A'Ghost On A Bicycle. BY JOLN J. O'SHEA.

Author of "We Three: A Camp Fire Story at Ekone." " A Wheelman's Adventures," &c. There was a squad of us, belated wheel-

nen. one evening, sitting round a comfortable fire in a comfortable inn, at an out-of-the way place with an out-of-the-way name, containing all the letters of the alphabet and several more thrown in, in North Wales. The spot in the hills somewhere near Pont-y-Pridd; and though it isn't much near Pont-y-Pridd; and though it is being affected by cyclists, on account of its being she made up her mind.

"One evening I met Dick riding back "One evening I met Dick riding back" for by common consent by three or four of us who were going together in one direction, and three or more whom we met going in another, for a very good and sufficient reason. The clerk of the weather had got into his tantrums. We had had a little thunder storm from him, and a little shower-short. sharp, and decisive. It sent sundry watercourses tumbling down the road in a few ninutes and drenched us thoroughly. We knew this out of the way caravansary was somewhere about and we made for it, for according to all meteorological appearances it was, for some time to come, a case of making the best of it, most decidedly.

All cyclists are philosophers. Our squad kept up the reputation of the order by proceeding forthwith to make themselves as comfortable as the circumstances, and a judicious spirit of economy, permitted. We were all determined to have the feast of reason and the flow of soul for that particular evening, just to show the weather clerk that we were, men not to be put out of sorts by his caprices; but we had one and all registered a vow that we would not pay too much for the aforesaid feast and flow. This, however, by-the-bye. The virtues which the spread of the cycle has been the means of nurturing are fair subjects for a learned treatise in themselves; this writing concerns an abstract matter. Neither is it matter for present concern what our squad did, said, or thought all this particular evening. But it is fitting and proper to relate that when a variety of erudite, scientific and humorous topics had been duly threshed out and settled to our mutual satisfaction, somebody suddenly sprung the proposition that the cycle and the genius of omance had nothing in common—that, in fact, they were at daggers drawn. Whoever, for instance, he queried, had heard of a ghost upon a bicycle? Nearly all the company laughed at the idea. But there was one of them that

He didn't object to our paying addresses to his daughter, but seemed to be trying, like ourselves, to find out which of us she liked best-perhaps with equal unsuccess. At any rate, he always met us civilly, and chatted to us in his own dry Caledonian way, on such interesting topics as the weather and the crops, the stock and share mar-

"Dick and myself were then in the enjoyment of a modest income each-quite enough for him, for he was not of an extravagant turn; but hardly enough for me, for my

"'Tom,' said he, 'I'm in great trouble, old fellow. I have to go away for a fortnight. There's a maiden aunt of mine very ill, over in Homburg, and she wants to see me. I'm to be her heir, you see, and I can't possibly refuse.'
"'I don't see why you should, my boy,'

I replied; 'neither do I perceive why you should be so dreadfully agitated. You're a lucky dog, so you are-coming in for a fortune.'

'I don't see why my arrangements should be affected by your maiden aunt's proceedings. The old lady is not going to make me her heir!" "But don't you see, Tom, that my absence would be giving you an unfair advantage? You're too honourable a fellow, I know, to avail of it.'" "Look here, Dick,' I said at length, after he had gone on in this strain for awhile, 'I'll go this far to oblige you: I'll not come out here again for a fortnight. If your back by that time, well and good. If you're not, the bargain is at an end." "Do you give me your word on that,

Tom?' he asked, brightening up wonderfully. "'I do,' I returned; 'you may haunt me when you die, if I break it. Now be off.' "We shook hands and parted, and when I saw our beloved Sophie, I informed her of the arrangement agreed upon. She said she didn't mind, as she was going on a visit to a friend in Wicklow for a week. But I thought she was secretly vexed all the same. "When we discovered that we were both hopelessly gone over Sophie, we had a long talk over the matter, and the upshot of it was that we shook hands over a fair agreement to go in for her, each of us, fairly and squarely, and let the best man wire, neither taking any mean advantage of the other.

and coming out somewhere near Bedford, in Just what the people of Yarmouth and Shelburne, who are interested in the construction of the narrow-guage railway in these counties, may think of this action of the business men of Halifax, is not difficult to conceive. The same is true of those interested in the Annapolis and Liverpool line. We want to say a word or two about the petscheme of these gentlemen,—the line from Sad Point in Shelburne to Bedford. Such a line, if constructed, would parallel the Windsor and Annapolis through all of western Nova Scotia, and only some twenty or thirty miles from it. What local traffic it could get would hardly pay for the axis grease used, and whatever other patronage it received would be wholly at the expense of the Windsor and Annapolis line. It would not open up or develop any country as the line from New Germany to Bedford would pass through a country, a large part of which resembles that at Windsor Junction. Such a line would afford railway facilities to but a handful of people, and is wanted by no one, except, it may be, a few merchants of Halifax, who think, forsooth, that it would bring them a little business. For this small increase in business they would have the covernment sended free profession and confidence of the gender of the people.

The spleudid sermons of the vis Shelburne, who are interested in the consmall increase in business they would have the government spend five or six hundred thousand dollars in railway subsidies, at a time when every dollar would have to be borrowed and added to the debt of the province. In short, this is about the wildest of all the wild-cat schemes of which we ever heard, and in our humble opinion the government which would propose to subsidize such a line, in the present financial condition of the province would be assistant or the province as the total province as the to —Boston Post: "For the past few years the business of the Yarmouth Steamship Company has steadily increased, and has now reached a point which absolutely necessitates important improgrements and changes at the Poston terminus. The work of erecting a new building there will be commended to the great preparations have the waste over such visionary subjects.

If these gentlemen want business why don't they get up and hustle for it as others do? If they cannot hold the trade of the western counties with present facilities what reason have they to expect they will be able to do so with another line of railway?

A line of railway from some point in Shelburne connecting with the Annapolis and Liverpool at Caledonia, or with the Nova Scotia Central at New Germany may be all right. But it is hardly worth while building a line from the latter placeall the way to Halifax merely to save the short journey from New Germany to Middleton. And we fancy our friends in the latter enterprising from New Germany to Middleton. And we fancy our friends in the latter enterprising town would not take very kindly to any new railway scheme which proposed to take from them the patronage they now receive from them the patronage they now receive from the Nova Scotia Central line. For this is just what a railway from New Germany to Halifax would mean. Premier Fielding did well to lecture this self appointed delegation on the great virtue and wisdom of people minding their own business. His remarks were couched in polite and diplomatic language, to be sure, but that is just about what he told them.

There is to be a Thanksgiving service in the church on Thursday morning.
Grim winter is beginning to shake out his snowy tresses, but when the sun is shining through them, as on last Thursday, it does not seem so dreary. The brook is skimmed with ice and the window panes show ridges of frost.

We miss the team loads of apples from the street, so it is presumed that those not shipped have been stored away in the cellars to be called for later.

The cold weather makes us think of Christmas.

Mr. I. M. Longley, Principal of Digby Academy, is expected to spend the Thanksgiving season with his family.

The Sabbath-school apassed a vote to have a concert Christmas week, and appointed a committee to arrange for the same.

Messrs. Troop & Son, the ship-owning firm of St. John, are in financial difficulties. It is understood that their present troubles have been induced by circumstances over which the firm had little or no control, principally by heavy losses from disasters to vessels.

The Montreal Witness is now offering the remainder of the present year free to new subscribers for next year as an encouragement to give that valuable paper a trial. The Witness, both Weekly and Daily, has, during the year, adopted what it declares to be the model form, with neat, small, converted to the present years are being enabled by the posses. venient pages, being enabled, by the possession of one of the most complete printing presses ever built by the Hoes, of New York, to vary the number of pages at will. The presses et a transfer of pages at will. The paper enters the press at two places, on rolls broad or narrow as required, and the newspapers come out at lightning speed, folded pasted and cut. Besides the improvement in form, there is a remarkable improvement in typography, the type being set by the Linotype machine, which attains the speed of five men, and casts a new type face every time. The proprietors invite visitors to Montreal to see these machines. The picture element has so greatly developed in the Witness, that it may now be fairly called an illustrated paper. The Witness has moved to the busiest corner in Montreal, the junction of Bleury and St. Peter streets with the firm will be able to continue to carry on the business.

The firm of Troop & Son own and manage more vessels than any firm in Canada. The Troop fleet consists of ships John McLeod, 1,595 tons; J. V. Troop, 1295 tons, and Troop, 1,526 tons; barques Cedar Croft, 1,099 tons; Cyprus., 1,091; Douglas, 509; Lera Lynch, 402; Hector, 498; Highlands, 1,234; Hornet, 407; Howard D. Troop, 2,080; Kate F. How Condensed Milk is Made In 1888 Switzerland exported 11,770 tons f condensed milk-a quantity equal to 250, 000 boxes, or just about twenty-five million These figures represent practically the whole of the output, for the quantity umed in the country is insignificant ompared with what is exported. Fifteen housand cows are required to produce this quantity of condensed milk. During recent years says the Chemist and Druggist, the ondensed milk industry has caught on the other countries besides Switzerland; but, even collectively, the new competitors do not approach the output of the pioneer

There are a great many condensed milk factories in Switzerland, most of which have sprung into life during the last four or five years, until Swiss milk brands in a shop window now present almost as bewildering a variety as the Swedish matches. The industry mainly depends, however, upon three large factories-the Henri Nestle Company, with its three works at Vivey, Bercher and Payerene; the Anglo Swiss Company, with factories at Cham and Guin, and the works of Lapp at Epagny. Henri Nestle, who liked so many modern captains of industry, started life as a phatricasm was, the pioneer of the condensed milk business. His invention proved a gold mine, and at his death, a year or two ago, he was reckoned one of the wealthiest citizens of the public.

The process of condensed milk manufac ture is exceedingly simple. Almost every village in the district tapped by one of the factories possesses a milk-collecting office, to which the peasants bring the milk fresh from the cow. These milk offices are owned by separate companies, with whom the factories contract for their supplies. At the collecting office the milk undergoes a refrigerating process. Upon its arrival at the fac tory it is first warmed gently over a vapor bath, and then exposed to a greater heat (not, however, exceeding 80 degrees C.) in copper vessels. The next manipulation consists in the addition to the milk of 13 per cent., by weight. of the best refined sugar. The mixture is then pumped into a vacuum pan for condensation. These are of the kind used at almost every manufacturing chem ist's in sugar factories, and in many other works. The pans have a false bottom, and are fitted with spiral hot-water tubes. Four thousand pounds of horse manure, about one-seventh in weight being can wheatstraw bedding was piled up in the peculiar situation."

Mrs. Stone was in herself the best reply that could be made to the argument that participation in political and public affairs must inevitably unsex woman and make them mannish. For fifty years this woman had stood in the front of a political movement. Her voice was familiar on the public platforms of every state and territory in the Union. She had lobbied for suffrage in the halls of Congress and to forty-four Legislatures. She had made set speeches in legislative committee rooms and answered interruptions to her remarks that were not always considerate or even courteous. She had stood at the polls on city election days distributing ballots and urging women to use the suffrage which Massachusetts had given them. If any woman had seen American politics all through, sounded its depths and made herself fully familiar with its seamy side, that woman was Lucy Stone. And yet, after fifty years of constant contact with notified and provided the suffrage which Massachusetts had given them. Her latest portraits show her honest and handsome face framed in a lace cap that recalls the dignified days of our grandmothers. Those who knew her personally, as I did, knew that, while her literary abilities were remarkable and her talents for agitation and organization extraordinary, she was at the america ametine a most domestic woman, possessed of the strongest home sympathies and an ideal wife and mother. Her presence was benediction in itself. She was the "grand old woman" of Massachusetts, and none knew her who did not respect, admire and love her.

A CUTE CHILD.

A well-known captain, who sails out of St. John, returned home one day last week, after a year's absence. Picking up his favorite child, a bright little tot of five summers, he was surprised to find that her weight and stature had not increased as it should. Looking into her eyes, the father weight and stature had not indreased as it is believed the conductor's lead as usual. He should. Looking into her eyes, the father said, "Polly, what a little craft you are! Why don't you grow, dear, like your mother?" "Why, papa," said the tot, "I haven't to send their sons and daughters to college, dyspepsia. Mamma uses Groder for dystone dear them liberally, to place them well to think about. The Self-Denial of Parents. That parents should deny themselves superfluities for the sake of their children is not in the least to their credit; it is meet, right, and their bounden duty: That they should ting by. Far from entertaining a feeling of pride or of complacency, they will his good sense. repay the beautiful self-denial of their par ents by a devotion which never knows a shade of diminution. It is an ignoble nature alone which is capable of feeling ashamed of those who belong to one's kith and kin, on account of any simplicity of manner or plainness of speech. Self-denial must not become self-effacement.

A few years ago it was not uncommon find the parents of young people rather crowded out of the way, the drawing-room riends, while the mother and father sat by hemselves in a basement dining room, or neir own chamber. A better state of things tains now, and young people have learned that society is crude and unsatisfactory in which parents have not their fitting place.

Perfect Cream Biscuit.

There have been several calls for recipes or food for invalids. For a long time a memper of our family could not eat yeast raised ead, and this biscuit, invented then from ecessity, has proved so palatable and wholesome and so useful for the children, Johnny began: that it has come to be a standby. Four uarts of flour, a cup of white sugar, a tearoke out in 1812?" The old man slowly raised his eyes and poonful of salt, a tablespoonful of soda, 2 ablespoonfuls of cream of tarter. Mix well and wet with pure cream, making only moist enough to roll. If too wet they will not be crisp. Roll rather thin and cut in squares the size of soda crackers and bake.

We often use white flour and sifted graham, equal parts, and they closely resemble the graham wafers we buy. -A proper sitting position requires that the spine shall be kept strait, and that the
