BACHELOR BROWN'S COURTSHIP.

Richard Brown had lived a bachelor for forty years, and declared his intention of continuing in the state of single blessedness the remainder of his life--gratefully to the satisfaction of his relatives the Hinkles, with whom he resided; for he it known, Uncle Richard was worth a cool half million, and unless, as Mr. Hinkle said, some "nasty charity" came in for his property, what should he leave it to but to his two cousins or their children.

Hopeful as poor human nature is of longevity, Mr. and Mrs. Hinkle scarcely expected to survive their cousin, who was their junior by ten years, but Adelaide and Rose, and Charles and William might in all probability be his heirs, and so their parents labored. He had the best room in the house, the best chair, the most particular consideration. His wishes were deferred to and his advice taken on every occasion, and he actually came to be loved; for, with all his quaint old-fashioned ways, and his habit of sitting utterly silent as though he had been dead and dumb, he was a lovable man. Matters progressed smoothly enough till it was habit and not hypocrisy which made Uncle Richard master of the house.

He went to the dentist with the people who wanted their teeth drawn, and always seemed to have sugar plums in his pocket. But one thing Uncle Richard would not do, and that was, to exhibit the least sign of politeness to lady visitors. He never saw one of his kind. He never even spent the evening in their company. He invariably shut himself up in his own room and had his tea there when one of these individuals was reported to be in the house; and when travelling, he never saw one of his kind. He never even spent the evening in their company. He invariably shut himself up in his own room and had his tea there when one of these individuals was reported to be in the house; and when travelling, he never saw one of his kind. He never even spent the evening in their company.

Bachelor Brown started in astonishment. The truth dawned upon him.

"You expected a young couple?" he said.
"Oh, you are quite young enough, sir," said the innocent clergyman. "And I must say the young lady appears a charming person."
Bachelor Brown felt himself puzzled.
"Should you think it would be a good wife for me?" he asked.
"Undoubtedly," said the clergyman, "but I should like to see her first."
"I am thinking of her," said Adelaide, "and cousin Dick shall go. I'll tell a fib."
"For shame!" said Rose.
"One ought to make some sacrifice for a friend," said Adelaide. "I'll tell him she's a child. He's always good to children."
"I will never do," said Mrs. Hinkle; he'll never forgive you."
But Adelaide ran up to her cousin's study and burst in with an exceedingly theatrical laugh.
"What a mistake!" she said, "and so stupid of them all. You think Amanda is a grown lady, don't you?"
"Isn't she?" asked the bachelor.
"As if a little child of nine years could be!" said Adelaide. "Poor little thing!"
"Poor little thing, indeed!" hurrying on his coat and hat. "Bless me! why didn't you mention it? Poor little soul!"
And in a few minutes the light wagon was driven down the road, and the Hinkles stood looking after it.
"I'm half frightened," said Rose.
"So am I," said Adelaide. "But it is done, and can't be helped now. I'll manage to coax him to forgive me, and it would not do to leave a friend in such a position, you know; and I didn't say she was a child."
Meanwhile Bachelor Brown drove to the station. It was a long drive, over a bad road, but he kept on his way very cheerfully. He was extremely fond of children.
When, on reaching the station, he saw no sign of her presence, he grew alarmed. If she had been lost through his neglect he never would forgive himself. He ran his fingers through his long curly hair, and peeped into the ladies' waiting room and only a fine, full-grown young woman sat there, and he retreated. The woman who waited in the apartment came out of her nook with a curtsey as she saw him, and he addressed her:
"Have you seen a little girl waiting for some one?"
"No, sir," said the woman. "There were two come down, but they are gone."
"Oh, dear--oh, dear!" said Bachelor Brown. "I hope there is no mistake." "It's little Miss Dove, and if the dear little soul has gone astray I am entirely to blame. Please make enquiries--there's a good woman."
As he uttered these words, the full-grown young lady in the waiting room was seen to blush violently and to arise.
"I'm Amanda Dove," she said, "and I expected some one from Mr. H's."
Bachelor Brown stood aghast! He had spoken of this lady as a dear little thing. His face, also, turned scarlet.
"I beg your pardon, ma'am," he began; "I expected to find a little girl--I wouldn't have used such expressions for the world--"
"I comprehend," said the young lady; "don't mind it in the least."
"Is this your trunk, miss?" asked Bachelor Brown in a hurry.
"Yes, sir," said the lady, looking down.
In a few minutes the two were driving towards the Hinkle's country seat. Never had Bachelor Brown found himself so close to any young lady, save his cousins before. He was woefully confused, but somehow, he liked it. How pretty she was! How pink and white! How golden her hair was! How the blue ribbons of her bonnet set it off. Wondering thus, he forgot the road, and suddenly found that he had lost himself. To add to the dilemma, the storm, which had been threatening for hours, burst the very moment when Bachelor Brown found it impossible to tell whether the left road or the right road led homeward; and the horse was afraid of lightning and grew restive. Amanda Dove was afraid of lightning also. She gave a little scream, and clung to Bachelor Brown's coat sleeve.
Bachelor Brown looked down at her. It was such a soft, plump hand. Her eyes were so round and so blue in her terror that he forgot she was a young lady.
"I'll take care of you," he said; a flash of lightning, a roar of thunder, and an attempt on the part of the horse to run away, interrupted him. Miss Dove turned pale. Bachelor Brown looked terrified. He cast a glance about him. Near the road was a parsonage, connected with its church by a garden.
"I'll tell you what we will do," said he; "we will ask for shelter until the storm is over. A clergyman ought to be Christian enough to take us in."
And driving to the gate, he assisted Miss Dove to alight. As he did so, two hired men rushed out and began to attend to the horse and vehicle, and an old lady and gentleman appeared upon the steps.
"So glad you're early enough to escape the storm," said the gentleman.
"Do come in," said the old lady. "Were expecting you--for on such occasions people always keep their appointments, rain or shine, I believe."
"What on earth does she mean?" said the bachelor. "But it is very kind of them."
"No, sir, what you mean is, that they have been waiting for you a long time," said the old clergyman in a nervous sort of way.
"Do you feel at all nervous, sir?" said the old gentleman.
"No, sir, thank you," said Bachelor Brown.
"Most men do, sir," said the clergyman.
"Yes, lightning is a nervous sort of thing," said Bachelor Brown.
"I did not allude to the lightning," said the old lady.
"But to the storm," said the old gentleman.
"Oh, no, sir, they never die but once," said the old lady.
A Bridget applied to the family of a citizen up town yesterday, with her clothes dripping like a water-pot. On being interpreted as to her condition, she said she understood the lady of the house wanted a wet nurse, and she had come ready for service.
"We once knew a man who said to his pastor: 'I am going to the other church, after this.' 'Ah, and why so?' asked the minister. 'Well, if you don't get your shoes made at your shop, I won't get my preaching done at yours.' So he went off."
One of the most original juvenile inventions was that of little Fanny, who, in prayer at night, spread out her bed, raising her eyes to heaven and saying: "Lord! here I am!"

THE HERALD, WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1868.

News by Telegraph.

Paris, Sept. 6.—Lord Lyons gave a banquet to the English and French press on Tuesday evening. The banquet was given in the Grand Hotel, and was attended by the English and French press, and the British and French consuls. The banquet was a success, and the press was highly pleased with the arrangements.

London, Sept. 6.—Yesterday Hon. Robert Jenkinson, Secretary of State for the Colonies, gave a banquet to the English and French press on Tuesday evening. The banquet was given in the Grand Hotel, and was attended by the English and French press, and the British and French consuls. The banquet was a success, and the press was highly pleased with the arrangements.

Mr. A. H. St. George, Proprietor of the Canadian Advertising Agency, Toronto, Ont., is our Special Correspondent. He has just returned from a visit to the United States, and has written a long and interesting article on the political situation in that country.

At the request of a prominent gentleman in Charleston, we have the following report of proceedings of the United States Congress in reference to free trade with this Colony. It appears to us that the only object which the gentleman alluded to can have in publishing this Report, is to throw cold water on the negotiations now going on, and as the Report proves nothing beyond the interesting fact that the Congress of the United States, by the handsome majority of 62 to 40, desires free trade with this Colony, and will doubtless give its sanction to the measure, it is not surprising that it should be published.

Our Lieutenant Governor is in future to be styled "His Honor," instead of "His Excellency." Legislative Councils hereafter elected, are not to have the title "Honorable." It is almost a pity that the new regulations could not be applied to some who have been decorated with the title in the past. The Province now has a Lieutenant Governor, a Lieutenant Governor, a Lieutenant Governor, and a Lieutenant Governor.

Discrepancies in the bus as to the mail for London. The passengers to-day, state that when the train started from the station, it was found to be short of mail. The mail was not put on until the train had started, and the passengers were left to wait for the next train.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD. Dear Sir—You, in common with the other journals of the Province, have devoted a considerable space to the discussion of the subject of the proposed free trade with the United States. The Government of the Province is in favor of the measure, and it is our duty to support it.

Mr. Butler, of Massachusetts, has written a long and interesting article on the political situation in that country. He has just returned from a visit to the United States, and has written a long and interesting article on the political situation in that country.

The weather during the past week has been very unfavorable for harvesting. The rain has been so heavy that the crops are much damaged, and the harvest will be a poor one.

The Roman correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette is assured of good authority that the next proposition to the cardinal will include the Archbishop of Westminster and, possibly, the Archbishop of Paris.

The Duke of Abercorn has been presented with the freedom of the city of London. In acknowledging the receipt of this honor, the lord-lieutenant allied himself to the Duke of Abercorn as a thing of the past, and spoke encouragingly of the social and commercial prospects of the country.
