to allowing the Whips to change the membership on legislative and special committees. I would like to talk about committees because I have very firm views on them. During the discussions I did not change my views with respect to this issue, and I think that the Opposition Whip will accept that. However, I feel that it is an impossible situation right now to try to operate the committees on the basis on which they were set up, especially for a Government with a large number of Members. I think it is very difficult. There was a system in our committees which was a system I liked. It allowed me the freedom to get on to the committee. The system was that there would be x members and x alternates. I was originally put on one committee but I did not like that committee. The way I got on to other committees was by sitting on the committee until I finally became an alternate member. I sat on that committee for hours, days, months and years and finally became a regular member. It was a means to an end. In such a large group as we have it is difficult to move upward in a committee. I succeeded in that because one of the alternates did not appear as often as I did, then one of the regular members did not appear as regularly as I did or ask questions on the regular basis on which I did. In that way, I, as a hard-working Member of the House, was able to work myself up in the committee. That shows that seniority is not all that counts.

I think that is equitable and fair. I did not push it in these amendments because I have had co-operation from the Opposition Whip with regard to other changes in the rules. I think we can still run the committees to everyone's satisfaction through the changes we made in November.

We eliminated the Parliament Committee and included it with the Committee on Management and Members' Services. We decided to reduce the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments because no one attended it. It is not of major interest to Members of the House of Commons. We have previously tried to work out the priorities among the legislative and standing committees and are now trying to refine that. We have tried to ensure that standing committees never sit when the House is in session. Legislative committees only will sit at that time.

There have been some difficulties with Bills which have previously been reviewed by the Finance Committee being referred to legislative committees. An excellent example of a case in which there was co-operation from all sides is that of Bills C-42 and C-56. The Finance Committee had already studied those Bills. It would be ridiculous to refer them to a legislative committee because, as the Whip, I would simply move the people from the Finance Committee to the legislative committee. That would really not mean anything.

I recall being the chairman of a legislative committee on a Bill. The entire Finance Committee was simply moved to the legislative committee. The committees have independent chairmen, but the problem in that case was that the original intent was that no witnesses would appear before the legislative committee. However, in this case the Minister had said that there would be an opportunity to call witnesses when the Bill was in committee, and that is when it went to a legislative committee rather than the standing committee.

The major changes relate to Orders of the Day. We had to find a way to advance government motions. There were so many dilatory motions every day that we were never able to proceed with debate on Bills. I accept that this place should be democratic, but I do not believe that it should be controlled by the Opposition without any input from the Government. The problem is that dilatory motions continually slow down the proceedings of the House and we never have a chance to debate the Bills we want to debate, only the dilatory motions. That is not accomplishing anything in the governing of the nation.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to indicate to the House that the Government has absolutely no intention of extending the hours today between four and five o'clock. Debate should proceed on this motion until five o'clock with no such indication from any Member on the government side.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary. However, I had a good crowd and was enjoying it and now I will lose my audience. I guess my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), felt I may have been playing to the audience a bit.

It is important to debate Bills. There is a limit to the amount of time you can discuss a Bill. I recall a ridiculous situation which took place when we were in opposition before the rules were changed. I was told that I had to keep talking for an hour and a half but I had only had a few minutes to prepare my speech. That was silly, but we had to do it because it was our opportunity to get our points across. We have removed the right of speaking for an hour and a half and the maximum time allowed is now 20 minutes, which makes a lot of sense to me. As a matter of fact, I think that ten minutes would probably be adequate to get your points across. In order to speak for a full 20 minutes one must have done thorough research. I have done thorough research on a Bill many times and seen the Bill pass before I had an opportunity to speak on it. That can be a little discouraging.

I think the Opposition is making a big to do about nothing. When Members realize that we have tried to simplify the processes in the House they will understand the Government's strong wish to govern the country. We believe the Opposition is important and we do listen to it. However, as I indicated before, committees provide a better opportunity and more time to really study a Bill. We do not accomplish nearly as much as we could in the House and not nearly as much as is accomplished in committees. I think limiting debate in the House and providing more time for debate in committees would solve some of the frustrations of the Opposition.

When I was in opposition I found committees to be the place where I could express myself and work toward making changes which, little as they were, were important. I recall that there were 49 amendments moved to the National Energy Program. They were not major but some were of great importance to us.

The intent of this motion is to permit the Government to govern and eliminate the time spent on dilatory motions. I think it is very important that we accept these changes. They are not moved with antagonism or animosity. There is no hidden agenda. The intent is simply to deal with legislation out in the open as we have been elected to do, but not to be controlled and directed by the Opposition for time immemorial.

I notice that you are on the edge of your seat, Madam Speaker. I would like to express my sincere appreciation for the opportunity to speak on this motion today.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). What times can he envision that Bills will be sent to a standing committee rather than to a legislative committee? Is that inherent in the motion before us, or do all Bills have to go to a legislative committee?

The reason I ask that question is that there is legislation which has been prepared from White Papers into which the standing committees have had a great deal of input. They have conducted hearings across the country, and during the hearing process they have often said that there will be another opportunity for people to make a presentation on what they feel should be done with legislation after the Bill has been brought before Parliament and goes to a committee.

If Bills are only to go to legislative committees, the composition of a legislative committee will not necessarily be a mirror of the people who are on the standing committee. I should like to hear the Hon. Member's comment on that point.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, a very important discussion took place in that regard. There was much discussion that perhaps legislative committees were not really a necessity. However, it was decided by many that they serve their purpose in certain instances.

I refer to Bill C-42 and Bill C-56, two financial Bills which have already been studied by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. In effect they have gone back to that committee by agreement. This also transpired in the cases of Bills C-18 and C-19. The Hon. Member was on that committee. They went to the Standing Committee on Transport and they were important to that committee because it had already reviewed the National Transportation Act in advance. It had already heard the witnesses, so all it really had to do was go across the country to review it with certain witnesses to get input on the possibility of change or amendments to the two Acts.

I think it must be based upon agreement by all Parties. For instance, it is the people on the Finance Committee, from both the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, who have worked with the Conservatives to convince their House Leaders that it would be a good idea to refer it to a standing committee as opposed to a legislative committee. It is really an agreement among all Parties, but it depends upon what has transpired—

Mr. Belsher: Is that still there?

Mr. Fennell: That is still there; the option is there. We can or cannot do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my friend the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). A short while ago, the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader came to the House and said: I can promise you that we are not going to use Standing Order 9(4)(a). And in order for people to understand what it means, I would like him not only to elaborate on this, but also to answer a question. This Standing Order makes it possible for a Member, when the Speaker is in the Chair, to—> —propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof—

Only if 25 or more Members then rise to oppose it is the motion deemed to have been withdrawn. During our negotiations with the Government ... It is because I know the Conservative Whip is favourable to this idea that I direct my question to him.

[English]

In discussions with the Government, I, for one, proposed that to demand that the Opposition needs 25 people to oppose a motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a) to prolong a sitting of the House beyond the normal adjournment hour was unjust because it exceeded a quorum in the House by 5, the quorum being 20. It also requires that members of the Liberal Party and the NDP who have small numbers in the House be involved in a difficult and sometimes demanding race to this place because we have committees sitting or other things to do. We must all run in here between four o'clock and five o'clock to prevent the Government from extending the sitting past the adjournment hour.

I suggested—and I still propose it—that a new rule should be written where 10 per cent would be the factor involved—10 per cent of the Government or 10 per cent of the combined Opposition. That could stay on the books for years to come as an objective figure which would be used to decide whether or not we should have a motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a).

That would provide fairness and would provide members of my caucus and me with an element of justice in terms of representation. For example, the Government has 211 Members, and 10 per cent would mean that it must have 21 people in place to prevent the Opposition from moving a motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a) to extend debate beyond the normal adjournment hour. It would also give us, in terms of our numbers, the fairness of having 10 per cent, which would be seven, to prevent the Government from proceeding with a motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a).

Does the Whip on the government side not understand that logic? Would he not agree that at this stage where we are indeed rewriting the books that would be a fairer approach to House business, that it would be in keeping with the spirit of the McGrath committee, and that it would be a much more just and equitable position?

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Opposition Whip indicated, we have had discussions on this matter. I am sympathetic. I believe that 25 is too high.

I would like to state what my opinion is right now, but he has put me in a somewhat embarrassing position because at the present time there are meetings going on right across the hall.

Mr. Gauthier: They are watching you.

Mr. Fennell: They are probably watching me to see what reaction I have to this question.

Mr. Gauthier: Inspire them.

Mr. Fennell: They may expire me, that is, keep me in this job forever. If I stated that 10 per cent or 20 per cent was right, they may come charging out of that room and hit me over the head before I could finish answering the question.

Let me say that I am very sympathetic to my friend, the chief Opposition Whip. However, I am frightened of my own colleagues who might be tough on me—

Mr. Gauthier: You are an honest man.

Mr. Fennell: —if I come up with an answer in advance of the conclusion of that meeting.

Mr. Gauthier: That is the best answer I have heard you give in the House of Commons.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I should like to make a comment and also ask a question of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

As I read the foreword to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, it makes it clear that the House has been deliberating the Standing Orders since December, 1984, and that the rules of the House currently in effect have been adopted, changed, and in a sense are in a state of limbo because they are merely provisional rules.

I want to point out to Members of the House of Commons that the Standing Orders are more than just rules governing Members of the House of Commons in their day to day debates and deliberations. They in fact establish the internal procedure for the House of Commons, which is of interest to a much broader segment of the public and the community than merely Members of the House of Commons. There is a great and grave public interest in some stability and some permanency to the rules which govern the processes and procedures of the House of Commons.

One can imagine the difficulties of a person or institution interested in a Bill before the House of Commons not knowing what are the lengths of debates, how long debate could be protracted, and a variety of other matters.

My question to the Hon. Member for Ontario is: Is it not generally in the interest of Canadians to have Standing Orders of the House of Commons which make it clear what are the rules of the House, what rules govern the processes and procedures? Does he not think that that interest goes beyond the membership of this Chamber and extends to other interested parties, so that the Government would be derelict in its duty if it did not intervene to create this permanence in relation to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and so that the deliberation which has gone on over three years will finally be put to an end and everybody will know what are the rules, processes, and procedures of the House of Commons?

Mr. Fennell: I should like to say that the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) probably has one of the greatest grasps of Parliament. He understands it. He understands the implications to the public. I really appreciate the Member asking that question. I failed to bring out the fact that we are trying to adjust provisional rules. As I said before, I spoke an hour and a half one day. I remember days when the Hon. Member for Halifax has spoken for an extended period of time, but that is not what the public wants. People want us to have fast and concise debate. They want to hear the arguments on both sides instead of the rambling of the past. The Member brought forward a very important point to Canadians who elected us to come here.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Earlier today, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) proposed to move an amendment which reads as follows:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the first semi-colon and by substituting the following: "and
> That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print a revised edition of the Standing Orders of the House, renumbering as may be deemed necessary and making such technical and consequential changes as may be required."

The Chair has had the opportunity to review the Hon. Member's motion. Because of Citation 424(3) and (5) in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, I have little choice but to rule it out of order. If the amendment were allowed and adopted, the effect would be to render the main motion unintelligible. The amendment, therefore, is not acceptable.

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I want to speak on the motion proposed by the Government and indicate at the outset that I am very disappointed by the action of the Government. I have listened carefully to what has been said by the Government House Leader and also by the Government Whip. They both tried to explain that they want to improve the procedural package concerning the House of Commons.

Quite clearly, when you scrutinize this resolution you see that the Government intends to substantially—radically, in fact—change the procedures of the House of Commons, not in keeping with the effort put forward in recent months by Members of Parliament on both sides of the House who have served on committees and reviewed the rules of the House of Commons. The Lefebvre committee, the McGrath committee and more recently the Cooper committee have done important work in consultation with representatives of both sides of the House. Indeed, we could say that the report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, chaired by James McGrath, was a report arrived at through consensus, through diligent work by members of the three Parties represented in the House of Commons with a view to bringing forward a balanced package that favours not exclusively the Government but favours equally the Government and the Opposition, and, above all, favours parliamentarians. It was an effort to enhance the role of the private Member.

From the report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons let me cite what a new Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) said:

> As a new Member of Parliament, I do not know the mechanics of this institution as well as some of my colleagues. I am absolutely amazed at how little input private Members have into the formulation of legislation, policies and/or regulations. It appears to me that most of the time we are told what a minister will be announcing in 48 hours and we do not have access, any means to study or contribute or change the finished product. But Members must go to their constituencies to explain and support the decision of the government. Sometimes this is extremely difficult.

These are the words of the Member for Calgary South, a member of the Government, who was expressing her view on entering Parliament and hoping for radical change in the way Parliament operates.

In the early stages, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Government House Leader and the Government sustained and supported the McGrath report and tried to implement it, although I have to say there are a number of important issues that have not yet been dealt with that have been referred to the new Board of Internal Economy, which issues until dealt with, will not make for a major change in our parliamentary procedures.

A significant step in the right direction has been taken so far, but there is another major step to be taken on which the Government is very hesitant. Not only is the Government not ready to go further in implementing the McGrath report, but it has just made an about-face with the motion introduced by the Government House Leader. In fact, these proposals, as we see them, coming as they appear to do in isolation from the philosophical framework which guides the reform process, reflect the need of the Government House Leader. They reflect exclusively the desire of the Government, frustrated in implementing some of its legislation, to take control of Parliament, to take control away from the back-benchers on both sides of the House, to take it away from the Opposition and basically impose le baillon to prevent the Opposition from speaking out and speaking out legitimately against some of the measures which the Government is introducing. This is regrettable.

One may look at some of the changes the Government wants to make and one could sympathize with the desire of the Government to re-address some of the anomalies that exist in Routine Proceedings. One can see here obviously that the Government is feeling the frustrations of excessive dilatory tactics that have been used recently by the New Democratic Party. The Government is, therefore, anxious to assert its control of the House. Unfortunately, we have to ask ourselves if this control is coming at too high a price. Does this not come at a time when, in a spirit of reforming Parliament and giving more authority to the private Members, the Government is seizing the passage of permanent new rules to give itself some authority? That is to a certain degree frightening. I refer to the decisions of the Government without any consensus, without any appropriate consultation and agreement with the opposition Party, whether it be the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party, to go ahead and change substantially some of the procedures to which we have been accustomed, in particular, our dealings with third reading stage. The decision of the Government to curtail debate on third reading in the way it wants to do it is unacceptable. The decision to amend Standing Order 117 is, to me, unacceptable. The decision to change unilaterally Standing Orders 13, 19 and 48 is also unacceptable.

I would like to remind Hon. Members and members of the Government in particular that the consensus arrived at in the McGrath report to do away with bell-ringing is a prime example of how Members on both sides of the House could put their partisan approach aside and try to work out procedures that would be in the best interests of good order in Parliament. I accept without any hesitation that the Government has a legitimate point in trying to redo Routine Proceedings and in trying to find ways to implement certain timetables for legislation. However, to do so unilaterally and without proper consultation and appropriate consensus sets a very, very bad precedent. On one hand, the Government has every right to want its legislation passed, but it must accept on the other hand that the Opposition has the right to fight as much as possible under the rules of the House of Commons against legislation the Opposition thinks is unacceptable.

The way the Government is trying to curtail debate on second reading, at report stage and on third reading is, to me, too much. If these rules are accepted, there will be the possibility of a Minister rising in the House and, without any notice, deciding that his legislation, which he thinks is good although all members of the Opposition and a large segment of the population are against it, will pass. He will move a motion that will be debated for only two hours and will preclude the continuation of debate at report stage and at third reading of the Bill. Therefore, a very drastic form of closure will be imposed on a piece of legislation simply because of the will of a Minister. I think that is unprecedented and very dangerous.

I am not saying that the Government should not find better ways of dealing with legislation. I am not saying that the Government should not have the right legitimately to expect that its legislation be accepted, but the way it is proceeding is, to me, frightening.

I also want to say that there is no quid pro quo in the proposals submitted by the Government. Time and time again, the Opposition Whip has asked a question which was nicely received by the Government Whip but was not answered. Under our current rules, we need only 20 Members to have a quorum. To ask the Opposition to have 25 Members present in the House of Commons in order to prevent the Government from prolonging the debate at the end of the day and making sure that the legislation that normally would not be accepted is passed is asking too much of the Opposition. There are 40 Members of the Loyal Opposition. This means that in order to prevent the Government from speeding up the process of passage of legislation, we would need to have 25 opposition Members present.

As you know, Madam Speaker, parliamentarians are asked to do many tasks. They are asked to be in here, to be in committee, to be in their constituencies and to represent the interests of their Parties at numerous meetings here and abroad. Therefore, it is impossible to ask an Opposition that is as small as we are to block the dictatorial will of 210 Members. Certainly the Government must come to its senses and use more appropriate numbers which would allow the Opposition to prevent unlimited debate on legislation.

I would like to deal with the proposals for Private Members' Bills. I know that through the good auspices of the Clerk of the Table, it is now possible to allow a substitute for an Hon. Member who cannot debate his Bill. The Clerk is now in a position to ask for other Members of the House to substitute for the Member who cannot be present and a different Bill can be looked at at the end of the day. The reality is, however, that if this fails, the one hour goes back to the Government. It should not go back to the Government.

The Government has enough time to look at its own affairs, and I think it is unfair to give Private Members' time to the Government. I do hope that the rules in this regard will make it crystal clear that if for one reason or another a Member is unable to deal with his Private Member's initiative, the time that would normally be given to Private Members' hour will not be given back to the Government. This is not asking too much and I believe that in the interests of Private Members, it is very important.

I would like to say something about a recommendation that is not very controversial but one which I believe is important. Both the McGrath and the Lefebvre committees opposed any nomination process for the Chair. All Members except those who wish to withdraw from consideration should be eligible to receive ballots.

As was seen in the election of the present Speaker, campaigning is resented by most Hon. Members and is seen as inappropriate. The present system is intended to foster thought and discussion by MPs on the selection of the new Speaker. By having to declare themselves to be candidates, it is clear that the House could be deprived, as it almost was on the last occasion, of the candidature of a Member who is not willing to declare himself. The process should be more subtle than a declaration of candidacy. The character of the election does not lend itself to a horse race.

The Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure has also recommended that the election process be improved by removing low-ranking nominees who receive less than a certain percentage of the votes. I think this is reasonable and I am glad the Government is willing to accept it. However, by inviting declarations, the House might see persons running for reasons other than the desire to seek the speakership. I think this is a step backward. I suggest that this proposal be reviewed by the Government and not be put forward for implementation. I think it will not be helpful in the election of the Speaker.

The major thrust of the McGrath report was the theme of increasing the influence of Members of Parliament. I am not saying it was to increase the powers of Members of Parliament. The House of Commons does not govern. It is clear that Ministers of the Crown are responsible to the House for the Government of Canada. However, there has always been what Edward Blake called the great power of the House to advise. This is the area which may be of direct interest to persons who must deal regularly with Government and who may have ideas about how to do things better. Clearly, if we are to implement the rules the Government wants to implement, Ministers are going to become very, very powerful. They are going to dictate the agenda and there will be absolutely no possibility of Members of the House, Opposition or Government, intervening to improve the legislation.

The McGrath committee had in mind improving the rules of the House of Commons to give more power to Members in reviewing legislation and Estimates in committee. To a certain degree we are doing that, but to a larger degree we are short of implementing all of the McGrath report recommendations. I certainly regret that three recommendations, one for an electronic voting system, another for the establishment of an appropriate small secretariat to support the activity of the Board of Internal Economy, and one regarding televising the work of committees, were not accepted.

Although everything has not been accepted by the Government, I think the gist of the recommendations of the McGrath report which have been implemented temporarily should now be made permanent. The desire of the Government to do differently should not be entertained at this time. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following:
> "all the provisional and permanent Standing Orders of the House in force on the date of notice of this motion be adopted as the permanent Standing Orders of the House; and
> That the Clerk of the House be authorized and instructed to print a revised edition of the Standing Orders of the House, renumbering as may be deemed necessary and making such technical and consequential changes as may be required."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair will reserve its decision on the motion and advise as soon as possible.

Questions and comments.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, my comment relates to the issue of electing the Speaker as raised by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). I ask all Members to think seriously about what the Government has suggested in that regard. I hope that even as I speak an agreement is being worked out which will make some of my remarks redundant, but I want Members to think about this matter.

The Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure was asked as part of its general review of the Standing Orders to look at the question of the election of the Speaker. There were at least two problems we wanted to address. One was what I call decluttering the ballot. We needed a mechanism to get the names of people who were not getting very much or any support off the ballot more quickly than was the case in our first experience of that procedure. We also needed a procedure whereby we could avoid what happened to the former Member for Yukon. He was unable to get his name off the ballot because he was not here in person to do so.

We made two suggestions. One, that there be a 5 per cent threshold below which your name would come off the ballot. Second, that Members be able to take their name off the ballot either by phone, telegram or whatever, so they would not have to come all the way from Yukon or wherever they might be in order to do so. That would have solved both problems.

The Government accepted the 5 per cent recommendation and then went on to recommend a nominating procedure, that is to say, people would have to actively put their name in nomination for Speaker. That procedure was rejected by the Lefebvre committee in 1982-83. It was rejected by the McGrath committee in 1984-85. It was rejected by the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures. All three groups unanimously agreed that it would be unseemly and take away from the process if people had to actively put their name in nomination for the speakership. It would lead to campaigning and various other things we do not want to see associated with the process by which a person becomes Speaker of the House of Commons.

It is important that the Government recognize that at the heart of the election of the Speaker is the idea that the House has control over its own processes. The election of the Speaker was both the symbol and substance of that reform. Therefore, it is most inappropriate for the Government to go against the unanimous recommendation of three committees of this House and decide by itself, as part and parcel of this unilateral motion, that it knows better and will implement an active nomination procedure.

I think the Government has become aware in the last little while about our concerns over this measure. Whether there is or is not an agreement, I hope the Government will see its way clear to change this particular aspect of the motion. Whether intended or not, and I do not think it was intended, this goes right to the heart and symbol of reform: Election of the speaker. If the Government can unilaterally change that procedure against the unanimous recommendations of three committees of this House, then parliamentary reform will indeed have suffered a setback. I ask the Hon. Member for Papineau to comment on that.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, this is clearly disquieting because the Government, taking advantage of the deadline for Parliament to reach a conclusion on our interim rules and make them permanent, introduced a whole series of proposals that have nothing to do with the parliamentary process nor the proposals put forward by the McGrath Report. The Hon. Member is right in saying this move originates from the Government and is based neither on the McGrath Report nor the Lefebvre Report nor the Cooper Report.

The other proposal to unilaterally change the parliamentary calendar also is disquieting. Thanks to parliamentary reform, orders that were made in the past, Members for some years have been in a position to know there would be recesses on predetermined dates—Easter, during the summer, or Christmas. Now the Government is unilaterally moving to change a calendar that was approved unanimously by the three political parties in this House, that introduced a little more common sense, a little more dignity into our parliamentary work, that allows each and everyone of us with family responsibilities to know that at Easter, during the summer or at Christmas we, as any other individual working outside this House, can go home and fully enjoy the statutory holidays.

Again, the Government acting unilaterally, without consulting anybody, is about to change the parliamentary calendar that was agreed upon in the past. It is my hope it will come to reason rather than insisting on changing that parliamentary calendar that has proved itself and is absolutely essential in my view to the dignity of all Members in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair, having reviewed the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), finds it acceptable.

Mr. Benjamin: Questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is finished.

Mr. Blaikie: Not according to my reading of the clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair noted the time between 4.41 p.m. and 4.51 p.m. as the ten-minute period. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has the floor.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I listened intently to the remarks by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and others during this debate. While I want to make a positive presentation, I want to address myself particularly to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Papineau.

I will say that his presentation was well balanced and quite fair. I think he made some important criticisms of the rules that would be in effect if this motion before the House respecting the Standing Orders were passed.

However, he failed to deal with the realities of the situation. The rules currently in force are provisional rules. If action is not taken to make the Standing Orders permanent, that is to say the permanent rules for the process and procedure of the House, we will revert to the situation that existed in December, 1984. If Members of the House cannot agree upon a set of rules as the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and no action is taken, we will go back to the situation that existed on December 7, 1984.

I believe the Member for Papineau and other Members have failed to address that situation. We are in a legislative limbo with respect to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and that is not a satisfactory situation.

No one would disagree with the proposition that the best way to obtain rules for governing any forum, particularly the House of Commons, is by the advice and consent of all Members. Unanimity is the desirable state. However, what is done when that state cannot be achieved? Do we abandon our obligations as a Government? Do we fail to put into force what the Government thinks ought to be the rules that prevail and govern the processes and procedures of the House of Commons? Clearly it is the duty and obligation of the Government to act in the absence of achievement of the consent that would be required for unanimity.

I do not see how any Member can seriously take the position that Members of the House are the sole custodians of the rules of the House, and must achieve unanimity to effect any change. If this was the Ottawa Lawn Tennis Club one could agree with that proposition. However, this is the legislative body for Canada. We owe an obligation not to ourselves simply as Members of the House of Commons, but to all Canadians who view this as the forum for public discussion of legislation and other parliamentary matters. It is essential that this House of Commons have permanent rules enshrined in Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

The obligation of the House is to provide Standing Orders of a permanent character. It is not our obligation, duty, or responsibility to await until we achieve that highly desirable state of unanimity, and keep everyone in a state of limbo with respect to the rules and processes of the House. That would be a totally selfish attitude.

I find it difficult to accept the position of Members of Parliament who state that unless they agree, unless they have the rules the way they want them to be, they will withhold consent and thereby prevent the unanimity with respect to the Standing Orders that we all desire.

The Government has not only the mandate to act, it has the responsibility to act. That responsibility is not just to Members of the House of Commons, but to all Canadians.

When we consider the changes that are brought about through this motion, I think any Member of the House of Commons—particularly the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who has pored over the rules of the House day after day, time after time—realize and recognize that the current rules do not form a perfect document. Change is necessary and desirable.

For example, I find fault with the current rules that relate to legislative committees. I think they are a misconception of the work and mandate of a legislative committee. I do not believe they provide anything positive in terms of the improvement in the processes and procedures in dealing with Public Bills before the House of Commons. I believe that change is essential.

I particularly have objection to the manner in which Private Members' Business is now carried out in the House of Commons. Anyone who suggests that it is not in the interests of all Members of the House and the Canadian public generally who are interested in parliamentary affairs to limit speeches in the House of Commons, to have sensible timing of debate so that debate cannot be protracted beyond all reasonable limits, is not taking his or her duties as a parliamentarian seriously.

I suggest that every poll that has been taken, every public opinion that has been expressed, has contained the complaint that the House of Commons delays and takes dilatory action with respect to matters before the House of Commons. That can be justified sometimes in order to attract public attention to a particular matter, but it has become the rule in the House of Commons to delay and use delaying tactics. The result is that the public suffers. Members of the House of Commons are paid to be here and the public awaits our action. It is the public that hopefully benefits from parliamentary action. Therefore, we do ourselves and the people of Canada no justice when we employ dilatory tactics. Any rule that is intended to stop and desist from this practice must have some benefit.

During the last months we have seen the provisions with respect to petitions misused, if not abused. I do not mean to cast any aspersions on particular Members, because a Member is entitled to use the rules as they exist. They are entitled to the technicalities of the law, but at the same time the Government has the obligation to remove mischief in the rules if it is preventing the ordinary transaction of business in the House of Commons.

In summary, I believe that is the point of the motion. It brings to a head the matter that has been long delayed over a three and a half year period. The House has failed to achieve the desired unanimity and it is time for the Government to act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN HUMAN PERSONS

The House resumed from Thursday, April 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mitges:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Constitution Act, 1982, to include unborn human persons, and that the Governor General issue a Proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada to amend section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights so that it reads as follows;

"7. Everyone including a human foetus or unborn being has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice."

And the amendment of Mr. Domm:

That the motion be amended in the paragraph numbered 7 in the English version, by adding immediately after the word "unborn" the word "human".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the motion was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) had the floor, with one minute left. He is not present so I will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on this very important motion. Protection for the unborn and the laws relating to abortion are issues on which fundamentally differing and opposing views are strongly and genuinely held by many Canadians. In view of the lack of consensus for major change in the abortion law, and because the existing law strikes an acceptable balance for Canadians who hold opposing views, it is the Government's position that it would be inappropriate to bring forth such an amendment.

Section 7 of the Charter is the broadest and most general of the guarantees of legal rights. It guarantees to everyone the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. The Supreme Court of Canada has interpreted Section 7 as giving the courts authority to assess the substantive as well as the procedural content of our laws.

Not long after the Charter came into force, those provisions of the Criminal Code providing for abortions under certain circumstances were challenged in the Saskatchewan courts by Mr. Joe Borowski. After a very thorough analysis of the law, the Saskatchewan Court of Queen's Bench ruled that Section 7 of the Charter did not provide protection for the unborn and that the term "everyone" in Section 7 did not include unborn human beings. Recently, the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal upheld this decision. Mr. Borowski may now appeal the decision to the Supreme Court of Canada.

From quite a different perspective, Section 7 of the Charter has been invoked by Dr. Henry Morgentaler in an attempt to assert that the Criminal Code provisions on abortion conflict with the mother's rights to life, liberty and security of the person. The issues raised in this case have been argued before the Supreme Court of Canada and we are awaiting its decision. As Members will observe, the effect of the Charter guarantees on the law in this area has not yet been determined by the Supreme Court of Canada. Therefore, quite apart from the substantive policy concerns, it would be inappropriate to move in this area without having had the benefit of the Supreme Court's final determination in this regard.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member calls upon the Government to give consideration to amend the Constitution to provide protection for the unborn. Such an amendment would clearly affect the legislative powers of the provinces and the constitutional amending formula would therefore apply. The current constitutional amending formula provides that such an amendment would have to be authorized by resolutions of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assemblies of two-thirds of the provinces having 50 per cent of the population of all the provinces.

Canada's First Ministers have agreed to a schedule of discussions for amendments to the Constitution. This issue has not been scheduled for consideration and it is unlikely that a consensus could be obtained either for the inclusion of this issue in the discussions or for its subsequent adoption.

In my opinion, this is not a proper way to initiate a constitutional amendment with far reaching and significant ramifications. Much work needs to be done before such an amendment could be considered. We would need to determine, first of all, what the implications are for a number of laws and practices which currently exist. The laws relating to abortion would perhaps be most directly affected, but we must also look at other laws relating to children and the provision of medical care.

Second, we would need to approach the provinces and determine if there is support for such an amendment. The Constitution cannot be amended simply because the federal Government thinks it is desirable. Instead, the terms of any amendment must be worked out in close consultation with the Governments of the provinces.

I would interject here, Madam Speaker, that that is exactly what is going on as we speak today.

Those who support this motion must carefully consider the implications of such a resolution. The most immediate effect of the proposed amendment would be on the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to abortion, but it is unclear what the larger effect of such a Charter amendment would be. Presumably, if the Charter were to be amended, abortions could not be undertaken unless the principles of fundamental justice have been observed in relation to the interests of the unborn human being. Also, the principles of fundamental justice would have to be observed in relation to the interests of the mother since the current criterion for abortion is a demonstration of danger to the life or health of the mother.

What would the principles of fundamental justice include in such a case? According to the Supreme Court of Canada, Section 7 of the Charter provides a basis to review the substantive content of laws as well as the procedural aspects. If this amendment to the Charter is enacted, the substantive content of the Criminal Code provisions on abortion, and their impact on the life, liberty and security of the person of both the foetus and the mother, could very well be at issue. So would the procedures for determining if an abortion should be performed. The courts would be called upon to determine whether these procedures are consistent with the principles of fundamental justice for both the foetus and the mother.

There are also a number of questions about the effect of the proposed amendment on our therapeutic abortion laws which have not been answered. For example, are the current therapeutic abortion committees an appropriate procedural safeguard for constitutional purposes? Would we need a court? Would we need to provide a mechanism for independent representation of the foetus before such committees? If so, what would that be and how would a person represent the interests of the foetus? Given the serious time constraints, what procedures would be necessary to adequately protect the interests of the mother as well as the foetus?

I believe that these and many other unanswered questions must be considered prior to initiating any amendment to the Charter to give protection to the unborn. At the present time, the law seeks to draw a balance between the interests of the mother and the foetus. Would the balancing of interests continue, and if so, what sort of constitutional protection for the rights of the unborn would be best?

In addition to the effect that this amendment might have on the laws relating to abortion, there are a great variety of laws relating to children and the health of mothers which might be affected. The resolution would provide a guarantee of security of the person for unborn human beings. Does this mean that those acting on behalf of the unborn child could prevent a pregnant mother from engaging in acts which might be harmful to the foetus such as smoking, drinking or eating improperly? How would such protections be enforced?

Before we could agree to amend Section 7, we would have to consider carefully the effect of such an amendment on our laws and practices. We would have to give the provinces the time to consider the implications of such an amendment.

In summary, I do not think that this is the time to approve such a motion. Much work remains to be done before we could consider a resolution to provide constitutional protection for the rights of the unborn. Even proponents of this objective have unresolved concerns. For example, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops has not endorsed this motion as the most suitable means to implement the right to life of the foetus. Moreover, the interpretation of Section 7 of the Charter, as it relates to the rights of the unborn, is still before the courts. We should await the definitive word of the courts before considering changes to the Charter.

The legal implications of such an amendment require further consideration at both the federal and provincial levels. Were we to proceed, we would have to know the effect of such an amendment on existing laws and practices. This would enable us to put new laws in place and to frame the constitutional amendment in a way that would best achieve our objectives. There is an appropriate process for constitutional amendment. It relies upon close consultation with the provinces and their agreement with the amendment. That is our Canadian tradition, one which continues to serve us well.

The Hon. Member has proposed a very important matter for debate, something about which all Canadians have deep beliefs and strongly held convictions. Although the Government feels it is inappropriate to consider amendments to the laws dealing with therapeutic abortion now, the debate on this motion has been an important airing of views.

• (1710)

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, may I say to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that I think he brought out a great many of the complications that would arise legally and in respect of other Acts should this motion pass. I hope that all Hon. Members listened thoughtfully and carefully to the incredible number of complications which he showed would occur if this motion were to pass. I will address other aspects of the motion, but I wanted to mention first how important I think the contribution of the Hon. Member were.

As we all know, the real intent of the motion is to outlaw all therapeutic abortions and effectively return abortions to the back alleys. The foetus as an unborn human person is what the motion is all about. I agree with the Hon. Member who has just spoken that it would be useful to see what the courts finally determine on this issue.

I would like to refer to the Reverend Tom Harpur who, as I think all Members will know, writes a regular column in The Toronto Star. I wish to refer to an article he wrote on April 26, 1987, in which he refers to "the oft-repeated slander that abortion is murder." He also states:

> It is time to challenge directly the sloppy thinking that jumps from saying a fetus is a potential human being or a human-being-in-process to saying it is already a human being or a person.
> Potentialities are indeed important, but they emphatically do not have the same value as actualities.
> In our Western morality, people have an ultimate value. Fetuses have value but not an equal value with actual persons.
> Specifically, they do not have the ultimate value of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Harpur then goes on to quote, surprisingly, a conservative fundamentalist scholar, W. A. Criswell, in this matter of emphasizing the relative value of the foetus as contrasted with the ultimate value of the woman. Professor Criswell wrote:

> I have always felt that it was only after a child was born and had life separate from its mother that it became an individual person. And it has always, therefore, seemed to me that what is best for the mother and the future should be allowed.

Finally, Mr. Harpur's article points out that according to the Bible what makes us persons is:

> —our God-like ability and responsibility to make hard choices, our capacity for relationships, and our powers of self-transcendence and self-awareness.
> This description is applicable to the pregnant woman in a way and in a depth that is simply not true of the fetus.
> There must be good reasons for terminating a pregnancy. But it is part of our freedom and responsibility as persons to make the ultimate decision about these ourselves.
> To compel a woman to bear a child against her will or to force her to abide by what others define as adequate or inadequate reasons for an abortion, is a form of naked, authoritarian violence.
> It is a denial of God's call to her to be a fully adult person taking responsibility for what is best for her own life and that of her family.

In practice, we are rapidly coming to a position of denying access to women to therapeutic abortions. It is shocking that in Prince Edward Island it is not possible to get a therapeutic abortion, and it is practically impossible in Newfoundland. In a letter received from a Dr. R. C. Gustafson of Kamloops, he points out that it is becoming clear that women in the whole of the southern interior of British Columbia are going to be denied equal access to safe therapeutic abortions. I only wish that there were time to read his full letter—

Mr. Scowen: Go ahead.

Ms. Jewett: If Hon. Members will give me unanimous consent I will read the whole letter.

The main point he makes in his letter is that the attempts by hospital boards to abolish therapeutic abortion committees are actually contrary to the requirements of both the Criminal Code and the Canada Health Act. They are allowing the relevant section of the Criminal Code to be restricted by lesser jurisdictions and the intent of the Canada Health Act to be flagrantly violated.

The Canada Health Act, as Hon. Members will recall since we passed it unanimously, forcefully promoted the principle of unimpeded and equitable access to health care free from constraints such as user fees or extra billing. Obliging a woman to go from the southern interior of British Columbia to Vancouver or to Washington State is the equivalent of user fees or extra billing, as Dr. Gustafson points out.

He ends his letter, a letter he sent to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), with these words: "No less an issue than the humane and equitable provision of health care to women is at stake."

Ultimately, then, the matter is for a woman and her physician to determine. It is interesting that this was so fully recognized in a recent poll in British Columbia. Indeed, if one considers the poll carefully one will see that should this motion pass and should the Government take it up and should there be an attempt to amend the Constitution to abolish abortion, then I do not think the amendment will get very far in British Columbia.

The poll to which I refer is the first conducted in five years in B.C. by United Communications Research on Lower Mainland. The results of the poll were aired on B.C. TV on the evening of May 21, 1987. With respect to the question about the decision on abortion being up to a woman and her doctor, 87 per cent agreed while only 12 per cent disagreed. Some 87 per cent of British Columbians in the Lower Mainland said that abortion was a matter to be determined by a woman and her doctor. There was hardly any difference between the two major political Parties. Members of the Social Credit Party were 82 per cent agreed while 17 per cent disagreed. In the New Democratic Party 91 per cent agreed while 8 per cent disagreed.

I would like to conclude my comments by reading from a letter from the Vancouver branch of the YWCA which reflects not only the views of the Young Women's Christian Association in British Columbia but throughout Canada. The letter states in part:

> The YWCA membership reflects our multicultural pluralistic society with its wide variety of accepted religions, political beliefs and life styles. Our purpose impels us to openness and understanding of the principles and values of others. As an organization we support the individual right to freedom of choice for women on a large range of issues affecting our lives.
> This freedom of choice extends to our position on reproductive rights and the right of a women to self determination regarding unwanted pregnancies. We believe that the discussion of pregnancy and its continuation or cessation should be a private matter of individual conscience decided by a woman and her physician.

● (1720)

Let us not return to abortion on the back streets. Let us think again of Tom Harpur's words:

> To compel a woman to bear a child against her will or to force her to abide by what others define as adequate or inadequate reasons for an abortion, is a form of naked, authoritarian violence.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Madam Speaker, as a women and a parliamentarian, I am of course particularly interested in the motion by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) concerning a proposal to amend Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as follows, and I quote:

> —a human foetus or unborn unbeing has the right to life, liberty and security of the person;

Madam Speaker, 110 residents in my riding have sent me form letters in which they ask me to support this motion. I have taken a very careful look at the procedure used by the Hon. Member which, although in itself quite commendable, and the Hon. Member is indeed to be commended on his initiative, is indirectly an attempt to deal with the abortion issue.

Madam Speaker, in my humble opinion, the very principle of this motion contradicts the same Charter of Rights and Freedoms the Hon. Member would have amended. How could the Charter, thus amended to include fetal rights, be used before the courts who would have to deal with an issue of this nature? Are the rights of the pregnant mother less important than those of the unborn child, and vice versa? How, Madam Speaker, will we protect the rights of the unborn child? Will there be court injunctions on a woman's uterus? Another example, Madam Speaker. If we have two spouses, one of whom wants the pregnancy to come to term while the other does not, what happens? An injunction would have to be granted to one of the spouses, but how do we carry out the injunction? Would there be prisons for pregnant women?

Madam Speaker, this may seem rather ridiculous, but it is exactly the kind of situation this motion brings to mind. Madam Speaker, adopting this motion would make women the slaves of their reproductive organs and expose them to court actions by any group acting to protect the interests of the foetus.

Madam Speaker, should the courts or legislation that would arise from this amendment to the Charter order a mother not to smoke, not to drink, not to eat this or that, not to practise certain sports, not to do this or do that, if the neighbours happen to think the mother's habits are endangering the health of the foetus?

Let us be logical with ourselves, Madam Speaker. I beseech my colleagues in this House to vote against a motion which in effect is impractical, inapplicable, and unrealistic, a motion which in my humble opinion misses the real point. What our Parliament should be debating today is the situation of thousands of children who are presently being abused, who are deprived of the care they deserve, abandoned children, children who are hungry and cold. Those children, Madam Speaker, should be protected. Our time should be spent developing a true family policy, a policy concerned with the prevention and support that the State should be bringing to families or women pregnant with an unwanted child, in order to help those women, through adequate action, keep their child until he or she is born instead of having an abortion.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, this motion hits squarely at the autonomy, the dignity and the safety of women in Canada, and I shall therefore vote against that motion for all the reasons I have mentioned, while hoping that the Government and every concerned Canadian man and woman will strive together to develop a true family policy in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, the Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) should be congratulated for bringing this motion before the House. The Government should certainly be congratulated for having changed the rules to allow such a debate.

This is a very contentious issue. I sought input from my constituents and asked them the following question:

> There are a number of questions; cost, use of medical talent and space, falling birth rates . . . and many others; but none addresses the central question—is the foetus a human life?

I received a number of replies, some of which I would like to read into the record. These are the "no" replies, if I may call them that. One reads:

> What I do if I miss my period is my business and not the business of government—lawyers or clergy.

That is a very direct response. Another reads:

> "Is a foetus a human life" is not the central question, it is the central excuse. Abortion has been going on for thousands of years and will continue to go on for thousands of years—nothing will stop it— "back alley butchers" will be sought out or self induced abortion methods will be used—more women and girls will die impaled on knitting needles or will poison themselves with Drano.

The last "no" response which I will read into the record says:

> Firstly, while you stated that your belief is that abortion is a moral issue, I contend that it is a religious one since the premise that abortion is murder depends on whether or not the fetus has a soul. If, for instance, I believe that the soul does not enter into the body until sometime after a viable birth, and you believe that it happens at the moment of conception, and neither of us . . . can present absolute proof, then, it must be accepted that this is a religious matter. Therefore for you . . . to force your belief on me . . . is a violation of my rights and therefore unconstitutional. In other words, it is not your right to stop me from having an abortion—it is not my right to make you have one!!!

This writer goes on to say:

> It is no argument to point out that the fetus is a living organism therefore it is wrong to stop its growth . . . . Sperm and ovum are living cells but there is no need to confer citizenship on them . . . . I am also aware that our present birth rate is inadequate to support our economy and that immigration will become a necessity. If Canadians are not happy—with this alternative, then maybe we have to look at why women are choosing not to have children. To force them to have children is untenable—

Those were the "nos". I will read the responses of some of those who believe in this legislation. One response reads:

> In vitro fertilization has given us irrefutable scientific evidence of the fact that life begins at conception.
> Your life and mine can be commenced in a dish in a laboratory—is a human womb really necessary to bring a baby to a viable point? Yes, from conception onward, all that is added is oxygen and nutrition. Everything we are now, we were then. The only thing that has changed is the place of residence from the womb to the world.

Another "yes" response reads:

I also do not know whether a foetus is a human life. However this does not prevent me from forming a belief based on the available information. I strongly believe that human life begins at conception—for those who disagree I have a question—Can you afford to be wrong?

A third reply reads:

Women are screaming "I have a right to control my body". Let me say as a woman, that I have a "right" to say no before jumping in the sack with someone. That is my ultimate control over my body—when I choose—to engage in—intercourse and a child is conceived—there is where my rights end and the right of another life begins.

• (1730)

Of the correspondence which I received—and there were in excess of 1,700 letters—the most touching and heart-warming letter was one from a nurse. I should like to quote it:

As a nurse working with first and second trimester abortions, I would like to make you aware of some concerns I, and also my colleagues, have.

Abortions are legal here up to 20 weeks gestation. They are done by injecting the amniotic fluid with digoxin—to kill the baby, and prostaglandin—to induce labour. The woman then delivers a dead baby. Many of these foetuses are larger than those being cared for in intensive care—dates are very unsure sometimes and abortions are done past 20 weeks . . . On Wednesday, 17 December, someone at the lab got fed up and sent back a foetus which was over 500 grams (or viable weight) and it had to have a death certificate filled out. The weight on the lab report was 640 grams. The weight on the report for vital statistics read 560 grams.

Before extra billing was banned, we saw many foetuses larger than this—

The abortion committee approves all requests. The diagnosis is always given as depression . . . For my one and a half years here I have seen only one abortion done because of foetal abnormalities and none done for medical reasons of the mother's.

Aside from these moral and legal questions, second trimester abortions are very dangerous. The woman's body is not ready for labour and she often experiences severe pain . . . The placenta rarely delivers spontaneously and the woman bleeds profusely—

Another problem we have is that sometimes the doctor can't safely inject the woman so a procedure is done that results in a live birth. We are told to wrap this gasping, wriggling, crying infant, and leave it to die . . . One was born weighing one kilogram and was taken to intensive care but was left to die since it was an abortion.

This personal issue is a central issue to me. It deals with the sanctity of life. I cannot prove, nor can I disprove, whether or not a foetus has a soul.

I was amazed that my seat-mate from New Westminster—Coquitlam said that a mother had more rights than a child. Are we to wind up having first-class and second-class citizens? This bothers me.

I should like to draw an analogy. If I went hunting and saw a bush move, prudency would dictate that I should not start shooting into the bush in case it was not the animal I was hunting but another human being. That same sort of prudency dictates that we do not terminate foetuses unless we can absolutely, irreversibly prove that they are not human beings.

What we do in Government is to look after the disadvantaged. What can be more disadvantaged than a foetus?

As I read into the record earlier, let me repeat:

I strongly believe that human life begins at conception—for those who disagree I have a question—Can you afford to be wrong?

We cannot afford to be wrong. We do not know the answers. We have to say yes to this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, first I want to thank you for recognizing me. I will try to shorten my remarks because I realize that although we have little time left a number of Members would like to speak to this motion.

Madam Speaker, there was a time when charity was a virtue, but these days it has become an organization. There was a time as well when education was dispensed by a system, by institutions, schools, families, and by the Church. Oftentimes nowadays they have lost sight of certain values, and the Parliament of Canada is fully expected to fill the void created by undeveloped values.

Madam Speaker, I enjoy these theoretical debates because they enable me to discuss openly with people and, without accusing those who are for or against, or without making anyone feel guilty, I will vote against this motion because, as the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) said earlier, we are not necessarily speaking to the basic issue.

I see my colleague from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on the other side who stated in an interview somewhere that he had already changed his mind about capital punishment, and when I began the debate on capital punishment, Madam Speaker, I was like him, I was in favour of the death penalty.

I once asked myself this question: If, on the eve of the vote in the House of Commons, my son were killed in a bank robbery, would my vote necessarily be the same if, instead of being the victim, he were the killer? If I am not sure I would still vote the same way, I must forget my emotions and take a dispassionate view.

Madam Speaker, I am here because I want to try and build a better world. I won't make a criminal of my daughter if some day she says: Dad, I don't want this baby. Madam Speaker, I would do everything I could to prevent her. I would tell her: Isabelle, we can raise that baby, we will take care of it because it's your child. But, Madam Speaker, I would not let my daughter go to court with a bunch of lawyers, all because she would be considered to have committed a crime.

In fact, my only alternative, Madam Speaker, would be to dig into my pockets and give her some money and tell her to get an abortion in the United States. But I don't want to do that. I don't want to put people through a judicial system that would put a terrific burden of guilt on them. But I also think that using abortion as a means of contraception is absolutely degrading. Yes, degrading. However, legislation is not going to make abortion any less degrading. I find it depressing and repugnant. I can find nothing positive in that kind of outlook.

However, Madam Speaker, branding my children and your children as criminals is not going to help me build a better world for those children. I do not really like the implications of free choice but to me, the important thing is not to criminalize but to respect the choice someone has made, which may be a terrible choice but not criminal.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief submissions with regard to the motion before us. I intend to support the motion but, before commenting upon the reasons for supporting it, it is important to point out the inconsistency which is present with regard to some of those who intend to vote in favour of and some of those who intend to vote against the particular motion.

In my view life is sacred, regardless of what stage in life, whether it is before birth or after birth. It seems somewhat inconsistent for some of those who intend to vote for this particular motion, indeed the mover of the motion, to support capital punishment on the one hand and to be opposed to abortion on the other hand.

Similarly, a number of Members in the House, most notably in the New Democratic Party, are adamantly opposed to capital punishment—and some argue because human life is sacred—yet they appear to be unanimously in favour of abortion. There is a basic inconsistency in that logic.

In my view the central issue is: When does life begin? If we conclude that life begins after birth, then there is really no need for this particular amendment, because Section 7 of the Constitution provides that any person is entitled to life, liberty, and the other provisions in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In that event there is really no need to entrench the rights of the innocent unborn.

However, if we conclude that life begins at some moment before birth, it would follow that the unborn person, the foetus, should be entitled to each and every protection afforded to living human beings under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Why would one distinguish between an unborn and a living person when in the Constitution itself we do not distinguish between black and white? We do not distinguish between short and tall. We do not distinguish between an able-bodied human being and a disabled human being. We say that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies to every person. I should point out, Madam Speaker, that the Charter applies to those who are not Canadian citizens. Every person living in Canada is entitled to the protection of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. So we do not distinguish in the Constitution itself with regard to human beings.

Why would one distinguish between a living person and a foetus if one concludes that life begins before birth? The central issue, as far as I am concerned, is, when does life begin? On a balance of probabilities—I have come to the conclusion in my own mind—and I am basically voting according to my own morality and conscience on this issue, not necessarily reflecting the views of the majority of my constituents, if you will—that life begins at some point before birth. Whether that is one second before birth, three months before or nine months before birth, life begins, in my view, before birth.

Let me give an example of why I believe that life begins before birth. If a pregnant woman were to be shot and murdered on the eve of giving birth, and both the foetus and the mother were murdered, would you argue that the person who perpetrates that crime should be charged with one count of murder or two counts of murder? I would argue that the perpetrator of that crime should be charged with two murders, that of the mother and that of the foetus. One could argue about property rights to substantiate one's argument with regard to when life begins. As a parent, if I were to will my assets to my children, and let us assume that I died the day before my wife gave birth, would anyone suggest that that unborn child should not be entitled, by law, to a share of my estate or my assets? I would suggest that the unborn child in terms of property rights should be entitled to a part of that estate. I notice that Members opposite are heckling. They may disagree with where I stand, but I ask that they grant me the common courtesy of listening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I listened attentively when they spoke.

Unfortunately, we do not have an opportunity to speak at length. I know there are people on both sides of the House who intend to vote for and against this motion. I am appreciative of the fact that it is a free vote, at least as far as our Party is concerned and as far as the Government is concerned. I would ask that people in the House respect one another's point of view. I may disagree with those who believe in abortion who may be opposed to this motion, but I respect their points. I simply ask in return that they respect mine as a Member of Parliament. I am entitled to express my opinion and to vote this afternoon. I intend to vote for this resolution.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I am most pleased, as most Members are, to have the opportunity to speak on this important motion. It is an issue that is one of the most important to have come before the House during the years that I have been a Member. I believe it is a national scandal that we kill by abortion between 60,000 to 70,000 human beings. I commend the Hon. Member for Gray—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) for his courage, conviction and determination to bring this matter before the House.

The matter is difficult, contentious and, as a result, the debate has been emotional and at time acrimonious. It is a matter of deeply held principles, and there can be little compromise between those who are for abortion and those who oppose it. Those who oppose the motion and are for abortion believe that easy access to abortion is the right of women who wish to terminate an unwanted pregnancy. They believe the issue is a personal one for the woman involved. Those in favour of the motion—and I am one of those—believe, to put it bluntly, that abortion is murder.

That is a strong statement, and why do I make it, Madam Speaker? I believe that a human being with untold potential is present from the moment of conception. I believe that every human being has the right to life. I believe that no one and no Government has the right to take an innocent life—and I emphasize the word innocent—or to kill an innocent human being. A human being is present from the moment of conception. This is a fact affirmed by modern science. It is a fact that can be proved genetically and was accepted as fact by the World Council on Abortion held in Washington in 1967.

From the moment of conception onward, there is human life. The first cell is a being. It is alive. It is an individual and it is human. It is not a carrot or a vegetable. It is not a cat. It is not an animal. What is conceived from human is human. The foetus is a human being with potential. It has all the genetic information and the developmental dynamism needed to become a fully developed human adult. Even a newborn baby is still mostly potential. It is important to remember that every human being is and remains a human being with potential. We all continue to grow and mature. Only death ends the process of growth which begins at conception.

Let me examine briefly some of the arguments used by pro-abortionists who support easy access to abortion. It is argued that a woman has control over her body and it is her choice alone whether to abort that pregnancy or to carry the child through to birth. There is undoubtedly truth in the statement that we all have or should have control over our own bodies. But even here there are caveats.

No society has condoned self-mutilation and no society has condoned suicide as a universal good. The fact remains that we are stewards, not owners of our bodies and our life. As stewards we have a duty to promote and preserve life and health. We are not the cause of our own existence and must not be the direct cause of the cessation of that existence, be it our own or someone else's.

The issue, of course, is whether the unborn child is a part of the mother, a part of her body such as, for instance, a wart. Or is it a separate human being distinct from the mother altogether, although of course depending upon her? If it is only a bunch of tissue, everyone would agree that the mother could remove that tissue at will for reasons of health. However, I submit that the evidence is clear that the foetus and unborn child is a separate being. Biological evidence shows that from the moment of conception onward, the embryo or foetus is a unique and distinct individual, a living human being having its own distinct genetic make-up different from that of the mother and the father.

The embryo has its own organs, its own growth dynamism, its own circulatory system and its own functions. Even the placenta is not part of the mother. It is an organ of the baby, and while the blood of the mother and baby meet, they do not mix but are kept separate by the placental membrane.

No one has the right to kill that human being which is in the foetus any more than a criminal has the right to kill innocent people. For the state to forbid abortion is no more an invasion of a woman's privacy than it would be an invasion of privacy to prevent a criminal from killing innocent human beings.

Again, it has been argued that abortion should be allowed because it is not reasonable to force a woman who has been raped or becomes pregnant incestuously to bear the child for the full term and subsequently give birth to the child. My reply is that I do not understand how killing the innocent child solves the problems of rape or incest.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, it is really too bad we will not have enough time for a complete debate on this motion. Actually, I have some doubts as to the relevance of the comments that were made. There has been no mention of the Constitution. I thought that the prupose of the motion was to include the word "foetus" in the Constitution. This has nothing to do with the life of a child or whatever . . . I don't think we are being relevant here, Madam Speaker. We have not been addressing the subject, and I would ask for more time so that we can do so.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Under the Standing Order I have no choice but to interrupt the debate at this time.

It being 5.51 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the time allowed for the consideration of this motion has now expired. Therefore, the question is as follows:

[English]

The question is on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

[Translation]

And the bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: As this is a historical vote, Madam Speaker, I think we should innovate. I suggest that you ask for unanimous consent——that unanimous consent be sought to proceed with the vote beginning with the mover of the motion and proceeding on that same side of the House row by row and then coming to the other side to finish the vote. It would be row by row starting with the mover of the motion.

• (1800)

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, in keeping with parliamentary reform I suggest that this is a Private Members' motion and which side of the House a person is on should have no bearing on the vote. I suggest we take it by the easiest method possible for the Table.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House in agreement that the division be taken by rows?

• (1810)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will proceed as follows: As is customary, Hon. Members in favour of the motion will be asked to indicate their position first, followed by Hon. Members who are opposed.

I will ask all Members in the first row to my right who are in favour of the motion to rise together, whereupon their names will be called by a Clerk, beginning with the Hon. Member seated closest to the Chair. When the name of a Member in the row has been called and recorded, that Member will resume his or her seat.

When the taking of the names of Hon. Members in the first row to my right has been completed, I will ask Members in the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows on my right to proceed in a similar manner.

I will then ask Members in the first row to my left, regardless of their Party affiliation, who are in favour of the motion to rise and remain standing until their names have been called. We will carry on similarly with other rows on my left.

Once the votes of Hon. Members supporting the motions have been completed in this manner, I will then invite Hon. Members in the first row to my right who are opposed to the motion to rise. I will proceed similarly through the remaining rows to my right and follow the same procedure for Hon. Members to my left.

It bears repetition that the taking of names of Hon. Members in every row will begin with the Hon. Members seated closest to the Chair and will continue consecutively to the far end of the row. This will be so to my right, regardless of rank. It will be so to my left, regardless of rank or Party affiliation.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Domm), which was negatived on the following division:

The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I abstained from voting on the main motion because as it reads now if one were to vote in favour of it one would not allow the abortion of a horse or a cat. That is why I supported the amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. If the Hon. Member, or any other Hon. Member, has a point of order to raise I will listen to it after the count has been announced.

And the Clerk having announced the result of the vote:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the House adjourns I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader what business will be called tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I realize that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has risen on a point of order. I do not know if anyone has heard him, the Chair has not.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, may I take this opportunity to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader what will be the order of business tomorrow? Could he inform us what bill or motion or resolution we will be considering?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, tomorrow the House will continue debate on the motion which was before it today. We are meeting in an effort to expedite the process. The negotiations which have taken place to date among the Parties have been helpful. I expect to continue to make progress.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6.34 p.m., the motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

THE LATE PRIME MINISTER BARROW OF BARBADOS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like very briefly to indicate to the House my very deep personal sorrow and that of my wife at the passing of Prime Minister Barrow on the Island nation of Barbados. May I take this opportunity to join with you, Sir, and the Speaker of the Senate in extending our own family's deepest condolences to the family of the late Prime Minister Barrow.

• (1405)

May I say to my colleagues that Prime Minister Barrow was a great Commonwealth parliamentarian, a great Caribbeanist, a great strength for the eastern Caribbean states, and a great source of strength to democracy in that part of the world. The loss of his presence will be deeply regretted by those who pursue democracy, by those who have a compassion for their people, and by those who look to the Caribbean as it grows and strengthens.

Many will recall that Prime Minister Barrow was the father of confederation of the eastern Caribbean states, although it did not live in the sense that our Confederation lives and, indeed, is reborn today. Nevertheless, the path that he carved out for those island nations will be long remembered and cherished by all of those who were there and by all of those of Caribbean descent, particularly those of Barbadian descent here in the great country of Canada.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE CANADA—SUPPORT FOR EARLY RETIREMENT OPTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, air traffic controllers, members of the Armed Forces and RCMP officers are all entitled to take early retirement. I think this is an entirely appropriate recognition of the demanding nature of their jobs and the importance of the services they provide. But I remind the House of another group of workers who perform an equally dangerous, stressful and important job and who do not now have the option of early retirement.

I refer of course to the employees of Correctional Service Canada about whom there seems to be a consensus in this House that they ought to have the opportunity for early retirement pursuant to the unanimous recommendations of the Sub-Committee on Penitentiaries 10 years ago. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) has written to the National President of the Union of Solicitor General Employees promising his support for the early retirement option. I know a number of my colleagues on this side of the House have indicated their support and have urged the Government to act.

Frankly, I do not understand the problem. There is substantial agreement in the House that Correctional Service employees deserve to have the option of early retirement open to them. This question is one which could be dealt with quickly and easily. The ball is now in the Government's court. I urge the Government to introduce the appropriate legislation as quickly as possible.

Canada's correctional workers have waited long enough.

NECESSITY TO PROTECT WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, Canadians enjoy some of the most beautiful lakes and rivers in the world. With less than 1 per cent of the world's population Canada contains as much as 25 per cent of the global supply of fresh water.

All of us derive benefit from Canada's abundance of water assets. During Environment Week we should be especially mindful of the need for adequate protection of these resources.

In the past we were as a people not as vigilant as we should have been concerning the pollution of our waterways. But we can look ahead for a better future if we ensure sound water management.

Much has been done already. At the federal level, agreements with the United States are contributing to protection against the ravages of industrial pollution. In many of our communities, urban and rural, programs have been enacted in recent years to undo the damage caused and to clean some of our lakes, rivers and canals.

We must do more. It is up to all of us.

REFUGEES

CRITICISM OF PROVISIONS OF BILL C-55

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, recent public opinion polls on refugee policy show that Canadians are maintaining their traditional open-mindedness.

Most believe that Canada should continue to accept refugees in numbers appropriate to our ability to assist them to establish themselves and their families in our country.

Polls also indicate that Canadians want the Government to deal with the problems created by the backlog in our outmoded refugee determination process. But is the Government's Bill C-55 the right response? The Bill proposes pre-selection at our borders, a system which some suspect as being aimed more at finding reasons to send refugees elsewhere than at assessing the legitimacy of refugee claims.

The Bill proposes establishing a list of so-called safe countries for this purpose, but it does not explain on what criteria the list is to be set up, how quickly it can be revised in response to changing world events, or how the Government can guarantee safety in another country.

Clearing the backlog will, in itself, discourage abuse of Canada's refugee determination process and make it easier to serve and assist genuine refugees. Canadians, who were the proud recipients of the United Nations Nansen Medal for their enlightened approach to the world refugee crisis, must think twice about Bill C-55.

MUNICIPALITIES

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF FEDERATION OF CANADIAN MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday last delegates from across Canada began arriving in Ottawa to attend the Federation of Canadian Municipalities' Fiftieth Annual Conference which ends today.

Over 900 delegates representing 402 municipalities are attending the conference celebrating the theme "A golden past and a brilliant future". They have come from as far away and as diverse places as the District of West Vancouver in the West, St. John's in the East, and, of course, Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

The delegates are addressing important municipal issues, ranging from liability insurance to water infrastructure, to privatization in municipal government.

We congratulate these delegates on their commitment to their communities and their country. They and their predecessors have travelled to similar conferences over the past 50 years to discuss municipal issues, initiate ideas and to build on those ideas. These are the people who have led Canadian municipalities to a golden past. We welcome them to Ottawa and encourage them in building a brilliant future.

FISHERIES

CREATION OF SPORT FISHING CORRIDOR IN RIVERS INLET AREA OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to a serious matter. It is the creation of an exclusive sport fishing corridor in the Rivers Inlet area, a previous commercial fishing area.

This action was unilaterally taken by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, contrary to the recommendation of the Central Coast Advisory Board.

This sets a dangerous precedent and process under way, where one or two local individuals can override the wishes of the majority of the community and the established advisory boards. I call on the Minister to revoke the sport fishing corridor in the Rivers Inlet area and request the Central Coast Advisory Board, with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, to work out an acceptable fishing plan for the area.

TRIBUTE TO RIGHT HON. PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): In 1534, Mr. Speaker, European explorator Jacques Cartier left Saint-Malo in France and sailed across the Atlantic on his way to become the storied discoverer of Canada. Soon after, French Europeans settlers were joined by English Europeans. It took only a few centuries for the descendants of these two great peoples to cross the whole Canadian continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific to create a huge new country whose population swelled with the arrival of many nationals from other countries.

In 1867 the Fathers of Confederation gathered in Charlottetown to witness a major constitutional event. Thanks to the good will of all regions of Canada their agreement prevailed until 1982, but the 1982 agreement turned out to be incomplete.

Today, June 3, 1987, ten Provincial Premiers representing four different political Parties have agreed on a historic definition of Canada. It is a consensus with history, with geography, with the economy, with our cultures, and with our various ethnic communities. Today, Mr. Speaker, we pay tribute to the architect of this event, to Canada's statesman, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

QUEBEC'S PARTICIPATION—CONGRATULATIONS TO ARCHITECTS OF ACCORD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as Quebecers and Canadians I think we can rejoice in the constitutional accord which paved the way for Quebec's endorsing of the Canadian Constitution last evening or this morning.

And like everyone else, I should think, I extend my congratulations to the Premier of Quebec, the Hon. Robert Bourassa, and to Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Rémillard who, since the 1985 elections, has been criss-crossing the country in an attempt to convince the other Provincial Premiers that Quebec should be urged to join the Constitution.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I also congratulate the Provincial Premiers who at last have come to appreciate the Canadian reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I also want to congratulate the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) for being the first leader in Canada to demonstrate open-mindedness with respect to Quebec's participation in the Canadian Constitution.

SIGNIFICANCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, today the most important amendment since the patriation of our Constitution was signed.

Mr. Speaker, in concrete terms this means that Quebec has returned to the Canadian constitutional fold and that our Government has kept its promise to make Canada a united country, where the rights of English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians are respected.

For Quebec, it means that the province will be able to select and receive its own immigrants; to propose nominations for senators from Quebec; to propose nominations for the three judges representing one third of the Supreme Court; and to promote and protect the French character of that province, in addition to obtaining a non-derogation clause with respect to language rights.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time in our history, the right to financial compensation for opting out has been enshrined in the Constitution. A great victory for the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, today is a great day. It is the first day of a united and strong Canada, open to all and attuned to the needs of Canadians. A unique Canada in the image of its Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Speaker, no more confrontation and arrogance. Make way for positive action and a modern, united and generous Canada.

CHALLENGE '87

SEED PROGRAM—CATHOLIC YOUTH ORGANIZATION'S APPLICATION DENIED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am outraged to learn that the application of the Catholic Youth Organization to the Challenge '87 SEED program has been denied.

The CYO depends upon student summer employment programs to provide one-on-one programs for exceptional children whose disability prevents them from taking part in regular camping activities. This is the only summer outlet for exceptional children, particularly those with social and emotional disabilities and severe learning problems.

More than 100 disabled children will miss out on summer camp this year because of the Mulroney Government's decision to cut off funding to the CYO.

Indeed it is truly a sad day for Canada when the Conservative Government wants to reduce the deficit on the backs of disabled children. How quickly Rick Hansen's struggle is forgotten.

EXTRAORDINARY WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY PRIME MINISTER AND PROVINCIAL COUNTERPARTS

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I was and I am proud to be a Canadian, and from now on I will be even prouder.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers of the provinces have put in long hours of hard work to reach a consensus representing the various interests and cultures of this beautiful country of ours.

[English]

The naysayers, those "quick-blooming" critics of the last few days, were determined to undermine the political will for national reconciliation so strongly expressed in the last election. They even contradicted themselves.

However, in recognizing our differences and confirming our constitutional right to be different, this agreement to unite Canadians truly represents a superb best effort on the part of the Leaders of our Governments and particularly our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated that consultations and discussions would continue. In any case, as an English-speaking Canadian and a Quebecer, I would like to thank our leaders for their exceptional work, and I think we should all celebrate their outstanding success.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—NEGOTIATING TALENTS AND LEADERSHIP OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, as of today we can say that we have a real Canada, united, dynamic, stronger than ever thanks to the efforts of our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, who showed exceptional political know-how and a deep commitment to put an end to Quebec's constitutional isolation.

The Prime Minister and the ten Premiers, especially Quebec's Premier, Mr. Robert Bourassa, turned a page in this country's history, and Quebec's enthusiastic and honourable entry into the Constitution marks the beginning of a chapter that will allow us to build a new Canada for the coming decades. This Conservative Government proved capable of reaching an accord with ten provincial Governments representing four different parties, thereby meeting with courage, stamina and persistence the challenge of national reconciliation. This points to the negotiating and leadership abilities of our Prime Minister, who turned into a constitutional agreement the understanding in principle reached at Meech Lake.

Mr. Speaker, I feel great satisfaction today at being a Canadian and a Quebecer, and with the support of my constituents in Chambly, may I tell you, Mr. Prime Minister—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—PUBLIC HEARINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that he has lived a very significant event in the history of our country. When the Prime Minister of Canada comes over to shake my hand, I shake his hand, but before congratulating him we will want to study—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —the technical and legal language.

I want to ask a couple of questions about where we go from here. Both Premiers Pawley and Peterson suggested that there was a commitment to federal parliamentary hearings, House of Commons, Senate, or both, and public hearings, so that Canadians and parliamentarians can express their opinions.

Canadian Press quotes Premier Peterson as being happy with "plans for federal public hearings on the proposed constitutional changes". He said that provincial hearings may also be held.

Would the Prime Minister take the House into his confidence as to his commitment, if any was given, to the Premiers to hold public hearings and to allow the parliamentary process to operate in some detail?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think in a response the day after the original Accord at Meech Lake to a question from my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, I signalled the intention of the Government to have full debate, full participation, in the analysis of any accord that might emerge. Inasmuch as one has emerged, there is a pre-ordained parliamentary process that must be followed in regard to the House and I have signalled to the Premiers my intention to make full use of an appropriate parliamentary vehicle to ensure public participation in and consideration of this important matter.

RATIFICATION PROCESS—ACCEPTABILITY OF AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in commenting after the meeting this morning at which the 10 Premiers and the Prime Minister signed the Accord, Premier Peterson stressed, again according to the Canadian Press report, that from here on in the constitutional debate will be slow and methodical and, if the public hearings point out flaws in the deal, the First Ministers can meet again to make changes before Parliament and provincial Legislatures formally ratify the amendments.

During the Prime Minister's necessary absence the last two days, I put questions to his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, attempting to ascertain from him whether amendments would be acceptable in a parliamentary committee and whether the Government would look constructively at suggestions made both in this House, in the other place, and indeed by members of the public who may be deeply concerned with the process.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, over at the Conference Centre, the First Ministers signed an Accord, a provision of which was an undertaking by all of the First Ministers to bring forward the document to their respective Legislatures and, in my case, to the House of Commons, and to recommend it for acceptance by their respective Legislatures. In my case, it is my intention to bring forward the appropriate documents pursuant to the parliamentary requirements and I will bring them forward with the full recommendation that the House of Commons, after consideration, adopt the document in its entirety. I believe it represents a tremendous effort by 11 First Ministers over an extended period of time, and that would be my recommendation.

As I have just indicated, there will be an appropriate parliamentary hearing of this matter and that too is in train through the Deputy Prime Minister and will be part and parcel of this review.

PUBLIC HEARINGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's words do not exactly reflect the thinking of Premier Peterson of Ontario and Premier Pawley of Manitoba. The Prime Minister knows perfectly well that the Quebec National Assembly held public hearings on the agreement in principle concluded at Meech Lake on April 30. In the circumstances, could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that public hearings on today's Accord will also be held here on Parliament Hill, with sufficient latitude so that Canadians can express their views on the substance of the Accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of parliamentary hearings would be, of course, to invite Canadians to express their views on the substance of the Accord. As far as I am concerned, after living with this initiative for more than a year, I can only say that, as a parliamentarian, I would table the recommendation suggesting the adoption of the Accord by the Parliament of Canada. And we would then see what a parliamentary committee would do. In any case, if there is a commission of any kind, it will have a specific task, and we will wait for the results. As for my commitment and that of all the Premiers, it is to bring the resolution before our respective legislatures, with a recommandation for approval of the full text.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATIVE MEASURE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to be sure about what it is the Prime Minister has just said in a manner that was quite difficult to understand. Is he saying that the resolution will be introduced like any other government measure which members of the Conservative majority will be expected to support? Will it be a measure which is really a form of executive federalism, or will we have a form of federalism in which the Canadian people can participate within which government Members, like members of all Parties, will approach the hearings with an open mind about ways in which our Constitution can be carried forward from the achievement today of agreement by First Ministers to a consensus among the Canadian people?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what could be more in keeping with our parliamentary traditions than having the Government House Leader sit down with the House Leader of the Official Opposition to attempt to determine the appropriate manner of dealing with this, consistent with our parliamentary traditions. That is exactly what the House Leader of the Government will do.

LENGTH OF RATIFICATION PROCESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister about a statement made in the Senate on May 26 by the Senate Leader in which he expressed the personal opinion, as reported at page 1051 of Hansard, that it will be possible for all Legislatures to have passed these resolutions before the summer recess.

Was the Government Leader in the other place speaking for the Government, or is it an understanding that this process may and should take longer than one month?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I did not see that statement by the Government Leader in the Senate. However, I have just indicated my view to the Leader of the Opposition as to the appropriate manner in which it ought to be handled.

The day after there were a number of questions, including two very incisive ones from the Member for Saint-Denis. In response thereto I think I covered the matter quite clearly and signalled my intentions with regard to how we could proceed if an accord were concluded. An accord having been concluded, we will follow through.

CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—CREATION OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who indicated that the Government wants to hold hearings on the constitutional resolution. Have the Government and the provinces considered the possibility of having a committee that would include both federal and provincial Members, in other words, a truly national committee?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no formal consideration of that concept. In the course of our discussions, the idea may have been mentioned by some of the Premiers. For instance, the province of Manitoba, if I am not mistaken, has a special procedure in connection with certain "mandatory" parliamentary commissions. I believe the Manitoba Government has already made a formal commitment to set up a parliamentary committee in Winnipeg. Which means that this particular jurisdiction will necessarily be involved. Our intention would be, after consultation with the Deputy Prime Minister, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, to set up the appropriate mechanism for this House.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, from the Prime Minister's answer I am not quite sure whether he was ruling out the possibility of having, on such an issue, a departure from traditional processes which could include a committee with federal representatives and representatives from provinces who would conduct these hearings. I understand that the Prime Minister is leaving open to discussion this possibility to be dealt with by the House Leaders.

Has the Government given any final consideration to the question of when it plans to bring a resolution before Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our intention is to bring forward the resolution soon, but at the same time to have the Deputy Prime Minister negotiate with his colleagues with regard to the parliamentary mechanism about which we have been talking. It is our intention to have that parliamentary committee apply to the Parliament of Canada. That is our intention and there has been nothing at variance with that discussed with the Premiers.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a final question on the process. The Prime Minister says "soon". Does he mean by that later this week or, for example, next week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we just signed it this morning at about six o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Maybe we can do it this afternoon.

Mr. Mulroney: We would like to do it sooner rather than later.

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When we examine the precedents concerning constitutional amendments and the way Parliament dealt with them we realize that most of the time the amendments adopted had to do with technicalities, the wording, although there have been a few substantial amendments as well. Since the Prime Minister seems to be quite prepared to hold public hearings so that Canadians may have their say, I find it rather difficult to reconcile that with the statement he made a few moments ago when he said his objective was the integral adoption of the accord he has just made with the Provincial Premiers. This is why I wonder whether he is open to the idea of amendments so that Canadians may come here to attend these hearings in the full knowledge that their endeavours may bring results, and that they are not wasting their time by coming here to make representations to a parliamentary committee.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the thrust of my response was that I was making a commitment. My objective is to recommend the adoption of the document, and that is still my intention. We will introduce it with a straightforward recommendation that the House of Commons and the Senate adopt it as is because we believe that it is in the interest not only of Quebec but of Canada as a whole. That being said, I have already expressed our views with respect to the kind of parliamentary commission which might be appointed. We will see in due time what might come out of it.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, given his position I find it normal that the Prime Minister would introduce the resolution before the House with the objective or at least the intention of having it adopted without amendments. Still I want to get back to the possibility of amendments. Although he was pleased, Manitoba Premier Pawley did say the accord is not perfect. Right after the conference, the Prime Minister of Canada himself indicated how satisfied he was to have reached this agreement, yet he admitted it is not perfect. So, without asking the Government to commit itself with respect to amendments it is not yet aware of, we would seek the assurance that at least the Government is open to the suggestion that amendments might be proposed and adopted.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has been acknowledged by both sides that although the document is not perfect it does constitute a homogeneous entity, the result of the sustained and dedicated work of a great many people over several months now: is it not? So in these circumstances I am prepared to recommend it in full, as the other First Ministers are committed to do before their own legislative assemblies. Now then, I have already indicated that the leaders of the Government and of the Opposition will hold discussions on a parliamentary commission or instrument, and we will see what comes out of it. The Hon. Member indicates that he has no amendment to propose, that is normal today, we will see in due course.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT'S APPLICATION FOR COURT INJUNCTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. While very important talks were going on during the last number of hours with regard to improvements to Canada's Constitution, legal experts in British Columbia were saying that the Government of British Columbia has taken action which violated the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our Constitution by requesting an injunction which, among other things, would prohibit citizens from pointing out errors in the government of the province, prohibit the circulation of written material advocating study sessions for employees, and much, much more. Is the Minister aware of this unprecedented initiative taken by the Province of British Columbia?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, obviously my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Jelinek: Ask a question and you will get an answer.

Mr. Riis: Since the Minister is aware of this obvious violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —being aware of this, what actions has he taken? Has he made representations to his counterpart in the Government of British Columbia? If not, when does he plan to make those representations?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the legal action taken in British Columbia and I think I should let the courts make their own ruling.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, for over nine months now Members of Parliament have been trying to find out what the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is all about. The Government has made some vague and nebulous statements that: "It will address problems of regional disparity and co-ordinate federal efforts in Atlantic Canada". The only federal efforts we know about in Atlantic Canada have been cuts ever since this Government took power.

I ask the Prime Minister why the Government has been so secretive about this program?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baker: Why has it refused to give any information at all about this program even to businessmen who require a year or two's advance notice in order to plan? Does the Government believe in the premise that anticipation is greater than realization? It has been over nine months since it was conceived. Isn't it about time you delivered?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would withdraw those sexist remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend mentions his concern about the secretive nature. This has been very public. There were meetings with the Atlantic Premiers. I went to Charlottetown for a public meeting with them. I met with them again in Vancouver after the First Ministers' Conference. There was a meeting this morning involving Senator Murray after the Constitutional Conference, and there is one going on now. If my hon. friend is in St. John's on Saturday, he will find out a lot more.

Mr. Baker: I will be there for the Liberal leadership convention, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Way to go, George.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question. Thank you.

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion said recently that multi millions of dollars have been removed from Atlantic Canada since this Government took office. There have been cuts in transfer payments. There have been cuts in programs. The Fisheries Improvement Loans Program is about to end. It will finish at the end of this month after 33 years in Atlantic Canada, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is scared to announce it.

I ask the Prime Minister will the amount of money which will be put into this new program at least match what has been removed by this very Government in the past two years? Will that amount of money be matched? If it will not be, how can the Government have the audacity to promise Canadians over and over that this will address the regional disparity problems of eastern Canada? You can't eat promises. Where is the beef?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that the Hon. Member is going to be in St. John's on Saturday. I want him to know that he has my vote.

Mr. Gauthier: It is his brother who is running.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, I will vote for the family.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Baker's dozen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: This is what happens when he stays up all night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I just want to tell my hon. friend something that, of course, he knows. There have been no cut-backs at all in the amounts allocated to Atlantic Canada. On the contrary, there has been a very, very sizable increase. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will represent an even further increase not only of opportunity, but of real dollars, to the benefit of Atlantic Canadians, which is something which has been long overdue by Governments over many, many years. It is an effort to reach out and to work with Atlantic Canadians with their participation, having designed the programs and mechanisms which will allow Atlantic Canadians a real role in the decision-making process which affects their lives.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

MAYORS' REQUEST TO MEET PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The mayors of 14 of Canada's largest municipalities have written to you, asking that they have the opportunity to meet with you—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Angus: Sorry. Through you, Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister asks whether he is prepared to meet with the mayors of 14 municipalities in Canada who want to ask him to reconsider federal funding or federal participation in rebuilding our aging cities. Will he meet with those mayors?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the Hon. Member that I have personally met with representatives from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities on a number of occasions over the past two and a half years where this matter has come up. I have been very clear with them as to the position of the Government. We are in a position of major fiscal restraint. What the municipalities are asking us to do is to share with the provinces and municipalities in programs which are essentially the responsibility of the municipalities and the provinces.

I want to take great exception to a report in the paper the other day which said the Government was reneging on promises I have made. I have never made those promises. I have been quite up front in telling the municipalities exactly where we stood as a Government. Unfortunately, this is something that we just cannot afford at this point.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET MAYORS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister because, as he must recognize, he is the ultimate level of appeal within Cabinet, and both his Minister of Finance and his Minister of the Environment have said time and time again that the Government is not prepared to provide this funding.

Will the Prime Minister meet with these mayors so they can have an opportunity to appeal to him as Prime Minister to change the policy of his Government regarding a sharing of the income tax dollars with the property taxpayers so we can rebuild our very old and crumbling cities? Will he do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that when I am speaking I am not speaking on behalf of myself as a single individual nor as a single Member of Parliament, I am speaking on behalf of the Government. We have considered this. We have reviewed the proposal of the FCM. Unfortunately, as I said to them and to the House on a number of occasions, this is an expense that, in a time of restraint where we are called upon to do more than we can afford to do in areas which are 100 per cent federal responsibility, we just simply cannot afford at this time.

RENEWAL OF MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is in regard to the same matter. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities made a proposal to the federal and provincial Governments for a five-year program to renew municipal infrastructure, including sewer and water systems and roads and bridges, for which each level of government would pay one-third of the cost. This program would not only provide a foundation for expanded economic activity but it would also directly create 280,000 jobs in all parts of the country.

Since the provinces and the territories are supportive of the program, how does the Government justify its outright rejection of the proposal? Why will it not reconsider?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded to that question in my previous answers. I think the Hon. Member may find he is a little off base when he says that all the provinces are supportive of this. What I suggested to the provinces and to the municipalities is that, since this is an area which is in their jurisdiction, if they feel as keenly as they do in presenting these proposals, surely they can get a start on it. Surely they can make a start on this as two orders of government and get on with the job, if the urgency is as strong as they suggest that it is.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we have had similar programs by the federal Government in the past when there was a need. Does the Minister not understand that this program would be an investment in economic growth which would gradually reduce the deficit? Does he not understand that most of the federal contribution would be recovered in increased tax revenue and reduced welfare spending? Why is the Government taking such a restrictive position on this matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Government of which the Hon. Member was a member terminated those programs. Possibly the Hon. Member should be looking inside rather than outside for the answer to his question.

The Hon. Member has said that, surely, we have lots of money. We do not have lots of money because the previous Government wasted money year after year. It built up the deficit from $2 billion to $38 billion. It left this Government and the country in a position in which the debt was growing at the rate of 23 per cent per annum. We are getting that rate down.

But if the Hon. Member wants to take out his little pocket calculator he will find out that debt was doubled—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VICTIMS OF BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS FUNDED BY CIA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Nine Canadians who were victims of brutal and unethical brainwashing experiments funded by the CIA in the late 1950s at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal have been seeking justice for a number of years in American courts.

In view of the commitment made over a year ago by the then Minister of Justice to consider seriously assisting these people financially, when will the Conservative Government finally move to assist the victims of these terrible experiments in their pursuit of justice against the CIA?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. It gives me an opportunity to report to the House that I have in fact been pursuing the matter with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, together with other representatives of that group who are involved in this particular litigation.

As the Hon. Member will know, the Government and my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have been extremely helpful in facilitating their access to justice in the United States. I can only say to the Hon. Member that I am in a process of consulting and looking at this matter in conjunction with his colleague. I hope that we will be able to come forward with some concrete results in the very near future.

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN SEEKING LEGAL REDRESS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister recognizes that his Government was able to come up with over $100,000 in payment to a former Conservative Member of Parliament who came up with a report saying that Canada had absolutely no legal or moral obligation to the victims of these terrible experiments.

I wish to ask the Minister of Justice this. It has been over one year now and one of the nine elderly victims has already passed away. How much longer do these Canadians have to wait before their Government will stand up for them and assist them financially in their pursuit of justice? How much longer must they wait?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I simply reiterate the point made by the Hon. Member. There is no legal responsibility on the Government. Notwithstanding that fact, we are attempting to analyse the situation with a view to determining what assistance might be possible.

I want to remind the Hon. Member of the fact that we have been most helpful. We have gone to very great effort to try to determine precisely the background of this matter which concerns circumstances that occurred some years ago. I think the Government has shown a sensitivity toward this particular situation. I hope the Hon. Member will appreciate that and applaud the Government for its actions up to this point in time.

DISASTERS

ANNIVERSARY OF AIR INDIA CRASH OFF IRISH COAST—HOMICIDE STATISTICS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, June of 1987 marks the second anniversary of the Air India disaster which claimed the lives of some 329 passengers and crew on the flight which left a Canadian airport. An Indian inquiry has determined that the crash was caused by a bomb explosion in the forward cargo bay.

Can the Solicitor General explain why these 329 homicides have not yet appeared in Canadian statistical records? Will the Minister also answer this question? When they do appear will they appear in the year 1985 or in the year 1987?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I regret to inform the Hon. Member that I can only advise him that the crash is still under very active investigation. For that reason I cannot make any further comments on it at this time.

Mr. Nunziata: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same subject. While the Conservative Party may be interested in whether or not the tragic murder of over 300—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Nunziata: —Canadians might be included in statistics, we in the Opposition are concerned about justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a question, he should put it.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Solicitor General this. In view of the fact that it has been nearly two years since over 300 Canadians were murdered, will the Solicitor General on behalf of the Government of Canada initiate a royal commission inquiry into the deaths? There has not been one held in Canada while there has been one held in Cork, Ireland, and another in India. Will he give an undertaking to the House that there will be a royal commission inquiry to assist the police in order to prosecute those who are responsible for those murders?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only reply to the Hon. Member by advising him, as I have in the past, that there is indeed an ongoing investigation. It is extremely active. I do not think that the interests of that investigation would be served by a royal commission at this time.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

BLACK WATCH REGIMENT—PARTICIPATION OF WOMEN IN PARADE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence concerning the fact that women of the Black Watch will not be allowed to parade before the Queen Mother this Saturday in Montreal.

Will the Minister ensure that the Queen Mother sees that Canada treats women as equals by directing the Black Watch to have women included in its parade on Saturday?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an important question. Women will be on parade when the Queen Mother visits Montreal on Saturday. I am expecting a list from my officials this afternoon of the functions they will be fulfilling.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISTRIBUTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE WORK

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that very satisfactory answer. I would also like to ask him this.

Will the Minister ensure that every man in the militia also shares equally in its tasks, including what Captain Conway of the Watch calls "invaluable administrative work", which he apparently relegated to women only?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the administration work is not relegated to women only. Indeed, the distinction that exists within the Black Watch is that administrative personnel who are not members of the infantry were not to be involved in the trooping of the colour. Both women and men are involved in that administrative work. The distinction was not made on the basis of whether a person was male or female. But I assure the House that women will be on parade when the Black Watch is parading on the weekend.

RAILWAYS

RAIL CAR INDUSTRY—STEELWORKERS' ACTION PLAN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister has made that more precise since Captain Conway said, according to his comments in the newspaper: "There's a lot of paperwork involved with this ceremony and every girl is necessary to get it done . . . "

However, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Next question!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport will know that this is Railway Industry Week in Canada. In Hamilton on Monday we had a chance to meet with the United Steelworkers of America who were asking the Government what specific response it has to the seven-point plan of action which has been proposed by steelworkers to save the railway car industry in Canada.

Given that the Minister was asked a similar question in the last two weeks by our transportation critic, what specific answers has he for the steelworkers with respect to the Government's response to the railway action plan?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should reply in the area of national defence. However, I think it is quite obvious that the nature of the rail transportation system in Canada has changed. The demand for rail cars has changed because of the faster turn around time. The Government has taken various actions in connection with trying to improve the demand for cars. For example, as of June 1 the Department of National Revenue is tightening up the regulations that apply to the leasing of U.S. rail cars on a temporary basis.

Incidentally, CN is purchasing 200 new centre beam flat cars this year from National Steel Company which was the low bidder on a competitive tender.

The demand for cars is not present for a number of reasons and we must balance that against the fact that we want our railways to be as low cost as possible and as competitive as possible, so we are not in a position to force them to buy cars that they do not feel they need.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the next Liberal Member of Parliament for Hamilton Mountain, Elizabeth Phinney, is here in Ottawa today. She specifically asked me to ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh! Order.

Ms. Copps: Is it not true that the reason he is backing off on the steelworkers' action plan is because he is sacrificing the railway car industry on the altar of free trade with respect to the Americans? Is that not the real reason?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to advise the Hon. Member that the next Progressive Conservative Member for the district of St. John's East, Mr. Tom Hickey, was in the gallery earlier this afternoon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am sorry that our soon-to-be colleague has left the gallery, but I will pass on to him the warm plaudits of the House of Commons.

With respect to the Hon. Member's friend who is running in the Hamilton Mountain district—futilely I hope—hopefully she does not have the same kind of phobias about free trade as are exhibited by the paranoid Member who asked me that question.

Oral Questions

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO EXPAND COVERAGE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. It concerns the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The Minister knows that roughly 18 per cent of producers are presently outside the plan and that past producer contributions have been exhausted and the plan is in deficit. Is the Minister considering opening up the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to permit those producers presently outside the plan to get into it on less onerous terms than is presently the case?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question that is of increasing concern to producers who are outside the plan, given the fact that the fund is in a substantial deficit.

There have been representations and we have been seriously considering the suggestion that the Hon. Member makes. We will take his question as representation. I also point out that we have already made an improvement to the Act which has provided for record amounts of interim payments prior to spring seeding when farmers need their assistance the most.

We will look toward making additional improvements if we believe they can assist producers.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am disappointed that the Minister who knew this question would be asked just left moments ago.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: It is after three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must advise the Hon. Member that that remark was quite out of order. It is after three o'clock. We started late today. The Chair tries to be as generous as possible in Question Period. Clearly, Ministers may have to leave. However, that comment is quite inappropriate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

TRANSPORT

JOB LOSSES IN INDUSTRIES RELATED TO RAILWAY TRANSPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Considering that he is often off the track, I would like to remind him that the future Liberal Member for St. John's East, Mr. Neary, was here, as well as the future Liberal Member for Yukon.

My question to the Minister is this: Yesterday, in Montreal, over 500 employees of Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel and Laforge took part in a demonstration to ask the Conservative Government—Mr. Laberge, the Prime Minister's friend, or maybe I should say his former friend, was there—what it intends to do to put an end to the loss of jobs in railway transportation related industries. Will the Minister be satisfied with watching the parade go by or will he take concrete action to save jobs in Canada?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the workers whom the Hon. Member is talking about work for Bombardier. I hope they will be as competitive as possible and will get as much work as possible in Canada or elsewhere. Naturally, we will do anything we can to assist Bombardier in achieving that purpose.

MEASURES TO BE TAKEN SO THAT BOMBARDIER EMPLOYEES DO NOT LOSE JOBS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board.

The Minister told us that there is nothing he can do to help Bombardier, and the President of the Treasury Board has spent a lot of money. There has been the Picard Report, and a whole series of reports, but there are no jobs.

In view of the fact that his colleague has contradicted him, could the Minister indicate what concrete action he can take to prevent Bombardier employees from losing their jobs in September? Will he take action, in view of the Minister of Transport's refusal to do so?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to indicate to my hon. friend that the Commission set up under the chairmanship of Mr. Picard was completely voluntary and did not cost a cent, except for the translation of the final report. I wish to emphasize the contribution of the Montrealers who devoted their time and energy to make quite valuable recommendations to the Government to alleviate the economic ills of the Greater Montreal region.

Also, over the past few years, more jobs have been created in the Greater Montreal region than had been the case for a great many years before. The jobs, therefore, are there.

ESTABLISHMENT OF POST OFFICES IN DRUG STORES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Government. It concerns the Post Office. Is the Government aware that in the inner cities of places like Winnipeg and Hamilton, senior citizens who live next to a post office must go to a drug store post office eight blocks beyond that post office, or take a bus past the post office next door in order to get their parcels and registered mail? Is that what the Government means by convenience when it establishes post offices in drug stores? Why must people go beyond the post office next door? When will it deliver decent postal service in this country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without in any way accepting the premise of the question, I will take it as notice and ask the Hon. Minister to get back to the Hon. Member, hopefully this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Chamber that the time for Question Period has expired.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 90, 120 and 131.

[Text]

DEPARTMENTAL MINISTERS' OFFICES

Question No. 90—Mr. Boudria:

1. Since September 4, 1984, what was the total cost of renovating, redecorating and refurnishing the departmental office of each Cabinet Minister?

2. What were the names of the contractors awarded contracts to perform such work and (a) in each case, what was the amount of the contract (b) were the contracts awarded by public tender and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): 1. For the period September 4, 1984 to September 30, 1986, present Cabinet Ministers have occupied 62 departmental offices. The approximate average cost of renovating, redecorating and refurnishing each office is $15,973.

2. (a) and (b). As most of the works contracted were for minor alterations requiring no public tender (see Government Contracts Regulations), contracts were mostly awarded by individual designation, invited quotation, from the Central Contractor Index or to the building owners.

Items were mostly purchased from sole source suppliers, approved suppliers or standing offers.

For the reasons mentioned above, a detailed listing of suppliers and contractors has not been provided as it would prove to be time consuming and costly.

PARKINSON'S DISEASE AND CANCER STATISTICS

Question No. 120—Mr. Caccia:

1. For each of the past five years, how many cases of (a) Parkinson's disease (b) cancer have been diagnosed in Saskatchewan?

2. How does this compare on a per capita basis with (a) other provinces (b) the national average?

3. Do the figures for either disease depart from the average and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1(a) Parkinson's disease. No national or provincial statistics are available on the incidence of Parkinson's disease.

1(b), 2(a), 2(b) Cancer only. Table one below shows the number and corresponding rates per 100,000 population of new primary cancers which were diagnosed in Saskatchewan residents from 1981 to 1985. The figures do not include non-melanoma skin cancers. Comparative figures for Canada, and for the highest and lowest provinces are shown for 1981 and 1982.

3. Comparison. Cancer rates for Saskatchewan tend to fall close to their average rate for all of Canada. The rates calculted in Table 1 however, are called crude rates, as they do not adjust for differences in the age structure of the populations of the various provinces.

These crude rates for Saskatchewan tend to be just above the national average, because Saskatchewan has an older population than most provinces and because cancer rates are much higher in order than in younger age groups.

In Table 2, age adjusted rates are calculated separately for males and females for Saskatchewan for 1981 and 1982. These rates, which adjust for differences in the age structure between the Saskatchewan and Canadian populations, show that Saskatchewan's rates for 1981 and 1982 fall slightly below the national average.

And the amendment of Mr. Ouellet (p. 6658).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: I was recognized.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I must interject here because the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) had been on for eight minutes yesterday when we reached five o'clock. I am sure the Hon. Opposition Whip was here and will acknowledge that fact. He has only 10 minutes or 12 minutes remaining, so I would appreciate him being given that opportunity.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am in your hands. I was recognized because I stood in my place. I want to participate in the debate. I have no objection to the other Member being recognized, if he wants to finish his remarks. I did not know that. I just go by the Speaker's rulings; I do not go by other people in the House.

Mr. Rossi: He was not standing.

Mr. Crosby: I was standing.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair wishes to apologize to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It was the error of the Chair. In fact, as all Hon. Members now know as a consequence of the interjection of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has the floor. I assure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier that he will be recognized as soon as is appropriate.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am a long way from your chair, but I think the record clearly shows that I had the floor at the termination of the debate at five o'clock last evening, and I was standing in my place. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will have an opportunity to make his remarks.

I want to point out, in the interests of all Hon. Members of the House, and in addition to the comments which I made yesterday, that is, June 2, 1987, that negotiations in respect of the establishment of new Standing Orders are continuing, so I understand. I think that anything which is said in respect of the motion now before the House of Commons must be uttered with knowledge that negotiations are ongoing.

I think the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski), has made every effort to achieve unanimity in respect of the adoption of permanent Standing Orders for the House of Commons. I think he is to be congratulated for continuing that task, even as the motion to adopt permanent Standing Orders is before the House of Commons.

We have seen in the past day, the past 24 hours, an excellent example of the desirability of achieving unanimity among those interested parties in respect of the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord. We all know what difficulties stand in the way of achieving a degree of unanimity with any legal process or procedure. I encourage the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government House Leader, in fact, all three House leaders, to continue their efforts to achieve unanimity.

The motion now before the House concerning the Standing Orders represents in that respect a failure to achieve concurrence among Members of the House and among the House Leaders. It must be clearly pointed out and recognized that everybody agrees the desirable course is consultation, consent and concurrence. When that concurrence cannot be achieved, when unanimity is not achievable, then the Government must act. It is in that context, the necessity for government action to establish permanent Standing Orders for the conduct of the business of the House of Commons, that I make these remarks.

The motion before the House, as I indicated yesterday, Madam Speaker, is to prevent the difficult situation that would arise if the House of Commons reverted to the Standing Orders that existed on December 7, 1984. In the absence of an agreement to continue the current revised, changed and amended Standing Orders of the House, we would be back to the situation that existed over three and a half years ago and we would have lost the beneficial changes that have been made in the interval. We would also miss the opportunity to make even more effective changes to the rules.

The process of changing the rules of the House of Commons is interesting. It was pointed out by an opposition Member yesterday that there had been no change in the rules since 1969 that was not achieved through unanimous consent of the Members of the House of Commons, an indication in itself that insufficient attention has been paid to amending from time to time the Standing Orders of the House. These are not rules and regulations to be written in stone and left unchanged for decades. The House must find on a day-to-day basis that there are obvious areas in which the rules under which the House operates can be improved. When that capability of improving the processes and procedures of the House is thrown away simply because of the difficulty involved in establishing amending provisions, then I do not think we have discharged our responsibility, either to ourselves or to the broader public interested in the procedures of the House of Commons.

The fact that amendments have not been made in the past is no excuse for reviewing the situation in light of current experiences and seeking to achieve better rules and regulations for the conduct of the business of the House. I think the fact that the rules of the House tend to be cast in stone is something that is not in the interests of all Members. If and when the rules are adopted, it should be on the understanding that they can be changed from time to time as experience dictates. I think we have taken the attitude that the rules are virtually inflexible and unchangeable, and as a result the procedures and processes in the House have become stilted and formalized to the point that they no longer reflect the desire of elected Members of Parliament to effect changes or to achieve new levels of efficiency, in the conduct of public business.

I spent three weeks this year at Westminster in the Parliament of the United Kingdom. I had the opportunity to observe at first hand the conduct of the British House of Commons. One is amazed at the maturity with which Members of the House of Commons there, the House Leaders and indeed individual Members, conduct the public business in that historic parliamentary forum.

We have in the new rules that are being presented, along with the motion introduced by the Deputy Prime Minister, new provisions with respect to time allocation. If we had in this House of Commons the kind of maturity that has been achieved in the U.K. House of Commons, we probably would not need rules respecting time allocation. I was amazed in speaking to the House Leaders of all Parties in the U.K., the Conservative Party, the Labour Party, the SDP and the Liberal Party, that they have no difficulty in deciding among themselves how much time to allow for a particular Bill or other measure introduced in the House of Commons. The arguments generated in their discussion relate to whether there may be one day, two days or three days of debate allowed. They may have some difficulty in coming to a specific agreement, but in no case does one Party prolong and protract debate for the purpose of achieving some other matter that the Party seeks to achieve in the House of Commons. The bargaining does not extend to the forcing of the Government into actions that it might not otherwise be willing to take or that are not necessarily in the interests of the public or part of government policy.

Mr. Keeper: Do they ring bells?

Mr. Crosby: In short, Madam Speaker, the rules are not used to blackmail the Government into actions. I think that is the path down which this House has trod to its detriment. Whatever was the experience in the past, I do not think any Member or any opposition Party ought to hold the Government to ransom by use of the rules of the House.

It may be justified in very extreme cases but it is now occurring almost on a day to day basis. I do not cast any aspersions or accusations of improper conduct on any Member of the House or any political Party that uses the technicalities of the rules as they are currently constituted. That practice has grown. But there comes a time in the history of this House that we ought to aspire to the kind of maturity evidenced in the British House of Commons to try to change those things.

There are many other ways of making points and appealing to the public on a particular meritorious issue. There is no need to torture the rules of practice and procedures in any chamber, and especially the House of Commons, being the national Parliament of Canada, in order to achieve the purposes of one Member or one political Party.

It is in that difficult context, in that difficult parliamentary situation, in which we look at the motion presented by the Deputy Prime Minister. The changes that are introduced with the motion clarify some difficult areas. On balance I think the changes will result in a more efficient operation of the House and the better conduct of the public business. That is our responsibility as Members, to see that those kinds of effective changes are put into operation. I recognize and realize that bargaining takes place, and I understand that. I hope that kind of bargaining will achieve the unanimity which is in everybody's view, I am certain, the best way to achieve change.

In the absence of a bargaining process which results in change, action becomes necessary. That is what the Government through the motion of the Deputy Prime Minister has done. I am sure the House Leaders of the other Parties even at this moment have the opportunity to negotiate and continue bargaining in order to achieve the changes through that process. While that process is ongoing, action is required. The action has been taken. It is here before us. The rules of the House can be changed now by positive action within the House of Commons.

As I have indicated, and I want to underline that point, we are in a legal limbo with respect to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. We have delayed and failed to come to a final decision on the substance and contents of the Standing Orders. Quite frankly, we do not have the right to continue that delay indefinitely into the future. Failure to achieve unanimity is no excuse for inaction. That is the point we all have to consider. It is not the best way, but it is the only way when agreement cannot be achieved.

I support the motion. I hope other Hon. Members will see fit to do so as well, recognizing that the Government has been forced to put an end to the protracted debate and discussions on the Standing Orders. The Government has been forced to take action to make the rules permanent.

As I said yesterday, Members of the House of Commons are not the only ones who have a stake in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. There is a broader community across all sectors and elements of Canadian society that look to the House of Commons for direction and guidance. There is more at stake in the public business conducted in the House of Commons than the interests of Members of the House. It is in that broader public concern about action in the House of Commons that we seek to have permanent Standing Orders for all to see, read and be governed by.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed my colleague's comments with regard to House procedures, but I am a bit curious about them. He said that it does not make good sense for opposition Parties to use the rules to hold up legislation. Obviously we in the Opposition do that in order to allow time for debate in the nation so that the full weight of public opinion can come to bear on any action the Government is seeking to undertake.

I wonder how the Hon. Member squares the statement he made today with the behaviour of his own Party when it was in Opposition. I am thinking particularly of the bell-ringing incident. At that time, the operation of the House of Commons was held up for at least a couple of weeks. Is the Hon. Member simply taking his line of argument from the fact that he is now in Government? Will what he is saying now have no bearing at all upon his behaviour and the behaviour of his colleagues when they are back in Opposition in what will probably be a very short time?

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I will ignore the last sentence of the Hon. Member's remarks because I thought the question he posed was a fair one and one that requires explanation. In order to explain my position on it, I think we have to go back to the time of the bell-ringing incident.

At that time, there was presented to the House of Commons a constitutional measure which members of the Progressive Conservative Opposition felt was not in the interests of the Canadian people. In order to draw attention to that constitutional measure, and particularly to the process by which it was presented for final approval, it was necessary and essential for us to do something in a dramatic way. We did this so that all Canadians would become aware of what was taking place and would respond to it.

The only alternative that appeared at the time was to find some method to hold up the process in the House of Commons until a broad public awareness could be achieved. The time did go on too long, but while the House of Commons was suspended negotiations were taking place.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member that there was a tremendous risk involved in that process. Had the public decided that the constitutional measure was a proper one and that the Progressive Conservative Opposition of the day had acted improperly in holding up the process in the House of Commons, each of us involved would have suffered greatly at the hands of the public. We took a risk because we thought that public awareness and action required it.

I believe that when there is such an extreme situation, Hon. Members are justified in using the rules of the House of Commons to delay or disrupt the proceedings in a legal way, not by civil disobedience. I would like to distinguish between the kind of tactic that is legal in a technical way and the day-to-day obstruction of the business of the House that is used to achieve other measures. Continual dilatory conduct is quite different.

Let me add that in the case of Bill C-22, for example, members of the Opposition, and I credit them for this, made Canadians aware of the contents of the Bill. They generated public discussion. However, to continue day after day to delay the Bill achieved no useful purpose. I challenge the Opposition in this way. If that Bill is so bad, pass it so that the bad effects of the Bill will be felt by all Canadians. If the Bill is so bad, all Canadians will punish the Government for passing that kind of legislation. In other words, if the position of the Opposition is that a legislative measure is bad, it should do its job and then let it pass. If it is bad, the Government will suffer for it.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I must say that it should be obvious to all Canadians that the Hon. Member's argument suits the side of the House on which he is sitting. It astounds me that the Hon. Member has said that when his Party was in Opposition and it perceived an issue that should come to the attention of the public it was okay to use the rules, but now that he is in Government and we in the Opposition are attempting to bring questions to the attention of the public through the rules, that is not allowed.

What bothers me about the procedure and arguments being used today is that if we are to have rule changes, those rule changes must be negotiated. We have here a demonstration of the Government using the heavy hand of its vast majority to ram rule changes through the House. I would ask the Hon. Member to lean on his colleagues so that they will negotiate these rule changes rather than ram them through the House just because they have such a large majority. The Hon. Member should keep in mind that he may be simply making the House more efficient for another Party that will take office shortly.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, that is fair enough. If we make the House of Commons more efficient for whomever is in charge of the public affairs, then we will have accomplished something worth while.

I agree with practically everything my colleague has said. I agree with the value of unanimity and with the practice of negotiation. However, he has failed to recognize that that process has gone on for three and a half years and has placed the Standing Orders of the House of Commons in a legal limbo. The time for negotiation has passed and the time for action has come. That action has been taken.

There is no reason why negotiations cannot continue and supplement the motion before the House of Commons. That can happen at any time, and I hope it does. However, that does not mean that the Government has to lie down, roll over and have the House of Commons remain in a state of legal limbo while negotiations continue. There is nothing wrong with a two-track system.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the Opposition should not expect the Government to roll over and lie down. On the other side of the coin, he suggested in an earlier response to my colleague that the Opposition is to roll over and lie down. He said it is to be irresponsible, and should not do all it can quite properly do under the rules to prevent, delay or obstruct legislation or to persuade the Government to change its mind. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Opposition is not entitled to use the rules in every way it can to do the job that it is its duty and responsibility to do? Are opposition Members supposed to lie down and roll over?

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I think that is a total misconstruction of what I said. I cannot put a question to the Hon. Member, but if I could I would. There comes a time when the Opposition has done its duty. It has opposed the measure and has made its opposition clear. It has communicated its position to the public and has made the public aware of the issue before the House of Commons. Its job is done, its duty has been performed and it is time to get on with the business of governing Canada.

It is the duty of the Opposition to oppose measures, bring them to the light of day and have all aspects of the matter fully debated and considered. However, when that job is done, then the Opposition can rest and let that terrible measure which has been imposed go into operation. If this is as bad as the Opposition thinks it is, time will punish the proponents of the measure.

Mr. Benjamin: You're advocating an anarchy.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members, including the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) who just spoke, should keep in mind that when we are speaking about the possibility of the Government acting unilaterally to change the Standing Orders—and I say "possibility" because I hope there may yet be an agreement—we are talking about a very unusual occurrence in the life of Parliament. The last time the Standing Orders were changed unilaterally was in 1969 when it was done by a Liberal Government.

At that time the Conservative Party, true to its rhetoric when in Opposition, bewailed the fact that the Liberal Government would act in such a unilateral way. The Conservative Party also bewailed occasions upon which Liberal Governments used time allocation and closure. Yet, it is under the Progressive Conservative Government that time allocation has become a routine matter. It hardly catches the attention of the public any more. The Conservative Party built a political reputation in opposition to the use of time allocation. A great irony has befallen the Conservative Party. It has now become captive to the very political evil which it denounced for so many decades. Such is the tragedy of power, I suppose.

As I said, this is a very unusual move by a Government and is more unfortunate at this time because we are in the fifth year of what I regard as a very important five-year period in the life of Parliament which began with the setting up of the Lefebvre Committee on Parliamentary Reform in 1982 after the parliamentary crisis precipitated by the ringing of the bells for 16 days by the Conservatives, the same people who are now so self-righteous about the use of Routine Proceedings to hold matters up for a couple of days.

We are in the fifth year of this five-year period of reform during which a great many good reforms have been achieved by agreement. I am concerned that by moving to act unilaterally the Government will bring an end to that spirit. We will be able to demarcate those years; 1982-87 Parliamentary Reform, Rest in Peace. From here on in it will be parliamentary war with regard to how the Government and the Opposition relate to each other.

I do not say that to be rhetorical or cute. I say it because I have a genuine concern that that which I and a number of other Members in the House have worked so hard to build over the last five years will be seriously damaged by this.

It did not have to be the way. It is this way partly because the Government sought to mix agendas which should not have been mixed. The purpose of extending the date for the expiry of the provisional orders past April of this year was that House Leaders would have time to consider the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure with respect to the provisional Standing Orders. I got up in the House and said that and the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) got up and agreed with me.

That which is before us now at the time of the expiry of the additional period for the provisional Standing Orders is not a negotiated response only to the Standing Orders. The Government has thrown in a couple of other things which it did not like. That is fair enough. It is okay for the Government to perceive problems in the Standing Orders, but it should not have tried to deal with them in the same context as it would deal with the provisional orders.

If the Government had concerns about the use of Routine Proceedings to prevent it from moving time allocation or to prevent it from introducing Bills, that could have been dealt with separately.

The Government has very seriously risked poisoning the whole matter of parliamentary reform by injecting into a process which should have concerned itself only with the provisional Standing Orders the poison of having to deal with technical matters, vis-a-vis Government and Opposition, which would have been better dealt with separately. The Opposition as well perceives problems with the way in which things work in Parliament and it would have been far better to have dealt with that separately than to slip into a process which otherwise dealt with the provisional Standing Orders and reform the matters with respect to Routine Proceedings which they have.

I am very, very critical of the Government for doing that. The Government did not have to mix those two agendas, but it has and we now have to find our way out of it if we can. I hope that will be possible. In the meantime I would like to comment on some of the things which are in the motion.

Yesterday I said how concerned I was about the Government's refusal to accept the unanimous recommendation of the Lefebvre Committee, the McGrath Committee and the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures with regard to the procedure for the nomination of the Speaker. All three of those committees rejected the notion that people should actively have to place their name for nomination for Speaker. Yet the Government decided that it knew better than those three committees. I am told that the Government is reconsidering that. I said a lot more about this yesterday and I recommend that those who are interested in the longer argument read what I said yesterday in Hansard because there are other things I want to talk about today.

For instance, I want to talk about the parliamentary calendar. It was a great achievement in 1982-83 when the Government and Opposition agreed to have a parliamentary calendar. Yet the Government is now proposing to include in the Standing Orders a motion through which it could very easily carry the sitting of Parliament past the June 30 adjournment date on into July. Government Members should look very carefully at what their own leadership is doing to them if they value the parliamentary calendar. As sure as I am standing here, if the parliamentary calendar is thrown away once it will be gone right out the window. If the Government is allowed, for whatever reason, to extend, through an ordinary motion—time allocation nonetheless—the sitting of this House into July as is suggested in the motion we are now debating, every Government from now until doomsday will do that.

The Government's reason for wanting to do that is that it has more business to do, that it does not have everything done which it wanted to do. That is tough. The Government has had ten months and if it cannot get the business of the House done in ten months with a 210-seat majority, that is not the problem of the parliamentary calendar or the small Opposition, but the problem of the Government. It should not be blamed on the parliamentary calendar.

If there is a significant and important, nationally compelling reason why Parliament ought to be recalled after the end of June, that provision already exists in the Standing Orders. All the Government has to do is justify to the Chair why Parliament ought to be recalled. The motion before us now constitutes a lack of confidence in the Speaker. The Government is saying through this motion, "we do not trust the Speaker to do what we would want the Speaker to do if we decide we want Parliament back". What is at the heart of the reform is to give more independent power to the Speaker and, through him, to the House of Commons, but what we have here is a move to remove powers from the Speaker.

I am trying to put my remarks in the context of reform. We are looking for ways, and there are many of them in this motion, which subtly, symbolically and substantively undermine the principles of the reform which has been going on for the last five years.

People may think that the proposal that the Government can extend the sittings into July only violates the parliamentary calendar part of the reform, but it also violates the notion of the Speaker as the person to whom the Government must appeal if it feels it has a good reason for recalling Parliament outside the limits of the parliamentary calendar.

There is a contradiction as well. On the one hand, the Government wants to take power away from the Speaker with respect to whether or not the House can sit in the summer and, on the other hand, it wants to give more power to the Speaker with respect to the determination of emergency debates so that the House cannot overrule the Speaker. I wish the Government would make up its mind. On the one hand it is removing the powers of the House to overrule the Speaker, and on the other hand it is instituting a power of the House to overrule the Speaker or to not have the Speaker's judgment involved at all.

Something else that I think should be brought to the attention of Canadians is this whole question of vote deferral. It has not been a controversial item. I see that the Whip from the Liberal Party is here. It gives the Whips the ability to defer a vote during the ringing of the bells. Remember, Madam Speaker, had this Standing Order been in place in 1979, Canadian history would have been different. The Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) would not have fallen. The vote on December 13, 1979, for which a number of us were present in the Chamber, would not have been taken. What are the implications of that proposal, particularly when we think about minority parliaments? I ask people to think about that. It means that whenever we have a vote, particularly a surprise vote, or even a vote which is not a surprise but the Whips are surprised by how few people the have for the non-surprise vote, there will be an ability to defer that vote. If there has not been an agreement which would keep the Government of the day in power, there will be at least 24 hours in which perhaps some kind of an agreement can be reached. That is the institutionalizing of bargaining time when it comes to minority governments. It is something I do not feel has received the attention it deserves.

The Government also proposes to extend the time for Government responses to committee reports. It wants 150 days. It needs over half a year to respond.

Mr. Merrithew: Over half a year is 150 days?

Mr. Blaikie: Well, almost a half year. One of the things which amazes me about the Canadian system of Government, and always has, is how slower we are to do anything than other countries. It does not take that long to respond to reports in Britain or in the United States. It seems that the Canadian bureaucracy has no equal in the slowness with which it is able to respond, particularly the bureaucracy of this Government.

What we have before us has the potential of bringing to an end what I think is a very significant period in the life of the House of Commons. I do not want to exaggerate, but the fact remains that if unilateral action is taken, it will go a long way towards damaging both the spirit and the letter of the reform, particularly as it affects the perception of the Speaker and the Parliamentary calendar.

Something else which ought to be receiving more attention than it is, is the amendment the Government wants to make to Standing Order 92(3), that committees meeting when the House is adjourned will meet according to a schedule set by the Chief Government Whip. I talked to a number of committee Chairmen who I think are pretty independent spirits, and they told me they are not really worried about it because they do not think the Government would use it to prevent their committees from meeting when they wanted to meet, or from investigating matters they had determined on their own they wanted to investigate. Nevertheless, the procedural possibility will be there for committees to be frustrated by the scheduling authority, the Chief Government Whip, about to be instituted in the Standing Orders. I ask Hon. Members to think about that.

There are a number of other things which are, I suppose, sort of caretaking kind of amendments on the part of the Government, and which have not received much attention. I think they should be mentioned. For instance, the striking of committees is to be done in the fall at the beginning of the Parliamentary year instead of in January as it is now. The rule that they be struck in January arose out of the fact that, contrary to other Parliaments when committees were struck at the beginning of each session, with the Liberal Government of Prime Minister Trudeau we did not have sessions, we just had one ongoing, for ever and ever type of session. So we had to arrive at an arbitrary date for striking committees.

The Government now suggests that we do this in the fall and it is not a bad idea, except that if the Government is not going to take the Parliamentary calendar seriously, this measure may turn out to be just as arbitrary as anything else. It seems the Government wants to carry the sitting of the House through the summer so it can then have an excuse for not having Parliament sit in the fall when the free trade negotiations are coming to a head. It can then quietly sell-out the country without anyone being here in the Chamber to even ask a question. That may be what the Government is up to. Would it not be nice for the Government to be able to quietly sell away the country without the House of Commons being in session and without there being the opportunity for members of the Opposition to ask questions and to determine the exact nature of the sell-out?

In any event, I hope that as I am talking a deal is being worked out and that many of the things that I have said will become—

Mr. Cooper: You will have to apologize for.

Mr. Blaikie: I will not apologize for them. Just the very fact that we say them repeatedly has everything to do with why we might come to an agreement. If we do not come to an agreement it will be because the Government decided to act unilaterally when there was no real need to to do so. What we have tried to do is bring the Government to its senses. We hope that that will happen very soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I have been getting ready for this for some time now, and right at the outset I would tell the House that everything is not black in this Government proposal. Of course it includes new provisions which took us by surprise, but on the whole these are Standing Orders which must be endorsed, which must be made permanent because, in my judgment, in the past few years, two years at least, we have had a valid and enriching experience. It is a definite improvement, and hopefully all Parties in the House will reach a negotiated settlement confirming that the Standing Orders are permanent, that the Official Opposition has been heard, that the agreement will sanction some parts of the proposal under consideration, and perhaps further negotiations will enable us to remove the odd irritants it contains.

Madam Speaker, I should like to refer to the report of the special parliamentary committee which examined the Standing Orders and the procedure under the chairmanship of Mr. Tom Lefebvre in 1982-83, because I found a rather interesting comment. At page 7:9 it reads:

> Parliamentary procedure must serve—

I am quoting:

> Parliamentary procedure must serve the interests of the House as a whole and favour no one party or faction above another. Reforms, if they are to be effective, must be arrived at on the basis of consensus and compromise. Since all parties must expect to make concessions, it follows that some of the recommendations your Committee expects to make will form part of a package of interdependent proposals.

Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the spirit of the reform and the spirit which prevailed when this reform was unanimously endorsed by Hon. Members stand as eloquent testimony that should prompt us to go ahead, make the compromise, behave as enlightened parliamentarians, and adopt on a permanent basis the provisional Standing Orders which over the past two years have made is possible to conduct the business of the House in an orderly manner.

[English]

We oppose the motion put forward by the Government House Leader basically because, as I said, we were surprised by some of the conditions it puts forward. The Government House Leader and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said in his speech, as reported at page 6622 of Hansard for June 2, 1987:

> The motion I have presented to the House has as its principal objective the enshrinement of the parliamentary reform process which has been experimental and provisional for the past two years. The adoption of this motion will make all of those reforms permanent Standing Orders.

When one looked tentatively at the proposal put to the House one noticed that the Government was trying to sneak in, in the dead of the night as some people have said, experimental rules that were modified somewhat by the addition of some four conditions, or Standing Orders, which had not been thoroughly negotiated by House Leaders, or had not even been discussed among House Leaders.

I wish to refer to those four items which had not been agreed to by House Leaders. The first is with respect to reordering Routine Proceedings. We had not agreed to that. The second is with respect to the automatic transfer of Notices of Motion to Government Orders. We had not agreed to that. The third is the taking up of time allocation motions during Government Orders. We had not agreed to that. The fourth is with respect to limitations on the first speakers at third reading.

We know that a Member speaking after the Minister introducing the Bill at third reading at present has unlimited time. Occasionally, but not very often, members of the Opposition have used third reading to speak at length. That is called a filibuster. We did it last year with respect to one Bill, Bill C-75. The Bill was later withdrawn by the Government, changed, presented to the House again and adopted with the modifications that we had thought appropriate. There was a success resulting from a filibuster. I cannot for the life of me understand why the Government would try to sneak in the sort of limitation on speeches at third reading that would have made it impossible for us to make our points.

We did agree with the rest of the proposals in the Government's motion and, generally, I think would support enshrining them permanently in our Standing Orders.

Holding the job of Chief Opposition Whip I know that we have improved the Standing Orders that were presented to us some years ago by the McGrath Committee. We improved them in terms of getting them to work better. I suppose experience is the best teacher.

We found, for example, that legislative committees, of which there were a great number, were sometimes too demanding on Members of Parliament. We found that having members in standing committees, legislative committees and the House was sometimes stretching our human resources to the extreme. Therefore, we suggested, as is the case in Britain, that we adopt a queuing system. This means that Bills which are referred to legislative committees will queue in order. This will be helpful because the number of committees sitting at the same time will be easier to control. Thus committees will be able to do justice to the subjects at hand.

The new rules have improved Private Members' Hour. The House knows that on occasion I have risen in my place and asked the House to rethink some of the rules that were being used with respect to Private Members' Hour. The fact that a Member could not be here on his appointed day, for example, meant that the Government could profit from that absence and get extra government time. I thought that was not fair. I did not think that it was proper for the Government to profit from something that I think is sacred to us, that is, our hour, three or four times a week. Our Private Members' Hour is the time when Members have the opportunity to present either motions or Bills and have them discussed. Some of them are votable but most are non-votable.

Our proposal that has been implemented was that non-votable items could be rearranged if a Member could not be in the House at the appointed hour. This would give other Members a greater chance to debate their motions and Bills.

Speaking of Private Members' Hour, yesterday there was a historic vote on a motion, and I hope that votes will take place more often. I believe that the experience last night improved our sense of participating in democracy and that one has a role to play.

I have intervened occasionally on the matter of Standing Order 9(4)(a), under which a Member who has the floor may rise and propose that the House do not adjourn at the normal time but continue beyond the normal adjournment hour to further consider a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof. When a large number of committees are sitting, it is difficult also to have Members in the House during the last hour before adjournment to ensure that we have 25 Members to prevent abuse of the Standing Order. While I do not know the opinion of the House, I suggest that a percentage of the Members would be a better solution, so that possibly 10 per cent of our membership would be required in the House in order to prevent the Government using Standing Order 9(4)(a). If the same rule applied to the Government it too would have less difficulty in finding Members to prevent the Opposition from using Standing Order 9(4)(a). When we all agree to a motion under that Standing Order, there is no difficulty.

I see the Government House Leader in the House. I know he has something to say, but I want to tell him before I sit down that I feel this debate has been constructive. I think we are back to the spirit of the parliamentary committee and of Lefebvre and McGrath.

I believe that if we now have an agreement, it is as a result of compromise. I accept that, because that is what we are supposed to strive for and I am happy to see that my House Leader, the Government House Leader, and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, have all come into the House. It indicates to me that we have come to a reasonable understanding and that they have possibly reached an amicable solution. I am pleased that we have reached some kind of understanding and I expect the Government House Leader to inform us about that.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his very kind words. He has clearly set the stage for what I am about to do.

As he inferred, once again the goodwill, the good nature and the interest of Parliament and furthering parliamentary democracy have prevailed. I am pleased to report to the House that we have reached an agreement on some outstanding issues.

As I indicated yesterday when I introduced the resolution, notwithstanding the fact that it was introduced in the name of the Government and that there were some outstanding issues, we did agree at that time to continue negotiations in an attempt to reach an agreement and resolution of the outstanding issues.

I think you will find the proposal that I have to be in order. In order to facilitate what we propose to do, it will be necessary for the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) to withdraw his amendment. I presume that that can be done with the unanimous consent of the House. If we do so, then I can introduce an amendment which has been agreed to by the House Leaders of all Parties. If I could seek leave to do that, Mr. Speaker, I think we could move on with this and complete it.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by our Parliamentary House Leader that some useful discussions have taken place among the House leaders of the three political parties in the House and that amendments reflecting the interests of both the Government, the Opposition, and Members in general will be submitted to us for consideration by the Government House Leader. In the circumstances I shall of course be glad to withdraw my amendment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and all Members for their co-operation in this regard. I think I am now in a position to move the following amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will need consent to move that motion. I take it that that consent is forthcoming?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the motion be amended as follows:

(1) by deleting the words "except Standing Order 4" in lines 10 and 11 of the motion, and by deleting the paragraph numbered 3;

(2) by deleting the proposed amendment to Standing Order 2(5)(a);

(3) by inserting the following new paragraph:

That Standing Order 9 (4)(b) be amended by deleting the words "twenty-five" and substituting therefor the word "fifteen".

(4) by deleting the proposed amendment to section 2 of Standing Order 55; and

(5) by inserting the following new paragraph:

That Standing Order 82(9) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

In each of the periods described in section (5) of this Standing Order, not more than four Opposition motions shall be motions that shall come to a vote. Of the 25 total Opposition motions, not more than eight shall come to a vote. The duration of proceedings on any such motion shall be stated in the notice relating to the appointing of an allotted day or days for those proceedings.

On the last day appointed for proceedings on a motion that shall come to a vote, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the said proceeding.

We did not get the percentage with respect to Standing Order 9(4)(b), but I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier will appreciate that concession. All of those are major concessions by the Government, again granted to the Opposition in the interest of facilitating the orderly progress of the House and preserving a strong institution of parliamentary democracy.

Again, I want to thank all Hon. Members for their co-operation, diligence, and patience in working through this very difficult task. I think we are all richer as a result of going through this exercise.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that the proposal of the Government House Leader is something that has been arrived at by negotiation and agreement between the House Leaders. In this context, I think it would be useful to remind the House of the conclusions of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure of the House of Commons. At the time it was presided over by Tom Lefebvre, now a member of the other place.

He said:

> Parliamentary procedure must serve the interests of the House as a whole and favour no one party or faction above another. Reforms, if they are to be effective, must be arrived at on the basis of consensus and compromise.

I think this has been proven by what we see transpiring in the House at this time.

As the Government House Leader has said, the Government has made certain concessions. However, I think it should be recognized that the opposition Parties have also noted some of the concerns of the Government and have been willing to have that taken into account as well.

I want to say, therefore, that what we see here is not only consistent with the recommendations of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, as I quoted from its report, but it is certainly consistent with the general way in which the House operates when we are dealing with its procedures.

I want to say in a very positive spirit that if the Government had been willing to continue discussions on this matter, what we had undertaken last week, we might well have arrived at this point without time being taken to debate the motion in question, time that might well have been used for consideration of the Government's legislative program.

That being said, I want to confirm again that what was put before the House represents the result of fruitful negotiations among the House Leaders of the three Parties. The Government House Leader has spoken about the matter in a very generous and open spirit. We must recognize and hope that it will be typical of his efforts over the coming months. Certainly, if that is the case, he will see a response of a constructive nature on our part. It is a matter of give and take, consensus, and compromise when we are dealing with the procedures of the House and the organization of House business.

As I have said, what we see at this point in time confirms that very key aspect of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy today to join with the House Leader of the Opposition and the House Leader of the Government in support of the amended motion and to indicate that it reflects the true spirit of Parliament. For many months the three political Parties have negotiated a change to the Standing Orders, a change to the rules and procedures of the House of Commons which will make life more meaningful and facilitate both the business of the House, from the Government's point of view, and the effective role of the opposition Parties.

As the Government House Leader has indicated, I also appreciate the spirit of co-operation which existed, not only among the House Leaders but among their hard-working staff and other Members who are committed to the process. They have actually worked long and hard behind the scenes to make this moment possible. It certainly took a bit of give and take. It took a great deal of openness on all sides to arrive at this particular point. I am pleased to say that it will facilitate the business of the House.

On that note it might be appropriate to cease this discussion to enable the House to get on with some very important business.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am very happy that many of the recommendations of the McGrath report will now become permanent rules of the House. It is a significant achievement for the Parliament of Canada. It is to the credit of the Government that it accepted these recommendations. Certainly it is to the credit of Members on both sides of the House who worked diligently to achieve this enhancement of the role of back-benchers and to establish a better climate in Parliament as a result of some of the rules which have been accepted.

I would be remiss not to remind the Government House Leader that there are still some recommendations outstanding. Precisely, some are before the Board of Internal Economy, and the Speaker is very much aware of them. Although we have gone through a major step in the right direction, I hope the Government will not consider that the work is completed and will indeed pursue some of the other recommendations to facilitate better the work of Members of Parliament.

Some of the outstanding issues could certainly be dealt with under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), who is the chairman of a committee which could look at some aspects of Parliament, and under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who is the chairman of another committee which could look at other aspects. In terms of modernizing our operations, televising the proceedings of committees and introducing electronic voting in Parliament, those are matters which are now before the Board of Internal Economy. Although we are dealing with some of the rules, it would be sad if we could not operate Parliament in a modern way in a modern society.

One recommendation of the McGrath committee concerned allowing Parliament to be the master of its own place. We know that many parliamentarians do not have proper office space, that some of us are crowded in our offices, and that indeed the facilities on the Hill could be improved. There has been a recommendation to introduce the concept of a small unit under an intendant of Parliament who operates under the responsibility of the Speaker of the House and the Speaker of the Senate and does the work we now ask Public Works, the National Capital Commission, or other organizations to perform on our behalf, with the feeling that these people do not have at heart the interest of parliamentarians. This is another area upon which I hope the Government will act in the very near future through the auspices of the Board of Internal Economy.

In closing, let me say that I am sure our former colleague, the now Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland, must be very happy today to see his good work enshrined as permanent rules of the House of Commons.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with those who have congratulated the House Leaders and the other Members on achieving a resolution of the outstanding problems which were interfering with the very positive step of adopting as a permanency the provisional rules. Tremendous progress has been made with these provisional rules.

I would merely like to point out that there is still room for improvement in the way we deal with supply. I would hope that those who are concerned with this matter will continue to try to improve it. It is a very long established democratic principle that there should be no taxation without representation. However, the other side is that the way in which the taxpayers' money, having been collected, is spent should also be carefully examined by the representatives of the people.

Over the years there have been many changes, from the days when the whole business of supply was dealt with in Committee of the Whole to the various arrangements that we have now whereby sundry standing committees examine Estimates. This system is not working as well as it should in one important way. It is not easy for Members of Parliament now to get an overview of supply because parts of the Estimates go into different committees. On another occasion I hope to have the opportunity to put forward some proposals on how we could make a more thoughtful and careful examination of the business of supply.

There have been some improvements over the years, particularly in the quality of the financial information available to Members of Parliament. Part III of the Estimates gives a lot more information than was available some years ago and gives it in a usable form, but there are still many more changes to be made.

As I congratulate those who have worked long and hard on the reform of the rules of the House, I do hope that we will see further changes to improve the quality of examination of financial information and expenditure.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a couple of moments to add a few comments. First, the whole process of parliamentary and procedural reform really goes through a process of ebb and flow. It is not very often that we get an opportunity where all of the ingredients come together that would allow us to undertake major reforms in an institution such as the House of Commons. Those ingredients I think have all come together in the last little while.

The process was begun by Tom Lefebrve to whom reference was made earlier. It was then picked up by James McGrath and we had the well known McGrath report which really has been the foundation of so many of the reforms with which we are dealing in the House of Commons. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) then continued the process and really carried it through, wanting to see the reforms become part of his new Government. When those major reforms are in place you come to a very crucial point in the whole process of reform, but there is bound to be some fall-out, some problems that come from any major reform. You have then two options, either do the tinkering and adjustments that need to be done or rancour can set in, dissolve the whole process and really undermine the kinds of reforms that have gone on before.

I want to add to the many thanks already expressed to the House Leaders who I think have very much saved the process by coming together in making this agreement. They have set the tone. They have allowed that freedom, that excitement and enthusiasm we felt for the reforms to continue. Our work is not completed, as suggested by speakers in the debate. There are adjustments and things that have to be done. Today, with the tone set by the Government House Leader and the two Opposition House Leaders, we have really firmly established that tradition of reform on which we have been trying to build during the last few months.

I think it is very pleasing to all Members of the House, no matter where they sit, on the back bench or the front bench, to see this come to a resolution and to know that we can now proceed with the amendment which, I am sure, will be passed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of my colleagues in the House, I simply want to say, now that we are about to adopt this motion, that we are very pleased that an agreement has been reached.

I have just one comment for the Government House Leader. Occasionally, we are taken somewhat by surprise when Government Orders are called, and I wonder whether we could be given a list of these orders more often so that Members might know exactly what business, what Bills will be before the House, so that our work in the House and our other parliamentary activities can be organized accordingly.

I think we saw an instance of this in the past week when it was difficult for us to schedule our work because the previous day we had to wait until 6 p.m. to find out the business of the House for the next day.

I would therefore ask—

[English]

Is it not possible for the Government House Leader, now that we have concluded this matter, to improve the notice that we get from the Government so that we can dispose of the business in a fair manner? It would be much more useful to us as an Opposition to know ahead of time what the legislative menu will be. It would be useful for the media and for the people of Canada to know that we are going to be looking at such and such a measure the following week, in two weeks or even a month. I cannot see why we could not agree to the Government's projected Order of business for the next two or three weeks. It would allow us to plan better and to work better and it would probably be more efficient and effective.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, am I to assume that we are through the resolution? Has it been adopted?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to that because it is a matter of House business. Perhaps I could do so after we adopt the resolution?

Mr. Speaker: I think that there is a clear disposition in the House to proceed. It is my duty to put the question to the House.

Does the House agree to the amendment of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Mazankowski) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion of the Deputy Prime Minister carry, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Mazankowski), as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Benjamin: You are lucky Arnold Peters is not here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Member is right, Mr. Speaker. It is a very interesting comment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the point made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is certainly well taken. I remind him, however, that what we have been trying to do over the course of the last two or three weeks is to dispose of Opposition Days. If there is any disorder, he has only to point to himself because we have been trying to dispose of the 13 Opposition Days. I am sorry that the Member has not signalled to the press and to the people of Canada what topics the Opposition was going to choose for discussion. If there is any confusion, it is largely as a result of that and the Government's obligation and responsibility to fulfil it.

I do have some good news, Mr. Speaker. We have just emerged from a House Leaders' meeting. We have more or less mapped out the order of business for the rest of this week and next week on into Friday. I will be in a position to so indicate to the House when I am asked the usual question on Thursday.

Mr. Gauthier: Excellent.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is a very tough and skilled negotiator, always very good-natured and always very constructive. I thank him for his remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The order of business following this resolution is Bill C-18. I think that all the Members who want to participate in that piece of legislation are here, including the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) speak with the Chair for a moment? I am sure all Hon. Members would be prepared to wait.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Because of the large number of motions in amendment set down for Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, at report stage, some of which were put on notice as late as last evening, I have not yet had time to finalize my ruling on this Bill. For that reason, I would propose to the House that debate begin on those motions with which the Chair has no procedural difficulty, and I will deliver my ruling the next time the Bill is called. Is there such agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Therefore, debate will begin on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 15 to 18 at page 2.

He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to commence the debate on report stage of this Bill by reminding the House that the Government put closure on the Bill at second reading. Then it put a deadline on the committee, which prevented the committee from holding hearings in places to which it should have gone. The Government put closure on the committee and then it put closure on the people.

Many people wished to appear before the committee to discuss one of the main thrusts of this Bill, paragraph (b) of Clause 3 which indicates that competition and market forces are, whenever possible, the prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services. My amendment seeks to delete that entire paragraph.

I move to delete that paragraph because, long before this legislation will have been included in the Statutes, already we have seen a substantial lessening of competition in the airline industry where there has been, for the past three and a half years, de facto deregulation. There are now only two major carriers when there used to be six large regional carriers and two national carriers. These two national carriers now effectively dominate the market. Competition has been further decreased under de facto deregulation because those two remaining carriers have obtained operating licences and operating agreements or have taken over or bought into at least a dozen and perhaps even 20 small local and regional carriers. In effect, the two remaining national carriers control the market.

Before we even began to deal with this Bill, it was shown through Canadian experience that having competition and market forces as the raison d'être of the transportation sector does not work, has not worked and is not working now. The same is true in the United States. The six major carriers which used to control about 55 per cent of the American market now control upwards of 80 per cent of it. The number of bankruptcies, mergers and takeovers has substantially decreased competition. One could say the same for the trucking industry, but I will get to that when we deal with Bill C-19. However, there were over 300 bankruptcies just last year alone in the American trucking industry because of the substantial decrease in competition in that industry.

The same is not entirely true of Canada because no one is about to build another national railway. We have enough trouble keeping the two we have going. That has been the case since 1923. Even for the two so-called competing railways, the thrust of the legislation is that a carrier, be it a railway or a trucking company, can decrease competition by using under-the-table deals, discounts, kickbacks and all the things that used to be illegal, all the things that fly in the face of so-called market forces, all the things that fly in the face of competition. That is what has occurred in the United States and that is what will occur in Canada.

Public convenience and necessity still remain the best criteria. We submit that the evidence is already in front of us, staring us in the face and in fact has hit us in the face, regarding the substantial drop in and deterioration of competition in the airline industry. Surely the Government needs no further evidence to tell it that it cannot rely only on competition and market forces in transportation, an essential public utility. It is inevitable that the result will be a decrease in competition, further concentration in a smaller number of hands and a domination of the transportation market, no matter which mode, by a very few. That is not free, open competition and free market forces. When left to their own devices, public convenience and necessity, employment and safety, and the welfare and good order of dozens of communities are not considered. The bottom line syndrome takes over. They will only transport goods and people if they can make a buck, and the bigger the buck the better. If they have to reduce service, eliminate competition, and cut corners in order to survive with the competition and market forces, they will do that in spades if this Bill ever becomes law. There are no safeguards for the shipper, receiver or traveller built in.

In the name of competition and market forces American trucking companies and railroads will be able to do things in Canada which Canadian railroads and trucking companies cannot do in the United States. We have repeatedly pleaded with the Government to put in a safeguard clause stating that as and when that occurs we will take reciprocal action. We ask for at least that much.

Competition is not working in the airline industry. When Air Canada gives a discount fare, Canadian International gives an identical one but some communities are left out. If an airline wants to compete and be party to market forces, it should have to offer the same service to every city it serves. It should not be able to pick and choose to which communities it will offer discount fares to.

My own city, for example, has been left out on occasion. We are not part of Canada. Reduced fairs are offered to Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto and Montreal and the rest of us pay the full fare or drive to the nearest large city to get the low fare. That is not competition. That is abuse of the travelling public and the rankest kind of discrimination. We are reverting to the days of the railroad barons when people were discriminated against depending upon where they lived or where their production was located.

This is an appeal to mediocrity. The last six times I travelled to the United States I was not on a clean airplane and could not find neat and properly dressed flight attendants. I did not have a meal fit to eat in their system of free market forces and competitive economy. So far, even with deregulation, those of our airlines which have survived rank in the top ten in the world. I am very proud of that.

The Government is hypnotized by the idea of competition and market forces. This will inevitably lead to a lessening of competition and a deterioration in the quality, kind and location of service for Canadians. I hope the Government will relent and accept this amendment.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate at this time to indicate that we in the Liberal Party are concerned about the wording of Bill C-18 which seems to be contradictory. The clause which the Member from Regina wants to have removed reads as follows:

> (b) competition and market forces are, whenever possible, the prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services,

It is quite clear that market forces very often diminish competition rather than increase it. The reality is that in certain sectors of the economy market forces are so compelling that the biggest ones dominate the market and can literally wipe out the smaller ones.

Therefore, I fail to understand how the Government, in its national policy on transportation, believes that a national transportation system should exist totally in the hands of market forces with faith that competition will be enhanced. Evidence so far of deregulation in the transportation industry in the United States is to the effect that instead of creating more competition there has been less competition.

The standing committee of the House of Commons dealing with Bill C-18 has received evidence to the effect that the industry is very concerned about the consequence of deregulation on the stability of their industry. I refer in particular to the trucking industry which appeared before our committee and clearly told the Government that deregulation in the trucking industry in Canada will create major turmoil and bring about rationalizations of many of the current operations and that a large portion of the trucking industry in Canada will be either bankrupt or purchased by American companies.

I do not think this will bring about better competition. It will shrink competition in the trucking industry. I submit, therefore, that this clause is contradictory in its wording. I believe that the mover of this amendment is correct when he says that this clause should not be in the Bill because it is not a true reflection of the reality.

It is not realistic to say that competition and market forces are the prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation service. In the airline industry, the railway industry and the trucking industry there have been regulations in the past which have ensured service throughout Canada, in rural and remote areas in particular. In issuing licences the National Transportation Commission was ensuring that service will continue in these areas. If we abolish this commission, people will be allowed to come in and out at will. If they start a service and decide it is not profitable, they will pull out. Therefore, the public, which was expecting and hoping that through deregulation there would be more competition and service, will find out in the end that in fact there is less service and less competition.

I believe what we are just beginning to see happen in the field of the airline industry is enough to make us understand that it is a very dangerous course the Government of Canada has now decided to follow. Clearly the deregulation of the airline industry has not brought about more competition. It has brought about a major concentration of the airline industry into two groups, the Air Canada group and the new Canadian airline group. That is the reality.

We used to have one major airline in Canada, Air Canada, a significant, almost major national airline, present almost everywhere but in the Maritimes, which was CP Air, five regional carriers and about a dozen local provincial airline companies. Since the Government has decided to deregulate, to allow a total free-for-all in the transportation industry, there have been takeovers and consolidation of operations into two major groups. We have seen the disappearance literally of the small local and provincial airlines. They are now part and parcel of the two large airlines.

In my own Province of Quebec we used to have competition between QuebecAir, Nordair and Air Canada. But we have seen the disappearance of this competition with the existence of only one service. Only one company is now giving us service. With the new rules of deregulation, there is no guarantee that the service will continue in some of these localities. Therefore, I ask myself, is the Government really serious when it introduces an Act respecting national transportation and in the very first clause of the legislation, in the declaration of a national transportation policy, it says that the national transportation system must be the foundation of competition and market forces? This is not the way it operates.

Since Pacific Western merged with Canadian Pacific, we have seen in western Canada the abandonment of some routes by one of the two airlines. Where localities in western Canada used to be served by two airlines, they are now served by only one airline. Certainly, competition will not flourish under this legislation. What is at stake is a dangerous possibility of excessive concentration, less competition and less service for the consumer. I do not think it is very good. I do not think it is in the interests of Canada. Therefore, I will support the amendment proposed by my colleague from Regina.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, at the outset I want to provide perhaps an explanation for those who will read Hansard and compare it with the Order Paper of previous days. I would point out that because of the difficulties we have had recently in scheduling House business, particularly when Bill C-18 was to come before us for the commencement of report stage, we found that I was not going to be in town. Half of the amendments proposed by my Party were in my name, whether they were accepted or not, and we were forced to put them all in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Therefore, for those who are wondering why all of a sudden the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan does not have his name on these amendments, that is the explanation.

The motion which was originally in my name, I think, hits at the heart of the approach of the Government to the transportation sector, the financial sector and the energy sector, as well as other sectors. Very clearly it is a philosophical approach on the Government's part. It believes in free enterprise. It believes in the private sector and that the market-place is the be all and end all.

We in the New Democratic Party believe there is a need for the federal Government and the provincial, territorial and municipal Governments, at various points in time, to intervene in a way to provide some balance and protection for the consumers, for the communities, for the provinces and for the nation as a whole.

The amendment before us in effect amends Clause 3, which is headed "national transportation policy—declaration". The part we wish to see removed reads as follows, and I quote:

> (b) competition and market forces are whenever feasible, prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services—

I think it is important we examine that clause and our move to delete that paragraph in the context of that declaration, which I would like to quote. Under the heading "National Transportation Policy" it states:

> It is hereby declared that a safe, economic, efficient and adequate network of viable and effective transportation services making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to serve the transportation needs of shippers and travellers and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada and its regions—

There is clearly nothing to conflict with that statement and the move to delete subparagraph (b). In fact, Clause 3(1)(c) states very clearly that economic regulation is needed, and I quote:

> Economic regulation of carriers and modes of transportation occurs only in respect of those services and regions where regulation is necessary to serve the transportation needs of shippers and travellers and such regulation will not unfairly limit the ability of any carrier or mode of transportation to compete freely with any other carrier or mode of transportation,—

We on this side believe that because of the geography of our country, because of where people have decided to live, to work, to raise a family, unlike the United States we are stretched in a very narrow ribbon across the 49th parallel, more or less, with the bulk of our population concentrated in the Windsor, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City corridor. There is one kind of transportation infrastructure there. There are many more options to those who wish to travel or to ship goods. For the rest of us who live at great distances from the metropolitan area, whether it be Thunder Bay, Winnipeg, Regina, Moose Jaw, Prince Rupert, St. John's, Newfoundland, Halifax, or any of the other communities away from that narrow corridor of southern Ontario and Quebec, the market forces do not work the same way. We do not have the volumes on a consistent basis to allow for the kind of competition which I think quite realistically can exist, for example, in the air side, in the triangle of Toronto, Ottawa, and Montreal.

It is clear that all of us who work in the House and who have constituencies away from Ottawa know that the vast number of people are travelling out of Ottawa and into it, out of Toronto and into it, and out of Montreal and into it, and that there is no need for choice. There is need for competition in order to provide for quality service as well as frequency of service.

However, with respect to the Thunder Bays of the world, even though it has the twelfth largest airport in the country, we know that there is only a population of around 113,000 locally and perhaps another 100,000 regionally to draw on to feed the airlines. So competition is different there.

Quite frankly, we need some protection since, with low volumes, the major carriers with the largest equipment will perhaps bypass Thunder Bay or only service it at certain times of the day. We are already starting to see stacking in Thunder Bay, something which we have been seeing in Toronto for quite a while, as well as in the United States, where all the carriers come and go at the same time. This places incredible pressure on the infrastructures. It causes overcrowding and frustrates travellers.

In the region we are seeing a change. We are seeing more carriers functioning, although there are fewer and fewer owners of air carriers. The smaller ones seem to get gobbled up by the two major airlines.

When I flew out of Thunder Bay this week on the tarmac there was an Air Canada airplane with all its insignias. Beside it was an Air Ontario airplane with its new maple leaf up in the corner. Beside that plane was a smaller plane owned by Austin Air, again with a maple leaf up in the corner. This gobbling up of the transportation sector has caused an elimination of competition. I cannot fault the current Government for that since Bill C-18 is not now in place.

What has happened thus far on the air side is as a result of a policy decision made by, I suppose, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was the Minister of Transport. It was his Government which opened up the skies and said: "We are going to have reverse onus. We are going to allow carriers to come and go as they will". The Conservative Government has inherited that situation, and my colleagues and I believe that it will make the situation worse. There will be less and less competition, as well as less service given to the people.

Sometimes I think that the Government wants it both ways. It has preached that deregulation will lead to lower fares. We know as a result of hearing the testimony before the Transport Committee that by and large the fares have bottomed out already. We have not seen much in the way of specials. In fact, we have seen an elimination of the ongoing seat sales. We are back to the sporadic seat sales which are offered to fill in empty seats on planes during the off times of the year.

At the same time, the Government has turned around and complained that a foreign carrier is out-competing Canadian carriers. I gather from press reports that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has decided to take some legal action to try to prevent this unfair competition.

I want to ask the Minister through you, Madam Speaker, this question: Which way will it be? Will it be competition to bring about lower rates for people? Or will it be a regulated process which ensures that there is protection for the consumer? In this way, on the one hand, they will not be overcharged, or ripped-off to use the vernacular, while on the other hand it will be certain that the carriers, be it on the air side, the rail side or on the trucking side as a result of Bill C-19, have an appropriate level of income to ensure their stability. The stability of their operations means money to pay their employees properly. It means money to pay for health and safety measures. It means money to pay for security, safety equipment and other things.

I think it is important that we accept the amendment to delete subclause (b) so that we remove the phoney principle of the market-place and ensure that we have some form of economic regulation right across the board. In some of our other motions we will be dealing with that. I think it is important to the country as a whole.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise once again on Bill C-18, because it is obviously a most important Bill for Canada, for all Canadians, and especially for remote areas where services are frequently not on par with those in more densely populated areas. I therefore support wholeheartedly the amendment moved by my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) which suggests that the Bill be amended by striking out the following lines:

> competition and market forces are, whenever feasible, the prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services—

The purpose of this Bill, we are told, is to increase services and competition, so that somehow Canadians will be better served throughout the country through increased competition. We should remember however, Madam Speaker, that free enterprise tends to eliminate competition. And of course, less competition means reduced services, so that after a while consumers begin to realize that there is no competition and that they have to pay more to get the services they need. And of course, in the end, it is the consumer that foots the bill. He ends up paying more. Of course, there may be more competition for some time, we may be able to benefit from a little more competition for some time, but you know that in the end the strongest will always win, and that of course will happen in the transportation sector just as anywhere else.

I therefore support this amendment, Madam Speaker, because I believe it runs counter to paragraph 3(d), which reads:

> (d) transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development,
> The commercial viability of transportation lines should be balanced against the goals of regional economic development so that the potential economic assets of each region may be fully developed.

I must say that paragraph (d) was amended in committee following long discussions and on the basis of many representations from both sides. Madam Speaker, I should like to suggest an amendment to this clause. However, I feel that paragraph (b) goes against paragraph (d), which deals with regional development. If we allow market forces and competition to operate freely, it goes without saying that we are going to lose some services. In my opinion, that is where the danger lies for our remote regions.

Madam Speaker, I could describe for you the situation which exists in south-eastern New Brunswick, where the market forces were left to operate freely. The Government has chosen the hands-off approach. It has refused to intervene. Of course, you are aware of the situation at the CNR workshops in Moncton. We have lost 800 jobs over the past two years. That is what happens when the market forces are left free to operate. Yet, the Government could have done something. It could have saved these jobs. It could have spared the few hundred workers affected the problem of having to move, because, as you know, our economy in south-eastern New Brunswick just could not create enough jobs over such a short period of time to absorb all these unemployed workers. So people are leaving. While flying home this past weekend, I met one of these workers who was returning from Winnipeg wondering whether he was going to move with his family. He asked me if there was anything anybody could do, because he was completely lost. That is what happens when market forces are left free to operate.

Last weekend again, as most Hon. Members, I used transport services, mostly to fly between Ottawa and Moncton. As recently as this spring, positions of mechanics were eliminated in Moncton, St. John and Fredericton. I contacted the Air Canada people and asked them how this was going to affect the services provided to the Moncton, St. John and Fredericton people, and I was assured that services would not be reduced in any way whatsoever. As I was flying home on Thursday night to spend the weekend with my family, the captain announced that the plane would land in Halifax, not because of adverse weather conditions in Moncton, but because of an electric problem. So he lands in Halifax. Why? Because there are no engineers in Moncton to look at the aircraft, and if he lands there, he cannot take off again. Despite the assurances I had that people in the area would suffer no service reductions. However, 100-odd people aboard that plane were rerouted: they had to land in Halifax, and those who had to go to Moncton early in the evening had to find other means of transportation. Of course, Air Canada offered to take us back to Moncton, but three hours later.

So, Madam Speaker, this is what happens when competition and market forces have a free hand—everything goes when it comes to cost-cutting too often at the expense of service to the people.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I have a few comments on Bill C-18 and the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

• (1720)

[English]

His amendment is one that would eliminate the sentence: "Competition and market forces are, whenever possible, the prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services". We should give that serious consideration because when a Bill deals with competition and market forces being the prime motivators in terms of transportation in this country, it builds into the system a clause that will discriminate against many regions of this country, including small communities, rural Canada, and other parts of Canada that are a long way from the market.

I want to use a specific example in my riding to show why I am concerned. In my riding we are beginning to see the effects of the rationalization of the railways, CNR and CPR.

Melville is a rail centre for the CNR and always has been. There are approximately 600 or 700 jobs with CN in the City of Melville, which has a population of about 5,000 people.

Approximately two months ago, the CNR announced that as of the end of June it would lay off some 46 employees. There are now rumours that another 14 will be laid off by Christmas, for a total of 60 lay-offs.

I want to say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that last Thursday in Melville, the City of Melville, the trade union, and the Chamber of Commerce organized a rally at the Melville stadium. There were 1,200 people at the Melville stadium protesting the rationalization of CNR and the loss of 46 jobs to that community, the loss of many families in that community. I was pleased to be there with the provincial Minister of Labour, who is the MLA for Melville, with Mayor Don Abel of the City of Melville, who is also the President of the Saskatchewan Urban Municipal Association, with Peter Champagne who was one of the workers, who, with many other people, represent the community very well. The people at that rally were concerned about deregulation in general and particularly about the specific fall-out in the City of Melville.

By eliminating 46 jobs in a small city like Melville, the Minister is taking a real piece of the community. The spokesperson for the Chamber of Commerce explained how these lay-offs would affect business very negatively. These lay-offs take a large chunk from the schools because many of the men being laid off have children going to school. These people are being taken away from their families and friends.

There were 1,200 people protesting at the stadium in a small place like Melville, when game 6 of the NHL finals was being played and one of the Philadelphia Flyers, Brian Propp, was a junior hockey star in that very Melville arena. Despite the fact that the game was on television and people were following the play-offs closely, 1,200 of them showed up at the stadium. I think that should indicate to the Minister of Transport that people in Melville are concerned and want him to intervene with the CNR and use his influence as Minister of Transport to see whether he can ensure that those jobs do not end on June 30.

I appeal to the Minister to do that. The Mayor of Melville is in town today. I know Mayor Don Abel would like to see the Minister of Transport. I know other people in the City of Melville would like to see the Minister of Transport. The provincial MLA, who is the Minister of Labour and a Conservative Member, would like to talk with the Minister of Transport. All of us collectively are urging him to do what he can to persuade the CNR to keep those jobs in the City of Melville.

Another thing happened in Melville last Thursday night. We were there as invited guests. After all the guests came on to the platform, there were two empty chairs remaining. Those empty chairs were for the head of the CNR and the Saskatchewan member on the Board of Directors of the CNR. Both of them were invited. Neither of them even had the courtesy to telephone—

An Hon. Member: Is this relevant?

Mr. Nystrom: —the organizational committee of the City of Melville to say that they would not come. They did not send a letter, a telegram, or anything at all. I suggest that this is a very human, personal, particular example of deregulation of transportation, where we have the rationalization plan of CN affecting Melville, one of the cities in my riding, in a very real and pertinent way.

That kind of thing will be repeated time and time again across the country if the Government has its way in terms of deregulation of transportation in Canada, be it airlines or other modes of transportation.

It is only one example. I could give other examples in my riding. A few moments ago the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker) said that I was not being too relevant to the Bill. I think I am being extremely relevant. I should like to give another example in my riding of how deregulation affects ordinary people in small towns and villages when we have deregulation, when we have a plan where the railways are forced to rationalize.

An Hon. Member: Abolition.

Mr. Nystrom: I think the Hon. Member was probably going to say the abolition of rail lines and branch lines. When we have a plan where the railroads are forced to lay off staff, they eventually abandon rural branch lines. I have had three or four cases in my riding where CNR and CPR have tried to abandon branch lines. They do that because they are lines which serve the small communities, villages, and towns, and they do not have the same market size as do bigger communities.

Why should people living in small towns and villages be discriminated against? Why should they be the ones who suffer because the Conservative Government is committed to an ideology which says that it must deregulate, it must privatize, and it must have free trade? It is dedicated to this archaic ideology of the 19th century, this neo-conservatism of Ronald Reagan which affects people in a very negative way in small communities throughout my constituency. People who live in Preeceville, Sturgis, Calder, Rosthern, and all kinds of communities in my riding are concerned about this kind of ideology going wild. They are concerned that their rail lines may be abandoned, that their rail lines may be the next ones to go.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because my friend opposite referred to me, I would like to invite him to southern Alberta where the Towns of Whitla, Winnifred, Burdett, Grassy Lake, and Seven Persons, which are on a main CP rail line are declining even with a railway. I do not think it can be simply said that it is solely because of rail line abandonment.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not a point of order.

Ms. Jewett: There are other Tory policies which are pretty bad, too, that have caused that.

Mr. Nystrom: It may not be just the railway. I can tell the House what will happen once the railways leave. Farmers in Willowbrook in my riding, when the line was abandoned, had to start hauling their grain to Theodore, Springside and Yorkton. The whole village started to disappear. It was the same in the Village of Jedburgh. When a farmer hauls his grain to town, he is liable to do some shopping, spend some money in that town at the same time. When the railway disappears, the town starts to disappear even more rapidly.

Mr. Thacker: It happens even when the railway is there.

Mr. Nystrom: The point I want to make is that when we start deregulating, railways start laying off staff and cutting costs. I refer the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills to Bill C-18. It indicates that one of its main criteria is that competition and market forces are, wherever possible, the prime agents in providing a viable and effective transportation service. If we are looking at competition and market forces, we must realize that they are not going to make much money hauling grain out of Willowbrook, Jedburgh, Rosthern, and Calder.

I suggest that these people deserve a service as much as people in Weyburn, Yorkton, or Swift Current deserve a service.

Mr. Orlikow: Or those in Lethbridge.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, those in Lethbridge. They happen to live in bigger centres where the rail lines will be maintained. If it is based strictly on profit, the small person or the average person will suffer.

I invite my friend from Lethbridge to go to the City of Melville to make the kind of speech on free enterprise, deregulation, privatization, and free trade which he makes in the House.

Ms. Jewett: Invite the Minister too.

Mr. Nystrom: I invite the Minister as well. After all, the City of Melville has a Conservative MLA. I am sure he would be very happy to see the Minister out there.

Mr. Crosbie: They will have a federal Conservative after the next election.

Mr. Nystrom: If the Minister does not come out there, in the next election the Conservatives will not even finish second in Yorkton—Melville; the Liberals will finish second. I invite the Minister to come to Melville to talk with the local people, with Mayor Don Abel, with the trade union, and with the Chamber of Commerce to save those jobs. I am asking him to be a gentle, benevolent, decent Newfoundlander and to save those jobs in the City of Melville, and we will all be happy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

For the same reasons the Chair explained earlier, we will now proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 4.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 15 to 18 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) competition and market forces are, whenever feasible, prime agents in providing viable and effective transportation services, provided that each carrier or mode of transportation establishes and maintains fares, rates and conditions that do not constitute unfair or destructive competitive practices."

He said: Madam Speaker, you will notice that this motion is another proposition we are putting to the Government which deals with subparagraph (b) of Clause 3.

We are hoping that the Government will accept Motion No. 3. However, if it decides that it cannot do so, then we have Motion No. 4, which tries to make competition work in the best sense of the word, which tries to ensure that it is real competition and does not allow for discriminatory practices against people or the goods they produce just because of where they happen to be located.

In the maintaining of fares, rates, and conditions alone, discrimination is already in place in the airline industry and in some parts of the railway industry. In fact, under another Act, a discriminatory practice which had been approved by the CTC is now under appeal to Cabinet. I am referring to variable rates. I think of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) with farmers along the Alberta border who are 300 miles closer to Vancouver but will be paying higher freight rates than those paid by grain producers in the centre of Saskatchewan, some 300 miles to 400 miles farther away from Vancouver. If that is not discrimination of some kind or other, I do not know what is, Madam Speaker, when you get discriminatory practices in airfares where somebody gets a discount fare out of Calgary to go to Vancouver while a person out of Regina cannot. Conversely, a person can get a discount fare to go to Toronto from Calgary but the person coming out of Regina cannot. Yet the person in Regina is 600 miles closer to Toronto. You have a situation that the person flying out of Calgary gets a lower fare than the one flying out of Regina.

If you want to make competition work, surely to goodness the law must say that there will not be any discrimination, that that mode of transportation and those carriers have to maintain fares, rates and conditions that do not constitute unfair or destructive competitive practices. Surely that is the minimal requirement that should be placed on the transportation industry in Canada. You cannot leave it to the so-called competitive and market forces. It has never in transportation worked before. It ain't working now in the USA and it certainly is not working in the airline industry in Canada. With this legislation, you will see the same effect in the trucking industry and, in many respects, in the railway industry.

As I said many times in the committee, and as I said to a number of witnesses some of whom were in favour of the legislation and some of whom were against, the efforts of my Party in the committee and here in this House are to try to make a bad Bill less bad. That is exercising our duty as members of the Opposition, not only to oppose but to propose and to try to persuade. That is why I was so interested in some of the speeches made by Hon. Members on the government side who have very short memories about all the complaining they did concerning rules when they were in the Opposition. Under the rules, it is a duty of Members on all sides of the House to exercise maximum effort, to oppose and to propose. That is what we are doing here.

I received assurances from the former Minister of Transport and from the present one that they would not be hidebound, that they would be flexible and open. What we got in the committee was not an open door. They were as open as a locked door. They did accept a couple or three minor things hoping that that would pacify, please and make them look like nice fellows. They are nice fellows, but they ain't very open, or they have not been yet. We were told by the previous Minister of Transport and by this one that this is not etched in stone, but it sure as hell is etched in black.

Without some significant and numerous changes to this legislation, we will have to go full circle, as we did from the turn of the century up to the end of the First World War when our transportation system and the railway industry was a complete disaster and competition was not working. We had to take over, nationalize five bankrupt railroads, bail out the bond holders, and bring in a regulated regime. During the 1930s and all during the war, right up until the last three or four years, we have had a regulated regime that put public interest and public service, necessity and convenience ahead of everything else. It was too slow and cumbersome in many respects, I admit. It was not responsive or quick enough to the needs of the consumer, the shippers or the receivers. That can be corrected. We will go along with streamlining a national transportation agency that is more responsive and responds much quicker, not just in the interests of transporters but in the interests of shippers, receivers and passengers.

Without provision in law at least to attempt to make competition work, the law of the jungle takes over. Shippers, receivers and consumers, particularly those who are small shippers and receivers and who are located in small communities—by that I mean even cities up to 150,000 population who are trying to reach markets in larger centres—are discriminated against. You have to enshrine in the legislation itself the principle of making competition work with these minimal safeguards.

This is why I am persuaded to run again so I can be sitting in this House, because I predict that three, four or five years down the road we will have to go full circle for the third time since 1867 to bring back a regulated regime. If you want to persuade me not to run again, withdraw this legislation and I will consider it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Thacker: Is that a promise? Can we get that in writing?

Mr. Benjamin: In Motion No. 4 along with Motion No. 3, although the Speaker feels that they should be debated separately and voted on separately, we are at least presenting two alternatives to the Government to make this Bill in its basic thrust, as bad a Bill as it is, less bad. We hope that the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary or somebody over there will get up and so indicate. If they want to indicate ahead of time how many of these amendments of ours they think are good—I know they think a lot of them are good—and are acceptable, we could probably get through this Bill a lot quicker. If government Members are going to be stubborn, mean, difficult and ornery, they leave us no choice but to present every motion as sincerely and as strongly as we can.

In the course of opposing we are proposing and hopefully, we will be able to persuade.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I had hoped to hear a government Member explain to this House why the Government does not want this kind of protection. Why does the Government not want to put a proviso that each carrier or mode of transportation establishes and maintains fares, rates and conditions that do not constitute unfair or destructive competitive practices? Why is the Government not coming forward and saying, "Of course, we want to protect them. We want to provide that protection". There is no movement at all. In fact, I heard a call for the question, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Belsher: We did our homework in committee. You were there.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member makes reference to doing our homework in committee. I want to remind him that we were not given the amount of time that we originally wanted.

Mr. Belsher: Now, now.

Mr. Angus: I want to be accurate by saying that in order to get travel outside of Ottawa, the limited travel that we did, it was an all-Party agreement—

Mr. Belsher: Right.

Mr. Angus: —to report by a certain date. That would not have been necessary if the Government were really confident in this Bill being accepted by the people of Canada. The Government wanted to get it through fast. Once we finally got it to committee stage, it took the Government forever after it was tabled to get it into the House for discussion. That says more about the manner in which the Government is controlling its own affairs than anything else. If the Government were that concerned about us doing our homework, we would have had more than two days to do clause by clause study. We would have had more than a partial to a full day with the Minister to go through the philosophical matters. Quite frankly, we were rushed. My colleagues and I are trying to correct some of those things we may have missed.

The Hon. Member made a reference to filibustering. I can assure him that we have no such intention whatsoever. I will be the last speaker for my Party on this clause. We are being very conscientious. Quite frankly, we learned the hard way during the debate on the WGTA. Before we had gotten anywhere near the end of our list of motions, the Liberal Government of the day brought in closure and many of our amendments were not dealt with.

We want to present our case in a very responsible way. We want to encourage the Government to reconsider some of its positions, and then we want to move on to other motions. There are many motions before us and we want to get through them before we complete our work on this Bill.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), said, we are trying to improve this Bill. Through the policy part of the Bill, we are trying to say that we feel that competition should be, where feasible, the prime agent in providing viable and effective transportation services. The House will recall my comments on Motion No. 3. I said that there are areas in Canada where competition does work, where market forces do compress prices and push up the quality of service. However, there are also areas in what I like to refer to as the near-North for which this is not true.

The near-North is not included in the exemptions found elsewhere in the Bill. Communities in that narrow band along the Canada-U.S. border and relatively close to the northern borders of the prairie provinces above which there is some form of continued regulation will be affected by this legislation. I am not talking about Thunder Bay or Sault Ste Marie, I am talking about Sioux Lookout, Kenora or Dryden, to use three examples from northwestern Ontario. These are communities with small populations, communities whose operations are seasonal.

In the past, there have been air services in these communities. By and large, these air services were established by entrepreneurs. Someone in the private sector sees a potential for the development of an air route and works extremely hard to develop that route and to get people to use air services rather than the roads and the rails.

Yes, these entrepreneurs had monopolies, but those monopolies were regulated and controlled by the Parliament of Canada through its agencies. As well, there was a need for those monopolies. Such a monopoly would ensure that a carrier who had invested time, energy and, most important, money to establish that route had some protection. Protection existed against people taking all the profit away during a lucrative summer season and then leaving a carrier who has established an infrastructure in the community struggling to make ends meet and to be able to continue to provide the service.

Regulations saw that that would not happen. However, thanks to the Liberal Government and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who introduced his "freedom of the skies" policy, those small entrepreneurs did get some competition. Carriers took over after the hard work had been done by an entrepreneur who had already convinced the people of the community to use the air facilities and who had invested in the community. The carriers took the cream away from the entrepreneur. They offered competition, but the end result was a reduction in service. The ultimate result of this Bill will also be a reduction in service.

As we see the big carriers take over the little carriers who took over the even smaller carriers and as we end up with only two national carriers for all intents and purposes, there will be minimal protection for the consumer and for the communities. The consumers may either lose the service or see the cost of that service blackmail them into paying exorbitant prices to move their goods and themselves and to stay in business. That is our ultimate concern.

Through Motion No. 4, we are trying to shift the emphasis a bit. We reluctantly accept competition as the prime agent, but we want some caveats. We want to ensure that when the courts look at this legislation as a result of legal actions, they will have to consider whether or not the mode of transportation or the carrier establishes and maintains fair rates and conditions that do not constitute unfair or destructive competitive practices.

We want to ensure that there is a mechanism that will prevent a small air carrier who has been out-competed by the biggies and is squeezing every last nickel and dime out of his operation will not cut those corners that mean safety and will not put in jeopardy that last passenger on that last flight before the company goes bankrupt. I think it is very important that the Government give consideration to accepting this modification.

I freely admit that the Government was very good about accepting many of the ideas about which we spoke in committee. As well, members of the Government moved their own motions. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary who is present will speak to the Minister and to the officials to see whether or not this modification would be acceptable.

I realize my time is running out, Madam Speaker. I know that one of my colleagues from the Liberal Party wants to speak, but perhaps, given the fuzziness of my eyesight when looking at the clock, you might want to join with me in calling it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member wishes to be recognized?

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Yes, Madam Speaker. If we do not call it six o'clock, I would like to rise.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATOR—SETTLEMENT WITH FRED TURNER

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition from citizens in Ottawa and district. They state that Turnair of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, whose representative appeared as a witness for the CTC, had its operating authority cancelled by the CTC after appearing before it, forcing Fred Turner, its operator, into bankruptcy. The cancellation of his licence is what bankrupted him.

Whereas the Queen's Privy Council of Canada later returned his operating authority and offered $15,000 in compensation but did not consult or negotiate with him, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House that an independent arbitrator be assigned to this matter to investigate the details of the case and to review and to negotiate the offer from the federal Government with Fred Turner in order to reach an equitable settlement which better reflects the true nature of his loss. For this the petitioners and this Hon. Member humbly pray.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO ROAD SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Trois-Rivières and Halifax who are calling upon Parliament to amend the existing highway safety regulations. The petitioners believe that the rear seat-belts in passenger cars are presently inadequate and that the suffering of car-crash victims could be reduced or avoided.

They also believe that the cost of medical care for car-crash victims can be reduced or eliminated.

For all these reasons, the petitioners urge Parliament to institute mandatory installation of three-point adjustable lap-shoulder seat-belts for rear seat passengers. They are also asking for installation of front seat air bags.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I have a second petition. This petition is signed by residents of Midland, Ontario, Elmvale, Ontario, Petaigan and Orillia, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition signed by residents in different parts of Ontario who are calling upon Parliament to amend the existing Canadian Safety Standards for rear seat-belts in passenger cars. The petitioners believe that the rear seat-belts in passenger cars are presently inadequate and that the suffering of car-crash victims could be reduced or avoided. They also believe that the cost of medical care for car-crash victims can be reduced or eliminated. QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the questions be allowed to stand?

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 3, consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport; and Motion No. 4 (Mr. Benjamin, p. 6706).

Mr. Speaker: There has been a great deal of discussion with respect to amendments to Bill C-18. Hon. Members will, of course, agree that the process which is now a custom in this place is discussions which take place between Hon. Members and the Table Officers. This eliminates a great deal of difficulty later when the Chair has to make a ruling. Therefore, I want to say, first of all, how much the Chair appreciates the respect for the process which all Hon. Members have shown and the co-operation they have given to the Table Officers.

Having said that, let me say that there has been in this particular case a great number of amendments. At least one Hon. Member may wish to say a few words before the Chair gives its ruling. This is to be looked upon as an exceptional circumstance, not a commonplace one. I will hear the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say how much my colleagues and I appreciated your assistance and guidance as well as that of the Table Officers in arriving at decisions regarding the eligibility or propriety of the amendments.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that if you think this is bad, you should be happy you were not in the chair during the Crow rate debate because at that time 108 amendments had to be dealt with. However, we will not prolong the matter now as we did at that time.

I am compelled to make a general comment first, and I promise I shall be brief. In the situation of report stage, the Chair is in the position of having to select or not select certain motions as well as decide whether or not they are in order. It seems to me that the rules provide the Chair with a wide latitude in this process of selection. I believe, Sir, that the Chair initially thought that some 30 motions would not be selected and that another 11 motions were out of order.

I would like to pose the question: Is the Chair placing itself, and any future successors—and I hope there will not be any successors for many, many years—in a position whereby, for example, in a minority Parliament, the Chair is not selecting but being selective? Further, I want to submit that the Chair must surely take into account that when there is a significant lapse of time between the proceedings in a committee and report stage of a Bill, events and circumstances can occur which will mean a measure which may have been defeated or passed in the committee needs to be reconsidered.

I also submit that we must recognize that the House may want to reverse a decision of the committee, especially a decision which was negatived, because we cannot assume that the House will always agree with a decision of a committee and it should have the opportunity to disagree.

I would just like to say briefly that Motions Nos. 2, 6, 11, 13, 44, 45, 46 and 96, are all substantive. They are all of a quality and importance such that the House may want to reverse a decision of the committee. For example, Motion No. 2 goes to the main thrust and principle of the Bill. According to the legislation and to the Government itself safety standards are paramount. We submit that that is extremely important.

Motion No. 11 defines the perspective of people who will be appointed to the agency, but the Bill is silent on the matter. Those engaged in a transportation undertaking or business and those in manufacturing or distributing of transportation plant and equipment are eliminated from being a member of the agency. However, those who are shippers are left untouched. Their conflict is just as direct as that of those engaged in a transportation undertaking.

Motion No. 13 attempts to correct that by placing those who are shippers or receivers in the same category and, according to a subsequent clause, they would have 90 days to divest themselves of any interest as a shipper or receiver.

Motions Nos. 44, 45, and 46 add to the major thrust of the Bill by making a willingness to meet the highest possible standard of safety a condition of obtaining a licence. The Minister, the Government, and the legislation have made clear that there will not be any compromise in the area of safety and security. We are suggesting that those three amendments strengthen the main thrust of the legislation.

Motion No. 46 deals with northern air transport. The Bill shows the Government's intention to continue a regulated regime in the northern designated area where public convenience and necessity are to be applied as they are applied under current legislation. The amendment continues that basic requirement in the new regime.

Motion No. 96 is substantive, because the House and the committee have agreed to a five-year review. At issue is the principle in the Bill to stimulate economic activity and employment. Since the review was agreed to for a five-year period, and subsequently a one-year review was agreed to, the amendment seeks to include in the annual review the progress or lack thereof of a continuous activity in terms of stimulation of economic activity and employment.

Finally, I should like to make a brief remark about two of my amendments which Your Honour has indicated are out of order. I thank you for the opportunity to try to persuade you otherwise. In Motion No. 21 we only add an equally important interest group to an already long list of important groups in the Bill which should be permitted to appear, if they wished, before the agency. Employment and employees are mentioned in other places in the Bill. I submit that the motion does not go beyond the scope of the Bill because it is permissive. These people may appear as well as the others already listed. It does not depend upon any other amendment passed or negatived; it stands on its own. As I say, it does not go beyond the scope of the Bill and certainly does not require additional government expenditure. These people may appear if they wish and obviously the Bill only provides for the expenditure of money if a witness is summoned. However, if they appear voluntarily, they are not eligible for any compensation.

Turning to Motion No. 48, the Chair cannot assume that I was trying to change the designated geographic area to one based upon population. Since my amendment does not seek to change the boundary stated in the Bill, it does not affect the designated area, its size, its shape, conditions, or anything else. The amendment only says that the commission "may". It does not require the commission. Also, the amendment relates to that part of the Bill which covers domestic air services, not the part of the Bill which covers the designated area. Perhaps I should have left out the words "designated area". In that case, the amendment would still mean the same thing.

I want to assure you, Sir, that I am not trying to accomplish something indirectly which I could not try to accomplish directly. I am only referring to markets with populations of 50,000 or less. Motion No. 48 in part reads:

—Where a domestic service is the only service for a market of less than 50,000 persons, and is outside of the designated area—

If it is inside the designated area it seems that the old regulated regime applies. However, I am thinking of the Cranbrooks of the world and many dozens of such places. Since there is a commitment by the Government that where there is imposed public duty because of a small market in order to ensure continuation of service, we want that to be part of the considerations for domestic services. That would apply in the whole country, and it does not do any damage to that part of the Bill concerning designated area. It is already there, anyway.

The amendment does not make a Cranbrook, for example, part of a designated area. However, it gives it a different consideration by the agency because of the size of its market and the service required. That is all. No other regulations apply to the designated area. It is just one criterion for small cities and large towns in scores of places which I submit need some kind of minimal standard that they can achieve. I submit that the amendment is in order and I hope you will reconsider it and so say, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the House would let the Chair consult for just a moment.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for the comments which the House has just heard. I want to assure him that the Chair has been listening, but I am not persuaded that under the circumstances I ought properly, in conformity with good procedural law, to allow the arguments which the Hon. Member has put and put intelligently and forcefully. Therefore, I regret to advise the Hon. Member that while I understand very clearly the substance of his argument, I reluctantly must advise him that procedurally I do not think I can accept it. That being the case, I am prepared to make a ruling on the order of these amendments and the acceptability of them at this time.

I should advise Hon. Members that in view of the very great number, and in view of the fact that a great deal of work has gone into trying to be not only procedurally sound but as generous as possible, this ruling will take a few minutes. I would ask Hon. Members to bear with me.

I think copies have been made available to those Hon. Member who are most particularly concerned.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have received what purports to be a draft of your ruling dated June 4, 1987 which is some 12 pages long. It may be that Members of the House would be prepared to have your formal reading of that ruling dispensed with as long as we all have copies of it.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for his suggestion because it would save some time. However, I have some concern when rulings are made whether we should deem them to be made. Perhaps on another occasion I might be persuaded to accept the suggestion of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, assuming of course it was acceptable to the House.

I think perhaps under the circumstances I should read the ruling. There will be 111 motions standing on the Notice Paper at the report stage of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation. When the House adjourned yesterday at 6 o'clock p.m., Motion No. 3 had been debated and a recorded division deferred, and debate had begun on Motion No. 4.

As there remain on the Notice Paper such a large number of motions not yet dealt with, many of which were debated at length during committee consideration, the Chair, after careful examination, has decided that a number of those which were debated and negatived in committee, along with some motions which are identical or consequential to them, together with a number of other motions, should not be selected. Therefore, the following motions will not be put to the House: Motions Nos. 1, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13, 18, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 36, 38, 39, 45, 55, 65, 66, 82, 92 and 96.

Motion No. 5 was moved and withdrawn in committee, when the chairman expressed procedural reservations concerning the motion's possible infringement on the financial initiative of the Crown. I can understand that point of view but, in this instance, I am inclined to give the benefit of the doubt to the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). Therefore motion No. 5 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 6, 7 and 8 will not be selected. Motion No. 9 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 10 and 11 will not be selected.

Motion No. 12 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 13 will not be selected.

Motions Nos. 14 and 15 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 16, 17 and 50 would remove from the Governor in Council certain powers and grant them either to Parliament or to the Agency. Therefore they will be grouped for debate. One vote will be taken on Motions Nos. 16 and 17. Motion No. 50 will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 18 will not be selected.

[English]

Motions Nos. 19 and 20 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motion No. 21 is attempting to introduce something new into the Clause it seeks to amend, which is beyond the scope of the Clause. Therefore I must rule this motion out of order and, in doing so, I would refer the Hon. Member to Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

[English]

Motions Nos. 21A and 22 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motion No. 23 in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would seek to expand the parties who may refer a dispute to the agency for mediation. This is beyond the scope of the clause, and I must rule the motion out of order. Again, I refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1).

Motions Nos. 24 to 32 inclusive all deal with the arbitration process. As the provisions of Motions Nos. 24, 25, 26, 28, 29 and 30 are contained in Motion No. 27, they will not be selected for debate by the House. But the other motions, namely, Motions Nos. 27, 31 and 32 will be grouped for debate. Motions Nos. 27, 31 and 32 will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 33 and 34 also deal with aspects of the arbitration process. They will be combined for debate but voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 35 would expand steps taken by the agency in conducting investigations undertaken pursuant to subclause 59(2) of the Bill. Provision for such public hearings would involve an additional expenditure and thus would infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order. In doing so, I rely on Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(7).

Motion No. 36 will not be selected.

[English]

Motions Nos. 37, 60, 61, 62 and 63 deal with confidential contracts and will be grouped for debate. Motions Nos. 37 and 62 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 63 obviates the need to put the question on Motions Nos. 60 and 61. A negative vote on Motion No. 63 requires the question to be put on Motions Nos. 60 and 61.

Motions Nos. 38 and 39 will not be selected. Motion No. 40 will be debated and voted on separately.

• (1140)

Motions Nos. 41, 42 and 43 attempt to amend an interpretation clause of the Bill. The definitions they seek to introduce are substantial amendments to the clause and are out of order. I think Mr. Speaker Lamoureux best summarized the procedural problem provided by an amendment to the interpretation clause when on May 21, 1970, at page 7166 of Debates, he said:

> In the opinion of the Chair, amendments of a substantive or declaratory nature should not be proposed to an interpretation clause. If such amendments were accepted, the clause would not then be an interpretation clause. I am sure Hon. Members realize the difficulty of accepting substantive amendments or proposals under the general classification of interpretation.
> I suggest to Hon. Members with respect that that is not the place to make proposed amendments or motions which are of a substantive nature.

Motions Nos. 44 and 2 will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 44 will dispose of Motion No. 2.

Motion No. 46 will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 47 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 48 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) seeks to redefine the term "designated area" by changing its basis from one of geography to one of population. I think this is clearly a new concept and I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he is trying to do indirectly what he cannot do directly although, he has argued strongly that that is not his intent. However, the effect is to change the definition of "designated area" as described in the interpretation clause. I must, as I have indicated to the Hon. Member with regret, rule the motion out of order.

Motion No. 49 will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 50 was dealt with in paragraph 8 of this statement.

Motion No. 51 would provide for financial assistance to carriers to encourage them to enter certain markets. The provision of such assistance would add a new expense and thus infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown. Again, in accordance with Citation 773(7) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, I must rule this motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 52, 52A and 52B will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 53 and 54 will be grouped for debate. A vote on motion No. 53 will also apply to motion No. 54.

Motion No. 54A will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 55 will not be selected.

Motion No. 56 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 56A, 57 and 57A will be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on motion 56A obviates the need to put the question on Motion 57. A negative vote on motion No. 56A would require the question to be put on motion No. 57. Motion No. 57A will be voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 58 and 59 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately. Motions Nos. 60 to 63 inclusive have been grouped for debate with Motion No. 37 and were dealt with in paragraph 18 of this statement. Motion No. 64 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 65 will not be selected. As motion No. 66 is consequential to motion No. 65, it also will not be selected.

[English]

Motions Nos. 67 to 78 inclusive deal with competitive line rates and will be grouped for debate. They will be voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 68 obviates the need to put the question on Motion No. 67. A negative vote on Motion No. 68 would require the question to be put on Motion No. 67.

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 70 obviates the need to put the question on Motion No. 69. A negative vote on Motion No. 70 would require the question to be put on Motion No. 69.

(c) Motions Nos. 71 to 78 inclusive will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 78A and 79 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 80 and 81 will be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 81 obviates the need to put the question on Motion No. 80. A negative vote on Motion No. 81 would require the question to be put on Motion No. 80.

Motion No. 82 will not be selected. Motions Nos. 83, 83A and 83B will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motion No. 84 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 84A and 84B will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 85 seeks to amend the subclause stipulating in what areas the Governor in Council may make regulations. This motion attempts to expand the definition of public interest by adding the counselling and retraining of employees as reasons the Governor in Council may exempt persons from the application of certain provisions of the legislation. This is a new concept and is clearly beyond the scope of the clause. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order and I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1), in support of this decision.

Motion No. 85(a) will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 86, 87 and 88 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 89 and 89A which deal with objections to proposed acquisitions of Canadian transportation undertakings will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motion No. 90 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 91 and 94 would add provisions for the agency to solicit public input from interested parties in undertaking reviews required by the Bill. Therefore, they will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 91 will also apply to Motion No. 94.

Motion No. 92 will not be selected.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 93 and 95 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 96 will not be selected.

Motion No. 97 would provide for hearings and inquiries by the agency in order to establish a basis for the evaluation of the progress made in meeting the objectives of the annual reviews required of the agency. Such hearings would create an additional charge on the Treasury. In addition, the intent of the motion is clearly a new concept foreign to the clause. Therefore, I must rule the motion out of order and, once again, refer Hon. Members to the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne's, sections (1) and (7) of Citation 773.

Motion No. 98 will be debated and voted on separately.

I apologize to Hon. Members for taking so much of the time of the House with this statement. However, as Hon. Members are aware, the large number of motions to be dealt with have taken a great deal of time and study.

• (1150)

For the benefit of Hon. Members I shall summarize this statement as follows:

Motions Nos. l, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13, 18, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 36, 38, 39, 45, 55, 65, 66, 82, 92 and 96 will not be selected for debate and will not be put to the House.

Motions Nos. 21, 23, 35, 41, 42, 43, 48, 51, 85 and 97 have been ruled out of order.

Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21A, 22, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 37, 40, 44, 46, 47, 49, 50, 52, 52A, 52B, 53, 54, 54A, 56, 56A, 57, 57A, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 67 to 81 inclusive, 83 to 84B inclusive, 85A to 91 inclusive, 93, 94, 95 and 98 will be put to the House for debate as outlined in this statement.

In closing, I think Hon. Members and certainly the public observing this would want me to express the appreciation of all Hon. Members for the very hard work that has gone into working out the appropriate and proper procedure for handling this number of motions. I want to tell the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), and others how much that is appreciated by the Chair.

The House will now resume debate on Motion No. 4.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any doubt in the minds of Hon. Members that you have spent enough time examining and deciding on the motions submitted to you. We wish to thank you for all the attention you have devoted to this decision.

I do not hesitate to support Motion No. 4 moved by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) because I feel that if it were approved, it would eliminate predatory rates, because the introduction of such predatory rates within the industry could cause some transportation firms, mostly the smallest and the weakest, which cannot face a non-competitive market, to disappear. Such rates would push them out of business.

[English]

This motion seeks to avoid predatory pricing, a situation that could drive a number of small transport companies out of business and allow bigger operators to capture a larger share of the market. Of course, if this were to happen it would lead to higher prices for the same services. The motion is very important and I invite all Hon. Members to support it. It reinforces Section 112(2) of the present Act which says that every rate shall be compensatory.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you might very well ask me: Why support such a motion if Clause 112 already takes this situation into account? Well, it is one more reason to support it, because it would reinforce the provisions of Clause 112 which provide that—

Every rate shall be compensatory.

But there is a clause a little further on which qualifies the term "compensatory", and it is the purpose of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to prevent under any circumstances such rates from being non-compensatory and becoming predatory.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, during the hearings, we heard a number of witnesses who were deeply concerned about the security aspect of our transport system. We fear—in view of deregulation and the haste with which the Government seems to push that industry toward deregulation—that public security could eventually be jeopardized. I view the Hon. Member's motion as something that would prevent some companies from being in a situation where they would have to reduce their costs and consequently give less consideration to security. And this could happen not only in road transport but also in other means of transport.

We also heard during the hearings several witnesses urging us to reflect on the present situation in the United States where deregulation was launched hastily and, in some cases, not enough consideration was given to security. We were also told that some accidents resulting in losses of lives had occurred recently and that we should examine what has happened during the last few years and take a second look at security problems.

Those are the reasons why, Mr. Speaker, I support the motion of the Hon. Member for Regina West and ask all the members of this House when they vote on this motion to keep in mind the security of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the debate on this question I recognized that this amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is a very wise one. In northern Ontario, communities have been served by carriers, in the airline industry for example, which have provided service for a considerable number of years and established a rate structure and a load. Along with deregulation and so-called free enterprise operations have come other carriers which have completely destroyed that structure. They drove the original carriers out of business. The rates increased and service became very infrequent. That is a destruction of the transportation system.

• (1200)

We have seen that happen in northern Ontario with rail and freight service. We have seen freight structures which discriminate against communities and regions which are resource-based. In fact, the rate structures are such that it is cheaper to ship out raw resources than to ship out the finished product.

Therefore I recommend to the House the adoption of the amendment of the Member for Regina West. I think it is eminently wise and would enhance the Bill considerably.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. We will move to Motion No. 5.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You may want to reconsider the order in which you are calling the motions. Debate on Motion No. 2 will also cover debate on Motion No. 44. I suggest that perhaps we could deal with those and get them out of the way. We will then be caught up and could proceed to Motion No. 5.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Regina West has no objection, the Chair would prefer to proceed with Motion No. 2 when we reach Motion No. 44.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent) moved:

That Bill C-18 be amended in Clause 3 by striking out lines 29 to 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"to regional economic development and commercial viability should be an objective both in the operation of transportation services and in the provision of facilities and services in direct support thereof, and where the Government of Canada decides or the Government of Canada and one or more provincial governments jointly decide that any such service or facilities and service is required for the achievement of national or regional, social and economic development objectives, that decision requires that those objectives take precedence over the objective of commercial viability whenever the two are in conflict. Where the Government of Canada decides or the Government of Canada and one or more provincial governments jointly decide that the achievement of national or regional social and economic development objectives requires that these objectives take precedence over the objectives of commercial viability, the benefits and costs involved should be identified and any relevant additional costs assumed by the government or governments concerned."

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is both a privilege and a duty to introduce this motion to amend Clause 3(1)(d) of Bill C-18. I appreciate that you recognized the motion and accepted it. To me, this is a sign that you recognize the importance of the motion for regional development. In fact, the intent of the motion is indeed to strenghten the importance of regional development. And as you read it, the motion would ensure that regional development takes precedence when decisions affecting transportation are made by this Government.

Mr. Speaker, the motion would clarify the Minister's authority. We know already that the Minister is empowered to act, as described in Clause 3(2), which states:

The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may specify, enter into agreements in support of the national transportation policy set out in subsection (1) or in respect of such transportation matters as the Minister considers appropriate.

The Minister indicated himself to the committee, on April 7, 1987, that he had that power. He said, and I quote:

[English]

There is provision in the legislation now for the Minister to enter into agreements in support of the national transportation policy or in respect of such transportation measures that the Minister considers appropriate.

Therefore, it is clear that the Minister already has that power.

The purpose of my motion, Mr. Speaker, is to define that power of the Minister more clearly, to streamline and reinforce it. With this motion, I am trying to develop a procedure under which regional development interests would take precedence over business interests when the two objectives conflict.

There lies indeed the major difference between this motion and the motion which was accepted when the Bill was studied in committee. In fact, Section 3(1)(d) of the Bill has been amended and Paragraph (d) now reads:

Transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development, and the commercial viability of transportation lines should be balanced against the goals of regional economic development so that the potential economic assets of each region may be fully developed

Mr. Speaker, these words now contained in that paragraph are of course justified. However, I think that is not good enough when we are talking about regional development.

Those words have insufficient clout to force the Government, the Minister and their staff to take regional development into account, and most of all, to give regional development precedence.

And if we really are to have a regional development policy which has some clout and which really meets the needs of the region, that should be acnowledged by all Ministers.

And if the objectives of regional development are only balanced against the commercial viability of transportation lines, we have no guarantee. It is too vague, too general. In fact, the Minister can forget or dodge that commitment. That is why I would like this paragraph to state that the objectives of regional development have precedence over commercial interests.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one calling for those changes. They have been suggested by numerous groups and people, and I take this opportunity to underline the suggestions of the Prime Minister of New Brunswick who said on April the 1st in Moncton, and I quote:

> The federal government's reluctance to date to incorporate into Bill C-18 satisfactory protection against the possible downside effects of the proposed legislation has increased the province's concern regarding the potential negative impacts of the new act on transportation services in New Brunswick, and in the Maritime Provinces in general. This is why New Brunswick is adamant that paragraph 3(1)(d) of Bill C-18, recognizing transportation as a key to regional economic development, be expanded to include the statement that regional economic development objectives will take precedence over commercial viability objectives when the two are in conflict.

And now for what was said at the same hearings by the Leader of the Opposition in New Brunswick, the next Prime Minister of the province, Mr. Frank MacKenna, whose position was much the same, and I quote:

> We must have a provision in this Act by which regional development directives take precedence over commercial viability . . . I am not endorsing the word "balance", I am endorsing the word "precedence".

In fact, the word referred to in the text is "balanced".

Mr. Speaker, other groups and the Governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island also supported this amendment.

I would urge all Members of this House to read the motion carefully, because my purpose in moving this motion is to provide for a mechanism enabling the Minister to act in terms of regional development. The Minister would either act alone or in consultation with the provinces or another agency.

Often, when we talk about regional development, it turns out no one actually has the responsibility. Mr. Speaker, Moncton, as you know, has suffered a massive loss of jobs. Every time we mentioned the subject in questions to the Minister of Transport, he told us the matter was being considered but that he did not intend to intervene in the business of Canadian National.

My motion would have given the Minister the means to act and to save the jobs we are losing today. By the end of this year, the number of employees will have dwindled to about 350, while in September, 1984, nearly 1,200 people were employed at the CN shops. So you see, losing all those jobs is quite a blow for New Brunswick. The legislation should have provided for a mechanism enabling the Minister to take action, either alone or together with the Province of New Brunswick; the Province of New Brunswick did get involved but it did not have the means, there was no mechanism for it to act together with the federal Government to save these jobs—

Mr. Speaker, I urge Hon. Members to examine this motion, to study it and to think about regional development, and of course I ask them to support the motion.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the two main issues that came before the committee when it was holding hearings on the Government's White Paper Freedom to Move and hearings on the legislation, were the matters of regional economic development and safety security. These were of particular interest in Atlantic Canada.

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) for this amendment because it deals with concerns that were felt by committee members from all Parties.

The amendment substantially deals with the concerns expressed about those issues by many individuals and organizations in Atlantic Canada as well as western Canada.

If the committee had not been placed under such a restrictive time limit, and had been able to travel to such places as Yellowknife, Whitehorse, northern Ontario, southwestern Ontario, northern Quebec and places in northern British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, I suggest we would have heard the same concerns as were expressed in Halifax, Moncton and St. John's.

Transportation is essentially a public utility, whether it is privately or publicly owned. All of the economic and social activities of a region such as Atlantic Canada depend on the transportation system that is designed to assist regional economic development. If the principle of the bottom line, which is cutting costs, takes priority, then of course lay-offs, rail line abandonment, and plant closures will result.

Surely the transportation system does not exist in those parts of Canada just to make a buck. When a transportation company, whether it is an airline, railway or trucking company, is told that it must operate as a public service, it is up to the Crown to cover the difference between revenues and costs in order to maintain a transportation service that will assist in further regional and economic development. Once that is accomplished the transportation mode becomes all the more viable. That is so because the region is developing, enlarging its economic activity and providing employment. Therefore, it provides more traffic for that mode of transportation.

The Government itself, as well as government Members on the committee, recognize that regional and economic development must play an essential role in any national transportation legislation. This is certainly set out in the report of the committee on the White Paper. It should take precedence over economic viability of the transportation system.

We cannot have it both ways. We submit that the development of the economy and the development of a region have to take priority over whether or not a railway, an airline or a trucking company can make a good buck. When they are left to operate with total so-called freedom to exit or enter a route or area of the country at their own will then there is not the stability of transportation service which is so essential to regional and economic development. If they are allowed to vacate an area, such as Atlantic Canada, because there is not enough traffic to make their existence viable, then the region will never become economically viable. Development will never take place because there will not be the transportation necessary to move the products, whether they be agricultural, manufactured or raw materials. There would be an insufficient capacity to grow. That is why regional and economic development have to take priority over economic viability of transporters.

The Government's blind adherence to the so-called deregulation of transportation in the name of competition and market forces automatically places regions such as Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and the far north at a disadvantage. It stacks the deck against their obtaining more regional and economic development. If transportation services are not in place, and transportation is the basic foundation of any economy, then allowing the transporters to pick and choose where they want to work, allowing them to go into the nice markets and cream the gravy off the top, going home to count their money and saying to hell with the rest of the country, cannot take place. That is why public convenience and necessity must remain.

However, we are only going to be allowed to keep those in the designated area. That is why this amendment which is before us is worthy of support. It places that type of priority in the new law so that this Government, or any succeeding Government, will always have to arrange that our efficient transportation system provides the type of service required for a region to grow and for job creation.

If we are totally to disregard, as the Government presently does, the principle of cross-subsidization, then those types of areas are left even further in the hole. Their capacity to grow is lessened even more. Cross-subsidization is a principle which I consider part of what we call co-operative federalism. That is to say that the nation as a whole shares in the cost of providing transportation services. In this way we minimize discrimination against people and the goods they produce because of where they happen to be located. If there are big profits to be made in the dense markets of Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton or Winnipeg, then fine. Some of those profits should go toward the provision of services in places such as Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario. That is fair. It means that all Canadians through the tax system, through the fares they pay and the rates they are charged, share together the cost of serving people all over the country, not just where a buck can be made. That has been an underlying principle in transportation since 1881.

The legislators of those days were more far-sighted than even they knew. We now have before us a short-sighted, self-defeating type of legislation that would eliminate what has been an absolute necessity in Canada for the past 100 some years. In fact, that necessity remains today. In some parts of the country it is even more needed than it was in the late 1800s or even in the Dirty Thirties.

I wish to commend the motion of the Hon. Member to the House. I commend him for moving it. I hope that the Government will decide that this is one that is worthy of acceptance and allow it to be incorporated into the legislation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this debate in order to commend my colleague for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) for bringing in this amendment that responds to representations made to the Standing Committee on Transport when on two occasions we travelled, especially in the Atlantic Provinces, both for the review of the Government document Freedom to Move and on the occasion of the second series of public hearings in the Maritimes, when the Transport Committee discussed Bill C-18. On each of those occasions, concerns of Maritime people for regional development were expressed in an absolutely clear, specific and undeniable way.

It is therefore amazing that did not get through to the Government. Certainly the Bill now before us does not meet the aspirations of the people in the Maritimes.

For those reasons, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent is bringing forward an amendment that would clearly specify that, where regional development objectives conflict with the objectives of commercial viability, the former would take precedence.

Obviously, transportation in Canada is absolutely vital to the economic welfare of all regions of the country. We cannot imagine such a large country as ours without a transportation system that is adequate to meet the needs of the people, not only for the transportation of passengers from one region to the other, but especially for moving all the necessities of life that must be delivered to the people living in the remotest areas.

Transportation therefore is vital for the Maritimes economy. I cannot understand why the Minister did not respond to the clear and specific representations that were made by his Conservative colleagues with provincial responsibilities.

The Government of Nova Scotia, the Government of New Brunswick and the Government of Newfoundland, three Conservative Goverments, made specific representations to the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who turned them down.

• (1230)

Therefore, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), is quite right to move this amendment. In doing so, he is speaking not only on his own behalf but on behalf of all the people of the four maritime regions. The Province of Nova Scotia appeared before our committee. It presented a brief to us which stated in part:

For many years the governments of the Maritime Provinces have advocated that the National Transportation Act endorse the following two regional development principles:

(i) transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development; and

(ii) where there is a conflict between regional economic development objectives and commercial viability, regional economic development must take precedence.

Without the commitment to the second principle, that development objectives take precedence, the first principle may have very little meaning.

I think my colleague is quite right. He has introduced this amendment to ensure that the two principles are there and they have some meaning. The Minister of Transport representing the Province of New Brunswick stated, and I quote:

This is why New Brunswick is adamant that sub-section 3(1)(d) of Bill C-18 recognizing transportation as a key to regional economic development be expanded to include the statement that regional economic development objectives will take precedence over commercial viability objectives when the two conflict.

The Government of Prince Edward Island said the same thing, and I quote:

—that it be enshrined and specifically defined in Section 3 of the National Transportation Act in the following words:

1) Transportation is recognized as a vital instrument of regional economic development;

2) Where the objectives of commercial viability or cost recovery are in conflict with regional economic development objectives, the latter shall take precedence.

The Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission said the same thing. It said it was important to add after the "development" the following:

—and regional economic development objectives take precedence over commercial viability objectives of the transportation system when the two conflict.

It is quite clear. The Leader of the Opposition in New Brunswick, Mr. Frank McKenna, appeared before our committee. He spoke very vocally on behalf of the people of New Brunswick. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in a very short while he may be the Premier of New Brunswick and, therefore, what he is saying should be taken into account. He said, and I quote:

It is essential that Bill C-18 be amended to ensure that economic development objectives will take precedence over commercial viability when the two objectives conflict.

It is interesting to remember that Mr. McKenna was questioned before the Standing Committee on Transport by the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) who tried to get him to accept that the word "balance" be in the legislation and be accepted. The Hon. Member for Moncton said:

Now, I guess the wording we have in most cases is that when looking at the commercial viability, it should be balanced in light of regional development objectives.

Mr. McKenna replied, and I quote:

With respect, I do not think so. The wording from Newfoundland is that, but I believe all three Maritime Premiers are unanimous as well as the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Committee, I believe, in saying that it should take precedence. I do not want to make that mistake. I am not endorsing the word "balance"; I am endorsing the word "precedence".

I think Mr. McKenna was certainly quite clear in this regard and the Hon. Member for Moncton was wrong in believing that the word "balance" would satisfy the people of the Maritimes. It will not satisfy the people of the Maritimes. What is needed is a crystal-clear commitment from the Government that in these circumstances, as suggested by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent, the precedence should prevail, and that economic development is paramount to any commercial viability and, therefore, it gives a direct mandate to the federal Government, who has a responsibility to sustain the efforts of the regions, to ensure that in the field of transportation, indeed, regional development is paramount and should be sustained through appropriate national transportation policy.

I would like to say in closing that Transport 2000 from the Atlantic Provinces also appeared before the committee. We can say that politicians have their own points of view, but here is a totally independent association, Transport 2000, which is known to be sometimes on the side of the Government and sometimes against it, depending on whether the Government is doing things well or not. Therefore, no one could say that Transport 2000 is a biased organization. Transport 2000 recommended, and I quote:

Specifically, we seek assurances that regional development and public interest considerations will take precedence over strict cost recovery criteria in the maintenance of transportation services to economically depressed areas.

This is what my colleague, in introducing his amendment, wants to accomplish. This is what we in the Liberal Party want to see in this legislation. We have never changed our view in this regard. I have here a press release which is dated February 7, 1977. It is a joint press release by the then Transport Minister, the Hon. Otto Lang, and the then Minister of Transportation and Communications of Newfoundland, Mr. James Morgan. They met and after their meeting they issued the press release which read in part, and I quote:

Mr. Lang, and the Maritime Premiers and Mr. Morgan agreed that where economic development objectives required it, those objectives would take precedence over the commercial viability of the services concerned. Mr. Lang further indicated that following further consultation with the Atlantic Provinces, he would propose an amendment to Bill C-33 now before Parliament to reflect that agreement.

Parliament was subsequently dissolved and this legislation never came to life and Mr. Lang is now doing other things. However, many years later we have the occasion to review and readdress this question through the National Transportation Act. I think we have to accept the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter into the discussion of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). It is an amendment which my Party supports. I want to take you back in time, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is important that we understand the changes which have occurred in this whole area throughout the process of the move toward deregulation by the Government.

We first had a White Paper called Freedom to Move brought down by the then Minister of Transport, which was given to the Standing Committee on Transport of the House of Commons to review. We had hearings here in Ottawa and in Halifax, Winnipeg and Vancouver. During these hearings we heard, both in terms of unprompted statements from witnesses, as well as through questioning by opposition members of the committee, that there was real concern about the impact of unfettered competition on some parts of our country. We heard about it in Atlantic Canada and we heard about it in the Prairies. We heard about it on the West Coast. We heard about it later when we travelled as a committee throughout northern Canada and the western Arctic. We heard pleas for some kind of protection and, quite frankly, only because the Opposition insisted upon it, was there mention of freedom to move in the report of the standing committee.

Then we got the original Bill which contained the following sentence: "Transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development"; not the only key, not the prime key, but a key. As we know from events this week in Ottawa, even the word "the" becomes an important point within the context of drafting a new version of the Constitution. "A key" was an area focused upon. After second reading in the House, it went to the Standing Committee on Transport which was charged with the responsibility of reviewing Bill C-18 and Bill C-19. Fairly extensive hearings were held in Ottawa and when we went on the road.

We heard the same message. People were frustrated because they had to repeat it. From their point of view, as well as ours, the Government had not listened the first time around. It had not listened to leaders in Atlantic Canada, in western Canada, or in the North in terms of the very real danger of it being left to the market-place to make a decision. The market-place would decide, based upon its bottom line, what was good and not good for shareholders. It would decide to eliminate or reduce a service without any regard to the impact it would have upon the regions and, most important, the impact it would have upon the people living in those regions. We heard from eminent people in all parts of Canada.

In terms of our committee hearings on the road, we started in the West and worked back to central Canada; then we started in the east and worked back again to the centre. On the western side there was difficulty. I am sure the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent will remember the frustration we felt. No matter how hard we tried as members of the committee to bring out the concerns, we had great difficulty during our hearings in western Canada. However, there was a difference when we were in Atlantic Canada. Unlike some parts of the west, people in Atlantic Canada have not had good times. They have seen the policies of national Governments being imposed upon them. They have seen themselves being ignored time and time again by Governments of both stripes at the federal level. They were scared that if the legislation went through once again they would be the ones on the "outs", the victims. They saw that there were areas of the country where competition was appropriate and did not need protection, for example, the Golden Horseshoe—the Windsor-Toronto-Montreal-Quebec City corridor where there are many options between modes and within modes to provide for the natural compression of rates on one hand and natural improvement of services on the other hand.

However, in Atlantic Canada, province after province, representatives of Governments, such as the Premier of New Brunswick, the Hon. Richard Hatfield, appeared before us. Let me read what was his contribution. He said:

> My overriding concern continues to be the lack of adequate recognition in Bill C-18 of the importance of transportation to regional economic development. The recognition of transportation as a key to regional economic development in Bill C-18 is an important step, but goes only half way.

Further in his statement he said:

> The national transportation policy statement which should be part of the new legislation must recognize the need to have regional economic development objectives prevail over commercial viability objectives when these are in conflict.

Government Members were listening very carefully. It was clear that they were getting the message. When we returned to Ottawa, we began the process of first hearing from the Minister and then from his officials. Then we got into clause by clause consideration. It was clear that Conservative members of the committee, particularly those from Atlantic Canada, got the message. Whether it was the message of the actual impact or whether it was a political message, I do not think we will ever know. The important thing was that they moved and worked behind the scenes to improve it once again.

Then we got the current wording of the clause which goes further than "a key" and says that transportation is recognized as a key to regional economic development and that commercial viability of transportation links is balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential economic strengths of each region may be realized.

Today we are trying to go one step further in the progression to allow us to have a statement in Bill C-18 which clearly gives primacy to regional economic realities over arbitrary decisions that are made by a transportation element in a region of the country, whether it be in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, the northern Prairies, the southern Prairies, northern British Columbia, or southern British Columbia. We would provide them with that primacy so that if a transportation mode were examining its situation, it would know that it could not move arbitrarily. There would be a protection, a control, or a regulation to prevent a change in a service which would have very negative effects on the economy of a region and the people who live there.

When we travelled and heard from the Premiers, the Ministers of Transport, rail unions, labour councils, and local development groups, we received a message we could not have heard had we sat here in Ottawa. Many of those people would not have been able to come here. It is not a question of whether or not the committee would find time for them. Perhaps it is not even a question of whether the committee would pay for them to come here. It is a question of available time. Many voluntary groups and small development councils do not have the resources to have their people away from their normal jobs for two, three, or four days in order to travel to Ottawa for hearings.

I should like to wrap up my comments because I realize that my time is up. I implore the Government to give serious consideration to allowing the further movement proposed by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent to be approved by the House, perhaps at a point sometime later today.

I appreciate having had the opportunity to contribute to this particular part of the debate.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I personally congratulate and thank the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) for bringing this very realistic and crucial motion before the House. It is an amendment which will put some common sense back into transportation in the country if carried out. We are not hearing a common-sense solution from the Government.

• (1250)

In answer to a question that I raised in the House just a few days ago, the Parliamentary Secretary told me that they had had a Transport Committee meeting that afternoon and had I been in attendance I could have presented my case. The Parliamentary Secretary knows full well that I am not a member of the Transport Committee and that that was a cop-out on his part. It was a cheap comment that he wanted to throw out and it had no relationship to the argument whatever.

The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent and those of us who are speaking on his amendment are serious about the transportation problems in Canada. We are not satisfied to sit back and let the large urban areas of Canada along the ribbon of rapid economic development in the southern part of the country take precedence over everybody and everything else.

When railways and modes of transportation were brought into Canada, they were brought in in order to service the regions because this country is all about regions and regional economic development. If it is not, then we are denying to many smaller communities the right to strive to be economically viable and to produce a half decent living standard for their people.

A lot of the conversation, comments and speeches in this House have been directed at branch lines. I can fully appreciate why many Members of this House are concerned about branch line abandonment because they service many small communities.

The matter that I want to raise again today is not a branch line, it is the main line of the CNR running from Glen Robertson near Montreal on the Quebec-Ontario border through to Ottawa, what is known as the Alexandria subdivision which is used now by both CN and CP trains because there is no CP track left between Ottawa and Montreal. I am also talking about the other section of the CNR main line called the Beachburg subdivision which runs from Ottawa up through Pembroke to Brent in the northern part of Algonquin Park. Part of the Alderdale subdivision goes from Brent through to North Bay and on to Capreol. That is a lot of track, Mr. Speaker. What does not make sense with CN's intention to abandon that part of the main line of the CNR across Canada is that it is 192 miles less from Capreol near Sudbury through to Montreal then it is to take all those freight trains carrying hazardous goods, chemicals and products from Capreol through to Toronto and all the major urban communities of the southern part of Ontario, up the waterfront of southern Ontario through Port Hope, Cobourg, Belleville, Kingston, Brockville and through to Montreal.

These people still do not know what is going to hit them when all this traffic that is presently going over the main line of the CNR from Montreal through to Capreol will no longer do so. I have heard that VIA Rail may be interested in taking over the CN line from Montreal to Ottawa to keep up passenger service. We know what the problems of passenger service have been in Canada. Are we to believe that VIA Rail will be in a position to pay the overhead costs of maintaining that route? What about the CPR? The CPR main line across Canada ran from Montreal to Ottawa. That part is now abandoned. It uses the CN line, one line between Montreal and Ottawa. From Ottawa on it uses CP track to Pembroke, Chalk River, Mattawa, North Bay, Sudbury and on into northern Ontario.

If the CNR main line, the Alexandria subdivision between Montreal and Ottawa is abandoned by CN, and VIA Rail wants to take it over, that is fine, but is CP going to take it over? Will it run on that same line? Will the CP keep it up from then on or will the CP, too, look upon this as a good excuse to get out? If the CPR does that and if that CNR mainline between Ottawa and Montreal is abandoned, and torn up, then there will be no railroad left in eastern Ontario and western Quebec. How can any Government that will allow that sort of thing to happen come into the House of Commons and say that it is interested in regional development?

I am very supportive of the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent as he strives and fights for his region of Canada and for his home Province of New Brunswick. Indeed, he has been speaking for Atlantic Canada on this one. I noticed here that he has given me a resolution of the Government of Prince Edward Island. It reads:

> Prince Edward Island reconfirms its position that the use of transportation as a tool of economic development is essential to our economy and well-being, and urges that this principle form part of the new national transportation policy and that it be enshrined and specifically defined in Section 3 of the National Transportation Act in the following words:
> 1) Transportation is recognized as a vital instrument of regional economic development—

That is plain, straightforward, rational common sense. It continues:

> 2) Where the objectives of commercial viability—

That is a famous term today:

—or cost recovery are in conflict with regional economic development objectives, the latter shall take precedence.

In promoting this resolution on behalf of Atlantic Canada, the Member from Westmorland—Kent is speaking in harmony with all of the regions of Canada. I compliment him for bringing this forward. Regional development is a must in our Canadian economic sense. If we are going to speak about everything in this country in terms of economic viability, why were those roads built across Canada in the first place? Why were branch lines built into the regions of Canada? They were built to bring out the natural resources of those regions to the big urban areas so that the urban areas could flourish and develop. Now that the lines are not viable any more, the railway companies are going to desert the regions of Canada. It is a situation of, "We don't need you any more. You have nothing else to offer us, so we are not going to give you anything back".

I join with the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent today in saying to the economically viable areas of Canada, "You owe us the opportunity for future development". We will develop. "But we don't want you to cut the legs and feet out from underneath us before we even get there". I say that we must consider this very seriously before any drastic action is taken and look upon regional development as the very basis of the future development of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

WELFARE

REQUEST THAT HOUSING AND SOCIAL PROGRAMS BE INTEGRATED

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Council on Development estimates that, at one time or another during 1986, more than 100,000 Canadians were homeless.

A recent survey has revealed that the average age of the homeless in Montreal in 1987 was 34 for men and 33 for women. During the 1930-60 period most of the homeless were men over 50.

What worries me today, Mr. Speaker, is the growing number of youths, women and entire families who are homeless.

In Montreal, one out of two homeless youths has lived in foster homes or institutions. Eighty per cent of homeless youths have severed all contacts with their relatives. Most of them have never worked for more than 24 months in their life. Twenty-three per cent of these young people have already been patients in psychiatric wards. In Winnipeg, the number of homeless youths under 18 keeps rising. Most youths are victims of physical, emotional and sexual abuse.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are deluding ourselves if we believe that housing is the only problem of the homeless. Any solution aimed at finding shelter for the homeless, without taking their social needs into consideration, would be bound to fail.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I strongly urge the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to work in close co-operation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with a view to developing a comprehensive policy to combine housing and social programs throughout Canada.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF B'NAI B'RITH

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise and pay tribute to the splendid working being done by B'nai B'rith Canada, part of B'nai B'rith International which was formed over a century ago. This weekend B'nai B'rith Canada will be holding its annual meeting and I wish it every success in its important deliberations.

The mandate of this most worthy organization is simply one of people helping people. B'nai B'rith's long, outstanding record of helping underprivileged children, assisting disabled persons and aiding senior citizens through initiatives such as providing housing, speaks for itself.

B'nai B'rith Canada also makes significant contributions in the fields of human rights and the protection of our freedoms. B'nai B'rith's youth organization and the on-campus Hillel group are to be commended for their human rights endeavours.

In closing, I want to recognize the strong performance of Mr. Harry Bick, the outgoing President, and wish every success to the incoming President, Ralph Snow, as he assumes the honour and burden of leadership.

MUNICIPALITIES

INFRASTRUCTURES IN STATE OF DECAY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Canadians expect good roads, sound bridges, and safe and well functioning water and sewage systems. These facilities, known as municipal infrastructure, are an economic necessity. As well, they are very important to the health and quality of life of all Canadians.

Across Canada municipal infrastructures are in a state of decay and disrepair. The costs involved to remedy the situation are high and municipalities are ill-equipped to pay. In past decades the federal Government saw a responsibility in this area and funded municipal projects, but in the early 1980s the previous Liberal Government cut the funding.

Some post-war facilities are nearing the end of their lifespans, and roads, bridges, sidewalks, sewers and water systems have deteriorated.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities which comprises 273 Canadian communities of every size and description commissioned a study to determine the magnitude of the problem and has come up with a proposal to address it. At the very least, the Government and cabinet officials should have some responsibility to discuss this proposal with those municipal governments.

MONUMENTS

RAOUL WALLENBERG—UNVEILING OF SCULPTURE IN CITY OF NEPEAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 31, a sculpture in honour of Raoul Wallenberg was unveiled in the City of Nepean. Several hundred people, standing in a steady summer rain, came to pay respect to a great humanitarian, a person who was responsible for saving the lives of thousands of Jews in eastern Europe during the Second World War.

Raoul Wallenberg, a citizen of Sweden, went while in his late twenties to Hungary. There he developed, under difficult and courageous circumstances, a scheme of issuing Swedish passports to thousands of Jews allowing them to escape to western Europe. Wallenberg was arrested by the Soviet Union at the end of the Second World War and has not been heard from since.

Those who were responsible for creating a memorial to Wallenberg are to be congratulated for creating a memorial to a great human being. At the unveiling I was pleased to represent the Government of Canada which has officially recognized in the House of Commons Wallenberg's humanitarian efforts.

Canadians continue to demonstrate their concerns about human rights.

THE CENSUS

RESULTS OF AGRICULTURAL CENSUS—COST OF PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Tories are at it again. With its insatiable appetite to decrease service and increase revenues, the Government never ceases to attack. The 1986 census for agriculture is another example of this vicious attack by the Government upon those least able to afford it. That report will now be sold for the sum of $192 for one set. I hear a Tory Member across the way saying that is a good idea. Do you know what the same results sold for when the Liberals were in power? It was free for the farmers of Canada. The publication of the results will also be sold for a sum of $50. When the Liberals were in power farmers could get that publication for $9.50.

• (1405)

Tory times are hard times for Canadian farmers. We have all known it for some time. The Government uses money to reward friends of the Tories like Roger Nantel instead of putting the money to a good use like helping the farmers. That is the priority of the Tories. Shame on the Tories!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PLIGHT OF COMPANY PENSIONS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to comment on Canadian National's response to the report of the parliamentary subcommittee on the CN pension system. That committee's comprehensive and realistic recommendations were presented to this House in May of 1986. However, it took CN 10 months to formulate a response.

While CN is prepared to make some adjustments regarding the pension board and trusteeship, the response contains no commitment to improving the financial plight of the CN pensioners. CN has rejected an increase in survivor benefits and the concept of a degree of inflation protection for current pensioners. It claims that ad hoc increases answer concerns regarding purchasing power of CN pensions. CN pensioners have not yet received their ad hoc increase for 1987. Thus I urge CN to announce the amount of that increase and commit itself contractually to an annual minimum ad hoc increase.

As well, the committee recommended the Government of Canada underwrite the cost of providing much needed improvements for the survivors and recipients of the provident fund. Yet we have not heard a response from the Government.

In summary, the responses to our report have not been adequate. I urge the Government and CN to reconsider their positions, particularly regarding survivor benefits and limited inflation protection.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SITUATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on Monday workers in British Columbia refused to work because they felt they had no other way to protest repressive labour laws introduced by the Social Credit Government.

Bill Vander Zalm was elected on a promise to end the spirit of confrontation created by former Social Credit Premier Bill Bennett. He has betrayed that promise. Now, in response to the day of protest, his Government seeks an injunction against British Columbia labour leaders. The injunction runs counter to all our constitutional rights and freedoms. If granted it would prohibit work stoppages, slowdowns, study sessions, picketing and strikes "as a means of accomplishing governmental change in the province". It defines all of these actions as the use of force.

If granted the injunction would make British Columbia more akin to Chile or South Africa than Canada. It is the most absurd attempt to use the courts to stifle working people in Canada since the 1919 Winnipeg general strike when J. S. Woodsworth was charged with seditious libel after quoting the Prophet Isaiah in the Bible.

CALL FOR EXPANDED COVERAGE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in recent months the western grain stabilization program has provided significant price support to the majority of Saskatchewan farmers. Our Government's changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act meant record interim payments before spring seeding when farmers usually have the greatest cash requirement.

During the past two crop years stabilization payments have totalled nearly $1.6 billion, some $862 million of which has gone to Saskatchewan. As a result of these record payments the stabilization fund is now in a deficit. This has caused considerable concern among the approximately 18 per cent of producers who are not in the plan.

I believe consideration should be given to amending the Act in order to make it easier for producers outside the plan to join. This would put all western producers on an equal footing and enable them to use stabilization to support their income during this period of world-wide depressed grain prices. It would also mean that if the fund is not self-supporting every Saskatchewan farmer would benefit from a further involvement of the federal Treasury.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—ROLE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, as we embark upon this historic constitutional debate it is important and essential that Members of Parliament be unfettered in their ability to speak out openly in a constructive way. We owe a duty to our electors, our country and ourselves to speak out about our vision of Canada and the ways the Constitutional Accord can be improved.

In my view the opposing viewpoints are not diametrically opposed. I believe that there is middle ground. I believe that the two visions of Canada which have been articulated by various people who have spoken out can be reconciled. Our goal as Members of Parliament should be to find that middle ground, to satisfy all Canadians, and to ensure that Quebec and all provinces are full partners in our Constitution.

IMMIGRANT'S MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Last night as I worked in my office, Mr. Speaker, I received a long distance telephone call from a friend in Toronto, Kay Yu. Kay Yu is a young Canadian woman of Korean origin. She came to Canada a few short years ago. She worked hard and was joined here by her father, mother, four sisters, a brother, and their families. Driven by the entrepreneurial spirit, but deeply religious, the Yu, Naughton, Lee, Kim and Hong families have started six businesses and founded the Korean Buddhist Society of Ontario.

Last night Kay Yu's first words to me took me by surprise, but they should not have. She said, "Congratulations on the signing of the Constitutional Accord. I hope you are happy because we are. Today is a great day for Canada. Now we are all Canadians again".

That simple but eloquent message from a young Korean Canadian woman, a Canadian by choice, says it all. I hope all Canadians understand the true meaning of the Accord as well as Kay Yu and her family do.

WORK STOPPAGE AT MONTREAL CEIC OFFICE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, last Friday 30 members of the Canada Employment and Immigration Union who work at CEIC's pay section in the Montreal regional office did not report for work. These employees provide pay services to some 6,000 employees of the Department throughout the Province of Quebec.

The employees were forced to take this extraordinary job action to force the management of Canada Employment and Immigration to pay attention to their on-the-job grievances, problems such as 10 to 15 hours of compulsory overtime each week, heavy work overload, and staff shortages. These problems have existed since the fall of 1986 when the Government began to take steps to cut jobs at Canada Employment and Immigration.

On Tuesday officials of the union were able to bring about a full and complete settlement with management. In fact management has acknowledged that the union was right in predicting the problems cutbacks would cause in this Department.

This is not an isolated incident, Mr. Speaker. I have met with and heard from many people who work for Canada Employment. They, too, report serious reductions in services to the public because of the Government's determination to slash public employees' jobs.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CENTENNIAL OF LAST MOUNTAIN LAKE BIRD SANCTUARY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the people of Saskatchewan on the centennial of Canada's oldest federal bird sanctuary at Last Mountain Lake. It was established on June 8, 1887, by the Government of Canada under Prime Minister John A. Macdonald.

The marshy bays, inlets, and wet fields bordering the north end of Last Mountain Lake were jointly set aside by the federal and Saskatchewan Governments for the conservation of migratory birds and wildlife habitat. This 15,600 hectare sanctuary now protects a major breeding ground and staging area for several threatened and endangered species.

Since it was created 100 years ago Last Mountain Lake has gained international recognition for its importance and contribution to the protection of wetlands. It was designated an international biology program site in 1971 and became a designated Ramsar site in 1982.

Congratulations on Last Mountain Lake's long history of success! May it continue to contribute to a balanced environment in the future. Let me also congratulate the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) who will be visiting the site tomorrow.

TRIBUTE TO LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I congratulated one of the great artisans responsible for the Constitutional Accord, the man who, more than anyone else, was responsible for bringing Quebec into the Canadian Constitution: Robert Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec. I read in the papers that yesterday the Premier of Ontario, borrowing a metaphor from the world of hockey, said that he gave the first star to the Hon. Robert Bourassa, Premier of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to extending my congratulations to the other premiers who understood the reality of this country and that Quebec should be seen as a distinct society compared with the other provinces, I would like to give a star to the Leader of the Liberal Party, who has officially announced his Party's position in no uncertain terms. We agree on the position on the Constitutional Accord but, one thing is certain and that is that, faithful to their traditions, the Liberals will fight to improve this Constitutional Accord for those people who were forgotten, and we condemn the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) for accepting handshakes from well-wishers after ignoring our native peoples and the francophone minorities outside Quebec.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY—ATTACK ON NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party, in a desperate state, has sunk to a new low and is using McCarthy-style language and techniques in its political fund-raising letters.

Many Canadians who supported former Saskatchewan Premier Tommy Douglas will be insulted by this approach. Manitobans who have supported the former Governor General and now ambassador Ed Schreyer, and Ontarians who supported ambassador Stephen Lewis, will find this repugnant.

The Conservatives have also offended our international allies in their attack on NDP international ties to other Social Democratic Parties. Did Mr. Jarvis mean to attack François Mitterrand, the socialist President of France? Was he attacking the Government of Greece? If not, which of our elected Social Democratic Governments is working for "a one world totalitarian state"?

The smear and fear campaign of the Conservative Party is plain silly and will not work. In poll after poll, Canadians express their faith in the New Democratic Party and the integrity of our Leader. This letter, which is part of a package of deliberate lies and distortions by a desperate group of third place and sinking politicians, displays their weak suit, their own lack of credibility and believability.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—ADOPTION BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will put my questions to the Deputy Prime Minister as they also relate to his capacity as Government House Leader.

The Liberal Party wants Quebec's signature on the Constitution. We want a united Canada. We believe that the spirit of the constitutional Accord deserves support and we will work hard to make it even better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think we are a little sensitive on this side of the House to the fact that we are being measured by an applause meter, and by who stands up. In any event, the Prime Minister was tired yesterday, justifiably so, after the accomplishment, and he unfortunately said that he expects the House of Commons to "adopt the document in its entirety".

Upon reflection, will the Deputy Prime Minister approach the Prime Minister to suggest that he should keep the spirit of constructive compromise alive and agree to allow any constructive suggestions to reach the floor of the House of Commons and a committee of Parliament, which is a position that has been publicly adopted by several of the provincial Premiers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that we on this side of the House certainly welcome the comments of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Indeed, we are encouraged by his commitment and his Party's commitment to move this agreement forward in the best possible manner.

I want to remind him, however, that we have an agreement by 11 First Ministers in the Accord. It represents a resolution to the very important issues that have been addressed over the last year. We, as the Government, are fully supportive of the Accord and will be recommending its adoption by Parliament. It will be in that spirit that we will move it ahead, and will do so in such a way that we will have a mechanism to allow full participation by all Members of Parliament.

ATTITUDE OF CERTAIN PREMIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I could quote some comments by several provincial Premiers. Take, for instance, Premier Peterson of Ontario, who clearly made a generous and major contribution to the Accord. He said he was not only in favour of improving the Accord but, indeed, open to the concept. Is the Deputy Prime Minister unable to emulate the energy, optimism and open-mindedness of the Premier of Ontario and other Premiers?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we as a Government are committed to seeing this Accord adopted by Parliament, as I am sure the Premier of Ontario is committed to seeing the provisions adopted by the provincial Legislature. As far as that goes, all the other Premiers will be doing the same thing.

This is an agreement that was quite unlike the constitutional process that we went through in 1981 and 1982. This process has been developed through consensus, consultation, a great deal of co-operation, and give and take. So we are really talking about quite a different proposal from that which was before the House the last time.

NATURE OF PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly the last time a parliamentary committee held hearings which actually improved the arrangement that was originally presented to Parliament. I hope the Deputy Prime Minister will accept that as a useful precedent.

What I am concerned about is this. I want anglophones in Quebec and francophones outside Quebec to be assured that their rights are 100 per cent guaranteed. I want to assure the northern territories that their eventual process toward provincial status is not forever closed by the Accord. I want Canadians to know that parliamentary debate really means parliamentary debate.

I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister this. Give us an assurance that what the provincial Premiers said publicly, on assurances, apparently, of the Prime Minister of Canada, will be lived up to by the Government when the Accord is debated and referred to a committee of the House. That is what we are asking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the last constitutional proposals that were brought before the House by the Liberal Government needed a great deal of improvement because there was very little consensus for the proposals that were contained in that resolution. As a matter of fact, we as an opposition Party had to fight like the dickens to try to get the matter before a parliamentary committee. There was very little consensus for that particular proposal.

Again, I repeat, we are committed to this proposal. I am not sure what changes the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting. If he is suggesting some changes, perhaps he would like to elaborate on those changes on the floor of the House. He will have an opportunity to come before the appropriate mechanism, a parliamentary committee. He and his colleagues will certainly have an opportunity to express their points of view.

I hope that at a very early date I will be in a position to lay out a number of options to the House Leaders opposite so that we can consider how we might best proceed. I am in the process of developing those options now. I hope that in the next few days I will be able to do that, and perhaps we can consider some of the points that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has brought forward.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON—ATTAINMENT OF PROVINCEHOOD

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It was during the election campaign of 1958 that the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker said: "I see a new Canada—a Canada of the north."

I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why this Government has abandoned Canada's north in the 1987 Constitutional Accord. Why was it that in all the negotiations leading up to this Accord the Northwest Territories and Yukon were cast aside and ignored? Why has the Government made it next to impossible for provincehood ever to be attained in Canada's North?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I think I should make it quite clear that the contentions that he has put forward are, unfortunately, untrue.

The reality of the matter is that we now have an opportunity as a new and united Canada to come forward in a spirit of co-operation which, unfortunately, has not existed in the country for many, many years, in order to develop the full potential of a very important part of our country.

This Party has taken a leadership role in terms of the concept of devolution so that the northern territories will in fact have control over their own destiny. I think our record is exemplary in this connection. I say to the Hon. Member that the process has done nothing but enhance our ability to meet that objective.

• (1425)

PROVISION REQUIRING UNANIMOUS APPROVAL BY PROVINCES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice who has just replied. In the light of what he has said, would he be willing to accept an amendment to the Accord which would remove the requirement of unanimity for the creation of new provinces? Second, is he willing to allow the territorial Governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon to submit their lists for a Senate appointment when a vacancy occurs north of 60°?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, one of the aspects of the Accord which I think is progressive, is in the Canadian tradition, and one which would give the kind of assurance to all parts of our country that regional considerations are going to be considered, is the fact that we have, for the first time in the history of this country, constitutionalized the constitutional process between the various provinces and the federal Government. There will be ample opportunity on an annual basis to consider the various proposals brought forward for progressive change in our country and the Constitution.

The inclusion of Quebec in the Constitution has given a dimension to our country which has been lacking over the past years. I would suggest to the Hon. Member, Members of the House and to the country, generally, it has given hope for our northern territories that in the course of the evolution of the Constitution over the next years, they will in fact reach their proper status in our country.

ABORIGINAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I think yesterday was a good day for Quebec and for Canada. In light of the lack of success of the recent First Ministers' Conference relating to aboriginal self-government, would the Deputy Prime Minister consider supporting the addition of another item to the two points which are there now in relation to the Senate and to fisheries matters at the First Ministers' Conference for next year, that being aboriginal title and rights and self-government? Now that Quebec is a full participant, I think we are much more likely to see success coming out of such a First Ministers' Conference.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to respond to that question, I agree with the conclusion of the Hon. Member that, with the inclusion of Quebec, the chances with respect to agreement on aboriginal matters is indeed enhanced. I commend the Hon. Member for his perception in that regard.

I want to say that in terms of the whole process of constitutional change with regard to the aboriginal peoples of Canada, I have already had an opportunity of meeting with representatives of the groups, with the exception of the AFN, and my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, has in fact been in constant contact with that important representative group.

It is our intention to carry on and find the best way possible to deal with the question of constitutional changes of aboriginal self-government. We will continue our liaison and discussion. I am going to consult with my cabinet colleagues and develop a strategy to deal with that matter to ensure that the priority for that development is in fact maintained.

CREATION OF NEW PROVINCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear that the Minister of Justice and the Government are open to having that added as a third component to the First Ministers' Conference for next year. In relation to Yukon and N.W.T., I have searched the record myself from 1981 until now and have been unable to find a position put forward by any province or any federal Party suggesting that an over-all veto be provided to each province for the creation of new provinces north of 60°. Prior to 1982 it was bilateral. Since 1982 it has been seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. Is the Minister of Justice prepared to be sensitive to the aspirations of northerners and be similarly prepared to leave the door open to northerners for the creation of new provinces?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to recall any Member who gave any greater attention in leadership to that matter than the Member who represented Yukon for so many years in this Parliament, the Hon. Erik Nielsen. We have maintained that commitment in our Party to northern Canada.

I want to say that there is—and it has been pointed out by the Deputy Prime Minister—the reality that legal proceedings are in fact before the courts at the present time which limit my ability to speak on the particular matter.

The fact of the matter is that we as a Party and as a Government are committed to the enhancement of the northern part of the country. I think our policies in that regard are worthy of commendation and will be seen to be the right way to go in years ahead.

REQUIREMENT FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT OF PROVINCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Justice to address his mind for a moment to the point I made a moment ago. Nowhere on the public record in Canada are the positions of the provinces or of the Parties represented in the House of Commons endorsing the requirement for the support of all 10 provinces for the creation of new provinces.

Would the Minister of Justice tell the House why the federal Government took the initiative to include subclauses (e) and (f) of the old Clause 42 and roll them into the new Clause 41 when there were no provinces or no Parties in the House of Commons on the public record? On what grounds did it take that action?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is quite untrue. I do not recall any particular participant in the First Ministers' meeting not agreeing to the particular proposition. In fact, all Parties were represented at the table. All Parties in the country had representatives at the table in the sense that there are Governments from four different political Parties.

The Hon. Member is just speaking through his hat when he makes that allegation. I remember the leadership which the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has given over the years in respect of the devolution of provincial status for northern Canada.

Our commitment is maintained there, and we will continue to work to that end.

PROMOTION OF FRENCH AND ENGLISH LINGUISTIC DUALITY—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The 1987 Constitutional Accord makes it an obligation for Canada and the provincial legislatures, including Quebec's, to protect the basic characteristic of this country, namely the French and English linguistic duality. If this duality is accepted, does it not deserve to be enhanced, and why were the provincial legislatures as well as the Parliament of Canada not asked to promote it?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is interesting to note that the Hon. Member has had a long interest in and support for the principles of bilingualism in Canada. Indeed the Accord has addressed in a very new and progressive way the undertaking of all provinces and the federal Government regarding the principles of a fair and equitable system of bilingualism in Canada.

This is an historic document, an historic agreement. I think the First Ministers showed the spirit of co-operation in our country in respect of this important topic. We should all commend those participants in this regard.

INCLUSION OF SPECIAL PROVISIONS IN CONSTITUTION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that, as far as duality is concerned, the provinces and this Parliament are under no obligation not only to protect, but also to promote both official languages. This is important for us as members of the linguistic minorities, that is, for anglophones inside Quebec as well as francophones outside Quebec. If the Prime Minister of this country could not convince the premiers to include not only the protection, but also the promotion of our linguistic duality, why did he not take it upon himself to include in our new Constitution the obligation for this Government and this Parliament of Canada to insure not only the preservation, but also the promotion of our linguistic duality?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I do not understand the basis of the Hon. Member's question, because I do not think there is any question of the commitment, as far as the federal Government and the Prime Minister are concerned, in respect of the preservation and promotion of the official languages of the country.

All I can simply say is that we will be judged by our record in this regard—and I think we will be judged favourably—by the Canadian people and by history.

Perhaps the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should revert back to the old system of the federal Government intruding itself, as under his former Leader, Mr. Trudeau, who had a great way of knocking the provinces about. We want to move forward in a very co-operative way. We want Canada to work together as a team. We want Canada to progress.

LABOUR RELATIONS

LEGISLATION INTRODUCED BY GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Premier Vander Zalm has been appearing on BCTV promoting a federally supported job-creation program and claiming that he needs to pass repressive labour legislation to make this federally supported program work.

Does the Government of Canada support the Vander Zalm proposition that repressive labour legislation is necessary to make federal-provincial job-creation programs work?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, clearly that is a provincial matter. It was answered by the Minister of Labour yesterday in the House.

I invite the Hon. Member either to pay attention to answers in the House or to read Hansard.

FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The working people of British Columbia and Canada are watching the answers to this. Clearly the Deputy Prime Minister missed the import of the question.

I want to repeat it in a different form. Does the federal Government believe that repressive labour legislation is required to make federally supported job-creation programs work?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the same question and the same answer, and I invite the Hon. Member to read the answer in yesterday's Hansard.

MUNICIPALITIES

COSTS OF RENOVATING INFRASTRUCTURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Finance, in answer to my request that the Government reconsider its refusal to fund municipal infrastructure which would create 280,000 jobs, said that he would not do this because it was outside federal jurisdiction.

The Government knows that under a previous Liberal Government, prior to 1979, there was a similar program which was finally terminated but was there when the need was there.

Since the President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities said that if the senior levels of Government did not participate in the program it could result in a $1,000 increase in the water bills of ratepayers, does the Government think it is a fair burden to put on ratepayers for something which will benefit the whole economy?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to funding of municipal infrastructure, it is true the previous Government brought in such a program. It also terminated such a program because of the complaints of the provinces at the time about interference in municipal jurisdiction.

Also, in the 1970s we did not have the enormous deficit we have today which was left to this Government.

RECOVERY OF EXPENDITURE—STUDY FINDINGS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware of the macro-economic impact study prepared by Informetrica for the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which indicates that the federal Government would recover most of its expenditure for such a program through extra tax revenue and reduced federal welfare payments? Is he not aware of that and that therefore the deficit is not a real reason to refuse the program?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the Informetrica study. It is being reviewed by Departments of Government, and we hope to be able to give our response to it shortly.

DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is only two months into the fiscal year and I have been informed that DRIE is in a serious cash crunch situation. I have been informed by some very reliable sources that DRIE is unable to meet all its program commitments for this year out of its $909 million budget for projects which have already been negotiated in the past.

Could the Minister confirm that, according to my sources, his Department is now unable to meet some $75 million to $100 million in financial commitments under DRIE's various programs?

Could he also tell us whether or not he has had a chance to meet with the President of the Treasury Board to discuss this very serious problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enlighten my hon. friend. I have also been advised that, because of the accounting methods now used by the Government, there might be some overspending in the Budget for the fiscal year 1986-87. This overspending could also affect the current fiscal year, with the requirements of the regions growing constantly. But my hon. colleague is certainly well aware that under Section 25 of the Financial Administration Act, the Department cannot commit itself to spending more than the amounts allocated.

We have asked for a report on this matter. As soon as we receive it, we shall respond accordingly. But I want my hon. friend to know that the Government does not intend to overlook its commitments to regional development, and I invite him to acquaint himself with the announcements that will be made within the next few days, especially in the Atlantic region.

CRITERIA USED BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I thank the Minister for responding and confirming the problems faced by the Department. In view of those difficulties, the Department will have to try and renegotiate those agreements, especially for major projects. In view of that indication, Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us now what criteria will be used to identify projects whose funding will be postponed until next year?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member. That situation is quite temporary in the first place and that will be solved over the next few days or at the latest the next few weeks. I would like to tell him also that we are currently reviewing not only programs but also the level of funding for those programs, and we will be in a position as I said to address those temporary problems. Again, I would like to assure him of our total commitment to and special concern for matters of development and regional disparities. Once more, the Hon. Member will be able to see what effort and priority the Government is giving the matter.

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF REFUSENIKS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When I was in the Soviet Union last month, Alexei Gloukhov, Director of the Department of Humanitarian and Cultural Affairs, basically confirmed that the U.S.S.R. is treating refuseniks as hostages when he said that "as disarmament and peace negotiations go, so go human rights".

We were shocked at such an admission and told him that Canada's position is just the opposite. How can we trust the Soviets regarding peace initiatives if we cannot trust them to live up to their human rights obligations?

Is glasnost a reality or a myth? How can the Canadian Government bring increased pressure on the Soviet Union to stop treating refuseniks as hostages and poker chips in its world-wide negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is the question which no one can answer with certainty. There have certainly been developments in the Soviet Union that indicate some openness toward change. There has been a welcome attitude toward allowing more refuseniks to leave the country and allowing also a greater degree of family reunification. How extensive that will be remains to be seen.

Certainly the consistency of the Soviet Union in being prepared to allow people who want to leave that country to come to freedom will be a factor which all other nations will have to judge when we try to make some assessment of the sincerity of the Soviet Union in its other activities, including its willingness to adhere to arms control and other agreements.

Oral Questions

NICARAGUA—CONTRA ATTACK ON CANADIAN AID VILLAGE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. When the Farmers for Peace first went to Macotal in Nicaragua two years ago to carry out a Canadian aid project they helped to rebuild the village which had been destroyed by the Contras. The Contras have now for the second time attacked this village, massacring, burning, looting, and kidnapping innocent civilians. This being clearly an act of terrorism, will the Minister now condemn the Contras as terrorists and immediately bring this matter under the category of terrorism before the United Nations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member was absent the other day when that question was raised. I have given an answer to it in the House. I have been in touch with the United States Secretary of State to express my personal great concern about the attack to which he makes reference upon a project mounted by the Farmers for Peace Organization.

I have indicated to Secretary Shultz that I intend to raise the matter and discuss it with him more fully when I meet him either in Venice or Reykjavik. I have further indicated, in answer to a representation by a Member of the House, that upon my return from that trip I would be prepared to meet with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam to discuss if there would be further appropriate action for the House or for the Government to take.

COST OF REBUILDING PROJECT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): I thank the Minister for his reply, Mr. Speaker, except I was talking about condemning it as terrorism before the United Nations. I knew about the other actions. I asked specifically whether the Minister would be willing to bring this matter up as an act of terrorism and define it as such. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for the purposes of being on the record before the House, guarantee that the money needed to rebuild the Farmers for Peace Project would be provided by CIDA? Will he ask the Americans to instruct their lackeys, the Contras, to release the four innocent villagers they kidnapped and put an end to their massacres of innocent civilians in their program of terror and intimidation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will consider the last two of those three representations, Mr. Speaker.

DOME PETROLEUM—PROPOSED PURCHASE BY AMOCO CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. According to reports in a Calgary newspaper, an internal evaluation document by Amoco has concluded that there would be many lay-offs at Dome after a takeover, and Amoco itself has publicly admitted that, indeed, there would be lay-offs. Did the Government discuss these job losses with Amoco during recent meetings held and did the Government press Amoco to reject these lay-offs for the future?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I would be correct in saying that that is not consistent with the information provided to us. I think quite the contrary is the case. I think the Hon. Member should consider the consequences of a collapse of Dome Petroleum, and such will be the case if a buyer is not found. Further, if the Amoco purchase is proceeded with, these would be things that would be taken into consideration during the over-all evaluation.

As I said, on the basis of the knowledge that I have and that I think the Minister has, that is somewhat inconsistent with what the Hon. Member is suggesting.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the public confirmation, which I understand has taken place, of lay-offs is unquestionable. It is a question of numbers where the newspaper in question has argued a large number and Amoco has said that the number would be smaller. There is no question that lay-offs will occur.

SHARES HELD BY DOME EMPLOYEES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that 5,000 to 6,000 Dome employees past and present have at this stage now devalued shares in Dome as their only pension funds, did the Government in its meetings also press Dome and Amoco to give these workers Amoco pension credits that would be equal to their years at Dome, as part of the takeover?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be pointed out that Amoco, if a purchase is proceeded with, has announced that it would be prepared to reinvest something in the order of $1 billion over the next five years. I do not know to whom the Hon. Member is talking.

The employees to whom I have spoken at Dome Petroleum clearly want this issue resolved and the sooner the better. They want security of the jobs. The best way to secure their jobs is to proceed with the transaction.

Mr. Langdon: And their pensions?

• (1450)

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member should stop frustrating attempts for people in Alberta to maintain jobs and job security. That is precisely what he is doing on the floor of the House of Commons right now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES—SALE OF ARMS TO IRAN—ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I believe many Canadians were distressed to learn of the attack on the Canadian food project in Nicaragua by the Contras. We appreciate the Minister's willingness to take that matter up with the U.S. Secretary of State.

I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister testimony that was given before the special committee investigating the Iran-Contra affair in the United States. This evidence indicated that the first shipment of arms to the Contras was purchased through a Canadian arms dealer. The committee has further released a memorandum from Colonel North to Robert McFarlane which discusses a Canadian originated arms sale to the Contras.

Taking into account those facts, I would ask the Secretary of State if he could report whether the RCMP has completed its investigations undertaken into Canadian participation in sales to the Contras and whether these recent revelations will also be incorporated into that investigation so that we will be able to determine if in fact Canadian arms are being used by the Contras to kill and maim innocent civilians in Nicaragua.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by my colleague, the Solicitor General, that the investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is not yet complete and that the Solicitor General has requested that the elements referred to by the Hon. Member, and perhaps other elements, should become part of the investigation.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING ARMS EXPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for the answer and I would hope that either he or the Solicitor General would give us the date that report is expected.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State a further question. Considering the ease with which Canadian arms dealers use intermediary countries to trans-ship arms to countries containing groups like the Contras, which is very clearly in violation of government policy, the government policy which we respect, I would ask the Minister if it is not time the Government looked at ways of tightening those regulations and rules to ensure that Canadian arms exports are not used in areas where there are hostilities, civil wars or conflicts, and particularly not in cases where there are severe violations of human rights as in the Nicaraguan case. Would it be possible to have that kind of recommendation or reform made and perhaps considered by the External Affairs Committee?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may be making some assumptions with regard to the nature of the Canadian involvement that the RCMP investigation will not bear out. He raises a difficult and complex question.

If the Hon. Member can propose some terms of reference that might allow us to get at this problem in a tangible way, I would be very interested in looking at them. It is highly complex because it deals only incidentally with arms trade and has to do with general and often normal practices of international commerce. However, if there is some way that we could define a way to look at that particular problem, I would be interested in seeing whether it would be worth while taking further action.

PROPOSED SEARCH OF EMPLOYEES' BELONGINGS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the post office. I am sure the Minister is aware of the plan of Canada Post to have security guards search the personal belongings of employees as they arrive at work, for stolen drugs, alcohol and items like that. I wonder if he would remind the post office of the Marin Commission report which recommended that people only be searched when there are reasonable and probable grounds and that the post office should be taking preventive action in the area of security.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course this decision that was taken by the post office has nothing to do with me or the Government but—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: It is a Crown corporation but those Hon. Members would not understand that.

The Hon. Member may be aware that here in Ottawa, six individuals in the post office were charged with selling drugs. A death occurred as a result of a worker who was under the influence of alcohol while driving a forklift off a loading dock. The recommendation at that time was that the post office take responsibility and ensure that that does not happen again. Taking security measures means looking at things like lunch pails to make sure that alcohol is not being brought onto the work site to ensure that those kinds of accidents do not happen in the future. That, as I understand it, is what the post office is doing.

APPLICATION OF CORPORATION'S POLICY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather contradictory for the Minister on the one hand to say that he wipes his hands of the post office and then on the other hand to make comments that seem to approve of the policy. I wonder if the Minister realizes that to label all employees and to initiate a blanket policy for searching all employees rather than to approach this in a selective manner is very provocative in the context of very sensitive negotiations that are going on at the post office. Does he not want service to continue? Will he tell the post office to take reasonable action rather than provocative action?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Reasonable action is the only appropriate action. I understand that this type of procedure is very common. Indeed—

Mr. Rodriguez: Where?

Mr. Andre: Twenty-five years ago when I worked a summer job, in fact I had to do precisely that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Twenty-five years ago? We had child slavery then too.

Mr. Andre: Obviously while members of the New Democratic Party are talking about not being provocative, they are doing everything they can to ensure that the relationship between the employees and the post office is as uncomfortable as possible so that they will have the strike they apparently want.

PORNOGRAPHY

DEFINITION OF EROTICA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, a pornography Bill dealing with violent and degrading sex is one thing. Artistic expression dealing with the human body and human emotion is quite a different matter.

My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Apparently the female breast and the human anal region are defined in the definitions of your Bill as erotica. Does that include a person's bare backside, bottom or bum? Further, would Gauguin's nude swimmers or Rockwell's bare-bottomed children or, for that matter, the Coppertone ad, pass muster with you? Does the Minister realize that, under his definition, today's modern artists will have to prove that they are portraying erotica and not the Minister's or the Government's view of s-e-x?

Mr. Rodriguez: Just the bare facts.

Mr. Crosbie: Give her a demonstration, Ray.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Hon. Member if she would not mind repeating the question. This kind of detail, based on my clear understanding that the Hon. Member does not understand the Bill, should be more appropriately addressed to me in committee. I hope the Hon. Member will speed this matter through the House of Commons so we can get into committee and I can demonstrate to her that this Bill is one which will commend itself not only to the Hon. Member but to the great thinking Canadian public.

ARTISTS' CONCERNS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, with no ifs, ands or buts, that is your definition of erotica in the Bill. My supplementary question to the same Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is listening with great care to all the words mentioned by the Hon. Member but there is one that she must not use again and that is her reference to the Minister as "you".

• (1500)

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for keeping me abreast of the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: What a bum rap.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the proposed pornography Bill states that a visible display of erotica must be "hidden by a barrier" or "covered by an opaque wrapper". That definition definitely puts the Sistine Chapel out of order. Should we cover Gauguin's nude sunbathers or Rockwell's bare bottoms with what? A fig-leaf? A maple leaf? Or, should they be gift-wrapped?

How is the Minister planning to answer the artistic community which is very concerned about this issue? It is no joking matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, she may want to consult her colleague, George Baker, if she wants to know about joking matters. I think she needs some help. With reference to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that she does not have to refer to me as "you". A simple "sir" would do.

I want to make it quite clear that the Hon. Member's contention is unfounded. It is wrong. Clearly the Bill provides for artistic merit even in the case of erotica. If she would read the Bill and understand it, and if she goes to committee after second reading, I will be able to explain to her that her understanding of the Bill is incorrect.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MINIMUM AGE PROVISION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Last week he met with his provincial counterparts to discuss a number of matters including the Young Offenders Act and the minimum age therein. Would the Minister advise the House whether or not the provincial Ministers agreed with the position of the Ontario Attorney General that the minimum age for criminal responsibility, which is now 12 in the Young Offenders Act, should be reduced to seven or whether they felt child welfare legislation was still the best way to deal with children under the age of 12?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member whose interest in this area is well known and appreciated. Indeed, the provincial Attorneys-General, Ministers of Justice, and myself discussed this matter at the petition of the Attorney General of Ontario. There was no consensus on the proposition put forward but I think there was an understanding and realization by all Ministers that we want, at least initially at the officials' level, to look at the operation of the Act and provincial child welfare legislation to make sure that between the two levels of jurisdiction and the two pieces of legislation we adequately covered the question of children at or under the age specified in the Young Offenders Act so that the public is properly protected. We are going to have our Deputy Ministers start that investigation and I think it will be to the benefit of the administration of justice.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise Hon. Members that the last question and supplementary will be those of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

MUNICIPALITIES

REQUEST FOR MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND CITY MAYORS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As he knows, I tried yesterday to get the Prime Minister to indicate whether he would be prepared to meet with representatives of the mayors of 14 of Canada's largest cities. Will the Deputy Prime Minister personally undertake to arrange a meeting between the Prime Minister and the mayors so they can in the best way possible indicate to him the need for federal participation in a federal-provincial-municipal program to rebuild our cities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know a lot of government Ministers have met with the mayors. Indeed the Prime Minister wanted to meet with them. However, I think the Hon. Member is aware that he has been preoccupied with a number of other things. The Queen Mother is arriving in Ottawa today as well. I know his intentions are clearly there and, if there is some way it can be arranged, he would be happy to do so.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's response. Perhaps if we had that response yesterday the questions today would not be necessary.

If a meeting is arranged at some mutually convenient date, in preparation for that meeting will the Government of Canada re-examine its policy statement about no funding to see whether or not the Prime Minister's negotiating skills can be put to their very good use to come up with a package that will see federal money assisting the municipalities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased that even the Hon. Member has acknowledged the negotiating skills of the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

I know all Members sympathize with the plight of the municipalities. I know as well that the Hon. Member sympathizes with the very heavy debt burden that the federal Government is facing. That was elaborated on by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance. That is certainly not to take away from the seriousness of the issue and in no way detracts from the fact that we are sincere about their plight. I will certainly convey the Hon. Member's representation to the Prime Minister at an appropriate time.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I am not rising on a point of order to question the ruling you made during Question Period to the effect that during Question Period at least a certain three-letter word, namely the word "you" is not in order. Instead I am rising to ask the Government House Leader the customary question about House business.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with Bill C-18. Tomorrow I will call the capital punishment motion. Monday, June 8, has been designated an allotted day for the NDP. On Tuesday we will be proposing Ways and Means Motion No. 18. We will as well proceed with Bill C-50, the unemployment insurance Bill. I do not think there has to be an order but there is agreement among all Parties to complete this Bill in all stages and sit beyond six o'clock but no later than ten o'clock that day in order that the Bill might be completed in all stages.

On Wednesday I propose to call Bill C-59, the energy Bill, followed by Bill C-2, Canagrex, again with the assumption that those two Bills will be completed that day.

Thursday would be another allotted day and that would be the last allotted day and we will probably sit until ten o'clock, I guess.

On Friday, and this could change, my intention is to call Bill C-18.

I present this order of business notwithstanding the House order yesterday respecting Standing Orders taking effect next Monday. In light of this you will find unanimous consent to agree to the designation of the two allotted days next week, with one of them a votable day.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the NDP caucus we agree with what the Minister has said. I would also like to find out what the status is regarding the labelling of hazardous goods Bill. I understand there has been a request from the Minister that we pre-study this legislation. If that is the case, this is June 4 and I would like to know when the Government is going to allow for pre-study and what mechanism is going to be used.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just before the Parliamentary Secretary answers, the House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Is there unanimous consent?

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there were some discussions among the Parties and I believe there is unanimous consent that a pre-study take place on that particular Bill. I have talked to the Minister and to the Chairman of the committee. It is my understanding that she will be organizing and calling a meeting very soon, which will enable the appropriate witnesses to be informed. I think that committee study should commence next week.

PRIVILEGE

INJUNCTION FILED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today I filed with the Speaker's office my concerns regarding the June 2, 1987, documents filed by the Attorney General of British Columbia under Registry Number C82660 for interim interlocutory and permanent injunctions. I believe that I and all Members of the House of Commons have had our rights affected by this and that a substantial question of privilege exists. It reads in part as follows:

> The Attorney General's claim is for interim, interlocutory, and permanent injunctions restraining the defendants, anyone acting on their behalf, and anyone having notice of this injunction, from:
> "1. Advocating, or circulating any writing advocating, the use of force, including:
> "(a) Work stoppages, slowdowns, study sessions—
> (b) —pointing out errors in the government of the province, procuring alterations of any matter of government—
> "3. Using force (including all that scribed in paragraph 1(a) hereof) as a means of accomplishing a governmental change in the province (including all that described in paragraph 1(b) hereof).

I am going to British Columbia on Saturday and will be attending what I suppose could be described as a study session with a number of those named as defendants in this document filed with the Supreme Court of British Columbia. I think it infringes on my rights and those of every Member of this House for the Government to bring before the Supreme Court an interim interlocutory and permanent injunction which states very specifically that anyone acting on behalf of the defendants or attending such things as study sessions is in fact in violation of such an injunction.

I have provided a copy of the documents which have been registered in Vancouver including the names of the plaintiffs and defendants in the action. I hope you will look with care at the effect this may have on any Member of Parliament, not only those from British Columbia who attends a study session where such things as government actions or ways of altering any matter that the Government might be considering are discussed. I think this strikes at the Charter and at the fundamental rights of the House of Commons.

The Speaker may well want to reflect on this for a day or two. If you decide that this does infringe upon my rights, which I believe it does, I hope I will have the opportunity to make the appropriate motion to refer this to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if you were about to dismiss the application I would naturally resume my seat. We have heard the Hon. Member and I appreciate that he wants to focus attention on the provincial matters which are presently occurring in B.C. I have no objection to his doing that. However, I cannot see how the Member's privileges as a Member of this House are in any way abridged or infringed upon by an injunction in a provincial court regarding a provincial matter.

The Hon. Member is free to do as he wishes on his own time with regard to personal business. If he is stopped from so doing by an injunction, his redress is at law. If he has an objection to the injunction stopping him in his personal capacity as a citizen from attending a study session, he should hire counsel and apply to be exempted from that interlocutory injunction.

Obviously in no way whatsoever, prima facie or in fact, does this in any way infringe upon the Hon. Member's ability to function as a Member of this House with regard to his position as a federal Member of Parliament.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has read the injunction with the care with which I have. The injunction is quite different from any other injunction ever brought before the Supreme Court of British Columbia. It states very specifically that anyone acting on behalf of anyone named in this injunction application is prohibited from even attending a study session to consider government matters.

I do not think it is appropriate for me to have to fly to Vancouver, hire counsel, go to the Supreme Court of B.C., and apply for some kind of remedial action from an injunction which the Province of B.C. has placed against me specifically because I do in fact represent people in this injunction and I do act on their behalf in the House of Commons.

I think the House of Commons itself must reflect very carefully upon just exactly how far the Government of British Columbia is going in trying to prohibit Members of Parliament, members of the public, members of trade unions, and members of any other organization in British Columbia from being allowed simply to attend study sessions.

The Government of British Columbia is prohibiting me, as a Member of Parliament, from saying anything about matters affecting the administration of the Government of British Columbia or attempting to procure any change. I suppose that under Sections 1 and 2 of the documents which have been filed in the Supreme Court of British Columbia I am in fact contravening such an injunction by even speaking out about it in the House of Commons.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I invite you to consider this topic very seriously. It is not something to be taken lightly. There may or may not be a question of privilege, but you will decide upon that. Upon reading the definition of privilege in Beauchesne's one will see very clearly that a question of privilege may exist and that the privileges of a Member could be affected. If the Member's privileges are affected, our privileges individually and collectively could be affected as well. Beauchesne's says:

> The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members; and by each House for the protection of its members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity.

I submit that if we, individually or collectively, cannot meet with our constituents, for whatever reason, that could indeed be an infringement upon our privileges. I invite you to reflect upon and give very serious consideration to the subject brought to your attention by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the question of privilege raised by my friend and colleague, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I had experience in a related matter last year. Last June, I believe on this same date, I was on the Gainers picket line in Alberta despite the fact that there was an injunction in that case.

I took the position with the police and the representatives of the Government which were present at the time that as a Member of Parliament I had a right to talk to those people to find out what their concerns were. As the labour critic for the New Democratic Party caucus I had legitimate concerns. I maintained my right as a Member of Parliament to speak with those people and find out what was going on. In that case there was no police action taken.

I am afraid that if we do not take this matter seriously there is a danger that the Member for Skeena or some other Member, in carrying out his or her duties as a Member of this House, could be stymied by provincial legislation and the actions of an over-zealous police force or over-zealous Attorney General.

I believe it is a serious matter. I do not know if the Speaker is in a position to rule on it now, but it is a matter that deserves study. We must protect our rights as Members of Parliament, not to break the law, but to be able to talk to people who are in a situation where they may or may not be breaking the law but are trying to protect their rights in the belief that the actions they are taking is the only way to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for their representations in this serious matter. I will look into it and get back to the House as soon as possible.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport, and Motion No. 5 (Mr. Robichaud, p. 6715).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate today. It is unfortunate that Members can only speak for 10 minutes on such an important issue and well designed motion as the one presented by my friend and colleague, the distinguished Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). The Hon. Member's motion indicates that it is indeed our duty to make sure that Bill C-18 contains specific provisions that ensure regional development and give it priority over other concerns.

If it is necessary to convince the House of the importance of those requirements, let me describe a situation that exists in eastern Ontario, particularly in my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. CN has taken the position that it will shut down a portion of its tracks. It has decided to shut down some 2,500 miles of rail line by embarking, as it already has, on a deliberate action of discouraging customers and rerouting some of their traffic on what it calls the intermodal system, which is a truck to most of us. Once it has rerouted that traffic and lost some of its customers, it will go to the CTC and ask to abandon certain rail lines with the argument that it no longer has enough customers.

On September 25, 1986, CN sent a memo, signed by Mr. R.P. Langlois, Regional Manager of Marketing for the St. Lawrence region in Montreal. The memo was sent to a number of people and states that in the context of rationalization of the rail infrastructure, some lines have been identified as being candidates for abandonment in the coming years. A preliminary plan has been prepared and attached are the sections affected. It states that every effort to attract new traffic on these sections is to be abandoned immediately and, for the traffic already on these lines, they must consider either, and preferably, converting this traffic onto the intermodal system or adjusting rates to minimize present losses.

I have copies of the internal correspondence of CN which are documents designed to chase away, divest customers that CN has at the present time because it is allegedly losing money on those lines.

The lines affected are the Beachburg subdivision, 163.9 miles, and the Alexandria subdivision, which is the line of rail just east of Ottawa and just west of Montreal, 57.7 miles.

CN wants to close down those two rail lines, according to the internal correspondence I have received. Since there is no longer any Canadian Pacific line between Montreal and Ottawa, and there will no longer be a CN rail line, there will be no train service between the two cities, either freight or passenger.

I objected most strenuously to this course of action. Officials from CN come to the community I represent and make long-winded speeches, telling us not to worry. However, when we ask if it means the line will not be shut down, the official states that it means we are not supposed to worry. When we ask if it means the line will be shut down, we are told it means that we should not worry.

CN has not been exactly forthcoming with answers on this issue. I received a letter from Mr. Ron Lawless on December 4, 1986, in which he described the situation concerning the Alexandria subdivision. He states in his letter: "As we proceed with our studies, one of the lines which will undoubtedly be reviewed is the Alexandria subdivision". The House will note that he says "will be reviewed". He went on to state: "The line accommodates at present freight service as well as VIA passenger service. At this time, I can advise you and indeed assure you that should a study reveal the need for a change in status I will see to it that you are made aware of the situation".

I just read other internal correspondence in which the decision had already been taken and CN was in the process of divesting itself of customers in an attempt to shut down the rail line in the future.

Needless to say, Mr. Lawless's letter is inconsistent with the truth, shall we say, and I phoned Mr. Lawless to express my displeasure with someone who is paid by the taxpayers of Canada and who gives Members of Parliament information which is inconsistent with the facts.

I have another letter from the President and Chief Operating Officer of CN. It is dated September 9, 1986, before Mr. Lawless sent a letter to me. The letter states: "This will confirm discussions on Thursday, September 4, 1986, concerning the Alderdale and Beachburg subdivisions". It goes on to describe how CN will shut down these rail lines.

It states on the second page of the letter: "Abandonment of the two subdivisions would result in annual track maintenance saving of $10 million and forgo during the next five years $50 million in capital expenditure. It also would create the likelihood of CN discontinuing the use of the Alexandria subdivision which currently has a five-year estimated capital requirement of $27 million".

The letter states that this would create the likelihood of discontinuing the Alexandria subdivision. The letter was signed by Mr. M.A. Blackwell, Assistant Vice-President. Mr. Blackwell is in fact the assistant to Mr. Lawless, the guy who wrote to me telling me I had nothing to worry about and that no plan to shut down these rail lines had been undertaken and that he would advise me if they ever did undertake to shut down rail lines.

You can now see, Mr. Speaker, why I do not like getting these types of answers from Mr. Lawless and the others surrounding him who seem to take pleasure in giving my constituents and I information which is less than accurate.

In closing, I want to tell Hon. Members that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), and I have organized a meeting here on June 15 in the Railway Committee Room to protest these cut-backs. We think that the regional development of the area I represent and the regional development of the riding of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke—in fact, all of eastern Ontario—needs to be protected. The Government should understand that eastern Ontario needs this type of amendment as proposed by the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud). I wish to congratulate him for having brought this matter to our attention.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent had the good idea of proposing this amendment today and, on behalf of the electorate of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and Eastern Ontario, I want to congratulate him.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to enter into the debate because so much of what the Hon. Member who has just spoken in describing the desire, the intention and the ability of the top managers of the railway, in this case the CNR, to mislead people, including Members of Parliament, is so familiar to me. It is like the second chapter of an old novel. We saw this type of action for so many years with the other railway, the CPR.

Of course, without the CPR, without a railway which stretched from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific, there would have been no Canada. But the founders of the country, Sir John A. Macdonald and his colleagues, realized that without a rail link linking all parts of Canada we would not have a country. So the then owners and managers of the CPR were given tremendous grants of land, tremendous subsidies of money in order to build the railway.

Over the years it has made billions, tens of billions if not hundreds of billions of dollars of profits. One would think that it would be appreciative and would, in return for its right to make the very substantial profits which it has made, try to co-operate and try to meet some of the needs of the country. But of course that is not the attitude of the CPR. It is out to get every penny of profit for its management and shareholders—and the public be damned.

I remember some years ago when I was first here as a Member of Parliament that the CPR was at that time operating two transcontinental passenger trains a day. It came to the then regulatory agency, I think it was called the Board of Transport Commissioners, and asked for permission to discontinue one of those trains. The regulatory agency turned the request down. It said, "No. You have to continue to run the two trains a day".

The CPR accepted that decision, or seemed to accept it. However, what it did very quickly after it received that decision which it did not like was to proceed to take the dining cars and the sleeping cars off one of the trains. Of course anyone who travelled by train from, let us say, Ottawa to Winnipeg, or Montreal to Vancouver, could not travel on that train if one could not get anything to eat and could not get a berth in which to sleep. So the passenger load just vanished.

Then, of course, the CPR went back to the regulatory agency and said, "Look, we have this second train running and it has no customers. There are no passengers. So we want to discontinue the train service". Of course, the regulatory agency gave it the authority to do that.

The CNR is a publicly-owned company, since the original owners, the speculators who built pieces of rail lines all over the country, one with no connection to the other, went bankrupt despite substantial subsidies and financial support from the then Government. Finally the Government of the day, which may have been a Conservative Government, I do not remember and have not looked at the history recently, took over these private lines and established the CNR.

People in Canada assumed—and obviously they were wrong if one looks at the way the CNR is operating at the present time—that because it was a publicly-owned rail system it would have some concern about the needs of the people, that it would have some social conscience. It may have had in earlier days. But what I see now, unfortunately, is that the CNR has learned all the wrong things, all the miserable things, all the underhanded ways in which to operate. After all, here we have a Government in place which tells it that it has to operate like a privately-owned company. It has to be efficient. It has to show a profit.

What does it mean to the railway company when it has to show a profit? It means traffic; that freight between the busiest parts of Canada, the economically prosperous parts of Canada such as Quebec City and Montreal, Montreal and Toronto, Montreal and Windsor, perhaps even between Winnipeg and Edmonton or Calgary or Vancouver, as opposed to passenger traffic, must be profitable. However, those several million people who live away from these busy parts of Canada, these prosperous parts of the country, for example, in the Interlake part of Manitoba or in northern Ontario, or eastern Quebec, must not count on the CNR any more. It is like saying, "Don't count on the railways because providing service will cost the company money". Thus one is written off and told to find another way. One is told, "Get a truck or a horse and buggy but do not count on the railways". That is the message which the management of the CNR has gotten from the Government. That is the lesson of how to do these things which it has learned from its friend, the CPR.

Let us look at what has happened. In the City of Moncton the CNR is the major employer, the foundation for whatever economic well-being Moncton and the surrounding areas have enjoyed. Surely, this giant corporation with revenues of hundreds of millions of dollars a year could spend just a little more to do the maintenance work in Moncton rather than in Montreal or Winnipeg. Surely, a company which was giving some thought and consideration to the well-being of the country would not have made the completely heartless decision to close up the Moncton shops.

I wonder if the President and the members of management of the CNR have ever thought that while they are doing quite well we are living in a period in which the economies of this country, and virtually every other country of the world are changing almost every day in almost revolutionary ways. Let them consider that their sons or daughters had entered the employment market and five or ten years after they establish themselves in whatever area they had chosen, the company just said, "We are closing up shop and there is nothing for you"? Have they ever put themselves in that position? Have they ever considered what is going to happen to the people in Moncton, many of whom have worked for years in the rail shops?

I see the concern of railway workers growing in my City of Winnipeg. We have maintenance shops established by both the CPR and CNR, each of which employs several thousand workers. I could go there tomorrow, take the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) with me, and meet workers who are second and third generation employees of either the CPR or the CNR.

Until recently, people whose parents or grandparents worked for the railway companies, knew that if they became employed by those companies and did their jobs, they would have a good, well paying and interesting job for the rest of their lives, but these days many people with years of seniority have been laid off, are being laid off and will be laid off. Those who are working there now are not advising their children to look to the railways for employment in the future because they have learned from experience that what we have is a transportation system, which has to be efficient, egged on by the so-called free enterprise system Government whose only interest is the profit and loss balance sheet. To be efficient means to forget about the have-not areas, forget about the people in slow growth areas, be tough, be heartless, be ruthless. I am never going to agree to that and that is why I support this amendment.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this debate on the amendment to Bill C-18 proposed by my colleague from New Brunswick.

Everyone is aware that Bill C-18 has been introduced to simplify or caricature, no more, no less. This measure paves the way for what is referred to in the transportation sector, especially railway or road transportation, as the law of the jungle, the law of the strongest, which means that the rich and big swallow the small.

We know that the consequences of this policy on the part of the Conservative government are such that major urban centres will not be unduly affected in terms of job losses or lower quality services. Hardest hit will be the remote regions, regions where people are poorer, where corporate structures are not as sound or do not have the same potential as those of major companies.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Members of the Conservative Party to think before voting against this motion of my colleague from New Brunswick who, for as long as he has been a Member of Parliament, has never stopped fighting to save the jobs of the railway and maintenance shop workers in his region.

Unfortunately, we have had no results, thanks to the Minister of Transport's incompetence and failure to act, but I hardly think everybody in this Government is as incompetent as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). There must be at least a few people with some sensitivity, and the immediate impact of my colleague's amendment would be to give the Minister of Transport—after all, some day we will have a better one who will take his responsibilities seriously—the legal authority to prevent a railway carrier from making profitability, dollars and cents as they say, the only consideration and from saying: It doesn't really pay to provide services to this region, we will abandon those lines. What this does to people and their jobs is not a priority. Because the Government has decided to adopt this attitude and let what I would call the law of the jungle and the worship of the dollar prevail, the people suffer and remote areas are deprived of essential services.

I think the Hon. Member from New Brunswick is to be commended for taking this initiative. He is the sole Member for the Liberal Party in his province, and the only one who has the guts to rise in the House, time and time again, to defend the interests of the entire Province of New Brunswick. Meanwhile, the voices of the Conservative Members of this province are muffled to the point of silence. Midas Muffler must have done a job on them! And with all those companies closing down. The Government can do whatever it wants to harm the interests of this province, but the Conservative Members see no evil, hear no evil and speak no evil.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this time they will finally wake up. They don't have to say anything. All they have to do is rise in their seats and vote in favour of this motion. No one will know.

I am sure that my hon. colleague would be proud to be able to say that in his province, his Conservative colleagues have risen above partisan considerations, that his colleagues from the Conservative Party in New Brunswick have considered the interests of the province, the interests of the people, the interests of workers, and regardless of partisan considerations, have followed the example of our Liberal colleague. But no, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see one of them doing that, we have not heard one of them. What are they all doing?

What my honourable colleague is suggesting would of course help protect jobs in areas like New Brunswick. Even in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, I know that they are trying—they are all getting uneasy on the Conservative side—I know that they are trying to find a Conservative Member from New Brunswick to come and reply. Anyway, we're going to shake them awake because it takes a Liberal to wake them up, Mr. Speaker. They are all chicken, they are cowards. The time has come to speak out. We have an amendment to save jobs in their province, let them come here and stand up.

They have been elected to represent their constituents. They are going to go out and canvass their ridings to try to be elected again, and they will say: Sir, madam, I would like to go on representing you in Ottawa. But the gentleman or the lady in question will tell them: My good man, my good woman, where were you when the Liberal Member put forward a suggestion to save my job in the transportation sector, where were you? Well, you know, I didn't know, I did not realize. Then they will simply tell him: Beat it, we're no longer voting for you. You had one turn, it is over, go back home, you can stick to your own transportation. Mr. Speaker, it is time for those people to wake up. Look at opinion polls. There is no Rhinoceros Party in New Brunswick, otherwise they would be fifth in the polls. That is what is happening to them in Quebec.

I think it is important, even in the Montreal area where last week I attended a demonstration by 500 workers of such corporations as Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel and Laforge. Marine Industries, in Sorel, which used to build railway cars, is now closed, finished. Bombardier will have to lay off 400 employees, and the Bill has not even been adopted. With this Bill, we are selling ourselves, or rather giving ourselves away to the Americans. But what my hon. friend is proposing is to create a mechanism, a tool which would make it possible for the Minister to tell a foreign corporation: Just a moment, this company, in spite of temporary difficulties, must continue to operate. It should be given a break, because it has jobs to save, workers to protect and services to provide. That is what the amendment is saying. It is not seeking to abolish free trade. It is simply looking for a tool.

Perhaps PC Members are well aware that even if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) was provided with such a tool, he would not know how to use it. Wake up and think! He will not be Minister of Transport forever. One of these days, a good one will be appointed to this position. It will be one of you. If not, it will be one of us. Such a tool is needed to ensure the protection of regional development.

When we talk about development, we mean more than just a principle: we are thinking about Canadians as well as the business firms which need a high quality transportation service, and all the unemployed who need jobs. That is what the amendement is all about.

As my time is about to expire, Mr. Speaker, I trust that some PC Members will stand up and congratulate my New Brunswick friend. They will congratulate and support him because his amendment is quite reasonable. It is meant to benefit the people of New Brunswick. I am from Quebec, and I know that my fellow Quebecers will benefit from this amendment, even those from the Montreal area. The Government refuses to develop any real railway transportation policy. The Government would rather have CN and CP buy car wheels from Brazil. Have you ever wondered where this Government's philosophy will lead us if it decides to buy from the cheapest source in the world? There will not be any work left for a single solitary Canadian. Of course, there will always be places where you can buy a cheaper equivalent of any product manufactured here. But then, what is the Government of Canada all about? It is there to ensure that its population has a decent standard of living, has services and has jobs. The proposed amendment to this harmful transportation bill will improve and correct some of its shortcomings and will contribute to its intended objectives.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to congratulate my colleague from New Brunswick and I would hope that at least one, not five or ten, not even three but one Conservative member from that province will stand up and support the motion. And if that member is afraid that his leader and his whip will punish him and cancel a trip he was counting on, then I suggest that he rise in his place and remain silent so that we know where he stands and so that my colleague can go back to the people of New Brunswick ant tell them that although the Conservative members are obviously not that good, one of them did agree with his proposal, however discreetly.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member who put this motion forward. Motion No. 5 is certainly well thought out and expresses a concern which for the people of northern Ontario is of great importance.

One thing about which we in northern Ontario are most concerned is regional development. The communities in northern Ontario are primarily based upon the exploitation of resources. All we do is cut or mine a resource, and then it is shipped out.

We have experienced in the past that as a result of the freight rates which are set, resources are shipped out cheaply, but in fact they penalize the north in respect of shipping a finished product to market. It is much cheaper to ship out a raw resource than to ship out a finished product. Furthermore, we have always dreamed, hoped, and prayed, I might say, for regional development. In other words we have hoped that the economies of our communities in northern Ontario would be diversified. There has been much rhetoric around the whole question of diversification of the economies of northern Ontario.

There is no doubt that the key to economic development in northern Ontario must be transportation. We all recognize that the supply of energy is important, but transportation is the key to the economic development of communities of northern Ontario.

What is the situation at the moment? It is that in fact CNR and CPR have both been abandoning rail lines in northern Ontario. In fact, at least at the present moment, there is the CTC and there must be adequate notification and hearings held in respect of the abandonment of any line in northern Ontario. However, if Bill C-18 is passed, the railways will find themselves free of that hindrance, of that hurdle, of at least the process whereby communities have the right at the moment to make representation to the CTC.

We all have concerns about certain CN subs; for example, the sub between Montreal and Sudbury. I understand that both CN and CP have a list of lines ready to be abandoned the moment proclamation is given to Bill C-18. The boys from CN will put the boots to northern Ontario in respect of these lines. In other words, they will run the line from Montreal, to Ottawa, to Toronto, back up to Sudbury, and west. This means that in the area between Ottawa and Sudbury there will be no line operating other than the line on which VIA will run.

This motion in fact indicates that we must place the economic development of regions first, before any other consideration in respect of rail line service. In part it reads:

> —the Government of Canada and one or more provincial governments jointly decide that any such service or facilities and service is required for the achievement of national or regional, social and economic development objectives—

It gives a role and function to the federal and provincial Governments, but it does not give any voice or any role to the regional Governments or local communities.

We in northern Ontario have our problems with Toronto. If we talk about centralization and rigidity, we have our problems with Toronto. They think that what is good for Toronto must be good for all Ontario. Hopefully the Government of Ontario, with this new-found desire for federal co-operation and co-operative federalism which Mr. Peterson discovered the other day, will start recognizing that the regions in Ontario should be given the same sense of co-operative federalism in the Province of Ontario.

The only quarrel I have with the motion is that in fact it leaves out the input of the regional Governments or local communities.

What we have at the moment is the CN, and I want to speak specifically to that. The motion speaks to that. For example, in the town of Capreol, CNR has 600 employees at the present time. CNR has been making decisions in respect of that workforce. It has been making decisions in respect of train dispatching and crew dispatching. It has been cutting away at the workforce in Capreol. It is moving out the workforce. There are no consultations with the community. There are no consultations with the people in the community. There are no consultations with the workers affected. Simply a decision is made somewhere in the regional office or somewhere in the main office in Montreal. Lo and behold we now find crew dispatchers in Toronto.

What do the crew dispatchers do in Capreol? They call the workers and tell them when the trains are going out. They call a guy who lives on Hannah Street in Capreol and say train number so and so is going out tonight. They took those crew dispatchers and moved them to Toronto. I want to ask you to think about that for a moment, Mr. Speaker. What do the crew dispatchers do in Toronto? They phone to Capreol and tell the guy on Hannah Street that the train is going out. We understand that it costs $30,000 in long distance phone calls a month to phone guys in Toronto from Capreol that trains are going out or that trains are going out west, east, north or south.

They say that that provides economy to the company. The company is saving money. How is that saving money? We asked the company to lay the figures and the facts before the people. We asked them to justify this decision. The CN literally told the people that it was none of their business but the people are the ones who own the CNR, and the taxpayers were told that the decisions that they make that affect them adversely are none of their business. We have a company which, with the acquiescence and permission of this Government is acting in a way that we condemned Inco Falconbridge in the past for doing. They are acting without any accountability to the people who through the support of their taxes built this railway company.

I have no problem supporting this motion, even though I would like to see some controls by the region. I will vote for this motion when it comes to a vote because it really addresses the concerns of the communities that I represent in northern Ontario.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1986

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next motion will be Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 3 by striking out line 36 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"so far as practicable, and with consideration to duties performed in the public interest, bears a fair propor-"

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion moved by my colleague and seconded by myself is to provide some fairness. The clause reads, as it exists in the Bill:

(c) each carrier or mode of transportation so far as practicable bears a fair proportion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The motion has been moved by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). The Member should realize that if he does not speak now he cannot speak.

Mr. Benjamin: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Angus: We worked that out ahead of time, Mr. Speaker.

One of the things we are trying to do is to make sure that we are fair and reasonable in handling this Bill. The points that we want on record we will put on the record, but we will not do so at great length. I will be the only speaker from my Party on this motion.

Let me read the existing clause and then point out the changes:

(e) each carrier or mode of transportation, so far as practicable, bears a fair proportion of the real costs of the resources, facilities and services provided to that carrier or mode of transportation at public expense—

Although the Order Paper that I have in front of me has a different version of the amendment, what we are adding is that no single carrier or mode of transportation will bear, so far as practicable, a greater proportion of the real cost of the resources, facilities and services provided to that carrier or mode at public expense than any other single carrier or mode of transportation is required to bear.

As some Members of this House know, we had a very long fight over another piece of legislation, namely, Bill C-75. Clause 4 of that Bill gave the Government of Canada the authority to impose user fees for Coast Guard services. We fought that clause and we won. The Government eventually dropped that clause, and the Government is now consulting with the industry.

One of the things we learned during the course of the debate and the research that was done by Members of this House and by interested groups is that clearly there was not a balance out there. We had, for example, in one particular year on the Great Lakes—St. Lawrence Seaway 75 per cent cost recovery. In other words, the users of those government services, whether port facilities, the Seaway, pilotage or whatever, paid for 75 per cent of those costs. On the other hand, we are told that in air transportation only 40 per cent of the cost of the government services provided to air users is recovered in the form of user fees.

Very simply, what we want to do is to ensure that there is balance, that no one sector is forced to pay more than any other, even if it means a full examination of the whole question of cost recovery and the methods used. But we on this side of the House feel it is important, if we are to prevent unfair competition between modes, that we as a Parliament of Canada and as the Government ensure that there is fairness.

I am sure there are those on the other side of the House who would argue, "Yes, we will do it, 100 per cent for everybody". But that kind of thinking has no bearing on reality. Members know that those sectors cannot afford a 100 per cent cost recovery.

Add to that the comparison between the trucking industry, using national highways, provincial highways paid for by public expenditures—yes, with some cost recovery through gasoline taxes—and the railroads who own their own roadbeds and are forced to pay for that cost. On the other hand railways do get substantial sums of money from the federal coffers to provide services that Parliament has deemed to be appropriate.

• (1610)

I would encourage my colleagues on the other side of the House to give serious consideration to this amendment which would provide fairness and to support it. Those are my comments on this motion.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to support the motion put forward by my colleague for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

In keeping with the spirit of good will and co-operation that pervades the discussion of the Bill, I will simply express my support for the motion.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion to be dealt with is Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-18, be amended by deleting Clause 8.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 12 moves that Clause 8 be deleted from the Bill. If my colleagues will read Clause 8, they will note that it allows for the appointment of temporary members to the new transportation agency on terms and conditions laid out by the Governor in Council, and any temporary member so appointed shall carry out such duties as may be assigned, and the next paragraph says that there will be not more than six of them.

The only reason temporary members of the agency should be appointed is to fill a vacancy. If a commissioner of the agency becomes ill or must take an extended leave of absence, it would be justifiable to appoint a temporary member to fill that vacant position, even if it is only for a few months or a few weeks. However, to simply be able to appoint six temporary members in addition to those already appointed for a three, five or seven-year term smacks to me of a way of giving handouts to friends. More seriously, it raises the spectre of having six temporary members appointed in order to stack the deck for special purposes. In a particular issue in a particular part of the country, six temporary members may be appointed, all of whom are known to be on one side or the other of the issue, to hear about it and make a judgment on it. I am not suggesting that the Government would do that, but the fact that the possibility exists should cause everyone to have second thoughts about that clause.

The clause is entirely unnecessary. The Governor in Council may appoint people to fill vacancies in any event without this clause being in the Bill. I submit that the provision is very risky and is fraught with danger. It leaves the Government open to a criticism and suspicion that could turn out to be well justified. I submit that at this time, the Government does not need any more of that. Whether the criticism is justified or not, why would the Government deliberately leave itself open to that kind of suspicion? I would urge that government Members agree that the clause be withdrawn because it is unnecessary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion to be dealt with is Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 20 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"Agency, including an adequate number of inspectors for each mode of transportation, which would be tied to the volume of traffic in each mode, shall be appointed in accordance".

He said: Mr. Speaker, one of the items that came up most frequently when the committee travelled to hear submissions on the White Paper entitled Freedom to Move, and when it held hearings on the legislation, was the question of the adequacy of the inspection services in all modes of transportation. That question came from people in the trucking industry, from forwarders and receivers of other modes of transportation, from a number of trade unions and even from many corporations. In fact, either the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the Canadian Chamber of Commerce called for a substantial improvement and increase in the capacity of government agencies to carry out inspections to ensure the adequacy, safety and security of the various modes of transportation.

As the Bill reads now, there can be the appointment of a secretary and such other officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the agency, and these employees shall be appointed in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. This amendment adds after the word "Agency" the following:

—including an adequate number of inspectors for each mode of transportation, which would be tied to the volume of traffic in each mode, shall be appointed in accordance—

It is in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. That motion would answer the request of literally dozens and dozens of witnesses who appeared before the committee, and would meet the desires of the transporters themselves.

I remember an officer of a major trucking company telling me there had not been a provincial or federal government inspector around his trucks or in his shops for over five years. He wants them to come in and examine his facilities, equipment and employees to see how well qualified they are. He wants them to examine his maintenance practices and procedures in case they are insufficient because he wants to know about it. He says safety not only comes first, safety pays. Even when safety costs money it pays off. When a senior officer of a major trucking company says he wants a government inspector to come and examine his premises and practices on a frequent basis, he also wants that to apply to everyone. That particular trucking company has an excellent record and reputation. It has first-class mechanics and maintenance schedules. It does not cut corners. However, what gives that reputable company a bad name is the fly-by-nighter who does not have mechanics or facilities. Those companies do not carry out proper and frequent maintenance of their equipment and vehicles. They are the ones that cause trouble for the entire industry. Most of this is because the Government has not had the capacity to carry out the kind and frequency of inspections that need to be carried out and for which the industry itself is asking.

It is false economy to try and hold down government expenditures in this way. The Government has said there will be no compromise on safety, so I am sure this amendment will help the Government live up to that commitment. There has been a modest increase of a few inspectors in two or three years but not anywhere near sufficient, whether it be for the air mode, trucking or rail. In fact, if I recall correctly, 17 rail inspectors had to worry about an area covering 10,000 miles of track and tens of thousands of items of rolling stock and locomotives. There is no way that many people can handle that large a territory in an adequate manner. It is not the inspector's fault and it is not the railroad's fault. It is the fact that we have not provided a sufficient quantity of qualified people to carry out those inspections and enforce the regulations and the law regarding maintenance and safety practices. Surely that is one of the prime requisites in national transportation legislation and a stated objective of the Government. Because that is true, I expect that the Government will find this motion to be most welcome.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the House decided to accept the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), Clause 15 as amended would in fact read as follows:

15. The secretary of the Agency and such other officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the Agency, including an adequate number of inspectors for each mode of transportation, which would be tied to the volume of traffic in each mode, shall be appointed in accordance with the Act.

Of course, the motion addresses the need for safety in all modes of transport. During the hearings we held across Canada on the Bill, many people came and expressed their concern for safety.

Mr. Speaker, we must appreciate that this Bill opens up new frontiers—as it were—with respect to transportation. This is something new for Canada and, more to the point, it is coming at us fast. We have no experience with deregulation, we can only go by what is happening in the United States, or what has happened in the United States. And if we are to believe the evidence given by people who appeared at the hearings, we can conclude that the United States are experiencing certain safety problems.

So the rationale behind this amendment moved by my colleague is that we would be sure there are inspectors or enough personnel to carry out the necessary inspections. Mr. Speaker, this does not mean that the minute Bill C-18 is proclaimed there will be a mad rush to hire all kinds of people here and there.

Quite simply the motion would ensure that there is enough personnel to maintain safety in all modes of transportation. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is number 15.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 19 at page 8 the following:

"(2) The Agency may also ensure that ongoing independent research is conducted with respect to Canada's transportation policy and the effectiveness of that policy relative to the public interest."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 19 of the Bill says:

"The Agency may appoint and, subject to any Treasury Board directive in relation thereto, fix the remuneration of experts or persons having technical or special knowledge to assist the Agency in an advisory capacity in respect of any matter before the Agency.

One of the things that is perfectly apparent is that it is the Government's intention to almost totally gut the research capacity of the Canadian Transport Commission. I suppose that might make it a juicy deal for people who obtain contracts as consultants, with fees more expensive than the cost of having your own research capacity.

The amendment asks, still subject to a Treasury Board directive which means that there will be no call for an additional expenditure, that:

"The Agency may also ensure that ongoing independent research is conducted with respect to Canada's transportation policy and the effectiveness of that policy relative to the public interest".

That must be done continually. It will be part of the annual and five-year reviews of the effectiveness of this legislation or portions of it. We think it would be a false economy not to maintain in the agency or attached to the agency an independent research capacity on a continuing basis to take instructions from the agency with regard to the kind of information it needs to have researched and reported on.

I hope the Government will reconsider and accept this motion in the way in which it is presented. It is an attempt to be helpful, to make a bad Bill less bad, and to ensure that the Government and the transportation agency have the proper resources to do a good job.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, again I should like to support this amendment proposed by my colleague from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) which provides that:

The Agency may also ensure that ongoing independent research is conducted with respect to Canada's transportation policy and the effectiveness of that policy relative to the public interest.

I think this is self-explanatory. As I pointed our earlier, it is clear enough that we are rushing towards deregulation. The change is proceeding at a rapid pace and, if we are to see and appreciate just what this new initiative entails, we ought to have independent research facilities to be in a position to assess the impact of this new legislation and find out how it can be effective with respect to the public interest.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motions to be debated are Motions Nos. 16, 17 and 50.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 22 by striking out line 14 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"al of Parliament, make rules".

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 23 by striking out line 13 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"23.(1) Parliament may, at".

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 85 by striking out lines 8 and 9 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"such terms and conditions as the Agency may approve, provide the assistance".

He said: Mr. Speaker, the intent of these amendments is to require the agency, when it has set its rules and regulations, to return to Parliament with them, and that they be subject to the approval of Parliament which, I expect, would refer them to the Standing Committee on Transport. This would give Parliament some say in the manner in which the agency sets its procedures. It would make Parliament, with the Government, a source of policy direction for the agency.

With regard to Motion No. 50, some of the procedures and regulations of the agency will require a transporter, be it a trucking company, airline or railroad, to continue to provide a service for the public good, convenience and necessity. From time to time this may mean that subsidies will be required or at least will have to be available. This amendment would replace the Governor in Council with the agency as the one able to set the terms and conditions of such financial assistance.

In earlier amendments we proposed that once the agency has drafted its regulations, procedures, and the directions of its work, it should bring those to Parliament for approval. In that way members of this House and the standing committee can examine them and rule upon their adequacy or otherwise.

For many decades the old Board of Transport Commissioners and the Canadian Transport Commission operated too much under a veil of secrecy. Much of what they were doing was known only to them and the Governor in Council and one had a heck of a time finding out what was being done, how it was being done, and why. One had to go through a lot of red tape. In fact, you sometimes had to cut the red tape lengthwise in order to find out what was going on.

These amendments make a new national transportation agency more responsible to the public through Parliament and place it more in the public eye which means that it will be more accountable. Members of this place and members of the standing committee will have some important input with regard to how it functions and what kinds of regulations it has. I think that is overdue as a result of the experience we have had in transportation since the late 1800s.

I hope the Government will seriously consider this as a new and innovative way in which to give the public maximum and direct access to the agency through their elected representatives. They should be made aware of the way in which it functions and how well it functions. It should be responsive and respond quicker than it has in the past. This is a marked difference from previous practice. We consider it innovative, new, and useful in the new regime the Government wishes to establish under this legislation. We hope it will agree to those three amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question will be on Motion No. 16 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), the result of which will apply to Motion No. 17. Is it the please of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is very evident in the present situation where you are hearing yeas and nays, that many of the nays are coming from behind the curtain.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Angus: I was inside the curtain.

Mr. Murphy: I believe that if we have to vote in the House, it would be appropriate if Members were actually in the House. I suggest that if people are actually voting on motions that are before the House—and we are making every effort to move these amendments with due haste—that the people who wish to vote against these motions should at least have the courtesy to be in the House.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to make it very clear that when you were asking for the yeas and nays I was not behind the curtains. I did not participate in that. I came in to rise to call for a division. I want to assure those Members that we on this side are not doing something of which we are accusing them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the House takes note of the very appropriate comment made by the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

The question is on Motion No. 50 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved:

Motion No. 19:

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 35 by adding immediately line 40 at page 14 the following:

"(8) The Agency may amend, suspend, or terminate any licence or operating authority issued under this Act, when satisfied that the holder of such a licence or operating authority has not complied or has refused to comply with the spirit and intent of section 3(1)(a) of this Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment would refer to the clauses on safety and the spirit of safety standards, to give teeth to the clause and allow the agency to make an assessment of the carrier's likelihood or indeed ability to operate safely.

We realize that some of the safety standards are the responsibility of Transport Canada, but we believe the agency, which has the powers to issue, amend, suspend, or cancel licences to carriers, should have some responsibility in the area of safe operations.

In order for the agency to make a more rapid decision as to whether or not a carrier is operating safely, or is even able to operate safely, it must have the staff to make those assessments in various parts of the country, as well as have the capacity to reach a conclusion and take action with respect to the safe operations of that particular carrier.

We believe this is a proper role for and duty of the new transportation agency. Such a responsibility should not rest only with a handful of people somewhere in the nether regions of the Department of Transport. I am not convinced that the experience until now has been very good or thorough in terms of safe operating practices, or even if new carriers are able to operate safely, with adequate financing, equipment and adequately trained employees. These are standards that should be a condition of licencing.

The agency should have sufficient employees to report in this area so that it can better judge whether or not a licence should be issued, amended, suspended or cancelled. I hope the Government will agree to Motion No. 19.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, to repeat what was said by the Hon. Member who just spoke, Clause 35 defines or gives certain powers to the Agency. To those powers, the Hon. Member would like to add the following paragraph (8) which says that the Agency may amend, suspend, or terminate any licence or operating authority issued under this Act, when satisfied that the holder of such a licence or operating authority has not complied or has refused to comply with the spirit and intent of Section 3(1)(a) of this Act. In fact, Clause 3(1)(a) of the Bill as it now stands says that the National Transportation System should meet the highest possible safety standards.

So if we look at both paragraph (8) of Clause 35 and Clause 3(1)(a), we see how sensible this amendment is, because here again, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of protecting the safety of Canadians, and if in this whole deregulation exercise that will soon be upon us, we do not give safety the attention it deserves, we may be in for some nasty surprises. None of us wants to get up one fine morning and read about a serious accident with loss of life that happened because somebody, somewhere failed to monitor the safety of our transportation system. Mr. Speaker, here we have an opportunity to show how serious we take the whole subject of safety. Throughout the process of considering this Bill, the Minister and his officials told us, time and time again, that the safety of the public was first and foremost in their minds. Now they have a chance to prove they were sincere about their dedication to the safety of Canadians.

I think Hon. Members here in the House and behind the curtains would do well to read this motion carefully and give it their full support, to keep safety a priority throughout our transportation system.

That Bill C-18, be amended in Clause 36 by striking out line 1 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) At any proceeding of the Agency for the".

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to indicate that the purpose of this amendment is to provide the agency with some flexibility. The current word in the Act is "hearing". We are proposing to replace it with the word "proceeding". This may seem like a moot point to some, but a number of witnesses who appeared before the committee during our hearings into Bill C-18 felt that the word "hearing" was too prominent and that it restricted the agency from having other less formal methods of doing business. In this case the change would guarantee the right of special interest groups to make representations at a proceeding.

Clearly, when we look at the role of the agency, as well as other quasi-judicial bodies which we all have encountered over the years, we see that some are very formal. Some have very strict rules with respect to who can participate and to what degree. This amendment would change the intent and the focus. It would give some flexibility to the situation.

For example, with respect to a rail line abandonment, instead of the formal hearings that we have experienced with the CTC over the years being held where there is legal counsel and the right to cross-examine perhaps there could be town hall meetings. The agency could go out into western Canada, or out into the area between Ottawa and Sudbury, or to the Eastern Townships, Moncton or Atlantic Canada and hold informal information gathering sessions in order to get a feel for the issue. The agency could get a feel for what the abandonment of a particular line would mean to the people who live beside it and depend upon it without those people having to go through the very trying process of sitting down and putting together a brief, a document, that will be tested. By doing this we would open up the process.

If this amendment were to be accepted we would open up the process to the people of Canada. In this way we would no longer have to rely on lawyers or lobbyists who perform this work on a full-time basis. In this way the ordinary man and woman could participate in the process and feel as if someone is listening to them.

One of my beliefs is that too often decisions are made by Parliament, by Cabinet, by legislatures, for valid reasons. There are also decisions made by private corporations for valid reasons. But the people who are affected by them have no ownership with respect to the results. They may bear the brunt of the results but they certainly do not feel as if they were part and parcel of arriving at them.

If I can use an example—

Mr. Thacker: We will agree to this one.

Mr. Angus: Given a comment I have just heard I think I should sit down and see what happens, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, we are almost at the close of today's proceedings. Because of the progress we have made and the cogency of arguments with respect to Motion No. 20 the Government will agree to this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 20 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PUBLIC BILLS

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom that Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today as presented by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) offers perhaps the clearest display of New Democratic economic policy and socialist philosophy that we have currently before the House, or in anything that that Party has presented.

The essence of the Bill is to provide a return or a price to farmers essentially to cover their costs, plus a reasonable profit. On first blush that seems like a pretty sound idea and something that all of us would like to see. However, if we wish to take the matter a little further we must ask this question. What does a reasonable profit really mean? I suppose it means that farmers would recover the costs of doing business, a reasonable return on their labour and a reasonable return on their capital. Again, that sounds all right on first blush. One could say, "Well, why should we not go ahead and do something like that?"

I think we must examine the issue a little more closely. One of the first things one will have to decide in establishing what is a reasonable profit, or in fact what are the costs, is who will determine them. The NDP has a fairly ready solution for this. Presumably some bureaucrats employed by the Government of Canada, some civil servants, perhaps here in Ottawa—there is lots of empty office space and I am sure we can fill it up with some people—can try to determine what costs, plus a reasonable profit, a farmer should receive.

I am an accountant and I know that in normal day-to-day business dealings the profit is the difference between costs and revenue. Therefore, if we are going to make some adjustment to profit, whether or not we can define what a reasonable profit is, we are going to affect either the costs or the revenue. This is presumably what the civil servants would have to decide. How would they go about that?

I suppose, first of all, they would have to take a look at input costs. They would say, for instance, this farmer over here with this size of farm should have that size of tractor because any other tractor is too big. They might decide that the farmer should use only diesel fuel or gasoline. The net result would have us moving in the direction of having bureaucrats, or some board or agency of the Government, making the decisions farmers currently make for themselves. In essence, farmers would be an extension of the arm of the Government as well because, presumably, they will not have to make decisions any more. They will have their costs covered, receive a reasonable profit and simply go about their day-to-day business.

On the other hand, the bureaucrats might wonder what they are going to do about prices because, of course, that affects the farmer's revenue. I suppose we could set up some kind of mechanism for deciding what the price should be and then controlling it. Let us consider what we would have to do to control costs and prices.

I should point out that members of the New Democratic Party have a solution for that problem. They suggest, in order to control costs, taking into public ownership of some existing farm supply retail operations, farm machinery assembly plants, meat-packing plants and canneries. This presumably would allow the Government, by owning the suppliers of farmers, perhaps the gasoline dealers and service repair shops, and so on, the ability to control the costs of the farmers. I am not so sure what the people in those businesses might think about having the Government take them over. However, that presumably would achieve what this Bill seeks to do.

What about prices? How are we going to deliver an effective price or set a price? Presumably some bureaucrats would determine what that would be and that price would be set. But because the buyers of agricultural products today are various processing plants, those people who take those products and make them into foodstuffs, namely the agri-food industry, there would have to be some control in that area as well.

Again members of the New Democratic Party have a solution. Their official Party policy espouses the establishment of industrial plants to be co-operatively or publicly owned for the processing of food and the manufacture of farm supply items in the region of production.

That seems to have it pretty well covered. We have the input costs controlled because the Government has taken over the retail outlets and the facilities which supply farmers. We have the prices controlled because the Government has now taken over the processing plants which buy the product.

But what is the next step? What if the farmer all of a sudden starts making too much profit? I suppose the New Democratic Party has an answer for that. What if there is over-production? I have a letter from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which makes the following comment, and I quote:

> Let us assume for one mad moment that parity pricing were the option of choice. Canadian agriculture earns 50% of its gross farm income in export markets. Who will buy our products at the parity price? Obviously, the answer is no one so long as other nations are prepared to meet the market. Then who will pay to make up the difference? Surely not the farmer. After struggling to achieve parity pricing, he is not about to give half of it back to move half of his product into world markets. And, if the Government pays the bill, how long will we avoid a successful countervail challenge?
> The entire idea of parity pricing distills down to nonsense. It is not remotely a viable policy option for Canadian agriculture. It is, in fact, a cruel hoax upon the desperate hopes and aspirations of many financially distressed farmers.

The letter goes on to state:

> With or without public support, commodities will not sell above a price determined in the market place. Obviously, therefore, some surplus product would have to be taken off the market and stored—until the market improved. If the market did not improve, these stored products would accumulate to overhang the market much as they do now within the EEC.

In an effort to resolve that problem, the provincial Member of Parliament from the riding of Timiskaming has a solution. He suggests that we formulate a strategy to take some of the land out of production and to control the size of farms.

I would like to respond by quoting again the official Party policy of the New Democratic Party. Their resolutions book is dated November 1986, which makes it six months old and both the resolutions I read earlier were from that book. The New Democratic Party stands behind these resolutions. These are constitutional resolutions and the NDP must put those resolutions into government policy if it every forms the Government. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has said many times that he stands behind these resolutions.

The resolution reads, "The Party espouses the establishment of a public commission to determine a formula for farm unit size on a regional basis". The New Democratic Party has now decided that in order to control the production—and we acknowledge that no controls on production and complete covering of costs would create a problem of surpluses which we cannot sell on the international market—we should set the size of the farms. If there was too much profit, obviously the Government could take a look and say, "Well, there is really too much profit here so we will set the size of the farm".

I think we only have to consider the implications for extending this proposal to other small businesses, such as suppliers, purchasers of farm products and, indeed, any small business in the country, to know how ludicrous this policy would be. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, every restaurant in my riding saying they should get a reasonable profit to cover their costs? Can you imagine every corner store, every retail service station saying the same thing? I think once we start down this road, once we accept this kind of philosophy, it will lead us to the socialism which all of us on this side of the House are trying to keep from happening.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the previous Conservative Member speaking against this Bill. I would like to say, as one of the members of the New Democratic Party, that I support the Bill. I do not have a large number of farmers in my riding, but we do have farmers who understand the problems all farmers are facing at the present time. They are in a situation where their costs are not being covered by the price of their commodities.

This Bill is trying to establish a mechanism so that farmers are indeed reimbursed for at least the cost of production and obviously have a reasonable profit. When Conservative Members rise, as did the previous Conservative Member, and rant and rave and claim that the Bill is impractical, they ignore the situation which exists for many other farm products. For example, the dairy, chicken, and turkey industries already have this type of system. It is not unreasonable to believe that farmers across the country should have some guarantee that their costs will be covered and that they will have a reasonable rate of return for the work in which they are involved.

I have heard Hon. Members speak against this Bill. They somehow think it is radical, yet it happens in other agricultural industries. They ignore what is really happening. In addition, they ignore the fact that almost every other industry is in a position to ensure that it has an adequate rate of return.

Certainly there are bankruptcies in some industries; certainly some industries go under. However, farmers who are unprotected at the present time need something to ensure that they have an adequate income. The only way that will happen is if the House of Commons passes some legislation which provides it.

Farmers have no control over what the American Congress does. They have no control over what happens in Europe. However, they expect the people they elect to the House of Commons from Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and other provinces to rise and to represent their interests.

The Conservative Member who spoke prior to me said that the Bill would just provoke a reaction from the United States, a countervail reaction or something of that nature. The truth is that the Americans have subsidized their farmers for many years. The truth is that the Europeans have heavily subsidized their farmers for many, many years.

We regret the fact that Canadian farmers need subsidies at this time, but we know that it is true. The Government itself recognized that during the Saskatchewan election when it finally came up with $1 billion after a very long period of time and gave it to farmers. Rather than reacting to every emergency which comes along, usually during a provincial election, the Bill is looking for an orderly manner by which the farmers will know what will happen to them. Then we would not have the situation where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) receives a panic telephone call from the Premier of Saskatchewan—and I believe it was at five o'clock in the morning—saying, "Please help me. The polls are bad. Let's do something for farmers. Let's find a billion dollars. I don't care how you give it to them. I don't care if you spread the money out. I really don't care if they ever see the money, but make sure you make that announcement". That is not the way to do things. Farmers do not appreciate it.

They got part of the money so far and hopefully they will get the rest of the money soon, although we do not know when. However, we are now approaching the next crop year and again farmers do not know what will happen.

We have asked repeated questions of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), and the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), trying to find out for farmers of western Canada and farmers of other parts of the land what the position of the Government will be for the upcoming crop year. We have been unable to obtain a straight answer on it. There is an indication that something will probably come. We do not know what, how much, what for, or when. In the meantime, farmers are out there right now planting their crops and making plans, and they do not know what the Government will do.

The legislation before us presented by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) tries to get rid of the very crude and politically involved system which we have at the present time. It tries to institute a policy whereby farmers of the land know that the Government and Parliament of Canada support them and how much money they can reasonably expect to make this year so that they can make plans with regard to their crops and other things. The Bill does not only deal with wheat, it deals with other commodities as well.

I have talked about the problems of farmers. I have talked about the impractical way in which we deal with our problems at this time. I have talked about the fact that they have been given $1 billion but they do not know what is happening next. Let me now explain why the Bill is necessary.

In 1981-82 the Canadian Wheat Board paid $199.62 per tonne for top grade wheat. In 1982-83, it went down to $192.43 per tonne. In 1983-84, it was $193.98 per tonne. By 1984-85, it was $186.37; by 1985-86, $160.00; and by 1986-87, $130 per tonne; 1987-88, it is $110 per tonne, but it may go up because that is the initial price.

However, the situation is that in that six-year period the price of top grade wheat has been cut in half. We have some expectation that the price may drop even further in the future.

It is very important that we have some legislation in place. It is also very important that we in the House move to support legislation in order that we can do something for Canadian farmers. To those Conservatives who have expressed concern that if we pass this Bill we will be passing a piece of NDP policy which will somehow get them in trouble with their right wing friends, let me remind them that in 1984 Parliament allowed the Bill to go to committee. In 1985, with the Conservative majority in the House, Parliament again let the Bill go to committee. Obviously there is a very drastic, continuing, and increasing need for some type of support system for farmers.

I urge Hon. Members of the House in all Parties to rise when there is a vote to ensure that the Bill goes to committee, so that farmers can appear before the committee and Conservative Members can make any amendments they feel necessary. Then we would have improved legislation for the House of Commons to pass.

As I mentioned earlier, protection has already been provided to some farmers involved in the dairy, chicken, and turkey industries. We are saying that that system is working very satisfactorily in those areas. It should be expanded so that farmers, like so many of us, can know what will be their incomes in a year and have some sense of economic security and economic stability and some sense that the family farm can survive.

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-221. However, I am somewhat disenchanted at the lack of participation of the Liberal Opposition on agricultural issues. This surely demonstrates the level of interest they have always had for agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, a progressive agricultural industry and a reasonable return on invested labour . . .

Mr. Rossi: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) is absent—which is quite often the case—no one comments on his absence. There is, I believe, a rule in this House which states that when mention is made of an Hon. Member on either side of the House, mention is made neither of his absence nor of his presence.

I would therefore ask the Hon. Member for Portneuf to show the same respect for other Hon. Members as that shown towards him when he is not present, which is quite often the case.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) on debate.

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I realize now that the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) did not understand what I meant. When I referred to the absence of Liberal Members, I did not mean to say that they were absent from the House. I meant something quite different. I meant that Liberal Members have failed to take part in this debate. Please listen carefully to what I have to say.

We should consider the negative effects a parity prices system could have on our farmers and the Canadian economy generally.

The notion of parity prices could do more harm than good for many reasons.

When prices are based on production costs, it is necessary to take into account the technological and agricultural innovations, which, through a more effective balancing of the various input costs, can result in lower costs and a regular decrease in the price of goods.

The production costs, however, are difficult to determine. It is necessary to distinguish between the costs for which disbursements must be made and such other factors as the fair reward for the farmer's work and investments, the value of which is difficult to assess precisely. They can be estimated, as they are already in some industries, but it is a delicate point on which people may hold different views.

If production costs were higher than market prices, a contingency or supply management system would be necessary for every type of farm product. One should not think about introducing a pricing system without having the means to limit the supply or dispose of the surpluses outside regular markets.

Canada is an exporting country and we depend on our export markets. These account for nearly half of our net farm income. Our production must be competitive on foreign markets.

If, on the one hand, the price of a product were set too high, we would have, on the other hand, to control the increase in imports which would certainly occur. But mainly, we could no longer export because our products probably would be too expensive on international markets. Our competitive position would then be jeopardized.

In order to remain on those markets, we would have to provide for export subsidies, and certainly our trade partners would react strongly. Canada would be accused of selling below cost or dumping. This of course would help isolate us from the global trade context and would have a disastrous impact not only on agriculture but the whole Canadian economy.

Unfortunately, the United States and the European Economic Community are engaged in a subsidy war, and Canadian producers are the unfortunate victims. Because of pressures abroad, prices for grain and oil seeds crops are down at least 20 to 25 per cent from last year. And probably they will not increase until market conditions have improved.

For those reasons Canada is attempting to stop that useless war which will have no victors. In that context, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) went to Brussels and Washington to express the Canadian viewpoint to the opposing parties.

The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Charles Mayer, met representatives of the five major grain exporting nations. The first meeting was held in Whistler, British Columbia, in June 1986, at Mr. Mayer's request. There was also a second conference in San Diego, California. At the end of that meeting, Mr. Mayer stated he was very confident discussions between the five major grain exporting nations would impact favourably on other multilateral negotiations concerning agricultural trade.

One thing is sure, however: the Treasuries of the United States and the EEC are not inexhaustible. I hope those countries will soon realize the uselessness of a policy of high support prices and huge export subsidies.

I hope that these countries will soon realize the uselessness of a high support price policy and massive export subsidies. Although the price of grain has come down, Canada has kept its place on world markets. That is the important point, because the efficiency of Canadian grain growers compares favourably with that of any other producer, anywhere in the world.

We also have conditions which make us more competitive. I could mention our soils, our weather conditions and also the quality of our grain and the competence of our farmers. The best way to obtain and keep clients is to offer them a product of superior quality, to build a reputation of reliability and to charge a competitive price.

Mr. Speaker, we are trying to increase our export potential by using an aggressive marketing approach. We can improve our competitive position through research, progress and technological transfer, soil conservation and other initiatives which will, over a period of time, reduce our production costs. We will soon realize that this is more efficient than giving subsidy upon subsidy, but, Mr. Speaker, it also requires more imagination.

While waiting for this trade war to end, it is essential that we keep our markets. Then we will be able to continue offering what made our reputation: superior quality products and competitive prices.

Mr. Speaker, I would be especially pleased to hear our experts in the Liberal Party talk about agriculture, defend the interests of Canadian farmers and try and suggest to farmers means to alleviate the problems they are presently experiencing. Our Party, Mr. Speaker, has over the months suggested a number of opportunities to our farmers. This is only a beginning, we will continue along that line.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I find it fortunate to have the opportunity to speak on this Private Members' Bill this evening. I appreciate the intent of the Bill and I must say its objectives are in line with the kinds of things which our Government has been undertaking over the last number of months in order to improve the situation in Canada, in western Canada in particular, in the agricultural sector.

There is consensus across the country that farmers deserve and should receive a fair and equitable return for their investment and for their toil in producing commodities. However, I do not think there is any one Bill that would assure adequate returns to all farmers at any one time. There is no single program that will achieve this goal. I do not believe that Bill C-221 respecting parity prices for farm products will meet the objectives that we are all trying to achieve on behalf of Canadian farmers.

The parity prices concept is not a new one. It was tried in the United States over 45 years ago and eventually discontinued due to major shortcomings; the program was just not working for agricultural interests in the United States. Perhaps we should review some of the reasons that the parity prices program undertaken in the United States did not work.

The Americans set up an Agricultural Adjustment Act, the purpose of which was to establish farm prices at a level that would maintain farmers' purchasing power, with respect to articles they buy, equivalent to that of the base period. In order for purchasing power to be maintained over time, relative prices and incomes in the base period must be appropriate. In the United States, it became apparent that there were substantial income differences among farmers, no matter what base period was used for the program.

The intent of the Parity Pricing Act in the U.S. was similar to that of Bill C-221 with respect to adjusting prices of farm commodities to reflect changes in the prices of articles that farmers buy. Moreover, in order to stabilize supplies and prices, parity prices were incorporated into the loan rate formula. Farmers sold what they could and the rest was purchased and stored by the Government. As technology advanced, production increased faster than demand. This increased the need for price support and over-production problems became unmanageable. Eventually, the Investment Parity Price Support Program became so expensive that it was disbanded.

It is interesting to note that although costs associated with the parity formula grew significantly, farmers were often not at the receiving end. Much of the money went to transportation, storage agencies and the construction industry. The U.S. experience illustrated that parity prices were not effective in providing price support to farmers. It cost billions of dollars but only a small portion of that went to agricultural producers.

Bill C-221 is aimed at helping Canadian grain and oil seed producers who are experiencing a very difficult time. As I indicated earlier, I think that is a proper objective. The producers in the grain sector are in a cost-price squeeze where market prices are falling and input costs are rising.

As an example, it is no secret that wheat prices have fallen about 30 per cent in the last year alone. This is due largely to an international trade war, particularly between the United States and the European Economic Community. However, input prices have continued to climb at a fairly substantial rate. Grain farmers on the Prairies are expected to experience a net decline in farm income this year, although this decline is being offset to a large degree by payments under government programs which our Party has initiated over the last number of months.

The solution to the farm income problem would not be found in Bill C-221. The U.S. experience already indicates that eventually it would be detrimental to the agricultural industry. The idea of parity pricing does not take into account new technology, efficiency of production, market signals and the need for international product marketability. It ignores the dynamic and often unpredictable nature of the agricultural industry due to diverse forces and conflicting interests regionally, nationally and internationally.

Over the past years, the farm sector in Canada has been effectively served by programs that increase the efficiency and competitiveness of farmers in the market-place. A legislated solution such as this Bill will not be responsive to constantly changing circumstances and would therefore result in high costs with declining effectiveness.

One could argue that the national supply management agencies which are in place for dairy and poultry products serve that industry well and that the same arrangement could apply to grains and oil seeds. However, these agencies have been established at the direct request of the producers themselves who continue to recognize the fluctuating nature of the markets. They have built-in flexibility to protect both producers and consumers. Bill C-221, however would not allow the same conditions for the grain and oil seed producers.

To be efficient and competitive, the market forces of supply and demand must continue to prevail. That has always been the fundamental philosophy behind agricultural policy in Canada, a philosophy shared by all provinces as signatories to the recently developed national agriculture strategy.

The Government has been working with provincial Governments and the farm industry to build a network of programs to strengthen the productivity, efficiency and competitiveness of the agricultural industry while providing farm income protection. Special initiatives have been introduced to help producers who are experiencing difficulties. In the long run, we believe that this approach will provide the best protection against the cost-price squeeze experienced by the Canadian agricultural sector.

The support programs provided for Canadian grain and oil seed farmers include the Special Canadian Grains Program which will provide $1 billion this year to assist grain and oil seed farmers. Payments are being made under the Agricultural Stabilization Act to farmers affected by lower prices. Payments of close to $55.8 million will be made for corn, soybean and barley producers for their 1985-86 crops. The Western Grain Stabilization Act has been amended to allow interim payments and an interim payment of $705 million was made in 1986-87 for the last crop year. As well, a tripartite stabilization program for the red meat sector has been established with six provinces participating. The farm fuel tax rebate program exempts farmers from federal sales and excise taxes on farm fuels. A five-year, $80-million interest rate relief program has been designed and implemented to lower interest costs for more than 5,000 Farm Credit Corporation borrowers.

I could go on to indicate other ways in which the Government of Canada is tackling this problem. In short, and in conclusion, it is my view that Bill C-221 would not help but would perhaps aggravate the situation. I am afraid that, while it is well intended, it would be difficult to support at this time.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague from the NDP for putting this legislation before the House. We, in the Liberal Party, agree that it is useless to go on talking about that matter to pass the time. I would be prepared, if Conservative Members want to agree to this Bill, to stop talking right now and pass it. Otherwise, I refuse to take part in that parliamentary hypocrisy that Conservative Members are trying to get us into because people who are listening to us know the procedure. This is the Private Members' hour, during which Members of Parliament introduce a Bill that seems a good one but instead of voting for it . . . I am looking at the Member from the Quebec region who spoke earlier for a very short time. They are talking out this Bill with their empty statements. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to sit right now and ask that we vote to pass this legislation. I think it is good for our farmers. It is useless to go on talking about it. If we all agree that this is a good measure, let us vote for it right away.

Mr. Gérin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) makes me laugh. I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker, and you will agree with me that he does not need to tell everybody that he talks for the sake of talking. For the past two years and a half, I think that all Canadians have realized that whenever he rises in the House, the Hon.

Member for Montreal—Ste-Marie really speaks for the sake of speaking. I have listened to him speak for hours in the House of Commons without taking one single note on his speech. I did not need take any because as usual, he said nothing worthwhile.

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) is not dealing with the Bill concerned. Now, I would like to tell this honourable Assembly that there had been an agreement with the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on the order of speeches, and there was a consensus with the New Democratic Party, with the Hon. Member for Champlain and with the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker. I therefore believe that when we have an agreement, a consensus in this honourable House, since—

Mr. Gérin: It is not a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Yes it is, for there was a consensus, Mr. Speaker, the three Parties had reached an agreement, and we have been told at the last minute that this consensus no longer exists. The Hon. Member for the NDP who moved that motion was not in the House. I am therefore of the opinion that it would have been logical to wait for the Hon. NDP Member who moved the motion. I wish to say that I am not very happy with the procedure that was followed: A consensus of the three Parties was reached, and at the last minute, the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) broke that consensus. You had actually been made aware of it, Mr. Speaker, and he had said he agreed with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on the same point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is being most clever in his "clumsiness". I had started to speak, and he interrupted me on a point of order which was not a point of order. He interrupted me as I was in fact going to explain the position of the Government. I simply wanted to say, before giving the floor to my hon. colleague from the NDP who wants to make a presumably important speech, that he has the right to be heard before we take the division. I hope that will be possible before six o'clock, but before that, I wish to say again, Mr. Speaker, that we could indeed do without all those points of order by Liberal Members, whether it is the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) or the other Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), who is well known for talking for the sake of talking while the other one says nothing worthwhile.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, but the Parliamentary Secretary who is in the House and with whom we often have to deal will tell you that indeed, when the three Parties have reached a consensus, they respect the agreement. I have been a Member for over eight years, the consensus has always been respected, and I regret to say that when the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) talks that way, the Hon. Member for Champlain—

Mr. Gérin: Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead—

Mr. Rossi: Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead, it does not matter where you come from, you are talking through your hat, and the attitude of the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) in whom we had full confidence is the exact opposite of that of the Parliamentary Secretary who never fails to act like a gentleman when we have agreements in this House. And when there is a consensus in this Hon. House a Member does not do what has just been done and play games . . . There is a way to behave in this House and when there is a consensus we respect it.

Mr. Malépart: Point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is indulging in a bit of demagogy. First, under the agreement made with the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—that is who it is—my colleague from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead was to seek the floor. That is precisely what he did, under the agreement—

Mr. Rossi: This is false, these are lies—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Second, the Hon. Member for Bourassa keeps on mumbling, but I would remind him that he is the one who came to sit with the NDP Member who is sponsoring the motion and said: Could my colleague from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead speak first? We said: Sure, no problem, and the Member for Bourassa went to see you to tell you that my colleague should have the floor. So we know all about Liberal agreements, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rossi: You said that; you are a liar—

Mr. Malépart: A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed. The Chair is always ready to recognize Members.

• (1740)

I think it would be in everyone's interest if we got back to the debate. Whoever wants to speak can get up and we will identify them.

I believe the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) had the floor . . . The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), on a point of order—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I just want to say that I was present when an agreement was made, and if the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) doesn't mind misleading the House, I was there when he spoke, his reputation . . .

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest we forget the agreements or near agreements. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to include in my speech the comment that the Chair should have the authority to cut off Members who talk for the sake of talking, as the two Liberal Members were doing—

Mr. Rossi: Sit down—

Mr. Gérin: —because the agreement in the House was to let my hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party say what he had to say about this speech, and he will have a chance well before our time is up, and we will be able to get on with this Bill.

Mr. Rossi: You wanted to go home.

Mr. Gérin: However, I want to condemn the lack of fair play shown by the Hon. Members for Bourassa and Montreal—Sainte-Marie, who were trying to waste the time of this House and talk the Bill out, because they know we have to leave at 6 p.m.

And so to give the Hon. Member of the NDP a chance to make his speech, I ask you—

Mr. Malépart: You are capable of lying.

Mr. Gérin: —and I ask my hon. colleagues to keep quiet and refrain from any points of order until 6 p.m. so we can put this question to a vote.

Mr. Rossi: Tell the House you want to leave— You are scared.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has already spoken in this debate. He has a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: I just have a very simple concern. Rather than points of order I wonder if we could not agree that—our friend from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead can speak to the substance of the Bill. This is very important. And we have an agreement here in the House that four Conservative Members will be taking part in the debate and two NDP Members, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and my friend from Regina West. With the consent of the House, my hon. friend can speak to the substance of the Bill.

An Hon. Member: Five minutes.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to use up the balance of the time. Since you had a left ear that was not so good this afternoon I hope your left eye cannot see the clock over on this side.

Mr. Nystrom: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for Ontario or Quebec or Atlantic Canada, but if there was ever an issue dear to the hearts of farmers, some of whom supported the Conservatives, some of whom supported the Liberals, some of whom supported the CCF and the NDP, and some of whom supported the Social Credit Party, it is a system of parity prices. After listening to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) I can say he is lucky that the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker was not sitting in this Chamber because he would have walked across to the hon. gentleman from Edmonton West and punched him right in the nose. I remember vividly in Saskatchewan all during the late 1940s, the 1950s and early 1960s Mr. Diefenbaker saying, "The farmers, they want parity, not charity."

Mr. Reid: Well done!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I was appalled when listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. He displayed an ignorance of what this Bill is all about and what the issue is that passes all understanding. The legislation has nothing to do with international trade. It has only to do with a parity price for agricultural products for human consumption in Canada. Nothing else. That would involve, for example, up to 20 per cent of our grain production used for human consumption. It has no effect on feed grain prices for hog producers or cattle producers or poultry producers. It is grain and grain products for human consumption.

A parity price now would mean an increase of five cents in the price of a loaf of bread. When you walk into a store and pay anywhere from a dollar to two dollars a loaf, five cents for farmers who are now getting less than the cost of production and cannot stay in business is surely not unreasonable. For those who grow some of the best malting barley in the world it might mean two and a half cents on a bottle of beer. A parity price for the grain farmer might amount to one-tenth of one cent on the price of a box of prepared breakfast cereal.

I do not understand the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, or for that matter the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. They want free market forces. Leave us alone, they say. Yet every time the Americans shut the border down on them or when the cattle industry is in real trouble and feedlots all over western Canada are going broke, who are the first ones down in Ottawa with their hands out? Those same guys who want free market forces. They want the free and open market when the prices are good but when prices are bad they come to Ottawa. That is why I do not take much of what the Canadian Cattlemen's Association says with anything more than grain of salt, and never have. These are the fellows who operate their big ranches with what I call the Texas cowboy syndrome, the free, independent spirit, waltzing around in their saddles. However, more livestock is produced by small farmers who are not members of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association than by the entire Canadian Cattlemen's Association. One questions who the devil they speak for besides the packing industry and their own selfish little kingdom.

It is okay for businessmen selling a product to set their price based on their cost of production, their cost of capital, and a return on investment on which they can live, and sometimes they even include their own wage. Why can a farmer not do that? The farm sector is still the only sector in our economy which has to be a price taker rather than a price maker. A working person in a union can bargain and negotiate his pay and ends up being a pay taker and a pay maker. The business community, doctors, lawyers, dentists, architects and chartered accountants can all set a price which covers their costs, a return on their capital investment, and a living. Why is that not possible for farmers?

That double standard in our economy has decimated the agriculture industry. Name me another sector which is more efficient and has diversified more than our agricultural producers. I defy anyone to do so. Their efficiency has been their downfall. They have diversified themselves into bankruptcy. They are entitled to a parity price on agricultural products produced in Canada for human consumption. If that means increased food costs for poor people they can be compensated directly through a tax credit, food stamps, or a variety of other programs. Why should the Canadian agricultural producer bear the cost of a cheap food policy and go broke?

The Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have supported the principle of parity prices in this limited manner for quite a few years. The House passed this legislation in 1984 and 1985. I urge my good friends across the way to talk to their colleague, the Member for Edmonton West, about parity prices. I urge the House to continue the debate on this matter which would bring about fair play for our agricultural producers in this very limited manner. At least 20 per cent of their production in a general average across Canada would get a fair price.

Surely if my good friends opposite want to adhere to the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about fairness, nothing could be more fair than this, albeit in a limited manner. We can do no less in this Parliament. I urge this House to do so.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker? I have had a hard day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has already taken part in the debate.

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is always right. He has the floor on debate.

Mr. Malépart: I am happy to hear you say I am always right, Mr. Speaker. I hope my Conservative colleagues will remember that famous statement of yours.

Mr. Gérin: Just wasting time.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it is important to realize, and that proves the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin)—as the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) would say: the balance—is not a good lawyer. He does not even know the provisions of the Standing Orders, what Bill we are debating now. This Bill is not to be debated during just one hour of Private Members' Business but may receive five hours of consideration. The debate must go on, Mr. Speaker.

Besides, the attitude of the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead and that of the Hon. Member for Champlain leave no doubt as to why the Conservative government is badly represented and the people—

The Hon. Member for Champlain tried to outsmart and manipulate the House of Commons through Standing Orders he does not even know.

Let us go back to the matter under consideration, agriculture, which is far more important than the procedural debate the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead and the Hon. Member for Champlain wanted to start.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, talking about manipulation, we have an expert at this on the other side, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker; when we made the arrangement, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), my colleague from the New Democratic Party, and my colleague for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead were there. The four of us made an agreement and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was not even there, and he does not even know what he is talking about. It is always the same thing in this kind of debate. You should call him to order, Mr. Speaker, and instruct him to talk about the matter before us, namely agriculture, instead of letting him talk about things in which he was not involved.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the debate but it is no use; the population—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): You have understood—

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, to answer this point of order—

Before long the population will decide the Hon. Member's fate; just look at what happens in the polls—

Mr. Speaker, the gist of the matter is to know who is concerned and what sector of our population is affected, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this is the problem of farmers in Canada, and we know how important it is, even for people from an urban area—

An Hon. Member: From downtown Montreal—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin) on a point of order.

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, about the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I wish to point out that he has already taken part in this debate and has absolutely no right to speak again. The only thing he wants is for the debate to last till six o'clock, which will happen in less than a minute, to prevent the motion from coming to a vote, and he is therefore wasting the time of the House.

I ask the Hon. Member to remain seated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on debate.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, as we conclude, could you explain to the Hon. Member, who is naive and stupid, that the Bill will not be talked out today and will remain on the Order Paper. I shall close on this note, Mr. Speaker, as it is now six o'clock and time for the House to adjourn.

• (1800)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—PRODUCTION OF ETHANOL FROM GRAIN. (B) POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE MARKET FOR GRAIN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise to Members of the House that I am rising today to express my dissatisfaction with the reply given to me on May 12 by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), in reply to a serious question that I thought was well put, regarding alternative markets for farm production. It is a subject very much linked to the Private Members' debate we just heard. The Minister could only reply that enzymes were being improved. He also made a rather ludicrous suggestion that the Province of Manitoba, the leader in fuel alcohol use and development in Canada, should be doing more. The Hon. Minister should know that his own province is doing more than any other.

The answer given by the Minister was out of touch with the present political and market realities. He ignored the desperate need for additional markets and the fact that emergency aid is something that can only use part of Canada's grain surplus and should not be seen as a marketing tool. He was so out of touch with reality as almost to recall the words of the former Prime Minister: "Why should I sell your wheat?" In the meantime, politicians south of the border are considering a five-fold expansion of an existing two-billion-litre-a-year fuel ethanol industry, with the support of the Vice-President, who is a candidate for the presidency.

The Government does not seem to understand what the debate is about. Lead removal has taken lead from gasoline in the United States, Europe, and Canada, and has created a market for octane enhancement that is one-tenth of the size of the total gasoline market. There is a significant difference for exporting nations like Canada. The difference is so important that international acceptance of fuel ethanol should be a major element of our grain marketing policy. Yet, there seems to be nothing more than a general understanding of the scope and impact of this industry.

In February, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board held a press conference before going to San Diego for a meeting of the world's five largest grain exporters. He told journalists at that time: "We spend a tremendous amount of money in all our agricultural programs, almost exclusively in economic terms on the supply side and we need to be looking more on the demand side". Indeed, the Minister is absolutely right. However, he is failing to follow up those words with any form of concrete commitment.

Three weeks after the Minister made that statement, Vice-President Bush said:

> I propose we consider a policy that will immediately increase demand. The answer is ethanol, the fuel distilled from corn and other crops . . . I share the goal of the National Corn Growers, that by 1990 we can produce 2.5 billion gallons of ethanol from 1 billion bushels of corn. It will help our farmers and manufacturers, while contributing to cleaner air and energy independence.

That 2.5 billion American gallons represents some 7.5 billion litres of ethanol from 1 billion bushels of corn. Those possibilities are perhaps even greater in Canada than in the United States.

I have copies of a letter and petition by 40 U.S. senators calling for the Environmental Protection Agency to mandate fuel alcohol for air quality reasons, and two Bills introduced in the House of Representatives calling for the same treatment. Has our federal Government considered any such similar policy? We have not heard of one yet.

Canada has an opportunity to scratch its own back, and to take a lead not only in research and development, but eventually in marketing, before others do so.

The nations of the European Economic Community are now facing the same decision between biochemical and petrochemical octane enhancers, but they do not seem to have grasped the concept of eliminating the necessary subsidies for ethanol by blending with methanol.

The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board should know better than any other Minister in the world, because right in his own riding a Canadian company, Mohawk Oil, has been distilling the necessary ethanol from grain and has been marketing an EM blend for several years, using fuel ethanol that comes from his own riding.

U.S. politicians are taking the lead and Canada is letting an important technological and, above all, important market opportunity for farmers slip away. Both our Agriculture Ministers seem to have been whipped into line by the writers of the western energy accord since there is no mention of fuel alcohol in that document. It would appear that while the Minister may be doing his best, the philosophy, practice and policies of the multinational oil industry have infiltrated the Progressive Conservative Government to the point where it determines this country's policy.

Before my time expires I should mention that the petrochemical octane enhancer, MTBE, can be a dangerous pollutant, whereas the ethanol-methanol co-solvent blends are no more dangerous as pollutants than the gasoline in which they are blended. Fuel ethanol's adoption in North America will pull Europe in with it as a market.

Canadian farmers have been asking the Government for a political commitment. The economic summit coming up in Venice and the imminent release of the western economic diversification strategy are two excellent opportunities. Indeed, there has even been a resolution from the town council of Minnedosa, a municipality some 60 kilometres from the Minister's own residence in Carberry, asking for expansion of ethanol-methanol blends. That is the home, after all, of Canada's first and, sadly, its only, fuel ethanol distillery, and its councillors have passed this motion without any response from the Minister as yet.

What has the Minister done? What will he do? If one listens to his comments of May 12 in the House, he is probably waiting for the price of grain to go up so that he can claim that fuel ethanol is going to be too expensive.

In the short run, of course, Canada's wheat farmers need subsidies. But in the long run what they need is an alternative market for their product. That is what ethanol-methanol blending for octane enhancement in gasoline would provide.

I should also add that not only are the wheat farmers in trouble for lack of markets but that Ontario corn growers—

No doubt that Quebec corn growers are experiencing similar conditions.

[English]

They are looking for alternative markets for their products because they will be in the same situation as western farmers in a couple of years' time if this Government cannot do something to provide them with another way to sell their produce at an economic return.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all, my colleague mentioned earlier the so-called infiltration of multinationals within our Party. I should like to remind him that his beloved leader does not mind at all having multinationals in his constituency of Oshawa and indeed, he is proud to have them there. He even wants to protect them during the free trade negotiations. Moreover, my colleague has been referring to what the Americans are doing, but he never misses an opportunity to discredit the Americans and to say that we should have nothing to do with them, that they are not quite decent. He should listen, Mr. Speaker, because when he talks about Quebec corn producers, he shows that he does not know much about agriculture and that he would be well advised to find out what is going on. For his information and that of his colleagues, Quebec corn producers produce much more for their own needs than for export. The situation is quite different from that described by my hon. friend, because they need that production.

Nevertheless, I am pleased, and so is the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, at the interest the Hon. Member is showing for the whole issue of replacement fuel. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that, in the seventies, even in the United States there were line-ups at the filling stations.

The Hon. Member asks a double question, one about the possibility of producing ethanol from grain, and the other about the possibility of this production giving Canadian grain producers a major alternative market for their grains.

First of all, the Government fully supports the efforts aimed at saving oil and developing other types of energy. That must be clear from the start. Through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Department of Agriculture, the Government continues to finance research in this area.

Moreover, taking into account the progressive reduction of lead concentration in gas by 1992, there exists a possibility of using ethanol for increasing the octane rating.

It has been estimated that such use would create a market for some 2.5 million tonnes of grain per year, which is the amount required to produce enough 3 per cent methanol to 5 per cent ethanol additive for all the gasoline sold in Canada today.

This is only a small fraction of total Canadian production, which now reaches close to 60 million tonnes, but such a market would help bring down surplus stocks of lower quality grain.

It is estimated that the effect of this market on prices would be marginal. I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that according to a working paper on fuel alcohol published earlier this year by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, ethanol-methanol blending could turn out to be an economical and competitive method of octane enhancement. It goes without saying that this would depend on the price relationships between grain and oil, which fluctuate widely.

The Government of Canada is well aware of these developments and since the release last year of the report on alcohol-based additives by the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, an interdepartmental committee has been closely monitoring new developments in the field of fuel alcohol.

To come back to the grain market issue, the Government is open to all possible solutions when it comes to maintaining and expanding markets for Canadian grain at home as well as abroad.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and for his sincere interest in this issue and I would ask him to provide any additional information he might have concerning the use of ethanol as a gasoline additive. His assistance in developing this type of new market for Canadian grains will undoubtedly be well received.

And in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, for his personal information, I would advise him to be more present at the Standing Committee on Agriculture in order to see in which parts of the country there might be surpluses, and in which parts there might not be, which would put him in a much better position to inform the Canadian people on what is produced in this and that region, thereby giving Canadian agriculture its true importance.

SOCIAL SECURITY—TAX REFORM—THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION—INCOME TAX—THE ELDERLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I come back tonight to a question I put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) concerning tax reform, in view especially of the statements that were made concerning tax exemptions for the elderly. We know that for the elderly there is the so-called Old Age Security pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the spouse's allowance, the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan, but in addition there is the so-called age exemption for people 65 and over. This year, those people are entitled to a $2,610 exemption and a $1,000 pension income deduction.

In the matter of tax reform, the Minister spoke of changing the tax exemption into a tax credit. This is perfect, it is exactly what we Liberals were proposing during the famous January 1985 consultation on the blue paper concerning family allowance and social security pensions. Unfortunately, at that point the Government was promising a lot of things, but we remember how much they misled the people, even committee members, even Conservative Members who believed the Prime Minister concerning the indexing of Old Age Security pensions and family allowance.

Mr. Speaker, I wish that this time, the Parliamentary Secretary—and the reason I am being so specific is that there is agreement, and in fact the committee called for a change from tax exemptions to tax credits. Regarding my question, which the Minister failed to answer, I want to say that I would like to get an answer from the Parliamentary Secretary. If we consider that, in 1983, the cost to the Government or the total amount redistributed to senior citizens through tax exemptions was $650 million . . . This $650 million is a form of assistance, a form of income support for people on middle and high incomes, since tax exemptions do not benefit people on low incomes. What I wanted to hear from the Minister and the assurance I was seeking, was that the transformation of tax exemptions into tax credits would reduce the amount allocated to very wealthy older people and transfer the savings to low and medium income senior citizens. The blue paper shows that a single individual with an income of $4,000, received tax exemptions amounting to $410. However, another individual with a pension and interest income of $50,000, which means quite a bit of money in the bank, received $1,569 in tax exemptions. That is to say the rich got almost four times as much as the poor.

I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell us that, when the Government corrects this unfairness in tax exemptions by replacing them with tax credits, the rich . . . Couples with an annual income of $70,000 received $3,000, while couples with a annual income of $6,000 received only $726. That means we will take money away from the rich. My question is this: Are we going to transfer the money to middle income people, are we going to give more to the poor, increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement? Or is the Government going to do what it did for Family Allowances and family tax exemptions? It is on that point that it misled the public and the Committee. It took away money by partially deindexing Family Allowances.

It did away with the tax exemption for dependent children. It gave back half the money as a tax credit but the rest went to the rich depositors of the banks which went under, it reduced the deficit, it spent $55 million to change the colour of military uniforms, things like that, it wasted the money that did not help anybody.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will respond. I would also ask him whether he can guarantee today that an amount equivalent to the $650 million will still be available to help provide some income for elderly people. Second, whether the Government policy in future will be to replace all existing tax exemptions such as those on investment income and registered retirement savings by tax credits which, in my opinion, would be much fairer all around.

• (1815)

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Let me begin, Mr. Speaker, by laying to rest the false premise which underlies the Hon. Member's question. The Government does not mislead senior citizens. Rather, it listens attentively to their concerns and acts accordingly. For this reason, we have allowed the splitting of CPP pensions so that they can be paid to both spouses.

In addition, we have raised the registered pension plan and registered retirement pension plan limits to make saving for retirement more equitable and more attractive. As well, we extended eligibility for spouses' allowance to widows and widowers.

This same concern for the well-being of older Canadians has motivated our work on tax reform. While it would clearly be inappropriate for me to lay out in detail the elements of tax reform which will affect elderly Canadians, tax reform has been guided by certain principles. These principles have been articulated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on several occasions.

Most notably, in his budget speech last February he noted that tax reform would be aimed at lower personal income taxes and significantly fewer tax brackets. He also noted that he was considering the conversion of personal exemptions to credits. Such a conversion would provide more assistance to lower income taxpayers, many of whom are elderly.

This would be fully consistent with the Government's intention to reform the system of social transfers and related tax provisions. The review of these provisions is aimed at three goals: to maintain universal access to social programs, to improve opportunities for self-reliance, and to provide more assistance to those in need and less to higher income Canadians.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government remains fully committed to these goals. They have been kept fully in mind as the tax reform package has been developed. None of them is consistent with the accusation the Hon. Member makes that a reduction in the age exemption is being considered.

Rather than rushing to judgment on the basis of what can only be rumour and hearsay, I respectfully suggest that the Hon. Member wait patiently, difficult though it might be, for the Minister's announcement on June 18. I can assure the Hon. Member that, given his pessimistic views, he will be pleasantly surprised.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—PUBLIC FAITH AND CONFIDENCE—REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I have ever asked you if you are a reader of The Toronto Sun. I can see that you are. Is there anything like The Toronto Sun in Montreal, Mr. Speaker? No, I thought not. As you are indicating, Mr. Speaker, there is really nothing like The Toronto Sun anywhere. I understand that.

As a reader of The Toronto Sun, Mr. Speaker, you will know—and I venture to say that every reader of The Toronto Sun will know it—that very few days go by when there is not a report in that newspaper about someone who is out on parole committing some sort of violent crime.

That is a frightening fact. Many people say that The Toronto Sun frightens people needlessly and unnecessarily. They say there is no reason for the paper to report that sort of thing because these things are not happening in actual fact as frequently or as often as the paper reports them. You know just as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that if these things were not happening there would not be anything for newspapers like The Toronto Sun to report. Things like violent crimes being committed while people are on parole are happening at quite a regular rate. That is frightening for the public, it is frightening for you, Mr. Speaker—I know that—and it is frightening for me.

One story I saw recently frightened me even more than many of these stories about violent crime being committed by people on parole. It was a story allegedly attributable to Mr. Ole Ingstrug. You know who Mr. Ole Ingstrug is, Mr. Speaker. He is a former senior official in the Danish correction service who is now the chairman of our National Parole Board. Mr. Ingstrug was quoted in the press as saying that he was very enthusiastic about the list of criteria which the National Parole Board was preparing to be used in granting parole. He went on to say that "We have not in the past had any kind of relatively clear criteria for granting parole in this country". That is a shocking statement.

I can see by your face, Mr. Speaker, that you are just as shocked as I am when the chairman of the National Parole Board of Canada tells us that the Board does not have any clear idea why it is letting people out on parole. It is no wonder you and I and the public have our confidence shaken in the parole system. It is no wonder at the same time that we have our confidence shaken in the criminal justice system itself. It goes a long way in explaining why recently our own Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said that Canadians in general have lost confidence in the criminal justice system and why the Attorney General of Ontario shortly after the Minister of Justice made that statement also said that Canadians have lost confidence in the criminal justice system.

What is going to give Canadians back that confidence? One of those things will be a dramatic change in our parole system. For heavens sake, surely we must have some criteria built into the system as to what the basis of parole is.

We know there are a lot of studies going on. For instance, Mr. Ingstrug said that the National Parole Board itself is studying the whole idea of what criteria should be used in granting parole. We know there is a study by the correctional law review of the parole system. We know that the sentencing commission has delivered a report which had a lot to say about parole aspects. We know that a few months ago the Law Reform Commission of Canada had something to say about parole. We know there is a task force in the Solicitor General's Department right now that is looking at recommendations of a coroner's jury dealing with parole in one particular instance and the shocking circumstances surrounding that.

We know that as all of these studies are progressing, a lot of questions are being asked. I have looked at some of those questions and they are good ones. For instance, what is the purpose of parole? Should we have parole at all? Should not a sentence of six years in prison mean a sentence of six years in prison? Is parole interfering with the court's sentencing? Does a judge take parole into account when he is sentencing? What minimum time should be served before parole is granted? What types of offences should be subject to parole? What types of offenders should be granted parole? Are the offenders receiving the maximum benefits from their prison sentence? Will parole help to rehabilitate people? Have prisoners been properly prepared for parole? Is there a risk to society in granting parole and how do you determine that risk? Is the only reason for parole to grant people time off for good behaviour? Is it because of overcrowding in the prisons? Is it because we would rather have problems created on the outside of prisons than on the inside?

There are all sorts of questions that are being asked, and they are good questions. I too have some questions for the Parliamentary Secretary.

Will the studies come up with similar conclusions and similar answers? Will those answers be the kind of answers that make the public feel confident and comfortable with the parole system? How long will it take to institute some of these changes to the parole system? Will the Government in fact have the intestinal fortitude to put these changes into effect?

There are many questions that I have to ask and many questions the public has to ask about the parole system. I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is here tonight. He had better have the answers for us.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have all heard it said that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. That holds true for the entire criminal justice system, including corrections and parole.

It is true that the system can always be improved. It is also true that appropriate major adjustments are a continuing program in a system such as ours that is in full evolution. We are taking steps to improve the system, beginning with providing the public more accurate information.

Canadians should be able to see clearly how things are done in Canadian criminal justice. If they saw this, they would be proud of the direction of our justice system. More important, the quality of their lives would be improved because their fear of crime would be diminished considerably.

This brings me to a remark made by the Chairman of the National Parole Board who said that there are no clear-cut criteria at present for the granting of parole. There are criteria, but how clear-cut they are is another question. In fact, the Chairman of the National Parole Board has said, and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) agrees with him, that those criteria are too broad and too general. They are too general to allow the public to see how they are applied in each case and too broad to be applied consistently, uniformly and effectively.

To remedy the situation and in the interests of making the parole process more transparent so that the public can clearly and readily see how the board arrives at its decisions, the chairman is having more refined and elaborate criteria developed against which all releases will be measured. These will be in place before the end of the year. The Solicitor General certainly welcomes this initiative. It speaks well of the orientation being given to the National Parole Board and its very acute sense of accountability to the public.

These criteria or decision-making policies will also give guidance to the board members considering release for the various categories of offenders, offenders who are so very different from one another and whose crimes are necessarily, for purposes of conditional release, measured in terms of mitigation and aggravating circumstances.

Many decisions in the correctional field cause reactions in the mass media and often among practitioners in other parts of the criminal justice system. This means that decisions must not only be easy to explain but also that the process by which decisions are taken must be easy to explain and fair to the individual and to society. It also means that the correctional system must operate in an efficient way. To that end, it is often necessary to be able to demonstrate that decisions have been taken in an accordance with legal provisions, administrative regulations or general guidelines.

Obviously public agencies, and particularly the criminal justice system, must pay much more attention to the question of communication with the public to engender public understanding of its policies and its way of operating, including the degree to which power has been delegated and the extent to which discretionary power is exercised at various levels. That is what is being done, and I will have much more to tell the House in the coming months as the parole system becomes more efficient, more transparent and indeed one in which the people of Canada may take pride.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—DISTINCT SOCIETY CLAUSE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, following the Meech Lake Accord one begins to wonder whether the distinct society clause could mean that a Canadian moving to Hull, for instance, might become more distinct than one moving to Ottawa. He or she would enjoy lower electricity rates, pay higher taxes, and refer to the Premier as Prime Minister.

Here in the House of Commons some interesting reflections emerge. For instance, would the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) be more distinguished than the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata)? Or would the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) be more distinguished than the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)?

Not to overlook the other place, would we have to conclude that a Senator from Montreal, by virtue of being more distinguished, becomes more honourable than a Senator from Saskatoon?

A new nobility might be created in the country. Before retreating into the greyness of my indistinctiveness, this being World Environment Day, may every Canadian make every day Environment Day.

HISTORIC EVENTS

WORLD WAR II—D-DAY ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will mark the forty-third anniversary of D-Day, June 6, 1944, when the Third Canadian Infantry Division and the Second Canadian Armoured Brigade went ashore on Juno Beach to participate in the invasion which would achieve the liberation of western Europe from Nazi tyranny.

Relative to the populations of Canada, Britain, and the United States, these forces were proportionately the largest national component in that invasion force. It marks one of the high points of Canadian military tradition.

This is not only an occasion for nostalgia. It is a day for advance, for there can be no better way to recognize this anniversary than today, the sitting day of the House closest to the anniversary of D-Day, being the occasion when the White Paper on national defence will be announced, expressing the resolve of the Government and of the country to re-establishing our defence capability after years of neglect under the previous Government.

This is not a military country. We all recognize that to be a sovereign nation we must be capable of defending ourselves.

This week there have been two events of great national significance. The Meech Lake Accord means that this is a more united Canada; the White Paper today means that we will be a more independent Canada.

REFUGEES

CRITICISM OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, thousands of Canadians have petitioned the Government to bring in a fair refugee law. According to The Star poll of June 3, 75 per cent want legitimate political refugees accepted in Canada. Yet the Government has brought in a law which does the very opposite in spite of the Ministers' claims.

Bill C-55, in Clauses 48.1(1)(b) and 48.1(4), says that a real refugee would not be eligible to have his claim heard if he has come from a third country that Canada considers safe, or if he is fleeing a country that Canada considers would not make him a refugee.

All experienced lawyers in private practice have condemned Bill C-55 through the Canadian Bar Association.

I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to withdraw this flawed Bill and to introduce one that follows the unanimous advice of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

COUNTRY-WIDE EFFORTS TO PROTECT AND ENHANCE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, today nations throughout the world are celebrating World Environment Day. This coincides with our Environment Week, a week when Canadians are encouraged to become involved in the protection and enhancement of the environment.

A variety of events are taking place, ranging from spring clean-ups in Nova Scotia to clearing landslides which have blocked salmon spawning runs in British Columbia. Businesses and individuals are participating and, on behalf of the Government, I extend my appreciation to all those who have helped make Environment Week a success.

Threats to the environment are not just a Canadian problem; they are global. The micro and macro changes to the earth's support systems are perhaps our greatest global challenges which must be addressed. We have the technology and know-how to address environmental problems. Collectively we must maintain our will.

Canada and Canadians have been in the forefront of environmental preservation and improvement. Much remains to be done, and World Environment Day reminds us of that challenge and responsibility.

DISTINCT CHARACTER OF QUEBEC VIS-À-VIS REST OF COUNTRY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, some people are wondering about the meaning of Quebec's distinct character vis-à-vis the rest of the country. Distinct character does not imply that the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is more worthy than the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Quebec's distinct character is a collective character in the sense that the majority speaks French, that a significant minority speaks English, and that cultural communities mirror Quebec's life and ethnicity. The majority in Ontario speaks English, the minority is francophone, and there are cultural communities as well.

So the distinct society which has been formally recognized this week reflects our collective differences. On an individual basis, the residents of Quebec, Newfoundland, Alberta, Winnipeg or wherever are all honourable people.

PESTICIDES

PATENT REGISTRATION CHANGES—INCREASED COMPETITION BETWEEN MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, subsidies to the farming sectors of the EEC and the United States continue to throttle our agricultural economy. While Canada continues to fight against these subsidies abroad, it is also taking action on behalf of Canadian farmers here at home.

The latest of the Government's ongoing efforts to aid our farming community has come in the form of changes to the product specific registration policy governing patents for pesticides. The changes will provide newly registered pesticides with a 10-year patent protection as opposed to unlimited protection under the old policy. When the 10-year protection runs out on a particular pesticide, other firms will be able to produce comparable generic products. The ensuing competition in the pesticide market should drive the price of pesticides down thereby reducing the over-all costs of farm inputs.

I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for his actions in this regard. These needed changes to PSR policy are the direct result of the Government's ongoing commitment to Canadian farmers.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING OF NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the aboriginal community in Canada really knew what it was in for when the Tory Government took office in September, 1984.

The so-called "Buffalo Jump" report took us all by surprise, virtually rewriting the 1969 White Paper calling for funding cuts, means tests, land claim delays and the transfer of programs through the provinces and territories.

The Nielsen prescription is becoming a reality. We have cutbacks in labour assistance for housing programs, continued delays in the reinstatement of aboriginal people under Bill C-31, and two weeks ago the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) announced limits to the entry of young native people into the post-secondary school system, despite the obvious need and proven success of the program.

Last night it was revealed that government mismanagement may result in a freeze on native economic development programs, programs which still only provide the barest impact on unemployment levels, reaching 85 per cent in many communities.

Despite three years of significant underexpenditures, the Native Economic Development Program is being treated on the same basis as any other Department of Regional Industrial Expansion program. The Native Economic Development Program cannot enter into any new contracts for this fiscal year and, despite the $76 million approximately, budgeted it has been told that it cannot look at further applications which are being received at the rate of 25 a month. Although there is a review by June 30, it is evident that the commitments made under this program when originally introduced are being broken.

IMPORTANCE OF PROTECTING HERITAGE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, today we join people of all nations to mark the World Environment Day. This day gives us an opportunity to urge all Canadians to take constructive measures to protect our natural and cultural heritage.

Mr. Speaker, why not take this special opportunity to highlight and emphasize the leading role played by international organizations in the fight against pollution?

If I may I should like to pay a special tribute to the Rouyn-Noranda environment committee which has been working tirelessly to improve the quality of life in Abitibi-Témiscamingue where pollution has become a serious problem.

Canadians throughout the country are taking part in a variety of projects to mark today's event. Fifty-odd Quebec organizations, groups and agencies have scheduled nearly 150 activities to promote the environment.

I am very pleased with these initiatives which stress the importance of protecting our heritage, not only for ourselves but for future generations as well.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this has been an historic week for Canada. The work that was begun by Lester Pearson and followed through by Pierre Elliott Trudeau with the repatriation of the Canadian Constitution has finally been completed with the arrival of Quebec in the Canadian family.

I am extremely proud that as a Liberal it was my Government that began the process and it was my Leader who first launched the request to get Quebec into the Constitution with the January statement in Le Devoir and also with his Liberal convention last November.

We believe as a Liberal Party that the Quebec society should be recognized as distinct. We support the Accord whole-heartedly and the position taken by our Leader. We further believe that any Canadian in the struggle to make a good Constitution will want to ask some hard questions and will want to have a very full, public and open debate.

Certainly as a Liberal I am proud we have launched that debate through Lester Pearson, through Pierre Trudeau, and now John Turner who had the guts to raise this issue first and foremost last year.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that it is always the Liberal Party which is leading the way with respect to the Constitution. We led with Lester B. Pearson and we continued with Pierre Elliott Trudeau. And when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) remained speechless, it was Mr. Turner who launched the debate, it was the Liberal Party which endorsed Mr. Turner's position at our convention last November.

COSTS OF PROTECTING ENVIRONMENT

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, this is Environment Week in Canada but it is not a time for platitudes about the environment. Millions of people in the Third World have already died as a result of natural disasters and diseases related to environmental neglect. We in Canada have been lucky so far but we can see on the horizon the shadows of environmental problems about which we have long known: acid rain, changes in our climate, and the poisoning of our world by toxic chemicals.

The new Environmental Protection Act has the potential to help us, but real progress has real costs. We cannot afford to make environmental protection a white-collar issue of concern only to those who work in secure and non-polluting industries. We will have to pay substantial transition costs for the people in industries that will have to change. This will not be popular, but those who enjoy economic security and now seek environmental security cannot expect blue-collar workers to pay for a clean environment with lost jobs and lost hope.

Oral Questions

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT CHARGE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we learned yesterday that the majority of provinces now feel that the federal Government was wrong to give in to the U.S. on the 15 per cent softwood export tax. However, a little history is in order.

The former B.C. Minister of Forests, Mr. Kempf, has now been revealed as a double-agent, having in fact held private discussions with the U.S. Coalition last fall unknown to the other provinces. B.C. then broke ranks and publicly took the U.S. view that the forest industry is subsidized. In fact, Mr. Kempf stated that the industry was subsidized by $200 million in 1985 and by over $1 billion in 1986.

These Social Credit revelations ruined Canada's case, and the final destruction came from the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) who made the famous one-time-only offer of 10 per cent only to offer 50 per cent more than that a few days later. In anger at having been caught at a sellout, the Minister for International Trade described B.C.'s forests as a silvicultural slum.

The Forest Ministers failed this week in Winnipeg to come up with a common package of provincial and royalty measures to replace the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber bound for the U.S. No wonder, with some areas of B.C. paying barely $1 per cunit royalty while some maritime areas like New Brunswick are paying over $50 per cunit. Yes, the Premiers have awoken with a $600-million B.C. hangover.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NATIVE COURT WORKERS' PROGRAM IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, there is in existence across Canada a federal-provincial program known as the Native Court Workers' Program. Recently the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan decided to withdraw its share in that program.

I should tell the House that it costs each citizen of Saskatchewan about 40 cents per year to be involved in the Native Court Workers' Program. That is less than the price of a cup of coffee.

The results of this program have been that the native incarceration rate in that province over a four-year period has declined by approximately 4 per cent.

This is an essential program and I therefore call upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) first to use his good offices to sway the Government of Saskatchewan from this short-sighted decision to cancel an important program. Failing that, I call upon the Government of Canada to assume full responsibility for the Native Court Workers' Program in the Province of Saskatchewan.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VENICE ECONOMIC SUMMIT—AGRICULTURAL SUBSIDIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to address to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last night during my televised comments on the constitutional agreement, I welcomed Quebec's joining the Canadian family in very positive and constructive terms. I said also that, despite that achievement, the Government must not neglect other urgent issues facing Canadians.

The Prime Minister will be at the Venice Summit and I would hope that he would tell his colleagues, the leaders of the other six leading industrial nations, that it is imperative to end agricultural subsidies because of the crisis they are causing throughout the world and particularly because of the crisis for the family farm and the grain farmer in western Canada. Will the Prime Minister be addressing that issue, and will he call for an extraordinary meeting of the world's leading grain producers in order to bring an end to the subsidy wars and return some reason to the international trading picture?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for that question because it deals with a problem the resolution of which is essential to the stability and growth of our country. The Prime Minister will certainly be raising the question of agriculture at the Venice Summit. He was the first Prime Minister of any country to put agriculture at the top of the agenda at the Tokyo Economic Summit.

We have had the benefit of direct consultations, most recently at the Carling Building last week, with representatives of farm leaders from across the country, to develop a position that Canada can put forward effectively. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition made a suggestion regarding an extraordinary meeting of grain producers. We will consider that option among others. There have already been a number of extraordinary meetings called by Canada or joined by Canada to try to ensure common action against a problem which I think it is generally recognized, because it is based on subsidies, cannot be solved by any one country alone. It requires the concerted action of several countries. That is what we are trying to achieve.

SOUTH AFRICA—APARTHEID—VENICE SUMMIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Minister. In the past, both the Minister and the Prime Minister have asked for more stringent sanctions against South Africa to put an end to the apartheid system. Now that the Prime Minister will be meeting Mrs. Thatcher and President Reagan at the summit, does he intend to follow through on his demands? Is he going to urge participants at the Venice Summit to make a concerted effort and apply strict sanctions against the apartheid regime, and to do so within a very specific timeframe?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows perfectly well that the Prime Minister of Canada has played a leading role within the Commonwealth and other organizations by encouraging consistent and increasing pressure on apartheid and by trying to persuade the South African Government to change its policy. We intend to continue this campaign in Venice. I may point out, and this will come as no surprise, that there will be some resistance from other countries at the summit, but nevertheless, the Canadian Government intends to raise the issue in strong terms. It is on the agenda of the first meeting of Heads of State or Governments Monday evening in Venice. We hope it will be possible to achieve some kind of concerted action. I am not suggesting there will necessarily be concerted action on the sanctions, but at least some kind of concerted action by the countries meeting in Venice.

THIRD WORLD DEBT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my third question relates to the summit. The Minister may perhaps be aware of a draft report prepared by 24 of the developing nations criticizing the International Monetary Fund, to use the words of the report, for strangling the Third World. The Minister is aware of the severe problem of Third World debt, a potential avalanche of $1 trillion, and what it is doing to cause deprivation, social unrest, and even perhaps putting at risk peace and stability in certain parts of the world.

Will the Prime Minister request of his counterparts at the summit a thorough review by the leading industrial powers of the policy toward easing that debt burden and rationalizing the approach of the major industrial nations to it?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question is yes. In fact Canada will be putting forward some proposals of our own, as will other countries. I think there is some hope for some modest movement on the part of the industrialized countries with regard to the debt question.

I share fully the concern expressed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition about the seriousness of the problem in debtor countries and the ludicrous nature of the situation. Some countries are now paying out more to meet their obligations than they are receiving in international development assistance or from other sources.

That is a complex problem which requires consistent and sophisticated attention. We hope that process will continue in Venice. We will have some proposals to make.

POLICY OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is very similar to that just asked by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

The developing nations are concerned that austerity regimes imposed by the International Monetary Fund have put them on a treadmill of merely servicing their national debts without hope of reducing the principal and without hope of the economic development which would create prosperity for them and markets for us.

In view of this will the Prime Minister point out forcefully at the Venice Summit the risks of this policy to Canada in particular, both as a creditor nation and as a trading nation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there will naturally be discussions which touch upon the operations and, undoubtedly, upon the policy of the International Monetary Fund. I would not want to suggest to the House that we expect that there will be any recommendation at this time for a change in practice, but there is certainly no question that if other countries do not raise that matter Canada shall.

There are a range of inconsistencies between some of the hopes expressed by some of the summit countries and the consequences of some of their policies, none, if I may say so, more so than in the field of agriculture. The agricultural subsidy policies of the European Community and the United States and the practices followed by Japan not only impact negatively upon our country but also have very serious and negative effects upon developing countries, many of which have to rely upon agriculture as the basis of their development.

ARMAMENTS EXPENDITURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Canada has a longstanding commitment to north-south relations based on our belief that achieving global security is very much dependent on our success in reaching greater economic stability in all the countries of the world.

Will the Prime Minister make it very clear to his counterparts at the Summit that increased arms expenditures in trouble spots in the developing countries of the world is no substitute for intelligent economic planning?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will be raising the question of arms expenditures both generally and specifically—specifically in relation to the Gulf—at the Venice Summit.

If I may take this opportunity to respond to what is perhaps one of the most combustible crises now facing the world in the Gulf, Canada has supported and applauds the efforts of the United Nations Secretary General to mediate. We think it would now be appropriate for the Security Council of the United Nations to mandate a cease-fire and a withdrawal with binding enforcement measures, including an arms embargo.

With that in mind, during my conversations earlier this week with Vice Chairman Yang of China I raised the question of the allegations of export by the PRC to Iran of the Silkworm anti-ship missiles.

UTILIZATION OF DEPARTMENT'S BUDGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is pertinent both to the very disturbing things that are taking place in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and to the by-election that is coming in St. John's East. Yesterday the Minister made the extraordinary admission that for the first time ever his Department, halfway through the year, has already spent all of its regional development money allocated for the present fiscal year. At the same time, the Minister said that there would be a freeze put on further spending by his Department but "the Government has no intention of reneging on its commitments to regional development".

How can the Minister put a freeze on all spending in his Department on the one hand, but have the Government live up to its commitments on the other?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister responded to those questions very clearly yesterday, in spite of what the Leader of the New Democratic Party might want to suggest. He acknowledged that there may be some overspending in the budget for the fiscal year 1986-87 and has taken action to correct that. The situation is quite temporary. However, I simply repeat the statement that he made, that all commitments will be honoured. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will be able to continue business as usual. That is being straightened out.

I believe I can say that the Minister will issue a statement, perhaps later today or early next week, clarifying this whole matter.

ATLANTIC OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, some time next week may be just a little late. The Prime Minister is going to St. John's tomorrow, where it is expected that at long last he will make an announcement on the Atlantic Opportunities Program and announce funding in connection with it. Since the Minister already said in the House yesterday that the budget for regional development is being frozen, what does it mean in terms of the Prime Minister's commitments in Newfoundland?

Will the Government be robbing money from other regional development programs in other parts of Canada, such as the Prairies and British Columbia, to spend for by-election purposes in St. John's? Or does it mean that the promises made in St. John's will not be implemented until a year after the by-election takes place? Is that what it is all about?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the socialist party is more political than usual. He must be believing the polls, because he normally is quite constructive. He has become quite political in that question.

I would remind the Leader of the socialists of the new unemployment rate figures that are out today. I am sure it will be of comfort to the Hon. Member that the unemployment rate has dropped to 9.1 per cent. Some 840,000 new jobs have been created, and 50,000 new jobs have been created in the Atlantic region since we assumed office. The Prime Minister's announcement will be one which will provide the kind of framework for future economic development, growth and security for people in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if the figures given by the Deputy Prime Minister are right—and I have no reason to doubt that—and unemployment is going down, I am very happy that that is taking place. I want to make that clear. However, I also say to the Deputy Prime Minister that he knows that unemployment in Newfoundland is approaching the 20 per cent figure in real terms, any way one looks at it. I am sure that is the case.

PREPARATION OF PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that senior department officials in DRIE have not been involved in any way in the work that is going into the announcement for the Atlantic Opportunities Program that will be made by the Prime Minister tomorrow and that this omission is extraordinary since it is their area of expertise? Will he confirm that this is an operation conducted by the Prime Minister and that what seems to be involved, in light of what the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said yesterday and the Prime Minister will be announcing tomorrow, is that they are converting regional development fund money into a personal political slush fund for the Prime Minister?

Mr. Crosbie: You are really desperate, Ed.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the socialists is getting desperate. He should also know that when we assumed office the unemployment rate in the Atlantic region was 17 per cent. Today it is 14.9 per cent and I think that is real progress.

I think the hon. Leader is relying upon the leaked documents he is getting from his colleague, the Member for Yorkton—Melville. All he has to do is be patient and wait for the announcement. Then he will see precisely what will be included in the Atlantic Opportunities Program. Also, if he will be just a little patient, I am sure there will be a statement issued with respect to the DRIE issue. Perhaps then that will answer the questions he has on his mind, superficially or otherwise.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—APPLICATION OF NON-DEROGATION CLAUSE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my hon. friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. The insertion of a so-called non-derogation clause for aboriginal peoples has improved somewhat the Meech Lake Accord. However, aboriginal leaders remain very concerned and very apprehensive because the non-derogation clause applies to only one small part of the Accord. For example, it is not applicable to the spending power provisions.

Why did the Government decide to restrict so narrowly the application of this non-derogation clause? Will the Government consider extending this clause to cover the entire Accord?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, once again I simply want to remind my hon. friend that this was an accord that was struck and agreed to by the eleven First Ministers. There was extensive negotiation and consultation, with much give and take.

The Member puts an interpretation on the particular clause in question. I thought that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, responded to that rather appropriately yesterday.

Let me repeat to all Hon. Members of the House that we intend to pursue this Accord with the fullest possible opportunities for a parliamentary hearing process so that all Members of Parliament and interested parties can come and place their views on the record. As I said yesterday, I will be meeting with my opposition counterparts very soon to lay out the various options of how we might best proceed.

In fairness, rather than debating the details and the interpretations on specific elements, I think that the committee process might be the best opportunity for the Hon. Member to pursue that.

FUTURE CONSTITUTIONAL TALKS ON FISHERIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Accord calls for continuing constitutional talks on certain matters, including Senate reform, as well as the matter of the fisheries. How is it possible to discuss the matter of fisheries in the absence of aboriginal leaders? The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the fishery is a basic and primary aboriginal and treaty right guaranteed in our Constitution. Will he agree to include aboriginal leaders in all constitutional talks that relate to the important matter of the fishery?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): There is a clear provision for future constitutional talks that is enshrined in the Accord. Clearly, there are matters that can be taken up as seen fit by the parties to that agreement. If the Hon. Member is making that recommendation, I am sure it will be taken into consideration.

REPORTED AUDIT OF DEPARTMENT'S BOOKS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday I was able to inform the House of the incredible revelation that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion does not have sufficient funds to meet its 1987 and 1988 regional development commitments that have already been made. Of course, this was confirmed in the House by the Minister. It affects jobs in the regions.

I was also informed this morning that, in a highly unusual move, the Government has hired the private consultant firm of Price Waterhouse to audit the books of this Department and straighten out this incredible mess. Since this is such an incredible occurrence—this Government cannot even run its Department in a business-like way—can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House why this occurred and why it was not identified earlier? How can the Minister make a full and complete statement to this House "very soon" when Price Waterhouse, I understand, just yesterday began its work auditing those books?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is true that there is an internal investigation going on with respect to this matter. I simply said that I believe the Minister will be making a statement, or issuing a letter correcting some of the issues referred to by the Hon. Member and outlining in clear terms how this matter will be dealt with. However, I repeat once again that all the commitments and obligations of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will be honoured. I can also assure the Hon. Member that the integrity of the Department will be clearly maintained.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, since this affects many programs such as the Native Economic Program and others, I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not he thinks there might have been a breach of the Financial Administration Act in this case. I quote part of Section 25(1): "No contract or other arrangement providing for the payment shall be entered into with respect to any program unless there is a sufficient unencumbered balance available out of the appropriation". I also have the same reference in the Treasury Board guidelines on financial administration. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think this might be a possible breach of the Financial Administration Act and also of the guidelines of the Treasury Board?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just chastised the Minister and me for making a statement without ascertaining all the facts. He is now asking me to comment on something—

Mr. Nystrom: A breach of the Act.

Mr. Mazankowski: —or to express an opinion on something—

Mr. Broadbent: He might have read it yesterday.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and the Hon. Member is basing the question on leaked documents—and he has a rather reliable source of leaked documents.

Mr. Broadbent: Very reliable.

Mr. Mazankowski: Reliable as far as inconsistency, in terms of providing information which is sometimes a little less than accurate.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister confirmed it.

Mr. Mazankowski: As was indicated, this matter is being looked into. I know there have been consultations and discussions with the President of the Treasury Board. I am not in a position to associate myself with the suggestion made by the Hon. Member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT REDUCTION—JOB CREATION FOR YOUTH AND ELDERLY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. All of us in this House are surely encouraged by the way unemployment has been reduced to 9.1 per cent, but all of us are aware of the need for still greater reduction. What economic initiatives can the Government take to reduce the unemployment rate lower still, especially among two age groups who find it difficult to be hired, those under age 25 and those over age 45?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for his question, which is an important one. I am glad he asked the question today, of course, because the unemployment rate, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is down from 9.3 per cent to 9.1 per cent and our youth are participating in the over-all decrease in unemployment. There have been 840,000 jobs created in all since the Government was elected.

Turning from the macro side of the answer to specific programs for youth, the tax reform proposals which will be introduced in June will clearly help entrepreneurship by lowering rates. That, of course, will have an immediate effect on young people as well as on all sectors of society. There is also the publication, the "Hot 100", which has all of these programs in it.

The Ministry of Youth has compiled some figures. We have a $10 million youth entrepreneurship program with the YMCA. We have 25 per cent of the innovation program set aside for youth. Finally, approximately one half of the Canadian Job Strategy is allocated to youth, and that is $720 million.

1987 CONSTITUTION ACCORD—LANGUAGE MINORITY GROUPS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the lack of balance in wording in the Constitutional Accord of 1987. On the one hand we find the role of the Legislative Assembly and the Government of Quebec is to conserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec, and we agree with that. On the other hand we find the role of the Parliament of Canada, and all the provincial Legislatures, is restricted to preserving the fundamental characteristics of Canada, that is, the linguistic duality, of official languages groups both in Quebec and outside Quebec.

I asked the Government yesterday to tell me why the different wording. I asked the Minister of Justice why the Parliament and the Government of Canada are not obligated not only to preserve but, more important, to promote these minority language groups. Can the Minister tell the House if the Prime Minister offered to enlarge the role of Parliament and the Legislatures of this country to promote its linguistic duality? And, if so, who opposed it amongst the provincial Premiers? Why is it not in the Accord?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to slough off a very important and well-intentioned question. I was not at the discussions and negotiations. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice were there. I cannot really comment on what went on during the course of those discussions. Suffice it to say I will again draw the Hon. Member's concern to the attention of the Minister of Justice and, hopefully, he will be able to respond in a more fulsome manner next week. I would hope that the Hon. Member would allow that to occur. If he will just be patient, I am sure there is an answer to his question, but I cannot give it to him at this time.

REPRESENTATION OF LANGUAGE MINORITY GROUPS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I thank the Minister for that answer. There is more to preserving and promoting the fundamental characteristics of minority groups, it also includes an area of my responsibility as critic, and that is equitable representation in the Public Service of Canada. We all know how difficult it has been for minority groups, both the English-speaking in Quebec and the French-speaking outside Quebec, to reach a demographic balance and obtain equitable representation.

Does the Minister not agree that by making the Parliament and Government of Canada obligated under the Constitution not only to preserve but to promote the linguistic duality of this country, one must ensure that staffing of the federal Public Service represents both the French-speaking minority outside Quebec and the English-speaking minority in Quebec?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to get into some very pertinent details with respect to the Constitutional Accord. I think what we have is an Accord which embodies a number of principles. We have said we would submit the document to an appropriate parliamentary committee where these things could be explored. I am sure that if the Hon. Member is convincing, as he usually is, there will be some consideration taken. But I repeat, the constitutional process is not completed. The process which is put in place will make it easier to incorporate constitutional changes as deemed necessary. I would hope that these are the kinds of things which could be exposed and discussed during the course of the parliamentary committee hearing.

SITUATION OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is on the subject of the Accord. As the Deputy Prime Minister is aware, native people feel ignored, if not betrayed, by what has happened in this Accord. Last night, when the Prime Minister was speaking to the nation, he said that four attempts to bring justice to our aboriginal people have failed, in large part because Quebec was not there to vote on behalf of our native people and perhaps next time, with Quebec's help, we will succeed.

Considering the Prime Minister's statement to the nation, will the Government guarantee there will be a First Ministers' meeting with aboriginal people and with northern representatives to iron out aboriginal rights in our Constitution within one year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think this was responded to yesterday by the Minister of Justice. The record of the Government on the entrenchment of aboriginal rights and the issues concerning the aboriginal peoples has been clearly a priority of the Government and several attempts have been made. I think the Prime Minister was quite correct in stating that now that Quebec is part of the Constitution the issues respecting aboriginal peoples will be resolved, hopefully more expeditiously.

• (1150)

As I indicated in answer to the previous question, the constitutional process is a continuing one. I am sure that given the priority that this Government has placed on the issue of aboriginal rights it will be dealt with in an expeditious fashion.

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the native people of Canada want some guarantee that that process will take place. If the Deputy Prime Minister cannot guarantee to Members of the House and to the native people of Canada that there will be a First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights within the next year, can he, on behalf of the Government, contact the Province of Quebec which is expected to vote for aboriginal rights, according to the Prime Minister, and the other provinces, and ask them to agree to a meeting on aboriginal rights? Will he at least do that on behalf of native people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members, that the priority with respect to aboriginal rights given by this Government has not diminished. As a matter of fact it has been enhanced as a result of the constitutional Accord that has been signed. I can assure the Hon. Member that in the future we will not shy away from dealing with this very important issue.

As to a specific time and a specific request, I am not in a position to give the Hon. Member that. However, I will certainly take it seriously and perhaps at a later date I might be able to provide a more definitive answer.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REDECORATION OF MINISTERIAL OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It pertains to the recent graduates of the Brian Mulroney school of redecorating—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Boudria: —namely, the Ministers who have spent $1 million to redecorate their departmental offices, not counting their Parliament Hill offices.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify to the people of Canada this lavish spending at a time when 3 million Canadians are living below the poverty line?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member's question is a serious one rather than one asked in his usual muck-raking style.

I think that it is fair to say that many renovations were required and necessary due to the restructuring of the Cabinet in 1984. If the Hon. Member has any evidence of any inappropriate expenditures or unnecessary spending, I would like him to identify them, give them to me and I will look into them.

EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I should be delighted to respond to the Deputy Prime Minister's invitation. Perhaps he could explain to the House why his Government, in the answer on the Order Paper, refused to provide details on individual Ministers, and why, especially, it failed to mention in the documents it provided that a Minister had spent $135,000 on redecorating his office on Parliament Hill and his departmental office? Why? Would he please explain that and inform the House why this kind of wasteful spending is tolerated by the Conservative Government?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it was because the question was poorly drafted.

SHIPMENT OF POSSIBLE INFECTIOUS MATERIAL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In the Halifax post office today a container fell, a type of container which has a history of breaking open when it falls. This container was labelled "AIDS—Arc Atlantic Reference Laboratory, Department of Microbiology, Division of Chemical Immunology". It was coming from the St. John's Hospital.

I understand that to ship infectious material in the mail is against the law. Yet an official from the Department of Health indicated that there may be some problems here about whether the material was suspected to be infected or whether it was just being sent because someone wanted their blood to be tested.

What I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to assure the House is that the spirit of the law in this situation will be applied, not just the letter of the law, and that these shipments will be stopped until this matter can be thoroughly investigated in order that the safety of the workers involved can be protected.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will certainly look into that situation to ensure that no risk is posed for any people having to handle these materials. The Hon. Member has my assurance and the assurance of the Government in this regard.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I referred my first question to the Deputy Prime Minister because it related to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I wish that he had taken the opportunity to reply.

USE OF SHIPMENT CONTAINER—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for the post office. It is with regard to—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are pompous beyond your height.

Mr. Keeper: Pardon me?

What I would like to know from the Minister responsible for the Post Office is this. The hospital responsible indicated that this material was being shipped through the mail in a container approved for that purpose. That was the hospital's response. What I would like to do is have the Minister indicate to the post office that he would like to see it suspend the approval of this type of container, which has a history of breaking, for AIDS-related material until he has an opportunity to investigate the situation thoroughly so that people's health and safety can be protected.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without necessarily accepting or rejecting the facts that the Hon. Member has put forward, I will certainly investigate the situation and take the representations, which the Hon. Member makes very seriously, in the seriousness in which they deserve to be taken.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

DECAYING INFRASTRUCTURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Once again I will appeal to the Government's good common sense.

How can the Government refuse to assist municipalities renew their decaying infrastructures for sewer, water, roads and bridges when today the Government will propose billions of dollars for nuclear submarines? Where are the Government's priorities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it has been said in the House on many occasions that while we are sympathetic to the problems that our municipalities face I think they would understand the difficulties that we have as a Government, in particular the fact that when we took over the reins of government the cupboard was not only bare, it was in a very serious financial debt position, with a doubling of the nation's debt occurring in the last four years of the administration of which the Hon. Member was a member.

Of course, it was most important and very necessary to reverse that trend, to bring down interest rates and to stimulate economic growth. We are now turning things around. Perhaps in the not too distant future, given the solid economic performance, growth and good job creation activities, we might be in a position at some point down the road to look into the matter.

The fact of the matter is that at the present time, as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance have stated, it would be a very difficult time to entertain a program such as the one to which the Hon. Member has referred.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, despite the deficit the Government will propose today billions of dollars for nuclear submarines. It has already found $1 million to renew and paint its offices. If the Government can find money for that, then it can find money to renew decaying infrastructures in the municipalities. Where is the common sense in this Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is speaking for his Party in asking us to withdraw from our commitments to NATO and our commitments to defence—

Mr. Allmand: No, no. I never said that.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is what he is implying.

Mr. Allmand: That is ridiculous. We have not had nuclear submarines, and we don't need them.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. He and the members of his Party cannot cry about the need for Arctic sovereignty. They cannot cry about the fact that our Armed Forces are not up to snuff. We have to rebuild our Armed Forces and our defence capabilities because, after 15 years of—

Mr. Crosbie: Liberal turpitude.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you. Liberal turpitude, was that the word? We now have an opportunity to fulfil our commitment as we said we would do in the campaign of 1984.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REPORTED BANNING OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Just five weeks ago the Interparliamentary Union held its semi-annual conference in Managua. At that time President Ortega assured us that political pluralism was alive and well there. Right after the conference, the Government put under house arrest the chairman of the Conservative Party in Nicaragua for his attempts to contact delegates. I understand that he has been released but the Party itself has been banned.

• (1200)

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs contact the Nicaraguan Ambassador here, find out the facts of the case, lodge a protest, and see what can be done about this since it is directly involved with the Contadora process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member not only for his question but for the very detailed report which he provided to me upon his return from Nicaragua with the interparliamentary delegation.

I take seriously the representation he has made to me. Naturally through our Embassy I will want to verify all the facts. If they are as he has told me, I will make that kind of representation to Nicaraguan authorities.

That regime is based upon a stated respect for pluralism. They, as other regimes, must be held to account to ensure that their behaviour bears some resemblance to their undertakings.

ACCESS TO POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, when we were there we learned that they are still maintaining the El Chipote Prison which was begun by Somoza and has probably one of the worst reputations in the world. Along with maintaining that prison, they have prohibited the International Red Cross from visiting political prisoners there.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs undertake to make sure that access to that prison is granted to the International Red Cross?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly make that representation.

FISHERIES

NECHAKO RIVER, B.C.—REGULATION OF WATER FLOW

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Since Confederation every Minister of Fisheries has held firmly to the view that the Fisheries Act is supreme in its powers to regulate water flows for the protection of salmon and other matters.

On May 22 the present Minister broke that tradition in siding with Alcan, the Aluminum Company of Canada, to negotiate water flows on the Nechako River in northern B.C., which will directly affect the Fraser River as well.

Would the Minister explain to the hundreds of thousands of British Columbians who will be hurt by this sell-out why he has chosen to place private corporate rights above the common law and common property rights of all Canadians?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question and assure him that as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada I do not intend to sell out the interests of the fishery and its important economic value to all Canadians, particularly those in northwestern British Columbia, for any other interest.

However, in the spirit of the habitat policy which I released last October, we believe it essential that we enter into negotiations and discussions with third party interests on the possible conflict and opportunity to harmonize other types of development with the important responsibility I have to ensure that fish populations are not only maintained—that is, the enshrinement of the no net loss principle—but that in fact we seek a net gain of habitat and the production of that habitat in the area of the fisheries.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, you know full well what the implications of negotiating an out of court agreement on Alcan's 1950 water licence will mean. Thanks to your quick action, Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of British Columbia upheld the supremacy of the Fisheries Act in 1980.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries. He does not seem to understand the fundamental error of what he has done.

Why has the Minister overturned 120 years of Canadian constitutional and common law rulings and placed corporate rights to a common property resource, which is flowing water and fish, above the rights of the owners of these matters, the people of Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this Minister has not overturned any period of history in the reasonable and balanced approach we are taking to the opportunity or possibility of creating significant employment in the Hon. Member's riding, without doing any damage to the fisheries contained within the area of the Nechako River watershed.

Therefore, I would be more than happy to welcome the Hon. Member and other Members of Parliament from British Columbia who are interested in the issue to sit with me and to receive a full briefing—and we will provide it to all other interested parties—on the options under consideration and the possibility of offsetting remedial measures within the spirit of our habitat policy, which I believe the Member has commended on earlier occasions, in order to achieve an accommodation and to realize additional economic development and jobs in his riding.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REIMBURSEMENT OF EARLY RETIREES—PENALIZED INDIVIDUALS—AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Hon. Members are aware that thanks to the Official Opposition's House Leader, the Government has agreed to call Bill C-50 for debate next Tuesday so that 35,000 early retirees can get their refunds. My question, unfortunately, concerns 2,500 people in Canada who will be penalized as a result of this Bill. They opted for early retirement before January 5, 1986, but for various reasons had to apply for unemployment insurance benefits after that date. This has cost them about $4.5 million. Could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to these 2,500 Canadians that his Government does not have the $4.5 million, because it spent over one million on redecorating ministers' offices and because the Minister of National Defence is about to announce that he will need billions of dollars to spend on nuclear submarines? How do we explain this wasteful spending to 2,500 Canadians?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie will also want to explain to the people whose cause he is defending that since we formed the Government, the unemployment rate in Canada has dropped by 2.6 per cent, down to 9.1 per cent today, the lowest rate in five years. We have created more jobs in the last three months, Mr. Speaker, than the previous Liberal Government was able to create in about four and a half years. I am not surprised my colleagues are reacting to this. Especially since we are delighted the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie has finally managed to persuade his House Leader to let Bill C-50 go through all three stages the same day, so that we can finally reimburse the people he claims to defend.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVISE ITS POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister. I wish he would answer those 2,500 people who are being penalized. What is the Minister going to say to a gentleman who wrote to me that he took early retirement on December 31? In case the Minister didn't know, January 1, New Year's Day, is a holiday. And because of all the paper work, he has to go and apply for his benefits on January 10 or 12. Instead of evading the issue, why doesn't the Minister agree to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to consider these 2,500 people in Canada as having retired in 1985 and to refund the four million, instead of spending ten or twelve or fifteen billion on nuclear submarines? Why won't the Minister agree to do that?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am delighted to see the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie showing an interest in National Defence, because when the Minister of National Defence announces his policy, the Liberal Party of Canada will have a chance to announce its position if they ever manage to develop one on that or on any subject of concern to Canadians today. As for Bill C-50, the Hon. Member will find out next Tuesday that a Commission will be formed to examine the cases to which he referred. And if the Liberal Party of Canada finally decides to adopt the Bill so that we can finally reimburse these people, that will clear up a lot of problems.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WHITE PAPER—CHALLENGE AND COMMITMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, three weeks from now we will celebrate Canada's 120th birthday. But in this spring of 1987 it is fitting for us to remember that 70 years ago Canadians of all regions and of all walks of life forged, at Vimy Ridge, a new sense of nationhood, that was the beginning of modern Canada.

We are not a militaristic people, but we are a nation with a proud and long military history. In two world wars and in Korea we built an honourable reputation for pulling more than our weight when called upon to defend our way of life, our national institutions and our democratic values.

It is perhaps difficult for some to accept that these values remain under threat today. But they are, and these threats are not uniquely ours. We cannot defend this vast country against possible enemies on our own. We must seek our security through collective measures with other nations who face the common threat.

[English]

It is 16 years since the last White Paper on Defence was tabled in this House of Commons. Since that time the world has changed in many significant ways which affect Canadian security profoundly.

In the Speech from the Throne opening the first session of this Parliament, the Government promised the Canadian people a thorough review of defence policy. I am here today to honour that commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I present to this House a coherent, made in Canada, defence policy, Mr. Speaker, which, when implemented over the next 15 years, will provide for the continuing security of Canadians in a changing world and will equip the Canadian Forces with the capabilities they need to become and to remain effective into the 21st century.

The defence policy review identified two fundamental deficiencies in current defence policy. The first is the existence of a significant gap between the capabilities required to meet the military commitments accepted by successive Governments on behalf of the Canadian people and the capabilities possessed by the Canadian Forces. This gap is widening as ships, aircraft, vehicles and equipment become obsolete before they can be replaced. If this trend were allowed to continue, the Canadian Forces would simply rust out.

The second deficiency in current defence policy is its failure to take into account the significant geopolitical and geostrategic changes affecting Canadian security since the last White Paper was tabled in 1971. These changes include Canada's emergence as a Pacific nation with increasingly important economic, cultural and strategic interests in the Pacific area; the growing strategic importance of the Arctic Ocean as an operating area for foreign submarines, raising both security and sovereignty concerns for Canada; the emergence of Soviet air-launched and submarine launched Cruise missiles, and Canada's vulnerability to attack by these weapon systems from our three ocean approaches; and finally, the requirement for sustainable supportable ground and air forces in Europe. This requirement will become even more pressing with any agreement to eliminate or significantly reduce intermediate nuclear forces in Europe where the Warsaw Pact has a preponderance of the conventional forces.

This White Paper, Challenge and Commitment, provides the Government's response to these deficiencies and lays out the future course of defence policy. The main thrusts are, first, that Canada will continue to base its security policy on three pillars: the maintenance of an adequate defence; the pursuit of equitable and verifiable arms control and disarmament measures; and participation in peace-keeping operations and negotiations to achieve peaceful settlements of international disputes; second, that Canada will remain a committed member of NATO—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: —and will continue to contribute land, sea and air forces to the integrated military structure of the North Atlantic Alliance; third, that within this framework we will remain an active partner in continental defence arrangements with the United States and contribute forces to the joint North American Aerospace Defence Command; and fourth, that to meet the changing alliance needs and national requirements, the force structure of the Canadian forces will be modified over time to meet the requirement for a well balanced three ocean Navy, including the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines and a second batch of Canadian patrol frigates; to consolidate in NATO's central front our major land and Air Force commitments in Europe; and to revitalize the reserve forces to make them capable of supporting and sustaining our military commitments both at home and abroad.

I should like to say a few words about each of these initiatives which, together with our contributions to North American air defence, lie at the core of new defence policy.

The first key element in our new defence strategy is the creation of a three ocean navy to protect our three ocean country. The deplorable state of the navy is well known. We have not a single minesweeper in the Canadian navy and the youngest ship in our fleet was being built at the time of the last White Paper in 1971. The oldest ships are more than 30 years old. The problem is so serious that we must either engage in a major rebuilding of our navy or give up even the pretence of being able to protect our waters. We have decided to introduce ship, submarine and helicopter replacement programs to build a modern and effective three ocean navy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The navy vessels which we are planning to acquire, Mr. Speaker, will be delivered through the next decade and beyond and will last, and represent Canada's naval capability, well into the next century. Our studies have shown us that in that time frame the most effective way of conducting anti-submarine warfare operations in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans would be with a balanced Maritime force comprising surface vessels with helicopters, nuclear-powered submarines and Maritime patrol aircraft. This balance is now lacking.

Such a balanced fleet mix will also offer Canada the option of submarine operations under the ice of her northern waters.

Some have suggested that the proposed nuclear submarine program is driving the costs of the White Paper. Such a suggestion is untrue. The sort of submarine that we are contemplating will cost approximately the same amount of money as a modern air defence frigate.

The issue is not the cost of a particular type of vessel but rather the cost of replacing a navy on the verge of rust-out. The real question is whether Canada can afford to have a modern navy or, perhaps more accurately, whether a three ocean nation as dependent on trade as Canada is, can afford not to have a navy. The Government's response is clear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Some people would suggest that we contract out the defence of Canada's waters to others. The Government is prepared to discuss co-operation in all aspects of the defence of North America, but we will not allow Canada's sovereignty to be compromised. We will be a partner with our allies and we will not be a dependent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker I will now turn to Consolidation in Europe.

To be credible, Canadian contributions to conventional deterrent forces in Europe, whether stationed in Europe or held in Canada as expeditionary forces, must be and be seen to be effective, available, supportable in action and sustainable over time.

Both our major land force and air force commitments to Europe—our stationed Mechanized Brigade Group, and our stationed Air Group on the Central Front in West Germany—and our Canada-based CAST Brigade group and Rapid Reinforcement Air Squadrons earmarked for deployment to North Norway—are currently unsupportable in action and unsustainable once committed.

The Government has concluded that the solution to these problems is consolidation into effective, supportable, sustainable land and air formations at divisional strength. The most careful consideration has been given to the political, military and economic implications of the choices open to us.

• (1220)

Once we had taken a decision to consolidate our efforts in a more effective and more focused way, we had essentially two choices: to concentrate on the northern theatre or on the central front. While consolidation in the North was appealing for many reasons, it was complicated by the fact that for reasons which we fully understand, Norwegian policy forbids the peacetime stationing of foreign troops in that country. Consequently, to focus on Norway would have required that we abandon the costly infrastructure that we had built in Germany, withdraw our troops from Europe altogether and try to develop workable arrangements to get troops to Norway if they became needed. This option simply would not have been sensible.

The best course for Canada in our view is to withdraw from our current commitment to send a CAST Brigade and two rapid reinforcement squadrons of fighter aircraft to northern Norway and to consolidate these forces if required in an emergency on our stationed land and air commitments in West Germany. We will continue, however, to provide a battalion group dedicated to deployment in the Northern European Command area as a contribution to the Multinational Allied Mobile Force, Land. The equipment for this battalion group will remain prepositioned in northern Norway and we will continue to exercise this and other forces with our Norwegian allies.

The Government has conducted intensive consultations in our consolidation proposals both within NATO and bilaterally with those of our allies that will be most affected by these adjustments. In general, the responses we have received are both sympathetic and supportive.

This change in the role of the 5th Brigade Group will require that it be newly equipped with main battle tanks and with other heavy equipment to fit it for operations on the Central Front. A large proportion of this equipment will need to be prepositioned in West Germany. It will also be necessary to re-equip the 4th Brigade Group which will remain on station in South Western Germany with new tanks in order to maintain its effectiveness throughout the period of the White Paper.

Consolidation into land and air divisions and the addition of divisional elements will provide larger, more effective and more visible Canadian contributions to the conventional deterrent and defence needs of the Alliance in Europe. Most importantly, the fact that our commitments will be both honest and doable will send the message both to our friends and to the Warsaw Pact that Canada will be there if we are needed.

Although I will deal with them separately later, it is important to recognize the role that a revitalized reserve force will be called upon to play in the sustainment of consolidated forces in Central Europe. Our maritime forces will also continue to play a critical role in contributing to the security of sea lines of communication between North America and Europe and both the support and the sustainment of land and air forces in the European theatre.

Let me offer a few comments now about the reserves. The sustainability in support of our stationed and expeditionary forces in Europe would in hostilities be critically dependent on the size and capability of the reserve forces. There are also national roles such as mine countermeasures, the naval control shipping, the protection of vital points and home defence which are well suited to the reserve forces. We intend to introduce a total force concept which will reduce the distinction between the regular and the reserve forces. The quality and quantity of training and equipment will be improved and the strength of the primary reserves will be increased to about 65,000 from the current level of 25,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: This will achieve an over-all reserve level of 90,000 in the 15-year planning period.

Other initiatives will be launched to pursue effective university officer training programs and to improve the pay and the benefits of reserve personnel. The reserve forces can play a vital and cost-effective role in the defence of Canada but they have been gravely neglected in recent years. We intend to see that these citizens, soldiers, sailors and aviators, receive the recognition which they deserve and we will give them a priority that they have not had for several decades.

I would also like to inform the House of a number of other elements of our new policy. First, the Government intends to continue to support our NORAD commitment of three squadrons of tactical fighters. This commitment will be reinforced through our participation in components of the North American Aerospace Defence Modernization Project such as the North Warning System through continued co-manning of the United States airborne warning and control aircraft flying in support of NORAD commitments and co-manning of operational support centres for the over-the-horizon backscatter radar stations.

We will pursue new initiatives which might lead to an enhanced capability to conduct surveillance of our northern areas from space over the next 15 years. During this period, we will also closely monitor the United States initiatives in space and other programs aimed at improving the aerospace defence of North America. I would stress that our policy will continue to be that all activities in space must respect international treaty obligations and must contribute to the pursuit of peace.

In addition to these initiatives in support of military commitments, the Government intends to pursue measures aimed at broadening and strengthening the base on which future defence policy is to be built. These measures include an increased emphasis on the provision of equal opportunities in the Canadian forces for members of both official language groups, expanding the role of women in the Canadian forces, ensuring that Canada's regular and reserve forces fully reflect the ethnic diversity of Canadian society, the strengthening of defence industrial preparedness and, perhaps one of the most important initiatives, the scrapping of the Emergency Planning Order and the replacing of the War Measures Act with the new emergencies legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, this has been a commitment of the federal Government since 1970 and we will act on that commitment. We will replace the War Measures Act with new emergencies legislation which will both better protect civil liberties and provide greater flexibility in dealing with emergencies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The Government will also introduce legislation to establish Emergency Preparedness Canada, the agency responsible for co-ordinating the civil aspects of mobilization planning.

This White Paper is the blueprint which will guide the rebuilding of the Canadian Forces. As Hon. Members know, major Crown projects such as the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program or the Low Level Air Defence Program take many years to complete and must be planned many years before production starts. For this reason, defence planning is long term and the horizon of the White Paper is the next 15 years.

To provide a fair balance between the need for certainty that resources for defence will be available in the long term and the degree of fiscal flexibility that is prudent for the Government to retain, a new planning and funding process has been developed for programs which will flow from the policies laid out in the White Paper. During the 15-year planning framework of the White Paper, the Government is committed to annual real growth in defence spending which, except in fiscal emergencies, will not fall below 2 per cent. Increased resources over those generated by this planned funding floor will be provided as major projects forecast in the White Paper are introduced and implemented.

In order to assess the level of incremental resources required in any given year, Cabinet will conduct an annual review of proposed defence spending for the following five-year period. A rolling five-year funding plan has been adopted and will form part of the defence estimates process. The first annual review will be held in September of this year. At that time, the second phase of the Ship Replacement Program will be examined to determine the annual level of incremental funding required over the 2 per cent base line for the next five years.

Since he was first elected to Parliament, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made clear his commitment to a strong and sovereign Canada. The Government he leads is determined to provide members of the Canadian Forces with a clear mandate and with the resources necessary to do their job.

Since coming to office, we have reintroduced distinctive environmental uniforms. We have opened up the Canadian Forces to increased opportunities for women, we have pursued initiatives to improve opportunity for members of both official language groups and we have started to narrow the capabilities gap. We have continued to pursue workable and meaningful arms control agreements and we have increased our troop strength in Europe by over 25 per cent.

As I conclude, perhaps I would be permitted by the House a personal note about the men and women who serve in the Canadian forces. The last 11 months have been among the most exciting and rewarding of my life because of the opportunity I have had to meet many of the dedicated men and women who daily lay their lives on the line in the defence of Canada. They live by a code of honour and duty and serve their country proudly. These dedicated Canadians deserve our thanks and support in their important work. On behalf of the Government of Canada I want to express our deep gratitude and pride to each and every one of them.

Mr. Beatty: The White Paper I have tabled today will provide a much needed sense of purpose, direction, pride and identity for the Canadian Forces. When implemented it will enhance the security of Canadians and help to re-establish Canada as a responsible and reliable defence partner. We must do our fair share in carrying the burden of collective defence if our views are to be respected and our independence preserved. We are a proud people and we will honour our commitments.

It has been a long and hard journey to get this far. The way ahead will not be any easier. We now have a coherent, comprehensive defence policy framework, a road-map to guide us into the 21st century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Members who have just finished applauding that address by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) will wait around to listen to at least some of the arguments the Opposition will be making with respect to the White Paper.

Before I get into the substance of the White Paper I want to review some of what I believe are the myths that the Conservative Government is attempting to create about what Liberal defence policy stood for. The implication is that the Liberal Party stands for weak defence.

Mr. Mazankowski: You have a proven record on that.

Mr. Frith: The implication is that the Liberal Party decreases defence spending while it is in power but a Conservative Government increases defence spending. I want to review the track record of the Conservative Party since it came to power in September of 1984 and compare it with the Liberal Party policy from 1979 through to 1984.

Mr. Dick: Why don't you do it before 1979?

Mr. Frith: The Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Dick) can have his say in a moment.

In 1979, the Liberal Government made a commitment to its NATO partners to increase defence spending by 3 per cent in real terms. Our track record from 1979 to 1984 indicates that we actually exceeded the 3 per cent goal.

Mr. Hopkins: By far.

Mr. Frith: By far. It was 4 per cent in 1980-81, to as high as 8.9 per cent in 1984-85.

Let us compare that with the Conservative track record. Never mind the Tory campaign promise of the summer of 1984 that they would increase defence spending by 6 per cent in real terms. My understanding, and correct me if I am wrong, is that all of the spending projections in the White Paper are based on the assumption that defence spending over the next 15 years will increase by only 2 per cent in real terms. That is not the 6 per cent they promised during the election. It is significantly lower than the 3 per cent during the Liberal Government years of 1979-1984. I just want to make sure that at least that myth is dispelled.

In addition, during the Minister's speech he indicated what the capital acquisition program would be. So that the record is clear, I want it understood that it was a Liberal Government that made the decision to upgrade the North Warning System which was completed in the first few years of the Conservative Government. It was a Liberal Government that purchased the 138 CF-18 fighters to upgrade our Air Force. It was a Liberal Government that decided to build new frigates for the Canadian Navy. I might point out as well that we were committed to a three-phase program. As a result of today's White Paper the third phase of that frigate program is going to be scrapped. I will come to the specifics in a moment.

The point I am making is that I will not allow the Conservative Government to promulgate the myth that the Liberal Party was never committed to the defence of this nation and the western alliance, because nothing is further from the truth. Our track record speaks for itself. I want the Canadian public to understand that the track record of the Conservative Party is one of lower growth rates in defence spending than occurred in the previous seven years of Liberal Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Allmand says we are spending too much.

Mr. Allmand: On submarines.

Mr. Frith: I now want to get to the specifics of the Liberal Party's defence policy. It is very important to understand the three premises upon which that policy is based and maintained.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is this Axworthy's policy?

Mr. Frith: The first is that defence policy should be part of a wider security policy. By that I mean defence policy must be cognizant of both our foreign policy needs. In other words, no decision should be made on defence policy which would detract from this nation's foreign policy goals.

As to Canada's long-term security, that will best be served by the pursuit of global security. That requires international co-operation. In pursuit of that, the Liberal Party remains committed to all of the multilateral institutions of the world, things like the United Nations. More importantly, we believe in our participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization so that we share with our partners in the defence of the western alliance. In addition, the Liberal Party, in pursuit of global security, recognizes that we have a responsibility to the defence of the North American continent and therefore believes very strongly in our participation in NORAD.

There are three primary functions that the military is being asked to undertake under a Liberal defence policy. I have already mentioned the first, a military contribution to the collective defence of the western alliance. There is one important proviso. We must maintain our participation in the defence of the western alliance but with the goal of always maintaining and enhancing stable deterrence. In other words, no defence or foreign policy initiative should be taken which would detract from stable deterrence in the western world.

The second is the protection of Canada's sovereignty through the effective control of Canadian territory to the extent that this is consistent with the wider goals of global security. In other words, when I talk about stable deterrence it is important that any acquisition of a weapon's system does not throw an unknown factor into the equation of stable deterrence. I submit to you, and I will go into some detail, that the acquisition of nuclear-powered submarines will lead to destabilization.

Last but not least, something which I think all of us in this House will agree on, is the tremendous international reputation Canada has in peace-keeping operations throughout the world. We have contributed to international organizations in an attempt to limit the outbreak of conflicts in various parts of the world. Canada's track record from the days of Lester B. Pearson is something of which this nation can be very proud.

I admit that the Minister of National Defence, in his previous roles as Solicitor General and Minister of National Revenue, has a reputation of never making a mistake. However, I say to the House today that the Minister has made a mistake in his decision to acquire nuclear-powered submarines. In this case he is dead wrong and to the tune of $7.5 billion.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): At least.

Mr. Frith: Let me explain why the Liberal Party opposes the Conservative Government's decision to acquire a fleet of nuclear-powered submarines.

The rationale, at least as I gather it from the speech of the Minister, for the decision to acquire nuclear-powered submarines is to protect Canada's sovereignty and security in the Arctic. That is the basis of the Government's decision.

Mr. Dick: Wrong.

Mr. Frith: Let us separate the two issues because too often we confuse the sovereignty issue with the security issue. As a result Canadians become confused as to what exactly government policy is with respect to both.

• (1240)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has indicated that in his view, the issue of sovereignty in the Arctic is a legal issue which must be clarified by legal recourse, either through multilateral agreements or a redress to the World Court in The Hague. If the sovereignty issue is a legal issue, why are we applying a military solution to a legal problem?

The Government says that the only option available to Canadians to pursue the objectives of security and sovereignty are nuclear powered hunter-killer submarines. I reject the assertion that the only method of addressing the security issue in the Arctic is the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines and I will elaborate on that in a moment.

The Liberal Party has maintained that the pursuit of national security can only be successful if it is synonymous with the pursuit of international security. It has been a Canadian tradition never to attempt to enhance security through a unilateral, military measure. I view the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines as a unilateral, military approach to a sovereignty and security issue. I think there are better and more sane ways of approaching the problem.

It is our view that a combination of detection devices with increased air patrols and surface ships, such as the icebreaker and frigates, can provide a visible security presence in Canada's Arctic. I believe that in the long run a combination of conventionally powered submarines, frigates and air patrols will be a much more cost-effective way of dealing with the security problem which exists in the Arctic than the acquisition of 10 to 12 nuclear submarines.

I listened to the Minister indicate that in his opinion there is a growing threat of sea-launched and air-launched cruise missiles by the Soviet Union toward North America. Through questions which I have asked in the Standing Committee on National Defence I have learned that it is our best friend and ally, the United States, which has admitted to using our Arctic waters, not the Soviets. There is no proof yet that the Soviets have used their nuclear powered submarines under the Canadian ice cap.

However, let us assume that the Conservatives are correct, that there is an increased security threat as a result of sea-launched cruise missiles from Soviet submarines under Canada's Arctic ice cap. I said at the beginning of my remarks that it is important that our defence policy go hand in glove with our foreign policy. Our foreign policy is to have an effective Canadian role and voice in arms control. Yet, if the Secretary of State for External Affairs is convinced that the sea-launched cruise missile threat exists under the ice cap, why has he not asked that the super powers put on the agenda at Geneva sea-launched cruise missiles as part of the arsenal facing the western world?

It seems to me that there is a gap between the defence policy which the Minister is advocating and the one taken by his own foreign minister. I submit to the House that it is very important that the Conservatives understand that defence policy, foreign policy and domestic policy must always go in the same direction. I submit that that is not now the case.

Some people put the cost of these nuclear-powered submarines at $5 billion but it is well known that $5 billion does not include the costs of refitting, refueling, or the training of the crews. The purchase, which will be the largest single expenditure in Canada's defence history, will be at least 50 per cent higher after the infrastructure has been built for it.

I have nothing against the enhancement of the Navy's capabilities. The Navy will have acquired 12 nuclear powered submarines for deterrence of threats to our Arctic security. That begs the question of what the nuclear powered submarines will do when they meet an American or Russian submarine under our Arctic ice cap. Would it not be simpler to use our conventional weaponry systems, including the frigates, anti-submarine air patrols and conventionally powered submarines, to deal with the submarines when they exit from the choke points in Canada's Arctic?

I suggest that this is a very expensive, unilateral, military response. There are other methods of addressing the same problem which have far less implications for Canada's defence and foreign policy. I do agree that as Canada is a maritime nation we will have to enhance Canada's Navy to ensure that we can control the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and ensure that Canada's security and sovereign interests are looked after.

The Liberal Party has a major disagreement with the White Paper with regard to the Conservative Government's decision to withdraw its CAST commitment to Norway. I believe that is a mistake in the premise of Liberal defence policy. Defence policy must dovetail with foreign policy. The Conservative Government itself developed the northern foreign policy approach. I agree that in terms of long-term geopolitical interests Canada will be best served by having alliances and associations with other Nordic countries such as Norway, Finland and Denmark which share Canada's geopolitical concerns. As a result of the withdrawal of our CAST commitment to Norway we will lose one of the major political IOUs which we have in the NATO Alliance since the Norwegians will view this withdrawal as a determination by Canada to withdraw its interest from other Nordic countries.

A good example of this was the Government's reversal of its decision to close the embassy in Helsinki. That was a clear signal to the Nordic countries that we were beginning to place less emphasis on our natural economic, cultural and political alliances with our Nordic neighbours. The Government quickly realized its mistake and announced that it would maintain the embassy in Helsinki. I believe that the decision to withdraw our CAST commitment to NATO will be viewed in a similar manner by our Norwegian friends. Canada will lose influence which it has had until now with our Nordic neighbours who share similar geopolitical interests.

I am going to ask the Standing Committee on National Defence to try to determine to what extent Canada's resources can be redeployed in Europe. Particularly in the light of recent arms control talks it is important that Canada maintain a physical presence of troops on European soil in Germany. We should pursue an option which would allow us to maintain our CAST commitment for the various reasons I have indicated, of a geopolitical nature, including redeploying our forces in Europe.

I agree with the Minister's statement that at the present time our CAST commitment militarily is not viable. However, I do not accept that because it is not viable in today's methodology we should scrap our commitment to Norway in the event of the outbreak of hostilities.

Aside from the geopolitical reasons, it is important that Canada maintain its commitment to Norway because, first, Canadian troops are among the few troop allotments in the western alliance which have been specifically trained for winter war conditions. Second, if we end up with a nuclear-free Europe, Norway will strategically and militarily take on a more important role. I believe that if there is a reduction in nuclear forces in Europe, Norway's role as a defence partner in the NATO Alliance will become more important vis-a-vis the Russian submarine fleet that is presently off the Kola Peninsula. Norway would be first under seige with the outbreak of war and it is important that the NATO Alliance recognize the strategic importance of Norway and that Canada recognize the role it can play because we have been trained for winter war conditions.

In conclusion, I believe the primary debate will be about nuclear powered submarines. The Liberal Party is opposed to the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines for all of the reasons I have outlined in my speech.

The Government has yet to answer whether the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines will ultimately mean that at some point in the future Canada will be drawn into the U.S. maritime strategy which many military analysts believe will lead to a destabilization of the existing superpower standoff. The Soviet Union is afraid that an aggressive attack on their submarine fleet off the Kola Peninsula will mean that the Russians will be forced into first use of their nuclear weaponry.

I do not believe that Canadians want there to be any possibility of Canada's military establishment being drawn into the U.S. maritime strategy in dealing with the Soviet nuclear capabilities. That is one of the most important reasons why the Liberal Party wants to remain committed strongly to the defence of North America, to the defence of the western alliance, but we must remember that our long-term global defence security is best enhanced by the pursuit of international peace and international security.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too am happy to rise today to respond to the Minister's speech on the Government's White Paper on defence. I want to congratulate the Minister for finally delivering the Conservative Government's White Paper. It has been promised for three years by three Ministers. However, after hearing his statement, I must ask what has really changed, apart from the proposed purchase of the nuclear submarines.

This country waited through 16 years of Liberal neglect for this White Paper. During that time, the Liberals let our equipment degenerate. The Navy virtually rusted away. When the Tories took office they promised to address this problem. But they have not dealt candidly with the obvious problems on which all Canadians agree, that our Armed Forces are under equipped, will remain under equipped, and we believe over committed.

Instead of getting on with the job of modernizing our Armed Forces and giving them a realistic job, the Minister has leapt into a grand scheme for multi-billion dollar nuclear submarines. That does not address the commitment capability gap. Neither has the Minister recognized that the potential threat to Canada has changed substantially since the last White Paper. Canada's defence policy must change to deal with the new strategic environment.

Canada has become a very strategic piece of real estate. We are sandwiched between two superpowers who see the world engaged in a struggle between their two ideologies. Canada could become a theatre of superpower conflict.

Canadians have to face the reality that this superpower struggle forces on us. We are threatened by a nuclear war that would certainly involve Canadian territory, Canadian waters, and Canadian air space. Canada's goal is straightforward. We must use our strategic geography to prevent nuclear war. Canada's Armed Forces should first, protect Canadian territory and sovereignty, second, contribute to world peace and disarmament, and third, remain totally non-nuclear.

If we look at the contemporary situation and keep these principles in mind, a new role for the Armed Forces emerges. For example, Canada is potentially threatened by ICBMs based on Soviet territory and in Soviet submarines. They must be reduced by arms negotiations. Canada can support those negotiations in two ways. First, we must urge both superpowers to make deep cuts in their arsenals, and second, Canada should take no part in Star Wars.

The development of ballistic missile defences undermines the ABM Treaty and undermines the confidence we need to negotiate new missile reductions, especially in cruise missiles. I wish to remind the Minister that the ABM Treaty is the only international document extant that puts a cap on further development of nuclear weapons and nuclear weapons systems.

As Canada works for the reduction of nuclear missiles, we must make sure that other types of weapons do not proliferate. Again, there are two actions Canada should take. We should not test the American cruise missile or help develop any other nuclear weapon. Second, we should make certain that the Soviets could not launch a first strike with their cruise missiles across Canadian territory.

Canada can and should provide surveillance, warning, and interception of bombers in the northern half of North America, excluding Alaska. Fifty-two radar sites are being constructed across the North to provide detection and early warning of Soviet bombers armed with cruise missiles. The stations on Canadian territory should be staffed and controlled exclusively by Canadians, and Canada should have its own AWACS under Canadian command and control.

Canada also has enough CF-18s to provide a visible, credible deterrent to a bomber attack on North America. The CF-18 should be phased back to Canada and sent to air strips in the Arctic if the danger of an attack increases. Moreover, these forward-operating locations should also be selected, constructed, maintained and paid for exclusively by Canadians.

Instead of developing a sovereign defence for Canada, the Government has chosen to get more deeply involved in the American strategy through the Air Defence Initiative. This could tie Canada to Star Wars.

The build-up of the Soviet northern fleet also potentially threatens Canada with nuclear war. If the Soviet Navy cuts the supply lines to Europe, a conflict on that continent would quickly escalate to nuclear war. We must enhance that protection of those sea lines of communication to our friends in Europe. We would never abandon our friends in Europe.

The American response to this potential threat also threatens Canada. The U.S. Navy wants to engage the Soviets in their home waters. Their submarines may try to pass through the Canadian Arctic, undermining our claim to sovereignty. As the Minister knows, this is often referred to as horizontal escalation. It is the new maritime defence strategy of carrying the potential for nuclear war into the other side's territory.

Canada needs a balanced naval fleet to counter these threats. Our aging destroyers should be replaced with new patrol frigates. They must not fall victim to the Minister's mindless lust for nuclear submarines. Canada should also replace the Sea King helicopter so that the frigates can detect submarines. I and my colleagues in the Liberal Party are afraid that these nuclear subs could become part of that forward advanced U.S. fleet participating in what is called horizontal escalation, taking defence into offence in Soviet waters. Surely that is not our responsibility or task. We are not a superpower and should not have any delusions about that.

The surface fleet must be complemented by long-range patrol aircraft. The Conservatives piled new northern flights on the existing Auroras after the Polar Sea incident. New patrol aircraft should be ordered so that the Armed Forces can do this job properly. I commend the Government for recognizing its error. However, Canada should not purchase nuclear submarines because it would cost $10 billion. The Minister is dreaming in Technicolor if he thinks he can buy nuclear submarines for the cost of frigates. In fact, this purchase has cancelled the third batch of frigates. The second batch is subject to a Cabinet review in September. Fewer helicopters will be purchased and, of course, there will be no conventional submarines. Why? We have no evidence of Soviet submarines in the Canadian Arctic. American submarines might be present in the Arctic but Canada surely would not sink such an intruder. The political and environmental consequences would be disastrous.

What is the Minister proposing? He is proposing we spend up to $10 billion to protect our sovereignty against our closest ally. That is how it appears from this side of the House.

There are better ways to protect our sovereignty. We should put fixed sensors off our three coasts. They can monitor submarines without risking human life and the delicate Arctic environment. Icebreakers can provide a much more visible physical presence than nuclear submarines. We should build up our conventional submarine fleet. A combination of fixed sensors, air patrols, surface ships and conventional submarines can then track intruders as they pass through choke points and head for open waters. This balanced fleet—and I stress that it is a balanced fleet—would also greatly enhance the security of the waters off our east and west coasts.

The Americans have legitimate interest in knowing if we discover any Soviet activity in Canadian waters or air space. We should keep them informed so that the United States will not collect this information without regard for Canadian sovereignty, but we should not be drawn into an undersea NORAD.

No where is the commitment capability gap more evident than in mobile command. It is spread half way around the world by our commitment to reinforce Europe and our peacekeeping in Cyprus and the Middle East. But Canada cannot live up to this commitment. Just last week two experts told Canadians that our troops would not last two weeks in a war and that our presence in Germany is purely symbolic. It costs $1 billion a year to keep one brigade and some CF-18s in Germany for purely symbolic reasons. This is not to denigrate the men and women who are there in the Canadian Armed Forces. It is simply, however, political symbolism which does not make any military sense.

The Government could not bring itself to adjust our commitments to meet our capabilities. Instead, it cut a commitment, which existed only on paper, to send a brigade to Norway. It has now ordered a small increase to our symbolic commitment to Germany. Canada is now making one hollow promise instead of two.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, we could all be a little more honest. Canada should bring its commitments in line with its capabilities. We are not a major military power. We are a North American country with world-wide commitments in peacekeeping, disaster relief and rapid reinforcement to deter aggression. The predecessor of the New Democratic Party, the CCF, strongly supported the formation of NATO during those dark days in the late 1940s when the major potential fear was in the central flank. My present party, the New Democratic Party, also supported NATO strongly until the end of the 1960s. But in the 1940s and 1950s, Europe was in shambles. Its economies destroyed by war. It had virtually no capability to defend itself. We as a political movement and Party were prepared to share in the defence of western Europe.

Today, however, with nearly three hundred million people in western Europe and with countries reborn and remilitarized like the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the United Kingdom—and the latter two have their own nuclear arsenals—I ask if it makes any sense to over-commit our forces and keep them symbolically present in Europe at a time when the whole strategic architecture in terms of potential thrust has changed from the central flank in Europe to the Kola Peninsula, to the northern fleet of the Soviet Union, to the Barents Sea, the Norwegian Sea, the North Atlantic and the Canadian Arctic?

We are not the Federal Republic of Germany. We are not the United Kingdom and we are certainly not the United States. We can make our greatest commitment to defence here in the northern half of North America and in the protection of the sea lines of communication to re-supply our friends, our fellow democracies in western Europe, should we go to high alert or, heaven forbid, a shooting war.

Let there be no mistake, we have gone through the NATO commitment and we have come to the conclusion that where we belong today is not in a military alliance in Europe. We should be devoting all our resources to the northern half of North America under Canadian sovereignty and sovereign territory and in the north Atlantic.

In terms of mobile command, this will require a light transportable army. Canada should base its troops in Canada and upgrade our equipment, response time and effectiveness, starting with air transport. This would give Canada the real capability to reinforce another democracy faced with aggression. The Armed Forces would also be better equipped for peace-keeping.

A rapid response army would require rapid reinforcement from an upgraded reserve. We welcome the Minister's statement on reserves. The side and character of the reserve would be determined by the deployment plans, however, of the regular forces. But the reserves must become more than a job creation project or a mailing list, which is what it basically is presently.

The Canadian Armed Forces would assume a much more effective role under such a policy as I have outlined briefly this afternoon. They would protect Canadian sovereignty and territory. They would help reduce the threat of nuclear war. They would have a clear mandate that supports peace and disarmament. They would have realistic commitments and the capability to carry them out, and in performing these tasks the Armed Forces would give Canada greater sovereignty and security.

We are all hoping, as we have always hoped, and we are all praying, as we have always prayed, for peace. That must always be a primary goal.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all the questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

and on the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p. 5331).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 56 minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that the last speaker on the debate on April 28 was the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), a member of the Liberal Party. If the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) then that means there will be two Liberals in a row.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): My records show that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) was the last speaker in the debate. However, I will confirm that.

Yes, it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who had the floor last. He spoke for 22 minutes. He was the last Member to speak, and he is a member of the New Democratic Party. Therefore I feel that it is only fair that I should recognize the Hon. Member for Trinity.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) again I would like to say that prior to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) had the floor. Prior to him it was the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) who spoke.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, with most Bills and with the numbers we have in the House I think it is only fair that the speaking order should be a government Member followed by a member of the Opposition, and then a member of the Government and then a member of the Opposition. That is normally the way we have conducted debate in matters such as this. I feel that with the numbers we have in the House it is only just and fair that we proceed in the manner which I have outlined.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have had this problem before. There are times when the Chair cannot see a Member from another Party rising and therefore recognizes the Member who does rise. In this case I have recognized the Hon. Member for Trinity.

As debate goes on I will try to balance the numbers accordingly. The Chair will recognize those Members as the Chair sees them.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I remind the House that in this debate we are in a situation which is not at all comparable to a government Bill. What is before us is a motion put forward by the Government for the House to debate and on which a free vote will be held. I take it that we are not working on the basis of a government spokesman followed by a member of the opposition followed by a government spokesman but rather first come first served. If an Hon. Member happens to be standing in his place and no one else is standing then the Chair will recognize that Hon. Member on the basis of equity and on the basis of the free expression of thoughts on the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am not about to start to balance off who is speaking for or against the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: We are not asking that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) has anything to say in this regard then he can meet me in the room behind the chair at a later time and we can talk. I think we should carry on with debate.

Mr. Fennell: I would just like to thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to bring this matter to your attention, and I did. Your Honour has certainly satisfied my needs. I know that the Chair will treat the matter equitably. With respect to what was said by the Whip of the Official Opposition, I had in mind numbers in the House and that the order should be equitable in that respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair always has a difficult time trying to facilitate everyone in the Chamber. I will do everything possible to try to keep everyone happy. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Trinity on debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this really is a strange motion that we have before us. Indeed, as my Party Whip has just pointed out, it is a very unusual procedure with which we are faced. We have before us a motion standing in the name of the Government yet it is not to be treated as a government motion.

Essentially, the motion is to establish a committee which will hold public hearings based on the assumption that capital punishment is to be reintroduced, asking for suggestions about the best way to kill people. That sounds to me a gruesome topic for a parliamentary committee. We then learn that the report of this committee is to be voted upon somehow, that it is not a government motion, but that there will be a free vote held. It is indeed a strange proceeding.

Perhaps it is strange because it is indicative of just how very difficult this issue is. Capital punishment is an emotional issue. The Government was not prepared to take a position itself one way or the other but chose this rather extraordinary procedure as a way of meeting the wishes of those of its members who do want capital punishment reinstated.

I would like to say at the outset that the current debate about capital punishment is really a debate about how best to protect ourselves from violent crime. Canadians want and deserve protection for themselves, their families and their communities. I am not convinced that capital punishment is the answer. I think that there are many other methods that would be much more effective.

First, the vast majority of murders committed in Canada are domestic murders. They are committed by people who are related to each other or who know each other very well and who have some type of an emotional bond with each other. Many of these murders take place in association with alcohol intoxication or intoxication by other drugs. These domestic murders tend to be committed impulsively. In those circumstances there is no stopping to consider the consequences. Even those who say that the death penalty is a deterrent, which is questionable, would surely not say that it can be a deterrent if a person is intoxicated and/or enraged and not carrying on in a logical fashion.

To counter this tragic situation of domestic violence and domestic murder there are many measures that can be taken. For instance, there can be more prompt police response, which means being willing to spend a little more money on policing. There can be tighter controls instituted to minimize spur-of-the-moment purchase of firearms. Basically, something can be done with the whole social services infrastructure such as jobs and service to help remove the basic social problems that put families and individuals into stress and conflict.

A small number of murders in Canada are committed by mentally ill people who are not in touch with reality and who certainly would not be deterred by the prospect of capital punishment.

Then we come to murders committed under orders. Perhaps when people think of capital punishment they tend to think in terms of contract killings or armed robberies planned by criminals. These are the minority of murders, but these are the murders which perhaps represent the real risk to all of us.

The person who orders a murder often escapes punishment. It is true that we have laws that deal with conspiracy, but in the case of contract killings the paid killer does not usually reveal the name of his employer. All of us in the House have received information from time to time about persons who have ordered killings from their desk, in some cases from penitentiary, and have been able to go scot-free. Changes are needed to ensure prompt and effective apprehension and punishment of those who issue orders to kill.

I think we must look again at our rules of evidence. Our whole legal procedure was put in place when the death penalty was in place. All kinds of procedures were built in to avoid the awesome responsibility of an innocent person being put to death. This means that while it is reasonable that the onus of proof should be on the accuser, that the person should be presumed innocent until proven guilty, our procedures have gone so far that many people are saying that the procedures really favour the guilty, especially the guilty who have a lot of money and can afford to pay high priced legal help. I think there is a very good case to be made for reviewing all our legal procedures and the rules of evidence. In fact, I understand the Law Reform Commission has recently made some recommendations along those lines.

There are other matters which I think should be looked at, such as guidelines in respect of compensation for police informants and police protection of witnesses. Again I am speaking in the context of murders committed by criminals in the course of their criminal activities, where there is profit motive or a motive of vengeance and where paid killers are used.

I also happen to think that the Government should at this point institute a royal commission into organized crime which would recommend ways of eliminating violent crime from this source. I have a Private Member's Motion on this topic which has thus far had two hours of debate in the House. If we can ensure that the proceeds of organized crime are not used to infiltrate and influence our institutions, if we can prohibit the laundering of proceeds of organized crime through legitimate Canadian businesses, if we can remove some of the profit motive from organized crime, and if we can remove their trafficking in drugs, I think we will also be taking a major step forward in reducing murders.

I would like to see this kind of concentrated attempt to protect Canadians from violent crime. I think this would do very much more for Canadians than reinstating the death penalty and killing a few people after the event.

The last time we had a debate on capital punishment in the House was in May 1976. I took part in that debate, and at that time I reviewed the history of capital punishment in Canada. It is quite interesting to see some of the changes which have come about since then, but also to see what happens when we had capital punishment on the books.

Members will know that in 1967 the Government of the day, headed by Prime Minister Pearson, introduced and Parliament enacted a Bill to abolish the death penalty for a five-year trial period. In 1972 Parliament was faced with the option of extending that Bill or returning to the death penalty. The decision in early 1973 was to introduce a Bill for a further five-year extension, and this occurred. However, prior to that 1973 extension, and in fact prior to the 1967 Bill, there had been no executions in Canada since 1962, the reason being that most executions were commuted by the Governor General by Order in Council. Indeed, there is a very long tradition in Canada of commuting sentences.

The authority to commute sentences, including sentences of death, has existed since Confederation, in two ways; first, the ancient right of the Crown to grant mercy, a right which was transferred to the Governor General by letters patent in 1947 and, second, the statutory power of the Government of Canada. Even as far back as 1869 one finds mention in the statutes of Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

These powers, both the royal prerogative of mercy and the statutory power of the Government of Canada, were used extensively and, as I said, from 1962 there have been no executions in Canada.

As one looks at the history of capital punishment in Canada and in all civilized countries of the world, one is impressed by the procedural safeguards which exist all through the process of charging an individual with murder, the hearings, and the appeal system before the final sentence is passed. The meticulous carefulness of the procedures together with the use of commutation make it clear that from the time of Confederation onward Canadians have regarded the taking of life, even the life of a criminal and a murderer, as a serious and awesome responsibility; certainly not as a sentence or sanction to be applied routinely.

A professor of jurisprudence at Yale, Professor Black, wrote in his book Capital Punishment: The Inevitability of Caprice and Mistake:

> The Law of Moses is full of the death penalty. But as time went on the Court in ancient Jerusalem, without of course touching one syllable of this law, devised procedural safeguards so refined, so difficult of satisfying, that the penalty of death could only very rarely be exacted.

This is the point I am making; when we have capital punishment on the books, the state in a civilized country will have such procedural safeguards and extensive appeal procedures, and in the case of Canada, the right of commutation, all built in to protect against the risk of putting an innocent person to death. That is the case because, as somebody has aptly said, though the justice of God may indeed ordain that some should die, the justice of man is altogether and always insufficient for saying who those may be.

Capital punishment was considered as a last resort in the defence of society before we had statistical evidence to show that it is not a deterrent. The evidence seems to be, in all the countries that have abolished capital punishment, that murders do not increase. Of course talking about murders in the plural is always unsatisfactory because even if one person is killed that is one person too many. If I had any evidence to show that capital punishment would stop one person from murdering, then we would have to look at the debate again.

Self-defence has been an acceptable defence in our society for a long time, but to say that killing one person who has murdered will protect or prevent further murders is not held up by the evidence. By the same token, I do think that life sentences should mean a very long sentence and that our parole procedures need to be tightened. Parole should only be granted when there is clear and incontrovertible evidence that this person will not kill again. Prediction studies are not well developed. A lot of available information is not being used. That situation certainly has to improve. Again, I repeat, that I cannot see capital punishment as offering better protection to our society in any way.

A former commissioner of the Metropolitan Police in London, Sir Robert Mark, has made the argument that I made at the outset, which essentially is in three parts. To prevent what he called the "awful possibility" of putting an innocent person to death, procedural rules of interrogation and trial require an exceptionally high standard of proof of guilt and it naturally makes the task of prosecution difficult. People who have been involved in murder trials have also pointed out that juries are most reluctant to convict when the conviction will be followed by capital punishment and, in fact, there is more likelihood of a murderer walking away for this reason.

Sir Robert Mark's three points are:

> 1. To prevent the "awful possibility" of putting an innocent man to death, procedural rules of interrogation and trial require an exceptionally high standard of proof of guilt and it naturally makes the task of prosecution difficult;
> 2. One cannot have two systems of investigation and trial, one for the handful of capital murders, and another for the other two million offences recorded in England and Wales each year, and
> 3. Accordingly, the practical effect is inevitably to lessen extensively the effectiveness of the criminal law as a deterrent to crime or as a means of catching and, most important of all, convicting criminals.

In my view the most important deterrent is the certainty of capture and conviction, a certainty which I think is interfered with rather than aided by the existence of capital punishment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). Is she aware that if this House were to vote for this motion and restore the death penalty in Canada, Canada would be the only country in the western world, including Australia and New Zealand, to have the death penalty?

It is true that in the United States the decision of whether to have the death penalty is a state matter. Since the U.S. Supreme Court reversed its decision and permitted the death penalty in 1976, executions have been carried out in only 12 states. If we were to pass this motion, we would be the only country in the entire western world, including Australia and New Zealand, to have the death penalty.

Has the Hon. Member considered that fact, and does she think it is appropriate that in Canada where we pretend to be a civilized country that we should go in the opposite direction, in the direction of South Africa, Iran and some other countries, rather than following the principle set forth in those countries with which we have most in common, namely, western Europe and Australasia?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the information which the Hon. Member has adduced. I do not particularly wish to see Canada in company with countries like South Africa and Russia which have kept capital punishment. Indeed, as the Hon. Member points out, the countries with which we feel we have common ground on matters of public morality and public principle have long since abolished capital punishment.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I always listen to my colleague with a great deal of interest and that situation has not changed. I listened to her concern about the criminal element, what is happening and how perhaps we might change the end result with other policies. Does the Hon. Member have some observations with respect to family violence and the number of murders that occur in family situations?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for her question.

As I said at the outset, the vast majority of murders in Canada are family murders. They very often arise in connection with alcohol or drug abuse. They are impulsive murders done at a time of stress.

Basically what we need to do is provide more services to assist families. Certainly unemployment puts a lot of stress on families. While the Government appears to be very content with a 9 per cent unemployment rate even now five years after the recession, I certainly am not and the unemployed are not. There are other stresses on families too, including housing. All these matters should be addressed. Probably there should be much more concentration. Although we are a prosperous country, we do have families who are finding life very difficult economically and otherwise. We need to look at all our policies that are designed to reduce sources of stress and strain for families.

A faster response and better service in case of domestic quarrels is very important. We have all heard from police that they consider themselves more at risk going into a family quarrel situation than in many other situations. As a civilized country, we have to be prepared to put some money into training and resources in view of the fact that the vast majority of murders are family murders. As well, where the link comes in with organized crime is that so often these family murders are associated with drug abuse. We know who the people are who have a vested interest in encouraging drug abuse because there is a large profit motive for them, even if they are destroying families in the process.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware of a recent study completed in the month of April by Professor Kenneth Avio of the University of Victoria? The study found that when a Government resolves to execute its criminals, those who die come disproportionately from the ranks of the poor, the minorities and the powerless. After studying 440 capital murder cases which occurred in Canada between 1926 and 1957, he came to the conclusion that even if capital punishment were justified in principle, something which it is not, he says, the spectre of its uneven application would haunt all of us. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on the findings of Professor Avio.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular study, but I am aware of other studies which have reached the same conclusion. For instance, there was one edited by Thorsten Sellin and published by Harper & Rowe in 1966 which showed that capital punishment was disproportionately inflicted on black offenders during the period 1930 to 1965. There was another study done by Wolfgang, a comparison of the executed and the commuted among admissions to death row. This New York study done in 1962 showed that blacks convicted of murder were three times less likely to have death sentences commuted than white offenders convicted of the same offence.

I would suggest that this is not simply because of racism but because of low educational levels and poverty. These are the people who cannot afford to buy high-priced legal help or, as someone has said, to pay for the very high-priced legal fictions that enable the rich and in some cases the crime bosses to walk away from crime.

Mr. Friesen: M. Speaker, in her previous response to another Hon. Member, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) said that the Government was content with the 9 per cent unemployment rate. When has the Government ever expressed that?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it was as late as this morning in question time when the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) was congratulating himself on the Government's performance. I have yet to hear any Minister, when mentioning the unemployment rate in the House, express any conviction on the need to bring it down further. If the Hon. Member has heard such statements and I have missed them, I would be very pleased to have him tell me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated but I will allow a short question to be put by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, was that not an expression of pleasure in the improvement it brought to those who are now employed rather than unemployed as a result of the economic policies of the previous Government?

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, under other circumstances, I have great regard for the Hon. Member. However, for him to try to introduce this kind of thing into a debate of this kind is regrettable.

I repeat that we are into the fifth year of recovery and I do not think that a 9 per cent unemployment rate in the fifth year of recovery is anything of which to be proud.

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I present my views on this motion with some mixed emotions. While I feel it is important to speak out, I find it unfortunate that it has become necessary to do so.

I begin by saying that I am a very proud Canadian. It has been my privilege along with my family to have lived in five of our provinces, to have travelled the length and breadth of our country, visiting each and every one of our provinces and the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

As well, I have lived in three other countries and I have lived in three of the southern States of the United States. I lived there in the late 1950s when the black citizens of that country could not sit on the park benches, could not use public water fountains and could not sit at the front of the bus. It was indeed a sad time in the history of that great nation. I personally felt offended by that visible slight to others, by man's inhumanity to man, and I felt proud to be a Canadian. I was proud of what our country represented and what our people represented in that this sad state of affairs was not representative of my country.

I have lived as well along with my family in Syria and Israel. We witnessed strife and war and hatred. As we travelled in these two countries and throughout western and a part of eastern Europe, we were always pleased to be recognized as Canadians because Canada represents something to free people and those people who are less than free throughout the world.

I now ask myself, what league is it that Canada wants to join, what strange, unique club among the civilized nations of the world that condone capital punishment, that say it is all right for the state to take a life because it does not respect the dignity of life or the dignity of man? Is this what we have now evolved to as Canadians? Is this the legacy that I will be passing on to my children and my children's children? Is this what I was elected for, to tell the state that it can take a life, it can kill, because I do not respect the dignity of man? I say no, not now, not ever.

I have not come by this decision easily or lightly. I have worn the uniform of our country for over 30 years. I have served at sea, on land and in the air. I was prepared to take life because I was trained to do just that, and I would like to think that if it had become necessary, I was prepared to give my life because I feel that anyone who wears the uniform of his country must in fact be prepared to do just that.

Last summer the good people of my riding, which is small in population, were horrified and frightened by four separate incidents of assault, rape and murder. On a per capita basis, it was comparable to anything happening in any of our major centres. It was easy to think of revenge, it was easy to think of vengeance, and it was easy to want to lash out and strike back. I knew that given these incidents, the majority of the people would support me if I voted in favour of capital punishment.

Although we have been touched by violence, we are not a violent society. As I studied this issue, as I listened to parents who lost loved ones, who wrote to ask me not to vote in favour of reinstatement, as I looked at the statistics, I realized that capital punishment was no deterrence to murder.

Since 1962, the year of the last execution in Canada, there has been no increase in first degree murder. Indeed, with the introduction of capital punishment there is a great danger, a great fear that criminals could be found guilty of a lesser crime and be out on the streets much earlier.

On that last point, a report by the research and statistics group of the secretariat of the Solicitor General dealt with this question in a report prepared in October, 1985, called "Questions and Answers on Capital Punishment". The question asked therein was, does the death penalty lead to a higher proportion of acquittals for murder because juries are reluctant to sentence a person to death? The report concluded there is evidence to suggest that the death penalty exercises an inhibitory effect on judges and juries. It cites, for example, a study by the British Home Office which found that jurors were reluctant to convict in capital cases and that findings of guilt would have been entered in some cases in the absence of the death penalty.

An American study dating from 1909, which compared conviction rates in states having capital punishment and states which did not, found conviction rates higher in the latter. In 1968 an Australian study made similar findings. It also makes reference to Canadian research which found that between 1881 and 1967 the conviction rate for murder was the lowest for all crimes of violence.

The report makes the following tentative conclusions. Although other theories might explain this phenomena, it is possible that juries were reluctant to convict on a charge of murder when it was a capital offence. It is possible that jurors are more willing to convict for murder since the abolition of the death penalty.

Finally, I have to advise that in my heart and soul I cannot, from a moral standpoint, in a planned and premeditated manner, vote to take a person's life. We cannot hide behind the mask of the executioner. To my mind the executioner will now be the man or woman who votes in favour of taking a life. It will be his or her hand on the lever, his or her finger on the button, his or her hand holding the needle. If this goes through we can never say, forgive them, Father, for they know not what they do. We do know what we are doing. We cannot and must not place ourselves in that minority league of nations who still carry out this barbaric act. We cannot and must not leave the good company of those civilized countries such as Britain, France, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden and Italy, the list goes on, who have abolished state killing.

In the words of Arthur Maloney, the death penalty is not the answer to the problem of crime and of criminals. Crime has its cause and crime has its cure. Its causes are clear. They can be stated like a litany. They are poverty, slums, broken homes, drunkenness, divorce, lack of opportunity and lack of education. Those are the causes of crime.

In a booklet produced by The Criminal Lawyers Association of Ontario it is noted that psychiatrists tell us that those who were abused as children are more likely to become child abusers themselves when they become parents. When they were children our hearts went out to them for the trauma they suffered and for what such abuse must have done to their minds. Yet when they become what we knew they had a good chance of becoming, child abusers or even child killers, we want their death. We were not prepared to give them the time, the attention, the resources or help when they needed it. We want to wait and with vengeance repay the death to society.

Of the many letters I received on this matter I do not believe any touched me deeper than the one I received from Lesley Parrott, the mother of 11-year old Alison who was abducted and murdered last July. She said the death of her daughter more than ever convinced her that as a society we cannot ever and must not ever condone killing, whether by state or individual, in any shape or form. Let the message be clear and unconditional: Human life is sacred and killing is always wrong.

We know capital punishment is not a deterrence. We know there has been a decrease in homicides and first degree murder charges. We have to ask ourselves why, why, why are we going through with this absurdity? Is it vengeance? Is that what is in our hearts? Can you imagine what kind of world we would be living in today if we had bowed to that most vulgar of passions, vengeance, after World War II? Where would we be today if everyone who lost a father, an uncle or a brother cried out for vengeance in the hour of victory? There would have been no Marshall plan, no reconstruction of Europe, no transformation in Asia. We would have lost our sense of humanity and our reason for living.

In dealing with this question we must understand and appreciate the underlying fears of Canadians, the concern that our justice system is too lenient, the concern that our parole system is too lax, the fear that those convicted of brutal crimes will all too soon be back on the streets, neither repentant nor rehabilitated. These concerns have to be addressed. The fears must be allayed.

When I say we are not a violent society, we must not then permit ourselves to become a violent society. In my own riding after the horrible experience of last summer good people who would never have thought of it before, never considered it before, were out buying hand-guns. These people are not vigilantes. The gun is no doubt more dangerous to them than to would-be intruders or assailants. But they were fearful. Fearful that they were no longer protected, that our judicial system, our penal system had failed them and let them down.

There are over 70 million hand-guns in the U.S., more than one for every family living there. This figure is expected to grow to over 100 million by the end of this century. There is only one kind of animal you hunt with a hand-gun, the two-legged kind. Violence begets violence.

What is the solution? We can begin with the Archambault commission. Is it fair to society when those who have offended society, who have forfeited every right to the freedoms and privileges which law-abiding citizens should enjoy are all too soon back on the streets? Does a life sentence mean behind bars for 10 or 15 years? I think not. Society thinks not.

I began by saying that I was a proud Canadian. We are proud Canadians. The countries of the world do look to our just and rational society. They want to follow our moral compass. We are not the greatest country in the world, only the best. Laurence Grafstein in one of his articles spoke of Canada's tolerant tradition and humane values. Patrick O'Callaghan has said that a country must be seen by reason and logic, not by age and artificially nurtured passion. That is true. That is the tradition of Canada, to follow the path of logic and reason.

Let us put this sad motion behind us, Mr. Speaker. Let us bury it in the past once and for all. Let us get on with the affairs of state that have made and will continue to make our country, Canada, the best place on earth to live.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I continually hear the statistics from abolitionists that murders are down. I find it strange that they do not mention the Air India disaster in which 329 people were murdered. If a person or persons are cold-blooded enough to put a bomb on an aircraft their plan is to murder everyone aboard that aircraft. I would have no hesitation to execute a person or persons who would do such a cruel thing as that.

Statistics also show that attempted murders are up 939 per cent. Those are tremendous figures. The reason that there are not more deaths as a result of attempted murders is because of advanced medical technology, paramedics, use of protective clothing, et cetera. Rather than the murder rate being down, there has been a tremendous increase.

I find that abolitionists have no sympathy for and make no comment about prison guards. Prison guards have been murdered in my province by convicted murderers. Since 1977 at least 20 people have been murdered inside federal prison walls by convicted murderers. I would not want to be guarding a person who would put a bomb aboard a plane to murder 329 people. I would not want to turn my back on such a person or be near them for a second. Prison guards are being put in an awful position.

In July, 1982, three prison guards were murdered—one by hanging—by men who were convicted of first degree murder in killings of policemen. In July, 1985, Celia Ruygrok was murdered in Ottawa by a convicted rapist and killer on parole. In October, 1986, Linda Ray was murdered in Belleville by a convicted murderer on parole. How does my hon. friend justify to his constituents murderers who murder a second time? That fact must be considered, as must prison guards.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I think we must differentiate between a murderer and an act of terrorism. It is a sad commentary that the small country of Ireland still has terrorism taking place on a daily, weekly and monthly basis. Capital punishment is on the books of that country but I believe, and I stand to be corrected, that the last time anyone was executed in Ireland was in 1954.

We are all concerned about the role that prison guards and policemen have to protect society. However, the fact is that the number of killings of police and prison guards has declined while the number of prison guards and police has increased. When prison guards and policemen accept their vocation they do so knowing that they could very well be faced with violence. It is interesting to note that their on-the-job death rate is much lower than that of many other vocations such as military pilots, miners, construction workers, et cetera. Therefore, I do not think that is a fair statistic.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to my colleague, the Member for Northumberland—Miramichi (Mr. Jardine). I would like to preface my remarks by saying that I very much appreciated the thoughtful and reasoned arguments which he put forward. With respect, I come to a different conclusion.

I would like to question my colleague on one of the points which he used to buttress his argument in favour of the abolitionist position, that being his reference to certain other countries which we should either imitate or emulate. Amnesty International has put out information which indicates that there are presently 28 countries in the world that do not provide the death penalty for any crime whatsoever. There are another 18 countries in which the death penalty has been abolished for ordinary crimes, but has been retained for certain circumstances such as war time and military law. There are another 129 countries, including Belgium, the United States, China and Japan in which the death penalty is available for ordinary crimes.

My hon. friend and the preceding speaker made reference to certain other supposedly civilized countries in the western world that have done away with the death penalty, and said that Canada should do so as well. I must say that I am somewhat confused by this. I note that among the 28 countries whose laws do not provide the death penalty for any crime whatsoever are Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Honduras and Nicaragua. In putting this position forward is the Hon. Member suggesting that Canada's system of justice should lean more towards that of Nicaragua and the Dominican Republic or, having regard to that which has taken place over the centuries, in countries such as the United States, China and Japan?

I would very much appreciate it if the Hon. Member would explain to me why we in Canada should feel obliged to emulate those few countries with less than 10 per cent of the population in the world which do not choose to have capital punishment.

• (1410)

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his kind remarks. I know that he includes Belgium as one of the countries that has capital punishment on the books. While I may have the year incorrect, I believe the last time an execution actually took place in Belgium was either in 1954 or 1945.

The Hon. Member who spoke previously pointed out that capital punishment in the United States is a state responsibility and, unfortunately, the southern states tend to carry out capital punishment on those in a minority.

There are some 129 countries that still have capital punishment on the books, but I would have to ask my hon. friend how many of those countries have democratically elected governments? How many of those countries are civilized, as we recognize civility? How many of those countries would we actually want to emulate and compare with our society? I suggest that there are very few.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this ill-timed government motion in favour of bringing back the death penalty, I want to say I oppose it for the same basic reasons that other Hon. Members who have spoken on this side of the debate have opposed it.

First, capital punishment does not serve as an effective deterrent against murder. It tends to be administered selectively so that a disproportionate number of poor people or members of visible minorities are executed. Third, there is always the possibility of executing someone unjustly convicted of murder. Fourth, there is a documented tendency for juries to acquit a much higher percentage of accused murderers when the death penalty is present. Thus, society has less protection when the death penalty is in place than when it is abolished and juries convict a higher percentage of accused murderers. Taken together, I believe these four reasons provide a solid, pragmatic foundation for voting against the death penalty.

However, I think our opposition to the death penalty has to move beyond pragmatism, to ask what kind of society we want and how we can help to build it. In the debate so far there has been a great deal of reference to scripture. I want to begin with some reflections on a very interesting passage of scripture, the One Hundred and Thirty-Seventh Psalm, which begins as an expression of homesick longing by a Jew who is in exile in Babylon:

> By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

The Psalm goes on to consider how his own people had been destroyed and devastated and how his city had been destroyed. It reads:

> Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.

The Psalm goes on:

> Oh daughter of Babylon, you devastator! Happy shall he be who requites you with what you have done to us!

What follows is perhaps the most terrible verse in all of scripture:

> Happy shall he be who takes your little ones and dashes them against the rock!

We have heard a fair amount of talk about the Judaeo Christian ethic, but I am sure that these verses coming from the scriptures of both Jews and Christians shock the sensibilities of every one of us. They testify to the anguish, the despair, the deadening of mercy that wanton violence can bring about in the life of a person who is otherwise sensitive and caring.

This kind of violence and therefore this kind of vengeance is far removed from the daily experience of most people in Canada. Perhaps it might make more immediate sense in Lebanon, Kampuchea, Afghanistan, Central America or Northern Ireland. We cannot imagine the kind of inner anguish that would lead an otherwise sensitive person to say,

"Blessed is the man who takes your babies and beats their brains out against a rock". Yet, as I read these verses, I am convinced not only that they are diametrically opposed to everything that is best about Judaism and Christianity, even though they are in our Holy Scripture, but also that these verses are pathetically honest and even understandable in the context of a violent world.

What do these words have to do with the return of the death penalty to Canada in 1987? The connection lies in the sense of anguish and outrage that people feel at the time of some particularly vicious murder, especially one involving the sexual assault of children. Murders like that leave us feeling somehow unclean, as though our own humanity were under attack, just from hearing or reading about them. We want to assert our own humanity by denying any connection with the murderer. How can we possibly share any sense of humanity with a diseased creature who perpetrates that kind of an act? It raises the question, what must it be like for the immediate family of the victims?

Looking at these words from the One Hundred and Thirty-Seventh Psalm, 2,500 years after they were written, and living in the relative security of a country like Canada, we know that these words fall tragically short of what is required to put an end to the cycle of violence and hatred which destroys the lives of helpless children. We can understand the desire for vengeance but we cannot agree that it represents justice.

In a literal sense, these verses from Psalm One Hundred and Thirty-seven are simply an extension of the lex talionis from the twenty-fourth chapter of Leviticus which says:

> He who kills a man shall be put to death. He who kills a beast shall make it good, life for life. When a man causes a disfigurement in his neighbour, as he has done it shall be done to him, fracture for fracture, eye for eye, tooth for tooth; as he has disfigured a man, he shall be disfigured. He who kills a beast shall make it good and he who kills a man shall be put to death.

These words represent a surrender, rather than a solution to evil and violence.

The depth of suffering on the part of victims should warn us that we have no right to extend easy forgiveness to murderers. That adds insult to injury as far as the victims are concerned. Perhaps the families of murder victims can find it in their hearts to forgive the murderer, and I hope that they can, but that is their business, not ours. It is not something that society can do on behalf of the families.

We need to find another approach, somewhere between this false desire for vengeance and the equally false idea that society can forgive. Perhaps we should begin with our concept of justice. How do we achieve justice in a world where murder, assault and violence shatter innocent lives and communities?

We sometimes picture justice as a blindfolded woman holding balance scales in her hand on which the merits of each case are to be weighed in an impartial way. This concept of blind justice operates without fear or favour on the basis of an impartial standard determined by law. In the administration of law, this impartiality has some very obvious merits. But we all know that it falls woefully short of providing full justice in many cases.

All of us as Members of Parliament have been involved in tax cases or immigration cases where a strict application of the law or regulation would lead to greater injustice. All of us have intervened with Ministers, asking them to get involved in specific cases so that justice would not be blind but would be wise and compassionate.

The biblical understanding of justice involves much more than blind impartiality. Rather, the spirit of God intervenes for good in human affairs and human beings are invited to share in that work. Sometimes the most unlikely human beings play the greatest role in bringing about justice. We should remember that Moses began his career by murdering an Egyptian foreman who had been beating an Israelite slave. Later Moses was a fugitive slave, running because he feared the death penalty. But then he became the person who freed the people of Israel from slavery in Egypt.

Certainly, the Bible speaks of retribution and there are many situations in addition to murder where the Bible calls for the death penalty. Blasphemy (Leviticus 24:16) requires death by stoning. The daughter of a priest who played the harlot was to be burned according to Leviticus 21.:9. Sorcery, bestiality and false worship (Exodus 22:18) and contempt of court (Deuteronomy 17: 8-12) all called for the supreme penalty, as did selling a fellow Israelite into slavery (Deuteronomy 24:7). Being a stubborn and rebellious son or a non-virgin bride (Deuteronomy 21:18 and Deuteronomy 22) called for the death penalty. Deuteronomy, Chapter 20 called for the death penalty for the male inhabitants of any fortified city who had the temerity to resist invasion by the Israelites.

These examples come from a very early and primitive stage of Israel's development and its understanding of God. While the great ethical and spiritual prophets of Israel and Judah still believed in retribution, their vision of God's spirit and justice went far beyond retribution. They saw God as patient and long suffering with human evil and shortcomings, moving beyond retribution and punishment to restoration, new life and a new society.

Jesus radicalized the law by pushing it to its logical extreme. Jesus said that looking at a person with lust was committing adultery in the heart. He condemned not just murder but the contempt which destroyed another person's self-image by calling them a fool. Which of us has not been guilty of that kind of contempt of other people, particularly in this House of Commons?

In doing this, Jesus was really underlining the human solidarity we all share, even with those who commit murder. He said the way in which we treat one another with contempt, robbing another person of his or her sense of themselves as an important human being, is really equivalent to murder. So we all share a certain solidarity even with those who commit murder. This should lead us away from a situation where we judge and condemn our brothers and sisters but remain blind to our own involvement in evil.

Jesus explicitly rejected the lex talionis by saying:

> You have heard that it was said: "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" but I say onto you, do not resist one who is evil.

Jesus urged us to imitate the goodness of God who makes the "sun to rise on the evil and the good and sends rain on the just and the unjust". All of this suggests to me a biblical understanding of the justice which moves far beyond retribution. The biblical concept of justice depends on an understanding of God's spirit working in and through human lives in spite of their grievous imperfections to create a better society. If this spirit does not give up working with us, then we are not to give up working with others.

Justice, then, is not an abstract impartiality but a living, dynamic spirit which seeks to operate in all of our lives for the creation of a new society. In varying ways we co-operate with that spirit or we impede it.

We need to bring our treatment of crime and wrongdoing and criminals into line with our understanding of the way that spirit works. Wherever possible, there should be rehabilitation of the criminal, bringing him or her back into a positive relationship with society. In minor crimes we note the positive attempts of some diversion programs. I have seen situations where people convicted of very serious crimes have had the opportunity to work with children with special needs and have been able to accomplish some very important things. In a very real sense they were able to pay their debt to society.

In conclusion I want to speak about the situation of criminals who cannot be rehabilitated and cannot be returned to a positive role in society. These people are beyond our best efforts and intentions. I think particularly of those diseased human beings who become sex criminals, those who have murdered while assaulting or molesting another person. In many cases, the roots of their disease go too deep to allow us any hope of rehabilitation, certainly at the present time. People can ask would it not be expedient to at least allow the death penalty for these people? The answer must be continue to be no. The death penalty evades the problem rather than deals with it. It camouflages our failure to find a constructive way to deal with these tragic and diseased human beings. All the arguments I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks also apply here. For that reason, I support the present law, imperfect as it is, which says that these people should be imprisoned for 25 years without the possibility of release.

We admit a sense of failure with these people but we at least keep the options open. We are continuing to testify to the fact that human life is valuable and I urge Hon. Members to consider the total picture of the kind of society we want to build, how we are going to build it, and to remember that violence itself, the taking the life of another person, cannot build that kind of society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

Mr. Heap: May I ask a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will go back to questions and comments. I asked for questions and comments and I did not see anyone rising. I would hope Hon. Members would rise a little faster. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) on a question or comment.

Mr. Heap: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was rising right when you spoke but you were looking the other way. I simply want to ask the Hon. Member if he would deal with the question which was raised a few moments ago by another Hon. Member with respect to the situation in a prison in which there are convicted murderers. There have been indications where they have murdered a second time, that is, by murdering a prison guard. I do not know if there is any significance in statistics as to the danger rate for prison guards as compared to police or other people in dangerous occupations, but my concern is for the remedial approach the Hon. Member has very powerfully advocated. Has he any comment as to how he can pursue that remedial approach with the least possible danger to the people whom we employ and empower to be directly and physically responsible for the care or custody of those people?

I know it is a very large question because it involves the question of our whole prison and reform system. However, could the Hon. Member comment on the immediate sort of question which was raised about a half hour ago?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Spadina that the Chair can only see when it sees someone rise. I noticed very carefully that you were sitting right next to the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands and you were not rising. I do not wish to disagree or argue with the Hon. Member, but I would hope that he would let the Chair decide who is going to ask questions and who is not, and not argue with the Chair because there was no necessity for that.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I think we are dealing here with a very important and sensitive question. The murder of a policeman or prison guard, particularly a prison guard, by someone who is already serving a sentence for murder, is something which has to be of concern to all of us.

• (1430)

At the same time, once we put it into context, we see that there are other occupations in Canada which have a much higher incidence of death than the occupation of prison guard. However, that does not relieve us from dealing with this very serious problem.

I think what we need are better standards of diagnosis so that when people are serving time for murder they should be available for study, for testing and diagnosis, not simply when they come into the prison system but on a regular basis. In this way if they are dangerous then that can be pinpointed and extra-special precautions can be taken.

In the interests of society as a whole, in the interests of creating a society in which people can feel free to walk the streets, we need to continue the effort in our prisons to rehabilitate people. In fact, we have to increase our efforts in that direction. Rehabilitation cannot simply take a second place to our fear of certain criminals. When there are criminals who have very clear dangerous tendencies then protection has to take first place. But we cannot as a blanket policy say that rehabilitation should take second place. I think that we have always to keep rehabilitation at the forefront of our criminology procedures. Where there is very clear evidence that someone is dangerous, then extra protection has to be called for.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say how much I appreciated some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) in his address, particularly those with respect to reminding other Hon. Members of how scripture can be used and misused. He rightly quoted passages that would not be welcome by everyone in the House, whether they support capital punishment or decry it. I hope that his message will also be taken to heart by those who oppose capital punishment, by those who have their favourite text to quote, including, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do", which is a particular favourite. They might fully comprehend the wisdom of his remarks and understand scripture not in terms of citing this verse or quoting that text but in dealing with larger themes.

In that connection I was also impressed by the way in which the Hon. Member dwelt upon the whole subject of deterrence and the difficulty with which society has been able to deter murder, regardless of what penalty has been invoked. The point which needs considerable emphasis is that, yes, societies that have had capital punishment have not eliminated murder. That is true. Societies that have not had it have not eliminated murder, which is true as well. Societies that have been rich have not eliminated murder. Indeed, societies with socialist governments have not eliminated murder either. It is possible that there is no deterrent that any Parliament or Government can devise that will eliminate murder. What we have to do is focus on the real nub of the issue, I submit, which is whether or not capital punishment is just or unjust.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that scripture has to be taken into its total context and one cannot pick out proof text to prove one thing or another. We must look at the total thrust of where scripture is going and what the biblical concept of justice is. I think that it is leading us toward trying to build a non-violent society. So the concept of justice that we are working for is a concept of justice that works for non-violence.

When we look at the statistics in the short run there can be debate; one can look at one state or one country and say that in this place they had capital punishment and the murder rate went up. It can be said that in other places capital punishment was abolished and murder rates went down, or vice versa. In the long run I think the Member opposite would agree with me that violence begets violence. Those who take the sword will perish by the sword. I do not say that as a proof text but rather as illustrative of a general truth that violence does indeed beget violence.

How can we create a non-violent society? How can we create a peaceful society when we feel that we have the right to take the lives of certain people because they have violated the norms of society? I think that if we have as a concept of justice not an impartial weighing of offences but, rather, the concept of a dynamic movement toward the kind of society that we all want, then the kind of justice we want will see the death penalty as being unjust.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) on debate.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I was one of those people who went into the last election campaign torn between the desire to protect the innocent victims of crime and my very real concerns over the effect I felt executions would have on the heart, the soul and the spirit of our country. During the last election campaign I said that I was not in favour of general reinstatement of the death penalty but that I wanted to know whether the death penalty would deter the killings of police officers and prison guards. I believe that these men and women taking special risks to defend the rest of us against violent crime and violent criminals deserve in return whatever protection and assistance we can give them and their families, the families they may leave behind when they die in our service. If it could be determined that the death penalty deterred killings of law enforcement officers and prison guards, I pledged to support its reinstatement in those limited circumstances.

Since then I have spent many long days and nights thinking about this, thinking about my feelings, my conscience, my attempts to grasp the nature of the problem, batting it back and forth by reading news reports about public opinion, the rising numbers of homicides and the falling murder rates. I have seen the conflicting claims on deterrence, the reports about the death rows of convicted criminals executed in the United States and the horrifying, enraging stories of innocent people dying at the hands of murderers in Canada.

I resolved some time ago that I owed my constituents, my colleagues in this House and my conscience more than a superficial review of press reports, more than a reading of public opinion polls or a response to organized letter-writing campaigns. I resolved to go beyond these reports, to go directly to the very large number of detailed studies by criminologists, sociologists and economists, which have dealt with the relationship between the death penalty and murder.

I believe that in dealing with an issue of such profound importance we have an obligation as parliamentarians to look past the necessary superficiality of reports in the popular news media. I spent the last several weeks carefully seeking out and reviewing studies on both sides of the question. I cannot claim or pretend to have reviewed everything that has been published on this topic. However, I have examined more than two dozen serious studies representing both the abolitionists and the retentionists points of view, following the trail of research references from article to the next.

If you will excuse the presumption, Mr. Speaker, I believe the material I have reviewed is highly representative of the existing studies available on this subject. All of the references to research studies to which I will be referring can be found in a document entitled: "The Death Penalty, Deterrence and Retribution: An Annotated Bibliography", which I have prepared and deposited in the Library of Parliament.

The primary arguments in favour of execution are three—deterrence, incapacitation, and retribution. It is, I might say in passing, a macabre fact that rehabilitation does not enter into this debate.

If I could be convinced of the unique deterrent effect of executions, I would be inclined to support their reinstatement. If executions were the only means to incapacitate criminals, I would be inclined to support their reinstatement. If I could be sure that vengeance would affect only the guilty and no one else, I might be inclined to support reinstatement of the death penalty.

There are six issues which will affect my vote on this issue: the efficacy of the death penalty as a deterrent, the possibility of direct and immediate risks posed to society through the demonstration effect of executions, the effect which the death penalty has on juries, risks to the innocent, the issue of retribution, and finally the availability of alternative courses of action.

The issue of deterrence is the most important one I think we have to address. If in fact it could be demonstrated that execution was a unique deterrent, that it provided a deterrent effect which other punishments such as imprisonment did not present, that innocent lives would be saved by executing people convicted of murder, then the issue would be clear, and some other risks judged acceptable.

Superficial common sense tells us that the possibility of execution should deter murderers. The deterrence theory assumes that people rationally calculate the benefits and the risks of their actions, carefully weighing the net gain or loss. However, common sense also tells us that most murderers are not rational when they commit their crimes. If they were afraid of death, they would be more worried about their much greater chance of being killed by police or the civilian population during the course of their crime than about execution.

Clinton Duffy, a former warden of San Quentin prison, is reported to have asked thousands of prisoners convicted of murder, or armed robbery, whether they had ever thought about the death penalty before committing their offence. No one had done so. However, I think it is fair to say that this type of anecdotal evidence is not convincing. Anecdotes and raw, unanalysed data can be twisted to support any argument.

It is for this reason that criminologists, sociologists, and economists have turned to more sophisticated statistical analysis to isolate the effects which executions have on murder rates. Their attempt has been to provide empirical, verifiable evidence about whether and how executions affect murder; what happens in fact, not in theory. Any of us who are genuinely interested in the effects of the death penalty on murder and are not simply going through the motions in this debate should pay attention to this research. It may be dry, but I would submit that it is useful and important.

Economists in particular, beginning in 1975, have had a profound effect on modern thinking about deterrence and on the decisions of several of the United States to resume executions. These researchers have turned to what they call multivariate statistical analysis, which is the use of economic models, and regression analysis, to determine how a host of different variables—the age and ethnic composition of the population, poverty and unemployment rates, seasonal variation in weather, general crime and execution rates, and a number of other factors—interact with each other to affect murder.

The most famous of these studies, and by far the most controversial, was a study published by Isaac Ehrlich in the American Economic Review in 1975. This study, entitled "The Deterrent Effect of Capital Punishment: A Question of Life and Death", examined murder rates in the United States between 1933 and 1969.

Ehrlich used an economic model for behaviour of murderers, suggesting that they did balance advantages and disadvantages of their actions. He came to the conclusion that what he called the "pure deterrent effect" of executions on murders was in the range of one execution deterring seven or eight murders.

These results were literally sensational, and his study was cited in attempts to have the United States Supreme Court reinstate the death penalty in the United States. It is a study which still has an effect on the thinking of some people, including perhaps some of my colleagues in the House.

I will not go into detail on the debate which followed publication of the study, but there have been several dozen subsequent econometric analyses of murder rates in the last 12 years. Anyone in this Chamber who is planning to use the Ehrlich results, or who believes that deterrence is a demonstrated fact, should know that only a handful of studies support his findings.

In fact, the Ehrlich study was severely criticized by other researchers who claimed that his statistical methods were simplistic and inadequate for the complex series of relationships involved.

A large number of other researchers attempted to replicate and verify Ehrlich's findings, some using the same data he used, others using new and more extensive information on murder rates, and almost all using more sophisticated models and statistical methods. In fact, the issue was so controversial that the American National Academy of Sciences created a special panel on research on deterrent and incapacitative effects of punishment to review the different studies. The panel's conclusions supported the overwhelming body of research which has appeared since 1975. There is no evidence to support the contention that executions deter murder.

Representative of the many, many studies which have found no deterrent effect, in fact about 90 per cent of all research done, are the comments of Dane Archer, Rosemary Gartner, and Marc Beittel, writing in the Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology in 1983. They conducted an analysis of murder and executions in 14 countries including Canada. They came to the following conclusion:

> Other justifications for the death penalty can and presumably will be debated, but the deterrence hypothesis must be regarded at this time as scientifically insupportable—

William C. Bailey's statistical investigation of the relationship between killings of police officers and executions in the United States between 1961 and 1971 concluded that the death penalty offered no protection to police officers.

Ezzat A. Fattah, writing in the Canadian Journal of Criminology, reviewed a large number of deterrence studies, including 10 which dealt specifically with the effect of executions on murders of law enforcement officers. He also came to the conclusion that there was no evidence that the death penalty protected law enforcement officers.

These studies also indicate that the abolition of the death penalty does not result in an increase of violence within penitentiaries where convicted murderers are sent to serve their sentences.

As Members of Parliament we cannot rely on intuition for our judgment on this issue. We cannot afford to ignore the empirical evidence available to us. Deterrence is a utilitarian argument, one which must have demonstrable effects to be valid. Such an argument, as opposed to, say, the argument for revenge, demands evidence, and that evidence is not there.

I think we have as well an obligation to use the research resources available to us as Members of Parliament to test our preconceptions against reality, to bring our own intelligence and capacity for critical judgment into play, to inform our constituents, and not to just respond to them.

Let me move to the second issue which has affected my vote, that is, the question of the risks posed to society by the death penalty. Not only is there no demonstrated deterrent effect for the death penalty, there is good evidence to suggest that executions actually provoke murders which would not otherwise have occurred. This ominous possibility must be of concern to even the strongest proponents of the death penalty.

Several reputable studies, investigating the short-term deterrent effects of execution on murder rates, have found that the murder rate actually rose significantly in the weeks and months immediately following an execution. Among the chilling results of this research it was found that in several states where data was analyzed, such execution appeared to account for between one and two additional murders in the weeks following.

In South Carolina, an estimated 24 murders were directly tied to executions over a 10 year period. In New York State, one investigation of murder rates between 1907 to 1963 found that on average each execution accounted for an additional two murders in the month after the execution, which were definitely tied to the execution. Another study in Chicago also found a significant increase over a five year period in both first degree murders and general homicides following each execution.

This has come to be called the brutalization effect. Far from deterring murders, executions appear to legitimize the idea that death is justified for people who have gravely offended us.

Executions provide a savage example of how the state, with all of its resources, feels it must solve its problems. If some murderers are people who feel humiliated, betrayed or dishonoured, is it any wonder that they borrow the state's methods to solve their problems? But whatever the psychology behind the effect may be, the effects are nonetheless established, executions increase the risk to innocent people by provoking murders.

I would like my colleagues to consider this evidence carefully. It is possible, of course, to ignore this, just as it is possible to ignore the evidence on deterrence. But those who do so will bear a terrible responsibility for the effects of their judgment on the innocents who may die as a result of it. The dangers to innocent people do not end with the brutalization effect.

My third concern lies in the effect of the death penalty on juries. Several reputable studies, some already cited in this debate, have indicated that juries are reluctant to convict when the death penalty is in effect. A recent study in Ontario indicated that members of juries in 29 of 32 cases where defendants were convicted of murder, have said they would have been reluctant to convict if the death penalty had been in effect. At least some of the people convicted, incarcerated and, therefore, incapacitated right now, would be on the streets if the death penalty had been in effect in Ontario over the last five years.

My fourth concern, and in many ways I think the most important, lies with the threat to innocent life inherent in an imperfect judicial system. We all know, at least every single one of us in this House who has had direct experience with the judicial system, that executing an innocent person is a real possibility. Yet some Hon. Members have said they doubt that anyone innocent has ever been executed. I think we have to look at the evidence, Mr. Speaker. Any Member might debate parts of it, but in the aggregate it makes a case that any reasonable individual must acknowledge.

In the United Kingdom, there is strong evidence that three people have been unjustly executed since 1945. In the United States, one study indicates that 12 per cent of people executed over a 40 year period may have been innocent. Another study indicates that 100 innocent people may have been executed in the U.S. since 1900. In Canada we have had two suspected, albeit unproven cases, of unjust execution, in 1956 and in 1960, in the cases of Wilbert Coffin and Raymond Cook respectively. We have had three certain cases of wrongful conviction for murder in Canada in the last 16 years. We have executed 710 people in Canada since Confederation. If our error rate was only half as high as the rate for errors in the American study, we may have executed 40 innocent people in Canada.

My fifth concern lies with retribution as a justification for the death penalty. At the heart of the retribution argument is the raw and honest demand for revenge. Retributionists, from Immanuel Kant to the present, have insisted that retribution need not be tied to deterrence, that it stands on its own as justification for execution. This is an argument, an appeal I can understand.

Faced with the horror of particularly brutal, cold-blooded or serial murders, our first reaction is that the murderer deserves to die, that no other justification is required. Kant and others have elaborated this argument, saying that we are reinforcing the value we place on life by demanding for murder the greatest of all payments, the forfeit of the murderer's own life. I will not deal with the paradox implicit in this logic. I will accept it as a natural, visceral first reaction to murder.

Let us clearly understand, however, that the basis for this moral argument is that those people who die are those who deserve to die—only the guilty, not the innocent. But if the net result of restoration of the death penalty is the possibility of executing innocent people, provoking new murders and releasing potential killers onto the streets because of reduced conviction rates, where is the justice in retribution?

We have in the last analysis, Mr. Speaker, other alternatives. We are not a poor society, and we must determine how highly we value the lives of innocent people. We must decide, as a society, just how highly we value revenge.

I know very well what public opinion has to say on the death penalty. I have no reason to believe that the views of my constituents in Ottawa West are any different than any others. I believe, however, that the public desire for the return of the death penalty is based on the mistaken belief that it deters murder. It is rooted in a legitimate fear of violent crime and violent criminals. It reflects a justifiable frustration with a criminal justice system which sometimes appears unable to keep dangerous offenders from repeating their crimes.

We have the resources to strengthen and increase policing, to reform our sentencing and parole procedures, to keep convicted murderers off our streets. The costs are not high, $5,500 a year, according to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) for each prisoner we add to the prison population. Even if the death penalty does not deter murders, deterrence research has shown us what factors do affect murder rates. Poverty and unemployment are at the heart of all detected rises in murder rates. We have to decide what we really want to come out of this debate. Do we genuinely want to reduce murder rates? Or do we simply want the atavistic satisfaction of killing those who offend us, whatever the risk to innocent lives?

Are we prepared as Members of Parliament to make the hard choices implicit in a policy which would reduce poverty and unemployment, improve policing and strengthen parole regulations? Or would we prefer the notion of a quick fix, which all available evidence tells us may please the public, but which will do nothing at all to reduce murder rates?

What this motion tells us is that we can be seen as champions of law and order without taking the trouble to deal with the real and complicated issues we know are at the heart of crime. We have the resources as a civilized society to solve our problems without killing people. If we decide that our desire for revenge is stronger than our taste for justice, then we will deserve the moral agony we will surely face on the day we learn that we, as Canadians, have executed an innocent person.

I believe that on the day we vote as a House for restoration of the death penalty by supporting this motion, we will inflict a dark scar on the soul of our nation. We will announce to the world that knowing all the risks to innocent lives we still demand the sweet satisfaction of revenge.

It is because I know we need not resort to this needless savagery, Mr. Speaker, that I will vote against the restoration of the death penalty.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) on his excellent exposé of this question, and I must say I share his views. However, perhaps he would care to look at the problem from another angle, especially considering that since the beginning of this debate on capital punishment, there has been no attempt to look at the problem as a personal responsibility. Let me explain, Mr. Speaker. As Members elected to the Parliament of Canada, we share the power in this country and I would even go so far as to say we share the power over life and death of all Canadians, but we share this power among 282 Members, including yourself, Mr. Speaker. This means that the Hon. Member and myself each share one two hundred and eight-second of the power in this country. And perhaps he would care to comment on the following. If the Parliament of Canada adopts a Bill to reinstate capital punishment in Canada, would the Hon. Member have the impression he would be an accessory to a premeditated crime? We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that if the Canadian Government decides to reinstate capital punishment, certainly it would be a kind of retribution, as the Hon. Member said, but on the other hand, it would be premeditated retribution through the judicial process, and in the final instance people would say, it is because the Government passed the Bill. But as an individual taking part in this decision, one of 282, would he personally feel to some extent guilty of being an accessory to a premeditated crime?

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking the Hon. Member for his comments.

[English]

The question he poses is a more difficult one to answer, but if I understood the question correctly, I think the answer is yes.

I have certainly gone through the moral agony of this debate myself. I realized that there was the possibility that I as a single Member of Parliament could, if this motion were to be defeated by one vote, make the difference because of the points I made in my speech about whether or not an innocent person might die or whether or not we may see more murderers loose on the streets as well as all the other arguments I made. I realized that I had to vote with my conscience on this issue and that if I had an opportunity to make a difference in this debate, I had to exercise that opportunity despite the views, many of them strongly held, of my constituents. It is a debate we have all had to go through.

Mr. Tupper: Mr. Speaker, through you, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), for his presentation this afternoon, particularly because it was so well researched. I felt that our hon. colleague had given a great deal of thought to his presentation and that he had looked at many very fundamental data relative to deterrence in particular but to other aspects of the criminal justice system as well.

I would like to compliment the Hon. Member as well on the sincerity with which he presented his thoughts on a very, very difficult subject. Recognizing his legal background and the fact that he made a substantive point of his feeling that Canada could still afford to maintain within our prison system criminals who were found guilty of the utmost crime, he has undoubtedly spent a great deal of time thinking about how the criminal system and the parole system could be improved to protect Canadians. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he could share with the House his thoughts on penal reform.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his kind comments and his very pertinent question. As he knows, I am Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General. The points he made have been of concern to me and my committee colleagues from all Parties for some period of time. In fact, yesterday at a meeting of the committee, we decided that two areas which we would investigate in the fall and start to research now would relate to the very question he asked.

We have not yet had a review of the corrections system in Parliament. Members like our distinguished Speaker who have been here for a while will recall the MacGuigan report of about 10 years ago. I think it is the view of the committee that, in any event, it is time for parliamentarians to take another look at the corrections system, particularly with a view to what can be done to improve rehabilitation.

Related to that is the whole question of parole. This is a matter which has been of particular concern to me as an Ottawa Member. Here in Ottawa, we have experienced a dreadful case about which I cannot speak in detail because it is still sub judice, that is, the Ruygrok case. I might add in parenthesis that I had the opportunity of meeting with Mr. Ruygrok, the father of the social worker in a halfway house who was murdered. It was a very touching meeting. He told me early on in this debate that he was against the death penalty. Despite what had happened to his daughter, he knew capital punishment would not have kept her alive.

Going back to my main point, the committee decided to look at the parole system beginning in the fall with a view to ensuring that tragedies like the Ruygrok case and others which happen all too frequently in Canada will not happen again. We intend to see that procedures are put in place that, to the extent humanly possible, would not allow such dreadful things to happen.

There is a lot of room for improvement in the parole and corrections systems. I would also suggest that there is room for improvement in sentencing and I welcome the recent developments initiated by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in that regard. I can assure the House that the Justice Committee will be giving a great deal of attention to all of these important issues.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, while I am strongly opposed to the reinstatement of the death penalty in Canada, I want to start by making it absolutely clear that I believe murder to be a most serious and heinous crime and that we in government at all levels must do everything in our power to reduce and prevent murder. The fact that I and others in this House are opposed to capital punishment does not mean that we are soft on murder, nor does it mean that we care more for the criminal than for the victim. That allegation is pure rhetoric, hokum and a red herring in a debate like this.

I believe very strongly that we should act to prevent murder but we should do something that is effective and meaningful and not something like the death penalty which is simply an illusion of action. Many of those who favour the death penalty say it is necessary to protect the public, to protect the police, to protect corner-store owners and to protect old people and children who walk the streets. Once again, I agree that we must protect those people, but there is absolutely no evidence showing that the death penalty offers this protection.

The death penalty certainly has not protected policemen. The year when the greatest number of policemen were killed on duty in Canada was 1962 when 11 policemen were killed on the job. In that year, there were two hangings in Canada, one for killing a policeman.

Since 1962, there has been an average of four policemen killed on duty per year while there is now a much greater number of policemen than there were in 1962 and a larger population. Of course, four per year is four too many, but the point is that when the death penalty was in force in 1962, it did not protect those 11 policemen who were killed while on duty. Nor does the death penalty protect the public generally. In 1976, the year we totally abolished capital punishment in Canada, there were 668 murders, a rate of 2.9 per 100,000 population. Ten years later, in 1986, we had 561 murders, a rate of 2.2 per 100,000. That is the lowest rate in 15 years.

Let us compare that with those states in the U.S. which have brought back capital punishment. So it is absolutely clear I must point out, that in the U.S., unlike Canada, capital punishment and criminal law is not a national matter. It is under the jurisdiction of the individual states. Every state has its own criminal law and every state decides whether or not it will have capital punishment and how it will be carried out. The U.S. Supreme Court decided in 1976 that the states could reintroduce capital punishment and some states did. In 1985 the rate of murder in the U.S. as a whole was 7.9 per 100,000 population. That compares with 2.2 in Canada.

There are two states which have reintroduced capital punishment and have the most executions, Texas with 18 and Florida with 16. The rate of murder in Texas in 1985 was 14 per 100,000, and in Florida 11.6. Not only is the rate of murder in those two states with capital punishment higher than in Canada, it is higher than the U.S. average. The death penalty is not protecting the citizens of Florida and Texas.

In the debate in this House on this issue in 1976 many Hon. Members rose in their place and said that if we removed the death penalty people will feel free to kill. Murderers will run amok in the streets. That did not happen. As a matter of fact, the rate declined, as I pointed out. I have here a clipping from the Montreal Gazette dated February 14, 1987. The headline reads: "Shot Montreal man in cold blood, Miami killer laughs at crime". This is a story about a Montreal businessman who flew to Florida, rented a car at the airport and drove away looking for the interstate highway. He did not know where it was so he stopped his car on the side of the street and asked a citizen where the interstate highway was. This citizen, as I call him, pulled out a gun and shot him in the head because he wanted the car. They caught that man later the same day and he was quoted in this article as saying:

> "I just shot him," shrugged the man who confessed yesterday to murdering a Montreal millionaire who asked him the way to Interstate 85, and then he laughed.

The fact Florida has the death penalty and has had 16 executions did not protect this Montreal businessman in that state.

When we compare rates of murder in those states with the death penalty and those states without the death penalty there is a clear pattern of lower murder rates in the non-death penalty states. In recent months the United Kingdom voted against the reinstatement of the death penalty. That is the third time the British Parliament has turned down an attempt to bring back the death penalty in that country. There the rate of murder is 1.1 per 100,000, much less than in Canada. In Belgium it is 1.3. In New Zealand it is 1.6. In France it is 3.3. All are much lower than the U.S. where 12 states have brought back executions and carried out executions since the U.S. Supreme Court permitted them to do so.

I have had several occasions to debate this issue with the Hon. Member for Peterborough. He has said that the U.S. reinstated capital punishment and the murder rate came down. Before 1976 he says the rate was over 10 per 100,000 and it has come down to 7.9. It is still very high but it has come down. Let us make absolutely clear that the U.S. did not reinstate capital punishment. In the U.S. it is a state matter. Thirty-seven states voted to bring back capital punishment, but executions have been carried out in only 12 of those states. There have been 66 executions in the U.S. since 1976 and more than half took place in Florida and Texas. Capital punishment is not protecting people in those states where it exists. Capital punishment does not protect, and that is our first argument against it.

Second, it is against most of our moral codes. The commandment is, thou shalt not kill. Before World War II and back into the last century capital punishment was justified as a self-defence mechanism. There was the exception to the commandment that in self-defence you could protect yourself and your loved ones. If someone came in to kill you or your loved ones, as a last resort you could kill him and that was justifiable. The justification was self-defence. It was thought that capital punishment was a legitimate self-defence mechanism. However, as statistics-gathering bureaus in many countries in the western world became more sophisticated it was soon learned that the death penalty was not acting as a self-defence mechanism. If it did not do that, it had no moral justification.

That is why we have seen in this debate that every mainline church in Canada has come out against the death penalty. The Catholic Bishops, the Anglican Bishops, the United Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Lutheran Church, the Baptist Church, the Salvation Army and synagogues have come out against it. It is true that some of the evangelical churches have come out in favour, but the great majority of our principal Christian churches have been opposed.

I have already said that in the so-called western world the death penalty does not exist in one entire country. It is still on the books in Belgium and Ireland, but it has not been carried out since 1945 in Belgium, and 1954 in Ireland. In effect, in all of western Europe, Canada, and most states in the U.S., as well as New Zealand and Australia, the death penalty is not in force. If Canada were to vote for this resolution and bring back the death penalty, we would be the only entire country in the western world to go in that direction.

As I said a minute ago, the British Parliament turned down an attempt recently to bring back the death penalty because they believe it is inappropriate in a civilized society. The death penalty does not protect. It is against our moral codes. It is not appropriate in a civilized society.

• (1520)

Fourth, it is irreversible if you make a mistake. There have been people mistakenly convicted of murder in recent years. Thank God we did not have the death penalty. Donald Marshall, a young Micmac Indian from Nova Scotia, was convicted of murder and served 11 years before they found out that he did not commit the crime. He was released from prison and has been compensated. If he had been convicted prior to 1962 he would have been hanged. John Wildman of Ontario was convicted of murder and served seven years before they found out he did not commit the crime and he was released from prison.

Professor Bedau in the United States recently wrote a book on the subject documenting 349 cases of people being mistakenly convicted of murder. Of those, 23 were executed. Capital punishment does not protect, it is morally wrong, it is not appropriate in a civilized society, and it is irreversible if you make a mistake.

Fifth, it is selectively inequitable. When it exists it is applied unevenly against the poor, minorities and immigrants. It is applied in that way because these people do not have the money to hire the best attorneys or to pursue the long process through the appeal courts, which sometimes takes years and is extremely expensive. Even if you are convicted in the last court of appeal you can go on and apply for commutation to the Governor in Council or, in the United States, to the Governor of the State. That is a very expensive process in which much discretion is exercised at every level.

Discretion is used at the very beginning of the system in determining whether a charge of first degree murder is laid, the punishment for which is death, or a charge of second degree murder, the punishment for which is life imprisonment, or a charge of manslaughter, the punishment for which is lesser again. The exercise of discretion at the beginning of the process by the Crown can mean life or death and depends to a great extent on the bargaining which takes place between the attorneys and on how good your attorney is.

Some people have described the death penalty as a lottery in which the odds are loaded against the poor. In the years in which we had executions in Canada there were a very small number of executions compared to the number of murders. The highest number of executions in Canada in any one year was in 1931 when there were 22 hangings. It is interesting to note that that was in the pit of the Depression when people were out of work and desperate. There were 172 murders in that year and only 22 hangings. The average rate in the 1950s, which is the last decade in which we had the death penalty, was five executions and 140 murders per year. In the 1940s there was an average of 10 executions and 120 murders per year. One might ask what happened to the other murderers during the 1950s and who the five were who were executed. More often than not they were the poor, the minorities and the immigrants.

Those are the main arguments against the death penalty. It does not protect, it is morally wrong, it is not appropriate in a civilized society, it is irreversible if you make a mistake, and it is applied inequitably to the poor and the minorities.

The principal argument we hear these days in favour of the death penalty is that it is the only appropriate form of justice. Where does that standard of moral justice come from? It certainly does not come from the western countries or the churches. I have pointed out that the churches do not accept that as a standard of justice nor do the western countries. Who accepts it? Who has that type of justice?

The country recorded as having the greatest number of executions last year is Iran where there were 450 executions. Is that our model of justice? In South Africa there were 125 executions. Is that our model of justice? In Communist China there were 105 executions. Is that our model?

People who argue that capital punishment is the only appropriate form of justice for murder are proposing an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth type of justice. They are proposing a system based on revenge, and that is not our concept of justice.

There is a lot to be said on the subject and I will not have time to cover it all. If we are really serious about reducing and preventing murder we will do things to prevent the act from taking place in the first place. We will deal with the causes of violent crime and murder, we will do things which are proactive rather than reactive. That is what has brought down the murder rate in those states which have very low rates of murder. In the State of Minnesota the rate of murder is 1.7 per 100,000. Compare that with Texas or Florida. Minnesota abolished capital punishment a long time ago and has had much better social and public education programs. They were involved in the communities in a way not seen in the southern states.

We must concentrate on the causes, prevention, security, rehabilitation, assistance to victims, more resources and training for the police, better family crisis intervention, better drug and alcohol rehabilitation, more effective gun control, less violence on TV, better juvenile corrections, education and recreation, and more support for the home and school.

It is my belief that the motion before the House is biased and indeed foolish. When the Government introduced it it said it wanted to remain neutral. However, the motion says that this House supports the reinstatement of capital punishment and sets up a committee to decide for what kinds of murder and by what method. If the Government was really neutral it would have introduced a motion saying that the House should re-examine the penalty for murder and make recommendations as to what that penalty should be. This motion is unfortunate.

In conclusion, if we in Canada believe that the supreme value is human life, then society should never repeat the act of the criminal. A criminal justice system based on revenge is not appropriate to a civilized society. We must do everything in our power to combat murder and other violent crime. We must look for solutions which are humane and civilized but also effective and ones which will provide security. Capital punishment is not humane, it is not civilized, it is not effective, and it does not provide security. As a result, under no circumstances should capital punishment be reinstated in Canada as a response to murder.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for his speech and also for the leadership which he has given on this issue, not only in the present debate but in years past. I can remember writing to him when he was the Solicitor General and trying to give him some encouragement. I am sure he does not remember that letter because he was getting thousands of them from people all over Canada who were very concerned at that time that we should abolish the death penalty.

The Member may have mentioned this before I came in, but it seems to me that one of the major concerns which Canadians should have in re-examining the question of the death penalty is that juries have a much greater tendency to acquit those accused of murder if there is a possibility that a conviction will be followed by the death sentence. I saw one study which indicated that prior to the abolition of the death sentence there was a 10 per cent rate of conviction for those who had been accused of murder. Following the abolition of the death sentence, the rate of conviction went up to 20 per cent. It seems rather conclusive proof that having the death penalty in place means that a much higher percentage of those who are acquitted could be guilty. Could the Hon. Member comment on the safety aspect of this to Canadians on the streets, when there is a higher rate of acquittal when the death penalty is in place?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in the middle of the debate on the abolition of the death penalty in 1976, the head of Scotland Yard in England made a statement that he was opposed to the death penalty precisely because too many juries were acquitting too many people who were actually guilty of murder and should have been convicted because they were afraid of convicting someone by mistake. The head of Scotland Yard said that, for that reason alone, he was opposed to the death penalty. He would prefer a system in which there is no death penalty in which at least those people who were guilty of murder would be behind bars until they were rehabilitated. He felt there was a more dangerous situation to have murderers acquitted because of a fear of the death penalty.

Several studies have been done in Canada, including one by Ezzat Fattah, of Simon Fraser University, who did a study that supports that theory, and a study by Jonathan Friedman of the University of Toronto, who conducted studies with jurors who served in murder trials. They said that if the death penalty had been in effect they would not have convicted some of the people they did.

There is also a report by Crown prosecutors in Ontario which states the same thing. There is much evidence to the effect that with the death penalty we often end up with a much more dangerous situation than without it. Of course, I am convinced of the argument for other reasons as well.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that I am proud to be a member of a Party which has a member who so strongly speaks in defence of all aspects of our society, particularly in this debate. I enjoyed the Hon. Member's speech and listened to him with great care.

Will he comment further on the social impact of the television medium in which we try very hard to imitate many American programs? The program Night Heat is the Canadian version of Miami Vice. The Hon. Member talked about the violence that we see on television. Can we do something about that?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, studies have been conducted on this subject as well. The American Senate conducted a study under the chairmanship of the Senator from Rhode Island. It was a study on the relationship between violence on television and violent crime. His findings were to the effect that while violence on television would not prompt people who basically were not violent in the first place to commit a crime, it would prompt those who were basically violent to act out their violence in the way they see it portrayed on television.

That U.S. Senate committee made strong recommendations to limit the violence to hours that were late in the evening so that it would not be seen by the younger segment of their population. That was never legislated in the United States, but was put into effect loosely by some of the networks. I personally believe that there is too much violence on television and films that are available to minors.

We talked about limiting films in which there is pornography but we do not sufficiently consider the effect of violence on their development.

If we are serious about combatting violent crime and murder, there are many things we can do that are preventive, including this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr.

O'Neil), the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) in the next five minutes. Therefore, let the Hon. Members govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, if it could be clearly established that capital punishment is a form of self-defence, would the Hon. Member be prepared to accept capital punishment? I understood him to say in his comments about self-defence that there was no proof that capital punishment was a deterrent. Is he opposed because there is no proof of its deterrence or because it is unacceptable?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that in the past, books on ethics and morality more or less justified capital punishment as a kind of self-defence mechanism, in which self-defence justifies killing someone. That kind of argument was used to justify capital punishment.

However, at that time our statistical information was very weak and it was hard to tell whether or not that was correct. Now we know that it is not correct.

The Hon. Member's question is hypothetical. I am convinced by the evidence that capital punishment does not effectively protect. However, that is only one argument that I gave against capital punishment. The Hon. Member will know that I gave five or six arguments, including mistake, morality, non-protection, inequitable application and so on.

If there could be proof to the contrary, that would prompt considerable re-examination on that one point. However, there are still many other arguments that would lead one to oppose capital punishment.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) for the leadership he has provided on this issue over the years. I am proud of his leadership on this particular issue.

I also want to commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) who I believe delivered a very thoughtful speech today. My question relates to the speech given by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West. The Hon. Member for Ottawa West referred to the brutalization effect. He said studies have shown that executions evoke more murders within the state where the person is executed. He gave examples of South Carolina, New York, and Chicago, where executions took place and seemed to provoke even more murders.

Does the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East believe there might be some validity to that theory?

Furthermore, I am reminded of the incident which took place in the House of Commons a few days ago, when someone rushed in and grabbed the Mace. I wonder if that might have been provoked because of the films of Corporal Lortie in the Quebec National Assembly which had been released for massive television use in this country a few weeks ago. One sometimes wonders whether that might give an idea to a person like the one who came here.

Should we be concerned about the brutalization effect? I am concerned about it, and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West has done a great service in bringing it to our attention.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to prove that one is the cause of the other. However, I am convinced from the evidence I have seen, without being able to prove it scientifically, that there is a relationship between violence that is carried out by the state and the growth of violence in society. If the state condones violence by bringing back the death penalty, whether by hanging, firing squad or the electric chair, it says something about the value it puts on human life. When it carries out executions in these very horrible, violent ways, it is also setting an example for society.

During this debate and similar debates, Hon. Members will bring forward for our consideration some horrible crimes, describing crimes in which some innocent child is brutally murdered by a criminal. Of course when we read about these crimes we are all incensed. I myself feel at the time, even though I am opposed to capital punishment, that if I had that person in front of me I would beat him to death with a baseball bat or something. That is how I feel. However, when we sit down to develop a criminal justice system, we do not base it on the emotions we have when we consider some violent crime. We use our heads. We ask what is going to be effective against this kind of thing. We do not really think about revenge.

If the state says, as a collectivity, that it approves of the death penalty, which is a type of violence, it gives a horrible example to the entire society and one which I think in the long run provokes more violence rather than less.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) for a very short question, please. We are running over the time now.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member raised the old argument about miscarriage of justice as one of his points. It is the classic argument that the death penalty must be abolished because there might be the possibility of executing an innocent person. He quoted Adam Bedau who, of course, is one of the most resolute and implacable opponents of capital punishment in the United States. Interestingly enough, Mr. Bedau cited a study of some 7,000 executions in the United States and concluded that the record failed to show that such cases occur. He also said, and I would like to quote from one of his articles:

> It is a false sentimentality to argue that the death penalty should be abolished because of the abstract possibility that an innocent person might be executed.

The main point, I think is that if governments were to function only when there was no possibility of error, how on earth could government function at all?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what book or article of Professor Bedau's the Hon. Member was reading, but he is out of date. The professor has written a more recent book. I spoke to Professor Bedau three weeks ago in Boston. I met with him at a conference. He has just published a book in which he documents 349 cases, 23 of which were executed by mistake. I would say to the Hon. Member that if the state wants to take a life, the burden of proof is on those people who want to take that life through capital punishment to prove it will have a positive effect on society. The burden is not on us who are opposed to the death penalty. If the state wants to take a life by bringing back the death penalty, or several lives by execution, it is up to it to demonstrate the need for it. It is doing a very serious thing by taking a life. It is up to the state to demonstrate that by taking those lives through execution, it will protect society and bring about a better society. If it cannot prove that, then it fails and we should not have a death penalty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into the capital punishment debate. I would just like to read the results of a recent survey taken in my riding of Winnipeg—Assiniboine. It is the largest return I have ever received on any questionnaire in my 15 years in Ottawa. I received some 7,000 responses to a detailed questionnaire. The return of capital punishment was requested by 78.7 per cent of the respondents. Legal injection over hanging, gas or electrocution was preferred by 85.8 per cent of the respondents. One question asked was: "If you favour capital punishment, what crime should be capital crimes?" The response came in to "all premeditated first degree murder" at 93.8 per cent. For the murder of police and prison guards the response was 94.2 per cent and for murder involving another serious crime it was 75.8 per cent. so there is strong support for the return of capital punishment in Winnipeg—Assiniboine and also in Manitoba. A capital punishment survey taken in Manitoba indicated, and I quote:

> 82.5 per cent of the Manitoba population favour the death penalty for the killing of either police officers or prison guards;

I think we are also going to have to add security guards, uniformed and plainclothes. There are uniformed guards in this building and their lives are at risk just the same as the policeman on the beat. So I believe we have to include these guards and others in the House of Commons and provincial legislatures, and also include private security people.

We have heard a lot of quotes from the Bible, different church organizations and different religious groups. I received a letter today from the Toronto Free Presbyterian Church. I would like to read part of its statement into the record:

> Please do not let yourself be overly swayed by those Church leaders who call loudly for the abolition of the death penalty. Is it not strange that many of them who regard capital punishment as barbaric are, at the same time, through the World Council of Churches, sending financial aid to terrorist groups, whose stock in trade is murder?
> It is obvious these Church leaders have lost touch with their people when the overwhelming desire on the part of Canadians is for the return of the death penalty for first degree murder. These are not "revenge-seekers" and "barbaric". Canadians generally are hard-working, loyal and law-abiding citizens, and their voice must be heard. It is our hope when the vote is taken you will faithfully represent the views of your constituents.

I will be voting on behalf of my constituents when we vote, Mr. Speaker. Members of Parliament have received a document from the Reverend E. Stevens of the St. Paul's Presbyterian Church here in Ottawa. It is entitled "Capital Punishment Again? A Christian perspective". Mr. Stevens stated:

> Capital Punishment is a subject which, in my view, needs a major "rethink" in Christian circles, because for almost 50 years now the official thinking of the major denominations has been dominated by a liberal-humanitarian philosophy which needs to be challenged. Finally, the subject is important because it involves other important Christian beliefs, notably three: the nature of God, the authority and responsibilities of the state and the nature of punishment.

We have all heard statistics, and I guess we could all stand up here for a couple of hours quoting every statistic under the sun, but the Citizens United For Safety & Justice in North Vancouver, British Columbia, have compiled some very interesting statistics which show that attempted murders have increased by 939 per cent over the last few years. The reason we have not had another 939 murders on our hands is due to advancement in medical technology, paramedics, use of protective clothing, and so on. Many victims' lives have been saved which otherwise would have been lost. How many listed as attempted murder would otherwise have been listed as murder?

As I mentioned earlier today, we have to take the Air India disaster into consideration. That was premeditated, cold blooded murder. A person who would plant a bomb on a aircraft containing 329 people is not a person we would want to have on this earth. I do not want to have to ask any prison guard to guard a person or persons who would do such a cruel act. These types of persons have to receive the death penalty.

Other statistics are coming in my office daily. I hope they are all accurate. I checked a number of them out and have not found any which are totally wrong. I think it has to go into the record that since 1977 at least 20 people have been murdered inside federal prison walls by convicted murderers. We have had prison guards murdered in my province, and I have a lot of sympathy for prison guards. I think we have to do something to protect them. In July, 1982 three prison guards were murdered, one by hanging, by men who had been convicted of the first-degree murder of policemen. I can recall that a couple of years ago a guard in the Archambault Prison in Quebec, one hour before he was to retire was murdered by a murderer. He was knifed to death. So there you are. In October of 1986 a young girl was murdered in Belleville by a convicted murderer on parole. I certainly do not know how he got out on parole.

There is another issue which we have to consider under the capital punishment umbrella, that is, the issue of drug dealers. In the United States there is a debate going on with respect to this subject. The U.S. House of Representatives passed a sweeping anti-drug Bill on Wednesday which includes a death penalty for drug dealers in drug-related murder cases. I would have no opposition to such a provision being included in the final drafting of our death penalty Bill, if it goes through.

There is only one country at the present time which has the death penalty for drug traffickers. That country is Malaysia. I just discussed this issue with a couple of Malaysian politicians recently. They would like to have some further conferences within the Commonwealth in regard to the drug problem. I hope that the Commonwealth countries can get together to deal with the issue in the near future.

I would now like to quote from an article published in The Globe and Mail recently, an article written by Mr. Les Bewley, a retired Vancouver criminal court judge. He is a columnist for Canadian Lawyer magazine. He states:

> Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being. The murderer has preferred no lawful charge against his victim; given him no right to counsel, no right to cross-examine or make full answer and defence; denied him the right to be tried before an independent, impartial, public tribunal; denied him any appeal. The murderer is prosecutor, judge and jury, all without lawful authority. Only such killing can be called murder.

I have heard it stated repeatedly that we should not have capital punishment in a civilized society. I am not so sure we have a civilized society when someone will plant a bomb aboard a 747, crush the skulls of young girls, break their necks, abduct them, and all the other horrible things they do. I do not consider that civilized. So we are not actually living in a civilized society when things of that sort are happening.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East says that we will be reading some terrible and bizarre cases into the record. I think we should. I think they should be discussed because we have had some terrible cases in Winnipeg in which children have been abducted. As I mentioned, their heads have been crushed like eggs, their necks broken, and all the rest of it. Young girls have been abducted, molested, bound hand and foot, thrown in a shed and left to freeze to death. I would have absolutely no hesitation in calling for the execution of persons who conduct themselves in that manner.

The following is one of the most bizarre cases I have ever read about. It happened in London, England recently. A young girl was burned on her chest, tummy and bottom. The article states:

> TRAGIC toddler Kimberly was branded on her chest, stomach and bottom before she was battered to death—
> The burn marks on her bruised and emaciated body were in the shape of an "L" or a "7"—
> All the branding scars were caused "by the application of a hot instrument,"... Other injuries found on four-year-old Kim's body indicated she had been:
> TORTURED with a lighted cigarette—at least 15 burn marks were found running the length of her spine and on her pelvis.
> BATTERED about the face, groin, legs and arms, and picked up bodily by her ears.

The 24-year-old man who tortured this girl for weeks got life, real life, in Britain. But he will not be able to be put in a section of the prison where other prisoners are. He will have to be kept in solitary confinement for the rest of his life, as the other inmates would deal with him in short order. The mother of the child received a 12-year sentence.

At the present time I would like to move, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

> That the House continue to sit beyond the daily hour of adjournment for the purpose of—

Mr. Parry: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Mr. Parry: I am raising a point of order that there is not a quorum in the House and that therefore the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but there is a quorum in the House. The Hon. Member can move his motion.

Mr. McKenzie: Before I was so rudely interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I will move the complete motion again. I move, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a):

> That the House continue to sit beyond the daily hour of adjournment for the purpose of completing consideration of the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council concerning capital punishment and amendments thereto.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The only motion with which I can concur is one which does not state "completing". It can state "continuing". The Hon. Member will have to change that, and then we can continue.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, but first the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine.

Mr. McKenzie: I can do as you suggest, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think if you take a look at the motion as proposed by my friend from Winnipeg Your Honour will notice that he is asking the House to consider extending the hours to complete the debate on the motion that is before the House at this particular time. At this time we are debating not the motion itself but an amendment to the motion.

What we are talking about here in the Hon. Member's motion is dealing with the entire motion. What is before the House is an amendment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine moves:

That the House continue to sit beyond the daily hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council concerning capital punishment and amendments thereto.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Will those Members objecting to the motion please rise in their places—

Mr. Parry: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have already recognized the Hon. Member on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Lewis: They do not have 25 Members in the House to block it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize another Member on a point of order I have to see if there are 25 Members in the Chamber—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Nystrom: A point of order with respect to the motion, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): First, I must count to see if there are 25 Members in the House. I will then recognize the Hon. Member.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is on the wording of the motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is nothing wrong with the wording of the motion. I have just read it.

Mrs. Finestone: Did you correct it?

• (1600)

Mr. Nystrom: A point of order, a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You have to get that motion in writing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have it in writing. I will now count to see how many Members are in the House.

Mr. Nystrom: You have to get that in writing. He changed it verbally from his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those—

Mr. Nystrom: He has to have it in writing. Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

Mr. Manly: It is after four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

Mr. Manly: It is after four o'clock.

Mr. Nystrom: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

Mr. Allmand: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

Mr. Nystrom: A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Fewer than 25 Members have risen. Pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been adopted.

Motion (Mr. McKenzie) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, when the motion was read by the Hon. Member, it said precisely that the hours be extended to deal with the motion of the Hon. House Leader.

We are not dealing with the motion but with the motion and the amendment thereon. That was not the motion that he made, and I believe that the whole matter is out of order.

What we are debating now is the amendment to the motion. His resolution to extend the hours was wrongly drafted in that he said extend the hours on the motion but not on the amendment. I think it was wrong to permit the matter to be put to the House in that way, and I think it was wrong to take the count, the way the motion was worded, because we were not debating the motion but the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think I can assist the House on this matter. If you check in Hansard, you will find that this happened on February 3 when the motion for second reading of Bill C-18 was before the House.

At the time that the motion to extend the hours was put, you will find, Mr. Speaker, there was an amendment by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to take the substance of the Bill and refer it to committee.

The motion to extend hours was accepted even though the motion under debate was amended. A motion was put not only for the main motion but for the amendment, and that precedent on February 3 should be followed here. It is exactly the same. The motion for second reading, as amended by the Hon. Member for Regina West, was before the House. The Chair accepted the motion to extend the hours. It was at about 4.50 p.m.

Debate continued on the amendment, debate collapsed on the amendment, Private Members' Hour took place, and then after Private Members' Hour the debate was extended until the motion on the main question was decided. This is exactly the same question, the main question amended. It is exactly on point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two points, and I make them very seriously. When you did the count to see how many Members were in the House opposing the extension of hours, it was one minute after four o'clock, and the Hon. Member for Malahat—Cowichan—The Islands (Mr. Manly) had been calling it four o'clock. According to our Standing Orders, at four o'clock we go into Private Members' Hour and there cannot be a motion put at that time because we are no longer in the regular business on the capital punishment debate. It is four o'clock, a Member of this House called it four o'clock, and you are not allowed, in my opinion, to put the motion at that particular time.

Second, Mr. Speaker, you were sent in writing a copy of a motion to extend the hours by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), saying that he wanted the hours extended on the motion before the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was clearly out of order. He sent that to you in writing, and he got up and verbally tried to change it from the word "motion" to the word "amendment".

The practice in this House is that if one moves an amendment in this House or a motion in this House, one sends it to the Speaker in writing.

First, Mr. Speaker, you counted the Members, who opposed extending the hours after four o'clock and, second, the motion was changed when the Speaker was already up in the chair considering the original written motion.

In both cases I think we have here a procedural irregularity.

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize any more points of order, let me indicate that we are looking for a precedent right now. Before I recognize the Hon. Member, and if he would bide his time for a few minutes, then I could just get the official transcript of what I am looking for at this time.

Order, please. The Chair has looked at this motion. It finds the motion in order. We will now go into Private Members' Hour and then continue, at ten minutes after five o'clock, with the debate as we had it this afternoon.

Mr. Murphy: You guys just killed the weekend.

An Hon. Member: Is this new co-operative federalism?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to ask the Deputy House Leader—and here we have before the House an extremely serious motion as to whether or not we bring back the death penalty in this country—whether he considers this the way we should deal with the motion, that is, late on a Friday afternoon, without consultation with the opposition Parties, and on a matter which could bring back the death penalty in this country. Is this the official policy of the Conservative Party on how we deal with a serious matter like this one in this country?

A vote could take place this evening on this without two-thirds of the Members—

Mr. King: No, it can't.

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Allmand: Debate could end. The Hon. Member is right. The vote could not take place, but the debate could end and the vote would be on Monday before a lot of Members could speak on this matter.

I am asking him if that is the policy of the Government in dealing with this extremely important matter. If it is, he won't get any co-operation from me this week or any other week.

Mr. Manly: It is shameful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It being 4.10 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Malone: It cannot be the same point of order because there was no point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am now entertaining Private Members' Business. Private Members' Business is in the next hour. If the Hon. Member wishes to raise any more points of order with regard to the motion, he may do it after Private Members' Hour. I do not want to disturb Private Members' Hour.

It being 4.10 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved that Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1610)

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a disturbing moment to start debate on Bill C-213 which I think is a fundamentally important Bill to many Canadians. It includes two particular sections. One, the removal of search and seizure powers of a dwelling house without warrant. This Bill flowed from amendments to the Canadian Criminal Code in 1977. Since that time, as we know with the adoption of the Charter in 1982, many people view with repugnance the section that was brought in with those amendments to the Criminal Code which allowed for powers for the search and seizure of a dwelling house without warrant. As you know, in the Charter, protections against unreasonable search and seizure are no longer possible. I think many Members of this House would like to support that particular section of my Bill.

The second section of the Bill will eliminate the requirement for firearm acquisition certificates in northern and remote regions of Canada. That requirement in relation to FACs is in relation to rifles and shotguns. I know there are many who shoot targets. Many hunters, trappers and northerners would like to see the firearm acquisition requirements removed because they have turned out to be a bureaucratic nightmare for most Canadians living in northern rural and remote areas.

I want to make it clear at the beginning that I wholly support the extension of safe handling and use of firearm courses. I think the RCMP and municipal police forces, boy scout operations, rod and gun clubs and whatever else, should all be involved with the assistance of the federal and provincial Governments in putting forward those kinds of courses. As all Members will know, seven out of ten firearm deaths in Canada are self-inflicted and it is very important that proper training and handling courses be made available.

Old Bill C-51 which brought in these two wrongful laws, as I describe them also included some good things. Bill C-51 increased the severity of criminal sanctions for misuse of firearms. I support the new indictable offence, Section 83, which incurs a minimum jail sentence of one year and mandatory firearm prohibition orders for those who have been involved in firearm offences.

There has been abuse of the legislation, Mr. Speaker. The requirement that a return to a magistrate be made subsequent to Section 101 search and seizure has seldom been met as we found in the final report of the evaluation of Canadian gun control legislation. There are several rather important quotations I want to take from that final document produced for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) in relation to these two provisions of Bill C-51.

First, in relation to search and seizure of a dwelling house without warrant, I quote:

> To safeguard against abuse, the legislation requires that following any Section 101 search, with or without a warrant, a report or return shall be made forthwith to the magistrate. However, we have found that in most jurisdictions, returns are made only if a seizure has occurred and a request for forfeiture is intended. Since returns are made only in those instances where the evidence is strong enough to support a forfeiture application, any protection afforded by having a magistrate review all Section 101 searches, is non-existent.

I stress those last words because this was from a study. Most of this legislation came into effect in 1979. In the years since, we have found that where police and peace officers have made use without warrant of the search and seizure provisions of a dwelling house, the proper returns to a magistrate have simply not been made.

Another quote reads:

> —lack of returns on all searches means that we cannot completely endorse the opinion that Section 101(2) is not abused—
> —we have found that the return procedure is not followed, except in cases of forfeiture applications. This defeats the purpose of having a judicial review of the circumstances of all searches and seizures and leaves this section open to possible abuse in the future.

On the question of search and seizure of a dwelling house without warrant, I think it is abundantly clear that the Government's own data and research on this matter makes it perfectly clear that that section of the existing Criminal Code must be removed. I hope to hear the support of government and Liberal Members in relation to this.

For many years there has been a long and strong debate in northern, rural and remote Canada about problems related to this particular power. We should keep in mind that peace officers have always had—and I support their continuing to have—the powers of hot pursuit. I support their having the powers that they have in relation to search and seizure where they have gone to a magistrate—and, in a day and an age of high technology peace officers can always set up systems where they can be in touch with magistrates—to obtain the necessary warrants. I think the protection of the rule of law and the protection of civil liberties of Canadians requires that this Draconian measure be eliminated from Canada's Criminal Code.

On the matter of firearm acquisition certificates, I have a number of quotations that I want to put on the record. They are also taken from the final report provided to the Solicitor General's Department concerning FACs:

> —subtle pressures are used to eliminate potentially unsuccessful candidates. Firearms officers frequently claimed they could 'sense' poor candidates. They will usually attempt to dissuade them from making formal application. One jurisdiction estimates that informal refusals were approximately 150 times greater than formal ones.

When I appeared before the legislative committee, in determining whether or not this would be a one hour or a five hour debate, I pointed out a number of jurisdictions, confirmed with statistics from the RCMP, from the Solicitor General's Department, that there are some jurisdictions where people apply for FACs and no one is turned down. We have to ask ourselves what kind of a system has been set up where people come in and firearms officers can say yes or no without any kind of judicial review. In my constituency many times people require six days to go and get an FAC. They have to drive hundreds of miles to get to an RCMP station to apply. Then they have to wait 24 hours, and if that firearm acquisition officer is not there, for example, he is in Atlin, Cassiar, Prince Rupert, the Queen Charlottes or anywhere across the North, if the officer is not there, they simply cannot apply. I think as you know, Mr. Speaker, you cannot even lend to your own brother, father or son one of your own firearms under the existing legislation unless they go and get a FAC, even if it is to run a fox out of the chicken house.

The second quote I have is also from the final study. It reads:

> Due to a general lack of data, it is difficult to assess the effectiveness of the FAC system in reducing firearm incidents.

> An analysis of the number of firearm incidents involving individuals with FACs would probably provide an indication of the influence of the system. However, none of our data sources, including police occurrence reports from the local jurisdictions, record whether involved individuals have a FAC.

That makes it clear that the whole premise on which FACs were brought in, which was to provide information to the courts and the police departments in relation to firearm incidents, has been demonstrated not to be operating at all in any jurisdiction in Canada.

The third quote reads:

> We cannot make a direct causal connection between these provisions and any reduction in the number of firearm incidents.

I do not think any stronger statement can be made about firearm acquisition certificates than that in the final study. There is no direct relation in terms of the reduction of firearm incidents. Clearly that system, particularly in northern, rural and remote Canada, is an absolute failure.

With regard to the situation in Canada in terms of the search and seizure of a dwelling house without a warrant, peace officers have all of the powers which they require to do everything surrounding those kinds of incidents by involving a magistrate on the one hand or being involved in hot pursuit. This section in my own constituency has been abused. In light of the provisions in our Charter of 1982, this section should be struck down both on constitutional grounds and on the grounds that I have laid out in terms of the study that has been carried out over the last six years.

Concerning the elimination of firearm acquisition certificates, I think the information is overwhelming that this has turned into nothing more than bureaucratic regulation that is harmful to safe, honest gun handling Canadians who shoot a little trap, a little target, or carry a firearm on a trap line or go hunting from time to time.

In the next 45 minutes I would encourage someone on the government side to speak in support of this Bill, because when I appeared before the legislative committee the government Members who did speak spoke very much in favour of it. I thought perhaps today the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) would be here because he said:

> —Mr. Chairman, that I am in agreement with the Hon. Member from Skeena.

And the Chair was clearly very supportive in his remarks.

I would hope that over the next 45 minutes we will hear from the Government because I have suggested to my colleagues in the Opposition that we would like to hear from government Members why they support or do not support Bill C-213. I know that I have received letters from people from every province and from both territories in support of this Bill. Many government Members, before being elected, said that they were very much in support of this Bill, so I would hope that we will hear from them their support for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to Bill C-213, which concerns gun control.

The Bill raises a number of concerns that are felt not only in my riding but across this country. Gun control relates to the very nature of our individual freedoms in a free and democratic society. This question also relates to public safety, and is thus of interest to all Canadians. That is one of the reasons why the very issue of gun control is so controversial and why opinions on gun control are so diametrically opposed.

The use of firearms in sports, for recreation and for survival has been part of our Canadian heritage for over four centuries, and the tradition continues today. In fact, since its introduction at the beginning of Confederation, gun control has been an important part of Canada's social policy. Today, it is not the principle of gun control itself that is being challenged, because measures that prevent the criminal and irresponsible use of firearms deserve our support. However, I believe the Government should try and strike a sensible balance between the need for protecting the public and the legitimate interests of owners and users of firearms. To achieve this balance, it is important that the House consider all those who are affected before amending the existing legislation. And this brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Skeena.

The Hon. Member would like to see abolished the right to search and seize, without a warrant, firearms, ammunition and other explosive substances in a dwelling house. Mr. Speaker, in my view, this provision is in the sections of the Criminal Code dealing with firearms for a very good reason. As the House is aware, many crimes, especially murders, are committed in the course of family or neighbourhood fights. Firearms are involved in most cases.

By adopting subsection 101(2) which allows search and seizure without a warrant, Parliament wanted the police to be able to seize firearms and ammunition and explosive substances in family fights, to prevent a tragedy. Whether a firearm is seized or not, the police officer must subsequently report to the court to justify the action taken, this to prevent arbitrary seizures and the harassment of innocent people.

Family quarrels break out suddenly and police are quickly called on the scene. Apparently the Hon. Member would seek to make it more difficult for police to take effective action in such cases, and to prevent them from conducting searches and seize firearms to avoid the possibility of a quarrel ending in a fatal accident. He would rather have police wait patiently for a provincial court magistrate to complete the search warrant application forms while their services may be urgently required elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been concerned over human rights violations and police power abuses. Still, in cases such as I described which may lead to death or serious injuries, I admit that exceptional and constraining circumstances may indeed justify searches and seizures without a warrant.

In the case of Hunter et. al C. Southam Inc., the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that, in certain cases, searches without warrants do not constitute a breach of the Charter. The same rationale applies to urgent situations where police must intervene quickly.

For my own benefit and on behalf of my constituents, I have been trying to follow the evolution of the situation with respect to firearms control. I have yet to hear of a case where someone allegedly abused Criminal Code section 101(2). If ever this provision were to be the source of many instances of human rights abuses I would be the first one to advocate the necessary amendments.

• (1620)

Under the second amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), firearms acquisition certificates would no longer be required for people living in the federal electoral ridings listed in Schedule III of the Canada Elections Act. These include Kenora—Rainy River, Thunder Bay—Nipigon, Yellowhead, Prince George—Peace River and the riding of the Hon. Member.

To my mind this is a discriminatory provision. Firearms acquisition certificates should be mandatory for all persons seeking to acquire a firearm, no matter how. The Hon. Member would extend special privileges to those whom he refers to as the "residents of the more northerly and remote regions of Canada".

In my opinion, such cities as Prince George, Thunder Bay or Gander cannot qualify as remote regions.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to support this Bill. One of its provisions could result in needless injury or loss of life, while the other is clearly discriminatory on the basis of the area where one chooses to live.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this afternoon. It is somewhat ironic that we are discussing this particular issue at this time today. A while ago, we ended temporarily a discussion on the death penalty, knowing of course that a large proportion of murders are directly related to firearms, and we began to discuss a private Member's Bill on firearms. We will then return a little later to the debate on the death penalty.

I should begin my remarks by saying that I am one of those individuals who does his absolute best to stay as far away from firearms as possible on every possible occasion. I am one of those people who has never owned a firearm and I believe I have only shot a firearm two or three times in my life.

I do not have much use for them personally, but I recognize that some people use firearms for sports and for hunting and, as my hon. friend from Skeena pointed out very appropriately, some actually require them for their protection if they live in very remote areas. As well, some who hunt for a living require firearms for their livelihood.

Having recognized the need for firearms as expressed by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), I nevertheless have two particular concerns that I must raise with him and the House. First, it is a fact that the number of firearms in existence and their availability is unfortunately very closely linked with the murder and crime rates.

I will digress for a moment to point out that it is well known that a number of U.S. Presidents have been assaulted with firearms over the years. I believe three were killed while in office, all of them by firearms. Not too long ago I read a newspaper article which referred to the fact that it cannot just be a coincidence that every one of those assaults on a President involved the use of a firearm. No President was ever choked, stabbed or anything else. They were all shot or shot at. I think there is a frightening message in that, which leads me to believe that firearms should not be as available as they generally are in this country.

I know the Hon. Member is very well intentioned with his Bill. I support him in his good intentions. I do not support his Bill but I certainly commend him for bringing before this House an issue which is obviously important to people in his constituency. However, that does not mean this is a good Bill for Canada as a whole. Nor is it a good Bill for those constituencies listed in Schedule 3 of the Canada Elections Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I see that some ridings are listed in Schedule III to the Canada Elections Act. Let me give you an example. There is for instance the federal constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon. What our colleague is saying is that in the heart of the city of Thunder Bay, there would be exemptions which the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) may feel are necessary in remote areas of his own riding, but which are not required in the downtown Thunder Bay.

Here are other examples. Among the other constituencies which the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) feels should be exempted from this section of the Criminal Code, I see the riding represented by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner); I know that there are areas in that riding which are quite distant from major urban centres. However, we should not overlook the fact that it includes cities such as Timmins and communities such as Cochrane, even if they are located in Northern Ontario. Because of other similar examples, and although its intentions are good, I am not going to support the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Skeena, a man very familiar with the administration of justice for having worked in it for a great many years, as I feel that the list of constituencies which he has proposed and his geographic approach to this legislation are both unacceptable.

Moreover, I have another problem resulting from the fact that it would include in the Criminal Code divisions which are federal constituencies. I am a little concerned about this, because riding boundaries are changed every ten years on the basis of census results. Some of these ridings should not appear in that group. But I am mostly concerned about the fact that, following the next electoral boundaries readjustment, other regions could be added to the list which are not really remote and where this legislation could be used differently from what our hon. friend expects. I urge him, therefore, to suggest a more equitable formula—I am not saying that our party would necessarily support it entirely—to define these so-called remote regions, in order to convince Hon. Members that they do need and want these exemptions.

Mr. Speaker, we know that many Canadians, but certainly not most of them, would like to have an unrestricted right to carry fire arms. But I know that there are a great many more who insist on restrictions and controls. This does not mean that we want to prevent reasonable people who have full use of their faculties and who do not represent any risk to society from owning firearms. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, both as Members of Parliament and as Canadians, we want to avoid a proliferation of firearms and especially their falling into the hands of people who should not have them, as is often the case especially in the United States.

I therefore urge the Hon. Member to prepare another Bill which would be more acceptable to the House, because, in spite of his good intentions, I do not feel I could support Bill C-213 as debated in the House this afternoon.

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-213, whose purpose is to amend the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to firearms.

The explanatory notes accompanying this Private Member's Bill are very revealing. They start with the words:

> The purpose of this Bill is to relax certain features of the gun control legislation in effect since 1979.

Mr. Speaker, the very purpose of this Bill raises some very serious questions. In fact, the question of relaxing some very important features of Canada's gun control legislation deserves to be looked at very carefully.

Canada has a long tradition of responsible use of firearms and a long history of controlling ownership and use. Although it is not generally known, Canada has exercised control over this area for over 100 years. As early as 1877 there were restrictions on the carrying of firearms. After Confederation, the federal Government adopted a Criminal Code that was administered by the provinces, and in 1892, the first national gun controls were introduced.

With the support of successive Governments, Canada's gun control system has evolved over the years and been reinforced to take into consideration the situation existing at the time. I am sure that most Hon. Members will remember some very interesting debates that took place when the last amendments to the provisions on gun control were passed in 1977.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a mistake to depart from a national control system which has been in place for such a long time and which provides for uniform controls across this vast country of ours. Exempting the twenty-five ridings listed in Schedule 3 of the Canada Elections Act from the obligation to obtain a firearms acquisition certificate might do tremendous harm to an important part of this program and would be a direct contradiction of its fundamental principles.

Mr. Speaker, I said that Canada's reasonable approach to firearms control has been endorsed by successive governments. I should also point out that firearms control has had considerable public support. The provisions concerning firearms acquisition certificates came into force in 1979. Three years later, the following question was asked in a Gallup poll:

"Under current legislation, a person must be at least 16 years of age, have completed an acquisition form and obtained police permission before buying a firearm. In your opinion, should this law be maintained as is, should it be more restrictive, or should it be less restrictive?"

According to the results tabulated throughout Canada, 28 per cent of respondents felt it should remained unchanged, 66 per cent were in favour of more restrictive control, and only 4 per cent thought the law should be less restrictive. In addition, even in communities of fewer than 10,000 residents, only 7 per cent favoured less restrictive legislation.

More recently, in 1985, another survey on this issue produced similar results. To sum up, the response in the country as a whole indicates that 90 per cent of Canadians want existing controls to be maintained or tightened.

Mr. Speaker, such findings deserve serious thought. I do not advocate government by polls, but it seems obvious that the legislative provisions concerning firearms in general and the firearms acquisition certificate system in particular have gained widespread acceptance. In fact, I saw nothing to indicate this system is an excessive hurdle for bona fide firearm users. Nothing has been adduced to show the usefulness of dismantling it by eliminating the firearms acquisition certificate in major areas of Canada. As far as firearms control is concerned, the Government insisted on the need to strike a balance between the genuine interests of users and public security.

It should be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that the goal of the firearms acquisition certificate is to provide better public protection. By making firearm buyers subject to a review process, the system is aimed at preventing as far as possible that access to firearms be opened to potentially dangerous people. Each year, the firearms acquisition certificate is denied for cause to some 1,000 individuals. In my view, those rejections are a very significant contribution to solving what otherwise could be serious problems. Why should we abolish such a system in a large part of the country?

The only reason submitted by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is that firearms acquisition certificates are a hindrance for firearm users and owners. Mr. Speaker, I do not deny that the need to apply for a certificate can inconvenience. But if we consider that the licence is valid for five years and enables its owner to acquire all firearms he may need over the period, the inconvenience is minimal. After all, this is a hurdle most people would have to go through only a few times in the course of a lifetime. The procedure itself only requires a few minutes. As far as going to the local police station is concerned, most applicants can do that on the occasion of other necessary errands, thereby limiting any inconvenience.

The matter of applying for the firearms acquisition certificate also raises another major point the Hon. Member for Seena seems to have overlooked. It is simply that the issuing of certificates and the conditions therefore are matters of purely provincial responsibility. For instance, New Brunswick has implemented a system of mail applications under which the applicant sends his filled questionnaire along with the prescribed moneys, his application is then processed by the police, and eventually the firearms acquisition certificate is sent by mail. One could hardly qualify this as a bureaucratic impediment. If the existing method really makes things difficult for people living in Canada's northern and remote areas—although nothing proves that is the case—other, more satisfactory measures could be introduced. Provincial or territorial procedures for issuing the certificates could be changed to allow for cases where applying for the certificate would be particularly difficult for the applicant. If problems of this nature exist, they should be brought to the attention of the responsible provincial and territorial authorities. However, I do not think there is any justification for amending the Criminal Code to abolish completely the system we have now across this vast country. The same principles should apply everywhere in Canada. However, it is possible to adjust the procedure to meet local needs.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation's existing provisions already include one that allows the provinces to ask the federal Government to declare that in their province, hunting licences, competence certificates and other permits issued for the use of firearms may be substituted for firearms acquisition certificates. By adopting this provision, Parliament clearly wished to give local authorities the necessary flexibility to enforce these provisions in the light of their own particular situation. However, it is interesting to note that none of the provinces ever asked for this provision.

I think that indicates that the system of firearms acquisition certificates was introduced without any problems and that the general public and the provincial and territorial governments accepted this as a useful form of public protection. The very existence of this provision is one more reason not to amend the Criminal Code so as to abolish the requirement for firearms acquisition certificates in twenty-five federal ridings.

Mr. Speaker, so far my comments concerned the proposal about firearms acquisition certificates. I would also like to say a few words about the possible repercussions of a proposal by the Hon. Member for Skeena to relax the provisions relating to search and seizure. The existing provision is in fact an important preventive measure. When policemen have to intervene, for instance in a family quarrel where a firearm may be used, they have the authority to search for and seize the firearm before it becomes a tragic part of the quarrel. We all know that that kind of incident unfortunately is frequent. It should be noted that family or social relations are involved in the majority of homicides. Needless to say, those situations are so unpredictable that it would be totally unreasonable to require police to get a warrant before moving in. In fact, they may have to act immediately to save innocent lives.

Provisions pertaining to searches and seizures have led to controversy. It was feared giving the police additional powers would lead to abuses. Such has not been the case. Current legislative provisions also include a system of checks and balances under which control is exercized to prevent abuses.

This is another area of the law where it is important to maintain an adequate balance. The need to protect the people must not infringe upon individual rights and freedoms. There are safeguards in that respect, and this is a matter that we should be closely monitoring.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Skeena would significantly dilute of important provisions protecting the public. It is therefore my view that Bill C-213 does not deserve our support.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to state that I am in support of legislation to control firearms.

• (1640)

[English]

In my view no civilized society can exist without some restrictions. In an open and progressive society the task of striking the appropriate balance between liberty and order is an ongoing process and the end result is dependent upon public consensus.

The first amendment which the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is proposing would do away with warrantless searches and seizures by police. He views this provision in the legislation as unnecessary and an infringement upon legal rights. Section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms reads:

Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

• (1650)

It is a fine balance between the needs of public safety and the legitimate interests of firearm owners and users.

The Supreme Court of Canada has already recognized that in exceptional circumstances, searches and seizures without warrant do not infringe on individual legal rights under the Charter. An example of a warrantless search and seizure would be the case of a domestic dispute which might end in the death of one of the people involved.

It has not been found that this power has been abused by the police. Moreover, the provision requiring a return before a court whether or not articles were seized provides a check on undue harassment of individuals. If the Hon. Member knows of examples which might counter my argument, I would be pleased to hear them. However, I am not aware of there having been an over-all abuse of this by the police. I would be the first to ask the Government to review the policy if the Hon. Member could show some facts that would dispute my position.

His other amendment in Bill C-213 would abandon the need for a firearms acquisition certificate in 25 electoral districts spread across the country. How would the Hon. Member explain to Members representing those areas the creation of inequities in safety and rights of people in those areas as a result of this amendment?

The FAC provisions were intended by Parliament to apply equally throughout Canada and not give one region an advantage over another. This is not the way the gun control legislation operates in Canada. Why should the general public residing in these regions be afforded less protection and benefit of the law than those who reside in large urban areas? I recognize that there is a problem with respect to distances and people having to travel a long way to get a licence as a result of provincial regulations. However, I suggest that this is an administrative problem rather than something requiring an amendment to the Criminal Code. That is why I cannot support that second provision in his Bill. Perhaps there is another solution to that problem.

The Government is currently reviewing the legislative portion of the firearms control program to determine which amendments are required to further facilitate its administration. While contemplating no alteration of the fundamental principles underlying the program, it will be seeking to find ways to enhance the protection of the public, as well as to limit some overly burdensome administrative provisions of the law which inconvenience legitimate gun owners and which do not serve to protect the public. This review will help to ensure that the firearms legislation is able to respond to problems which were not anticipated at the time of its introduction.

It is an interesting coincidence that today we are debating the death penalty. I have discussed the question of the death penalty with enforcement people in my riding. As an abolitionist, I was comforted to hear that stronger penalties for illegal use of firearms would be preferred by the senior members of our forces rather than the use of the death penalty. Our local police have managed to reduce the crime rate in our region which, unfortunately, is very high in comparison with the rest of Quebec as well as the rest of Canada. They are doing a splendid job and certainly would not appreciate any relaxation of gun control.

My area is also a natural paradise. There is plentiful game and a beautiful landscape. Therefore, my constituents are very individualistic, but they recognize that there is a need for gun control and the legislation we have at the moment. While it may be imperfect in some technical, administrative way, it is protecting the public and giving them a chance to enjoy the sport that they want to enjoy in our region.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to take part in the debate on Bill C-213. The purpose of this Bill is to relax certain features of the gun control legislation that has been in effect since 1979, while retaining strict prohibition of firearms possession by those convicted of violent or firearms-related offences.

Section 95 of the Criminal Code makes a firearms acquisition certificate mandatory for practically anyone seeking to acquire a firearm. If I understand this amendment correctly, it would accordingly eliminate the requirement for a firearms acquisition certificate for residents of the more northerly and remote regions of Canada in some 25 constituencies.

The other amendment deals with the section of the Criminal Code which currently provides extensive powers to police officers to search for and seize firearms without a search warrant, in some circumstances. This amendment would remove the power to search a house without such a warrant.

My life today is much different than it was at one time. I want to speak to this Bill from some personal experience in the area of firearms.

In the course of my professional life I have been obliged to carry a firearm for a variety of reasons. I have been obliged to carry a firearm to protect myself from wildlife. I have been obliged to carry a firearm to provide my food supply. I regret that I have been obliged to carry a firearm to protect my life and the life of those with whom I worked. Of course, in my farming operation in which I am involved, the use of firearms is not necessarily a daily occurrence, but it is frequently required to protect my livestock from rodents, wolves and so on.

I approach this Bill with a considerable amount of personal interest.

In the spring and summer of 1976, and again in the same period in 1977, the House of Commons went through an emotional and controversial period, all in aid of amending the gun control provisions of the Criminal Code.

Finally, in July, 1977, Bill C-51 was passed, and that is the legislation that is on the books today. I think it has been well received in Canada.

The legislation contains several significant provisions. Those measures include the increased court powers to prohibit persons with histories of violence from possessing firearms; stiffer sentences, including a mandatory minimum for persons using guns to commit indictable offences; tighter controls over firearms businesses or dealers; expanded powers of firearms seizures for police to aid them in dealing with domestic disputes and new penalties for carelessness in storage and use of firearms.

Perhaps the most important feature of the firearms legislation was the establishment of the firearms acquisition certificate system to control the availability of firearms to potentially dangerous or unstable individuals.

I want to devote a few moments to the first amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). He would like to remove the power of police to search for and seize firearms, ammunition, or other explosive substances from a dwelling house without a warrant. As he states, searches of private homes would be lawful only when authorized by a magistrate.

I once found myself in my daily life, not recently, albeit, in a situation where I went into a home in the middle of the night, in the presence of a police officer, where violence at its worst was taking place. Firearms were present. Lives were in danger, the life of a mother and potentially the lives of the children. There was no time to react, but in one direction and that was to get that weapon out of the house as quickly as possible and out of the danger area.

I can only imagine if this amendment were in place at that particular night what would have happened during the period when the police officers who were involved would have had to go for a warrant in order to retrieve and remove that firearm. I trust that my colleague has considered that aspect carefully. I am not sure what is motivating him to move in this direction.

I support the measure which gives police the power on reasonable grounds and under judicial control to take firearms without a warrant, which I believe is urgent, and which was unanimously endorsed by all Parties when the present legislation was under consideration.

Domestic disputes are volatile and there is no way to predict their outcome. I believe that police officers in our country need this special provision. I also believe that this is one of the ingredients in the legislation which gives reasonable balance between the needs of public safety and the legitimate interests of firearm owners and users. So I cannot support the first amendment.

The second amendment would eliminate the requirement for a firearms acquisition certificate for residents, as he describes, of more northerly or remote regions of Canada. He has chosen and identified 25 federal constituencies named in Schedule III to the Canada Elections Act. I find it a great dichotomy that one member of the New Democratic Party wants to loosen the firearms acquisition certificate system and another of his Party, in a Private Member's Bill, is making it even more restrictive. There is very awkward and difficult dichotomy within the New Democratic Party on firearms control. For instance, the Hon. Member Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I understand, has sponsored a Bill which would turn the firearms acquisition certificate into a firearms possession certificate. The effect of this would be to extend the present system of control over unrestricted firearms, which only covers transactions, to include control over possession.

I honestly do not know how the Hon. Member is going to implement his scheme. One does not have to be a resident of the jurisdiction in which one applies for a firearms acquisition certificate. One could live, for example, in Ottawa and apply for a firearms certificate elsewhere and all of the guidelines would apply. What if one lived in Ottawa and wanted a firearm? One would only have to go to one of these 25 constituencies where one would not require a certificate in order to procure it and be able to obtain a firearm. Therefore, if an individual believes he would not meet the requirements for a certificate in his own area, he or she could simply purchase a long gun in any of the 25 constituencies named, no question asked.

The Hon. Member's proposal reminds me of the kind of checkerboard firearms legislation which exists in the United States. If the legislation is too tough in one area, all one has to do is to drive across the state line where controls are few or non-existent. Is that the type of firearm control we want in Canada? I do not think it is. I do not think it is what we, as legislators, have in mind for Canada.

I do not think that we can accept the proposals before us this afternoon. As legislators, it is up to us to ensure that there are adequate and good gun control laws. The Hon. Member's suggested amendments are unreasonable, not to mention controversial, and I think it would be wrong to support such measures in this debate.

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the Private Member's Bill submitted by the Hon. Member of Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I congratulate him for his interest in this area, which is one which concerns all Canadians, especially those in my riding.

I am certain that Members of this House appreciate that Canada's firearms control program, presently set out in part II (1) of the Criminal Code, is one of the most effective mechanisms existing in the world today for controlling the ownership and use of firearms. All free and democratic countries have recognized the necessity of controlling the possession of such weapons and strive to achieve what is for them an appropriate balance between the interests of society and those of persons interested in acquiring these potentially dangerous weapons.

This proposed legislation focuses on two issues: first, the issuance of the firearms acquisition certificates in remote areas of Canada, such as my riding, and, second, the right of police officers in exigent circumstances, to search for and seize a firearm without a warrant. It is my view that both proposals submitted for our consideration today are wrong-headed. One would seriously diminish the effectiveness and universality of the protection of the public offered through the firearms acquisition certificate's screening process in the existing legislation as it is applied across the country. The other would hamper the police in performing their duty to preserve the peace and protect the public.

I would propose to address the proposed modification of subsection 101(2) of the Criminal Code first. Let us be clear from the outset with regard to the present Criminal Code provisions set out in respect of search for and seizure of firearms. Where the police have reasonable grounds to believe that it is not in the public interest for the individual who is believed to be in possession of the firearms to retain them in his possession, there are two possible courses of action. Section 105(1) of the Criminal Code states that upon application to a provincial court judge made by or on behalf of the Attorney General with respect to any person, the provincial court judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of that person, or of other persons, that that person should have in his possession custody or control any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance, the provincial court judge may issue a warrant authorizing the search for and seizure of any firearm or other offensive weapon, or any ammunition or explosive substance in the possession, custody or control of that person.

Subsection 101(2) reads that where, with respect to any person, a peace officer is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interest of the safety of that person, or of any other person, that that person should have in his possession, custody or control any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance and that the danger to the safety of that person, or other persons, is such as to proceed by way of an application—I notice, Mr. Speaker, my time has run out and I thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

Pursuant to the motion adopted earlier today pursuant to Standing Order 94(b) the House will now revert to the consideration of the motion on capital punishment and the amendment of Mr. Robinson.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—RIGHTS OF NORTHERN CANADIANS—FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament who are very interested in today's motion will recall the recommendation in the McGrath report that motions, unless they are declared such, are considered not to be motions of confidence in the Government. I want to make it very clear that, as a member of the caucus of a Party which supports the constitutional Accord and wishes today to make some fine tuning comments, we consider the motion before the House to be not a motion of confidence—no reflection of a non-confidence vote—if it is voted in the affirmative. I just wanted to make it very clear in the spirit of the McGrath report that this motion has nothing to do with confidence in the Government.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in responding to my hon. friend's point, I know the motion is well intended and that my hon. friend wishes to have a full and complete debate on the matter, but he will remember that while the Government responded favourably to many parts of the McGrath Committee report—and you will know, Mr. Speaker, as will the House, that this is the first day under which the new rules have been brought into full force without any provision—I would point out to the House that the confidence convention was considered by the Government, and we did not feel that we were able to put the confidence convention into play as suggested by the McGrath Committee.

The Government will be considering today as an allotted day and the motion as a matter of confidence. That does not mean we cannot have a full debate on the matter or have it explored fully.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I gave my friend notice that I wanted very briefly, without interfering with the debate which shall go forward, to make a point of order with respect to the Opposition Day motion. I suggest that the Hon. Member's motion deals with two distinct propositions. One is the rights of Canadians in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and the second is a request for a First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights.

There is no doubt in my mind that it is appropriate to put a complicated question before the House, but I am concerned in that the first part of the motion deals with the constitutional rights of Canadians residing in northern Canada, a matter which is now sub-judice. The Government leaders of both Yukon and the Northwest Territories have recently filed petitions in the Supreme Courts of those jurisdictions which seek judicial declarations that certain constitutional measures which the Meech Lake agreement anticipates are in contravention of the Constitution of Canada, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, in their anticipated impact upon residents of the Territories.

The Yukon petition is scheduled for hearing on June 15, and the Northwest Territories petition on June 22.

I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Citation 335 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which indicates that, pursuant to the sub-judice convention:

> Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record.

This is a matter which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) raised in response to questions during last Thursday's Question Period. I understand the reluctance that the Chair has shown in the past in ruling opposition motions out of order, and I support that principle. In this case, however, I would suggest there is a possible solution; if you were to find one part out of order, that you give consideration to splitting the motion and proceeding with that portion which is not barred by the sub-judice rule—I am referring to the latter part of the motion.

I would ask you to consider this point of order, Mr. Speaker, and whether or not you might properly find that since the matter of the rights of Canadians in Yukon and Northwest Territories is, in fact, before a court of record that you should properly amend the motion. That amendment could take place by deleting all the words after the word "should" in the second line, down to and including the word "to" in the fourth line so that the motion would read:

> That the Government should make a commitment to hold a First Ministers' Conference to discuss aboriginal concerns, in particular self-government.

Mr. Speaker: Are there Members rising on the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this discussion but I think it is an important point. The motion as it presently reads affirms that the question we are discussing is a political question and it is a matter quite appropriate for the House to discuss. We have sought advice on the appropriateness of the particular wording and consider it to be appropriate. It is certainly a political question and goes far beyond any restrictions that the court would place on such an initiative by the House of Commons.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this resolution and the debate on it, in my opinion, in no way impinges on the court action taken by the Territories with respect to their rights under the Constitution.

We are not in this debate or by this resolution trying to resolve that court action or anticipate the court action. We are dealing with the political will of this House to decide on the Meech Accord and what is in or not in it. We are not in any way trying to deal with the court action. I do not think that this resolution can be ruled out of order on those grounds.

There have been, I believe, many precedents where Parliament has passed legislation dealing with an issue that is before the courts and resolved it once and for all. In passing such legislation, Parliament has not attempted in any way to impinge on the rights of the litigants in the case. They have settled for the future once and for all and what would then be the situation.

With respect to the other point, I am deeply disappointed that the Deputy House Leader for the Government has refused to accept this resolution as a motion other than one of non-confidence. When the Government brought in the new rules suggested by the Committee of the House, chaired by the then Hon. Member for St. John's East, this was supposed to be a new era of putting more meaning into opposition resolutions before the House. I do not think the Government has accepted one opposition resolution as a motion other than one of non-confidence, even though opposition Parties have, time and time again, asked that they not be considered questions of confidence.

I would like to know from the Government, if this is not accepted as a motion other than one of confidence, what will the Government accept as such a motion in an opposition resolution? The Government is making a farce of the new rules which the Government itself has proposed that we continue, to which we have agreed. I cannot see what is meant by that provision in the rules if the Government will never accept any resolution put forward by the Opposition as a motion other than one of non-confidence. This is one which the Government should certainly accept on that basis.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to add one further point to this important debate. I am referring to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Citation 336(1) which reads:

> The sub-judice convention has been applied consistently in criminal cases.

It then goes on in Citation 337(1) to read:

> No settled practice has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.

This is clearly not a criminal case that we are considering and, therefore, I think the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) is simply not appropriate.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I have two additional points which I will make briefly because I do not wish to impinge upon the debating time.

First, with respect to the point which my hon. friend has just made, there is quite a difference between Parliament commenting on a civil case between two individuals or two different parties and Parliament commenting on a case which is being brought to a court of law by a territory which involves Parliament. For that reason, simply because we want to have the matter heard by the courts without any question, a decision by Parliament should not impinge on that.

• (1120)

The second point I would make is that my friend may say that this is a political matter, but in the motion the reference is that the Government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord, 1987. I do not think there is any question that we have not diminished in any way the rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I think we should try to separate what is properly the matter which should be dealt with in Parliament and properly the matter which should be dealt with by a court of law.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as the mover of the motion, I would like to reply very briefly to the Government's arguments and to support what our House Leader has just said. The wording, as is my wont, was chosen with care. The words at the outset are that the Government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord, 1987. It does not say legal rights nor does it say moral rights, it simply says rights.

With foresight, I thought the Government might try to make even what on legal grounds I would regard to be a spurious argument, but certainly if the House gives the wording of the motion the latitude of interpretation it deserves, we may be talking about moral rights. That is one case that can be made and I will make it.

A stronger kind of case could be made that in addition to moral rights that are being infringed upon there are certain legal rights. If the wording had been "legal rights", the Government's case might be somewhat stronger than it is now. It certainly would not have been persuasive, but since the word "rights" is used and can be interpreted as meaning moral rights, I think that slight degree of credibility the Government had in its argument falls completely to the ground.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address two issues which have come to the attention of the House in the last few minutes. First, Rule 337 of Beauchesne's as it applies to sub judice refers quite clearly to the fact that no set practice has been developed in relation to any civil case. Certainly, the civil case convention does not apply after it reaches trial stage in any event.

It is quite different, of course, when dealing with criminal cases because then Rule No. 336 applies. Rule No. 336, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader indicated quite truly, indicates that debate at that point would be inappropriate if this were a criminal case, which it is not.

Finally, discussions about existing rights or rights of any other kind is a point of debate and not really central to the point of order, or to whether Rules 336, 337 or any other rule applies. Whether or not rights have been taken away or whether they have been taken away morally, legally, constitutionally or otherwise is a point that could be raised during debate, but that discussion does not in any way affect whether or not Rules 336 or 337 of Beauchesne's apply in this particular case.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one very brief point. I would suggest that the precedent which the Parliamentary Secretary is seeking to establish would in fact be a very dangerous one in that it would significantly limit the powers of Parliament to debate issues of public concern.

The Parliamentary Secretary suggests that the mere issuing of a writ in the courts would cut off parliamentary debate and discussion. Surely Members of the House would recognize the implications of that. I know Your Honour recognizes the very serious implications of that. The Parliamentary Secretary sought then to shift ground. He probably recognized that the soil was eroding rapidly beneath him so he then started to suggest that perhaps the nature of the litigant made a difference. He said that it was a territorial Government that was suing and somehow that made it different. I would ask Your Honour to recognize that the fact that a writ has been issued and a civil action is under way should certainly not preclude a discussion by the House of the very important issues that have been raised by my leader.

Mr. Speaker: In the interests of not holding up debate, the Chair has decided that, rather than reserve in this matter, the Chair will rule immediately.

In the interests of Hon. Members and of the public watching and listening, I want to be sure that everyone understands the issue that has been raised here. It is an issue that is always likely to be raised in the House, especially with respect to a matter being debated here which may be the subject of consideration by the courts.

I would say at the outset that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary raises a matter of concern to Hon. Members and a matter upon which the Chair has had occasion to comment in the past. In order to make the issue absolutely clear, I will read the motion. Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Riis, moves:

> That the government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord, 1987; and further, to make a commitment to hold a First Ministers' Conference to discuss aboriginal concerns, in particular self-government.

One of the points the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has made is that the view of the Government is, and I think I have his words correctly, that it has not diminished the rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. That may very well be, but that is of course a matter of debate. However, I have taken the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's point.

The reason that there has been throughout the centuries the admonishment by Speakers, contained in the learned comments on procedure, with respect to debates which concern matters before the courts is of course fundamentally to ensure that the rights of those who are before the courts are not prejudiced. Again, so that all Hon. Members and the public will understand, I would like to refer to Rule No. 335 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads as follows:

> Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record.

There is no question that in this case the action that has been taken with respect to Yukon and the Northwest Territories is before a court of record. The rule goes on:

> The purpose of this sub-judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

Rule 336 goes on to say:

> The sub-judice convention has been applied consistently in criminal cases—
> The precedents in criminal cases are consistent in preventing reference to court cases before a judgment is rendered—the convention is applied again when an appeal is launched.

In the view of the Chair, this clearly is not a criminal matter. Rule 337 goes on to say:

> (1) No settled practice has been developed in relation to civil cases, as the convention has been applied in some cases but not in others.
> (2) In civil cases the convention does not apply until the matter has reached the trial stage.

• (1130)

I think it is common knowledge that even were the rule to apply in this particular case the matter has not reached the trial stage.

I also draw to the attention of Hon. Members Citation 479(2) of Beauchesne's. It reads:

> The Opposition prerogative is very broad in the use of the allotted day and ought not to be interfered with except on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds.

In this case the issue which has been raised is a matter of public debate and a great deal of comment on both sides. No trial has yet commenced and if indeed it ever comes to trial it will certainly be treated as a civil matter.

Therefore, the case against proceeding with the debate is not strong enough on procedural grounds to move the Chair to set aside rule 479(2), that the use of the allotted day ought not be interfered with except on the clearest and most certain procedural grounds.

Having said all that, I know Hon. Members will want to support the Chair in the suggestions and admonishments that I have made in the past with respect to comment on cases before the courts. I have urged Hon. Members to be very careful and to extend the principles of fair play, which is the basis of this place. I do want Hon. Members to understand that nothing I say in this ruling takes away from the very paramount necessity for all Hon. Members to guard with great care the rights of any citizen who may be involved in a court case, most especially, of course, a criminal case, which this is not.

I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for raising a matter which does warrant the consideration of the House and the Chair. I regret that I have not had time, under the circumstances, to give as extensive a ruling as I may have wished to in this case, but under the circumstances this morning the Chair will allow the debate.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

> That the government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord, 1987; and further, to make a commitment to hold a First Ministers' Conference to discuss aboriginal concerns, in particular self-government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, following the historic meeting of the First Ministers last Tuesday in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers of the provinces reached an accord on a variety of propositions designed to amend the Canadian Constitution we in the New Democratic Party expressed our pleasure. We were happy with two things; first, that with the great diversity of political backgrounds and Parties of the Premiers and Prime Minister, representing the highly diverse country of Canada, they were able to come together on an agreement, and that ought to be an indication to those of us in this House who had to express a final opinion that we should likely be able to find ourselves in agreement with what was proposed, and second, we were pleased because we had said as a Party, following the Meech Lake meeting, that although we liked the process up to that point, and that in principle the Meech Lake Accord seemed to move in the right direction, we wanted to see the final wording. Last Tuesday we saw the final wording.

I am pleased to say on behalf of my caucus that we had the longest discussion that my caucus has had during this session, on a matter of great importance to the future of Canada, not only for the next five or ten years but, one hopes, for a few decades to come. Such a matter requires a most systematic and thorough discussion by all political Parties, about all of the elements and their implications to the Accord. My caucus spent over four hours discussing this matter in what I thought was one of the most constructive, useful and informative discussions we have had on any matter. Frankly, I would have welcomed public observation of a serious group of men and women actively deliberating upon a very serious matter.

At the end of that meeting I announced, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, our support for the resolution. I did so with great confidence that people from one end of Canada to the other—

Quebecers and other Canadians as well, when they examine this document, will find that the resolution is an excellent one. It is good for the federal Government and it is good for the provinces, because thanks to this Accord, the provinces will start to play a more positive role within our federal system.

Third, for the first time in our history, the Province of Quebec, as a result of a decision made by the Government of Quebec, will become a full participant in the Canadian federation. As I said before, this is a historic moment.

[English]

We are pleased that all the elements which needed to be considered were considered by the First Ministers. We think the package is a very positive one for the federal Government's role in our society, for greater participation by the provinces, and particularly because it constitutes an opening up to the Province of Quebec which was acceptable to the Government of the Province of Quebec.

I said that while accepting the Accord we would have more to say about the process of its consideration by Parliament and, very important, about the right of Canadians to learn in greater detail about what is involved and their right to make constructive suggestions about some of the details of that Accord.

Second, we said that we would have constructive suggestions to make about changing the Accord which would be consistent with its purposes and which we hope the federal Government and, in turn, the provincial Governments, will be able to reach final agreement upon and accept as positive.

I want to say something important on behalf of my colleagues with regard to the process. We want the Government to announce soon what it plans to do in terms of establishing a committee to look into the Accord and provide an opportunity for input from the people of Canada and Members of Parliament. The Government has an obligation to get this under way and to do so soon.

Today I want to talk about two groups of Canadians who are quite unhappy with the Accord. They are northerners and aboriginal peoples. Aboriginal peoples think they are doubly jeopardized because in addition to fearing that certain losses in terms of aboriginal rights could occur, since a majority of Canadians living north of the 60th parallel are aboriginal peoples, they believe that they lose once again in terms of discrimination against rights of people who live north of the 60th parallel.

I want to stress to Members of the Government that today's motion is fully consistent with the spirit and purpose of the Accord.

[Translation]

As a country, we wanted a process of renewal so that the founding partners of Confederation would feel both legally and morally comfortable within our federation. It would be most unfortunate if in the course of this process, two major groups of Canadians were to feel left out.

Seventy-five thousand people live in Yukon and the Northwest Territories, in an area that represents one third of Canada's territory. At a time when we are talking about the importance of Arctic sovereignty, the Accord as it reads today confers on northern Canadians a status that is somewhat inferior to that of the residents of other provinces. I am sure that we all want to try and improve the situation so that people in the north will not feel like second-class citizens. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said last week that the process will enhance our ability to achieve that goal, the goal being to realize more fully the aspirations of northern Canadians. Canadians in the north want a strong voice in the decisions affecting their future in Confederation. They want a strong voice in areas that affect them.

The leaders of the Governments of Yukon and the Northwest Territories believe that they should be able to consider the option for their territory to become a province. They have expressed serious doubts about the success of such an option, since now the approval of all provinces will be required for the two territories to become provinces.

[English]

Although there is no doubt that the central purpose of the last two First Ministers' meetings was to bring the people of Quebec, through their Government and in a positive way, to acceptance of a federal Canada, it was also desired by everyone there I am sure to do this without jeopardizing the rights of other Canadians. It would be very unfortunate if this accord, which is such a plus for so much of Canada, ends up doing injury to other Canadians. The changes I am proposing today are intended to avoid that possibility. They are intended to meet with the purpose and spirit of the Accord and I hope they will be listened to and accepted by the Government.

The people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories have two central complaints. First, they object to the amending formula which requires unanimity in order for them to obtain provincial status. This requirement is a departure from the history of the evolution of Canada. When your province, Mr. Speaker, as well as the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland became part of Confederation only the federal Government was involved in the decision. Certainly the other provinces played no role whatsoever. In 1982 this principle, which held sway up until then, was changed to require at least seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population to agree to the establishment of a territory as a province. With this Accord a more regressive step has been taken and, if adopted as part of our Constitution, all 10 provinces plus the federal Government have to be in agreement. This is quite unacceptable to the NDP.

The people in Yukon and the Northwest Territories simply want the restoration of the situation to what it was in 1982. They are not asking us to go back to the situation prior to 1982, they are simply asking us to restore the formula of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population plus the federal Government being in agreement.

I hope the Government has an adequate answer to the question I am going to ask. Why have we changed the formula to require unanimity? It goes against our history. It goes against logic. It goes against fairness. The people of those two territories want the right to make up their own mind about becoming a province and they do not want one province alone to be able to say no. That is what is involved. Now is the time in this debate for all the Parties to make clear that what has been fair for other provinces in the past ought to be fair for Yukoners and people in the Northwest Territories today. We should all commit ourselves to Part 1 of this motion.

I would say parenthetically about the former Member for Yukon, a former Deputy Prime Minister, a man with whom I did not agree about an awful lot, and he would say the same thing if he were here today, that Mr. Erik Nielsen fought hard for the goal of Yukon eventually becoming a province. He made many speeches on that subject, both in this House and in Yukon. I have a suspicion that were he still a member of the Cabinet this kind of unacceptable proposal would not have been made. I will not say anymore on that.

The other point is that not only is there discrimination against the north in this respect, there seems to me to be an infringement of their legal rights in the provision in this Accord for the selection of new Senators. Far be it from me to praise the Senate and I certainly will not praise it as it now exists. However, if we are going to turn over to the provinces the right to select future Senators from their regions, then it seems to me logically, and I would have thought legally, necessary that those regions participate in the selection of their Senators in exactly the same way as the provinces.

I am not a lawyer. I have many other faults but that is not among them. However, I would think the legal case being made about differential rights in the Charter of Rights by the Northwest Territories and Yukon is a solid one. It seems to me that what is involved in this provision is a different set of rights. If you are a Canadian living anywhere other than north of 60, you have the right through your provincial Government to participate in the selection of Senators. Yet if you live north of 60 you do not have that right. I believe that discrimination ought to be corrected by this Parliament before the resolution is adopted.

I want to talk about Canada's aboriginal peoples. In March, we saw the conclusion of the fourth constitutionally required attempt by the First Ministers to deal with aboriginal rights. It was the last in a series of meetings that have been designed to redress a very important and profoundly sad historical wrong. As all Canadians know, that meeting ended in failure. It was indeed a sad day for Canada.

It was both sad and poignant for many of us who were not participating in the conference but saw the wind-up session and saw, in particular, the very distinguished, committed and very moving statements made by the leaders of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. They were speaking as leaders of aboriginal peoples, but also were making it clear that they were speaking in a fundamental way as Canadians. They were saying that they wanted to be brought in as part of the Canadian family.

I say that we should not at this time continue to ignore their claims and that we should positively make a commitment to resolve what failed to be resolved in March. We should be making a commitment to have a First Ministers meeting on aboriginal rights, particularly on the question of self-government for aboriginal people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Following the failure of that meeting, the Prime Minister said: "It was with the greatest sadness that this was a moral obligation that has been unfulfilled by Canada, by the federal Government and by the provinces". He was alluding to the failure to establish within the Constitution the principle of aboriginal self-government. It is important that we deal justly with the ongoing injury of unfulfilled rights for our aboriginal peoples, particularly the right of self-government within Canada.

On behalf of my colleagues I said to the aboriginal leaders' conference in Toronto on February 5, that as a nation we ought to be proud of our federal system which, in historical terms in the modern world, is one of the earliest democracies. We were the first to really combine the principle of responsible government and federalism. We have had a positive, at times exuberant, history in terms of resolving constitutional differences which, in effect, are by-products of differences within society.

There is now an important opening of considerable historic significance to the Province of Quebec. We are adjusting our federal system in a realistic way that accords with the human reality as it exists in Quebec and Quebec's relations with the rest of Canada. We have shown that flexibility in our federal system. In this regard, we ought to be energetically committed to the ideal that the federal system in Canada must be further amended to incorporate within it, the aboriginal peoples of Canada with their own form of self-government.

I wrote to the Prime Minister on March 5, expressing my Party's desire for the Government to take the lead at the First Ministers' conference on aboriginal rights to be held later that month, and to work vigorously for an agreement. While I understand the Government's strategy of playing a consensus role, we wanted it to put a set of propositions forward that could have provided the foundation for the support from a number of provinces which could then jointly deal with the dissenting provincial Premiers. We know that rather than pursuing such a strategy, we saw a strategy of consensus building.

It is time that the federal Government took a more vigorous position, one that is clearly worked out and discussed with the leaders of the aboriginal peoples. It is time the Government took the initiative rather than wait for all ten provinces to be in agreement. It must formulate a package of proposals with the support of the majority of provinces who are on side in this important issue, significantly the Province of Quebec, and then work on the other provinces. I am sure that with the support of the vast majority of Canadians we can win.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), but is there unanimous consent to give the Hon. Member some extra time?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we agree to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to continue his remarks. Of course, we take it that he will be reasonable and take into consideration the fact that members from our Party want to speak to this important motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I thank Members of the House for their consideration.

Following the Meech Lake agreement, I questioned the Prime Minister about the need for a specific commitment by the First Ministers to be put in the Accord to have additional meetings to deal with the question of aboriginal rights, particularly the right to self-government. At that time, the Prime Minister responded with openness and said that he was prepared to rethink the position that was taken at Meech Lake. I hope that rethinking process is taking place with great seriousness.

An appropriate metaphor has been used with reference to the inclusion of the aboriginal peoples with their rights in the Constitution. It is the metaphor of the circle. The circle of our Constitution simply is not complete. I am convinced that after the appropriate decision is made in the National Assembly in the Province of Quebec, for the first time Quebec will be openly making a positive decision to be part of the Canadian federation. That is an important part of closing the circle. However, we must now include the aboriginal Canadians. It is unthinkable to close the circle without them because the Canadian family must include all of its members within the circle.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, native leaders, the Prime Minister and the Opposition are agreed that if during the past five years, Quebec had taken part in the struggle for constitutional recognition of native peoples, our chances of success would have been greater. Now that Quebec has signed the Constitution, we must try again.

The Prime Minister has stated that genuine co-operation is necessary to see that justice is done to Canada's native peoples. We can give these words muscle by adding to the Accord a constitutional conference of First Ministers on native rights, especially the right of self-government.

We can respond to the concerns of native peoples and the citizens of Canada's North.

On May 4 this year, the Prime Minister said that the Meech Lake Accord was not about the possibility of creating new provinces but about bringing Quebec back into the Constitution.

Native leaders and leaders of the Governments of Yukon and the Northwest Territories are glad to see that Quebec has been brought back into the Constitution, although they do believe that the Accord could have disastrous consequences for native peoples and the people of the north.

We now have the time and the opportunity to improve the Accord in such a way that it enhances and does not restrict the aspirations of Canada's native peoples and the residents of Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

[English]

Now is the time to complete the circle of confederation. Supporting this motion will move us clearly in that direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? There being no questions and comments, debate.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate which follows a very historic event in the history of our country, that is, the unanimous agreement and signing last week of the Accord with respect to an amendment to our Constitution which says: "Welcome back Quebec. Welcome to Canada as a full and participating member of our Confederation".

I think it important at this point to reiterate, and again from time to time as we discuss the matter, not only here on the floor of the House of Commons, but generally in Parliaments of the provinces of our country, that we have taken this step to make our country whole, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, and to have a most important part of Canada feel at home and part of this union.

I was gratified to hear, not only from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) but from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) as well, in their formal responses on behalf of their Parties their unequivocal approval of this Accord. I say to them that the position they took was positive and constructive, coming as it did at a time when it seems to me we are moving towards a Canada that does in fact constitutionally reflect the realities we face. It is in that spirit that I address this debate.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party has, in his motion, raised a couple of issues which bear full debate and consideration. Let me say at the outset that I want to deal with these issues as best I can in a non-partisan way, because I believe that is the kind of debate we should have with respect to constitutional matters. However, I have to say that I do not share the basic premise of the motion put forward by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He is dealing with two elements in his motion, the position of those important citizens of our country who reside in the Territories and our aboriginal people, and that the position we have taken as a Government and as a Parliament with respect to these people constitutionally has been anything but supportive. In fact we are making progress, and I want to deal with the realities of what has transpired and what we now face. I want also to give my assurance to Members of the House, on behalf of the Government, that in these two important areas our commitment remains to achieve progress and to work towards that priority.

The Hon. Member for Oshawa alluded to the process which is taking place with respect to this particular matter. I think it is important for us to put this into context. Some people have said that this particular Accord is not receiving the kind of debate it should. I think the facts are that this particular Accord has and will receive by far the most complete and intensive consideration of any political accord with respect to our Constitution in the history of our country.

I want to remind Hon. Members that in 1980, 1981 and 1982, we were in an evolutionary period with respect to constitutional change. They will recall that until 1982 the whole question of constitutional change in law, practice and convention was really a unilateral function of the federal Parliament. There was reference in some judicial pronouncements that there should be some consultation and agreement where actions were taken that might impact on the legislative capacity of a province but, in reality, when the last province was added to our country this was a unilateral action taken by the federal Government without consultation with other provinces. So I think it is important to note that we have progressed in constitutional terms to 1982 when the inclusion of additional provinces was in fact a matter which required the consensus of provincial legislatures, and also the consent of those legislatures representing over 50 per cent of the population of Canada.

Therefore, I take it that the New Democratic Party is not taking the position that when we deal with matters of national institutions and the creation of new provinces, and when we talk about giving self-government to aboriginal peoples, we should move back to the point that unilateral action can be taken by the federal Government. I take it that indeed the NDP supports the idea that provincial participation and consultation in these important issues is fundamental in modern Canada.

I wanted to put that in context, because it seems to me that when we debate this issue, we need to remember that the last time we had a constitutional amendment, in 1982, there was no debate by the provinces and no debate with respect to any provisions which took place, except on the floor of the House of Commons and in the Senate of Canada. The agreement was finally put together, as history tells us, in a kitchen, with the exclusion of the important Province of Quebec. It was negotiated in the dead of night between the provinces, with the exception of Quebec, and manifested itself in an Accord which was not signed by Quebec. It was simply put to us in Parliament and we were asked "yea or nay". There was no subsequent discussion about the elements which went into the compromise arrived at in the night without the participation of Quebec. There were no debates in the provinces with respect to that matter because all that was required was a joint address of the Senate and the House of Commons with respect to that particular amendment.

We are now moving to a point where we not only will have a discussion here on the floor of the House of Commons, but there is also a provision—this will be negotiated between the House Leaders of the various Parties in this place, that is an appropriate method of dealing with this matter—for each of the provinces, in all regions of Canada, to debate and discuss this matter. A more complete process has never been undertaken for constitutional change in Canada.

On the political side, and I do not want to get myself involved in the legal arguments which will be addressed with respect to matters before the court, but speaking in terms of the interests of people who live in the Territories, I want to say that the matter we have before us is a matter arrived at by unanimous consent in trying to reflect the realities of Canada today. I do not think anyone can challenge the fact that my Party and this Government have taken a leadership role with respect to devolution in the Territories and with respect to ensuring that, as quickly as possible, we move forward in this area of the Territories controlling their own destiny and attaining provincial status.

In terms of what we have before us, the reality is simply this. Part of this arrangement, which was in effect a discussion of what will happen in the future, is a constitutional recognition that whenever one talks in terms of additional provinces within our country, regardless of the government in power at any particular time, there must be the fullest understanding and consensus of all provinces with respect to such admission or creation. Indeed, the provision for unanimity addresses the reality of today. We are entering into a new phase in federal-provincial relations.

When was the last time in Canada that we could have attained such accord? When was the last time we saw representatives from all political Parties moving forward co-operatively to strengthen our country and to give a proper recognition to all its regions? Could one have visualized two or three years ago constitutionalizing a process by which every year there would be a meeting of First Ministers with an agenda regarding constitutional amendment?

What an opportunity for Canada to move forward in terms of the development of the north! In the Northwest Territories there is an internal discussion going on now with respect to boundaries and the division of the Northwest Territories into two separate Parties. I simply say that we now have an opportunity to move forward in this area. We have a new spirit of co-operation, a new spirit of confederation. I say to Hon. Members opposite in the New Democratic Party that this is an opportunity for us to move forward in this spirit of co-operation to serve the legitimate and proper aspirations and purposes of the people within the territories of our country.

I should point out that there is also a protection built into this unanimous provision in the Constitution, inasmuch as it will not be possible for intrusion into the Territories by existing provinces wishing to expand their boundaries into that area of our country. That would require unanimity as well. Thus there is a protection to people in the territories built into this Accord, which I recommend for support on the floor of the House of Commons.

We have an opportunity to go forward on this matter and, indeed, with respect to the matter of aboriginal rights on a formalized basis. We have now agreed for the first time in our country to have constitutional amendment as an annual process, to work together to try to develop a country which will be not only more sensitive to the concerns of all its residents and citizens but, indeed, responsive to all areas and regions of the country.

I wish to deal briefly with one or two items that have been raised with respect to the 1987 Accord and some of the misconceptions that may have been brought forward. I think that this is a strong and solid document which recommends itself for the unanimous support of all Members of the House of Commons and of the Senate, if I may be permitted to refer to the other place. This is an opportunity for us to go forward and to say to Quebec, "Yes. We want you as part of Canada to play an important and integral role".

Before we start to become involved in a discussion of the wording or some element that some Hon. Members might have preferred to be in the Accord, I ask all Hon. Members this. Consider the consequences of having failed over the course of the long and protracted negotiations that have taken place over the last three years, which negotiations have culminated in the Meech Lake Accord and subsequently in the agreement signed formally by all Premiers and the Prime Minister last Thursday. What kind of country would we have faced today if we had come out of those meetings saying no to the Province of Quebec? This has to be an underlying consideration. I cannot as a western Canadian visualize as a western Canadian the type of insular attitude that would be taken by some who would say to an important part of our country, "It does not suit our convenience right at the moment, therefore we are not going to pay attention to your legitimate concerns and your wish to become part of Confederation".

If that was the attitude prevalent with respect to the part of Canada which I represent, then my attitude toward Confederation would be severely limited and negatively impacted. Instead of standing in our places and saying that we wished that the Constitution contained this word or that word, let us be forward-looking. Let us be generous. Let us support what I say and suggest is a solid supportable document which, in fact, strengthens Canada and all parts of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Accord has two essential characteristics which reflect the Canadian federation. The first is the incontestable fact that a fundamental characteristic of Canada is the existence of persons who speak one or other of our official languages, together with the fact that Quebec, within Canada, possesses a distinctive heritage. This is a feature which is indeed recognized by our founding constitutional document of 1867, which singles out Quebec's civil law system, the use of both official languages in the law, courts and legislature of that province, as well as at the federal level. The second is the affirmation of the basic nature of a federal system of government wherein the component units, that is, the provinces, have a legitimate, shared interest in the establishment and composition of the central institutions of government. These bodies do not exist for the sole interest or benefit of the central government.

This is a point that was made very clear by the Supreme Court of Canada when, in 1980, it struck down a unilateral attempt by the federal Government to reform the Senate. This is equally true with respect to areas such as immigration,about which the provinces already have a concurrent jurisdiction with Parliament. It is true about spending power with respect to which the provinces take an obvious interest in shared cost programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Nor is it surprising that the provinces be viewed as standing on a basis of equality when decisions are being made about the fundamental alterations in the central institutions of the nation or in the evolution of its political structure. These are the essential features of the Canadian federation which are the heart of the new constitutional Accord, a translation of basic facts into legal reality.

At the same time the central government and its capacity to govern as a strong government have not been impaired. Its full powers to ensure a united and strong Canada with English, French and multicultural dimensions are fully protected. Its essential powers over immigration remain undiluted. Its spending power is civilized but undiminished. Indeed, this power is now explicitly recognized in the Constitution by the Accord. The ultimate authority of the central government over the Supreme Court and Senate remains, and no amendment to the Constitution can be made without its consent. So where are all these alleged so-called losses in federal authority that have been stated to be at peril?

As the preamble to the 1987 Accord states, the purpose of the amendments are, —to bring about the full and active participation of Quebec in Canada's constitutional evolution and provide new arrangements to foster greater harmony and co-operation between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces, and would require that annual First Ministers' conferences on the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate be convened and that annual constitutional conferences composed of First Ministers be convened.

[Translation]

• (1220)

[English]

There is a second misconception about the wording of the proposed constitutional amendment. The constitutional amendment gives as much, if not more, precision in its language as any previous set of constitutional amendments we have seen and, indeed, as some of the concepts contained in the original BNA Act and the Constitution Act.

Let us look at the Constitution Act, 1982. Section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees rights and freedoms "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society". Is there anything more general one can state in a constitution or a charter than those words?

In Section 7 everyone has the right to life, liberty, and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. Those words outline principles which we all support and which we would want to be interpreted in the proper Canadian way.

Let us go back to Parliament's powers in Section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867. It allowed Parliament to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada. The Privy Council and the Supreme Court together have been moulding and remoulding that expression for 120 years. We still have no certainty about its meaning, whether it is a residual or an emergency power.

I think the wording of the proposed amendment is in comparative terms most precise and supportive. I do not think any of us would want to have such restrictive and constrained wording in the course of a constitutional amendment that it would not allow for expansive, creative, evolutionary development of a united Canada which recognizes the interests and the uniqueness of the country; one which can in fact be developed as time goes by.

Since questions have been raised in respect of allegations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but he too is about to take up a few extra minutes. I hope he will get unanimous consent to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. I want to touch upon the second part of the motion because I believe it is a very sustainable—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Here again I must remind the House that we have Members on all sides who want to speak in this debate. This is an Opposition Day. If government Members could take their 20 minutes, plus the 10-minute Question Period, I would appreciate it. If the Minister could give us an undertaking that he will not take any more than three minutes or four minutes to finish his speech, I would appreciate that also.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will try to take no more than four minutes or five minutes.

Mr. Gauthier: All right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In respect of appointments to the bodies in question, there has been no limitation of the ability of the federal Government represented in Parliament to make the appointments in question. However, there has been a new process in respect of consultation, not only in terms of appointments to the Senate until Senate reform is a reality, but also in terms of the Supreme Court of Canada. I suppose the impact is more pronounced in the Province of Quebec than in the rest of Canada. Consultations can take place with the provinces in respect of the other positions in terms of the Supreme Court of Canada.

I want to deal with the latter part of the motion before us by pointing out that we are in fact moving forward in terms of our consideration of constitutional amendments in the interests of aboriginal peoples. I share the disappointment. I think all Hon. Members of the House felt that we were unable to strike an arrangement on aboriginal constitutional amendments at the last First Ministers' meeting. However, the federal Government gave leadership. I hate to take issue with a statement by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, but the reality is that the federal Government was in a position of leadership to bring forward, in all stages of the discussions over the course of the last three years, a proposition which would have allowed for self-government in Canada. We felt that it should have been acceptable and sufficient, not only to the aboriginal peoples but also to the provinces, to bring about an amendment. All of us agree that the objective is one toward which we all want to work. However, it became a question of whether or not we would be able to bridge the gap which unfortunately existed between a number of provinces and the aboriginal people over the question of the inherent right to self-government existing for aboriginal peoples. We tried every device and every initiative to bridge that gap. It was not consensus making which was at stake; it was a fundamental principle in which the federal Government said that self-government must always be within the context of Canadian confederation.

If we consider that basic principle, then any other position on the part of the federal Government would not find acceptance by Members of Parliament, let alone the population of Canada. We wanted to allow for a position which could be evolved and developed, and for a commitment to be made to sit at the table with the aboriginal people on a mandatory basis to move forward with self-government, but it did not work.

However, that was not the end of it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated at the conclusion of the First Ministers' meeting that it was not the end of it and that we may not call a First Ministers' meeting in order simply to go over what happened in the past, but that we would want to see some indication that we would make progress. Therefore I have met, on behalf of the Government of Canada, in an initial way with three aboriginal representative groups. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) has been in communication on an ongoing basis with the AFN. We are asking for their input into what would be an appropriate mode to proceed in respect of aboriginal self-government. I have had very helpful discussions with representatives of the aboriginal groups. I am now consulting to determine what will be the most appropriate way to maintain the priority to move toward the ultimate constitutionalization of the concepts of self-government and aboriginal rights within the constitution.

It seems to me that it would be unrealistic for us to convene meetings which would take place on a formalized basis until we were able to examine with aboriginal groups the appropriate way to proceed at this point in our history.

As far as the federal Government is concerned, I assure Hon. Members that our commitment to aboriginal peoples and people in the territories of Canada remains. We believe that their rights are protected under the Accord and that there is a new prospect for movement in a constitutional way which did not exist prior to the Accord.

The final result of this meeting of minds in a unanimous way was to give us the prospect—and a happy prospect it is—that in the months and years ahead Canada will make progress and serve the best interests of its citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are still two minutes remaining in the 20-minute plus 10-minute total, so I will allow a question or comment by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed listening to the remarks of the Hon. Minister and essentially agreed with much that he said. However, I missed any precise explanation from him about why he is opposed to the motion. What are the objections of the federal Government or any of the provinces to maintaining the system that now exists in allowing new provinces into Confederation? I do not understand who would object to the existing system. Why necessitate having all 11 provinces in agreement?

• (1230)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my answer will be brief and to the point with respect to those two elements put forward by the Hon. Member. I do not find it possible to sustain and support the motion because I do not accept the premise. It is not a question of restoring the rights of people in the Territories. I have explained with respect to the aboriginal people why a First Ministers' conference at this point may not be the best method. There is an understanding among aboriginal peoples that there has to be emphasis on a little different approach before a First Ministers' conference is called on aboriginal constitutional matters. That is not to say that these are not legitimate matters for First Ministers' meetings, but what we want to do is look at the most appropriate way to make sure we will have success. It is one thing to have a meeting but it is another thing to have success.

I do not think the New Democratic Party wants to go back to unilateralism on the part of the federal Government. I think New Democrats believe in the phrase co-operative federalism.

Mr. de Jong: Yes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think we all agree with that. When we get involved in the policy question, a legal question has to be asked. If you add new provinces to our constitution that would affect such programs as equalization. Are we to move ahead without first having an understanding and consensus with all participants in our confederation on these issues, even with the positive merit of devolution of the Territories to provincial status in Canada?

Secondly, this does impact on the amending of our constitution. When you bring in new provinces, a new dimension is brought to the amending formula which, in another section of the present Constitution, requires unanimity having two-thirds of the provinces of the country representing 50 per cent of the population of Canada? If, by way of example, you create three new provinces in northern Canada, do you not first want to understand what the implications are for Saskatchewan, Ontario, Nova Scotia or any province or region? What are the implications of such change, Mr. Speaker?

I am trying to suggest to the Hon. Member that these concerns are shared. The desire is to move ahead with the Territories in full consultation with them, but there are a number of considerations in our modern confederation which have to be taken into account, that cannot simply be overlooked for the sake of political rhetoric. We have to look at some real problems to see how we are going to address them realistically, recognizing that certain important constitutional elements will be affected if we do not have that unanimity for the establishment of new provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask you how questions and comments can be terminated when they started only a few minutes ago?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the Hon. Member realizes that the first speaker spoke for close to a half an hour. I am trying to balance the time for the first three speakers. The Minister took 32 minutes, to be exact, of his allotted time. I am now going to the Liberal Party. I would like to balance things off before the end of the day. If there is a problem and if the Hon. Member wishes the Chair to do something differently, would he please so advise?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Minister had sought consent of the House to finish his remarks. I believe in the exchange he would take four or five additional minutes to the 20 minutes allotted to him, then there would be a 10 minute question and comment period which would give us in the Opposition, both the New Democrats and the Liberals, a chance to question the Minister. We agreed to that, Mr. Speaker. I find it difficult now that you have combined the 20 minutes plus the additional time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not find any problem with that at all. The Chair is the servant of the House. If there is agreement here to allow an extra eight minutes for the Hon. Minister to answer questions, I am easy. Is there unanimous consent to allow an extra eight minutes for questions and comments?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your reasonable approach in this matter and that of my colleagues in the House. Actions often speak louder than words. I observed that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the First Ministers met during a series of meetings regarding aboriginal rights ,there was no fruitful outcome, that the meetings ended in the early afternoon with statements of regret. But when it came to bringing Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional family, which is a legitimate matter and one we all support, the Ministers met throughout the night and produced results. What can the Minister do now to reassure Canadians and the aboriginal peoples that the same kind of commitment will be demonstrated with regard to aboriginal peoples and self-government for them?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think the facts speak for themselves in this regard. We had, unfortunately, in the aboriginal constitutional conference what I would call wide apart positions on the part of the representatives of the aboriginal peoples and certain of the provinces. We had been able to garner for the federal position very substantial support, but it was not sufficient to get the kind of consensus that I think would be essential under our Constitution, which provides for an amendment with two-thirds of the provinces representing 50 per cent of the population. Significant agreement was also required by representatives of the aboriginal peoples present. A realization came that we were not able to bridge the gap and that more work had to be done. More work will be done because the federal Government is prepared to give leadership in finding areas of common ground.

The Prime Minister has stated perhaps the obvious, that one can keep people together at a First Ministers' meeting, but at some point in time, whether having to do with aboriginal peoples or other matters of such immense importance—as was the case in bringing Quebec back into the constitutional process—an assessment must be made as to whether or not it is possible to get consensus. Happily, in terms of the developments that have taken place concerning the agreement signed last week, there was not only consensus but unanimity. That state did not exist with the aboriginal constitutional conference. We did not have unanimity. We had some very sharply stated differences which emerged after many, many months, weeks, hours and days of discussion and negotiation, not only with ministers but also with officials.

Over the course of the last year I have spent a very substantial period of time trying to get a constitutional amendment on behalf of the federal Government for the aboriginal peoples of our country. We have tried to give leadership. We have tried to bring the provinces and the aboriginal peoples toward a position that we think will serve our country and the aboriginal peoples well, by having a constitutionalized provision for self-government. We continue to believe that we should have that constitutional provision. We are now canvassing the suggestions of representatives of aboriginal groups as to how we should proceed. As well, I will be consulting with the provinces to obtain their views.

Until we can develop an alternative regime, I do not think, as suggested in this particular motion, that it would be fruitful or helpful to convene a First Ministers' conference at this time. This is an item that can be placed on the agenda at the annual meetings on constitutional amendments. I believe at this time we should have an ongoing and continuing exchange, particularly with the aboriginal peoples, as to how they think we should develop this. That is what I am now in the process of doing.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House of Commons today deals with two important matters. First, it deals with a request made by Yukon and the Northwest Territories that we change the provision in the Meech Lake Accord which requires the unanimous consent of all provinces to establish new provinces. Second, we are discussing the request of the aboriginal peoples that we hold further federal-provincial conferences to entrench aboriginal self-government.

The Liberal Party supports both requests and will vote for this resolution today. In doing so, we do not believe that the passage of this resolution will in any way detract from the principles agreed upon in the Meech Lake Accord and in the Meech Lake-Langevin resolution.

I would like to say a few words about the process which allows for further discussion and for amendment of the Meech Lake Accord. It seems to me that the basis of the Meech Lake Accord is the adherence of Quebec to the constitutional document of 1982. The thrust of the Accord is to meet the five conditions laid down by Quebec in May of 1986 for adherence to the Constitution.

What were those five conditions laid down by Quebec in May of 1986? They were: first, the explicit recognition of Quebec as a distinct society; second, a guarantee of increased powers for Quebec in matters of immigration; third, a limitation of the federal spending power; fourth, revision of the amending procedure including recognition of Quebec's right of veto; and fifth, Quebec's participation in appointing judges to the Supreme Court of Canada.

We believe that the Meech Lake Accord and resolution responded to those five demands. However, very often when dealing with certain matters we must then examine what has been agreed upon to see how it touches on other parts of the Constitution and on other rights. As we do that, we see that this agreement could possibly touch on other matters such as aboriginal rights, the rights of the Territories and linguistic rights. We can maintain what was agreed upon in response to Quebec's five demands, but we must make certain that in agreeing to those demands we do not detract from other rights that were in the Constitution and were not necessarily discussed by the people who met at Meech Lake and in the Langevin Block last week.

While the principles of the Meech Lake Accord must remain sacrosanct, or else we will scuttle the whole agreement altogether, I see no reason why every detail of the Accord must remain sacrosanct. Let us look at what was done in 1981 and 1982 when we patriated the Canadian Constitution and provided for a Charter of Rights and an amending formula. That whole process took more than one year. It began on October 6, 1980, with a constitutional resolution similar to the one in the Meech Lake Accord tabled in the House. The final vote was taken on December 1, 1981. In the interim, there were three debates in the House and three votes. There was a long debate which terminated on October 4, 1980, at which time a vote took place. Then the resolution was sent to a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons where it was improved upon. Amendments were made with the agreement of the committee and, if I recall correctly, all Parties agreed to many amendments made by the Special Joint Committee.

Once the committee had finished its work in February 1981, the resolution was returned to the House where it was again debated and another vote was held on April 24, 1981. Then it was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, there were further discussions and there was a Federal-Provincial Conference on the resolution as it came out of the House of Commons.

At the Federal-Provincial Conference, certain things were changed. When the Ministers signed that Accord in the fall of 1981, they took out provisions Parliament had put in with respect to women and aboriginal rights. Having signed the Accord, it returned to the House of Commons for the third time and Parliament, despite the fact that the Accord had been signed by the provinces, put back in the aboriginal rights and women's rights clauses, though they were not entrenched as well as they had been in the first place.

That is the process that was followed in 1981-82. It entailed much discussion, three debates, three votes and the work of a Special Joint Committee which heard the evidence of groups from all over the country.

The importance of the two matters we are dealing with today is that neither of them are mentioned in the five conditions put forward by Quebec. There is no mention in the proposals put forward by Quebec in May, 1986, of the rights of the Territories to become provinces, or of aboriginal rights. Consequently, I cannot see why there is any objection to dealing with these two matters as proposed.

Who would object? Obviously Quebec did not object. We do not know what went on in the chamber where the Meech Lake Accord was discussed, but it is hard to understand why the unanimity rule was put into the Meech Lake Accord when it was not part of Quebec's proposals. It does not seem to me that it had anything to do with the agreement to Quebec's five proposals. While we want to respect the principles on which Quebec and the other provinces and Governments agreed, we must ensure that these principles agreed upon do not derogate unintentionally from other existing rights.

The first matter raised by the resolution which is to change the provision in the Meech Lake Accord that requires unanimity of all the provinces in order to establish new provinces was never the rule in Canada. When the federal Government carved the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan out of the Northwest Territories in 1905, it was done by a statute of the Parliament of Canada with the agreement of the Assembly in the Northwest Territories. The other provinces were not involved and two important provinces were established in that way. The same was true with the admission of Newfoundland in 1949. That was an agreement between the Newfoundland or colonial legislature of the day and the Parliament of Canada. The other provinces were not involved.

In 1981-82 when we patriated the Constitution and put in it the requirement for the creation of new provinces of the agreement of at least seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population, the two Territories objected at that time because we were departing from the rule we had followed in the past. If they objected to that provision in 1982, they are certainly upset with what is being proposed now. As a matter of fact, they are now saying let us at least stick with the 1982 provision. They see no reason, nor do we, why we must have unanimous consent of all provinces, especially since that was not part of Quebec's conditions for entry into the constitutional agreement.

As was noted by other Hon. Members, the Northwest Territories and Yukon have evolved over the years. I can remember the day when those two Territories, especially the N.W.T, were run by a bunch of mandarins from Ottawa. In due course Assemblies were set up in the N.W.T. and Yukon, much earlier in Yukon, in a move towards a system of responsible Government.

There was also a time when the Governments of those two Territories were almost completely non-Indian or non-Inuit. Now Indians, Métis and Inuit are very much involved in the Governments of those two Territories. As you know, an agreement in principle has been reached to divide the Northwest Territories in two. One would cover the area of Nunavut populated principally by Inuit. The other, in the Western Arctic along the Mackenzie, would have a mixed population of Dene, Métis and non-native people. Those areas are evolving and it would be unfortunate if we stick with this unanimity provision in the Accord for the creation of new provinces.

As far as I can see, that provision is not necessary. Certainly if we agreed to what is in this motion today, that would not be a barrier to the acceptance of the other conditions put forward by Quebec. I want to point out that when the Liberal Party was in convention last November we passed a resolution to completely withdraw Article 42(1)(f) of the 1982 Constitution. That is the provision which requires agreement of seven provinces plus 50 per cent of the population. It was the feeling at the convention that we should return to the traditional way of doing things whereby it would be a matter between the federal Government and the new province concerned.

Another issue is that in drafting the Meech Lake Accord the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) completely overlooked the appointment of more Senators for those two Territories. They provided that each province provide a list of names for appointment to the Senate and forgot that we have a Senator from Yukon and a Senator from the Northwest Territories. If in due course we have a third territory we will probably have three Senators. That is with respect to that part of the resolution relating to the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

With respect to other parts of the resolution, which deal with aboriginal rights and the aboriginal right of self-government, once again I believe we can provide in this Accord further constitutional conferences on aboriginal self-government without impinging at all on Quebec's proposal. There was nothing in the Quebec conditions which dealt with aboriginal rights, and as far as I can see you can completely agree to the distinctiveness of Quebec's society and the promotion of that distinctiveness without being prevented from recognizing aboriginal rights and aboriginal self-government in the Constitution.

It is interesting to note that there was some movement between the Meech Lake Accord and the Langevin resolution. The Accord did not refer at all to the question of aboriginal rights or the rights of the multicultural heritage in Canada. However, in the resolution they at least put forward in Section 16 a non-derogation clause whereby the new Section 2 of the Constitution would not derogate from those rights entrenched in the Constitution with respect to the aboriginal people and multicultural heritage. That indicates that there was some goodwill there. Yet we know they did much of that in the middle of the night, after a long, long meeting, and probably it was not completely thought through.

In Section 37 of the Constitutional Act of 1982 they provided for further First Ministers' Conferences to discuss and take action on aboriginal rights, and in particular aboriginal self-government. Four conferences were held as required, one each in 1983, 1984, 1985 and this year, 1987. Alas, no agreement was concluded. The aboriginal peoples of Canada are saying to us that we went through four First Ministers' Conferences on aboriginal self-government and we could not agree. That shows we did not have the same political will at those conferences that we had when we sat down to discuss the Meech Lake proposals where we agreed unanimously to the conditions put forward by Quebec. We have now moved forward quickly on the resolution. They are saying if we can demonstrate that political will with respect to one group of people in Canada, surely we can do it with respect to another which was here for thousands of years before the Europeans came.

It is also interesting to look back on those four conferences. The objection of several provinces was that they could not agree to entrenching aboriginal self-government in the Constitution because they did not know what it means. They said "It must be more precise." They want to make sure they know what they are agreeing to. Isn't it interesting that in the Accord all the provinces and the federal Government agreed to a distinct Quebec society without that being precisely defined. They also agreed to a provision with respect to the spending power without that being precisely defined. I agree that we need not precisely define those two things. On the other hand, if there is no need to define those provisions in the Meech Lake Accord, surely that should not be used as an objection against aboriginal self-government, which I also believe need not be precisely defined in order to agree to it.

There is an additional reason to request in the Meech Lake Accord a commitment to another First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal self-government. That is, Quebec is now in the process and there is now a much greater chance of something being agreed to. It will be easier to get agreement of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population. I refer to Section 16 of the Langevin resolution which is a non-derogation clause for aboriginal people and the multicultural heritage of Canada. While that was a step in the right direction, it is not complete. If we think this thing through, I think we should admit that the non-derogation clause should not only apply to Article 2 but to the entire Accord. In other words, I think it should read that nothing in the Meech Lake Accord should derogate from the rights of aboriginal peoples as set out in Section 25 and Section 35, and so on, of the Constitutional Act of 1982.

I note it is one o'clock. I believe I have some time left.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the debate resumes, the Hon. Member will have two minutes in his debate and 10 minutes of questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, continuing with some thoughts on the Constitution here are a few questions Canadians are beginning to ask. What is a distinct society? What powers does a province have when it has a distinct society within it? Does a provincial Government's power override a citizen's right under the Charter? If it does, should it?

When you single out one distinct group, what else constitutes a special group? Why lock aboriginal and ethnic communities into their current status rather than improving their status? Why go down this path of separating groups of Canadians? Where does the man or woman who does not speak a word of English or French fit into this new scheme of things?

On spending powers, how is the word "objective" to be interpreted? Who is to establish national objectives? Why is Parliament now left out?

On immigration, what happens to two immigrants to Canada who enter the country under different immigration policies? What happens when they move from province to province? If the words of the Accord were left vague on purpose, why saddle judges with the political job of sorting out what the politicians really meant?

These are questions which Canadians would like to have answered.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PETITION SEEKING EXIT VISAS FOR VLADIMIR AND MARIA SLEPAK

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, last week I sent the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a petition signed by 200 people in my riding of Guelph. They urged the Minister to make a personal appeal to Chairman Gorbachev of the Soviet Union for the repatriation to Israel of long-term refuseniks Vladimir and Maria Slepak.

The Slepaks have been trying to exit for 17 years without success. Surely these decent people should be allowed to leave the Soviet Union to be reunited with their children. I appeal to the people of the Soviet Union to join with others around the world and urge the Government of the Soviet Union to allow the repatriation of the Slepaks to Israel.

ENERGY

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF DOME PETROLEUM BY AMOCO CANADA—PAYMENTS TO DOME OFFICIALS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, three senior executives of Dome Petroleum will receive a total of about $3 million if and when that company is sold to Amoco. The chairman, whose annual salary is just over $600,000, will get a lump sum of $1.5 million U.S. One vice-president, who makes $247,000 a year, will get a lump sum of $600,000 on top of the interest-free housing loan of $225,000 he has received. Another vice-president, who has been paid $222,000 a year, will get $600,000.

This is taking place when ordinary workers are getting pay increases even lower than the increase in the cost of living.

It may make sense to reward company leaders when the company they lead is a winner, but this is a company which would have been declared bankrupt if it had not received hundreds of millions of dollars in government subsidies, if it was not carried for years by Canadian banks which will now get only 75 cents on the dollar owed to them although Dome did not even meet its interest payments on its loans, and while hundreds of unsecured creditors to whom millions are owed will get nothing.

Surely there is something wrong with our income tax laws and business morality which permit such unconscionable payments to those officers of Dome who helped bring this corporation to the brink of bankruptcy.

IMMIGRATION

PROJECTED POPULATION DECLINE—DECISION REQUIRED ON IMMIGRATION LEVELS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is a time for tough decisions. Canadians must decide whether we want Quebec in or out of Canada. We must decide whether we should contribute to our own defence or leave it to the Americans and, very soon, we must decide whether Canada's population should increase, decrease, or remain the same as it is now.

In making the population decision Canadians must bear in mind that, if present trends continue, by 1990, less than three years from now, the total number of people dying and leaving Canada will exceed the total number of new births and immigrants.

We must also bear in mind that there are 15 million people in refugee camps around the world, that thousands of Canadians want their families abroad to be allowed to immigrate to this country, and that our aging population means there will be a shrinking number of wage earners to support a growing number of senior citizens.

In these circumstances is a stable or lower population really practical? The time for decision is drawing near.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—VIOLATIONS OF UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION REGULATIONS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are constantly worried about the welfare of friends and relatives living in eastern bloc countries must also live with the frustration of knowing that their efforts to keep in touch by mail can be disrupted by Soviet authorities who do not deliver letters and gift parcels, but merely return them to the Canadian senders without explanation.

This violates the Universal Postal Union Regulations. However, Canadian postal officials say that they cannot investigate unless the sender provides full details. My constituents say that to do so could expose a friend or relative to the risk of retaliation.

It is encouraging to know that the Government of Canada has raised the matter in bilateral meetings with the Soviets, as well as at meetings of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Under the terms of the Helsinki Accord, the 35 member states of the CSCE have a mutual obligation to maintain open lines of communication among their citizens. This obligation is not being met, and the Government of Canada should be doing all it can to see that the eastern bloc respects the integrity of postal and other forms of communication.

AIR TRANSPORT

VAL-D'OR REGIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): On June 5, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) I attended the official opening of the new Val-d'Or regional air terminal in Abitibi-Témiscamingue, a project which local residents had been waiting for for 14 years.

The new air terminal is a major component of the regional airport redevelopment project valued at more than $10 million. The project got under way in late 1984 and I did appreciate the work of the airport director, Mr. Daniel Bleau, and of Transport Canada in this case.

With respect to air transport, the Val-d'Or regional airport is the turntable of the entire development of Abitibi-Témiscamingue, James Bay, and Northern Quebec. Indeed this is what prompted the Conservative Government of Canada and Transport Canada to invest $10 million.

The main air carriers are: Air Canada, Canadian International, Nordair Metro, Quebecair Inter, Voyageur Airways, Are Creebec and Hélicoptères Abitibi.

Mr. Speaker, this new air terminal meets the needs and wishes expressed by the business circles and the traveling public of Abitibi-Témiscamingue and the northern regions of Quebec.

THE CONSTITUTION

LINGUISTIC RIGHTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), today introduced a motion before the House that seeks to advance the rights of northerners and aboriginal peoples.

One, if not the most important, indicator of one's rights, is the ability to protect and enhance one's own language.

[Translation]

The people of Quebec were right to identify the language as being the true spirit which reflects a distinct society.

[English]

For the aboriginal people of Canada, the indicator is not only a matter of principle, it is one of necessity.

Of Canada's 53 indigenous languages, it has been estimated that only three have strong chances of survival into the next decade. The Museum of Man study found that eight languages are now facing extinction, 29 are in a state of deterioration, and 13 are moderately endangered.

The three languages given the best odds of survival are Cree, Ojibway and Inuktitut.

The languages found to be in the most danger, measured by the rate of change in the number of speakers and the age of the speakers, are those in British Columbia. They include the Haida, Tlingit and Kootenay languages.

On behalf of my Party I call upon all Members of the House to support the motion presented today. For those of us fortunate enough to have our native language not only thrive, but also enjoy constitutional protection, we must make every effort to ensure that the aboriginal people of Canada will retain their languages for future generations.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUPPORT FOR WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, a true north strong and free! We will now be able to say that with greater conviction, with greater confidence, since the release of the White Paper on National Defence Challenge and Commitment.

The Government has no aggressive intentions toward any country, but, as the White Paper pointed out, we can and will deter the use of force against Canada and Canadian interests.

The proud men and women of our three services, in their distinctive uniforms, now know that they will have the tools to do the job, to carry out those responsibilities which the Government has imposed upon them.

Well selected, well trained, and finally well equipped, they and all Canadians can share the satisfaction that we, in concert with our friends and allies in NATO, are making our contribution to world peace and harmony.

The introduction of a White Paper was a promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Government. We all take heart at its deliverance.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, a poll released over the weekend shows that 70 per cent of Canadians believe the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) lifestyle is too lavish. Even Tory supporters believe that the Prime Minister should conduct himself in a more down to earth fashion. In other words, Canadians are saying no more $3,000 per night suites, no more butlers, no more maids, no more people to watch their luggage, no more closets to hold 80 pair of Guccis, no more back-up planes and, finally, no more podium to travel around with.

Canadians expect their Prime Minister and members of the Government to live well, but do not want their money to be wasted in a manner which is more synonymous with the rich and elite. Will the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) now say to the Canadian people that they are guilty of muck-raking too, because that is what I asked the Deputy Prime Minister last week in the House of Commons? The people of Canada believe that the extravagance and the excess must come to an end. Let us see if the Deputy Prime Minister will make accusations against them too, now.

SPINA BIFIDA WEEK

DISABLING DISEASE AFFECTING NEW-BORN CHILDREN—NEED FOR GREATER AWARENESS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, June 8 to June 14 of this year is Spina Bifida Week in Canada. Spina bifida is one of the leading disablers of new-born children in our country, and is known by most experts to happen more frequently than muscular dystrophy, multiple sclerosis, polio, or cystic fibrosis combined, yet until recently most people had never heard of it.

Prior to the early 1960s, the majority of babies born with spina bifida died. Today, thanks to medical advances, nearly all new-borns with spina bifida survive and, with aggressive medical rehabilitation, they can become contributing members of our society.

The Spina Bifida Association of Canada will be making a special effort this week—and I repeat "this week"— to encourage greater awareness of this pre-natal condition. I would urge all Members of this House, and all Canadians, to participate in these activities. We must join in the spirited efforts led by a great Canadian, Mr. Rick Hansen, to increase awareness of spinal cord and related defects and ultimately to find a cure for these disabling conditions.

TRADE

EFFECT OF U.S. FARM BILL ON CANADIAN HONEY EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, American farm policies, using their "buy-back" scheme, have virtually closed the doors on Canada's beekeepers.

Historically, this nation's apiculturists have shipped over one-quarter of their annual production southward. This figure has risen dramatically in recent years with more than 8,500 tonnes of honey enjoyed by American citizens last year, putting $12.5 million into the honey jars of Canadian beekeepers. But the Farm Bill has soured things.

A Canadian beekeeper selling into the U.S. today would net 40 cents to 44 cents a pound Canadian, which is equivalent to the U.S. buy-back price. Cost of production on the Prairies, however, is 58 cents a pound. As a result of this, no Canadian honey flowed southward in 1987. About one-third of the year's production was in storage until beekeepers began to sell off at fire sale prices to get badly needed cash.

The Farm Bill is also damaging our traditional markets. U.S. producers are quoting honey into European markets at 8 cents to 10 cents a pound below Canada's prices. In light of the hurt being done, I feel the Canadian Government should consider the Honey Council's request for $15 per colony compensation for their losses.

Oral Questions

FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is important that the terms and conditions attached to the cash flow freeze announced in respect of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion be clarified as soon as possible. Many DRIE programs are of a continuing nature and potential recipients, on the reasonable expectation that funds would be forthcoming, have entered into contracts and sometimes even borrowed and have already spent these moneys.

A case in point is the Travel Industry Association of the Northwest Territories which will find itself in severe difficulties if promised funds are now withheld. When the Department wishes to cease funding an organization, it ought to give reasonable notice and not do this in the middle of a multi-year agreement.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WHITE PAPER—ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY—ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my questions are all directed to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence I will direct them to the Deputy Prime Minister. My questions concern the White Paper on Defence. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was quoted as having said that the issue of sovereignty in Canada's Arctic is essentially a legal question. Yet the Government is about to spend $10 billion to acquire nuclear-powered submarines in a military response to what is essentially a legal question.

• (1415)

What does the Minister expect a nuclear-powered submarine to do when it encounters either a Soviet sub, an American sub or a British sub in what he considers to be Canadian waters but which they consider to be international waters?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the whole idea of deterrents and the whole reason for our expenditure on them is to make it obvious to potential adversaries that we have the capability of knowing if they are in our waters and of doing something about it if it should ever come to that—and Heaven forbid that it should ever come to that. Without the capability of going into our northern waters with nuclear submarines, we do not have that capability. Therefore we potentially invite intruders. By having that capability there is no such implied invitation. People undertaking that act would be doing it knowing that it is an act of provocation.

So in fact the giving to us of that capability through nuclear submarines improves our capability of deterring that kind of action, therefore improving the capability of the over-all NATO alliance to keep the peace.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, the action of the Government precludes any other option other than a military one, and there are others, if proper foreign policy initiatives are followed. Even the Secretary of State for External Affairs called the acquisition of nuclear-powered submarines something like science fiction in a response to questions before the Standing Committee on National Defence.

UNITED STATES FORWARD MARITIME STRATEGY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my second question deals with what I find to be something that is curiously silent in the White Paper on defence. There is no mention at all of the U.S. Forward Maritime Strategy, yet many military experts consider that the Forward Maritime Strategy is a very dangerous one. I want to make sure, and I would like to have the Minister assure the House, that no Canadian submarines will ever be sucked into the vortex of U.S. Forward Maritime Strategy now or in the future.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are, we have been for a long time, and I think we are likely to be for quite some time in the future members of NATO and committed to joint defence activities on the part of NATO. In that context we have undertaken, on behalf of NATO, certain responsibilities in the North Atlantic, responsibilities in terms of patrol, in terms of presiding, letting potential adversaries know that we know they are there, and patrolling that area. We would expect to continue that.

As we bring on these nuclear submarines we will then be in a position to undertake the same kind of activity off the Pacific coast where there is a growing threat, one we cannot meet. Of course, we will be able to do the same in our own Arctic waters. It will always be done in the context of NATO policy until such time as Canada withdraws from NATO, which I do not think will be in the near future.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, prior to my concluding question I want it perfectly understood that the Liberal Party remains committed to our participation in NATO and in NORAD. There should be no misunderstanding that position.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SIZE OF PROJECTED EXPENDITURES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we have now had the opportunity over the weekend to read the White Paper on Defence. I think all of us have come to the same conclusion. Would the Minister not agree that the total dollars promised in the White Paper are based on the assumption that military or defence spending will increase by only 2 per cent over the next 15 years, totalling $183 billion? Would the Minister not admit that that is $25 billion less than what had been projected under the previous Liberal Government's defence expenditures? All the Government is attempting to do, besides engage in an exercise in smoke and mirrors, is to make less look like more.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no. As a matter of fact the fiscal plan, and it is in the budgets of the former Finance Minister, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, called for no increases in defence spending after 1983. I think the Hon. Member should check that out before making an accusation.

This is the first time that a long-term commitment has been made in terms of defence expenditures, which will allow the military to engage in long-term planning and ensure that we get full value for the money.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

SIZE OF FUNDING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. According to the 1987-88 Budget estimates of the Minister of Finance, regional development funding has been cut by 32.4 per cent or $4.4 billion in the 2.5 years since the Government has come to power.

The Prime Minister's announced $200 million per year, or one-fifth of one per cent of the federal Budget for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, pales beside the regional development funding cuts which have already been made over the last 2.5 years.

How is it that the Prime Minister of Canada, with all the sombre seriousness of the face of a robber's horse, can go to St. John's, Newfoundland, and announce new money and new initiatives when regional development funding over the last 2.5 years has been cut to the bone?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister announced on Saturday—and I would have thought that Hon. Members from the Atlantic provinces would have received this with great joy, but apparently not—$1.05 billion in new money for a new approach to overcoming regional economic disparity in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: This is $200 million in new dollars in each year for the next five years.

It is not true that there has been any diminution in regional development spending under our Government.

I will give the hon. gentleman some facts. For example, in Newfoundland in 1983-84, which was the last full year under the last administration, the Government spent $32.9 million under GDA and ERDA.

In the year 1986-87, that had increased by $43 million to $75.9 million. We more than doubled the spending of the hon. gentleman's Government.

The prelude to his question was entirely false and fallacious. We have already doubled regional development spending, and we are pledging to continue regional development spending in Atlantic Canada at its present level over the next five years while we add $1,050 million to that total.

If my hon. friend does not rejoice at that news, he should at least keep his facts straight.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is playing a mug's game. It is the equivalent of a Canadian citizen being held up on the sidewalk by a mugger who takes $100 out of his pocket, returns the next day and gives him $50 and tells him that he has $50 of new money. Atlantic Canadians will not fall for that kind of mugwash, foolishness, and flimflam.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, given that the projections of the Minister of Finance for 1987-88 show that you have cut some $4.4 billion out of regional development funding, and given that you have now had this pale announcement of new initiatives, can—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to put his question through the Chair.

Mr. Tobin: Can the Minister, who is now responsible for this initiative along with fish, transport, and everything else, assure the House that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is not about to fade out of existence as a result of the paltry statement this last weekend in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would spend some time reading the information which is put out, he would know that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion will continue to administer national programs, while in Atlantic Canada the new Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will take over certain of those programs and will lead the battle to overcome regional disparity.

Might I quote to the hon. gentleman what was said: "What this announcement means is that over the next five years we will maintain this year's level of spending"—

Mr. Tobin: Which has been cut.

Mr. Crosbie: Not cut, Mr. Speaker. It is $258 million, approximately, under ERDA and GDA in Atlantic Canada this year, a great increase over 2.5 years ago.

We will maintain this year's level of spending. In addition, we are committing $1.05 billion to the region through this new agency.

In the last year for which we have figures, that is the year 1985-86, per capita spending under regional development in Newfoundland was $122 per year as compared with $4 per year per capita in Ontario. Those are the facts.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COST OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINE PROGRAM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions on the Government's White Paper on Defence, but I think it is absolutely deplorable that the Minister of National Defence is not here to defend his paper, that the Associate Minister is not here, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not here.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You wouldn't be here if anybody had any use for you somewhere else.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Brant, I know, has a serious question. I would tell him that reflections on Members being here or not being here is, of course, improper. Members often have other very pressing matters to attend to, and that applies equally to cabinet Ministers.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I will put my questions to the Deputy Prime Minister, not to the Minister responsible for the Post Office, of all things, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of National Defence has only given an estimate of the sail-away cost for nuclear submarines. Will the Deputy Prime Minister now inform us or reveal the total cost of the program, which includes new training facilities, two crews per submarine, and the infrastructure needed to service each of the nuclear subs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of National Defence is away from Ottawa on government business. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is attending the Summit in Venice.

An Hon. Member: What about the Associate Minister?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister in charge of the Post Office, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is quite capable of answering all of the Hon. Member's questions.

COMPARISON OF OPERATING COSTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence heralded the nuclear submarines as the greatest thing imaginable for Canada's defence policy. Is the Minister aware that a Canadian Defence Quarterly appraisal said of conventional submarines "That the cost of the capability gained"—that is the return on investment—"is better than for any other major warship" and that "the defence of our waters in the Arctic can be achieved without going into the enormous expense associated with the large nuclear attack type submarine"?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence acknowledged that nuclear submarines cost 1.6 times as much as conventional submarines. For that expenditure you get at least three times the capability in defence commitments, as a platform. It was on that basis for maximizing the defence capability per dollar of expenditure that the decision was taken to look to the acquisition of nuclear submarines. They are a very effective weapon system. For our commitments to NATO they will be very, very useful, and they will give good value to Canada for the money.

TOTAL COST QUERY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary goes back to the first question that I put to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Can the Minister in charge of the Post Office inform the people of Canada what the total cost of this program will be? I am not talking about the sail-away cost of some $500 or $600 million per boat, I am talking about the total cost of the nuclear submarine program, a figure we could not get from the Minister of National Defence on Friday. Maybe the Post Office could tell us.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as a result of this White Paper at least the defence people will soon have more people in uniform than I have in the Post Office.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I don't doubt that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: No one can obviously give the detailed cost of expenditures—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Somebody has to pay for them.

Mr. Andre: Of course they have to be paid for. The expenditure plan was laid out in the White Paper—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No it wasn't.

Mr. Andre: —the minimum of 2 per cent real growth over the next 15 years. Within that context the equipment required, including surface ships, tanks, minesweepers, minor war vessels and so on will be purchased in an orderly fashion. The rough figure to know is that a nuclear sub costs 1.6 times that of a conventional submarine. Support facilities are about 1.8 times more for nuclear than for conventional. For that, one receives several times more capability.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

RESPONSIBILITY TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, finally the Prime Minister announced the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency on the weekend. We are told that one of the key architects of the program was one Dalton Camp and it is to be headed up by the Ambassador to West Germany, Donald McPhail. The Minister responsible for the new agency is Senator Lowell Murray.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Of all the Members of Parliament in this Chamber on the government benches, was there not one man or woman who the Prime Minister thought was capable of being the Minister for this new agency? Is the Government not even concerned that not one Member of Parliament can ask even one question of the new Minister responsible for this agency because he is not here, he is in the Senate? That Senator is responsible to no one but his maker, the Prime Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise my hon. colleague that I have been appointed to answer in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am quite willing to change places with Senator Murray if necessary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It may be true that Liberal Senators are answerable to no one, but PC Senators are answerable to the Prime Minister and to their cabinet colleagues. Our Prime Minister is a maker, not a faker, or a shaker as is the Leader of the Official Opposition.

I will do my best to answer to the House for this very important agency, hand-in-glove and in tandem with Senator Murray who will be answering in the Senate. Both of us together will see that the $1.05 billion is spent on new activities and new money for new projects over the next five years. I thank my hon. colleague for his interest.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister can appoint whatever mouthpiece or loudspeaker he wishes. The fact remains that DREE is now a distant dream and DRIE has dried up. Now the entire future of industrial development in Atlantic Canada is left in the hands of the Prime Minister's new troika, Camp, McPhail, and Murray, the bureaucrat, the diplomat, and the old school chum.

Does the Minister not realize that $1 billion over five years divided up into four provinces makes about $50 million a year to replace the $65 million Newfoundland used to get under DREE? Now the Fisheries Improvement Loans Program of $250 million will be terminated by the Government at the end of the month. Will the Minister not admit that this is simply a recycling job with less money, no parliamentary control and total control by a single, solitary Senator?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we all understand that our hon. colleague is very touchy today. His brother Winston did not make it at the leadership convention on Saturday. Winston Baker got it good, like a battered baker should.

With respect to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Minister intended to say: "With respect to the question", and with respect to the question, the Hon. Minister will answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I might say that they had a farewell tribute to their departed leader, Leo Barry, on Friday night. The only trouble was that their battered former leader, Leo Barry, did not turn up. Having been stabbed to death by his colleagues, he did not bother to go. This is a precedent for the Leader of the Official Opposition.

With respect to DREE being dried up, DREE was in a drought with $32.9 million spent by DREE under ERDA and GDA in Newfoundland in the last full Liberal year, 1983-84. That amount was more than doubled last year to $75.9 million and that will continue. There will be added to that and to the other spending in Atlantic Canada another $1.05 billion, $200 million per year, and that ain't hay. If it is hay, it is the kind of hay we can use plenty of in Atlantic Canada.

CREATION OF JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister made some disparaging comments about the brother of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate. All I would say is that I hope, unlike the Minister, he will not decide to join the Conservative Party now that he has lost the Liberal leadership.

Mr. Crosbie: He was an NDP member.

Mr. Broadbent: You will get your chance, Mr. Minister.

My question is for the Minister. The Government could not find among 24 Conservatives who were elected from Atlantic Canada one person apparently capable enough to be a Minister, and disgracefully appointed a Senator to account for this important work.

The Government has allocated $200 million per year for this important work, and according to the press release it is to cover procurement, training and skills development, technology infrastructure, local investment promotion and, finally, job creation. Will the Minister tell us, out of these many things that have to be done with this $200 million, precisely how much will go for job creation and particularly how much will go to Newfoundland where, under the Conservatives, unemployment has risen 2 per cent in the past year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that Winston will not be as offended as the Leader of the NDP. Winston used to be a member of the NDP. No wonder the hon. gentleman is so sensitive on his behalf.

The question is why was Senator Murray appointed to look after the agency. One reason is that the Government of Newfoundland recommended in a brief to the Government of Canada that the Minister responsible for federal-provincial relations should look after this agency and Senator Murray is the Minister responsible for federal-provincial affairs. In addition, the Prime Minister did not want to appoint a Minister having line department responsibilities which might interfere with him giving this agency most of his time and attention. Those are the reasons.

The agency will not have to finance procurement. The hon. gentleman knows that if he has read the statement. The principal function of the agency is the design and delivery of programs for small and medium-sized businesses and industries within the region. In addition, the agency is responsible for bringing regional perspective to the design of national economic and social programs that affect Atlantic Canada. That is what it will do.

For the first time there will be a regional input into national programs for Atlantic Canada, and the four Atlantic Premiers have reacted positively, and strongly in favour of this. The hon. gentleman sings from his own song sheet as usual.

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I prefaced my last question by saying that people in Atlantic Canada are happy with the decentralization program but they want something other than a few cents per citizen to create badly needed jobs. That is the issue. They want money, real money.

Since the Government has cut about $4 billion out of the Atlantic regions, specifically from regional development programs, will he tell us how much of the $200 million will go specifically into job creation? Since unemployment in Newfoundland has risen by 2 per cent in the past year, when will the Government move to bring down the unemployment level? That is the issue.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. gentleman gets his figures. The unemployment rate in Newfoundland in September, 1984, was 23.8 per cent. It has gone down to 20.1 per cent. Total unemployment has fallen by 9,000 in the last two and a half years. These are strides. In 1980-84 unemployment rose by 27,000 under the Liberals. I could go on and on but I will not.

• (1440)

Spending in Atlantic Canada on programs to overcome regional disparity will be about $258 million this year. We are going to just about double that. The $200 million going to this agency will be used for economic development, job creation, and long-term improvements to business and industry in Atlantic Canada. The other programs will continue to be financed by their present sources. That should reassure the hon. gentleman who is worried about what is going to happen to his candidate in St. John's East, not about what happens to the people of Atlantic Canada.

ALLOWANCES PAID PERSONNEL SERVING IN EUROPE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in my years in this House I have never seen such disrespect for Parliament as we are witnessing here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down then!

Mr. Hopkins: On Friday the Government brought in a 15-year program for defence spending in this country amounting to $183 billion. We have got two Ministers. Neither one of them is here to answer questions. That is an insult to Parliament.

I will pose my question to the Acting Minister of National Defence who promised a 6 per cent real spending in the last election campaign across this country and all the Government has come up with is 2 per cent. The Minister is aware that the Canadian military and civilian personnel in Canadian Forces Europe receive a cost of living exchange rate allowance to protect their income and purchasing power while serving abroad. Bank of Canada records show that the Canadian dollar has lost considerable value against the Deutschmark in the last year, reaching an all-time low on May 4.

Some Hon. Members: Debate!

Mr. Hopkins: I ask the Minister why in the face of this evidence why did his Government cut the allowances of Canadian Armed Forces personnel in Europe by 15 per cent on May 1? How can this Government take a White Paper ego trip while at the same time pulling a cheap stunt like that on our military personnel serving abroad? Is this the way the Minister is going to create good—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, salaries and benefits, including overseas allowances for Armed Forces personnel, are set by Treasury Board at a level to ensure that Armed Forces personnel are remunerated at the same level as permanent members of the Public Service. That is the formula. If he has a complaint perhaps he can show up at the appropriate standing committee and look at the policies of Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member had a very extensive preamble and I would ask him to make his supplementary question direct and to the point.

TREATMENT OF PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister review StatsCan's procedures and bring in a decision on the cost of living and the exchange rate allowances for our Armed Forces personnel abroad that will be fair and just to the lower ranks of the Canadian Armed Forces in Europe who are the hardest hit? Surely fair treatment of our personnel and good morale are as important as equipment?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, absolutely. I can assure the Hon. Member that nothing will be more beneficial to the morale of our troops than to have good equipment for the first time in many years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I realize the Hon. Member had his supplementary prepared before he heard my first answer, so I think he should re-examine the "blues" in that regard and, as I suggested, examine Treasury Board policies which establish these remuneration and expense levels. If he has a suggestion to make I am sure the President of the Treasury Board would be willing to hear it.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

INVESTIGATIONS OF DEPARTMENT'S EXPENDITURES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the unprecedented overspending in his Department in the last couple of months. I want him to answer two specific questions today.

First, can he make a commitment to this House that he will make public the finding of two investigations into his Department's spending, namely, the internal investigation now being conducted and the audit by Price Waterhouse?

Second, can he now confirm that as of last Friday the overspending in his Department reached an astounding level of almost $100 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, last week I announced I had been informed that expenditures for the 1986-87 financial year may have been in excess of our budget. I also said that both internal and outside reports would be forthcoming. As soon as I have the reports and have examined their findings, I will act accordingly, and I will then be in a position to let the Hon. Member know whether I will release them or not.

[English]

SPECIAL PROJECTS BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm today that as of last Friday the overspending in his Department for the first two months of the year is approaching $100 million? That was my first question and surely he knows the answer.

Since Treasury Board approved on Friday the shifting of money from the special projects part of his Department to regular programs can he tell us if there is a shifting of money from one pocket to another? Can he tell us whether or not any special projects will now have to be delayed, cut back or cancelled? Can he please answer those two questions?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): As to the first question, Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of figures so I am not prepared to comment on any of those until we receive the reports we are supposed to receive.

Second, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Department and the Government remain committed to helping regional development. It was exactly in this regard that we announced last Saturday some big programs that will help reduce regional disparities.

AGRICULTURE

FARMERS' FINANCIAL DIFFICULTY—REQUEST FOR DEBT RESTRUCTURING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week StatsCan revealed the Government is presiding over the worst decline in agriculture since the 1930s. Young farmers are being driven off the farm in record numbers. Fully 30 per cent of farmers are in serious financial difficulty. When is the Government going to take action and bring in new debt restructuring instruments to assist farmers in staying on the land?

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member's question, I may remind him that since we came to power, with the Minister of Agriculture we have been working very hard to restructure agriculture and provide for future generations of farmers. There is the 6 per cent program, for instance. We have the shared-cost mortgage. If we look at the situation the Liberals left us, with farm credit rates at nearly 20 per cent, and at the present rate of 10 per cent, we have a real success story, that will have an impact on farming and on future generations of farmers in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that 97 per cent of farmers, or 50,000, rejected the commodity-based mortgage.

REPORTED OVERCHARGING BY CHARTERED BANKS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He knows that banks overcharged hundreds of farmers by switching their notes from a fixed rate of interest to a floating rate, a higher rate, during the 1980s.

Mr. McDermid: When the Liberals were in power.

Mr. Foster: Since the Inspector General of Banks has refused to take action, is the Government prepared to set up a public inquiry into this overcharging by the chartered banks in the face of serious financial difficulty for our farmers?

• (1450)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that particular matter has been brought up in the House a number of times in the last two months by Members on both sides of the aisle. The Inspector General of Banks is preparing a report and expects to have it in my hands this week.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and is a follow-up to the question I asked him on Friday. As he knows, the aboriginal people feel that they were left out in the cold as a result of the Meech Lake Accord.

I asked the Deputy Prime Minister on Friday whether he, the Prime Minister, or the Minister responsible would call the Governments of Quebec and the other provinces and ensure that there will be agreed-upon First Ministers' conferences on aboriginal rights. Will the Government undertake to do that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Hon. Member, with his vast parliamentary experience, would have recognized that this issue is being debated on the floor of the House sponsored by the New Democratic Party as an Opposition Day motion. Surely the points which he has raised in Question Period today and on Friday can be raised and responded to during the course of that debate.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, that may be possible, but I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister a question as to government policy.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the native people feel offended because there is no guarantee that there will be a First Ministers' conference on aboriginal rights. Will the Deputy Prime Minister call the Government of the Province of Quebec and the Governments of the other provinces to ensure that a First Ministers' conference is agreed upon and that aboriginal rights will be a main topic on the agenda?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Justice has participated in the debate today and has answered that question. If the Member was not here to hear the Minister of Justice, I would invite him to read Hansard.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CONTENT—CLOSURE OF SHELLER-GLOBE PLANT IN WINDSOR

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Last week the Sheller-Globe Company said it had closed its Windsor plant putting 200 workers out of work overnight because of the Government's policy of allowing offshore automotive manufacturers unlimited access to the Canadian market with regard to auto parts.

Why is the Government refusing to establish a policy now that offshore automobile companies which want to manufacture or import in the Canadian market must follow the same rules with regard to Canadian content and jobs as do the North American manufacturers?

How long will the Government stand by and put at risk tens of thousands of automotive jobs? Will it not accept its responsibilities and act on this matter now?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to set the record straight. The products manufactured at Sheller-Globe include steering wheels, which are now recognized as being less and less competitive.

Consequently, the company was in a position that it had to close the plant to which the Hon. Member was referring. However, it decided to maintain the plant in Kingsville which employs 350 workers.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that the Government is very much aware of and concerned about such plant closings but the company in question has never asked for federal assistance.

[English]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister and the Government continue this attitude the predictions of the Canadian based automobile manufacturers and the representatives of the workers will come true and more than 40,000 jobs will be at risk.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Minister another chance. Why will he not establish a policy now that companies which want to manufacture in Canada or import into Canada must meet the same rules for Canadian content, jobs and production as do the North American manufacturers? Why does the Minister continue to sit idly by when we see these problems arising because the Government is allowing companies to establish themselves here without meeting the same requirements as the North American manufacturers?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Government will continue to issue policy which will continue to create the numbers of jobs that it already has created. More than 840,000 jobs have been created and the unemployment rate is going down. Those are the kinds of decisions which Canadians expect from the Government.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RECOMMENDED TELEVISION COVERAGE OF CRIMINAL TRIALS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In a working paper released last week the Law Reform Commission of Canada recommended a more open criminal justice system, including experimental TV coverage of criminal trials.

Will the Minister of Justice advise the House whether, in order to assist the Law Reform Commission to come to final logical recommendations, the Minister will permit experimental television coverage of criminal trials?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he pointed out, this is a working paper of the Law Reform Commission. We will, of course, continue to carry out consultations with those people who are primarily responsible for the administration of justice. There is federal responsibility and jurisdiction with regard to a certain number of courts, but the provinces themselves are essentially responsible for the administration of justice and the utilization and provision of rules of court.

I will carry out discussions and examinations with my provincial colleagues in conjunction with the Law Reform Commission. It is conceivable that some of the suggestions which the Hon. Member has made will commend themselves to either level of Government.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in this matter. We will continue to examine whether television enhances judicial proceedings. We have some experience in the House of Commons, but I will not comment on that.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

APPLICATION TO HAMILTON INDUSTRIAL TRAINING CENTRE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. My question is with regard to the Hamilton Industrial Training Centre which has a better than 90 per cent success rate in getting its trainees into the job market and yet has experienced cuts from 200 to 120 places thanks to cuts in the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

What does the Government intend to do to alleviate the current waiting list of 400 people, which will be added to with the impending closure of Otis Elevators? What action can we expect to ensure that this successful program will be able to do its stuff?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the Hon. Member's very important question, I have to take it as notice and get back to the Hon. Member, perhaps later this week.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, since these cuts do come from the Canadian Jobs Strategy, will the Government undertake not to forget about the people of Hamilton but to restore the $1 million which was cut from this program so that this very successful program can go ahead?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Government has no intention of forgetting about the people of Hamilton or those of any other part of Canada for that matter. As I said, the comments which the Hon. Member has made are very serious. I would like to look into them and get back to her as soon as I possibly can.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—MAINTENANCE OF GROUNDS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I am pleased that the renovations to the Ottawa International Airport are almost complete, as I am sure are all Members in the House. The renovations are on budget, albeit a bit behind schedule.

However, the maintenance of the grounds around the airport, especially in the parking area, is a mess. Visitors coming to the capital for the first time do not receive a good impression. Will the Minister of Transport crack his transport whip, shall I say, to ensure that the grounds are better maintained immediately?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make a commitment to the Hon. Member to that effect. With regard to parking, I understand that there are 1,600 parking spaces provided. The contractor was occupying about 100 spaces until 14 days ago but they are now available to the public. I will look into the question of landscaping and maintenance of airport grounds.

We are all pleased, of course, that the renovations and improvements to the airport are now being completed. We will certainly look into the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

BLACK WATCH REGIMENT—QUEEN MOTHER'S VISIT—ROLE OF WOMEN PERSONNEL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe the utter hypocrisy of the NDP in asking a question about the Canadian Jobs Strategy when they know that they would not even allow opposition Members of Parliament to have access to information on this issue. However, that is not my question.

My question is directed to the Minister responsible for supermailboxes and deals with a promise made by the Minister of National Defence in the House last week. Last week the Minister promised that women would be marching in the Black Watch march last Saturday. In fact, women were not allowed to march. Apparently the so-called order of the Minister of National Defence was overruled. I want to ask the Minister responsible for superboxes, who is acting on behalf of the Minister of National Defence, just who gave Perrin Beatty his marching orders anyway?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that type of question, considering all the admonitions in Beauchesne, should be answered. However, because it is an important question when stripped of all the ridiculous garbage surrounding it, let me say that women participated in the Guard of Honour which met Her Majesty on June 4. They participated in the quarter guard on her departure on June 8. Between those two occasions there were seven other occasions when women and men participated together in respect of the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth.

Ms. Copps: The fact is that female cadets were not allowed to march and that their participation occurred when one of the male cadets fainted and a woman had to come out to recover his rifle.

NON-PARTICIPATION IN MARCH

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday in the House the Minister of National Defence promised the House that women would be marching in the Black Watch ceremony. Last Saturday, those women were pulled off parade. Who gave the Minister his marching orders, and who is running this Department anyway?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have just told the Hon. Member, I am informed that on nine different occasions in parades of various sorts in association with the Royal visit—

Ms. Copps: Not trooping the colours.

Mr. Andre: —men and women participated together. There was one occasion in which only the infantry and not the rest of the regiment participated in one parade. It so happens that there are no women in that infantry group. The Hon. Member keeps her mouth so open that it is no wonder she cannot hear what I am saying.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FINANCIAL SELF-SUFFICIENCY GOAL—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Will he acknowledge that his plan for the Post Office, which includes job cuts of some 8,700, privatization, and service cuts, puts the Post Office on a collision course with the postal unions? Will he not reconsider that plan and delay the date for financial self-sufficiency by next spring so that he can give some elbow room to the Post Office in order to negotiate a collective agreement and maintain service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the plan calls for an improvement of services. Eight thousand new postal outlets will be opened over the next few months.

Elements of the Hon. Member's comments are subject matter of negotiations before the table now. If he is interested in avoiding a strike, he would stop raising these issues in the House in that context, making it look as though the Post Office intends to cut back on employees. He knows that is not the case. He knows that the intent is to improve service in a fiscally responsible way.

He ought to let the negotiations carry on rather than try to foment the situation and thereby contribute to a possible strike.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister appears to have denied that his own plan includes cuts of some 8,700 jobs at the Post Office. Does he not recognize that a plan for such deep cuts in employment at the Post Office will obviously be provocative in the present situation and that if he wants a negotiated settlement he must put service at the Post Office first and give the employees some job security? Will he not reconsider his plan in this light, to continue service in the Post Office for Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat that service is the first priority. I mentioned in the House on several occasions that this service will be independently audited and there will be reports made to Parliament on a quarterly basis.

The Member would like to leave the implication that there will be 8,000 people laid off, but he knows that is not the case. There are plans for lay-offs. There are plans for opening new postal outlets and privatizing some of the activities, but in a way that treats the employees with the respect they deserve and will receive.

The Hon. Member seems to want a strike. That is why he keeps raising these issues in a way that implies that some ill is being done to the people affected.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties with respect to the order of business for tomorrow. I think you will find unanimous consent for the following motion to be put to the House and passed unanimously. I move:

> That notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, on Tuesday, June 9, 1987, when the Order for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-50, an Act respecting the treatment of pension payments in determining certain unemployment insurance benefit entitlements and to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, is called and is disposed of on that day, it shall stand referred to a Committee of the Whole;
> That the House shall continue to sit, if necessary, beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, to complete all stages of the Bill;
> That not later than 10 o'clock p.m., on that day, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings, and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to complete the remaining stages of the Bill;
> That should a recorded division be demanded on the motion for the third reading and passage stage of the Bill, it shall stand deferred until 3.15 o'clock p.m. on the following day;
> That Private Members' Hour and proceedings on the Adjournment Motion pursuant to Standing Order 66 shall be suspended; and
> Provided, that when the proceedings on the Bill pursuant to this Order have been completed, and if the House has gone beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have unanimous consent to move his motion?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I agree in general with the motion that has been proposed by the Hon. Deputy House Leader. However, I am confused about one point. If there should be a reasoned amendment on second reading, it seems to me we would have to dispose of that reasoned amendment by a vote before moving to Committee of the Whole, rather than waiting until the next day. I do not know whether that possibility has been considered.

If there is such an amendment on second reading, we would certainly facilitate the taking of such a vote almost immediately.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, you have my copy of the motion, but I think from listening to my hon. friend's question that the motion does not preclude the taking of a division on a reasoned amendment during the course of the day. The motion calls for all questions to be put at 10 p.m.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there has been an understanding that if there are reasoned amendments put forward, they would be dealt with during the proceedings of the day.

I also want to indicate that there have been discussions between the Parties and in an effort to facilitate passage of Bill C-50 and expedite the business of the House we will be co-operating 100 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD, 1987—RIGHTS OF NORTHERN CANADIANS—FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That the Government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord, 1987; and further, to make a commitment to hold a First Minister's conference to discuss aboriginal concerns, in particular self-government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) had two minutes remaining in his speech plus a ten-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I referred to some of the concerns of aboriginal peoples with respect to the Meech Lake resolution. I mentioned that the aboriginal peoples want the resolution amended to provide for further First Ministers' conferences which would entrench aboriginal self-government. Section 13 of the Meech Lake Resolution provides for further conferences on fisheries and the Senate but does not mention aboriginal self-government. Surely aboriginal self-government is part of the unfinished constitutional business of this country and should be included in Section 13.

Second, the aboriginal peoples want Section 16 of the Meech Lake Resolution amended so that none of the Meech Lake Accord—not just Section 2 of the Act—will affect other aboriginal rights provisions.

Third, the aboriginal peoples ask the following question. If precision of definition was not necessary to entrench Quebec's distinctiveness and the spending power as set out in the Meech Lake Accord, why is precision of definition necessary to entrench aboriginal self-government, as was demanded by several provinces when they met to discuss aboriginal self-government and the Constitution? The aboriginal people say there is a double standard on this matter and that should be resolved.

Fourth, the aboriginal peoples cannot accept that the fundamental character of Canada, as defined in the Meech Lake Resolution, be expressed to simply include French and English speaking Canadians. Certainly the aboriginal peoples are part of the fundamental character of Canada and should be included as such.

In conclusion, we support this resolution. We support that part which relates to the concerns of the northern Territories and that part which relates to the aboriginal peoples. In supporting the resolution, we do not believe that it conflicts or contradicts the five principles put forward by Quebec and which form the basis of the Meech Lake Accord. We do not see any good reason for refusing these requests made by the northern Territories and by the aboriginal peoples. The Government, I believe, has agreed to hold hearings on the Accord and to the possibility of amendments. Why does it not say yes to these kind of amendments right now?

Finally, I want to reiterate what was stated by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), that this motion should not be considered a motion of confidence or non-confidence in the Government but simply as an expression of will on the part of this House. As a result, I would ask Hon. Members, especially those on the Government side, to consider this motion in the terms put forward by the proposer, that they should express their will with respect to these matters and not be concerned about want of confidence in the Government. The measures proposed in the resolution are justifiable and will not derogate from anything in the Meech Lake Accord proposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Since there are no questions or comments, debate.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to rise to support the motion of my Leader concerning the constitutional aspirations of aboriginal people and territorial residents. As my Leader stated, we in the New Democratic Party, after extensive, exhaustive and, indeed, exhausting discussion, reached the conclusion that we could, in broad terms, support the principles on which the Meech Lake Agreement was founded and that we would be prepared to extend our every effort and commitment to improve that Accord by the process of amendment, committee hearings and open public discussion.

When we talk about the Constitution of our country, we talk of the basic, fundamental and supreme law which governs all of us, which binds our allegiance and commitment and which defines our institutions; which must enshrine our aspirations, and very much recognizes the inspirations from which this country has sprung.

The Meech Lake Accord provides the framework of the latest amendments to this Constitution. They are amendments of considerable import and great weight. They bring into full participation, within the Constitution, the Province of Quebec, the second largest province in terms of size and population, and the home and birthplace of francophone culture on this North American continent.

I am proud to have the opportunity to be part of the beginning of the process of parliamentary discussion and, we hope and trust, eventual modification of the Meech Lake Accord to reflect as fully as possible the consensus which we are able to obtain right across this country and the aspirations and inspiration from which it springs.

The Meech Lake Accord, when initially announced in very broad terms, with its wording as yet unspecified, was greeted, unfortunately, by a salvo from a person who used to sit in this place, a person I could perhaps most politely describe as driven to petty invective and personal imprecations which have no part in a national debate of such major proportions. Those comments were, of course, picked up and spread across the country by members of the media, as is its duty and, indeed, its right. However, in spite of that kind of interest, there have been some intelligent, persuasive and very deeply felt objections and criticisms to the contents of the Meech Lake Accord.

We are continuing in a constitutional process which will take some time, but it is worth devoting time to. It is a constitutional process which will reframe the Constitution. If our amendments are not accepted through the process of constitutional adaptation, it will then again have to be subjected to further amendment. It is worth while remembering that this is not the first Constitution which has held sway in Canada even dating back to the year 1867 when Confederation was formed. That distinction belongs, of course, to the Great Law of Peace of the Haudenosaunee, the six nations of the Iroquois, who now inhabit the southern part of Ontario but who previously were spread across the eastern half of this entire continent.

The Great Law of Peace of the Haudenosaunee was not simply understandings on an oral basis. Those understandings were essential to the life and spirit of a document, which infused and united the six nations. It was a genuine constitution in the sense of being codified by means of the wampum, and by the ability of those who could interpret the wampum. Those who have read the transcription, shall I say, of the great law of peace into the English or French language, have found that it is a document of considerable complexity, but one which is obviously infused and marked by the need for goodwill, good intentions and fair understanding in order to make it work.

Thus it is with the present Constitution of Canada, be it in its unamended form or with the addition of the amendments we are contemplating today. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), said that actions speak louder than words. Indeed, they do, and this should be a key to the understanding of the Constitutional context in which we propose amendments to recognize the self-government rights of the native people of Canada.

The aboriginal people have had to put up with much. they have had to put up with dispossession, displacement, the stripping of their culture and the imposition on them of the myth of two founding peoples in this country, whereas there were in fact many peoples before even one of the so-called founding peoples came.

In more recent years they have had to put up with being dragged through the process of four First Ministers' conferences, seeming to have the goal within their grasp and then having it snatched away by intransigence and an unwillingness to recognize the centrality of their role to this country and to this society. They had to put up with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) not accepting their invitation—and we know that he was busy with other matters—to come to discuss before the final Meech Lake meeting in the Langevin Block the claims and the requests of aboriginal peoples and their just demands. They have had to put up with a double standard.

I could recite the history at some length. However, I think briefly outlining some of the wounds that the aboriginal people of this country have felt through the recent constitutional process will suffice. They went through four conferences in five years. They had the most recent conference adjourned on them early. They were not given the opportunity to sit up until five in the morning to reach an agreement. We know that if an agreement had been possible they would have sat far beyond that. We all know that the best decisions are not taken at five in the morning. Regrettably, they did not even get a mention in the closing speech of the most recent conference in the Langevin Block.

The prediction of Mr. Jim Sinclair, the Métis leader for Saskatchewan, that it would be awfully easy by comparison to bring Quebec in because Quebec was seen by the Premiers and by those involved in the constitutional process as being one of "our own" was sadly fulfilled. The native people did not have that courtesy extended to them. The aboriginal people of this country have consistently supported the inclusion of the Province of Quebec in the Constitution. Their magnanimity in that regard is also to be commended.

Their objections to the Meech Lake Accord do not extend to a desire to see it rejected. They know that political will rather than merely supportive language will be the ultimate instrument by which aboriginal self-government rights will be entrenched. I am glad to say that that political will exists in my Party at all levels. When we form the Government of Canada we will ensure, if it has not already been remedied, that the insulting omission of the entrenchment of aboriginal self-government rights is included.

While it is said that the inclusion of Quebec in the constitutional process radically strengthens the opportunity to entrench aboriginal self-government rights, that is a conclusion for the long term. It is not the way that aboriginal people or, I believe, the majority of Canadians would have wanted to see it. I say that because it offers the hope of bringing aboriginal people in, but by a process of coat-tailing, a process by which they are subordinated to the wider constitutional process.

The territorial governments, and all the people of the Northwest and Yukon Territories, are disappointed with the Meech Lake Agreement. They felt that there was an implied commitment on behalf of the Governments of Canada that they would be admitted to Confederation when the time was due. There is a unanimity of territorial opinion on this point. The Territories have seen the amending formula slide from the pre-1982 position, that only the federal Government's say-so was required, to the 1982-87 position of the seven provinces, 50 per cent rule, to the 1987-onward position which seems to say that there must be unanimity to allow a new territory into Confederation.

The Government Leader in the Yukon said "We have become second-class citizens". Others have compared the situation now to that of foreign countries that might seek admission into the Canadian federation. Therefore it is not surprising that the governments have filed, in their own Supreme Courts, actions designed to object to and to state their objection to the Meech Lake Accord.

The letter that I saw recently from the Prime Minister concerning the admission, eventually, of the Territories, whether it be after, or concurrent with, the division of the Northwest Territories into Nunavut and Denendeh, seems to equate the admission of new provinces with a de facto constitutional amendment. That surely is at variance with our history, and at variance with the process that brought Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba into Confederation. Indeed, I feel that it is somewhat sad that we do not have the sort of oral history within the majority cultures in the country that would have provided us with some examples of the hopes and aspirations of what were then the Northwest Territories and which are now Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Canadians are very disturbed by the social and economic inequities that aboriginal peoples face. The average family income is much lower while unemployment is much higher. Indeed, no statistical social measure seems to be positive in the case of the comparison between the aboriginal people of the country and the wider society.

Those conditions can only be alleviated by providing a framework under which aboriginal people will be able to develop their communities as their own centres of cultural integrity, of economic opportunity and of administrative and political development. These are the goals of aboriginal self-government.

The letter that the aboriginal summit, the four major national groups, sent to the Prime Minister contains the aboriginal peoples' commitment to constitutional development within Canada, a commitment that is there despite all the problems, a commitment that is part and parcel of the emerging and encouraging renaissance that aboriginal peoples and aboriginal communities are undergoing in this country. Despite all the rejections it states "We believe that the Constitution must stand as a symbol of hope and inspiration for aboriginal peoples, as well as for other peoples of Canada". The aboriginal commitment to the Constitution of Canada is there. They only desire to be part of the circle of Confederation.

It is obvious, and not only through hindsight, that the Meech Lake Accord could not of itself bring aboriginal people into the Canadian Confederation because they, after all, were not represented at that meeting. What is most insulting and most discouraging to aboriginal people and their leaders is the apparent omission of any framework, any hint of the process, that will eventually bring them into the Constitution. Aboriginal self-government rights in the Meech Lake Accord are relegated to the level of "other matters". Surely, that must be a profound criticism of the lack of a continuing high priority awareness that all our leaders should be bringing to the situation of aboriginal people in this country.

On May 27, 1987, the aboriginal summit wrote the Prime Minister outlining eight points. I will go through them briefly. They are: explicit constitutional recognition; a guarantee of non-derogation and non-abrogation; a guarantee that opting-out provisions will not prevent aboriginal people from delivering national programs through their own governments; a guarantee that the Territories will be admissible on the same basis as before; that aboriginal people will be able to participate directly on matters that affect them such as fisheries; that they will be able to negotiate constitutional provisions that might arise out of the Meech Lake Accord and affect them; and, finally, a timetable. Out of those eight legitimate claims that the aboriginal people made, only one, the non-derogation clause, was actually recognized.

We have from Le Droit of Ottawa:

[Translation]

—the headline:

NATIVE PEOPLES ASTONISHED.

And they have every reason to be, Mr. Speaker, as Konrad Sioui, regional leader for Quebec of the Assembly of First Nations pointed out:

> "The federal Government is handing over to the provinces areas that until now were under federal jurisdiction. And from now on, the provinces will be free to opt out of certain shared cost programs. This means that federal programs for native peoples may be turned over to the provinces, which may decide either to change them or drop them altogether."

• (1530)

[English]

That is a major concern of aboriginal people who, after all, are in the early stages of being able to offer those programs through their own Governments.

I should like to refer to the fisheries. The number two item in the Meech Lake Accord after Senate reform—and I do not want to get started on it because I could say so much—is the fisheries. Surely that is something on which the aboriginal people of the country must be consulted. Surely their leaders must be heard and their concerns must be recognized.

We have had situations which have even gone to violence in which the aboriginal people have a vital stake because it affects the economy of their communities. We have the salmon fishery on the B.C. coast. We have the salmon fishery in the Restigouche River in New Brunswick and Quebec. We have the situation in my own riding of Kenora—Rainy River where, because of the lack of attention to the definition of the rights of aboriginal people, there are grave concerns being raised and in many cases played upon by others for their own advantage. We have the situation at Rice Lake in southern Ontario.

I raise these examples not to say that the aboriginal position on all these questions or issues is correct, but to point out the depth and gravity of the concern which aboriginal people have for the regulation of both the freshwater and the salt-water fisheries in virtually all provinces and territories in Canada.

An entrenchment of the inherent rights of self-government for which the aboriginal leaders of the country sought and strove so valiantly at the First Ministers' Conference is, as I have said, something that cannot be included in the Meech Lake Accord. However, it seems that the First Ministers of the country met without considering the unfinished business, which was left before them as recently as some two months ago when they came together in the Langevin Block. Surely any conference, any consultative body, or any deliberative assembly, when meeting again, should be considering what was left undone from its most recent meetings. Surely that is something which was a grave omission from the Meech Lake Accord.

In the last couple of minutes which I have, I should like to turn to the situation regarding the Province of British Columbia and the way in which aboriginal rights and aboriginal aspirations are continually denied, derogated from, and devalued under a Government which I should not like to try to describe in analytical terms when related to the democratic system of Canada. We have a situation where the aboriginal people are essentially considered as not having a communal interest, not having communal aspirations, not possessing cultural heritage that they share among each other, and not being worthy of explicit recognition, even though everyone concedes that it is their ancestors who were here first and extended so much co-operation and welcome to the interlopers.

I should like to refer to a letter from the Assembly of First Nations to the Prime Minister which outlines the situation so clearly. It reads:

> It appears that the federal Government has not been able to muster the political will necessary to deal with aboriginal and treaty issues in a way that would provide clarity and certainty.

As Mr. George Erasmus, the Grand Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, said, "the political will that was demonstrated over the last couple of days"—and he was referring to the first of June—"by the First Ministers was just not there in March".

"Consider the glaring inconsistencies of the double standard employed by the provincial delegates at the aboriginal rights conferences", says Tony Hall who is on the Faculty of Native Studies at the University of Sudbury.

The Meech Lake Accord requires revision and amendment if it is not to leave the aboriginal people of the country in the limbo which they have so long inhabited. As my Leader said, reconciliation of the people of Quebec with the Constitution is essential. My Party and I say that reconciliation of the aboriginal people of Canada with the Constitution is equally essential.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my Party is inspired to hope that the Meech Lake Accord can produce an optimistic future for Canada based upon the inclusion, at long last, of Quebec in the constitutionalized family. However, there are some who share the concern, as reflected in the motion before us, that certain sins of omission leave the Accord flawed. I agree with that proposition.

I would ask the previous speaker whether there is not another area in which the Accord is flawed. Is there not the danger that the deliberations involved in leading up to the Accord have not seen so far too much debate between the two founding peoples? Is there not another sin of omission which should be addressed?

I call attention to the fact that Sections 7 to 15 are subject to Section 33, the non obstante or the notwithstanding clause. I am particularly concerned that there is a large portion of the Canadian population which sees in Section 15 guarantees of rights to those who are neither English nor French nor aboriginal.

Is it not another important omission which must be addressed that Quebec, shortly after the adoption of the Constitution Act, 1982, invoked Section 33 and applied it to all of its future legislation? Should we not be speaking on behalf of an increasingly significant portion of the Canadian population in ensuring that all provinces will be bound to respect in perpetuity the rights of those who are neither English nor French? Should we not ensure that rights accorded to people irrespective of race, colour, creed, and religion should not be subject to override?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for the question. He is a far more learned constitutional scholar than I am. I will do my modest best to respond to him.

I think it must be said that the multicultural and multiethnic dimension of Canada is as central as any other proposition or fact to an understanding of what makes the country live, move, breathe, talk, and co-operate; sometimes we struggle but we always finally get along together.

One of my initial fears in reviewing the Meech Lake Accord was the provision on immigration. I think its intent is something I would certainly want the Government to devote some time and effort to clarifying. I wonder—and others have expressed the same fear—if there is not some element in there where provinces would eventually gain the power to be very selective over the origins of people they admit to the country.

Although there have been, certainly in the past, stains on the immigration policies and practices of the country, most notably right before and in the first years of the Second World War, by and large we have an excellent record. That was celebrated and recognized by the United Nations in the awarding of the Nansen Medal.

• (1540)

We want to keep that record and I believe we as Canadians want to build on that record, not by adopting a policy which will exclude large numbers of bona fide refugees. I saw a cartoon based, I believe, on Jacques Cartier's landing. People were being greeted by the Indians and one of the native people was looking over his shoulder saying "they lied to get in too". We do not want to see a refugee policy that rejects those who are legitimate refugees, and we do not want to see an immigration policy, nor does the Minister—if we are to believe the news reports—want to see an immigration policy that unduly restricts immigration into Canada. Let us remember that in, I believe, 1910 under the policies led by Sir Clifford Sifton Canada saw an influx of some 400,000 immigrants, some of whom today would qualify as refugees. This was a country then with a population of 7.5 million. I would challenge any Member or anyone anywhere to say that those people and their descendants did not integrate, participate and become fully part of Canadian society. Any notwithstanding clause that cuts off that sort of opportunity for the future would be something against which I feel we would have to speak out.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate on the Constitutional Accord, and I can only say that we as parliamentarians are indeed privileged to witness this turning point in Canadian history: one chapter is closed and a new chapter commences. We rejoice in Quebec's return to the Canadian constitutional family. We have formally drafted the principles of the Meech Lake Accord in terms agreeable to the eleven First Ministers. We can now proceed with the task of building the Canada of the next decade and the next century.

The constitutional question is undoubtedly the most oldest one in our federal-provincial relations. It is a complex, emotionally charged issue which encompasses so many divergent interests. It is a question that has shaped the last 100 years of our history and our society and that will shape our future. It is a question that has always spoken to the hearts and minds of Canadian politicians who realize the importance of what is at stake here. It is also a question we have given centre stage on our political platform, first of all because we intended to deal with a problem that goes back to 1927 and which was not satisfactorily dealt with in 1981.

In the historic speech given by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at Sept-Îles during the last election campaign, it was on August 6, 1984, he made a commitment to conduct discussions with a view to bringing Quebec back to the Canadian constitutional family. We left nothing to chance, we worked very hard and now we are reaping the benefits. Mr. Speaker, without wanting to make this a partisan debate, I must say that we have our Prime Minister to thank for this achievement.

I am proud and pleased that the Meech Lake Accord which in itself was a major achievement has been formally made into a constitutional agreement endorsed by all Parties. I am proud because the initiative which led to this outcome did avoid ambiguity and improvisation; because Quebec will join the constitutional family with honour and enthusiasm; because the democratically elected Quebec Government, with its openly federalist program, has expressed full satisfaction with the response to its demand; because nine other provinces as well expressed their satisfaction with this statement of principle of the equality of the provinces; because this new opening will eventually make it possible to launch discussions on other questions of general interest to all provinces, and of particular interest to some of them; because the 1987 Constitutional Accord is synonymous with national reconciliation, one of the major planks of our Prime Minister's election campaign; because, as a Quebecer and a Canadian I consider it is fair to and equitable for Quebec and Canada as a whole.

When the First Ministers met at Meech Lake it was the first time since the April, 1982, patriation of the Constitution that they got together to review the concerns which had prompted Quebec to refrain from participating fully in our country's constitutional evolution. Once again, Mr. Speaker, we are witnesses to the improved federal-provincial relations, particularly between Quebec and Ottawa, which have prevailed since our Government came into office.

Each of the five propositions of Premier Bourassa's Liberal Government was the object of serious considerations and of the April 30 agreement in principle. The 11 Governments were able to draft a constitutional amendment project which was endorsed on June 3.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on certain aspects of this project. First, the acknowledgement of Quebec's distinct society and the Canadian duality. In this House last October 3 the Prime Minister had this to say about Quebec, and I quote:

> It is indeed a province with a difference! We have different roots, a different culture and the French language which is different . . . Thank goodness, it is a language which contributes to our Canadian identity.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, Quebec, a distinct society, enriches the very nature of Canada and gives it a unique character. As this century is drawing to a close, when as Canadian men and women we seek to establish a clearer definition of the values we share to confirm our common identity, by the same token we become aware that Canada's unity is closely linked to respect for its diversity.

Since the Canadian Constitution was patriated in 1982, most of our basic values and features that give Canada its essential identity have been recognized and protected by this country's supreme law. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedom is an integral part of the Constitution. Of course the Charter mainly enshrines individual rights, but the Constitutional Act, 1982 also includes some collective rights.

Indeed aboriginal rights in Canada are recognized and affirmed even though a lot of progress is still needed. One provision states that the Charter shall be interpreted in a matter consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multi-cultural heritage of Canadians. Finally, the Constitution urges Parlement and provincial legislatures to promote and develop Canada's regional energies.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Constitution Act, 1982 is more than a constitutional document, it is to a great degree a statement of the features that make Canada unique. It is my conviction the constitutional recognition of vital components of our society will remain incomplete as long as we do not recognize in the Constitution the existence both of French-speaking Canadians centred in Quebec, and English-speaking Canadians centred in the rest of the country, but also present in Quebec. If those basic realities are not recognized, how can we understand or explain for instance the language provisions of the Charter or the special protection afforded Quebec by the Constitution civil code?

I believe that that part of the agreement dealing with Quebec's distinctive nature strikes a fair balance between the principle of equality between all provinces and the need to protect and strengthen Quebec's uniqueness and contribution to the Canadian identity. And the agreement reaches that goal while guaranteeing that nothing will infringe upon the rights of aboriginal people and our multi-cultural heritage.

Let me now refer, Mr. Speaker to immigration, an aspect of the agreement that is closely connected to the matter of a distinctive society, its survival and developmenet.

Section 95 of the 1867 Constitutional Act gives Parliament and provincial legislatures concurrent powers to make lows in relation to Immigration, with federal lows taking precedence over conflicting provincial ones. In practice, it is essentially Parliament which has taken upon itself to legislate in this area, essentially through the Immigration Act. Throughout the years, however, the federal Government has signed administrative agreements for immigration with seven provinces to address their particular concerns. The most complete of the kind is the Cullen-Couture Agreement, signed with Quebec in 1978. Under this agreement, Quebec has considerable power to apply its own selection criteria to the choice of immigrants coming from abroad. The federal Government, however, continues to set the national standards and objectives in the area of immigration especially because of its authority to establish classes of immigrants.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to be too hard on the Hon. Member but I thought the resolution before the House today dealt with the rights of the Northwest Territories and Yukon and aboriginal rights provisions in the Accord and not the Accord generally. It seems to me that the Hon. Member is involved in debate on the entire Accord, but this resolution is restricted to only two very specific points.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member is getting to the point.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I would like also to confirm to my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) that, before integrating our aborigines to the Constitution, we must first adopt the Constitution.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, concerns vary from one province to the next. Quebec is concerned first and foremost with the implementation of an immigration policy which would favour the development of vigorous francophone communities and allow it to select every year a number of immigrants in proportion to its population.

British Columbia seems to be interested mostly in immigrants likely to create their own businesses. Other provinces have at present no objection to the federal Government assuming full responsibility in the area of immigration, but they wish to retain the possibility of signing such agreements in case of any change in their situation.

Although Quebec and the other provinces seem generally satisfied with the administrative agreements signed with the federal Government, Quebec wanted to have its agreement entrenched in the Constitution to prevent the federal Government from eventually cancelling the provision by using its own legislative powers.

Other provinces have also indicated that they would want to entrench any such agreements with the federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, all the provinces agree that the federal Government should continue to assume its general responsibility for setting national standards and objectives in the area of immigration, especially in terms of defining the various classes of immigrants, determining who is not eligible, and setting up comprehensive immigration quotas. The Government of Canada will retain the ultimate jurisdiction over family reunification and assisted relatives, matters of particular interest to Canadians who have recently settled in this country and to anyone who understands the importance of humanitarian reasons.

Mr. Speaker, the Accord signed on June 3 will enshrine in the Constitution an expanded version of the Cullen-Couture Agreement with Quebec, an agreement that has produced good results since it became effective ten years ago and whose principles have proved satisfactory for both parties.

The need to clarify the roles and responsibilities of the federal Government and the provinces with respect to immigration arises from the fact that Quebec wants to be responsible for protecting and promoting the distinct identity of its society. The Government of Canada shares this concern, aware that the existence of a Canadian French-speaking entity, concentrated in Quebec but also present in the other provinces and territories of this country, constitutes of one of the fundamental characteristics of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that thanks to the proposed constitutional amendment signed on June 3, federal-provincial relations in this area of shared jurisdiction will become more harmonious.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to say that as a parliamentarian, a Quebecer and the Member for the riding of Chambly, I take great pride in the fact that on April 30, at Meech Lake, and last week in Ottawa, the First Ministers were able to meet the incredible challenge of reconciling the specific needs of Quebec with the interests of the provinces and the common good of the entire country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

Mr. Desjardins: First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend my colleague from Chambly for his remarks before making a brief comment and asking him a question.

The Opposition motion under consideration reads as follows: That the Government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon and the Northwest Territories to the Constitutional Accord of 1987; and further, to make a commitment to hold a First Ministers' Conference to discuss aboriginal concerns . . .

Unless I am mistaken, and my colleague may correct me in his response, there was a conference of aboriginal people here in Ottawa a few months ago, the fourth one, and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) is an unfailing supporter of their rights. It was not him who created a problem during the conference of aboriginal people here a few months ago. Not at all.

Given the motion under consideration today, my question to the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) is this: Can he tell us how it had become imperative for both Quebec and Canada to do something about getting Quebec into the constitutional fold to repair the blunder of 1982?

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins) for a very relevant question, especially as we know that the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue is deeply concerned with aboriginal matters in the vast Abitibi-Témiscamingue area. As we all know, there is a large population of Quebec native people in that area.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, following the comments by Members of opposition Parties, and again while trying to keep partisan considerations out of this debate, it is quite clear, from what the Members of other Parties have said, that there is a desire to reach a unanimous position and an attempt by opposition Parties to claim the merit of this historical achievement, namely the signing of that constitutional agreement by the ten Premiers and our Prime Minister, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, an agreement by 10 provincial Premiers representing four different political parties.

Let us think of the extraordinary conciliatory talent which was required to get those political leaders to reach an agreement. That is obvious, as was shown recently by the failure to reach an agreement here in Ottawa at the conference on aboriginal rights, when 25 per cent of the Canadian representation was missing from the negotiating table. How can we as a Parliament reach an agreement, how can we as a Government reach an agreement representing the whole of Canada and establish a unanimous position when 25 per cent of those concerned are missing in the debate, in the negotiation?

Mr. Speaker, we are obviously concerned with aboriginal matters. That is a fact. Indeed, the Prime Minister had organized that meeting of aboriginal people to try and reach a consensus on that matter. Unfortunately, the Province of Quebec was absent from that negotiation.

Why should we therefore try to put the cart before the horse now? In the first place, the Province of Quebec has to become part of that constitutional process, has to have its own fundamental right to speak at that table. When that is done, it will be much easier, Mr. Speaker, to invite aboriginal people as well as the Ministers of the 10 provinces to meet once again and ultimately to achieve an impossible task because our Prime Minister has a record of achieving what seems impossible, and once again I am satisfied that he will succeed eloquently.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to look at page 6 of the Accord. I am referring to Section 41(i) which deals with the establishment of new provinces. In the present Constitution, that was dealt with under Section 38. In the Meech Lake Accord, that was moved to Section 41. Amendments under that section require unanimous consent. Nowhere in the five conditions laid down by Quebec is there reference to the entry of new provinces into Confederation. Those five conditions do not even imply that we must have unanimous consent to admit the Territories as provinces in Confederation. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell the House why the admission of new provinces should come under Section 41 which requires unanimous consent rather than remaining in Section 38 which requires the consent of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population?

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, it is amusing to hear the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). How awfully hard it is to accept something of benefit to everyone, not only Canadians but also Quebecers!

They are comparing cabbage to carrots. They would like to revert to the good old times of 1982. We are now in 1987. Pierre Elliott Trudeau is no longer Prime Minister. The Liberal Party of Canada is no longer in government in Ottawa, and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East has difficulty realizing that. We have been here for almost three years. He has been in opposition for three years, and still he grasped nothing. He is struggling to understand and compare the 1982 constitutional agreement and the 1987 one, when even today he cannot realize he has been in opposition for three years.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that is a rather evasive answer, to say the least! I would like to come back to it because there is a difference between the 1982 proposal, which provided that the federal Government would sit at the table with provinces and discuss the matter. There have indeed been four federal-provincial conferences on the matter of aboriginals. I am asking the Hon. Member this clear and non-partisan question: How come—Canadians are listening—the 1982 agreement required the concurrence or support of seven provinces comprising 50 per cent of the Canadian people, either to amend the constitution or to include a new province—if you wanted to admit a new province, it took seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population, when today unanimity is required. All provinces! I am hearing the Northwest Territories and the Yukon say: This is unfair! So, can he give me a reason? Does he know or did his government tell him, did his Prime Minister explain to him in caucus or elsewhere why today they are insisting on unanimity, when it used to be 50 per cent of the people, seven provinces? That is clear!

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I realize my time has almost expired, and I will be very brief. I repeat, what is more important? The contents of the 1982 agreement which Quebec did not sign and with which Quebec did not agree, or the 1987 agreement with the five recommendations by Quebec which were accepted, and which Quebec did sign? For the first time since 1927, Canada's 10 provinces are part of the Constitution, Mr. Speaker. That is the important thing. And that is the agreement that was signed on June 3, 1987. The Liberals don't seem to understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it seems fitting that I have a chance to speak after hearing diatribes from those who are trying to make this a fight between Quebec and the native people in Quebec and the Territories. Obviously no Member of this House believes that is the case. Leaders of all three Parties have spoken in favour of the Accord. They expressed their wish to have Quebec feel it is a full partner in Confederation.

The purpose of this motion laid down by my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), was to go past that point. To recognize that Quebec now accepts the constitutional amendment process and has been brought into the family does not mean constitutional amendments have ended.

Obviously two groups in our society feel they have been left out of the process. Not only that, they were not invited to Meech Lake or the meeting last week in the Prime Minister's Offices. They were left out because the Accord effectively limited their rights. That is a concern and that is why we brought this motion forward. That is why, in introducing the motion, the NDP made it very clear that this is not a matter of confidence in the Government and that all Members have the right under the new rules to vote according to their conscience.

As I said earlier, when the Accord was reached and the final wording accepted, we said we were grateful to have this historic constitutional Accord. We were glad to see Quebec brought into the constitutional family. However, as I also said, there are groups of men and women who feel left out, namely, the northerners and aboriginal people. It is important to realize that the majority of people living in the Northwest Territories are also aboriginal people, so they have been doubly affected by the constitutional sleight of hand so far as natives and northerners are concerned.

It is important to remember that the federal Government should have been standing up for native people. It is important to remember that the federal Government should have been speaking and working for those people because the federal Government has that direct constitutional responsibility. I consider it a failure by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) not to have adequately dealt with the rights and concerns of those people. It was not the responsibility of the Province of Manitoba and of Premier Pawley to defend aboriginal people, although I know he tried to. It was not the responsibility of any other Premier. Constitutionally, the responsibility lies at the feet of our Prime Minister, and he failed.

I do not criticize him out of hand for that. There was the major task and responsibility of getting Quebec to accept the Meech Lake Accord. However, I believe that if he had worked harder he could have found a formula acceptable to Quebec and the other provinces, and at the same time moved us further along the road to having the concerns of aboriginal and other people in the north met by the Accord.

• (1610)

This motion requires that we move back to the existing rights of the people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories to be able to form their own provinces. My Leader, the Member for Oshawa, stated that, although it is not perfect, the old amending formula of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population and the federal Government agreeing to a constitutional amendment makes a lot more sense than the proposal which will be before this House as a result of the Meech Lake Accord. The Meech Lake Accord requires the agreement of all ten provinces and the federal Government to form a new province. Since this situation was not faced by any other province in order to enter the Constitution, it is a threat to the people of the Territories and Yukon.

We should not pretend that there will not be a province or provinces formed in the north. It was not that many years ago that people did not believe that provinces would be formed from the old Northwest Territories, the old Rupert's Land, and now there are more than three provinces formed by what used to be the Hudson Bay Company's land. Changes in population patterns and mineral development policies in the north may well mean that there may be even more than two or three new provinces in the future. It is important that when we change our Constitution we do not do so in such a way as to make it almost impossible to get the necessary agreement to form new provinces.

The aboriginal people of this country feel that they were left out of the circle. They believe they were not listened to at Meech Lake or last week. Their demands were quite simple. They wanted and still want a guarantee that there will be more First Ministers' meetings to try to make some constitutional amendments which will bring in self-government and answer other concerns of aboriginal peoples.

The aboriginal peoples recognize that there is no guarantee that we will find wording acceptable to all the provinces. They recognize that the federal Government may not consider this to be a high priority item on its political agenda. However, why could the Premiers and the Prime Minister not agree, as part of this process, that there will be more meetings on aboriginal rights, that the First Ministers will sit down with the leaders of the aboriginal people and the leaders of the Territories and work toward fully entrenching and fully explaining aboriginal rights in our Constitution?

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Prime Minister have said that having Quebec in the Constitution makes it easier to have aboriginal rights entrenched. In the Prime Minister's speech last Thursday evening to the people of Canada he said in part that four attempts to bring justice to our aboriginal people have failed, in large part because Quebec was not there to vote on behalf of our native people, and perhaps next time, with Quebec's help, we will succeed.

Those were the words our Prime Minister spoke to the Canadian people, including the aboriginal people. If the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice were serious in their remarks, why has the Government refused to act to ensure that there will be a First Ministers' conference on aboriginal rights?

If the Government does not act, we must question its sincerity. On Friday in the House of Commons and only an hour ago in Question Period we asked questions on this issue. We are not asking for a guaranteed constitutional change. We wanted the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, or some Minister speaking and working on behalf of the federal Government, to call the Premiers and ask whether they can agree to have a First Ministers' conference on aboriginal rights, preferably within the next year.

We did not request a constitutional amendment or an amendment to the Meech Lake Accord. We only requested that the Government take the initiative to work toward solving the question of aboriginal rights. It would have taken only a certain number of phone calls, yet the Deputy Prime Minister would not even confirm that he would go that far.

That lack of a very simple action by the Government is the reason that native people are very concerned. They have to be concerned when the Deputy Prime Minister will not say that the Government will take the initiative and do what it can to ensure that aboriginal rights are recognized and self-government is proclaimed under our Constitution. As you know, Mr. Speaker, prior to the last meeting of First Ministers on aboriginal rights the Prime Minister was criticized for not taking a very active role, for acting as a chairperson of the meeting rather than as one of the leading instigators of action at that meeting. As I watched the part of the First Ministers' conference which was televised, that impression was further entrenched in my mind because I did not see the Prime Minister making suggestions, pushing the Premiers, or trying to get an agreement.

In the dying hours of that meeting which, by the way, did not continue all night, the Prime Minister was offered an option by the native people and the Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley. That option was that rather than adjourning the meeting forever they should recess it only for three, six or twelve months until the officials of the provincial and federal Governments and the native leaders could work out a deal. At the end of that meeting the Prime Minister said: "This is the end". He put down his gavel and said that the meeting was over and that was it.

Contrast that with what happened with regard to Quebec. The Premiers worked until dawn to resolve the issue. There were two meetings of the First Ministers within a five-week period. The action was quick, concentrated, and very serious. I have commended the Government for that, as have the native people. We now need that same type of leadership and concern from the Prime Minister and his Ministers to ensure that we do not forget about the aboriginal peoples.

It is fine for the Prime Minister to say that now that Quebec is in the Constitution we will be in a better position to resolve this issue next time. Those are fine words and they may well be true, but they are meaningless unless the federal Government is willing to take the initiative to ensure that there is a meeting of the First Ministers with the aboriginal leaders and the elected leaders of the Territories. He must take that initiative and that is the intent of this motion. It calls for that initiative on behalf of the aboriginal peoples of this land and to ensure that the people of the Territories do not feel like the new second-class citizens of Canada.

Earlier, my Leader talked about completing the circle. He said Quebec has now come into the constitutional family but that there are aboriginal people and people in the Territories who still do not feel part of that circle. It is time that this nation took that leap of faith and that the Prime Minister and his Cabinet showed a sense of leadership on behalf of the aboriginal people and the people of the Territories by calling that meeting.

While the Prime Minister can call a meeting without consultation, our motion suggests he go one step further and consult with the provinces and make sure there is a First Minister's meeting to resolve these problems and reassure the people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories that their concerns are being heard.

They are the ones who were left out of Meech Lake. They feel that their issues and concerns were ignored by the Prime Minister, the person who is constitutionally responsible for representing their interests. They must next be brought into the constitutional family. I urge Members of the House to pass this motion. It does not speak against Meech Lake, but urges the Government to take action for the aboriginal people of this land and for the people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories who believe they are part of the constitutional family of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who is talking about native rights. If I look at the wording of their motion, I find that the New Democrats always try to project the image of people who are concerned about problems that are, in fact, non-existent.

The first paragraph of their motion says: "That the Government should seek to restore existing rights of Canadians in Yukon . . . ". How are we supposed to restore rights if the rights are already there in the Constitution? I mean, we are not going to reinvent the wheel.

The Meech Lake Accord does not say that the people of Yukon or the Northwest Territories have lost something. They were already included in the 1982 Constitution which you, the New Democratic Party and the Liberals, ratified while excluding Quebec, and you did not object to Quebec's not being included.

You were talking about native rights in Canada, but by excluding Quebec, by excluding 25 per cent of the Canadian population, by excluding a provincial Government which was able to negotiate an agreement with native peoples in Quebec . . . Remember the agreement signed by the Government of Quebec with the native peoples of James Bay? Those agreements were made by Quebec within that province, and on that province's territory, by the politicians who were there at the time. But the 1982 Agreement excluded Quebec from the Canadian constitutional accords and today, they are saying: Yes, but it wasn't important for the native peoples to have Quebec in the Constitution. That is what you did in 1982. And today, you are trying to reinvent the wheel.

What I want to say to my New Democratic Party colleague is that it was through our Party, independently from the Meech Lake constitutional agreement and well before it was concluded, that the Indians, the Sechelt band, gained self-determination. Thanks to whom? Thanks to the Government now in office. It had nothing to do with the Constitution. Nothing in the Meech Lake Accord says that native people will be forgotten, on the contrary.

This is why I should like to know on what grounds your motion calls on the Government to restore the rights of northern residents, considering that these rights were never removed from the Meech Lake Accord, and then explain to me why it was not important for Quebec to get aboard to help all native people of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, first, I think I should correct some of the inaccuracies in the Conservative Member's statement. He said that the Liberals and the New Democratic Party endorsed the 1982 Agreement. Had he been here at the time he would have known that all three Parties, and again all three Leaders, endorsed the 1982 package. I do not think he can pretend that this was some Liberal and New Democratic Party attempt to ignore the reality of Quebec.

In fact, I know that my Leader, the Member for Oshawa, made some suggestions to make sure that Quebec was in the Constitution. One of the amendments we suggested is now part of the Meech Lake Accord. It would have allowed Quebec to be compensated for any shared-cost program in which it did not want to take part. That was a specific recommendation that we made at that time because we felt strongly that Quebec must be brought into the constitutional family.

The Hon. Member denies that existing rights are being changed. While I do not come from the Northwest Territories, my riding of Churchill is as close as one can get to the Northwest Territories. I spent some time in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The 1982 constitutional Agreement requires seven provinces and the federal Government to agree to the creation of a new province. This has been a very difficult problem for people in Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Previously, the federal Government could create provinces by itself, as it did for Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Newfoundland. After the 1982 constitutional Agreement, the opportunities of people from Yukon and the Northwest Territories were being restricted, but they accepted that.

As a result of the Meech Lake Accord and its successor, we now have a situation in which it takes the agreement of the federal Government and each of the 10 provinces for the creation of a new province. There have been times in our constitutional history when a province or provincial Premier may have had disagreements, sometimes justifiably, about a particular issue. Therefore, if the Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island or perhaps Manitoba are not satisfied about an issue which may have no relation to the creation of a province of Yukon or Provinces in the Northwest Territories, there may not be unanimous agreement.

While there are those who may say that this will not happen, I suggest that the history of our country has proven that it is quite possible that one or more provinces may say no.

The people of Yukon and the Northwest Territories want at least equal treatment as is the case for most constitutional changes. If they can make their case to the federal Government and seven provinces, with 50 per cent of the population of this land, then they should be able to form a province. That is the existing right that is being taken away by this Accord.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member keeps trying to raise the point that it is impossible to obtain unanimity in Canada. The 1982 option recognized implicitly that it is impossible to obtain unanimity in Canada. The Meech Lake Accord has proved the opposite to be true. And I do not see how the Meech Lake Accord, with the undertakings it contains, how those negotiations, and the new political will we have seen emerge in Canada, which reflects the Canada of 1987, a Canada that has evolved since the time, five years ago when they said that unanimity was impossible— So we have to have 50 per cent of the people agreeing because of the assumption that it would be impossible to get unanimity—

How could there possibly be this fear it would be impossible? Can you imagine ten First Ministers refusing to let Yukon, already a territory, become a province? What do the Premiers have to lose by having a new province in this country? What do they have to lose as Premiers? Are they going to lose anything? Not at all! They will lose nothing. And the new provinces that will be created have everything to gain, in that they will not be accepted by a certain proportion but by all. That is the difference between 1982 and 1987. Not accepted by 50 per cent and rejected by 50 per cent. This time, they will be welcomed by the entire Canadian family, not by five but by all 10 children of the Canadian federation.

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Churchill for a short rebuttal.

Mr. Murphy: I think the important thing is to realize that there may be unanimous agreement right now with the 10 Premiers and the federal Government, but that does not mean it is going to be there forever and a day. What the people of the Northwest Territories are saying is to please make the constitutional amending formula flexible enough to recognize there may be some problems in the future. After all, my Province of Manitoba came in at a time when I suspect the Province of Ontario may have said no to Louis Riel. Unfortunately for the people of Manitoba and fortunately for the people of the Red River Valley, Ontario did not have a veto.

What we are saying is that there may be reasons in the future which would result in one province, for whatever reason, saying no, even though nine other provinces said yes and even though the federal Government said yes. Absolutely no one will claim responsibility for being the father of the amending formula. No province will claim it insisted on this. The federal Government will not claim it is the father of this change. But obviously someone pushed for it. Someone in that closed room pushed for this particular amendment, and the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories want to know why, just as the native people want to know why they cannot have a guarantee of at least one more conference with all the First Ministers in attendance to discuss aboriginal rights.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, probably the worst thing about the debate today is that it is necessary. I wish we had not been called upon to debate this issue today. I wish that the 11 First Ministers who gathered in the Langevin Building some days ago had had the common decency to treat Canadians living north of 60 degrees as fellow men and women and not as some kind of creatures beyond the pale.

I am unable, Sir, to stand idly by when the interests of the people I represent are disregarded and when their heartfelt aspirations are cast aside. After having given the matter a great deal of reflection, I have come to the decision that I will support the motion before the House today. I have been here long enough to know that the introduction of such a motion was, in all probabilities, motivated by partisan considerations. I am sure that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) is not unmindful of the by-election which is coming up in the Yukon in a few days' time. I know that today's proceedings are part of the Business of Supply and, under normal circumstances, Members would be called upon to vote along Party lines. But I am going to treat today's motion at its face value, and it makes sense.

Perhaps it is time we did take cognizance of the suggestions made with respect to parliamentary procedural reform. Perhaps there is an occasion when a good idea can be brought forward by members of the opposition Parties.

There is no way that my vote is to be construed in any way as a vote of non-confidence in the Government. It is true that rapid advancements in constitutional development have taken place in the northern Territories under the Progressive Conservative Government. Far faster changes than ever took place previously when we were stalemated under the previous Government. I recall an example of that, and this goes back to the time the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He gave letters of instruction to the Commissioner of the Yukon which were challenged in this House by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), who now presents himself as a great proponent of territorial rights. We made practically no progress during the time the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau was Prime Minister. However, we have made great progress very quickly in the last couple of years. For that reason, I am proud to be a supporter of the present Government.

Let us look at the recent developments, going back just a few weeks, in the constitutional Accord and the perceptions of these in the Territories. We have heard a lot about how this has been perceived in Quebec and Ontario and southern Canada, but let us look at the perceptions which have come about in the Territories.

When the Meech Lake Accord was reached on April 30, we in the Territories were equally pleased, along with other Canadians, that a mechanism had been found for bringing Quebec into Confederation. This is something we wanted to see as much as anyone. However, we were bewildered and disappointed that we had not been invited to, and were not part of the Meech Lake Agreement. We could not understand why. Being a kind of gracious people, we assumed it might be an oversight. Therefore, we made every effort to see that elected representatives of the people of the Territories would be at the meeting to be held a month later when the ratification of the final draft was to take place.

I want to read into the record a letter I wrote at that time to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I think it properly reflects the feelings of my constituents. It reads as follows:

> Congratulations on your successful negotiations with the provincial premiers towards bringing Quebec into the Canadian Constitution.
> Once this has been done then the only Canadians excluded from voluntary participation in this great confederation will be those living in the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory.
> We must therefore redouble our efforts to extend full provincial rights to Canadians living north of the 60th parallel.
> In that the proposed Meech Lake constitutional amendment dealing with the changes to the amending formula for those items contained in Section 42 of the Constitution Act which include the creation of new provinces or the extension of existing provinces into the territories are of immediate and direct concern to the territories I solicit your untertaking that pursuant to Section 37(2) of the Constitution Act elected representatives of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory shall be invited to the contemplated First Ministers' Conference which is to deal with these proposed amendments.
> Thank you.

Unfortunately, Sir, I have to report that I have not received a written reply to that letter.

Similar importunities were made by the First Ministers of the Territories to the Prime Minister of Canada and to the provincial First Ministers. Apparently, these also fell on deaf ears.

We now come to June 3. This time things were a little different. This time the exclusion is deliberate—the denial is deliberate. Why this was so we do not know. We probably will never find out until some of the participants publish their memoirs in the years to come. We might suspect that Manitoba covets parts of the District of Keewatin, or that the Province of British Columbia has its eyes on parts of Yukon. We do not know. But what happened was that this cosy little club of southern provinces got together and made their own cosy little rules while other Canadians, those living north of the 60th parallel, just sat outside in the cold.

I think that all political Parties must bear some of the blame for this. Certainly, the provincial Premiers represented three federally-represented political Parties at that meeting. They all signed the agreement. They must all bear part of the blame.

The feeling in the Territories is that somehow the system has let us down. If this agreement goes forward, if goodwill is not shown in the future by the provinces and by the federal Government, then what will happen is that two classes of Canadian citizens will be created. We will have those enjoying full rights of citizenship below the 60th parallel, and above that line we will have second-class Canadians. That, of course, is not acceptable. What happened on June 3 is that disappointment turned to disgust. Bewilderment turned to revulsion.

There is a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories for whom I have a great deal of respect. His name is Mr. Robert MacQuarrie. He is not a member of any political Party. He is noted for his logical analysis. He is not given to hyperbole. This is what he had to say of the Langevin agreement. "It is a scandalous travesty of democracy". I think that he reflects the views of his constituents, who are also mine, in so saying.

I was back home in the Northwest Territories last week. As I walked around the streets of the various towns and settlements in my riding, carpenters would put down their saws and hammers, labourers would put down their shovels, and they would come up and ask me: "Why have they done this to us?" Sir, it is taken as a personal insult to those people who live in the Territories. The territorial Governments on behalf of the people they represent are taking these matters to court, and I think quite rightly so. They want judicial intervention into what they say is a denial of their rights, supposedly guaranteed under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I would now like to go briefly through the agreement and outline the complaints that we have with it. First, there is the question of the Senate. Had we been there, the amendment to Section 25(1), I am sure, would have been worded differently. I think that this is an oversight. What this new section does is to deny any further appointments of Senators from the Northwest Territories or Yukon, although they are supposed to be guaranteed representation under other parts of the Constitution Act. But because they have no provincial Government to put the name forward on a list, when Senator Adams or Senator Lucier resigns, dies, or whatever, there can be no replacement until an over-all constitutional change is made. That is wrong. We ought to have representation in the Senate. I cannot see why anybody would deny that.

A very similar sort of situation arises with respect to the Supreme Court. No person in the Territories, no judge, can aspire to be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada because, under the proposed Meech Lake-Langevin Agreement, that will be denied to them, whether or not that is an oversight on the part of the drafters, I do not know. Had we been there, that would have been clarified.

There are annual First Ministers' conferences to be convened under the agreement. One is to be held on the economy and the second on constitutional matters. We were previously invited to constitutional conferences. We were to be there by virtue of Subsection (2) of Section 37. But that is something that has been taken away from the Territories now. There is no mention, no requirement, not even a possibility of them being there as participants at constitutional conferences when things of evident, direct interest to the people who live in the north are to be discussed.

The other matter of great concern that we have heard a lot about today already is the changes to the formula by which new provinces are created. In my way of thinking the evil deed was done in 1982. Prior to that time the creation of new provinces, whether, as we have seen, was the case with Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or Newfoundland, was a matter between that area and the federal Government. The change came in 1982 when Pierre Elliot Trudeau was Prime Minister of Canada.

I do not know about the practical results of the proposals here. I suspect that it will not make that much difference. If we are going to get seven provinces, we are likely to get 10. But we should have been there at Meech Lake. We should have been there in the Langevin Block when these proposals were being drawn up and discussed.

What could be of more direct interest to the people of a part of Canada as a discussion as to how they can become a province, how they can join this great Confederation?

In summing up I want to say that the Meech Lake-Langevin Agreement as it stands, as much as we like to see Quebec coming into Confederation, is unacceptable to the people of northern Canada. They have seen provinces kind of bending over backward to accommodate the reluctant bride, Quebec. But they themselves who have only wanted, and always wanted, to be part of this family of Confederation, have found themselves cut out. They have been left outside of the circle of Confederation.

The question that we have on our minds, the question that we want an answer for, is quite simply this. Why, under these agreements, is it to be proposed that we who live north of the 60th parallel be excluded from the Canadian family of Confederation?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) state that he would support the resolution today. I think his action is a natural consequence of the new rules and the statement by the proposer that the motion should not be considered as one of confidence in the Government.

I accept fully his statement that while he supports the motion, this does not stand for non-confidence in his own Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). While I congratulate him on that, I want to take him up on one point.

He said that he was surprised by the position taken by the Liberal Party today because in 1979 the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Liberal Party opposed the proposals made by the then Conservative Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at that time for more responsible government in the Territories.

I know the Hon. Member wants to be fair. I recall very well that while this Party stood for more responsible government in the Territories, we did not want those proposals to move ahead unless there was assurance that the aboriginal people were involved with that movement toward responsible government in the north and there was some mechanism to provide for the settlement of land claims at the same time.

I must say that we tried to make the point that these measures for responsible government should not go ahead without some assurance of involving the aboriginal people. In fact, the Government acted on that, both the Conservative Government of 1979 and the Liberal Government of 1980, so that we now have in the north a quite significant evolution toward responsible government with the aboriginal people involved. We now see in the Northwest Territories the Inuit and Dene involved in the Government. It is the same thing in Yukon. We fully support that.

The only reason we took the position we did in 1979 was not that we were opposed to that development in the North but that we wanted to ensure that the aboriginal people would be fully involved.

I wanted to make those comments. As I say, I appreciate the position of the Hon. Member, but I want the record to be clear on that.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I think to a certain extent the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is trying to rewrite history. I was in the House at that time. If I remember the arguments presented by his Party and the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, they did not have too much to do with social justice. However, they had a lot to do with strict legalities and whether the letter of instruction sent by the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Commissioner of Yukon was legally correct and proper. That is my recollection of the arguments presented at that time.

One small but positive development toward constitutional development in the time the Hon. Member enjoyed the portfolio of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—and I compliment him on it—was that in 1976 or 1977 he allowed the elected executive committee of the territorial Government to be increased by one additional member.

It just so happens that when this took place, the member of the Legislative Assembly who was chosen to take this new portfolio at the territorial level was myself. I have never really come to the conclusion as to whether I should thank the Hon. Member for doing so or whether what should take place is entirely the opposite.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I support the constitutional Accord signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premiers of the provinces last week. I believe it is good for Quebec and good for Canada.

I also said that it needed improvements and that I hoped public debate and public hearings involving the participation of Canadians from one end of the country to the other would, over the course of weeks and months, achieve those improvements. I believe the motion before us represents such improvement, and we support that motion.

[Translation]

I therefore support the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The motion is entirely compatible, to borrow a term from the constitutional Accord, with what members of my Party and I myself have already said on this issue. I am therefore happy to see that the members of the NDP now agree with us in this respect.

[English]

I agree with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who spoke earlier. This motion does not detract from the Meech Lake-Langevin Accord. I agree that the principles of the Meech Lake Accord should remain sacrosanct. There is no reason, however, why every phrase in that agreement should remain sacrosanct or why the First Ministers, the Parliament of Canada, and the legislatures of the provinces should not yield to improvements which can be justified to those respective jurisdictions.

With regard to the admission of new provinces, I have pointed out to the House on more than one occasion that I believe one of the flaws in the constitutional Accord signed by the Prime Minister and the First Ministers is that the eventual admission of Yukon and the Northwest Territories as new provinces is now subject to the unanimous consent of all provincial Governments.

While I agree that existing provinces should indeed have something to say about the admission of new provinces, we should remember, as has been pointed out already in the debate, that this rule did not apply to any current provinces brought into Confederation since 1867.

Mr. Benjamin: Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Newfoundland.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905, Manitoba in 1870, and Newfoundland in 1949?

Therefore, I believe that an exception should be made in the case of Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I believe that they should be governed by the current formula, which would be seven provinces and 50 per cent of the Canadian population.

Since I was not in the room when the constitutional Accord was reached, I do not know whether it was merely an oversight on the part of the Prime Minister and the Premiers pressing forward to get an agreement. However, as has been pointed out, there is also no provision for consultation with the Territories on the appointment of northern Senators.

We have yet to hear from either the federal or provincial Governments a satisfactory explanation as to why it was that the First Ministers wanted to make it more difficult to admit Yukon and the Northwest Territories as full partners.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said this morning that it had implications for equalization payments. I do not find that argument at all persuasive.

In the 1982 amendment enshrined in the Constitution, the commitment of all levels of government to regional equality is set forth quite clearly. Does the federal Government really believe that that provision would be weakened or changed because of the admission of new provinces? We do not think so. We are not getting very clear reasoning from the Minister of Justice on what is a very important and indeed a vital issue for northern Canadians.

The Government of Canada was the only Government at the negotiating table to speak for the interests of northern Canadians. I therefore urge the Prime Minister to take the lead with the provincial Premiers in seeking agreement to change that section of the constitutional Accord.

I support the Accord. I support the agreement reached over that marathon session in the Langevin Building despite its flaws because it represents a reaching out to Quebec and to our French-speaking citizens. I also believe we should reach a little further and extend our hand to Canadians living north of the 60th parallel and to our aboriginal peoples as is set forth in this motion.

• (1700)

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East pointed out earlier that there was some movement from the statement of principles set forth in general terms at Meech Lake to the Accord signed last week in terms of the recognition of aboriginal rights and the multicultural nature of our society. Section 16 of that Accord will bear a good deal of scrutiny, hopefully in this House, in committee and by provincial legislatures. I believe that the Government should capitalize on that good will and bring it a step or two further.

You will know, Mr. Speaker, that I presented a motion to this House, together with the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East, which sought to correct what we believe to be an historic injustice to the aboriginal peoples of Canada. We sought the support of all Members at that time to recognize in the Constitution the inherent right to self-government of aboriginal Canadians. We also urge the Government of Canada to abandon its insistence that the right to self-government should be contingent upon negotiated agreements.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the First Ministers' Conference with aboriginal leaders held in Ottawa in March was the last such conference that Ministers were obliged to hold on this issue under the terms of the Constitution Act, 1982. That conference failed to produce an agreement to recognize aboriginal self-government. I believe the reason for that failure was the lack of political will and leadership of the federal Government on that issue.

Again this morning the Minister of Justice repeated the argument that until such time as there is significant agreement among the provinces to entrench aboriginal rights and aboriginal self-government there will be no further meetings. In other words, what the federal Government is saying to the provinces is, "Show me where you want to go and I will lead you". We consider that to be a vacuum in leadership. We consider that to be a derogation from the position the federal Government should take—

Mr. Benjamin: An abdication.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Abdication is a good word—in furtherance of the historic rights we believe to be inherent of our original peoples. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply my intuition is that the Government does not believe in the concept itself of aboriginal self-government. The Minister of Justice complains that he has to know right down to the last dot and comma what precisely the concept of self-government means before the federal Government would ever pursue it.

We believe that those rights should be included in the Constitution first as a general statement and affirmation of the rights of our aboriginal peoples, rights which we consider to be inherent, never having been extinguished.

The federal Government, on the other hand, believes that all the details of every application of that right should be worked out first, and only then should that right be included in the Constitution.

Part of the constitutional Accord calls for further First Ministers' meetings to discuss the Senate and the fisheries. We believe that since the fishery is an important aspect of aboriginal rights, native leaders should at least be part of those meetings, along with the First Ministers. I go even further. I would like to see this Parliament add to that agenda to the Senate reform issue, to the fisheries issue, a commitment listed specifically to aboriginal right to self-government and the inherent rights of our aboriginal peoples. That should be added specifically to the agenda by this Parliament and the legislatures as part of the Constitution.

I believe, together with my colleagues, that the right of the aboriginal peoples to self-government has existed for centuries. It existed well before this continent was explored and colonized by Europeans.

[Translation]

We believe that this right to political autonomy has always existed and was never abolished. It still exists. It should therefore be written into the Constitution of Canada. At our convention last November our Party passed a resolution asking that self-government for aboriginal peoples be expressly acknowledged in the Constitution.

The Liberal Government headed by my predecessor, Mr. Trudeau, had also acknowledged this right. The Penner report, named after the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, which recommended working towards the inclusion of aboriginal peoples' political autonomy in the Constitution had been commissioned by the Government of Mr. Trudeau. As a result of the report this same Government had also introduced a legislative measure designed to guarantee political autonomy for Indian nations.

[English]

Aboriginal rights were included in the Constitution of 1982 along with the guarantee that those rights apply equally to men and women. There was also the recognition of the existence of rights acquired through both future and existing land claims agreements.

[Translation]

Several of these agreements have been negotiated, among other with the Cree-Naskapi of the James Bay region. The federal and provincial Governments were also committed to hold three new conferences—one in 1984, another one in 1985, and the third in March of this year 1987—with a view to reaching an agreement on this question which is of crucial importance to the native people of Canada.

In fact, the present Government is moving backwards, going back to 1982. It simply wants to start all over again. How can the present federal Government think that the aboriginal people will have faith in it? In our opinion, it is simply not satisfactory either for the native people or for the Party I represent in the House of Commons, nor can it be either for the other Members of the House.

We in the Liberal Party are in favour of a constitutional amendment which would take into account the very right, the historic and never abolished right of native people to self-government.

[English]

Our First Ministers, we believe, should show faith in the ability of the aboriginal peoples to make their own decisions. They should not take refuge in the status quo, a status quo which has served the aboriginal people so badly and in such a frustrating manner in past decades.

I believe that not only should we have an acceptable amendment enshrining the right to self-government, we must also have a commitment from the federal Government to provide the fiscal resources necessary for the effective exercise of self-government and a commitment to negotiate the necessary agreements and infrastructure.

I believe it is not too late to improve this Accord to include aboriginal peoples and, as I said when I began, northern Canadians.

The federal Government has an opportunity to lead the way in convincing all provincial Premiers to make an historic gesture and, at long last, recognize the inherent right of our original peoples to self-government and to ensure that they be welcomed fully into the Canadian family as our original citizens, worthy of our respect, worthy of the friendship of their fellow citizens from one end of this country to another.

The purpose of my brief intervention is to urge the Government to listen to what the House has to say and to support the motion that was introduced by my colleague from Oshawa. We believe the amendment process should be more flexible along the lines I have suggested for admission of the two Territories should they eventually want to become full partners in our Confederation and to put onto the agenda of the recognized Constitution, the right of our aboriginal peoples to self-government and self-determination within the Canadian Confederation.

Those are two improvements I believe that could be made without in any way sacrificing the full purpose and intent of the constitutional Accord which, after all, is to bring Quebec fully into our Confederation politically, psychologically and emotionally. I believe that it merits the sincere and deep consideration of every Member of this House and, if we can look across the country, of members of our provincial legislatures who will have a duty, as we do, to seek improvements to this historic Accord.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and ask him for his opinion, and I mean this in a totally non-partisan manner. British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Newfoundland came into Confederation without the unanimous consent or the consent of a number of provinces. I would like his view, and I mean this quite sincerely, on why it would be necessary at all to have even the consent of seven provinces if a Territory of Canada requests admission into Confederation as a province. Would he agree that that is an item of business between the federal Government and that Territory and no one else?

• (1710)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I can say to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan, whom I have known for a long time, that while I recited the fact that historically the admission of a new province had been a bilateral matter between the then territorial concern and the federal Government or the self-governing dominion of Newfoundland, within the context of the 1982 Accord we had moved on to a more collective style of confederation. I would be satisfied if the seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population would be able to pronounce themselves upon the admission of either Territory. I think the necessary flexibility would exist and the chances of either Territory becoming a province would be enhanced as a result.

Since the 1982 Accord, we have had an amending formula that we did not have before. When Newfoundland, the last province brought into Confederation, was brought in, there was no definition by the Supreme Court of Canada nor by the British North America Act as to what the amending process was. I would be satisfied with the 1982 arrangement which would be flexible enough to obtain what northerners are seeking.

Mr. Benjamin: But seven provinces can stop it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not want to bind either leader of either Territory, but it is my understanding, after talking to each of them, that the arrangement I have put forward would be satisfactory to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, we will go on to debate.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to speak today. I would like to review the progress the Government has made in promoting the political development of the Northwest Territories and Yukon. Self-government and political development in the north has been one of the most important foundations of the policy the Government has followed since its election. A great deal of progress has been made in transferring powers, programs and responsibilities of a type normally exercised by provincial Governments from the federal Government to the territorial Governments in the Northwest Territories and Yukon. The process is continuing and will continue to receive our unreserved support.

Our commitment to this course of action is based upon both principle and practicality. It is our belief that those providing public services should be as close as possible to the people being served. A better understanding of local conditions, a sensitivity to local aspirations and hence more accountability and improved services thus becomes possible.

I would like to outline some of the measures the Government has taken in support of northern political development. To begin with, formula financing for the territorial Governments was introduced in 1985. Under this system, about two-thirds of the funds required by the territorial Governments for the provision of public services are provided in the form of grants. In the current year, the Northwest Territories will receive $465 million and the Yukon $155 million under formula financing.

Before formula financing was introduced, grants were negotiated on an annual basis between the two levels of Government. This was a short-term approach that made long-term planning difficult and created some tensions between the federal Government and its territorial counterparts. Territorial Governments can now plan ahead with a predictable cash flow.

Consistent with its approach to financing arrangements, the federal Government has made extensive progress in transferring specific programs to the territorial Governments. The transfer of the Northern Canada Power Commission to the Yukon was completed within the established target date of April 1 of this year. Discussions have also been approved with the Northwest Territories concerning the transfer of the NCPC. Responsibility for forest management in the Northwest Territories has also been transferred involving the transfer of about $24 million to the territorial Government from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Nursing stations on Baffin Island were transferred to the Territories and similar transfers in the Keewatin, Central Arctic and Mackenzie regions are scheduled to occur early next year. Considerable progress has also been made in discussions concerning the transfer of health services in the Yukon. Discussions are also under way between the Yukon Government and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans on the transfer of responsibility for the management of inland fisheries.

The timing, conditions and nature of such transfers are developed together with territorial Governments and reflect territorial priorities. At the same time, such transfers must take account of the particular concerns of aboriginal groups, especially insofar as such transfers may affect land claims matters. Consultation with aboriginal groups is thus an important requirement in the transfer or devolution process and is fully supported by the federal Government.

The settlement of claims arising from aboriginal title in the Northwest Territories and Yukon is intimately linked to the processes of northern political development. By establishing certainty in relation to the ownership of land and resources, the settlement of comprehensive land claims will create a more favourable climate for investment and development, thus strengthening the economic basis which must provide the foundation for political development and self-government.

Further, the development of a constitutional framework through which aboriginal groups can participate in the management of wildlife and secure a say in environmental management more generally requires the participation of territorial Governments to arrive at arrangements for the participation of claimant groups in institutions of public Government. Thus, one of the greatest challenges for the federal Government, the territorial Governments and claimant groups in the north is the development of institutions and structures of public administration that accommodate the interests of aboriginal people, are accountable to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory and are responsive to the needs of all northerners.

Settlement of comprehensive land claims is a personal priority of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and of the Government. In this regard, last year the Minister secured the approval of Cabinet for a revised comprehensive land claims policy that took account of many of the concerns over the old policy voiced by aboriginal groups.

Under the revised policy, the old practice of extinguishing in a blanket fashion all aboriginal rights, titles and interests is discontinued. The scope of comprehensive land claims negotiations includes a broader range of self-government matters. There is clear recognition of the aboriginal interest in marine areas, a matter of great concern to the Inuit in particular. Resource revenue-sharing arrangements may be negotiated to provide to claims a percentage of the federal Government's share of resource revenues. The revised policy will, together with other steps taken for the better management of the negotiating process, greatly facilitate comprehensive claims negotiations. We may expect some real progress in northern comprehensive claims over the next two years.

Of course, aboriginal people have insisted that for their aspirations to be fully met, there must be the negotiation of new political arrangements as well as the settlement of their interests in lands and resources. The process of claims settlement and of northern political development are thus intimately related.

In this regard, the Inuit of the central and eastern Arctic have for the past several years advocated the division of the Northwest Territories to create a new eastern territory, Nunavut, in recognition of its distinct linguistic, cultural, geographic and economic status. A plebiscite conducted by the territorial Government in 1982 showed an over-all level of support of 56 per cent of residents of the Northwest Territories for the division of the Territories with the support for this division especially strong in the Inuit communities.

• (1720)

The Legislative Assembly of the N.W.T. subsequently set up a constitutional alliance, which is organized in two forums—the Nunavut Constitutional Forum and the Western Constitutional Forum—with participation by aboriginal organizations. In February of 1985, the then Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development affirmed his support for division, provided that a territorial consensus could be developed on the issues of a boundary, the location of administrative centres and the distribution of powers between local, regional and territorial levels of Government. To assist in the development of this consensus, the Government provided $4.4 million to the constitutional alliance. A great deal of progress has been made by the two forums that make up the alliance, culminating in the negotiation of a "boundary and constitutional agreement for the implementation of division of the Northwest Territories", signed in Iqaluit on January 15 of this year.

There has been some disappointment that the failure to resolve some claims-related matters related to the boundary proposed in the Iqaluit Agreement has not led to the referendum on division anticipated for the spring of this year. There have also been suggestions the federal Government should intervene directly to settle this matter. But it is northerners who will have to live with the decisions taken, and it is they who must resolve these questions. Matters like the establishment of a new territory and the determination of its boundaries are necessarily complex and involve many careful considerations. Some set-backs are inevitable in such a process. Personally, I am very impressed by the way northerners have approached this issue and the progress they have made. The federal Government will continue to support the principle of northern decision-making in this crucial area of concern to the future of the Northwest Territories.

Northern political development is important to all Canadians because it is linked to the key issue of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. Hon. Members may recall that in September, 1985, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced a strong package of federal actions aimed at strengthening Canadian sovereignty in our northern regions. These actions included legal adoption of straight borderlines around the perimeter of the Arctic archipelago, creation of an Act dealing with Canadian offshore application, increased surveillance flights by the Canadian Armed Forces, and the construction of a polar Class 8 ice-breaker. The intention to deploy a number of nuclear submarines in northern waters reinforces these steps. But our sovereignty can also be strengthened through the day-to-day activities of Canadians working and living and establishing political institutions in our northern regions. Mr. Nick Sibbeston, the Government Leader of the Northwest Territories, has expressed this idea forcefully as follows:

> The recognition of the rights of Canadian aboriginal peoples who have traditionally dwelt in the North, the formation of a strong northern Government and the active development of the North as an integral part of the Canadian economy will affirm the sovereignty of Canada in the Arctic far more completely and effectively than any other measure.

This approach, Mr. Sibbeston said, was very much in the Canadian tradition. Not with loud statements but with quiet action. Not with conflict but with co-operation.

There are many sound reasons for this Government to continue to encourage and facilitate the move to full responsible Government in our northern Territories. Like all Canadians, northerners have the right to participate in making decisions affecting their future. Political devolution will also speed the process of economic development and renewal in the North. It will simplify the regulatory structure in the Territories, create political stability, and encourage economic development. This will help the North and benefit all Canadians.

Finally, political development will help to assert the sovereignty of Canadians over our vast lands north of the 60th parallel.

This Government will continue to work with territorial Governments, native groups and northern citizens to ensure that the orderly political devolution now in progress proceeds to its logical conclusion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate, particularly because I was not sure I would get the chance. I want to outline why we have chosen to support this Accord and at the same time work to keep open the possibility of improvements. I want to do this for my constituents and those other Canadians who I know continue to have a lot of questions about the so-called Meech Lake Accord. I know the intervention by former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau raised a lot of questions about the Accord. Certainly, after my own first reading of it I had a lot of questions. I have taken the time to examine the Accord in detail and consult with others, so I want to outline my views.

Up until now there have been some extreme views put forward in the public debate on the Accord. On the one hand, there is the kind of standard government line, the Brian Mulroney hyperbole.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Order!

Mr. Keeper: Excuse me. I will not mention the name of the gentleman.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Try Prime Minister.

Mr. Keeper: I respect the rules of the House. I was referring to the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Foster: What is his name?

Mr. Keeper: He is the gentleman who has been Prime Minister for a short period of time and will be for another year or so. After that the people will judge.

He says the deal he and the 10 Premiers cooked up overnight will result in harmony in the Canadian nation. This is an end to the conflict between federal and provincial Governments. From now on everything is going to be sweetness and light. Premier and Prime Minister will walk smiling, hand in hand, arm in arm. That is the kind of vision he presents. It is a Pollyannaish view and belies much of the reality of Canadian politics and the sociology of Canada. We have strong regional interests and a decentralized federation in which the provinces have considerable power and influence. When they feel they have to speak up for their people, they speak up strongly, and you are bound to have real differences between federal and provincial Governments.

Another view is that the Accord is a complete disaster for Canada. Somehow the agreement worked out at Meech Lake and in the Langevin Building is the end of an effective and powerful federal Government. From now on federal Governments will have their hands tied behind their backs. They will be impotent and unable to respond to the needs of ordinary Canadians. They will be unable to bring about the kind of national programs people need. The view is that we have abandoned the vision of one Canada and a common citizenship from sea to sea. The view is that there will be no more national programs. Progress towards a bilingual nation has been stopped in its tracks. That is a disastrous scenario regarding the Meech Lake Accord which, upon reflection, I do not share.

Is there an alternative to those two views? I think it is possible to take a much more studied and balanced view of the constitutional Accord. I think it is important to have a more realistic view.

• (1730)

I want to focus in on a key element of the Accord which has concerned me, that being federal spending power. There is an interesting clause in the Accord which says that provinces will have the right to opt out of federal programs if they choose to put in place a compatible program. We will have national programs out of which the provinces can opt out. They can receive federal dollars to establish their own programs.

That is a key element of the Accord. I want to be sure that with this clause in the Constitution we can still create new national programs which will serve the needs of ordinary Canadians. We in this Party have a long and proud history of fighting for the social needs of Canadians. It was through the efforts of our predecessors in this Party that the medicare program came to be. The national pension programs are dear to our hearts. It is important that the capacity of the federal Government to initiate remains.

I took the time not only to read the words in the document but also to consult with people who have negotiated between the federal and provincial Governments. I asked them whether they thought we could still establish national programs such as a day care program. I took the time to speak to constitutional lawyers who have a handle on the legal aspects of the Constitution.

I must be frank and say that I got quite a variety of points of view. You get different points of view from different experts but in the final analysis, as an elected representative, one must reflect on all the data and make a judgment. I made an evaluation of this clause.

I think that this clause fundamentally writes in constitutional language that which has become the constitutional practice in the country. That is, when a federal Government chooses to establish a social program it will sit down with the provinces and negotiate the program. That is fundamentally what has happened in this country. The federal Government has not unilaterally established new programs and imposed them upon the provinces regardless of what the provinces said.

In the past, provinces have had a say in the way in which programs were developed. The extent to which they have had a say varied depending upon their financial capacity. The influence of the federal Government results from the fact that it was willing to put money on the table to establish new programs. Therefore, a province such as Ontario could be much more independent in its point of view. It could tell the federal Government to keep its money, that it is not interested in what the federal Government was proposing.

However, provinces like Manitoba or the maritime provinces which do not have the same kind of revenue need federal dollars and will be more inclined to negotiate to have the needs of their people met. Such underlying sociological realities will continue to affect constitutional negotiations for the establishment of new programs.

Fundamentally, the effectiveness of federal spending power to create new programs will remain. In the past, the federal Government had the spending power and the provincial Governments had the jurisdiction. The two bodies sat down together and negotiated to create a national program. In the future the federal Government will have a constitutional right to establish national objectives and the provinces will be asserting their right to establish standards for programs within their areas of jurisdiction. There will still be a process of negotiation to establish new national programs.

I contend that nothing fundamental has changed with the Accord. It is still possible to create new national programs and it still must be done through negotiation. We have written into the Constitution that which has been the practice over the last few years.

I think things will depend upon the quality of leadership in the country. If we elect political Parties which are committed to establishing programs that will meet basic human needs and which follow through on those commitments when elected, we will have good national programs. They will, of course, have to be negotiated with the provincial Government. While some provincial Governments may be able to hold out and weaken a program in some cases, other provincial Governments will be creative and find ways to improve programs.

I would like to make a point about the positive aspects of this Accord and another about how the Accord could be improved. We have established that the Accord does not make this country ungovernable, that we can still, with good political leadership, establish national programs. One of the advantages of the Accord is that it completes the circle, with Quebec signing the Canadian Constitution. In addition to that, it demonstrates to Canadians who live in Quebec that people across Canada have opened the door to them. Provincial leaders from across Canada have devised an Accord which makes room for Quebec in the Canadian Constitution. There has, therefore, been an opening of spirit to Quebec.

The Accord also recognizes the sociological reality that Quebec is unique, that the majority of its population speaks the French language. In this country we must celebrate our differences, we must recognize that our differences add to the value of our culture. We must do this while recognizing that we have a common Canadian citizenship of which we are proud.

My final point is that this Accord can be improved. The Premiers have said that the amending requirements of the Accord, such as the unanimity principle, do not put constitutional change in a strait-jacket. Let us call upon the Premiers to demonstrate that. If that is true for the future, it must also be true for the present. After we have had public hearings on the Accord, the Premiers can get back together and improve the Accord in ways in which Canadians have identified.

• (1740)

Parliament will be holding hearings on this Accord and unless they are to be viewed as a complete farce, the Premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must be prepared to consider any change to the Accord on which a consensus develops in the country. Aboriginal rights and self-government are issues to be considered.

The Premiers met on four occasions to discuss aboriginal self-government, with no results. The final meeting broke early in the afternoon with the Premiers tearfully saying they tried their best, but with no results. However, a few weeks later they met to discuss the Province of Quebec. Obviously, Quebec is an entity in this country with much more political clout, and the Premiers stayed to negotiate seriously and demonstrate a commitment to meet all night in order to produce results. I ask them to show the same kind of commitment to aboriginal people in this country that they have just shown to the people in Quebec.

That is how the Accord can be improved, by building upon the consensus that the Prime Minister and the Premiers have been developing through this Accord. I call upon the Prime Minister and the Premiers to be open to suggestions made by Canadians who appear before the parliamentary committee. Canadians will have a greater opportunity in the weeks to come to examine the Accord in more detail. They may discover weaknesses in the Accord that are not yet apparent and which the Prime Minister and Premiers must be ready to correct.

The Accord can be improved by identifying and correcting the weaknesses. One immediate improvement to the Accord would be to make a serious commitment to address the question of aboriginal self-government.

Parliamentary hearings can be creative. We have heard a criticism that the lists of Senate and Supreme Court appointees that the provinces will present to the federal Government will tie its hands or make the appointments of Supreme Court justices secret. Perhaps parliamentary hearings could be conducted before the Prime Minister approves the appointment of a Supreme Court justice.

Changes in the rules of the House have allowed Order in Council appointments to be examined by a parliamentary committee. Rather than conducting such a hearing after the appointment, perhaps it could take place before the Prime Minister approves the appointment of a Supreme Court judge on the recommendation of the province. Such hearings could ensure the input of Canadians.

Perhaps such input to this Accord would encourage Canadians to make positive suggestions rather than simply to try to scuttle the Accord.

The Accord provides an open door for Quebec to enter the constitutional family. It leaves with the federal Government the capacity to establish new national programs such as child care. It is important to improve this Accord, and I believe a good beginning would be to take the strong initiative in the area of aboriginal self-government. We must remain open to the suggestions of Canadians so that the hearings do not become a farce.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt these proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9). The question is on the motion of Mr. Broadbent.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent), which was negatived on the following division:

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REINSTATEMENT

The House resumed from Friday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House supports, in principle, the reinstatement of capital punishment and directs that a special committee on reinstatement, composed of 15 members, be established, hold hearings and make its final report to the House no later than three (3) months following the adoption of this motion, such report to provide recommendations on:

(a) which offence or offences should carry the death penalty, and in what circumstances;

(b) which method or methods should be used to carry out the penalty of death, and in what circumstances;

That, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), this special committee be hereby appointed as a committee to prepare and bring in a bill no later than three months following the adoption of this motion, founded on the committee's recommendations on (a) and (b) above; such a bill shall be the object of a separate and distinct report of the special committee, and such a report shall be its final report;

That such bill, when reported from such special Committee to the House, be deemed pursuant to Standing Order 107(1) to have been introduced and stand on the Order Paper, in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business"; and that, when the said bill has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Legislative Committee;

That the Striking Committee be empowered to name the Members of the special committee, provided that once the Striking Committee report is laid upon the Table, it shall be deemed concurred in;

That the special committee have the power to sit while the House is sitting and during periods when the House stands adjourned;

That the special committee be empowered to report from time to time and send for persons and papers, and to print such papers and evidence from time to time as may be ordered by the committee and to retain the services of expert, technical, professional and clerical staff;

That the special committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the committee;

That a quorum of the special committee be eight (8) members for any vote, resolution or other decision; and that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive evidence and authorize the printing thereof whenever six (6) members are present;

That any substitution of membership on the special committee be made pursuant to Standing Order 94(4); and

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the special committee is ready to issue its final report and the said bill, the special committee shall present its report and the bill to the House by filing them with the Clerk of the House provided that the report shall then be deemed to have been laid upon the Table, and the bill shall then be deemed, pursuant to Standing Order 107(1), to have been introduced at the first sitting of the House thereafter and to stand on the Order Paper in the name of the special committee chairman, for first reading at the next sitting of the House; and that subsequent House stages of the bill be considered under "Government Orders", with the bill standing under the heading "Government Business".

and on the amendment of Mr. Robinson (p.5331).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Mr. Robinson moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" in line 1 up to and including the word "that" in line 2 and the words "on reinstatement" in line 3 in the first paragraph.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that Your Honour would find agreement in the House to treat this vote as a free vote as we did last week and that the count would start in the front row of the government benches and then go to the other side to have the same thing done on the opposite benches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House in agreement that the division be taken by rows?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will then proceed as follows: As is customary, Hon. Members in favour of the amendment will be asked to indicate their position first, followed by Hon. Members who are opposed.

I will ask all Members in the first row to my right who are in favour of the amendment to rise together, whereupon their names will be called by a Clerk, beginning with the Hon. Member seated closest to the Chair. When the name of a Member in the row has been called and recorded, that Member will resume his or her seat.

When the taking of the names of Hon. Members in the first row to my right has been completed, I will ask Members in the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows on my right to proceed in a similar manner.

I will then ask Members in the first row to my left, regardless of their Party affiliation, who are in favour of the amendment to rise and remain standing until their names have been called. We will carry on similarly with other rows on my left.

Once the votes of Hon. Members supporting the amendment have been completed in this manner, I will then invite Hon. Members in the first row to my right who are opposed to the amendment to rise. I will proceed similarly through the remaining rows to my right and follow the same procedure for Hon. Members to my left.

Order, please. It has been a long day. This is the first time that this type of voting procedure has taken place—

Some Hon. Members: It is the second time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is the second time, but I was not here the first time.

It bears repetition that the taking of names of Hon. Members in every row will begin with the Hon. Members seated closest to the Chair and will continue consecutively to the far end of the row. This will be so to my right, regardless of rank. It will also be so to my left, regardless of rank or Party affiliation. The question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Robinson), which was negatived on the following division:

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, as Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Third Report of this Committee. In accordance with Standing Order 99(2), the Committee requests that the Government table a comprehensive response within the next 150 days.

Mr. Speaker, the report recommends that a First Ministers' conference should be held next year on obstacles to minority language instruction in Canada. The report points out that most provincial legislatures have yet to conform to the provisions on minority language education rights in the Constitution.

[English]

Another recommendation requests that the issue of the lack of post-secondary education in French outside Quebec be added to the agenda of the national forum on education scheduled for October in Saskatoon.

Finally the report recommends that the Bill to amend the Official Languages Act—be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present, commensurate with Standing Order 106, petitions from Kamloops, Penticton, Kelowna, Oliver, Smithers, Cranbrook, Surrey, Vancouver, Richmond, Burnaby, Lillooet, Victoria, Tofino and Port Coquitlam.

The petitioners are concerned about the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides proven to have had deleterious effects on human health. The petitioners are also concerned that these chemicals produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms, soil and water. They feel that these chemicals have in past years been registered and approved as safe for various uses and that new chemicals are constantly being approved under the same guidelines as the new ones that have been proven deleterious.

The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant derived pesticides.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 124, 125 and 126.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—LEGAL COSTS

Question No. 124—Mr. Murphy:

1. From January 1, 1986 to March 1, 1987, did the Cape Breton Development Corporation incur legal costs related to labour relations and, if so (a) what were they (b) what legal firms and lawyers represented the corporation in these cases?

2. For the same period, was the corporation involved in any arbitration cases and, if so, what legal firms and lawyers represented the corporation in these cases?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. (a) From January 1, 1986 to March 1, 1987, the Cape Breton Development Corporation incurred legal costs for the following:

(i) cases brought by various unions before the Canada Labour Relations Board seeking extension of representation rights for certain employee classifications: cost of $54,792.48;

(ii) action brought by the Cape Breton Development Corporation with regard to illegal work stoppages: cost of $4,413.76;

(iii) actions brought by the Cape Breton Development Corporation under Section 118 of the Canada Labour Code to cause consolidation of various bargaining units: cost of $9,084.08.

(b) In each of these actions, the Cape Breton Development Corporation was represented by the legal firm of McInnes, Cooper and Robertson.

2. Yes, and the Cape Breton Development Corporation was represented by the legal firm of McInnes, Cooper and Robertson.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—CONTRACTUAL COMMITMENTS

Question No. 125—Mr. Murphy:

In 1986, was the Cape Breton Development Corporation able to meet all of its contractual commitments to supply coal and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): During the fiscal year 1986/87, the Cape Breton Development Corporation was not able to meet 86,975 tonnes of contractual commitments due to the unavailability of the right quality coal. Geological conditions at the Lingan colliery were the main reason for this shortfall.

(in tonnes)	Thyssen Carbometals Co. (New York)	O.A. Mueller (Germany)
Contract	150,000	120,000
Actual Shipment	100,543	92,482
Shortage	49,457	27,518

In addition, the Cape Breton Development Corporation was unable to ship some 60,000 tonnes of coal to Ciment Indépendant du Québec, which could not take the full contracted amount of 120,000 tonnes because of a strike at the cement plant.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—MINE DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 126—Mr. Murphy:

For each of the next five years, what is the Cape Breton Development Corporation's plans for mine development?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): The Cape Breton Development Corporation plans to have three collieries operating during each of the next five years, these being: Lingan, Prince and Phalen, the latter which became operational in May, 1987.

Current international market conditions of coal oversupply and declining prices make further expansion plans not feasible at this time. A second access tunnel was completed at Donkin-Morien in February, 1987, and the tunnels will be maintained for future access as required. The high sulphur content will also make this coal resource quite difficult to market.

Substantial on-going capital funds of between $29 to $44 million will be invested in each of the next five years to maintain the operating capacity of the existing three collieries and other surface infrastructure.

Should market conditions improve, the Cape Breton Development Corporation could consider increasing the production capacity of its existing collieries or, in the longer-term, bringing another colliery into production such as Donkin-Morien.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ACTUARIAL VALUATIONS

Question No. 122—Mr. Gauthier:

1. From 1952 to the present (a) what has been the annual real rate of interest assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA), the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

2. For the same years (a) what has been the annual real rate of salary increases resulting from salary revisions assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

3. For the same years (a) what has been the average of retirement assumed in the actuarial valuations that have been carried out of the PSSA (b) what has been the basis of these assumptions (c) what have been the financial consequences, in actuarial terms, of any changes made in the assumption of this factor?

4. As of March 31, 1987, what is the actuarial surplus that would be realized by the PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA if the assumption changes mentioned in Parts 1 to 3 had not been made?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT ADJUSTMENTS (PENSION PAYMENTS) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that: Bill C-50, An Act respecting the treatment of pension payments in determining certain unemployment insurance benefit entitlements and to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this morning on second reading of Bill C-50, which concerns amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

This Bill, which deals with pension income and separation payments for the purposes of unemployment insurance, contains three important amendments for the Canadian workers described therein.

Unemployment Insurance

As Hon. Members are aware, on April 5, 1987, new regulations regarding pension income and separation payments came into effect.

The first amendment contained in Bill C-50 will make the effect of the amendments concerning pensions retroactive to January 5, 1986.

Since January 5, 1986, pension income arising from employment, paid either in a lump sum or in regular payments, is considered to be remuneration for the purposes of unemployment insurance.

Bill C-50 will enable workers whose benefit period is based on subsequent employment, whether it started before or after January 5, 1986, to have their pension income arising from their previous employment no longer considered as earnings for the purposes of unemployment insurance.

Madam Speaker, this Government has always held the firm conviction that people who retire should not consider unemployment insurance as an additional source of income.

However, a distinction must be made between people who retire permanently and those who retire in order to start a new career. The amendments that came into effect on April 5, 1987, make that distinction. They ensure that individuals who retire and start a new career are treated fairly and equitably, since they continue to be part of the labour force.

[English]

This Bill will allow the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to apply the recent April 5 change on subsequent employment retroactively to January 5, 1986. It will allow for full UI benefits to be paid to claimants receiving a pension if their claim was based on employment obtained after the start of the pension.

[Translation]

The House will also be asked to consider another major amendment under which the eligibility of people who filed their unemployment insurance applications before January 5, 1986 would be assessed in accordance with the former regulations.

Hon. Members will recall that my December 5, 1986 statement had to do with the Government's conclusion that some people claimed they had been given inaccurate information about the implementation of the January 5, 1986 pension income provisions. To ensure fairness in the application of the January 5 measures, this Bill makes a clear distinction with respect to pension income handling before or after the January 5 legislative provisions.

The rule is very simple: the eligibility of all those who applied for unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986—those who filed their application when the old regulations were in effect—will be determined on the basis of the old regulations. In each case the workers involved will receive from the UIC a refund equal to the deductions made with respect to their pension income.

[English]

The last change which is included in Bill C-50 aims at maintaining the right to benefits for those claimants whose separation payments have delayed the start of a claim for UI. Under the present regulations, separation payments can delay the start of a claim and can, in certain cases, reduce the number of insurable weeks that CEIC counts to establish a claim for benefits.

The passage of Bill C-50 will allow the qualifying period or the benefit period to be extended by the same number of weeks represented by the separation payment up to a maximum of 104 weeks. This will ensure that most people do not lose the protection of the UI Program.

[Translation]

In my judgment, Madam Speaker, Bill C-50 deserves the consideration of all Hon. Members. The proposed measures will have a direct impact on a good many Canadians. These amendments show that the Government is intent on treating all workers with fairness.

Bill C-50 must be adopted as soon as possible. The sooner the House supports this measure, the sooner the Employment and Immigration Commission will be in a position to make payments to all those who are covered under these legislative provisions.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not have very much to say about this Bill and with good reason. There is not very much good to be said about it. This Bill should not have been necessary in the first place and it was only required because last year before January 5, 1986, the Government decided, cruelly and unfairly, to cut the unemployment insurance benefits of thousands and thousands of pre-retired pensioners. So the Minister comes to the House today with the Bill and does not have very much to say because there is not much good to be said for it.

At least the Government has finally put Bill C-50 before this House for debate. As you know, the Bill was tabled for consideration in Parliament on April 1 of this year but was not called until today, more than two months later, even though the Government has the right to call Bills whenever it wishes. The Government has the power to set the business of the House. If it had placed a high priority on this matter it could have been called immediately after April 1. That was not done. As a matter of fact, we only heard from the Minister and the Deputy House Leader a couple of weeks ago when they approached us in order to deal with the Bill quickly in one day after delaying it since April 1.

What is Bill C-50 all about? I think it is important to repeat the story. On January 5, 1986, the Government cut unemployment insurance benefits of all those who were forced with little choice into early retirement and reduced pensions. Some of those people were military personnel who are required to retire in their 40s. Many others are in their early 50s with homes to maintain and children in university. While these individuals have pre-retirement pensions, many want and need to work. As required by the Unemployment Insurance Act they are ready and willing to work, otherwise they would not be eligible.

Here we have approximately 50,000 Canadians who faithfully paid their unemployment insurance contributions for years and were laid off before their official retirement age. They still want to work but they have unfairly and retroactively had their benefits cut. In the middle of the game the rules were changed. Many of these people accepted a reduced early retirement pension with the understanding that they would receive unemployment insurance until they found a new job, or for at least a year. Others counted on it to support themselves and their families until they qualified for Old Age Security at age 65.

Some employers used this system, smaller pre-retirement pensions combined with unemployment insurance, to ease older workers out in order to hire younger workers in their place. Because of the Government's action this is not possible. The Government expresses great concern about youth unemployment but its actions are a disincentive to bringing in young people to replace those older pre-retirees.

These cuts in unemployment insurance did not apply to those who took early retirement but received retirement income from stocks, bonds, registered retirement savings plans, rents or interests. In this way the measures are discriminatory. They were a cheap, cruel way of attempting to reduce the deficit on the backs of the unemployed.

The Government said to a group of pre-retired pensioners,"We are going to reduce your unemployment insurance because you have been laid off before age 65 and you are receiving a pre-retirement pension". However, others who may have taken early retirement in order to go to another job and are sustaining themselves not by a pre-retirement pension but through rents or interest from stocks or bonds, or an RRSP, are not touched in any way whatsoever. They still get their full unemployment insurance benefits.

We maintain that not only were these cuts in unemployment insurance against pre-retirement pensioners unfair, cruel and discriminatory, but also illegal. They were introduced by the Government by means of regulation, administrative action, not by a Bill in this House. We have argued that for a long time. We asked the Government to explain how it could take away benefits, reduce benefits provided for in the Unemployment Insurance Act, without amending the Act. As I said before, we had people who were obliged to pay contributions over the years, including employers, by virtue of the Act, and then the Government comes along in the dark of the night and introduces regulations to cut the benefits. That seems to me and many other learned lawyers to be illegal.

Once it was done we asked the Government to correct it in other ways. However, we want to put on record again that we believe this whole shameful mess was illegal in the first place.

Once it was announced more than a year ago we in Parliament strongly objected and asked that these measures be withdrawn. Nothing was forthcoming. The former Minister consistently refused to make any change or budge one inch. She would not agree that there was anything wrong with these cuts which, as I say, were introduced in the middle of the game when the rules had already been established.

Not only did we object but many associations of retired Canadians objected as well, associations of retired military personnel, retired RCMP personnel, and others from the public and private sectors. They all strongly objected. They held demonstrations on Parliament Hill. I believe we had at least three demonstrations. There were mass meetings in Montreal, Victoria, Halifax and other parts of the country. Not only did those associations and opposition Members of Parliament object, but very significantly, at the Government's economic summit conference in March of 1985, the only petition which carried—and by the way, everyone there had been invited by the Government—was ignored by the Government. Eighty of the 136 participants at the conference signed the petition which asked the Government to withdraw the measures. The Government called these people together in a conference to discuss certain economic and social questions, and the only thing the conference decided upon was ignored by the Government.

Later on we had the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council with respect to older workers. The former Minister appointed that committee to advise her on programs and policies with respect to older workers. In August of 1985 the committee presented its report entitled Older Workers, an Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market. What did it say? It said the Government should not proceed with the announced changes in the unemployment insurance regulations scheduled to take place in January of 1986 regarding the identification of pensioners' income for the period immediately following layoff until the commission of inquiry on unemployment insurance has reviewed the issue and made recommendations.

• (1130)

The recommendation of the committee with regard to older workers was also ignored by the Government. In the interim we asked questions of the former Minister of Employment and Immigration and, after her, of the new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). We gave new examples of the hardship this was causing. A retired pensioner in the West committed suicide because he could no longer make ends meet. He was so struck by the harshness of this measure that he took his life. That very sad case was put on the record by one of my colleagues.

We continued to ask that this measure be rescinded, but we were refused. The answer given by the Minister on all occasions was that no changes could be made because they were awaiting the recommendations of the Forget Commission. That answer was repeated over and over again.

Finally, on December 3, 1986, the Forget Commission reported and in a unanimous recommendation said that the current treatment of pension income should be rescinded with the effective date of January 5, 1986. The report went on to say that if such a policy was implemented it should be implemented on January 1, 1989. In other words, a lot of lead time should be given and it should not affect in any way those who had entered into early retirement schemes without knowing that this would happen.

In addition to the petitions, the meetings, the lobbying carried on by many associations, and the many questions put in this House, three groups set up by the Government to advise it with respect to older workers made recommendations against these cuts and asked that they be rescinded. Yet the Government refused on all occasions.

The issue did not die. These people did not give up. They continued to badger, push, pull and embarrass the Government until finally, under the new Minister, the Government agreed early this year to make some kind of reimbursement, but still on a discriminatory basis. The Government finally decided that it would reimburse those who had made their application for unemployment insurance before January 5, 1986. For those who applied after that date there is a nonsense formula.

The Government is saying that the cuts for them will be maintained because they applied after January 5, 1986, but if they get a second job and are laid off from it their pre-retirement pension will no longer be counted against them and their contributions on the previous job will count. They will get unemployment insurance at the full rate after being laid off from the second job.

That is a harsh and unacceptable provision. Many of these people are in their late fifties or early sixties and have no chance of getting a second job. If they live in the greater Toronto area or an area of economic growth they might be able to find a job, but a large number of these people live in Atlantic Canada or other slow growth economic regions. They are like myself and many other Members in this House in that they are in their fifties and early sixties and are still capable of working. However, we know that it is very difficult for people to get jobs at that stage of life. Because these people applied after January 5, 1986, they are subject to this cruel and harsh treatment.

In the last few days when the public knew that this Bill was coming forward today I received many calls from individuals who had been pre-retired before January 5, 1986. When they went to the Unemployment Insurance Commission to make their claims they were discouraged from doing so. The officials said there was no use in making a claim because they would not get anything anyway. They delayed making their claims until after January 5, although they could have done so before, because they did not have any expectation of what the Government might do. Later they found out that because they delayed making their claims they are subject to the ridiculous proposal of having to get a second job and being laid off again. That is a very discriminatory proposal.

The Unemployment Insurance Act has always provided that while you work you pay contributions, and when you are laid off or pre-retired you get benefits. There was never any question of subjecting people to the requirement of a second job before they received benefits. This is a post-facto sort of fandangled method to get the Government out of the hole. It does not really get the Government out of the hole at all and it is unfair and discriminatory. To draw such a cut-off line between one group of pre-retirement pensioners and another is completely unacceptable.

The Government did not come to this position easily. When the Government first announced the policy, it said that it would reimburse those who applied before January 5, 1986, but only if they proved that they were misled by an official of the Department. There was a lot of protest against that and the Government backed down and finally came forward with the Bill we have today.

It is really amusing that the Government is now trying to blame the Opposition for this entire mess. Does the Government really think the public is that stupid? The Government implemented these cuts unfairly and harshly and maintained them for over a year. Finally, under pressure from the public and many groups, it backed down one-quarter of the way and then half way. That is where we stand now. Now the Government is blaming us for the fact that these people do not have their money. These people do not have their money because these cuts, which should never have been made, were made by the Government.

Bill C-50 provides for the full reimbursement of those who applied for UI before January 5. We support that, but I warn pensioners to watch out because the Government may still have some tricks up its sleeve to cut them out. However, we do approve of that provision. The Bill also contains the provision for no reimbursement of those who applied after January 5 unless they get a second job and are laid off again. We think that is discriminatory, unfair and unacceptable. We cannot support that.

Finally, there are provisions in the Bill which deal with severance pay. The Government also decided to cut back on unemployment insurance for those who got severance pay although that severance pay was necessary to relocate or set up in a new job or business. The Government of Ontario did not agree with that and passed provincial legislation to overcome the federal proposal. Through Bill C-50 the federal Government is implementing measures to render null and void that which the Ontario Government tried to do to protect certain pensioners.

We asked the Government several months ago to split this Bill into two Bills, one which would include the provision for reimbursing those who applied before January 5, 1986, which we would support and pass in five minutes. We wanted the new fandangled ridiculous system to be put in a separate Bill. It should have been put in a separate Bill because it is something entirely new in the unemployment insurance system.

The Government refused to split the Bill. It would rather hold one group of pensioners hostage in order to implement something with which no one agrees. The Government has put a good measure in the Bill along with an awful measure and expects that we will vote for the awful measure in order to have the good measure implemented. That did not work. The Government would not split the Bill. We asked the Government to take administrative action to reimburse those pensioners who applied before January 5 and who were going to be reimbursed anyway. Since the Government cut them by administrative action, we asked it to reimburse them in the same fashion. However, the Government turned that down as well.

Today we are faced with a Bill in which one part is beneficial to pensioners who were originally cut but will now be reimbursed, but in which there are two other completely unacceptable parts.

Consequently, I want to move the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and by substituting therefor:

"this House declines to proceed with a measure, the principle of which is to provide discriminatory and inequitable treatment for pre-retired pensioners with regard to their right to unemployment insurance".

Let me tell the Minister that if he were to accept this amendment and redraft the Bill so that all pre-retired pensioners would be treated the same way, we would pass the Bill in 15 minutes without any debate. We would do it before ten o'clock today and pass the entire Bill. However, we cannot accept a Bill which discriminates against a group of pre-retired pensioners in this way.

The Government eventually saw the folly in the cuts it had made last year and has moved in a piecemeal fashion to withdraw that injustice. However, it has only gone halfway. Why does the Government not recognize that these cuts were entirely wrong, as suggested by the Forget Commission, the advisory council on older workers, and as recommended by the people who attended the Prime Minister's economic summit? I suggest that the Government could accept this amendment and easily redraft the Bill.

I have further amendments to put forward in Committee of the Whole if the Minister does not accept this amendment, but this could be done very quickly and the Bill redrafted so that it would be non-discriminatory toward all pre-retired pensioners. We could then pass the Bill.

If the Government decides to reintroduce these measures next year so that they become effective at a future date, we would still oppose such legislation, but at least everyone would know the rules of the game and that the measure would be put into effect.

We appeal to the Government's sense of fair play and justice not to maintain this Bill in its present form in which it treats one group of pre-retired pensioners in one way and discriminates harshly and cruelly against others.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, in the 11 years I have been in the House of Commons I have never seen a measure that has been subject to as much change as this. It is like taking three steps forward, four back, another three steps forward and five steps back.

On November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program that would affect pensions and severance pay. The Minister of Finance said that henceforth, pension income will be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes and likewise for severance pay. In the 45 years since the inception of the Unemployment Insurance Program, pension income was never so considered.

Some may ask why the Government decided to make these changes in November, 1984. The only charitable reason I can find is that the Government was newly elected and did not know what it was doing. In fact, it was in that same period that it tried to deindex old age pensions. Perhaps the Government was mesmerized and did not realize that the Unemployment Insurance Program had generated a surplus of $800 million in 1986 and 1987 and was projected to generate $1.7 billion in surplus in 1987 and 1988. Although the unemployment insurance fund was not in a deficit position, the Government made this announcement as a result of its fixation on fighting the deficit.

While it was forced to back off on deindexing, we are still faced with this announced move on unemployment insurance as far as the pensions are concerned. We in the New Democratic Party fought that move from the moment the Minister made his announcement. We launched an attack on that provision regarding the treatment of pension income as earned income.

I want to make it crystal clear to those who are watching this debate, particularly retirees in the private and public sector and in the Armed Forces, that our Party's position is based on the principle that Bill C-50 does not apply to pension income vis-a-vis earned income and earned benefits prior to 1984. It will only affect about one-third of the 50,000 early retirees who have been affected by the announced changes in November 8, 1984. Our position is that an injustice to one is an injustice to all.

The Minister may believe that he is taking the right steps and some of his colleagues in the back benches may believe that he is taking the right action, but there is absolutely no reason for him to consider making what we believe to be an iniquitous change because the Unemployment Insurance Program is generating $1.7 billion in surplus, based on present premiums. That is in addition to the $800 million generated in the fund last year.

Why is it necessary to nickel and dime people who took early retirement, in many cases to protect the jobs of younger workers? Why is it necessary to nickel and dime people who served this country in the Armed Forces, many of whom have no choice but to retire after 35 years in the services? The Government rewards them by saying they will not get the full unemployment insurance.

We believe this Bill is flawed on several grounds. It is a discriminatory Bill. One would assume that everybody who has saved for their retirement would be affected by the Government's announced changes on November 8, 1984 and by this Bill. However, that is not the case. One is only affected by this Bill if one has contributed to a pension fund in the workplace. Those who have contributed a percentage of their pay to a pension fund which has been matched by the employer are affected by this Bill. In other words, those who put money aside for retirement are affected by this legislation.

Armed Forces personnel are affected, those who have contributed to a provincial pension fund are affected, and those who have contributed to the Canada Pension Plan are affected. What if one is working in a company which offers no pension plan? If one took 7 per cent or 8 per cent of one's income every month and put it into some savings plan which would pay some sort of pension after 30 or 35 years, or if one put it into buying condominiums as an investment so that at retirement one can retire and live on the rental income, one could collect full unemployment insurance benefits and the pension would not be affected.

Large numbers of workers at Inco were encouraged to take early retirement to protect the jobs of younger workers. Because of the relationship between the leadership of the union and the company, they entered into a deal whereby in the first year of retirement the company would defer paying pension for a year, which would allow the workers to collect unemployment insurance for 49 weeks while they looked for work. After that, the pension from the company would be increased by a percentage to make up for the year which was deferred. One cannot do that in the armed services, and many other employers would not engage in that practice for their employees. So this Bill discriminates. It is illogical.

On November 8, 1984, the Minister and the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, who is now the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), took the position that pension income was earned income, and she repeated that time and time again. What does this Bill do? It sets up two classes and it says that if one gets a second job while on pension and then loses that job, one can collect unemployment insurance benefits and full pension. What happened to the principle of pension income as earned income? It went out of the window. In fact, what the Government is doing is setting up two classes. At least, it ought to be consistent. If pension is earned income, then that is what it should be. What is so magical after the second job? One is still receiving the pension income from the first job. It is absolutely ludicrous. It is stupid. What does the Government think Canadians are that they will not see through this?

I want to make crystal clear again to those who are watching, that while I have no problem with paying people their unemployment insurance based on what one part of this Bill is proposing, we cannot, in principle, accept that two-thirds of employees have to get a second job before they can collect. We cannot accept that because that is an injustice to 50,000 pensioners who were affected by this change in 1984.

We say the Bill is unfair. In many parts of the country such as Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, parts of Quebec, the Prairies and British Columbia, it is not easy for an older worker who takes an early retirement to get a second job. What the Government is saying is that if one happens to live in the Golden Horseshoe in Ontario, that is great, one would be able to collect unemployment insurance and receive one's pension because one has a second job. But in many regions of the country it is not easy for the older worker to get a second job, and so they would never collect.

We say this Bill is absolutely undemocratic. On November 8, 1984, the Minister of Finance consulted no one, neither the Minister nor the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and we discovered that when the commission appeared before the standing committee. Neither did he consult the Advisory Council of the Department of Employment and Immigration, nor Members of Parliament, nor those who have an interest in unemployment insurance. The Minister of Finance unilaterally, in his autocratic way, rose in this House and holus-bolus said: "Boom, you are gone, sacked. You got it". He must have been taking lessons from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said to the pensioners: "Zap, zap, you got it". What did he do? He amended—and this is the undemocratic part—an Act of Parliament by regulation. Parliament passed the Act which provided pensioners with their unemployment insurance and their pension income, but this Tory Government and this Minister amended that Act by regulation, which is an undemocratic principle. We in this House had no opportunity to debate those measures. I accuse this Government of being undemocratic, unfair and illogical. I can think of other things of which I can accuse the Government but this is a family show.

To rub salt in the wound, having amended an Act of Parliament by regulations, having taken away the pensioners UI benefits by regulation, what does the Minister do? He says: "Well, we cannot give it back to some of them by regulation. We have to do it by an Act of Parliament". So we have this mess of porridge called Bill C-50. People out there watching have to understand what a snivelling group are those sitting on the government side, although they are not so snivelling when it comes to their corporate friends, their buddies in high places.

We on this side of the House cannot support this Bill. The principle is flawed. I want people to understand as they watch this process that about one-third of those who are eligible will receive some money, but the fact is that two-thirds are going to be denied what is rightfully theirs. They have contributed. It is like an insurance scheme. Imagine, Madam Speaker, if you had fire insurance on your house and you paid the premiums faithfully and then the house burned down? You go to the insurance company and tell them your house burned down and you are ready to collect, and they say: "Well, just a minute now. You have $80,000 in the bank, two cars, and are earning so much in salary. Sorry, we cannot pay because you have income".

What kind of cockamammie scheme is that? What kind of a jiggery-pokery scheme is this? This is just flimflammery. It is taxation without representation, that is what it is. They have no choice but to pay the premium. Once they are working in the workforce of Canada, they have to pay, but then they will face all of these hurdles in order to collect.

• (1200)

This is a cruel Government. I want to make it clear that it is cruel, particularly with people who do not have the muscle to fight back. Across the country groups have fought against the original announcement since it was made in November, 1984. All the pension groups which have contacted me through my newsletters have indicated their opposition to Bill C-50. They are solidly together—they stand in solidarity. They have said that an injustice to one is an injustice to all. While there are some who are anxious to receive what is rightfully theirs under this Bill, there are far too many who will be denied and who will continue to be denied what is rightfully theirs in terms of unemployment insurance.

The compromise which the Government has come up with in Bill C-50 is no compromise at all. We will vote against this Bill. I want people to understand why we are voting against it. It is because in principle the Bill is flawed. It is because of that that I am now prepared to introduce an amendment.

I move:

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following:

"the House refuse to continue the studying of this Bill which:

(a) contradicts the principle that pension income is earned income and that pension is considered earnings for unemployment insurance purposes; and

(b) creates discrimination in an essential service."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has listened carefully to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The Chair realizes that the amendment is not at all related to the amendment previously moved by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Hence, at this time, the Chair cannot receive the amendment from the Hon. Member. Of course, it could be moved once we have disposed of the amendment which is already before the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, just for clarification, after we have disposed of the amendment that is before the House, will the Chair then entertain my amendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member has already spoken so someone else will have to move the amendment once we have disposed of the amendment which is being debated at the moment.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to clarify the situation. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), has been speaking to the amendment put forward by my colleague from the Liberal Party. Therefore, after we dispose of the amendment, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt will actually have an opportunity to speak again to the original motion. If he so wishes at that time he can then put his amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has effectively spoken on the amendment. Thus he could be heard again on the main motion, of course.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in debate on Bill C-50. As all Hon. Members know we will be sitting today and into the evening in order to have an opportunity to have a full discussion of the provisions of the Bill.

I would like to deal with the basic principles of what we are discussing today. That will take us back to November of 1984 when, as a Government, we came out with a policy statement which stated that, basically, all forms of income arising out of employment should be treated equally with respect to applying for unemployment insurance income. That is the basic principle that the Government has put forward, and it is our policy.

As some Hon. Members have already indicated, in November of 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced this principle he said that it would become effective as of January, 1985. In December of that year the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, having looked at the situation and having recognized that there would need to be a further transitional period because people had not had the opportunity to change their retirement plans or make the appropriate arrangements, agreed to an extension of the implementation of this provision to January 5, 1986.

Today, in recognition of some of the concerns that have arisen in the interim period we are bringing forward legislation to clarify those concerns. In particular, we will put into effect a distinction between those persons who retire and those persons who, having taken an early retirement have not actually gone out of the workforce, who then go back into the workforce, will requalify at some later date if they are unemployed and be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

The third provision of the legislation deals with the issue of severance or separation pay and provides a more equitable way of dealing with it. It enables those who have received separation pay to qualify for UI benefits under the appropriate circumstances and receive the full benefit to which they would be entitled, perhaps up to as much as 50 weeks. I know from my own experience in dealing with constituents that these measures will be very much welcomed. In fact, we know that there will be about 55,000 Canadians who will benefit to the tune of about $295 million as a result of the legislation we are putting forward today. That is why we want to get it done, so that those who will qualify can begin to receive those additional funds.

I think that the basic principle has to be clearly understood. I am not sure that it has been understood by many Canadians. It makes the distinction that all forms of income from employment, in this case including pensions that arise as a result of employment, be treated in the same way. Therefore, this income would be deducted from any eligible benefits for UI. Of course, we know that in some cases where there is a high pension that person is not eligible for UI, obviously.

We have made this important distinction. It is one which has been brought to the attention of many in British Columbia. We had a meeting not long ago in Nanaimo at which we met with a number of retirees. We certainly heard from them that in many cases the retirement they were taking was not a permanent retirement, it was an early retirement. They were actually going back into the workforce and would be contributing again to unemployment insurance. In the event that they are laid off from that job, or some other unfortunate circumstance arose, they should be eligible to collect UI. As my colleague from Nanaimo—Alberni has indicated, that is something we felt to be only fair and appropriate. So we are very pleased that the Government has come forward with that amendment.

We also recognize that there has been some confusion about the various eligibility rules. Therefore, we are making it clear that those persons who have retired and who were receiving pension income but who had applied for UI benefits prior to January 5, 1986, will have their claims dealt with under the old rules.

• (1210)

Those who applied prior to January 5, 1986 come under the old rules, and those who apply after that date will come under the new rules. Hopefully that distinction, which is being clearly made in the legislation, will clear up some of the concerns we have heard over the past year in dealing with the issue.

We recognized that some of the administrative procedures and proposals made earlier caused some confusion, so we eliminated that complexity and the potential for uneven application across the country. We brought about changes to the implementation of that January 5, 1986 ruling.

The legislation with which we are now dealing draws a very clear and simple line to ensure fairness in the transitional provisions of the regulation for early retirees. I just want to make very clear that those who applied for unemployment insurance prior to January, 1986 under the old rules will have their entitlement to benefits determined under the old rules. Equally and in a straightforward manner, those who apply for benefits after January 5, 1986 will be governed by the new provisions.

However, the principle—and we have not deviated from it—still comes back to the issue that the income one derives from employment, whether it is through wages, separation pay, or pension income, is considered income. I think most Canadians agree with the point of view that UI, for perhaps too long, was considered as something everyone got. It is not. It is a special provision under special circumstances. It was not designed to deal with those people who were retiring and leaving the workforce and had entitlement to an appropriate pension benefit from their employers.

Members will recall that on December 5, 1986, when the Minister announced his intention to modify the UI legislation dealing with pension earnings, he maintained the principle that persons who have retired should not use UI as a supplementary income. The announcement proposed that workers who took other employment after retirement and then worked long enough to requalify for UI benefits should receive the benefits without any deduction of their previous pension income. This particularly applies as we see people, perhaps increasingly, taking early retirement, in their early forties, some from the Armed Forces or police forces. They are not leaving the workforce; they are applying and going into other fields of employment. They will be treated as new entrants into the workforce in respect of UI.

With this Bill we are amending the pension regulations to permit this kind of thing as of April 5, 1987. With regard to qualifying for UI, we are making retroactive requalification back to January 5, 1986.

The changes will ensure that workers who start subsequent careers and contribute to unemployment insurance and subsequently become unemployed will be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits based upon their post-retirement employment income regardless of their previous pension income.

Returning to the issue of separation pay, again it was an issue of fairness. I have certainly dealt with particular situations which have arisen in connection with the treatment of separation payments. Members will recall that on March 31, 1985 the treatment of payments on separation for unemployment insurance purposes was changed.

There were two facets to it. Certain employer-employee agreements have sought to take advantage of what might be construed as a loophole in the wording of current UI regulations. The purpose of the amendments is to provide a clear legislative attempt to avoid these kinds of loopholes. More important, they will provide an extension for the qualifying and benefit periods when an allocation of separation payments has prevented the payment of a UI benefit or has delayed the start of a UI claim.

For example, if an allocation of separation pay delays the start of a claim by seven weeks or ten weeks, the qualifying period can then be extended by seven weeks or ten weeks. If a person received 104 weeks of separation pay, in other words two years, he or she would not be eligible to claim UI. I think it is only fair. Obviously those persons are fortunate enough to receive two years of separation pay, and if they return to the workforce at some point, we hope they would be able to find that kind of employment in the two-year period.

The legislation maintains the basic principle of keeping separate the concept of unemployment insurance from regular income. Yet it deals with what we have found to be some of the inequities and unfairness which were brought to the attention of the Minister.

I compliment both the present Minister and his predecessors because they listened very carefully to recommendations which were brought forward by members of my Party and by members of the Opposition. They listened to the concerns which were expressed across the country.

In bringing forward the recommendations and the legislation today, we are dealing with those concerns and ensuring both fairness and equity in the treatment of Canadians, while maintaining the fundamental principle that UI should not be considered a supplementary income when a person retires no matter what the circumstances.

I appreciate the co-operation and support of all Members of the House in dealing with the issue today and this evening. We can deal with consideration in committee and third reading stage so that the 55,000 Canadians who will benefit from these changes will indeed start to receive their cheques.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I have a quick question for the Hon. Member. I would be curious to know how she has responded to those people in the Armed Forces and the RCMP who, by definition, receive pre-retirement incomes and then are expected to find a job.

The Hon. Member represents a constituency in British Columbia where the economic situation has been so woefully bad in the last number of years that many people who have retired from the Armed Forces and the RCMP have been simply unable to find jobs for many months, and in some cases longer. What has she said to those people who paid into the unemployment insurance fund for their entire working lives, only to find upon retirement that they were not eligible for the benefits for which they paid together with their employers for so many years?

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my hon. colleague. I am sure that he, as have I, will have been pleased to have noted that in the recent statistics over the past week the unemployment levels in British Columbia, particularly in the Vancouver region, have dropped. It is a very encouraging signal and one we look forward to continuing over coming months as many of the economic initiatives of the Government take hold. These will be followed of course by the proposals in the western diversification plan, which I am sure will also be very important to British Columbia and the other western provinces.

In respect of the other part of the Hon. Member's question, we must again come back to the basic principle or the basic policy we have enunciated. UI is not paid to everyone. When one retires and receives a pension, one does not qualify for unemployment insurance. It is only for those who then go back into the workforce and requalify as part of their second career, second job, or whatever, and are paying back into unemployment insurance. If they should be laid off or lose that job, whatever benefits they have accrued as a result of the second job would then make them eligible for payments only related to the second job. It does not change the basic principle. When one retires and receives pension income arising out of one's employment, that pension income is considered as income and reduces one's eligibility for unemployment insurance.

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) a question about what I think is the discrimination which this Bill provides after January 5, 1986. For example, an Armed Forces person who has served the country for 25 to 30 years, receiving very very low pay in the early stages of his or her career, retires, not voluntarily, because many people are forced to retire. Their trade may no longer be useful. Armed Forces people are at a tremendous disadvantage because, having had to retire at 45 to 50, it is very difficult to find a job in the private sector in most parts of the country. I speak mainly of my own province. A more extreme example would be parts of Newfoundland and parts of Prince Edward Island where unemployment rates are exceptionally high. Areas in Newfoundland have over 35 per cent unemployment.

People of 45 to 50 years of age are at a time in their life when costs are at their highest. They have children finishing high school. Some have children in university. There is a great misconception about the size of the pensions of some of these people, who are paying mortgages and trying to educate their children. These people have paid premiums into UIC for 25 years, which is back-door taxation in its worst form, and they are told that there is no way they can qualify for UI.

I have people who have come into my office for over a year, not former Armed Forces personnel. They are young people who cannot find a job, so how do we expect those who have had to retire from the Armed Forces to find ready-made jobs? People have settled. They have planned for years and have bought houses. Some of them are in parts of the country where they cannot find another job.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that. I must have 50 letters from people who find themselves in that serious situation. I just cannot understand why any Member of the House of Commons would ever agree with that part of this Bill.

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. One has to come back to the basic principle that pension income arising out of employment is now considered deductible from UI benefits. That has been well known since November-December, 1984.

Mr. Rodriguez: You will find out in the next election.

Mrs. Collins: For two and a half years people have been able to plan on that basis and to recognize that in planning for their retirement—

An Hon. Member: They are not all the same.

Mrs. Collins: Obviously it varies. Someone who has a high pension will not be eligible for any UI.

Mr. Robinson: It may wash in Vancouver, but that does not wash in Burnaby.

Mrs. Collins: For those whose pensions are very low, my understanding is that they can still be supplemented, and I come back to what I said. For too long people thought of UI as kind of a retirement cushion. That is not what it is all about. It is there to look after people who, because of circumstances in their workplace, have been temporarily laid off for a period of time. It is to help them readjust. It is just a change in thinking—

Mr. Manly: Tory thinking.

Mrs. Collins: —that people will have to understand. I support that point of view. People will have to make their plans based on that reality.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the distinction in the Bill between those who get full reimbursement under the Bill and those who do not is based on whether they really take retirement or whether they are retired but want to work again. It seems to me the Member has not read the Bill.

Mr. Rodriguez: She does not know the Act.

Mr. Allmand: If a person were forced to retire, as my friend pointed out, and wanted to work, that person is cut back just the same. The distinction in the Bill has nothing to do with whether one wants to work or does not want to work. The distinction is whether one happens to apply after January 5 or before January 5.

Does the Hon. Member support a system where some people who retired before January 5 but through illness, by misinformation, travel or whatever were not able to make their application until after January 5, are subject to the cuts, but a colleague down the street who retired at the same time but got his application in before January 5 is fully reimbursed? That is what is in the Bill. Does the Hon. Member support that?

Mrs. Collins: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, because I know he has been involved in UI for many years, within every UI office there is always some flexibility to deal with particular situations where, for valid reasons, a person was unable to make the application on that date. As I understand it, there is that discretion.

Mr. Robinson: There is no discretion.

Mrs. Collins: It may indeed apply in this circumstance as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-50. I suggest it is important that everyone should remember why Bill C-50 was introduced in the first place. The fact that we now have a measure designed to make refunds or correct the mistakes of the Conservative Government does not in any way reflect the will of the Conservative Government nor of the Conservative Members, except for one or two.

First it must be recalled that on January 5, 1986—this was the outcome of a December 23, 1985 decision to make a Christmas gift—the Cabinet headed by the Prime Minister himself saw fit to cut off the unemployment insurance benefits to which older workers voluntarily or involuntarily opting for early retirement were entitled. For example, an older worker who lost his job because the plant shut down. He had the right to withdraw his pension plan contributions, so the Government decided to cut him off UI benefits because he was receiving pension benefits. The decision was officially made public on January 5, 1986 and we know that the ensuing wave of protests from Canadians generally and the the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, forced the Government to take cover behind the Forget Commission, waiting for advice. We also know that on December 3, 1986 the Forget Commission told the Government: You are wrong, you must rescind these regulations and reimburse older workers. On December 5, two days later, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) did admit the Conservative Government had erred and he unveiled policy changes.

Sadly enough, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration made his announcement he failed to remove all discrimination and, a few months later, he showed us a questionnaire which was more like a request that older workers in fact denounce the officials who were alleged to have misinformed them. And so it was that strong representations made by ARSAC, by the coalition and by spokesmen for retired military personnel once again forced the Government to backtrack and withdraw the questionnaire after owning up to its monumental blunder.

The end result of all this was that on March 18, 17 months later, the Government agreed that it was completely mistaken, that it was wrong to seek to cancel UI benefits, particularly in the case of men and women who had vested rights, and on April 1 the Government introduced Bill C-50.

Unfortunately, once more, older workers had to put pressure on this Conservative Government. In each Conservative constituency, they had to put pressure on their Members of Parliament to force the Government to debate this bill on June 9.

After fighting for seventeen months, older workers have won only part of the battle. For them, victory will come in two years when they defeat this Government. What they have won now, Madam Speaker, is that all workers who retired before January 5, 1986, voluntarily or not, and who filed a claim at their unemployment insurance office, and there are 35,000 of them, will be paid a total of $65 million.

Unfortunately, there are still 2,500 people in Canada who, as my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has just reminded me, also took early retirement voluntarily or not before January 5, 1986. The most obvious example is the case of the Gulf refinery employees who lost their jobs because of this Conservative Government and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Because of this Prime Minister and this Government, these people have been denied their full unemployment insurance benefits. This is what happened when they filed a claim, Madam Speaker, as shown by the affidavits signed by people from all Quebec constituencies who have sent me postdated applications to prove that they went to their unemployment insurance office between September and November 1985 to file a claim, where they were told by unemployment insurance officials: "You have your separation pay and sick leave; when those have run out, you can come back and be eligible for unemployment insurance."

Once more, there is nothing for them in this Bill. Unfortunately, no Conservative Member is rising to defend these 2,500 people who are entitled to the full reimbursement of their unemployment insurance benefits because their case dates back to 1985. I trust that, when we move an amendment in committee, the Conservatives will rise to support this amendment so that all those who stopped working before January 5, 1986, will become eligible even if they did not go to their unemployment insurance office immediately. I have here a letter from a voter in a Conservative riding who has this to say: "I took early retirement on December 31, 1985. On January 1, 1986, Government offices were closed and the company office and staff were on holidays." This worker received his job separation form only on January 8, and when he went to the unemployment insurance office to file a claim, the Government would not let him.

There are hundred of cases in every constituency and this injustice will remain if the Government does nothing.

We all recall that the Government decided in secret to commit this injustice toward older workers by having an order in council published before the Christmas adjournment on December 23, so that no one would learn about it. The Cabinet had met with the Minister in secret to attack older workers, and all the Ministers who are here now were accomplices in that decision.

Today, the Government could have used the same method to say it had made a mistake and committed an injustice and that the Cabinet would cancel rules 57 and 58 to reimburse everyone automatically without discriminating against older workers.

Let us see now what we have in the Bill for all the men and women who have lost their jobs. People in the Champlain constituency, in the Trois-Rivières area, in East Montreal, in Abitibi, in Murdochville. Workers in Murdochville who are going to lose their jobs, will withdraw their pension funds, which belong to them, and contrary to what the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) did, those people have contributed to a registered retirement plan out of their own income, They have used their own money to contribute. But those people will not be eligible for full unemployment insurance benefits. In Murdochville, those people will have to find another job, work for 20 weeks, and then they will be told that if they lose that second job, they will qualify under the system on the basis of what the Hon. Member for Capilano called—as the Hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration says, on the basis of employment income. That time it will work. The first time was no good. Yet what people tend to forget is that the unemployment insurance benefits paid to those recipients will be based on the income from their second job.

Take all the members of the Armed Forces in Canada. All the servicemen. The Government wants to spend $186 billion to buy submarines to defend ourselves against the invisible enemy. The enemy of Canadians is "Brian Mulroney" and the Conservative Government. That Government is reluctant to pay even its servicemen. It told so to the Armed Forces Personnel in Canada—and I am surprised that Conservative Members from provinces other than Quebec do not stand up to speak for those servicemen. We have former members of the Armed Forces in this House. It is a shame to see them remain silent.

That means that all those who now serve in the Canadian Armed Forces, and who have to quit their job, will not be eligible for full unemployment insurance during the seven, eight or nine months when they look for another job. And if after ten months they find another job and they work until they are 65, they will have paid unemployment insurance, they will have lost a job and they will have been discriminated against by this Government. Those people will never have been eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

Those are the facts. Later on, we will be proposing amendments. We look forward to the attitude of Conservative Members . . . Some of them siad that they were open in their consitituencies. When people forced into early retirement went and met them specifically, they all said: You are right. But the time of reconing has come, and we shall know where we all stand.

Contrary to what the NDP says, I believe it would be wrong to vote against that Bill. It is not a perfect Bill, it is not a Government Bill. The reason we are dealing with this Bill is that the Official Opposition, the Liberals, the people of Canada have forced it upon the Government, Without the action of the Official Opposition, elderly people would never have been entitled to a refund. It was what the present Employment and Immigration Minister was hoping for, when he took part in the decision to cut unemployment insurance benefits, and we know what the Minister did with the Forget Commission. He wanted $6 million of the Canadian peoples' money, of the Canadian taxpayers' money. Now, Mr. Minister, whereas you took part in wasting $6 million, $4.5 million is all that would be required to bring some fairness to 2,500 people.

Mr. Minister, given that you have wasted all that money, I do hope that you will have a little more social sympathy when you think of those people.

Madam Speaker, what will be the consequences for older workers? There will fall into two groups: those who will be entitled to the benefits of a RRSP and those who will be entitled to the benefits of a Registered Pension Plan. And both will be penalized.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration will be entitled to a pension as a former director of a CEGEP and former teacher. He will get his full pension. When the time comes for him to collect his pension as a former teacher and former director of a CEGEP, he will not be asked: How much income do you get from other sources? Both he and his employer have contributed to his pension fund. Why should the Minister, who will be entitled to payment of a full pension, deprive older workers of their full unemployment insurance benefits while they remain available for work?

Madam Speaker, I would hope that the Minister comes to the realization that as a result of his Bill, some 2,500 people are in the grey area, I mean those older workers who have agreed to an early retirement. Take the case for instance of the Wabasso workers and those from various other companies in Trois-Rivières, Champlain, both Montreal East and Montreal West, as well as Saint-Hyacinthe. Their company has closed down and were laid off because of some provincial piece of legislation, they received separation payment after a notice of so many weeks. The House will remember the case of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East which was closed down by this Conservative Government: Because these workers had accepted separation payments, something like eight, ten or eleven weeks in compensation following the closing of the plant, they could not—and I have obtained notices from the Department, pursuant to section 17: The employment office cannot entertain an application for unemployment insurance benefits as long as the separation payments have not been exhausted.

Mister Minister, I do hope that you know the Unemployment Insurance Act and Regulations. To conclude, Madam Speaker, I wish to remind the Minister that the committee of the House, made up of representatives from the three parties, have recommended to withdraw Sections 57 and 58 and not to discriminate against older workers, both men and women.

Mr. Desrosiers: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask our colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) whether he was present when the federal Government reopened the refinery he was referring to earlier in which millions of dollars were invested so that all the workers would get their job back.

Madam Speaker, furthermore I should like to ask him whether he remembers that three other refineries were closed down in Montreal East—of which time the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie never objected to or challenged their closing nor stood up for the hundreds of thousands of workers whose jobs were lost in Montreal East.

I hope that the Canadian people who are listening today will remember that when the three refineries which were closed down under the Liberal Government—the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie never stood up in the House to defend these hundreds of thousands of employees. And today he rises in the House to blame us for the closing of the Gulf refinery. May I remind him that he was here when we reopened the Gulf refinery and gaving back their jobs to all former employees, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I am under the sad impression the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) will go back to singing, because he just proved clearly that, as people in Hochelaga—Maisonneuve say, he did not do his homework on the Gulf refinery. He should have attended more regularly the Survival Committee and defend the rights of people in Hochelaga, Mercier, Rosemont; if he had done so, he would know the Gulf refinery facilities reopened thanks to the provincial government.

The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve is not aware of it, unfortunately but quite understandably because he is present neither in Ottawa nor in his constituency, but half of the Gulf refinery employees are still laid off.

As a concrete example and proof, it is not for nothing that employees of a shut-down company have to send letters to the editors in district newspapers in order to meet the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve.

And despite what the Hon. Member just said about the Gulf refinery, only 50 per cent of employees got their jobs back there. The Federal Government did nothing—it was a Cabinet decision to shut the Gulf refinery down.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) had risen and said "The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is right". There are senior workers in the constituency of Hochelaga. Two plants are shutting down in the constituency of Hochelaga. I would have expected that the Hon. Member would rise and tell the Minister of Employment and Immigration: You are wrong, because older Hochelaga—Maisonneuve workers at the two companies that are closing down will not be entitled to full unemployment insurance. His role and his duty today would have been to rise and defend them. My conclusion is that he preferred to remain seated rather than defend his constituency, and the people will get rid of him soon.

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, thousands of members of the Canadian Armed Forces from across Canada, including my constituency of Burnaby as well as others, including the Hon. Member who just spoke, are deeply concerned. They feel betrayed by the Government's policy on unemployment insurance. We know, because of Armed Forces policy, that these people are forced to retire at an age when in many cases they want to continue working. Despite that and despite the fact they are actively seeking employment, government policy denies them unemployment insurance. In some cases they have paid into the unemployment insurance program for many, many years. To me it is a betrayal of the members of Canada's Armed Forces and a breach of the contract they made with the Government to tell them they are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits now. This Bill continues to exclude those people from coverage and makes an arbitrary division between those who retired before January 5 and those who retired after.

It is in that light that I want to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) why he and his colleagues in the Liberal Party support this legislation. I am amazed that the Liberal Party is prepared to put its principles behind it and vote in support of this Bill despite the fact that it slams the door on thousands of Canadians who are entitled to unemployment insurance. How can Liberal Members stand up in good conscience, in principle, and support this Bill when it is so deeply flawed and denies unemployment insurance to so many Canadians who have legitimately earned it?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and I thank the Hon. Member for it. We must keep reminding ourselves of what the Government did, what the situation was before January 5, 1986, and what the proposals are.

Before January 5, 1986, there was no difference made between income from an employer—employee or any other kind of pension plan, as far as unemployment insurance benefits were concerned. The decision made by this Government after January 5, 1986, is that not only our Armed Forces personnel, our people in the RCMP—and it is not my first responsibility to defend those people, I am thinking of all the older workers—those people found a new job, they kept on paying full unemployment insurance contributions, but they were not eligible to benefits.

What is the gain made by older workers under Bill C-50? This afternoon those people will be here. In the first place, all those affected by the decision of January 5, 1986 will get a refund. Secondly, there is a step forward, that is those who continued to make unemployment insurance contributions and were not eligible to receive benefits, will now be eligible.

However, I agree with the Hon. Member that it is not entirely satisfactory. I remember the workers of Lapalme and those of Richelieu and I will not ask anyone to sacrifice $10,000 to uphold the interests of someone else. And considering that it is a step in the right direction, I will support the Bill. The NDP will make its own decision and be accountable to its electors.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to the comments of my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie and I was startled when I heard him say about my colleague from Hochelaga—Maisonneuve that he had not risen to defend strongly the rights of preretired workers. But, Madam Speaker, I read carefully Hansard for the early eighties when three oil refineries were closed. Nowhere did I read any comment by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) indicating that he said to the then Prime Minister: "No! I am against that, because several hundred thousand workers will be laid off". I did not hear him say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse):"I am against that, because workers should be protected". And today he is acting hypocritically, because he has set up a survival committee. Why did he not do so when the three other refineries were closed down? Why did he not rise as an honest man to say once for all: "No, I am against that, I want to protect the workers." Madam Speaker, the enemy of preretired workers is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: What the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) is saying is stupid. It confirms . . . It so happens that I visited the ridings of Champlain and Trois-Rivières for meetings with unemployment action committees and preretired pensioners. The Hon. Member for Champlain and the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) displayed what courage they had. They remained in hiding. They remained in Ottawa and sent their secretaries to defend them.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on a point of order.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is saying is completely distorted. If we did not attend, it was not because we did not want to be there. It is because we were invited at a few hours' notice, which was not the case for the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This is a matter for debate. It is not a point of order. Very briefly, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: The Hon. Member is obviously squirming. He proves once again to be as much a disappointment as the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). Old workers expect the support of the Hon. Member for Champlain who deluded them into believing he would protect their interests. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member did not rise to their defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

• (1250)

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, this travesty of a Bill, C-50, typifies the entire reason why the Government is in so much trouble. It typifies why the Government has gone down in the polls consistently over the last two and a half years. It typifies why the Government is headed for defeat in the next election.

The roots go back to November 8, 1984, when the Government thought it had a mandate from the people of Canada to do practically whatever it wanted. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought in an economic statement at that time through which the Government hoped to save $120 million off the backs of Canadian working people. In the changes to regulations which were announced in that economic statement both pension income and severance pay were classified as earnings for the purpose of calculating unemployment insurance. The Government thought it was in bright days in that time and could do whatever it wanted.

Opposition to that was mounted first in the House of Commons by Members like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who saw what was happening, and then by the working people across Canada who recognized the threat which this posed to them and their livelihood. This forced the Government to delay the implementation of these provisions. The provision with regard to severance pay was delayed until March 31, 1985, and the pension provisions were delayed until January 5, 1986.

The unfairness to older workers was so obvious and evident that the Government thought that by delaying it people would become used to it and it would not be such a bitter pill to swallow. The matter was referred to the Forget Commission, but the Government refused to ask for an early recommendation. When the Forget Commission finally reported, it recommended that these provisions with regard to pension income being counted as income for the purposes of calculating unemployment insurance be dropped. However, the Government refused to act immediately on that.

The issue has been dragging on and on. The Government finally introduced a Bill in April. It is trying to blame the Opposition for the fact that it has not been dealt with, but the Government is supposed to be in charge of its own legislative timetable. Why has it not acted?

It is important that the people of Canada understand the unfairness and discrimination which was involved in the regulations originally brought in by the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government in November, 1984. I can underline that unfairness by talking about the impact it has had in my riding where many former service personnel have retired. It is important to remember that for most ratings in the Armed Forces early retirement is a requirement.

After 25 years in the services many members are required to retire. They are aged 45 to 50 and still have growing families. They still have heavy mortgage payments to make and must make provisions for their children's education. They still have a good part of their working lives ahead of them. The pensions they receive from the Canadian Armed Forces are not extravagant. They are very modest and they have a difficult time getting by on them. They need to have continuing employment but in that part of Canada there is high unemployment and it is very difficult for many of these early retirees to find employment.

When these regulations were brought in they formed a group called the UIC Repeal Group, 1986. It is made up not only of ex-service people but as well of early retirees from the Public Service and also of people on private sector pensions. This group is made up of working people who feel that they have been betrayed by the Government. They feel that the Government was elected on a promise of fairness and to create jobs. The jobs have not been created, particularly in my area, and instead of fairness they see discrimination pointed directly at them.

To give you a better idea I will read briefly from a couple of the letters I have received on this issue. A person living in Ganges, British Columbia, writes:

> Perhaps you can better explain why I can't or won't receive unemployment insurance benefits after having been told by my former employer B.C. Hydro and my union, I.B.E.W. that I should apply for same.
> In November 1986 I went to the U.I.C. office in Saanich and registered my application. In a few weeks I received two cards to complete and return on the appropriate dates which I did. Several weeks later I received a rather ambiguous letter—informing me of the weekly amount of my monthly pension but not denying me my claim, along with more cards to fill out. I have regularly been receiving and sending cards since.
> Finally, sometime later, I phoned the office to try to determine exactly what if anything was happening with my claim and was told that I was not entitled to any benefits unless I returned to work for the required minimum number of weeks. This seems to me to be absolutely ludicrous and totally unacceptable. I served overseas with the RCAF during WW2 and understand my UI payments were made by the military, I've worked for over 38 years and have never made a claim, I've taken early retirement because I am unable to safely climb power poles anymore, (I was a Hydro lineman) my monthly pension is considered to be "earned income" and now I'm told all of that amounts to nothing, but if I return to work for 20 weeks I will be eligible for benefits. This surely has to be the ultimate insult.
> The contradictory newspaper articles I've chanced across have done nothing but confuse me and in fact I fear I might find myself in a "no man's land" since my effective retirement date was 30 September 1986.

The correspondent is completely correct. He is in a no man's land, and that is exactly where this legislation leaves him. Perhaps I can call it one o'clock and resume my speech later.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

CRITICISM OF PROGRAM

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Prince Edward Island Union of Public Sector Employees represents the employees of Holland College, the only community college on the Island. At their recent annual meeting the employees passed a resolution condemning the federal Government's Canadian Jobs Strategy Program.

They expressed a number of important concerns about the direction the Government has taken on job creation. The new emphasis on the private sector to provide skills training is not working in Atlantic Canada. The private sector cannot provide either adequate or comprehensive technical education.

In fact this backward job-creation program is hurting community colleges and depriving young Canadians of proper skills training. Holland College has already been forced to lay off some of its staff, and this trend is expected to continue.

Only the Government's incompetence is to blame for a job-creation strategy that results in lay-offs at those colleges where employment skills are supposed to be taught. I urge the Government to rethink its short-sighted attempts to privatize job training and put the funding back into community colleges where it belongs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUPPORT FOR WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians love their country, and because we cherish who we are and the resources we possess, it is worth defending.

Members of our dedicated Armed Forces, and Canadians over-all, have waited 16 long years for a caring and responsive Government to reply to the genuine concerns about our nation's defence and military commitments to our allies. I commend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) on his White Paper entitled Challenge and Commitment, A Defence Policy for Canada.

The White Paper has been heralded by members of the Armed Forces and our allies for the Government's decision to modernize and purchase essential equipment for our land, sea, and air forces.

Canadians and our allies have faith and trust in a Conservative Government that cares about the defence of our great country and freedom throughout the world.

ENERGY

END OF MORATORIUM ON OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION OFF QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—POSSIBLE ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) and his British Columbia provincial counterpart announced the end of a 14-year moratorium on oil and gas exploration off the coast of the Queen Charlotte Islands in British Columbia.

That moratorium had been imposed because of the environmental and ecological threat which could be posed by such activity. The Minister is aware that those same considerations for that marine life still exist.

The Government is also aware that the Queen Charlotte Islands are the traditional homeland of the Haida people, who have expressed their concern over this development.

A recent full day's debate in the House of Commons resulted in the unanimous recognition of the need to protect the Queen Charlotte Islands.

I trust that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will respect the will of Parliament as he goes forward with this policy. The people of British Columbia know that with good will on the part of all participants, we can develop our resources while protecting our environment, particularly one of the treasures in this country, the Queen Charlotte Islands. It is an area that is the habitat of one-third of the nesting birds on the West Coast, with limitless aquaculture and one of the great rain forests in the world. I want to draw this to the attention of the Minister of Energy.

ENERGY

END OF MORATORIUM ON OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION OFF QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—POSSIBLE ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during the past few years Canadians have demonstrated their interest and support in preserving the natural environment of South Moresby and Lyell Islands off British Columbia's northern coast.

However, today Canadians learned that the federal Government, along with the Government of British Columbia, plans to support exploration and drilling for oil and natural gas in this area by lifting the moratorium that has barred offshore exploration north of Vancouver Island since the early 1970s.

This callous action will jeopardize the sensitive ecological balance of the area, provide a serious threat to the West Coast fishery, and place the visitor potential of this pristine environment at risk. It completely ignores the fact that this area, now open for oil and gas drilling, is under aboriginal claim.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) has said that various jurisdictional problems have been resolved. However, what about the ecological, environmental and cultural issues that originally precipitated the implementation of the moratorium? These have not been resolved. Simply because the multinational oil companies have lobbied successfully is no reason to sell out this unique ecological area to the highest bidder.

POVERTY

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENTS TO ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): These past few days, Mr. Speaker, The Ottawa Citizen and Montreal's Le Devoir have published a series of articles on poverty.

Mr. Speaker, the statistics we see are alarming. Descriptions of the day-to-day lives of between 800 and 1,000 people in our national capital and the poverty which prevails in Eastern Montreal are the symptoms of our society's deep malaise. Such poverty can be seen throughout our country.

I believe that all Members of the House, men and women alike, can only deplore this very serious situation. The elderly had long since been considered as being the poorest members of our society, but things have changed indeed.

Poverty today, besides being more prevalent among women, is the lot of all kinds of people who are often very young, between 14 and 20, people suffering from psychiatric disorders, heads of single-parent families. All these people have precious little chance of ever improving their living conditions.

Many women who are alone and raising a family are caught in a vicious circle. If they manage to find work for which they draw less than the minimum wage, they are no longer entitled to assistance for medical expenses. They have to work an ungodly number of hours barely to make ends meet. Other groups suffering from poverty experience the same difficulties when they try to better themselves.

We are not doing enough to help them. Mr. Speaker, this is why I believe the federal Government, in co-operation with the provinces and the municipalities, must find a solution to the poverty problem in the very near future.

TRIBUTE TO FRANÇOIS PERROUX, FRENCH ECONOMIST

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, François Perroux, Collège de France professor and founder of ISMEA, the leading European economic research centre under the direction of Denoel and Bernis, died Tuesday, June 2, at the age of 84.

Undoubtedly François Perroux was at once France's most reknown, most productive and most remarkable economist of our century. As an economist he had a major impact in Canada between 1945 and 1980.

A relentless worker, he is better known for his conceptual imagination, so rich that the mere listing of his books, articles and communications in France and in the fifteen-odd foreign universities from which he held honoris causa doctoral degrees—the Universities of Ottawa, Montreal and Moncton, among others—covers about 40 single-line pages.

After the liberation, he was the first French economist invited to the London School of Economics, to Harvard, and especially to Canada.

Prophet in the renewal of the general balance theory and in the analysis of Third World fundamental problems, author of the "development poles" concept which was so widely exploited, of the automotive industry "driving force" theory, of the "macrodecisions" and of the "structural disparities between large units", François Perroux made a long journey through concepts, and his contribution to applied economics deserves special mention.

François Perroux wanted—and this was but one facet of his generosity—economics to be normative rather than moralizing because it makes sense only to the extent that it contributes to the full exploitation of human resources.

We have lost a great man.

REFUGEES

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-55

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, today marks the beginning of the national week of protest against Bill C-55. It is a week to speak up for justice and fairness for refugees.

The situation for refugees has become a human tragedy of enormous magnitude. The United Nations estimates there are between 15 million and 20 million refugees around the world. There is a consensus that Canada needs a new refugee determination process but the Canadian Government is not responding fairly or listening to Canadians.

Every group involved with assisting refugees, all the major churches, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and Amnesty International, have condemned the Government's new Bill and asked for its withdrawal. Bill C-55 lacks the most basic safeguards set down by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. It probably violates our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the United Nation's Convention on Refugees.

On behalf of my Party I call upon the Government again today to act swiftly to withdraw this unjust measure. We require an alternative instead. We need a fair, fast procedure, open to all claimants and consistent with the principles of fundamental justice. We must not betray Canada's tradition of compassion.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICE-BREAKER—SUGGESTED PROPULSION BY NUCLEAR POWER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the advantages of nuclear propulsion over diesel fuel for ice-breakers operating in the Arctic are self-evident and incontestable. The only rational argument for the selection of diesel fuel for the proposed Polar 8 ice-breaker was that it might be uneconomical to build fuelling facilities for one vessel which would otherwise be dependent on foreign fueling.

With the recent announcement by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) that Canada is to acquire a fleet of nuclear-powered submarines, fueling facilities will now be built in Canada. Therefore, there remains no reason why our Polar 8 ice-breaker should not be nuclear propelled. The Government ought now to reconsider its earlier decision before we get locked into a poor choice.

GOVERNMENT'S OBJECTIVE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in 1981, when the Canadian Parliament under a Liberal Government passed an Act to establish the Canada

Post Corporation, the objective was improved services, better labour-management relations and a reduced deficit.

After six years, under a Conservative Government, the objective has become a reduced postal service, accelerated deficit reduction and a threatened strike.

The Conservative Government has completely ignored the recommendation of the Marchment Commission to give the Canada Post Corporation until 1990 to solve its deficit problem.

Why accelerate deficit reduction? We are now facing a strike, and according to the report of the conciliator, there could be violence in the workplace. This is how the Conservative Government solves the problems of Canadian society.

AIR TRANSPORT

PRESENCE OF AIR FRANCE CONCORDE AT VAL D'OR IN ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the city of Val d'Or celebrated the inauguration of the new regional air terminal of the Abitibi—Témiscamingue region and northern Quebec on Friday, June 5, with the coming of the Air France Concorde.

The big white bird came from New York to land on one of the longest runaways in Canada. Twenty-three years after being designed, this French and British supersonic airplane still provokes wonder and astonishment. The artisans of this event were the airport general manager, Mr. Daniel Bleau, of Transport Canada, and Dr. Alfred Lomsy of the Association pour le développement de l'anesthésie-analgésie en régions éloignées, who is also from Val d'Or.

This was quite a challenge for northern residents. Schools were closed, buses were chartered everywhere in Abitibi for the event, and 10,000 people were able to watch this magnificient plane.

One hundred Abitibi residents made the trip from Val d'Or to Mirabel on the Concorde, returning that same evening on an Air Canada flight organized by Mr. Jean-Claude Tétrault, director.

The management of Air France and the Concorde pilots will be able to say throughout the world: Yes, we went to Val d'Or, in Abitibi, and we shall go back there because the people are wonderful.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DEPARTMENTAL EXPENDITURES—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as has been brought up in the House a number of times over the last little while by my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is having a serious problem with its budget. Right now there exists a situation in which in the first two months of this year the Government has managed to spend $100 million more than was allocated for the entire fiscal year.

The Government has announced that it is cutting back and freezing funds for native people who rely on the Department's programs. In addition, the people of the Northwest Territories are adversely affected. One-fifth of the Territories' annual budget comes from these funds.

We must have a public inquiry into this situation. We must know what amounts have been spent. We must know who authorized the amounts. We must have some mechanism to ensure that native people and northerners do not suffer from the Government's incompetence.

HIGHWAYS

AGREEMENT TO UPGRADE YELLOWHEAD HIGHWAY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, in October of 1986 the Government announced that it would join with its Saskatchewan counterpart to upgrade the Yellowhead Highway.

I would like to take this opportunity to inform the House that on Friday, June 5, I was a witness to the $22 million agreement which will set in motion restoration and widening of this vital northern route.

The upgrading of the Yellowhead will not only improve access to Canada's northern industrial and resource development areas, it will also provide a safer, more efficient highway for those Canadians travelling in the west.

I know that in Saskatoon alone this project will have a significant effect on highway safety, eliminating two particularly hazardous traffic areas, the Eighth Street traffic circle and Circle Drive, and a narrow strip of highway on the south end of the city.

I wish to commend the federal and provincial Governments for their ongoing co-operation in developing this vital tourist and commercial highway.

S. O. 21

EFFECT OF IMPORT REGULATIONS ON TENT MAKERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the damage that is being done to a number of small industries in Canada which depend on imports which they manufacture for sale. I am referring to items such as shirts, neckties, clothing and, latterly, tents. Tent manufacturers, like the others I mentioned, have to compete with their finished products against foreign imports. The products they want to use to manufacture their goods are subject to heavy duty, if they wish to bring them in from abroad.

I submit that when an industry cannot obtain a Canadian manufacturer that is comparable in terms of its product and its appropriateness for manufacturing a product, it should be allowed to import duty-free. This case has been made by manufacturer after manufacturer. They are now beginning to go out of business.

Tent manufacturers are in very grave jeopardy. I urge the Government to look at their situation and to take steps now, where foreign competition is so serious, to allow them to import the goods that they need to manufacture their products here in Canada.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UTILIZATION OF PRIVILEGES RESERVED FOR PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at my home in Charny, I received an envelope on which the sender was identified as being the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The envelope contained a letter printed on official House of Commons paper, from the office of the Leader of the NDP.

The letter is essentially a political one and contains a message about the Canadian tax system. It also contains a card addressed to the Hon. Member's office, no postage required, which will be used to make lists of addresses of Canadian citizens. The addressee is asked simply to sign at the bottom of the following form, which says, and I quote: "I want you to know what I think about fair taxes and jobs". And there is a space for the names and addresses of those who complete this form.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist Party is increasingly using Members' privileges for his own Party's political purposes.

Mr. Speaker, this simple letter, if sent to five and a half million addresses in Canada, will cost taxpayers $550,000. It is high time Canadians judged the honesty of these socialists. They must give an explanation today, here in the House.

I wonder, is it me or is it just the weather that is getting on the nerves of those—gaymocrats, Mr. Speaker.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ARRIVAL OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS IN NORTH AMERICA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks a lot about multicultural policy, but when the time comes to deliver it is noticeably absent. I refer specifically to the Government's lack of action in respect of the five hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Christopher Columbus in North America.

I have here a letter dated March 18, 1984, from former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau naming Alex Roncari of the City of Hamilton the chairman of the quincentennial celebration. More than three years have elapsed, and the Government will not even commit itself to having a committee to look at what Canada will do to celebrate the five hundredth anniversary of the arrival of Christopher Columbus in North America.

E facile per parlare di multiculturalismo, ma quando arrivo il tempo di fare qualche' cosa, questo governo non fa niente.

It is easy to talk about it. I want the chairman from Hamilton to be recognized and allowed to continue in his work, not stopped by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) as he is doing at the moment.

RAILWAYS

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION—FORTHCOMING DECISION ON CABOOSELESS TRAINS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, many Members might be aware of the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission is wrapping up its hearings in Ottawa this week in respect of the application of railways to run cabooseless trains. I want Hon. Members to be aware—and perhaps they are not—of the seriousness of the decision the CTC would be making if it decided to do what the railways wanted and allowed cabooseless trains to run.

The railways have argued sometimes on the basis of the American experience. However, if the CTC were to decide to allow cabooseless trains in Canada, we would have a situation quite different from that in the United States where only 25 per cent of trains are actually running without cabooses because of the way States have jurisdiction over transportation and the way collective bargaining is involved in the issue.

What would happen here, when this industry is primarily federal, if the CTC were to decide to allow caboose less trains is that we would have, carte blanche, cabooseless trains running from one end of the country to the other on the basis of limited American experience and other arguments that the railways have made which fail to take into account the need for the human touch when it comes to safety on trains running through Canada.

I hope the CTC will make the right decision, not the wrong one, and forbid the running of cabooseless trains.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S ISSUANCE OF PERMITS TO DRILL FOR OIL AND GAS IN CANADIAN WATERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. At my request, the Members of Parliament for Gander—Twillingate and Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe have consulted with officials at External Affairs, and indeed with French officials in Paris, and have confirmed that the Government of France has issued permits to two giant French oil companies—Elf Aquitaine and Total—to drill for oil and gas in over 20,000 square kilometres of Canadian waters.

In response to the investigation of my two Members, the Department of External Affairs this morning issued a weak-kneed protest.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the Prime Minister was aware of what was happening when the President of France was in the country last month, and why did he not raise a claim for Canadian sovereignty and protest this matter with the President of France when he was in the country?

• (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is correct. We have been advised that the French Government has granted joint exploration permits to two French companies to explore for oil off the coast of St. Pierre-Miquelon. Instructions have been issued to the Canadian Ambassador to protest the granting of these permits.

I should say as well, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the Right Hon. Member is aware, that under both Canadian law and international law activities related to the exploration and exploitation of resources on the Canadian shelf may be undertaken only with the express authority of the Canadian Government.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister takes the time to read what the Canadian Government sent to France this morning, he will recognize that it was a mealy-mouthed weak-kneed protest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Having sold out our East Coast fishermen, the Government is now selling out East Coast oil and gas workers.

CANADIAN POSITION—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PROTEST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I will put my question in terms that will get the point right home to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why didn't the Prime Minister of our country tell the President of France that France has no more right drilling off the coast of Newfoundland than it has to drilling rights in the Province of Alberta? Why hasn't that message been delivered?

Would the Deputy Prime Minister relay a message directly from this Parliament to the Prime Minister in Venice to say to President Mitterrand, when he is sitting across the table from him, to stop that unlawful drilling in Canadian waters?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is advocating the same kind of gunboat diplomacy as the New Democratic Party. His rhetoric is sounding almost as shrill. I might remind the Right Hon. Member that last year, in October, 1986, a similar application was made and Canada did protest. No drilling was taking place at that particular time.

Ms. Copps: They really listened, eh?

Mr. Mazankowski: In reply to the latter part of the Hon. Member's question, my understanding is that the Prime Minister did meet with Prime Minister Chirac earlier this day. I have not had a report on the outcome of that meeting but I am sure that that will be forthcoming and I am also sure that this matter would have been raised.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not going to be diverted by the Deputy Prime Minister. We are not advocating gunboat diplomacy. We are advocating that this Government stand up for Canada's rights, that it show some guts, some backbone and some forthrightness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is absolutely unbelievable that a European nation should pretend to exercise sovereignty rights over our waters while this Government does nothing about it but make a feeble protest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Be honest, John.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And the only noise we hear in this House is the flapping of the fins of the trained seals behind the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would put his question. Thank you.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of empty wind and fin-flapping over there.

An Hon. Member: Be careful now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister may feel temporarily secure in the numbers behind him, but the people of Canada do not feel secure in the way his Government is protecting our sovereignty. That is quite clear.

What specific action will the Government take to prevent the French from exercising pseudo-sovereignty rights over Canadian waters? When, how, and what action will be taken?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know it is encouraging for all Members of the House to notice that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can rally his troops over something.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Mazankowski: We hope that that might enhance his own personal security because many of us are very concerned about his own personal security.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: My colleagues behind me are saying that they want the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to stay.

Some of the—

Mr. Rossi: We're not sure that Canadians want you though.

Ms. Copps: Bring back Erik.

Mr. Shields: Oh, Sheila, be quiet.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister could get to the answer to the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has gotten carried away with some of his rhetoric. He may want to go back to check what he has said because some of the things he said are totally inaccurate.

As I said earlier, we are talking about a disputed area, and under both Canadian law and international law the activities related to exploration and exploitation of natural resources undertaken on the Canadian shelf can only be undertaken with the express consent of the Canadian Government.

RIGHTS OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Accord was supposed to give to Newfoundland, not France, the right to drill and explore in the waters off Newfoundland out to the 200-mile limit. Now the French Government, apparently over the objections of the Canadian Government, has issued drilling permits to two companies in France allowing them to drill out to 200 miles and to as close as 30 miles of the Newfoundland coast.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government will do to end once, and for all, the issuing of these permits by the French Government in order to live up to the spirit of the Atlantic Accord and protect the rights of Newfoundlanders?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that question. I indicated that a formal protest has been launched. The Prime Minister of France and the Prime Minister of Canada met earlier today and I am sure this was a matter that was discussed.

I should indicate as well that Canadian petroleum companies too have been granted permits in this disputed area. Really what is happening here is that both countries, because it is a disputed area, have been granting permits. However, as of yet, no drilling has taken place by either side.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it does not matter if it is France or the United States, if it is fish, lumber or oil, the word is out: this Government is made up of a bunch of pushovers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Does the Deputy Prime Minister not realize that in this case France is taunting Canada? We announced 7,000 metric tonnes of fish for next year for France. Two weeks ago France announced it would catch 27,000 metric tonnes. As the Deputy Prime Minister has said, we say no to the drilling and France now says yes to the drilling in Canadian waters. Will the Government simply sit back and watch as the French fill their bellies with our fish and their tanks with our oil?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I simply remind the Hon. Member that in October of 1986 there was a similar kind of application made. Perhaps it was part and parcel of this same application. Canada protested at that time and drilling was not undertaken. Perhaps the proof is in the pudding.

Ms. Copps: The proof is in the drilling.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact of the matter is that Canada did protest very vigorously and drilling did not take place.

• (1430)

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to understand very clearly what the Government has done about this important situation. With respect to extraterritoriality Canadians will remember the Government has already yielded to the Americans on the softwood lumber issue. With respect to sovereignty it has yielded to the French on fishing off the coast of Newfoundland. Did the Deputy Prime Minister say that, notwithstanding earlier Canadian protests, the French have gone ahead and made the decision to drill in our waters?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): The Hon. Leader of the socialist Party is wrong on three counts.

Mr. Broadbent: It would be encouraging if the Government would not only claim it is right but actually do something for once in the interests of Canada. That is what we would like to see the Government do.

CANADIAN PROTEST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says no, the Government did not protest before. I thought he said just a moment ago to someone in the Liberal Party that the Government sent a telegram last year protesting drilling in these waters.

Mr. Mazankowski: The drilling did not take place.

Mr. Broadbent: Presumably if that protest meant anything last year it should mean something this year, unless the Government has abandoned its position. The Minister has now said the Government sent another telegram. Can he tell us what was said, and, if the Government of France plans to ignore it and go ahead and drill in our waters what does the Government of Canada intend to do to stand up for Canadian interests?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada is the same. It is a disputed area. The fact of the matter is that I have indicated a formal protest has been launched. Second, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of France met earlier this day and I can only presume this matter was discussed.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER BE CONTACTED AT VENICE SUMMIT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, while they met earlier this day they could have discussed any one of a half dozen matters that come up at a summit. The people of Canada would like to know for sure that they discussed this important question. Will the Minister check with the Prime Minister in Venice and report back to the House tomorrow not only about what took place in that conversation but with assurances that in this case, if not in softwood or fishing, the Canadian Government will make a decision in the interests of Canada for a change and not in the interests of France?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the socialists had not been so busy preparing his questions he would have heard the answer I gave to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I indicated that the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of France had met and I was awaiting a report. I would certainly report back to the House when I received it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, after the last seven questions, right about now Canadians are wondering if there is any sight more pitiful than the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada cowering, and expecting the people of Canada to cower with him, before the Treaty of Paris, a 224-year old treaty, one which was signed 104 years before Canada became a nation.

An Hon. Member: You are sick.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has been very patient. The questions have been long, argumentative, and repetitive. In the interests of other Members who, I know, are waiting to ask questions, I would ask the Hon. Member to get to the point and put the question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister not realize that these are not colonial times? France is not an imperial power. Canada is not some colony of a far-away mother country. Will he today announce measures to ensure that no other nation other than Canada will issue permits for companies to explore and drill for oil in sovereign Canadian waters? Will he do that today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is the reason for our efforts to get this matter put to arbitration, the action of the French Government in issuing a permit to drill for oil and gas in disputed waters. This is a dispute between Canada and France as to who has the jurisdiction over those waters, as to whose continental shelf they come within, whether it is France through St. Pierre and Miquelon, or whether it is Canada. As a part of the effort to get that issue settled we are negotiating with France to send this matter to arbitration, which is the only way in which it can be settled peacefully and in accordance with international law. In the meantime our ambassador in Paris is making an official protest to the Government of France. If they follow the example of last year there will be no drilling under these permits. That is the position.

Our policy is firm and we can assure the House that it will continue to be firm, firmer than the position of the previous Government because it took no action to settle this issue in the 20 years it was in power.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the President of France was so impressed with his private meeting with the Hon. Member for St. John's West that he promptly went home and had his Government issue two permits to drill off Newfoundland in sovereign Canadian waters. That is how impressed he was by that Minister who has shown all the backbone of a jellyfish.

I ask the Minister of fisheries, transport, Canada-France, offshore oil and gas, what measures is his Government going to take to ensure that no companies other than Canadian companies drill in sovereign Canadian waters? Have you got anything besides flippant words to offer the people of Canada and your fellow Newfoundlanders in this regard?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if shouting and braggadocio were effective I would put the hon. gentleman out offshore from St. Pierre and Miquelon and blow the French to kingdom come!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In the meantime a further meeting is set for Paris on June 24 and June 25 of this year to continue negotiations on fishery quotas. Other meetings are going to be held on the boundary.

The President of France was told of the firm and fixed position of the Government of Canada with reference to these questions off the East Coast of Newfoundland. He understands our position. Naturally they are trying to respond to the action we took in barring their vessels from Canadian ports, which action we are not going to change. That is action we took. The predecessor Liberal Government did nothing, but now they are in opposition they are like lions, tigers. They are like walruses.

Mr. Langdon: That is a hard act to follow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Why bother?

Mr. Shields: Good point. Sit down.

MINES AND MINING

CLOSURE OF MURDOCHVILLE MINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the management of Gaspé Mines announced yesterday it was closing the Murdochville Mine. More than 400 people will be laid off as a result of this decision, which will have a disastrous impact on the community. What does the Government intend to do about this?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Government sympathizes with the people of Murdochville. Second, three weeks ago I had a meeting with my colleague, the Quebec Minister of Mines. The Minister, in accordance with his responsibility for Quebec's natural resources, was negotiating with Noranda. He asked the Canadian Government, as part of the Ottawa-Quebec agreement on mining, to sharing 50 per cent of the cost of reimbursing the loan, since negotiations were going along those lines. I was delighted to be able to confirm the Canadian Government's interest in these negotiations and also our decision to pay 50 per cent of the cost of interest payments.

I can assure you that as far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned, we have responded positively to Quebec's request.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the Minister if it is sufficient simply to offer one's good intentions, or is it not necessary to take leadership in an area like this and try to create a situation, through economic development and progress, that will give to that community a chance for the future? Surely it is time the Government started to take that leadership instead of sitting back and letting the private sector take the lead all the time.

• (1440)

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, leadership for the Government does not mean doing something it should not do. The first responsibility of the Government is to recognize that natural resources are first the responsibility of the provinces. With that in mind we have always agreed to work with the Quebec Government because it is its responsibility first.

That is why Minister Savoie has had negotiations with Société Noranda. When we were asked to participate in that we responded positively. I do not think that leadership of the country means that we should go against provincial rights.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM INDIA

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in our Gallery of a parliamentary delegation from India led by the Honourable Mr. B. Shankaranand, Minister of Water Resources.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to believe that for two days following the release of the White Paper we have had neither the Minister of National Defence nor the Associate Minister of National Defence in the House to answer questions. Now we do not even have the Acting Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has had to remind Members in the past that undue comment about the absence of any Member, any Leader of a Party, or any cabinet Minister is not looked upon favourably in this place. The reason for that is that Members, cabinet Ministers and Leaders of Parties have to be elsewhere a good deal of the time doing the jobs which they must do. I ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Acting Defence Minister said that without Canadian nuclear subs in the Arctic we are inviting potential adversaries. He said that with them there would be no implied invitation but any intrusion would be an act of provocation.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the Acting Defence Minister that the presence of an American sub in Canada's Arctic would constitute an act of provocation?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to thank the Hon. Member for the question or not. Surely he is not seriously trying to imply that an ally of our country would create provocation in our waters. Most certainly any activity of allied vessels would be in consultation with the Minister of National Defence.

The Arctic Ocean is not Canadian waters, and I assure the Hon. Member that our submarines—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bradley: The Arctic Ocean is not Canadian waters. The Canadian waters which are in the Arctic Ocean are within our territorial waters. Submarines can go in the Arctic without being in Canadian waters.

POSSIBLE INSTRUCTIONS FOR SUBMARINE CREWS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary. I asked this question yesterday. If the sovereignty issue in Canada's Arctic is essentially a legal question, what instructions will be given to the crews of Canada's nuclear-powered submarines in the event that they run into submarines from other powers in what we consider to be Canadian waters and they consider to be international waters? What are we asking our submarines to do in that event?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question is certainly hypothetical. However, I am sure that if our submarines were in those waters and identified submarines of any other nation they would log the location, the time, and the character of the submarine, which information might be utilized in international courts in disputes over waters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S ISSUANCE OF LICENCES TO DRILL IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. First we saw the spectacle of our northern cod stocks being sold out to the French. Now there is oil drilling in Canadian waters. I do not think the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government understand the serious nature of what is happening.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister, at least to indicate how serious this is, recall Ambassador Bouchard from France for consultations on this matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a repetition of an earlier question. I have stated the Government's position which has also been stated by the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I have outlined the actions that are being taken and I will keep the House informed of the actions taken and results of the meeting which I am sure the Prime Minister of France and the Prime Minister of Canada have had.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER BE CONTACTED AT VENICE SUMMIT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Deputy Prime Minister mentioned that. The Prime Minister is in Venice at the moment with the leader of France. We will excuse the Deputy Prime Minister from Question Period. He can go to his office, telephone to Venice, and tell the Prime Minister of this country that Parliament and the people of Canada are extremely concerned about the actions announced by the French.

Will the Prime Minister enter discussions with the leadership of France while he is at the Venice conference? Later today the Deputy Prime Minister can report to the House on the context of that conversation.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the Hon. Member's suggestion I am sure he understands that that is not necessary. The Prime Minister of Canada considers this to be a very important initiative. I do not think he needs any prompting from the Hon. Member or me to do what is in the best interests of Canada.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ALLOWANCES PAID TO PERSONNEL IN EUROPE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, while the Ministers are out selling their budget for National Defence, the growth of which has been reduced over 15 years, to the Canadian people, I will direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board to whom the buck was passed yesterday by the Acting Minister.

The Government continues to treat members of the Canadian Armed Forces shabbily. First it was an attack on retirees by taking away their unemployment insurance. Now it is attacking members of the Armed Forces in Europe by cutting their cost of living pay and their exchange rate pay.

In light of the protests from Canadian Forces in Europe will the Minister undertake to review this issue by sending Statistics Canada back to the drawing board to make a more accurate assessment of living costs and exchange rates in Canada? Never mind the system. The Government can do it if it has the will to do it and if it cares for Canadian Armed Forces personnel.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this Government is the first Government in many years to stand by our Armed Forces and ensure that they are well treated, well equipped, and able to do the job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, an index has been developed to equate the standard of living on posts abroad to that in the national capital region. That index is revised periodically. It has been a longstanding practice and has been applied at this time as in other periods.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board has chosen to use the same old inaccurate rhetoric about defence spending. That story will be laid wide open. I hope he is ready for an education.

EXCHANGE RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Dragoons and other units will be coming home from Germany this summer and the 8th Hussars and others will be replacing them. My question for the Minister is serious and I do not want an answer about your system. Will the Government correct this injustice with exchange rates and cost of living in Europe, or will he treat the people who are going there this summer in the same shabby manner as he was treating those who are coming home? Will the Minister withdraw his order of May 1 when he took 15 per cent of their pay package away from those personnel and give it back to them? That is the question, and a serious one.

• (1450)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are treating our personnel abroad, whether they are in the Armed Forces or the foreign service, in an equitable and decent manner. If the Hon. Member really believes that the methodology of the survey is faulty, I will be happy to look into it and ensure that the system is working in an equitable way so that people are paid on an equitable basis, whether they be in Germany or anywhere else in the world.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF MILK PRODUCTS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

In the area of multilateral trade last year the Government took decisive action to limit the importation of dry blends of products containing 50 per cent or more milk solids. Since there has been some evidence recently that some importers may be importing mixtures with slightly less than the 50 per cent limit of milk solids, what action has been or will be taken to stop this apparent disrespect of the intent of the import control list?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that my Department is working very closely with the Department of National Revenue on this alleged skimmed milk scam. The allegations are that skimmed milk mixed with salt is being imported into the country as soup mix, in contravention of the Export and Import Permits Act.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that investigations are continuing. There has been a seizure of skimmed milk as a result of them. There has been increased vigilance at the ports of entry to ensure that no such contraventions occur.

ENERGY

END OF MORATORIUM ON OIL AND GAS DRILLING OFF QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Government's decision to lift the moratorium on offshore drilling in British Columbia shocked and surprised British Columbia Indians, fishermen, and environmentalists. The Government had not used the moratorium years to do the necessary oceanographical and biological studies to determine the long-term environmental risks. Now it is acting with haste and expediency.

Will the Minister assure the House that no drilling will take place until long-term studies have been done and the data analysed, and until public hearings have been held on how the drilling will proceed and who has jurisdiction?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. colleague that people in British Columbia were very pleased with yesterday's announcement. Second, the announcement is intended to make it known that both Governments have accepted the recommendations of the task force on those matters. Third, we have committed ourselves to negotiate an accord with the provincial Government. That will answer some aspects of his question.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Minister of Energy will soon see how pleased the people of British Columbia are with this deal, which is a sell-out of the environment.

IMPACT OF DRILLING ON FISHERY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister tell the House what studies have been done on the impact of any drilling on the fishery? What will be the impact on aboriginal rights, which extend out into the ocean shelf? What will be the real impact of this drilling?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I feel the situation is quite clear. Governments have agreed to set up a committee to consider environmental issues. Both Governments have accepted the vast majority, that is to say, almost all the recommendations, especially on environmental issues.

Thirdly, the Government has accepted to negotiate an agreement such as the one we signed with Newfoundland or Nova Scotia. Within the framework of these agreements, any kind of future development in whatever shape or form, will not take place without public hearings, as was the case with the Newfoundland and Nova Scotia projects.

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. After reducing postal service in many ways, the Government is preparing to shut down the postal service completely by forcing postal workers into a strike that they do not want and no Canadians want.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister ask his Minister responsible for Canada Post to stop acting like someone who is betting on a horse at the race-track? Yesterday the Minister said about a possible postal strike: "If I were to put odds on it I would say it does not look that good". We want the Government to get involved in settling that strike. Will it carry out these negotiations with the union at arm's length, watching as a witness, or will the Deputy Prime Minister order his Minister to get involved and settle this before it gets worse?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the conciliation report has just been brought down. I believe there is a clear indication by both sides that there is a desire to re-engage in negotiations. I am sure the Hon. Member would want that negotiating process to take place. We encourage it and we hope a strike can be avoided. We will certainly do everything in our power to assist in facilitating both parties to get back to the bargaining table. That is the way this issue can best be settled for all Canadians and the workers particularly.

[Translation]

QUERY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL INTERVENE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is saying that the Government is keeping an eye on the situation. That is all it is saying.

How can the Government allow the situation to deteriorate further and end up with a total breakdown in postal services? How can the Minister be satisfied with watching the game from the side, comfortably seated by the boards, without realizing that the time has come for him to get on the ice and get involved. We will end up with a strike and the Government will be responsible for it.

When will the Government finally decide to intervene in these negotiations which are a stand still?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I do not have to explain to my hon. friend that the collective bargaining process in Canada is well entrenched and recognized by Canada Post, the Minister, the union involved, and the leadership of that union. The collective bargaining process in Canada does not call for intervention by the Government at this time. On behalf of which side would the Hon. Member ask the Government to intervene?

ENERGY

SOLIGAZ PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Quebec Minister of Energy stated recently that if the Sarnia—Montreal pipeline is not converted to natural gas liquids, the Soligaz $250 million project will be in jeopardy, and he asked the Minister to intervene at the National Energy Board.

My question is this: Did the Minister make the importance of that conversion to Montreal-East and workers in Montreal-East known to the National Energy Board? Did he intervene, and if not, why?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the appropriate terms, yes.

INQUIRY HOW GOVERNMENT HAS INTERVENED

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

"In the appropriate terms, yes". I would like to ask the Minister to tell us, since he stated last week he would not intervene with the National Energy Board, when he did intervene, how and in which direction? Can he give a specific answer to that question?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I used the phrase "in the appropriate terms", because clearly the Minister of Energy may not intervene in the Board's decision process. But he can make the Board aware of the importance of such decisions, to ensure in particular that the system works in a fair way. And it is in that sense, within my responsibilities and my powers, that I did so Mr. Speaker.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—TRANSBOUNDARY EMISSIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As a result of the decision yesterday by the United States Supreme Court on the subject of acid rain, both the Ontario Government and the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain have indicated they will be henceforth concentrating their efforts to control cross-border acid rain emissions on lobbying of the United States Congress.

Will the Minister advise the House if the Canadian Government is presently lobbying the United States Congress on the subject of acid rain emissions? And, specifically, what efforts are we making to persuade United States Congressmen and Senators to pass very tough and strict acid rain emission control standards?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a U.S. Supreme Court decision in which the court, in effect, defeated the efforts of eight of the States in the northeastern tier to get a court-imposed solution to the acid rain problem. In a nutshell, the case was decided on a technicality surrounding a letter which had been written by a previous head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

In any event, from a Canadian point of view, we lost on procedural grounds, which indicates to us, as a Government, that we Canadians cannot count on the American courts to press our case in the United States. If we are to have a solution to the acid rain problem on a transboundary basis, we are going to have to find it on a Government-to-Government basis. That is why we are concentrating our efforts, in the first instance, on the U.S. administration.

I note with pleasure that on May 26 the U.S. President—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McMillan: —reconfirmed the position he expressed on the floor of the House of Commons in favour of giving consideration to a bilateral accord. In tandem with that—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McMillan: —we are using all legal and diplomatic instruments to press Congress—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McMillan: —for a legislative approach to the acid rain issue.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PUBLICATION OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I should start by thanking the after-dinner speaker who just read.

My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It concerns the Government's attempt to hide facts once again. Every month the Minister publishes a leaflet which is entitled Research and Development Bulletin, and these documents usually contain the names of people receiving government contracts in R and D, and usually statistics by region concerning research and development. Can the Minister explain to this House why it is, starting this month, this publication will no longer carry statistics by region on research and development? Is the Government's record so shameful it is now trying to hide it?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure the Hon. Member that I have no intention of practicing censorship, I am not that kind of woman.

I suspended information on research and development statistics because they were confusing. But in my capacity as Minister in charge of Statistics Canada, data from Statistics Canada can always be used because they cover the overall picture of what is being done at the research and development level.

CANADIAN PEOPLE'S RIGHT TO KNOW TRUTH

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister. She just stated statistics on overall research are available. Now, she knows full well her document gave them by region. Why does the Minister still insist the disclosure of information to the public is confusing? Is the truth so confusing? Is it not true Canadians have a right to know the facts and draw their own conclusions in that matter?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): As I said, Mr. Speaker, the statistics that were published by my Department were only sketchy, segmental data, and were misleading. This government wants to supply overall information in the most genuine way possible. This is why Statistics Canada will be able to supply you with all the data concerning research and development.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT ADJUSTMENT (PENSION PAYMENTS) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-50, an Act respecting the treatment of pension payments in determining certain unemployment insurance benefit entitlements and to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Allmand (p. 6872).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock p.m. the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) had the floor.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, when we broke for lunch, I had been asking what kind of worker the Government was discriminating against with the November 1984 regulations. What kind of person did the Government see as ripping off the unemployment insurance system? I read a letter from a worker who had been paying into unemployment insurance for 38 years and had never filed a claim, then found he had been disqualified. I would like to read another letter. My correspondent states, and I quote:

> I would like some information on U.I.C. claims with reference to military annuities. I was retired due to my age in 1979 after serving 25 years in the Canadian Forces (sea). My gross pension is $685.00 which is very difficult for my wife and I to live on.
> With the employment situation as it is in the Cowichan Valley it is next to impossible at my age to get a full-time job. I had part-time work until last month and due to cut-backs was laid off and am unable to draw U.I.C. benefits.
> As I have been paying into this long before January, 1986, I was wondering if I will be able to draw again.
> Thank you for looking into this matter for me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I am sure all Hon. Members would like to extend the courtesy of being heard to their colleague. The Chair would certainly like to hear the Hon. Member as well.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, even if my colleagues did not wish to extend the courtesy of listening to me, perhaps they could extend the courtesy to those workers who have been discriminated against with this kind of legislation. The working people of Canada deserve at least to have their case heard by this House rather than that it be drowned by this babble of conversation taking place at the present time.

We have to ask how Bill C-50 addresses the injustice perpetrated upon the working people. How does it address the discrimination which has resulted in these people paying into the unemployment insurance system all these years and when it comes to their turn to draw benefits, they find they are disqualified by reason of the fact they are in receipt of a pension? What does Bill C-50 do? It goes one-third of the way toward justice. Over 50,000 people were affected by the regulations of November, 1984 which hit severance pay and pension income and counted those incomes as earned income for the purposes of unemployment insurance. Fifty thousand people were affected by those regulations. When we study this Bill we find that 33,000 people will still be discriminated against. Every year 33,000 people will find they are disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance because of the provisions of this Bill.

This Bill is illogical and unfair. To illustrate, if you can imagine, Madam Speaker, two people who retire from the Armed Forces at the same time after putting in approximately the same number of years. One of those people is able to get a short-term job. He works a certain number of weeks and then that job runs out and he is laid off. However, he is able to collect unemployment insurance because he has worked enough weeks to qualify. His pension income does not count against him for the purposes of drawing unemployment insurance.

The other person gets out of the Armed Forces at the same time as his buddy. He looks for work but is not able to find any. He is not able to find even temporary work, and he is not able to claim unemployment insurance. Instead, he is told that his pension income has to count as earned income and therefore he does not qualify. Where is the justice in that? Where is the logic?

I think we have to realize that pension income is a form of saved income from previous employment. It is unfair to treat it differently from other types of savings. It is unfair to treat pension income differently, when it comes to unemployment insurance, from the way we treat RRSPs or investments, for example.

The Conservative Government says that it does not want to use the unemployment insurance system to finance retirement. There can be a legitimate debate on that issue. Personally, I think that when we have such a high rate of unemployment among young people it might make sense to encourage early retirement. If having people go on unemployment insurance for a year will encourage early retirement and get people out of the labour force so that younger people can come up and get a job, then that makes sense to me. But the Conservatives say that they are opposed to that principle.

Even if we accept the argument of the Conservatives that it is wrong to use unemployment insurance as an inducement to early retirement, surely they do not need to use these types of Draconian measures, these types of unfair measures, to discourage people from taking it. They could use the job search provisions that are already in the Unemployment Insurance Act to ensure that anyone retiring and in receipt of a pension income would have to be going through regular job search before he or she could collect unemployment insurance. The provisions are already in place. Why do they go to these lengths to discriminate against older workers in the way that they are doing?

The November, 1984, changes were intended to cut the deficit. But why are we cutting the deficit on the backs of older workers, many of whom are retired service personnel, Public Service people and people from the private sector? Why are we trying to cut the deficit on their backs when the unemployment insurance fund will be running a $1.6 billion surplus in 1987-88? Why are we picking on older workers who are at their most vulnerable, people in the age bracket of 45 to 60 who still need to work in order to pay their mortgages and to finance their children's educations? Why are these people being singled out for this type of unfair attack? It is all of a piece with the Government's earlier attempt to put a cap on increases to the Old Age Security pension which it almost got away with if it had not been for a few hundred thousand seniors who cried foul two years ago. Studies have shown that only one worker in ten who is laid off at that critical age is going to be able to find work again. Thus only one worker in ten is really able to benefit from this type of situation.

In addition, this type of legislation discriminates very seriously against people in the poorer provinces. It discriminates against workers in areas of high unemployment, in the Maritimes, Newfoundland, British Columbia, and in certain parts of northern Quebec and Ontario. But it discriminates particularly against those in the Maritimes and British Columbia where a large number of retired service personnel live. This type of discrimination is unfair. It is bitterly resented by these people who have served their country.

This legislation admits that there was an error made in November of 1984. It admits that those regulations were wrong and poorly thought out. But it is a half-hearted admission. We are not taking the type of action that is needed to provide justice for these working people.

Therefore, along with my colleagues, I will be opposing this legislation. It is illogical. It is unfair. It is contradictory. I do not understand how the Government can introduce such legislation. I do not understand how government Members can stand up and speak in support of it. I do not understand how members of the Liberal Party can say that they will vote for it. I hope that the least we will get from the Liberal Party is a bit of a split and some of them will think about this and vote with us against it.

In short, this legislation is wrong. We oppose it completely.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to join in the debate today on the proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. These amendments deal with two areas: the treatment of unemployment insurance in relation to pension income, and the treatment of unemployment insurance in relation to severance pay.

Following changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act on January 5, 1986, a pension earned by an individual was treated as income during the period received and was deducted accordingly from unemployment insurance benefits as per a formula set out in the regulations. These changes were rooted in the belief that unemployment insurance should not be used as a supplement to pension income earned by those individuals who have retired and who have chosen to withdraw completely from the labour market. This has never been the intent of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and this Government is still committed to that belief.

However, the Government recognizes that there are many individuals who have retired and who, by choice or by economic necessity, have decided to remain active members of the workforce. Upon assuming a second career these people continue to pay unemployment insurance premiums, as is their legal obligation. At some point in the future an individual may be forced to submit a claim for unemployment insurance based on insured earnings accumulated during his second career. It would be inequitable to then deduct pension earnings from these unemployment insurance benefits, the result of which would all but eliminate most claims.

The intent of Bill C-50 is to correct this inequity by allowing pensioners who requalify for unemployment insurance by working subsequent to their retirement to collect benefits without being penalized for collecting a pension as well. I feel that this is a good measure. This principle is one which Members of the House should support.

In addition, Bill C-50 will compensate any individual for lost unemployment insurance benefits based on a claim begun after January 5, 1986, providing that that claim resulted from post-retirement earnings. This is a good measure as well. I find it difficult to believe that any Member of the House could vote against it.

Bill C-50 creates two categories of claimants who will benefit from the proposed changes. The first category includes those referred to previously, that is, claimants who are capable of requalifying for unemployment insurance on the basis of post-retirement employment. Some 30,000 people per year are expected to fall within this category with a projected reduction of savings in the unemployment insurance account of approximately $230 million for the fiscal years 1985-86 through to 1987-88.

The second category consists of those claimants who are not capable of requalifying but who have applied for benefits before January 5, 1986. It appears that, prior to the introduction of the January 5, 1986 amendments, some people were misinformed as to what these amendments would imply. As a result, many people retired and applied for unemployment benefits based on the mistaken assumption that their pension would not affect their benefit claim.

The Minister has dealt with this problem clearly and concisely. Under Bill C-50 all pensioners who applied for UI benefits prior to January 5, 1986, will now be dealt with according to the regulations that were in place before the January 5, 1986 changes. Any benefits lost since that date will be refunded. This is a good measure, and I find it difficult to believe that any Member of the House could vote against it.

The second issue with which Bill C-50 concerns itself is the matter of severance pay. Following previous changes in the treatment of payments on separation, some confusion existed which resulted in inequitable treatment. In order to prevent this occurrence, clear up the existing confusion, and treat all claimants fairly, Bill C-50 extends the qualifying and benefit period up to a maximum of 104 weeks when the separation payment has prevented the payment of unemployment insurance benefits or has delayed the start of a claim. This change merely delays the receipt of unemployment insurance and does not result in any loss of benefits.

The Minister has stated that Bill C-50 proposes changes which demonstrate the commitment of the Government to ensuring fair and equitable treatment of all workers. I wish to echo this sentiment. I applaud the Government, and the Minister in particular, for these measures.

With this in mind, I would urge that the Government carefully monitor the unemployment insurance delivery system in the future with the goal of eliciting continuing improvements. When a person retires early, he or she may be retiring permanently or about to embark upon a new career. Such a person who gets a job answers the question clearly and without doubt and requalifies for benefits without pension deductions.

Jobs are not as plentiful in all parts of Canada. I suggest that the Government should consider a future improvement to put a person forced to take early retirement, who proves that he or she is actively seeking work, in the same category as one who has obtained a job in that the claimant could obtain benefits without pension deduction. I have in mind people like members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who fall into this category.

All in all I feel the changes covered in Bill C-50 represent a tremendous step forward, and I would urge that a future goal of the Minister be to consider additional changes along the lines I have suggested.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who just spoke. Could the Hon. Member explain why his Government can ask for $186 billion to buy submarines. Why it can spend money on military equipment to kill people, to fight an otherwise unknown enemy, and why it cannot spend the millions of dollars that are right there in the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which belongs to Canadian workers, to ensure that older workers are treated fairly? I know the Hon. Member as a man who is sincere and dedicated to defending the rights of his constituents. Would the Hon. Member be willing to support the demands contained in the amendments the Opposition intends to present, which are the demands of the Pan-Canadian coalition, to ensure that all workers who took early retirement before January 5, 1986, either voluntarily or involuntarily—the Hon. Member is aware of people in his riding who were unable to go to the unemployment insurance office. Suppose a person stopped working on December 31. The unemployment insurance office is closed on January 1. Because the person in question received separation payments, that person would not go to the unemployment insurance office until after January 10, and unfortunately, if the Government maintains its decision, there will be at least 2,500 people in Canada who will not be reimbursed. Will the Hon. Member, considering that he defends the rights of his constituents, support the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party?

[English]

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question which was like a multiple choice question. It contained quite a few questions.

People who retired before January 5, 1986 are covered by the Bill and are henceforth entitled to benefit. Of course, everyone is always entitled to apply for benefit. The question is whether the pension income applied to the benefit would reduce it to zero or substantially reduce it.

I assume the Hon. Member means with his question that people who retired technically and filled in the forms after January 5, 1986 should not be subjected to the regulation.

The Bill deals with people who retired before January 5, 1986, and, substantially, pension will not be considered in computing their benefits in the future. The Bill also deals with people who retire after January 5, 1986 and subsequently obtain a job. In the future, after they obtain a job they too are, to put it colloquially, home free.

What about people who retire after January 5, 1986 and before they get a job? That is the area which is not covered in the Bill, and that is the area which I drew to the attention of the House in my speech.

I hope that answers the Hon. Member's question. He asked me whether I would support a Liberal amendment. I would have to see the amendment and make a decision, when I see it, as to whether it is in order. I know one was introduced earlier, but I have not had the opportunity to obtain the "blues" and read them yet. However, I will look at them, and when the time comes for the vote I guess the Hon. Member will know.

I want to thank him very much for his interest in older workers and in all Canadians. I thank him for the hard work he did on the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration that brought in some excellent recommendations at which we should be looking in the future.

Mr. Henderson: Madam Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I know he has many veterans and service people in his riding. I must say that I have always known him to be a conscientious and fair-minded worker.

However, I want to ask him about the post-January 5, 1986 amendment which the Bill really covers. Armed Forces people, those employed in the RCMP, and others have had premiums for UIC deducted from their pay cheques. Under the Bill they will no longer be able to collect UI benefits after having paid in for some 25 years to 30 years, unless they can go out and find another job and work from 10 weeks to 14 weeks depending upon the variable entrance requirements in the location in which they happen to retire.

Could the Hon. Member comment upon the fairness of that one aspect? It seems that when one pays into unemployment insurance or any insurance, it should be there when one needs it. I realize that there is a very slight distinction when someone retires. However, in most cases in the Armed Forces they are not retiring voluntarily; they are being forced out. I feel that they should be eligible for UIC benefits the same as any other employee in any other occupation.

It seems to me—and I want a brief comment from the Hon. Member—that it is very unfair for the Government to ask these people to pay premiums all their lives and, just because they cannot find alternative employment after retirement, to tell them that they are no longer eligible to draw UIC benefits. I think it is wrong, and I should like to have some comments from the Hon. Member. I know he will give me fair comments on it.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his statement and for his question. They have been made with the clarity, experience, pungency, and sincerity we have come to expect of him.

I do not think there is any basic difference between the Hon. Member and myself in respect of this particular problem. The problem is that a person who retires early is not denied unemployment insurance.

Under the regulation, the pension income is considered as income and it is evaluated in the formula. It operates to reduce the amount of unemployment insurance a person receives. It is a relative type of thing.

However, in too many instances the weight of the pension can entirely wipe out the unemployment insurance, which substantially brings us to the same point the Hon. Member mentioned.

I see a difference between a person who retires early and exits from the workforce and a person who is forced to retire early, like many members of the Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I feel that the people in the latter category who are forced out early and who are actively seeking work—that is the other qualification—should be eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

• (1530)

That is the point I made in my speech, and one which I asked the Department and the Government to take a look at regarding future change. One could make this change by indicating that pension income will not be considered as income for UI purposes. One could do it by indicating that there is a rebuttable presumption. A person who retires is exiting from the workforce and, by evidence of the individual looking for work or with the amendment which the Minister is bringing in, obtains work. The amendments of the Minister go a long way in the direction that I would like to see us go. I laud him for that. I think it is great that the Minister has done more than anyone else in recent years in that regard. I feel there is room for further improvement, as I indicated in my speech. I hope, if the Hon. Member has a chance, he will cast an eye over it and offer me his constructive criticism, which I value very much.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I, too, am well aware of the kind of person the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie) is. I sat on the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration for many long hours. We sat side by side and discussed this matter at great length. The Member says the Minister goes a long way with his changes concerning pension income and unemployment insurance. The Hon. Member says that if a second job can be obtained and the person loses that second job, that person can qualify for benefits. He thinks this is a real move.

I know that the Hon. Member represents a riding, an area, very much like mine. It is completely dependent on resource extraction. Will he stand up and tell the House whether he thinks that a person in his community who takes early retirement and actively seeks a job can find that second job in a riding like his, like mine or in ridings throughout Atlantic Canada that are very similar to ours? If he thinks that person can get a job, I would then say, yes, the Minister has gone a long way toward making some worth-while changes. If, however, the chances of getting that second job are very remote, then this Bill is not serving his constituents, my constituents, or constituents in regions across this country like ours. Really, it is nothing.

Mr. Howie: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and indicate that I value his question because of the very high regard in which I hold him. The Member makes a good point with respect to people who have difficulty finding the first post-retirement job.

I had a meeting in my constituency with about 500 people. Many found jobs at the army base from which they had retired. They told me of the difficulties they had encountered because this pension UI regulation was haunting them with respect to the post-retirement job they got and all the other post-retirement jobs which they may get in the future. They made strong representations to have this section removed. I am very pleased that the Minister has removed it. I was most sincere when I paid him tribute for doing it.

The Member mentions the other problem of people looking for work. If the Member looks at my speech, I think he will find that I covered that point, at least it was my intention to do so. I brought it to the attention of the House in the strongest and most efficient fashion that I could. I thank the Member for giving me the opportunity to underline the fact that I did bring that matter forward.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, this is an issue in which I became involved very early in the debate, as early as November 8, 1984 when we first heard of the changes which the Government was making in the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations. It was interesting to realize what tack the Government was taking in its approach. The Government obviously zeroed in on those on long term employment, such as people in the Canadian Armed Forces. Their benefits when coming out of the military into civilian life ended up meaning really nothing to them. They could not collect the full amount of unemployment insurance. I know of some of my constituents who got out of the Armed Forces and collected as little as $2 a week. Some of them got $16 a pay-cheque. The worst is that those changes were simply unfair.

Let us take a look at what went on in the longer process. The Globe and Mail zeroed in on these changes in December, 1984. It was an ongoing issue early in 1985. The first question I asked in the House was on March 26, 1985. I mentioned the loss of unemployment insurance benefits because of severance pay. That change was to become effective on January 1, 1985. Members of the Canadian Armed Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others in positions where their type of occupation requires them to retire early get an annuity. You do not try at the time of retirement to describe the difference between an annuity and a pension because it is very difficult for anyone to understand. That issue also came up during the debate. Members of the Armed Forces or the RCMP who get out in their forties take a monthly pay with them.

The unfairness is not just the case that people did not qualify for full unemployment insurance once they got out of the service or whatever, but because they still paid premiums like everybody else. Their pension income or annuity, whatever you want to call it, was part of their pay package and agreement while working. But the Government is taking this away simply by changing regulations.

I remember many of us asking questions of the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald). Time and time again she would repeat the dates on which various announcements were made. The announcements meant nothing. If she was going to change them, she said would announce them some time. It had nothing to do with the rationale for having done so. After she finished naming all the dates a number of times, she got around to saying that everything would be referred to the Forget Commission. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about it one day. He told me that it was a very complex problem and that it would be referred to the Forget Commission. That was his way out. But it was the Government that made the issue complex by changing the regulations in the first place.

Along the way we had a press report and comments emanating from the then Deputy Prime Minister, the then Member for Yukon and also from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who disagreed with their colleague in Cabinet, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration. She still did not listen to them. Yet she would rise in the House and say that if the Hon. Member had representations to make or had any useful comments, she would be glad to receive them. I did not think there was much sense in me speaking my mind if she would not listen to her own cabinet colleagues who were speaking to her about it.

I appreciate the problem faced by the Hon. Member for York—Sunbury (Mr. Howie). He spoke very well on this matter this afternoon. For those of us who represent large military communities, it really created a great problem. Although members of the military community choose the ridings in which they vote, those of us who have large military bases in our ridings have many more such constituents than other Members of the House of Commons.

At that time, the Government's regulations denied unemployment insurance benefits to those military personnel who were paying premiums the same as anyone else. They were met with a double whammy. Members of the RCMP and the Canadian Forces, unless they get into serious difficulty, continue to be fully employed and, as a result, never make any demands on the Unemployment Insurance Fund. However, when they get out, they cannot collect the full amount of unemployment insurance benefits because the benefits they earned while serving those years were used against them. Actually, their own pay packages were being used against their ability to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

The Government attempted to hide its decision at that time by passing it into law through an Order in Council. It changed the regulations and effectively bypassed the House of Commons. These changes were brought in in such a way that opposition Members were prevented from debating them in the House of Commons. We woke up one morning to find that the Government had made all these changes in Cabinet and that we were suddenly faced with new rules for collecting unemployment insurance benefits.

We tried to tell the Government that if it could change the regulations to deny people benefits after they had paid for them, then it had equal authority to change those regulations back so that those people would be treated fairly and could collect unemployment insurance benefits when required between jobs. However, the Government never accepted that. It simply turned everything over to the Forget Commission.

The Government expected the Forget Commission to be the answer to all of its problems. We also know that when the Forget Commission dealt with these issues relating to unemployment insurance, it too disagreed on them. There was much dissension within the commission while the matter was being studied. In fact, two members of the Forget Commission disagreed publicly with the changes the then Minister of Employment and Immigration had made. However, that did not faze her. She went on her merry way defending her defenceless position. Then the Government finally saw the light and decided to change those regulations much later on.

The regulation relating to members of the RCMP, the Armed Forces and others employed similarly has been changed but it is certainly not a very satisfactory solution. The Government has told those people that their pensions will continue to be used as income consideration when applying for unemployment insurance benefits. As a result, people coming out of the Armed Forces after January 5, 1986 will apply for unemployment insurance and will receive reduced rates because of the annuities for which they applied under their financial arrangements and pay packages throughout the years they worked. That is unjust.

Then there is a regulation that says that if those people get out of the Armed Forces, the RCMP or equivalent employment, and if they work the required number of weeks depending on in which region of Canada they live, they will be able to qualify without their pensions coming into play. The problem here is the fact that when many people get out of the Armed Forces, they have difficulties in civilian life. Many of them are trained soldiers. Some have held jobs that allow them to adjust easily into civilian life, but what happens to the people who are trained in fighting, warfare and handling equipment used in securing a country? These people may not have an expertise that would allow them to fit easily into civilian life. As a result, it takes them much longer to adjust from their old jobs to their new jobs. Surely during that period of time, that regulation should apply.

I would like to see this regulation changed to allow for people who are in that position. Some of these people even have to take training after they leave their old jobs in order to get new jobs. Surely that should be taken into consideration as an added argument in favour of changing that regulation.

On Wednesday, May 14, 1986, an article appeared in The Globe and Mail bearing the headline "Ottawa determined to fight in growing battle over UI pay". It reads in part as follows:

> The current 3,000 appeals will mushroom soon to about 30,000, said Ed Halayko, spokesman for the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association.

I would like to pay tribute to Ed Halayko today and to the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association and other associations for the way they carried on this battle. They truly realized what this meant to people with whom they could relate very well and with whom they had associated every day of their lives.

Service personnel will continue to retire and to face this problem between retiring and acquiring their first jobs. I must ask the Minister a serious question, and it is one I have not heard him answer. Why should members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police be required to pay unemployment insurance premiums if they cannot make use of them in a better way than that which this legislation provides? That is the injustice of the whole thing.

I would like to put on record a letter from a member of the Canadian Armed Forces. It reads as follows:

> I am presently a member of the Canadian Forces (CF) and have been for the past 26 years. My home town is Eston, Saskatchewan, and I am presently stationed at St. Louis, Missouri, U.S.A.

• (1550)

Here is a man who served for 26 years, who obviously never received a single UIC cheque during that period of time, yet paying premiums the same as any other Canadian, knowing full well when this came in that he could not collect the full amount at the end. I go on, Madam Speaker:

> Approximately 20 years ago, it was legislated by our Government that CF personnel would contribute to the UI Commission with the understanding that CF members would benefit from the investment if required. As you are well aware, Mr. McKnight, CF personnel must retire early in life, (in my case 50 years of age) and seek continued employment because the CF pension benefits are not sufficient to survive in the Canadian economic system.
> Being released from the CF at a relatively early age is a traumatic enough experience, however, to pay into an insurance system that will not benefit us while seeking new employment is ludicrous, not ethical, and against my human rights.

There is the precise message that the Government must get. There must be something done to make this system fair for members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others. We hear in this House of Commons about moral conduct. I say to the Government, Madam Speaker, that it is immoral conduct to charge people for something that they do not get. It is legal robbery in a real sense. Going on with this letter:

> Generally, a member of the CF who retires with 20-25 years of service will not be eligible to draw any UIC benefits.
> My second concern is that when I retire, and obtain employment, I will still be required to contribute to a system in which I will derive no benefits should I become unemployed.

At that time he was referring to his pension that would still apply. We have learned since that that has been adjusted somewhat, but it is still not fair, Madam Speaker. That person is still going to be affected during the most challenging part of his life. That is between his major occupational career and the next job, starting his second career.

We know simply that this Government got into a mess that it never thought it would get into. It is trying to crawl back out of it by leaving old inequities remain and creating new ones. As everybody in this House knows, this Government chopped $100 million out of the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited budget and wanted a cut-back in employees. It gave them the golden handshake, you know, "get out, we'll pay you to leave your job." About 550 employees have left as of this time or will leave very shortly. These people are being shoved out on retirement at an early age, again having paid unemployment insurance premiums all their working careers with that Crown corporation, and are not able to collect, Madam Speaker.

So what happens? I'll tell you. As the Member of Parliament for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, which contains Canadian Forces Base Petawawa and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited Chalk River where people are being pushed out to on retirement, I got a real education in the unemployment insurance regulations and a real education on how unsympathetic this Government is to long-term employees.

This legislation is far from perfect. If it is not fixed up by this Government, I hope it will be fixed up by a Liberal Government after the next election, putting some human feeling, common sense and honesty back into the system, saying to people "if you are going to pay for something, we are going to produce it for you." If that is not done, then no Government in Canada should be charging unemployment insurance premiums.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the answers from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, the Finance Minister and the present Minister, those two in particular, were anything but satisfactory. The present Minister has done sort of a half job, a patch job of coming back and trying to save the face of the Government. But the face of the Government will not be saved until they put some integrity back into their own system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is to be commended on his remarks, and I think it is clear the Hon. Member is very familiar with the situation of Canada's military personnel, and with the adverse effects these people will suffer as a result of his Government's failure to act. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he thinks about a situation where we have two citizens, each with a weekly income of $385. Since unemployment insurance benefits represent 60 per cent of someone's income, this means that they each would be entitled to $231 in unemployment insurance benefits. Unfortunately, this is where their problems start, and where we see the double standard applied to older workers. One worker gets $300 a month from a pension plan to which he and his employer each contributed half, while the other worker gets $360 from a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, an RRSP.

Now, the one who gets payments from an employee-employer pension plan is no longer entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. The other person, however, also a worker, who is getting the same amount from an RRSP, is entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits.

I wonder what the Hon. Member has to say about this Conservative Government's decision to create two classes of older workers, whether they happen to be military personnel or people working in the private sector, and about the fact that the Government makes no distinction between a person who leaves his job and the person who loses his job. I would appreciate some comments on this aspect of the question.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: I thank the Hon. Member for that question because I realize that while I am talking, I am using the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces as an example. I used others along the way. I think the Hon. Member has really highlighted another lack, another injustice on the part of this Government. There is no question that the Hon. Member has hit the nail right on the head. The Government treats one class of people one way and another class of people a different way. The very fact that it brought in some of the regulations it did on the unemployment insurance legislation simply proves that it really does not have much sympathy for the individual who loses his or her job.

When it brought in changes to the regulations, the Government said it would be very complex. I said in my speech that it created the complex situation by the changes. What they tried to do during the election campaign and after was to put things in very simplistic terms. "We are going to do this and that is it" and "We have got the majority and we are going to shove it through and if you don't like it, that's tough." That is what they are telling Canadians. By using the simplistic approach they are attacking some and not others. In the words of the Minister of Finance to me, it is a complex situation. When you start changing regulations in a general sense, you are not differentiating between someone who retires and draws upon a Retirement Savings Pension Plan and a person who loses his or her job and needs unemployment insurance.

The Government is using the golden handshake to try to get people to quit their jobs and then uses this to justify not paying unemployment insurance in the same way as it used the pension plan as an excuse. Under the new regulations, the Government will allow them to receive benefits in spite of that. Under the old regulations, they would not have been affected, but that regulation has been changed for those who will receive a pension under an RRSP.

In summary, the Conservative Government thought in very simplistic terms about the future of the country when it got on its rambunctious political trail and said how it was going to change everything in the country and set things right. After only three years, parts of the country are in the worst mess they have ever been in simply because the Government thinks everything is simple. It is beginning to learn that everything is not simple. There are many areas which must be considered differently.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, in the Hon. Member's speech he made some very excellent points. He brought to the attention of the House some very sad stories about individuals in the Armed Forces who were hurt by the unemployment insurance cuts introduced by the Conservative Government, which sad stories will be continued by this legislation forever and a day unless the Government agrees to amend it.

The stories the Member told were bad enough. However, does he realize that under this legislation if two individuals were laid off from the same firm in December, 1985, one may have been fortunate enough to have made his application for unemployment insurance before January 5, 1986, but the other, perhaps because of illness, misinformation, the Christmas or New Years holidays, or whatever, may not have made his application until January 6. The first person will get fully reimbursed while the other will not.

That is because instead of correcting the mistake it has made the Government is perpetuating it by inserting a date which divides pensioners in the same situation into two classes. As I said, the Hon. Member's stories were bad, but was he aware of the ridiculous situation which I have described which will result from this legislation?

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, I am very much aware of that situation. It is as a result of the Government's approach of putting forward a very simplistic solution to a very complex problem. The Hon. Member mentioned the situation of two people laid off before Christmas, 1985, one of whom submitted an application before January 5, 1986, while the other one did not. I believe there could be other reasons for that as well. The Government did not have a campaign to advertise the new regulations which it brought in. It did not send Ministers across Canada to tell Canadians that unless they applied for UIC before January 5, 1986, they would get nothing upon retirement.

If the Government is going to make major changes in policy which affect the daily lives of everyone, surely it has an obligation to put on a public relations program and tell people about it. It is not only when the Government thinks it has something worth-while to tell that it should make public announcements. If it is going to bring in bad news, it had better tell people of that too instead of making their lives worse by having them find out after the fact, when it is too late. I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde).

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Thank you for recognizing me, Madam Speaker. After two and a half months since Bill C-50 was tabled in the House for first reading, I am very pleased that we are on second reading, and possibly third reading today so that at long last the 1985 early retirees will be able to benefit and get their cheques at the earliest opportunity.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues in the House will remember that a few weeks ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) announced his intention to change the regulations on pension income so that all workers would be given fair and equitable treatment.

Under these regulations which came into force on January 5, 1986, any pension income derived from employment was considered to be earnings. In other words, the Government made it crystal clear that people who were going into retirement should not view unemployment insurance as an additional source of income.

The provisions of Bill C-50 with which I will deal today do not change anything to the Government position, and I want to make this clear from the outset.

The Government agrees that there is a basic difference between a person who retires for good and another who quit his job to begin a new career. Since people in the latter group, men and women seeking new challenges, continue to be part of the active population, we believe they should be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits regardless of the pension income they might be drawing.

Just so there will be no misunderstanding, Madam Speaker, I want to illustrate the consequences the new provisions of the Bill will have for certain retirees. In the case of a worker who retired in February last year and who applied for UI benefits pursuant to the January 5, 1986 regulations, his unemployment benefits would be reduced by an amount equal to his pension income. So far, no change.

But let us suppose this man found a new job in May, 1986, for example, and was laid off a few months later, under the previous regulations his UI benefits would have continued to be reduced to the extent of his pension income.

Madam Speaker, this is where we intervene through the provisions of Bill C-50 tabled on April 1. As a result, the worker whose unemployment insurance benefits would have been reduced because of his pension income will be entitled to a refund of the total amount withheld until then if his benefit period is based on ulterior employment.

The effect of this amendment is to make the changes in the regulations on pensions, which have been in effect since April 5, 1987, apply retroactively to January 5, 1986.

Madam Speaker, this legislation also affects those who applied for unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986, and who were already receiving benefits by that date. When the regulations on pensions came into effect on January 5, 1986, retirees who were receiving pension income either lost their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits or received reduced payments, so that the Government had to take action to ensure these people were treated fairly.

Madam Speaker, the Government acted as follows: The eligibility of these persons will from now on be determined according to the old rules. Let me explain. A retired worker whose unemployment insurance benefits were interrupted or reduced because of his pension income and who applied for benefits before January 5, 1986, will be reimbursed for the equivalent of the amounts previously withheld from his benefits. That is clear.

Furthermore, Bill C-50 contains another important change since March, 1985. A person who received severance payments upon termination of employment found that this delayed the beginning of his benefit period or reduced the number of weeks of insurable employment for his qualifying period.

Madam Speaker, according to the amendment proposed by the Government, separation payments will no longer reduce the number of weeks of insurable employment or the duration of the benefit period. We still abide by the principle that no one should be receiving severance payments and unemployment insurance benefits at the same time. I think that should be understood, Madam Speaker. However, in some cases such payments were spread over many weeks. In extreme cases, the simple fact of receiving separation payments spread over a long period could make a person ineligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

Under the new provisions, both the qualifying and the benefit periods of the claimants will be extended by the number of weeks corresponding to the moneys paid at the time of employment termination. Thus, most people in such a situation will not loose the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Plan at the time when they most need it. The new provisions will be deemed to have come into effect on April 5, 1987.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I would like to outline the three major changes proposed in Bill C-50 introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard).

Since April 5, 1987, workers who rejoined the labour market after retirement have the same rights to unemployment insurance as any other Canadian worker, whatever their pension income. I repeat that pension income will in no way reduce the amount of the benefits to which retirees who have rejoined the workforce would be entitled. The Government proposes to have this amendment come into effect retroactively. People in this situation can ask for reimbursement of the amounts kept back during an unemployment insurance benefit period which began after January 5, 1986.

The second change concerns retirees who receive a pension income and who had claimed unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986.

When the amendments proposed by the Government have been approved, the former rules will retroactively apply to the entitlement of such claimants. The sums deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits because of their pension income will be reimbursed by the Commission.

Under the third amendment proposed in Bill C-50, workers whose benefit period would be reduced or eliminated because their severance pay is spread out over many weeks will maintain full entitlement. The qualifying and benefit periods will be extended by the aggregate of weeks represented by the severance pay.

Madam Speaker, by specifying the terms of payment and adjusting certain provisions of the Act to current economic conditions, the Conservative Government is showing flexibility, quickness of action and an open mind. Like my colleagues, I am firmly convinced that our unemployment insurance legislation now meets the expectations and needs of Canadians as well as it possibly can.

I was listening to the questions which my Liberal colleagues asked each other earlier. When someone is not satisfied with a decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, he can appeal to the Unemployment Insurance Arbitration Board. This is his right. If the decision of the Arbitration Board is not in his favour, he can also appeal to the Federal Court.

In the case of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, anyone who feels his rights have been infringed, whether by Bill C-50 or by anything else, is entitled to an appeal at these two levels.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Judging from his last remarks, Madam Speaker, I can't imagine that my hon. colleague has had much experience with the Arbitration Board. First of all, the Arbitration Board intervenes in a case only to appreciate the points of fact and the points of law. I understand that the Arbitration Board does not have the legal capacity to change the terms of reference within which it must operate, on the one hand. On the other hand, the Federal Court can intervene only in matters of law and does not have the jurisdiction to change the interpretation of the facts arrived at by the Arbitration Board.

Having said that, I should like to direct to my hon. friend a question which, under the circumstances, appears to me to be outright indecent. The question is this: Let us imagine two individuals, Madam Speaker, one having contributed to a private pension fund, and the other to a fund jointly contributed to by himself and his employer. For what reason, if we are to apply the Act strictly and faithfully, are there two different status with respect to unemployment insurance benefits? When the time comes for him to retire, the individual who contributed to a pension fund, better known as a RRSP, is in no way penalized, while the other individual who lacked the financial capability to invest in a pension fund and who is at the mercy of his employer administered pension fund, is penalized because his benefits are taken into account. How can we explain, justify and reconcile these two situations which are quite clear-cut and obviously discriminatory in the legislation before us?

Mr. Plourde: First of all, Madam Speaker, I did not mean to challenge the Unemployment Insurance Act, but rather his interpretation of it.

In reply to his second question, I should like to tell my hon. friend that for every negative side, there is a positive side. We could talk all day long about the negative side, but I have heard no one talk about the positive side, which is that not all early retirees are not entitled to unemployment insurance benefits... There are early retirees who receive a minimal pension income and who therefore are entitled to practically the full payment of their unemployment insurance benefits. Just as there is also a provision in the unemployment insurance legislation which still makes it possible for someone reporting an income to draw 25 per cent of his unemployment insurance benefits... Therefore, we are not talking here about all early retirees, but about some people in Canada who feel wronged, but the majority of them who are not getting even a minimal pension income are entitled to receive full unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I have a comment following the Hon. Member's contribution. I would also like to emphasize to the House that the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde) was one of the three MPs in the Conservative Party who fought the good fight for our early retirees, which resulted in the legislation now before us, Bill C-50, so that for people who indeed took early retirement before January 5, 1986, we could straighten out the situation caused by information that was hazy at that time, which hurt our early retirees. I want to commend him in this House because he was one of those, together with the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) and myself, who worked on that so that we could now have this Bill. Thanks to his work and that of others, we are now ensuring that all our early retirees, that is the 55,000 early retirees, will benefit from the $295 million that will be paid because indeed of Bill C-50.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, can the Hon. Member explain the difference between two guys in my constituency of course who retire from Firestone Company, two guys who retire the same day, one who applied before January 5 and the other who applied on January 10. Why should one get benefits but not the other?

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, I think I answered that question earlier for an Hon. Member from the Liberal Party. This is where indeed the UI Arbitration Board gets into play, on the perception and wrong interpretation of someone who, because of the Holiday season, was pre-retired at the end of December and who comes to the UI office on January 5, 6 or 7, 1986, and at that point, there is an interpretation, and I feel, Madam Speaker, the only solution for those people, and I am ready to support them, is to report to the Unemployment Insurance Arbitration Board.

Speaking of legislation this House is called upon to pass, you know, Madam Speaker, I have not once in my political life seen a Bill that made it unanimously in this House. Look for instance at the Old Age Security pensions. They are paid to people when they reach age 65. Why not give them to those 64 and over? We have heard that kind of debate before. We heard that kind of suggestions from the Opposition, when this Conservative Government gave a pension to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, and then they asked: Why not give it to unmarried people? Well, Madam Speaker, no legislation is perfect. There is always room for improvement.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I have just heard the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn). We have learned that there was only three Tory members who wanted to promote the cause of the preretirees according to what the Hon. Member for Jonquière has just said. However the Hon. Member has mentioned that pensioners who have gone into early retirement or have lost their job before January 5, 1986 and did not claim any unemployment insurance benefit should apply to the arbitration board. However, I put the following question to the Hon. Member: What is he doing here? Is he not a member responsible for drawing up clear and specific laws or is he going to ask the judge of the arbitration board to draw up some legislation while he goes away? We have here a fine opportunity to draw up some clear and specific legislation. Why does the Hon. Member insist on having his constituents, the older workers, going to appeal to obtain a decision? why does the Hon. Member want to make things harder for his constituents? Why does he not rise and say to the Minister and then to the Prime Minister: "Listen, what you are doing is unfair." You are going to put in the Bill that every person who has stopped—and later we will have an amendment. I look forward to seeing the courage of the Hon. Member for Jonquière, when he will be asking that anyone who stopped working before January 5, 1986 and can provide it be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, like others. He knows that very often people in his riding went to the local employment centre, or even to his constituency office, to be told that under the Unemployment Insurance Act they were not entitled to benefits immediately. They had to wait because of their severance pay.

What is the Hon. Member doing here if he does not want to pass clear and precise legislation?

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) asked me that question, because I represent the riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup. He said only three Members of the Conservative Party rose to support Bill C-50. That is not exactly true, Madam Speaker. Three Members decided to join forces and to meet with the Department of Employment and Immigration and our Minister to let them know that we felt that all early retirees of 1985 had been discriminated against.

Madam Speaker, I did not back out of a meeting called by a senior citizens association in my riding of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup. It had been advertised on the radio, on TV and in the papers. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie was supposed to be there, and also some representative from the NDP. I attended that meeting to tell people the truth, but I was the only one. They did not dare to come and confront me, Madam Speaker. Nevertheless, I defended the early retirees of Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, along with all early retirees in Quebec and Canada, and that is also the purpose of the legislation under study today, Bill C-50. If it had not been for the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, Madam Speaker, who has been stalling on this matter for two and a half months, the early retirees of 1985 would have had their cheques a long time ago.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate today. We have been waiting a long time to carry out this debate. As Members of Parliament will be well aware, the legislation was first introduced on April 1, April Fool's Day. We all realize that the Minister is a jovial and funny fellow. He likes to tell stories and jokes. We thought he was pulling an April Fool's joke on the people of Canada. When he introduced Bill C-50, he said that some Canadians who had retired would receive the unemployment insurance benefits they had paid for. However, if one was going to apply after January 5, 1986, one would no longer be able to collect the unemployment insurance benefits for which they had paid for such a long time.

The people of Canada thought here is a funny Minister, this was a good April Fool's joke, only to find out it was not an April Fool's joke. The Minister was serious. The Government had decided that if an individual decided to retire earlier or was a member of the RCMP or the Canadian Armed Forces and, of course, was required to retire earlier than at age 60 or age 65, or if an individual was laid off because the plant or mine had closed and some severance pay was received, those individuals could not receive unemployment insurance benefits.

The people of Canada quite frankly could not believe the Government would do this. I remember delegation after delegation coming to my constituency office in Kamloops—Shuswap and delegations and rallies on Parliament Hill of people saying: "We cannot believe that the Government would introduce legislation that would be so unjust so as to treat some people one way and to treat other people in a totally different way". Some people who had paid into the unemployment insurance fund for their entire lives would not be able to collect unemployment insurance when they lost their jobs.

I think all of us can appreciate the frustration that these people must have experienced. It is as if we had paid car insurance amounting to hundreds of dollars every year in the event that when we are unfortunate enough to have an accident we make a claim and insurance will be paid to compensate for any loss. Similarly, in comparing the unemployment insurance situation to the car insurance situation, if one gets into a car accident then one goes to one's friendly insurance broker and says: "I am submitting my claim for this accident. I have been paying insurance to your company now many years". If the broker were to say: "We are no longer going to pay you. We have changed our policy, changed our mind. You seem to be someone who has an extra car, and you seem to have a good job. We won't pay you. Come back in a few months after you have exhausted all your funds trying to pay for the damage to your car and we will see what we can do for you", we would laugh. We would simply throw our hands up in despair that the world had gone mad.

Such is the case with the Minister of Employment (Mr. Bouchard). He brings forward Bill C-50 which basically says that if one has retired from the Armed Forces, or from the RCMP, or if one has decided to retire early from one's firm to allow a younger employee an opportunity to come into one's line of work, then one would be penalized because one would not be able to collect unemployment insurance because one would be collecting a modest pension or severance pay. Until one has exhausted that amount of severance pay, or while one is collecting a modest military pension let us say, one's unemployment insurance would be deducted to reflect that. In other words, it would be considered as earned income.

I ask Hon. Members if they can imagine anything so peculiar. Here is an individual, let us say in the Armed Forces, who has been paying unemployment insurance for perhaps 20 years, paying unemployment insurance every week for 20 years. This person then retires, as people in our Armed Forces do after a certain length of time, with a modest pension. It is not enough money to live on.

Here are people from our Armed Forces who must go out to seek other employment, develop other careers, perhaps take advantage of some of the skills or expertise they have learned in the Armed Forces and then apply that to the civilian world. We all know how difficult that is, particularly if one lives in certain parts of Canada and finds oneself retired on a modest military pension and must go out to seek employment. That might take some time. In Kamloops we have just closed down a major military installation. It is very difficult for people in an area in which the unemployment rate is perhaps 15 per cent or 20 per cent to find a job right away. It might take a few months, if one is lucky. Well, in cases such as that, these people would not receive their full entitlement of unemployment insurance benefits because they would be receiving a modest pension. The Government has decided that if one is receiving a pension then one will have one's unemployment insurance deducted to reflect that amount of money since it is considered to be other earned income.

That is grossly unfair. People have been paying into this unemployment insurance for many, many years, with the assumption that when they did retire they would have an opportunity to have a few months, perhaps the better part of a year, to seek other employment. As I have said, in some parts of Canada that is a real challenge.

One must ask oneself: Why would the Government bring in such peculiar legislation? Why would the Government decide to penalize those people who are receiving alternative funds from pension funds, for example, or let us say from severance pay? Why would the Government do this? I suppose one could say the following. There must be a problem with the unemployment insurance fund. There must be a deficit situation.

Such is not the case. Certainly during the depths of the recession there were years when there was a deficit in the unemployment insurance fund. But I ask Hon. Members to consider these figures. In 1985-86 there was a surplus in the unemployment insurance fund of $174 million. In other words, of all the money taken in by UI, and in consideration of the money going out to help those who found themselves unemployed, there was a surplus of $174 million. That is a great deal of money.

In 1986-87 the figure increased to $720 million in surplus funds. For the present year, 1987-88, the projected figure is a surplus of $1.7 billion. That is an incredible amount of money. There is no need to become niggardly and to penalize tens of thousands of people who are already a part of a system today, let alone those who will be part of the system in the future, who have a modest income from a pension into which they paid for so many years and who now find themselves to be ineligible to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

I wish to make one thing clear at the outset. Bill C-50 will bring help to a number of people who were caught as a result of the Government changing the rules of the game half-way through it. About one-third of the 50,000 people affected will receive justice as a result of Bill C-50. But the question remains: What about all the others? What about the other two-thirds of the 50,000 people affected by this change of legislation, let alone all those from now on and into the future who will be affected by it?

As a Party we say that this is a very unjust Bill. It is unfair. It is discriminatory. It is undemocratic. We cannot support a Bill that can be described in those terms. We recognize that it will bring justice to a handful of people across the country, a few thousand people who were caught when the Government changed the rules half-way through the game.

The only thing we can ask is why on earth did the Government do this? Why on earth did the Government decide to discriminate so much against those in the Armed Forces, in particular, and those in the RCMP, and those on private or public pensions to which they have contributed for so many years?

Not everyone is caught in this situation, as we well know. For example, if an employee of a company or a professional decided to invest money, not in a company pension plan or a government pension plan but instead into stocks or bonds, or into property in Hawaii, Jamaica or wherever, and then collected revenues on that for retirement purposes, then one is not excluded. In others words, if that is how one obtains one's pension funds, then that is okay. One can collect that money and collect unemployment insurance as well. However, if a man or woman who served in the RCMP for so many years, served Canada in that respect, and contributed to the government pension plan, then that person cannot obtain full entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits once he or she retires and is seeking alternate forms of employment.

The whole thing is illogical. To me it reflects the reality of a Government that is in a state of total confusion. This is a Government that really has no idea what kind of a society it is attempting to support. This legislation supports those who obtained their retirement income from investment portfolios. It discriminates against those who contributed to company pension plans or government pension plans, as those people in the Armed Forces and the RCMP would obviously be doing.

In a sense this legislation places Canadians into two classes. There are those who contribute to their retirement years in one way versus those who provide for their retirement years in another way.

I wish to indicate another concern which I have. The Government received countless petitions with respect to this matter. I remember my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who day after day with our colleagues in the New Democratic Party presented petitions to the House bearing thousands and thousands of names.

• (1640)

In fact, I remember a stack of petitions presented one day which included 19,000 names of Canadians who were registering opposition to this discriminatory, illogical initiative by the Government. Earlier I mentioned the large rallies on Parliament Hill of retirees who were opposing the imposition of this legislation. They felt that they had contributed to unemployment insurance and pensions all their lives, only to have the Government change the rules at the eleventh hour and keep from them what they believed to be rightfully theirs.

I should like to refer to the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council which tabled a report indicating the following recommendation:

> That the Government not proceed with the announced changes in the unemployment insurance regulations scheduled to take place January 1, 1986,—

In other words, the actual advisory group to the Minister indicated that the Government should not proceed.

The House will recall the famous Forget Commission. A member of that commission, Mr. Roy Bennett, a former executive with Ford Motor Company, spoke out in February, 1986. He was reported in The Winnipeg Free Press as follows:

> In hindsight, I think it would have been better had the Government not made those changes—

Those were the comments of a member of the Forget Commission. He indicated that the Government initiative in this case was not particularly good.

I should also like to refer to letters from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the then Minister of National Defence, the former Hon. Member for Yukon, Mr. Nielsen. In his letter, Mr. Nielsen said:

> After considering the options available, I have now concluded that the only reasonable and fair approach is to seek an exemption for the Canadian Forces from those provisions beginning 1 January, 1986 that will require pension income to be treated as earnings for purposes of determining unemployment insurance benefits.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs went on to say in his letter:

> As you are aware, because of the unique requirements of military service, members of the Canadian Forces are required to retire at a much earlier age than people in other walks of life.

He made the point that members of the Canadian Armed Forces ought to be excluded from this discriminatory, unjust, and illogical legislation.

The most interesting letter we received was from the Progressive Conservative Women's Association in Oromocto-Burton-Geary which passed a resolution calling upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to withdraw the inequitable provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act. Even key players in the Progressive Conservative Party do not agree with this initiative of the Conservative Government.

One could identify individual Members of Parliament in all political Parties who have spoken against the legislation and have tried to point out to the Government that it was not an appropriate initiative.

As we all know now, it was an initiative announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, 1984 with no consultation whatsoever. We have been trying for nearly three years to determine from whom the Minister of Finance got the idea. To whom did he talk? Members of his own caucus, people in his own Party, people from all regions of Canada, and people from a variety of walks of life have unanimously opposed the legislation. One must ask with whom the Minister of Finance discussed the matter before he made the announcement on November 8, 1984 when he suggested that the Government should change the unemployment insurance program so that pensions and severance pay would be considered earned income.

I remind the Minister that for more than four decades the country has not considered pension and severance pay income as earned income, and the system has worked well. People have planned their lives with this in mind. People have planned for their retirement years with this in mind. For the Government to change the regulations—and I emphasize that point—is really a disservice to the people of Canada.

I must say that the Minister of Finance did not have the courage to introduce legislation to make these changes. He knew that if he were to introduce legislation at first reading, second reading, committee stage, report stage, and third reading, the people of Canada, through their elected representatives in the House of Commons, would have stopped that discriminatory, punitive legislation.

The Government chose the sneaky, underhanded, back-door, end run approach. It decided not to introduce legislation nor to propose statutory changes. It decided to simply rewrite the regulations in the Unemployment Insurance Act. This is back-door legislation; this is under the table, back room, backhanded, sneaky legislation.

It indicates to me a Minister of Finance who does not have the courage of his convictions, or knows that his caucus would not stand behind him, to introduce it as a Bill. Therefore, the regulations were changed behind closed doors. Unfortunately I suppose members of the Minister's Party now feel an obligation to find some way to support the legislation, as we have seen in today's debate. In a sense I feel sorry for a number of members of the government Party who must think of something positive to say about this initiative.

I want to say very clearly that as a caucus the New Democrats will not support the legislation today. We will oppose it on principle. We believe that we cannot support a Bill which treats people in an unfair and unjust way today and forever into the future.

We appreciate the Government's initiative will help a handful of people who were caught in the process prior to January 5, 1986. However, those who applied after that date are caught up in this very discriminatory Act.

I do not know how the Liberals will vote. I suppose, as some of their spokespersons have indicated, they will support the legislation. I do not understand why anyone would support it because of its very unjust nature.

I want to close by suggesting that another problem with the legislation is the fact that many people, who paid into the unemployment insurance fund and had their contributions matched by their employers, have waited for months and months for the Government to make up its mind, to make a decision on whether or not they would be eligible. As Bill C-50 indicates, a handful of Canadians will be eligible. What about the interest on that money? Tens of millions of dollars have been sitting in an account waiting for the Government's decision for months and months on end. However, there has been no commitment on the part of the Government to provide interest on those funds; these people have been unable to use that money. Again I remind the Minister of Finance particularly that when any Canadian owes the Government of Canada some money, interest payments are at the top of the list. The Government ought to do the same in terms of treating these people fairly.

In conclusion, I simply want to say that it is unfortunate legislation. Although we oppose it, we recognize that it will be helpful to a handful of Canadians.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). In the House earlier today we heard the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) say that he was supporting the Bill, a Bill which will entrench into law a very unfair provision.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, who is experienced in the House, how any Member of Parliament who has properly read the Bill, apart from government Members, can actually support such an iniquitous Bill?

As the Hon. Member pointed out, the Bill will affect those who were disentitled as of November, 1984 and into the future. How can any self-respecting Member vote for a Bill which will entrench an unjust law? How can one do it? How can that be squared with one's constituents, with the people out there, and with one's conscience?

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt for his question.

As I indicated in my speech, the Minister of Finance used a back-door approach to change the regulations and to impose these new changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am sure members on the government side were as surprised as any of us when they awoke on April Fool's Day and found out that the Government was proceeding with this initiative. As I said, I appreciate the fact that some members feel an obligation to speak in favour of the Bill, but they do it in a rather creative way.

• (1650)

To respond to my friend from Nickel Belt, I can only assume that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Marie (Mr. Malépart), as a Member reflecting his views and having to go back to his constituents to explain his vote, must have made a mistake. I cannot believe that the Liberal Party as a caucus would support this legislation.

At the moment, Madam Speaker, I will give the Liberals the benefit of the doubt and assume that the Member perhaps got his positions mixed up and had not consulted adequately or appropriately with the critic who spoke very strongly against the legislation which was introduced and will be voted on today. I assume the Liberal caucus will be voting against this legislation and that the Member from Montreal—Saint-Marie made a mistake when he said that his Party would be in support of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, today is a great day for our early retirees. After 17 months, their situation is about to be corrected at last. All who opted for early retirement before January 5, 1986, will finally be able to draw the unemployment insurance benefits to which they were entitled.

Madam Speaker, at this point, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Roberval and Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) for agreeing with the position taken by his Conservative colleagues who defended the cause of early retirees across Canada, and especially in Quebec, where there were quite a few in this group. The Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde), the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) and myself have, on several occasions, pointed out to the Minister the shortcomings of regulations that were adopted by this Government and which led unsuspecting people, to retire. They even received encouragement from their unions and some of our officials who said that if they took early retirement before January 5, 1986, they would be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits.

Madam Speaker, as a result, these people opted for early retirement, in the firm belief that if they did so before January 5, 1986, they would be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits. In fact, what happened was that the pension income of these people was considered as earnings, and as of January 5, 1986, their benefits were reduced.

There had been some confusion in this respect, and at the time, these people were, I would say, unfairly penalized as a result of that confusion. And that is the position we took in explaining the matter to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his predecessor, who had asked the Forget Commission to make recommendations in this respect.

Today, the provisions of Bill C-50 will correct this situation, and finally, early retirees who applied for unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986, will have their entitlement fully recognized, and will be able to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

Madam Speaker, why did our Government have to consider pension income as income for the purposes of unemployment insurance? As you know, people used to retire at 65. So on that basis people were entitled to only three weeks of UI benefits. Gradually the mentality of Canadians has evolved and nowadays people retire much earlier. People began retiring at 64, then 63, and now we see some who retire at 60, 57, and so on. This is how Canadians came to believe they were entitled to one year's unemployment benefits on retirement. And of course we hear people say: I paid unemployment insurance premiums for 20, 25, 30, 35 years; it seems to me I should be eligible for UI benefits.

If we look at it this way, Madam Speaker, it does make sense that from a merit standpoint someone who has paid premiums should indeed be eligible.

But merit alone cannot be a consideration because the unemployment insurance principle is that people are entitled to benefits in cases of lost employment or if they are unfortunate enough to be unable to earn an income. This is where the Unemployment Insurance Act comes into operation so that people will have a source of income for a while, that is 60 per cent of their previous income over a certain number of weeks up to a maximum of 50.

The same principle prevails, Madam Speaker, except that the Government believes that unemployment insurance should not be considered to be a retirement income. So what we are doing is that in the case of someone who retires early, the unemployment benefits are reduced by an amount equal to what he gets at retirement, that is his pension income.

Madam Speaker, no one is being left out in the cold; no one is being left without a cent. Those who have no pension income and who are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits will still be able to claim unemployment insurance. However, those who have a pension income of more than $297 will have their unemployment insurance benefits reduced proportionately, which means that they might not receive any benefits. Once more, our retirees are being protected as far as unemployment insurance is concerned.

Madam Speaker, the Forget Report recommended that the Government postpone this decision for two years.

I would like to remind my colleagues opposite that if our Government has done as recommended and simply postponed the debate for two years, some people would still have found themselves in the same situation when the legislation came into effect.

After the economic statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on November 8, 1984, everyone knew that the new regulations would come into force on January 5, 1986.

As I said at the very beginning of my speech, Madam Speaker, today is a great day for early retirees as those who retired before January 5, 1986, will receive the amounts to which they were entitled.

In addition, Bill C-50 now under consideration corrects another anomaly in the case of people who retire from our Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and later rejoin the labour market. Previously, their pension income had been considered as income when they claimed unemployment insurance. Bill C-50 now tells these people: If you rejoin the labour market and are eligible for unemployment insurance, your pension income will no longer be considered as income.

I believe that our Government is clarifying an important point which will solve the problems faced by these people who could not count on the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Plan after rejoining the labour force.

These are therefore the two major points of the Bill, and I would also like to remind opposition Members that in the case of people who may for instance have retired early before January 5, 1986, and may not have had the time to apply for unemployment insurance benefits, of course our Government has to draw the line somewhere. Whenever there is a legislation, the line has to be drawn somewhere. But those people are still free to present their cases to the unemployment insurance commissioners who will consider them on a case by case basis to determine whether those people are indeed eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I would also like to underscore the patience of our early retirees, for I have met with many of them in my region, in the Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean area, many ARSAC people and early retired pensioners, including someone from the Jonquière constituency, Mr. Rosaire Bouchard who, on a number of occasions, contacted me to enquire as to when Bill C-50 would be introduced in the House. On each of those occasions, I insisted that we needed the co-operation of the Official Opposition to be able to introduce that legislation and make it possible for our early retirees, the 55,000 early retirees, to take advantage of the $295 million which will be made available to them.

I therefore want to acknowledge their patience and I regret that it took another two months before we could pass this legislation because of the unwillingness of the Opposition to co-operate.

Mr. Rossi: That is not true!

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): I am also urging opposition Members opposite, especially Members of the New Democratic Party, Members of that opposition Party, to support our Government on this Bill. I believe it is clear enough that in the case of an early retiree who was being treated unfairly before January 5, 1986, the situation is now being clarified, so that those people will at last be able to get their unemployment insurance benefits, and I believe this is a good legislation for those people and the Opposition should be supporting the Government. It is fairly obvious that we are doing the right thing for our early retirees. We are filling an earlier gap, and this is a great day for those people, for all our early retirement pensioners.

So, Madam Speaker, this is the view I wanted to express on Bill C-50, and as a Member for Jonquière, I am greatly pleased to support this Government and also to thank my colleagues, not only the three Hon. Members who more especially worked on behalf of our early retirees, but also all Hon. Members from the Conservative Party who appreciated the principle in this Bill and helped us win over our colleagues and who today make it possible for all our early retirees to get the benefits they were entitled to.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, if I understood the Hon. Member correctly, he tried to justify the provisions in this Bill which would deal with the situation of a member of the Armed Forces or the RCMP paying unemployment insurance premiums for years and years yet when forced to take early retirement, and I say forced, not being eligible for any benefits. The Hon. Member said that that is true, those people would pay for years and years and would not be eligible for any benefits. But he said that they could get second jobs and if they qualify under those second jobs and are laid off, then they will receive UI benefits. He says that that is the justification.

If the Hon. Member is to give these people benefits only after they are laid off from their second jobs, why does he make them pay premiums while employed in their first jobs? Why should they pay premiums on the first jobs when they will not receive any benefits from the first jobs? If they will be forced to take second jobs to receive benefits, then they should only pay premiums on the second jobs.

Members of the Conservative Party must think the Canadian public is foolish if they would accept that justification. There is no justification whatsoever for that rule. The Bill should provide that people who are forcibly laid off through early retirement should not have to pay premiums because they cannot claim benefits after those jobs. If they have to work again, of course they will have to pay premiums and that in itself would give them the right to benefits.

The whole thing is filled with illogic from beginning to end. The principles that are applied to the second job are not applied to the first job. A pension is not acceptable after the first job but it is all right after the second job.

In the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration—

Mr. Gormley: Is this insurance or pension? You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Allmand: I know what I'm talking about. Come in here and talk about it and we will ask you questions. You don't know what the hell you're talking about.

Mr. Rossi: Gormley, go to your seat and speak up.

Mr. Allmand: He has not got the courage to come into the House to speak.

I have respect for the Hon. Member who just spoke. I worked with him in committee. The other Hon. Member never came near the committee.

How can the Hon. Member justify making members of the Armed Forces who must retire early pay premiums when they cannot collect a cent in unemployment insurance benefits when they are laid off?

[Translation]

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I would like to respond to the question put by the Hon. Member. First, a retiree's pension income will be treated as income for Unemployment Insurance purposes. If the individual is not entitled to Unemployment Insurance, this means he or she has at least $297 a week from the start. This is what it all means, because if your pension income is lower than that, you are still entitled to your Unemployeement Insurance benefits, depending on your earned income.

Second, Madam Speaker, this Government . . . and we clearly established that Unemployment Insurance benefits are not to be treated as pension income. We took that premise and we stand firm on that. Through Bill C-50, we just corrected the gaps because we wanted to ensure that someone, a member of the Forces for instance who took early retirement, who had pension income, if that individual returned to the labour market and later on lost his or her job, he or she could at least be entitled to Unemployment Insurance benefits. But pension income is taken into account for UI purposes, and again as such Unemployment Insurance benefits are not to be viewed as retirement income.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I found the speech of the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) to be most disturbing. I could not see the logic of it. The Hon. Member said that this was a great day for those who retired early before January 5, 1986. Might I remind the Hon. Member that it was his Government that announced the decision in November of 1984, not the Opposition.

It was this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who did not consult the workers, who did not consult the representatives, who did not consult the UI Commission, who did not consult the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council and who consulted no one. He did not even consult his own fellow Tories and treated them like they were nobodies. They weren't even 50 yards off the Hill, they were nobodies right there in their own seats.

Mr. Orlikow: They still are.

Mr. Rodriguez: And they still are because there they are like sheep supporting a Bill that is so flawed in principle and in application.

Having done that, the reaction came from across the country. What did the Government do? The former Minister of Employment and Immigration turned the matter over to Claude Forget who was to study it. He studied it and made recommendations to the Government. The Government tipsied, turvied, twisted and turned and now, three years later, it brings a Bill before the House.

How can the Hon. Member face his constituents in Jonquière having taken away by regulation the unemployment insurance benefits of those who took early retirement in order to save the jobs of younger workers? Now he is saying what a great thing the Government is doing when it is giving back those who retired prior to January 5, 1986 the benefits while at the same time continuing the injustice by saying to those workers in regions like his and mine that they have to get a second, non-existent job to receive unemployment insurance benefits if laid off. How inconsistent can he be?

That is the same trash we heard in the Standing Committee when we discussed this issue and that is why the Hon. Member's colleagues voted against him. In fact, 90 recommendations were carried by a majority and the Hon. Member was the only one who voted against giving justice to early retirees. All the rest of his colleagues including the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom)—

Ms. Copps: Where are they today?

Mr. Rodriguez: I don't know where they are. I haven't lifted something lately and looked but they might be there. They are not in the House. The fact—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. As there is only one minute left in the question and comment period, I think the Hon. Member would agree that the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) should speak.

I point out to all Hon. Members that it would be better to refrain from mentioning the presence or absence of other Hon. Members in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: They do so all the time, Madam Speaker!

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member—

Mr. Rossi: They have the right to do so; we do not.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): It is just like you; stop doing so!

Mr. Rossi: Two years from now, we will see . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please! One minute. The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) has the floor.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that if he were among those who have been waiting for 17 months to receive the unemployment insurance benefits to which they are entitled, he would feel too that this is a great day when legislation is finally passed by the Government.

Also, concerning the motion which was moved before our Standing Committee, Madam Speaker, I am the only Member who refused to vote in favour of one of its 90 recommendations, the one dealing with pensions, because other Members wanted our Government to take a step backwards and make sure that pension income would no longer considered as income for unemployment insurance purposes. Madam Speaker, if I refused it is because I did not want our early retirees to develop wrong expectations, knowing full well that our Government had no intention to go backwards; there was no reason for me to pretend and create false expectations. We should show more honesty towards those we are representing in the House of Commons.

Mr. Malépart: The truth!

Mr. Rossi: You are the ones who cut the unemployment insurance benefits.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I cannot believe the logic of the Government. It kicks workers in the teeth by bringing in legislation which is completely unfair. The Liberals fight it. Workers fight it. Members of the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association fight it. We force the Government to back off. Now members of the Government come forward and say we should pass this legislation because at least it exempts those who were affected prior to January 5, 1986. What about those who are going to retire in 1987?

I was up in my office and got a telephone call from someone who has worked 29 years at Firestone in Hamilton. He is very fearful that in the next two days there is going to be an announcement which could lead to either closure or sale of the plant. The future of the plant is up in the air. This worker wants to know, if that happens, whether he will be entitled to collect unemployment insurance while he is looking for another job. The Government is asking us to support a Bill which would say to this worker that 29 years mean nothing. "You paid into the fund for 29 years but you cannot have a penny. If you get another job you will have to continue paying unemployment insurance even though you cannot collect."

I am not surprised that the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) fled—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Only a minute ago the House was reminded not to refer to the presence or absence of other Hon. Members. I would appreciate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) observing that recommendation.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am not surprised that the few Conservative Members here are hanging their heads in shame.

Mr. Jelinek: How many Grits are there? Four.

Ms. Copps: They do not want to get up and speak on this legislation because it is awfully embarrassing and they do not want to be put in the position of going back to their riding and saying that they supported legislation which could mean 1,000 workers in Hamilton will have their unemployment insurance benefits put in jeopardy.

I would like to speak to another amendment which has not been dealt with in great detail. It relates to severance pay. When the Government first introduced this legislation, not only did it hit between the eyes workers who were being forced into early retirement, such as Canadian Armed Forces personnel. It also said to those workers who received severance pay that they cannot collect unemployment insurance until they exhaust all of their severance benefits. Most people will know that when you have been working on a job, perhaps with a small pension plan or perhaps no security at all, and you are in the process of trying to find new employment, retrain or get reoriented, you need that severance pay to make the necessary changes in your life. Yet the Government cut that off as a result of the 1984 budget statement.

However, the Liberal Government in Ontario believes workers had the right to keep their severance pay. That Liberal Government recognized that severance pay is an emergency fund which you need over and above the money needed simply to survive. That Government introduced legislation which meant that workers in Ontario, under certain specific circumstances, could continue to collect severance pay and at the end of that time they could apply for full unemployment insurance benefits. Clause 9 of this Bill before us cuts the heart out of that Ontario legislation. It cuts the heart out of legislation which says to workers when you are laid off after 20, 25 or 30 years, through no fault of your own and you are not in a position financially to retire, we are going to give you this severance package to help you reorient yourself, relocate and get a bit of a leg up on what is probably the most crucial period in your life.

I am not surprised the Government is bringing forward legislation that snatches that assistance from the mouths of workers' families. I am not surprised because since 1984 it has consistently promised itself to be very long on promises and short on action for older workers. I will refer to the promise made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he pulled the LAB program out from under the feet of Canadian workers. The former Liberal Government introduced the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. If you were in a so-called sunset sector, where jobs were decreasing rather than increasing, and you had worked for a long time and your age plus years of service totalled 80, essentially you could go on an early retirement program and receive continuing benefits. The Conservative Government cancelled that program last year. It promised to replace that program with another. It even had a nice name for the program, POWA. The Government said it was going to reach out to older workers. Yet here we are in 1987, we have not heard a peep from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) or the Minister of Finance, and older workers are not only not receiving the unemployment insurance benefits that should be their due, neither are they getting LAB benefits and there is no replacement program.

The Government claims it does not have enough money. The Government claims it is going bankrupt. They may be morally, but not financially. Imagine my shock and surprise when I walked into the House today and I see a so-called newspaper called—

[Translation]

Journal Action fédérale du Canada with a picture, not one picture, Madam Speaker, but 50 pictures of the Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) spread over eight pages. Fifty pictures of the Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve over eight pages. And, Madam Speaker . . . He says there was no expense. I hope he is right because page 8 features a picture of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his remarks to the management and staff of the Journal Action fédérale du Canada and it is entitled Prime Minister of Canada. It is not entitled " Leader of the Conservative Party" but "Prime Minister of Canada". So he claims to be speaking for the Canadian people by lending his support to a newspaper, which is a clear betrayal of the principle that journalists should at least give the impression of being unbiased.

A word from the Prime Minister, "To management",—I assume this means the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve—"To the management and personnel of Action fédérale du Canada, my best wishes for a successful their new magazine. I am sure this monthly publication will provide a fresh look at what is happening in the region."

What annoys me is not just the 50 photographs of the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, but the fact that the Hon. Member is posing with a bikini-clad female—

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Ms. Copps: —and he thinks that is journalism! He would have us associate the Prime Minister and a bikini-clad female with the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. I find that extremely annoying.

Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve would be better off voting for legislation that will give more money to our workers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) knows perfectly well she is not supposed to show documents of this kind in the House. I am glad she finally reverted to the subject before the House today, and I would be grateful if she would continue in that vein.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I apologize. I was commenting on the Conservative Party's wasteful spending, because I wonder whether Canada's workers will continue to support a party that has no compunction about cutting off the very lifeline of our workers, because if you cut off unemployment insurance, you cut off everthing they've got. But this Party can always find money to invest in asinine publications that would rather print pictures of bikini-clad females than articles on Canadian politics.

Madam Speaker, this is why I asked the Conservative Members whether that was the policy. Because I think that workers are fed up, they have had it up to here listening to the Government telling us there is not enough money for workers, yet they did find money for the banks, money to change military uniforms, money for all kinds of things, to pay $1 billion to the banks, just like that, it was able to find $1 billion in less than 48 hours. But when it comes to helping workers the government simply cannot find a cent.

Mr. Malépart: And the submarines—

Ms. Copps: They say: We are broke after 1986, after January 5 there is nothing left. We no longer have any money for older workers—

Mr. Malépart: And repairs to Ministers' offices!

Ms. Copps: —and they are asking us to support them and help them betray the workers. I do not want any part of this betrayal!

Madam Speaker, to a certain extent I should like . . . I am pleased that the New Democratic Party should already have raised this issue in the House because I, for one, would like to tell the House how I see the hypocrisy of the New Democratic Party in my own riding of Hamilton East.

As it happens, Madam Speaker, I am talking about older Steel Company workers who are anxious to be retrained because they have been laid off. So instead of trying to find solutions through legislative measures or employment strategy the New Democratic Party would rather play petty politics and directly influence the steel workers' union, call a press conference to denounce the Government without even inviting a single Member of the Liberal Party.

• (1720)

[English]

I would like to address the question of the NDP. We have heard a lot about the NDP in relation to this Bill. I dare say that if it had not been for the Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association, the Alliance coalition Québec, and the Liberal caucus, the NDP would have laid down and died, this Bill would have gone through, and they would not have got their money.

I find the hypocrisy of the NDP unbelievable. In my riding steel workers are being laid off. Instead of trying to mobilize Members of Parliament who have a voice in Parliament, the NDP had a sneaky little press conference with their so-called candidate on Hamilton Mountain who does not even have a voice in Parliament. They are prepared to jeopardize the jobs and retraining of steel workers for their own petty, political ends.

I am not the only person who has said this. In fact, the person who ran the program for two years for the steel workers is so disgusted with the NDP's abuse of its parliamentary privilege and the privileges of Members of the Legislature in excluding all other political Parties from discussions on the Canadian Jobs Strategy that he is pulling out of the program. He is sick of the NDP and its hypocrisy.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is getting carried away with her rhetoric. She congratulated the candidate for Hamilton Mountain. The NDP has worked closely with the Canadian Labour Congress in planning a program to fight this Bill. I wish she would tell the story straight rather than applying her own politics to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is sure that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) understands very well what it is to get carried away in debate.

Mr. Rodriguez: Me?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): However, that is not a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I raised this issue because I think it is well and good for all of us in Parliament to take credit, although I am sure the Government does not want to take credit for this Bill as it is positively embarrassing. However, we in the Opposition believe that we had a small part to play in getting the Government to back off on this specific issue.

People like Ed Halayko pulled veterans from coast to coast together. For the first time in the history of this country he mobilized a demonstration of Armed Forces veterans here on Parliament Hill. He will say that the Armed Forces did the job by pulling the people together and causing the Government to reverse its position. We saw the same kind of mobilization from the Alliance coalition Québec when people came to the Hill to express their point of view. I believe that is the joy of democracy.

I raise the issue of the NDP because they do not mind hitting out. I heard the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) blasting the Liberal Party in a question about a half hour ago. They can dish it out but they find it really hard to take. I believe that in this situation in Hamilton where they have tried to use partisan political means to pursue victory for their candidate they have bitten off a little more than they can chew. When you deny a Member of Parliament the right to fight for her constituents on something like the Canadian Jobs Strategy, you are showing your Party to be one of hypocrisy. I believe that that is what the voters of Hamilton Mountain will decide.

Mr. Rodriguez: You're crying again.

Ms. Copps: The Member says that I am a cry baby. I am not a cry baby. I tell the truth and the people in my riding know that. They will not be very happy with the NDP which tried to circumvent the process to improve the Canadian Jobs Strategy steelworkers program.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mind the Hon. Member for Hamilton East repeating what I said, but she should repeat exactly what I said. I did not call her a cry baby. I said she was crying again. She cried when they reported that she was plotting against her Leader and she is crying again right here in the House.

Ms. Copps: That's a sexist comment and I resent it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, order.

Ms. Copps: The NDP thinks women cry. I don't cry and even the Member for Nickel Belt doesn't make me cry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Ms. Copps: Give me a break. Sexist.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, order.

Ms. Copps: Do I look like I'm crying?

Mr. Rodriguez: I read it right here in The Toronto Star, in your paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, order! I am sure Members want to debate the Bill which is now before the House. I ask all Hon. Members to keep their comments relative to the Bill now before us. There are enough things for Hon. Members to say without getting into conversations which can only make this House unruly. I know that is not what Hon. Members want the public to see. The Hon. Member for—

• (1730)

Ms. Copps: Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I can assure the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) that I know the name of the riding of the Hon. Member sitting next to her.

[Translation]

Order! I hope that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) does have a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, you may decide upon it when I am finished speaking, not before.

Madam Speaker, on the same point of order as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). In my opinion, he has insulted the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) since the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has no way of knowing, cannot pass judgement on what has been said, on what has been repeated by my colleague from Hamilton East, on whether or not this is what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has said, since he—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I believe that these are matters which can best be checked by all concerned when the blues are out. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has two minutes to conclude.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt has come up with this item in the newspaper since it demonstrates that he is just as sexist as the newspaper in saying that I indulge in crying. Frankly, Madam Speaker, you have seen me in this House on several occasions. Do I give the impression of being a woman who cries constantly? I do not think so and I can appreciate that the NDP feels hurt to have been told the truth about the riding of Hamilton, about what happened during the election; that was painful. It is easy for them to insult the Government and the liberal party. They think they always do better. But the NDP is not ready to accept the truth when its own members are guilty of breaching political ethics.

[English]

This Bill is treason to working people. It is an attempt to cut the ability of those people who have rightfully paid unemployment insurance all their lives to collect that unemployment insurance. It is an attempt to cut off the possibility for people of Ontario to collect severance benefits.

I believe this Bill should be stopped. We have fought long and hard for the inclusion of 34,000 workers who would have been covered when the legislation was amended. However, at the same time I do not expect the Government can ask us to support this legislation which will lead to chaos for older workers, who are already the hardest hit.

Perhaps when the Government follows up on its promise to bring in a program for older workers and brings in a real program for early retirement we can then begin to talk turkey. At the moment, however, it is quite clear that it wants us to support bad legislation.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! I must inform the Hon. Member that her time is up.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Hon. Member. The original proposal to destroy the ability of people who have paid into the unemployment insurance system through weekly payments for years was opposed from the day the Government brought it forward.

The Government did not introduce this legislation because something was wrong with the unemployment insurance system but because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was determined to reduce the deficit. This Bill was opposed by all opposition Members of Parliament.

The Member is correct that the strongest opposition, and I am sure the most important opposition in terms of convincing back-bench Conservative Members that this Bill was terribly wrong, came from the retired Armed Forces personnel who are so adversely affected, and by other pensioners.

However, I could not believe what I was hearing when she accused the New Democratic Party of being able to manipulate the unions in Hamilton so that they could not carry on the battle as they should. I would understand it if it was said by Conservative Members of Parliament from a rural area or a wealthy part of Vancouver or Toronto, who have no understanding of the labour movement and how trade unions operate. I know they are ignorant about workers and the unions to which workers belong, but the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) comes from a city which probably has the highest percentage of organized union workers in this country, and one of the strongest locals of any union in the steelworkers' local in Hamilton.

When the Hon. Member for Hamilton East suggests that the NDP in Hamilton was able to manipulate the union for its crass political purposes and was able to have the union not do the job it should to protect their unemployed members, she is not denigrating the NDP, but attacking and denigrating the union.

The officers and full-time representatives of the steelworkers' union should be turfed out if they were guilty of that kind of charge which the Hon. Member from Hamilton has made against them. If there is anyone who is using this place for crass partisan political purposes, it is the Member for Hamilton East. She ought to know a hell of a lot better than to spout the kind of nonsense she did.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, as usual, the New Democratic Party make many comments with little information. If the Member knew anything about the situation I am referring to in Hamilton he would know that the charge was not levelled by the Member for Hamilton East but levelled by the director of the program who had worked in developing it for unemployed steelworkers. He is a member of the steelworkers' union himself and was so disgusted with the NDP that he pulled out of the program.

The charge was not levelled by the Member for Hamilton East, it was levelled by the man responsible for the program who, himself, wanted to invite all Members of Parliament, including Liberals and Conservatives—there are no NDP Members of Parliament in the Hamilton area—to say that the federal Government is cutting back on programs and we should work together to get a fair share for Hamilton. That is what he wanted to do because he believed in the program and in the workers.

Instead, he was overruled by members in the New Democratic Party who decided to hell with the workers. They decided it was more important to push the NDP candidate in Hamilton than to give the workers of Hamilton a voice in Parliament by involving every Member of Parliament. When you make that kind of charge, you make it toward the steelworkers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Try as it might, the Chair has a very difficult time relating the last comments to the Bill being studied.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for her courage and frankness. However, I cannot do the same for the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and a few others. I would like to know what my colleague for Hamilton East thinks of the comments made by the Members for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) and Kamouraska (Mr. Plourde). In other words, is it not a fact that the Conservative Government cut off the unemployment insurance benefits of older workers? Is it not a fact that the Conservative Government deindexed or tried to deindex Old Age Security pensions?

My colleague is well aware that the Conservative Government wanted to put a tax on medication for those who suffer from cardiovascular diseases, diabetes or respiratory illness. This is my own impression, and the members of the Quebec Coalition for the defence of pensioners and early retirees in Quebec are here now. These people had a good reason for organizing at least seven demonstrations and forming action committees to put pressure on Conservative Members. I would like to hear the comments of my colleague. These people have fought for 17 months. As for the Hon. Member, she said earlier that she would oppose the Bill in its present form.

I myself said at the beginning of my speech that I would agree to vote for this Bill on the condition that the Government would accept our amendments. If the Government accepts the amendments moved by the Liberals, that is by my colleague for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) or by myself to avoid any discrimination in this Bill, will the Hon. Member also vote for it?

Ms. Copps: In such a case, Madam Speaker, we shall certainly vote for this Bill because it will then be acceptable. However, without these amendments which deal with unemployment insurance and severance benefits—

Mr. Malépart: Severance pay.

Ms. Copps: Without these amendments, we could not support the Bill as it is discriminatory, and I know that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) fights discrimination in the case of senior citizens, whether we are speaking about the cost of drugs or pensions. This Bill includes discriminatory provisions which will be removed if our amendments are adopted, but without these amendments, it is unacceptable.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I was listening to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), and I would like to tell her that if Hon. Members on her side of the House vote against the legislation, our early retirees will realize that all the noise made by some of you was only scam and petty politics, because we now have a legislation that early retirees have been expecting for 17 months so they could get the Unemployment Insurance benefits they were entitled to, because there was fuzziness. Now we are correcting that gap, and I hope you will rise and support the Government on behalf of our early retirees, who are counting on that.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) must think early retirees are goddam stupid if he thinks he is . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will want to apologize and polish her language.

Ms. Copps: Yes, Madam Speaker, I do not want to profer ugly words. So I say, if the Hon. Member thinks early retirees are so ignorant they are not aware that this Government introduced those 17 months of waiting, we in the Liberal Party were ready, even in November, to get the Bill through. We were ready in April last to pass the legislation dealing with early retirees prior to 1986. We were even ready two months ago to have the Bill pass. The Government used us as hostage by claiming—

Mr. Malépart: Senior citizens are hostages.

Ms. Copps: —they will be paying those monies. In fact, we did the fight for retirees, and we will go on fighting for those who will be retiring after January 5, 1986.

So I do not think early retirees can blame us if the Government introduced a Bill that is discriminatory.

• (1740)

[English]

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, if there is anyone in the House who has not been deafened within the last half hour, I would like to address a few remarks to them. The reason I rise is because I have an affinity for retired servicemen. As many Hon. Members will know, I served for 26 years in the Armed Forces and have some understanding of its pension system, more often referred to by servicemen as their superannuation.

When the new Minister was appointed a year and a half ago, I felt rather sorry for him. The Forget Commission had been formed and the only analogy I can think of for the job he had to do in trying to sort out the unemployment insurance system was rather similar to saying to him: "Go out to the kitchen. There is a stew boiling on the stove. Separate all the condiments in it without taking it off the stove". It was just an impossible task. The Minister understood that and is going about it one stage at a time.

I think I can speak for quite a few of the servicemen who say that this Bill is a considerable step forward to where they want to be. It will give them an opportunity which very few people have. After they qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, which is after 20 weeks, work at their second job, they can then get unemployment insurance at the full rate despite the fact their pension will be coming in at the same time.

Referring to pensions as earnings for unemployment insurance purposes is what this Bill is all about, whether or not we should consider pensions as earnings which, at present, we do. What has bothered me about this Bill is the anomaly in the logic which accepts that before the member retires, he must pay into unemployment insurance which is supposed to insure his employment. When he reaches retirement age, he must leave. He then retires and starts drawing his pension and suddenly he is not insured for unemployment insurance despite the fact he may spend the rest of his life unemployed and despite the fact, as I think everyone has pointed out, that during his entire service he would not have missed a single payment, or a single week's work, either. So it really is an exercise in futility. However, if an individual gets a job and holds it for 20 weeks, suddenly pension is no longer income. It seems to me that if it is logical to consider pension to be income in one period of one's life, then pension is income. Had the Government gone for that, I could understand the logic. Had the Government gone the other way and said it is not income at both times, I could understand that. However, to say it is income during the period that one is unemployed and as soon as one starts working again, it is not, is a bit hard for me to grasp.

I placed a question on the Order Paper in March. I do not know how many Members noticed. It was answered on May 4. My question was, and I quote:

> In each of the years 1985 and 1986, did Canadian Armed Forces personnel contribute to unemployment insurance and, if so,(a) what was the total amount collected from them (b) did the Government match these contributions (c) what amount was paid out of the U.I.C. fund to unemployed ex-service personnel?

The answer to the first question by the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) was, yes, Canadian Armed Forces personnel did pay into UIC. He was a bit short of figures in 1986, having the "pay out" for 1986 but not the "pay in". In 1985 the servicemen themselves paid in $45,700,712. The Government contributed $56,988,788. I have never been able to understand in all the many years I have looked at these figures for civil servants, and this Bill applies to all civil servants, only to a slightly lesser degree because civil servants have an older retirement age than the Armed Forces. I could never understand why the Government did not contribute exactly the same amount every year, but there is some technical reason. However, the fact is that the Government did not contribute anything in 1985. My question was: "What amount was paid out of the UIC fund to unemployed ex-service personnel?" The answer was $39,992,164 which is less than what the servicemen themselves put in. I think all of us in the House of Commons of Canada are smart enough about the way things are done to know that there is no fund sitting in a safety deposit box into which the Government put $56 million in 1985 because that would have matched the servicemen's input. There are careful records kept with respect to that fund, but it is not in existence. No bank holds it in bonds, nor is there anything that has been put aside to provide a fund which generates funds. Consequently, there are several theoretical billions of dollars in this theoretical fund.

The fact is that in 1985, in reality, the Government did not put anything into the fund. The serviceman and woman knows that he or she has put something into the fund because they can see it missing from their pay cheque every month. They put in $45.7 million.

If we look at 1986 we find out that this aberration, let us say, of the Order in Council, has been, to a large degree, fixed by this Bill. The payment out dropped from $39.9 million in 1985 to $28.1 million in 1986. The Government, instead of making only some $6 million from the servicemen themselves, made some $17 million. That is to what I object. I have asked the Minister to take that up and to reassess the entire unemployment situation. It badly needs it.

There are a great many people who are paying into the fund and a totally different set of people who are taking money out of it. It does not seem to me that that is the way that most insurance policies work. I think that the Minister has done the best that he could with this Bill. It meets the requirement that they be allowed to withdraw unemployment insurance if they are going into the civilian workforce. It will enable them to draw it at a better rate than other people who have similar incomes to what retired servicemen have.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Allmand. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment lost. We will now resume debate on the main motion.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I want to say on behalf of the members of my caucus that we are opposed to this Bill because it is flawed in principle, it discriminates, it is illogical, unfair, and undemocratic.

Mr. Blaikie: And we don't like it either.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I would like you and all Members of this House to know that this Party is prepared to deal with the Bill by ten o'clock this evening, deferring any third reading vote until tomorrow.

Mr. Gauthier: That is the agreement anyway.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the agreement, and I trust government Members are not going to betray the trust of all those Canadians out there who are expecting this Bill to be passed. We have some very good amendments for Committee of the Whole. I think they deserve to be debated. If the Government thinks it is going to double-cross the Opposition by going back on its agreement, it is not double-crossing us, it is double-crossing the 50,000 early retirees who expect their concerns to be dealt with fairly in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Therefore, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House declines to give second reading to a Bill which contradicts the principle that pension income is earned income and that pension is considered earnings for unemployment insurance purposes and creates discrimination in an essential service.

• (1840)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was an understanding among all three Parties that we would deal with this Bill in total today. That included completing second reading stage, arranging for Committee of the Whole, which physical arrangements the Clerks have already made, and completing the third reading stage, all within the extended day to be concluded by ten o'clock. We agreed to defer the vote on third reading so that Members would not necessarily have to stay until ten o'clock.

We now understand that the Government has decided not to live up to that agreement, that we will not deal with report stage today. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has informed me that the Government plans to continue debate at second reading until ten o'clock. That is not what we understood would happen today. We understood that we would complete all stages, not only second reading stage never reaching Committee of the Whole or third reading.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the agreement which was struck with all three Parties is very clear and is on the record. The Government has many speakers who wish to speak either at second reading or to the amendment which has been moved by the NDP. We are prepared to allow every person who wants to speak to do so. In fact, one of our Members was rising to speak. Our Party will debate this legislation at second reading using the full time available for debate and questions and comments. If a recorded division is required on second reading stage at ten o'clock we are perfectly prepared to be here to vote.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I want to appeal to the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader. When the three House Leaders reach an understanding to facilitate the passage of legislation through all three stages, we believe that it should be lived up to. The understanding was that all three stages would be dealt with, which includes Committee of the Whole.

After agreeing in good faith to accommodate the Government's request to complete this Bill today, we learn that the Government has decided not to live up to that agreement but rather to sabotage the House's ability to reach report stage, Committee of the Whole stage, and third reading. The Government has the right to do that. It has the unilateral right to determine the business for tonight. However, the Government should not ask us to come to agreements to facilitate government business ever again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is in some difficulty in that this is a question of negotiations among the Parties. The Chair will recognize Members who wish to speak on the Bill. The Chair is in the hands of the House in this matter.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, when we agreed to this special order it was quite clear that we were agreeing to a proposal which included Committee of the Whole at which stage we could move amendments. If the Government intends to speak on second reading until ten o'clock when all questions are to be put so that we cannot have committee hearings in Committee of the Whole, that is contrary to the spirit of the agreement. I ask that the Deputy House Leader or the House Leader clarify that. We want to ensure that we have a reasonable amount of time in Committee of the Whole, which is what we thought we were agreeing to.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, we have Members who wish to speak on this. I am sure it is no surprise to the House that we have several regional caucus meetings this evening. I suggest that we continue debate while I sit down with my colleagues in the two opposition Parties to see if we can determine a time at which it might be convenient for the House to go into Committee of the Whole. We can deal with any matters at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader to recall exactly the comments made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), which are recorded in the official Hansard, the Debates. The Minister and everyone absolutely wanted that the Bill get through in one day, with possibility of amendments. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will remember . . . Because that is a commitment from the Minister, there are people from the Coalition who are here and I hope this will go through all stages and we will be allowed to bring in amendments.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the question is settled for the moment. There will be negotiations among the Parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Madam Speaker, I am glad to see representatives of our early retirees in our Gallery. They will be able to see for themselves the kind of procedural nit-picking opposition Members have been inflicting on us since last April, before we can finally make these payments.

The Government is hardly responsible for the fact that the debate and subsequent payments have not taken place sooner. We would love to adjourn this House immediately and order those cheques to be paid forthwith. However, for the sake of procedural arguments or because of a need to make a kind of circus out of the worthy cause of early retirees, the Opposition, and I am referring to both parties, insisted on using all kinds of rules and regulations and procedural nit-picking to draw out the debate and try and enhance their political credibility.

Earlier, I met the leaders of the Association des préretraités in the lobby. They are starting to see the light and were wondering how useful what was being done today, and what has been done for a number of months by the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, would be in getting payments to our early retirees who now will not be paid until next month, the eventual result of today's debate that was agreed to after endless pressure from Quebec Conservative Members.

I may remind the Hon. Member who moved an amendment just to draw out debate, an amendment by the New Democratic Party, that he doesn't seem to understand what the debate is all about or what the legislation is all about, and perhaps I could summarize the fundamentals so that he will have a better idea of what we are talking about.

The amendments to the provisions on pension income reflect this Government's conviction that retirees should not consider unemployment insurance as a supplementary source of income. I think that is understood.

However, the Government recognizes the fact that a distinction must be made between those who retire permanently and those who retire in order to start a new career. I think that is also understood.

The changes announced by the Government make that distinction and ensure that people who retire and start a new career are treated justly and fairly, considering they continue to be part of the labour force.

When the Government learned on December 5, last year, that some people maintained they had not been thoroughly informed about the significance of the provisions on pension income which were to be implemented on January 5, 1986, we immediately proposed, at the request of the Conservative Members from Quebec, that the Government arrange to review the cases of those who stated that their decision to retire had been based on inaccurate information received from federal Government sources. A departmental investigation was carried out when we learned that some employees had misinformed the public. The Hon. Minister immediately asked for an investigation and set up administrative procedures. Because of the slowness of the administrative process, we found that application of these procedures could become very complex.

Once more, the Government took matters in hand to avoid complications, such as a possible difference in application of the rules from region to region, and made some changes to the regulations on pensions which had come into effect on January 5, 1986. Bill C-50 defines a simple rule, and I am surprised that the Hon. Members opposite cannot understand it. This simple and clear rule ensures fair treatment for all claimants during the transition period.

The rule is quite simple. All those who claimed unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986, when the previous rules still applied, will have their elegibility determined according to the rules then in effect. In addition, all those who made their claim on or after January 5, 1986, will have their claims processed according to the new provisions. It seems to me quite clear that this meets exactly the expectations of the preretirees. This Bill was introduced in April, and if the Opposition had seized the opportunity to support the Government, these people would already have received their cheques. But no, they saw fit to play politics, play cat and mouse by resorting to procedural wranglings in committee, never failing to raise all kinds of objections or move amendments, so much so that after many months we are still fighting to get a green light to issue these cheques for which early retirees have been waiting for so long.

Hon. Members will recall that on December 5 our Government announced it was going to amend the legislation with respect to pension income. That was on December 5, 1986. While respecting the principle that retired people should not consider unemployment insurance as an additional source of income, the announcement made it clear that people who take another job after retiring and who stay on that job long enough to be entitled to UI benefits should not have such benefits reduced by an amount equal to their pension income. Again this was a request on the part of early retirees.

Through this legislation the Government will amend the pension income regulations as of April 5, 1987. In addition the Bill will make these regulations retroactive to January 5, 1986.

Again, that is exactly what our early retirees have been asking for and which they could get through some good will and gesture on the part of the Official Opposition.

These amendments will make it possible for workers, who have started a new career during which they have contributed to the unemployment insurance fund and who then find themselves without a job, to become fully entitled to unemployment insurance benefits calculated on their employment income following their retirement, whatever their previous pension income may have been. This is exactly one of the claims which is now being met by the Government.

This legislation deals also with a matter of equity, which has to do with the treatment of the amounts paid upon separation. Hon. Members will remember that on March 31, 1985, amendments were made to the treatment of amounts paid upon separation for unemployment insurance purposes.

Since the coming into force of these amendments, a number of management-union agreements have tried to take advantage of what can only be described as loopholes in the current wording of the unemployment insurance regulations. The purpose of these "arangements" was to betray the intent of the legislation.

Through this legislation, the Government is amending the regulations by eliminating this loophole and preventing some people for getting double compensation, I mean receiving both a separation payment and unemployment insurance benefits. These amendments came into effect on April 5, 1987. Exactly as in the case of someone who is applying for unemployment insurance benefits, it must be ascertained that he has no other sources of income, since the unemployment insurance scheme is directly related to the work he was carrying out and which represented his one and only source of income.

The proposed Bill will also make it possible to extend both the qualifying and benefit periods when the distribution of the amounts paid upon separation presented the payment of benefits or delayed the beginning of the unemployment insurance benefit period. For instance, if separation payments extend by seven weeks the beginning of a benefit period, the qualifying period will be extended by seven weeks.

In conclusion, since several Canadian men and women will be affected by the various sections in this legislation, we ask our hon. colleagues to give it their undivided attention and move amendments is an effort to delay its passing and to make political gains at the expense of poor retirees who want nothing more than receiving their cheques. Those people need their cheques and, for the past three months, the opposition has certainly thwarted the efforts made by the Government to issue them.

My philosophy teacher always told me when I did not understand or grasp the meaning of an excerpt dealing with philosophy—

Mr. Allmand: It was not even called for second reading, liar.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair would like to hear what the Hon. Member who has the floor is saying. Let me try to remind all Members that most of the time screams or comments being called across the floor are recorded in Hansard and perhaps Hon. Members would like to think twice before making some comments that they would regretfully see in Hansard the next day.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Plamondon: Madam Speaker, I am concluding. I was quoting my philosphy teacher who said teasingly when we did not understand a text which was rather clear: What is well understood can be clearly stated and the words to say it so easily come. He used to add: "Of course, pigs cannot appreciate pearls." He was just joking. I suggest then that maybe we should try and understand and vote quickly—

Mr. Nystrom: It was professor John Crosbie!

Mr. Plamondon: In conclusion, madam Speaker, I stress again the necessity to pass quickly that bill in order to satisfy those people who are eagerly waiting for the amount which is really due to them.

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) to explain to the House how it is that he can infer that we, the Opposition, are delaying this Bill, given the fact that we have agreed that it will pass through all stages, that is second reading, committee of the whole and third reading, in a single day. I therefore ask the Hon. Member to clarify his point, to explain how he can insinuate that we are delaying this Bill when we have already agreed to the proposal by the Government to adopt this Bill in a single day. It is simply unbelievable that he should make such an inference!

Madam Speaker, I also have a second question for the Hon. Member. It is the following. How can the Hon. Member—for whom I have the greatest respect—explain to the House that he is in favour of a Bill which denies members of the Canadian Armed Forces and members of the RCMP the possibility of collecting unemployment insurance even when they have contributed for many years? How can he explain that he is in favour of such a Bill?

Mr. Plamondon: Madam Speaker, I am going first to say that I have also a lot of respect for the Hon. Member. Now, when he asks me to explain to him why his Party can be accused of delaying things, when it passes a Bill in one day, I would like to remind him that for the last three months, we have asked that this Bill be put on the Order Paper, so that we could pass it in one day. Regrettably, we could not make ourselves heard by both opposition Parties. We have been ready for a long time to pay and this . . . An example: if you were ready to resolve the matter, why, today, when the text is clear and precise, are you still proposing amendments? Your Party just proposed another one. This only delays the debate, when everybody knows that at the end, it will be this text, as tabled by the Government, which satisfies entirely those who want the necessary money that has been taken from them, that will be adopted.

One never talked about any other person than our early retirees, who signed petitions, who met with Government and Opposition MPs and who want exactly this bill which will allow them to receive their cheques. Any procedure or amendment only results in delaying the end of the debate and obviously, the issuing of the cheques. Obviously, if you stop speaking and the Opposition does the same, the debate will stop and the cheques will be sent out. If not that, what do you call delaying things?

Mr. Nystrom: It is not true.

• (1900)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am the official critic for unemployment insurance for my Party and I want to tell this House and the Hon. Member that no one approached me—

Some Hon. Members: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: —no one approached me to limit the debate to one day until about eight days ago. This Bill was tabled in the House on April 1 and the Government did not do one thing about it until about eight days ago. Then it offered us not a day, but a Wednesday afternoon, a short day. I said I would be willing to accept the very next day, if they gave us a full day with extended hours, and it took them almost eight days to respond. So cut that out. Tell the truth.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Allmand: You do not know the meaning of truth over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) knows very well that this is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) first to signal he had a point of order. I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Actually, Madam Speaker, it was not a point of order, but a question to the Hon. Member. That is why I was standing. My question is—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I had understood the Hon. Member was rising on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Gatineau on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: That is precisely the point of order I wanted to raise, Madam Speaker. We were back to the questions to the Hon. Member, and I wanted to ask him one question, but the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis)—I find it difficult to pronounce—had indicated he wanted to rise on a point of order. So, I would simply like to give him a hand. But if he does not have any point of order, other MPs and myself wanted to ask questions, Madam Speaker, and I have been rising for a long time.

[English]

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, I have been patiently waiting for a ruling or an interjection by yourself on an interjection made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) when my hon. colleague the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) was making a speech, which prompted you, Madam Speaker, to rise and call the House to order, to which the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East quite distinctly, and I am sure it will appear in the blues, referred to our hon. colleague as a liar.

I have been patiently waiting for the Hon. Member to be called to order and to withdraw those remarks or be dealt with accordingly because, certainly the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East knows very well that that is unparliamentary and unacceptable. I personally take it as an affront as a Member of this House of Commons that such language would be tolerated by the Chair. I expect you, Madam Speaker, to deal with it accordingly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There was at one time—and I hope we will not have to listen to this very often this evening—many people talking rather loudly together. I warned everyone not to say anything they might regret the next day. If the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East has some apologies to make, I am sure he will make them. As far as I am concerned, and I will check the blues tomorrow, I cannot be certain at this time.

If the Hon. member feels he should apologize, I am sure he will do so.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I know the rules do not allow me to call the Hon. Member a liar, and I did call him a liar, so I will withdraw that remark. Unfortunately, I cannot think of any other words which will express the same opinion.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is not an unequivocal withdrawal, but I think that at this late hour, tonight, we shall accept it.

The question and comment period is now over. On the debate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in the debate on this April Fool's Day joke which the Government has played on the workers of Canada who are anticipating retirement and wondering how they are going to handle their affairs. I appreciate the opportunity to say something immediately after the unseemly display which has occurred in the House, precipitated by an Hon. Member suggesting that the Opposition was holding up action on this Bill. Here we have a mess created by the Government in the fall of 1984. It has taken the Government months, years, one could say to recognize it as the mess it is even when the Ministers of the Cabinet pointed out the mistake which had been made.

Members on the front bench of the Government caucus are prepared today to indicate how unsatisfactory this Bill is even now. We then have a Member of the Government, a new member admittedly, since the 1984 Parliament, suggesting that somehow or other the Opposition has been holding this up. I can appreciate why a Member would be tempted to say that is a lie because it is not true. What we have to recognize here is a mess that the Government created and which it is refusing even now, belatedly in this April Fool's Day joke Bill that it served up, to do justice to Canadian workers.

What did we have? We had a new Government, swollen with numbers, arrogant in office, convinced it could do anything, dedicated to one end alone, convinced that only by means of reducing government expenditures could it return the country to prosperity and, regardless of any sense of honour, any kind of promises given in the election campaign, determined to do anything to reduce the outflow of government expenditures in various areas.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in preparation of his statement for presentation within days after the House convened in November of 1984, came up with a bright idea to change fundamental rules in the unemployment insurance system. It is a system which, at that point, was almost half a century old. It had been won by years and years of labour in the 1930s, in years of depression, by workers who were out of work and who wanted it, insisting that unemployment was not their fault, that governments had to recognize some responsibility. There were people in province after province who insisted that an unemployment insurance system was necessary on a national basis in order to provide for the unemployed. Finally, by constitutional amendment no less, the Canadian people resolved to do just that.

In 1940 unemployment insurance was added to the list of federal responsibilities. Fundamental rules were established for it. It was a system of insurance which was maintained by employees and employers. Government came into it when necessary to keep up the amount of funds needed to maintain the scheme. But it was a system of insurance.

In recognition of the plight that workers faced when they retired, there was a system of benefits laid out. In the 1970s that system of benefits was improved and enhanced at a time when unemployment rates ran very high and such a scheme was necessary.

What did the Minister of Finance decide to do in November of 1984 but to change the fundamental rules, to say that there are some lucky people out there who, when they cease to be employed, have money. In some cases they may become eligible for benefits. They may be eligible for severance payments. They may even have holiday pay. The Minister said: "Let us count all of that as income. It is marvellous. We can postpone the day when the unemployment insurance fund will need to advance anything toward them, when they will have any kind of eligibility for benefits. In the process we are going to reduce the outflow from the unemployment insurance fund and the deficit will be reduced somewhat".

No regard was given to good faith. No regard was given to the situation of workers who had earned these benefits over months and years of service. They were simply struck away. The philosophy of the Government was to break faith and save money.

What we have had is a system in which as many as 55,000 Canadians have been retiring just on that one aspect alone. Thanks to these changes the Government has been able to save $250 million on an annual basis. Sure, it has been a nice saving. Yet no regard was given to the fact that the Government has resources that people put out of work do not have.

No regard was given to the fact that persons who had planned for years found themselves faced with retirement, involuntarily in many cases. After all, it was the military personnel in the Canadian Armed Forces, and others in the RCMP, particularly in the lower ranks, who were forced into retirement. This was not a voluntary decision they made. They were forced into retirement.

The Minister of Finance, having regard and responsibility for the finances of the country, and having the resources of his Department and of the Bank of Canada, as well as the Canadian people behind him, turned to these people who were forced by the regulations of the Armed Forces and RCMP into retirement and said: "You are not going to have any entitlement for unemployment insurance because your pension is too high". Or he said: "You may have a little bit of entitlement. We are going to take your pension benefits first and calculate them. If that is less than you are entitled to under the new regulations, we will top it up a little bit".

To say that to people who still might be in their forties or early fifties, people with responsibility for families, with children in college and university making large demands on their families, people who served the country well for decades was one of those fundamental acts of bad faith that has been characterized by Government time after time. It went on to characterize it over the next months. It aroused the anger of the Canadian people. It has provided the basic reason that has driven this Government down toward 25 per cent and less in the public opinion polls. That kind of lack of faith was not to be tolerated by the Canadian people.

What do the Canadian people do now but wait quietly for the day when they will have the chance to turf this Government out and throw it as far as they possibly can. That was the situation created by the Minister of Finance in the fall of 1984. It was obvious that it was a bad piece of work. It became obvious very quickly as the Minister of Employment attempted to work with the regulations and had to change deadlines. These were deadlines that were in effect for the end of the year, and then pushed back for later in 1985. Then further changes pushed them back until 1986. It was obvious that a fundamental mistake had been made.

In fact, ultimately, when the royal commission which was looking at the entire unemployment system declared in its report that a mistake had been made, there could be no doubt that the Government had taken the wrong course of action in the fall of 1984 in terms of this particular action for retirees. It was the minority report on unemployment insurance written by Frances Soboda and Jack Munro which drove the point home in paragraphs that considered not just retirement but severance payments and vacation benefits as well.

I wish to read some of this into the record since it makes the point so well.

> Pensions, severance pay and vacation pay have one thing in common. They were all earned prior to separation from employment.
> Pension income is a payment from a fund that was generated for an employee while he or she was employed. Vacation pay is an entitlement that is earned while employed and banked either in a "time off with pay" bank or in some cases in a vacation pay trust fund. Severance is a compensation to long-service employees for their lost employment rights. It is earned while employed and paid out on termination to finance the special adjustment problems that older workers face. It is an asset, not income. These earned benefits are caught in the regulation's net because they happen to be paid out on termination of employment . . . It is illogical to treat them as if they were.
> It is also extremely unfair. Many working people have taken early retirement from jobs in heavy industry, in particular, on the assumption that they could be able to supplement their pension income with lower-paying jobs after retirement, and that they would be eligible for UI when they were unemployed.
> Thousands of others in the armed forces and police are required to retire many years before normal retirement dates. These "retirees" are expected to find other employment after "retirement." Counting their pensions as income makes them effectively ineligible for UI.
> It is the only form of income not related to current earnings which is allocated against UI benefits. Investment income or income from RRSP's which is indirectly related to employment, prior to termination, is not allocated against UI benefits.
> It is inequitable to count pension income against benefits, for example, but not RRSP income. It is inequitable to count severance benefits against UI benefits but not the proceeds of RRSP withdrawals or other forms of pre-termination savings.

There, in one of the distinctions which the regulations drew, we see the kind of unfairness that the Government was prepared to create. Those who were not able to deposit to a regular pension fund, those who had to use RRSPs, or those who built up investments through other means and who might well not be compelled into retirement, those people would have escaped the net anyway. Others, those thousands of Canadians who were grateful for pension plans, worked through their unions and by other means to build them up, built up a benefit, built up an entitlement for their retirement.

In cases where they were in the forces or with the police, very careful planning was required. I know about some of this from members of my own family. They made calculations on how they might use pension benefits, together with other sources of income, to find work and to continue in a productive role in society after they had retired from the forces.

All this was done away with by a sentence or two in the statement of the Minister of Finance in November, 1984. For years the Government has allowed the situation to prevail. It has allowed this abomination on Canadian workers to continue. Finally, we had the Bill on April 1, and the Government waited through April, through May, and more than a week into June to bring it forward for second reading.

We have an understanding that it will be debated at second reading and considered in Committee of the Whole, that we will have an opportunity to put forward amendments in an attempt to improve it. God knows that the Bill needs improvement. It should not be passed in its present form. I am sure the critics in our caucus and those in the Official Opposition want to try to improve the Bill so that there will be a re-establishment of the regulations we should actually have.

What are we faced with? We are faced with Conservative Members who have something half good enough for them to want to make speeches about it. They want to spend all evening talking about it instead of giving us an opportunity to try to improve it in Committee of the Whole.

They are prepared to accept something which will save 22,000 workers on an annual basis but will leave another 33,000 workers unprotected. If they are prepared to make big speeches about it and fill the evening praising the Government for half-hearted measures a third of the way along the road, I suppose that is the situation in which they find themselves in government these days.

We all know that organizations of retirees across the country are not content with this Bill. As soon as the Bill was tabled they made clear that it was inadequate and insufficient to allow persons who were fortunate enough to find a second job to establish unemployment insurance eligibility by those means.

It is a classic piece of unfairness. Those who have connections, those with skills, and those who live in parts of the country where jobs can be more readily found are the people who are favoured. They might conceivably be able to obtain a contract for enough months to establish eligibility. However, those who live in Atlantic Canada, those at lower ranks in the forces who are unable to obtain contracts, and those without jobs wherever they are, remain out of luck. This is from a Government which claims to have the most needy always in mind when dealing with social policy.

It is an instance of Conservative unfairness and readiness to stick it to the unfortunate while pretending that the Bill which has been put forward is some great improvement to the unemployment insurance system. They have hardly begun to walk the road back to justice for the workers of Canada, for those who are forced into early retirement.

I see no reason for us not to get into Committee of the Whole as quickly as we can to put before the Minister amendments which would make the Bill what it should be, if we are to have a genuine return to the regulations that prevailed on November 7, 1984 and a return to the kind of justice the people of Canada want. Let us get to that point this evening and forget about speeches in support of something that does not deserve praise.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, what would the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) have had us do in the fall of 1984 when we faced a very serious crisis? We had 1.5 million people unemployed and an unemployment fund which was empty. It was in deficit by at least $1 billion. This is what triggered the effort to try to resolve the problem.

The Hon. Member has seen what the Forget Commission recommended as a way of dealing with the problem. They were Draconian measures which would have either delayed the payment of unemployment insurance or would have narrowed the number of weeks when people could have drawn unemployment insurance. They were unacceptable alternatives.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) looked at how we could put the unemployment fund on a basis where it could meet the needs of the unemployed and how we could create jobs to reduce the unemployment figures.

That is exactly what we have done. Granted, the unemployment fund can no longer be used as a retirement plan, but it was never meant to be a retirement plan. We did the best we could with a very unfortunate situation. The previous administration knew about the problem in 1982-83 and did absolutely nothing. We came along and had to do something about it. We felt that the most just thing to do was not to take away unemployment from people who were truly unemployed, not to make them wait longer, not to give them less money, and not to give them benefits for a shorter period of time. We looked at how the plan was being used in ways for which it was not meant when it was instituted.

The Hon. Member gave an historical rendition of what the plan meant, but he omitted a very recent piece of history. The fund was empty. What would the Hon. Member have us do? Would he have us shorten the period, give less money, or ask for more money from workers to put into the fund?

Now that we have this situation, would he have us not give a chance to members of the Armed Forces who usually take an early retirement, not because they have to but because they have decided that they can retire at 45 years of age? Would he have us not give them a chance to reapply for unemployment insurance? Would he not give a chance to public servants who want a second job after they have retired? Would he not give them a chance to have unemployment insurance? What is it that he would like us to do?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, those last sentences were just silly rhetoric. I have said that I want all this done and so much more, so let us not have all this talk about what I would want and so forth.

In 1984, the unemployment insurance fund was in deficit. What else would one expect when almost 1.5 million Canadians were out of work? What else could one expect? One expects the Minister of Finance to use the resources of the people of Canada through his Department and the Bank of Canada to finance the unemployment insurance fund until we are into a better employment situation and a lower deficit situation. That is what we want.

However, the point is that we are not faced with the situation in 1984. This year the unemployment insurance fund is expected to be $1.6 billion in the black. At the same time the Government refuses to extend justice to all retirees as it should. With money in the bank, it is refusing to re-establish the benefits for all workers to whom it should be extending it.

Surely that is the fundamental contradiction in my hon. colleague's question. What is the point of railing on about being dissatisfied with what we have here when there are resources to extend full unemployment insurance benefits to people who are driven into retirement?

They do not want to use the UI fund as a retirement fund but as a transition to other employment. Why not allow them the full benefit of that rather than force them to finance their own job hunt until they are lucky enough, if they are, to find a job and then to begin building up benefits? That is the contradiction at the heart of the Bill, and there is no point to laying rhetoric on it. The Bill simply failed.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, no wonder the Conservative Party is so low in the polls. The Hon. Member who just put a question indicates that she is not familiar with either the Forget report or with the Unemployment Insurance Act. Would the Hon. Member please read Recommendation 26 to the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). She said that Forget's recommendation was Draconian. Recommendation 26 reads:

> The current treatment of pension income should be rescinded with an effective date of January 5, 1986. The new policy should be announced and an implementation date of January 1, 1989—

Which means that Forget wanted the entire thing withdrawn as of January 5, 1986. I guess the Member for Gatineau has never read the report. Will the Hon. Member please instruct her on that. I would also ask the Hon. Member to please instruct her on the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Government wanted to correct the situation where people use the Unemployment Insurance Act as a retirement fund. Please let the Member for Gatineau know that in the Unemployment Insurance Act there is provision that you must always be ready and available for work. If you are not ready and available for work, you are not eligible for unemployment insurance. If you have a pension and if you are still ready and available for work, you should be eligible for unemployment insurance. The control mechanism against people using unemployment insurance for retirement is that they must indicate whether they are really going to retire or be ready and available for work. If they are not ready and available for work, no one is suggesting that they should get unemployment insurance. Will you please instruct the Member about the Act?

• (1930)

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this further opportunity from the Liberal critic to say something about the Act and the point of the legislation. To do all of this in the presence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is a bit of a privilege. It is good to have him here this evening in this part of the debate, and I trust he is listening carefully. The opportunity to obtain unemployment insurance benefits while one is still under 65 is because it serves as bridging from the employment one has had to the employment one expects to find. That is as true for someone who has been forced into retirement from the Armed Forces or the police as it is for anyone else who has been forced into retirement.

The resources of the country are there. These days the resources of the unemployment insurance fund, again as a result of the increase in premiums which the Government has carried through, is in good financial shape to handle this. At $1.6 billion in the black, there would not be any difficulty in taking that final step and providing the 33,000 retirees—which the present provisions will not protect—with the opportunity to obtain benefits as they pursue work.

As my friend has pointed out, and as I might underscore from the reports, including the unemployment insurance minority report Ms. Soboda and Mr. Munro, from which I read there was a recommendation about a difficulty that might arise in this area of allowing persons on pension income to receive unemployment insurance benefits without regard to the pension benefits they were receiving. After all, this was the kind of planning people had done previously in preparing themselves for retirement. The response put forward was to ensure that people were generally in the job market looking for work. That recommendation is the one which the Minister has refused to take. Clearly the Minister of Finance and the bunch over in the Ministry of Finance who want to keep taking money out of the pockets of the Canadian people every chance they get by taxation, higher premiums—

Mrs. Mailly: What nonsense.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): —by declining to pay off benefits, these same people have seen to it that the Minister who probably wants to do right by retirees has been prevented from doing so. There very simply is the problem with his Bill which is why we are so critical of it and why we resent the government Member trying to whip up something good for this Bill which it does not deserve.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to add my comments to those of previous speakers and give you my impressions of this Bill.

However, I must say, first of all, that after listening very carefully to what was said by the Hon. Members for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) and Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), that I have seldom heard so much political rhetoric in just two speeches.

Madam Speaker, since the Hon. Member for Richelieu finished his speech saying that he had met a philosopher who said that if you didn't understand the situation . . . I'm afraid I don't have the exact words, but perhaps the following saying will do. Speech is silver and silence is golden, if you don't want to make a fool of yourself. I think that what was said by the Hon. Members for Richelieu and Jonquière was a clear indication that they don't know what they're talking about, and that the whole point of their speeches was basically to use an issue that is of fundamental importance to so many thousands of people as an excuse for political rhetoric. To consider the facts in chronological order, we have to go back to November 1984, when the Government published a policy document under the title: A New Direction for Canada. This document was supposed to provide a plan and a timeframe for what was supposed to happen when, and to whom. So we get to the magic date and this particular group of Canadians is told that from now on they are no longer entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits, since any benefits they receive from their employer will be deducted.

This was in 1985, Madam Speaker. Today, in 1987, we are finally going to be given a chance to deal with a situation that has been dragging on for too long, and which in many cases has become a very serious problem.

Madam Speaker, as a result of endless protests, hundreds of petitions and numerous visits to Ottawa where people tried to get something done about this disgraceful case of discrimination, the Government finally showed its true colours last April. In April, it announced what it intended to do about the situation, after giving us all kinds of tentative solutions, none of which made much sense. In April the Government made its intentions clear when it tabled this Bill.

Quite recently, hardly 10-odd days ago, we were told: Listen, you in the Opposition, here is what we intend to do. So what is the reaction? We responded: In the interest of all these tens of thousands of people, as far as we are concerned we would have liked to have several days to debate this important question and the many injustices it raises; but in the interest of the tens of thousands of Canadian men and women who are frustrated and are waiting for fabulous amounts, we are prepared to co-operate to dispose of this matter in one single day. This was about ten days ago, Madam Speaker.

On the other hand, keeping in mind what I have just said, the first Government proposition to the Opposition on such a major issue was to hold the debate on this Bill on a Wednesday. And, as it happens, Wednesday is the shortest day of the week. And then they will claim, as did the Hon. Member for Jonquière, that this is a great day for retired people.

It is a great day for retired people. First retired people can rejoice, second Government Members take credit for this decision which is woefully incomplete in many respects. They take credit for being responsible for this great day. However, if we had to define demagogy, I suggest this would be a good example.

The Hon. Member for Richelieu said that if the Government has been unable to deliver the goods until today the blame rests squarely on the Opposition. We were quite ready and we reacted immediately, as he said himself; we reacted immediately. This is June 1987, yet the problem dates all the way back to January 1985. So I would suggest that in either case Canadian men and women can see through such puffery, they will decide for themselves who is really guilty, who is really responsible for what, in my judgment, is indeed a black mark against this Government.

Madam Speaker, in my constituency and my own region, there are certainly about 400 or 450 Canadians who are directly affected by this Bill. These people have been waiting for months, more than a year, for the Government to give them what they were fully entitled to receive. These 400 people, at an important time of their life, made a decision based on what they were expecting to get, after examining the situation objectively and taking into account a very important factor for the economic well-being of their communities, as they saw that they could leave the labour market so that more young people could keep their jobs and support their families. For these 400 people, full unemployment insurance benefits were essential and even vital.

Suddenly, they found that they had to make due with benefits which had been reduced, in many cases, to nil. Most of these people had contributed to the unemployment insurance plan for 20, 25 or 30 years and they were suddenly being told: You are no longer entitled to these benefits, or if so, only marginally.

It is only after being subjected to petitions, pressures and aggressive demands that the Government reversed its stand two, three or even four times, to give us finally what we now have before the House, namely Bill C-50.

Madam Speaker, I believe that all those who have been waiting for redress since their benefits were cut off are in the best position to understand who is responsible for this completely unacceptable situation.

We in the Opposition were and still are willing to co-operate. We shall co-operate as concerns the Bill which was called earlier today, and when the House adjourns this evening, the matter will be definitely settled and the people involved will be able to receive their cheques within a few weeks, at least I hope so. Among other things, this will be an opportunity for the Government to show it was serious when it spoke today about understanding and about generosity for these people who have been waiting for over a year because of these reductions.

In many respects, Madam Speaker, it would have been interesting to devote more than one day to this issue. We understand the extreme urgency of disposing of this Bill, so that the cheques can start going out as soon as possible. But having said that, I would be remiss if I did not indicate to you and to those concerned with this issue that it would have been important and even most relevant to keep on discussing this important and a number of its ramifications. I am referring here to the issue which I would described as discriminatory, most unfair and outright unreasonable. I had an opportunity before to demonstrate this point.

Let us imagine two Canadians, one working in the footwear industry, and the other in the manufacturing sector. Most everybody will recognize that in the footwear industry, salaries are somewhat average, not to say small in most cases. Clearly, Madam Speaker, an individual earning a modest salary does not have $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 at the end of the year to invest in an RRSP. He is at the mercy, in a slavish sort of way, of the pension fund which his employer has established for his employees. Contributions are always based on the salary earned, the generosity of the company's financial statements, so that pension funds which are made available to employees are generally quite modest. I am referring to the first individual to which my example applies.

The other one, who worked in a factory and had been fortunate enough to contribute to a pension plan, seeing what is happening here tonight, will not try to negociate his participation in a private pension plan but will prefer and rightly so, to take the money he was prepared to invest in that plan and put it in what is called a RRSP. When they reach 55 years of age, both men will retire and to ensure their subsistance, they will depend exclusively on the pension paid by from their employers, which consist of contributions taken from their pay cheques during 25 years.

No need to say that that pension doesn't represent much and is hardly enough to live decently. After a whole life spent on a low paying job, all the worker can count on for his retirement is a limited income. In a context of social justice, he could also reasonably expect one year of unemployment insurance benefits. But it will not be the case under this Bill because this man will be told: "That's it, you earn $300 a month, we deduct it from your benefits and we give you the difference." In his case he will live way under the poverty threshold while the other man could earn a more reasonable income and invest $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 in a RRSP every year for about 30 years. That same worker who from the start, could look to a rosy future, will go to the unemployment insurance office to withdraw the full amount of his contributions; as I said, these will be higher than the contributions of his fellow worker who working in the footwear industry was paid smaller wages and we know that UI contributions are based on the salary earned. We have here a perfectly clear example, Madam Speaker, of totally unjustified and injustifiable situation, an absolutely discriminatory situation which would have warranted explanations and answers.

There is another situation which seems to be unbelievably unfair, and which is documented in dozens of files in my riding office. When plans were made by asbestos mines to lay-off workers, and hundreds of people were concerned, they had obviously been scheduled over six to 10 months. Those in managing positions with the company knew very well that they would be laid-off as of a certain date, while their colleagues were laid-off at a much faster rate and more expeditiously. From this group of employees who knew officially that they would be laid-off on a permanent and definite basis, a few left before the week of january the 1st; they had known for one to three months beforehand that they would be permanently and definitely laid-off. But in fact they were laid off in the first week of January. Everybody knows there is a two-week waiting period. Everybody knows that these about to be laid off, do not exhaust their holidays but keep them in order that immediately after being laid off they can count on a full salary which is equivalent to paid holidays. Consequently, logically and mathematically, these people could not go to the UI office and file their claim for benefit. What happened? The legislation says, and very clearly contrary to many speeches we heard so far, at Section 4, paragraph (a): The Commission shall consider the entitlement to benefit of any claimant who made an initial claim for benefit before January 5, 1986.

For many, this legislation and its consequences represent a considerable improvement because it means several month qualifying periods, but for many whose situation I just described, there is no remedy to their problem, yet they are affected by the same situation of economic disaster in some area. Since they could not, because of a combination of circumstances, file their claim before January 5, the Government says: No, a line must be drawn, and they use as an example the fact that at age 65 one is entitled to old age security pension, but not at age 64, 11 months and 20 days. I accept that first example but I sincerely submit that in such a specific case, the individual who knew before January 5, 1985 that he or she would be laid off on a given date should be considered as all others who had the privilege, because it becomes a privilege, of filing an application before January 5. There is also the great injustice toward those who will be contributing thousands of dollars in unemployment insurance and who at the proper time will apply to obtain benefits but will be told: "Well, listen, you belong to a special group. You are not entitled to benefits unless you do this or that." Once again, Madam Speaker, it is an injustice, a discrimination and we would have liked to redress those grievances under a reasonable legislation which would have been fair and equal for all. We are told, and it was mentioned in a question, that for financial reasons, choices and restrictions had to be made as a result of the debt. On the other hand, billions are going to be spent to modernize defence while those individuals are entitled to expect minimum living wages. Such minimum living wages could be granted to them under a legislation which could be more reasonable and fairer.

• (1950)

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, when I heard the Hon. Member denigrate the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), I thought he was being carried away and let it go by. But after hearing his speech, I realize it was ignorance of the facts that led him to make that comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Richelieu. First, concerning the individuals he is referring to, who had vacation leave and perhaps sick leave credits, it is agreed that those individuals can put their claim to the Unemployment Insurance Board's tribunal. As always, this is the law. It is there. That is the first thing.

Second, people who have no pension income are entitled to UI benefits as always. The aim of the bill is to say that pension income, income from sick leave, vacation leave and so forth is to be deducted for UI purposes. In other terms, people with $15,000 income and less are still eligible to unemployment insurance. And even above that the deduction is pro rated on pension income. This is to point out that unemployment insurance income is unemployment insurance and not pension insurance, as I said.

Further, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), a colleague of the Hon. Member who just spoke, earlier said I was ignorant of unemployment insurance rules and this was why I suggested the Forget report's recommendations were drastic but there were others. As far as I am concerned, I was referring to proposals: how to save in the first place.

Second, if he says, as he read the Regulations to us, that people had to be available for work as a condition to being eligible to UI benefits, how does he explain that an early retiree who indicated he was not available for work would be entitled to benefits?

Clearly, this contradicts the purpose of Unemployment Insurance. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to tell me, first: Should he recognize that even today a lot of people have no pension fund, and are therefore entitled to Unemployment Insurance benefits, and it is unfortunate they have no pension fund because they find themselves penniless when they have none.

Second, the small-income people he was referring to are still eligible to UI benefits and the legislation in no way affects them.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Thank you, Madam Speaker, specially for allowing me to reply on this aspect of the arbitration board. I wish to tell my colleague that in the past two years, I personally submitted no fewer than 150 cases to the arbitration board. For your information, that board is composed of three people who assess the case brought them, after having seriously considered the analysis made by the Commission.

I agree with you that, in some cases, the arbitration board might prove somebody right, but for your information, I repeat that clause 4(1) refers to any claimant:

—who made an initial claim for benefit before January 5, 1986.

My experience before the arbitration board allows me to say that following a submission made before it, where there is evidence the claim was filed on January 15, the rejection would soon follow, and to refer to my colleague's comments, it will always be possible to appeal to the Federal Court. For the information of my colleague, however, to do so means a two and a half year delay in many cases, when that level can be reached since, first, the Federal Court will not negotiate, question or revise the facts. I will reply secondly by asking a question: Imagine two people, one with a private pension plan, the other without. Both earn $20,000. Why does one receive full unemployment insurance benefits while the other does not get one damn cent? What do you tell those two people who paid the same contributions, who possibly worked in the same sector, for different employers, one contributing to a private pension fund while the other does not. Let us suppose there are layoffs and both have the same seniority, the same wages, the same responsibility, even life expectancy. One is told: "You are entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits." The other: "You will not get a damn cent." What explanation do you give to that Canadian man or woman?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Any other questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne).

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, thank you very much for allowing me to say a few words on this most important Bill, for it is a Bill that I do consider as most important indeed. It is very important, Madam Speaker, because in the following days and weeks, we will at last be in a position to provide payments for those people who had applied for unemployment insurance benefits and were retiring early before January 5, 1986, and we shall be glad that the matter is finally resolved after waiting so long, after the Opposition dragged its feet so long without possibly realizing the impact that such a delay in the legislation could have on thousands of taxpayers. But ultimately, Madam Speaker, I am pleased to see that today at last, we can have this debate on, and pass Bill C-50.

As you know, Madam Speaker, my colleague from Richmond—Wolfe started earlier by quoting a famous author whose name he did not mention, but who said more or less: Better shut up and look dumb than speak and prove that you are. Not to be outdone by him, let me tell him the motto of the Liberals, as Rivarol would say: "Doing nothing is an art. Not overdoing it is wisdom". And that is what the Liberals have done over the years.

I fail to understand, in all honesty, because eventually the matter is going to be resolved, and we have agreed, in the three Parties, that people will be entitled to unemployment insurance if they presented a claim. I therefore fail to understand, Madam Speaker, why some Members, at least Members of the Official Opposition, said earlier today in this House: "Madam Speaker, it is a shame to see an irresponsible Government cause such irretrievable harm to the community of early retirement pensioners of Canada".

That shows one thing, it shows that opposition Members have short memories. Very very short memories. I want to remind them, Madam Speaker, that salaries and pensions were frozen at 5 per cent and 6 per cent while we had an inflation rate of 11 per cent, 12 per cent, 15 per cent. Madam Speaker, when the Liberals at the time took that action, when they did that to the Canadian people, I never saw, and I have read the proceedings, I took the trouble to read the proceedings of the House at the time, I have never seen any Liberal Member or Minister stand up and tell the former Primer Minister, Mr. Trudeau: "Look, what you are doing is not fair. You are hurting Canadian people. You are doing away with the basic rights of early retirees. You are removing fundamental rights from workers, mothers, and the economy".

No, Madam Speaker, all the Liberal Members, the 74 blockheads, as they would often be called by Mr. Parizeau, the former Pequiste Minister from Quebec, sat quietly in their chairs and said: "Our Prime Minister is right. We are not going to do anything. We are not going to say a word because he will get us off the track". You see, Madam Speaker, that is what the Opposition was like when they were in power.

I listened this morning as my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie made this outrageous statement to the House: "Madam Speaker, the Gulf refinery in Montreal was closed by the Conservatives. As the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I set up that survival committee. I save the jobs at the Gulf refinery". Madam Speaker, I took the trouble of looking into the Debates. I repeat, under the previous Liberal Government, three refineries closed down. Not one, but three in Montreal East. Three refineries and not one Liberal Member of the time stood up and said: We are going to set up a survival committee. No Liberal Member, no Minister, Madam Speaker, rose to tell his or her Prime Minister, Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or Minister of Employment and Immigration: "What are you doing for our workers?" None, Madam Speaker!

Today, in this House, in the country, some are talking about social justice and equity . . . We realize, Madam Speaker, how gifted the Liberals are in the art of deceit, how inconsistent they are in their actions to defend the interests of the Canadian people.

We must accept one thing. When we assumed power in 1984, we had some constraints, administrative constraints, a huge deficit due to a large degree to a careless administration, a deficit, Madam Speaker, which will mortgage for years to come future generations, my children, your children and their children.

Their mind was set on the short term, and on their own re-election instead of, the middle and the long term and the better interests of the Canadian people.

We will probably not have to remind them that they were the ones who allowed those at the top of the salary scale not to pay any tax. We will remind them the tax loopholes they left in the area of research, which left gaps of several billion dollars in the Canadian economy. And who was bearing the burden, Madam Speaker? The Canadian workers, the workers from Quebec, all those who paid taxes to a Government who was supposed to be responsible but who almost drove Canada bankrupt, put Canada in such a financial state that industrialized countries in general did not trust it anymore; they put the people of Canada in such a situation that it did not trust them, and we saw what happened in 1984, because of the commitments they did not keep, because of the promises they had made for several elections but they never fulfilled.

We will all remember the previous election, we will remember that in 1981, the former Liberal Hon. Member for my constituency, I don't remember his name very well, said the following in a pamphlet: If we, in the Liberal Party, are re-elected, we will increase the pension for widowers and widows who are between 60 and 64 years old. Madam Speaker, only a Progressive Conservative Government could put such a policy in place.

Due to sound management by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Cabinet, we have achieved a $10 billion reduction in our deficit. Those $10 billion at a 10 percent interest rate mean savings of $1 billion in each and every coming year. That is $1 billion to be redistributed between social programs, to be shared by families most in need, that is $1 billion representing new opportunities for our upcoming youth, for future generations, and opportunities to live a good life and, most of all, to get some time during their life monies which they are entitled too.

Social justice calls for a long term and not a short term perspective. Social policy and social justice, Madam Speaker, must be considered in a global approach, in the context of decisions to be made for the middle and the long term. In other words, difficult decisions had to be made, but no outstanding politician in Canada or in the provinces even made his mark without some unpleasant courageous actions on the short term, decisions which time has proven to be the most judicious of all.

That is what our Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has done. That is precisely the decision he has made.

We have seen that on January 5, 1986, people who had made applications before that date . . . There had been a communication problem and in my opinion, the message had not been clear enough. The Minister said: "It is true. We are going to solve the problem." And we have done it. We are solving it today because we are discussing the matter.

Ninety-five percent of all those cases will be settled, people will have no more problems, they will be able to receive their unemployment insurance benefits. Some Opposition Members are saying: "We have convinced the Government to change its mind." But, Madam Speaker, only fools are never wrong. As regards our Minister of Employment and Immigration and our Prime Minister, they know how to recognize what is right, they know how to recognize what is called social justice, they know how to recognize fairness and it is for that fundamental reason that our Minister of Employment and Immigration tabled before this House a bill to pay, to refund early retirees. That is the main reason for Bill C-50.

I heard some colleagues in the New Democratic Party, particularly the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who said earlier: "We must take care of the members of our Forces." But, Madam Speaker, members on the other side are the first ones to be willing to stop our contribution to NATO. They are the first ones to be prepared to withdraw the Canadian Army and put it God knows where.

But for them, there is no problem, money is no problem, we can always print more. It is nothing to worry about. They do not know what economy means, that is why they are in the Opposition and will stay. However, what is sure is that when we look at the whole debate on Bill C-50, we must recognize that all Members who have taken part in this debate, in particular those of the Conservative caucus, who made representations, who heard in each of their respective ridings the chairman and people from ARSAC, FADOQ, or from senior citizens' federations, explain to the workers' unions, to our Members of Parliament what they have been through in technical terms, because the problem is not one of substance but of technical nature and of bad communications—

We told them they were right, we went to see our caucus, we discussed the whole matter and the Minister understood our point. If we are debating Bill C-50 today in this House we certainly do not owe it to the Opposition, to the Liberals and even less to the New Democrats. Quite the opposite, Madam Speaker. Some of my colleague, like the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), said earlier that Liberals and New Democrats have been delaying the study of this Bill. I saw the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) rise and use an unparliamentary word, which I shall not repeat, saying that they had always been willing to participate. It was a half-truth, Madam Speaker, because if you think of the debates we had in the last few weeks, you will realize that the Liberals and New Democrats have kept delaying the study of some bills to prevent this one from being debated. Liberals and New Democrats have been filibustering to prevent the Government from paying benefits to the early retirees affected by this legislation.

Madam Speaker, a while ago I was listening to my colleague from Richmond—Wolfe who was telling us about the difference between people with pension funds and those with RRSPs. He mentioned the case of a person earning $20,000 a year who has a pension fund and another one also making $20,000 who contributes to an RRSP. Let me remind him that to get an RRSP that will give him the same benefits as a pension fund he must pay much higher contributions than someone with a pension fund, to which the employer contributes 50 per cent or even 100 per cent.

Madam Speaker, these people will eventually be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits and I cannot understand why my colleague for Richmond—Wolfe and the Opposition are doing all kinds of calculations to demonstrate that those who contributed to RRSPs will be able to get both an annuity and unemployment insurance benefits while those with a pension fund will not be eligible to UI. Madam Speaker, if two people retire from the same company, CIP for instance, and get a pension and if one of was also contributing to an RRSP, none of them will get unemployment insurance because they both have the same pension fund. That is of an absolute logic that the Opposition is unable to understand and that is why, Madam Speaker, we have known such a huge deficit during the 20 lean years of the Liberal government. They did not know how to count. The only thing they knew was to try and play politics in a demagogic way, as was so cleverly demonstrated by the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

You know, Madam Speaker, my colleague for Nickel Belt says a lot of things perhaps he should not say. Maybe he should listen, maybe he should learn from our Government how responsibilities must be taken on.

• (2000)

You know, Madam Speaker, it is easy to criticize for one who sits on the other side, for one who does not know what it is to take a decision that is appropriate for tomorrow's economical growth, for the future generations, for social justice and equity, that is easy for one who has never been able, who has never had the chance to take such a decision, and who will never have a chance to do it because he is leaning towards the New Democratic Party. Those are the people, Madam Speaker, who prefer to criticize and be irresponsible rather than sit around a table or come to the House and say: Yes, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has recognized that workers who took an early retirement lacked technical information. They will be refunded, you will obtain our support, we will stop from making difficulties about the various bills so that finally, this responsible Government can grant to those who take an early retirement their basic rights which are being upheld. And we will continue to fight for them despite the systematic opposition by Liberals and New Democrats and we will do them justice and tell them: Yes, you are entitled to that, you paid for it. Yes, you are entitled to that in legal or technical terms because you paid your contributions, but we would also tell them: "Unemployment insurance is not a pension fund, but it is meant for the unemployed and the needy."

I sometimes receive at my office an individual who gets $150 per week and is caught because he or she has a side line and has to refund. It is unfair that person has a family with two, three or four children. The unemployment insurance policy is unfair when someone can collect benefits of $1,200, $1,500, $2,000 without being cut while an unemployed family man with two children to look after and who earns $150 per week is penalized because he has enough courage to have a side line and he is told: "No, you will be penalized." Madam Speaker, that is an inequity that must be changed, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration is addressing it. This Government is addressing it in a responsible way. And I do not see why an opposition that is being destroyed by internecine divisions, an opposition that is destroyed at the level of its ideology cannot accept it, cannot co-operate in building a strong Canada, a Canada that will respect every region and every social class, that will put everything back in its rightful place, that will ensure that this country is the greater for it.

Since a number of my colleagues want to take part in this debate, I will give others an opportunity to do so. In conclusion, although it will be difficult for you to do so, I would ask the opposition to find the will to co-operate for once, to give back to people who earned it what is rightfully theirs, and to co-operate in a forthright, honest and non-partisan way, as the Hon. Member for Richmond suggested. This will show Canadians how much the House of Commons and the Canadian Government work for the common good rather than electoral interests, as the opposition is so adept at doing.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, we heard the non-demogogue. We have heard a calm speech by the Hon. Member who just spoke.

Mr. Gormley: Just like yours, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want the Hon. Member to give me some specific advice in responding to this person, a Mr. Dominic Cosintino from John Street North in Hamilton, who wrote:

> In my case (and probably many others as well) I retired early at age 57, not by choice, but because my plant (Stelco Inc., Canada Works, Hamilton) closed its doors. Some employees were allowed to retire previous to final closure, as operations were moved to other plants in Quebec and Ontario.
> To enable junior employers to transfer to other Stelco Plants, older employees were asked to delay their departure so operations could be wound down in an orderly fashion and to maintain customer compliance.
> Since I was employed as a truck loader in the Shipping Department I was asked to delay my departure until complete closure came about. This occurred March 31, 1986, at which time I retired. By having acceded to Stelco's request I find myself disqualified from the proposed forgiveness by not retiring before January 5, 1986.
> May I reiterate that I did not choose either my retirement or the date of it. I retired only because of plant closure.
> Thank you for any efforts on my (our) behalf.

The Hon. Member talks about social justice. I want to know what answer he and his Tory Party have for the Cosintinos of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): You know, Madam Speaker, the first thing that is prompted by the Hon. Member's question, and the first thing I might suggest would be to tell him he should resign if he is unable to solve those cases. This is the proof the New Democratic Member should quite simply go home and vacate his seat to a competent Conservative who certainly would defend his constituents before the minister in charge, before this House and before a Parliament and an honest caucus which, quite evidently despite the shortcomings of both opposition parties, is successfully protecting the interests of Canadians.

Madam Speaker, there is something in the Hon. Member's statements that makes me wonder, and if he wants to listen, perhaps he will stop putting that kind of question. You know, one thing comes to my mind. I may not be his age. My daughter certainly is not, since she is two years old. But we have a country to build. We must be responsible to all Canadians, both workers and non-workers. We have to be responsible for current policies, future policies, policies that will ensure that each and every Canadian, quite apart from the New democrat ideology, the Liberal ideology, the ruling Party ideology, we will have to put in place policies that will meet the needs of the people, not on the short-term, electoral level, as the opposition has always done, not on chameleon positions as the New Democratic Party always did, because, Madam Speaker, when they feel like it they vote along with the Liberals, and when they feel like it they vote along with the Conservatives. They are trying to spare each side, but they are sparing nothing. The only thing they are sparing is the seat of their pants, because they remind stuck to their seats for fear of losing them.

But, Madam Speaker, when one is part of a responsible government, led by a Prime Minister who is committed first and foremost to justice and fairness, who believes that each and every Canadian has an equal, basic right, then, as our Minister of Employment and Immigration did, one tables a Bill C-50. As responsible Members, we support him 100 per cent in his efforts. And all we hope for is for the opposition, who understands nothing, to at least follow the example of a Government that has the common interest to heart.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, no wonder they rank so low in the opinion polls in Quebec. Considering the kind of answers... Two simple questions. Two very simple questions: If you were so concerned about the problems of thousands of retirees, why is Bill C-50 dated April 1, when the problem goes back to January, 1986? Second question: If the Liberal Government's policies were so debatable, why, after spending $9 million on the Forget Commission, after listening carefully to Charlies Brown's 59 sheep who came up with 90 recommendations, why isn't there a single damned recommendation in the Bill? Why?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I would like to draw the attention... Order, please! I would like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) to the kind of language used in this House. I made the same remark to one of his colleagues earlier this evening, and perhaps he could be more careful.

The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne).

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Please sit down, sir. Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asked two very specific questions. First, why Bill C-50 was tabled on April 1 and why it took us until June to get to the second and third reading stage? My answer, since he either did not understand what I was saying or wasn't listening, is that the Opposition did everything that was humanly possible—and it certainly did a good job—to hold up the various Bills that were on the table and thus prevent the Minister of Employment and Immigration from introducing Bill C-50.

As for the second part of his question, when the Hon. Member refers to polls and the Prime Minister, I may remind him that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is certainly not in a very good position to finish his current mandate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair realizes that it is getting late. However, I think it would be much easier to proceed if all Members tried to maintain order in the House, and I am referring to both sides of the House, front benches as well as back benches.

The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) may finish his comments.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, whatever the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) may have to say about it, I shall continue to defend the interests of a responsible Government. I shall continue to defend the interests of those who come to my office and tell me they have problems. We shall defend those interests. I shall continue to make representations to my responsible Ministers, and, Madam Speaker, in concluding, I shall continue to urge the Official Opposition and the New Democrats to help us get this important Bill through the House so that we can make those payments to the people entitled to receive them.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Rodriguez. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Pursuant to order made Monday, June 8, 1987, the Bill stands referred to Committee of the Whole.

Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-50, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, in this Bill the Government is partly reversing itself to allow persons who applied for unemployment insurance benefits, and who were early retirees or retirees prior to January 5, 1986, to get their unemployment insurance. If the Government were to go all the way and pay all of those retirees beyond January 5, 1986, even though they may not have obtained a second job, how much does he and his department estimate the cost to be of the plan?

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, if I understood correctly the question put by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I think that what the Hon. Member is really asking me to do is, in some way, to abrogate the Bill and arrange to pay all the people who were already receiving payments from pension plans and who would be claiming unemployment insurance benefits.

I think the position has its merits. However, the Government has calculated that the costs connected with this Bill for 1985-86, and if I were to act along the lines you are suggesting—in any case, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the Bill represents a cost of $295 million.

If we repealed all the new rules as requested by the Hon. Member, it would mean additional costs of $95 million for 1985-86, $305 million for 1986-87 and $280 million for 1987-88.

In my opinion, these would be excessive costs and I do not think that we could face such an increase.

In other words, under this Bill, we are already bearing additional costs of $295 million, and as I have just pointed out, if we did as my colleague asks, it would mean $685 million more, which the Government is not in a position to pay.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, in his announcement in November, 1984, the Minister of Finance denied unemployment insurance benefits in part or in whole to all those retirees who attempted to obtain unemployment insurance. Here we are in 1987 and the Minister is bringing forward a Bill in which the Government is saying all right, we made a mistake. Does the Minister intend to pay interest on the unemployment insurance benefits to those who were entitled to receive them but did not prior to January 5, 1986?

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, it is not a question of admitting that there was a mistake or not. The principles have not changed at all. In November 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that those who received income from pensions, which is considered income from employment, could not at the same time receive unemployment insurance benefits, which are also considered income from employment.

In other words, the established principle has remained the same. However, for reasons of understanding and as it seemed that, for all kinds of reasons, some people might sincerely and honestly not have understood our message before January 5, 1986, we decided to make this measure retroactive to January 5, 1986 and consider that these people had made in good faith a claim which should be honoured.

I would like to correct something which my colleague said. The principle has not changed in the last two years. You can say if you like that you have succeeded in making the Government change its mind. This is not important for us. What is important is to have been fair for the preretirees who honestly believed that the Government should respect its policy and to have decided not to apply to the letter a provision which these people might have misunderstood. This is what we recognize.

I repeat that we are continuing to apply the very same principles as before, and I would like the Hon. Member to remember it during the rest of this debate. The Government does not admit that anyone should receive benefits from two sources of employment income, in other words pension funds and the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

• (2120)

Mr. Rodriguez: This is rather confusing. The Minister said that the Government enunciated the principle in 1984, the principle being that pension income is income for unemployment insurance purposes. If the principle has not changed, why is he now saying that if a retiree gets a second job and gets laid off he can continue to draw the pension and full UI benefits? It seems to me that the principle is flawed and illogical. After all, the person will still get pension income but because he or she was able to latch on to a job they can collect full UI benefits as well as the pension income.

To me that establishes two classes of retirees, the first being made up of those fortunate to obtain another job after having lost their job. We know from statistics that an older worker has one chance in ten of getting another job. Rather than establishing a principle the Government has further layered the UI and created a class structure at that level in the unemployment insurance program. Surely the principle lacks coherence and logic.

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, my friend does not understand that in the world in which we live today it is not unusual to start another career. You usually receive a pension after your first career. Someone who takes mandatory retirement at the age of 50 can have another career for 20 years. The principle that those who receive pensions cannot collect unemployment insurance applies to the first part of their lives. If you start a second job and work for four, five, or six years and then lose your job you can collect UI benefits which apply to that part of your life.

That is something which the Member and I will have to consider because in the new world of work many Canadians will face the reality of having a second career. I want to emphasize that the principle is the same. Pensions and unemployment insurance cannot be received together. However, when you start another career—

Mr. Rodriguez: That is illogical.

Mr. Bouchard: It may be illogical for the Hon. Member but it is logical for Canadians and it is Canadians whom we serve, not him.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Chairman, nothing the Minister said has convinced me that the principles are maintained or are logical. Therefore, I would like to move the following amendment:

That Bill C-50 be amended in Clause 2(1) by striking out lines 11, 12, 13 and 15 and renumbering the remaining line 14 as line 11.

I have sent you a copy, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, I want to support that amendment. I was happy to hear the Minister say that the principle enunciated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November, 1984, has not been changed and that the Government stands by that principle. If there is one group of Canadians who will know what that means and who will resent what the Government has done, it is members of the Armed Forces. We have heard Members on the government side say how proud and supportive they are of the Armed Forces. However, let us look at what this Bill does to members of the Armed Forces.

A man or woman joins the Armed Forces at the age of 18 or 20. As a member of the Armed Forces, unemployment insurance premiums are deducted from their pay. After 20 years that member of the Armed Forces retires, not because he or she wants to but because the regulation require them to do so. Therefore, at age 40 to 45 those people are forced out of the Armed Forces and immediately begin to draw their pensions. They do not have any choice but are required to do so.

That pension is too small to live on. Their home may have been in Winnipeg or Vancouver but they served a number of years in Halifax; Saint John, New Brunswick; or Ottawa and they want to move home. They have to relocate, buy a home, and find a job. It takes them some time to find a job. They are drawing a very small pension and, after having paid unemployment insurance premiums for 20 years, they should be able to get unemployment insurance benefits. They can get their benefits, but only after the deduction is made for their pension.

I received a letter from a Winnipeg resident who lives in the constituency of the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine to whom he wrote first. The Member did not have the courtesy or decency to reply to the letter, perhaps because he did not care or perhaps because he did not know what to say. I will put this letter on the record and perhaps the Minister will give me a reply which I can send on to this person.

He says:

> You are no doubt aware of the government action in altering the unemployment insurance (UI) program pertaining to severance pay and pension income.
> I am a member of the Canadian Armed Forces and will be retiring from the forces on 17 Aug 85 after serving 33 years.
> While the prospect of entering the civilian job market and establishing a second career does not greatly worry me, there are of course some personal concerns about the availability of suitable employment.
> I have been contributing to UI since Armed Forces personnel were included. I currently contribute 46.84 each month to the scheme from which I can now claim no benefit. Under the government changes to the plan Armed Forces personnel have become victims of what may be called an insurance scam. We contribute premiums with no opportunity to benefit.
> I was informed of the impending legislation at CFB Winnipeg in January '85 when making inquiries regarding my retirement benefits.
> I wrote to my MP, Mr. Dan McKenzie, Winnipeg—Assiniboine, stating my view that the changes to the UI plan were unfair in that we were paying for nothing.
> I likened the situation to a family owning two cars. One car becomes damaged in an accident and the insurance company refused payment because the family has another car to drive.
> I have paid into the UI, as Unemployment Insurance, not an income replacement scheme. I may soon be unemployed. Certainly I will have some income but it will be considerably less than I had anticipated should I be unable to secure employment.
> Members of the forces have obviously had the foresight to maintain employment on a career basis with the aim of an annuity to assist in later life. We have served under conditions of service which do not apply to most civilian careers.
> Frequent transfers, uprooting families from jobs and schools, rented and often sub-standard housing, hazardous work conditions and other vagaries of the profession.
> At an age where a majority of civilian career workers are reaching an income and seniority peak, armed forces members are released from the service to attempt to establish a second career, normally at ages between 47 and 55.
> Many members on release are in a transition period for some time. They move to a new location, they buy their first home, they are "Putting Down Roots" for the first time. Finding employment under these conditions is difficult. Not all military trades and professions are immediately transferable to civilian occupations. Unemployment Insurance always provided a "cushion" during that transition period.

Let me stop there for a moment. This member of the Forces obviously did not get a reply from his Member of Parliament, the Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie). Let me continue:

> In a letter signed by Michael H. Wilson, Minister of Finance, I am informed that:
>
> "The justification for the change in the treatment of pension income relates to the primary principle behind UI, which is to provide income protection to people who are without a job and without earnings. Someone receiving money from a previous employer in the form of a pension or separation pay cannot be said to be meeting these requirements. The change eliminates double payments and reinforces the objective of UI as an income replacement scheme".
> Mr. Wilson's reference to "double payments" is nonsense. The Government is eliminating their "one payment" because I had the foresight to work at a career which provided some pension security. If it is the Government's intention to eliminate a percentage of the working population of Canada from UI benefits, it should also eliminate those same workers from paying premiums.
> As you may detect in this letter, my reaction is one of anger. I feel cheated of even the possibility of drawing any benefit from unemployment insurance should I be unable to secure employment. As selfish as this view may appear, it is a view shared by a great many fellow service members.

He concludes his letter as follows:

> It is a situation which makes me regret my 1984 vote for the Conservative party.

I would like the Minister to tell me what answer I can give to satisfy this member of the Armed Forces and many others who feel exactly as he does.

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, I listened carefully to the letter of the former member of the Armed Forces read by my colleague from Winnipeg North. Since the Government will be allocating $300 million to the Unemployment Insurance Fund for the benefit of all Canadians, including members of the Armed Forces, I believe that if such a Canadian has questions to ask, we have answers to give him.

My answer will be much shorter as it is simply a question of logic. The Hon. Member recommends that we eliminate Section 2 (b) of the definition, which states:

[English]

"Arising out of service in the Canadian Forces or in any police force".

[Translation]

This would mean that, as there would be a contradiction between the amendments and the Bill itself, we would be unable to pay all the former members of the Canadian Armed Forces who have requalified for benefits in the last 18 months. Millions of dollars in benefits could not be paid, especially as there is a relatively high rate of re-employment among members of the Armed Forces.

However, I can accept some of the comments made by the Hon. Member. This is a universal system to which all Canadians contribute, but naturally they are not all expected to collect from it. In the present situation, the Government is addressing the question of equity, and gives to members of the Armed Forces, police forces, the RCMP and others who will requalify the possibility of collecting unemployment insurance benefits when they lose their second job.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on the amendment.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Chairman, I think the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is really worthwhile, since it tends to completely eliminate discrimination against older workers. Contrary to what the Minister says, his principles are quite flexible. He says first of all that a person who has pension income should not receive unemployment benefits. However, this principle no longer applies once that person gets a second job. After this second job, the first principle is forgotten. Mister Minister, the Government will have to make up its mind. It is no use juggling with concepts to make people believe—

We already know, Mr. Minister, that people in the Armed Forces, that people in the RCMP, we already know, as the Hon. Member for Jonquière has said, that people who lose their jobs because of a plant shutdown, those people have worked for 25 or 30 years, they have paid unemployment insurance contributions, so now the Minister and the Conservative Government want us to tell all those people in Murdochville and others working for companies closing down: Ladies and gentlemen, you older workers, it has been decided that you are not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

The principle the Minister is explaining to us reminds me of someone who owns an apartment building and takes out a fire insurance policy. All of a sudden there are too many fires in a given neighbourhood, so the insurance company makes a decision and tells the people: You will not be covered for the first fire, but continue to pay your premiums and should fire break out a second time, then we will pay you.

Mr. Minister, your are off base. You are way off base with respect to the thousands of older workers. The Minister would have us believe this will cost between $550 million and $600 million, yet the same Government spent $3 billion to reimburse people who had savings of $60,000 in western banks, people who knew the rules. But now the Minister is saying: No, the Government cannot spare any money. First, the Minister is openly misleading the people. This is not Government money, it is the money of the employers and the money of the employees. Second, the UI fund does not belong to the Government, it is the money of workers. The workers and their employers decided to set up a fund to protect themselves in case of lay-offs.

Mr. Blais: Unemployment, that is what it is!

Mr. Malépart: Exactly. When you lose your job. I am happy to see that the Conservative Members agree. When you look for a second job, you are entitled to UI benefits. But then, the Government says no. The workers in Bellechasse who will be looking tomorrow for another job because they have been laid off would like to get their UI benefits, but the Hon. Member for Bellechasse says no. When you are looking for another job, you are not entitled to the full benefits. But when you have found another job and embraced a new career that may last five or ten years, according to the Minister, after 20 weeks the principle has now changed.

I wish the Minister would break down this $285 millions he is talking about. We all know how much it costs the Unemployment Insurance Commission and not the Government in 1985 to reimburse retired workers, but who exactly will benefit from the projected $265 millions or so, how many people are actually affected? I would appreciate some precision about the numbers and about the principle at work. Why is this principle rather flexible? If you qualify for a second job, you lose the benefits, but for the first one, the principle applies.

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, it is not easy to reply to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), because he said at the outset that we are "off the track". I don't know how many are on his side, but some of them have often changed "tracks" on the way. I am simply asking him to be logical and understand that in 1987, some people stop working, either through mandatory or voluntary retirement: that is called pre-retirement. There are people in the Armed Forces who retire when they are 40 years old, others retire when they are between 45 and 50 years of age: We say that these people are getting money from employment, something you just cannot deny; therefore, the unemployment insurance rule states: You are entitled to benefits if you do not get money from another job. That's exactly what's happening when people are collecting a pension.

Please, when you had the floor, I did not try to interrupt you! When you qualify for a second job, it's not the rule that changes, but the facts. You pay premiums, you begin a new career and if, after a while, you lose your job, you are entitled to benefits because of the premium you paid, because, again, your pension fund applies to your first job . . . All of this is logical. But you should not try to adapt logic to daily reality. Otherwise, we would end up in a mess such as yours: between $3 billion and $4 billion deficit in the unemployment insurance account. By 1989, we expect to completely balance the unemployment insurance account.

You are mixing things up, you are saying that it is an employer-employee fund. The federal Government is contributing $2.8 billion, which represents over 25 percent of the unemployment insurance funds. This is a whole package which must be dealt with as a whole. The Government states that retired people with a pension—be honest now—will collect unemployment insurance benefits if their pension income is $5,000. Only those who are paid a $15,000 pension will not get unemployment insurance benefits. Benefits are progressively eliminated as the level of pension income goes up. Yes, but let us call a spade a spade. The older workers who are receiving $5,000 will collect unemployment insurance benefits. But it is clear that a person who is getting a $35,000 pension a year should not, a priori, collect $15,000 in unemployment insurance benefits just because he has paid premiums.

I suggest that unemployment insurance benefits exist for people who have lost their jobs, who have no employment income and who are looking for a job. However, we recognize that for those who have started a second career and who are paying premiums, it's not the principle but reality which has changed. It's reality which has changed, and you will have to admit that today, because people will have a second career which will last, not five or ten years, but 20 or 25 years, for when people reach age 50, they can start a career which may last 20 years, contributing premiums for 20 years. When they stop, according to the legislation which will be in force at the time, they will act accordingly.

We are trying to be logical, and I think we have been from the start; if we made adjustments, it is because we felt we had to take into account new facts such as a second career. The Government was motivated by fairness and justice for those to whom the new legislation and regulation have not been properly explained; that's why it added $65 million to establish a proper balance. I think that the Government has done its job. done its job.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Madam Chairman, if I understand the proposed amendment correctly, it would restrict the definition of pension to simply being pension under the Canada Pension Plan. As a result, an individual could not have his or her unemployment insurance benefits cut because they received pension arising out of employment or arising out of service in the Canadian Forces or any police force or under a provincial pension plan.

Under this amendment, unemployment insurance benefits could only be cut for those who receive pension under the Canada Pension Plan. As we know, that only takes effect at age 65. I see the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) nodding his head so I presume I understand his amendment correctly. It is a worth-while amendment because it restricts the harshness of this Bill, and while it is the best we can do on this clause, I think it is something which would certainly go a long way in making this Bill more acceptable. It would no longer impinge upon people in the Armed Forces or police forces who were forced to retire early. It would not impinge upon those who work for Northern Electric or Bell Telephone who are forced to retire early, nor people who come under a provincial pension plan of any kind.

This raises the whole question of the real reason for this Bill. During the debate tonight, Hon. members from the government side have said this Bill is necessary—

An Hon. Member: Desirable.

Mr. Allmand: —or desirable, whatever you wish. I was repeating some of the terminology used earlier this evening and during the day. Those Hon. Members said the Bill was necessary because unemployment insurance was never meant to be a pension plan. They implied that when people went on pension, they should not have the right to unemployment insurance benefits. I must point out again that the principle control mechanism in the Unemployment Insurance Act is that one must be ready and available for work. If a person in effect does retire, taking their early retirement pension, then no one is suggesting they should receive unemployment insurance benefits. A lot of people opposite do not seem to understand that. No one is suggesting that someone who is not ready, willing and available for work should receive unemployment insurance benefits.

The problem is for those people who receive an early retirement pension but are still ready and available for work because they are only age 45, 50, 55 or 60 years. They have a lot of good years left in them. They are receiving an early retirement pension and are ready and available for work. However, we have the control mechanism on abuse. If they are really using their unemployment benefits to retire, then the control mechanism is in the Act that they are not ready and available for work.

The discriminatory nature of all these measures—and I am glad the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is restricting this definition of pension—is that while the Government has tried to cut back on employment insurance benefits for those who receive an early retirement pension, it does not cut back on their unemployment insurance if they retire early, do not get an early retirement pension, but are able to live on rents, dividends from stock or bonds, or types of income other than employment income. There was no attempt to do that. So it is very discriminatory.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member has put forward this amendment. We will support it because it restricts in a large measure the scope of this Bill. I give notice to the Minister that discrimination would still remain in the Bill and it would be essential to knock out all those provisions which discriminate between those who apply for their unemployment insurance benefits before January 1, 1986, and those who apply after. That is unacceptable and we will deal with that as soon as we have this amendment accepted by the Minister. I am sure he will see the reason for it.

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, I am really sorry but I think I have the same argument in English as I do in French. I have already said that we need the amendments to be in accordance with the law. Any kind of exclusion would mean there is no accordance with the law. I think my hon. friend would like us to be very legitimately in accordance with the law. That is the reason why I believe that this amendment is not reasonable.

• (2150)

Mr. Robinson: Madam Chairman, I am rising in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. I would like to ask the Minister a question in connection with the amendment.

As the Minister knows, members of the Armed Forces and members of the RCMP have served Canada for many years. They have paid contributions into the unemployment insurance fund. These individuals, these members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP, have in fact assumed all along that because they had paid into this fund in good faith that they would then be in a position, if they were still actively looking for work and were unable to find employment, to draw upon unemployment insurance.

These individuals are forced to retire at an early age by the policies of the Armed Forces and the RCMP. The Special Committee on Equality Rights recommended that this type of forced early retirement be eliminated. But it has not been eliminated. The reality is that men and women in the Canadian Armed Forces and in the RCMP are in a position in which at the age of 45, 50, 55 they are thrown on to the job market. It is true that they have a pension, but in many cases they want to continue working.

As the correspondent to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, pointed out, in many cases they have additional expenses involved in relocating from the Armed Forces, or relocating from where they may be serving with the RCMP. For example, they may be serving in Europe, in Lahr or Baden with the Armed Forces. They have assumed that they would have this money available, money which they paid into UI while they actively seek work.

The Minister represents men and women in the Armed Forces. He has members of the RCMP in his constituency. I have the honour of representing the constituency of Burnaby. I have a couple of hundred members of the Armed Forces in my riding who, in fact, are serving not only in Canada but in Europe as well. How can the Minister, and how can members of the Conservative Government and caucus, possibly support the betrayal, the breach of trust and the breach of contract which this Bill represents by denying to those members of the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP the right to apply for unemployment insurance if they are still actively looking for work when they are forced to retire from the forces and from the RCMP? How can the Minister possibly defend that policy?

Surely he recognizes that it is indefensible. Surely he recognizes that by supporting this amendment and by his Tory colleagues supporting it he would at least be keeping faith with the men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP who have served the country and who do not deserve to be stabbed in the back the way the Minister is doing.

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, of course I will not support the amendment. I am sorry. I have a great deal of respect for those people in the Armed Forces and in the RCMP. Giving UI or not to the people for whom we have a lot of respect is not the basis upon which we have to make such considerations. I agree with the Hon. Member that the people from the Armed Forces, from the RCMP and from the police forces across Canada have to take mandatory retirement sometimes at the age of 40 or 45 years. But those people have a pension. If the pension is too small, then, at that time, they have the right to make up the difference with their UI benefits. I refer to an amount lower than $15,000. That is what we call equity. At 40 or 45 years of age we are usually looking for another job. A great many times we have the possibility of getting a job, and at that time to requalify.

If we have to take those people out of the definition, then how can we give back that money to those people who requalified since January 5, 1986?

Mr. Robinson: Madam Chairman, I have a supplementary question. The Minister should know that it is very difficult for people in their late forties and fifties to find other employment at a time when there is a very high level of unemployment in the country. I wish to ask the Minister a very specific supplementary question.

In view of the fact that these individuals, the men and women in the Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP, have paid into the unemployment insurance fund, in some cases for many, many years, in good faith, and they are now being denied eligibility for unemployment insurance, is the Minister at the very least prepared to return the contributions which these people have paid into the fund, with interest, since they are obviously eligible for unemployment insurance? Will the Minister at least return the contributions that they have made in good faith over the years?

Mr. Bouchard: Madam Chairman, I will be brief. I do not know of any type of insurance company which returns premiums.

Mr. Orlikow: You took the money under false pretences.

Mr. Bouchard: I cannot understand that type of philosophy. We are dealing with an insurance. When we do not need this insurance because we have a job—

Mr. Robinson: They don't have a job.

Mr. Bouchard: And they have a pension. A pension is money coming from employment. The employment rules are very clear. We cannot obtain money from both sources. I think that is very clear. I am sure that if the Hon. Member wants to make just a small effort he will understand.

Mr. Baker: Madam Chairman, the Minister said that he did not know of any insurance money that was returned. I do not know of any insurance program into which one pays money and when one has an accident the company does not pay. If one had insurance on one's car and had an accident, then the insurance company pays. What the Government is doing is this. The Minister says that it will collect unemployment insurance. It will make people pay the insurance premium and when they are out of a job it is not going to pay the insurance.

Under the same Bill, if an employer pays in and the employee pays in and the employment is found not to be insurable, then it is paid back to the employer.

In the Bill "pension" means any retirement pension "(a) arising out of employment". I suppose we can understand that. That is the intent of the Government. The Bill goes on to state: "arising out of service in the Canadian Forces or in any police force". In other words they are not really in employment. They are not being employed. The Bill states that the Canada Pension Plan is not paid out from employment or the provincial pension plan is not paid out from employment. The Minister then turns around and says: "We do not want to pay unemployment insurance to somebody making over $30,000 a year".

Under the Bill, one cannot earn more than $35,500 per year, because then one would have to start paying it back.

I see that our time is running out. I do not completely agree with the amendment. What we should be returning to is what the situation was under the Liberal Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —that is that all people who pay into the insurance scheme can collect insurance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: We do not say: "Oh well, you know, people who paid in under the Armed Forces, they cannot collect. Police forces cannot collect. Provincial employees cannot collect. Canada Pension Plan people cannot collect". I suggest to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that what he has proposed is perhaps the second best thing. He should change his thinking back to what the situation was under the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Baker: That was that we paid out. If they paid in, we paid out. We did not betray them as this Government is doing.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being 10 p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, June 8, 1987, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to complete the committee stage of the Bill now before the House.

WOMEN

BATTERED WOMEN—GOVERNMENTS MUST ACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today, the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women published an important document, under the title: Battered But Not Beaten, an investigation of wife battering in Canada.

In this document, a sequel to the book on battered women published in 1980, we find women of all classes and all ages. In 1985, the majority of women in transition houses were young mothers. Fourteen per cent were under 20. Fifty per cent were between 21 and 34. More teenagers and pregnant women who have been battered by their partners are coming to these transition houses.

Many of these women are poor: 43 per cent were living on an annual income of less than $10,000, while 32 per cent had a family income of $10,000 to $20,000.

We also find immigrant, native, disabled, teenage and rural women in this group as well as women living on military bases.

Much has been done since 1980 and much remains to be done. A number of recommendations are directed to the Government, such as increasing personnel and funding for shelters for battered women, including special assistance for child care, the need for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister responsible for the Status of Women to heighten the awareness of the Members of this House, and creating special shelters for batterers. The husbands or boyfriends, not the women, should have to leave the family home. And there is special emphasis on the need for research on the cause and dynamics of family violence and on the connection between violence, alcoholism and pregnancy.

In concluding, I want to say that battered women who choose to stay with their families do not do so out of weakness. In fact, the opposite is true, and this document praises their courage, saying that it takes extraordinary strength of character to stay in that kind of situation.

I therefore want to ask federal, provincial and municipal Governments to help deal with this pressing problem.

HIGHWAYS

UPGRADING OF YELLOWHEAD HIGHWAY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have risen many times in this House to talk about the Yellowhead Highway which runs through Saskatchewan from Manitoba to British Columbia. It is considered, by those of us who live along it, to be the northern Trans-Canada route when travelling across the country. I have pressed many times for federal recognition of this highway and federal funding.

I was delighted when the Government of Canada agreed to a cost-shared $100 million upgrading of the Yellowhead Highway. I was particularly pleased when, just recently, we concluded the Canada-Saskatchewan-Yellowhead agreement involving $22 million of the $100 million to be spent in my home province. Some $15 million of that $22 million will be spent in the general area of The Battlefords—Meadow Lake. It will involve, for example, widening and enlarging the underpass near Borden. There is also a commitment to twin the Yellowhead between Saskatoon and The Battlefords and the first leg will begin shortly.

The Canada-Saskatchewan-Yellowhead agreement is very real evidence of co-operative federalism as the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan have committed themselves to working together. I would like to thank our Government and particularly the Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament who helped me to make this a reality.

REFUGEES

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-55

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, June 9, was the forty-eighth anniversary of the black day in 1939 when the ship St. Louis, with 930 Jews seeking refuge from Hitler, was turned away by the Government of Canada, so that many of them died in Hitler's Holocaust. Yesterday Canadians in a dozen cities said: "Once is too often". They put on black armbands and publicly demanded that the present Government of Canada withdraw Bill C-55, the Bill which would do to Central American and other refugees what the Government of 48 years ago did to Jewish refugees.

In Nanaimo people joined a fast and public protest. In Calgary, Winnipeg and Saskatoon all heads of churches fasted one day and put on black armbands. MLA Anne Smart addressed a rally of Amnesty and the Open Door Society of Saskatoon. The entire caucuses of the Manitoba and Alberta NDP joined the one-day fast and are wearing black armbands. In St. John's, Newfoundland, and Halifax, Nova Scotia, churches, Amnesty, Oxfam and CUSO are petitioning residents against Bill C-55. Every Member of Parliament has been sent a letter by the Montreal Coalition for Refugees asking each of us to join in demanding withdrawal of Bill C-55, the anti-refugee Bill.

REDUCTION OF STAFF IN SASKATOON AND MELVILLE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my deepest concern over the reduction of 55 employee positions in Saskatoon and another 47 positions in Melville by Canadian National.

I clearly understand the need for an efficient rail service capable of remaining competitive with other forms of transport. I also recognize the effects automation and modernization will have on the CN workforce. However, I cannot overlook the far-reaching effects this shuffle of 102 CN employees will have on these two Saskatchewan communities.

Some of these employees will opt for early retirement. However, most will have little choice but to relocate to Winnipeg where CN is centralizing its workforce. Saskatchewan generated $459 million in major commodities for CN last year. In fact 16 million tonnes, or 18 per cent of all goods carried on CN in Canada in 1986, originated in the Province of Saskatchewan. In light of these figures you would think CN, as a good corporate citizen, would take into account the effects these actions will have on one of its major revenue contributors.

I intend to organize a meeting of senior officials from CN and representatives from the federal, provincial and municipal Governments in order that an amiable solution can be reached reflecting the interests of these two communities and CN's commitment to serve Saskatchewan.

MINES AND MINING

MINERS' MEMORIAL DAY IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in 1937 George Orwell vividly described the life of a coal-miner in these words: "In the western world the coal-miner is second in importance only to the man who ploughs the soil". He went on to say that most of the things one imagines in hell are there; heat, noise, confusion, darkness, foul air and, above all, unbearably cramped space.

Tomorrow, June 11, 1987, is Miners' Memorial Day in Cape Breton. We are reminded of the important role coal-mining has played in the history of Cape Breton. Although many mining methods have changed since Orwell's time, the unique character of the miner, the courage and strength that Orwell so well described, have not.

The devastating fire at No. 26 Colliery in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, brings home once again just how dangerous a profession coal-mining is and how the people of Cape Breton have continually had to struggle against adversity. As we turn back the pages of history we remember the tragic loss of 69 men in 1917 in the methane gas explosion which took place in the Lingan mine, and the explosion in 1979 in Glace Bay. We especially remember the origins of Miners' Memorial Day which arose from a six-year series of protests culminating in the strike of 1925 and the death of William Davis.

We can be proud of the coal-mining tradition of Cape Breton and at this time we remember the contributions of all miners and all their families and, above all, we honour those who lost their lives in those tragic accidents.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF BALTIC AND UKRAINIAN NATIONS' SUFFERINGS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, this evening the fifteenth Ecumenical Memorial Service to commemorate the genocides and continued sufferings of the Baltic and Ukrainian nations will be held at the Notre Dame Basilica in Ottawa, followed by a candle-light vigil at the National War Memorial. Similar ceremonies will be held throughout Canada this weekend.

Ukrainians, Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians, together with other captive east European nations, gather each year to commemorate the Baltic Holocaust and the millions of Ukrainians who fell victim to Soviet oppression. The service provides an opportunity to reflect upon the continued persecution and suppression of freedom, national cultures, religions and languages by the Soviet regime.

I urge all my colleagues in this House to join eastern European communities this evening and, by our presence, demonstrate our commitment to the universal principles of freedom, liberty and justice.

REVENUE CANADA

ACCESS TO CONFIDENTIAL TAX INFORMATION—ABSENCE OF SECURITY SCREENING FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday details of a secret government report which investigated the theft of confidential tax information on 16 million Canadians were made public in The Globe and Mail. This damning report is a sorry tale of sloppy and lax security, of unsupervised access to offices containing confidential tax information. Incredibly there was an absence of security screening of any type for employees having access to personal tax information.

The bad news does not end there. The report also concluded that officials in the Minister's Department should have foreseen these serious security problems at Revenue Canada long before the theft of the tax information.

In light of this telling and depressing report the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) should now admit that his Department was negligent in protecting sensitive tax information that millions of Canadians entrusted to the Government. It must never happen again.

LABOUR RELATIONS

USE OF UNION DUES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to welcome the National Citizens' Coalition spokesmen to Parliament Hill today.

The NCC is rallying support for Ontario Professor Merv Lavigne who for a number of years has been questioning the use of the Rand formula union dues for purposes other than the labour movement and collective bargaining.

After campaigning for several years Mr. Lavigne got a favourable ruling from the Supreme Court of Ontario on July 4, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, most of the money is used illegally by the socialist party across the aisle. So far I have made a number of interventions requesting the socialist party to enlighten us on the source and legality of its funding. Mum is the word.

At 3 p.m. today, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lavigne will be in the hall of the Centre Block to explain his principle concerning the use of workers' money to Hon. Members and parliamentary reporters.

TRANSPORT

INDUSTRIAL CLOSURES—EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RELEASE FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in one month, six companies have announced they are closing their plants and laying off more than 2,000 employees in Quebec, mainly in the Greater Montreal area: Simmons, Coleco, McIntyre, Métallurgie générale, and Taran and Murdochville.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it was announced today that the shipyard industry is experiencing its worst year in the past 25 as far as loss of employment is concerned, and the same applies to industries involved in railway car construction.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all Conservative Members in this House to put pressure on the Government and the Minister of Transport to release funds to save over 2,000 jobs in Quebec.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I want to make you aware of a special event that will take place in Erie riding this summer. It is Friendship Festival '87.

Friendship Festival '87 will exemplify nearly 175 years of peaceful and friendly co-existence between two communities, Fort Erie, Ontario, and Buffalo, New York. REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DELAY IN TABLING IRDP ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, of course you are aware of the tremendous mismanagement at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, known as DRIE. That Department is now almost $100 million over-committed in its funding for the 1987-88 year. Being $100 million over-committed after two months is tremendous mismanagement.

It is also very unfair that the Native Economic Development Programs have been put on hold despite the fact that those programs are not responsible at all for the over-commitment in that particular Department.

You should also be aware that according to the precedents and rules of the House, IRDP, which is the Regional Industrial Development Program is supposed to table its annual report in the House by June 1. It is now over a week past June 1 and we do not have that report. Where is that annual report? What is the Minister trying to hide, or is it just more incompetence by the Minister in charge of regional development?

STATUS OF WOMEN

PLIGHT OF BATTERED WIVES—PUBLICATION OF BOOK

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, along with other Members of the House, I was present today when an important book was launched in Canada. Battered But Not Beaten by Linda MacLeod is about preventing wife battering in Canada. It is about the battered and the batterer. It is about the children who also suffer. It is about the shelters and the people who work in them, about the community and our response to a very serious problem.

But the book is also about hope, about love, about support for those who are directly involved.

• (1420)

It is about the progress we have made and the distance yet to go before we can fully understand, control, and ultimately prevent this vicious and particularly hurtful form of violence.

This book is a low-key, serious, sensitive, and enlightening exposition of a complex social problem.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF ACCIDENTS ON BOARD NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians are asking do we really need nuclear submarines? Are they desirable from an environmental viewpoint? Would Canadians living near coastal waters be safe in the event of an accident? In recent years radiation accidents are reported to have taken place aboard nuclear-powered vessels, including a meltdown.

Experts say that accidents at sea or under the Arctic ice may damage a reactor core and release radioactivity. Although the probability of such accidents is low, it takes only a small release of radioactivity to cause widespread damage.

As reported in a national newspaper, it is the opinion of civilian emergency planners, environmental scientists, and veterans of the United States nuclear navy that the Canadian Government's plans to build nuclear-powered submarines may pose serious dangers to the environment.

The message is loud and clear. Canadians don't want nuclear submarines. The Cabinet should shelve this $5 billion idea of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

THE GREAT LAKES

HAZARDS POSED BY HIGH WATER LEVELS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the House today to thank the Government of Canada and especially the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for their interest and efforts to find possible solutions to the high water levels in the Great Lakes. These abnormally high levels have been plaguing my constituency for a number of years. The people of Sarnia—Lambton thank the Minister for his action plan to assist in the reduction of lake levels.

The Government has recognized the essential role played by the Great Lakes. Lake Huron and the St. Clair River in my constituency are both well-known tourist areas. As well as this, they provide an avenue for commercial shipping, both Canadian and international. They separate Canada and the United States, yet in many ways bring us closer together as we share a common waterway. It is essential that we continue to protect these great bodies of water from environmental problems and shoreline erosion.

The Canadian Government recognizes their importance and appreciates the Great Lakes. By working with our American neighbours we can maintain and preserve the essential characteristics of this great waterway.

I call upon the Government of Canada to continue to respect and appreciate the Great Lakes. For the millions of Americans and Canadians who live on the Great Lakes, I urge the Government to continue its efforts to preserve and protect our homes and jobs on the Great Lakes.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISSUANCE OF EXPLORATION PERMITS BY GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government of France has issued drilling permits for an area in Canadian waters that is 100 times the area of St-Pierre-et-Miquelon and four times that of Prince Edward Island. At the Venice Summit, did the Prime Minister of Canada tell the Prime Minister of France it is illegal to issue drilling permits in Canadian waters, and has Mr. Chirac agreed to cancel the permits? Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House why the Prime Minister of Canada has allowed France to treat us so casually in this matter?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is dead wrong in his assertion that the French Government has issued drilling permits in the area in question; that is absolutely false.

What has been issued are exploration permits. Such exploration permits—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Mazankowski: —have gone back to 1966-1967. Canada has had exploration permits issued in this disputed area as has France. It appears to be sort of a paper exercise wherein the two countries are positioning themselves in such a way to exercise their so-called rights in the resolution of the disputed area.

I should say that the Government of Canada, through the Prime Minister and the Ambassador, has protested very vigorously. However, this is not a new development. It has been going on for quite some time. I find it rather surprising that the Liberals find it offensive today when they agreed to the same course of action in previous times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

ISSUANCE OF LICENCE TO FRENCH GOVERNMENT-OWNED COMPANY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we do not accept that defensive assertion of the Deputy Prime Minister at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister may call this a paper exercise, but for the people of Newfoundland having their waters taken away from them for the purpose of exploration, and having their fish taken away from them is not a paper exercise. It is their livelihood.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I wish to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. Is it a paper exercise to allow France to grant drilling or exploration permits, or any other type of permit invading our sovereignty, to a government-owned petroleum company in France, the same way that it would be illegal for the Government of Canada to grant a permit to Petro-Canada to drill in the Mediterranean? Is that a paper exercise? Is that an exercise he will not protest on behalf of the people of Canada and Newfoundland?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: That is a stupid analogy.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition may want to posture, and perhaps in the process even blow a blood vessel, but the fact of the matter is that he is dead wrong. This is an exercise that has been going on for some time.

France first issued its exploration permits in 1966, which were protested by Canada. Canada issued exploration permits in 1967, which were protested by France. There has been a moratorium and an understanding during the course of this period of time that no drilling would take place. That assurance has been given. So nothing has really changed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POSITION—FRENCH PRESIDENT'S VISIT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister got some very nervous applause from the Minister of Transport. I can understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I worry for you, John. We're afraid you might disappear before our eyes.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yesterday in the House the Deputy Prime Minister said in response to a colleague of mine that there was a similar protest made by this Government in October, 1986. That protest was rejected by France. This was an issue before the French and the Canadian Governments when President Mitterrand was here. Why was this issue not taken up with the President of France, or at least the Foreign Minister of France, Mr. Raimond, when he was here? Why was this challenge to Canadian sovereignty not rebutted and rejected by Canada when we had a chance when the President was here in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are going from the ridiculous to the sublime. The Right Hon. Member knows that this is a disputed area and that the two countries have been issuing permits in order to protect their own interests in terms of the bargaining process and the dispute-resolving process that will take place.

An Hon. Member: Speak for Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: We are speaking for Canada. There is no drilling. The Government of Canada has reacted in a very vigorous way. That is why there is no drilling, and there will be no drilling as long as the disputed area remains in question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S MESSAGE TO FRENCH PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. He knows that there are no conditions attached to these licences which state that the licences and the permits to explore will not be exercised until such a time in the far distant future when the matter of the dispute is resolved. He knows that.

Yesterday in the House he told all Members that the Prime Minister yesterday morning met with Mr. Chirac, the French Prime Minister. Will he tell us today what message the Prime Minister gave the French Prime Minister and what the response was?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Good question!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. I am glad the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition agrees.

The Prime Minister met not only with Mr. Chirac yesterday, he met with him today. He also conveyed our views in writing. He informed the French Prime Minister that the action taken by the French in issuing these permits was inappropriately timed given the fact of the negotiations in which we are now engaged. But having regard to the fact that the permits that are issued on either side, either by France or by Canada, are equal in every respect, that is part of the bargaining process and the positioning the two countries are taking in respect to the resolution of the disputed boundary area.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we know what the message was. We now want to know what Canada will do to back up its position.

We are not in a normal negotiating process when France takes 20,000 metric tonnes more fish than has been allocated by the Government of Canada. We are not in a normal negotiating position when France claims 22,000 square kilometres of Canadian sovereign waters for exploration permits. That is not normal.

• (1430)

We closed ports on fish. What new measures is the Government, beyond paying lip service at the Venice Summit, prepared to take to ensure that Canadians and Newfoundlanders can look out across the water off the coast of Newfoundland and know it is ours and will not be exploited by any other nation? What measures, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one has to wonder where this great voice was from 1967 to 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: You were in the Liberal Party when he was in high school.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member needs the assistance of the honourable fog-horn from Hamilton East.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That issue started in 1966 and went on until 1984. After 1984 action was taken.

What have we done about the French overfishing? What the Liberal Party was afraid to do for all the years it was in power. We closed Canadian ports to French fishing vessels. They are hurting and they are asking us to change that, but we are holding firm until we get this matter settled in the interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ISSUANCE OF PERMITS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has to do with this drilling in Canadian waters by French companies.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Riis: There is going to be drilling.

Mr. Rodriguez: The French Government has issued drilling permits.

Mr. McKnight: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: —to Total Petroleum.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are exploration permits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: They are sensitive about the Gallup poll, aren't they?

Mr. Rodriguez: They have issued the same kinds of permits which the Government issued to oil companies in Canada to drill on the Grand Banks.

What commitment did the Prime Minister get from Prime Minister Chirac with respect to withdrawing those permits whether they are exploration, drilling or whatever? What commitment did the Government get to withdraw them?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is dead wrong. Drilling permits have not been issued. That has to be made very clear. The Hon. Member should know that there has been an understanding. There is a moratorium that has been in place since 1966. It is continuing and that has been reaffirmed. I repeat for the Hon. Member that no drilling will take place, notwithstanding the fact that exploration permits have been issued, on the part of either side.

REQUEST FOR WRITTEN UNDERTAKING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Has the Government received in writing from the French Government that there will be no drilling in those disputed waters?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that has been the understanding and it has been reconfirmed today verbally.

Mr. Riis: In writing?

Mr. Mazankowski: It will be confirmed in writing.

REQUEST THAT AMBASSADOR BE RECALLED FROM FRANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is fairly obvious that the Government has reneged on its responsibility to speak up for the rights of Canadians and for the rights of Newfoundlanders in this particular dispute the same as it reneged concerning the northern cod stocks.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister indicate how seriously we in Canada consider this matter? Is the Government prepared to recall our Ambassador for consultations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the Hon. Member in the House that his obvious lack of knowledge of this issue will not impress the voters in St. John's East. That is all he is posturing for.

Mr. Rodriguez: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is no need to recall the Ambassador. The Ambassador is carrying out his duties as he is instructed to by the Government of Canada.

CONTENT OF FRENCH PERMITS—MINISTER'S SCHEDULED VISIT TO PARIS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, after many telephone calls to Canadian officials in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and in the Department of External Affairs, it is quite obvious that nobody in the Government of Canada knows what is in the present permits that were issued by the Government of France, and neither does anyone know what was in the permits issued back in the 1960s.

After telephoning officials in the French Government, it is quite clear that the permits are considerably different. The geographic area is not the same nor is the content of them. They are completely different. The Government of France says there is no moratorium on drilling off the East Coast of Canada.

Since the Minister of Transport is flying to Paris tonight to watch an air show tomorrow to sit back and relax, will the Deputy Prime Minister order the Minister of Transport to stop paying attention tomorrow to what French activities are in the air and pay more attention to what the French activities are in the waters off Newfoundland, present Canada's case, and get some answers?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to confirm that I am going to Paris tonight.

Some Hon. Members: Stay there.

Mr. Crosbie: Canadians can rest at home tonight easy knowing that I will be in Paris tomorrow morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: What about the French?

Mr. Crosbie: I am going to the Paris Air Show. Today, of course, it is the House of Commons hot air show that I am observing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Canadian Ambassador delivered a strong protest to the high levels of the French Foreign Affairs Department today. He was reassured in very clear terms that the present exercise was nothing more than a paper one that had been going on since 1967. He was assured that the agreement entered into between Canada and France in 1967, when guess who was in power, whatever exploration rights were requested or given these would not give rise to actual drilling or other installations, would be maintained, and that that position would be confirmed in writing.

I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he stop bothering officials in the Government of Canada with silly inquiries this afternoon.

REQUEST THAT FRENCH DRILLING RIGS BE ARRESTED

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's line yesterday was what oil company in France would come over all the way across the Atlantic to explore and to drill, spending millions of dollars over here when it didn't even know if the Government of France owned the territory. Obviously the Minister doesn't realize that Elf Aquitaine is not a private company. It is owned mostly by the Government of France and it is willing to spend millions and millions of dollars to lay claim to our shores off the East Coast.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Can he tell us when is the Government going to stop pussyfooting around and announce today that if any drilling rig comes into Canadian waters to explore for oil it will be arrested immediately?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of arresting the Hon. Member, it is a question of certifying.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The very oil companies that the hon. gentleman is going so wild about owned by the Government of France—it has some kind of ownership interest—got these original permits in 1967 when the great giant killer and his Party were in power, those ferocious defenders of what?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND CAPELIN FISHERY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Newfoundland fishermen after having spent thousands of dollars getting ready for the capelin fishery now see that the price being offered and the volume demanded by the chief buyers, the Japanese, are not sufficient to maintain that fishery as an economic fishery and they see their families robbed of important income for the coming year.

Is the Minister prepared now to take responsibility to ensure that Newfoundland fishermen will get an adequate and fair price for the capelin?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not the intention of the Government of Canada that the fishery of Newfoundland be nationalized as might be the direction which the Hon. Member would advocate.

• (1440)

We are expecting a very successful inshore fishery in Newfoundland this year partly as a result of the corrective measures I took last autumn at the urging of the Newfoundland Inshore Fisheries Association. We cannot determine prices, or subsidize prices directly, for reasons the Hon. Member should appreciate. However, we are definitely looking forward to this year as a very good year for the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador.

REQUEST THAT MARKETING AGENCY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to nationalize the fisheries in order to have a decent pricing strategy in place. This problem happened last year. It is happening this year, and it will go on happening unless the Government takes action. The Minister should be aware of the need and desire for a proper marketing strategy and marketing agency for capelin. Is he prepared now to have a marketing agency for the capelin? And is he prepared to use some of the funds promised to the Atlantic area through the Atlantic Opportunities Agency to ensure that agency is able to function and get a fair price for Newfoundland fishermen?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the demand for capelin has produced a new dimension to the Newfoundland inshore fishery which was of great benefit to the fishermen last year.

Mr. Manly: It is good for all of us.

Mr. Siddon: That is a fact, and we are looking at means of enhancing the opportunity the capelin fishery represents in additional ways this year. Discussions I have had with the Salt Fish Corporation and members of its board perhaps will envisage a marketing arrangement of the sort to which the Hon. Member has alluded.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. He should know that the possible closure or sale of Firestone in Hamilton involves 1,300 jobs. Given that the federal Government has spent $15 million to modernize that plant over the last five years, including the demand for job guarantees, what specific action is the Government prepared to take to protect those 1,300 workers in Hamilton who are facing either possible layoffs or plant closure as a result of the sale?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that in 1986 this Government signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the tire manufacturing industry in Canada. In this case we have been in close consultation with the company's executive to see how this matter might be handled. The Memorandum of Understanding commits us to working very closely with all the companies in the industry on a continuing basis to address such mutual concerns as expressed by the Hon. Member.

I simply want to assure the Hon. Member that that close relationship and co-operation are ongoing.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the workers of Moncton heard that promise from that same Minister and in fact they were let down. We want to make sure the people of Hamilton are not let down.

JOB GUARANTEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Given that the Minister has been in close consultation, he will know that there are discussions with both the Italians and the Japanese about the possible sale and/or closure of the plant. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us specifically whether the Government is prepared to block that sale through its powers under Investment Canada if indeed these job guarantees, for all the current jobs, are not forthcoming?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that in no way does this Government intend to let the people of Hamilton down, as we have not let other people down.

Mr. Tobin: Why don't you talk about Moncton?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is manifested in the fact that some 840,000 new jobs have been created.

Mr. Tobin: How about Moncton?

Mr. Mazankowski: Insofar as Moncton is concerned, is the Hon. Member criticizing the fact that the new Atlantic Opportunities Agency is going to be located there—

Ms. Copps: What about Firestone?

Mr. Mazankowski: —which is going to create some 300 jobs? If he is, why does he not stand up and say so?

Ms. Copps: What about Firestone?

THE CONSTITUTION

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—ABORIGINAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is, of necessity, directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will be aware that Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick recently added his voice to others in the Tory Party supporting the amendments to the Meech Lake Accord which were proposed by my Leader in his motion in this House on Monday, namely, that the elevation of territories to provincial status should not be subject to unanimity rule and that at the very least there should be a schedule in the Meech Lake Accord for the negotiation of the entrenchment of aboriginal self-government rights in the Constitution.

Given the increasing number of influential voices—

Some Hon. Members: Speech.

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. de Cotret: Question.

Mr. Parry: —supporting these amendments, will the Prime Minister at least canvass provincial Premiers to see if they would be in favour of including those improvements?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of

New Brunswick has long been an advocate of advancing the rights of aboriginal peoples in this country. Of course, he has taken a very major leadership role in federal-provincial conferences. We certainly welcomed that and I think he should be complimented.

I would hope he would call upon his provincial colleagues, the other Premiers, to work in unison with the federal Government in achieving what might be a consensus. But the Hon. Member knows there has been an agreement signed and agreed to, and the constitutional process is not shut. It provides for ongoing dialogue and adjustments. Clearly this could be an issue which could be placed for consideration in the next year.

The Government's position on this is very clear. We have attempted in every respect to work out an arrangement which would be satisfactory to all, and we will continue in our endeavours in that regard.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in recent months aboriginal people have seen the breach of the James Bay Agreement, the breakdown of the First Ministers' Conference, the insulting omission from the Meech Lake Accord, a cap on post-secondary education, and most recently the Government has denied—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Parry: —to six bands in northwestern Ontario—established bands—the right to land for their own reserves. What, if anything, is the Government going to do for the aboriginal people of Canada before all the people of Canada send it to its just reward?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member expresses his concerns in strange ways. The request by six bands in northern Ontario, newly created bands, to establish reserves and lands was a process which was discussed with those bands. The decision which was made was made because of the additional costs. Some $66 millions of dollars were needed. The only way this Government could find the dollars needed would be over a three-year period, not to provide housing to any bands in the Province of Ontario, or only to provide one-quarter of the housing needed over five years. I am sure the Hon. Member would not find that acceptable and neither would Indian leadership in Ontario.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

OFFICE BREAK-IN—REPORTED ALLEGATION BY ROGER NANTEL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the very serious allegations by one of the Prime Minister's best friends, Mr. Roger Nantel. Mr. Nantel has accused the RCMP of criminal activity by breaking into his offices and camouflaging the break-in to look like an ordinary burglary. Mr. Nantel further alleges that the RCMP were investigating "dirty money behind Brian", referring to the Prime Minister of Canada.

Will the Solicitor General categorically state that Mr. Nantel's allegations are without foundation? Or is there any truth to Mr. Nantel's allegations?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to advise the Hon. Member that I was advised by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police approximately two hours ago that its organization was not in any way involved in the break-ins as alleged by Mr. Nantel.

SPECULATION CONCERNING WALTER WOLF

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Nantel is accusing the RCMP of investigating the Prime Minister. He speculated that the RCMP were investigating "rumours circulating that Walter Wolf was an international arms dealer who had largely financed Mulroney's operations". I ask the Solicitor General whether the RCMP has ever investigated the allegation that dirty money was used by the Prime Minister to defeat the then Leader of the Conservative Party, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead?

• (1450)

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, the RCMP does not disclose what investigations it is carrying out at any particular time but I can assure the Hon. Member that the RCMP is a force of integrity and honesty and is the best force in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

REPORT ON BATTERED WOMEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns a very distressing report on battered women in Canada which was released today. I wonder if the Minister will tell us if he will respond favourably to the prime recommendation of this report which is for federal initiatives for funding so that we can end this problem by reducing it gradually, and so that transition houses and shelters can work toward education and prevention so there will no longer be one million battered wives in Canada.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the report from the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women is an extremely important one. As was mentioned, for example, by the Hon. Member for Guelph in his statement to the House today, the report on which I had a briefing earlier from Ms. Gold lays out very clearly the wide-ranging complexities of the issue. I also think the report indicates that there has been some progress made but we have a long way to go yet.

I might say to the Hon. Member and to the House that this matter was placed on the agenda of the Minister responsible for federal-provincial social affairs in January. I intend to take the issue back and make further recommendations to my cabinet colleagues along with my colleagues who have similar responsibilities in this field.

FEDERAL INITIATIVES RECOMMENDED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, for every one woman who enters a shelter for battered wives, another is turned away because of lack of funds. We still have a very long way to go.

I wonder if the Minister would be more positive in his response and would really deal with the fundamental recommendation that there must be federal initiatives so that there will be not just emergency response but a comprehensive approach to education and prevention for dealing with this problem and eliminating the shameful condition of the existence of battered wives.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to minimize at all the recommendations made by the advisory council but I think Hon. Members should also keep in mind that there have been two changes made in the very specific area the Hon. Member has raised in her question. There has been an increase in the number of transition homes. I along with my colleague, the Minister responsible for CMHC, will have to expand that social housing so that there will be an additional number of spaces.

Second, I changed the Canada Assistance Plan regulation for a needs test. I felt that that was not appropriate. If a woman presents herself at a transition home, her needs are not financial, her needs are psychological and social and can be so identified quickly. That provision has been changed so that women can access those homes under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Earlier in my response I said that we will look at the report very carefully. I will come back to the House and my cabinet colleagues for further recommendations and action.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ADVERTISING CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and concerns once again the very serious allegations made by Mr. Roger C. Nantel. Can the Minister if Supply and Services tell the House, in view of the unacceptable conduct of Mr. Nantel of which we were informed today by the Solicitor General, what specific actions she will take to cancel the contract Mr. Nantel has with the Government of Canada through Supply and Services as the agency of record, because of his unacceptable conduct? Will she fire him and will she do so now?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have already had occasion to remind the House that Mr. Roger Nantel is not registered with the Department of Supply and Services and has therefore never received a contract from my department.

REQUEST FOR JUSTICE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Whether we are talking about Roger Nantel, Roger C. Nantel, Nantel and Associates, Media Canada or Synchrocom, it is all the same. What does the Minister intend to do today to put a stop to this circus where someone who has a fat government contract can accuse the RCMP and everybody else and get off scot-free? How are we going to have any justice in this country?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Media Canada Inc. does have government contracts. We followed the normal procedures, and as I said previously in the House, we got better value at lower cost, compared with what was being done under the previous government.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO REPORTED ALLEGATIONS MADE BY ROGER NANTEL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns the very serious allegations being made by Roger Nantel, the long-time friend of the Prime Minister. In view of the seriousness of these allegations, allegations of illegal break-ins by the RCMP to the Tory Party headquarters in Quebec and Mr. Nantel's office, will the Solicitor General agree to meet with Mr. Nantel to discuss his allegations and will he assure the House that there will be an independent inquiry, and that it will not be a case of the RCMP investigating the RCMP?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House earlier today that the RCMP was not involved in this break-in. Second, I can assure the Hon. Member that at the time of this break-in it was fully investigated by the Montreal Urban Police, the police with jurisdiction.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of the allegation of Mr. Nantel, does the Solicitor General not recognize that it is important that justice be seen to be done and that it not be merely the Commissioner of the RCMP assuring him that the RCMP did nothing wrong? We have heard that before. Will the Solicitor General not ask for an independent inquiry into this matter to assure the House and the people of Canada that there has been no impropriety or illegality on the part of the RCMP as alleged by Mr. Nantel?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret these unsubstantiated allegations made against the integrity of this force.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member or any other Hon. Member in the House, or Mr. Nantel, has any information which can assist the Montreal Urban Police to substantiate these allegations, then I ask them to come forward immediately.

RESEARCH

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS—APPARENT INJUSTICE TO QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Some troubling figures have just been released indicating that Quebec is only getting a few crumbs, in terms of federal contracts for scientific research. In 1985-86, Quebec got only 16 per cent, which is $569 million out of a total $3.4 billion.

Considering those figures, could the Minister inform the House what her Government or Department intends to do to correct this unbalance?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's insinuations are entirely ridiculous and are based on an erroneous newspaper article. Le Devoir has finally realized that we have a national capital and that research is done within the departments. Thirty-four per cent is therefore in the National Capital area, as you know, and covers both Quebec and Ontario, with 20 per cent for Ontario and 16 per cent for Quebec.

QUEBEC RECOMMENDATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if what the Minister just said is true, why did she tell my colleague that no more figures will be released? Because 75 per cent of the 34 per cent for the National Capital area is on the Ontario side. That makes a big difference.

Daniel Johnson, the Quebec Minister of Industry and Trade, has said he would not be satisfied with mere crumbs, and he suggests that the Minister correct this injustice by having the federal Government establish its space agency in the corridor between Quebec City and Montreal.

Does the Minister agree with the suggestion made by the Quebec Minister of Industry and Trade?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed honoured by the fact that the Quebec Minister has given me the privilege of deciding where this particular agency is going to go.

I will tell you why I asked my department to stop releasing the data collected by us. I tried to explain to the press that these data concern only the research and development being done by the Department of Supply and Services. And that is why I stopped the production of these figures because they were only confusing the issue.

Statistics Canada, however, will provide comprehensive statistics, and of course we, as the Government, have an abiding concern for maintaining social and economic equity in dealing with the provinces.

CHILDREN

ACTIVITIES OF BUREAU OF MISSING CHILDREN

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Last year the Minister established a Bureau of Missing Children headed by Inspector John Brookmyre. There is some concern that the bureau has been downgraded and I would like an assurance that that is not true but that in fact the program will move forward with vigour in order to secure the future of these children.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has long had an interest in this matter and I thank him for his question. I am happy to advise him that indeed Sergeant Brookmyre remains in charge of this unit. As a matter of fact, he is down in Chicago today with my Deputy Minister attending a conference on missing children.

We are indeed very concerned about this issue. As you know, I opened the missing children registry last August and am presently in the process of holding national consultations on the feasibility of opening a missing children information Center. There is very strong support for this initiative in Cabinet and we will continue along that line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUGEES

BILL C-55—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Yesterday over 100 organizations and thousands of individuals initiated a national campaign to try to convince the Government to amend very serious flaws in its refugee legislation. Every single NGO in the country is unanimously opposed to the fundamental tenets of this legislation. Given all that, will the Minister begin to promote and defend the constituency he is responsible for in Cabinet by eliminating the pre-screening process and the safe third country concept which have the effect of turning people away even before they reach an oral hearing before a refugee board? Is he prepared to amend universally unacceptable principles?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member for York West is fully aware of the opinion of Canadians concerning the legislative measure we tabled with respect to immigration and the status of refugees.

I would suggest that the Bill will come up for second reading debate in the very near future. I am even more convinced that our propositions reflect the views of most Canadians concerning the measures we must take to let genuine refugees gain access to Canada.

[English]

UNIVERSAL ACCESSIBILITY QUERY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also knows the opinion of Canadians, some 75 per cent of whom want a fair refugee system. He and the Government are misleading Canadians if they continue to say that this system is fair and humane, because it is everything but.

While recognizing that no legislation is absolutely perfect, is it also not irresponsible to continue to ignore stubbornly the recommendation for universal accessibility, which was the centre-piece of a three-year consultation process? Why is the Government betraying that process now? When the Minister is long gone from his portfolio, how will he live with himself and his community in defending this legislation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my friend from York West can say what he wants. I challenge him to deny that 83 per cent of Canadians want us to tighten up the regulations.

Mr. Marchi: Read all the statistics, Benoît.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REFUSAL OF APPLICATION TO LAUNCH YOUTH TELEVISION CHANNEL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. After the expenditure of $800,000 of taxpayers' money and two years of hopeful and enthusiastic lobbying by young people for a cable TV channel which would serve their interests as well as involve them, the CRTC has denied a hearing of their application on the basis of a technicality. The Minister is an advocate for youth. What action does he intend to take in order to effect some change in the face of this distasteful and insensitive rebuff to our youth by the CRTC?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I have not been up-to-date on that issue but I can inform the Hon. Member that I am aware of representations made before the publication of the Caplan-Sauvageau report. As he also knows, that report dealt with part of that request put forward by that group. It is something to which I am at firsthand sympathetic. What we must also consider in dealing with this matter is the arms' length relationship that exists between the Government and the CRTC. In that context I will be very happy to look into the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Short supplementary.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the third Party's purported advocate for youth will take action at least to intervene in order to obtain either a delay of the hearings or a delay of the decision until the application of Young Canada Television can be heard?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, whatever intervention we do undertake will have to be done in a quasi-judicial context. My predecessor did this in making representations before the committee but there are limits imposed upon a cabinet Minister by law. I can make limited representations in that context.

I would like the opportunity to look at it very closely and report to my hon. colleague because it is an issue over which the Government has a great deal of concern.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF MR. CROUSE, MR. COATES, AND MR. HAMILTON

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention and that of all Hon. Members that there are three Members of this House who entered Parliament for the first time in the general election of June 10, 1957.

The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), Nova Scotia, is still a tower of strength in our caucus and the House and a strong voice for freedom. He has served with dignity and honour and has made a tremendous contribution to this House, to Nova Scotia, and to Canada.

The Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Coates), Nova Scotia, has over 30 years served with dedication and commitment, never wavering in his loyalty to his Party and his country, serving in many capacities in the House and indeed in the Party. Most of all he has always been cognizant of and concerned about the welfare of his constituency.

Of course we must acknowledge in our midst the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), Saskatchewan, who served as a Minister in that first Diefenbaker Government and subsequent Governments. His imagination and creative approaches to dealing with our mutual problems have certainly made a notable contribution to our country.

• (1510)

There are many other outstanding Members from other Parties who came into the House in the 1957 general election. Many have since gone on to other fields of endeavour. I would like to take this opportunity, on behalf of my colleagues, to congratulate and thank them all for their outstanding service and their distinguished contribution to this House and to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, while this may be somewhat unusual and unorthodox, I see in the Gallery the former Hon. Member for Ontario, the Hon. Michael Starr, who was also elected in 1957 and was the Minister of Labour in the Diefenbaker Government. I think it would be appropriate to acknowledge him as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to second the good wishes of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). What Canadian could ever forget that 30 years ago today John George Diefenbaker swept into power with a minority Government after a very, very charismatic campaign. I can say to all Hon. Members that there has been no more compelling parliamentarian in the history of Canada than John George Diefenbaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At that time, the three Members mentioned by the Deputy Prime Minister were also elected to this House of Commons; the Members for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Coates), both from Nova Scotia, and, of course, the Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) from the Province of Saskatchewan.

I want to say to all three hon. gentlemen that no greater tribute can be paid in this country than to enjoy the confidence of one's fellow citizens, for whatever length of time, but 30 years is a hallmark of which each of them individually ought to be proud. It is a tribute to the sacrifices they and their families have made. I want to congratulate all three of them most heartily.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I, too, in breach of the rules, would like to recognize Michael Starr whom I knew as Minister of Labour and for whom I retained a very warm friendship. He enjoyed the respect of Members from all sides of the House when he was in this place.

Since the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain is here in the House this afternoon I want to say to him that in my view he has never been given the credit he deserves for having authored the northern vision. Mr. Diefenbaker made that a popular concept in Canada. He opened up our lands north of the 60th parallel to Canadian attention. The Roads to Resources program was his. The farmers of this country will always remember him as a spectacularly successful Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The only weakness in judgment he has ever shown is having hired Brian Mulroney as his executive assistant when he was the Minister of Agriculture. The only other person who had as good luck with his executive assistants was Davie Fulton.

In any event, to all three gentlemen, congratulations, a generous thank-you from your fellow citizens, and wishes of good health, good future. We are proud to have known you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise on behalf of my Party and recognize the Members for South Shore (Mr.

Crouse), Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Coates), and Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). We take great pleasure today in recognizing their contributions to the House of Commons and Canada for so many years. We appreciate the fact that through their efforts Canada is a better place today.

The fact that the three Members being honoured today have served this House for 30 years tells us a great deal about what their constituents think of them having given them the ultimate vote of confidence for so many years. The fact that these individuals have been in this House serving the people of Canada in this capacity for 30 years also tells us a great deal about their perseverance and their commitment to the principles of democracy and parliamentary procedure.

There are a handful of people in the House of Commons who command the attention of Members when they stand. When the Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain stands and makes a speech in this House, he has the undivided attention of all Members. On behalf of my Party I would like to say that we appreciate and recognize the Hon. Members' contributions. We thank all three of them for making Canada a better place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I thank all Hon. Members for mentioning the names of the three of us who are in the House today and that of Mike Starr. I would like to say something a little different from what would ordinarily be expected on this occasion.

I recall when a Member from one of the York ridings had been in the House for 30 years and the Prime Minister had made him an honorary Privy Councillor. The House began to scream "Speech, Bob, speech". He had never made a speech in 30 years. He rose in his place and made the shortest speech I think this House has ever heard. He said, "If you guys would speak a lot less you would last a lot longer", and he sat down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton: In the history of the British Parliament there was one Member who made one speech in the House which was so well received that he never spoke again for 40 years. When he went to Ireland to become a Member of Parliament in the new Irish House they asked him why he had kept quiet for so long. He was a very able person. He said, "When you do something you cannot do better at, take it as granted and do not try to do any better". His name was Hamilton too, but that is beside the point.

Some of you may have noticed that in the last few years I have not spoken as much as I used to. I have learned from fellows like Bob McGregor and the Irish Hamilton of 150 years ago.

I would like to make one serious remark. On June 10, 1957, Canada was living perilously close to a one-Party type of government. I do not mean that in any harsh sense at all. The mere fact that the Conservative Party came back to power, with a minority Government admittedly, was the first break in this tendency.

In addition, never in the history of Parliament had there been so many veterans in the House. Those of us who had survived the war came in here in large numbers in the elections of 1957 and 1958. We brought back to this House an attitude which I think deserves some consideration at this particular moment.

We were well convinced that our efforts abroad would have to be repeated unless we learned to work together, not only within our nation but with other nations as well. I am doubly glad to see my friend, Mike Starr, in the Gallery because we set out to try to co-operate with the provinces.

I well remember in 1958 when we were hard pressed to provide jobs for people. We had a high unemployment rate in those days of about 6 per cent and were catching Hail Columbia from the Opposition. Bill Hamilton, the Postmaster General, and I were doing our level best to build post offices across the country and clear up the bush. We were spending a lot of money but not creating many jobs. Mike Starr suggested that we go to the municipal Governments which had lots of jobs they wanted done but no money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1520)

Mr. Hamilton: As the House very well knows, municipalities are the creatures of the provinces. But how did Mike Starr get around that? He simply proposed to the municipalities that all of these programs were eligible for help if they could get the consent of the provincial Government. One had to see the reactions of the provincial Governments. How can one turn down a request from a municipality to have something done in its riding when nothing has to be spent?

I can still remember Premier Duplessis of Quebec calling me and saying: "That Mike Starr, he is a devil. He puts a proposal before me that I cannot refuse". He thought the world of Mike, who was a very sensible person. He only dealt with Duplessis over the phone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton: Let me also say that, to my recollection, Mike Starr was the first person to describe the type of program we were conducting with all the provinces and territories as a co-operative type of government. I changed that name somewhat, to co-operative federalism.

I was pleased that the succeeding administration of the Right Hon. Mr. Pearson accepted this doctrine. However, that administration made a slight mistake. It called all the provinces together to deal with them as a group. Confrontational politics could never work in that sort of situation. They must be dealt with individually and let each province have a different arrangement.

Today, I not only want to give credit to the Government of the day but to point out that we had a group of people in the caucus who were very conscious of the fact that the only way to keep peace in the world was to co-operate not only with our own institutions in the country, but to co-operate on an economic basis with all other countries in the world. We are one world economically, we are one country nationally, and the only way we can make it work is through co-operation. All that this Government has done is simply to put it in a written form. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair might say to the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), on behalf of all Members of this place today and over many years, that we have heard some wonderful comments, and that was vintage House of Commons.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon all Hon. Members rose and applauded.]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-258, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, this is an amendment to the Criminal Code to permit the prosecution within Canada of war criminals found here. The Bill comes from a recommendation of the Deschênes Commission to the same effect. This recommendation has been agreed to by the Government. Although the report was received as long ago as last December by the Government no action has been taken. I intend by my Bill to show the Government one way, at least, of implementing that important recommendation and to urge the Government to get on with the job.

I hope I will have the opportunity to proceed with this Bill because I think it is effective. I want to note the strong legal opinions which the Deschênes Commission obtained upon which the recommendation is based to the effect that this is a valid exercise by Canada of its municipal jurisdiction to deal with criminals found within our country.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN TWENTY-FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), that the twenty-first report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure, and indeed, an honour to present petitions on behalf of the residents of Kamloops, Monte Lake, Copper Creek, Argenta, Kaslo, New Denver, Nakusp, Vancouver, North Vancouver, Burnaby, Delta, Lillooet, Bridge Lake, Williams Lake, 100 Mile House, Salmon Arm, Ladner, Surrey and other places.

The petitioners are concerned about the increasing number of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides which they believe have been proven to have harmful effects on human health. They believe that these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms, soil and water. They are, therefore, asking the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and the examination of alternative ways of controlling pests, such as biological control and plant-derived pesticides.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise with a petition which indicates that troubles in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada.

Canada has established standards of refugee status determination but our existing procedures have broken down under unexpected strains. The standing committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force. This proposal has support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals.

Procedures recently adopted that turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before their claims are examined put real refugees at risk. Therefore, we, the undersigned petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refuge board, independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and an adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadians concerned that conditions in many parts of the world are causing people to seek safety from persecution by coming to Canada. They point out that in the past we have had standards for refugee status determination but that these have broken down under unexpected strain. They also point out that the standing committee of Parliament has established a new procedure which has the support of all Parties and of many other groups in Canada concerned with refugees, but that the present procedures which have been adopted turn away refugee status claimants from ports of entry before their claims are examined, which puts real refugees at risk.

• (1600)

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Toronto who are concerned about the subject of unemployment insurance and point out the large amount of money spent in income transfers in other provinces and the necessary consideration of these things by the Forget Commission, but the unfortunate recommendations made by the commission which would force 62 per cent of the unemployed to live on less than $140 a week.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, call upon Parliament to reject any legislation designed to eliminate federal contributions to the unemployment insurance program and to reduce unemployment benefits for unemployed Canadians.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS AT ARMED FORCES BASE AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of people, about a hundred people, living in Toronto who are concerned about the low level flight training of pilots in NATO at the Canadian Forces Base in Goose Bay, Labrador.

Apart from the damage to the local native life, they point out that this training program is a provocative and aggressive war-fighting action that tends to endanger world peace.

Therefore, your petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end all low level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base and cease negotiations with NATO for the establishment of a larger base there.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, finally I have a number of petitions, about a hundred petitions, from residents of Toronto who are concerned about immigration, particularly about the refugee program of the Government.

They point out that whereas the previous system broke down under strains, it is necessary to adopt the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which has support from the Council of Churches, the Bar Association, the Jewish Congress, members of all Parties, and other groups and individuals, and which would particularly embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to these hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make this claim.

As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO RESTORATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure of introducing a petition signed by numerous constituents living mainly in the City of Regina.

They petition Parliament to defeat the motion introduced on February 16 supporting the principle of the restoration of the death penalty in Canada.

The petitioners point out that to kill people who kill people to show that killing people is wrong is morally indefensible. They share the belief that returning evil for evil contributes to the disintegration of the moral integrity and social well-being of the society in which it is introduced.

They also point out that as a member in good standing of the United Nations, Canada should be supporting the United Nations in its efforts to eradicate the death penalty in all nations of the world, rather than undermining Canada's reputation as a leader among civilized nations.

Therefore, it gives me great pleasure to present the petition to the House.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege and pleasure to present today a petition which has been duly certified and signed by residents of Toronto, Kelowna, Whitehorse, Vancouver, Ladysmith, Sardis, Burnaby, and Kitimat, on the question of the Government's proposed changes to the criteria for admissibility of refugees to Canada.

The petitioners urge parliamentarians to support a system which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada, and adequate opportunity for refugees to arrive in Canada to make such a claim.

POINT OF ORDER

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF SENATOR HEATH MACQUARRIE

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether my point is strictly in order, but earlier today we recognized Hon. Members who have served the House for 30 years, since June 10, 1957.

I should like to recognize another Member who was elected on that same date and still serves this Parliament, now as a Senator of the Government of Canada. I am referring to Senator Macquarrie who was elected on the same date and has now served Parliament for 30 years.

He was a Member of the House until 1979 when he was appointed by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), to the Upper House, the Senate.

Senator Macquarrie was first elected in the dual riding of Queens which included part of my present constituency. However, following a redistribution, he went on to represent the riding of Hillsborough.

I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) who is seated beside me, would want to join in recognizing his fine accomplishments for the people of Canada and the people of Prince Edward Island in both this House and in the Upper Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S ISSUANCE OF PERMITS TO DRILL FOR OIL AND GAS IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to ask leave, pursuant to Standing Order 29, to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the issuance by the Government of France of drilling and exploration permits to foreign and French companies to drill in Canadian sovereign waters.

I make this request in the interest of ensuring that Canadians, and more important Newfoundlanders, have an opportunity to air fully in the House all the consequences and implications of such extraordinary action which has been taken in recent days by the Government of France.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think my hon. friend is making a serious error in fact, which I should like to point out to the Chair.

In fact the Government of France has not issued drilling permits. Neither has the Canadian Government issued drilling permits.

The permits which were issued were exploration permits, issued by the Government of France and by the Government of Canada, into disputed areas. Both Governments have issued permits to—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): At this time the Chair will reserve on the application submitted by the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Robert de Cotret (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-59, an Act to provide for payments in respect of exploration for or development of lands for the production of hydrocarbons in Canada other than coal, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I rise to make a few brief comments on Bill C-59. In so doing, I would like to acknowledge the co-operation of my friend, the energy critic for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), as well as the co-operation of my friend, the energy critic for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I think the attitude of co-operation displayed by these two gentlemen and their Parties toward Bill C-59 underlines the importance we all place on the legislation that is so needed for the benefit of the Canadian West and indeed the entire economy. It will address the devastation experienced by the oil and natural gas producing provinces because of the drastic drop in world oil prices.

This legislation will make possible the implementation of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentives Program which my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), announced on March 25 in Edmonton. I am sure all Hon. Members are fully aware of the problems the Canadian oil industry and the western producing regions experienced, particularly last year because of the dramatic drop in international oil prices. Just as an example of this, exploration and development spending in the western sedimentary basin plunged by more than 50 per cent and thousands of jobs were lost. Hundreds of companies went into receivership and experienced bankruptcies. I believe we all appreciate the human and social costs of the situation.

I am sure all Hon. Members will agree on the soundness of the measures provided by the Bill and the urgent need to support recovery in this key sector of the economy. Just as an aside let me say that, since the announcement of this program, there have been clear signs that exploration and development activities and plans as reported by the service sector in the oil industry have increased considerably. There is now a mood of optimism in the oil patch that has not existed for quite some time.

The Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program is as relevant to the imperatives of social justice as it is to those of economic development. I would like to emphasize that the provisions of the Bill are the outcome of lengthy discussions and consultations with representatives of the oil and gas sector and provincial Governments as well as with my Liberal friend from Cape Breton—The Sydneys and my NDP friend from Vancouver—Kingsway.

The purpose of these consultations and briefings was to ensure that the financial support provided by the Government would do the greatest amount of good while respecting the structure of the industry. This support could go as high as $350 million in the first year and it is estimated that the program will attract up to $1 billion in additional investment in the petroleum industry and will create as many as 20,000 jobs in the oil and gas sector.

The Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program is a signal to thousands of workers in the oil patch in western Canada and the producing provinces that we recognize the importance of the oil and gas industry and that we have confidence in its future. I therefore encourage all Hon. Members to recognize the soundness of the Bill and to give it their unreserved support.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to reply to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Shields) in debate on this very important piece of legislation. Our Party is in agreement with this legislation. As has been stated by the Parliamentary Secretary, we feel that it will be helpful to the oil and gas sector. We only wish it had been brought forward earlier.

According to the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, in 1986, $4.2 billion of investment which had been applied the previous year was not applied to the energy sector. Had this piece of legislation been brought forward earlier, we could have kept some of this investment in 1986. However, it is being brought forward now and it is better late than not at all.

I do feel that the Government was somewhat pressured into bringing this measure into place. There has been intense pressure from western Canada in addition to the pressure of the obvious need which exists in the energy sector. The Parliamentary Secretary has mentioned that the sector is recovering, and I am pleased to say that I agree with him. We have not seen a manifestation of that yet, but planning for drilling for the fourth quarter of 1987 is optimistic. The companies are planning for a greater participation in drilling and exploration than they had earlier. Of course, this is as a result of a combination of this legislation and the fact that the OPEC price has been holding fairly steadily. The price that we once believed would not hold beyond the December agreement now seems to have a good chance to remain in that vicinity.

I would like to compliment the Government on finally accepting a principle that the Liberal Party has been putting forward for quite some time, and that is, the principle of involving government programs in the energy sector and not just letting the market dictate it. This program is good. I know we cannot expect great movement, but this will be helpful. The energy sector appreciates it and I, on behalf of the Liberal Party, appreciate it. I would like to thank the Government for this enlightenment.

There are a few provisions in various clauses which I will mention. I presume that as we go through the Bill clause by clause, I will have a chance to mention any questions that come up on the various clauses.

• (1620)

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I welcome the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary and thank him for acknowledging the co-operation involved in this legislation. It is a sort of co-operative federalism, if you like, or co-operative parliamentarianism.

He mentioned in his short speech that there had been a 50 per cent plunge in exploration in the western sedimentary basin. He is right about that. That is why this Bill is here in front of us. Many aspects of exploration and development in western Canada have been devastated. There are certain bad aspects to that and maybe even certain good aspects. The bad is the personal problems for some of the people in the oil industry, especially the small producers who do exploration and the small companies that help with that exploration. Those people are having trouble surviving.

The profit in the upstream exploration and development part of the oil business has gone down 64 per cent, but in the refining and marketing end, which is called the downstream, it has gone up 110 per cent. That is especially true in refining. That indicates the big guys can carry on through this downturn whereas the small companies are really getting hit. It means the big guys will have money and the little guys will not and they can be bought out by the big guys. There is a real danger that the small Canadian sector of the oil industry will collapse or be bought out by the larger companies.

I will not go into this in great detail but if you look at the comments of the Canadian Petroleum Association, the lobby group for big oil, or IPAC, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, which is big and medium-size oil, they oppose regulated crude prices. The smaller producers tend to want a return to a fixed price or some system of stabilizing their cash flow. The Government was under some pressure and, to its credit, it responded.

I said there was some good with respect to the hard times. The good is that it has forced a lot of oil companies in western Canada to be lean and trim. The cost of finding oil is now about $7 a barrel. Some of the Alberta Members can enlighten us more on that. The figure is certainly lower than the American cost. The rough rule of thumb is to multiply that by three, which means our producers can survive at around $20 a barrel and prices today are around $18, $19, or $20 a barrel. So the industry in western Canada is starting to come back. There is some light at the end of the tunnel.

I join with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) in asking what took the Government so long. The announcement was made on March 25. First reading of this Bill was on May 19. Here we are in June with the Bill before us. I think the reason is that the Government had to take a kind of long swallow. This Bill is in conflict with the Government's basic energy policy because the Government is actively involved in the market. That is of course against its policy. However, to its credit the Government realized that that kind of energy policy would not serve the small companies properly.

The oil industry is being devastated by the Western Accord signed by the previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the producing provinces a couple of years ago. The Government deregulated the price of oil and allowed it to go to world levels at the same time as the world market price fell out of bed. That is what devastated the industry. The Government has been scrambling to do something in return. It withdrew some taxes after a lot of pressure and after an Alberta by-election was about to proceed. The Government got rid of the PGRT. It has also responded in this Bill.

I would like to refer the House to my question of March 25, 1987, the day after the Government announced this program we are debating here today. I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in Edmonton today. I want to tell him that I generally regard the measures as positive for small oil companies. However, why did it take the Government so long to announce the program? Why was there so much squabbling associated with it? Why did the Government not use our proposal, which was to take the money raised from the one cent per litre tax on gasoline, or about $450 million, and earmark that amount for grants for small oil companies? It would have been a greater amount, and it would have been a better amount.

There are other alternatives to this scheme. However, on behalf of my Party I support it.

I have some questions and they will come up as we debate the clauses. First, will the cost be $350 million? The PIP program, and that is what this is, the son of PIP, or mini-PIP if you like, cost the Treasury something like $8 billion. That was an incredible amount for what is, I think, fairly limited return. That is why I was critical of that in the National Energy Program. When the Conservatives say the NDP supported the NEP, it is simply not true and I invite them to check the record.

What I am saying is that we have to audit it carefully so the costs do not get out of line. The Parliamentary Secretary said he anticipated the cost would be $350 million, but that it will bring in another $1 billion in private investment. I hope it does. However, we have to look at the mechanics of its operation in some detail. Does it effectively target Canadian companies? We want Canadianization of the oil industry if we can get it. We should look at the accountability of the companies, not just the people who get the grants but the operators of the actual programs, and we should make sure they are all audited properly.

I have another concern and I will leave this with the Parliamentary Secretary. He might want to look at it. I am concerned about the lease of premises for this new outfit. Perhaps he might be able to enlighten me further. I am told the Government is going to spend about $1 million to $2 million to lease premises in Calgary for the agency administering this program. I am told there have been two bids, one from PetroCan and one from Great West Life, and the Government accepted the one from Great West Life. I do not understand why the Government does not want to give this to its own Crown corporation. It seems to me that this would save taxpayers $1 million or $2 million. I put the Government on notice that we will be pursuing this further.

To sum up, this legislation is to be welcomed because it helps the small Canadian producer. It is still not the answer. That really lies in a proper price for oil. That depends on the world price and upon government policy. I hope the Government will not stop here. I hope there will be more energy matters included in the western initiative which will be announced. I suspect that there will not be, that the Government will be finished with the energy industry after this Bill. I hope it will consider the Husky upgrader and negotiated prices for the tar sands and Syncrude.

• (1630)

In conclusion, we do welcome this Bill. We will be monitoring it very closely. I have some other questions which I will raise during the clause-by-clause debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you would find unanimous consent to change the reference from a legislative committee to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the Chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-59, an Act to provide for payments in respect of exploration for or development of lands for the production of hydrocarbons in Canada other than coal.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 5—

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Clause 5 as follows:

That Clause 5 of Bill C-59 be amended

(a) by striking out line 38 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"person, other than those allocated by that person to a shareholder pursuant to section 7;"

(b) by striking out lines 41 and 42 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"person with whom the person is associated and those allocated pursuant to section 7 to any person with whom the person is associated; and"

The amendment to Clause 5(a) explains that a joint exploration company that has allocated some of its benefit to a shareholder can exclude it from the calculations of its annual expense limit.

Section (b) clarifies that in calculating your annual expenses you must include yours and those with whom you are associated. You must also include the expenses that were incurred by your associate as well as those that were allocated to your associate.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary South. Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 5, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 5, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 6—

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Clause 6 at page 3. I move:

That paragraph 6(b) of the French version of Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 6 and 7 on page 3 and substituting the following:

[Translation]

"b) le ministre les répute associés à partir du moment qu'il fixe et les en avise par écrit"

[English]

This amendment makes the French version correspond exactly with the English.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 6, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 7—

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Clause 7 at page 3. I move:

That Clause 7 of Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 27 to 41 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"entitled to a payment in respect of eligible expenses incurred by it during a fiscal year in respect of which the corporation has the right to make a renunciation under subsection 66(10.1) or (10.2) of the Income Tax Act, unless the corporation allocates to a shareholder eligible expenses in an amount equal to the amount that the corporation has so renounced or will so renounce in favour of that shareholder in respect of eligible expenses incurred during that fiscal year.

(2) Where a joint exploration corporation allocates eligible expenses incurred during a fiscal year to a shareholder, the corporation is entitled to a payment in respect of those eligible expenses to the extent that the shareholder would be entitled to a payment had that shareholder incurred during the fiscal year the expenses"

We have pluralized "expense" because, as you well know, during exploration and development there will be more than one expense. The other word we had a problem with was "renunciation". A company does not have to renounce everything which would be in the pool of the shareholder. All that need be allocated is what is expensed, not all that is eligible to be expensed.

The word "application" is too restrictive and would not allow a change. The amendment removes "application" and replaces it with "joint exploration corporation allocate as eligible expenses" and so on.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Hon. Members have heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 7, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

On Clause 10—Entitlement is Property

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I have an amendment to Clause 10. I move:

That Clause 10 of Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 1 to 3 on page 5 and substituting the following:

"10. Subject to part IX of the Financial Administration Act and the regulations thereunder, the entitlement of a person to a payment in respect of an eligible expense incurred after March 31, 1987 is transferrable and"

We are correcting terminology. This Bill is not amending in any way the Financial Administration Act. This amendment does allow for persons to assign, to transmit, through wills or any other sort of documentation, their entitlement. It really provides for the flow-through of the benefits.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 10, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 10, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 15—Audit or Examination

Mr. Porter: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-59 be amended by (a) striking out line 17 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"audit or examination, including information, documentation or copies to which the person has a right of access but which belong to another person"

(b) by striking out line 44 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"audit or examination, including information, documentation or copies to which the person has a right of access but which belong to another person".

The books and records are usually in the hands of the operator. This amendment provides access for the applicant to obtain invoices, records, et cetera.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Chairman, I am in favour of the amendment. I am pleased that the Government has noticed this because it seems that there could be abuses if the people who were getting the grants did not have the power to examine the chits and other records operators were sending in. I take it that the auditors can now look at those books of the operator and that there cannot be an agreement between the people who get the grants and the operator to exclude the government auditors from looking at those books. I hope that is true.

Mr. Shields: Perhaps the officials could answer that directly.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The officials cannot answer directly.

Mr. Shields: It requires the applicant to secure the operator's permission that CDIP may see the operator's books.

Mr. Waddell: The company that is getting the grant may require that it be allowed to see those books so that the government auditor can see the books? I do not want them to make any cozy agreement between themselves.

Mr. Shields: It requires the Government to have access to the books.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 15, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 15, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 16 agreed to.

On Clause 17—Exceptions

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I have a problem with Clause 17 insofar as there is disclosure of information. I believe that any disclosure of information must be dealt with judicially. There should be no disclosure of information unless it is absolutely necessary.

The clause states:

> Information or documentation obtained under this Act may be communicated, disclosed or made available for the purposes of the administration or enforcement of this Act, legal proceedings related thereto or criminal proceedings under this Act or any other Act of Parliament and may be communicated, disclosed or made available—

To the Minister of Finance solely for the purposes of his needs, to the Minister of National Revenue, and to the Chief Statistician for Canada. Clause 17(d) goes on to say:

> —to any agency established under an Act of Parliament to which the Minister is, by that Act, required to make available statistics, information and documentation obtained by the Minister under that Act that relate to energy enterprises or corporations that control energy enterprises.

I find that clause quite broad. It is a catch-all clause that leaves those to whom this information relates in an uncertain position. There is much confidential information and I believe it is an infringement on the privacy and rights of these people and corporations to include that in a catch-all clause like this.

Mr. Shields: I thank the Member for his question. I refer him to Bill C-104, which I am sure he recognizes. It was an Act respecting petroleum incentives and Canadian ownership and control determination that amended the Foreign Investment Review Act. It was under the Petroleum Incentives Program legislation. The wording from that legislation was transferred directly to this. There have been no leaks.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I acknowledge what the Parliamentary Secretary has said. My point is that if there was a need to rush this clause through and it was a unique clause that had never been used before, perhaps it could be said that there may be something to which the Minister will have to relate this information.

Since we have seen this clause before and no other agency or body has required this information or there is no other body to which this information must be applied, why is this clause necessary now? If there is another agency to which this information must be given, surely that should be made public and stated in the Bill, rather than have this catch-all clause.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, let me give one example to the Member. The Petroleum Monitoring Agency might require the information. We realize that the Government is big. One is not always sure exactly when and where this information will be required. The point I want to make is that to my knowledge there was never a leak during the entire time this clause was in the PIP legislation. I and all Members of the House would share the fears expressed by the Hon. Member. However, history has shown that there have been no leaks. I would ask the Member to consider that and allow this clause to pass.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 17 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 17 agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

• (1650)

On Clause 19—Evidentiary Privilege

Mr. MacLellan: I do not honestly see the need for this clause. I will just read the information. It states, and I quote:

> Notwithstanding any other Act or law, no person who obtains information or documentation under this Act shall be required, in connection with any legal proceedings, other than proceedings relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act or criminal proceedings under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, to give evidence relating to any information or documentation that is privileged under this Act or to produce any statement, document, writing or portion thereof containing any of that information or documentation.

I do not understand why we really need that clause. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could help me on that.

Mr. Shields: My understanding is from the officials—and I think we would all admit we do not understand all of these clauses because of the legalese involved—it is so it does not catch an individual in a position where he is required to testify, caught between a rock and a hard place. It is so that it does not infringe upon his rights, but he must testify. I would also point out again to my hon. friend that it is exactly the same wording as in the PIP legislation and it has caused no problem in the history of the PIP legislation. I would ask that it just be carried through.

Clause 19 agreed to.

On Clause 20—Regulations

Mr. MacLellan: Under Clause 20(a) under "The Governor in Council may make regulations", my concern is that the tendency in the last few years is to have legislation which really is less informative and all encompassing than it used to be. There seems to be more and more of a trend these days to go to regulations, that the legislation itself is just merely a framework on which one could hang the regulations. The regulations, of course, can be changed by Order in Council and do not have to be brought before this House for passage.

Therefore, it is a convenience for the Government that if it wants to change a regulation, it merely needs an Order in Council, whereas if it is in the Act and has to be amended, it requires legislation.

When we have a clause like this, I think we have to be very careful that we define accurately and carefully where these regulations are to apply. If we get into a generalization of any of these clauses, then what we are doing is giving carte blanche to the Government to change this Act by Order in Council instead of by amendment to the Act, which I think would be more in order. Granted, there is a place for regulations and I would be the first to admit that, but not to the extent we are seeing at the present time. To that degree, I would just like to mention Section 20(a) which states, and I quote:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) prescribing any matter or thing that is by this Act to be prescribed;

That seems unnecessary. If we are going to have regulations, the regulations should be on specific points and not a catch-all. What that does is give the Government carte blanche to be able to put a regulation through on anything it wants and this Act will diminish in importance and the regulations will continue to become more important. More and more of the principles of this Act will be included in regulations and the Act will become less and less important and, I think, largely through a clause such as that.

Mr. Shields: First, Madam Chairman, I do not think that anyone would deny that we need flexibility in the Act, and full consultation will always take place with the industry. Our discussion about this Bill has been one of co-operation of all parties in the industry and that is why I think we have such a good piece of legislation.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member that we must always refer back to the text of the legislation to make the regulation. It is not carte blanche. We just have to refer back. It is not a general power the way it is drawn up. We must always refer back to the text of the legislation before the regulation can be adopted.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could enlighten me as to under what section I can ask some questions on the administration of the program. I suppose I could do it under Clause 20 if some regulations would be made in terms of setting up the program. How is the bureaucracy set up? This is the Petroleum Incentives Administration which was set up by an Act. There is a report to Parliament and so on. I gather this will be just part of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Where can I ask some of those questions? I will do it now if it is possible.

Mr. Shields: I would like to point out to my colleague that the PIA is not created by statute. The PIA is part of EMR and the annual report to which the Hon. Member refers is strictly a voluntary matter. It is not a requirement by statute.

Mr. Waddell: I thank the Hon. Member. That answers one part of my question. The second part of my question is that I want to ask about the money for the administration of this program. How much is it going to cost for the administration of the program? Under what section of the Act will that be included? Is there any section of the act? If there is not, I will ask the question now because there could be regulations passed for the administration of this program.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I am not sure if I understand completely what the Hon. Member is asking.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps I should wait until Clause 32, if he is prepared to allow us to go to that. I want to know how much money is going to go for administration and what kind of administration of this program, versus how much money does the Parliamentary Secretary expect to go to the oil companies? There is a Clause 32 which deals with $350 million for this fiscal year ending March 31, 1988. I want to ask some questions about that. Perhaps I will wait until we get to Clause 32.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I can answer one part of the question. The total $350 million is allocated for the program. The administration of the program is taken out of the EMR budget.

Mr. Waddell: Well, then perhaps I could ask him now. Is the Parliamentary Secretary prepared to tell me, or has he any idea of how much it is going to cost to administer the program? I cannot find it in the Bill. How much is it going to cost to administer the program up to March 31, 1988?

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I cannot give the Hon. Member the answer to that specific question at this time—I will undertake to get him the estimates—because it is outside of the Act. However, I will get him the estimates as closely as I can. The closest I could come, and I do not know whether this would be satisfactory, is to say that indications are it looks like it would be about $10 million.

Mr. Waddell: So it would cost about $10 million to administer the $350 million program. I know the Parliamentary Secretary shares with me the concern that we do not want to blow Government money or spend it if we do not have to.

Could the Hon. Member also find out, unless he knows the answer already, why the Crown seems to be spending $1 million or $2 million more than is required? As he might know, there are two bids for the premises of the administration, one being for the Merlin Building in Calgary—I am not as familiar with Calgary as other Hon. Members across the way—and I think that is already Petro-Canada's. The other one is the Pacific Plaza, although I am not sure of that either. That is the Great West Life Company. Petro-Canada is already paying for the space, is it, or perhaps it is the other way around? If Petro-Canada is already paying for some space in Calgary, why is the Government going with Great West Life and wasting $1 million to $2 million of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I think the Hon. Member knows full well that Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation and operates in the private sector under certain regulations. He also knows that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources does not determine what buildings are to be leased for the purpose of administering the CEDIP. That is determined by the Department of Public Works. I have had discussions with the Minister of Public Works. I have asked him the very same question as the one posed by the Hon. Member. He has yet to get back to me with an answer. When he does, I will be happy to pass on the information to the Hon. Member.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I understand that the Great West Life Building is the Merlin Building and the Pacific 66 Building is the one that is owned by Petro-Canada. I understand that the difference between the two is very small. Can the Parliamentary Secretary give us the difference? As I understand it, it is about a $1.2 million lease but the difference between the two is just a few thousand dollars. Is that not correct?

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, again, I have to say to my hon. friend that I just do not have the information which he requests. The person who will have that information is the Minister of Public Works. I will make that information available to the Hon. Member when we have it.

Mr. Waddell: I will take the Parliamentary Secretary up on his offer. I point out that Petro-Canada may be operating in the private sector but it is a public company. It is owned by us all. If it has vacant space and if the Government does not take it up, that means that the taxpayers lose money, unless someone else takes it up. However, I am told that someone else will not take it up, or that the chance of that happening is small. I hope that the Government is not making an ideological decision, or any other kind of decision on this matter. I hope the Government has some good explanation for this.

Mr. Shields: Point well taken. Thank you.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 20 carry?

Mr. MacLellan: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 21 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 26—Officers, etc., of Corporation

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, with respect to Clause 26, I think the burden that is being placed on transgressors in the Clause is very light. The Clause states:

> Where a corporation commits an offence under this Act, every person who at the time of the commission of the offence is a director or officer of the corporation is guilty of the like offence, unless the act or omission constituting the offence took place without the person's knowledge or consent or the person exercised all due diligence to prevent the commission of the offence.

I can understand the part that refers to "without the person's knowledge", and perhaps "the person exercised all due diligence". But the fact that the person did not give consent to the wrongdoing should not excuse that person from being at fault. A person could have knowledge of what is being done and have been in a position of responsibility and exercised no due diligence to try to stop that act from being committed. Just because consent was not given does not mean that that person should be completely blameless for the offence. I think it is letting them off too lightly.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I point out to my hon. friend that in legal slang this is called "boiler-plating". It is only in there to conform to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 26 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

On Clause 29—Liability of Flow-through Shareholder

Mr. de Jong: Madam Chairman, I was not planning to enter into the debate. However, I realize that on June 18 the Minister of Finance will be bringing down his White Paper on tax reform. It seems that the Minister and the Government have made a commitment to change many of the tax provisions in the Act. As well, there has been discussion in terms of flow-through shares and the possible elimination of such shares. Does the Government's spokesman have any knowledge with respect to whether or not the flow-through shares that are provided for in Bill C-59 might very well go out the window in a matter of a few days or a few weeks?

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I am sure my hon. friend will understand that I have no more knowledge of the White Paper than does he. I just cannot answer his question.

Mr. de Jong: In other words, is it possible that the exercise we are going through today will become meaningless one or two weeks from now?

Mr. Shields: I can point out that this Bill reflects the position of the Government of Canada. If we wanted to get hypothetical, the price of oil could go to $50 per barrel tomorrow.

Clauses 29 and 30 agreed to.

On Clause 31—Variation in Program

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Clause 31 on page 12 of the Bill. I move:

That Clause 31 of Bill C-59 be amended by striking out lines 27 to 32 on page 12 and substituting the following:

"order made after September 30, 1988 provide that there is no entitlement to a payment in respect of eligible expenses incurred after the date of the order or vary the figure set out in section 4 in respect of all eligible expenses or of such classes of eligible expenses as are specified in the order, and where an order is made under this subsection varying the figure set out in section 4, the figure as so varied shall be deemed"

What this means is that the "vary" in the original documentation does not allow for the Governor in Council to vary down the grant or entitlement to zero. What the amendment does is give power to the Governor in Council to phase out, terminate or reduce to zero the rate of entitlement, at a rate of 33.33 per cent of that expense.

Mr. MacLellan: I cannot agree with the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member. I think it drastically alters the spirit of the Bill. We are told in Clause 4:

Where an application made to the Minister in the prescribed form and manner establishes that a qualified person has incurred after March 31, 1987 an eligible expense, the qualified person is entitled, subject to the prescribed terms and conditions and on the requisition of the Minister, to a payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of 33.33 per cent of that expense.

• (1710)

The amendment to Clause 31 changes Section 31 and says that really there is no entitlement to a percentage. What we have through the back door from the Government is a sunset clause when in September, 1988 the Government can reduce the rate to zero. Therefore, there is no entitlement under this Act. It is not only not in the spirit of the legislation but it is a misapplication of the intention of both Clauses 4 and 31.

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for his concerns. Yes, the Bill does provide for a sunset clause. The initial thrust of this program was to create jobs in a regionally depressed area which was caused, as the Hon. Member well knows, by the falling price in oil.

The program is specifically to help small and medium-sized producers. After September 30, 1988 the amendment to the Bill requires six months notice before one can terminate, which is stated in Clause 31(2).

The Hon. Member is quite right, it is a sunset clause. It would be acted upon in the event that the price of oil did rise and rise quite dramatically. Those people could be secure in their employment.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, it might be of interest to my hon. friend to know that when drafting the legislation and discussing the way it would work with the industry, the industry had no complaints with this clause. There is a sense of security there because we know the price paid under the CEDIP for exploration and development will remain consistent. It is only after September, 1988 which is 18 months down the road that it changes. This is a transitional thing. We do not know where the price of oil will be next September. We certainly did not know where it was going to be last September. We must have that flexibility as keepers or watchdogs of the taxpayer's dollar.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I do not doubt that what the Parliamentary Secretary is saying is correct. The people who viewed Section 31 may not have found it objectionable but they would find the amendment objectionable because it drastically changes things. Under law, Section 31 could not reduce the rate to zero. That would be over and above the authority of Section 31. Under Section 31 as it presently stands, it can be reduced but it can only be reduced, it cannot be wiped out. Section 31, in effect, is not now a sunset clause. Under the amendment to Section 31, it would be a sunset clause. That is the objection I make.

Mr. Shields: Madam Chairman, I point out to my hon. friend that it was always the intent to have a sunset clause. When discussing the principles with the industry, that was always understood. What we have done by way of the amendment is to clarify that original intent. It was obviously overlooked at the drafting stage. I am looking at the proposed rules for the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program dated April, 1987. I refer the Hon. Member to page 5, second paragraph. I will read a portion of it:

It is currently proposed that the legislation will authorize the Governor in Council to adjust the incentive rate for eligible expenses, or to adjust the rate for particular classes of eligible expenses, or to terminate the Program on six months' public notice.

That was there and it was discussed. No one is getting blindsided on this. It is strictly clarifying what the original intent was. I will make this booklet available to the Hon. Member if he does not have it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think if you were to seek unanimous consent you would find unanimous consent to proceed with third reading of this Bill now, and immediately following completion of third reading debate and the division being taken, the House would call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the House agree to the proposal put by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wise (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I wish to acknowledge once again the co-operation of the energy critic for the Official Opposition and the energy critic for the New Democratic Party. I want to thank them for their diligence and help in seeing the Bill passed. This Bill will be welcomed in the oil patch in western Canada and in all Canada because it is non-discriminatory. It will apply equally in Hibernia, Beaufort, and the Western Sedimentary Basin. I thank them very much.

• (1720)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his kind words. We in the Liberal Party support the Bill. I have certain reservations about some of its clauses but not about the general thrust of the assistance it will give to the oil and gas sector.

I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government would note the objections which have been made today and would give consideration to them, so that perhaps some changes can be made and we will not have to continue on those points and thereby be able to give the financial benefits the Bill provides to the oil and gas sector.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I should like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his kind words acknowledging the co-operation of the Opposition. I look forward to receiving my next letter from Mr. Bill Jarvis, President of the Conservative Party, who no doubt will talk about our co-operation in various matters.

I should like to say that I am cautiously optimistic that the Bill will work. It favours smaller companies. It focuses on grants rather than on tax incentives, allowing some of the smaller companies which do not pay taxes to benefit. It acknowledges the plight of small oil companies as a national issue. It is a national problem about which we all must talk.

It is still short-term. The long-term solution is to diversify the western economy—no mean feat but something which must be done—away from total dependence upon oil, but oil being a major part of it.

I should like to conclude by quoting from The Calgary Herald. I am not the favourite son of that newspaper; it has written three editorials criticizing me personally. However, I want to show how co-operative I am by quoting The Calgary Herald: "The federal Conservatives have learned a valuable lesson in realpolitik", or as they say in Calgary "real politics". It continues: "No matter what is said publicly about meddling bureaucrats and the virtues of free enterprise, government intervention in defence of orderly markets and job preservation is as indelibly a part of Canadian life as ice hockey and woollen mittens", and I would add to that summer barbecues.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which deals with the agri-food program of the Department of Agriculture. The committee is concerned that farm income programs need to be more carefully planned, funded and co-ordinated to ensure that adequate reserves are built up to assist farmers at times of greatest need. This is highlighted by the recent dramatic increase in the western grain stabilization fund deficit which has risen to $850 million in April, 1987, from $175 million on December 31, 1986. A need for better information and analysis in the administration of this program is required, as well as better information to the Minister in the exercise of discretionary authority.

Your committee is concerned also about the health hazard posed by inadequate procedures and facilities for the storage and disposal of dangerous substances. This problem had been noted in earlier reports and therefore your committee will pay particular attention to the Department's aim of 100 per cent compliance for the handling, transporting, storing and disposing of these materials.

As a result of two cases in London, Ontario, involving major capital projects which demonstrated a lack of consciousness, the committee is calling on the Department to demonstrate its capacity to accept increased responsibility and to be cost conscious in the expenditure of taxpayers' money.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF CHEMICAL PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners reside in Hinton, Grande Cache, Rimbey, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Condor, Edmonton, Camrose, Calgary, Jasper, Drayton Valley, Robb, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Stony Plain, Edson, and other locations in Alberta. The petitioners are of the opinion that increasing numbers of chemicals used as herbicides and insecticides are being proven to have harmful effects on human health. They believe these chemicals also produce short and long-term harmful effects on non-target organisms, soil and water, and that the same chemicals in past years have been registered and approved as safe for their various uses. The petitioners therefore call upon the House of Commons to initiate a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and an examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant-derived pesticides.

• (1110)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition on the concerns of people with regard to pesticides. In this petition people from Ontario, B.C., and Nova Scotia express their concern and call upon the Government to have a full public inquiry into the safety, testing, registration and regulation of the use of pesticides and an examination of alternative ways of controlling pests such as biological control and plant-derived pesticides.

If I may sneak in a short editorial, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that I am presenting this petition at the same time as Cesar Chavez of the United Farm Workers is meeting with MPs on this very topic.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 121 will be answered today.

[Text]

PACIFIC ADVISORY REGIONAL COUNCIL

Question No. 121—Mr. Manly:

1. Since its inception, have any specific issues been referred to the Pacific Advisory Regional Council (PARC) to be investigated and reported upon and, if so (a) what are they and what is the timetable for a report on each issue (b) how many directly concern the commercial fishing industry on the West Coast?

2. What percentage of members appointed to PARC are (a) natives (b) sport fishermen (c) processors (d) seine fishermen (e) troll fishermen (f) others?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. (a) PARC has not determined a formal agenda of issues to be considered nor their timetable for deliberation and reporting.

(b) Each of the 15 items on the list of prospective issues submitted to PARC are of concern to the west coast fishery including the commercial fishing industry. The majority of prospective issues involve other interests in addition to commercial interests.

2. Selection of PARC membership was not based on organizational affiliation, however, selections were made to ensure "balance of knowledge and experience in the different aspects of the Pacific fishery. The members of PARC have a broad generalized knowledge of the west coast fishery: some also have a very specialized knowledge of particular sectors. Many PARC members fall into more than one of the categories specified (e.g., commercial native fishermen), therefore the following add up to more than 100 per cent.

Commercial (troll, seine, gillnet) gears (5)	38%
Processing (2)	15%
Native (3)	23%
Sports (3)	23%
Other (2)	15%

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

FRENCH GOVERNMENT'S ISSUANCE OF PERMITS TO DRILL FOR OIL AND GAS IN CANADIAN WATERS—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29 I ask leave today to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the issuance by the Government of France of drilling and exploration permits to foreign and French companies to drill in Canadian sovereign waters.

I make this request in the interest of ensuring that Canadians and, more important, Newfoundlanders, have an opportunity to debate fully in the House all of the consequences and implications of such extraordinary action which has been taken during recent days by the Government of France.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) for bringing this important matter to the attention of the Chair and Hon. Members. The Hon. Member applies under Standing Order 29 which is a provision under which an application can be made for an emergency debate in circumstances in which the matter is not only important but the discussion of it is urgent.

The matter raised has been the subject of some comment in the Chamber in the last several days and is with regard to permits allegedly being granted to certain oil companies or oil corporations by the Government of France for exploratory drilling in waters which Canada alleges are Canadian sovereign waters. As I say, there has been some preliminary exchange on this issue during Question Period for the last two days.

The matter is important. There is no question of that in the mind of the Chair. However, as yet I do not think it is appropriate for the Chair to accept the application for an emergency debate. This, of course, is without prejudice to Hon. Members to raise the matter under Standing Order 29 at another time.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1987-88—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 60, DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Speaker: Today being the final day for the supply period, the House will proceed as usual with consideration and adoption of a supply bill. Considering our recent practice, do Hon. Members agree to have this Bill distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 60, in the amount of $64,443,000 under the Department of Communications—National Film Board—Revolving fund, operating loss, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible that, today, the Government should have to defend an institution as prestigious as the National Film Board. However, because of a motion by the New Democratic Party to substract $100,000 from the National Film Board's budget, the Government of Canada has a duty to defend an institution that has made its mark in the cultural and social sphere in this country.

The reputation of the NFB has been recognized by the public, and in fact internationally, for many years. And each year's production confirms that this reputation is not exaggerated, witness the NFB's latest productions under the directorship of François Macerola and his team. We have every reason to be proud of an institution that is one of the great success stories in Canada's cultural history.

Since it obtained its initial mandate, the NFB has been producing and distributing films, and now videos, and plays a major and strategic role in the world of the motion picture industry, culture and communications, where public and private institutions work side by side. In this respect, the NFB is an essential adjunct to our country.

It helps provide Canadians with basically Canadian cultural products that respond to their expectations and their needs, Madam Speaker, and which offer a comprehensive view of our own reality and culture.

The NFB's primary role is to help Canadians become aware of their own cultural identity, to enhance their knowledge of what they are and of the values by which our society is defined. Because of its mandate, the NFB is not subject to the same financial constraints as the private sector. It is therefore our responsibility, here in the House, Madam Speaker, to ensure it has the means to carry out that mandate.

That does not mean the National Film Board, as a State-funded filmmaking agency, can afford to neglect current developments in the industry. Several years ago, it established a number of objectives for institutional renewal which have helped to make its organization less unwieldy and more flexible, and as a result, the NFB has been able to introduce more efficient operations and filmmaking practices. Building on the experience acquired over the years, the NFB has rejuvenated its image and while stimulating the creativity of in-house filmmakers it has also attracted independent film artists who increasingly are taking advantage of the institution's new open policy in this respect.

This publicly-funded producer is becoming increasingly better equipped to fulfil a mandate that is particularly important today. Its success and its image are due first of all to the daring, quality and excellence of NFB productions which respond to the social and cultural needs of Canadians. Fiction feature films, documentaries and thematic subjects all reflect a Canadian reality. In addition, the NFB also plays a role in developing and advancing filmmaking techniques.

One example is the development of the IMAX Three-D, which was used to make the first production to be actually projected in 3D. Madam Speaker, I am referring to the film Canadians had the pleasure of seeing at Expo 86 in Vancouver. This film was seen by about 700,000 visitors from all over North America and the rest of the world.

Madam Speaker, I would also like to mention a fond memory. During Expo '67 in Montreal, the city where I was born, the NFB presented a film which people are still talking about. It was screened in the Labyrinth Pavilion where film producer Roman Kroiter and his assistant Joan Henson, a close friend of mine with whom I attended McGill University, had prepared an absolutely extraordinary documentary highlighting Canada's cinematographic evolution. It was the NFB which provided these highly talented young Canadians with an opportunity to produce this film at the pavilion, a film which earned general plaudits at Expo '67. As early as 1967 therefore, 20 years ago, the NFB made a name for itself and for Canada in the realm of cinematography.

The NFB continues to be very active on a number of research and development fronts, experimenting with new techniques and thus keeping abreast of state-of-the-art technologies which it uses to its own ends and from which cinematographic circles in Canada and abroad can readily benefit.

A visit to National Film Board headquarters is all one needs to see how very succesful it has been. The walls are literally covered with plaques and awards attesting to the excellence of its productions.

One hundred and forty-six NFB productions were singled out for awards during the last fiscal year: 69 here in Canada, 40 in the United States, 39 in Europe, and one in Australia. The Decline of the American Empire alone accounts for 18 awards.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I would draw Hon. Members' attention to a special program designed to warn children against sexual abuses. This has to be the current topic with which we can all readily identify, and here again the NFB is leading the way. I am referring to the series Mon corps, c'est mon corps which is distributed by public organizations throughout Canada. In recent months this series has sold 7,686 video copies and the NFB is planning to send 3,500 videocassettes to public libraries from coast to coast.

Such success can only stem from the NFB growing popularity and the need for this kind of agency. Fully aware of current trends, the NFB has revamped its distribution network to make its products more readily accessible. Ever more organizations are promoting and distributing NFB films because its products are increasingly geared to a variety of needs. The number of Canadian viewers is on the increase and sales abroad are booming.

The National Film Board is responsible also for training our filmmarkers and upgrading their skills. Together with departments and provincial agencies, the NFB has developed experimental training programs dealing with various movie-making trades, as a result of which we are witnessing a new breed of people increasingly skilled in their craft, to meet the needs of our own producers and those of foreign producers who come to make movies in Canada.

Moreover, the NFB is making every effort to attract a larger audience by ensuring its presence on the national television networks during prime time, as well as on the educational networks. Over the past two years, the English and French national networks added more and more NFB productions to their programming.

Moreover, the NFB has been trying, in its programming to reach the various strata of our Canadian society, supplying with quality videos institutions such as video clubs, film archives and film theatres, as well as video distributing machines. Also in the area of broadcasting, the Government Film Commissioner tabled recently with the CRTC a request for licenses to be issued to Télé-Canada and TV-Canada, which will specialize in public interest non-commercial television services.

In line with the Caplan-Sauvageau Report recommendations, these services would serve essentially to identify Canadian social and cultural realities, to represent Canada in its entirety, to broadcast quality programs, to give Canadians, both men and women, with creative abilities better access to television, and to provide complementary programs.

That kind of project evidently reflects the will of the NFB to have the widest distribution possible for its productions. This is a necessity as important as the capacity to produce, Madam Speaker. Why have excellent films if people cannot see them? So this is a necessity for which funds are required. This is not the time to reduce the funds; we should rather try to add to the existing funds. This is why, breaking new grounds in the distribution area, the NFB has concluded agreements with public and school libraries to make them partners in the distribution of its films and videos.

That kind of agreement is very successful. I will give only one example but it is without doubt very telling. In 1984-85, the city of Quebec public library rented 335 videocassettes and 254 were viewed on the premises. However, following the signature of the agreement, in 1985-86, that is under our government, Madam Speaker, the renting of videocassettes went up to 5,525 and then to 8,070 in the first nine months of the following financial year; to that number must be added 3,700 internal viewings. Therefore, we realize, Madam Speaker how much public access to viewing has increased.

The countless successes of the National Film Board are not due to chance. They are due in the first place to experienced personnel which can be found at every level of the organization. They are due also to the leadership of the Commissioner and his management team. The NFB was not afraid to set itself some high objectives and does not hesitate to innovate and encourage creativity. As a public producer, the NFB provides support to all talented filmmakers everywhere in Canada. In fact, 70 per cent of NFB films are made by freelance filmmakers, a major contribution to the development of new talents and the growth of our cinematographic industry.

Madam Speaker, another plus is the very special consideration given women by the NFB which has set up mechanisms to promote the cultural constituency they so properly deserve. Whatever one may say, Madam Speaker, whatever the NDP opposition may claim, the Access and Equality program is aimed at wage parity and employment equity for women working at the NFB. Under this program launched last year, it is expected that parity between male and female permanent and casual NFB staff will have been achieved by 1996.

In this respect, Madam Speaker, it must be recalled that in 1974 the NFB created a separate unit—Studio D—to meet the specific needs of women film producers and English-speaking viewers. This is the special domain of anglophone women filmmakers. Through this unit the NFB makes it possible for women to produce films and provides them with an opportunity to become proficient in every sectors of cinematography. Ever since it opened its doors, Studio D has gained international recognition for the quality of its productions.

So those are some of the accomplishments which were made under the aegis of François Macerola and which ought to be kept in mind. We must be fully aware of them and realize how enriching they are for all Canadians, men and women alike. Are we going to take a stingy axe to such a cultural heritage? Are we going to deprive our filmmakers—even partially—of such an essential tool for our own development?

The NFB is a large and diversified public undertaking. It has already agreed to make major budget cut-backs, thus contributing to reduce the national deficit, as would any agency or ministry of a Government intent on setting public finances back on an even keel. Even at that the NFB has managed to fund its activities and come up with new programs. At the present time, the socio-cultural balance of Canada's cinematographic industry rests squarely on three production sectors: film production by women, regional production, and production of fiction feature films. These three creation sectors deserve the financial backing required for more dynamic expansion.

We owe the NFB the support it needs to carry on with its activities. It would be an unfathomable loss, Madam Speaker, for the private and public movie industry if our public producer were to be forced to reduce its involvement in areas of activities that are so important to each and everyone of us.

In this vast country of ours, with a number of remote isolated communities, movies play an essential role as an outstanding communication medium. We should give the film industry all our support and even increase that effort so that it can serve the Canadian people even better, rather than calling for cuts in its funding.

The suggestion under consideration bears the mark of ignorance, or at least of inexplicable blindness, and is therefore unacceptable. Such a lack of common sense is beyond belief, Madam Speaker. The motion calls for cuts of $100,000 out of a $72 million budget, for reasons which appear to be rather personal. I read the report of an exchange which took place at the Standing committee between the Hon. Member in whose name this motion for $100,000 cut stands and Mr. Macerola, and I must say that I was taken aback by the personal and agressive remarks of that person, and that I felt very sad when I read that text, because I deeply respect the Hon. Member who moved that resolution. I am surprised at the approach she has decided to embark upon for reasons which she will no doubt be explaining to us later on.

Deep in the memory and in the experience of every Canadian man and woman, there is a character, a lansdcape, a situation, which have helped them know and understand themselves better. We could all mention a movie of the NFB, a documentary which made us feel proud to be Canadians.

Let us think for instance of the innovation of Mr. MacLaren. I remember as a child, as a teenager at school, when we were shown those outstanding short films.

Just skimming through the 300 pages of the NFB inventory will provide an answer for everyone. The NFB is our collective memory, and that past and present memory deserves to be respected and protected. Presently, the National Film Board needs us and is asking us to let it keep its share of the development of the Canadian movie industry.

As we are the ones who need the NFB, Madam Speaker, we will agree with that request out of generosity and self-respect, and we will reject in no uncertain terms the suggestion of the New Democratic opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

• (1130)

[English]

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I am rising on debate rather than to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary. Can we move to that?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This is the period for questions or comments, but there being no questions or comments, we will resume debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, it may seem to be quite an anomaly, and indeed it is, for me to be proposing a cut of $100,000 from the budget of the National Film Board because I am a long-term supporter of the National Film Board. I have protested against the very substantial cuts the Government ordered against the NFB and which have been defended by the Parliamentary Secretary who is going to the rescue. She is trying to defend against my proposal today, which is for a very specific purpose, and I will explain very precisely why. This is a symbolic gesture. The $100,000 that I propose be cut from the budget of the NFB represents the salary and benefits to the President of the NFB who has acted in a most irresponsible way. I intend to document to this House precisely in what kind of irresponsible fashion he has acted and why he is unworthy to be the head of the NFB.

I would like to see the NFB get lots more money, not just $100,000 more. I think it could use far more money than that. I have supported it in principle being involved a TV Tele-Canada proposal, which not everyone does, but I want to see the NFB involved in that.

I have opposed the drastic cuts suggested for the NFB in the past by government commissions, task forces and so forth. So I am a supporter and I am very disappointed about the way it is acting on the very important question of funding films for women, its own Studio D in English production and, of course, it is not making a priority for women in French production.

Studio D has been very important for women in this country. It has been a means of expression for women. It has given an opportunity for women film makers who, after all, have a much tougher time getting independent film money. The role of funding film makers who are women is absolutely essential for women to have voice and to be part of the world of film and video in Canada.

There has been a long history of attacks on Studio D. I can recall when I was President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women defending Studio D when it was always about to be cut completely. We had to run to its defence because it was speaking for women in a way in which no other body was. I note also that the model of Studio D has been proposed as a model to emulate in other institutions. The Caplan-Sauvageau report, for example, made a recommendation that Studio D, the women's arm of the NFB, should be seen as an important player in the NFB's contribution to TV Canada, its expertise in producing women's films serving as a model to the entire broadcasting industry. I very much agree with this assessment. I think it is quite right.

I recall that for women trying to get the CBC to have more women producers, directors and more broadcasting reflecting women's points of view in an area where women were still badly represented, Studio D was a positive model and it is a very important part of our cultural life.

I have been raising this issue with the President of the NFB when he comes before the committee for Estimates. I want to quote what was actually said. He came before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in 1985 on Estimates. I asked him about the role for Studio D. Mr. Macerola turned the responsibility of answering my question over to Mrs. Joan Pennefather, the Vice-Commissioner and Planning Director. She said: "The NFB is stating quite clearly its continuing support for women's production at the NFB and in Canada". With respect to production both in Studio D and by Francophone women at the Film Board she said: "We are not only supporting the continuance of Studio D but the expansion of its mandate, a national mandate to reach out to Anglophone and Francophone women". She goes on to say: "There it is, its work is continuing. It is not satisfactory and we want it to grow". She also talked about expansion.

• (1140)

I have already pressed them on the need to have an equivalent studio for Francophone women since Studio D makes only Anglophone productions. There has been a great demand for that. There has been a demand for the great films of Studio D to be subtitled in French so that they will be accessible. That has not been allowed, or at least not in nearly adequate numbers.

I suggested that in terms of popularity, rentals and sales Studio D is actually Studio A. In terms of winning prizes Studio D is Studio A. Indeed, when I suggested this in committee, the President of the National Film Board, Mr. Macerola, said: "Yes, you are absolutely right. Yes". I asked him about funding and why the studio was not getting more.

As to the discussion about the exact amount of money that it was getting, Mr. Macerola said: "The object is to increase that budget". This is from the transcript of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for May 9, 1985, at page 12:23. That is a very specific promise.

On the next page, page 12:24, Mr. Macerola states:

> We are just in the middle of the exercise of allocating the financial resources. It will be the normal increase . . . but that is not enough.
> I cannot give you a precise figure. Nevertheless, the objective is to increase the budget of Studio D and to increase the amount of money devoted to film making by women at the NFB. It will be a significant and a very important increase, but I cannot tell you the percentage because we are in the middle of it.

Nevertheless, significant and important suggests significant and important—large, not small. We have been promised a significant increase, and that was before a parliamentary committee which represents not only Parliament but the people of Canada in vetting the estimates of the National Film Board. It is what the President of the National Film Board promised.

What did he do? He did not increase the budget of Studio D. We know that in the meantime the NFB experienced cuts. But when we look at the period from 1985 until 1987, although there were cuts, that money has been restored. If we look under the heading "English Programming Financial Resource Allocation" for women's production, we see that the actual figure for 1985-86 is $2,531,000. The estimate for 1987-88 is down to $2,184,000. For marketing the figure for 1985-86 was $288,000 and for 1987-88 it is down to $228,000. These are decreases, not increases. Yet we had a promise of significant increases.

The total resources in this area of course have gone up. The total for production in 1985-86 was $22,960,000, whereas by 1987-88 the figure had increased to $24,939,000. For marketing there had been an increase from $4,079,000 to $4,715,000. This is a section of the Film Board that has had an increase in its allocations while Studio D has gone down. It has gone down in proportion, and it has gone down in actual figures. Yet the President promised an increase, and a significant one.

The Parliamentary Secretary thinks that my reaction is a personal one, as if it were somehow a peculiar reaction for a Member of Parliament who sits on the committee. The Parliamentary Secretary did not sit on the committee. She did not hear that promise. But she can look it up in the minutes of the committee meeting and see that he made a promise to the committee of a significant increase. She can read right in front of her that there is a real decrease. That is not a personal reaction. Here we have the President of the National Film Board making a promise to a parliamentary committee and then reneging on it and cutting the money.

If one turns the page in the Estimates to the next page and looks at French productions, one will see that women's productions are not even on the list—so much for making it a priority area for Francophone producers, directors and performers. This is something which has been demanded before.

The National Film Board likes to talk about its employment equity program. I applaud it for introducing an employment equity program. Every government Department and every enterprise of any size ought to have one. I am not against it. I have said before that I am in favour of it. I am pleased to see that it has one. Women should be able to move into other roles. Women should be part of every studio at the National Film Board. They should have opportunities for training and promotion, of course. But that is not a substitute for having Studio D, or a Francophone equivalent of Studio D. Women must feel so at home at the Film Board that they can get their ideas across so that there is not a situation of women film makers having to go to male managers of departments or studios and asking and trying to convince them that their point of view, while it might be a bit different, is nevertheless worthy.

We have to accept the fact that there may be differences of opinion as to what is the best way to do things artistically. There is a difference. Vive la différence. We want to see that the creativity of women and men has a chance to be explored. While there is a managerial structure that is overwhelmingly male and women have to go to male managers to ask for money, that is not adequate. There may be a time in which Studio D is not needed. That may happen. But I do not see it happening yet. Until that happens we need a strong Studio D.

I can give Hon. Members an example of what the President of the Film Board said himself. This is from the committee hearings held on May 21, 1987. Again, he was being asked about Studio D. Mr. Macerola states, as reported on page 42:22:

> —well, I have some problems, frankly speaking, with the filmic approach of certain films. I think they are putting too much emphasis on the content but nevertheless, . . . this film is returning some good revenues.

From Mr. Macerola's perspective he does not like some of the work that Studio D does. He is entitled to his opinion. But it is important that there be a studio where women can make the decisions about what is film quality and not have to answer to a male manager who may have a different opinion. It seems to me only fair that that should be the case. Women should have a chance to explore and to use their creative abilities. If they have some differences, they should be expressed, just as men express theirs. In the meantime—we want to see women moving into positions in other studios and being able to do their work in other studios working with men.

When we have the situation of Mr. Macerola lying to a parliamentary committee, not fulfilling his promises, what do we do? The idea of having a separate vote for Studio D, to have a National Film Board women's division, seems to be not the way we like to do things in Canada. We like to have women and men working together. While we have a situation in which women have been very under-represented, not appointed to managerial positions and not being given any opportunities for expressing themselves, having a separate studio for Anglophone women and a separate studio for Francophone women makes sense. That is a reasonable Canadian type of compromise. The idea of having a completely and separate parliamentary vote, a completely separate board of directors and so forth seems to me to be going too far. That kind of separation of women and men is not what we want. I would like to think that women and men can by and large work together. But while women are still not on an equal basis in reality with men, we need two studios, by language, in which women can have their own voices heard.

I think the idea of having a separate vote and so forth, going to those lengths, is wrong. I am not suggesting we go that route. But I can tell Hon. Members that I feel very much puzzled as to what else we can do. I do not think we can continue with a President of the Film Board who comes to a committee and who admits that the studio is doing good work and who promises it extra money and then reneges on that promise. What is a parliamentary committee for if people will come before it and not do what they actually say they will do? We have to be able to count on the heads of agencies who come before us. If their word is not good, we have to get rid of those people and bring in people who will actually do the jobs properly and will be fair to both women and men.

If progress is made in employment equity, that is fine. I understand that some new appointments are coming up and I am very pleased to see that. We will certainly applaud any move in that direction. Women have been appointed as head of the camera department, head of the Atlantic regional office and recently head of the Pacific regional office in Vancouver. It is very good to see these appointments and no one is complaining about them. However, until there is real equality between men and women, we must see adequate funding for Studio D.

I note that an advisory committee for Studio D composed of people both in and out of the Film Board, film-makers and representatives of women's organizations across Canada, recommended that Studio D needed $3 million to $5 million to do its job. The people who made this recommendation know the Film Board and its capacity for work. They know what can be done. This year, $2,154,000 has been awarded to Studio D. That is not terribly close to what the advisory committee indicated would be sufficient.

Mr. Macerola has said that 36 per cent of English film production will be done by women this year. That figure does not sound too bad. It is not 50 per cent or 52 per cent, but it is not a bad figure. I note, however, that it is a bit of an exaggeration because the Daughters of the Earth program took a very large amount of money. There is a little blip from that and normally the participation of women is not nearly that good. Yet the quality of the films produced by Studio D is very good. Those films win awards all around the world. They are very popular. Canadian people watch them, rent them and buy them. They are sold in other countries as well.

A study done by Chris Scherbarth on Studio D productions in comparison with other NFB productions found that Studio D productions were borrowed or bought twice as often as other films produced by the National Film Board. We have an enormously successful studio, yet the President of the National Film Board is simply not giving it the opportunities it should have. This is despite its artistic success and popularity.

I believe my proposal is the only symbolic gesture I can make. I would like to see the NFB receive more money for Studio D and for other studios. However, I as a private Member cannot move for an increase in the budget. As all Hon. Members know, that is not open to a private Member. However, I am concerned that there be fairness for women and men film-makers. Women and men taxpayers contribute to the National Film Board and I am concerned about fairness.

As a parliamentarian, I am concerned that the head of an agency came before a parliamentary committee and gave an undertaking which he did not respect. I think we must respond to that, and I throw it back to the Government. What should the Government do when the word of the head of an agency cannot be relied upon? I believe that a person like that should be replaced with someone who will be honest and open to the needs of Studio D and who will be fair to both the women and men who work at the National Film Board.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, today we have seen a perfect example of what would happen to government policies if the NDP ever got into power. We have heard a whole mish-mash of emotions but very few facts. Some of those facts, to be polite and use parliamentary terms, are so twisted that I cannot recognize from where they come from.

I would like to point out what the Hon. Member said in the exchange about the separate set-up for men and women at the National Film Board during the meeting of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which the Hon. Member read. It reads:

> I suggest to you that it is inadequate, that you are insensitive, and that you have rested on the fact of having an employment equity program, which may do great things in the long run.

The Hon. Member says that women have to run hat-in-hand and hat-pin in the other hand to react to men at the National Film Board. In saying that, she is omitting a few facts. The trustees of the National Film Board are composed of four men and four women. The National Film Board senior management committee is composed of three men and four women. The heads of the National Film Board's English regional studios are three men and two women. The National Film Board's French fiction studio which administers over $11 million in co-production funds is composed entirely of women. I do not know where she gets her figures.

I have before me the budget summary of the National Film Board for the period from 1983 to 1987. The figure at the bottom designates money attributed to the French unit of Studio D which our Government brought in, in 1986-87, first with a budget of $159,000 and now for 1987-88 a budget of $404,000. The Studio D budget went from $579,000 to $795,000, which means there is already $1,300,000 where there used to be $600,000 for Studio D and its French counterpart which did not exist previously. Added to that is the federal Women's Film Program, the International Year of Youth training project, which was also done by the NFB and dealt with men and women, the Employment Equity Program, which has $337,500 in training funds right now, as well as the Women's Market Development Group. In 1983-84, that was $504,142 altogether, and what is it for this year? It is $1,678,430. How can that be a decrease? I do not understand.

What we have here is a difference in philosophy. I have discussed with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—East (Ms. Mitchell) the NDP's approach to equality for women. Members of the NDP think in terms of quotas. Since 50 per cent of the people in Canada are women, they think that 50 per cent of every program everywhere, even if women are not involved in a particular activity, should be composed of women. That is ridiculous.

Members of the NDP think in terms of quotas and reverse discrimination. They think in terms of ghettos. They feel that if they cannot get their pound of flesh, men and women should live in separate ghettos. That is the philosophy of the New Democratic Party. Members of the NDP think that women cannot hack it in the real world so they should be put in a favoured environment, watered and fed so that they will grow like beautiful flowers. That is nonsense.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I note that the Parliamentary Secretary simply totally ignored the Estimates of her own Department. She said she does not know where I got my facts. Expenditures in 1985-86 were $2,531,000, an amount which has gone down to $2,184,000 for 1987-88. I do not understand how that can be an increase. Of course, there has been a loss in purchasing power because of inflation. Those are the facts.

The Parliamentary Secretary has taken some very selective positions and has referred to them. The board of trustees does not decide which individual films will be funded. Let me quote what Mr. Macerola said about the NFB before the committee, and this can be found at page 42:36 of the transcript of the meeting of May 21, 1987. He said:

> What I was saying is that for the time being, I am head of a cultural organization that is a male organization, like all the other ones. Therefore I have to redistribute the existing funds, that is I have to go and get the money that is being spent by male producers and directors in order to give it to another constituency.

He was complaining about my suggestion that Studio D ought to get more money. He said "no", that the NFB was a male organization, and that he had to cope with the male producers who run the NFB. That is what he said in committee. Then he went on to say:

> The easiest way for me would be to "ghettoize" the women who work at NFB and increasing Studio D's budget by $2 million or $3 million.

He was counting on an increase to Studio D, which he promised before the parliamentary committee two years earlier. Then he said that that would be to ghettoize women.

• (1200)

It is absolutely preposterous to say that giving money to Studio D is to ghettoize women. If that is the policy of the Government, then it ought to get rid of Studio D altogether. We do not want a ghetto. We want a climate where women can work and get their stuff out. That is what Studio D was doing. I do not think the Government can have it both ways. If it wants to say that it is a ghetto, that it is a bad thing, then the Government ought to get rid of it.

We certainly cannot have the head of an agency come before a parliamentary committee in 1985 and promise an increase for Studio D, and then return to the same parliamentary committee two years later, having decreased the funds available to Studio D, with the excuse that it was on the grounds that the male producers who run the NFB would not let him do otherwise and that to give more money to Studio D would be to ghettoize it.

Why did he not say in 1985 that he was against Studio D and against ghettos? He has simply not been honest.

I should like to see the Parliamentary Secretary respond to these false statements made to the committee. I am absolutely astounded. She was not at the committee at that time, but now that I have brought it to her attention, I hope she will take it up with the Minister.

It is grossly irresponsible for her to say that it is all right for the president of an agency to come before a committee, to lie, to make promises and not to fulfil them, and then to attack someone who points that out and react personally. I think Parliament ought to be very concerned when the head of an agency comes before a parliamentary committee on the Estimates and lies before that committee.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I hesitate to ask this question of my colleague as she is a member of our Party, but I say to her that I would ask this question of any Member.

I think it is a very serious matter for a Member of Parliament to rise in the House when the Member has what the Member says is privilege and the person accused does not have the opportunity to reply.

Mrs. Mailly: Right on.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, for whom I have a great deal of respect, has said repeatedly in her speech today that the head of the National Film Board lies. I do not know how the head of the National Film Board can reply to that.

When the committee was meeting and when the head of the National Film Board was there, did the Hon. Member make that charge to him so that he could reply to that charge at the meeting?

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I did not make the specific charge there because I wanted to consider carefully copies of Hansard and the Estimates. I asked him and gave him an opportunity to give an undertaking that he would fulfil his word.

I asked him very explicitly, since he had brought in these Estimates which were a decrease, if he would then undertake to increase the budget of Studio D. He then said "no", absolutely and categorically. I gave him a last opportunity to make good on his word.

Subsequently I went over the record very carefully to compare his original statements in the 1985 meeting with what happened in 1987.

As I say, I gave him an opportunity to make good on his word, and that is when he came up with the response that it was a male institution. He came up with excuses as to why he was not going to make good on the word he gave back in 1985.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I somewhat reluctantly join in this debate on Vote 60 in respect of the cut of $100,000 to the budget of the National Film Board.

I am disconcerted by the manner chosen by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to bring to the attention of the House what she perceives to be untruths spoken and undertaken by the chairman of the board and our film commissioner in respect of Studio D.

I was not there in 1985. I was not the communications critic at that time. I was at part of the meeting to which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood referred in May, 1987.

I actually left that meeting because I believe that one has an obligation to be at least polite and to maintain a degree of decorum when one is speaking with public servants and technocrats who are there to serve our society. One can disagree, but one does not have to be disagreeable. I was so discomfited that I left.

I went over the exchange but not with the same fine-tooth comb as the NDP Member went over the exchange. I have subsequently asked myself what we are talking about in respect of the National Film Board and women.

I know that the National Film Board has a very wonderful Studio D. I know that it produces some extraordinary films about, for, and addressed to women as well as the general population. The film commissioner has a commitment to the cultural space occupied by women at the National Film Board and to film-making in general, film-makers in Canada. He has been attacked by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood. In my view he has shown—and I say it in all sincerity—some leadership and a great deal of sensitivity to the matter of equal opportunity and to the development of women, not only in Studio D but throughout the National Film Board.

The track record of the National Film Board and the final results we have seen—and one must assume it is because of the leadership; I have no other way of making such a presumption—have indicated an ongoing improvement since the appointment of the present director, Mr. Macerola, in 1983. If we look at our other cultural industries, whether it is broadcasting, cable, television, or book publishing, in every single industry the situation of women and their presence in those industries is indeed something to criticize.

I suggest that the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood is as strong a proponent of the role, space, and place of women as I am. However, I think we see things somewhat differently. I see the world as a shared partnership, families and people who live together in society. I do not look at 52 per cent per se. I look at competence, equivalents, and the right to move regardless of one's sex.

I also say that there has been discrimination and stereotyping and that therefore we must do some additional promotion, which is called employment equity. I have been very critical of the Government's employment equity Bill, Bill C-62. I have said very strongly to the Parliamentary Secretary—and she knows that I have said it—and to the Minister that all the right words are in place; the problem is that there are no teeth in the Bill to put employment equity into action. All one must do, according to the Government, is to deposit a report. You can avoid any kind of punishment and any kind of sanction. That is not good enough, Madam Speaker. On that score, the Government has done lovely things with words, flowers and smoke and mirrors, but it has put no practical application to it. On the other hand, we have the chairman of the National Film Board, the film commissioner, who has said, contrary to all his other colleagues in the cultural field, "I intend to do something about this."

• (1210)

In December, 1986, the National Film Board announced—voluntarily—its plan to establish a new division to head an employment equity program which aims to achieve parity among women and men in all National Film Board staff and contract positions by 1996 and to ensure a more equitable place for women in all aspects of film-making in our society, particularly by establishing training and apprenticeship programs. I wish Treasury Board would take note of what the National Film Board has done and apply the same thing across all the Crown corporations in our Government. The goals set will be met through funding and hiring practices, through training programs, film crew selection procedures and greater support of the board's film unit.

The program is the first to be implemented by a major Canadian cultural organization. The program was initiated as a result of a study done by the National Film Board completed in November, 1986. It was not a surprise to me nor to the NFB that the study found that men make up 78 per cent of the management, 69 per cent of the film-makers and 85 per cent of the technicians. Furthermore, and I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary is well aware of this, men make $4,000 to $6,000 a year more than women in all categories except in the support staff. It is traditional and normal in Canadian society that women get paid a 60 cent dollar. I think women now get a 64 cent dollar, but we are looking for a 100 cent dollar.

In the meantime, the National Film Board took a really solid look at things. Because women comprised 72 per cent of the board's support staff and 93 per cent of the its clerical and secretarial staff it said something had to be done. In actual fact, when you look at the number of National Film Board employees, as of February 28, 1986, you have on full-time staff 324 women and 421 men. In terms of division, women are trying to get to an equal situation—we have not made it yet—but at least there is a program being put in place that will see an improvement in this unfortunate distribution which does not reflect women's competence, capabilities, ingenuity and creativity in the cultural sector. This program grew out of the Film Board's five year operational plan which guarantees Canadian women equal partnership in the National Film Board's reform.

The federal employment equity legislation to which I referred before, Bill C-62, passed last spring required all federally regulated employers and Crown corporations to report annually to Parliament on the progress in the hiring and promoting of women, the disabled, native and visible minorities, as per the whole of Section 15 in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it being the equality section. The concept was to be applied in the National Film Board. We have been addressing particularly Studio D.

I suggest that there are other aspects which need to be addressed, not only Studio D, relating to visible minority women, relating to visible minorities, relating to native people, women, and native people in general. We have to look at the whole ball of wax and see what the National Film Board will come up with in all of these categories.

The Film Board, as you well know, Madam Speaker, does not fall under the employment equity legislation. That is why the President and his board must be complimented. They have shown leadership. They did not have to put themselves under Employment Equity legislation because NFB is an arm's length cultural institution. But Mr. Macerola intends to keep the Government informed about the progress and the implementation of the program. That is a very forward move.

The Member quoted from the hearings and the exchange with the Vice-Commissioner of the National Film Board, Joan Pennefather. I too asked about employment equity. She went on to tell us that not only was the NFB involved in an employment equity program, but it would also bring in contract compliance, something which the Government did not even bother to do in its legislation which it should have done and which was promised during the election. The Government forgot to keep that promise along with many others. What did Joan Pennefather say in response? She said that the National Film Board has gone further than the employment equity legislation and has implemented contract compliance. Contract compliance is an essential component of the employment equity program ensuring that when the National Film Board is working on co-ventures with partners in the independent producer sector, it will see that employment equity is involved through contract compliance.

The Hon. Member said there were cuts. There may have been some cuts. I am not prepared to argue down to the finest of details. But I am prepared to suggest that one should look at what happened to Studio D over a year ago. Through no fault of Studio D it had a deficit. Anyone who is in business, whether in public company business or private company business, knows that when you have a deficit it has to be dealt with. Studio D had to deal with that deficit. Studio D had a lot of carry-overs, projects which it carried over from 1985 to 1986. There was, and understandably so, some discontent at Studio D. There were film producers who were not getting jobs. There were new projects. Studio D has a million and one new ideas which are good, exciting and dynamic. But you and I know that we cannot have everything we want. We have to do things within certain parameters. Studio D, with this long list of carry-overs and with the deficit it had to pay back, did not have the kinds of funds it wanted that year.

Let us look at what has happened. Basically, we have had dollars invested in film projects produced and directed by women. In the English branch we had a total of $18,121,898 in production, $6,581,334 of that or 36.3 per cent was done by women. In the French branch with a total of $12,334,697 of production, $3,610,423 or 29 per cent, was done by women. That is not fifty-fifty, but I hope we will move to fifty-fifty.

There have been no cuts in the over-all budget. In Studio D in 1983-84 they had $363,708, and the amount was $795,450 in 1987-88. I will place in the record, if I have time, the total of this budget, but I now want to go on to another aspect.

With respect to the over-all National Film Board, we are talking about five studios in Montreal, one in Toronto, one in Halifax, one in Winnipeg, one in Edmonton and one in Vancouver. Each one of these studios has projects dealing with women and with women's issues. Not all projects with respect to women come out of Studio D.

The Member said that she does not want to see Studio D perceived to be a ghetto, and neither do I. I am saying to you, Madam Speaker, and to the Member for Broadview—Greenwood, the leadership and the motion before us, which is a motion of censure on the management and leadership of Mr. Macerola, is not a fair critique. We see coming from all the studios some excellent projects and programs which deal with women and women's concerns. They are not just women's concerns, they are society's concerns. Things concerning women, from women's point of view, are very important. There are also women who produce and direct on their own, not necessarily in Studio D.

• (1220)

Studio D, which was founded in 1974, the International Year of Women, has produced many films to date. It has been a training ground for young film producers. They have gone on to other studios with their skills, training, their vision and view, scripts and productions.

Studio A is an animation studio and it boasts five studios in Montreal. It was founded by Norman MacLaren. Wendy Tilby of Vancouver has produced a wonderful film called Tables of Content. She has already won two major awards, one in France just last week. She won the best women's film award at the Annecy meeting in France. She does not come out of Studio D, she comes out of Studio A. Quite frankly, I do not care what studio she comes out of as long as she has produced a fine film with taxpayers' dollars which reflects women's concerns from a woman's perspective. I do not think she has to be from Studio D. Obviously, if Mr. Macerola were not interested in women, he would have done something that would have been counter-productive to producing these kind of women.

Studio A has an opportunities program for young children animators and film directors. On the French side, research is being done in the two-dimensional animation field. We have produced Sand Castle which won an academy award and gave us a chance to experiment in new technology and new technique.

In Studio B, the fiction studio, great features have been produced. We have had some excellent critical awards. One of the best film-makers, Donald Britton, did that film on Mackenzie King. Do not tell me that women in our society are not interested in Mackenzie King, his peccadilloes, his view of women and whether or not he looked in a crystal ball. Women are just as interested in that as men. The fact that it was produced in that studio does not detract from Studio B or the vision we have.

The film on Hal Banks which was produced last year had a very serious impact on the lives of women. It impacted on how their husbands live. I do not think you can discount that. Sitting in Limbo and 90 Days are excellent films that need to be recalled.

With respect to Studio C, the centre for documentaries, it has produced wonderful film series such as the one done by Gwynn Dyer on war and the consequences of war. Does that not impact on women? Some day we ought to look at a film series done by women on the impact and consequences of war. It might be a different film. I hope in that sense we will see an evolution in the role of women in the National Film Board. Co-production on the French side in that studio is very important.

In Studio G we are doing multi-media and educational programs. My friend talked about how young people view themselves within the educational framework. Those are important projects.

What is the true portrait? The NFB board of directors is composed of four men and four women. Senior management is composed of three men and four women. The heads of the regional studios are three men and two women. The French fiction Studio C, which administers over $11 million in co-production, is composed of women only. What I am trying to say to you is that the NFB renewed its commitment to the federal Government's women's film program in the amount of $2 million over the next five years, and that is some commitment.

In closing I want to point out to you that the voice which the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood brings to this debate is not consonant with the voices of some women's organizations. Madam Louise Dulude, in December, 1986, had only praise for the NFB announcement and said that since they are a federal government agency they are under no obligation with respect to employment equity or the promotion of women. She feels they deserve full credit. That credit goes to the head of the NFB. In March of 1987, MediaWatch, the Canadian Coalition Against Media Pornography, and the National Action Committee on the Status of Women held a conference called "Adjusting the Image: A National Conference on Canadian Broadcasting Policy" and paid compliments to the NFB.

I want to conclude by saying that I oppose the sense of the amendment. We cannot afford to cut $100,000 from the NFB. It goes against the creativity which has been demonstrated in the leadership and all the way down the line. So I reject out of hand the amendment to the motion.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Through an inadvertent slip-up the amendment which the Hon. Member just spoke against has not actually been put to the House. There have been consultations with the Parliamentary Secretary and the Liberal Whip and, with unanimous consent, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) should be allowed to make her motion at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I would like to reply to this point of order. We would agree with the proposal except for the fact that we would like to complete the 10-minute question period, and then proceed with unanimous consent to the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). We wish to go on, but I do not think that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is aware of this, and she has now gone out. I have a question to ask her. When the 10-minute period is over, if everyone agrees, we can proceed with the amendment.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There seems to be consent that we complete the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to put her motion.

Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: I thank my colleague for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) for her speech. I know that she is a member of the Standing Committee, on which my position of Parliamentary Secretary unfortunately prevents me from sitting. A Parliamentary Secretary cannot sit on a Standing Committee to ensure that all its members will have every freedom to develop policies on the issues involved. This is why the Parliamentary Secretary does not sit on the Committee. It is out of respect for the independence of the Committee. However, since the Hon. Member for Mount Royal herself does sit on the Committee and quoted some of her own comments before the Committee, I would like to ask her to confirm officially what Mr. Macerola said in reply to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). The Acting Chairman had just asked the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood to let the witness answer since he was being bombarded with questions. Mr. Macerola then replied.

[English]

MR. MACEROLA: What I was saying is that for the time being, I am head of a cultural organization that is a male organization, like all the other ones.

Obviously he meant a male-dominated organization. That is the world as it is, but we want to change it. He continues:

• (1230)

Therefore I have to redistribute the existing funds, that is I have to go and get the money that is being spent by male producers and directors in order to give it to another constituency.

Mrs. Finestone: What page is that on?

Mrs. Mailly: I am on page 42:36 of the minutes of May 21, 1987. He continued:

The easiest way for me would be to "ghettoize" the women who work at NFB and increase Studio D's budget by $2 million or $3 million. However, I decided to choose the harder way.

I have chosen to enhance the cultural space occupied by women, not only within Studio D, but also within the NFB and within the Canadian film-making milieu.

So, the whole world is our oyster, Madam Speaker. He said:

That is my philosophy. That is why I believe that I have all the required competence and capacities to lead that organization.

I ask whether Mr. Macerola answered that way in committee.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I would like to be able to say that I was there and heard it with my own ears. Regrettably, I had to leave before the end of the meeting. Therefore, I did not hear it. I have, however, read it. I wondered what the meaning of that jargon was. I called Mr. Macerola and asked him what he was talking about when he said: "I have chosen to enhance the cultural space occupied by women, not only within Studio D but also within the NFB and within the Canadian film-making milieu". I told him that I did not understand his philosophy in English and asked him to explain it to me.

I am glad the Member asked that question because the answer really meant that he was going to apply employment equity and ensure that women get equal opportunity based on their competence, the projects they will present, and the fact that they are creative, innovative and competent. He said that he believed that to be the case and that it should apply not only in Studio D but across the board in those areas in which he has an involvement.

If the Hon. Member wants to know whether I heard it, the answer is no; whether I read it, the answer is yes. As to what it means, I have just told you what it means.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a comment first and then ask a question. I am very perplexed by why this has to be an either/or proposition, that either we have employment equity or we have Studio D. I am in favour of both, and I would hope all Members here would be in favour of both. It is not an either/or proposition. We need Studio D. The day may come when we do not need it, when women will be so much at home in any studio that it will seem superfluous to have a separate studio. However, in the meantime we need it and we had a promise that funding to it would be increased.

I applaud the employment equity program. I do not know why the Liberal critic talks about support for the NFB by the National Action Committee, MediaWatch and so as if that were somehow in opposition. Of course they should applaud the NFB when it does the right thing. I do too. There is no opposition. That is a completely false opposing of sides. I applaud their employment equity program, but it is not a substitute for Studio D. I think this false opposition has caused us to miss the point of the debate.

I would like to ask the Member a question for clarification. Was there a decrease between 1985 and 1987? The Member referred to figures from between 1983 and 1987, but I am not talking about 1983. The Member's figures showed an increase between 1983 and 1987 but there was in fact a decrease between 1985 and 1987. Would the Member confirm that? The promise was made in 1985.

Second, is it all right for the President of an agency to come to a committee and promise an increase and then to decrease the funds?

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I will answer the second question first. I was not there when the promise was made. From the Hon. Member's description the promise seems to be more of a global nature than a specific nature. From reading the minutes of the committee proceedings it seems to me that the promise to increase Studio D related to a budget cut which had taken place. There was a hope that money would be coming back to the National Film Board from the Treasury Board and that if such funds came back a portion of them, or perhaps all of them, would be turned over to Studio D. I was not there in 1985. All I can say is that I have heard the Hon. Member speak to Mr. Macerola, in not the most gentle of terms, with respect to that issue.

I will send my hon. colleague a copy of the figures I have on the Studio D budget. I said that in 1983-84 Studio D had approximately $363 million. In 1984-85 it had $343 million. In 1985-86 it had $554 million. In 1986-87 it had $579 million, and in 1987-88 it has $795 million. When I subtract 579 from 554 I still get an increase rather than a cut.

Ms. McDonald: No, no.

Mr. Gormley: That's it for questions and comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Does my hon. colleague who just chaired the other meeting want to ask a question too?

Mr. Gormley: I will let you ask me questions.

Ms. McDonald: Sheila, you haven't got the right figures.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, if I do not have accurate figures I will have to recheck them. I am not lying to the House or misleading it. These are figures which I have taken—

Ms. McDonald: Look at the Estimates.

Mrs. Finestone: I am looking at the budget summary, Madam Speaker. These are the figures in the budget summary. However, I will go back and check that to which the Member is referring. My over-all sentiments remain the same. I have not heard the President mislead or lie. I was not there. I understood that there was a promise "if", and that promise was not realized because new moneys were not forthcoming or moneys were not recovered.

I am sorry but I still cannot agree with the Member for Broadview—Greenwood, as much as I would like to support her. She usually does very good research and there is something wrong somewhere.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is over. Pursuant to prior unanimous agreement of the House I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to move an amendment.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting the amount of $64,443,000 and substituting therefor $64,343,000.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have received the amendment and it is in order.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to know if this in any way nullifies the debate which we have already had due to a lack of process.

Mr. Murphy: No, you're still on record.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Not in any way. There was unanimous consent of the House to allow this amendment to which everyone has referred throughout the debate this morning. The amendment is now before the House.

• (1240)

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to speak to this particular motion. However, I must confess that it is not without a rather strong sense of incredulity that I find myself compelled to defend the proposed 1987-88 budget for the National Film Board. It is lamentable, in fact completely incomprehensible, that any Member of the House would suggest diminishing our support for the National Film Board of Canada.

As a member of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I know I speak on behalf of all government Members in saying that the Government wishes it could have given more to the National Film Board this year and we regret the budgetary constraints that do not make this possible. However, we live in cognizance and awareness of certain economic realities.

I find it strange that a member of the Opposition would actually suggest that we appropriate less money for the National Film Board this year. I find it rather reprehensible that it would come from a Member who I believe has a long and distinguished record not only in the field of communications and culture, but in having women play a complete and equally participating role in Canadian society.

That Member has spent a great deal of her career defending the National Film Board and has often stated what she and the New Democratic Party believe are many of the dangers to culture from free trade. We know that these fears are unfounded. One has the impression of posturing when members of the NDP talk about a freer or enhanced trade threatening the cultural sovereignty of the National Film Board but then proposing less money for the National Film Board of Canada.

There is no question as to where the true danger lies. It is not with our Government's far-seeing policy of securing economic growth through expanding our markets. However, it is in the betrayal by any Member of the House of the kind of cultural rights that we try to uphold.

Many of us see these cultural rights residing in the National Film Board and the kind of work that it does. To undermine this cultural instrument in Canada through arbitrarily slashing money off the budget, $100,000 in this case, is truly dangerous to Canada's culture.

The Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), on this day when we discuss Estimates, should be defending the National Film Board rather than attacking it. Anyone versed in the cultural history of Canada would know that contribution that the National Film Board has made to our national identity. The international reputation of Canada has been indeed illustrious in the NFB's 48 years of history.

Established in 1939 by the legendary John Grierson, the board quickly became a pioneer in documentary film-making. It remains a world leader to this day.

In the early days when the NFB got its start, it did not remain exclusively in the documentary field for long. With the arrival of Norman MacLaren in 1941, the NFB began laying many of the foundations of its international reputation for imagination and innovation in the field of animation. This reputation still holds true today, not only for independent Canadian film-makers but in the good name of the NFB itself.

MacLaren was a genius who continually developed new film-making techniques, drawing, painting and even scratching directly on the film itself to achieve effects that others never even imagined. Norman MacLaren was honoured around the world not only for his artistic achievements, but also for his contribution to world peace and understanding through films such as Neighbours.

But his brilliance might never have been able to flower had it not been for the National Film Board, where he was free to transcend the commercial pressures of the bottom line and to pursue innovative ways that were artistically and culturally far ahead of many of the pioneer film-makers. His techniques have recently reached critical acclaim from mass audiences.

His productions, and those of the NFB in many disciplines—features, documentaries, shorts, animated films and videos—were far ahead of their time in the 1940s and 1950s. They were popular and acclaimed. In the ensuing 40 years, NFB productions have appeared in some 60 languages and have won innumerable international film festival prizes, acclamations, and awards.

For example, in 1960, the film Universe won the Jury's Prize at the Cannes Films Festival for the exceptional quality of its animation, as well as 23 awards from other film festivals. Other NFB films have consistently won prizes at Cannes. These winners have included over the years: Blinkity Blank, City of Gold, Women on the March, and most recently all Canadians are very familiar and proud of Le Déclin de l'Empire Américain which won the Cannes International Critics Prize just this last year.

Other NFB films have won the prestigious Robert J. Flaherty Award of the British Academy of Film and Television Arts. They include Nobody Waved Goodbye, Grierson, Los Canadienses, Prologue and Sad Song of Yellow Skin.

The films which were winners at Cannes and in the British Academy also won many other international prizes. However, these films represent only a few of the international award winning productions of the National Film Board of Canada.

Many Canadians, particularly those in the more widely distributed commercial film category, look to the American Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the Academy Awards. The Academy Awards are often a test around the world of the commercial viability and success of popularly distributed film.

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has recognized the National Film Board achievements with an astounding total of over 50 Oscar nominations for NFB productions. The Film Board has had eight Oscar winners so far. They are: Churchill's Island in 1948, Neighbours in 1953, Le Château de Sable and I'll Find a Way in 1978, Special Delivery in 1979, Every Child in 1980, If You Love This Planet in 1982 and Flamenco at 5.15 in 1984.

All of these award-winning productions were rooted in the Canadian experience. Many involved powerful and occasionally searing explorations of Canadian cultural and social life.

Many were done on low budgets through the NFB's regional offices, which contracted much of the production work out to free-lancers.

We should all be very proud and amazed at what the NFB has accomplished with the money Canadians have entrusted to it over the years. The board's record calls for all the support that this Government is able to give to the NFB.

It is time for fiscal prudence. I believe every Canadian who sees the astonishing national debt that was bequeathed to this Government by years of reckless spending by previous Liberal Governments, knows that tough decisions must be taken to achieve the kinds of savings the Government needs.

The National Film Board has achieved substantial saving under its five-year plan. It is not a time to be lopping off $100,000 from the NFB budget, an institution which has been a source of great pride to many Canadians over the years.

I want to comment on this motion and why it has been moved at this time. Since it is not parliamentary to impute motives to another Member, I will not do so. However, I will directly share with the House why this is being done.

As a member of the parliamentary Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I know there has been a rather unfortunate, long-standing and ever increasing degree of enmity, animosity and open hostility between the New Democratic Party member of our committee, the Member for Broadview—Greenwood, and the very renowned and esteemed President of the National Film Board, Mr. Francois Macerola.

In a rather distasteful exchange recently before the committee, that NDP member called the President of the Film Board arrogant. Just this morning in committee, she said that he had "lied to the committee".

I understand that earlier this day during the debate the Member for Broadview—Greenwood also referred to lying. The Member's concern is about the place of women in the National Film Board and their place as producers and directors and those contributing to Canadian film. Her concern is shared by every Member of the House. They say the best way to make any man a feminist is to have daughters. That we will see our daughters with full equality with men in Canadian society in the next 10 or 20 years is of great importance to us.

• (1250)

Mr. Skelly: That is paternalism.

Mr. Gormley: The Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party interrupted me just as I felt a wonderful speech on feminism coming, but perhaps I will save that for another day. We who have children want to see our daughters attain an equality in the arts, culture, business, law and in many other sectors of Canadian society.

The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has had a long-standing row with the National Film Board over what she believes the NFB is doing in place of allocating funds for Studio D, the women's studio, for employment equity and for encouraging the development of women. However, I think the Hon. Member has far overstepped parliamentary privilege in referring to a Canadian citizen as lying under parliamentary privilege where that citizen has no recourse against that allegation. I think a careful examination of the record will show that as well as being unparliamentary and unfair, it is simply not correct in this case to refer to the film commissioner of Canada as having lied or having misled a parliamentary committee. More than that, this row has led to the motion today to eliminate $100,000 from the operating budget of the NFB. What the Hon. Member is trying to do is somehow to punish the film commissioner for what she believes has been a lack of performance on his part on behalf of women's issues.

The mind boggles at that philosophical approach. I do not always agree with Mr. Juneau of the CBC, but is the answer to cut more money from the CBC? I do not even like Knowlton Nash. I would not have hired him as an anchor man. But should we eliminate his salary from the CBC? Any good and sensible parliamentarian would see that it is the height of irresponsibility to try to inflict upon a Canadian organization, particularly a cultural organization, one's own viewpoint, in this case, often dogmatically, by assaulting the fiscal planning of the NFB by trying to reduce money from its budget. I think Members of this House, particularly those on the government side, and members of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, feel a sense of revulsion about this.

I am not usually very partisan in this House, but this is really an example, I think, of what we see as a great contradiction. Back where I come from, the NDP goes out to talk to farmers and damns the grain handlers every time there is a strike. This is the same NDP which is run by the Canadian Labour Congress, of which the grain handlers are dues payers. That is the height of hyprocrisy. It is typical of the New Democratic Party.

The NDP cultural critic, who extols the virtues of the NFB, as we all do, scares the devil out of the cultural community by saying the NFB will be jeopardized if we have free trade, and we all know that as false. Here is a person, who is a self-styled, well respected advocate of the NFB, standing in this House asking us to lop money from its budget. That cut in money is designed to cause personal harm to the Film Commission of Canada and the chairman of the NFB, Francois Macerola. I think it is a petty way to deal with one's difficulties and disagreements with the policy of the NFB.

I would hope that in the remaining part of this debate, and in the future of the NFB, we do not see this kind of narrow-minded, overly partisan sort of attack, not only on the NFB but on the very integrity of a man who is respected by all Parties in this House for doing an excellent job in leading Canadian film policy. I would like to point out that if one looks at the record of NFB with respect to women, one will find that of the eight Oscar-winning films I mentioned just a moment ago, three have come from the NFB Studio D. The only permanent women's film making unit in the world, Studio D has often given compelling expression to the Canadian voice on the world's stage, a voice of conscience, reason and personal dignity.

Many who know my background will know I have not always agreed with Studio D. Some Studio D productions have offended my sense of balance on certain moral issues. However, do I, as a member of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, say to lop money from the budget of Studio D because I did not like a film on abortion, or that I did not like the direction taken in a certain program? All Members of this House know that that is not the way one tries to effect a balanced policy in Canada's National Film Board.

Not a Love Story, for example, which was nominated for an Academy Award in 1982, graphically portrayed the destructive effects of pornography on both men and women. This acclaim was given to the NFB for that production, and to Studio D, wherein that production had its development and its promotion, and I think that was a very wide acclaim to us in Canada who are so concerned with the harmful effects of pornography. If You Love This Planet in many ways polarized and balkanized the great concern over how we view nuclear arms, and to all of us involved in the debate as parliamentarians, it gave us a warning and yet a hopeful message. I think that is something about which all Canadians are justifiably proud.

The continued support for Studio D is part of a comprehensive policy designed to increase the cultural space occupied by women.

During Francois Macerola's mandate, the NFB has increased resources to women working in studios and other parts of the country. Just recently a film on entrepreneurial women was shown to a meeting of Ministers for the Status of Women in Halifax. The NFB's over-all approach is to ensure fairness in the workplace for women. As the government film commissioner, Mr. Macerola, recently announced, an employment equity program, as detailed in Equality and Access a New Social Contract has been hailed as one of the most progressive anywhere in the federal Government. Mr. Macerola's action was not compelled or forced. This was voluntary. This was developed by a senior manager in Canada's Public Service who has that kind of commitment.

The NFB has undertaken to conduct a comprehensive program of employment equity as provided for in the Charter of Rights to improve the status of women not only in the employ of the NFB but in the film arts of Canada. The NFB has been reviewing its programming and distribution systems to ensure that all their components recognize and honour a commitment to the full partnership of women in Canadian society. It has identified specific training objectives to be pursued in terms of the promotion of women within its ranks.

I would think the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, whose concern with the advancement of equality for women is well known to all Canadians, would want to reward Mr. Macerola for moving in the right direction. I know that until we have a House of Commons with 141 elected women—probably about 143 women would reflect the true percentage—women have some distance to go in Canadian society. But if one looks at the commitment of the NFB, at the testimony before the standing committee of Mr. Macerola and his senior staff, many of whom are very well respected women managers in the Public Service and in the film industry, I think one could take lessons in many respects from what the NFB has done. I would hope that as we analyse the NFB and its work, we would provide a hopeful message to the NFB, not only for the Studio D but particularly for women who are hoping to produce, write and make film across Canada, that these people can indeed be recognized as women and as Canadian artists in their own right.

For this reason, I will conclude by saying that I reject out of hand, as I am sure all Hon. Members do, that the NFB should have any kind of budget reduction based on a very partisan, political aim, which I know is unacceptable to every Member of Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock p.m, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TAXATION

NEEDS OF SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): In 1986, Mr. Speaker, I had the great pleasure of traveling through Canada from Halifax to Vancouver to consult small businesses and find out their needs with respect to federal policy. Today I am very pleased to present this report of the national Liberal task force on small businesses, a report which features the representations made to us.

Mr. Speaker, it must be emphasized that the tax reform which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is committed to unveil on June 18, 1987 will undoubtedly have a significant impact on small businesses.

Since the Liberal Party wants to take a positive and open approach to this reform, we will wait until the white paper is tabled before commenting and announcing our position on taxation and small businesses.

ENERGY

ALASKA STATE SENATE'S CONGRATULATIONS TO CANADA ON ARCTIC OIL PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is quite interesting to see ourselves as others see us. Very occasionally the view can be quite complimentary.

On April 23 the Senate of the State of Alaska passed the following resolution after noting in the preamble how Canadian industry and government had successfully worked together to explore, develop and transport Arctic oil from the Beaufort Sea in a visionary and environmentally sound manner. The resolution reads as follows:

> Be it resolved that the Alaska State Senate sends its hearty congratulations and expresses its deep admiration to Gulf Canada Corporation, the Government of Canada, and the governments of the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories for successfully developing a leading edge in Arctic oil production for the international petroleum industry.

In return perhaps we should compliment the honourable Senators on their perspicaciousness.

PESTICIDES

POTENTIAL HAZARDS—CALL FOR CHANGES IN REGULATIONS AND CONTROL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, today on Parliament Hill, Members of Parliament had the opportunity to meet with Cesar Chavez of the United Farm Workers who indicated his concern regarding the affect of pesticides on consumers and farm workers.

The control and use of pesticides are an issue of growing concern to many Canadians, and all New Democrats. Today the New Democrat environment critic in Alberta, John Younie, is launching a campaign to increase awareness of the potential hazards of many pesticides and calling on the federal and provincial Governments to implement the following changes to pesticide regulation and control: That Health and Welfare Canada, Environment Canada, and the general public should have more control over the registration of pesticides in Canada; that all substances in pesticides, including active and inert ingredients, should be listed on packaging and should be fully tested and registered; that stronger regulations on testing should be devised that ensure human and environmental safety, with the producer or distributor bearing the testing costs, and the use of all pesticides that do not meet test standards should be suspended until these standards are met; that the public should have access to all toxicological data concerning pesticides so that informed choices can be made regarding their use; and that a test review board should be established to permit an all-Canadian, independent audit of tests done by private labs to check the appropriateness, validity, methodology, lab practices and accuracy of test results.

These are measures which my New Democrat colleagues and I urge the Government to consider seriously.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PAGES AND MEMBERS ANNUAL BALL GAME

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, "It's one, two, three and you're out at the old ball game"!

The "Expo" MPs and the "Blue Jay" Pages played their annual ball game in the rain. The "used-to-be" ball-playing MPs, with the help of three Pages, garnered 14 runs against 6 by the middle of the ninth inning. During the game the MPs gradually weakened while the Pages grew stronger.

When the Pages came to bat at the bottom of the ninth they batted the ball all over the diamond bringing their score to 14. But considering that the Pages playing for the MPs made three runs the Pages really won the game 14 to 11.

• (1405)

Superb sportsmanship permeated the whole game as did friendly comradeship. As the two teams "three-cheered" each other, every MP felt proud to have had an opportunity to work with such splendid young Canadians. We need have no fears about a wonderful future for Canada when our Pages, with other youths like them, take over the reins of Government. Vive les Pages!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

SITUATION IN GASPESIA—ROLE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the drama now unfolding in the town of Murdochville and, in fact, in a major part of Gaspé. Hon. Members know that fire swept through the Murdochville mine in April. Two hundred workers had been laid off. We learned recently that these 200 workers will definitely lose their jobs and that 200 more will be laid off soon, with the result that in a town like Murdochville 400 families will be jobless.

Mr. Speaker, as if the situation were not serious enough, a few days ago I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) tell the House that the only intervention of the Government would be to help "support" whatever financing may be offered by the Quebec Government.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the role of the federal Government in regional development is much more extensive than that, and I urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to look immediately into this dramatic situation which is having a serious impact not only on the town of Murdochville but also on the entire economy of Gaspé.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EARLY RETIREES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the House passed Bill C-50 to reinstate the eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits of early retirees who had filed applications before January 5, 1986. Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that June 10, 1987 was a great day for early retirees in this country. After waiting for many months, all those who took early retirement and filed their applications for unemployment insurance before January 5, 1986, will at least get the amounts to which they were entitled.

Above all, I would like to say to these people that it was a privilege to work with them, as I did by taking part in a number of private and public meetings with the ARSAC on this matter, and I am proud of the fact that thanks to the provisions of Bill C-50, they will be reimbursed. I also want them to understand I will continue to intervene on their behalf, as I did throughout this debate in my representations to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), so they will get their cheques as soon as possible.

I am delighted with the outcome of this debate which means that all workers concerned will receive fair treatment.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

LEGAL FEE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have just received a response from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) to questions I put on the Order Paper regarding the Cape Breton Development Corporation. From January 1, 1986, to March 1, 1987, a period of just over one year, the corporation spent $54,792 on legal fees related to one aspect of industrial employee relations.

Specifically, this money was spent to deal with cases brought before the Canada Labour Relations Board on employee classifications. The firm McInnes, Cooper and Robertson were the recipients of this outrageous amount of money.

Since the Cape Breton Development Corporation has a full-time industrial relations department, on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia who want to know why so much extra money was spent on industrial employee relations, I call upon the Minister to order an immediate investigation into the legal expenses of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF BALTIC AND UKRAINIAN NATIONS' SUFFERINGS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last night Canadians of Estonian, Latvian, Lithuanian and Ukrainian origin held their 15th annual ecumenical memorial service here in Ottawa. This service is held each year to remind us all of the six million to 10 million Ukrainians who perished in a man-made famine or in Siberian labour camps, to remind us of the one million, or one in six Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians who were liquidated or deported to Siberia, and to remind us all of the continued suppression of national cultural, religion, language and freedom in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Ukraine today.

• (1410)

This year's service should remind us all, as we debate the defence White Paper and as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) meets today and tomorrow in Reykjavik to discuss arms control with NATO Foreign Ministers, that there is no real peace without freedom.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CHILE—CONCERN FOR SAFETY OF CARMEN QUINTANA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as of June 8, Carmen Quintana, the young Chilean student who was horribly burned with gasoline last July, returned to Santiago, Chile, to testify against the soldiers responsible for this hideous crime.

Quintana, who now resides in Canada, returned to Chile in April to meet with the Pope during his visit. While there, a death squad threatened to kill her, and written graffiti calling her a traitor were on walls everywhere. As a result of this previous visit, human rights groups in Chile and the Inter-Church Committee for Human Rights in Latin America here in Canada are extremely concerned for her safety.

Carmen Quintana's lawyers, one of whom is from Montreal, are asking the Chilean court for an re-enactment of the incident that almost ended Carmen's life but claimed the life of a friend. The Pinochet regime has already conducted a re-enactment but without the benefit of any witnesses.

The results of the Government's re-enactment show that Carmen kicked the container of gasoline on herself that nearly ended her life—a remarkable conclusion. Her lawyers are requesting another re-enactment with the benefit of witnesses to prove the Government's allegations to be incorrect.

It is clear that Carmen Quintana is in environment that is very hostile, and any requests to challenge the Pinochet Government's earlier claims of the incident will not be taken lightly.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to inform the Pinochet regime that the Canadian Government is maintaining a careful watch on Carmen Quintana throughout the trial until she returns to Canada, and to press other countries to pursue the same course.

IMMIGRATION

ARREST OF CONSULTANTS AND LAWYERS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week RCMP officials arrested six Toronto area immigration consultants and lawyers and charged them with aiding and abetting Portuguese nationals to remain in Canada through fraudulent means.

The role which certain unscrupulous lawyers and immigration consultants played in the movement of groups to Canada claiming refugee status is a matter of concern to us all. Such abuses bring our immigration laws into disrepute and, above all, have flooded our refugee determination system with false claims, while those refugees with valid claims have been forced to wait months and years before their claims could be resolved.
