The World's Noblest River.

From my earliest childhood the St. Lawrence River has held a peculiar fascination for me—a fascination that has strengthened and developed with the passing years. I still have a confused remembrance of having taken a trip with my father and mother through the Thousand Islands and on to Montreal when but seven years old, the momentous voyage having been accomplished in the old side-wheeler "Osprey," owned and commanded by the late Captain McKay, father of Messrs. Robert and Aneas McKay, who are still in the shipping business in Hamilton. The boat had been chartered by five families, my father's among the number, and a jolly party they made to be sure.

My memories of that trip are rather hazy, but there are vivid spots which stand out clear and distinct. I remember the excitement on board when the ship plunged madly through a fearful churning, foaming, maelstrom of foam-crested waves, whilst the jagged and forbidding rocks protruded their fearsome heads so close to our seemingly helpless craft as to threaten instant annihilation, and to cause myself, and many rough older than I, to blanch with terror. I remember old Indian Joseph, the pilot, whose flashing eye up aloft seemed to dance with suppressed joy as he revelled in the power and knowledge that enabled him to carry the boat safely through the troubled waters to the peaceful calmness below. I remember feeling thankful that I was not aboard that other boat, whose black smoke-stack and tapering mast we could plainly see sticking up out of the water on our left. (This was the steamer Grecian, which struck a rock and went down in the Cedar Rapids).

I remember being in a big city and going to the top of a high mountain, where I could see a beautiful river far below in which were two lovely green islands (Nuns' and St. Helen's), and also a great long structure crossing the river on stone piers, which my father told me was the famous Victoria Tubular Bridge. I think that is all I can recall, save perhaps the strange-robed priests, and the childish awe with which I gazed upon the garish magnificence of the old French church of Notre Dame, and—oh, yes, there were the canals and locks, and the dark-skinned, barefooted boys and girls, who spoke a strange language, and sold us toffy and raspberries in quaint little birch bark receptacles.

And there my memory fails to go further.

That was thirty years ago, and, in the time that has intervened since then, the fascination of my childhood has strengthened and developed until I have come to love the dear old St. Lawrence and everything pertaining to it, with a love that is born of close and familiar association and companionship, as between old and tried friends.

Since that first trip on the Osprey, I have sailed on the bosom of the old river at different times of the year, and under many and varied conditions. I have seen the sun rise like a ball of liquid fire from the bosom of the calm and peaceful stream as we entered it at five in the morning, and I have seen it so wild, so tempestuous, and foggy below Quebec that the big steamer was obliged to anchor for seven hours in the middle of the river (nearly opposite Kamouraska) there to wait for daylight. It is his many and varied moods that enhance the beauties of the great father of the waters, and endear him still more to those who know him well.

On my many trips on the steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, which, by the way, is the only means of reaching and running the Rapids (from Toronto), and absolutely the only means of visiting the far-famed—the mysterious—the awe-inspiring, and ever-beautiful Saguenay. For years I have travelled on both rivers, and always on these comfortable and commodious boats.

The Corsican, the Algerian (the old Kingston, which carried the Prince of Wales safely down the Rapids), the Passport (Caspian), Magnet (Hamilton), Corinthian (burned in the Coteau Rapids), Abyssinian, Grecian, Spartan. These are names to conjure with, and dearly beloved by the old tourist of the St. Lawrence, who feels a jealous pang shoot through him when he reads of the splendid new boats Toronto, and her twin sister, who are soon to join the fleet. All of the old popular boats must have been splendidly constructed originally, their hulls, I believe, being of steel, and practically indestructible, while their interior arrangements are exceedingly comfortable and commodious.

Of the service in regard to meals, staterooms and attendance, naught but the highest praise can be given, and I speak from long experience. On the trip this summer we had fruits, new potatoes and other early vegetables, when they had not yet made their appearance in Toronto, and our whole party were intensely enthusiastic over the beef-steak, as genuine Britishers will at times. As to the Saguenay trout, one of our party described it as "a delightful dream of unscaled finny perfection."

The trip from Toronto to the old city of Kingston is full of interest, and the city itself has many noteworthy points, among which are the penitentiary, which a former inmate once grimly described to me as the "Lake Ontario Hotel"; Rockwood Asylum, the Church of the Good Thief, Royal Military College, and ancient Martello towers.

On a Sunday, Kingston is the quietest, sleepest, dead-alive place in the whole of Canada. A witty Irishman, who keeps a little restaurant on King street, and who, in defiance of the powers that be, ministered to our wants, informed us that "we are not allowed to even give food to the people who come off the boats," and they, the said people, "must go to grass." "I am the only one who keeps open now. They have hauled me up once or twice, but could never make a case, and now they leave me alone,—why, man alive, a boat that is in danger of sinking could not be caulked in Kingston on Sunday!"

Now comes the magnificent sunrise on the St. Lawrence (if you are lucky or fortunate), and the entrancing fairyland of the Thousand Islands, especially down the American Channel, where the art of man has tried to enhance Nature's own handiwork, and, to a certain extent, succeeded, although for natural scenery give me the Canadian islands in all their pristine loveliness. However, the rustic magnificence of Hopewell Hall, Castle Rest, and the other charming spots, which wealthy American owners have transformed into little individual Gardens of Eden, are well worth seeing, and never fail to attract on deck tourists, armed with camera and field glass.

Clayton, Round Island, Thousand Island Park, Alexandria Bay, Brookville and Prescott are all points of interest. Then comes the smaller rapids—the Galops and Du Plat, after which we enter the Long Sault (9 miles in length), and, in my humble estimation, the most beautiful of all the Rapids. Next comes Cornwall and Coteau Landing, and then, in rapid succession, the Coteau, Cedar and Split Rock Rapids, and lastly, when the striking form of Mount Royal can at length be seen in the distance, comes the exciting and dangerous Lachine Rapids.

I met a little party of American globe-trotters on the boat, and they assured me that, although they had sailed up the Rhine, on the Nile, the Amazon, and, of course, the Mississippi, for scenery that is nobly grand and inspiring, the St. Lawrence surpasses them all.

It is out of the province of a short sketch of this nature to say much about the city of Montreal. Suffice it to say that the old place is full of rare interest, historical and otherwise. What interested our party most was the Mountain and the trolley trips around the same, the old French church of Notre Dame, St. James Cathedral (which is modelled after St. Peter's at Rome), the Church of the Gesu, the ancient Chateau de Ramcay with its curios and relics, the magnificent Maisonneuve monument, which is a triumph of the sculptor's art, and was the work of that clever French Canadian, Philippe Hebert.

Last, but not least, we strongly advise everyone who stops over in Montreal to visit Sohmer Park, a pleasure resort which has become famous all over the continent. In the large pavilion at this restful spot the tourist may mingle with as large a cosmopolitan crowd as may be found anywhere in the whole world. And there he may listen to Levigne's splendid band, hear comic opera and portions of grand opera given capitally, witness a good vaudeville show, leave the pavilion during the intermission and sit out in the grounds around little tables, under spreading trees, where he can partake of liquid refreshment furnished by nimble-footed waiters, and thereafter go and waltz, or even take a hand at the roulette tables, of which there are many, and which we were told are ren in the interests of the Society for the Promotion of Art. Oh, Sohmer Park is a great place, and it is greatest, and busiest, and has sometimes 15,000 people there on a Sunday.

At Montreal we changed steamers for Quebec. (There are two of them—the "Montreal" and "Quebec"—fine large vessels, with double tiers of staterooms, and each boat having a splendid orchestra on board.)

The restful, pastoral scenery of Longueuil, Boucherville, Varennes, Vercheres, and Contrecoeur, are passed ere night sets in, and then we stop at Sorol, situated at the mouth of the Richelieu River, the northern outlet from Lake Champlain.

Before reaching the ancient city of Quebec, we stop at Thras Rivers and Batisseau. From here on the scene is changed—the pastoral, English-like scenery is gone. The river becomes deeper, and the coast bold and rocky, a soupeon of the awe-inspiring grandeur lower down.

Dear, quaint, old Quebec with its battlemented walls; funny narrow streets, and crumbling relics of a bygone age, which, in the Upper Town, give place to magnificent residences of stone, fine Provincial Buildings, the Basilica, the old Citadel, where a private in the British regiment now stationed there, acted as our guide, and incidentally informed us that he didn't know how the war was going, as he never saw the newspapers, and also that his regiment was soon to be ordered to South Africa. From here you get a splendid view of Levis, the river, the Island of Orleans, and the beautiful country around. I must not forget the Wolfe and Montcalm monument, the Chateau Frontenac (the C. P. R.'s splendid hotel on the Dufferin Terrace), the Maison au Chien d'or (the interesting story of which has been so ably told by Mr Kirby), Montgomery House, where the American General was laid out after being slain in his unsuccessful assault on the city in December, 1775. On Dufferin Terrace we saw, in course of erection, what promises to be a magnificent monument to Champlain, soldier, sailor, statesman, who was the first to plant the white flag of France on the battlements of Quebec, and was the real founder of New France.

I must also not forget the delightful little French hostelry (the Hotel Blanchard) facing the quaint old church of Notre Dame des Victoires, where Monsieur Cloutier holds sway, and where I never fail to stop when I am in Quebec.

Again we step aboard—this time the Canada or Carolina—I know them well, both fine specimens of palatial river steamers, the Carolina being particularly fast.

On the way down the river we stop at Baie St. Paul, Les Eboulements, Murray Bay, Cap a L'Aigle, Riviere du Loup, and Tadoussac, all of which are full of interest, but of which I have not the space to write at present.

It is at Tadoussac where we enter the far-famed and mysterious Saguenay, which is the outcome of some huge convulsion of Nature, when the mountains were rent in twain and the river thus formed. Minor convulsions of a similar volcanic nature are within the memory of man, when a boat's crew are said to have witnessed a mountain fall into the unfathomable depths of the river, which in places is over 2,000 feet deep, while some have claimed that it reaches a depth of a mile-and-a-half.

Near the entrance to the river porpoises abound, their white bellies shining in the sun as they roll over and over each other in sportive mood. A gentleman on board amused himself with popping at them with a rifle with but indifferent results. Here at Tadoussac we visited the Government Salmon Hatchery, and also a quaint little old church (the first ever built in Canada).

It was night, on the up trip, when we passed the famous capes Trinity and Eternity; but on the way down we had a splendid view. These capes are upwards of 2,000 feet high and are so stupendous as to utterly annihilate all power of calculation. Trinity has three elevations, on the second of which is a colossal statue of the Virgin, 36 feet high. Although this statue was erected in three pieces, goodness knows how it was ever got up to such an elevation. A little further up beyond the statue is a huge wooden cross. The devout navigators of the river never fail to cast reverent glances aloft at these symbols of their simple faith.

Chicoutimi, the terminus of the steamers, is an exceedingly interesting place, and possesses beauties which I have never seen chronicled.

At the back of the town, among the hills, is the most beautiful series of falls I have ever seen anywhere. These falls, the waters of which are a bright golden color, are situate in the Chicoutimi River, which has its origin in Lake Kenogami, and flows into the Saguenay. One of the most picturesque of the series is the L'Aubigniere Chute, so called from a French artist who was the first to depict its beauties on canvas. On one of these falls a company has built a fine pulp mill, the raw material abounding in the district.

Opposite Chicoutimi is the village of St. Anne, near which, on a high bluff and visible for miles, is an immense wooden cross, which was erected in commemoration of a terrible conflagration some thirty or forty years ago which swept the country for over one hundred square miles. At St. Anne I took special interest in that picturesque race, the gentle Montagnais Indians, many of whom we watched while engaged in the peaceful occupation of making or mending their canoes in anticipation of the hunting season, their operations often extending to Labrador and Hudson Bay. The squaws are particularly picturesque, their beautiful hair being arranged with an odd little curl hanging in front of each ear, the head being covered with a pretty toque made of triangular pieces of red and black cloth, the shape of the cap somewhat resembling a tam o'shanter.

Lack of space forbids me writing more. I shall only add that, for a delightful summer trip abounding in novelty and constant interest, that down the St. Lawrence and up the Saguenay can scarcely be surpassed.
