One of the saddest features of the day was when the annexation candidate came to the front to vote for himself. He was informed that he was not on the list. Nervous people who were present put their fingers in their ears in anticipation of an explosion. But this was a case where words were futile. No language could express the sense of wrong which overwhelmed the annexation candidate. He simply grew ghastly pale and ground his teeth, while his hair curled and crackled as if under the influence of a thousand curling tongs. This circumstance will explain why the figures are 172 instead of 173. Many old-timers found themselves disfranchised. Elijah Westman, who has been voting on the same property for 20 years, found he had no vote. Peter Ryan tendered his vote and was refused. William Crocker, a young but experienced voter, found he wasn't in it, and many others could be mentioned. So many complaints of the omission of the names of old residents came in that Clerk Bievins at length conceived a horrible suspicion that

Quite a number did not vote for this reason. They left their residences before the opening of the booths, and as they could not vote at any booth but that assigned for their residences they refused to journey back again to exercise their franchise.

Expensive Voting.

The vote at many of the booths was very light—lighter than ever known before. Indeed it is said that at one booth, No. 4 St. George's, there was but one voter on the list and he voted. It cost about $15 or $17 to register that man's vote—that is $6 for the man who asked him his name, $2 for the one that wrote it down, $1 for the constable who had not a number of the booths. that wrote it down, $1 for the constable who kept him in order and soven or eight dollars for the rent of the booth to shelter him from the sun, and then the misguided man voted for Bigelow. At St. George's No. 1 but two votes were polled, at St. James' No. 4, four votes; at St. Lawrence No. 1, none; at St. Lawrence No. 1, two; at St. Lawrence No. 5, three. The largest vote polled was at No. 27 St. Stephen's, where 115 votes were polled, 96 of them for Bigelow. It must be admitted that the figures on the returns that reached the press committee room were not very plain, the figure that was taken for nine looking as much like two.

The result was not such a surprise as one would expect. It was known that the Conservatives were not keeping in step, and tune dreds of them were met in the street during the day who had not voted and expressed the greatest indifference as to the result.

The following is a synopsis of the result by wards:

DEAR SIR.—In reference to the exhibitions given of your "Patent Portable Fire Escape," which I witnessed at some of the highest buildings in our city, I can only say that the results were the most satisfactory of any tests of the kind I have ever seen.

The Value and Danger of the Industry—

Rev. P. Tocque lately gave the Canadian Institute, Toronto, an interesting account of the Newfoundland seal dishery. In the of the Newfoundland seal sistery. In the course of his paper he said that naturalists describe no less than 15 species of seals. The kind most plentiful and which pass along the coast of Newfoundland with the field ice, are the phoca Greenlandica, which is the technical or scientific name given to the harp or half-moon seal, who frequent the coast of Terre Neuve or Newtoundland. About the last of the month of February the coast of Terre Neuve or Newtoundland. About the last of the month of February these seals whelp, and in the northern seas deposit millions of their young on the glassy surface of the frozen deep. At this period they are covered with a coat of white fur, slightly tinged with yellow. I have seen these "white coats" lying six and eight on a piece of ice, resembling so many lambs enjoying the solar rays. They grow very rapidly, and in about three weeks after their bith begin to cast their white coat. rapidly, and in about three weeks after their bith begin to cast their white coat. They are now captured, being killed by a stroke across the head with a bat, gaff or stroke across the head with a bat, gair or boat-hook. At this time they are in prime condition, the fat being in greater quantity and cont ning purer oil than at a later period of eir growth. It appears to be necessary to their existence that they should pass a considerable time in repose on the ice; and during this state of helplessness we see the goodness of Providence in providing these amphibious creatures with a thick coat of fur, and a superabundant supply of fat as a defence from the intense cold of the ice and the northern blasts. cold of the ice and the northern blasts. Sometimes, however, numbers of them are found frozen in the ice. When one year old these seals are called "bedlamers." The female is without the dark spots on the back, which form the harp or half moon, and the male does not show this mark until two years old. The female is not provided with a hood.
An old dog-hood is a very formidable animal. The male and female are generally found together, and if the female happens to be killed first, the male becomes furious. Somtimes ten or a dozen men have been engaged upwards of an hour in despatching one of them. I have known a al years ago on the shore at Longriddy furspatching one of them. I have known a half a dozen handspikes to be broken in endeavoring to kill one of these dog-heads. They frequently attack their assailants, and snap off the handles of the gaffs as if they were cabbage stalks. When they in-flate their hoods it is very difficult to kill

SHOT DOES NOT PENETRATE THE HOOD, and unless the animal can be hit somewhere hopeless case to attempt to kill him. They are very large, some of their pelts which I have measured being from 14 to 18 feet in length. The young hoods are called "blue backs." Their fat is not so thick nor so pure as that of the harps, but their skins are of greater value. They also breed further to the north than the harps and are generally found in great numbers on the winter in seal nets.

The square fipper, which is perhaps the great seal of Greenland (phoca barbata), is seldom met with. Formerly this species of seal was frequently captured on the ice. This animal resembles the seal in its body and limbs, though different in the form of its head, which is armed with two tūsks, sometimes 24 inches long, consisting of coarse ivory; in this respect much like an elephant. The under jaw is not provided with any cutting or canine teeth, and is compressed to afford room for the tusks, resiecting downwards from the unner jaw.

A contributor to a New York paper says: "I met a hotel chambermaid the other day

The first thing that occurs in Newfoundnd to break the winter's torpor is the land to break the winter's torpor is the bustle and activity attending the outfitting of vessels for the seal fishery. In its prose-cution are combined a spirit of commercial enterprise, a daring hardinood and intre-pidity almost without parallel. The intert of every individual, from the richest to ast of every individual, from the richest to the poorest, is interwoven with it—from the bustling and enterprising merchant that, with spy-glass in hand, paces his wharf, sweeping ever and anon the distant horizon for the first view of his returning ship, to the little broom-girl that creeps slong the street, hawking her humble commodity. The return of the seal hunters reminds one of Southey's poems, "Madoc" and "Roderic the last of the Goths." The seal fishery of Newfoundland has asmed a degree of importance far surpassing | 000 acres. the most sanguine expectations of those who first embarked in the enterprise, and has now become one of the greatest sources of wealth to the country. The sailing vessels have now been mostly superseded by steamers from 300 to 800 tons, carrying from 150 to 280 men each. In 1891, 19 steamers were engaged in the seal fishery. One steamer brought in 8,000 young harps the first trip and 18,000 old seals the second trip. The total value of both trips estimated at $132, and the steamers have broughts.

There you see another lot, while the last spark of life is not yet extinguished, being stripped of their skins and fat, their writhings and heavings making the unpractised hand shrink with horror to touch them. The seal fishery being prosecuted during the vernal equinox is rendered particularly dangerous. It is a voyage of hopes and fears, trials and disappointments, and the prosecution of it causes more anxiety, excitement and solicitude than any other business in the island. Sometimes the seals are sought after at a distance of from two to four two to four miles from the versal, over high right them. Bea wolf, etc. These seals seldom bring forth more than one, and never more than two, at a litter. They are said to live to a great age. Sometimes a stray one is caught in a net, reduced to a mere skeleton, with teeth all gone, which is attributed to old age. Buffon, the great French naturalist says: "The time that intervenes between their birth and their full growth being many years, they, of course, must live very long. I am of opinion that those animals live upwards of a century, for we know that cetaceous animals in general live longer than quadrupeds; and, as the seal fills up the chasm between the one and the former, and consequently live much the live test of the North of the mature of the former, and consequently live much the seal is different from the vessel in search of their prev, a freezing snowdrift or a thick fog comes on, when no object around can be distance from the vessel in search of their prev, a freezing snowdrift or a thick fog comes on, when no object around can be distance from the vessel in search of the sealers gather together. The Newfoundland seals probably visit the Irish coast. A number of seals were killed on the west coast of Ireland in 1856, among them the old harp, and Sir William Logan gives an account of the skeleton of this kind of seal aaving been found embedded in the clay around Montreal 40 feet deep.

The phoca cristata, or hooded seals, are see called from a piece of loose skin on the land. All the Newfoundland seals are whelped on the ice and not on the land as the fur seal.

The Horse Power of a Whale.

The horse power of a whale has been made a subject of study by the eminent anatomist, Sir William Turner, of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, in conjunction with the equally eminent Glasgow shipbuilder, John Henderson. The size and dimensions of a great finner stranded several years ago on the ahore at Longriddy furnished the necessary data for a computation of the power necessary to propel it at a speed of twelve miles an hour. This whale measured eighty feet in length, twenty feet across at the flanges of the tail, and weighed seventy-four tons. To attain a speed of speed of twelve miles an hour. This whate measured eighty feet in length, twenty feet across at the flanges of the tail, and weigh-ed seventy-four tons. To attain a speed of twelve miles per hour it was calculated that 145 horse power was necessary.

According to some writers the whole number of symbols is over 40,000, of which, after deducting the obsolete ones, about 25,000 are said to be in modern use.

This vast number of symbols is expressed by only 400 or 500 syllabic sounds, which, by way of different intonation, are increased to about 1,500, or, according to some authorities, to only about 1,200. This peculiar state of affairs makes the language the richest in the number of written symbols, but the poorest in the number of different sounds by which these symbols are expressed in the living speech; and since the same sound may represent sixty or more different words, the Chinese, to overcome this difficulty, fix the proper meaning by combining the word which it is desirable to make understood with another bearing a similar or supplementary meaning, and by placing, in the case of nouns, classifying words between them and the numerals which precede them.—New York Sun.

The language is monosyllable, each syllable being a root and every root a word; it is without inflection, and the words are employed indifferently as one and another part of speech; that is to say, the same word may form substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb; and the relation of gender, case, number, and person is determined by the position of the word in the sentence and by the use of certain auxiliary words.

As the language possesses no alphabet, the Chinese require a different symbol for each meaning. All Chinese symbols can be divided into two main classes—namely: radicals and combinations, the latter being formed by the addition of strokes to the radical. Native philiologists, however, divide the symbols into six classes, of which the first represents the forms of objects, numbering 600 or more,

A Bird That Can Give the Mule Pointer The third class of symbols, of which there are said to be about 700, represents the combination of ideas, and they are formed by uniting two or more significant characters to give the idea of a third.

The fourth class numbers about 372, and comprises symbols which, being inverted either in form or sound, assume different meanings.

The fifth class consists of about 600 symbols which represent borrowed meanings; that is to say they are applied in a double sense, and hence have been called metaphorical.

The sixth class embraces over 20,000 characters, each being composed of two parts—namely: the primitive or phonetic element, which represents a certain sound and which also gives the sound to the whole character, and one of the 214 radicals from the first class. Sanitary equipment is not all, however. A model home must possess some art. This firm cater to artistic tastes in their exhibition of gasaliers and electroliers. In a large wareroom on the second flat of their building is shown an immense variety of filuminating apparatus. It would require much space to describe the conteats of the wareroom. There are, however, a number of strikingly fine pieces. One of onyx and gold bronze, imitating candles, is very pretty. Numerous combination pieces—that is, combining a capacity for gas and slectricity—are finished in rich materials and highly artistic style. No one can fail to get their wants supplied when there is such an infinite range to choose from. Prices range from $4.50 to $1000 for single pieces.

MORE sales have taken place in Moore Park during the past year than in any similar preceding period. Not for speculation either, but for homes. A number of handsome residences are now in course of construction; and this season will witness marked activity in the same direction.

ALL who visit Moore Park are struck with the advantages it possesses in its immediate surroundings, and are delighted and surprised at the wide and commanding views this plateau affords.

WHILE residents here enjoy all the exclusiveness of an extensive private park every city convenience is practically at their doors. Sidewalks, gas, water, drainage, and in fact all the comforts desired by the cosmopolitan can be found here.

TRANSIT between Moore Park and down town is a strong point in its favor. Only five minutes from Yonge-street, and a picturesque station on the Belt Line Railway is in the centre of the park. This makes it a business man's elysium.

NO boom prices. No boomsters wanted. Only solid, respectable people who desire to make pleasant homes for themselves need apply. These will receive liberal treatment sunday Schools, Churches, etc., and may be sure they are doing a good thing for themselves.

without doubt an active interest is being taken in fine residence situations. A large number of sales have taken place in Moore Park, and homes to the value of $30,000 are being erected therein. Moore Park is particularly attractive to those who wish to have the seclusion of a private park. Homes can be built there on situations apparently quite isolated and yet be quite "in town." There is first-class communication with the centre of the city, so that business men can enjoy sylvan surroundings at their homes and be at no inconvenience in getting to and from them. This is an advantage which convertes the securation of the surrounding state of the city, R. Dewar, curator; Messrs. Merritt, in convenience in getting to and from them. This is an advantage which

The Value and Banger of the Industry-A Picturesque Occupation With Large the Trade-The Various Species.

Rev. P. Tocque lately gave the Canadian Rev. P. Tocque lately gave the Canadian Institute, Toronto, an interesting account of the Newfoundland seal fishery. In the course of his paper he said that naturalists describe no less than 15 species of seals. The kind most plentiful and which pass along the coast of Newfoundland with the fold its are the phose Greenlandica, which along the coast of Newfoundiand which field ice, are the phoca Greenlandica, which is the technical or scientific name given to the harp or half-moon seal, who frequent the coast of Terre Neuve or Newfoundiand. is the technical or scientific name given to the harp or half-moon seal, who frequent the coast of Terre Neuve or Newfoundland. About the last of the month of February these seals whelp, and in the northern seas deposit millions of their young on the glassy surface of the frozen deep. At this period they are covered with a coat of white fur, slightly tinged with yellow. I have seen these "white coats" lying six and eight on a piece of ice, resembling so many lambs enjoying the solar rays. They grow very rapidly, and in about three weeks after their bith begin to cast their white coat. They are now captured, being killed by a stroke across the head with a bat, gaff or boat-hook. At this time they are in prime condition, the fat being in greater quantity and containing purer oil than at a later period of their growth. It appears to be necessary to their existence that they should pass a considerable time in repose on the ice; and during this state of helplessness we see the goodness of Providence in providing these amphibious creatures with a thick coat of fur, and a superabundant supply of fat as a defence from the intense cold of the ice and the northern blasts. Sometimes, however, numbers of them are gound frozen in the ice. When one year gound frozen in the ice.

Somtimes ten or a dozen men have been engaged upwards of an hour in de-spatching one of them. I have known a half a dozen handspikes to be broken in en-deavoring to kill one of these dog-heads. They frequently attack their assailants, and snap off the handles of the gaffs as if they were cabbage stalks. When they inthey were cabbage stalks. The walrus (trichocus rosmarus), sometimes called sea horse or sea-cow, is now seldom met with. Formerly this species of seal was frequently captured on the ice. This animal resembles the seal in its body and limbs, though different in the form of its head, which is armed with two tusks, sometimes 24 inches long, consisting of coarse ivory; in this respect much like an elephant. The under jaw is not provided with any cutting or canine teeth, and is compressed to afford room for the tusks, it is killed.

In its prosecution are combined a spirit of commercial enterprise, a daring hardihood and intrepidity almost without parallel. The interest of every individual, from the richest to the poorest, is interwoven with it—from the poorest, is interwoven with it—from the bustling and enterprising merchant that, with spy-glass in hand, paces his wharf, sweeping ever and anon the distant horizon for the first view of his returning ship, to the little broom-girl that creeps along the street, hawking her humble comalong the street, hawking her humble com modity. In 1845 the number of tailing vessels employed was 350, from 60 to 150 tons, manned by 12,000 men. The time spent on the voyage was from two to six weeks. The sailing vessels have now been mostly superseded by steamers from 300 to 100 tons, earrying from 150 to 280 men nach. In 1891, 19 steamers were engaged in the seal fishery. One steamer brought in 8,000 young harps the first trip and 18,000 old seals the second trip. The total value of both trips estimated at $132,000 old some of the steamer brought.

Sometimes a stray one is caught in a net, reduced to a mere skeleton, with teeth all gone, which is attributed to old age. Buffon, the great French naturalist says: "The time that intervenes between their birth and their full growth being many years, they, of course, must live very long. I am of opinion that these animals live upwards of a century, for we know that cetaceous animals in general live longer than quadrupeds; and, as the seal fills up the chasm between the one and the other, it must participate in the nature of the former, and consequently live much the seal is deferent from the vessel, and during the masses of ice, and during the subribute of the dark place were found in masses, of ice, and during the masses, of ice another, across horrid chasms, where yawns the dark blue water ready to engulf them.
