TAREWELL! the village leaning to the hill, And all the cawing rooks that homeward fly;
The bees; the drowsy anthem of the mill;
And winding pollards, where the plover cry. We watch the breakers crashing on the bow And those far flashes in the Eastern haze; The fields and friends, that were, are fainter now Than whispering of ancient water-ways. Now England stirs, as stirs a dreamer wound In immemorial slumber; lids apart, To that old music hidden at her heart. Farewell! the little men! Their menial cries She rises in her circuit of the skies An eagle with the dawn upon her wings. Welcome again the land of our farewells l In this strange ruin open to the stars We find the haven, where her spirit dwells

This letter forms a sort of epitome of his criticism of us. He writes of "the strong spirit of this unaccountable nation . . . a nation fond of their liberty, learned, witty, despising life and death, a nation of philosophers; not," he goes on, "but there are some fools in England, every country has its madmen; it may be French folly is pleasanter than English madness, but by God English wisdom and English honesty is above yours." When a man says that a nation excels his own in such an essential as wisdom, and when he calls God to witness his words, we suspect his intellectual mood. He is for the moment angry with his own country and sees something in need of correction. It is his own country which he is scolding not a

Are we a nation of philosophers? Per- tendril of the pea vine to reach out for a Are we a nation of philosophers? Perhaps it would be more true to say that we are a nation of moralists. There is nothing so dull as to hear a dull man moralize; but brilliant morality, comprising as it does almost the whole field of satire, is very much like wit, and popular philosophy has always a moral blas and is always tergs in England. The moralizing of the pea vine to reach out for a support that it may climb heavenward. The rill of water increases and grows as it pursues its way, joined by other little will not be rilled to the river. It is our moral bias, again, which accounts for our the water warmed under the sun's rays and the trout refused longer to dwell in the waters which enervated him as the transfer of the Thurd. has not the fools which it deserves. We think "The greater the country, the greater the fool" would be a truer saying. There is no fool like an English fool, we believe. The Continental fool has a thick head. You cannot get much into it, but it is not so impossible to fill with new ideas as is the head of the English fool. Whether he be a faddist, or a stick-in-themud, he brings his natural moral bias to culiar brand of fools. Every country Turkish bath enervates its devotees. a self-interested ban man whose errors should be penalized. The whole force of the fool's character is thrown into the defence of his ignorance. Perhaps this is why Voltaire calls him mad, and finds his folly so little pleasant. The French fool may be a blockhead, but he is not a professional condemner. His stupidity is passive, while the Englishman's is nearly always aggressive. Now and then among women we see the passive fool—the amiable, inconsequent creature with the reasoning power of a child, and none of a child's intuition or predilection for big intellectual issues. We imagine that there are some fools everywhere of this sort. They are cosmopolitan and of no living interest. Their portraits drawn by the greater masters give us delight; but it takes a man of genius to see any worth in them, any material which can produce either love or laughter.

But the worst result of that tendency to the fool of the streams and forest the conditions and take care of themselves much better than the small fry which was formerly placed in our streams. ### CHRIST IN FLANDERS

WE had forgotten You, or very nearly— You did not seem to touch us very nearly— Of course we thought about You now and then; Especially in any time of trouble-We know that You were good in time of trouble But we are very ordinary men.

And there were always other things to think of-There's lots of things a man has got to think of-His work, his home, his pleasure, and his wife And so we only thought of You on Sunday-Sometimes, perhaps, not even on a Sunday -

Because there's always lots to fill one's life. And, all the while, in street or lane or byway-In Country lane, in city street or byway-You walked among us, and we did not see. Your feet were bleeding as You walked our paver How did we miss your Footprints on our pavements?-Can there be other folk as blind as we?

Now we remember; over here in Flanders-(It isn't strange to think of You in Flanders)-This hideous warfare seems to make things clear. We never thought about You much in England-But now that we are far away from England—
We have no doubts, we know that You are here.

You helped us pass the jest along the trenches-Where, in cold blood, we waited in the trenches-You touched its ribaldry and made it fine. You stood beside us in our pain and weakness-We're glad to think You understand our weaknessnehow it seems to help us not to whine. We think about You kneeling in the Garden-

Ah! God! the agony of that dread Garden-We know You prayed for us upon the Cross. If anything could make us glad to bear it-Twould be the knowledge that You willed to bear it-Pain -death-the utmost of human loss.

Though we forgot You-You did not forget us-We feel so sure that You will not forget But stay with us until this dream is past. And so we ask for courage, strength, and pardon-Especially, I think, we ask for par-And that You'll stand beside us to the last.

The most important step to take in the care of the woodlot is to protect the trees of the future. Unless the young trees, which go to make up the undergrowth of the woodlot are protected there one as they are removed. Without trees there can of course be no woodlot.

Grazing animals are one of the greatest hindrances to the proper development of the small trees. It is almost as impractihindrances to the proper development of the small trees. It is almost as impractical to pasture cattle on the same piece of ground as one is attempting to grow trees as to pasture them on a piece of ground on which one was attempting to grow
