A Great Intrigue,

Mistress of Darracourt.

CHAPTER XI.

"You shall try," he said, handing it back to her. She took it, and shifted the teeth to and fro.

"Oh, I can't make any sense of it!" she said, petulantly, after a moment or two. "I don't believe there is anything in it!"

"My dear Miss Verner, really!" murmured Mrs. Dalton.

"It is very simple," said the marquis, taking the key back into his own hands. "You arrange the wards so that they make the one word—"

"Oh, stay!" said Lucille, with a smile. "Please do not tell us. Remember that you have just told us that you, and you alone, are the only person who knows the open sesame to your treasures, and that it is not wise to intrust so important a secret to three daughters of Eve, who, you know, are by nature incapable of keeping it!"

"They all laughed, as in duty bound; and as Lucille turned away with a smile, the marquis put the key in the lock.

"In deference to Miss Darracourt's injunction, ladies," he said, "I shall not disclose the secret. 'See!' he added, as he turned the key and the panel slid smoothly back into its place and hid the glittering treasures, 'one word does the whole business.'"

"And we don't know what that word is! Isn't it too provoking?" said Marie Verner, as Lucille turned to leave.

"You shall know whenever you please," said the marquis, putting the key in his pocket, and preparing to accompany them.

"Really?" said Marie Verner, looking back at him over her shoulder.

"Really and truly," he replied, as she went out, laughing in her light and careless fashion.

Lucille treated the whole matter as an amusing incident, with no serious meaning; but in the afternoon every word that was spoken came back to her with the vividness of lightning.

CHAPTER XII.

The marquis accompanied, escorted them as far as the entrance to the Court, but would not accept Lucille's invitation to go and get some tea. He was too wise to force his advantage or to make the running too quickly. He had done well that day, had got her forgiveness, and had actually enticed her within his house. He would be satisfied for the present. But before the six months were past he would have her in his grasp! And so he betook himself to the lonely Hall, leaving the ladies to talk over their visit.

Do Your Looks Quite Satisfy You?

If Your Color is Bad, If You Suffer From Pimples, Here is Good Advice.

Fine Results in Two Weeks. Miss Nettie E. Callaghan, a well-known young lady in Middleton, writes as follows: "I was affected for two years with a rash, and ugly looking pimples that spread over my face. My color was poor, and my blood evidently completely out of order. Certainly it was a most despairing sort of a case, because various treatments did but little to help me. A friend of mine in Toronto, Ont., advised me to get Dr. Hamilton's Pills, so I sat at once for five boxes. In two weeks I felt like new—looks improved, spirits rose, and I felt I was getting well. I have used this remedy for a long time, and now wouldn't be without it."

If you are in ailing health, have blood disorders, stomach trouble, or headaches, Dr. Hamilton's Pills will help you quickly. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Man Drake and Butternut. 25c. per box, five for $1.00. Sent postpaid by the Catharhose Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

He almost pulled his horse up, and looked at her, a glance of surprise and sadness in his face.

"Apologized!" he said, in a low voice. "Do you think he meant it? The marquis apologises to me! Beg my pardon!" He laughed a short, bitter laugh of incredulity. "Rather than do that of his own free will, he would have cut off his right hand!"

No! Would to Heaven it were so! I would have taken the peace offering; yes, I would have taken it! But the apology, the gracious words, were not meant for me, but for you! It was to gain your good will that he humbled himself in the dust before me—Harry Herne!"

He stopped abruptly, arrested by the look of anxious interest and curiosity on Lucille's face.

"Why should he feel so bitterly toward you?" she said, gravely, coldly. "The marquis is a gentleman—"

"And I am only a servant! No," he broke off, quickly, with swift intensity, "not that. I do not mean that, for I would rather be your servant than a prince of the blood. Ah, do not let us talk of him, Miss Darracourt! It is too beautiful an evening to talk of men's quarrels and strifes! The world was made for better uses. Are you comfortable?" He bent forward and drew the reins tighter through her fingers. "That's better! See, now; we are at Observation Point," he said, pulling up his horse.

Lucille did the same, and looked around. They had reached a slight elevation above the woods, which commanded a view of the Court Park and the Court House and Hall.

She uttered an exclamation of surprise and delight.

"I call it Observation Point," he said, "because I often come here when the poachers are about. They will smoke, poor fellows, and sometimes, risky as it is, they light fires, and from this point, with a glass, I can trace all their movements. I keep my glass hidden away, so that I may not have the trouble of carrying it."

He laughed and dismounting, went to a stone, and raising it, took a field glass from the hollow.

He stood by her horse, and was adjusting the glass, a powerful one, for her, when he uttered an exclamation, and lowering the glass, turned to her with a strange expression on his face.

Lucille looked down at him in surprise.

"What is the matter?" she asked.

He was silent a moment, a dark shadow of angry thoughtfulness and perplexity crossing his face.

"Do you remember the morning you drove the ponies?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied. "Am I likely to forget it, seeing what happened?"

"I mean, do you remember my saying that a young lady was watching you from behind an urn?" Lucille laughed.

CHAPTER XIII.

Lucille took the field glass in her hand, and, with a smile of amusement and incredulity, was raising it to her eyes, when Harry Herne said, quickly, "Stop!" and led the horses behind a large yew.

"Now you may look, Miss Darracourt!" he said.

"Why did you do that?" asked Lucille.

"Because you can now see without being seen," he said.

"It is too ridiculous!" exclaimed Lucille; but she looked through the glass, and, as is always the way with the charming sex, stared blinkingly at the blue sky.

"I can't see anything with these stupid things!" she complained. "I never could look through telescopes or microscopes, or anything of that kind—Ah!" she broke off, with a little, quick breath, for in the course of the glass wobbling she had accidentally focussed the Court, and there on the terrace, as he had said, stood Marie Verner, with a field glass in her hand.

The lens seemed to bring the spy so close that Lucille, startled, almost let the glass drop, and she sat motionless, her face flushed and pale by turns; then it brightened, and she laughed as she looked down at him as he leaned against his saddle, his handsome face grave and thoughtful.

"That is Miss Verner," she said, "and she is looking this way; but how do you know that she is watching us?"

He said not a word, but sprang on to his horse, and motioned to her to ride on. They passed round a clump of trees, and were out of sight of the terrace for a while; then he turned sharply to the right, and they emerged on a second clearing.

"Now," he said, handing her the glass again.

Lucille's eyes trembled as she raised it, but after a moment she got the focus and looked steadily.

"NEVER AGAIN."
"God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over mine and mine,
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget! Lest we forget!"

Since the beginning of the war I have been proud of my countrymen. And by that, of course, I mean nothing so silly as my Englishmen. I mean every man of British blood, wherever he may be scattered over land and sea, who has learned what the name of England stands for, and who is prepared to fight and die to maintain it.

For, look you, I am no politician, as that word is commonly accepted. England does not mean to me Tory England, nor Radical England.

It means the land which stands for peace, freedom, good government, anti-slavery—but above all for peace, even if that peace has to be purchased at the price of the bloodiest war of all time. And I am one of those who has worked and written for the universal training of our manhood in order that we may be ready for such a crisis as has now arisen.

That we are not ready in the sense of being trained is, alas, too tragically true. We shall pay for it, and pay dearly, before this war is over. But if we learn our lesson, even thus late, if we realize that we are the pivot on which the world's peace revolves, even the awful horrors of the existing war will not have been too great a price.

Even now I doubt if our young men have realized that you cannot train an army in three months; that you cannot learn to march, to endure the hardships of war, that you cannot live and fight on a war commissariat without a long and a stern preparation. But we shall learn that lesson all right in the next six months.

The Spirit of the Race.
Nor have our people learned on how little they can live in health. So long as they know how to cook, and various nutritive values of easily obtainable foods. If they had we should hear nothing of a food scare. That, too, we shall learn speedily and, I hope finally, this side Christmas. What has not failed us, thank God, is the spirit of the race. We are now ready, whatever we have been hitherto, to demonstrate once more what England means, and must mean, if the world is not to be thrown into the melting pot.

This war will solve a great many problems which have been solved about this time, whether Germany was the immediate provocation or not. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa have to make up their minds once for all whether they are really parts of the Empire, or whether they are to go on indefinitely sharing in all the good results of that Empire without shouldering its responsibilities. They have to settle whether the British army is their army, whether the British navy is their navy—or not, and to contribute in men and treasure proportionately.

We have to settle whether it is not about time that our ridiculously small group of islands called to its counsels a statement to represent both the "palm" and the "olive" of Kipling's poem. It is all right, or rather it is not all right, to shout about having the men, and the ships, and the money, but the hour has struck at last when each inhabitant of our Empire has to learn his place as a world's peace-maker. He must understand that between them Britain and her possible allies can dictate a permanent peace, as they could have done to-day if wiser counsels had prevailed.

I am not much of a believer in the god of battles. Wherever else it may be true, it is not true on the battlefield that Right is Right. Such battle gods as there are fight on the side of the big battalions, as we shall see before this war is over.

But anyhow, we are by way of learning in what appears to be the only possible way, that if we are to remain a nation and an Empire at all, we shall, each man of us, have to take ourselves more seriously. For, at the nod of one man, or half a dozen men if you prefer it, we find Europe in flames, men and ships confronting each other in a world's death grip, trade paralyzed, and enough money chucked away to pension off the whole of Europe at the age of 65.

And if I am any judge at all, the one feeling that dominates that part of the world which is ranged against Germany, and Austria is that it shall never occur again. It is not only Mr. Carnegie (who was prepared to give all his wealth in the cause of peace) who says so; it is not only Mr. Arnold White, who wrote an inspired letter to the Press on the subject, but I believe every adult is so impressed with the shame and the horror of this thing that he is prepared to die to prevent its recurrence.

We men of peace, who have pleaded that not only on the kit-bags and knapsacks of our soldiers and sailors, but on the hearts of all thoughtful men should be stamped the words, "Never Again." The menace of the mailed fist must now cease at all costs and for all time.

Freeing a World.
The world must be freed from the terror of a would-be master, from anything and everything which is capable, as now, of breaking up our homes, wrecking our businesses, and plunging us all into a sea of care and pain.

We men of peace, to quote Mr. Carnegie, feel that of all crimes the killing of men by their fellow men is the foulest fiend ever loosed from hell, the deepest disgrace possible to so-called civilization; and we agree with him that "we must not fail to call to account the guilty emperor, king, president, or statesman who has done this thing."

If it were the last word I were ever to write, I would still back up Mr. White's demand that "this war must not end until the German warships are sunk, her fortresses razed to the ground, her army disbanded, and her munitions destroyed." And I am not at all sure that I do not agree with him in his demand that "the military and civil bureaucrats responsible for opening hell's gates" should, on proof, be shot.

Germany has more to fear from the cold anger she has aroused in England and France than many have yet an adequate conception of. For this is not a case of wounded amour propre, it is not a case of "misunderstanding." It is not a case, as in the Japanese War, of a nation being goaded beyond endurance.

No! It is a cold-blooded, premeditated, carefully-planned scheme, to destroy France, and possibly Belgium, to seize the French colonies, to exact a huge war indemnity from an inoffensive people, and then, after a period of "rest" to attack the one Power in the world, our own, which stands as I have said, for a world's peace.

Disregarded Prophecies.
Many people, Lord Roberts and Mr. Robert Blatchford, for instance, have seen it coming. France, certainly, has for years lived the life of a plucky dog chained within fighting distance of a ferocious wolf only too anxious to pick a quarrel. We ourselves, let it be said in all gravity have the sea and nothing but the sea, to thank for our immunity. And even that we have jeopardized by allowing—yes! allowing—the German Navy to attain such unnecessary and such dangerous proportions.

Well, friends, I believe Europe, and especially France and Great Britain, have made up their minds that this thing and this kind of thing has got to stop. We have blazoned on our banners the words, "Never Again." We are only at the beginning of the business.

Thanks to our Navy, which some foolish people would have had much less adequate for the present task, we are in little or no danger of starvation. Nor do I think the risk of serious invasion of these islands is one our military or naval authorities stand in fear of. We may have to live on workhouse diet, but no "patriot" fears that. And an odd ship or so may land if they are so foolish, a few hundred or a thousand men here to give our home defenders something to do.

The dangers do not lie there. You may yet find that Manchester, besides have to be defended on French and Belgian soil by men who have never yet dreamt of being called up. Our ladies may yet be glad to cast

The Boiled Shirts.

Sweet youth, you come and ask for admission, you'd have me preach and counsel you a spell; and so I say, to better your condition, go, learn a trade, and learn it packing well. The world is short on skilled and drilled mechanics, but it is long on trifling human equities; who, facing work, are prone to its and panics, who wear kid gloves and boiled or scalloped shirts. The man who tolls at bench or loom or anvil is worth a grove of those who talk or write; 'twould serve them right to bring some cash from Canville, and put them in, and sell the bunch up right. The man who takes his tools from out their locker, who swings a sledge or piles the shining saw, is more worth while than any tiresome talker, who boasts the flag, or yet expounds the law. The country awakes with men demanding payment for dazy schemes, the thought of which awakes the country awakes, with men in perfectly faint, and what we need's the man in overalls. Go forth, fair youth, and learn to be a tinker, a plumber, bold, a tailor or a cook, and men will say you are a peach and clunker, when on the product of your skill they look.

IN TIMES OF WAR you cannot do without clothes any more than you can in times of peace; but at such a time it is necessary that you economize as much as possible; and in order to keep all our help at work we intend to make up Suits and Overcoats, until further notice, at the smallest possible margin of profit, but must be strictly cash orders. Investigate and get our prices; quality of our work needs no advertising. SPURRELL BROS., 265 Water Street, next door to Parker & Monroe's. aug17,10d.14

Harvest Hands.

The harvest hand is a man whose duty it is to pile up prosperity with a pitchfork.

He can generally be distinguished by his deep scarlet neck. Most of the world's sunshine is concentrated in the harvest field and after a harvest hand has toiled for two weeks with nothing between him and the sun but a half-acre straw hat that he looks like a lobster who has just had a hot bath.

The harvest hand follows the binder and piles the bundles of wheat and oats into neat little piles. Later on the pitches these piles onto a wagon. Almost anybody can stick a fork into a couple of wheat bundles and boast that he's a farmer. But the second pair of bundles weigh more than the first and the 100th pair weigh twice as much. By afternoon the green young harvest hand is pitching haystacks instead of bundles and by night he is pitching pyramids.

About all the work in the wheat field comes at harvest time. This makes the harvest hand a scarce and valuable institution. He gets from $2.50 to $4.00 a day in Kansas with board and a bed in the hay loft thrown in. Thousands of plaid gentlemen who lead lives of leisure far from the reach of a bath tub stroll out into Kansas during the harvest to work a little at these figures. But very few of them get rich at it. After a man has rested doggedly for twenty years he is not of much account in a wheat field where "rest" is the rarest and most unrequited word in the dictionary.

Many a college boy takes off his dinky hat and pretty frat pin in the summer and goes out to Kansas where he tackles a wheat-planting job and sticks to it until he looks like the wreck of a scare-crow. We can forgive a college boy anything he does in winter for the feasts he performs in summer, when the rest of the world is hunting a cool spot near the lemonade bucket.

Fads and Fashions.

The curiously carved wooden beads from the East are among the most artistic.

The neck cord fastening to the simple white blouse is an attractive and new feature.

Snocked dresses are in vogue again for little girls, and nothing could be prettier.

Eggsell crepe nightgowns are being trimmed with flat bands of blue and white stripes.

For most out-of-door sports the simplest white linen or pique costumes are correct.

Small panama hats are trimmed with scarfs of heavy white chiffon or richly colored ribbon.

Crepe de chine blouses have chemisettes, collars and bands of hemstitched Paris muslin.

Gray and white craquelé mesh lace is used with bright-colored taffeta for evening gowns.

White doeskin gloves, hand-stitched with black, are an English fashion just introduced.

Tub skirts now come in striped and plaid colors to harmonize and are combined in the same dress.

An old blue taffeta gown, ruffled almost to the waist and having a ruffled fichu, has much charm.

Girdles have to be knotted fresh at each wearing if they are to produce the effect of carelessness.

Very trim summer coats are made of black and white checks, with raglan sleeves and big pockets.

The long, accordion-pleated tunic promises to be one of fashion's greatest favorites the coming season.

Parasols are bowered and ruffled in a word, one of the most interesting accessories to a woman's costume.

Boys' Jersey Suits.

Flanking Movement Evidently Abandoned.

THE GERMAN MARCH TOWARD PARIS.

Special to Evening Telegram. LONDON, Sept. 1. It is evident that the Germans have now been obliged to abandon their attempt to outflank the left wing of the Allies, owing to large reinforcements of French troops which have reached the flank. They are now making a desperate effort to beat through the centre of the allied line to occupy the line of Noyon, La Fere and Laon. That is to say they are seeking to gain the shortest road to Paris. The reason for this manoeuvre is because it is obvious that at La Fere they strike the main line by Noyon through Compiègne and Senlis to the French capital.

They would also command two main roads of greater importance than the railway which would surely be destroyed. One by Noyon, Compiègne and Senlis, and the other by Laon and Soissons. It seems that they are in fact endeavoring to drive a wedge of troops into the rough circle formed by Noyon, Compiègne, Soissons and Laon. The grand scheme of German strategy therefore becomes apparent.

There are apparently three armies marching on Paris. The most westerly is that which is operating in the region of La Fere. The centre is that which has been in action at Lunney and Signy l'Abbaye which is endeavoring to seize the main road via Reims to march on Reims, and the third is the Crown Prince's, which is also endeavoring to converge on Reims by the route of Montmedy, Steing and Vouziers.

Of the disposition of the allies to resist their three attacks we know but little, but with the immense forces that should be at general Joffre's disposal, there should be no difficulty in holding them all.

A victory has been won at Guise, but nevertheless, the Germans are progressing in the region of La Fere. This would seem to point to an undue weakening in the centre line to protect the extreme left wing, which is no longer menaced.

Apparently the German offensive in Lorraine which assumed threatening proportions last week has been completely checked and the French are once more advancing. They have seized the right bank of the Moselle. Probably the German offensive in this quarter was merely a blind to stop the French troops from being moved north.

FRENCH CENSORSHIP STRICT.

LONDON, Sept. 1. A despatch from Paris says the censorship of news of military operations in Northern France is exceedingly strict. The afternoon papers came out to-day with all reference to progress of military events blocked out. There is much excitement in the French capital, but the people have faith in the ability of the allied armies to see the country safely through their present crisis.

GERMAN LOSSES.

LONDON, Sept. 1. A despatch to the Evening News from Copenhagen says that the German casualty list gives the losses at Konigsberg as about 800 of the 43rd Infantry, and that the other German regiments engaged, notably the 65th Landwehrers from Cologne and 136 Fusiliers from Rostock and Wisman lost several hundred men each.

BRITISH EXPELLED FROM BRUSSELS.

LONDON, Sept. 1. A German aeroplane flew over Oostend to-day, according to a Reuter despatch from that city. The despatch further adds that 80,000 troops are due to arrive there, and that the German Government at Brussels has ordered the expulsion of all British subjects within 24 hours.

GERMAN CONSUL ARRESTED.

LONDON, Sept. 1. According to information reaching here, says a despatch to the Central News from Malta, Herr Von Blizow, German Consul at Tripoli, has been removed under arrest, charged with having carried on an anti-Italian propaganda among the natives. The Italian authorities have lodged a protest with the German Foreign Office.

AUSTRIA WILL FIGHT TO A FINISH.

LONDON, Sept. 1. A despatch from Bucharest, which reached the Central News, by way of Rome, says the Roumanian general staff considers that the battle on the Austrian frontier will be decisive.

They believe that a defeat of the Austrians would be followed by a general insurrection, and that therefore whatever may be the sacrifice the Austrians cannot fall back. They are now making a strong effort and are recalling even their troops engaged against France and Serbia.

FIGHTING RESUMED; GERMANS PRESSING ON.

LONDON, Sept. 1. Fighting has been resumed all along the frontier, according to the French official account, which admits that the German right wing continues to advance. No other details of the fighting have yet come through. It is not known whether the British have again been engaged.

GIVING GROUND BUT NOT BREAKING.

LONDON, Sept. 1. "The Anglo-French Army Corps have had to give ground, but nowhere have they been broken through," is the statement at the French Embassy here to-day.

ANNIVERSARY OF SEDAN.

LONDON, Sept. 1. On this the forty-fourth anniversary of the battle of Sedan, the German armies are combining in one supreme effort to repeat the triumph over their old time foe. The British censorship is absolute on all messages from France and Belgium concerning operations there, but it is known that the German left and the German centre are again attacking the French and British centre at Rocroi, and that along the Meuse from Sedan to Verdun the German army is trying to force a passage. The French army of the Vosges is forcing the combined German armies of Alsace Lorraine steadily back. The Russian army in Poland has hurried the Austrian army back across the River Vistula on its base at Cracow with enormous losses.

FRANCE CALLS ALL HER RESERVES.

PARIS, Sept. 1. An official announcement was made this afternoon to the effect that the Minister of War had decided to call out all reservists who have not yet been previously summoned to the colors.

REPORTED RUSSIAN ARMY CORPS ANNIHILATED.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1. A despatch to the German Embassy from Berlin, says the official report shows that it was greater than ever before. Three Russian army corps were annihilated, twenty thousand prisoners were taken including two commanding officers, and complete annihilation of the Russian army. The above is not confirmed.

AUSTRIA'S TERRIBLE PUNISHMENT.

LONDON, Sept. 1. A despatch to the Daily News from Rome, declared that the Russians have inflicted a crushing defeat on the Austrians in Galicia. The Austrians who sought to cross the Vistula are said to have suffered a loss of 20,000 men.

MOBILIZATION OF TURKISH ARMY.

ROME, Sept. 1. Telegrams from Berlin announce the mobilization of the Turkish army. It is said the Turkish Government will form an army of the first line composed of two hundred thousand men, all Mohammedans.

WASHINGTON Sept. 1.

The Turkish Ambassador here expressed doubt to-day that the Turkish army was mobilizing and about to fight on the side of Germany. He said the Turkish army was mobilized three weeks ago.

CANADA'S IRISH REGIMENT.

MONTREAL, Sept. 1. Recruiting for the new Irish Regiment being formed in Montreal, will be closed on Saturday. The promoters of the movement state that applications are pouring in so fast that they could get a thousand volunteers instead of the four hundred they intended to get.

MARSHALL BROTHERS.

The Foreign Legion.

Men of All Tongues for Britain.
One of the most remarkable gatherings held in London since the outbreak of the war took place at the Scala Theatre recently in connection with Captain Webber's appeal for enrolment in his Foreign Legion for Active Service.
Outside the theatre in the street was a great queue of men of all nationalities, speaking many languages, representing many different and sometimes conflicting characteristics and personalities, and yet at this time all drawn together by one desire—to assist Britain and her allies in checking the march of the common enemy. Flags of all European nations, with one or two exceptions, were sold in the streets and the audience in the theatre wore dyers flags, some wearing three or four.
The curtain rang up and revealed to the large audience Chevalier Ricci, who is to take the honorary command of the Legion.
A slight figure with quivering lip and shining eye, he said: "I had the honour of fighting against the Germans sixty years ago in 1866 in Italy under General Garibaldi. (Loud applause.) I had the honour of commanding a company at the siege of Paris, and as a compliment I received a Prussian bullet. (Applause.)
"Having fought against the Germans twice, it is my luck to be here," continued Signor Ricci, "and to offer my services to fight them for the third time." (Cheers.)
Captain Webber, went on the speaker, had the honour of fighting for England in the Boer War. The Legion had enrolled 800 men already, but they did not want to take Englishmen who ought to take duty in the English Army or Reserves. "There is no rivalry between our corps," concluded the Chevalier, "except that of doing our duty. (Applause.) They have been so kind—and here the speaker's voice faltered for a moment—as to say that I must take the honorary command of the Legion. I hope Lord Kitchener will take us on hand as soon as he can, because we are eager to meet the Germans once more. We want ladies as nurses, and no one is too young or too old to serve."

The Chevalier sat down amid ringing cheers from throats of all nationalities.
Captain Webber, a soldierly figure, said they already had 800 enrolled in the Legion, all with one desire—to serve this country. They wanted no self-advertisement, but only wished to benefit England. (Applause.) They were desirous of raising a fighting corps entirely self-contained, with every unit for being a mobile corps. They had an ambulance corps where training would be given, and physicians were already enrolled.
"Think," said Captain Webber, "of the liberty that the British flag has given you, and show that it has not been given you for nothing. (Cheers.) No country in the world gives foreigners the privileges and rights that England gives you. (Loud cheers.) The time has now come when you can show your practical sympathy with the country which has given you shelter. The enemy's campaign is against humanity, and it is for us to do what we can to wipe that lot clean off the face of the earth. (Cheers.) Italian people will never consent to allow their Government to take up arms against this country. (Loud cheers, during which Chevalier Ricci stood up and shouted, "Never.")
Speeches were given in various languages, Captain Webber remarking that they could do without the German tongue.
At the conclusion of the meeting, flags of various nations were brought on to the stage and loudly cheered. The audience sang "God Save the King" and other National Anthems.
An earnest appeal was made for recruits. It is aimed to raise 2,000 men, which will be placed at the disposal of the War Office.

How Artillery Drove Over Human Bridge.

Wounded French Soldiers Tell of Experiences in Battle.
London, Aug. 25.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail describes a visit among the French, who were wounded in the battle of Vosages, and have been sent to Vichy, whose palatial hotels have been transferred into hospitals.
"I talked with many of these wounded," he said. "Three men who fought side by side said:—It is probably our own fault that we are here. Our major fell at the first volley, and then all the other officers at succeeding volleys. When we found ourselves without officers we, not bothering about what was going on at the front, rear or flank, fixed bayonets at 1,200 yards and went at them, singing all the way. We were just fifty yards from the enemy when we were downed."
"In an adjoining cot was a peasant soldier who told me his story: 'At Cirey a shell fell full on my knapsack, sending me sprawling face downwards. I did not stir, expecting every moment to be blown to atoms. After what seemed a half hour, seeing that the shell had not exploded, I hunched up my shoulders and the shell rolled gently off. It is a pity it was so big, as otherwise I should have brought it back as a trinket for my sweetheart.'
"A wounded artilleryman contributed the following experience: 'I witnessed one horrible scene. The Germans were shooting from the deep trenches among which our artillery was doing terrible work. But as fast as a German dropped a fresh man took his place, until bodies of the Germans were on a level with the surface of the earth works. At this moment a German battery was ordered to advance. The heavy wheels sank in the trench, but the drivers furiously lashed their horses and finally dragged the guns across the human bridge.'
Austrian Troops Burn, Destroy and Hang as They are Retreating.
Paris, Aug. 25.—The Serbian Government has notified the French Government of a protest which it is formulating against the attitude of the Austro-Hungarian troops, and of which the following are the terms:—
"The commander-in-chief of the Austro-Hungarian forces, giving instructions to his troops, enjoined them to burn the ripened crops, destroy the villages, and hang the peaceable population.
"During their retreat towards the river Drina, the Austro-Hungarian troops have practiced unexampled cruelty. Our troops have met a large number of victims of this barbarism, killed and disfigured, especially old men, women and children.
"These horrifying cruelties have revolted our soldiers to such a point that it will be very difficult to hold back violent expression of the sentiments of vengeance which they entertain.
"These facts represent and constitute a violation of the laws of warfare and in consequence the royal Government of Serbia is constrained to take all measures for reprisals compatible with the rights of the people."

Deadly Fire of Artillery Illustrated.

French Gunners Worked Quicker and Better Than Germans.
Paris, Aug. 24.—A striking picture of the devastating effects of French artillery is given by Rene Dalgny, one of the heroic soldiers who took part in the capture of Muehausen. Writing from the front under the date of August 18, he states:
"Our artillerymen employed Melinite shells, the effects of which were terrible. From long distance we could clearly see entire sections of the enemy's ranks mowed down by the fire. The German troops adopted close formations, recognized as of old date, and advanced. Our gunners literally sprinkled the ground with a hail of fire, and one shell exploded near a section of over fifty German soldiers, who were thrown upon their faces. After several instants we saw two or three of them arise and flee. The rest lay prone.
"Our four piece batteries worked against the enemy's six piece batteries, but the French fire was much more rapid than that of our adversaries, and we rained a veritable shower of shells into the German ranks. Our gun carriages were not moved during the fire to any great extent. It was found necessary to change the range but little, and that was all that was necessary. The Germans, not possessing the recoil breaking device with which the French guns were fitted, found their weapons suffering derangement after every discharge, while the French fire was so rapid as to be almost without break.
"An idea of how the Germans regarded our artillery fire was given our gunners by a number of German prisoners, who were submitted to the danger of our shell on August 13, when the 19th Regiment of German infantry, known as the "Baden Guard," marched on the positions occupied by the French. A violent combat followed. The struggle was being waged when suddenly our artillery was brought into play, and the greatest panic raged in the ranks of the Germans, the French being immediately victorious.
"The French artillerymen are demons," said the Germans who were taken in the fray.
"I have seen the battlefield after our gun fire, and the ravages caused are terrific."

The Lion's Whelp.

(From the Chicago Tribune).
Kipling never wrote a truer word than when he made Canada say: "Daughter am I in my mother's house, But mistress in my own."
This expresses Canada, the obedient offspring of the British Empire, but the independent, self-governing Dominion from Vancouver to the Atlantic. Immediately on Great Britain's declaration of war Canada rose to her defence. The lion's growl was echoed by the whelp.
There is no law which compels Canada to do this. Great Britain cannot compel her to contribute to the defence of the Mother Country one man, one gun, one bushel of wheat, one dollar of Canadian money, and yet the Dominion has already sent millions of flour and grain, three regiments of equipped men, batteries of guns, and the offer of an unlimited number of volunteers.
The men who gave a good account of themselves in South Africa will not be wanting in valor on Europe's battle-fields.

"Jack" Meyers.

Red McGhee says:
No real New Yorker ever fires of tellin' folks about Jack Meyers, the redskin Giant star. It ain't no use for you to be a me some other buckstop in the game—Jack's not him faded far. That stuff gets there some after while, but they ain't missed the mark a mile with all their bunk an' guff. O' Jack can make their lies come true by gettin' out an' comin' through with skads o' fancy stuff.
Jack used to have a name so long 'twould make the chorus for a song when he was on the coast. He dropped the Indian trademark, though, before he started in to show the stuff New York fans can boost. He played out west till nineteen-nine, when Muggsy said: "My boy, you're mine," an' brought him from St. Paul. O' Bowerman was backstop then, but by the end of 1910 Jack forced him to the wall.
The Chief's right arm is way past good. He pegs to bags an' spins the wood in western cyclone style. Re poles out long an' timely swats that go to disant lonely spots—makes fielders chase a mite. Some stars keep flashin' in an' out. With Meyers there's never any doubt about his candle power. In world champ bout or practice fray Jack plays the same ol' classy way each week, each day, each hour.

Divorced Life

By Helen Hanson Fuenke

Watching the Divorce Mill Grind

The lean months which had followed on the heels of her divorce seemed like a nightmare as Marian looked back upon them. To-day, with ample ready money still in her purse, in addition to the little nucleus of a bank account she had started in one of the up-town banks, she marveled at the curious prank of good fortune which had enabled her to sell her story to the editor of the Cliff Dweller. Had she suspected that it was through the machinations of Jack Meadows that this story had brought her the glorious sum of $100, she would have hated herself an object of charity. Ignorance of the circumstances constituted her bliss. Thus does a simple thing like point of view make for either happiness or woe.

After Barker's departure for home, Marian returned to her writing with renewed zeal. Her glimpses of new portions of the city spurred her fancy and quickened her pen. A promising plot had been buzzing through her mind like a pin-wheel, and she found good fun in the effort to transmute it into a salable tale. She toiled hard at the task, then started with it for the office of Mr. Ransom, the editor. This time he bade her leave it with him for consideration. Ten days passed before she received a reply. It contained various helpfully critical remarks, and a second check for $100. It was sent exactly a month following Marian's receipt of her first $100 from the magazine. Ransom was living up to the letter of his arrangements with Meadows, the droll philanthropist. Marian overjoyed at her second stroke of good fortune, roamed the city for more material for fiction.

One day, obeying an impulse, she got off the subway at Brooklyn Bridge and crossed to a drab, frowning building, which she found was the court house. Impelled by a flood of curiosity, she entered. It was the first time she had been near a court-house since that dreary, late autumn day when she had obtained her own decree of divorce. She made her way into one of the benches. A

The Unpardonable Meanness.

To remind any one who is under obligation to you of that fact is a serious breach of true courtesy. But to presume upon the fact that some one to whom you are under obligation is restrained by that law of noblesse oblige from reminding you of ten times more shamefully.

And yet there are many people who do just this and who escape scot free because other people have so fine a sense of courtesy that the ethical bonds of noblesse oblige are to them as binding and unbreakable as shackles of iron. For instance, a young girl whose father and mother are dead is living in her married sister's home. The older sister and her husband are not well off and while they accepted the responsibility of the girl's upbringing without a thought that anything else was possible, it means constant self-sacrifice. One would think that the younger sister would feel under great obligation and be ready to do anything in her power to make it up to her benefactors. On the contrary she realizes that her sister and husband have too much delicacy of feeling to ever remind her that she is being supported by them, and she presumes upon this safety to be thoroughly selfish and ungrateful.

She hangs upon the piano in the evening when her sister is tired and wants to sleep; she is consistently late to meals; she is needlessly extravagant about such little things as electric lights, and calls her sister's carefulness "mean." Instead of being eager to wait upon her sister or do any little thing for her that might show her gratitude she resents being asked for services of this nature, and it she does them, manages to make her sister feel that she is demanding her pound of flesh in asking for them.

That last, to me, is the meanest thing this class of people do. If their benefactors, tried beyond endurance, do forget noblesse oblige for a moment and ask for some recognition, or reproach them for their ingratitude, these ingrates, instead of being ashamed into better conduct seize the opportunity to act the part of a martyr. "You aren't willing to do this for me," they say in effect. "You give it grudgingly. Very well then, I shall receive no more. I will go out into the cold, cold world, etc., or 'I will make way with myself since nobody wants me.'" (The latter was the threat of the young girl in question when her sister, tried beyond endurance by some piece of selfishness which particularly affected her husband, did dare to reproach her.)

Of course, the benefactor promptly becomes remorseful, begs the martyred one to keep on receiving and promises never to do it again. And, of course, the beneficiary, having confidently expected this outcome, reluctantly permits himself to be soothed, and finally condescends to let things be as they were, knowing that he has forged new shackles with which to keep his benefactor in subjection.

Yes, I realize that such an extreme type as I have presented is not common. But I think a touch of this tendency to presume on the helpless position of a delicate minded benefactor crops out in many of us. And I think it is one of the meanest, most contemptible things that any human being can be guilty of.

How I Flew to Norway.

Lieut. Gran, the Norwegian explorer-airman, flew from Scotland to Norway recently.

"He left Cruden Bay, Aberdeen-shire, at 11 p.m., and arrived at Klep, near Stavanger, four hours and ten minutes later, covering the distance of 320 miles at an average speed of just over seventy-six miles an hour," says the Daily Mail.

"His own description of his great flight," published in the Mail, "shows that he had only a few moments of anxiety, practically at the end of his voyage, when his petrol was diminishing and he became 'seasick.' His flight was the longest ever accomplished out of sight of land.

"I can hardly believe it that I am in Norway now," he writes. "A few hours ago I was sitting at Cruden Bay Hotel in Scotland having lunch, and now I have tea in a lonely hut on the barren Norwegian coast, some 20 miles south of Stavanger."

"Before I started out on this flight I made up my mind to write a diary under way. Well, the diary is written; but I am afraid in too few words. I did not manage more.

"1.15 p.m.—Under way again. The Bullers of Buchan are under me some 1,500 feet. I am following the coast, steering north by east. Ahead it looks very gloomy. I hope I shall not run into fog again as I did this morning.

"1.30 p.m.—The coast of Scotland is no more. What a strange feeling to be so lonely. I have passed some ships, but now there is nothing but sea beneath me and threatening clouds above me 1,500 feet up. I can judge by the 'white horses' that it is blowing fresh from the northwest. I allow for drift and steer northeast.

"2.15 p.m.—One hour gone. I have made up my mind to carry on. It must be done now. Writing is difficult. The machine is thrown a good deal about. The compass works splendidly, thanks to my friend Pierce. (Mr. S. Pierce, of the Bleriot Flying School, Lieutenant Gran's technical adviser.) Some fog now and then, but I have seen the sun and checked my course.

"4.5 p.m.—I hardly know what to believe. Thick fog, and, as far as I am judge, a strong northwest wind. The motor works to perfection, but somehow my big petrol tank has run empty. No vessels about, but I can not see many hundred yards ahead of me.

"This is the last entry in my diary. From this moment, it cleared a little, and the wind became stronger, and as far as I could judge more westerly. The machine was thrown horribly about, and I had great difficulties in keeping my course.

"At 4.30 p.m. I got into thick fog again. Up till this I had kept quite cheerful, but now I feared that my flight would finish up in the water. I felt sea-sick. My petrol was every moment decreasing, so it was not very pleasant.

"I started climbing. At about 3,000 feet there was still fog. At 6,000 feet

TO THE PEOPLE OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN:

The Mother Country has been compelled to go to war and preserve, among other things, the rights and liberties which we all enjoy as citizens of the Empire.

Newfoundland in common with the other Oversea Dominions, has pledged itself to assist the Mother Country with material help in the present extremity.

This is to take the form of an increase of the Naval Reserve from Six Hundred to One Thousand men and the raising of a Regiment of Five Hundred men for land service abroad, and the Colony has further undertaken to assume the full cost of this contingent of Five Hundred men during the course of the war.

It is our duty and privilege, as loyal and patriotic citizens of the Empire, to voluntarily assist in supporting this movement, and, to raise a fund for that purpose. This Patriotic Fund will be applied primarily in making provision for the depending relatives of those who undertake to fight the battles of the country and the Empire by land and sea and afterwards to such other objects connected therewith as may be deemed desirable.

The need is great and in the confident expectation that this appeal will evoke a prompt and generous response, we respectfully but strongly urge all who can, to give as liberally as possible towards this most deserving object.

The undersigned, on behalf of the Patriotic Committee appointed to undertake the organization and despatch of this regiment, appeal for subscriptions toward this Fund. Contributions may be sent to the nearest magistrate, to the branches of any of the Banks doing business in the Colony, or to the Treasurer, J. S. Munn, Esq., and they will be gratefully acknowledged.

W. E. DAVIDSON, Governor.
E. P. MORRIS, Prime Minister.
