The Braes of Yarrow

An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

Beware how you speak, whispered her brother, as he released her hand. 'Remember the fate of your child and of Gilbert Elliot hangs upon your words.' The instant she was released Lady Spens advanced quickly to the priest and threw herself on her knees before him. She seizthe rosary which hung suspended from his waist, and holding it up raised her eyes appealingly to his isce. 'Good father, I conjure you by this sacred symbol to save me from those men.' She is mad, 'thundered Tushielaw, atarting forward.

Back, sirrab,' cried the priest, raising his Back, sirrah,' eried the priest, raising his hands majestically, 'advance one step upon the sacred ground whereon this poor lady rests and the anathema of the Church shall fall upon you with its blight.'

Tushielaw stood still, abashed somewhat by the threat, but not in the least degree turned from his purpose.

'She is mad, I say; she came here of her own will.

own will.

It was to crave your protection, holy father, it was to cry for mercy at your feet, it was to appeal for help against those who have neither pity, fear, nor mercy.

It is with my authority that this union is to be formed" said Barras harshly.

What is your authority? demanded the friar sternly.

"What is your authority?" demanded the friar sterily.

The seemed priest had advanced behind the other as if to support him.

"My authority is that of her brother, and her only guardian."

"Has she none other?"

"Noue since her husband is dead."

"Are you sure that you are the only one who owns any control over this lady.?"

"I swear it."

"And so, master priest, let your prayers be said, and we will go," added Tushielaw.

"Your prayer would be a curse, holy father," cried Mistress Spens passionately.—"Your prayer would doom me to perdition for ever, for the day that I am made his wife I will kill myself."

"Peace, mistress, you have given me your promise and I will hold you to it. Are you ready, sir priest?"

"Not yet."

It was the second friar who spoke this

"Peace, mistress, you have given me your promise and I will hold you to it. Are you ready, sir priest?"
'Not yet.'
It was the second friar who spoke this time, and at the sound of his voice Tushielaw, Barras, and Lady Spens started. The latter listened with trembling expectancy for the next words, and the eyes of the three were fixed upon the tall hooded form.
'You have seen,' said the second priest quietly, 'how sorely this lady is troubled by the thought of the union you propose.—Why then persist? It is not love that urges you on; and if it be merely the possession of what wealth she owns—whatever your object—I charge you to think well before you push matters to extremity.'
'Our purpose is our own to hide or reveal as we think best.'
'Then out of pity spare the dame, and let your purpose fail.'
It shall not fail while we have life and strength to carry it. Wherefore waste no more words.'

your purpose fail."

It shall not fail while we have life and strength to carry it. Wherefore waste no more words."

'You cannot look upon her misery and say you care not that you are the cause of it.

'By the Rood, my patience has lasted longer than your argument, sip priest, 'cried Tushielaw, fiercely. 'Answer now, will you wed us—yea or may?

'Not until you have satisfied us that its her wish, and that she is free to wed even when it is her will.!

'Enough said; another priest will serve us with fewer words and better grace. Nay, never look dark and frown at me, for dark looks and frowns will never hurt me. Come, mistress, you have played us a trick that you shall not try again. Come.'

He stepped forward as if to drag her from the protecting hand of the first priest, when the second priest stepped before him.

'Hold, if you value life.'

'I have risked that with less cause e'er now.'

'You shall not touch this woman.'

'You shall not touch this woman.'
'And who shall stay me?'
'Or who shall stay me?'
'Or who shall stay me?' said Barras, adwancing with his accomplice.
'An authority stronger than yours, Tushielaw, and of more sacred kinship than yours, Heron Barras.
'Whose authority?' cried the two villains in one breath.
'Minc.'
The priest threw off his hood and revealed

'Mine.'
The priest threw off his hood and revealed a knight in a chain armour.
Lady Spens sprung to her feet and threw herself into his arms.
'Husband!'
Wife !--they shall never harm you now.'
'Wat Spens!' ejaculated Barras, starting back.

A thousand fiends,' growled Tushielaw in back.

'A thousand fiends,' growled Tushielaw in confusion.

'Which of you two villains will dare to lay a finger on this lady now? What, are you such poor knaves that you quail and tremble at the sight of one honest man among you? Out upon you, it is such wolves as you who sack defenceless homes, and frighten helpless women to their destruction, that should be hunted to death rather than the beasts of the forest. It is such knaves as you that should be burnt in the market place, and, with Our Lady's help, I shall do something toward obtaining for you your meed.' See you to your sister,' roared the border chief, 'I will see that fause loon who speaks so big.'

Sir Walter whipped his sword from its scabbard. The lady hid her face upon his scabbard. The lady hid her face upon his scabbard. The lady hid her face upon his breast.

Hamilton Child of Police Dismissed.—
The Recorder of Hamilton has for the past few days been engaged investigating charges against Capt Nichols, Chief of Police, and Deputy Chief Ahrens, and om Monday night presented his report to the Council. The Recorder finds that some of the charges have been proved, and that it has been established as a fact that the Chief in some instances demanded and received money from proscutors which he was not entitled to, and his conduct in this respect is characterized as not being calculated to have a good effect on the general public. A motion recommending the dismissal of both Chief and Deputy was unanimously adopted after a brief discussion. The vote was received with manifestations of applause by the audience in the Council Chamber.

Montreal Dally News.—We

MONTREAL DAILY NEWS.—We are pleased to notice that this ably conducted paper continues to grow in favour with the public both in Montreal, and throughout the country, We have it on good authority that the Daily News has the largest subscription list in that City, and the most solid circulation of any morning journal published in Montreal. It moreover contains, on an average, more reading matter than any Daily journal in the Dominion of Canada—a fact which must be patent to all our contemporaries;—few of whom will be backward in endorsing it. The News does not reprint the same items over and over again, and it does not insert Advertisements beyond the time contracted for in order to deceive the outside public into a false notion of the extent of its advertising patronage and save the cost of giving, to the last item, the news of the day,
