House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Wednesday, May 23, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

LAKE FREIGHT RATES

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I move, seconded by Mr. Lapointe:

That eight hundred copies in the English language and two hundred and fifty copies in the French language of the report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into Great Lakes freight rates, laid on the Table of the House on the 18th May, 1923, be printed forthwith, and that rule 74 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RADIOTELEGRAPH REGULATIONS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I beg to lay on the Table of the House certain amendments which have been made to the Radiotelegraph Regulations and to the form of licenses of private commercial broadcasting.

INSURANCE ACT, 1917, AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 184, to amend the Insurance Act, 1917.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Explain.

Mr. FIELDING: The first part of the bill is designed to avoid the duplication of returns in certain insurance matters. The larger part of the bill provides certain conditions of insurance policies with respect to automobile insurance. There is a correction of the French version of the previous act. These are the chief purposes of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 181 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Dunnett.—Mr. Sheard.

Bill No. 182 (from the Senate), for the relief of Laura MacBrien.—Mr. Sheard.

Bill No. 183 (from the Senate), for the relief of Chester Abbott Redmond.—Mr. Church.

WHEAT BOARD LEGISLATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): At a previous sitting the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) inquired:

Has the government had a request from either the government of Alberta or the government of Saskatchewan, or a joint request from both, to extend the wheat board legislation by order in council, as provided by the act of last year?

Further have any names been suggested to this government to handle the proposal for the present year?

It will be recalled that by the legislation of 1922 providing for a wheat board covering one year, the government was authorized if requested, to extend by order in council, for a further period of one year. Under date of February 27 last the Premier of Saskatchewan forwarded to the government a copy of a resolution passed by the legislature, and requested the government of Canada to immediately pass an order in council extending the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1922, for one year from the 15th day of August, 1923. The resolution referred to expressed the opinion of the Saskatchewan government as follows:

The government of this province should request the government of Canada to immediately pass an order in council extending the operation of the Wheat Board Act of 1922 for one year from the 15th day of August, 1923.

The government of this province should indicate to the government of Manitoba its intention to extend the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board (additional powers, Saskatchewan) Act, 1922, for one year from the 15th day of August, 1923, provided the necessary federal order in council be passed.

The government of this province should communicate to the government of Manitoba the willingness of the government of Saskatchewan to immediately co-operate with the other prairie governments and farmers' organizations for the purpose of evolving a co-operative method of marketing for subsequent years, but without in any way restricting discussion and co-operation to the precise type of organization outlined by the Premier of Manitoba.

Under date of March 10, the Premier of Alberta forwarded a copy of a resolution passed by the legislature of that province on February 13, and stated it was the intention of his government to pass the necessary order in council extending the provincial legislation for one year. Mr. Greenfield further stated:

I am writing to urge upon you the desirability of the federal government passing the necessary order in council extending the federal legislation for a like period.

The resolution referred to was an expression of opinion of the legislature that:

The government should continue the negotiations carried on last year with the governments of the Dominion of Canada and the province of Saskatchewan, for the establishment of a wheat board, and that every effort should be made this year by the said governments, together with the government of the province of Manitoba, if that government passed the necessary legislation, to establish such a board in time to handle the crop of 1923.

In accordance with the above notification, the Canadian government passed two orders in council on the 7th April, 1923, that is to say, P.C. 610 and P.C. 611. The first order in council referred to ordered that the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1922, be brought into operation as provided by section 19 thereof; the second order in council referred to ordered that the operation of the said act for all purposes be extended for one year from the 15th of August, 1923.

BUDGET CHANGES

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I purpose laying on the table of the House notice of several changes in the budget resolutions. They will reach the members in the Votes and Proceedings in the morning; but perhaps the House will be pleased if I state at once, without comment, the nature of the principal changes. If there be no objection, I will do so.

In the resolutions as they stand the change in connection with the sales tax is to take effect on the first of August. We have decided to make the date January 1, 1924, inasmuch as it will cover existing contracts and avoid embarrassment which might otherwise arise.

According to the resolutions before the House, the tax on beverages and also the tax on confectionery would be abolished on the first of August. We propose that the abolition shall take effect practically at once, on the first day of June.

There is a readjustment of the silk duties, the details of which I need not mention.

The item of newsprint is omitted from the exemptions to the sales tax. There was a misunderstanding; this was not asked for by anybody, and it was inserted for customs purposes. But at all events we are not pressing it.

Another item I might mention is with regard to what is called the dumping duty on sugar. The resolutions as they stand provide that the dumping duty shall not apply when sugar reaches a certain price, eight cents per pound. We are proposing to make a limitation; we propose that the dumping duty shall continue, but that it shall be limited; that at no time shall it exceed three-quarters of a cent per pound.

I think those are all the matters of sufficient importance to speak of now. The details will appear in the Votes and Proceedings in the morning. In the meantime, I will give copies to my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. STANSELL: Does the tax exemption as applied to drain tiles apply at once?

Mr. FIELDING: I would prefer that the hon. member should read the resolution in the morning. The idea is that it is to come into effect at an early date, I forget the date.

OLD AGE PENSIONS AND MOTHERS' ALLOWANCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): Have any negotiations been carried on by this government with the governments of the various provinces for the purpose of arranging for conferences between the provincial and the federal authorities in the matter of old age pensions and mothers' allowances?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My impression is that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) had a conference last fall with representatives of the Labour departments of the provincial governments, in the course of which conference a number of matters relating to the question to which my hon. friend refers, were discussed. I cannot say at the moment what further conference there has been, but I know that the matter has been the subject of conference between the provincial governments and our own.

THE BUDGET

CONCLUSION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 22, the debate on the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance), that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Robert Forke.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), to whose wide experience and sound judgment in financial and tariff matters the country is mainly indebted for the essential features of the budget which has been presented to the House, will speak again in the course of the debate with reference to some of the criticisms that have been directed against it by hon. gentleman opposite. In the circumstances, I should much have preferred to leave to my hon. friend such further reply as may be necessary. Inasmuch, however, as my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has seen well to go beyond the subject matter of the budget to direct his attack against the Liberal party as a whole in what, with characteristic use of opprobrious epithets, he declares to be a lack of honour and fidelity to pledges and a repudiation of principles, and as certain other hon. members in the course of this debate have sought by their remarks to give to the public a wholly erroneous impression as to the character of the budget, I may perhaps be forgiven for taking up more of the time of the House at this stage of the debate in a few general observations upon some of the matters referred to in criticism.

First, let me speak of the charge that the action taken by the Liberal party in this budget has not been in accordance with the platform of the Liberal party as laid down at the convention of 1919. I say that any such charge is wholly unwarranted. I think I am as familiar as any member of the House with the platform of 1919 and with what took place at the Liberal convention in reference to it. When I was honoured by the members of that convention with the position of leader of the Liberal party, I did not wait until those present at the convention had dispersed, to express what I conceived to be the purpose of the platform which had been laid down and the spirit in which the party would expect to have it interpreted. Indeed, the first remarks I made on the occasion were to the effect—and I used at that time a simile which I thought was obvious to all, and which I still think is as appropriate as any that could be used—that I regarded the platform drafted by the convention as a chart on which had been plotted the direction the Liberal party would be expected to take, should it be returned to power. I made it perfectly plain at the time in the use of that simile, that I did not regard the party as bound by the platform literatim et verbatim, pledged to carry out each line and letter of it during the first year or two we might be in office. Indeed, I made another fact equally plain, which was that I should not attempt, if at the head of the government, to follow the example of the then Prime Minister the present leader of the Opposition, of trying to direct the operations of government pretty much, if not wholly, by myself; I stated that I would endeavour to surround myself with the ablest men whom this country might send to parliament, and from their collective wisdom, I would seek to derive the guidance necessary to decide how far at any particular time it might be wise to go in pursuing the course plotted for us by the convention. That was the statement I made in the presence of all the delegates on that occasion. There was no exception taken to that attitude; there has been, so far as I know, no exception on the part of the Liberal party as a whole to that attitude from that day up to the present.

Some little time after the convention had been held, and I had again the privilege of having a seat in this House, while the Liberal party were still in opposition, I had the honour of seconding a resolution which was introduced by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) setting forth the attitude which we believed was the one the party was expected to take towards any matters of tariff revision. I shall not read the whole of that resolution, but I will quote the concluding paragraphs of it. It was moved by the present Minister of Finance on May 10, 1921, and seconded by myself:

> That such changes should be made in the customs duties as may be expected to reduce the cost of living, and to reduce also the cost of implements of production required for the efficient development of the natural resources of the Dominion;
> That, while keeping this aim clearly in mind, the House recognizes that in any readjustment of the tariff that may take place, regard must be had to existing conditions of trade, and changes made in such a manner as will cause the least possible disturbance of business.

That was the position of the Liberal party as it was asserted in this House of Commons after the Liberal convention of 1919 and before the general election of 1921. And that was the position we took when we went to the country.

I noticed in the remarks of my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) yesterday, that although he introduced many subjects in the course of his speech, there was one very significant omission from all that he said. He made no reference whatever to a single speech of mine delivered during the campaign of 1921. I spoke in every province of the Dominion with the exception only of the province of British Columbia and in every province in which I spoke, from every platform upon which I stood, I took occasion on this subject of the tariff, to refer to the convention of 1919 and the interpretation which the Liberal party put upon the Liberal platform as adopted at the time of that convention. I spoke in terms exactly similar to those which I am asserting at this moment. I made it plain, using indeed, the very simile I have used this afternoon, that if returned to power I should regard the platform as a chart on which was plotted the course the Liberal party was expected to take. I said that I would not seek to follow it literally, that I felt it would be unwise to do so, but that I would seek to bring about me, from the different provinces of the Dominion, men upon whose judgment the country would have reason to rely with confidence and that I would be guided by their collective wisdom in moving in the direction indicated. I also made it clear that whatever the Liberal party might do with respect to the tariff, it would do in relation to conditions existing at the time; and I know I made the further assertion that no established industry in this country operating at that time and which was earning a legitimate profit need have any fear, if the Liberal party were returned to power, that its legitimate business would be injured by any revision of the tariff. That was the position I took throughout the campaign; I took it in every province; and I challenge my right hon. friend and those around him to search the journals of this country from one end of it to the other and bring into this House of Commons, if they can, a single statement of mine, truly reported, that is contrary to what I am saying at this moment.

Now, Sir, I say that that is the pledge by which we are bound; that is the position we took when we appealed to the country. We were returned on that representation and on no other. What we have done in this budget is to carry out the spirit of the platform as laid down in 1919, in the light of conditions as we see them at the present time.

Some of those who sit opposite have referred to this budget as a protectionist budget. What are its features? In the first place, there are in it, so far as tariff matters are concerned, a very large number of reductions in duties. I have in my hand a list of tariff reductions in which some 21 different items have been affected by considerable reductions, apart altogether from the general reduction made through the British preference on all articles. Twenty-one different articles, which I will not detain the House by reading, have been affected by an immediate reduction of duty. Then, as respects all commodities, the British preference has been increased. This is equivalent to a reduction in the customs duty on articles coming from Great Britain of a 10 per cent discount on all goods coming in through our Canadian ports. There again is a further general reduction of duties. But let me point out to hon. gentlemen that this budget must be considered not only in relation to what we are doing at the moment but in conjunction with what we did last year. Last year we made some material reductions in customs duties, some of them with respect to the British preference; and if one takes occasion to study carefully the items that were affected, one will find that as regards goods coming from the Old Country there has been a very considerable reduction in customs duties through an increase of the British preference. I have here a list of items that have been affected by the British preference in a very direct way and to a considerable degree by what we have done this session combined with what was done last year. In some 40 cases which I might cite there have been reductions ranging anywhere from 2 to 3, 4, 5, 7 and 9 per cent increase in the British preference. Among these let us cite the following: take first the case of flannels; there was a reduction last year and again this year, the two together making a total reduction of 4½ per cent. In wool fabrics, the total reduction is 5¼ per cent; in clothing, the total reduction is 4½ per cent; wool clothing and tweeds 5¼ per cent; blankets, in one case 9¾ per cent, in another case 4¾ per cent, and in another 2¼; in cotton fabrics there is a reduction of 4¾ per cent; in collars and cuffs 7 per cent; in corsets of 4¾ per cent; in harness 4½ per cent, besides other items that I might mention. These are all items that enter into the cost of living; they are articles that affect every home; and this means a material reduction in the cost of living. But that is not the only change made so far as the effect upon the customs tariff through the British preference is concerned. I have here another and much larger list, a list of something like 180 articles, many of them important, which have been materially affected by the change in the tariff that we have made through the British preference. Of these 180 articles, in the case of 80 of the items the present rate is over 50 per cent, while in the case of the 100 others the preference runs anywhere from 40 to 50 per cent. One of the planks of the platform was that we should aim to bring about a British preference of 50 per cent. Well, we have brought it about in these 80 items of the tariff to which I have referred. In 100 others we are above 40 and approaching 50 per cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In how many of these cases do we bring the goods from England at all?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With the exception, I think, of three or four all the goods come into this country from England.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Practically none.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will tell me the ones that do not come from England.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The amount of goods coming from England is negligible compared with the amount coming from the United States, which is the controlling factor.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have before me a list prepared with some degree of care by one of the officials of the government. Included in this list are two items, sewing machines and drain pipes, which have been affected by the two last reductions, and in regard to these there is the following footnote:

> Practically no importations of these items from Great Britain at present, or likely in the near future.

All the other items which constitute those affected by the changes of this year and last combined, come into this country from Great Britain. The point I wish to make clear is that the platform of the Liberal party called upon us to aim in the direction of a 50 per cent British preference. We have that 50 per cent applying now in a large number of cases, and we are approaching it in a still larger number of cases; but we have also gone beyond this 50 per cent in some instances. If we had adopted the attitude of mind which some hon. gentlemen take towards platforms we should have stopped the minute we reached the 50 per cent. We take the position that there has been indicated to us the direction in which we should go provided the circumstances of the times so permit. As I have said, we have carried out that policy in a manner which I think will help materially the consumers and producers while it will also help the trade of the country.

Then again in this budget we have emphasized our belief in the importance of reciprocity. That was another plank of the Liberal platform. Let me not forget also to make mention of an important article on which a very marked reduction has been made—50 cents on every 100 pounds of sugar coming in not only from Britain but from all other countries. There is a reduction which affects every household in this country. There are a few cases where the tariff has been readjusted, but for the most part the entire revision, both last year and this, has been in a downward direction; and in addition to that a very substantial relief has been afforded through the specific items I have mentioned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when one considers that the essential features of this budget are: No increase in taxation; a substantial revision downwards of many items in the customs tariff; a large reduction so far as sugar is concerned; an increase in the British preference on all articles coming by way of Canadian ports; a revival of the offer of reciprocity to our neighbours to the south—when we consider these essential features how can it possibly be stated that this is a protectionist budget? By an identical process of reasoning, assuming that we had taken a reverse course, assuming that we had increased the duties all along the line, reduced the British preference, added 50 cents per 100 pounds to the sugar duty, denied any further faith or belief in the merits of reciprocity, hon. gentlemen opposite might have brought in and supported an amendment declaring that we had introduced a free trade budget and that they would not support it on that account.

Another feature that I think it is right should be taken into account in the consideration of this budget is what has been enacted, or is likely to be enacted, in the way of legislation this present session. Commercial treaties have been made with France and Italy which will bring considerable relief to the consumers of the Dominion, and we believe will materially help in the expansion of our trade. Then there is the enactment, we hope, of a Combines Investigation Act, which contains a clause giving the government power, wherever it appears as a result of investigation under that act that the tariff is being used as a means of enabling groups of interests to gain an undue profit, to reduce duties by order in council. These are all part and parcel of the legislation which we are presenting to the House and which is associated with this budget. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that far from being capable of the interpretation which some hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured to place upon the budget, on the face of it this is clearly a budget leading to freer trade and reduced cost of living for the masses of the people of this country.

Now, may I say just a word to my hon. friends who believe strongly in free trade? The hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) referred last night to his early studies in political economy. I think probably that is where most of us, in the first instance, get our conceptions with respect to matters pertaining to the tariff. But many forget that there is a difference between the theoretical study of a particular subject and its practical application where there are concrete circumstances which have to be taken into account. Many men carry their academic training into the business world and cease to be of any practical use just because they do not realize the difference between theory and practice. If every country of the globe followed a free trade policy, if there were no protective walls erected by other nations, certainly free trade would be the best policy for the world. No man can argue successfully against free trade on theoretical grounds. It is obviously to the interest of all mankind that capital should be attracted to and invested in those industries which in the matter of comparative cost of production afford the greatest natural advantages. That is absolutely sound doctrine. But when you have the countries of the world following not a free trade policy, but instead erecting tariff walls higher and higher, a man ceases to apply his theory accurately when at a given moment he is prepared to concede to other countries the placing of a handicap against the trade of his own. For that reason, as one who believes in the theoretical soundness of the free trade argument, I contend that in the application of all our economic ideas and principles we must take account, as economists do take account, of world conditions as they are and apply our theory in the light of existing conditions.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, the fact that those who were strongest in the advocacy of free trade, the people of Great Britain, did not achieve their object in a single day, a single year, or even in a generation? Free trade was not brought about in Great Britain in the course of any one parliament. If one leaves out of account altogether the Reciprocity Treaty of 1787 which Pitt negotiated with France, and which was one of the first measures for freer trade, but which was shot to pieces by the Napoleonic War—if one leaves that measure out of consideration, it was some thirty-five years from the time of the first material reduction before the free traders of England were able to reduce the tariffs of their day to the point where free trade became an actuality. And in that period a change had taken place from the England that existed in the day when the movement started. At the inception of that movement England's industries were more or less in their infancy, but in course of time the effect of the so-called industrial revolution made itself felt, the application of power to industry became more and more extended, until England rose to be one of the greatest manufacturing countries in the world. In addition to that, England developed not only her manufactures during that period; she developed also her mercantile marine; her trade upon the high seas; and it was co-existent with the growth of her industries at home and her trade on the high seas that England began to reduce the duties,—a step which ultimately led to free trade. If we were to be logical in this country in what we say with respect to the introduction of free trade, we would study with care some of the essential developments in the English free trade movement. I have referred to the reciprocity treaty with France which Pitt negotiated in 1787. It was in 1825 that Huskisson reduced the high tariff previously existing to a maximum rate of 30 per cent on fully manufactured goods. Peel in 1842 reduced the tariff to a maximum rate of 20 per cent, and abolished the corn laws in 1846. Gladstone in 1853 brought the tariff down to a maximum rate of 10 per cent and finally swept away all protective duties, co-incidentally with the enactment of the second French reciprocity treaty negotiated by Cobden, in 1860. When the British in this cautious way introduced free trade, Britain was indisputably the greatest manufacturing as well as the greatest trading nation in the world. The introduction of free trade greatly helped her traders and did not injure her manufactures, who in almost every product could defy competition. The final step was taken as a result of the reciprocity trade negotiating with the other leading manufacturing nations of the time. Is Canada, which both last year and this has made substantial reductions in her tariff, to throw down the bars completely, entirely irrespective of the policy of our great neighbour to the south, where the high tariff party, as we know to our cost, is in power? The present budget includes a grant of lower tariffs to the one and an offer of negotiations looking toward, lower tariffs to the other of the two great nations with which five-sixths of our foreign trade is carried on, while reciprocity treaties with two other of our leading customers have been brought before parliament.

May I say to my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) and to my hon. friends of the Progressive party, that I do not object in the least to any of the views they may put forward; I believe absolutely in their sincerity with respect to lower duties on commodities and the help that lower duties might be to the country. But what I do take exception to is the method whereby they seek to effect the objects they have in view. Does my hon. friend from Brome believe that Pitt, that Huskisson, that Peel, that Gladstone, that these great protagonists of free trade, never had their days of darkness, of disappointment, and of difficulty? Does he believe that these great statesmen never knew what it was to feel solitary and alone in their inability to realize within a limited period of time the ideal which was so strong in their own minds? Had these men seen well to divide themselves from their party, even to the limited extent to which my hon. friend has found it necessary so to do, would Gladstone's name. would Peel's name, would Huskisson's name stand out to-day in history as they do, as the men who brought about these great reforms in trade?

Mr. BIRD (rising)—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BIRD: If I am not transgressing—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. BIRD: I am sorry if I am transgressing any usages in this regard, but a question did occur to me and I am going to ask it in justice to the hon. member for Brome.

An hon. MEMBER: He can take care of himself.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BIRD: If I have the permission of the Prime Minister, I want to ask him if England would have had free trade to-day had it not been for John Bright?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did not omit the name of John Bright intentionally. I happen to have before me the names of those identified with particular reductions of the tariff at the time they were made. I think my hon. friend is quite right; John Bright's contribution was one of the greatest—but John Bright fought within the ranks of his party. John Bright, through his great moral strength and his noble eloquence, was able to influence the men of his own party to his own view, and he exerted that influence by standing in their ranks and commanding them with his majestic power. I say in all seriousness to the hon. member for Brome that I am sorry to see him take a seat opposite. Why? On his own account? Yes. On account of the party? Yes; but most of all because of the very ideal that he has at heart; for the place to realize that ideal is among the men who are helping to bring about its fulfilment. I would say much the same to the members of the Progressive party, because of their attitude; that is to say the attitude of some of them. They feel it necessary not to interpret the difficulties of the economic situation in this country to their constituents, but to create in the minds of their constituents, by their attitude in parliament, the impression that there is, in this parliament some unwillingness to have justice done to western Canada, that there is a need for agitation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friends applaud that remark; I am happy to say, however, that I noticed only a very few of them do so. They take this attitude, Mr. Speaker, instead of seeking to interpret to their constituents what they know to be some of the problems and difficulties in connection with all these tariff matters, and the extent of which they had not learned as they now know it until they came into this parliament. There is a double duty on the part of members of this House: they owe a duty to their constituents, but it is not the duty merely of advocating in parliament the particular demands of particular sections; they also owe a duty to return to their constituents and to explain to them the problems with which the nation as a whole is faced. I was told by several members of the Progressive party before this budget was introduced that regardless altogether of what the Minister of Finance might say in the budget they would find it necessary to bring in an amendment. Where is there in such an attitude the extending of help to a government that is seeking to effect reform? How can any government be expected to co-operate with men who, though proclaiming a like purpose and a like aim, maintain that—regardless of what is done—for the sake of agitation, for the sake of making clearer and wider a division and a breach in our country, they will bring in some amendment and by their course in debate create an impression throughout the land that a condition of injustice exists so far as the attitude of one section of Canada toward another is concerned? Let my hon. friend from Brome, and my friends of the Progressive party look at the gentlemen directly opposite and take a leaf from their books. You do not find in their ranks any high priest of protection, simply because he is unable to get all the protection he wants, taking a seat apart and erecting an altar of his own in some far corner of the room. You do not find these hon. gentlemen who profess to believe in protection dividing into two great wings, one saying we have not protection enough and the other saying we must have more protection. "The children of this world"—sometimes interpreted as "the children of darkness"—"are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

May I say just a further word with respect to another feature of the budget—the emphasis which has been placed upon stability as regards the tariff in the government's tariff announcements? Why is it that the present government is seeking stability in the tariff? For the simple reason that what this country needs to-day, as what the world needs, is a little more in the way of stability. What we need to-day is to restore a feeling of confidence in the minds of the business community, and in the minds of the industrial community. The world to-day is still trembling more or less from the convulsion of the titanic struggle of a few years ago, and the highest duty of statesmanship is to seek, so far as it lies within the power of every nation, to restore in the minds of all classes of the community a feeling of certainty, a feeling of confidence, a feeling which for want of a better word we describe as stability. Stability does not mean finality. I notice that some hon. gentlemen opposite have sought to combine the two words. If there was one thing above another which the hon. Minister of Finance was most careful to emphasize when he spoke of stability, it was that as regards all legislation, and in particular as regards the tariff, there was no such thing as finality. He spoke particularly and specifically of the probable need for change as respects some items of the tariff affecting consumers and in relation to the necessities of production. He mentioned these things, and if there be need for greater emphasis as to what he said, may I direct the attention of the House to the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance had no sooner concluded his reference to stability than he began to speak of reciprocity and of trade agreements with the United States, which would mean changes in the tariff the minute they were brought down.

No, what my hon. friend sought to convey to the House in his remarks was that the government, after having carefully studied the situation from all angles, had come to the conclusion that having regard to the situation of Canada to-day in relation to other countries, it should tell the Canadian people that as respects the tariff, unless there were obvious reasons why there should be changes occasioned by necessity, they might be reasonably assured that there would be a steadiness in the tariff for some little time to come. That is what my hon. friend sought to make clear to this House, and he did so for the reason, that what we in Canada can do with justice in the matter of tariff revision is necessarily dependent in large part upon what is done by our neighbours to the south and upon what occurs in Europe.

What is the position with regard to the United States? Since the Liberal convention was held, there has been enacted by the United States a much higher tariff than ever before existed between Canada and the United States. The Fordney-McCumber tariff, so-called, to-day is operating to the disadvantage of Canada. Is there any member of this House who will stand up in his place and say: Notwithstanding that obvious fact we think we should throw down our bars against the United States and give them an opportunity to come in here and affect our industries in a manner even more seriously than they have already been affected.

Take the situation in Europe—and this accounts in large measure for the troubles that my hon. friends are having in the West. It is not our tariff alone. In these discussions on the budget all ills that any portion of the country seems to have are focussed up against this one target. The reason western Canada is suffering to-day is in large part due to the fact that the demand for our grain and our raw materials is not what it used to be, is not what it should be or will be until conditions in Europe become more settled than they are at the present time. We feel that the settlement of conditions in Europe and the favourable change in the American tariff are not likely to be effected for some little time yet, and for that reason we say that pending a change in this external situation we wish to give to the Canadian people the assurance that we do not purpose having an unstable tariff, because that is the significance of it. The one word has to be used in relation not only to its synonym but also its antonym. We do not propose to have an unstable tariff while this unstable condition exists in different parts of the world.

We have sought however in this budget to take steps which while not so apparent on their face, will we believe, become increasingly apparent as the years go by, and will, we feel sure, be helpful in changing the situation. We have increased the British preference on all articles coming from Britain through Canadian ports. Why have we done that? One reason, let me say, which prompted the government to that action, possibly the reason which above every other may have inspired the thought in the first instance, is the circumstance that Great Britain, the Mother Country, has removed the embargo on our cattle going into the markets of Britain, and we wish the Mother Country to see and to know when she takes an attitude toward us which means stretching out a hand of which we are in need, that we are equally prepared to stretch a hand across the sea and greet her with goodwill in return. We hope to see continue, as we are seeing now, our ships crossing to the islands of Britain laden with cattle from our western plains, but we hope also to see these ships returning to Canada with goods which will be of service to the people of the western plains as well as of other parts of this Dominion. We hope to see furthered in this way a larger trade.

There is another object we have in view. We have been trying to build up our railways in this country, and no group of men in parliament have talked more of the necessity of nationalization of the railroads or expressed more often the desire and hope that the National Railways would succeed than hon. gentlemen of the Progressive group. We believe that if we can develop trade through our own ports we will be helping to develop and assist our National Railways. We think this is a moment when we should seek to bring as far as we can over our own Canadian lines all the trade that we can hope to bring. There again, is a national purpose that we have in mind.

But more than that. It is becoming increasingly apparent that not only on the Atlantic ocean but on the Pacific ocean as well there are possibilities of great trade development. Vessels are leaving the ports of Vancouver and Victoria and sailing down the Pacific around through the Panama canal to the countries of Europe. We hope to see a return trade developed between Great Britain and those western ports by way of the Panama canal, and whatever comes in that direction is all to the benefit of western Canada. We believe that by our policy we will help to make apparent to the world the advantages there are in trade through Canadian ports, and I think I am right in saying that whether we trade through Canadian ports on the Atlantic or through Canadian ports on the Pacific, whatever comes in the way of increased trade through any of these ports will redound to the advantage of all parts of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

But, Sir, we had another aim, and I think it is becoming apparent to anyone who reads the American press of to-day. The Americans, as I have said, have put up a high tariff wall against us affecting no part of this country more than the part from which my hon. friends of the Progressive group come. They have that wall, but we want to show them that if they wish to sell they must also be ready to buy. There can be no jug-handled proposition in matters of trade. If you wish to sell you have got to be willing to buy. If you wish to buy you have to be willing to sell. I think our American friends will come to see that if, as a result of their action— and it is their own business, of course—if as a result of their action Canada is going to seek and obtain new markets in which to buy and sell in Britain, new markets in France and new markets in Italy, is going to develop a reciprocal trade and effect agreements with Australia and possibly other countries as well, if they begin to see that in all these directions we are striking out into and creating new lines of commerce, and that we can manage very well as we are, I am inclined to think that that line of thought, quicker than anything else, will bring about the change which my hon. friends of the Progressive group opposite hope may come.

Before I leave that matter, may I add this with respect to our endeavour to bring about stability? We are taking in this connection a stand which we believe to be not only in the interests of our own country but in the interests of the world. I have in my hand a copy of the report which was presented to this parliament some little time ago of the Genoa Conference for the economic and financial reconstruction of Europe. Canada was represented at that conference by two able and distinguished gentlemen and there were assembled there, as hon. members will recall, representatives from most of the commercial nations of the world. True, in some respects the conference did not achieve all that was hoped and expected of it, but there were certain matters on which there was general agreement, and in the report of this conference I find the following. It appears on page 37 of the report printed by order of this House:

Article 43

All customs tariffs should be published; such publication should be accompanied by a clear and precise indication in regard to each category of goods of all the duties which are leviable on the importation or exportation of the goods concerned.

Article 44

The tariffs should be made, so far as possible applicable over substantial periods of time and changes in rates and in customs regulations should be made as rarely as possible and duly published, the practice of frequent modification for the purpose of economic warfare being entirely abandoned.

I would direct the attention of my right hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, particularly to these last words. He has been urging throughout this debate that in trade matters we should use the tariff more or less continually as an instrument of economic warfare. At this conference of European and world statesmen—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was commenting on the fact that the government was doing so itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, no, I think the right hon. member went much further than that in his comments. Indeed his whole speech on the French treaty was a declamation in favour of economic warfare and the uses to be made of the tariff in that connection. However, this conference at Genoa of men who had seriously at heart the future welfare of Europe and the well being of mankind deemed it advisable to give as their studied and thoughtful opinion that the practice of frequent modification of tariffs for the purpose of economic warfare should be abandoned. Not only did the Genoa conference consider this matter; it was dealt with also by the League of Nations. Canada is a member of the League of Nations, and as such we are specially interested in any step which that body may take to further the object for which it has been created. A great deal has been said about tariffs and their bearing upon world peace. The League of Nations exists for the purpose of furthering the peace of the world. Among matters to which in this connection the League of Nations has felt it necessary to give attention have been some of the questions of economic relations between the different countries. I have here a copy of the latest proceedings of the League of Nations and I find that the economic commission, which is a committee of the council, had under consideration the recommendation of the Genoa conference to which I have referred, and that this committee of the council made its report to the assembly of the League of Nations. The following appears at page 1396 of the official Journal of the League of Nations for November, 1922:

B. The council, desirous that effect should be given to the recommendations embodied in article 3 of the resolution of the Genoa Economic commission, "that tariffs should be made so far as possible applicable for substantial periods of time and changes in rates and in customs regulations should be made as rarely as possible..."

Resolved:

To endorse and communicate to the states members of the League the following resolution adopted by the Economic committee of the League at its last session:

"The Economic committee is deeply impressed with the inconvenience and injury caused to international commerce which result from the uncertainty arising from frequent changes of customs tariffs and associates itself cordially with the resolution of the Genoa conference on this subject.

"The committee strongly recommends that all states should endeavour to ensure that their customs tariffs should remain applicable over substantial periods of time, and that changes in rates and classifications should be effected as seldom as possible and only when they are required by the essential economic needs of the country."

That resolution, according to the report of the assembly, was unanimously adopted by the assembly of the League of Nations at its last session. Now I read these resolutions not for the purpose of helping to foster the impression that in speaking of stability in matters of tariff the action of the government contemplates finality in any particular or in any direction. I rather wish to bring home to the members of this House, as far as may be possible, what has become so apparent to the statesmen of other parts of the world, that if we are to get away from the unsettled conditions of the present, if we are to restore confidence among the nations of the world, if once more this world is to be brought back to the order which prevailed prior to the Great War, we must all seek, in whatever directions we can, particularly in our international relations, to establish something in the nature of a reasonable stability. That is all we are aiming at. We do not intend to sacrifice in any particular the needs of any class of our citizens or the needs of industry, the needs in any direction of consumers or of producers, but what we do wish to make clear is that, so long as conditions continue to exist as they are at present, so long as on the part of the United States, the tariff wall remains what it is against us, and in Europe the unsettled condition continues to be what it is, and so long, may I add, as Canada remains the only country that has reduced its tariff since the Great War, while other countries continue to put up their tariffs, for that period of time at least we shall give to those who are interested in investing their capital and establishing industry in this country, and who are seeking to restore business to a higher level of development, assurance that there will not be unstability where stability ought to prevail.

Mr. GOOD: Does the Prime Minister think that stability on a wrong and false basis would help to allay unrest?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope I have made it plain to my hon. friend that the world has been on a wrong and false basis, and that we are trying to get it on a right and sound basis, and the only way in which that can be done is by having regard, not for an imaginary world, but for the world in which we are living. If my hon. friend says that it is a wrong and unsound thing that all the nations of the world should have tariff walls erected against one another, I say that in principle I agree entirely with the hon. member; but if he says the way to cure the evil is for one country, perhaps the smallest of the lot, to throw down its tariff walls, while the rest of the world keeps up its tariff walls, I say that he would be a long way from providing a remedy for the condition which he hopes to cure.

Perhaps the best evidence of whether or not the government's action in proceeding slowly and cautiously, as it has done in the matter of the tariff, is a wise and a good one, may be borne out by a few statistics that more or less speak for themselves.

I shall give the House just a few figures and with that conclude. We have heard from one quarter quite a wail about the alleged deplorable condition of our country; but that is not going to help to improve the situation. It would do much more for Canada if we let it be known throughout the world exactly where and how we stand in the matter of economic revival. I have brought together a few figures as nearly up-to-date as possible for purposes of comparison, and I think they show conclusively the direction in which we are heading at the present time. These figures, by the way, I have obtained from the statistical department of the government. The figures are as follows:

The estimated outlay on building operations during the month of April, 1922, was $14,047,198; during April, 1923, it was $17,544,061, an increase of over three and a half millions of dollars.

Canada's trade for the month of April, 1922, was estimated at $80,347,495, made up of imports, $47,695,454, and exports, $32,652,041. Our trade for the month of April, 1923, was $122,509,396, made up of imports, $68,181,320, and exports, $54,328,076, an increase in the one month of 1923 of $42,161,901. This is equivalent to an increase of about half in the total trade of last year.

Bank clearings, in April, 1922, amounted to $1,213,021,399; in April, 1923, they amounted to $1,267,520,018, or an increase in the one month of 1923 of $54,498,619.

Savings deposits, another barometer of prosperity or the reverse, were for January, February, March, 1922, $1,184,703,596; for January, February, March, 1923, $1,218,295,721, or an increase in those three months of $33,592,125.

The figures on immigration are still small but they reveal a similar increase for the first four months of 1922. There were 16,774 immigrants landed in Canada as against 22,240 for the first four months of 1923, or an increase of 32½ per cent. But that is only the beginning of our immigration for this year.

The question of employment has been referred to at different times. The Department of Labour works out what it describes as an index of employment on percentage basis of the available labour supply. For the 1st of May, 1922, the index number was 83.3; for the 1st May, of this year, 1923, the index number stands at 91.44.

These figures which reflect the trade of our country, the savings of our people, the employment of our people, and which reflect clearly and beyond dispute the national progress, are more eloquent of the position of our country than any words can possibly be. I would say to my hon. friends, instead of striving to make the condition of this country out to be what none of us would wish to have it, they should lay the emphasis and stress rather on those things in which we have good ground to take pride and satisfaction.

With respect to the budget proposals which the Minister of Finance has brought down, let me say just one word in conclusion. If there is one thing above another for which at this time this country has reason to be grateful to Providence, it is that we have had spared to guide us in matters of finance and tariff, the grand old gentleman at whose side in this parliament I have the honour to be seated.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, up in the York valley where I live, there is an old settlers' road that has been in use now for over one hundred years, and on one side it is backed by a very high hill, very much wooded and very steep. It is altogether sheltered from the sun, and from that day to this the old name given to it by the settlers has been retained, that of Greenland. The snow never melts in the spring, and there are in the hillside two openings through which the winds blow at all times. As I say, the settlers called it Greenland. When I look at the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) down there in the Greenland of this House, and when I listen to the speech that has just been delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the thought comes back to me of a statement once made by the late Goldwin Smith, who was a great student of English as well as Canadian politics. He said:

> A great deal of the time of the public men of Canada is devoted to the respective amount possessed by each of the doubtful virtue of consistency.

We have heard a good deal of that to-day; we heard a good deal of it yesterday, and on different occasions we have heard a good deal of it in this House. Still, my sympathy is with my hon. friend down there in Greenland.

I have just this to say about the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Having always been a Conservative and a believer in making Canada a self-contained country, I am pleased to hear him make the speech that he has made to-day. He professes to be a protectionist, and he now professes to be in favour of Canada having industries of various kinds of her own. Yet, when he says that, and when I endorse it, still there is a grievance on the part of the people of our western country, and still there is a grievance in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in connection with the way in which the war has treated the people there, and they believe something should be done for the development of those provinces. If I take the occasion of the discussion of the budget to refer to some public questions, I am not going for the moment any more into the subject before the House than to say that I cannot vote for the amendment and I cannot vote for the budget. Recognizing the urgency before hon. members to get away during this evening so that they may return home for the holiday, I am going to take the little time I have at my disposal to discuss two public questions of some concern to the people.

I begin by saying that the greatest railway in the world to-day is the Canadian National Railway system, the only shareholders of which are the people of Canada. The second greatest railway in the world to-day is the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is not owned by the people of Canada, but which was largely subsidized by the people of Canada by way of land grants, legislation and bonus, and which is owned by a private company. These two roads have come now somewhat into competition One is a publicly-owned road and the other is a company-owned road. The people in the province from which I come, indeed the people in my riding, are great believers in public ownership. Not only have we our share in the National railways; but the province of Ontario has a splendid system of railways, publicly owned up in northern Ontario. In Toronto we own the street railway system and in Ontario we own and control radial roads. We also have a hydro system for the distribution of electricity, and we are absolute believers in public ownership as applied to public services. We are glad to have the National Railways to-day; they are making headway and I have no doubt will soon prove a great success. But it seems that the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has been dealt with so generously by the people of this country, is gradually creating, perhaps, a party in this House, and certainly a sentiment in the country, through the press and in other ways, which has a tendency to destroy confidence in the public-owned railways. The Canadian Pacific Railway evidently wants to have the National system crippled or destroyed, or at all events to have it turned over to itself. That will never come to pass in this country. If such a thing should happen, Mr. Speaker, it would simply establish a sort of boss-ship that would make life in this country intolerable and almost impossible. It would destroy our political institutions, for there would be a railway boss in Canada to whose dictation the government would be subject; indeed, parliament and the press would be equally subject to that dictation. And yet you can see this process working in Canada; the suggestion is being disseminated throughout the country that the National Railways ought to be destroyed or at least turned over to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific Railway professes to be, and as a matter of fact, by right of citizenship in Canada, is a shareholder in the National roads; and if my good friend, Mr. Beatty, and those associated with him in the railway business find themselves in competition with the public-owned roads, let them compete with those roads. Do not, however, let them seek to destroy the National system; they must give that system a race for the money, and put up a competition against it in the matter of service. They may win out, but I do not think that is possible. Of course, they can spend the enormous reserve which the Canadian Pacific Railway possesses to-day and devote that money to an intensive competition with the National Railways, but I believe that such a competition would ultimately prove ineffective, and they would not get much support from their shareholders if they attempted a policy of that kind the object of which would be to squander the reserves of the company in any such competition. But, I say, let them go on; I do not think that the National system need have any fears.

I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the Canadian National Railway system is the greatest institution of its kind in the world to-day. It is made up of the Grand Trunk, now seventy years old, the old Canadian Northern, the Mackenzie and Mann Northern, the Transcontinental, and many other roads that have been taken in; and this National system to-day has the marked characteristic of possessing almost the entire strategic advantage of transportation from one coast of Canada to the other. It possesses everything on the St. Lawrence, in the old city of Quebec and in Montreal. It comes to lake Ontario by the St. Lawrence route and has all the strategy of position at Toronto and Hamilton. It commands particularly the strategy of the Niagara river and the Detroit river, it has the sites of bridges and tunnels, it has much of the land along these shores, and it possesses wharves and everything of that kind. Similarly, it enjoys all advantages of this kind along the Welland canal to lake Erie and the upper lakes. Now I come to the right-of-way, and I will say for Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as I have always said, that in the building of the Transcontinental railway there was accomplished the greatest piece of railway strategy on the North American continent. The Transcontinental railway built by the Laurier government from the city of Quebec to Winnipeg is a splendid stretch of railway. It has the best grade in America and is on a height of land from which the water runs to Hudson bay on the north and on the south to the lower lakes. It has, I believe, a better grade than any other road on the American continent; and besides this, it has the whole strategy, so far as transportation is concerned, in crossing the Rocky mountains through the Yellowhead pass. So that I am convinced that the Canadian National railway system is bound to be a great success. To-day it is in the hands of excellent men who understand the railway question and most of whom are Canadians; and I believe they are getting a fair opportunity from the government to work out a solution of the problem before them.

The road has been making some deficits, and this fact is constantly brought up against public ownership. But as a Canadian I declare that the roads we have taken over are going to be a great success. They are going to solve the transportation problem of this country, and I have no doubt about their future. I have faith in my country and believe that we are going to surmount the difficulties that have followed in the wake of the war; and one of the greatest means by which we shall recover from the war will be the development of our transcontinental railway system owned by the people.

We have spent a great deal of public money in making waterways in Canada and these are of course complementary of the railways. The two can be utilized together and in that way I am sure they could be more efficient than the Canadian Pacific Railway; and perhaps some day when the air-ways have been sufficiently developed they will be able to work in conjunction with the dual system of the waterways and the railways. Altogether, the people of the West and of the East, being, I believe, of the opinion that the National Railways are a valuable asset to this country, I entertain the hope that they will soon make good. But I think there is room for the Canadian Pacific Railway as well. And if the Canadian Pacific Railway is wise, some day perhaps it will see its way to become a part of the National system. There is no reason for the separate existence of the two, except the reason advanced by some of my friends from the West, that they desire competition between the two systems. Be that as it may, I believe that some day the two roads will have to be consolidated.

And now that I have spoken of these two examples of railways, one an instance of most successful private ownership, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the other an example of a publicly owned system of railways which I am sure is going to be successful in the near future, I desire to take up the question of the merits of the company-owned road which is being lauded so much in this country, in the press and elsewhere. As a matter of fact the greatest wreckage since the war, and not caused by the war, has occurred in connection with the American system of company-owned railways. These have been absolutely scrapped. Even the private roads of Great Britain are in very bad shape, but the private systems in America are absolutely at the end of their tether to-day. They have three great tasks before them, namely, first, the reconstruction of all their tracks; secondly, the electrifying of their motive power; and last the re-equipment of their rolling stock. They cannot get money, because the public have no confidence in them, and the United States congress has by legislation directed the railway commission over there to put a valuation on all these roads. Further, congress has provided for the consolidation of the roads into ten regional divisions, the weak roads along with the better roads, the idea being to endeavour if possible to put them on a sound basis. But the only way in which this can really be done is for the treasury of the United States to come to their rescue; and I predict, after a careful study of the proposition, that even the great New York Central will not be able to finance itself now; and I do not think that either the Pennsylvania or the minor roads have any future before them. So clearly was congress impressed by these circumstances that, as I have said, it ordered a re-valuation of the roads; and congress I believe will be forced to come to their relief, and take the position which one of the ministers of the late government in Canada took when relief was sought for the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk. He said, "I readily gave them money to help them out, knowing they would come back to me for more, and then I would get the roads." Well, the American government will acquire the company-owned roads of the United States in very much the same way, and they will co-ordinate them into a single system as publicly owned railways. So those who deplore the fact that public ownership of railways cannot succeed in this country had better ponder how the company owned roads have failed in the United States.

There is room in this country for two great railway systems, but there is not room for any ascendancy of the Canadian Pacific either from political or an economic point of view. The executive of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company must be content to face the situation as it is. If they care to work in co-operation with the National Railways, I have no objection. The two companies might very well pool some of the business, for there are unnecessary trains run by both roads that could be cut out. The National road which possesses the best grades and the best strategy in transportation would be willing, I imagine, to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway running rights on terms.

But be that as it may, I have every confidence in the National Railways, and I am sure parliament will enact any necessary legislation for their improvement. I was talking to a friend the other day, a Senator, who has a proposal to meet the situation as it presents itself to him. He told me that probably we might have to put our railways under a somewhat improved board to what we have now, and he suggested that we might very well get men of the standing of Sir Joseph Flavelle, to become members of such a trust or board. I know we can get men of his stamp. But even if we do not, with the management we have at present I have every confidence in the success of our National Railways as against the success of the company owned railways in the United States, and I am certain that under a fair revaluation, which would involve a considerable reduction of their present capitalization, our National Railways, while they may not be able to earn very large dividends, will at least in a very short time show a surplus sufficient to pay a low rate of interest on the debenture issues, and will continue to give the country good transportation service. This is a splendid asset owned by the people of Canada—we are the shareholders. The shareholders of the Canadian Pacific are not confined to Canada, there are some in the United States, some in Great Britain and some in other countries of Europe, but if they have any regard for the future of their investment they will be prepared at no distant date to make an arrangement with the Canadian National System.

This is an appropriate time in which to bring before the House a subject that touches the economics not only of Canada but of the world. Notwithstanding all that we have suffered from the war, notwithstanding the accumulation of riches in some of the countries which participated in the war, and notwithstanding the enormous gold reserve that the United States has created, there is something that is astounding in the condition of the world to-day, and yet our bankers and our economists more or less ignore it. This subject has been brought to our attention in this House and it is coming before us again. I refer to the awful gambling in the staples of life that is carried on on the great stock exchanges of the world. On the Chicago grain exchange and on the New York produce exchange the great staples of life are dealt in—wheat, oats, flour, barley, cotton, sugar, and so on. The rising price of sugar has been a matter of public discussion during the last few weeks both in this country and in the United States, and some relief has been secured here partly because of the action taken by a committee of this House and partly because the women of this country have set their faces against the use of sugar at present prices. There is no doubt that enormous gambling is going on in connection with the sugar supply of the world. A great deal of the discontent that exists throughout the world to-day is due to this heartless gambling in the staples of life. As an apologist for the sugar refiners of Canada pointed out the other day—I refer to the Montreal Gazette—there are a lot of gougers who have their own money and the credit of the banks behind them and they deal in futures, which is one of the main causes of the discontent that prevails to-day against unfair economic conditions.

Now, the problem before us to-day is: How can we take the gambling element out of these bogus transactions in the staples of life, that is, cotton, sugar, flour, meats, and so forth. One deplorable feature is that nearly all the bankers of the world and the great newspapers and periodicals more or less justify this economic scourge of gambling in staples. If as the bankers and the great newspapers and periodicals say, there must be this dealing in futures, why do they not call for the creation of a department in every government for its further development? Our universities ought to have departments devoted to the elucidation of the principles that underlie this gambling in futures. But nothing is done. I will tell you how bad the condition has become. In the United States the people are thoroughly aroused to the fact that there is something wrong with the sugar market, and the government, through its attorney general, applied to the courts for an order prohibiting the produce exchange and the sugar exchange in New York from dealing in futures. The application was refused, but he is appealing to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I believe he will get an injunction. The United States is building up a great engine for the purpose of regulating this awful gambling in grains, in sugar, in cotton, in hides and all things of that kind. It is gradusually reorganizing its financial and banking system. It has created a great reserve bank system in which every bank of the country has to have membership if it wishes to get along. The whole financial organization of that country to-day is under the control of congress, of the government, just as their railways have been under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. What the United States is going to do, as I size it up, through the control they have over the banks, is to take some step which will place this gambling business also under control. My prophecy is that the banks of the United States will be forbidden to use the savings of the people for the promotion of gambling in futures in the great staple commodities. That is the only cure I see for this condition which has come upon us.

You can observe how it is working out in connection with the sport of racing. We have allowed racing in this country, and it is now getting away beyond the people's control. We have some legislation bearing upon the subject, and in England also they have some enactments designed to stop gambling of that kind. Men who never raised horses or who know nothing about the breeding of horses are putting up great sums in connection with races, and most of them lose. The same thing goes on in connection with this speculation in the main staples of the country. I do not quite know how it is to be stopped, but it must come to an end by some means. The sugar troubles of the people of Canada, which were emphasized here in the last week or two, had their origin in this scourge of gambling in futures. I wonder how much attention the farmers of the West have paid to the awful exploitation of wheat and their other crops in connection with ventures on the Chicago wheat exchange? It is time that the parliament of Canada and the congress of the United States took some steps in this matter. I would not like to see the state have to go into the management of the grain business of this country, but such a course may be forced upon the people if there is no other relief from the present condition.

It is out of order to refer to what is going on in the Banking committee or the Agriculture committee in the House, but there is one measure to which I will draw the attention of the Prime Minister, namely, the need of a new franchise act which will recognize equality of citizenship between men and women, which will recognize that all are entitled to some kind of representation and that the vote of one citizen is as good as that of another. We have not so far had that condition recognized in this country. Now, the Prime Minister may go to England this summer to take part in an imperial conference. I would like to hear some explanation in this House before the Prime Minister goes as to what may be the procedure in that discussion. Are the dominions to have equal votes with the Mother Country, or is there to be a leader of some kind? Are commitments to be made concerning Canada before we have had an opportunity of discussing them here? To my mind, before that conference is held there ought to be a full and fair discussion in parliament; the whole question should be threshed out —of what part we are to take in it, or whether we are to be bound by any commitments without parliament having first been consulted, and also whether one of the results of the conference will not be to give us what has been given to Australia, namely, the right to make and revise our own constitution as we wish.

Now, these may not be questions immediately connected with the tariff, but they are questions which concern the welfare of this country, and I bring them up chiefly for the purpose of giving rise to further discussion of them. We have a national system of railways that is going to prove a success. We have a country that will recover itself, notwithstanding the setback it has experienced. While business may not at present be so good, there is a great future ahead of this country. We will get more immigrants; there will be a better settlement of our land, but most of all we must find a way of remedying the grievance of our Canadian West as well as of the Atlantic coast sections. These things are before us and they must be dealt with. The grievances do exist; my sympathy is largely with those who present them. I hope, therefore, that we shall soon have legislation with respect to banking, legislation in the direction of creating a system of credit for the benefit of farmers of the West, and that prosperity will once again come to our country and to all countries of the world. According to this morning's papers there does seem to be hanging over the world the cloud of another war, and we have to devise a fiscal policy for ourselves that will make us independent and able to get along without those nations who would throw the world again into war. Parliament can well afford to give more of its time to the discussion of these things, and to making Canada self-sufficient for her present and her future greatness.

Mr. A. B. HUDSON (South Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the members who have spoken in expressing respect and good will toward the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I do this notwithstanding the fact that I feel compelled to differ from him in respect to several of the proposals he has put forward.

The budget contains many matters of very great importance to the country, and I propose to discuss very briefly two or three of these. In the first place, the minister asks for authority to negotiate a reciprocal trade arrangement with the United States. With that proposal I am in full accord; I heartily commend it. I do not share the view which the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) expressed, that it would find no favour in the country; on the contrary, I think it would find the greatest favour. It does not seem to have been received with entire approval at Washington, and I think that the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) was quite right in saying that it would probably have received a much better reception had we had there a Canadian representative whose business it would be to encourage better relations between these two countries.

The budget provides for a reduction in the duty on sugar, which is all to the good. It provides for an increase in the British preference which is so slight as far as I can see that it will mean nothing to the consumer.

The most significant part of the budget, however, is the reference of the Minister of Finance to stability. A good deal has been said as to what was meant by stability by various members of the government and others. I think that the Minister of Finance is a master of language, and that we can best accept his own words as conveying what he really meant. He says at page 2649 of Hansard:

> I think the country should be content to accept the tariff as it will now stand as one as fair and reasonable as can be prepared under all the circumstances, and business men should be able to carry on various enterprises without the fear of being soon disturbed by further changes.

I think that is absolutely clear. The minister of Finance regards the present fiscal policy as one which should be fixed. There may be incidental changes, but as a general policy that tariff should be fixed for the present at least, subject only to what may occur in connection with reciprocal trade relations with the United States. Now with that statement I entirely dissent. Apart altogether from the question of free trade or protection, or of a protective policy, I think the time has arrived now when there should be a review of our whole fiscal system, that we should look over the situation that exists in Canada, review what has happened during the last forty or fifty years, and then frame a policy which would be in the best interests of the country.

It was the hope of many in 1879, when the National Policy was adopted that Canada might be made largely a self-contained country, a place where we would produce and make nearly everything we required to use or consume. How far we have got in that direction it is not easy to say, but the trade returns of our imports, comparing 1879 with the last fiscal year, show that in 1879 we imported goods to the value of $80,000,000, and in 1923 goods to the value of $802,000,000, just ten times as much. In the meantime our population just about doubled, so put in another way we now import per capita goods to the amount of $90 whereas forty years ago we imported goods to the value of only $18 per capita. Since then there has been a change in the value of money, that is, a dollar then would buy much more than a dollar now, but that difference would only account for a small part of the increase. Now that increase in imports is due no doubt to several causes, but there is one cause that I think is well worthy of comment, and it is of much larger operation in the business of the country than is generally appreciated. That is the fact that with scientific discoveries, new inventions, improvements in the arts, the general desire of all civilized people to maintain the same standard of living, to have the same conveniences, the same pleasures of life, the same labour-saving devices and the same transportation facilities, there has been created an ever-widening circle of new wants, making it more and more difficult for any country to supply its requirements from within its own territory. This same rule applies to all countries in the world, all countries at least that are advancing. Take the United States for example, a country with a great diversity of climate, a great diversity of products, a great diversity of soils, and yet there we find they are importing more and more from the outside world. Notwithstanding even the Fordney tariff they continue to import more and more. We sell them more goods from Canada now than we did a year ago. The Fordney tariff, high as it is, is not sufficient to form a barrier against that economic law. Now countries in that respect vary greatly. We in Canada are subject to very considerable limitations that do not exist in the United States, for example, climatic, geographical, and a limitation in natural resources of some kinds.

In the debates in 1879, when the National Policy was adopted, one of the strongest arguments put forward was by Sir Charles Tupper, and it ran something like this: He said that in England and the United States they had great deposits of coal and iron; in Belgium they had the same; that by reason of the development of these two resources England and the United States had become great and wealthy, and Belgium wealthy. He said: Here in Canada we have vast deposits of iron ore, vast deposits of coal, and by reason of these two things, if we establish a protective policy, something to care for the industries dependent on the production of iron and steel, we will soon ourselves become wealthy and great. Well, that policy was adopted in 1879, and the protective tariffs in respect of those particular industries were then put in force, and what is the result? In the year 1922 there was not a pound of iron ore produced in Canada that was smelted in Canada. During the last few years the production of iron ore has dwindled to the point of practically nothing. Last year we exported a few thousand tons which was smelted in furnaces in the United States, but here in Canada we find that these great deposits of iron ore which were going to provide the wealth of the country are not being developed, or they are unfit for development, or are so situated that they cannot be economically developed. The mills of Nova Scotia get their iron ore from Switzerland, Sweden and Spain. The mills of Ontario get their iron ore from the United States. All the steel made in Canada is made from foreign ore. The machines we make in Canada out of iron and steel are made out of the products of another country, and the same thing in regard to other products of various kinds sugar, cotton and other textiles.

We are not a self-contained country; we can never be a self-contained country. We have to recognize that we cannot live alone, that we are part of a great world, and that more and more as the years go by we will deal with other countries, irrespective of tariffs. That being so, having to buy more and more, we have to pay for what we buy. How are we going to pay for it. In addition to paying for what we buy, we have to pay $180,000,000 or more per year interest on debts due to foreigners in foreign countries. How are we going to pay that interest and pay for what we have to buy? We can only pay by what we export. What do we export and what can we export? We export the same kind of things that we exported in 1879, largely; that is, the products of the farm, the sea and the forest; they may be in a partially improved form, but, generally speaking, we are confined to these three resources. In the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1922, we exported goods to the value of $931,000,000. Of that sum $772,000,000 was made up of products of the farm, the sea and the forest. There should be a deduction made from the total because of sugar, but a clear eighty per cent of the total exports were made up from those three sources. It was true in 1879, and is still true—and it seems to me that the wise policy in Canada is to recognize the fact—that if we are going to maintain our place in the race of civilization we have to depend on those main sources upon which we depended forty years ago. The products of the mine do not represent a very large percentage of our exports. The exports of manufactured articles amount to a small percentage, this part of our trade being hampered by foreign tariffs. Many of our manufacturers complain very bitterly about the iniquity of foreign countries imposing tariffs which prevent them from getting their goods into those countries. That is a condition that may exist for some time. Then, take the country where we have an open market. In the United States we have an open market for at least two commodities manufactured in Canada, namely boots and shoes and farm machinery, and yet we find that our Canadian manufacturers who have had the benefit of this protective tariff for forty years are not yet able to compete in the largest and most profitable market in the world which is open to them. For that reason, I say it is folly to spend any time encouraging new manufacturers, especially by artificial means. I think the minister has made a mistake in including in his budget this year provision for new duties. I take as strong exception to that as I do to the proposal to bonus new industries. I think industries in Canada should be established only on the basis of their own economic strength. My view is, first, that the government should have set their faces firmly against these demands for new duties and demands for bonuses; and secondly, that they should have considered, not merely the manufacturers of eastern Canada, but the producers of Canada as a whole as well. One would assume from the speeches which have been delivered in this part of the House that the fiscal policy was designed for the benefit of only one class of people, and my complaint against this budget is that it entirely neglects the other class of people.

There has been a good deal said about the question of sectionalism in Canada. This has been spoken of by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and by some members on this side of the House. And it is a serious question, much more serious than many members of this House are willing to recognize. So far as the west is concerned, it is reflected in practical solidarity by one party in this House, a party not connected with either of the two principal and old political parties of this country. That solidarity means something; it means not merely Progressivism or Farmers' party, or anything of that sort, but it means that there is a sense of a real grievance out there, a sense that a wrong is being done to the population of that territory, about 2,000,000 people, who think alike to the extent of probably eighty or ninety per cent. What has been done towards examining the source of their complaints? We hear a good deal of discussion about various things. Some hon. members on this side of the House have said "Why do you talk so much about tariff? You have far greater reason to grumble about freight rates and transportation costs? The tariff does not mean so much in dollars and cents." I would just remind those gentlemen that a tariff is a tax, and an unjust tax means a good deal more than the money exacted. The feeling of injustice is a feeling which produces a great many results that one does not care to contemplate. Hon. members will remember that it was a tax of something like twelve shillings imposed on one John Hampden that ended in the loss of the head of King Charles I. The unjust tax has a psychological effect which many exactions in other ways do not have, and that is something which governments of both political parties have failed to recognize. The situation in western Canada in regard to the tariff is different from that in eastern Canada in one respect, at least. In western Canada we produce, generally speaking, one commodity, namely wheat. That is the great source of wealth there. The total value of wheat and wheat flour for export, which is practically all produced in western Canada amounts to $312,000,000—one-third of the total exports of Canada.

The people who produce that get no benefit from the tariff, though they bear the burden. And that is the reason why they complain; that is the reason why they will complain until some satisfactory adjustment is made; and that is the reason why I say that the government in this instance has failed in its duty in not considering the peculiar position of those people out there. Some of us out there realized the situation; some of us believed that a compromise might be found in the Liberal platform of 1919. We believed that that might be found acceptable to the people of western Canada in regard to that particular question. As far as one can judge from the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), there is no hope now of those portions of the plank of the Liberal platform being carried out by the present government. That being so, I feel compelled to vote against the government's proposals in this case.

Mr. J. L. STANSELL (East Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is with some degree of diffidence that I, as one of the "children of this world" attempt at this time to offer any criticism of the budget, presented by a party that style themselves "the children of light." I can take comfort only in the fact that I have long held the view that saints are created as a result of deeds done in the body, and not as a result of any assertions on their part.

In common with others who have preceded me, I feel that I must extend sincere congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on having spent about forty years in the service of his country, a fact which any man might well be proud of, and on having been able in that time to present the House and the country with seventeen budgets, an accomplishment also worthy of mention. I said that I wished to convey my sincere congratulations. I do not propose to qualify those congratulations by a wholesale condemnation of the provisions of the budget. We realize, I think, that the minister has had a difficult task imposed upon him. Under present conditions it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to please everyone, and I presume the Minister of Finance himself, old parliamentarian as he is, does not expect that the bouquets that we throw in his direction will be entirely denuded of any thorns that might be attached to the stems. Therefore, while commending many features in connection with the budget, I desire to draw attention to a few things that, I think, are not so commendable.

Amongst the exemptions from the operation of the sales tax, I am pleased to notice one feature. I had occasion to make some requests for the exemption of the sales tax as applied to drain tile for farm drainage purposes. I can imagine that it is very difficult in applying the sales tax, where it is necessary to raise revenue, to single out a few articles that should be exempted. In a few words, I should like to point out why, in my judgment, this particular article should be exempted from the operation of the sales tax. It is well known that the condition of agriculture at the present time is such that some encouragment is needed. It has been recognized for some time that much can be done to increase production, and at the same time to increase profits, by the practice of underdraining. The provincial governments recognizing this, have in most cases provided, through the municipalities, an arrangement whereby farmers can secure loans for the establishment of under-drainage. This encouragement is provided by a long-term loan repayable in instalments at a low rate of interest. For the federal government to apply a sales tax to the very same article which the provincial government is, in effect, giving a bounty or assistance to, does not appear to be a sound principle. Therefore, in discussing this matter with the Minister of Finance I represented that to be my view, and in addition, I suppose, other similar representations have been made. I am glaid to note that in the interest of the farmers, this item has been included in the exemptions.

There are also some further changes, particularly with regard to the stamp tax. I cannot see that the stamp tax as applied last session, or as changed as it has been this session, is a fair one for the poor man. It is more a tax in the interest of the rich than in the interest of the poor, and I will endeavour to show why. Under the present condition of many business men and particularly the farmers, it is necessary, in order that they may tide themselves over the present financial depression, for them to secure loans from banks or other sources. A stamp to the extent of two cents for every fifty dollars must be placed on the note by which such a loan is secured. Therefore, when a farmer has to borrow $2,000 from a bank in order to tide him over a financial difficulty, he is taxed because of his misfortune, on the loan, and then because in the operation of sound business principles, that money has again to be paid out by cheque, he is taxed to the same extent over again on the cheque. Therefore, because his cheques are not of sufficient size to obtain any benefit from the minimum tax of $1, he is doubly taxed on the transaction. In comparison with the man who has means of his own or who deals in money in large volume, he is very unjustly taxed under the present system. In my opinion, the minister would have been well advised to have made that tax on both notes and cheques, not to exceed two cents for each $100 instead of two cents for each $50.

The minister in the presentation of his budget referred to the fact that he did not expect to be able to please his friends of low tariff persuasion by going to the extent that they would wish; neither did he expect to please the official opposition by making protection as high as they would wish. I should like to challenge that statement in particular, because I wish to point out that with very few exemptions he is adopting the tariff that was in force by this party that he styles a high tariff party. But, Sir, he has gone a little further than that and has even attempted to out-Herod Herod by adding a stability clause which the Conservative party never saw fit to propose. We in this corner of the House have openly professed our faith in a protective tariff, not because we wish to protect any particular industry, but because we believe it is better to use the proper name and call a spade a spade. I was very much impressed with the clear definition of the terms, "protective tariff" and "tariff for revenue" as given by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler). In our platform we ask only for that measure of protection which will enable men and money to be employed in Canada; we do not ask for any more than that. Should any interest or any hon. member ask for more? Should any interest or any hon. member expect less? This stability clause is evidently a stumbling block to our friends to the left. It is perhaps a new Liberal doctrine, one never before propounded, and not at all in my judgment in keeping with the one presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) last year. I refer to Hansard of last session at page 2843 wherein the Minister of Finance uses the following words:

> I say, in all sincerity, that this budget ought to commend itself to our Progressive friends, not as a finality, not as something that is entirely in line with their own views, but as something which follows the right direction, and, so far as it goes it should have their cordial support.

There is nothing whatever in that about tariff stability, and I am not at all surprised that my friends to my left are disappointed that this stability clause has been inserted. This new doctrine of the Liberal party evidently has just a little too much kick in it for my friends to my left; and there is a suspicion that like another article of commerce of considerable strength, it has its source in Montreal.

In my opinion the most serious feature of the budget is its failure to balance. I am well aware of the many claims which there are upon the revenue of this country, but it is over four years since the war concluded and it seems to me that the time has come when in the interest of the country we should be able to balance revenue and expenditure. I know, too, that it would not be popular at the present time to increase taxation. But there are two methods by which the budget of the private individual, the corporation of the country itself may be balanced; one is an increased revenue and the other a decrease of expenditure. I fully realize the difficulties that present themselves to public men in positions of responsibility when they attempt to keep down expenditure. But I remember, as well, that this government, before they attained power, urged that this should be done. The war was over, they said, and the government of that day should balance the budget. Yet, after two sessions in office, the present Minister of Finance still tells us that there will be a heavy increase in the debt this year and we must look forward to another increase next year. This is a matter for serious reflection on the part of every hon. gentleman. Surely some method might be adopted of curtailing expenditures in order to make the budget balance. A great deal might have been accomplished to encourage immigration and restore confidence in the country if heroic measures had been adopted in this respect, so that the attention of the world might be directed to the condition in which Canada should be financially to-day. Among the various criticisms which might be directed at the provisions of the budget, I am convinced that this is one of the most serious, and now, their second session in power, hon. gentlemen opposite should have made some earnest attempt to bring down to the House a balanced budget with a promise of a reduction of debt for the year to come.

Let me direct a few words to a subject of great importance, namely, agriculture. I I listened with interest to the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) a few nights ago and I recalled a statement attributed to the present Minister of Finance —that responsibility sobers men. After listening to the sober reflections, of about three hours' duration, of the Minister of Agriculture, in which he dealt with various subjects including razor-back hogs and dunghill hens and many other things, from the fear of God to the crack of doom, I wondered in what frame of mind the hon. gentleman was before he sobered up. Among other bits of advice that he offered to hon. members of the farming profession on my left, one thing which struck me was his exhortation to pray for rain. He tendered this as a solution of some of the difficulties of the farmer to-day. Well, Sir, in my judgment, if the farming interest in this country was not considered a fit subject for prayer when the minister arose, the House must have been fully seized of the necessity before he sat down.

There is one subject connected with agriculture on which I desire to say something, and that is the accredited herd system operated under the Department of Agriculture. This is something the importance of which has been stressed many times on the floor of the House, and some criticism has been offered because the valuation has been lowered. In my opinion the valuation was not too high, but the trouble was that in many cases an ordinary animal was valued up to the maximum. The real need of reform lay in the proper valuation of animals under the system that we had. I am well aware, however, that the process of accrediting the pure-bred herds of the country is one that entails a tremendous amount of money and is a great drain on the revenues of Canada, and therefore I wish to point out something which I think should be done in the way of investigation. The ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Tolmie) in his address on the budget emphasized the necessity for an investigation. It may not be popular for me to say so, but I am going to state what is a well recognized fact among those who are conducting these tests and who are in a position to know. It is not claimed by the best informed of these men that this test as at present applied is perfect; in fact they admit it is only so to the extent of 90 per cent. That refers, however to the number of animals condemned and slaughtered which are found not to have been suffering from the disease. The test is also imperfect in another way, that it does not determine whether an animal simply has the germ of the disease or whether it is in the advanced stages.

But in my judgment the most pressing necessity is for us to know whether the animals which remain are affected through failure of the test to disclose their true condition. I think it is apparent to every hon. member that great as the danger might be in the condemnation of animals not infected it is slight compared to the danger of leaving animals in the herd in which the disease has not been disclosed by the test. Therefore I would strongly recommend to the minister that before further money is voted for this purpose some investigation should be conducted with a view to finding how accurate the test is as applied to the animals left in the herd. There is only one way in which this can be discovered, and in comparison with the total amount of money expended the cost would be only trifling. A few herds of different breeds in localities where the disease is known to exist should be purchased outright by the government, and after the test has been carefully applied by competent men in the department the animals should be slaughtered and a thorough investigation made to determine whether by any possibility the test falls short of disclosing the disease and thus leaving some infected animals in the herd, which of course would be a greater source of danger because we would be enjoying a sense of false security by the fact that we thought every animal tested was healthy. This is a serious danger and the amount of money involved is sufficient to justify an investigation being undertaken without delay.

In view of the discussion that has taken place during the past week it is perhaps advisable to consider the needs of agriculture to-day. We have been endeavouring in this House and in a special committee to find out just what these needs are. I have no desire to refer to anything that has taken place in that committee, I merely propose to offer a few suggestions on the point from my practical knowledge of farming conditions. One of the first needs of agriculture is a little sympathetic consideration on the part of other interests in this country. I am well aware, Mr. Speaker, that radical views are held by some members of the farming profession as well as by those of other professions, but one of the first essentials in the solution of any problem is the spirit in which the different interests concerned get together and compare notes and view the problem from various angles. I have never yet heard the statement from a man who has made a careful investigation into agricultural conditions that farming as a commercial proposition could be made profitable. Now, this is a serious state of affairs. I am not one of those who preach blue ruin, but I do believe in looking conditions squarely in the face.

Then there is the attitude of some members of the party to my left, and I trust they will bear patiently with me if I offer any criticism of their conduct. There is a tendency on the part of many of us when we wish to accomplish certain objects in which we are particularly interested to voice the most extreme views in order to make them impressive. I fear the representatives of the farming industry have not been entirely free from this charge. Extreme demands on the part of one class will be met by extremes from other professions and deadlock will result. A disposition to sacrifice a little by way of compromise might furnish a solution for present difficulties. Without such action the situation is almost hopeless.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Would the hon. gentleman tell me just what the agricultural industry could sacrifice to-day to other industries?

Mr. STANSELL: The hon. member is doing just what I was endeavouring by a gentle hint to prevent him doing. I am quite in sympathy with the attitude of other members who think differently from me, and I am always willing to extend to them full liberty of expression of their opinions. As a farmer, I am prepared to say that farmers have made considerable sacrifices; and I must in all justice say as well that many attempts have been made on the part of other interests and of governments to do something to assist the farmers. These efforts may not all have been well directed but it is the part of courtesy and good judgment to give credit for the intentions behind those efforts—just as essential as it is to paint the dark side of the picture regarding agriculture.

Apparently there is a tendency on the part of some to feel that all the difficulties of the farmers to-day are due to the tariff. I am not going to say that the tariff does not play some part in these difficulties, but I do say that there are many other things that can be done to improve conditions—many that can be undertaken by the farming interests themselves. One of the outstanding needs of agriculture at the present time is for provision to be made—possibly by the provincial governments—for a system of long-term loans to enable men with small capital to purchase farms at a reasonable rate of interest and with repayment by annual instalments of principal and interest extended over a term of years, possibly twenty or more. I think that is something that every interest in this country should favour. Such a system would do a great deal to encourage immigration to take up farming and it would also tend to keep young men on the farms. The short loans required by farmers for the feeding of stock and similar operations could very well be handled by our present banking system with perhaps a little adjustment.

Another thing necessary in the interests of the farmers is better marketing facilities. In some respects provision may be made for these facilities through government assistance, but I believe that in the end a solution can only be found in the efforts of the farmers themselves. A great deal has been done by our colleges and our experimental farms to show us how to produce more, but very little has been contributed from those sources to show how to market profitably what we produce and how to conduct our farming operations at a profit to ourselves. Much of the money that is being expended along this line in these institutions might, in my judgment, be even better expended if some attention was devoted to methods of bringing about a better system of marketing and to demonstrating how the various operations of the farm can be conducted at a profit.

Some reference has been made to the Liberal party, now on the government benches. I do not propose to discuss at great length the Liberal platform of 1919; it does not seem to be an agreeable subject to some hon. members. However, the government has been two sessions in office and it is only fair to look over its record thus far and see how well it is living up to expectations. I will give them credit for some things at least. Last session, through a slight reduction in the tariff on farm implements, which was more than offset by an increase in the sales tax, they succeeded in putting an if in the tariff. But this session they have more than counterbalanced that by putting a raise into raisins. There is one thing, however, that in the two sessions they have failed to do, and that is to put form in their platform. In direct opposition the Finance Minister now makes a stab at tariff stability concerning which the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Raymond) made the most eloquent and probably the best explanation that has been given; he said that tariff stability did not mean that the government were not moving at all—I infer also it did not mean that they were making progress in the right direction—but it did mean that they were not easily upset. Well, it seems to me that the people have a right to demand a little bit more than what is involved in that explanation. It is not sufficient to say that they are making progress in a circle and that they are not easily upset; the people who put faith in the tariff platform of the party now in power have a right to ask when the ship is going to make port. I would like to follow this illustration a little further, because it seems to be very apt. When is the ship going to deliver the cargo entrusted to it? There was also chartered by another party in this country a ship to carry a cargo of political professions very similar to the former. Some of us did not have the faith that others did in the quality of those two ships, which were so nearly alike that it was difficult to distinguish between them. Through certain circumstances the one chartered by the Liberal party obtained the right to make the first voyage. Some of the things that were to form part of the cargo of that ship were the following: Tariff reductions, free foodstuffs, free agricultural implements and instruments of production, and so on; relief from taxation, reduction of debt, relief from government by orders in council, a producers' and consumers' tariff, and a number of other things, all of which were promised if the charterers of the ship were given control of the people's affairs. As to tariff reductions, some have been made, but they have been offset by increases and bounties on other articles. The free list has been entirely abandoned. Relief from taxation, especially the sales tax, has been given by an increase in taxation, and reduction of debt has been dealt with by an increase of debt. Freedom from orders in council has been provided to the extent of increasing the number of orders in council, and the producers' and consumers' tariff—none of us seemed to be quite clear what it meant—has been entirely abandoned. The whole thing was styled as responsible government. Now, this ship was equipped with a chart and compass, and provisions were necessary for a voyage of that kind. The provisions have been described as "the letter and the spirit." The provision of the letter was made in Ottawa in 1919 while the spirit had its source in another province. If there has been criticism of this phase of the voyage it is that while the ship was well furnished with the spirit there was not quite enough of the more material thing, the letter. A majority of the Canadian people put faith in that ship and in her ability to deliver the goods.

Many of our friends to the left, having a similar ship, were watching with interest the voyage of the one to which I have been referring and anxiously awaiting the delivery of the cargo. Let us try to imagine the feelings of these gentlemen who have been waiting for delivery of the goods. Well, when a wireless was sent asking for an explanation of the delay—the voyage having been continued for seventeen months but still with no port in sight—the hon. member for Brantford explained what tariff stability was. He told all the anxious ones to take comfort, that "we are still right side up,"—he might have added the two accompanying words, "with care." But in my judgment those who put faith in that ship, those who have been anxiously waiting, are entitled to more than that; they are entitled to know how long it will be before this cargo, including substantial reductions in the tariff, is to be delivered. There are some reports—I do not know how true—that some members of the crew became discouraged. We know that one at least has jumped overboard and is attempting to swim to port. It is not expected that he will be able to bring much of the cargo with him. It is also reported that others are about to follow. One of the officers is reported to be suffering from wounds and is now in the south recuperating. The Solicitor-General, so apt in quoting scripture, has gone to his reward. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) from whom much was expected in the way of providing solutions for all the difficulties of the labouring men and the common people, seems to be somewhat shackled. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), the bold Lochinvar from out the West, is apparently otherwise employed. The cargo has proven of no value, and the ship is on the rocks. The captain is indisposed and the mate labors to "Budget." These, it seems to me, are some of the conclusions that must be entertained by those who put faith in that particular party.

In closing let me say that in times past there was another ship chartered by the Conservative party, known as the National Policy. No doubt that party made some mistakes; no doubt they have not kept a perfectly accurate course throughout the whole voyage, but in the main they have tried to steer a safe course in the national interest, avoiding the rocks of high protection on the one hand, and the shoals of free trade on the other—because under present international conditions I believe that free trade can only be adopted as a theory; it cannot be put in practice—therefore, we must avoid the rocks of high protection on the one hand, and the shoals of free trade on the other. In an endeavour to do so we are not advertising stability in the sense that we believe we have reached the point where no further reductions can be made. We are still ready to subscribe to our platform even though the measure of protection to-day may not be the same measure required five years hence, but we are ready to subscribe to the policy that we only want such a measure of protection as will keep our money and our men employed in Canada—no more and no less. We do not think that anyone should ask for less.

I realize some of the problems affecting our people in the East and some of the problems affecting also our friends in the West. I believe the majority of right-thinking people and especially, may I add, of the Conservative party, will be willing to meet in a compromise and try to do something towards providing a solution for the difficulties that present themselves to the Canadian people to-day in an effort to avoid the rocks and shoals and to carry the ship of state, though not as at present manned, but as we hope it soon will be, safely on to national progress and prosperity.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Saskatoon): The discussion on the budget has turned mostly on the trade of the country, and I wish to discuss it to-night from that standpoint. Tidings are reaching us from different parts of the country of a movement unparalleled in our history, composed of men and women who have spent years of hard work founding a home and raising a family, and indeed from one end of the Dominion comes news of a section of people, although very small, talking of secession. We may well ask ourselves at this time what there is in the government of the country that is out of touch with the problems of humanity as represented by the workers of the country, and is there any way to remedy the condition? Now, bad as times have been this last year on the farms of Canada, the government has seen fit to increase the expenses in the coming year, and to continue the process, begun many years ago, of closing up the last gap of liberty that the consumers of the country ever possessed. Notwithstanding all that the Prime Minister said this afternoon, the fact remains that the country did look to the Liberal party as the party of free trade.

Another fact is established conclusively by this budget; that is that the Liberal party is not a free trade party, that it has abandoned the principle that established it as a free trade party, that it is now in line directly with the party whose forebears established the national policy of trade penalties and that nothing is to be henceforth expected from the Liberal party in the line of free trade more than from the original party of protection. The Prime Minister says that this is not a protectionist budget. I wonder if it can be called a free trade budget. I think he means it is a budget of stability. But is there anything in it that would lead the public to expect some relief from the burden of taxation imposed by the tariff? He said that economists must take their stand in the practical world as they find it. Who are the economists? Since 1897 I have not known of an economist. I have not known of a professor of economy in any of our colleges or universities who has come out with treatises on this subject in a way to guide the public. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that since that time the mouths of the economists have been closed, and for a certain reason. A theory, he said, is different from practice. We must be careful of capital.

What is capital? Is capital only that which is liquid, looking for investment? Is capital only that which is in the hands of the manufacturer invested in a manufacturing industry? Is there no capital invested in the farms of the country by the million men engaged in that industry? What is capital? Referring to the men who have spent twenty years of their life building homes in the new parts of this country, and who now see everything slipping from them by the unjust conditions placed on their backs, I ask this House, in all fairness, is that twenty years of hard work not a very substantial form of capital?

The Prime Minister says he does not object to our theory, but to the methods we adopt to achieve our ends. He speaks of the great men of the past generation in England who have had their names emblazoned on the pages of history, and he asks, did they take the same methods and leave their party? I am not acquainted with the lives of all those men, but I do know of one in particular, John Bright, who did leave his party. He left his party, formed the Anti-Corn League and was willing to co-operate with any one for the purpose of taking duties off the necessities of life at that time.

The Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) says that if the world needs anything to-day it needs stability in industry, but, in speaking of industry, he forgot to mention agriculture even once. Does the agricultural industry of this country need no stability? If there is one industry in this country more than another that needs stability at this time, it is that one basic industry on which the prosperity of every other industry depends. The Prime Minister says we must take note of what the United States is doing. That is an old protectionist argument. It is venerable only in its age. There is nothing in it. He says we must let the United States know that if they sell they have got to buy. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that when we can buy our goods from the cheapest market in the world we are bringing the cost of production on our farms in line with the world's prices. Production will then be made easier and our goods for export will be produced somewhat in line with the world's prices. He blames the untoward conditions of agriculture and the country at this time on the Great War, which has now been over for five years He says that through that, the demand for grain is gone. I want to inform the House to-night that we have about a 75 per cent better price for our grain than we were getting in pre-war days. Grain is the thing we have demand for, and we can sell it at all times. The wheat of western Canada is the chief producer of the income of this country, and it is the only thing on the farms that we are sure of finding a market for at the present time. We are not grumbling at the prices of that product; our grievance is as regards the price of everything we have to buy in order to raise that product.

The lowering of the tariff against Great Britain is more than offset by the restriction placed upon goods coming in, of having them all unloaded at Canadian ports. This will entail a haul of some 540 miles more by rail. It will certainly deprive our Canadian National Railway of a good part of its income, as it cannot be expected that the goods will come in any volume, at least in nothing like the same volume as at present. But evidently in this case the ear of the government has been open to the demands of the privileged monopolies rather than to the needs of the people.

The increase also in the duty on raisins is bound to raise the price of a very necessary commodity. "Oh", but you say, "we will get them from Australia." The raisin and current industry in Australia is still simply in the experimental stage, and in any case the Australian people do not have to sell those commodities any cheaper than the Californian price on which we shall have to pay three cents per pound.

The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) declared that the trade of Canada is passing through a very serious, a very critical time, made critical by the fact of that trade having been established by a tariff. He blames the tariff for that. Yet the government of which he is a member is giving the same privilege to an industry about to be set up in Canada for the first time for the manufacture of artificial silk. After operating for one year, this industry will be entitled to the same consideration as, he says, applies now to all other industries established under the tariff. In other words, this new calf raised on the tariff cow, in forty years time will still have to be fed from the same source. I have never yet heard an advocate of protection put up a logical reason why a trade penalty should be imposed on any article of commerce, particularly the necessities of life. But even from a protectionist standpoint, is there any logic in encouraging the copper industry by a bounty and, at the same time, placing foreign copper on the free list? I am a free trader, but I am trying to look at this from a protectionist standpoint. I confess the ways of the protectionist mind have been a closed mystery to me for a long time. Evidently there is in this an attempt to please the home producer as well as the manufacturer.

This afternoon a change was made in the duty on sugar. To my mind the sugar combine needs no protection. The same gentle men who to-day control the price of sugar in this country, very largely control the credit to the Cuban producers, and they are able to raise or lower the price of the raw product just as they see fit. As I state, they need no protection.

Some of my hon. friends to my right would like to see, in the words of the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) a tariff commission, so that we could have a scientifically constructed tariff. There can be no such thing as a scientific tariff. No man who has given any thought to that subject will ever try to reconcile the two words "scientific" and "tariff." He might as well try to say that the Atlantic ocean was dry as to apply the word "science" to the tariff. Science aims at the vindication of natural laws, while tariff taxes are devised for the express purpose of circumventing natural laws as regards trade. A tariff for revenue is just as contradictory, except where it is levied on goods that are not made at home. Great Britain raises revenue by a tariff, and the Conservatives do not forget to tell us about that; but their tariff is placed on articles of luxury and those which are not produced in Great Britain. The British people, after about seventy-five years of the freest kind of trade in the modern world, will not allow the skinning process to go on that our taxpayers are subjected to.

The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Raymond), speaking the other evening, declared that the tariff is not understood by some of us who undertake to discuss it. He informs us that it is a study in natural psychology whatever that means. I want to inform my hon. friend that one thing we on this side of the House know quite well, is that the tariff is a privilege given to one class. Somebody has to pay for that privilege and we know very well who pays for it. If it is simply the hallucination of a disordered mind, as he suggests, I submit that that state belongs rather to those who fancy a tariff confers a right by law to get something for nothing, than to those who are plundered. It may be said that all citizens, all city dwellers, doctors, lawyers, mechanics and others, are taxed alike to bear the burden of the tariff placed upon other classes; but the doctor, or the lawyer, or the mechanic sets the remuneration for his services according to the cost of living. Even the working man, the labourer, through organization, is able to maintain the same high rate for his services, and still to pass the tariff tax on to someone else. That someone else, more particularly than any other in this country, is the farmer, and since his price is set for him by the open markets of the world, he is not able to pass on to others the unjust burden that the manufacturer of the commodities he needs places upon all other classes. The farm products of this country must be sold in competition with the product of all the cheapest labour throughout the whole world, including Europe and Asia alike. The United States farmers have been disillusioned since the Fordney tariff has been placed against us in that country. I want to read an extract from an editorial I received the other day because nothing better exposes the fallacy of the protective tariff. Look at it from any angle you like, it is a fallacy, whether it is to increase prices in favour of the farmers or is intended to raise revenue. This editorial says:

> A committee of experts employed by the Fair Tariff League of the United States have estimated that on the agricultural schedule farmers in the state of Kansas gain $260,000 as producers and lose $2,500,000 as consumers, while on manufactured goods the farmers of the State gain $257,000 and lose $30,000,000.

This committee has started a similar investigation in Nebraska and the farmers are beginning to see the nigger in the tariff woodpile. The time has about arrived when the Canadian farmer will no longer be the beast of burden of this nation as he has been in the past and will not suffer the taunts and insults that have been thrown at him by all other classes, including indeed some of the members of this House, simply because he seeks to make known the truth in regard to the conditions that surround him. Even the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the trouble with the hon. gentleman?

Mr. EVANS: I was going to say that the Minister of Agriculture himself describes the statements of a patriotic minority who seek to make known the truth in this House as so much bluff; he regards it as a game, at which he was playing, some time ago himself. The hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) also says that the Progressive party has been wholly misled by false literature, and has been making reckless insinuations regardless of the facts. In other words, I suppose he means that they are too ignorant to know better. But the strange thing about agriculture these days is that no one knows anything about it except those who have never been at it, or those who have been at it and failed and have recently taken refuge, perhaps in the Civil Service, or in other branches of business, perhaps on some experimental farm or on some commission, or even, perhaps, in politics.

There is even unfairness to-day in the difference of attitude on the part of the government as between city and rural dwellers. Since confederation everything has been sacrificed in this country to the building up of the cities, and I believe that even in the Civil Service there is great unfairness and partiality as between the country and the city employees. I was asked to mention in this particular the plight of one class of men to-day who are not receiving a fair remuneration for their work, or anything that bears any comparison to the wages paid to a similar class of men in the Civil Service. I refer to the rural mail carriers. They are entitled to something more than they are getting. They are men who have to brave all kinds of weather and furnish their own outfit, and they are bound down by a contract to deliver their mail on time. I was asked to make a plea for them, and seeing the justice of their demand I do not hesitate to do so, nor do I apologize.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) declared that last year certain manufacturers realized the necessity for the restoration of the Crowsnest pass agreement and although this was against their own interests, the hon. member said, they were not complaining. As a matter of fact, all manufacturers have been depicted in this House as the most docile class of men, bearing with fortitude the hard conditions that are imposed upon them at the present time and never squealing. Well, why should they squeal? What have the manufacturers to complain of? Their will is dominant in this House. They have been served since 1879 submissively by the government of this country irrespective of party, and the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) declaring that they have been served better by the present government than under his régime, quoted a list of farm implements which have been increased in price in proof of that assertion.

From the Progressive standpoint, the whole controversy that has taken place in this debate,—all the speeches delivered yesterday, able and eloquent speeches, by the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) and others—has been as to which party has been serving the big interests the best, which has been most faithful to the principle of protection. Sir Richard Cartwright declared at the Ottawa Convention in 1893, as reported at page 42 of the official report of that convention, that up to that time, after only thirteen years of the National Policy, hardly less than $1,000,000,000 had been filched from the pockets of the people for the purpose of entrenching the oppressors of this nation in power and enabling them to defeat the wishes of the people. What have they to complain of? By a law they were made the wards of this nation in 1879, and by 1897 they had become its masters; and since then the government of this country has been, irrespective of party, obedient to all their wishes. That $1,000,000,000 represents more than the whole of the indemnity that Germany dared to impose upon France after the war of 1871; the total sum which the victors dared exact from a vanquished nation of forty millions was taken from the pockets of the Canadian people during the first thirteen years of the National Policy, in a country with a population at that time of less than five millions. Now, Sir Richard was accepted at that time all over the Dominion as the greatest authority on trade statistics.

But let us take the next fourteen years, up to 1907, the date of the second Fielding tariff revision. Assuming that Sir Richard was right in his computation as to the first thirteen years, the years between 1893 and 1907 must have robbed this nation of one and a half billion of dollars, because during that time we increased in population by one and a half millions, and the dutiable items had increased from three hundred and forty to four hundred and eighty; besides it was during this period that certain provinces gave substantial aid to the steel industry and many municipalities aided the establishment of certain industries within their own borders.

But I come to another phase of the question. Is the money cost all that is to be considered? What was the moral cost in all those years? The right hon. leader of the Opposition pointed out yesterday the seriousness of a government scrapping its pre-election pledges. Now, in the same speech of Sir Richard Cartwright I gleaned the following:

> It must be obvious to everyone who will give the slightest consideration to the working of the protective system in this country or elsewhere that the moment you introduce that system you make legal provision for corruption on a most extensive scale. The moment you introduce the protective system you create a class whose interests are essentially different from those of the people at large, and who become ready contributors to corruption funds, sharing with their masters the plunder they have been enabled to filch from the pockets of the people.

In the House of Commons debates of April 11, 1890, Sir Richard, in answer to a question from the Honourable Mackenzie Bowell, declared:

> The whole business of protection is robbery, legalized robbery, You subsidize the manufacturers, and in return the manufacturers subsidize you. The thing is openly done by both parties to the transaction.

In 1891 when he published Canada and the Canadian people, Goldwin Smith made exactly the same charge. Who will say to-day that a similar debauchery is not practised when politicians will still defend a system of revenue that places one dollar in the treasury and five in the pockets of the protected interests? Previous to 1896 a system of education in opposition to the National Policy with all that it entailed, was carried on by the Liberal party. They educated the people to the evils of the protective system and the benefits of free trade; but after 1897 this educational effort ceased, and since that time a generation of young Canadians has grown up which sees nothing better in the public life of this country than was described by Sir Richard Cartwright. I think we need go no further to find what is the matter with this Dominion to-day. This is the state of affairs at the present time, and those on both sides of this House who advocate the maintenance of the present system are doing so in face of the fact that people have been driven out of their very homes from the great basic industry of agriculture, and that our workers are seeking employment in another country.

Now, the member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) put the blame on the farmers themselves for their present unsatisfactory condition and said it was due to their lack of method and industry. He even went so far as to declare that the pioneers of to-day were of the ginger pop kind—all gas and no kick. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are thirty-five of those pioneers in this little group to which I belong, and they are not any of the gassy kind either. Some of us furnished our quota to the brave army that fought for the liberties of this Dominion. Many of us who had begun to take life a little easier resumed active work on the farm in order that our sons might fight the battle of freedom. No, we are not of the gassy kind. We did not try to hide our boys in the woods or in theological seminaries either. And we are not mentally or commercially helpless, as the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Raymond) describes those he is pleading for and on whose behalf he exclaims, "Oh, if you don't leave us alone we shall die."

In this debate the advocates of trade penalties have expatiated on the wealth of our natural resources, and at the same time they whine at their helplessness to make use of those resources. And yet they charge us with seeking paternalism from this government. I say, Mr. Speaker, it would be better for this nation if these people depended on their own industrial ability and ceased whining about the stability of the tariff. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but it does not require much prophetic skill to foresee that there will be no stability in this country until all our people shall enjoy their citizenship in the fullest degree. The phrase has frequently been used in this House, "Canada for the Canadians." Who are the Canadians? Have the agriculturists and workers no part in this Dominion? At last Friday's sitting of this House there was brought forth a plea for the workers at Powell river, British Columbia, and it was found there was no way in which parliament could protect those people from the unjust and unreasonable action of their employers. It is true the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) made a very fine speech about the decisions of the Versailles Conference; but the workers of this country to-day are like hungry lads outside a confectioner's shop window When these workers are driven to desperation the Minister of National Defence will not hesitate to send the militia there as he sent them to Sydney last year. In the past we have seen empires rise, reach their zenith, wane and pass away. The verdict of history points to the cause as being the lack of interest on the part of the common people in their civilization and their government. Russia is the last case in point where the wedge of privilege was driven in to cause a cleavage and separate the toilers from any interest they might have in their common wealth.

If the protectionist dominions of the British Empire, and especially this Dominion, fell in line with the Mother Country in a free trade policy they would place themselves in a position to share with her the material benefits which the economic blunders of other nations are forcing upon her in the hope of bringing about her ruin. England to-day is the centre, the trading mart, of the world, just as she used to be. Month by month she is increasing her trade and shipbuilding, while we are making the same mistake as the United States did some years ago when she taxed foreign goods and shipping in the hope of making that country the great trading and carrying country of the world. Our short-sighted policy of placing a penalty on the trade of the country has involved this Dominion in a huge deficit in respect of our merchant marine fleet, and the day is close at hand when we shall see the end of that venture unless we reverse our national policy. England is still the greatest carrier of the world. She cares nought for the tariffs of other countries; the mistaken policies of other countries are keeping the cost of production so low in Great Britain that tariff policies of other lands make little difference to her. Canada, under the mistaken policy of protection, has impoverished the industries natural to this country in order to maintain an export trade for industries that admittedly cannot stand on their own feet. I say admittedly, and this, I want to inform my hon. friends, is where the hallucination may be again applied. Our statesmen to-day, ignorant of economies, are refusing, even if they are able, to see the consequences of their own action in the depletion of the farms in every province of this Dominion and the exodus of mechanics to seek work in other lands. The fact is that they have killed their own home market by the shortsighted policy of protection.

[Mr. Evans.]

Britain will be the first country in the world to free herself from the abnormal load of debt occasioned by the war, in which she placed all her allies in a position to resist the kaiserism and bondage that threatened the world at that time. Britain has now arrested the decline in shipbuilding. Last month an increase was reported in the tonnage built of 24,000 tons over the output for the previous three months, while we in Canada have a modern merchant marine fleet which under present policy we would be well rid of. Britain's exports expanded by $15,000,000 in the same period, and the fiscal year which has just terminated yielded a surplus revenue of $500,000,000, which is being applied to the redemption of the public debt, thus simplifying the problem of national finance for the present year. And most important of all, there is a reduction of 6 pence in the pound in the income tax, as well as a cutting of the corporation tax in half and a lowering of the excise on certain articles. During the year gone by we, on the other hand, have had to increase our national debt and the Minister of Finance is hard put to it to find sufficient revenue for the current year.

Protectionist countries contribute to the cheapness of production in Britain by taxing themselves to bonus importations into that country, and this generosity on our part is so costly that we have in the past been keeping the financiers of Britain and other countries busy furnishing loans to make good the difference. At the same time, our natural resources are not developed as they should be, and we are stifling to death the one basic industry that may be able under other conditions to pay its way—agriculture.

I did hope to see in this budget some consistency regarding the tariff. If we need tariff for revenue, why do we maintain tariff laws and regulations that can absolutely, at the will of the minister, prohibit imports on which revenue may be collected? I am speaking now of the anti-dumping clause with its latest amendments and regulations, all interpreted in favour of those whose interest it is to eliminate competition and not to collect revenue. When we go back to our constituencies what shall we advise our people to do? Shall we tell them to buy foreign-made goods so that we may furnish revenue for the carrying on of government? Or shall we advise them to buy the home-made product enhanced in price by import penalties and help to swell the coffers of the protected industries, the distributing combines, and so on, and give them the increase of power that goes with money to dictate the policy of this country?

Surely there are plenty of ways to collect revenue besides the stupid, vicious, insatiable method of placing a penalty on all our exchange of goods with other countries.

We have been accused of not coming forward with any policy of taxation. I think our amendment is pretty plain in that respect, but I would recommend, since both Liberal and Conservative protectionists are anxious about a tariff for revenue, the abolishing the anti-dumping act with all its regulations and thus enable our co-operative concerns throughout the land to flourish. To do this will increase the revenue by the importation of foreign goods on which duty may be collected. Since the distributing combines will not allow goods to be co-operatively distributed, it is a vicious, a feudalistic act on the part of the government to tie the hands of the people by any such unreasonable legislation. Its removal will tend to lower the cost of living and consequently the cost of production, which will be an incentive to agriculture and manufacture alike. If there is one form of protection that our Canadian Manufacturers Association should be careful to cultivate and preserve, it is a national spirit of co-operation on the part of the home consumer. This, however, they have destroyed by refusing to sell except through "legitimate channels of trade," as they term it—through combinations, jobbers, wholesalers, and so on. These bodies have become so tyrannical that I believe even some of the manufacturers themselves are beginning to squirm.

The cost of living to-day in Canada is higher than in the United States or Britain, and it cannot come down until the people have freedom as to where they shall purchase what they need. The distributing combine has gained in strength since they found that the anti-combine bill of 1910 was a still-born babe. I have grave doubts that the present enactment is going to show much more life.

But to return to sources of revenue, I would recommend an even sharper graduation on big incomes than we at present impose. A graduated inheritance tax should be a lucrative source of continuous revenue. The provinces to some extent make use of it. But through the granting of franchises many of our citizens have inherited great wealth that has been created by the community at large. It is only right that the people should share a part of the wealth they themselves have created. It is certainly in the interests of a real commonwealth to diffuse great fortunes; it helps to smooth out class distinctions and to afford equal opportunity to all. Colossal fortunes are often made these days in, say, oil grants, which belong to the community. We are not making as much of this resource as we should. When great fortunes are attained simply by luck, and sometimes perhaps by manipulation, it is unfair to curb the opportunities of others by a concentration of wealth in a few hands.

I would suggest, as is done in the amendment, an extension of excise. Heavier taxes on luxuries might be imposed to produce revenue. But to say that revenue can only be collected by giving a monopoly to certain privileged ones, why, I do not think you could deceive a school boy with such a tale.

Withal I would recommend that greater attention be paid to economy. At a time like this when the trade of the country is contracting rather than expanding, it surely does not call for such lavish expenditure on public works, geodetic surveys and the like. Besides taking the estimates for this year, members from Quebec and the Maritime provinces seem to make a business of playing Santa Claus to all their little fishing towns and villages, and the government seem willing that such should be the case, making a business of patronage.

No definite policy seems to be followed in any of our national developments. Too much is done according to political party expediency. The Welland canal was begun at a time when the nation could not afford it and when it was not particularly needed.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is the hon. member not aware that the Welland canal was started largely at the request of western people?

Mr. EVANS: I want to inform the hon. minister that I have been in touch very largely with western thought, and I have never known from any of the organized interests in western Canada, either from the United Farmers of Manitoba or Alberta, from the Grain Growers' Association of Saskatchewan, or from any united boards of trade a demand for the Welland canal. I say that that work was begun at a time when the nation could not afford it, and when it was not particularly needed, while on another project $12,000,000 worth of work and material was left to go for naught and will now have to be redone. I think that altogether history will record the policy of Canadian statesmen from confederation down to the present time as a policy of blind selfishness in conducting the trade of the country along certain channels through certain hands without any thought of the country's need.

The hon. member for Halifax condemned the Hudson Bay railway project, but defended the commencement of the Welland canal after the Hudson Bay railway project had been abandoned because the nation could not go on with it for want of money. Whatever doubt there is regarding the Hudson Bay railway and the navigation of the straits, the time to raise any objection was surely before some $23,000,000 was spent on that work, nearly half of which has been left to go for naught because some people thought their interests would be hurt by its completion.

The statement is often made in this country, it has often been made in this House, that Canada is a hard country to govern. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is only hard to govern to the extent that in our national life the wedge of privilege has been driven in between the interests of different classes and areas of this Dominion. If those responsible for the administration of this country would consider the needs of the Dominion instead of the exigencies of party things would be different. To-day independent thought is stifled in our colleges and universities. Newspapers are controlled, credit is withheld, enterprise killed and confidence destroyed. Our natural resources go undeveloped while agriculturists and workers are leaving the country. Canada is a country of great potential wealth, but we cannot hope to create a nation by class privilege. We must view these things with a broad outlook upon the fields of the future, and leave to our posterity the foundation of a true democracy.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if for no other reason I feel that I should rise now to express my warmest thanks to the hon. members in all quarters of the House who during this debate have said so many kind words concerning myself. I appreciate very much these manifestations of their goodwill, and I give them in all quarters my warmest and grateful thanks.

Now, with regard to the budget debate, so much has been said from this side of the House in review of objections that have been raised and the ground has been so well covered in the magnificent address delivered to-day by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), that there really would be no excuse for my occupying the attention of the House in a lengthy address. I have no intention of doing so. I desire to be brief, but there are a few points, chiefly in the speech of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), and the ex-Prime Minister, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), to which I should like to allude, but I promise the House that I shall not detain them at any considerable length.

[Mr. Evans.]

The criticisms offered by my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) were in the main kindly and not calculated to make me or anybody else angry. On the whole I have not much fault to find with him. One criticism that he offered was that I was too conservative in my estimates of the revenue for the year. Well, perhaps I was, but will my hon. friend not agree with me that on the whole it is better in forming estimates of the revenue to be conservative than be extravagant in the other direction? I think it is wiser.

My hon. friend again and again in the course of his address argued that we should have armed ourselves—I think that is the word he used—in our French relations, in relation to the United States, in relation to all our trade business with foreign countries, by first increasing our tariff to a high point in order that, as they say, we should have something to trade with. I am not sure that that is a wise policy; but this I am justified in saying, that if it was a wise policy in the minds of my hon. friends opposite, the strangest thing in the world is that they did not utilize that policy when they were in power themselves. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance did not occupy that post for many years, but he had a couple of sessions during which he might have, to use the expression, jacked up the tariff to a high point if he so desired; but he did not do it. He kept on under the old tariff. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition fell into the same line of argument. Why did we not arm ourselves, why did we not jack up the tariff before we went to France and before we go to the United States? I think myself I have a right to point out the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite when they had an opportunity did not do it.

How is it if that is a sound policy it has only been discovered since they have been out of office? I had in my mind the story of two country merchants in the flour trade. A customer went into Jones' store and said to him, "What are you asking for flour to-day?" Jones said "Ten dollars." "Oh," said the customer, "that is pretty high; I cannot pay it." Jones said to him "No; that is all right; it is a fair price." The customer said to him "Why, Mr. Smith's price for flour is $9.50." "Well," said Jones, "in that case I am afraid you will have to buy it from Smith." The customer said "Yes, but Mr. Smith is out of flour just now." When Smith was out of flour, he could quote a low price, and when my hon. friends are out of office they can tell us in pious words what they would have done if they had been in power. But it seems to me that the action of hon. members when they had the opportunity to do something is the best answer to the policy they are advocating to-day. My hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) emphasizes that line of policy, not only with regard to France, but with regard to the United States. Again and again he tells us that if we want to trade with the United States we must have something to trade with. He emphasizes that policy and he takes up the old line "No truck or trade with the Yankees." That is the substance of it. But not long after he made a speech along those lines the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson) suddenly asked this question: "Why is this government not reducing the duty? Why do they not reduce the duties on American automobiles?" Which of these two policies represents the attitude of the Conservative party to-day? Is it my hon. friend from West York, who wants to jack up the tariff against the Americans, or is it my hon. friend from Halton, who wants to cut down the duty on Yankee automobiles? I think I have a right to ask my hon. friend to define which of these two policies is the correct one. My hon. friend from West York gave us quite a lecture on potatoes. I think there is no other item in his review which occupied so much of his time as potatoes. I want to refer to it, first because he regarded it as important, and secondly because it is an amusing incident. The item reads as follows:

Potatoes when imported from a country which imposes a customs duty on potatoes grown ln Canada per 100 pounds, British preference 20 cents; intermediate, 35 cents; general tariff, 35 cents.

My hon. friend went on to speak at considerable length on this potato question; he referred to the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) as having something to do with it, and he said:

The hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell), I think has been helping them a little along the line of instructions. I do not know how he managed this; he certainly managed to get them to pick out the one item that would constitute the smallest reason in the world to move an American business man in the right direction. But, perhaps, the process of education will go on. He has got them to put a protective duty on potatoes when other countries maintain a duty against potatoes grown in Canada. I do not know why we should not eat Canadian potatoes. I always thought we should. I think Canadian potatoes are very good.

And then, in consequence of his reference to the hon. member for Carleton and Victoria, that hon. member (Mr. Caldwell) said:

Since the hon. member has coupled my name with this, I should like to dissociate myself with it entirely. We want free entry of our potatoes into other markets.

Then the hon. member (Sir Henry Drayton) continues:

Wonderful! Is the attitude of this hon. gentleman not extraordinary? I am not going to debate the matter; but I am going to tell him one thing, that his attitude is just as helpful to the potato producers of New Brunswick as was his vote on the Crowsnest pass case. If he wants to make it impossible to do business, all right; but hon. gentlemen across the aisle—

I believe that he meant the members on this side of the House. Then he continues:

—were learning something, and they put this duty on potatoes. Let us suppose that this duty on potatoes was imposed for some good cause. If there be any good cause, the reason why potatoes should be picked out as a specific instance, must have regard to the American tariff. The one potato scale I know of that is worrying Canada to-day is the American potato scale.

He went on to speak at some length in that direction and said:

Certainly it is a fine point to start with if they are serious in the desire to tackle the question like men of business. Undoubtedly it is a fine trading point as compared with the millions, the hundreds of milllions, of values that come from the United States into Canada; it is small, for example as compared with the millions which we get from them in silks, textiles, iron and steel products, etc. It is simply small and contemptible.

That was my hon. friend's criticism. He referred to it as a small and contemptible item. I have pleasure in telling him that, if that item is small and contemptible, it is no baby of mine, it is not an item of mine, but it is taken from the tariff as he left it when he went out of office. This item he has dwelt upon, which he thinks we have selected as a small, contemptible item, is simply taken from his own tariff in its very words, and we have carried it into the new tariff. While the tariff previously, as my hon. friend left it, had a rate of so many cents per bushel, the law of Canada requires that potatoes shall be sold by weight and not by measures, and we simply convert it from the number of cents per bushel into the number of cents per hundred pounds; and that is the whole question. Nevertheless, my hon. friend characterizes it as a small and contemptible thing, and says that it is a specimen of the way this Liberal government is doing things.

Reference was made to the duty on artificial silk as something which creates a departure from our own line of policy. Let us examine that for a moment. That is a new article which is not yet classified in the tariff. As it is likely to be widely used, it ought to have a classification, and we have placed it in the tariff and so we have to say what rate it would bear in the tariff. Artificial silk is after all silk, practically. It serves all the purposes of silk. It will displace silk as far as it is used. If it be not specially mentioned, it may fall into the unenumerated list which would bear the rate of 17½ per cent. My hon. friend opposite emphasizes the opinion that silk is a luxury. We think that artificial silk might properly be treated as silk, and put in the tariff accordingly, and if the rate is a high one, it is simply because of the general principles that luxuries are taxed more highly than cheaper commodities. That is the whole story. From a purely revenue point of view, it is a serious thing, because if we displace silk by artificial silk we will be losing the revenue. In this case, I hope we shall get the revenue, and if incidentally it helps to encourage the industry, so much the better. It is a fair illustration of a revenue tariff which carries with it incidental protection.

I have a number of notes to which I intended to refer, but I am frank enough to say, Mr. Speaker, that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister covered the ground so well to-day that I am going to make my speech briefer than it would otherwise have been. In connection, however, with the general criticism, we have heard very much about economy. They all talk about economy. It is the easiest thing to advocate and the hardest thing to accomplish. My hon. friends opposite generally talk about economy. I think possibly my hon. friends of the Progressive group talk of it still more. But if we examine the records of parliament we find that in three cases out of four the suggestions of hon. members opposite do not call for economy, but for larger expenditures of public money. We propose some appropriations for the Militia service, but hon. members opposite say our estimates are too low, and we ought to spend more. I think they find fault and say that we did not grant enough money for the militia. I do not want to debate the merits of it. I simply state it as a fact. We had a similar experience in the matter of naval service. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia brought down some appropriation for the naval service and again we were told we should have provided more money. We are proposing to add one or two industries to the bounty list, and hon. members opposite say the bounties are not large enough, and that we should make them higher Everybody talks of economy. We all become advocates of economy for the other fellow, not for our own district, not for our own province. My hon. friends from Toronto talk about economy; but they are not anxious to cut down the appropriation for Toronto harbour. The hon. members residing in Toronto, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Harris) emphasized the fact that we were not spending money as we ought for the deepening of the St. Lawrence canals. This I suppose, would probably take only a couple of hundred million dollars! What about that? They talk economy, and yet they tell us that we should expend money on deepening the St. Lawrence canals. The last speech delivered to-night, namely that by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans), advocated economy; but the only economy he proposed was that we should increase our expenditures by paying more money to the rural mail carriers.

Mr. EVANS: I should like to put the hon. gentleman right. I contrasted their remuneration with that of other members of the Civil Service.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. gentleman, I understood, said that they were not getting enough, and he thought they ought to get more. If I am wrong in my understanding, I take it back. He thought these men were not well enough paid and perhaps they are not. I am not debating that question, but it is costing the country six and a quarter million dollars to provide for that service, and if you vote only a moderate increase, you add a couple of million dollars to the expenditure. I am not discussing the merits of the case; I am simply pointing out that this cry for economy contrasts very strangely with the attitude of hon. gentlemen when they come to deal with matters in which they have a keen interest.

My Progressive friends are not free from criticism in that connection. They are advocates of economy; but they want more branch railways, and they want the Hudson Bay railway. It is not as easy as it looks to economize. Even in the matter of the Civil Service, although hon. gentlemen talk glibly of economy in that direction, one of the hardest things in the world, as any hon. member who has been in office knows, is to cut down the Civil Service. Those who have no responsibility can treat that matter very lightly; but I can tell hon. gentlemen—I do not need to assure those who have held office—that even in that matter, a policy of economy may very easily cause trouble. I would be as glad as any other hon. gentleman in this House if we could have a larger measure of economy. But Canada is a comparatively undeveloped country; we have great needs; we have in every part of the country many works which call for attention. Some of them possibly can wait; many of them are urgent, and if the wheels of progress are to keep moving, we have to respond to many demands made upon us for public expenditures. I frankly say that it is a good deal more difficult to economize than my hon. friends think.

Perhaps one of the strangest things in this discussion is that which was so forcibly referred to to-day by the Prime Minister, when he spoke of the criticism being offered that this was a protectionist budget. That is the strangest thing in the world, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will persist in that attitude, they must not be surprised that the country refuses to take them seriously. Why, in nineteen out of twenty cases in which the tariff is touched by these resolutions, it is touched by way of reduction, and in the budget of last year, with very rare exceptions every change that was made was by way of a reduction. Why then do hon. gentlemen persist in talking about this as a protectionist budget?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was that not equally true of the budget of 1919 and the budget of 1920, both of which my hon. friend denounced as protectionist budgets?

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend is not the best witness as to what I have said and things of times past; but I am more concerned in the things of to-day and of the future, than I am in what occurred in 1919. My taste for study does not lead me back to the kings of Egypt as quickly as it does in the case of my right hon. friend.

I would say, as regards the hon. member for West York, whose kindly criticism I accepted in the best of good nature, that he set himself right in the end. He did, perhaps, say some harsh things, but in the end he turned to the Speaker—I am not using quotation marks; I do not say that these were his words, but they are the substance of them—and he said: Mr. Speaker, I have been talking along these lines for some time; but I want to tell you that you do not want to take me seriously; I want you to understand that all this is said merely in a Pickwickian sense, and as evidence of that I want to tell you that these farmer chaps may, if they want to, go after the budget; let them; but as for me and my house, I am satisfied with the budget, and I do not propose to move any amendment. So, if I cannot agree with all that my hon. friend from West York has said at all events I can congratulate him upon the soundness of the conclusion which he has reached.

The Prime Minister dealt with the question of this being a protectionist budget, but I think what he said is capable of being emphasized. He said and very truly—indeed he gave illustrations of the extent to which reductions had been made—that this could not be considered a protectionist budget. He dealt with the matter so ably that I will not dwell further upon it.

I turn now to make a brief reference to the speech of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). I am sorry that he did not find himself in a more amiable frame of mind. He does not seem to be able to forgive the people of Canada for a little event which occurred more than a year and a half ago. He should cultivate a little more amiability in that direction and leave his grouch at home next time. The first criticism was that this was not much of a budget anyway; that it did not give us as many statistics as it ought to; that there ought to have been this statement and that statement, and this comparison and that comparison. That is a fair matter of debate. Possibly he is right, but at all events he is not universally supposed to be right. A budget which would please everybody would be a marvellous thing. I have no thought that I have achieved that purpose, nor that I am ever likely to do so; but I am glad to be able to say this that, while in the press of the country I have found many criticisms, legitimate enough from the point of view of opponents of the government, I have been rather fortunate to have this compliment paid to me: "Whatever may be said, Fielding did not give us a long speech anyhow." That is something. You know the story in the case of the good old German people where the custom is to say something nice at the grave of the departed. This was the case of a man who had died and who did not have many friends. At his grave everybody was trying to say something nice and they found it a pretty hard job; but one old man said: "Well, friends, he was a good smoker." It is nice to have somebody say a kind word even in the matter of the brevity of the speech. I want to quote, particularly for the benefit of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, what the leading Conservative organ of Canada said on the occasion of the delivery of the budget. I am quoting from the Montreal Gazette on the morning after the budget:

> It (Mr. Fielding's speech) was the shortest budget speech on record and took less than an hour to deliver. The effort lost nothing on account of its brevity—

They differ from my right hon. friend there. He thinks it should have been a longer speech.

> —and Mr. Fielding did not weary his listeners with a recital of endless figures on Canada's financial position. He gave a short, crisp statement in that regard and quickly got to the kernel of his subject, namely, changes in the tariff, sales tax and stamp tax.

I have to make my choice between the compliment that is paid by the leading Conservative organ of Canada, and the severe criticism offered by the leader of the Opposition, who complained that I did not weary my listeners with these long tables.

The leader of the Opposition also emphasized this notion of the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) about jacking up the tariff, and the general cry for economy. What now is the financial difficulty in the way of Canada? What are the causes of our embarrassment so far as we have any, because I do not admit that the embarrassment is very serious? What prevents our having a satisfactory budget? Two things. The war, as hon. gentlemen will surely admit, and the railway question. I do not want to debate the question of who is responsible for either of these things. Least of all do I want to blame the hon. gentleman for expenditures on account of the war. But this I have a right to complain of, that while I willingly share with him any responsibility for those expenditures, he discusses the causes of the present difficulties we are in and attributes them to us. He is not fair in so doing. He is constantly talking of the difficulties with which we are faced, and assumes that they have resulted from some conduct of our own. He tells us again and again that we have increased the sales tax and in that way have added to the burdens of the people. He asks, why do you not balance the budget? And many an hon. member on the other side reiterates the same question. Well, in the budget speech I pointed out what I thought were good reasons for our inability to do this; I stated that it was much better to bear patiently for a year or two the condition we now have, and to have faith and hope and a firm belief that the betterment which we all long for will come in a short while, than to impose new taxation. But if my hon. friend insists so emphatically on the necessity for balancing the budget, why did he not do it in his own day? Only now he discovers that we cannot balance the budget. He says, "You are increasing the sales tax." He did not increase the sales tax in 1921, but he was content to add $92,000,000 to the debt of the country—a much simpler process in a way, but not quite so satisfactory, I think. He did not increase the sales tax in 1922; no, Sir, he preferred rather to add $81,000,000 to the public debt. And if things had gone on in that way and the right hon. gentleman had remained in power, heaven only knows what would have been the condition of affairs last year Heaven only knows what the public debt would have been. We thought it was wise to face the music, to recognise the facts, and to meet the obligations that were before us.

I do not stop for one moment to consider who is or who is not blameable for the fact that we have these large obligations; I simply declare that the right thing to do, in the face of them was to increase taxation in some form or other to meet them. We increased the sales tax. If we had been willing to follow my hon. friend's example and to allow the whole burden to be added to the public debt, we need not have increased the sales tax. But we did increase it, and we did so for good reasons; and having done so we think there is nothing for us to apologise for. We did not balance the budget: we hope we shall be able next year to do so but whether we do balance it or not, we are facing our obligations; our path is in the right direction and we are endeavouring to make ends meet. So that if we have to add something to the public debt it will be because conditions oblige us to do so. In the meantime, we say to the country that the policy which offers them exemption from other new taxes is a wiser policy than that which the right hon. gentleman would recommend.

Now, with regard to the question of reciprocity, when we undertake to consider all that is involved in this question we assume a very great responsibility; and I confess I have some reason to rejoice in the attitude of my right hon. friend, not that I approve of it, but because it is some satisfaction to have a clear issue before one. My right hon. friend says that these resolutions which we have embodied in the budget do not amount to anything; he tells us that they will not accomplish anything. Well, I do not know whether they will or not. I do think, however, that it is desirable nevertheless that the resolutions should be there; I think it is desirable to have a clear-cut statement in the most official form of the desire and the willingness of the people of Canada to enter into a friendly arrangement with the government of the United States whenever that government is prepared to consider any proposals in the direction of reciprocity; and just as it was deemed wise in 1879 to introduce this proposal into the Tariff Act of that day, which proposal was commonly referred to as the standing offer, so I think it is wise to-day to re-introduce that standing offer, not because there is anything new in it, or because we expect that we shall gain anything by it, but simply because we think it is well that there should be a clear statement of the desire of the government of Canada to enter into an arrangement with the people of the United States. The American people, in view of the events of 1911, might be justified in emphatically declaring that they do not want reciprocity; and I would not blame any American who, if he met me, might say: "What is the use of your talking about reciprocity now? You had a chance to have reciprocity in 1911 and you rejected it, so that there is not much use in your talking about the matter at this time." I think there is much to justify that view if any American were inclined to advance it. At all events, we are persuaded that it is a wise policy that there should be at least no room for misunderstanding, but that we should have it clearly and distinctly made known, in the most precise and formal way possible, that this is our desire now.

The right hon. gentleman has taken a new line on the question of reciprocity. He discusses the events of 1911 and takes the extraordinary view that the reason why he would not support the Reciprocity agreement of 1891 is because it lacked permanency. Why, he says, if only we had the assurance of permanency it would be all right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that; I said that there would be something to be said for it and much to be said against it, but that it would be a great deal better for us to have some assurance in the matter.

Mr. FIELDING: I happen to have before me just what my right hon. friend said, and I will quote him to justify my statement of his position.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well, read what I said.

Mr. FIELDING: I have the exact words of the right hon. gentleman, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding on the point I shall quote precisely what he said:

> If we enter into a commercial arrangement with them, there would be something at least to say for it, if conditions were such that we knew there would be permanency to such arrangement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, that is part of what I said.

Mr. FIELDING: And further, the right hon. gentleman goes on to say:

> But I said before there would be something to say for such a treaty if there was any guarantee or hope of permanency.

In other words, he wanted the assurance of permanency. He says:

> In that case we would know what to do; investors would know what to do; agriculturists would know what to do; ranchers would know what to do; men thinking of going into any line of trade or production would know just what to expect.

Can you not see the great demand there for permanency, for a guarantee, an assurance of permanency?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister, of course, left out a part of the quotation.

Mr. FIELDING: If my right hon. friend thinks it important I can, of course, read the whole extract. I did not omit any part that was vital.

Mr MEIGHEN: Oh yes, you did.

Mr. FIELDING: The right hon. gentleman has his remarks at his hand, and if he thinks fit to do so he may read what I have omitted; I simply wanted to avoid wearying the House with a long extract. He said further:

> But is there any guarantee of permanency or can there be any guarantee of permanency under any conceivable circumstances? I ask that question, and I ask it seriously, because in my judgment it is the root and the heart of the whole situation. There was no permanency inherent in the 1911 treaty. Each country reserved the right to depart from it at its will. That the United States insisted on; that the United States will always insist on.

Will my right hon. friend tell me what is his warrant, his authority, for the statement that the United States insisted upon anything of that kind? That is the material part of the quotation. He states that the United States insisted upon that qualification; I want to know where he got his authority for that assertion?

Mr. MEIGHEN: For the reason—

Mr. FIELDING: Oh no; not the reason. the authority. I want the right hon. gentleman's authority for that statement of his.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know it is there.

Mr. FIELDING: It is not there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not in the treaty that the hon. gentleman made? Was it not provided that it was not to be permanent but was to be cancellable at the will of either country? It undoubtedly was, and in every treaty that was ever made in the history of the country that provision has been embodied.

Mr. FIELDING: In the first place, my right hon. friend is referring to the treaty; and in the second place he is not answering my question. I am not disputing his statement as to what is in the agreement itself; that speaks for itself. But the right hon. gentleman says that the United States insisted upon that qualification, and I want to know what authority he has for making that statement. We do not want him to tell us what is in the document; we know what it provides. But he says that the United States insisted upon a certain qualification and I say that he cannot give me any authority for that statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should think that something which the United States obtained would be obtained on their own insistence and not on the insistence of this country. Anyone would presume that. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to read what he omitted?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, if it will do any good

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is what I said:

> Now, mark you, I said there would be something to say for it. There would at the same time be much to say against it.

And I went on to say what would result.

Mr. FIELDING: Quite so. But the right hon gentleman went on to say that an assurance of permanency was "the root and heart of the whole situation." He not only says that this condition was in the agreement, but he tells us that the American people insisted upon it. That is the vital point; and he has not given any authority for that statement. Nor can he give any such authority; I tell him there is absolutely no foundation for it. The Americans were prepared to discuss a reciprocity treaty for a term of years if we so desired.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That would not be permanent.

Mr. FIELDING: There is no permanent treaty in God's world.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I say.

Mr. FIELDING: When the hon. gentleman used the term "permanency" he meant forever, did he? That is not my idea of what in diplomatic affairs the word "permanence" means. However, I again say in reply to my hon. friend that his assertion, that the United States government insisted upon the temporary condition and we had to submit to it, is unwarranted; of my own personal knowledge I say it is not in accordance with the facts. The United States government were prepared to discuss a reciprocity agreement of a broader type if we wanted to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In return for what?

Mr. FIELDING: I will read the essential part of the agreement that we did bring back. But my hon. friend emphasizes the fact that the Americans insisted upon this and that it was something we had to agree to. I say emphatically there is no warrant for the statement. What happened to the agreement when we came back? Was it not attacked because it was considered to be practically permanent? Was not the burden of every complaint from the Conservative party "You have bound Canada hand and foot?" Was not that the story? It is a new story now. To-day they say they wanted a permanent agreement, but at that time we were charged with binding Canada hand and foot to these horrid Americans. "No truck or trade with the Yankees" was the cry of those days, and now the right hon. gentleman says, "Oh, it would have been all right if we had only had some guarantee of permanency."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Agriculture is very much amused to-night.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it is perhaps the hundredth time the hon. gentleman has stated that hon. members of the opposition at that time declared for "No truck or trade with the Yankees." I ask him now for his authority for that declaration. That was entirely an invention of the hon. gentleman's leader of that time.

Mr. FIELDING: I saw it at that time in the press. I never attributed the phrase to the right hon. gentleman himself, but I have been informed and believe that that was the cry of the Conservative party.

Mr. DUFF: I heard Sir Robert Borden say it.

Mr. FIELDING: I heard it was stated in Ontario by the chairman of a meeting with Sir Robert Borden sitting on the platform. However, "No truck or trade with the Yankees" was the slogan throughout the country, no matter by whom it was originated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman think that the statement of some chairman of some meeting is authority for attributing it to the Conservative party?

Mr. BUREAU: It was in the literature of the Conservative party.

Mr. FIELDING: If used at a public meeting by the chairman of that meeting with Sir Robert Borden sitting on the platform it is pretty good evidence that it was the slogan of the Conservative party at that time. However, I want now to show what was in this agreement that my hon. friend has referred to. Here is a quotation from the letter written by the late Mr. Paterson and myself to the American Secretary of State:

> It is agreed that the desired tariff changes shall not take the formal shape of a treaty, but that the governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by concurrent legislation at Washington and Ottawa.
> The governments of the two countries having made this agreement from the conviction that, if confirmed by the necessary legislative authorities, it will benefit the people on both sides of the border line, we may reasonably hope and expect that the arrangement, if so confirmed, will remain in operation for a considerable period. Only this expectation on the part of both governments would justify the time and labour that have been employed in the maturing of the proposed measures. Nevertheless, it is distinctly understood that we do not attempt to bind for the future the action of the United States Congress or the Parliament of Canada, but that each of these authorities shall be absolutely free to make any change of tariff policy or of any other matter covered by the present arrangement that may be deemed expedient. We look for the continuance of the arrangement, not because either party is bound to it, but because of our conviction that the more liberal trade policy thus to be established will be viewed by the people of the United States and Canada as one which will strengthen the friendly relations now happily prevailing and promote the commercial interests of both countries.

That is incorporated in the agreement, written by Mr. Paterson and myself, placed there at our request, not because the American government insisted upon it, but because we thought it was not wise at that time to bind Canada for a longer term. We were content to bring the arrangement back for submission to the Canadian people, to let them try it, and in the light of actual experience to determine whether or not they wanted to make a permanent treaty.

There is one satisfaction in dealing with my hon. friend's position in this matter; we have at all events a clear-cut issue. He is opposed to reciprocity with the United States—he does not want it anyhow. His idea is—I do not quote his words now—no truck or trade with the Yankees. That is only another clear-cut way of expressing his position.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all; that is very unfair.

Mr. FIELDING: Well, I understand that in his speech yesterday my right honourable friend (Mr. Meighen) distinctly declared his opposition to reciprocity with the United States.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING: Very good. Then there is a clear-cut issue. Hon. gentlemen of the Conservative party—so far as they permit themselves to be represented by my right hon. friend—are against any trade treaty with the United States. In the name of the Liberal party of Canada I declare to-day that we stand for reciprocity with the United States. I say that when the opportunity comes to make a fair treaty or agreement—and I say the agreement of 1911 was a fair and reasonable agreement, and I am glad that our Progressive friends call for a repetition of that agreement in their motion to-day; to that extent I agree with it—but I say that when the opportunity comes we are proud to declare in the face of the parliament of Canada, whatever the fate of it may be, that this Liberal party stands for reciprocity with the United States when we can get a fair and reasonable agreement. That is our position. We are content to let the people judge between the hon. gentleman and ourselves on that point

Now, I want to conclude. I have spoken longer than I expected to do.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. FIELDING: The budget speech—may I modestly say?—was not partisan, it was not boastful, though I think there was something in it that might justify boastfulness. There was not a line nor a note in it that gave cause of offence to anybody. It stated simple facts in a way beyond dispute. That has not been denied. It was a fair statement of the situation, and it offered a fair proposal to the people. Now, what is it that is offered in the reciprocity agreement? My right hon. friend, by the way, says there has been a change in public opinion since 1911 with regard to reciprocity.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. FIELDING: No, I reverse the statement. My right hon. friend is right. He says there was no change, that is, that the adverse opinion of the people of Canada in 1911 remains to-day. That is more correct. I want to tell my right hon. friend that he is absolutely unwarranted in making that statement. In 1911 blind partisanship led men away from the consideration of an economic question and for party reasons, not for economic reasons, they voted against reciprocity.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister not consider that what he is saying now is "a grouch?"

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. BUREAU: It is an answer to a grouch.

Mr. FIELDING: No, it is just a proclamation again of the old faith, and I am proud to proclaim it; that is all. But my right hon.

friend has said there has been no change of public opinion. I want for a moment to draw his attention to this. I am told there are members sitting in this House to-day who voted against reciprocity in 1911 and who are to-day subscribing to the resolution of the Progressives which is in favour of reciprocity. I do not say that of my own knowledge, but I am so informed. Last week in the town of Yarmouth a large meeting was held of the fishing interests of the south shore of Nova Scotia and was attended by leading gentlemen from three or four counties. Among these gentlemen were many from my own constituency, including a number of prominent citizens who opposed and helped to defeat me in 1911. Those gentlemen at that meeting declared that what the interests of Nova Scotia most need to-day is the admission of its products into the United States market. Yet my hon. friend says there is no change in public opinion. There is a change in this way, that the time is come when the people will no longer view this question through the spectacle of partisanship; they are looking at it, as it ought to have been loked at from the beginning, as an economic question. The cattle raisers of the West and the fishermen of the East alike feel that admission of their products to the United States market would be one of the greatest things for the commercial success of Canada. That is the feeling in Canada to-day. It is said of the Bourbons that they learned nothing and forgot nothing. I doubt whether the Conservative party of Canada are going to endorse the position taken by my right hon. friend against reciprocity. An economic question will override a purely political question, and although my right hon. friend may still desire to take the Bourbonic view of the matter, I believe there are thousands of Conservatives in Canada who will readily follow us if we go to the polls on that issue and who will stand for reciprocity now, though they did not stand for it in 1911.

Now, about the budget. I have said that it is a very modest budget, an unassuming budget. There are no fireworks about it. It does not offer a great deal; it offers just a simple statement of what seems to be most needed to meet the conditions of the day. First, it offers exemption from those new taxes that my right hon. friend would impose to balance the budget. We do not want to balance the budget with new taxes to-day; we will wait and see, if I may quote that expression again, and hope that we shall be able to balance it next year without new taxes. Then, we offer a wide, comprehensive measure of tariff reduction. We offer a substantial increase in the British preference. We offer a reduction aggregating $2,500,000 on one household article, sugar—and if you want to do something to relieve the masses of the people in respect to the commodities that they use, what article could be better chosen than sugar? And we make a proposal —I am glad to find that it was honoured by some hon. gentlemen on the other side—to encourage the business of the Canadian ports. Reduced taxation, then; reduced duty on sugar; increased British preference; tariff improvements; simplification of the sales tax—in all these things, simple, unpretentious as they are, you have the elements of a sound, sensible budget, one which, I am bound to say, will receive and has already received approval from the people of Canada.

I know you can have no budget that will please everybody. I know you cannot make omelettes without breaking eggs. I know that any time you touch the tariff somebody will for the moment think he is hurt. But in all my experience in making budgets I never knew a budget that was characterized by so many evidences of the public favour as have been indicated in the communications which have come to me, as well as by what has appeared in the press. I present this budget to-day as a simple, businesslike transaction, a project of common sense to meet the present situation, and I am sure that it will receive the favourable judgment of the Canadian people.

FISHERIES—ATLANTIC PROVINCES

MARINE AND FISHERIES COMMITTEE RECOMMEND INVESTIGATION

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Lunenburg): I beg to move that the third report of the select standing committee on Marine and Fisheries be concurred in.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): If I recall correctly, the chief subject of this report is a recommendation for another roving commission. If the report is to be concurred in, I ask that it be concurred in on division.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to postpone this motion until next sitting?

Mr. SPEAKER: Of course, this motion was only by unanimous consent, because notice had not been given. Therefore, the matter will stand.

Motion stands.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE AT WASHINGTON

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): I should like to direct the attention of the government to a despatch which appeared in the daily press this week to the effect that the delay in naming Canada's envoy at Washington is due to pressure from the Imperial authorities at London. It is stated that this question will be taken up at the forthcoming Imperial Conference at London, and that an interchange of correspondence has taken place between this government and London with respect to the matter. Is the government in a position to give us any information.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The report is wholly without foundation as respects any one of the features mentioned by my hon. friend.

SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT

VANCOUVER EMPLOYEES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St John City): I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Beland) to an answer that was given in reply to certain questions of mine. I refer the minister to Hansard at page 2297. The first question I asked was:

> Were the services of any men in the employ of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment at Vancouver, British Columbia, dispensed with on or about March 1st, 1923?

The answer to that question was: "No." I have in my hand a communication stating that the following: Captain R. C. Cruit, Captain W. R. Flewin, M.C., Mr. H. Irvine and Mr. W. A. Beattie were given notice and left the service on February 28. They were all married men with dependents; they were of good overseas' service, and, as I state, they were given notice and left the service on February 28. Would the minister be good enough to look into the matter and ascertain if there has not been some inaccuracy in the answer?

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): The answer was prepared by officials of the department. I shall be glad to make an inquiry as to the apparent inaccuracy in the answer given.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 139, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

He said: When introducing the bill I explained the purposes of the amendments. The main amendment is to change the system as to the trustees. Under the present law we have authorized trustees who are appointed by the Governor in Council. We propose to have the trustees chosen by the creditors. Under the present law the debtor assigns to the trustees. We change this system; we propose that a debtor should assign to the creditors. He will assign willingly through an official receiver who will be a judicial officer in one or another of the different provinces, or he will be forced to assign on a petition granted by the court. In either case a custodian will be appointed—by the receiver when the assignment is made willingly, and by the judge on petition. The duties of the custodian are to take charge of the assets of the estate and to call the creditors to appoint the trustee. We propose to amend the law for various reasons, among others for the purpose of authorizing the sale of real estate properties that are subject to hypothec in the province of Quebec in the same mode as we now proceed in that province in connection with sales by the sheriff. Another amendment is to restore to the landlords the privileges which they enjoyed, before the law of 1919, under the legislation of the different provinces. We propose also to provide that the debtor shall not be authorized to propose a composition between his creditors and himself until after the assignment; while another authorizes the official receiver to compel the appearance of the debtor before him for examination in regard to the causes of his assignment, the disposal of his property, and so forth. There are minor amendments, consequent upon the main ones which I have just outlined.

Mr. W. A. BOYS (South Simcoe): In committee I shall probably have more to say than on the present occasion, but I desire to take the opportunity now of making an observation or two upon the proposed amendments. It seems to me that if what the minister suggests is carried out we might just as well go back to the provincial law as it previously obtained in the various provinces. We were getting along fairly well in Ontario, and the only thing we required was a law providing for discharge, which has been the feature of the bankruptcy law, so far as I know. I hold in my hand the act as originally introduced, together with a mass of amendments; now we have a further bill, with another extensive collection of amendments. If the law is to be changed so frequently and extensively it seems to me we had better revert to the old state of things and let each province deal with the situation as it thinks proper. There is, I think, in every province of Canada a law dealing with assignments and preferences, and if we would in this parliament extend the right to grant discharge—say after publication of notice of application to be made to a county judge, the debtor satisfying the judge that he has dealt honestly with his property—then I do not see why the debtor should not be given an opportunity to start life afresh. But these constant changes, and the mutilation of the act in this manner, are to my mind most undesirable. I do not know whence comes the request for the change; I have heard of none in my own province. We are getting on very well indeed with the act as we had it, with the authorized trustees. I know that a number of them have put up $80 to obtain the security required; in my own county one has recently done so. If this proposed bill goes through they lose that, and while this may appear only a trifling feature it is one worth mentioning. Why should we have the change now suggested? I hope later to ask the minister to explain from what source comes the demand for this startling change in connection with this law. I understand that the act is modelled after the English act, and naturally it would take a little time to get a new law working smoothly. That, however, was being accomplished, and now that we understand the act and the people of the provinces have become acquainted with its provisions and, are applying them with little inconvenience, it is proposed to make these changes. I think if the minister feels that he must do away with the existing system of authorized trustees, it would be just as well to repeal the provisions of the act entirely and pass one giving authority for the discharge of a bankrupt in the manner and upon the grounds I have indicated, leaving the matter in other respects to the various provinces. After all, apart from that feature, is it not a question of property and civil rights? It is a much easier matter to make an amendment to meet the situation in the legislatures, it can be done more quickly and the operation of the act would be less expensive. The stand I feel disposed to take is that if we are going to disturb the law as we have it now and go back to what is practically the old system, we should have recourse to the provincial laws as they obtained in the various provinces. But I certainly do urge that there should be some law giving the right to discharge anyone making an assignment, upon his satisfying, say a county judge. I do not see why a bankrupt should have to go to large cities in a matter of this kind. A county judge is in a position to pass upon the question whether or not a debtor has dealt honestly with his property and should be given his discharge and be allowed once more to do business in his own name. I will reserve any further remarks I have to offer on this matter until the House is in committee on the bill.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): I do not understand that these proposed amendments are intended to interfere with the discharge of the bankrupt. As I understand the matter, the provisions proposed relate more to procedure than to anything else, and I gather from a cursory reading of the bill that the amendments now introduced rather strengthen the act in many respects. The substance of the bill appeals to me as being an improvement, with the possible exception of one of the clauses, which restores to the landlord all the rights that he had prior to July 1920, when the act was put into force. I am against the provision in that clause, because I fear that as a result of it the landlord will walk away with the entire assets of the estate.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They often do.

Mr. JACOBS: In one province, which I know most, the province of Quebec, the privilege of the landlord in some cases extends to twenty-eight months' rent. In a large city like Montreal, where rents are pretty high, we can conceive of cases where a landlord not only will rank as a privileged creditor and walk away with everything, but will be a creditor to a considerable extent even after the entire estate is wound up. Let me read section 2,005 of the Civil Code:

> The privilege of the lessor extends to all rent that is due or to become due under a lease in authentic form.
> But in the case of the liquidation of property abandoned by an insolvent trader who has made an abandonment in favour of his creditors, the lessor's privilege is restricted to twelve months' rent due and the rent to become due during the current year if there remain more than four months to complete the year; if there remain less than four months to complete the year, to the twelve months' rent due and to the rent of the current year and the whole of the following year.

That is to say, the landlord would be entitled to sixteen months' accelerated rent and twelve months' past due rent. Where the trader has been paying $1,500 or $2,000 a month rent, this privilege claim will run up to some $40,000 or $50,000 in some cases, whereas the whole estate might not be worth more than $15,000 or $20,000. I think the minister ought to consider this amendment carefully before finally putting it through, because there is no reason so far as I can see why the landlord should be placed in this exceptional position. The creditors are all more or less in the same boat. A merchant who has sold goods to a trader expects to get paid, otherwise he would not have given him credit, and when the trader makes an assignment this class of creditor ought reasonably to get something out of the wreck, instead of the landlord being given the preference and perhaps gobbling up the entire estate. To my mind it is a relic of feudalism that the property-owner should have everything and the ordinary creditor nothing. In that respect I am opposed to the bill.

I am in favour of the other amendments. I am glad that the rights which a married woman had before the passing of this act are to be restored. Under the act of 1920 a married woman who has advanced money to her husband has no claim whatever against his estate until all the creditors are paid in full, which means that her claim is wiped out. We can easily conceive of a husband in trade who upon becoming financially embarrassed would naturally look to his wife to lend him whatever means she possessed. She would be the very first to whom he would apply for assistance. Simply because she is a married woman she gets absolutely nothing, whereas if she happened to be unmarried or living in concubinage with the debtor she would be entitled to her full rights as an ordinary creditor. I think it was a mistake on the part of this parliament to enact such legislation, and I am glad to see that under the proposed amendments this injustice is removed.

Mr. HANSON: What is the effect of the laws of the province of Quebec with relation to marriage settlements?

Mr. JACOBS: The act wiped out marriage settlements so far as husband and wife are concerned, and these amendments do not propose to restore them. It is only where a wife has advanced money to her husband that she is entitled to rank as an ordinary creditor. This seems to me to be only just and right, and I heartily support the amendment. Another amendment to which I give my entire approval is in regard to fees paid to attorneys and trustees of estates. It was provided that attorneys and trustees should be entitled to not more than five per cent of all the proceeds of the estate; they might get less but not more. A trustee and an attorney might carry a case to the judicial committee of the Privy Council, they might be engaged for five or ten years on work in connection with the estate, but would not be entitled to more than the specified percentage. Under these amendments the inspectors may in writing, with the consent of the judge, fix such fees as they may deem advisable. That seems to be logical. I may say that this particular section of the act was introduced after the bill left this House. The Senate seemed to be so obdurate on the point that it was not thought worth while to insist on the withdrawal of their amendment, and by so doing imperil the passing of the act. I think it is high time that this section was repealed, and I am glad the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) has yielded to the requests of those who have studied the act. The measure by its other provisions makes easy of comprehension the more or less complicated verbiage of the act as it was prepared in 1920, and naturally we are all in favour of this simplification. So far as the province of Quebec is concerned I think I can say that in a general way the bill meets with the approval of the entire province, but I am sure the section with regard to the priority of landlords' claims will not meet with the approval of the trading interests throughout Quebec.

Hon. J. B. M. BAXTER (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): Mr. Speaker, the only feature of the act in reference to which I would like to make a few remarks is the change in regard to official receivers. Experience no doubt has convinced the Minister of Justice that the system is not quite satisfactory in some of the provinces. While in the province of New Brunswick recently for about a week, I made inquiry of a number of members of the legal profession and of some business men who come very closely in contact with the working of the act. I do not pretend that I interviewed everybody, but those I canvassed were unanimous in supporting the present system.

Mr. VIEN: Which province did the hon. member refer to?

Mr. BAXTER: New Brunswick. My inquiry was confined really to the people in the city of St. John; I do not pretend to have got information outside. But I am quite convinced that the business men and lawyers there are better satisfied with the law as in force at present than with the system under the Assignments and Preferences Act—provincial legislation—which used to be administered. Under the proposed amendments there is practically a direction to appoint the chief creditor as trustee. Under certain circumstances this system might work out very badly, for the chief creditor might arrange to realize the estate in such a way that perhaps the general creditors would not fully benefit.

Mr. JACOBS: The chief creditor only acts as official guardian until the trustee is named.

Mr. BAXTER: There is rather an indication that his appointment is to be permanent. Under the old Assignments and Preferences Act the chief creditor was very often a big wholesale house which practically dominated the whole administration of the estate. All I want to say is that the Canadian Credit Men's Association, which has organized itself as a trustee, has the confidence of the business world of New Brunswick, and the few others who have been appointed there as official receivers also have the confidence of the public. In the case of any new law the people require to become adapted to it. In the province of New Brunswick we have virtually a body of officials who have become, to a reasonable extent, expert in the administration of insolvent estates. Under the system now proposed there is no necessary filling of the official position by the same person. In other words, if A becomes insolvent X may be the official receiver, while if C becomes insolvent Y may administer his estate, and so on. We think it is better to have a few corporations or individuals designated for this purpose who have acquired a knowledge of, and consequently are much more expert in dealing with, the ordinary problems that arise in respect to insolvency, and we prefer these experts to a procession of untutored men. I do not want to oppose the change if the Minister of Justice is convinced that it is advisable, as I am sure he must be convinced of its necessity in certain provinces; but I would ask him to confine its operation to those provinces where he has found the need for it, and to let the other provinces alone where the present system is working well to-day. Surely that can be arranged. While the plan seems to be that more responsibility is to be placed on the clerks of the Circuit Courts, I do not know that the Minister of Justice or anyone advising him has made any sort of inspection of those clerks in my province. They are all very admirable gentlemen, but I trust, in regard to some of them, that no very onerous burdens will be imposed upon them. Some of them would fail in performing the simplest official act—and to say that is not to reflect at all upon their honour or their credit; it is simply a question of ability. I am not favourably impressed with the idea of the attaching of federal bankruptcy provisions to the existing assignments and Preferences Acts in the provinces, because I do not see how you would be able efficiently to deal with an estate which was in more than one province. That is the value of the bankruptcy law, and I do not think we ought to detract from that value. I would ask the Minister of Justice to consider carefully the advisability of leaving as it is the present machinery in the provinces where it is working efficiently, and where the suggested change would not be as good. The changes should be confined to the districts from which complaint may have come.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the intention of the Bankruptcy Act as passed by this parliament was, I believe, that there should be a uniform law throughout Canada. If the proposals of the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter), who is a good lawyer of considerable experience, were put into effect the bankruptcy law would be anything but uniform.

Mr. BAXTER: The principle would not be altered.

Mr. CARROLL: No, but the procedure under which the bankruptcy act was enforced would not be uniform. In regard to the point raised by the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), I would point out that the law respecting rentals under bankruptcy or assignments in the province of Quebec is different from the law in the other provinces. Speaking for my own province, I would say offhand that the very best a landlord may get when an assignment is made is three months' rent, which is equivalent, I think, to a notice that when assignment is made the occupant of the premises must get out in three months.

Mr. BOYS: One year in Ontario.

Mr. CARROLL: Yes,—unless indeed, the premises are used by the assignee or the trustee for the purpose of selling the goods, and so on. In view of the circumstances that might arise, and that in fact do arise every day in connection with bankruptcy or assignment cases, where the creditors are from different provinces and people from different provinces are interested in the estate, I think the minister should make the law as regards the rights of landlords in bankruptcy cases uniform over all Canada.

With reference to the matter of trustees in bankruptcy, there have been numerous complaints from Nova Scotia. I do not know how well founded these complaints are; while I do some little practice of law there when I am not in parliament, I have had no considerable experience under the new Bankruptcy Act aside from giving an opinion occasionally—that is, I have never followed a bankrupt through the bankruptcy courts. But the situation was this. Trustees from all over Canada had jurisdiction in all parts of the country under the act, and the complaint was that gentlemen from other cities —I am not going to mention the particular cities—would come down to Nova Scotia and actually induce persons who were in more or less shaky circumstances financially to make an assignment or to take proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. VIEN: May I ask my hon. friend whether there are any trustees in his own province doing this same thing?

Mr. CARROLL: Oh, I am not talking about that. If they are doing the same thing they are certainly doing something that is unquestionably wrong.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend did not catch the purpose of my question. In the province of Quebec we have just such a condition, and we protest against it. I made the inquiry of my hon. friend in order that I might learn from him whether such a grievance existed in his own province.

Mr. CARROLL: That is, whether or not trustees from Nova Scotia went into other provinces?

Mr. VIEN: Not only that, but that they indulged in the practice of inducing debtors to go into bankruptcy.

Mr. CARROLL: That is, in our province?

Mr. VIEN: Yes.

Mr. CARROLL: Well, I did not make the statement, but I think I can fairly say now that such has been done. If my hon. friend wants to find out what is the concern to which I have reference, I will tell him; it is the Credit Men's Association of the city of Montreal. Now, they are not here to defend themselves, and I am simply saying that the charge has been levelled against them that they have come into Nova Scotia and induced people there who are a little shaky financially to make an assignment under the Bankruptcy Act. I have no doubt in the world that the people of my province are not one iota better in that regard than this particular association to which I have referred. In Nova Scotia the official receiver under the act would be the prothonotary of the Supreme Court, or perhaps in some instances, as in New Brunswick, the clerk of the county court. But it does not take one very long to become acquainted with the general principles of the Bankruptcy Act. The assignees or trustees who were appointed after 1919 were, of necessity, novices in that kind of work, but they benefited by their experience and, if they had any brains, became, as a rule, expert. I would point out to the hon. member for St. John City that the receiver in the first instance, namely, the prothonotary of the Supreme Court or the clerk of the county court, will have, as I understand the act—and I have not studied it very thoroughly—very little to do. A meeting of the creditors is called; they appoint some person, one of themselves or someone else who is competent, to become the guardian of the estate.

Mr. BAXTER: They are only formal custodians.

Mr. CARROLL: So that no very onerous task would be imposed on the prothonotary of the Supreme Court or the clerk of the county court. I have no further suggestions to offer; in fact, I would not have arisen had not the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier brought up the question of rentals. I would ask the minister to take into his serious consideration the advisability of making this phase of bankruptcy—the matter of rentals, uniform all over the country.

Mr. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have given this proposed amendment of the Bankruptcy Act some consideration; during the interim between last session and this I had occasion to act in a number of bankruptcy cases in my own province. I should like to say first of all that except for one thing, to which I shall advert later, the act has given very general satisfaction in New Brunswick. I believe in the principle involved in the act, that of giving a debtor his discharge so that he may start over again. It would be a great pity indeed if that outstanding feature of the act were wiped out, and I am glad there is no suggestion of that kind in this bill.

With regard to the outstanding substantive feature of the bill as introduced by the Minister of Justice, namely, the change in the claim of the landlord to the estate, I think that ought to be opposed very, very strenuously. Under the old Assignment Act in the province of New Brunswick, and I think it is true of nearly all the provinces, only three months' rent could be taken by the landlord, and if the law is changed as proposed by this bill and this provision would be in suspense while this act is in force, in my humble opinion in the province of New Brunswick there would be no limitation on the rights of the landlord. It would depend entirely on what might be contained in this bill and the terms of the lease. The lease might have ten years to run, and I know of no reason why the landlord in that event should not collect the full rent out of the estate. Of course, I know I am putting an extreme case, but anyone can see at a glance that that would be a very wrong state of affairs. If three months is too short make it six months, or a year, but do not leave it as long as is suggested by the civil code of Quebec, which is apparently what has actuated the hon. minister in regard to this matter. That would put the ordinary, unsecured creditors at a very great disadvantage. After all, they are the people whom we should look after, they have given credit. The landlord is always in a secured position, and I suppose he always will be. I suppose it will be necessary that he should have some priority and preference over the ordinary creditor; otherwise rents would have to be guaranteed and premises would not be secured easily, but at the same time there is danger of going to the other extreme, and I would suggest that the minister devise some happy medium and make it applicable to the whole Dominion.

Mr. CANNON: Does my hon. friend contend that section 27 of the present bill would make the laws of the province of Quebec concerning lessor and lessee applicable in New Brunswick?

Mr. HANSON: No, I do not say it would. I did not argue that for a moment, but I would say this to my learned friend. From what I gather from the reading of the article in the civil code by the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), I think it gives the landlord a very great preference, and one that I personally do not wish him to have. In the province of New Brunswick it would revert, of course, under this section to the old act where the provision was three months, and in the province of Ontario a year, and in some other places eighteen months, all of which is undesirable to say the least. I think there should be uniformity.

The chief objection to the Bankruptcy Act in the province of New Brunswick is not with reference to the principle involved at all. It is not with respect to the personnel of the authorized trustees. We are a small province down there, and business is comparatively small having reference to, say, Toronto and Montreal. The estates of bankrupts are small, and the complaint I have found among creditors and others in the province of New Brunswick is in relation to the costs and expenses. I think it has been little better than a scandal the expenses that have been incurred and the fees that have been paid to solicitors out of some of the estates. I happen to know of a few cases in my own office, and there was one where I felt constrained to admonish my junior with respect to the size of the bills he got taxed by the registrar. They have been altogether too large having regard to the character of the business; I will be perfectly frank about it. I could give you a case in point, where there was a contest with respect to an alleged preferred claim. An ex parte order was made by the judge of the bankruptcy court to set the case down for trial, and when the bill of costs came out, the solicitor got a fee of $80 for going to St. John and back and getting the ex parte order setting the case down for trial. The judge ruled that he was entitled to $30 as solicitor, and a counsel fee of $50, which was absolutely absurd. It tends to bring the act into disrepute and gobble up the whole estate. There was a contest over this case, ending in a drawn battle, each side winning one of two points. The costs involved were over $800, and the amount in dispute was less than $500. The creditor class do object to the size of the costs, and I wish the minister to give some heed to what I am saying in that regard with relation to small estates. The cases I have in mind will never get to the Privy Council, and I think the act would be received with a great deal better grace if there was a real limitation on the amount payable to authorized trustees or the trustees as proposed here, and to the solicitor.

Mr. JACOBS: Might I point out that these amendments make provision for a case of that kind?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I think I should point out to hon. members that on the second reading of the bill only the principle is discussed. I see that the hon. Minister of Justice is by this bill introducing several amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. When the motion for the second reading was made it was carried, but as the Minister of Justice thought proper to give a brief explanation the debate continued, and now on both sides hon. members are discussing various features of the bill. Would it not be better to go into committee of the whole and there take up these amendments one by one?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then the motion is carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Before the motion is formally carried I would ask my hon. friend the minister to give us the usual assurance we get on second readings in a case of this kind. I quite realize that we would make much better progress in committee, but we do not wish to be told in committee that any objection we might raise is a matter of principle that should have been raised in the House; so I would ask that if the second reading now carries, it be on the understanding that we have the right to raise in committee any matter of principle that we desire.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time, and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Before this clause carries I wish to make some remarks which I was just in the way of making when the second reading was called "Carried" by Mr. Speaker, as he did not happen to see me rise. A few weeks ago we had a debate in this House on the motion of the hon, member for Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) asking that this act be repealed altogether. The debate was carried on to a very large extent by members from the province of Quebec from which I come, and I feel safe in saying that it was the opinion of a very large majority of those members, in fact the almost unanimous opinion, that the Bankruptcy Act should be repealed. Moreover objection to the act was expressed by various hon. members opposite. As a result of those opinions the Minister of Justice said he would give his very best attention to what had been said, and that some measure would be introduced in the course of the present session, which would give better effect to the wish of the House as expressed at that time.

To-day I was particularly pleased to hear the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) suggest to the government that the Bankruptcy Act should be repealed in toto, provided some provision was made in the law to allow the debtor his discharge such as now exists, under the Bankruptcy Act. In other words, if I understood the hon. member for South Simcoe rightly, in the event of there being a provision enacted by which a debtor could be discharged, just as he can now be discharged under the Bankruptcy Act, he would favour the repeal of the whole act. I emphatically endorse that proposition. When the debate took place on the motion of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Montmorency, I was one of those who protested very strongly against the Bankruptcy Act and asked for its repeal I do not intend at this moment repeating what I said on that occasion, much less repeating the arguments of hon. members who took the same stand as I did. Be it sufficient for me to say that the provincial legislature, no later than December last passed a resolution declaring that the Bankruptcy Act was not in the interest of the province of Quebec, and expressing the opinion that it should be repealed. That is a declaration from the highest tribunal in the province of Quebec, and I may add that 95 per cent of the citizens of our province would favour the repeal of the act. As to having a provision in the law under which the debtor could be discharged under the same conditions as the present, I have not the least objection; I very strongly support the hon. member for South Simcoe when he asks that the Bankruptcy Act should be repealed subject to the retention of a clause such as referred to.

Mr. MERCIER: There is no proposition of that kind before the House just now.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): It is true, the hon. member did not make a formal motion to that effect, but I gathered that to be the effect of his argument. I repeat, there is a good deal in what the hon. member for South Simcoe said and I think the Minister of Justice should give heed to it, especially when it represents the opinion of ninety-five per cent of the citizens of my province.

Mr. BOYS: I think I had better make a little explanation. I do not know that I went quite as far as has been suggested. What I said was that if the present idea of having authorized trustees was abandoned and we were to revert to the system of candidates, so to speak, on the part of large creditors—for that is what it would amount to—we might as well get back to the former provincial practice as set out in the various provincial acts. My experience has been this. An assignment in the past was made to some individual; it could be made to anyone, it could be made to an office boy for that matter. A meeting of creditors was held. The creditors organized themselves, and in the large cities we know perfectly well that there are cliques each with their pet trustee. They came there supporting their pet trustee, and finally one side won out. Instead of having what should be, in my opinion, more or less of a judicial officer in the position of trustee, you had the successful candidate of certain interests in the larger cities. There might be forty or fifty local creditors but their claims were small. One or two large creditors in the cities controlled the situation, changed the trustee, or assignee as he was called 4 p.m. before, and appointed their choice. He might be a perfectly honest man, but it goes without saying that his tendencies would be to do what he could for those who secured the office for him. What I said was, that if we are going to depart from the system we have at the present time of having an authorized trustee—who is a man appointed by the department and who has to give substantial security—we might as well go further and return to the provincial idea. For the whole county of Simcoe, so far as I know—and it is a very large county, large in territory and very large in population, the people numbering over 90,000—I think there are only two trustees. They are both men of excellent standing in the county, they have given security, and they are doing their work well. If you are going to destroy that system entirely it seems to me—the Minister of Justice shakes his head but I certainly thought—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I say that in fact they will not be abolished, because if they have such experience they will be elected by the creditors.

Mr. BOYS: With the greatest possible respect to the views of the minister—and I would like to say that I do have very high respect for his opinion so far as I have heard it expressed in this House—I do not think the matter will work out that way at all; it has not during my thirty years' experience at the bar in my own province. I repeat, I believe you will find you will get back to the system of "candidates," just as I have mentioned, and that the creditors controlling the meeting—which means the largest creditors—will change the assignee as appointed by the debtor and elect one of their own choice. Now, you do not, in my opinion, get a man who could for a moment fill the position of an independent judicial officer under those conditions. I want the committee to understand that I do not oppose the present system at all, but I say if you are going back to the system suggested in the bill now before us you are practically returning to the provincial system. If you are going back to the provincial system you may just as well go the whole distance and let the laws of the various provinces govern. I think the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier misunderstood me in that connection. I would much sooner see the law as it exists at present maintained—

Mr. JACOBS: I think it was the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis) who misunderstood my hon. friend.

Mr. BOYS: I gathered from your remarks that you thought I had made some reference to the trustees, and advocated the repeal of the act, but perhaps I was mistaken.

Mr. JACOBS: It was the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps I am mistaken. My position is this: If we can retain the authorized trustees, let us do so. If we have too many, they are not appointed for life and good conduct, and the services of some of them may be dispensed with. That might be unpleasant; but it can be done, and we should get capable men.

As regards the landlord and his preference, this is not an appropriate time to discuss that subject, and when we come to it I may have something to say, as there seems to be a difference of opinion as regards landlords and preferential claims. In Ontario, I understand a landlord has a preference for one year's rent as regards the past. I was not speaking of the future at all.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) seems to be surprised at the fact that the law of 1919 is amended, and that we have these amendments this year. I must tell him that this is not new. The United States had been working for a century and a half before they arrived at their present bankruptcy law. We have been doing the same thing for nearly one hundred years. It is not because we now propose to make a change in the system of appointing trustees, that we should say that this is so radical an amendment that we would be justified in repealing the whole act. I may be in error, but it seems to me that the majority of the people of Canada are in favour of a bankruptcy act. I know the province of Quebec is opposed to it.

Mr. BOYS: So am I in favour of a bankruptcy act.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: But the majority seem to be in favour of it. My hon. friend says that we should not change the system of appointing trustees; that we have authorized trustees, and if we proceed in the way in which we now propose, many of the best men who have acquired experience under the present law will be deprived of the opportunity of continuing to practise their profession. He says that the system by which the trustee is chosen by the debtor is preferable. It seems to me that the creditors should have more to say than the debtor in the choice of the trustee who is to liquidate the estate. If my hon. friend looks over the situation in the various English-speaking countries, I do not think he will find anywhere else in the world a country which has such a system as we have to-day of authorized trustees, where the debtor is the judge as to the choice of the trustee. We now propose to adopt the English system, we propose to adopt the American system, and to say that the creditors who are most interested are those who should have the first and last say in the election or choice of the trustee.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a fact that the creditors have it in their power to remove the authorized trustee at any time after appointment? Does that not give the creditors the control to which they are entitled, and which is all that is necessary?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: They can do that for cause; but if it is good to give them such a right, why not give it to them at the start? That would not dispose of the objection raised by the hon. member for South Simcoe.

Mr. HANSON: The difficulty with the present modus operandi is this. You appoint in a locality an official called the custodian. He is only a locum tenens after all. While a meeting of the creditors is being arranged for, I think it will be found that the estate will be gradually disappearing; that these officials will not act as the authorized trustees act to-day. The minute a petition is filed with the authorized trustee, he takes control of the estate and he takes all steps necessary to protect the assets, pending the first meeting of the creditors. When the meeting of the creditors is held, it not infrequently happens that the creditors exercise their right under the act and change the authorized trustee. But the estate has been preserved in the meantime by a man who is responsible.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It has been so well preserved that, in many cases, if not in most cases, there has been nothing left for the creditors. We want to put a stop to that.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister, in making that statement, refer to Canada as a whole or only to certain parts of Canada?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: To many of the interests.

Mr. BOYS: I wish to say that, in my experience, that is absolutely not the case at all. The work of the trustees with whom I have had something to do, has been very satisfactory and the charges have not been excessive.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I congratulate my hon. friend who is most fortunate, and I am sure, as I have said before, that his trustees will continue to exercise their profession in the future, because the creditors will confide to them all the different estates which may have to be entrusted to trustees.

The hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter) raised an objection to the amendment that we propose regarding the custodian. He said that he objects to the choice of one of the largest creditors, because in most cases that creditor would be appointed trustee. It is very seldom that creditors are appointed trustees. I remember that in Quebec, under the law we had, we had regular professionals as trustees. We had not a very large number of them. They got to be known by the merchants, by the manufacturers, and in the large centres they were, in most cases, the same. Creditors were never appointed trustees,and I have reason to believe that under this law, what has happened in the past will happen in the future.

I understood some hon. members to say that the Credit Men's Associations disapproved of these amendments. From what I have heard and read of them, I find that they all approve the amendments. We have received resolutions of approval from the Manufacturers' Association of Canada, and from many boards of trades and different associations in Canada. This bill, which has been on the order paper for two or three weeks, has been considered by the whole population of Canada, and I gather from opinions that I have received that the amendments are generally approved.

As to the question of the rights of landlords, all we wish to do in suggesting amendments to the present law, is, first of all, to make it constitutional. It is all very well to say that in such and such a province the preference is too large in favour of the landlords; it is all very well to say that the laws of the provinces are different; but in amending our statutes, we must take into consideration our constitution. If we were to make a special section or clause which would make the law uniform for the whole Dominion, and if we were to find afterwards that such a section or clause was not in accordance with the British North America Act, we would have to amend our statute once more. I am told that at this moment an action is pending before a court in one of the provinces of the Dominion, and the parties have been told that the judge will decide that our section 52 is unconstitutional. Is it not preferable to leave it to the provinces to decide as to the privileges they wish to extend to the landlords? The adoption of our amendment, which provides that the privileges of the landlord shall be controlled by the provincial laws in force in 1920 in the various provinces, would not deprive any province of the right to amend its own laws to meet its own views. If it is found that the province of Quebec, for example, gives too much to the landlords, the business men or any of the electors of that province might very well wait upon the provincial government and request that the law, which my hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs) seems to think is so bad, be amended to provide that in future the privilege accorded the landlords should not extend to more than 26 or 28 months, or 16 months, or whatever might be deemed best. It would be quite simple for the people of Quebec to have their law amended if they considered it unjust; and if the privilege of the landlord is not considered enough in any of the other provinces, it is equally competent for them to amend their statutes. What I wish to insist upon is that in regard to the question of the privileges of the landlord, the important consideration is that whatever legislation we pass shall be constitutional, and unless we are perfectly certain that we can legislate without infringing upon any rights of the provinces in this particular we ought to be exceedingly careful. If we cannot pass a provision, in regard to this question of the privileges of landlords, that shall be uniform, and equally satisfactory and acceptable to every province, I think it is preferable for us to take the course that is now proposed, so that the provincial laws which are now in existence or which may be enacted in the future shall govern the rights of the landlords.

Mr. CARROLL: That would necessitate an amendment to section 51A of the act?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes. On this point I am prepared to receive the suggestions of the committee, and if there is offered anything that is better than what we propose I am ready to consider it.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Denis) mentioned anterior debates in this matter. I do not wish to reopen the discussion, but before entering upon a consideration of the details of the various amendments I would offer some general observations to the committee on the law itself. I fully agree with the majority of hon. members from my own province who have suggested in this House the entire repeal of the Bankruptcy Act. I do not desire to criticize the operation of the law outside the province of Quebec. Evidently, in view of the expressions of opinion of other hon. members in the House, the Bankruptcy Act operates rather favourably and satisfactorily in the other provinces. In the province of Quebec it has not given satisfaction.

Mr. JACOBS: Why?

Mr. CANNON: Before the bankruptcy law of 1919 was passed we had a very simple, economical law under our code of civil procedure, which was known as the voluntary abandonment of property. The people were satisfied with the operation of that law, and whatever changes were brought about by the Bankruptcy Act certainly did not meet with the approval of the majority of the people in our province. My hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs) has just inquired why the people of Quebec were not satisfied with the act of 1919. I can answer that question briefly. The reasons for this dissatisfaction were principally these three: First, the authorized trustees were appointed by the government in too large a number. We had in our province, in the large centres like Montreal and Quebec, accountants who had given entire satisfaction to the people, and who had been handling estates under our own abandonment of property law; and when the 1919 act was passed and put into force a greater number of trustees than necessary were appointed. The result was that while on the one hand we had large, prosperous and trusted firms who could handle estates in a satisfactory manner, there were on the other hand a whole lot of trustees who had for the most part been appointed through political pull, who had no experience, and who began to make a living by inducing people to go into bankruptcy. This evil has been considerable in the cities, but it has been widespread in the country. Farmers who had always met their liabilities with the merchants and with the banks, who never had any serious financial troubles, were told by these trustees that if they went into bankruptcy their debts would be wiped out, their financial liabilities would disappear, and they could start all over again. The farmers were deceived and a large number of them went into voluntary assignment. The trustees made a whole lot of money, the farmers lost the little they had, and their credit has naturally diminished in consequence. The result of the appointment of these unnecessary trustees under the 1919 law was most disastrous in our rural centres. The second reason is that the officials under the law, that is to say, the court officials who were supposed to conduct the proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, were under the control of nobody. They were not provincial officials; they were not federal officials; they were not under the authority of any judge. Although exercising functions of the widest importance, they were subject to the supervision of no one.

Mr. HANSON: Were the registrars not under the supervision of the judges?

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. and learned friend will examine the law he will see that while the judge has certain functions the official registrar also has distinct functions altogether beyond the judge's control. Let me give an example. In one of our judicial districts a minor official whose duties were solely to affix stamps to judicial proceedings became the registrar. Now this minor official has for years exercised functions of the highest character and is drawing tremendous fees without being controlled by anybody, and whoever attempts to control him is told very politely that "it is none of his business."

Mr. JACOBS: May I be permitted to point out that under the law passed last year he becomes an official of the provincial department?

Mr. CANNON: We had another example in the city of Montreal. The registrar under the Bankruptcy Act, when he received instructions from the attorney general of the province to follow a certain line of conduct, told the attorney general that "he had nothing to do with it." This is a notorious fact.

Mr. JACOBS: But he ended up by following the instructions of the attorney general.

Mr. CANNON: He may have changed his attitude. But that is the condition of things in the province of Quebec: first, too many trustees; second, officials under nobody's control; and third, the Civil Code put aside and mortgagees treated as ordinary unsecured creditors. Therefore there is throughout the province a general feeling of dissatisfaction with the act.

Mr. CARROLL: Does my hon. friend mean to say that under the Bankruptcy Act a mortgage would not be a preferred claim in the province of Quebec?

Mr. CANNON: Not unless it fell within the provisions of, I think, Section 32.

Mr. CARROLL: The three months?

Mr. CANNON: Yes. I do not wish to repeat the arguments which were brought forward this afternoon, but there is also the question of the married woman's rights being put aside. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite mentioned the desirability of having a uniform law throughout Canada, especially as concerns federal matters. We all agree on this point. But this uniformity, if it is to meet with the approval of the people, must be of such a nature that it does not take away privileges which have been guaranteed to any province by the British North America Act or by existing treaties. We have in the province of Quebec privileges concerning our civil laws which are considered, and rightly so, as the most sacred heritage received from our forefathers. We are justly proud of our French laws. These laws have their source, as everybody knows, in the greatest work of the highest legal minds—Pothier and others. We have in the province of Quebec laws handed down to us from la coutume de Paris, and we have our civil laws which are a reproduction of the Code Napoleon. We wish to follow in federal matters the same laws as the other provinces, but we ask the federal government, when it deals with matters of this sort, to be always careful not to lay a hand on the sacred heritage which we treasure and which we want to retain as complete and as intact as it was left to us.

I observe with pleasure that the amendments brought forward by the Minister of Justice meet to a large extent the three inconveniences which I have indicated. Trustees are now to be chosen by the creditors. Those who are good will continue in business; those who are simply trying to live by deceiving people and leading them into bankruptcy will have no more business, and so this evil will disappear. As to officials under the Bankruptcy Act, if there was no control before, I see with pleasure that, should these amendments be adopted, these officials in our provinces will be under the immediate control of our prothonotaries.

As to our civil rights, I see by the amendments that they are restored in great measure. There is, I think, misapprehension in this House as to the right of the federal government to encroach on the civil rights of the provinces. Bankruptcy is within the scope of federal legislation according to the British North America Act. If we have a right to legislate on bankruptcy we should exercise the right, but only encroach on provincial rights whenever we have to enact something which is an essential incident to our own law. What are the essentials of a bankruptcy act? First, to take over the property of a debtor; secondly, to realize the assets of that debtor; and, thirdly, to distribute the proceeds. These are the essentials.

Mr. JACOBS: What about the discharge of the bankrupt?

Mr. CANNON: I do not think it is essential. But even if it were, supposing we have, then, four essentials, cannot this parliament enact a complete bankruptcy law to meet these four essentials without laying a hand on the civil laws of the province of Quebec?

Mr. CARROLL: Does my hon. friend think that uniformity should attach to all federal laws?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly, provided the rights of the provinces are safeguarded. Let us legislate in bankruptcy matters in order to meet four, or three, requisites of a bankruptcy act. But I say we can do so without in any shape or form encroaching on the civil rights of any province. I am pleased that the Minister of Justice who is in charge of this legislation belongs to the school of those who believe that the provinces are not merely adjuncts of this federal parliament, but that they are just as powerful and sovereign within their own jurisdiction as the federal parliament is.

Mr. HANSON: You did not say so the other night.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, I did.

Mr. CANNON: We have had in Canada a long fight between successive Ministers of Justice and the attorneys general of the different provinces, and I hope, notwithstanding what my hon. friend opposite may say, that the Minister of Justice will continue the tradition of Sir Oliver Mowat and others and will never, after having been Premier of Quebec, endorse as Minister of Justice the policy that would make the federal power superior to the provincial.

I have read the amendments and am sorry to see that the Minister of Justice has brought forward nothing to cover the punishment of offences under the Bankruptcy Act. Under sections 92 and 93 all such offences are indictable offences; but the Criminal Code has not been amended to meet the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, and therefore it is impossible for a man accused of an offence under the act to have either a summary or speedy trial. Very often these offences are of such a nature that they could be tried summarily or speedily, especially in rural centres where criminal terms are held only once a year, sometimes only one every two years. Before this bill passes I hope the Minister of Justice will see to it that amendments are prepared by his officials to meet this condition.

Mr. JACOBS: I would point out to my hon. friend that cases under section 417 of the Criminal Code—offences against bankruptcy—are now handled speedily in the district of Montreal under the Speedy Trials Act.

Mr. CANNON: When was the amendment introduced?

Mr. JACOBS: It has been the law for the last thirty years.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend may think it is the law, but I doubt whether a provision enacted thirty years ago would have effect in the legislation of 1919, which repealed the old law.

Mr. JACOBS: The section of the code to which I refer—I think it is 417—says that the court may handle offences under the Bankruptcy Act. Under that act we have sent to prison quite a large number of traders in Montreal. I trust they will not take this hint from my hon. friend to apply for habeas corpus.

Mr. CANNON: I know I have had occasion as Crown prosecutor to discuss the matter before our judges of the Sessions of the Peace, and they have come to the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction. The Criminal Code was passed when there was no Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. CARROLL: My hon. friend will remember that the Criminal Code gives jurisdiction in all criminal cases except certain matters, and if it does not except bankruptcy, the courts have the power to try cases under the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. CANNON: I attach great value to the opinion of my two learned friends, and I hope they are right. But I direct the matter to the minister's attention in view of the fact that it was decided altogether differently by our judges in Quebec, and that very recently.

I support most heartily the amendments which are offered, and I hope this is only the first step in the right direction. If we cannot obtain a complete repeal of the law, I trust that it will be amended in such a way as to cause most of the present inconveniences and disadvantages to disappear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In the first place, I want to commend the member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) upon the study he has given to this question and also to congratulate him upon his sudden, violent, and, I hope, permanent, conversion to the recognition of provincial rights. During this same session we witnessed an absolute disallowance, a flouting, a complete disregard of provincial rights in the case of a Nova Scotia statute, and it is both refreshing and interesting to see the good that discussion has done and the converts it has already made.

Mr. JACOBS: May I point out that desperate diseases require desperate remedies?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Apparently the disease looked so bad that the remedy, which is best illustrated by that frame of mind which grants to the provinces their rights and acknowledges their jurisdiction, has already happily been established just where it was most needed. I agree that there are difficulties in Quebec. I do not personally know anything about them, but so many hon. gentlemen have said they exist that I am sure they do. I have no doubt that too many trustees were appointed in the very first instance, as my hon. friend says. The former government appointed 182 trustees for Quebec—a larger number than had been appointed for any other province. In that list were included all the accountants and all the gentlemen the hon. member referred to as having done business before, and it included also a lot of others. But even at that, apparently it was not large enough, because the new government promptly appointed 66 more, so that we had a total of 248 in that province. Revocations in the case of people not putting up their security reduced the number by 39. I am frank to say that 209 trustees for Quebec are altogether too many. I suggest that the minister consider the advisability of recognizing that fact and of putting Quebec upon a more reasonable basis in that respect. He will have no difficulty in finding out where the troubles are or in getting the act on a working basis in that province, because so far as I am aware it is on a working basis everywhere else. Would it not be better to make an honest attempt to improve matters in the province of Quebec by cutting down the number of trustees, getting it back to what the situation was before the legislation was introduced? Would it not be better to do that than to upset every other province with the idea of helping a comparatively small matter of regulation or administration in Quebec? I recall very well the old days when assignments were plentiful when there were many commercial and law firms specializing in assignments, firms which had their representatives here, there and everywhere. We remember that certain gentlemen who could be named by the practitioners in almost every town and who specialized in that kind of work always had a little valise packed in their office in order that they might take the first train out where there was a chance of getting an assignment. We all recollect the fights that used to be worked up, the money that was spent, and the indirect preferences that resulted. Is it wise to go back to that condition? For that is what we are doing. Again, is this thing not costing enough money as it is? Why should any unnecessary interest be brought into the matter? I am very much in sympathy with my hon. friend from the province of Quebec when he speaks about junior officials having large powers—and we propose to increase those powers; we are aggravating the evil he complains of. It is the first step that is important in matters of bankruptcy and assignment; the great thing is to get in quickly and see that the right thing is done at the right time. Well, we are now saying that the person who is to take the first steps is the class of official that my hon. friend from Quebec has spoken about.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is under a misapprehension as to the word "custodian." In our province, under these amendments, the prothonotary, the chief official of the Superior Court, will be the one who will control the operation of the act. We are satisfied with that. Before, he had no authority.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know how it is in Quebec, and I will take my hon. friend's statement for that at once, but in Ontario we have the local registrar everywhere. The vast majority of these gentlemen have never had the slightest amount of commercial experience, absolutely none. Very many of them have very little experience of the ways of the world or anything else outside of the town where they may have had a practice and subsequently received the appointment, and many of them have never practised at all. Yet it is to gentlemen of that experience that estates are now to be given, just at a time when decisive action is the most necessary. Is that a good thing?

Again, in order to protect—I do not know why we have this other feature brought in—but in order to protect the estate—I do not know whether it is to protect it from these registrars or what the real idea is—we are to have a custodian. There is another place of possible conflict and possible loss. But why, if the registrar is good enough to take hold of this thing in the first instance, cannot you trust him with the problems? Or is it really necessary to have a second set of costs besides the registrar's set of costs? You have the custodian's set of costs, and you have not finished then, because you must go further and have your election and finally find out who the trustee is to be. Mr. Chairman, as we are running it in Ontario—I do not know how it will be in other provinces—the result is simply this: You are going to have three sets of law costs in any event, and we do not know how serious they will be or how far this thing will go. The opportunity is there. You have the opportunity in the first instance with the registrar. He will have somebody to look after him, to steer him. Then you have the debtor, and the debtor usually has a substantial interest in the estate. You have him there with his lawyer. Then you have the curator, and finally you have the receiver. We have all these additional costs thrown on estates in Ontario simply because too many trustees are appointed in Quebec; there is no trouble anywhere else. I do not want to overstate this matter in the slightest, and so that I do not overstate it I am just going to read a short memorandum as to how people who trade, people in business, think this will work out. They point out what the present law is; I do not touch that. They point out as to the amendments that are now being made: I do not touch that. Then they go on to say that the court officer to do this work in the province of Ontario will be the registrar or the local registrar. Then they say:

> The debtor, when filing this voluntary assignment with the court, is required by the amendment to, at the same time, file with the official receiver a sworn statement of his affairs including a list of his creditors. Then the official receiver, or, in the case of a receiving order then the court, is to appoint a custodian who shall, as far as possible, be selected from the most interested creditors. The official receiver is required to preside at the first meeting of creditors, which is to be called by the custodian at his office or some other convenient place. This meeting of creditors is to appoint a trustee for the estate, who may be any person the meeting may name, and the trustee thereupon takes charge of the administration of the estate.

I think these business men have fairly stated it.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend says they are business men?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Who are these gentlemen?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Auditors accustomed to business. I want to make it sure that I am not overstating the case, and I am giving their opinion to my hon. friend. I do not want to overstate in any one particular, and if these gentlemen are wrong on any point I hope the minister will point out where. They go on to say:

> This method of appointing a trustee contains many objectionable features. It is undoubtedly designed in an attempt to correct an unfortunate state of affairs in the province of Quebec, where authorized trustees have been appointed under the Bankruptcy Act who are inexperienced: It is stated that the government has appointed—

They go on to give the number of trustees appointed in Montreal, and then say:

> The result is that the administration of bankrupt estates throughout the entire Dominion is being complicated very materially in an effort to cure a condition in Quebec which should never have been permitted to arise. The present Bankruptcy Act, section 15, provides adequate machinery for the change by the creditors at any meeting of the authorized trustee to whom the assignment was originally made, or who was appointed receiver by the court, and it is submitted that the creditors have therefore a complete remedy in their own hands.

I think my hon. friend is wrong when he stated in his speech that section 15 was only operative for cause, that the creditors for cause might make a change. And if I may draw his attention to the section I think he will find that the creditors at their discretion, without any cause, at their will, may make any change they like. It is the court that asks for cause. If I am wrong in that, I hope my hon. friend will correct me. The memorandum goes on:

> The objectionable features of these changes may be summarized as follows:
> As to the matter of expense: The proposed amendments add to the cost of an estate, the costs of the court and the costs of the custodian, which will bear heavily upon small estates. Three sets of solicitors' costs will have to be paid out of many estates, that is, the costs of the solicitor for the debtor, then the solicitor of the custodian, and finally of the trustee.
> As to meetings of creditors, assignment papers would frequently be filed with local registrars through the province in which the debtor lives. The appointment of a creditor at a distant centre as custodian will be inconvenient. If a local creditor should be named as such custodian the first meeting of creditors will be called locally, resulting in creditors, who are usually located in large centres, having to make long journeys to attend meetings for the appointment of a trustee. On the other hand, the meetings of creditors of a debtor residing, for instance, at Sault Ste. Marie, if called in Toronto, where the majority of creditors of most estates in Ontario are usually located, and which would be the most convenient place for the meeting, then the local registrar at Sault Ste. Marie would be obliged to personally attend the meeting of creditors, at the expense of probably a small estate.

I pause there and ask my hon. friend what he thinks ought to be done in a case like that. There you have a merchant at Sault Ste. Marie. The local registrar there is the appropriate person to handle that estate. You have all the creditors in, say, Toronto. These amendments provide for a meeting of the creditors. What is to be done? Are all the creditors to go up to Sault Ste. Marie, or is the local registrar to come down to the creditors at Toronto? Usually debtors arrange these meetings so as to meet the convenience of creditors, and so that there shall be only one railway trip instead of the expense of bringing thirty or forty creditors to the meeting. What does the minister think ought to be done in a case of that kind? Is the local registrar, because he has to be there, going to call the meeting where the creditors are or where the debtor lives?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is a matter of detail, when we come to it we can deal with it. I may remark that the creditors have the right to vote by proxy; it is not necessary for them to travel from any place in any province to the centre of that province, they may very well send their proxies. Even where the meetings are held in the great centres very few creditors attend but they are always represented by someone. What is complained of is a matter of detail but I am prepared to discuss it. In reference to the memorandum from which my hon. friend is quoting I should explain that I have met quite a number of trustees. There was only one that I saw who was unalterably opposed to this amendment. He is a gentleman from Toronto and very well experienced in these matters. I tried to convince him that he would not lose anything from this amendment but I find he has not been converted yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In a city like Toronto you have your one registrar. How would it be possible for him to look after the meeting of creditors from time to time in a city of that size, with the amount of insolvency matters which are pending there? How could he do it?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Very easily, and he could have a sub-officer to replace him, as we propose by an amendment which my hon. friend will see later on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So there will be relief given in that direction?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is another point that I draw to the minister's attention:

> In the administration of a complicated or important estate a great deal of preliminary work must be done by a trustee prior to the first meeting of creditors apart from the mere preparation of the statement of affairs.

I do not suppose any one of us will deny that that work ought to be done, unless you are going to have a whole lot of time and money thrown away.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: What kind of work?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The work of getting together all the figures, the work necessary in order to make a proper and complete statement of the affairs of the debtor. That ought to be available. Further than that, if the trustee be a good trustee he should be prepared with some suggestions as to the best way of working the matter out.

Mr. MARTELL: As I understand it the proposed amendment provides that the assignment shall first be made to the clerk of the court or prothonotary of the court, who is usually the same official, and this prothonotary first secures a list of the creditors and notifies them. He calls a meeting of these people and they elect a curator or trustee to carry on the work. Now, prior to this amendment there was a lot of official trustees in bankruptcy and the majority of them, though perfectly honest men, were concerned primarly with getting their fees for the work they did.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the question?

Mr. MARTELL: In this case it is proposed, I believe, that the person to whom the assignment is primarly made—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is not asking a question he is making a speech. Surely we would all agree that in the administration of a complicated or important estate a great deal of preliminary work must be done by the trustee prior to the first meeting of the creditors, apart from the mere preparation of the statement as to the condition of affairs.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend's informant wants the trustees to be chosen by the debtors. We say the trustee should be chosen by the creditors, and that work could be done by the official receiver or custodian. And what is the work to be performed? Purely and simply the calling of the creditors.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that is all my hon. friend thinks ought to be done I can tell him he is not familiar with the work which is done by the better class of trustees when the work is properly looked after, and it is usually properly looked after by the better class of men. If this meeting is merely in order to see how many people there are on the list of creditors, and the time and money consumed is to be thrown away well and good. But if you have a man who understands this work there will be a lot more than that done.

Mr. MARTELL: Does the hon. member not think well of the proposition of the Minister of Justice which is to try and provide that everybody concerned shall get a fair return from a bankrupt estate?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that is what the Minister of Justice has in mind he is not doing it.

Mr. MARTELL: I think he is doing it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, he is going to prevent that. Now, is there any dispute about this?—

> This work calls for expert accountancy knowledge and its proper preparation does materially assist the meeting in its decision. This preparatory work could not be accomplished by a creditor-custodian, thus making necessary further needless meetings.

Is there any dispute about that?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, there is dispute. When an assignment is made by the receiver a custodian is appointed and if it is necessary to take any proceedings to preserve the property the custodian does it under the direction of the receiver. If there is an inventory to be made the custodian makes it and he calls the creditors. In the work of liquidation he is supported by the trustee.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then, Mr. Chairman, we have this position: No work of liquidation goes on, nothing is done, except a mere collection of names, until the receiver is appointed.

Mr. MARTELL: Is not that right?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Nothing is done at all, there is no preliminary work of any kind done?

Mr. MARTELL: Nobody is prejudiced.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The estate is not got into shape at all, and nothing is done to clarify the issue. We have that, at any rate, that nothing of any kind is done until after the meeting of the creditors. I take it that the minister would not suggest that the local registrars have any expert knowledge in accountancy that would enable them to do the work, no matter how pressing the necessity?

5 p.m.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That work has to be done by the custodian, who will be a man of experience and interested by reason of the fact that he will be one of the largest creditors.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Ah, but how can the minister tell he will be experienced because he is a creditor?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I said "interested."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But the one thing here is experience—experience in accountancy, experience in the work. The fact that the man is a creditor does not say that he is at all experienced one way or the other. The custodian is to be one of the creditors.

Mr. MARTELL: Not necessarily.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Should he be one of the creditors?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If possible, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why should he not be the man who ought to be appointed the permanent receiver?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If it is satisfactory to the creditors they will appoint him trustee.

Mr. JACOBS: Some little time must pass before the appointment of the permanent trustee?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what I am pointing out, and I am pointing out further that under this amendment there will be a complete waste of time. On the other hand, if you appoint a man who is experienced in accountancy a lot of preliminary work will be done and, very often, a complete scheme worked out. Now, what does my hon. friend say to this?—

> The appointment of a creditor as Custodian opens wide the door for serious collusion between the creditor-custodian and the debtor and would lead to irregularities of many kinds which would be extremely difficult to trace.

In other words your custodian is a man who may have a private interest in the estate apart from the rest of the creditors As a creditor he has his own axe to grind, but it may not be one that is common to the rest of the creditors.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: But the custodian acts under the direction of the receiver.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The custodian is getting control and I do not know how long that matters could be delayed until the permanent receiver is ultimately appointed, or whether you may not have to deal with the fact that the custodian being on the ground would like to stay there. I suppose it will also be admitted:

> In large estates a creditor would be totally incapable of taking charge or administering its affairs for even the short period between his appointment and the calling of the meeting.

Would that be permitted?

> Experience is essential to such temporary administration and often it is necessary and expedient that advances should be made to the estate in order to conserve assets and manage the business so that the estate can be subsequently dealt with to the best advantage.

I suppose my hon. friend will provide in his bill that this custodian may be recouped for advances he makes in order to keep the estate going. That is a risk that good trustees are taking to-day.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is no doubt that if he disburses any money, he should be recouped.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And if he advances money for the purpose of keeping the business going?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am pointing out again to my hon. friend that that incidental work is sometimes very important, and that it ought to be in the hands of people who have been accustomed to doing that sort of thing. The rest of this memorandum—and it is a long one—merely emphasizes the points that I am indicating. It shows the manner in which log-rolling and wire-pulling goes on when you have an election carried out in the way that my hon. friend suggests. At least that is what has happened in the past, and there is no question that it will happen again in the future. I am not, however, going to trouble my hon. friend with further details, because that is all covered in the larger points that I have mentioned. Again I ask my hon. friend: Why not make the Quebec situation right and have things functioning in Quebec as they ought to function and as they are functioning in Ontario?

Mr. MARTELL: What is the difference?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid it would take me too long to tell my hon. friend. We have had a long statement on that, and we all have to agree that there is a difference. I am taking what hon. members from the province of Quebec say.

Mr. MARTELL: Everybody in Canada knows that the system of laws in Quebec is different from that in any of the other provinces. If my hon. friend and I were to argue in regard to the Nova Scotia laws and the Ontario laws, we would understand each other; but if we undertake to argue about the laws of Quebec, we are both in the dark.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not going to argue with my hon. friend as to the Nova Scotia or the Ontario laws.

Mr. MARTELL: They are very much the same.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We were not talking about the laws in either province. My hon. friend was out of the room at the time, but our discussion had to do with the character and number of trustees in Quebec. Would it not be better, as I said before, to try to get this Quebec difficulty overcome as I have suggested? I am not going to discuss the other clauses at all. I have discussed the question of appointment only, and only because my hon. friend discussed it. I am not going into any details as to his rent clauses and the like, except to say this. I want to find out, in the first instance, whether my hon. friend thinks this House has jurisdiction to pass a bankruptcy law.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can my hon. friend tell me how in the name of common sense, a bankruptcy law can be passed which does not affect property and civil rights?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It depends.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A bankruptcy law means the creation of a method of determining civil rights. It takes civil rights here and civil rights there.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I wish I had the assurance of my hon. friend to decide that point of law. It is not so clear as that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not talking about a point of law; I am talking about the necessary implication of a Bankruptcy Act. Under a Bankruptcy Act you are immediately taking away the rights of creditors. Are they not civil rights?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The right of distress is taken away. Is that not a civil right?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Unquestionably. Therefore, we must all agree that you cannot have a bankruptcy law, power to pass which is given to the Dominion under the British North America Act, and you cannot exercise it unless you interfere with property and civil rights. The whole thing deals with property and nothing else. Does my hon. friend find in the British North America Act any distinction drawn between property and civil rights having regard to personal property on the one hand and property and civil rights having regard to real property on the other? Because I cannot find such a distinction.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Perhaps I might show some to my hon. friend, but I do not suppose we intend to discuss that point here. As I say, the question has already been submitted to some of our best judges, and some have said that we have no right to interfere to the exent of depriving landlords of their preference; some say that we may have that right. As I said before, we have now a case pending in which, I understand, judgment is to be rendered against our act. I shall not be prepared to say that the judgment is not sound.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If we stand in that parlous position, we ought to stop doing anything with this act.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Not at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, because my hon. friend himself has admitted that it is absolutely necessary and essential, under a bankruptcy law, to deal with property and civil rights. Every day, under a bankruptcy law, we are interfering with rights of action which are founded on provincial law, just as much as is the right of a lessor founded on provincial law. I would have thought that if we had the right to introduce and pass a bankruptcy law, we would have the right to deal with matters of necessity incidental to that field of legislation. The Privy Council has so held in other cases. If we have not that right, I point out to my hon. friend that this measure ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. MARTELL: Though we have already passed a Bankruptcy Act, does my hon. friend not think that before we put an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act upon the statute books, it would be well to repeal the Bankruptcy Act as it stands at present, and to get a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada and, if necessary, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in order that we may know exactly what we can do in regard to bankruptcy—though we have the power, under the British North America Act, to pass a bankruptcy law—in order to see how far, in the opinion of the learned judges or of the law lords, we can go as regards an infringement on property and civil rights? Would that not be better than allowing the ordinary people to bear the expense?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The trouble in that case would be that the people would have to pay a great deal more. There are many insolvencies at the present time; if we cancel this law, that would cost the public, the creditors and the debtors, a great deal of money, and more money would be thrown away.

Mr. MARTELL: Does my hon. friend not think, before we had this bankruptcy law, we were getting along very well under our various provincial laws with regard to debtors and so on?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is a good thing to have a law which will enable a man who has failed honestly to be able to get a clean sheet and to start afresh. We could not do that before, and for that reason I am in favour of the bankruptcy provision. But surely my hon. friend will agree with me in this, that if we have jurisdiction to pass this bankruptcy law, we have jurisdiction to interfere with the right of a lessor just as much as we have the right to interfere with the rights of any other creditor.

Mr. MARTELL: I agree with that.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I understand my hon. friend desires, as we do, to frame a bankruptcy law that will be as perfect as possible—he is in favour of a bankruptcy law?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We are discussing the point whether we have the right, legislating as we do in regard to bankruptcy, to affect property and civil rights?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: As I said before, there is room for discussion on that point. The only point, though, that we have to consider in connection with these amendments is the preference of the landlord. When there is doubt on such a question why not make it sure that there shall be no cause for attack by anyone on our amendment, on the ground of its being unconstitutional, by leaving to the provinces all their rights intact in this matter? If, simply in order that we may have a uniform law for all provinces, our legislation changes the status of the landlords in any province and thereby gives occasion for the contesting of our act and the decision later on by the courts that it is unconstitutional, we should only have to start all over again; while if we leave, as we propose to do, the privileges of landlords within the jurisdiction of every province, there is no possibility of any doubt being raised in connection with our amendment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would willingly give in to my hon. friend if it were possible in my opinion logically to do so on the one hand, and on the other hand to maintain our bankruptcy law. Logically, I cannot see the difference between saying to a preferred creditor, who has risked his capital, that his preference shall be absolutely void under our bankruptcy law, while we say to the landlord, who has risked nothing except the occupancy of his property, "We will not interfere with you."

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is the merit of the provision.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The merit of the provision? I should think the merit is all with the man who has risked his capital. But on the question of property and civil rights, is there any distinction between a preferred creditor and a preferred landlord? You interfere with local law in each case.

Mr. MARTELL: Is it not a fact that in all failures, even under provincial laws—and this is certainly the case in Nova Scotia—the landlord has priority over all other creditors?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I know that there is such a preference. In Ontario it has been one of twelve months down to the time of the failure, and three months afterwards. But we changed that in Ontario by our legislation; it is only three months now, if I remember rightly, to the time of the failure. But there is no trouble in Ontario.

Mr. MARTELL: There is no trouble in Nova Scotia.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was a just change to make, and I believe Nova Scotia had the same provision as Ontario.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Suppose we postpone further discussion of this point until we get to that amendment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very well.

Mr. BOYS: If the minister is afraid of the question of landlords' rights, if he fears that we are treading upon provincial jurisdiction in interfering with the landlords in their claim for rent, what has he to say regarding the Statute of Limitations? Under the law of Ontario, which I imagine is the same as in many other provinces, the creditor has a right of action for six years. But if you give the bankrupt his discharge, and if you want seriously to face this question of provincial rights, what about the application of the Statute of Limitations in this case? When you give the debtor his discharge you say to the creditor that while the law of his province gives him for six years the right to sue, yet under federal legislation in this particular respect he shall not sue at all? I am not seeking to raise these provincial questions, but now that we are discussing them I am surprised to hear the minister state that there is a grave doubt concerning our right with respect to the landlords.

Mr. MARTELL: I understand the minister to propose that as regards the landlord's preference the provincial law as it previously stood shall be invoked again. Is not that fair to those people who have been brought up under that law, and to the lawyers who are fully acquainted with it?

Mr. BOYS: The hon. gentleman is quite right; that is exactly what the minister says. and that is acceding to the suggestion that we are interfering with provincial rights. But I am asking the minister's attention to another feature which is more far-reaching than that. The Statute of Limitations in Ontario gives the creditor the right to sue within a period of six years.

Mr. MARTELL: It is the same with us.

Mr. BOYS: Well, are you not taking that right away by this legislation when you give authority for the discharge of the bankrupt? I am absolutely in favour of the discharge, but if we are to worry about provincial questions, I should think it would be better to take time to consider all these matters, because there is no earthly doubt that you are interfering with the right of the creditor under the Statute of Limitations when you provide for the discharge of the debtor. It may be well for us to go cautiously until the Privy Council has passed upon the question. If you venture into the realm of provincial rights there are a number of other questions, besides that of landlords, which might be urged along the same line.

There is another feature with regard to the authorized trustee on which I might speak for a moment. I have listened carefully to what the minister has said on this point, and while I have an absolutely open mind on the subject I must confess that he has not convinced me. I am in favour of the authorized trustee, because, as I think, you will get in the main good men. They are appointed by the department and give a substantial security. What right has the creditor to find fault if the estate of the debtor is dealt with by a man appointed in this way? Surely the creditors are just as safe in the hands of such trustees as they would be with one of their own choice, when he is only himself a successful candidate against others. There is absolutely no doubt that in all these meetings of creditors an effort is made by one clique to have one man appointed who will act for a number of wholesale houses in the large cities, while another clique will endeavour to have an assignee of their own choice nominated; and generally one group come to the meeting sufficiently strong to control affairs and they secure the appointment by outwitting the others. Surely creditors—and this is what we must consider—are as safe in the hands of an authorized trustee, appointed with proper security, as they would be under a trustee appointed in the way I have described. If the minister has anything further to urge upon the subject I shall be glad to hear it, because if I could see any reason for a different view I would gladly take it. I do believe that the present system has worked well in Ontario, and because it has worked well I think we should stick to it. It it has not proved satisfactory in Quebec, and the minister thinks that something different is advisable for that province, it is not my desire to say or do anything that would interfere with the satisfactory operation of the act there. But I realize that if we are to have uniformity at all it would hardly be right to have one law for one province and a different law for another province. For that reason I think it is better to stick to the idea of authorized trustees. I agree with the suggestion of the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) that if there are grievances in Quebec, if too many trustees have been appointed, if they are not of the right type, or if they have been guilty of improper conduct, such as persuading solvent farmers to make assignments in order that they themselves might be personally advantaged, then it is high time that some provision be embodied in the act to make any such conduct a criminal offence in order that these men might be punished. There are proper ways of dealing with men of this type. But the mere fact that a few trustees, such as have been described, have been appointed in this way is no valid reason for turning this act completely upside down. If you are going to do that let us get back to provincial legislation.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. MARTELL: Would it not be well to assign the work to local registrars? Many of these men holding official positions are not dependent on the fees derived under the Bankruptcy Act, whereas the trustee in bankruptcy is very apt to be particularly concerned regarding his fees.

Mr. BOYS: Unless the position of registrar is looked upon as a sinecure, and therefore those occupying them do not earn the fees they are now receiving, I do not approve of the suggestion. It may be that there are local registrars who have not work enough to do, but as a rule I think they are fairly busily engaged, and you would be simply giving them a lot more work. I do not hesitate to say that in Ontario we have as capable a registrar as anywhere in Canada. He is a very efficient man. But he already had plenty of work to do, and there is no question that when these duties were heaped upon him he had too much to attend to. From what I have been told by members of the profession in Toronto—my own experience is limited—he did not have time enough to perform these additional duties.

Mr. MARTELL: You take as your instance, a large centre of population.

Mr. BOYS: I am taking the act as it stands.

Mr. MARTELL: Take the case of a small centre.

Mr. BOYS: We must deal with the act as it is. There was only one registrar for Ontario; if there was one for every county I would not be arguing as I am. I admit at once that the suggestion contained in the amendment before the committee is a great improvement, because of course the work is being divided up, and it may be that in that respect it will turn out all right. If we have to submit to these other changes, as far as I am concerned I am in favour of this feature, but I take the stand that we should not depart from the system which is working well everywhere except in Quebec. Again I say, if these abuses exist let us insert a section which will deal with the guilty and punish them. Regarding the controversy between two hon. gentlemen opposite, I am of opinion that where an offence is made indictable, as it is in many cases in this act, that is sufficient in itself, as the Criminal Code deals with indictable offences. This act says that the doing of a certain thing shall be an indictable offence, and thereupon I should imagine information could be laid and the provisions of the code invoked. However, if there is any doubt on the point a very definite provision should be inserted in the act.

Mr. CARROLL: The hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) raised the point that the judge handling a bankruptcy case might commit the accused to the Supreme Court for trial, and thereupon no other criminal proceedings could be taken against him. There may be something in this contention. On the other hand, section 523 or 533—I forget which—of the Criminal Code provides that a county court judge shall have absolute jurisdiction except in cases of murder, treason and so forth. I take the ground that as bankruptcy is not included in the exceptions the bankruptcy court would have jurisdiction under the code. But there is something to be said in favour of my hon. friend's contention.

Mr. BOYS: I do not know of any provision which gives the bankruptcy court any jurisdiction regarding indictment. Certain things are made indictable offences.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me, according to section 93 of the Bankruptcy Act a judge of the Superior Court who acts as judge in bankruptcy has a right to commit, and the section indicates the procedure to be followed. It says that after the judge has committed the accused an indictment has to be preferred. Then subsection 4 says that should proceedings be taken under the Bankruptcy Act no other proceedings can be instituted under any other act. I argue that if the commitment is by a judge in bankruptcy, as the law stands to-day the trial can only be held before the Court of King's Bench.

Mr. CARROLL: That is, by jury?

Mr. CANNON: By jury. If, on the other hand, the complaint is made under section 417 of the Criminal Code, which is altogether different, then there can be a summary or speedy trial.

Mr. MARTELL: Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the judge in bankruptcy has power to order the commitment of a person without any preliminary investigation?

Mr. CANNON: No. According to the Bankruptcy Act the judge acts as the magistrate hearing the preliminary investigation. After the trustee, or whoever lays the complaint, has put before the judge sufficient evidence, there is a commitment. When the commitment has been made by the judge, at the following term of the Court of King's Bench an indictment is put before the grand jury. Then the question arises: if a prisoner when arraigned is called upon to plead, has he a right to ask for a speedy trial?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, he has.

Mr. CANNON: I do not think he has.

Mr. MICHAUD: I think we had better submit the question to the Minister of Justice, and find out.

Mr. CANNON: To sum up my argument, I say if the proceedings are taken under the Bankruptcy Act there cannot be a summary or speedy trial; if proceedings are taken under the Criminal Code there can be either trial by jury or summarily.

Mr. MARTELL: In other words, as I understand my hon. friend, an accused committed under the Bankruptcy Act has no power to elect for a speedy trial, he must go before the grand jury, be indicted and be tried by the petit jury?

Mr. CANNON: As the law reads now.

Mr. CLARK: I can shorten my remarks considerably by saying that I endorse the suggestions made by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton). The object that the Minister of Justice appears to be anxious to attain is that the creditors shall control or have the power of appointment of the trustee or custodian of the estate. If that is so I have no objection, but I think the same object can be attained in a simple and much more effective manner than by the proposed amendment. In the first place, I think it objectionable that the registrar should become the official receiver. In the second place, I think it is objectionable also that one of the creditors should be a custodian of the property even though it is only for a short period of time. I can think of instances where creditors with business reputations that are Dominion-wide have been only too anxious to secure advantage over their co-creditors. I think it objectionable that one creditor should be the custodian of the property, even for a short time, particularly where the estate may be owned by foreigners. There you will have creditors who, probably, are also foreigners; you will have a bad element; the custodian is almost sure to be not too scrupulous with regard to the rights of his co-creditors, and I am afraid that before the general meeting of creditors takes place the assets of the estate in many cases will have been dissipated. Or advantage may be gained by means of lobbying which will result in a trustee being appointed who has not had experience, who is not trustworthy, and who should not be given control of the estate pending its winding up. It strikes me that there are some weaknesses in the present act. Probably the most serious trouble has occurred in the province of Quebec. Undoubtedly too many trustees have been appointed, and apparently the trustees have not been of such a calibre that they should be entrusted with the administering of estates.

There is a provision in the act which permits debtors going into bankruptcy when they should not do so at all, debtors who are involved, perhaps, yet solvent, and who would eventually pull through. I refer to section 3, subsection (j) of chapter 8 of the statutes of 1922. This section uses the expression, "If he ceases to meet his liabilities as they become due." In other words, if one of these unscrupulous trustees, who appear to be so plentiful in the province of Quebec, comes across a man who may not be able to meet one particular debt, he can persuade that man to go into bankruptcy, and it is pretty difficult to combat the right of the debtor to do so. There is one debt he cannot meet; perhaps he cannot meet a good many; but he is not a man who should be permitted to go into bankruptcy. This section should be so amended as to provide that only those who are unable to meet their general liabilities may go into bankruptcy.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We intend to amend that section along those lines.

Mr. CLARK: Then that point is met. But I am very serious when I say that throughout Canada, these estates should be administered by authorized trustees. I do not believe that in Ontario or in the western provinces any serious difficulties have been encountered in connection with the authorized trustees. It all comes back to the man who is appointed. Perhaps the number of authorized trustees should be limited, and the appointees should be men experienced in the winding up of estates. I am prepared to agree that the creditors should have the power at the outset that the minister thinks they should have, provided that it is an authorized trustee who is appointed, a responsible man. That will bring about a condition of security and will make it certain that the estate will be administered in an honest manner. But in the present act there is a provision under which the creditors appoint a committee of inspectors representing all the creditors—not any particular creditor—and this committee of inspectors control the administration of the estate; the trustee cannot make a move without their authority. Therefore I think we have in the act now a provision which gives the creditors the control from the outset that the minister has laid down as essential.

There is another feature that has not been touched upon, and a very important one, with which I had to deal last summer. A responsible firm in Vancouver was in serious financial difficulty. They did not want to go into bankruptcy, and under the provisions of section 13 they made a proposal for a composition, which meant that eventually they would pay their debts in full. That composition was accepted by the creditors. As the act is proposed to be amended, that company could not make a composition with its creditors without going into bankruptcy; the good will of the business would have been gone and its credit lost; in fact, the business would have been destroyed. On the other hand, by being able to submit that composition to its creditors, the business of the company was continued, its credit in England and throughout this country was preserved, and to-day it is carrying on successfully. The minister might well consider leaving the act as it is so that a firm can make a composition without the necessity of going into bankruptcy. If the amendment as proposed goes through it will be a very serious matter for the business of the country. I say again that I hope the minister will give serious consideration, before these amendments are passed to the suggestions made by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), which, I think, are essentially sound. I do not mind the creditors having control so long as we are assured that we are not to have further complications. The minister will find within a year, I think, if this proposal regarding custodians is adopted, that great protest will be made by the business interests of the country. I do not see how anything can be gained by having these custodians. If it is necessary to have a custodian, by all means let him be one of the authorized trustees. Do not let an interested person have control of the estate, even for ever so short a time because the best business men will look after their own interests.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—"Authorized assignment."

The CHAIRMAN: It is suggested by the minister that (yy) should read as follows:

"Official Receiver" means the person having authority—

The words "having authority" are now inserted by motion to amend.

—in the locality of the debtor to exercise the functions of the official receiver for the time being.

The word "authorized" is struck out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does this section really carry out the expressed intentions of the minister, Mr. Chairman? For example, when we were discussing the question of custodian and I was pointing out the disadvantage of having creditors placed in that position, he said that it was not necessarily a creditor that the custodian had to be but I think as the clause now reads it makes the custodian a creditor. It says:

"Custodian" means the creditor duly authorized to exercise the functions of custodian for the time being.

That clause stands, and I think it is entirely out of line with the remarks of the hon. minister.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Subsection 4 of section 10 provides:

Immediately after the acceptance of the authorized assignment, the official receiver shall appoint a custodian whom he shall, as far as possible, select from the most interested creditors.

So it is not necessarily a creditor, but only as far as possible.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am pointing out to my hon. friend his own section here defining the word "custodian," and it says he shall be a creditor.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We might substitute the word "person" for the word "creditor" in line 12, subsection 2 of the bill. I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would remove that difficulty.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like to ask my hon. friend what is meant by section (yy) reading:

"Official Receiver" means the person in the locality of the debtor authorized to exercise the functions of the official receiver for the time being.

What does that mean? It says the official receiver is the person authorized to exercise the functions of the official receiver.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend will find that by clause 31 we are providing for the appointment of an official receiver, and here in (yy) of section 2 we are defining what the official receiver is. We say that the official receiver means the person having authority, that is to say, the person appointed in virtue of that section 31 which I have just mentioned.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This refers not to the real receiver, but to the stop-gap?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: To the real receiver, the judicial officer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: To the man who only acts temporarily?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No. He will be there for all time, even after the discharge has been granted. He will keep the records, the archives. He is a very important officer, and is permanent.

Mr. BOYS: Why does the minister use the word "locality?" That is very indefinite.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That means a district. Each province is a district, and we intend to divide them into sub-districts. It means the locality where the assignment is to take place.

Mr. BOYS: Do these sub-districts come down to country or judicial districts?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: When we arrive at that section we can discuss whether in Ontario we shall have, say ten or forty districts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend really think there is any sense in having that clause there at all? It says: The receiver is the receiver.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is necessary to define who the receiver is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The definition is that the receiver is the receiver. I do not know that we are getting any further by that. If you wanted to define it I would have thought you would have had some reference to the other section and say that it was the person to be appointed under the authority of that subsequent section. To say that a cow is a cow does not advance one very far in a definition.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is not the definition of a cow. It is for the purpose of showing where the assignment shall take place. It must take place in the hands of the receiver in the province.

Mr. CARROLL: He can only go to one receiver.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I see.

The CHAIRMAN: There is an amendment submitted to be known as 2A to be inserted between clauses 2 and 3. It is moved to amend section 3 of the act by inserting the word "generally" after the word "liabilities" in paragraph (j) thereof.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is to say, the debtor cannot be adjudicated bankrupt because he has failed to pay one of his debts. He must cease generally to meet his obligations.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have not that in front of us. It is rather hard to follow.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is subsection (j) of section 3a, which now reads as follows:

If he ceases to meet his liabilities as they become due.

We propose to include the word "generally" after the word "liabilities." The subsection will then read:

If he ceases to meet his liabilities generally as they become due.

That is to say we cannot adjudicate a man bankrupt because he fails to pay one of his debts; he must cease generally to meet his obligations.

Mr. JACOBS: Does not the word "liabilities" carry the implication of "generally."

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No. There was a judgment rendered by Mr. Justice Fisher in the case of Stevenson vs. Taylor, reported in volume 70, Dominion Law Reports, page 853, where it was decided that failure to pay one debt that was an act of bankruptcy within this paragraph.

Mr. BOYS: It seems to me that the minister will cause litigation by using the phrase that a man shall only be adjudicated bankrupt when he "generally" fails to pay his debts. Who knows what that means? It is quite evident it does not mean the failure to pay one debt; does not mean two or three, or twenty? Why not have a provision that if on written demand he fails to pay his debts for a week, or two weeks, or some such period, then he may be adjudicated bankrupt? The word "generally" is very indefinite, and is certain to give rise to litigation.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I do not see what litigation it could give rise to. It is for the judge to reach a decision. A petition is presented to the judge and if there is any objection from the debtor, if he says, "I have not ceased meeting my obligations" the petitioner will give proof that in three, or four, or five instances, he has failed to do so. Then the petition will be granted.

Mr. BOYS: There may be an answer to that suggestion or some explanation given. Surely it is better to have the section definite in its wording. The provisions of The Companies Act are somewhat along the line I have referred to. If you do not want to prolong the situation make the period one or two weeks, but let there be a written demand for the payment of the debt. On failure to pay the debt within a specified time he may be adjudged bankrupt. In that case there will be no doubt about it. Otherwise, I think, you will have doubt, possibly difference in judicial decision, as to what the wording means, and there will certainly be answers and unfounded excuses given for failure to pay the claims which might delay the declaration of bankruptcy.

[Mr. Chairman.]

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I thought this was the best amendment we could draft. There certainly were abuses in declaring a man bankrupt because he ceased or refused to pay one of his debts. By saying that it should be "generally" and leaving the matter to the judge to decide we thought there was protection for the creditors and for the debtor.

Mr. JACOBS: I want to say that the section we are now discussing was inserted in the Bankruptcy Act as an amendment, I think, last year and it is taken word for word from the old Bankruptcy Act which was reproduced in our Code of Civil Procedure.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved that the bill be amended by adding section 2A as follows:

Section 3 of this act is amended by inserting the word "generally" after the word "liabilities" in paragraph (j) thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—If petitioning creditor is a secured creditor.

Mr. CLARK: Sub-clause (2)—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We should add the words "as far as possible" after the word "custodian" in the third line of sub-clause (2).

Mr. CLARK: What I was going to suggest was that the words in the third line "one of the most interested creditors" should be struck out, and the words "a person qualified to act as trustee" inserted. That would be in keeping with the spirit of paragraph (mm) of clause 2, subclause (2), which was amended by striking out the word "creditor", and inserting the word "person".

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: The substitution of those words would get over the difficulty with which most of us have been faced, namely that of having competition, lobbying, amongst creditors for the appointment of a trustee. I think it would also tend to reduce the cost of winding up these estates. As was pointed out this afternoon, we are likely, under the amended legislation, to have at least three sets of costs.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Will my hon. friend be satisfied to accept the substitution of the words "a qualified person" instead of "one of the most interested creditors", but keeping the last part of the clause, that the judge should be governed as far as possible by the wishes of the creditors?

Mr. CLARK: That is agreeable. It would then read:

A qualified person, having regard, as far as the court deems just, to the wishes of the creditors.

I would rather have the words "qualified to act as trustee", because it would then be quite clear to the official receiver that it is the desire of this parliament that, so far as possible, the person who is appointed is a person capable of winding up an estate, because if that official receiver appoints a man who is qualified to act as a trustee and he receives the approval of the creditors in making that appointment, the probability is that when the creditors meet for the first time for the purpose of appointing or approving a trustee, that person who has been appointed as custodian during the interim, will be the person chosen. The chances are also that the costs will be reduced, the efficiency in winding up the estate increased, and at the same time the object which the minister has in view, namely, the consulting of the creditors and giving them ultimate authority, will be accomplished.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have no doubt that the amendment as we offer it will fully protect the interests of the creditors. I have no wish to oppose any suggestion offered and I am prepared to accept the change. I therefore move that the words "one of the most interested creditors" be struck out of line 3 in subsection 2 and that there be substituted therefor the words "a qualified person."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 55—Regarding vestment of property in trustee.

Mr. CLARK: What is the effect of this section?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It repeals section 6, which constitutes the authorized trustee or receiver, since there is no longer an authorized trustee, and provides for the substitution of the official receiver and the creditors' trustee. This section also contains provision for stay of proceedings. In the act as it stands now there are three sections relating to stay of proceedings, sections 6, 7 and 13A. These three sections are repealed by the present bill and the whole subject is embraced in section 9.

Mr. CLARK: In line 6 of subsection 3 it is provided that upon the appointment of a trustee:

—as hereinafter provided, such property shall, subject to the rights of secured creditors, forthwith pass to and vest in such trustee, and in any case of change of trustee, the property shall pass from trustee to trustee without any conveyance, assignment or transfer whatever.

If a company holds property in trust for another, will that property vest in the trustee under the provisions of this section?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The trustee will have the same right as the company had before.

Mr. CLARK: Under the act as amended, I assume from the minister's answer that in future all property which the assignor held in trust for any other person will vest in the trustee?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Stay of proceedings:

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is covered by the new section 9.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Limitation regarding remedy of creditor against property or person of debtor:

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This section contains the provisions with regard to stay of proceedings. In the case of a secured creditor who takes action against his debtor the court is authorized to stay proceedings when this is considered to be in the interests of the creditors generally.

Mr. BAXTER: The last phrase in this section, "unless the court otherwise orders," applies, I take it, only to the clause beginning with the words "provided that, subject to the provisions of section forty-six," etc.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, it applies only to the last clause; it is not necessary in relation to the first.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Regarding assignment for general benefit of creditor.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We amend this clause so as to make the statement which is to be offered by the debtor less complicated. It would be an impossibility for a debtor to prepare the statement which was provided for in the amendment as first suggested. If the details offered to the receiver by the debtor are not sufficient the statement will be refused. A full statement will be prepared by the trustee when elected.

The CHAIRMAN: This is the amendment submitted:

That subsection 5 be struck out and the following be substituted therefor:

The official receiver or his nominee shall preside at the first meeting of creditors and shall decide any question arising in connection with the appointment of the trustee by the creditors, and any creditor may appeal from his decision to the court. Upon the appointing of the trustee by the creditors he shall complete the authorized assignment by certifying thereon the name of such trustee, and such assignment shall thereupon, subject to the rights of the secured creditors, vest, as of the date and the acceptance of filing of the said assignment, in the trustee all the property of the debtor.

Shall section 10 as amended carry?

Mr. BAXTER: I see it is dependent in part on another section, but here is something that seems to be very important. We are in the hands of the official receiver; he has the power to accept or reject an assignment. Now I have to refer to section 65A as enacted by section 31 of this bill, and there I find that in my province the official receiver is the Circuit Court clerk until the Chief Justice assigns another officer to perform those duties. If the Chief Justice does not assign the duties to any other officer I would have great fear of the consequences sometimes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I agreed with my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) that we would not consider this section before Monday evening. Then we might discuss the point now raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. BAXTER: I think it would be well to reconsider it.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 10 as amended carry?

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Baxter.]

On section 11—Form of assignment.

The CHAIRMAN: The following amendment is submitted to section 11 (A):

That section 10 (A) of the said act as enacted by chapter 17 of the statutes of 1921 be repealed.

Shall section 11 (A) carry?

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Publication of notice, etc.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is only a change in the procedure. Notice has to be given by the custodian instead of by the authorized trustee.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—Composition, extension or scheme of arrangement.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: In this amendment, Mr. Chairman, we provide that a composition will be allowed only after assignment.

Mr. CLARK: I should like to repeat what I said this afternoon, that I think it is a great mistake, as far as my experience goes at any rate, to force a business concern into bankruptcy before it is allowed to make a composition with its creditors. I had a concrete instance of this last year in Vancouver. A large business firm was in financial difficulties, as many other firms are to-day owing to the general deflation. It had large creditors in Great Britain and throughout this country: It wanted to continue its business operations. It made a proposal to its creditors, which after due consideration was accepted by all of them, and to-day that firm is carrying on successfully. Now, had it been necessary for that firm to go into bankruptcy before making a composition its credit would have been destroyed and it would not have been able to carry on business. I am sure many other similar instances might be given. I feel confident that the object which the minister has in view will not be accomplished without grave injustice being caused to business in general.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We have complaints from nearly every province that this clause has been much abused. We are told that debtors will go before a judge, make an offer of composition, have it approved, and then go to their creditors, who are forced to accept the composition. The clause may have been advantageous in the case mentioned by my hon. friend, but generally we understand from traders and manufacturers that a composition should only be allowed to take place after an assignment. Then the creditors are in a position to examine the debtor as to his assets and can judge whether a composition is worth acceptance. I really think we should not refuse the amendment.

Mr. CLARK: I have one other observation to make. My understanding of the act as it now stands is that a debtor must go to his creditors first, not to the court. The court merely approves what the creditors have already approved. The creditors now have all the facilities that have been suggested by the minister. In the instance I have cited the creditors appointed their inspectors and auditors, who made inventories and audits just as they would have done if the estate had gone into bankruptcy. But there was this further advantage, that the public was not informed that the business was bankrupt, and consequently its good will was not destroyed. It was an instance of an unfortunate debtor successfully coming through a trying period. The provision for examination might be made applicable to debtors who seek a composition with creditors, without the necessity of actually making an assignment. If we make the provisions regarding examination applicable, then they appoint their inspectors and auditors who can go into the business and do everything that is now done in cases where the debtor actually makes an assignment. My view is that once an assignment is made the business is destroyed.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Even with the amendment there would be nothing in the law to prevent such a debtor from informally calling his creditors together and trying to make an arrangement with them. If his creditors are willing to accept a composition informally, they are at liberty to do so.

Mr. CLARK: But he cannot go to the court after he has consulted them informally and get the court to approve the compromise. That is what was done in this case.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is exactly the objection we find—that two-thirds of the creditors should, before assignment, bind the other third. If it is possible for such a debtor to arrive at an arrangement with his creditors, there is no objection to his doing so. It was found in nearly every province that many debtors would take advantage of this provision for composition to do away with their assets, and if there was no settlement between them and their creditors there would be very little left of the estate when they came to assign.

Mr. BAXTER: I would ask the minister to be good enough to hold this section with the other one and give it a little more consideration. The section of the original act of 1919 dealing with this subject has been so much amended that it is impossible to follow the amendments. But the original scheme provided for a decision by the majority of the creditors, and that accomplished something that you cannot get by a voluntary agreement, because one creditor or more than one standing out may utterly destroy the opportunity. Under the original plan the court did not approve until after the creditors had voted, and there was also a provision by which 10 per cent of the creditors could demand an investigation of the bankrupt under oath. But it might require more than his examination; it might require the submission of his books and the examination of other persons. I suggest that the minister strengthen the provision on that line. You may still allow the benefit of the secrecy and still give the opportunity for getting all necessary information, but, no small group of dissident creditors—who may be dissident only for the purpose of forcing the payment in full of their own debts—can block the creditors who are willing to give the debtor a chance for a fresh start.

Section stands.

On section 14—Security to be furnished by trustee.

Mr. BAXTER: Should this not provide that the trustee shall give security to the satisfaction of a majority of the creditors? I can well understand that you could not satisfy all the creditors. There should be some rule applicable to the thing.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 42 of the act, subsection 14 provides as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of this act, all questions at meeting of creditors shall be decided by resolution carried by the majority of votes, and for such purpose the votes of creditors shall be calculated as follows:
> For every claim of or over twenty-five dollars, and not exceeding two hundred dollars—one vote;
> For every claim of over two hundred dollars and not exceeding five hundred dollars—two votes;
> For every claim of over five hundred dollars and not exceeding one thousand dollars—three votes;
> For every additional one thousand dollars or fraction thereof—one vote.

Mr. BAXTER: I still suggest that it would be better to say, "to the satisfaction of a majority of the creditors."

Mr. CLARK: I have given the minister a copy of an amendment which I propose in connection with this section, and which, I think, would overcome the difficulty regarding the creditors which has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John City. My suggestion is that the section read as follows:

Every trustee appointed by the creditors as hereinafter provided shall within seven days give security in cash or by bond of an approved guarantee company, satisfactory to the official receiver, conditioned for the due accounting and for the payment over and transfer of all moneys and property received by him as such trustee.

The objection I see to the amended section as it stands in the bill is that the creditors may not understand the security which should be given by a trustee. The official receiver, on the other hand, is an officer of the court and deals with such matters daily; he knows the nature and the value of the security that should be given in such cases. Then again we may have cases where the custodian appointed is one of the creditors, and he may be a friend of the trustee appointed, and use his influence to see that no security is given or only nominal security, whereas if the matter is left to the official receiver and the different security laid down in the act is taken, namely, cash or the bond of a guarantee company, all would be safeguarded.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The creditors are most directly interested. I understand that my hon. friend wishes the receiver to have a say in the matter, that he should name the company?

Mr. CLARK: Not necessarily.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That he should approve it.

Mr. CLARK: As to the amount, yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I think the creditors should decide that.

Mr. CLARK: I cannot think of any instance in the courts where the court does not say: I leave it to the registrar to fix the security; or the court itself says the security shall consist of a bond by a guarantee company conditioned in such and such an amount. That is the usual procedure.

Mr. CARROLL: Probably what my hon. friend is afraid of is that the persons fixing the security would be interested parties, which is of course opposed to the ordinary legal procedure.

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Mr. CARROLL: That would be the objection I would see.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I understand that my hon. friend wishes the receiver to fix the amount and the form of the guarantee, and not leave it to the creditors?

[Mr. Clark.]

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I do not see much objection to that.

Mr. CLARK: And it should be cash or the bond of a recognized guarantee company.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I do not think the security should be limited to the bond of a guarantee company. If the bond is satisfactory to the creditors it does not matter whether it is a guarantee company or not. There are places where these guarantee companies have no office and you could not find an agent to issue a bond. I submit that if the bond is approved by the official receiver, that should be quite sufficient, without limiting it to a guarantee company.

Mr. CLARK: The objection raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Black) is overcome by section 13 with the proposed amendment which provides that all these assignments shall be made in certain localities, and the localities will be such that there cannot be an instance where the registrar carries on where there is not a guarantee company.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved by the hon. member for Burrard that section 14 be amended by substituting therefor the following:

Every trustee appointed by the creditors as hereinafter appointed shall within seven days give security in cash or by bond of an approved guarantee company satisfactory to the official receiver conditioned for the due accounting and for the payment over and transfer of all moneys and properties received by him as such trustee.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Is the hon. member for St. John satisfied now as to a majority of the creditors?

Mr. BAXTER: This makes it all right. This goes to the official receiver. If it had remained in the original form I would have thought it advisable to submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: The next amendment is to provide that the last paragraph of section 14 on page 6 of the draft bill be amended to read as follows:

And provided further that nothing in this section shall have the effect to terminate the security heretofore given by any such person; such security shall be kept in force until such time as the Governor in Council is satisfied that all moneys and properties received by the trustee have been duly accounted for and paid over to the parties entitled thereto.

Mr. BAXTER: I would move to substitute for the phrase "to terminate" the words "of terminating." To say "the effect to terminate" is not very good.

Amendment (Mr. Baxter) agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would ask the minister if it is intended to have the Governor in Council exercise authority in these proceedings. This would rather indicate that it is. What is the real scheme? Is the ultimate authority with the courts or with the Governor in Council?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This refers to bonds heretofore given, and that right has already been given to the Governor in Council

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is merely as to past business.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 15—Appointment of trustee.

Mr. BAXTER: I have not had time to examine the voting section very carefully, but I do not think there is any provision that a certain proportion of the creditors shall be represented at the meeting for this purpose. Clause 2 says:

> A trustee may be removed and another trustee appointed or substituted by creditors by ordinary resolution at any meeting of creditors.

That would leave it open for a meeting at which it would not be anticipated perhaps that such a step would be taken, and you would have the matter dealt with by perhaps a small proportion of the creditors. It seems to me there ought to be some provision so that there would be at least a substantial body of the creditors or of the claims represented, for this is quite an important meeting, and very often there is not much more in these estates than the sort of fighting that goes on between one side that wants one representative and another side that wants another. I know the minister does not want to lend the legislation to the assistance of any party quarrel of that kind.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If a trustee is not honest and the creditors find it necessary that he should be removed, and if they had to wait until there was a full meeting with two-thirds of the creditors represented, it would mean a delay of three or four weeks, and in the meantime, how would you administer?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is not that covered?

Mr. BAXTER: You have the security for him if he is not honest.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, but it is not sufficient to have the security. You have to liquidate in the interest of the creditors, and in some cases a delay of three or four weeks might be very injurious to their interests.

Mr. BAXTER: You are going to give notice anyway?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Notice is given of the meeting and the creditors have to appear.

Mr. BAXTER: Then have it put in the notice and it is their own fault if they do not turn up. Provision may be there but I have not been able to follow it up. If you are sure all will get their notices it will be their own fault if they do not turn up.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Suppose at a meeting of creditors they are informed that the trustee has acted dishonestly and they wish to remove him why should it be necessary to wait for another meeting, with special notice to the creditors, to authorize such removal? After all the creditors are there. They are not interested in removing the trustee unless they think he is not acting honestly. He is acting for them, and why make it so hard for the creditors to effect a change if they find it is necessary for the good of the creditors at large?

Mr. BAXTER: I will only say this: The section as drafted allows the trustee to be removed for cause by the court, but it does not require any cause for removal by the creditors.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is a repetition of the old law.

Mr. BAXTER: Probably there were faults in the old law and it was amended many times. No doubt it can be amended again.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think this provision is the same as in the old law which appears to be the point taken by the hon. member (Mr. Baxter). Under the old law a majority of the creditors who held one-half, or more, of the amount of the accrued debts could do this. Theoretically, I think the minister is quite right, but the trouble is that this is not a theoretical question. In most of the difficulties with assignments in the past you have two factions trying to get control of an appointee. Now I can see what the objection of the hon. member (Mr. Baxter) is. He does not wish to have these factional fights. He does not want to have one man in one day and somebody else in the next day. We have had that condition in Ontario under the old law.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Suppose we were to say a majority of the creditors.

Mr. CARROLL: You cannot simply say a majority of the creditors.

Mr. BAXTER: You might say a majority in number of the creditors who hold accrued debts and so on.

Mr. CARROLL: I think it should be a majority in interest. For example one person might have control of 75 per cent of the claims. He should have the real interest in the matter. Twelve others might control only 12 per cent of the whole of the claims. I am only suggesting this for the purpose of getting the provision properly worded.

Mr. BAXTER: I agree with my hon. friend in that respect. I think it would be preferable to have it worded "a majority in amount of the claims" rather than a majority of the number of creditors. But I would suggest to the minister that as there are other sections that are being held this one also might be deferred. I would be perfectly willing, even at the risk of a little more draftsmanship, that in case of dishonesty the creditors could act at once and irrespective of the size of a meeting. Nobody wants to protect dishonesty. On the mere question of substituting one man for another let it be a majority in amount of the estate. In any other case let the matter go to the court.

Mr. CARROLL: The court may now remove a trustee for cause. Would it be satisfactory to my hon. friend that the trustee might be removed by a majority in number or interest of the creditors at a meeting?

Mr. BAXTER: I am impressed by what the Minister of Justice says. I do not think that in the case of manifest dishonesty we should hold the creditors back from acting and compel them to go and show that cause to the court. I am willing if dishonesty is established that a bare majority in numbers of the creditors should act on that. What I want to provide against is putting in A to-day and then moving to put in B to-morrow. That is only a mischievous proceeding and helps no one.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We will reconsider the section.

Section stands.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

On section 16—Right of manufacturer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the effect of that?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is to protect the time in which a manufacturer of a patented article must apply to repurchase. The delay runs from the date of the appointment of the trustee rather than from the date of the assignment or the receiving order.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—Sales in the province of Quebec; sales of hypothecated immovable property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister explain what change is made here?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: In the case of immovable property, whereon a hypothec or privilege exists, such property shall not be sold by the trustee unless he is authorized by the judge after permission given to him by the inspectors to that effect, and after notice having been given to each hypothecary or privileged creditor whose name is entered on the register that the registrars of the registration division are obliged to keep according to the laws of the province. According to these laws when a hypothecary or privileged creditor lodges notice with the registrar in every case where a sale is to take place by the sheriff, and such property is to be sold, the registrar has to notify the creditor. We exact the same from the trustee. He will be authorized to sell such real estate on which there is a hypothec only with the permission of the judge and the inspectors and after notice has been given to the creditors who have such hypothes or privilege on that property. Then he will proceed to sell the property exactly in the same method, 9 p.m. and after the same notice, as when the sheriff effects such sale. He will have to give such notice and to sell at auction, if he is authorized in writing by the creditors to do so, in order to save costs. This is satisfactory, I understand, to the creditors of the province of Quebec who have been asking for such an amendment to protect their rights.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose what my hon. friend means is that preferred creditors in Quebec have been objecting that their rights have been interfered with under this insolvency law?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No. Some properties were sold by the trustees without the creditors knowing about the sale, and this sale can free the properties of mortgages, hypothecs, privileges only if they are sold by the sheriff. By these amendments, however, we wish to authorize the trustee to proceed himself with the sale without going to the sheriff; but this he will do only after authority has been given to him by the judge, and by the inspectors, and after notice has been given to the creditors. He will replace the sheriff where such consent or authorization has been given to him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the complaint really is that notice was not given in the past.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Under the present law the trustee could not discharge the property; the property had to be sold by the sheriff, and such a procedure is sometimes very expensive. It is in the interest of the creditors, the trustee and the debtor, that the sale should take place at auction by the trustee. The intention is to save money, to protect the rights of the creditors and to protect the creditors generally.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why cannot you in Quebec make the valid sale that you can make in Ontario under the bankruptcy law?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is not the same law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The procedure is under the same bankruptcy law.

Mr. MARTELL: The system of procedure is different.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We provide our system of procedure under this legislation.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend knows that we in the English-speaking provinces have a certain form of procedure. The courts and officials of Quebec are accustomed to an absolutely different form of procedure. While I quite agree with my hon. friend, who is a lawyer of many more years' standing than I am, he knows very well that lawyers become acquainted with a certain form of procedure. Quebec has become accustomed to a certain form of procedure, and it wants to carry that out. As I understand the matter, in Quebec they had no authority to discharge the debtor; in Ontario they could do that. In Ontario the property could be sold by the sheriff, and in Nova Scotia and other provinces it could be sold by the trustee and discharge given. I understand this section is intended to apply only to Quebec.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is what I am saying. In Ontario, if a property is mortgaged, a sheriff could sell it and discharge the mortgage. It is the same in Quebec..

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the necessity for this change?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: To facilitate the liquidation, to give full title.

Mr. MARTELL: To save costs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Under the law of Quebec, is it suggested that, if the judge says so, the property can be sold without being subject to the mortgage.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then why do we have this trouble about the judge in this clause?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The judge cannot discharge the mortgage. We now legislate to this end, that with the permission of the judge, the permission of the inspectors, and notice being given to the creditors, the trustee will have the right to sell and discharge the property, which is something that cannot be done in Ontario.

Mr. BAXTER: I am not going to attempt to discuss this clause because I know simply nothing about the procedure. I do not even know whether the remarks I am going to make pertain to this particular clause or not. Since the House rose I was in conversation with the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), and there are some matters that he wishes to speak of that are peculiar to the law of Quebec. They may or may not bear upon this clause. I have not the knowledge to say so. I am going to suggest to the minister that, perhaps, he let this clause stand until that hon. member is here, and if what he wants to say bears upon it, he will have an opportunity of discussing it.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have seen the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier, and he wishes to speak only as regards the preference of the landlords. As to this, he is perfectly well satisfied, and he made that declaration this afternoon in the House.

Section agreed to.

On section 18—Description of debtor's property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the effect of this amendment?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 18 is to amend section 25 of the act. It is to render the property of a debtor acquired after the assignment and before his discharge, available to his creditors. The present act makes a distinction in this respect between a debtor adjudicated bankrupt and a debtor who has made an assignment. The result is to encourage assignments since the assignor virtually gets a discharge automatically by this provision. There is a distinction between a receiving order and an assignment. Under this amendment all property that is acquired by a debtor up to his discharge goes to his creditors without any distinction between the case of the receiving order and the voluntary assignment.

Mr. BAXTER: The old section called him a debtor in one line and a bankrupt in another, and this is to call him the same all through.

Section agreed to.

On section 19—Abstract of receipts and disbursements.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the reason for the change?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is to require the trustee to give notice to the creditors with the final dividend sheet, that he will apply to the court on a certain day for his discharge. Subclause (2) amends section 37, subsection (7) of the act to make it articulate with the provisions for the appointment of a custodian and his duties. The authorized trustee hitherto has advertised the assignment and called the first meeting of creditors. This is now to be done by the custodian. It is a change in the procedure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A distinction is made between the dividends paid. In subclause 2, final dividends are mentioned. The first subclause apparently deals with a dividend, and then the trustee is to give "notice that he will apply to the court on a day named therein for his discharge." He would not apply until after the final dividend was paid, would he? Or does that refer only to the final dividend? It does not read that way in the amendment as drawn, but it may have that effect.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: When the trustee pays his last dividend he gives notice to the creditors that at a certain date he will apply to the judge for his discharge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think that the proper side notes have been given. The first one refers to the abstract of receipts and disbursements. Is the minister quite sure that subsection 2 refers to cases of final dividends?

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The side note is not correct.

Section agreed to.

On section 20—Remuneration of trustee.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This enables the inspectors and the court to give to the trustee a remuneration in excess of 5 per cent, which in the case of small estates has proved inadequate. If, for instance, an estate realized $1,000, five per cent would only be $50, and I do not see how a trustee could be expected to act for such a remuneration. It is deemed wise to leave it to the court and the inspector.

Section agreed to.

On section 20A—Release of security.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This provides for the release of the security on the discharge of the trustee.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have not this section before us but I presume the minister can assure us that this is the purpose of it.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, that is the purpose.

Section agreed to.

On section 21—Application of trustee for discharge.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is provided that the trustee shall apply to the court for his discharge within fifteen days of the payment of the final dividend.

Mr. BAXTER: That is, for the discharge of himself as trustee?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes. We propose now to make the period thirty days. We considered that fifteen days was not long enough, and as the trustee could not be appointed in any other case until he got his discharge it was represented that this provision might work a hardship on trustees. If a judge were not in a position to render judgment in that time a trustee might be deprived of a valuable appointment. We therefore provide that the trustee shall apply within thirty days and if the charge is refused he shall be ineligible to act in any subsequent case.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is much better.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—Meetings of creditors.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: By this we propose that the meeting of the creditors shall take place at the office of the receiver, who shall decide any controverted points; and there is an appeal to the judge from his decision.

Mr. CLARK: Is it the first meeting of the creditors that is to take place in the office of the receiver?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: Suppose a business has failed in the town of Barrie, say, which is an instance that was suggested this afternoon; there is no local registrar or official receiver there. The official receiver for that particular locality is in the city of Toronto, and it is reasonable to think that the major portion of the creditors would be located in Barrie. Is it intended that these creditors, in order to attend the first meeting of creditors, must journey to Toronto to secure representatives there?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Does the hon. member think that the receiver should go to Barrie?

Mr. CLARK: Frankly, I say that would be preferable, especially in view of the fact that the official receiver can now appoint someone to represent him.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is necessary to fix some place where the creditors shall meet, and if the meeting is to be official and of that solemn character which it should possess, there is no better place at which it could be held than the office of the receiver. If the creditors do not wish to travel they can very well send proxies. There are creditors all over the country in every province and I do not see really how you could have a better arrangement than this.

Mr. CLARK: I am thinking more particularly of small businesses in small communities. I do not think that this applies to my own district, but it certainly does apply to smaller communities all over the country where small businesses fail and go into bankruptcy. The creditors might be located in a little town and there would not be much solemnity to the occasion if they had to journey a hundred, or fifty or twenty-five miles to the office of the receiver to attend a meeting of creditors. As a matter of fact, I believe that in many instances the estate would be so small that the travelling expenses of the creditors in going to the office of the official receiver might be equal to the whole estate.

Mr. MARTELL: Does not my hon. friend think that if these things may occur in certain districts it is a good practice to have a prothonotary act as official receiver? He is a clerk of the court, and everyone who goes into court is struck by the solemnity of the proceedings.

Mr. CLARK: I think my hon. friend misses my point altogether. I am directing attention to cases where the official receiver has no office in the town. Take my hon. friend's own community, for instance. Supposing the nearest official receiver resided in the city of Halifax, and the creditors of the insolvent concern lived in his home town, they would all have to journey to Halifax to attend the first meeting before the official receiver. That is the situation I am presenting to the minister. It would be most unreasonable and unjust to the creditors, in many instances the expense would be prohibitive to them, and as for the issuing of proxies, through the failure of any of the creditors to attend the first meeting there would be no one available to represent them.

Mr. MARTELL: We may not have any official receiver in my particular county. That is one reason for putting the matter in the hands of the prothonotary. But supposing a merchant fails in my county, the majority of the creditors are very apt to be resident in Montreal, Toronto and other large centres. Would my hon. friend say that under such circumstances the official receiver should journey to those cities? Why not let the creditors retain some good local solicitor to appear before the court in their behalf? When the clerk of the court is clothed with the authority of an official receiver there is always due solemnity about the proceedings.

Mr. CLARK: If my hon. friend is looking for a job this would be the best way of getting one.

Mr. MARTELL: No, I am not looking for a job.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the minister is determined that we shall go through these meaningless forms before we get down to business, I do not know that he can adopt any better course. Apparently because there is difficulty in Quebec he thinks it perfectly reasonable that we should inconvenience creditors in Ontario by requiring that these two unnecessary things be done, involving delay and expense. As my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Clark) said, you may have all your creditors at a place where there is no receiver. We were discussing a similar case this afternoon—not a hypothetical case, but an actual case of a man failing in northern Ontario and not a single creditor living within one hundred miles of his home town. There is the option on one hand of one person taking a railway trip, and the option on the other hand of perhaps twenty-five creditors or more taking the railway trips. Well, if we are to have these troubles perhaps it is just as well that the twenty-five should be obliged to travel instead of one.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is precisely for those creditors who live far from the receiver's office that we make such a provision to protect them. We are not legislating especially for Quebec, we are considering the whole Dominion. It was represented to us that the present law was abused, that authorized trustees would sometimes decide to have a meeting of creditors where it would be impossible for them to attend. By this amendment we provide that the first meeting of creditors shall take place at the office of the receiver, which is supposed to be the centre of the district. Taking Ontario—leaving out Quebec for the moment—Toronto is the centre. It is not the intention to bring all creditors to Toronto; we have in mind by a later section to divide the province into various districts and to locate a receiver in the centre of each. I do not know that we could choose a better place for meetings of creditors than the centre of the district in which the bankruptcy takes place. This amendment is not to embarrass creditors, it is to protect them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The case I put to my hon. friend was that the creditors were already in Toronto. The insolvency occurred at Sault Ste. Marie, where there is a local registrar and where you have the assignment, but all your creditors are hundreds of miles away down in Toronto. Under this law they would have to go to Sault Ste. Marie.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It may be very good for the creditors' health that they should have to take these journeys at their own expense on top of the money which they are already out, but I really do not think they will be of this opinion. So far as geographical boundaries are concerned, my hon. friend is going to have trouble. The centres of commerce are not fixed by geographical boundaries. You will have a place in a particular section of territory from which all your freight and all your credit movements will radiate, and if that be on the outskirts of the community instead of in the centre, as he says that is the place where the convenience of creditors should be considered. But I suppose my hon. friend has absolutely made up his mind that all this has to be done? I was not in the House for a few minutes after dinner and do not know whether in the interval the section as to the appointment of local registrars was adopted.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is to be considered on Monday.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then perhaps we are considering all these sections in advance of time, because they will only be important if my hon. friend is determined to put through the other section.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If we leave the law as it is to-day we are entirely in the hands of the receiver. My hon. friend speaks of the interests of Toronto creditors. Well, supposing an assignment is made at Sault Ste. Marie in favour of the official receiver, who would be the registrar. With the law as it is to-day he might decide to have the first meeting of creditors in Winnipeg or Montreal. Would that be fair to the creditors generally?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, absolutely unfair, and my hon. friend is giving us one of those hypothetical cases that we need never worry about. All these men want to hold their jobs. The receivers, who can be thrown out by the creditors, call their meetings in such a way, in any case I ever heard of, as to help the creditors and make their course easy. Men do not usually go against their self-interest. If my hon. friend has a case of a man failing at the Soo and having creditors' meetings called in Winnipeg or in Montreal, I could understand his position, but I am afraid he will never find such a case.

Mr. MARTELL: Does my hon. friend not think that the creditors should seek the court rather than that the court should seek them? Under the scheme he submits the registrar or referee would go all over the country to discover all sorts of claims some of which might be purely fictitious, devoid of credit from every possible point of view. The registrar gives due notice; the creditor has to file his claim. If the registrar goes from place to place in order to find out who the creditors are he will run up a bill of costs which will derogate from the interests of the other creditors. So that when notice is given of the locus in which the registrar is situated, every person interested should go to that locus to put in his claim there. That is what the minister is after.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid my hon. friend was out this afternoon when I was addressing myself to this question. If he had been here he would know that I did not want any pesky registrar at all. I do not want the method of appointment changed.

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference to my hon. friend, I say that the proper registrar is the prothonotary the clerk of the court, for these officials are known to every person in the municipality or county.

The CHAIRMAN: Clause 2 as amended, carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: On division.

On section 22, subsection 4—voting by proxy.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the import of the amendment?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 42, subsection 13 provides for the lodging of proxies with the trustee; they are now lodged with the custodian. That is the only change.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the subclause carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we had better have all these carried on division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried on division.

On section 23—proof of debts.

Mr. BAXTER: The original act provides as follows:

> A debt may be proved by delivering or sending through the post in a prepaid and registered letter to the trustee, a statutory declaration verifying the debt.

Now, the amendment makes it optional to send the proof either to the custodian or to the trustee. As I understand it, when the trustee is appointed the custodian ceases to function. Suppose someone sends proof of debt to the custodian after that official ceases to function; is there anything to tell the ex-custodian to hand these things over to the trustee?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is no special provision for that. If my hon. friend thinks it is necessary, I would be prepared to accept the suggestion.

Mr. BAXTER: Does the minister not think it would be well to do it, just to stop carelessness? However, so far as I am concerned the section may pass.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is one of the difficulties of the proposed changes: you have one man here to-day and another to-morrow, and the people know they have the right to send proof of debt to either. I think my hon. friend is going to find difficulty with his scheme.

Section agreed to.

On section 24—secured creditor to value of security.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This amendment is to require secured creditors to value securities only in the case of a demand by the trustee. Heretofore the secured creditor has been obliged to value the securities within thirty days of the receiving order or assignment on penalty of being disentitled to rank as an ordinary creditor if his claim is in excess of the value of the security. As the secured creditor may not know of the insolvency it is unfair that he should be penalized for failure to value within thirty days; it is sufficient to compel him to value when the trustee so demands. If the trustee asks for a valuation and if the creditor neglects to value, then he is disentitled to rank as a creditor for the surplus over the security. This subsection is also amended to make it clear that the secured creditor shall be entitled to receive dividends only in respect of the balance of his claim in excess of his valuation; this result is doubtful under the present section. It is further provided that subsection 3 shall be repealed, which requires a secured creditor to identify the property covered by the security within ten days on penalty of forefeiture. He must, of course, identify the property if the trustee contests his claim, but it is manifestly unfair to compel him to identify within ten days under penalty of forfeiture. Suppose a creditor pretends that he has a lien on certain goods. If he files his claim with the trustee, the trustee will either accept his claim or contest it. If he contests it, then it will be the duty of the creditor to identify his property, but if his claim is contested we do not see why the creditor should proceed to such identification within a period of ten days.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would it be necessary in both cases? Supposing you have a claim on goods. Unless those goods are identified, unless it be that under the new act it is recognized that we are going to have delay, and I think we are going to have it, surely one of the very first things is to take an inventory of your goods, put your valuation upon them and the like. Get to know what the assets are, but you cannot do that unless you first find out whether those assets are subject to lien. I would have thought that was one of the first things to make clear. I would have thought that the trustee would have a right to try and make the creditor distinguish the goods he claims.

Mr. MARTELL: Surely the hon. member knows that the first thing to do is to take an inventory of the goods. Subsequently you find out what the liens are, but at the outset you take a full inventory of all the assets. When it is known what stands against them, that is submitted to your creditors.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that to be for an indefinite date? I suppose my hon. friend thinks it ought to be done some time. Before, it had to be claimed within ten days. Does he think that is too soon? But surely one of the first things for the trustee to do is to know what the goods of the insolvent really are. I would have thought that was absolutely elementary.

Mr. MARTELL: That is plain.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Surely then the law ought to stand and the man ought to say: These are my goods, and not the goods of the insolvent.

Mr. MARTELL: Your liens come in after the inventory is made.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If there is a claim filed by the creditor it is accepted or refused. Simply because the creditor goes to the trustee and says: I hold security on such-and-such goods, that does not change the position. By the mere fact of the creditor filing his claim, the trustee knows what the claim is, and he is in a position to contest the same if so disposed. Because a claim is filed it does not necessarily have to be accepted. I do not see what difference it makes. Why force a creditor who has a lien to proceed to such identification under a penalty of losing his privilege unless he does it within ten days?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What length of time does the minister think should be set apart for the identification of these lien goods? Sooner or later it has to be done. How long a time does the minister want?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: As soon as the creditor claims, the trustee is informed. We are told by men who have had a very large practice in bankruptcy matters that this is of no use, that it is only a cause of trouble. It does not help in the liquidation, and that is why we have brought down the amendment.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think we did more than discuss the first section.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Subsection 2 amends subsection 5 to enable the trustee to sell any goods the creditor fails to value. The creditor has to value his property if he is asked to do so. This is to supply an omission in the existing law which does not provide for the case where the creditor omits to value. If the creditor omits to value the trustee cannot sell. We provide to this effect, that whether he values or not the trustee will have the right to sell.

Subsection 3 amends subsection 7 of the act, which provides for substituting the amount realized by the sale of a security for the amount at which the creditor valued such a security, to make it clear that such substitution extends to sales by the trustee under subsection 5 of the act as well as to sales by the creditor. This is necessary by the amendment to subsection 5.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend this afternoon or this evening dealt with the question of hypothetic and mortgage properties in Quebec. I suppose he there was dealing with claims similar to those dealt with by this section, and we had machinery provided for in the case of Quebec. Is there any difference made as a result of these amendments in the ultimate solution of these questions as between Quebec and the other provinces?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So far as the results are concerned similar justice is done all over the country.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I just wanted to make sure that that would be the effect of this. I confess I cannot make it out.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is no difference. Subsection 4 amends subsection 8 of the act to enable a creditor to amend his valuation at any time before sale instead of within two months. If the property has changed in value there is no reason why the creditor should not be permitted to change his valuation. He is limited to two months under the present law, but we say that he should have the right to change his valuation whenever he finds it proper to do so. There will be no loss to the creditors by his doing that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The only trouble I see is this, and I have no doubt my hon. friend has considered it: Ought not these things to be wound up a little quicker than a delay of two months would render possible? Why should there be so much delay?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This amendment does not extend the delay.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You do not think it will?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Not at all. If the sale was to take place in six weeks the whole thing is finished.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 25—Wife's claim.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does the minister say as to this?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 25 amends section 48, subsection 2. It is to repeal the provision whereby a wife's claim for money lent her husband for the purposes of his business is postponed until other creditors are paid. As the wife is frequently unable to refuse to make such a loan it is thought to be unfair that she should suffer under the existing disadvantage. This was explained by our friend from Dorchester this afternoon. He thought the wife should be protected.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I just wanted to make sure of one thing there, Mr. Chairman, and that is what the minister's opinion is. I have not the acts before me as to the effect of this amendment, whether the old laws which permitted all kinds of abuses to be worked as against creditors would again be put into effect, or whether this would be absolutely confined to bona fide approved claims of the wife in the shape of loans to the husband's business.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The amendment to that effect is very clear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It reads that way here, but I have not the act itself before me and I wanted your opinion.

Section agreed to.

Sections 26 and 27 stand.

On section 28—Examination of bankrupt by official receiver.

The CHAIRMAN: It is proposed to strike out subsection 1 and replace it by the following:

Subsection 1 of section fifty-four, as amended by chapter eight of the statutes of 1922, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

54. Where a receiving order or authorized assignment is made the bankrupt or assignor shall present himself before the official receiver who shall examine him as to the causes of his insolvency and the disposition of his assets and shall put to him the questions provided by the general rules or questions to the like effect. The official receiver shall make notes of such examination, and shall communicate them to the creditors at their first meeting. If the bankrupt or assignor fails to present himself at such an examination within three days from the making of the receiving order or the filing of the assignment, the court may by warrant cause him to be apprehended and brought up for examination, and may order him to be committed to the common goal of the judicial district in which he resides for a term not exceeding twelve months. Furthermore, the bankrupt or assignor shall make out and submit to the Official Receiver a statement of and in relation to his affairs in the prescribed form verified by affidavit and showing the particulars of the debtor's assets, debts and liabilities the names, residence, and occupations of his creditors, the securities held by them respectively, the dates when the securities were respectively given, and such further or other information as may be prescribed by the court. Such statement shall be submitted within seven days from the date of the receiving order or assignment, but the court may for special reasons extend the time. It shall be the duty of the custodian to verify the debtor's statement of affairs and to make an inventory of his assets.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This amendment is to require the bankrupt or assignor to present himself before the official receiver within three days of the making of the receiving order or assignment to be examined as to the disposition of his assets and the causes of his insolvency. This is the English law and it is considered a very important feature of their act. The official receiver is to make notes of the examination and to communicate the same to the creditors at their first meeting.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was trying to follow the amendment as it appears in the bill, but I ran out of type here in a very short time. I think my hon. friend has got some long typewriten amendment he is asking the committee to adopt.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The amendment was read by the chairman.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps we might have it read again.

The CHAIRMAN: It is proposed to strike out the section as it appears in the bill and substitute a new one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No wonder I experienced considerable difficulty in trying to follow it as printed in the bill. I wonder if my hon. friend cannot have copies made?

Mr. CARROLL: I quite agree with the hon. member. In order to follow intelligently the progress of an important bill of this kind we should have the data the minister has before him, or it should be in the possession of the clerk of the committee and available to members. While not objecting to the present proceeding, I think that in future when important bills of this kind come down we should have all the necessary information before us in order to know exactly what is being done.

Mr. MARTELL: How can my hon. friend have placed in his hands all the data that the minister has? The minister has come here with the notes he has read showing why he desires these amendments. I do not see why the minister should be called upon to supply every member with copies of his notes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I will give my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) a copy of the amendment if he wishes it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: From my reading of the amendment which has been handed to me by the minister, it appears to provide for an immediate examination which, of course, is a very good thing. Is this the English form of procedure?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is the English law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can the minister tell us from memory what the real change is as compared with the present law?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Under the present law the debtor can only be examined after a vote of the creditors or inspectors. By this amendment we are providing for a compulsory examination immediately after the assignment, so that the creditors when they meet, will be informed of the position of the estate.

Mr. CLARK: I have not had an opportunity of studying this amendment carefully but I think the objection I raised to an earlier section also applies to this, namely, that the debtor may have to travel one hundred miles or more for the purpose of this examination within three days of the assign-
10 p.m. ment. I think that is correct, is it not? Now, it is safe to assume he will come down say to Toronto from Barrie, and attend before the official receiver for examination. The official receiver knows nothing about the particular business in question, and is not a qualified person, I should say, to examine the debtor in regard to it. The result will be that the examination will be conducted by a man who knows nothing about the business.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I may say in answer to my hon. friend that the questions will be put by the official receiver in the same form as provided for in the English law.

Mr. CLARK: Is that provided for by the bill?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: In effect, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the minister thinks that is a sufficiently searching examination. I confess I did not realize for one minute that the only kind of examination that the creditors would get the benefit of would be an examination conducted by a registrar of one of our courts. That would be a kind of cross-examination that would generally take us virtually nowhere. It would never get under the hide of a fraudulent bankrupt.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This does not deprive the creditors of examining the debtor afterwards. They may petition the court, and they will be granted that opportunity of examining the debtor at any time they wish.

Mr. CLARK: The circumstances in this country are quite different from those in England, because in England the distances are nothing. Furthermore, the centres there are large and, therefore, it is safe to assume that there will be an official receiver in every centre and that a debtor will not have to travel far as in this country. Therefore, if the questions are of a stereotyped nature, why not have them printed, send them to the local registrar and let the debtor fill out the answers to the questions and swear to them before the local registrar? I can see many instances where the poor debtor will not have the money to travel, and I assume that the court or the country is not going to put up the money for him to make such a trip.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend undoubtedly desires to have the most searching examination. All parties have the right to be represented by counsel, to examine and cross-examine. Then if the registrar rules against them, they have a right to appeal against his decision to the court. What more does my hon. friend want? What right have people who may have a good claim to pay the expenses of a registrar travelling throughout the country?

Mr. CLARK: I am not suggesting that the registrar should travel in order to do this. I am making this suggestion in order to save money for the creditors. I am suggesting that the local registrar is a perfectly fit and proper man to take the examination, because it is, after all, only a stereotyped examination.

I think I am correct in saying that these questions take a set form. Therefore, the debtor can write down his answers just as easily as he can deliver them by word of mouth.

Mr. MARTELL: If the examination is stereotyped and stereotyped questions are set, a solicitor may advise his client, who may be the debtor, what sort of answers to give that may be evasive. I do not think he should be given the form of questions at all.

Mr. CLARK: I am not presuming fraud on the part of the debtor or his counsel.

Mr. MARTELL: In the case of the average bankrupt there is probably an element of fraud.

Mr. CLARK: I am trying to get an examination that will be of some value, and I am endeavouring to save some money to the estate. On this preliminary examination, is it provided for in the legislation that debtor and creditor shall be represented by counsel?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The debtor can be assisted by counsel if he likes. The hon. member has objected that the debtor may not have enough money to travel from his domicile to the receiver's office. If the debtor is as poor as that, I do not suppose the creditors would be very anxious to examine him. All we do is to protect the creditors, and I do not see why my hon. friend should be so much interested in the debtor. It is all very well to see that the debtor gets fair protection. On the other hand, he is generally the one who is the cause of loss to the creditors, and it is only just and right that the creditors should have some opportunity of examining their debtor and knowing what he has done with their property, because, after all, it is their property he has used and disbursed.

Mr. CLARK: I think the minister has misunderstood me. I am not objecting to the creditors having an opportunity to examine the debtor. I am not thinking of the interest of either; I am trying to think of the interests of both. If we can save money, that means that the creditors will receive a larger dividend. On the other hand, I can think of many instances where a debtor, when he has come to the state where he becomes bankrupt, may have assets which are worth a great deal of money, but he may be without a cent of ready cash, and within three days he may be in a fix where he is subject to a penalty through no real fault of his own. What I want to get at is this. If this preliminary examination is going to be an extensive one, conducted in the presence of counsel, it is going to be more than a preliminary affair; it is going to be an exhaustive and expensive affair and to last over a considerable period of time. If it is going to be an exhaustive affair, it should not take place within three days of the assignment, because the registrar will not be sufficiently seized of the nature of the business to enable him to carry on this examination. If, on the other hand, it is going to be only a preliminary affair, with stereotyped questions, the same questions put to one debtor that will be put to all, that can be done just as well on a printed sheet. Let the debtor write his answers down and swear to them before a notary public. If that is not considered satisfactory, then the debtor should be entitled to attend before the nearest local registrar of the Supreme Court to the place where the debtor is living, so that these questions may be put to him, and then he can take his oath and give his answers to the questions. I am not clear, under the clause of the bill, whether this is to be in the nature of a preliminary examination, or whether it is intended to be an exhaustive examination in the presence of counsel representing all parties.

Mr. MARTELL: Would my hon. friend, if he were going to court, give beforehand to the party opposite the questions that he was going to ask? If you send out a number of stereotyped questions—

Mr. CLARK: I am asking the minister that question.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There are formal questions to be put; if the receiver finds that he should put other questions, he will be at liberty to do so.

Mr. MARTELL: The parties will have the right to be represented by counsel.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has the minister really found any necessity for this in administering the act? This is not what I was thinking of—a full examination; it is a matter of the purest formality. I assume there is a series of questions one would naturally put to a debtor: what assets he has, the reasons for his insolvency, questions looking to whether or not he has made disposition of his assets, a general discovery of assets. That is what such an examination amounts to on a regularly stereotyped line. Has the minister found any necessity for that? At one time I had a good deal to do with insolvency matters, but that is so long ago now that I am not as familiar with the subject as I used to be. But my recollection is that examinations that ever amounted to anything always occurred after something had been found out. An examination as a rule is no good at all except in cases where there is fraud of some kind, either in getting rid of property, or transferring property or in preferring certain individuals. My experience was that you never got on to anything like that, unless you knew just what you were after and worked out a good line of cross-examination. I believe that this examination by itself might be more educative to the dishonest debtor than useful to the creditor. Has my hon. friend found any troubles arising because we have not had this complete examination in the past?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes, we were told by some trustees that such an examination should be required in all cases, and from what we have learned from some interested creditors it is very important that thorough examinations should be made. My hon., friend, with the experience that he has had in dealing with such cases, knows as well as I do that it is always well that creditors should have the right to examine the debtor—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: —so that they may know what he has done with his property—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Undoubtedly.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: —and may ascertain the details of different claims that might be filed against the estate by some of his family or his friends. I do not understand why objections should be raised to the amendment we now offer. This is the law as it is in England and it has been found of great use to the creditors. We have been informed that it would be of some advantage to creditors in this country if it were embodied in our legislation, and that is why we have proposed it. If, of course, it proves of no benefit to the creditors in any case it will not be put to use by them. But when we are asked to pass this provision, which is the law in England, and which the experience of everyone who has practised at the bar for some years recognizes to be useful, it seems to me that it should be accepted without further discussion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says that if the creditors do not want to use it they will not, but my recollection is that the debtor is obliged within three days to present himself for examination, which examination must be made.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my recollection is right, every bankrupt is bound to do this.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then it is not a matter of option; the examination must be made. My hon. friend has entirely mistaken the object of my inquiry. I want to find out, where an examination is not calculated to discover fraud, whether it has been found necessary to have such an examination at all. If the minister says it is necessary, very well. I entirely agree that there is a necessity for a thorough examination, and if this were to be a real examination conducted by counsel, I could see the utility of it. I find, however, that it is to be a stereotyped form of examination.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is nothing to prevent an examination on any grounds.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose a man comes within three days and makes a discovery which the registrar thinks is a full and perfectly good and free discovery. The registrar thinks he is a fine gentleman, and there the matter ends. Does that stop the creditors themselves from conducting an examination on their own account? Supposing the creditors themselves desire to examine the man a month afterwards, can they do so, or is the right of examination exhausted by this inquiry on the part of the registrar?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: They can examine him whenever they like. As to the question of travelling, it is provided that the assignor shall present himself to the receiver within three days. As he must assign personally into the receiver's hands, there is no reason why he should not ask to be examined on the same day. One trip would therefore be sufficient for both purposes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was concerned in making sure of the right of further examination. What section gives that right?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 56.

Section agreed to.

On section 29—Examination of Debtors.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We are adding a new subsection 2. The first part provides for the examination of all persons who are supposed to know anything about the affairs of the assignor. Under the present law, only the employee of the assignor and the assignor himself may be examined. We propose to amend it to give the right to the creditors to examine any person who may be thought to possess any knowledge of the affairs of the assignor. The last part of the amendment provides that the debtor shall be examined as to the administration of his affairs. He can ask for protection, as the law now stands, against prosecution in any criminal court. By this amendment we propose that any information that he may give under oath may be used by the creditors against him in any action they may take. If he is so protected that no such use may be made of any of his answers, I do not very well see that there would be any use in the examination.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, the section of which you have been kind enough to let me see the typewritten copy does not seem to me to cover one of the points raised by the hon. minister. It says, "Any person liable to be examined under the provisions of this section." Is there another amendment for our consideration as to what people are liable to be examined?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If you read the beginning of section 29 in the bill the amendment will be clear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then the context does not show us exactly how that examination is to be held. Is it to be taken before a special examiner under the ordinary rules? For example, in Ontario whom will the examination be held before?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: (reading.)

Where a receiving order or an authorized assignment has been made the trustee upon ordinary resolution passed by the creditors present or represented at a meeting regularly called or upon written request or resolution of a majority of the inspectors of the estate may without order examine under oath before the registrar of the court or other prescribed person the debtor or any person who is or has been an agent, clerk, servant, officer, director or employee of the debtor respecting the debtor, his dealings or property,

It will be the same examination before the registrar or any other officer designated.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then who will determine what the word "reasonably" means, having regard to the new section? Have these words been given any judicial interpretation—"any person reasonably thought to have knowledge of the affairs of the debtor." That may be used to very great advantage or very harshly, or it might be made merely a source of expense.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: He will appear before the registrar or some other officer, and if he has any objection to raise he will raise it and the registrar will decide.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have thought that the ordinary way of proceeding there would be to get from the registrar authority to bring the man before him, and that he would not grant this authority unless it was shown prima facie that the man sought to be examined had some knowledge of the affairs of the debtor. It looks as if subpoenas could be issued for anybody.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I do not think that creditors would be interested in calling any persons merely for the pleasure of annoying them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The mere issuing of a subpoena would not cause the attendance of any man unless it was reasonably shown in the first instance that he had some knowledge of the debtor's affairs.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: What does my hon. friend suggest?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was asking my hon. friend. Frankly, I confess I have not had very much chance of considering this.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is not an amendment; it is in the bill.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But I am afraid this is the first time I have read it. It certainly seems to me that if the section goes through it will not do what my hon. friend expects. Before anyone could be in default under a subpoena it would have to be shown that he was a person who could reasonably be thought to have knowledge of the affairs of the debtor, and that would have to be established prima facie some way or other.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Does my hon. friend wish to let it stand or not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I hope my hon. friend will come to the conclusion that we are really helping him if we say, "passed on division."

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I hope my hon. friend will do a little more in that direction.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 30—Powers of court regarding conditional discharge:

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is to amend subsection 5 of section 58. The subsection reads as follows:

The court shall refuse a discharge in all cases where the bankrupt or authorized assignor has committed any offence under this act or any offence connected with his bankruptcy or assignment or the proceedings thereunder, unless for special reasons the court otherwise determines, and shall on proof of any of the facts mentioned in the next succeeding section, either—

We propose to strike out the words, "unless for special reasons the court otherwise determines."

Section agreed to.

On section 31—Officer to be assigned to duty by Chief Justice, etc.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Stands.

On section 32—Tariff of costs and fees.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is to enable inspectors of the court to approve payment of legal fees in excess of 5 per cent of the gross proceeds of the estate. In some cases assets have been lost because there was no provision to pay the necessary legal charges to recover them.

Mr. CLARK: I would suggest to the minister that he strike out the words "in writing of the inspectors and" so that the amendment will read, "except with the approval of the court." My reason for the suggestion is that the trustee deciding to do certain work must first consult his inspectors under the provisions of the act. When he receives their authority he instructs the solicitor to go ahead. There are many cases where the value of the work is largely in excess of 5 per cent of the gross proceeds of the estate, and that is particularly true where the assignor holds large properties in trust for other persons. In fact a large portion of the assets may consist of these trust assets; the actual assets of the estate may be very small. In cases where the inspectors instruct the solicitor to go ahead and do the work, obviously the solicitor should be paid reasonable fees for doing that work. In practically all cases the court fixes the fee payable to solicitors or counsel. A tariff of fees is laid down and the court first directs taxation of the bill of the solicitor. I cannot see why it should be necessary to secure the approval of the inspectors in writing of such bill, because they do not understand what are proper fees to be paid the solicitors. The court, on the other hand, is dealing with that question every day, and I think it will be quite sufficient to leave it entirely to the court to say whether or not it is reasonable that a solicitor in a certain case should be paid more than the five per cent. If it is decided that he shall be paid more than five per cent, then it is fair to leave it to the registrar to decide by means of taxation what actual amount the solicitor should be allowed.

[Sir Lomer Gouin.]

Mr. MARTELL: Does my hon. friend not think it would be better for the registrar to tax the costs in the first instance, and then if the parties are not agreeable, to have the judge decide the matter?

Mr. CLARK: I am only suggesting what I think is the custom not only throughout Canada but in Great Britain as well. The court in all such matters directs the solicitor's account to be taxed by the registrar and then the registrar taxes it.

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference to my hon. friend, I may say that the practice in our province is that the solicitor's bill is taxed by the taxing master. Certain fees are prescribed; there is a maximum and a minimum, and the maximum can only be exceeded when the court or a judge so rules. If a solicitor is not satisfied, he may appeal to a judge for a rehearing and retaxation.

Mr. CLARK: That is not the point at all. This is a case where it must be decided in the first instance whether or not a solicitor shall be at liberty to present a bill. The court decides that; it is decided every day in winding-up proceedings. When the court decides that the solicitor is entitled to present a bill, then it goes to the taxing master, who taxes it. If the solicitor is not satisfied with his bill he has the right to appeal to the judge as my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not familiar with the system of taxation in the various provinces, but does my hon. friend mean to say that a solicitor is entitled to have costs taxed where the act does not entitle him to costs?

Mr. CLARK: No; my hon. friend has not followed me at all. He has not got the point.

Mr. GOULD: I suggest that where the money procurable from the insolvent's estate is not sufficient to pay the solicitor's fees, the solicitor himself shall become one of the creditors and go on a pro rata basis the same as the rest.

Mr. MARTELL: A Daniel come to judgment.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I understand that my hon. friend suggests that the word "in writing of the inspectors and" be struck out.

Mr. CLARK: Just leave it, "except with the approval of the court."

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have no objection to that.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 34—Commencement of the act.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Did I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Baxter) to propose an amendment with regard to the removal of a trustee by majority of creditors?

Mr. BAXTER: I was only making a suggestion upon which the minister might work out something.

Mr. GOULD: I have gathered from the discussion that has taken place that this bill pertains more particularly to large investments, that is, to institutions in urban centres. It has occurred to me that some provision might be made, through an addition to the act, to provide for smaller businesses, we will say, in the country, or agriculturists, or both —provision whereby the smaller business man or the agriculturist might be enabled to settle with his creditors and start his business life over again. As there will be further discussion on the bill on a later occasion I just give that thought to the minister and the committee for their consideration.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I think the hon member will find that the provisions in the present act cover such cases. Farmers and wage earners are entitled to assign whenever they wish, and can get their discharge.

SUPPLY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply:

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would ask my hon. friend who is leading the House whether he thinks it is worth while starting anything fresh at this stage, in view of the very depleted benches by which he is surrounded.

An hon. MEMBER: How about your own?

Mr. FIELDING: Does my hon. friend say that he desires us to go on with the estimates?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was wondering whether anything would be gained by starting new business now.

Mr. FIELDING: Whether we gain anything will depend very largely on my hon. friend and those sitting near him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think that much will be gained.

Mr. FIELDING: It is still early. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is prepared to go on with his estimates.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We can take order No. 35. It is a Senate bill.

Motion withdrawn.

PETITION OF RIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 165 (from the Senate) to amend the Petition of Right Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1—Revocation of fiat obtained by fraud.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The amendment is to authorize the Governor in Council to revoke any fiat which he might have granted on a petition of right whenever he discovers that the granting of such fiat was induced by misrepresentation, concealment or non-disclosure on the part of the petitioner of any material fact which in the minister's opinion should have been truly stated or disclosed for the minister's information in the consideration of the petition. Passing an order in council revoking such fiat and depositing that order in council with the clerk of the court, puts an end to the case. Here is how subsection 2 reads:

> A copy of any order in council revoking or withdrawing the Governor General's fiat upon any petition of right as aforesaid, certified by the clerk of the Privy Council, may be filed in the Exchequer Court, and thereupon the petition shall abate, and all further proceedings in the action shall be and be deemed to have been, by the revocation or withdrawal of the fiat, perpetually stayed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This bill looks to be a perfectly proper bill, but I suppose it was brought in for the purpose of correcting the mistake of the government in granting the fiat in the famous Hoppe lease case.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We do not admit we ever committed an error. There is not legislation to cover any special case. We only thought it was advisable to make our position perfectly clear, that whenever a fiat had been granted and we discovered that we were misinformed or deceived we would have the right to revoke such fiat.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that the coincidence is just simply something that is remarkable.

Mr. GRAHAM: It just synchronizes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The synchronization is really complete. It is perfectly wonderful that just after a committee of the Senate dealing with the Hoppe case recommends such legislation this legislation is brought down and there is no connection between the two at all. Well, Mr. Chairman, apparently we have not got out of the age of miracles yet.

Mr. MARTELL: Does the hon. member believe in miracles?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I never did before but I am asked to believe in them to-night.

Mr. MARTELL: I am glad to see you are waking up.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is perfectly correct, Mr. Chairman. It is a great thing to brighten up, and it is a great thing to be able to listen to the declarations now made by the minister without a smile of incredulity. I ask my hon. friends though seriously whether it is not a fact that the Hoppe leases were referred to a committee of the Senate, and that as a result of its inquiries such a state of affairs was ascertained that the department presided over so ably by my hon. friend—I do not say he did it—recommended that the fiat should be withdrawn, stated that if the facts had been known the fiat would never have been given, and that this bill is necessary for the purpose of carrying that report into egect. Am I not right?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: An investigation took place in the Senate into the Hoppe leases. The Deputy Minister of Justice appeared before the Senate committee as a witness, and he was told that a certain agreement had been come to between a party and the heirs of the Isenberg estate. The Deputy Minister of Justice wrote a letter to the chairman of that committee telling him that if he had been informed of what he had since heard and had been told during that investigation he would probably have not granted a fiat.

I said at the outset in explaining the bill and in answer to my hon. friend that this was not legislation specially brought down for the Isenberg estate. This bill was introduced in the Senate so as to make our position perfectly clear, that there should be no doubt as to our right to revoke such fiats whether it be in the Isenberg case, or any other case that might be now pending or arising in the future. There is no mystery in the whole thing. If my hon. friend is satisfied that this is good legislation, he should approve of it and let it pass.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I quite understand that my learned friend is in one sense perfectly right. He is perfectly right when he says that this is not a special private act which is passed for the purpose of undoing the mistake of granting the fiat in the Hoppe case. That is perfectly true. It is not special in that sense at all, but it is an act nevertheless, a general act, for the purpose of enabling the government to undo the wrong they did in granting the fiat. That is what it is for. I think it is right under the circumstances that the wrong should be righted and the fiat which ought never to have been granted recalled, and if this is necessary for doing that I think this legislation is right. Is it a further term in connection with the granting of this improvident fiat, which hon. gentlemen were warned against, not once, but twice in one year, that this cancellation is to be accompanied by a cash payment?

Mr. MARTELL: May I ask my hon. friend what is the usual rule in applying for a petition of right?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid my hon. friend is getting more like an Irishman every minute.

Mr. MARTELL: I simply want to know.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What I said is not meant as any offence against the Irish at all; I boast of a fair amount of that strain myself. I am merely referring to the fact that an Irishman is supposed to answer a question by asking another. Now my hon. friend has been doing that pretty regularly to-night when a question has been put to the minister. I do not mind answering my hon. friend's question but I do object to his rudely interrupting when the minister wants to answer a question that has been properly put to him.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not rude at all; I am simply asking you to give the rule.

Mr. CARROLL: I would suggest that my hon. friend from West York read section 2 of the bill which will explain the whole thing

> Nothing in this act shall be construed or interpreted as a legislative interpretation, declaration or limitation of the prerogatives of the Crown in dealing with the issue or revocation of any fiat granted upon petition of right.

Mr. BAXTER: We are all taking a hand at stopping the minister when he is very anxious to make a reply. I would suggest to the last hon. member who has spoken he should read section 1 when he will see that it is retroactive. I will ask him to ask the minister whether there is any other case in esse or in posse, except the Hoppe case, to which the retroactive feature of this legislation is to be applied. I think it would be a first rate thing to apply to that case, but is it suggested that there is any other case known to the government where a fiat has been improvidently issued.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This is not retroactive legislation.

Mr. BAXTER: Not in section 1? Yes.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I beg your pardon.

Mr. BAXTER: Let me quote the section:

In the case of any petition of right as to which the Governor General has heretofore granted or may hereafter grant—his fiat—

And so on. Then you act upon that. It applies not only to a petition of right which may be granted in the future but also to a petition which has been heretofore granted.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is not as to any pending litigation that it is retroactive.

Mr. BAXTER: Yes and it is right that it should be.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I understood my hon. friend from West York to put a question. He wants to know what the government is going to do in the matter of reimbursement?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I asked whether it had been stated in this report, or agreed that the money would be paid. What is the stand of the government in that matter?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have not got the report before me. I understand, though, that the report goes to the extent of saying that the Senate would recommend the payment of the moneys that were disbursed. I am not sure that this is an exact statement. However, I cannot give any answer to my hon. friend as to what the government would do if that question were put to them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it from what my hon. friend says that the government have not got as far yet as to consider the report of the Senate. Does he accept it in so far as putting the government—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I cannot speak for the government, I can only speak for myself.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —putting them in a position to remedy the wrong which they did. The minister says this is not retroactive legislation. I want frankly to say that I will not support it unless it is retroactive because I understood this bill was for the purpose of righting the wrong done in the Hoppe case in the granting of that fiat. I understood that this bill was brought down for the purpose of changing the general law so that that fiat might be recalled. If I read the bill properly I think my hon. friend is wrong because the first section states clearly:

In the case of any petition of right as to which the Governor General has heretofore granted or may hereafter grant his fiat that right be done, and whether or not the petition has been or is filed in the Exchequer Court of Canada, and at any stage of the proceedings in the said court, the Governor General in Council may upon the report of the Minister of Justice withdraw and revoke his fiat, if the minister reports that the granting of the fiat was induced by misrepresentation, concealment or non-disclosure on the part of the petitioner of any material fact which in the minister's opinion, should have been truly stated or disclosed for the minister's information in the consideration of the petition.

I do not think the minister had the wording before him when he said this was not retroactive.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: What I mean is this: It is not retroactive in the sense that this would apply to any case now pending. It is not retroactive in that sense.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have thought it was retroactive to the fullest extent. If there is any way in which we can make it more certain that that action does not go on, and that the people of this country are not defrauded, we should follow it. However, I think the section is pretty well drawn. I think it is just as retroactive as we can put it. For instance in subsection 2 of section one.

A copy of any order in council revoking or withdrawing the Governor General's fiat upon any petition of right as aforesaid, certified by the clerk of the Privy Council, may be filed in the Exchequer Court, and thereupon the petition shall abate, and all further proceedings in the action shall be and be deemed to have been, by the revocation or withdrawal of the fiat, perpetually stayed.

I think that is a good provision. I think that that is probably going as far as we could go. Then as to the saving clause which my hon. friend (Mr. Carroll) noted:

Nothing in this act shall be construed or interpreted as a legislative interpretation, declaration or limitation of the prerogatives of the Crown in dealing with the issue or revocation of any fiat granted upon petition of right.

I think perhaps we might have a question as to what that really means.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I shall ask permission to drop it. That is not necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It should be struck out, it only weakens the bill.

Mr. MARTELL: Before the section carries I wish to explain why I asked one or two questions. Probably I am a little hoarse and my hon. friend opposite did not quite understand me. I asked those questions with a view to securing information. I have a little but not great familiarity with the question of petitions of right. Every subject has a right to petition the sovereign and the Crown has the right to issue a fiat, which fiat issues in order that right may be done. But supposing any person applies for a petition of right and the Crown, as represented by the cabinet ministers, refuses to grant that right; to whom should people appeal in order to have it declared whether they have been rightly or wrongly denied that right? Now, irrespective of what party may be in power persons will apply for a petition of right. I have in mind a case where a petition of right was refused and by the party which I support. I believe we have a Supreme Court of Judicature in this country to which we refer all cases, whether constitutional or otherwise, in the form of a stated case, and that court should have the right to say finally whether or not a petition of right or a fiat should issue. If you do not do that people will never get justice in this country because politics will enter in and no minister will admit that he ever did wrong in his own department. That was my only reason in rising to ask questions of lawyers who have been longer at the bar than I have touching this matter. I am sorry that I am a little hoarse to-night or I would have talked 11 p.m. at much greater length in protest against any cabinet, or any government having the power to say finally whether people should be denied the right to appeal to the courts of the land in order to have their cases tried on their merits. Now, as the case stands to-day a person may petition to the Minister of Justice for the issue of a fiat. Naturally the minister, in connection with whose department the petition is entered, is very apt to say, "We have done no wrong," and to go to the law officers of the Crown and argue his own case. I submit that should not be final. I believe it would be good legislation in this country, where a petition of right is denied by the government, to give the Supreme Court of Canada the right to say whether a fiat or petition of right should issue. That may be considered radical from a lawyer; but I consider that is the proper way to deal with the matter, because no man should be denied justice or deprived of an opportunity of contesting his rights in the courts of the land.

Mr. SHAW: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) a couple of questions, the first question for a matter of information. Supposing the Minister of Justice has been imposed upon, and a fiat has been granted by reason of some misrepresentation or some fraudulent non-disclosure; would the minister not be entitled to cancel the fiat without any legislation whatever?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is possible, but we want to make it perfectly clear.

Mr. SHAW: The second question that I want to ask the minister is whether or not he proposes, when this legislation is passed, to apply it to the Hoppe case.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: As to that we will consult our lawyers, and if it is applicable, we will apply it to that case.

Mr. MARTELL: I should like to have an answer as to whether there is any possibility of having my suggestion followed out. If there is argument in favour of a fiat or petition of right, could the matter not be carried to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether or not a fiat should issue in the event of the government deciding that it should not issue?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member addressed the question to me in the first instance, and I say that there is no appeal. I may say to him that he has found a Minister of Justice big enough to say when he is wrong. He did give the fiat last year, and he is now saying that it ought not to have issued.

Mr. MARTELL: I am satisfied with the Minister of Justice, and he is a big man too.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Sir Lomer Gouin moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Next sitting of the House.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The bill has to go back to the Senate.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Owing to the fact that the bill has to go back to the Senate, I will withdraw my objection.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 179 (from the Senate), for the relief of Grace Lees Smiley.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 182 (from the Senate), for the relief of Laura MacBrien.—Mr. Sheard.

Bill No. 183 (from the Senate), for the relief of Chester Abbott Redmond.—Mr. Church.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King, the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Monday, May 28, 1923.

The House met at three o'clock.

NATIONAL PARKS AND RESERVATIONS

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 185, respecting National Parks and Reservations.

He said: We propose by statute to separate the parks in these reservations which were formerly administered as a whole. The purpose is simply, first, to provide for their better administration as recreation grounds, and second, to ensure their better preservation as sanctuaries for the breeding of wild life. It is sought, also, to give the Governor in Council power to set aside reserves for historic sites. We can very much better explain the various provisions of the bill in committee, but these are its main purposes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MR. FRED T. CONGDON

Mr. HANSON:

1. Has Fred T. Congdon been appointed by the present government a royal commissioner to inquire into and report on the question of gratuities voted by former directors of Grand Trunk Railway to themselves and others shortly before the road was taken over by the government.

2. Was the said Fred T. Congdon formerly a member of parliament for Yukon territory?

3. Was the said Fred T. Congdon public administrator for Yukon territory and for what period?

4. Were charges of mismanagement and improper conduct in the administration of the Wiley estate in Yukon made against the said Fred T. Congdon as public administrator?

5. Was the late Augustus Power, K.C., legal officer of the Department of Justice, appointed a commissioner to inquire into and report on said charges?

6. Did the said commissioner report that said Mrs. Wiley and her infant daughter suffered loss, injustice and hardship due to manner of the administration of said estate by said F. T. Congdon?

7. Did the government of Canada subsequently recommend to parliament the grant of a sum of money to said widow and her infant daughter or either of them on compassionate grounds?

8. Was a grant of money made by parliament to the said widow and her infant daughter or to either of them?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Yes, appointed but resigned owing to ill-health.

2. Yes.

3. Yes, from the 13th March to 30th September, 1901, and from 20th May, 1905, to 2nd April, 1907.

4. Yes.

5. Yes.

6. The report of the commissioner is included among the papers of which a return has been ordered by the House of Commons. The report speaks for itself.

7. Yes.

8. Grant of $10,000 made by Vote 574 of the Supplementary Estimates 1912-13 to Charlotte Wiley, in full satisfaction of claim for loss of mining claims, the property of her father on the date of his decease.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OUTSIDE BUREAU

Mr. JACOBS:

1. What was the total sum paid by the government for printing, outside the printing bureau each year for the past five years?

2. What was the cost to the government of printing the Labour Gazette outside the printing bureau each year for the past five years?

Hon. Mr. MURDOCK:

Answer of the Department of Labour:

1. Nil.

2. Answered by answer of King's Printer, dated May 3, to same question.

Answer in so far as respects the Department of Public Printing and Stationery:

1.

Fiscal Year	Printing Binding etc.	Halftones, Lithographing etc.	Total

PORT ARTHUR ELEVATOR

Hon. Mr. STEVENS:

1. What was the total amount of No. 1 standard screenings at the government elevator at Port Arthur for the years ending August 30th, 1920-21-22?

2. What was the total amount of revenue received in each of the above years from all screenings?

3. Were the said No. 1 standard screenings recleaned in the said elevator?

4. If so, what was the total revenue for each year:—(a) from the recleaned screenings, (b) from the refuse screenings?

5. During the said years, to whom, at what price and what amount did the government sell, (a) No. 1 standard screenings, (b) recleaned screenings, (c) refuse screenings?

6. Were the said screenings at any time offered to public tender?

7. Did the government officials mix the grain extracted from the said screenings with other grain in the elevator?

8. In accounting to the shipper for screenings, as provided by law, was said accounting and payment for the No. 1 standard screenings before being recleaned or only at the rate allowed for refuse screenings?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. It is difficult to determine what information is required by this question. We have no knowledge of the term "No. 1 Standard screenings." The net dockage, as set by the inspector, on cars received at the Canadian Government Elevators for the crop years ending 30th August, these years, was as follows: 1920, 96,563 bushels; 1921, 243,211 bushels; 1922, 198,879 bushels.

2. Gross revenue, 1920, $13,146.10; 1921, $1,835.00; 1922, $21,797.50. Less W/R bought in 1920, $17,588.65; 1921, $7,722.16; 1922, $2,-246.58. Total net revenue or loss, (loss) $4,-442.55; (loss) $5,887.16; (profit) $19,550.92. Figures for elevator year ending 31st July, each year.

3. All original dockage is recleaned as often as necessary to remove all graded grain.

4. Revenue from screenings; recleaned 1920, $13,146.10; 1921, $1,835.00; 1922, $21,105.00. Refuse, 1922, $692.50.

Figures for elevator year ending 31st July, each year.

6. Yes; sold to highest bidder or at market price.

7. Certainly. Dockage as set by the inspector does not contain any commercial grain; therefore it is essential that the elevator does not allow any commercial grain to remain therein. This must be separated and binned with grain of the same grade.

8. An accounting to the shipper for screenings was made according to law, that is, by the issue of a warehouse receipt for screenings for the quantity set by the inspector.

The elevator has no control whatever over any disposition which the shipper may wish to make of such warehouse receipt. The Canadian government elevators do not make any cash returns for screenings.

RETURNED SOLDIERS—DEATHS FROM TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. LADNER:

1. What is the number of deaths from tuberculosis in each of the provinces of men who served in the Great War, during each year since the war up to this date, and what number of such men had their domicile in such province before enlistment?

2. What is the number of new cases of tuberculosis reported each year since the war according to provinces, showing also the number of such men who had their domicile in such provinces before enlistment?

3. What is the total number of men who served in the Great War now under treatment by the government for tuberculosis according to the last available records?

Hon. Mr. BELAND:

1. Statistics, showing the number of deaths by disabilities, by provinces, and the pre-war domicile, of pensioners, and patients, are not maintained by the department. The total, by years, of men suffering from tuberculosis who died while on the treatment strength of the deparmtent, or while in receipt of pension for that disability is:

Year	Number
1917	41
1918	141
1919	391
1920	459
1921	404
1922	348
1923 (1st quarter)	70
Total	1,866

2. Statistics in respect to number of primary and re-admissions to treatment for tuberculosis show:

	Men	Cases
Total Primary Admissions to Dec. 31, 1920	9,157
Total Re-Admissions to Dec. 31, 1920		449
Total Primary Admissions during 1921	598
Total Re-Admissions during 1921		752
Total Primary Admissions during 1922	485
Total Re-Admissions during 1922		1,122
Total Primary Admissions 1-1-23, to 31-3-23	115
Total Re-Admissions, 1-1-23, to 31-3-23		289
*Total Primary Admissions to date, 31-3-23	10,355
Total Re-Admissions to date, 31-3-23		2,612

*Shows the number of men, who on admission for treatment, were suspected to be suffering from tuberculosis, as well as those in whom the existence of the disease was established. In many of the former class, who are admitted primarily for observation, the existence of tuberculosis is not established and the diagnosis is changed accordingly. The number in whom the diagnosis of tuberculosis was subsequently confirmed is therefore less than the total admissions indicate.

3. On April 21, 1923, the number of men undergoing treatment for tuberculosis as patients of the department was: In Canada, 1,051; in United States, 103; in British Isles, 26; Total, 1,180.

CIVIL SERVICE LIST

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. At what date was the last Civil Service List published?

2. At what date will another list likely be published?

3. What is the reason for delay in publishing list?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. The last edition of the Civil Service List was submitted to parliament at the first session of 1919 and contained the records up to the 1st April, 1918. The provision which required the Civil Service Commission to issue the annual Civil Service List was deleted from the Civil Service Act of 1918. Consequently since that date there has been no statutory provision for the publication of an annual list.

The work of reclassification which has been in progress since the fall of 1918 has made it difficult if not impossible to compile a Civil Service List which could have been even approximately accurate by the time it was ready for distribution. The commission has not therefore considered it advisable to submit any recommendation to the government in this matter up to the present time.

2. Owing to the entire permanent service being now under the Civil Service Commission a complete list to-day would contain at least three times as many names as the 1918 edition and would be correspondingly expensive to produce. The commission would not be prepared to proceed with its preparation save under direct instructions from the government.

3. Answered by No. 1.

CORNWALL CANAL—ALLEGED PARTISANSHIP

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Have charges of political partisanship been preferred against Augustus Blackburn, lock tender, James T. Shields, lockmaster, and John Waldrof, lock hand, employed on lock number twenty-one of the Cornwall canal?
2. Has any investigation been held?
3. If so, who was the commissioner who conducted the same?
4. What was the result of such investigation in each case?
5. Have any of the said employees been dismissed?
6. Is it the intention of the government to dismiss any of said parties?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Thomas R. Mayberry.
4. Blackburn admitted the charges; Shields and Waldrof pleaded not guilty and in their cases the evidence was insufficient to establish the charges.
5. No.
6. As Blackburn admitted being chairman of the Conservative ward committee, acting as chairman of public meetings in the interests of the Conservative candidate, canvassing and drawing voters to the polls for the same candidate, his services will be dispensed with by the department.

MESSRS. BOVILLE, FISET and COULTER

Mr. KELLNER:

1. What is the number of years of service in the public service of Mr. T. C. Boville, ex-Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr. R. M. Coulter, ex-Deputy Minister of Post Office Department, and General Fiset, ex-Deputy Minister of Militia?
2. What was the annual salary of each of the above-mentioned, the date of their retirement, and what is the annual pension of each of them?
3. What leave of absence was allowed to each one of the said gentlemen at the date of his retirement and what salary was paid during that leave?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

Department of Finance

T. C. Boville:

1. 37 years.
2. Annual salary $6,000; date of retirement April 1st, 1920; retiring allowance, $3,733.33 per annum.
3. Three months' leave of absence was given from date retirement was authorized for which payment was made at the rate of $6,000 per annum. Mr. Boville had, however, taken considerable sick leave prior to 1920.

Department of National Defence

General Fiset:

1. Major General Sir Eugene Fiset is an officer of the Permanent Active Militia, who is seconded therefrom for duty with the Civil Service; his retirement is not as a member of the Civil Service but as a member of the Permanent Active Militia, and has been based on a total service of 30 years and 220 days.
2. General Fiset's salary as Deputy Minister and Vice-President Defence Council is $10,500 per annum.

The date of General Fiset's retirement on pension, under the Militia Pension Act, will be April 1, 1924. The annual pension payable on his retirement will be $5,686.19 per annum, to be increased after 3 17/365 years by $88.81 when unpaid pension dues for service in South Africa will have been paid, and after 2 179/365 years by $525 when all unpaid pension dues will have been recovered.

3. Owing to the serious impairment of his health due to overwork during the late war, General Fiset's medical advisers insisted upon an absolute severance from his public duties. He was therefore granted one year's sick leave with pay from November 1st, 1922, which leave owing to General Fiset's condition at the present time, has been extended to the 31st March, 1924.

Post Office Department

Dr. R. M. Coulter:

1. 25 years, 5 months.
2. Annual salary, $6,000; date of retirement, 1st January, 1923; retiring allowance, $4,200 per annum.
3. Nil.

ST. MARGARET'S BAY ROAD, N.S.

Mr. JONES:

1. How much, if any, federal money has been paid out of the good roads appropriation towards the St. Margaret's Bay road in Nova Scotia?
2. Does the amount paid represent forty per cent of production? If not, what per cent does it represent?
3. How many miles have been constructed upon which the Dominion payment is applicable?
4. If nothing has been paid, is it intended that any Dominion money shall be contributed toward this road?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. $131,091.49.
2. Forty per cent of $340,228.72, as recommended by the Chief Engineer of the Federal Highways branch.
3. 17.5 miles.
4. Answered by No. 1.

IMPERIAL SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Mr. EVANS:

1. Is the Imperial Shipping Committee continuing its inquiries as decided at the Conference of Prime Ministers and representatives of the United Kingdom, the Dominions and India in 1921?
2. Are the reports of the above committee available to members of this House of Commons?
3. Who is the Canadian representative on that committee?
4. Why did the Canadian representative oppose the resolution at that conference recommending the constitution under royal charter of a permanent committee to carry out the duties specified in the report of the Imperial Shipping Committee dated June 3rd, 1921?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.
2. The reports are printed and published by His Majesty's Stationery Office in London and may be obtained directly from that office or through any bookseller.
3. Honourable P. C. Larkin was appointed a member of the committee on April 15th, 1922, in the room of Sir George Perley resigned..
4. The published summary of the proceedings of the conference does not disclose why the representative of Canada did not agree to the resolution recommending the constitution under royal charter of a permanent committee.

S.C.R. EMPLOYEES, VANCOUVER & VICTORIA

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. How many employees of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment department are there now in the service of the department in (a) Vancouver; (b) Victoria?
2. How many have been relieved of their appointments since the 1st of January 1922, in respect of each city?
3. How many of those relieved were returned soldiers?

Hon. Mr. BELAND:

1. On the 15th of May, 1923, the staff of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment numbered: (a) in Vancouver, 230, (b) in Victoria, 24.
2. Since the 1st of January 1922, there have been retired from the employ of the Department: (a) in Vancouver, returned soldiers 64, others 21; total, 85; (b) in Victoria, returned soldiers 9, others 2; total, 11.
3. Answered by No. 2.

POSTMASTER OF LAROUCHE

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was the postmaster of Larouche, Chicoutimi-Saguenay county, dismissed? If so, for what reason?
2. Was an inquiry held in these parts on account of this employee? If so, by whom was it made and what did it cost? If not, why?
3. Is it true that one named E. Dubois was put in charge of this post office?
4. Does the government know that this Dubois is a public insolvent, having failed several months ago?
5. Were petitions addressed to the government recommending the said Dubois to this position? If so, how many electors signed them?
6. Does the government know that it would have been easy to find in Larouche, in the neighbourhood of Dubois, many of its good partisans, responsible from all viewpoints and well qualified to fill this office?
7. Is it the intention of the government to uphold, notwithstanding, the nomination of Dubois?
8. What is the total salary connected with the office of postmaster at Larouche?
9. Who recommended to the government the nomination of the said Dubois?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Yes. Political partisanship.
2. No. Dismissed on statement of member of parliament that to his personal knowledge postmaster was guilty of acts of partisanship (See Hansard 15th February, 1923, page 286)
3. J. E. Dubois was placed in charge.
4. No.
5. No.
6. No information.
7. No complaints have been received against the public service rendered by Mr. Dubois.
8. $60 per annum (minimum remuneration).
9. Dr. Savard, M.P. Office in question removed from operation of the Civil Service Act by order in council 1053 of the 29th June, 1922.

POSTMASTERS DISMISSED IN CHICOUTIMI-SAGUENAY

Mr. HANSON:

1. How many postmasters in the county of Chicoutimi-Saguenay were dismissed since the 1st January, 1922?

2. For what reasons were these dismissals made?

3. Were inquiries made in the localities where the dismissals were effected, in each case? If so, by whom?

4. If inquiries were held what amount was paid to the investigator as salary and daily expense?

5. Are these inquiries over? If not, how many are still to be made?

6. Were complaints made to the government against dismissed postmasters for bad management of their offices, or improper execution of their duties? If so, in what cases?

7. Is it true that certain changes were made temporarily? If so, is it the intention of the government to make the present office holders permanent?

8. Is it true that in the county of Chicoutimi-Saguenay, between the years 1897 and 1921 inclusive, no dismissal was made for the reason of partisan politics, and that the only changes effected were made only for bad service or by voluntary resignation?

9. Have instructions been issued for the holding of other inquiries against further postmasters in the district of Chicoutimi? If so, against whom?

10. Are there inquiries which have not yet been completed? If so, in what cases?

11. Will these inquiries be continued? If so, when?

12. Have inquiries been held that will not result in the dismissal of employees? If so, in what cases?

13. Is it the intention of the government to continue this policy of dismissals under the cover of inquiries which are but excuses in the eyes of the public?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Eleven.

2. Eight, Political partisanship; Two, removal of post offices to more suitable locations; One, mismanagement.

3. Partisanship: Four cases investigated by commissioner appointed for that purpose, (Order in Council 2172 of the 16th October, 1922); Four dismissals made on personal statement of member (See Hansard, 15th February, 1923, page 286).

Change of site and mismanagement: Investigated by District Superintendent of Postal Service, Quebec.

4. Partisanship commissioner, $374.48, total expenses.

5. Yes.

6. Yes. Port Alfred; Canton Tache.

7. Temporary arrangements were made to continue public service pending permanent appointment by the Civil Service Commission. The permanent appointee will be nominated by the Civil Service Commission according to the established procedure.

8. Yes.

9. Yes. Against the postmaster at St. Gedeon Station and Jonquére.

10. Yes. See 9.

11. Cases still under review by commissioner appointed to investigate charges of political partisanship.

12. Decisions in outstanding cases will depend on finding of commissioner.

13. The procedure followed is identical with that put into effect by the Conservative government after the elections of 1911, except that in a similar period following the election of 1911, the Conservative government dismissed over 800 postmasters for political partisanship, the majority without public investigation, as against 62 by the present government, the majority after public investigation had been held.

POSTMASTER AT LABARRE

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was the postmaster at Labarre, Chicoutimi-Saguenay county, dismissed? If so, why?

2. Was an investigation held in that county in regard to this postmaster? If so, by whom, and what did it cost?

3. Is it true that a person named Thomas Debiens, of St. Bruno, was charged with the changing of this post office? If so, what amount was he paid?

4. Who was nominated in the place of the former postmaster?

5. Who recommended to the minister the nomination of the new office-holder?

6. If there was no investigation held how was the government notified?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Yes. Political partisanship.

2. No.

3. No.

4. D. Lapointe.

5. On recommendation of Dr. Savard, M.P. The office in question was removed from the operation of the Civil Service Act by order in council 1053 of the 29th of June, 1922.

6. Dr. Savard, M.P., made a statement that to his personal knowledge the postmaster was an active partisan during the federal elections. (See Hansard, 15th February, 1923, page 286).

STE. ANNE-ST. CHARLES TELEGRAPH

Mr. HANSON:

1. What were the revenues from the telegraph line between Ste. Anne and St. Charles, in the county of Chicoutimi, during the past five years?

2. What were the revenues of the same line between St. Charles and Péribonka during the same period of time?

3. What were the expenses for the maintenance and salaries on each of these sections during the same years?

4. Does the government know that the length of this line there is a telephone system which serves all the parishes and which is in direct communication with all telegraph offices of the district, and that consequently the existence of this telegraph line has become absolutely useless from all standpoints?

5. Is it the intention of the government in these circumstances to discontinue immediately the maintenance of these two sections of telegraph, which have no reason for existing from the standpoint of public interest and economy?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. $323.47.

2. $23.13.

3. Ste. Anne-St. Charles, $4,201.90; St. Charles-Peribonka, $4,774.85.

4 and 5. Yes, and as the telephone system supplies all accommodation required in the district, negotiations are in progress with the view of disposing of this branch line at an early date.

MR. EUGENE CARON

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was Eugene Caron postmaster at Tadoussac, in the county of Chicoutimi-Saguenay? If so, during how many years?

2. When did he cease acting as postmaster?

3. If he gave in his resignation, why did he do so?

4. Is it true that it was proven to the Postmaster General that the said Eugene Caron, who was at the same time land agent of the provincial government of Quebec, and had considerable correspondence, profited of his position as postmaster to stamp his letters with used stamps which had been officially cancelled, and that it was for this reason that he was forced to give in his resignation immediately into the hands of the inspector who found him in fault?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Yes, from 1st March, 1888, to 15th April, 1911.

2. 15th April, 1911.

3. Postmaster was dismissed.

4. According to departmental records the postmaster was dismissed for having affixed obliterated postage stamps to mail matter despatched from his office.

POSTMASTER AT HERBERTVILLE

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was the postmaster at Herbertville station, county of Chicoutimi, dismissed? If so, why?

2. Was an inquiry held in these parts on account of this employee? If so, by whom and what did it cost?

3. In his report did the investigator recommend the dismissal of the postmaster?

4. Is it true that petitions signed by the majority of the interested parties were addressed to the government recommending the retention of the old postmaster?

5. Is it true that the post office was temporarily confided to one Raoul Desbiens? If so, is it the intention of the government to leave him in that capacity permanently?

6. Did the government receive favourable petitions on the nomination of the said Desbiens? If so, what was the number of signatories?

7. Who persuaded the minister to make Desbien's nomination?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Yes. Political partisanship.

2. Yes. Oscar Drouin, L.L.L., barrister, Quebec. Appointed commissioner to investigate charges of partisanship by order in council 2172, 16th October, 1922. Cost $128.75.

3. Commissioner Drouin found Mr. Asselin guilty of political partisanship.

4. Petition received bearing 123 signatures in favour of the retention of Mr. Asselin.

5. Yes. Permanent appointment is being made by Civil Service Commission.

6. No.

7. Mr. Raoul Desbiens placed in temporary charge on the recommendation of Dr. Savard, M.P., pending permanent appointment by the Civil Service Commission.

POSTMASTER AT ANGOULEME

Mr. HANSON:

Mr. LAVIGUEUR:

1. Has the Immigration department received a resolution from the "Conseil National des Metiers" of the district of Quebec, protesting against the transfer to Quebec of a certain member of the St. John, New Brunswick, Immigration department staff and from elsewhere?

2. Does the department intend to replace these persons transferred to Quebec with citizens of the city of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

1. No.

2. In the event of any vacancies occurring the same will be filled in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

CATTLE QUARANTINED AT LEVIS

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. What quantity of hay, straw, and grain was purchased by the government for the cattle placed in quarantine at Lévis, Quebec, during the years 1919 to 1922, inclusive?

2. What are the names and business addresses of merchants from whom these purchases were made?

3. What amounts were paid to said merchants for each of the above years?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1, 2 and 3. Nil. The government does not purchase hay, straw, grain or other feed for animals placed in quarantine at the quarantine station, Levis, Quebec. The owners of the animals purchase the feed themselves.

PURE-BRED SHEEP IN ONTARIO

Mr. SENN:

1. Did the Department of Agriculture receive a request from the Ontario government or any breeders' association to participate in a scheme for the importation of pure-bred sheep to be distributed at cost in the province of Ontario?

2. If so, did the department agree to accept any responsibility in the matter?

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Yes, a request was received from the sheep breeders' associations in various provinces that some assistance be provided to pure-bred breeders in enabling them to import pure-bred rams for breeding purposes.

2. Yes, the department has accepted responsibility as follows: The Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture are co-operating equally in defraying transportation and purchasing expenses on specially selected rams imported this year.

WAREHOUSING OF GRAIN

Mr. COOTE:

1. Do the same laws governing the warehousing of grain as specified in the Canada Grain Act apply to dockage over 3 per cent which is not the property of the terminals?

2. Where are dockages set on cars of grain which are consigned to Fort William and Port Arthur?

3. Does the purchaser or holder of a warehouse receipt receive the quality and quantity of dockage taken from the car as specified by the tariff?

4. Is the quality of this dockage established at the time the grain is graded? If not, why?

5. Where and how is the quality of this dockage determined, and is all grain cleaned to grade to assure the dockages being taken out before setting a standard for quality?

6. Is binning supervision of dockages exercised by the Inspection department as prescribed for by the Canada Grain Act, section 94-95?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. All dockage regardless of ownership is binned together and is delivered upon the surrender of documents within 3 days; otherwise such dockage may be disposed of as provided for in the tariff governing the operation of public terminal elevators.

2. At the point of inspection, usually Winnipeg.

3. The holder of documents representing dockage receives the general average of quality of screenings as received by the public terminal elevator.

4. No, because it is not practical to bin separately the actual dockage from each individual car.

5. (a) Samples of dockage are being taken by officers of the Inspection department at each public terminal elevator while cleaning machinery is in operation, and the average quality of such dockage is determined from the samples so taken.

(b) Yes.

6. No provision is made in the Canada Grain Act covering the binning supervision of dockage by the Inspection department.

COST OF CARRYING MAILS

Mr. LEADER:

1. What was the total amount paid by the Dominion government to the railway companies for carrying His Majesty's mail in Canada for the last fiscal year?

2. What was the amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

3. What was the total amount paid to the Canadian National Railways, including the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific?

4. Is it the policy of the government to grant mail contracts to the Canadian National Railways, whenever possible?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

It is not possible to give the exact figures in answer to the above questions as the railway accounts for March quarter have not all been adjusted yet. It can be stated, however, that the expenditure on railways will be approximately as follows:

1. $7,453,000.
2. $3,671,000.
3. $3,187,000.
4. Yes.

YUKON MINERALS EXHIBIT

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

Will the govenment cause to be prepared an exhibit of ore and minerals from Yukon territory with data and facts informing the public of the wonderful mineral resources of that territory, the same to be placed with the Canadian Exhibit at British Empire Exhibition in England?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

An exhibit of this nature is at present in process of preparation.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Mr. ROBITAILLE:

1. What are the instructions of the Post Office Department in its supplement of the Official Guide of the Canadian Postal Service of May, 1923, in regard to summer time?

2. Have these instructions been revised or cancelled?

3. Has the municipality of the city of Montreal adopted daylight saving?

4. Have the time tables of railways which carry the mail to or from Montreal, been changed so as to agree with the daylight saving time?

5. Has the hour at the Montreal Post Office been changed and have the clocks been put an hour ahead since April the 30th last?

6. If so, by what authority has this change been made?

7. How was the change ordered?

8. Is it not a fact, although employees arrive at the Post Office at 7 a.m., daylight saving time, they have hardly anything to do up to the arrival of mails at 8.30 a.m., daylight saving time?

9. Can these mails be distributed by the first delivery?

10. Does the minister intend to re-establish the normal hour?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. "Local Daylight Saving. It is necessary in all cases that arrangements shall be made to despatch and receive mails in accordance with the railway time tables; but in the matter of the time of the opening and closing post offices the postmaster may be guided by the action of the municipal authorities that is, in any place where the local authorities decide to adopt daylight saving time, the postmaster may do likewise."

2. Only where the exigencies of the public service necessitate a departure from the advice contained in May, 1923, supplement to the Postal Guide.

3. No.

4. No.

5. Yes.

6. By the Post Office Department through the intermediary of the Division Superintendent of Postal Service Montreal.

7. Answered by No. 6.

8. No.

9. No.

10. The department is prepared to adopt whichever time is most conducive to the rendering of an efficient and satisfactory public service.

C.P.R. MAIL SERVICE

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. What is the total amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1922 for mail service?

2. What is the total amount, paid for mail service, to the various lines under government control?

3. What is the toal amount paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway for carrying overseas mail from the various seaports inland, and what are the details for the contracts covering this work?

4. What is the total amount paid to the various government lines for services specified in the above question, and what are the details of contracts covering the work?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM (for Postmaster General):

1. Calendar year, 1922, $3,749,288.14.

2. Intercolonial, $1,042,404.49; Canadian Northern, $680,253.09; Grand Trunk Pacific, $338,673.83; Prince Edward Island, $20,745.29; Grand Trunk Railway, $1,194,517.40; total, $3,256,594.10.

3. It is not possible to give any figures in answer to this question as such mails are carried with other Canadian mails and transportation is paid for at a car mile rate. There are no contracts for railway mail service. The rates of payment are fixed by the government.

4. Answered by No. 3.

MR. W. R. LITTLE

Mr. LAVIGUEUR:

1. How long has Mr. W. R. Little been in the employ of the Immigration department?
2. What are his duties?

2. 1919, $1,600; 1920, $21,438.12; 1921, nil.
3. No land has yet been turned over to the provincial government.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS.

ALBERTA DRAINAGE COMPANY

Mr. KELLNER:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, orders in council and other documents, regarding the sale of a parcel of land, under Order in Council No. 811, dated April 26th, 1922, to the Alberta Drainage Company, Edmonton, Alberta, containing by admeasurement 12,800 acres more or less.

BONDED OR EXPORT LIQUOR WAREHOUSES

Hon. Mr. STEVENS:

For a return showing a list of all licenses for bonded or export liquor warehouses granted in British Columbia since January 31st, 1921, together with the names of parties to whom granted, date of issue, and the name of the provincial authority endorsing the same, including a copy of said applications and letters of endorsation from provincial authorities also any transfers from one bonded premises or district to another district, together with copy of all endorsations, etc.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING—WINNIPEG

Mr. McMURRAY:

For a return showing, (a) Amount paid for printing by the Dominion government in the city of Winnipeg from January 1st, 1911, to December 31st, 1921; (b) All contracts entered into by the government with printing firms in the city of Winnipeg, and money paid to said firms from January 1st, 1922, to date; and (c) All printing contracts, and correspondence in connection therewith, made by the Canadian National Railways in connection with various publications and other printed matter.

MAIL CARRIERS AND CONTRACTORS

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant) moved:

For a return showing the names and addresses, by provinces, of the rural mail carriers.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Acting Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, taking this and the following motion together, I would ask the hon. gentlemen in whose names they stand not to press them. These returns mean the compilation of about thirteen thousand names, which would take weeks of time and cost a lot of money, and unless the information is of some special use to members of parliament, I would ask that the department be not put to this trouble and expense. I may add that these lists are sought after a good deal by various departmental stores, patent medicine firms, and so on, and the department has always taken the position that if any private concern wants these lists the country should not be put to the expense of compiling them; the firm itself should pay for the lists.

Mr. GOOD: My information is that there are only about three thousand of these names.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am taking the two motions together; these include about thirteen thousand names. If you grant one motion, you must of necessity, on principle, grant the other. If any private individual wants this information he should pay the expense of getting it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall I say dropped?

Mr. GOOD: Let it stand for the present.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Calgary East) moved:

For a return showing by provinces the names of all the rural mail contractors and the contractors operating between the post offices and railway stations in Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: This motion includes mail contractors operating between railway stations and post offices maybe half a mile or three-quarters of a mile apart. There are about nine thousand of these men.

Mr. IRVINE: As the government, no doubt, has to send out pay cheques to these men every month or so, I wonder if it would be a difficult matter to compile the names from these cheques as they are being sent out.

Mr. GRAHAM: It would mean the compilation of thirteen thousand names with their addresses—quite a big job in itself. I may repeat what I stated in regard to the preceding motion that the department has always taken the stand that they do not give out this information unless it is for some special purpose. Before I became a member of this House I endeavoured to get these lists myself and was absolutely turned down by the department.

Mr. IRVINE: In that case Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will not object to my pressing the motion now?

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands?

Mr. IRVINE: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped?

Mr. IRVINE: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Lost on division.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House tomorrow go into committee of the whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the provisions of chapter 12 of the statutes of 1921, be amended by extending the time for the completion of the Saint John and Quebec Railway between Centreville, in the county of Carleton, and Andover, in the county of Victoria, New Brunswick, from the 31st day of December, 1923, to the 31st day of December, 1925.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution, has given his consent thereto and commends it to the consideration of the House.

SAAR VALLEY COMMISSION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, what is the attitude of the government in regard to the action of the Canadian representative on the Saar Valley Commission, Mr. R. D. Waugh, ex-Mayor of Winnipeg? He was reported by the press a little time ago to be offering his resignation because of the action of the majority of his fellow-commissioners. The latest English newspapers to come to hand—the Manchester Guardian, the London Nation and others—are very strong in their condemnation of the action of the majority of the members of the commission. I wonder if our Canadian government have any part in this matter and if so, what action they are taking to support the Canadian representative.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government has no intimation on the subject other than has appeared in the press. I understand that the gentleman referred to is an appointee of the League of Nations; he is not an appointee of the Dominion government.

ALLEGED SECESSION POSSIBILITY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Calgary East): I wish to inquire if the attention of the government has been drawn to a statement made by Hon. W. F. Roberts, Minister of Public Health in the province of New Brunswick, which appears in this morning's press, to the effect that the secession of the Maritimes and the formation of a Maritime dominion is an imminent possibility unless a truly Canadian national policy is outlined and adhered to. If the attention of the government has been drawn to this I would like also to know if in their opinion, this is not more disrupting to the Dominion than, say, a strike of miners in Nova Scotia, and if they found it necessary to send militia to combat the strikers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: There is the question, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The attention of the government has not been drawn to the matter my hon. friend mentions.

BONUS TO TRIPLETS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): I have here a communication from one of my constituents requesting me to ask a question of the government. As the communication is very brief I will just read it; it is a matter in which the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) will be particularly interested:

We are told here that the government pays a bonus in the case of triplets who live. The — family have triplets, and if it is true that there is a bonus coming, will you please advise us what proceedings should be taken to obtain this bonus, either in the way of land or money. We will thank you for looking into this matter for us.

I wish to ask whether the present government has, or the former government had, any general policy in this respect. If not, I suggest the propriety of such a policy.

Mr. GRAHAM: Who says the West is not progressive?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend is right in suggesting that the Minister of the Interior is in a better position to answer that question than I am.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will bring the matter to the attention of the government.

ISENBERG AND HOPPE LEASES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to ask the government if the statement appearing in this morning's Citizen is correct, contained in a letter from Mr. W. Murdock to the effect that the leases known as the Isenberg and Hoppe leases in Alberta have never been cancelled.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Decidedly, no. They have been cancelled.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would ask whether there is no system of registration so that the public may know of the issue of fiats for the reconsideration of such cases. Instances of this kind arise and the first intimation the public gets is that the case is under way. Is there no means of making the public aware of these matters?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question is one which the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) would be in the best position to answer. I will direct his attention to the question.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—PILOTAGE

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 166, to amend The Canada Shipping Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister explain this bill?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I explained the proposed legislation fully when the resolution was before the committee and my hon. friend was present; I can only repeat what I then said. The law as it is does not allow any discretion to the pilotage authority, in ports other than Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, and St. John, to refuse a certificate to the master or the mate of a vessel who may apply for it. The object of the bill is to replace the word "shall" by the word "may" and add the words "if his application be approved by the pilotage authority." At present the pilotage authorities, after the ordinary examinations and upon payment of the dues, are compelled to deliver a certificate to the master or mate making the application. The necessity for the change has been forcibly brought to the attention of the department through a special case which arose this season in the pilotage district of Miramichi. The channel there is very narrow, and capable men have to be employed as pilots. We cannot expect pilots to spend all their time there if their services are not always required; under these conditions they have no option but to seek other means of livelihood, thus leaving the port without competent pilots. The bill is necessitated by an opinion of the Department of Justice that under the law as it stands the pilotage authorities have to grant the certificate. Under the amendment the master or mate is allowed to pass an examination, and be granted the certificate only when the pilotage authorities approve.

[Mr. Brown.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Master or mate, if application approved, may be examined, and, if passed, may receive pilotage certificate.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As I understand the minister's explanation, he wants in the first place an enabling clause, and in the next place a clause to prevent, if necessary, action being taken. On looking at the act I suppose the real change is this, that you can use substituted pilots with the assent of the pilotage districts of Quebec, Montreal, Halifax or St. John, but that others could not give that assent. Am I correct in that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And the next change is the substitution of "may" for "shall" in the sixteenth line?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, and the addition of the words "if his application be approved by the pilotage authority."

Section agreed to. Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 180, to amend the Civil Service Supermnnuation and Retirement Act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister would tell us what is being repealed by this section.

Mr. FIELDING: It is the clause which authorizes the Treasury Board to grant an extra term of years. That is the whole object.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I remember that.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

INSURANCE ACT, 1917, AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 184, to amend the Insurance Act, 1917.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Returns of British or foreign unlicensed insurance.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister explain?

Mr. FIELDING: This is to avoid the sending in of a duplicate return. There are several places where returns are required, and the object of this is to provide that where one return has been received in proper form, a duplicate shall not be required. That is the whole purpose of the first section.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not the act before me, but my recollection is that there was a change, not very much change in substance perhaps, but a change in the form for the definite purpose for which the return was required. Is the minister quite sure that if he waives these returns he will leave the company in the same position, having regard to the section requiring the return, that they would be in if they put in a false return, for instance?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think it touches that at all. The Superintendent of Insurance has prepared the bill and he assures me it is to avoid unnecessary duplication.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend is satisfied, I am not objecting.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—French version amended.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That seems to be different.

Mr. FIELDING: That is an error in the translation, that is all.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Conditions of license for automobile insurance.

Mr. FIELDING: This creates standard conditions of policies for automobile business, that is all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we approved of that a couple of years ago, but it was not gone on with.

Mr. FIELDING: I presume not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think it went through the committee.

Mr. FIELDING: I understand that the various interests concerned have been consulted in the matter and that the bill is not objected to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps we had better get a little idea from looking over the marginal notes as to what this means.

Mr. FIELDING: I should be very glad to let the matter stand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, it would not take five minutes.

Mr. FIELDING: The automobile insurance business is comparatively new. This is simply to create standard conditions of insurance in this business as has been done in other lines.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps we might take it up section by section.

Mr. BOYS: Is this bill the result of suggestions made by companies interested in such insurance, or by whom? The minister is introducing it, but these things occasionally have some other origin.

Mr. FIELDING: This is the work of the Superintendent of Insurance and he informs me that he has been in communication with the various interests concerned, and that this bill is merely to meet a new condition that has arisen. It is not objected to so far as I know, but if any hon. gentleman desires me to hold it over I have no objection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with paragraph (c) I would ask the minister whether that follows the usual clause as to mis-descriptions, mistakes in applications and so forth. It seems rather broad.

Mr. FIELDING: I think it follows the custom as respects other branches of the insurance business.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This reads:

> If any person applying for insurance falsely describes the property to the prejudice of the company or knowingly misrepresents or conceals or omits to communicate any circumstance which is required by the terms of the written application—

I note that written application is required. That would be in the form, I assume, that the department will select, so it would not be open to the companies to enlarge that application. In other words, that form of application would be the form approved of by the department, and the companies could not use other forms?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, I would so understand it.

Mr. BOYS: I have not had time as yet to go through all these clauses, but I see that it is necessary under one of them to have a copy of the application in the policy. From my own experience in business it seems to me it would be a very good idea if the agents of companies, or the companies themselves, were compelled to deliver to the insured a copy of the application at the time it is taken. I have, as a matter of fact, a case pending now, and there are many such cases where these policies are filled in, as a matter of convenience, by the agent of the company. I am not finding fault with that, but apparently the agent sometimes takes certain things for granted and inserts them himself, and then later on they turn out to be incorrect—not having been read over at the time by the insured—trouble results. I do not think it would be a hardship on the companies if their agents were compelled when taking an application for insurance to deliver a copy of that application then and there. In my experience I do not think I have ever run across a man who was able to show me the form of application that he had signed and if there is any sign of trouble it is difficult to get these copies from insurance companies. The insured, having signed the application, when he returns to his home in the evening will look over his copy. If he does not do it then he will not do it at all. If he looks it over he may find things in the application which should not be there.

Mr. FIELDING: I shall be pleased to leave the bill in committee and discuss the matter suggested by my hon. friend with the Superintendent of Insurance.

Mr. MANION: May I ask a question? I notice in glancing through the notes of the bill—I confess I have not read it over carefully—that the measure seems entirely for the purpose of protecting the insurance company, and I was wondering if the draftsman—I am not referring to the minister himself but to the official who drew up the bill—in any way took into account the very large number of owners of automobiles in the country, and if he did not draw the bill wholly with the object of protecting the company. In other words has the matter been gone into sufficiently fully by the draftsman to ensure that the companies are not making the regulations so strict as to vitiate, in certain cases, or do away with, the insurance. I hope that the interests of the owner of the automobile are being looked after. I know that the minister would not ignore that point, but I have seen bills put through the House on some matters in which the effect of all the provisions had not been thoroughly looked into. Now the owners of automobiles in the country would not become thoroughly familiar with a policy of this kind whereas the company would be looking entirely to its own interest. I simply point out that phase of the question to the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: I shall draw my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the Superintendent of Insurance. I am perfectly sure that the superintendent, in preparing this bill, has had regard to the automobile owner as well as to the company. However, any suggestion on that line will be worthy of consideration, and before the bill is put through committee I will be happy to have the Superintendent of Insurance consulted in the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is just one thing, going rather to the principle of this matter, that I would like to draw to my hon. friend's attention. On glancing over the act now I see that exceptions to insurability are made by the act itself. The usual principle as to insurance is that the insurance, when made, is an absolute contract unless exceptions are stipulated, and for the purpose of helping the public the law provides that these notices shall be printed very distinctly. In some instances, I think—I am speaking from recollection—red ink or larger type has to be used if the company desires to contract itself outside of the ordinary liability of an insurer. In other words, the exceptions have to be brought to the attention of the insured. Now, I point out to my hon. friend that this bill changes the rule altogether. This bill says that unless otherwise specifically stated in the policy of insurance, the company shall not be liable in a whole list of cases; for example if the interest of the insured in the automobile is not that of sole ownership, and so on. A man might very well desire to insure a partial but real interest which he had in an automobile just as much as if he owned it wholly himself, and I really think it should be pointed out to him in black and white in his policy that that partial interest is not insurable. Then again, a man may well insure his automobile and have to raise a little money on it; that will not be looked upon as a very heinous thing to do. But under this bill if a man insures his automobile and happens to have or subsequently gives a mortgage, or a lien, against it the policy is void, though there is nothing in the policy to show that such is the case. I would suggest to the minister that he should look into the effect of this bill and see whether we really ought to depart from a pretty well settled principle in connection with insurance, namely, that if the insurer desires to make exceptions to his general liability the exceptions must be clearly shown on the face of the policy.

Mr. FIELDING: I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. Before the bill is again taken up I will call the attention of the Superintendent of Insurance to the various points brought forward.

Mr. BOYS: Would the minister allow me to make another suggestion or two which might be considered by the superintendent when he is speaking to him. I would like to suggest that a copy of an application should always be given to the assured. Supposing, as often happens, loss is sustained and some question arises. The solicitor wants to see the application that his client has signed, but he has not got it. There is nothing which compels an insurance company to provide it, and while most of them do some are unwilling. I think there should be a clause in the bill which would compel an insurance company to provide a copy of the application upon the request of the assured or his solicitor. Then I would like this further suggestion to be considered: There should be a clause that the assured or his authorized agent should be permitted at any time to inspect the original application in the possession of the company. My reason for suggesting that is this. As I said before, very often answers are filled in by the agent and you cannot find that out by a typewritten copy. But if the opportunity was afforded of seeing the original application you could tell whose handwriting it is in, and get at what you want that way. I would like such a clause as that to be included if possible.

Progress reported.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUGS BILL

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Health) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 72, to prohibit the improper use of opium and other drugs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would ask the minister to explain the effect of the amendments, as to whether the policy adopted by the Commons is or is not changed by them.

Mr. BELAND: Five amendments have been made by the Senate to this bill. Two of them are of minor importance, and were made at the instance of the department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it that those are the first two.

Mr. BELAND: The first two involve only the addition of one word to the interpretation clause. The other amendments are more important but as far as we are concerned we have no objection at all to them. They make the intention of the bill clear. I refer to the amendment to clause 4 of the bill, which is the penalty clause. It has been divided in two, one having reference to indictment and the other to summary conviction, a penalty being provided in each case. The fourth amendment refers to section 14, on which there was some discussion in this House, and it has reference to the onus of proof. The amendment reads:

> Where any person is charged with an offence under paragraph (a), (d) or (e) of section 4 of this act, it shall not be necessary for the prosecuting authority to establish that the accused had not a license from the minister, or was not otherwise authorized to commit the act complained of, and if the accused pleads or alleges that he has such license or other authority, the burden of proof thereof shall be upon the person so charged.

It makes it a little milder, and I think more acceptable. The last amendment provides for the insertion of the words "and for the revocation of licenses" after the word "purposes."

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT—COAL

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil) (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill 159, to amend the Dominion Lands Act respecting the sale or other disposal of coal lands and coal mining rights.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think hon. members of the House will remember that the present bill was submitted as an amendment to the Cancellation Act introduced by myself, to validate cancellation of leases. At that time I opposed this amendment, pointing out that the leases in question, were placed under the control of the Governor in Council and were not in the hands of the minister for disposal. Since that time, I presume, hon. members will have noticed that this has been the matter of a rather lengthy controversy in the Senate, both as to the question of the leases and as to the question of the issuing of the fiat in connection with those leases. Hon. members will remember that the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) introduced legislation on Friday evening for the purpose of the withdrawal of the fiat, and again the Senate has passed this amendment, and I am prepared to accept it, and will ask the House to accept it. It will place these lands under the control of parliament rather than under the control of the minister or the government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I did not notice that there had been any great conflict in the Senate. It seemed to me that the government representatives in the Senate realized that a great mistake had been made last year, and that the government members in the Senate promoted this legislation; furthermore, that the government members in the Senate, upon looking into the question of the fiat, came to the conclusion that a very great error had been made in issuing that fiat. A bill has now been brought over from the Senate, which will enable the government to recede from a position which was entirely antagonistic to the real interests of the people. That is quite clear. I merely rise to point out that I do not think there was a fight in the Senate. I think they recognized unanimously that the present procedure was absolutely right, and I rise to congratulate my hon. friend on doing the right thing now, although he insisted on doing the wrong thing last year.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

LIVE STOCK ACTS AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made in the Senate to Bill No. 10, to amend and consolidate the acts respecting live stock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister tell us what the amendments are and whether they affect the policy laid down by the House?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The amendment made by the Senate reads:

There may be appointed from time to time by the Civil Service Commission, with the approval of the Governor in Council, such inspectors as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act.

These are the conditions that prevail with respect to the act at present, so that the amendment does not make any difference in the administration of the act.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It makes it quite sure.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It makes assurance doubly sure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the minister think it goes far enough to indicate to him, as a matter of principle, that Duncan Marshall should now be recalled?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Duncan Marshall was appointed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

SALE AND INSPECTION OF FRUIT

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 11, to regulate the sale and inspection of fruit and fruit containers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Explain.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is the same amendment as that which I read a minute ago, except that it is worded a little differently. It reads:

There may be appointed from time to time in accordance with the Civil Service Act, 1918, and any amendments thereof, such inspectors as are necessary for the purpose of this act.

This condition obtains now, and therefore the amendment, like a chip in the porridge, does neither good nor harm.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, and to provide regulations regarding butter substitute and the re-manufacture of butter, the character and weight of butter, the keeping of records by manufacturers or dealers in butter and cheese, and the examination of such records by inspectors, methods of establishing the guilt of persons charged with violation of the Act, and the procedure to be followed in all such cases.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This resolution precedes a bill, which, I think, has not yet been distributed. The purpose of the bill is to amend the Dairy Industry Act, such amendments are being made as time and the changed conditions of the industry have proved to be necessary. Certain changes are provided for in the interpretation clauses with respect to the terms "inspector" and "analyst." The terms "milk" and "butter fat" have also been defined in the bill. I do not think the term "substitute for butter" is to be found in the bill, but I believe it is in the margin; it refers to the percentage of milk or butter fat that must be contained in butter, and the stipulation is made that this shall be 80 per cent and shall conform to the requirements of the Food and Drug Act.

Mr. TOLMIE: That does not refer to oleomargarine?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; possibly that may come up at a later stage, but I cannot say with any certainty now whether it will or not. The bill also deals with re-manufactured butter. The term "manufactured" has hitherto been misunderstood. Sometimes it is used in reference to the original source of the manufactured article, but occasionally butter is re-made or re-churned, and there is a provision with respect to that practice. Possibly the section that is of most interest is that which deals with the weight of butter. In connection with charges that have been made in the past in relation to underweight in butter packages, there has been experienced a great deal of difficulty in proving that there has actually been such underweight. This difficulty has been inevitable under the terms of the act as it stands at present, because it is provided that the weight shall be so much at the time that the prints or the bricks were moulded or cut. When a pound print or brick goes to the retailer and is sold over the counter it is seldom the same weight as it was orginally, so that it is obviously exceedingly difficult to obtain a conviction for the selling of a package that is underweight when you have to prove the weight of the butter at the time it was moulded or cut. This term, "moulded or cut" is therefore being eliminated; the weight must be one hundred per cent at the time the butter is offered for sale.

Mr. BOYS: That applies to the retailer

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. We shall discuss this point later on. There are difficulties in any case, but this is considered to present the minimum difficulty and is most satisfactory inasmuch as it assures the consumer of full weight. As I have said, it is next to impossible to secure any conviction when you have to prove what the weight of the butter was a month or two previously. There are also some other changes with respect to minor matters: certain books must be kept to conform with the new grading system, and provisions are being made with respect to prosecutions and so forth. But these are matters of detail.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the meaning of the term "renovated butter"? Does this refer to butter made from renovated cream?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The provision in the bill with regard to renovated butter is intended simply to continue the prohibition.

Mr. TOLMIE: Does "renovated butter" mean butter made from renovated cream?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; this provision simply prohibits the manufacture of renovated butter by the process which is practised in the United States.

Mr. TOLMIE: That is, re-churning.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it does not prohibit re-churning. There is a process of renovation in the United States by which the butter is electrified, and that is the practice that we are prohibiting.

Mr. TOLMIE: The word "renovating" here does not interfere with the liming of cream?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; when the bill is under consideration I shall explain that feature of it. A big evil is creeping in in connection with the treatment of cream that has reached too high a state of fermentation when it reaches the creamery. There is no doubt that the inferior quality of a good deal of the butter that is turned out is due to this evil. The bill does not deal with this situation, however, which is one that, I think, calls for consideration. I had thought of raising the question before the special committee on Agricultural Conditions.

Mr. TOLMIE: Does the minister think that we could make butter fit for competition with European manufacturers competing in the British market, if we used cream of that kind?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. TOLMIE: Can the minister give us any information about the manufacture of what is known as "manna" in the province of Quebec?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think it falls from heaven, and certainly we have had several prosecutions this year in connection with this product. Certain butters of not very superior quality are mixed with vegetable oils and sometimes there is as much as fifty or sixty per cent of butter fat in the compound, the rest being vegetable material. This is considered to be an attempt to circumvent the oleomargarine law. I do not know whether or not that is the intention, but certainly it would be pretty expensive oleomargarine that would contain fifty or sixty per cent of butter fat, which is the nature of "manna." It is obvious, of course, that the butter must have been of a distinctly inferior quality in the first instance, or it would not have been mixed with vegetable oils in this proportion. The same vegetable oil is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and I do not think there is any actual law that prescribes the amount of vegetable oils that must be incorporated in the compound to constitute oleomargarine. It is rather a confusing question.

Mr. TOLMIE: Under the law to-day the manufacture of oleomargarine is permitted only in certain establishments that are licensed for the purpose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, and it transpired that these places were apparently licensed. I do not know whether the intention was to get by with it as butter, or whether it was produced as oleomargarine. This is a sort of compromise compound containing butter and vegetable fats.

Mr. TOLMIE: You did not let it slip past you, anyway.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. TOLMIE: What results did you have in the prosecutions?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think we got convictions, but it is some months now since I was inquiring into the matter. I will get details for my hon. friend.

Mr. TOLMIE: Does this act prevent the manufacture of what is called "filled milk"? And what are the actual ingredients of filled milk?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a local term. The "manna" that we have just been speaking about may be termed "filled butter"; it is filled with other ingredients. In making filled milk the butter fat is extracted from the whole milk and replaced by foreign fats of a similar nature, such as cocoanut oil and peanut oil. The practice is not very general in Canada, but it is quite common in the United States and is prohibited in some nine or ten states. The standards for milk and butter are fixed by order in council under the Food and Drugs Act. In the bill itself there is rather a technical expression which, I think, with the carrying out of the tests embodied in section 1 of the bill stipulating that there shall be 3.5 of butter fat in milk, will have the same effect as prohibiting filled milk, for the simple reason that with this percentage of butter fat in milk there will be no object in adding any other ingredients. Of course, a lot of tests run a good deal higher than 3.5 per cent, which is somewhat low, but it is quite obvious that while the milk contains this percentage it is not simply whole milk with the butter fat extracted.

Mr. TOLMIE: In view of the fact that a bill is to be brought down after this resolution is passed, would it not be well to have this particular point covered in the bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have not used the term "filled milk" any more than we have that of "filled butter". We simply stipulate that butter shall consist of 80 per cent butter fat, which conforms to the Food and Drugs Act. We have a double standard, which will make it impossible for butter to be filled and sold as "manna". The requirement of 3.5 per cent of butter fat in milk will prevent any attempt at filling. However, if it is advisable to make it clear by elaborating the word "filled" we can discuss it in the committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MILLAR: Are there any substitutes for butter, other than oleo, that are forbidden by law? Also, what constitutes a violation of such a law? I noticed in the city a short time ago something that was labelled and looked very much like butter, but when I asked the retail merchant he said it was the best quality oleo. In the labelling there was nothing to indicate that the compound was oleo, and I was only told its true character when I asked about it. Would the labelling of oleo or any other substitute as butter constitute a violation of the law?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: During recent years the ingenuity of man has been exercised in seeing how many compounds could be put on the market to imitate butter. My hon. friend might very easily find in stores a compound labelled "country roll", and he would have to turn it upside down to find the word "oleo". Sometimes the word is very indistinct, but usually it will be found on the bottom of the roll. Many people take that country roll to be butter. We all know what the country roll our mothers made was like, but this compound never saw the country in Canada; at the same time it is suggestive of butter. When it leaves the wholesaler the wrapper usually is on it, but when it is displayed for sale by the retailer frequently the wrapper is off and nowhere can the word "oleo" be found except on the bottom of the package. In reply to my hon. friend's question, whether there is any other compound besides oleo that can be sold legally, I think there are others, and it is scarcely possible to determine whether they are meant for butter or something else. But I think the proposed bill will prevent these imitations because they would not contain the required percentage of butter fat.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Mr. Chairman, there is no questioning the minister's diligence in providing regulations governing the quality of milk, butter and cheese; these dairy products are surrounded with regulations so strict that it is practically impossible for any adulteration to escape detection. The dairymen are not finding fault with such regulations. But I think there is good cause for complaint on their part that such regulations do not apply to those who add base ingredients to dairy products in order to take advantage of the latters' merits. This is a very common practice in this country to-day and it is so general in the United States that, as the minister has pointed out, a number of state legislatures have provided regulations against such adulteration. Reference has been made to "manna", which is, I believe, an endeavour to replace butter fat with a baser ingredient so that the compound may be disposed of at a greater profit. It is surprising how ingenious people are in their attempts to take advantage of something which has merit.

With regard to oleomargarine, which has been mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie), I would point out that there is absolutely no fixed standard for this commodity. The packers have the absolute right and privilege to take dairy products into their packing houses, mix base ingredients with them, and sell the compound at an enhanced profit to themselves. Do the committee think it fair to enact regulations so strict with regard to the production of a food that is absolutely essential to the health of growing children, and at the same time allow the packing houses to adulterate this commodity and dispose of it to the public as a substitute for butter? I think our regulations have been altogether too lax in this respect, and I am surprised that the minister is not taking steps in this bill to provide against these encroachments. You may surround those who are producing dairy products with all these regulations, but you cannot compel them to continue their production unless they find it profitable to do so. During this parliament and in preceding parliaments advice has been handed out by agricultural experts, as well as by those who are not agricultural experts, as to what should be done to make agriculture a success. It has been suggested that the farmers, particularly those in the West, should go into the live stock business; many who do not know the conditions in that part of the country have held that this is the only hope of salvation for the farmer. At the same time the manufacture of a commodity such as butter, on which there is the lowest duty that applies to any commodity that comes into this country, is surrounded with regulations so strict that they are becoming a nuisance. And the minister gets up to-day and states that extra safeguards are to be provided respecting the butter-fat content of milk and dairy products, but no provision is being made in regard to the encroachment on this commodity of butter-substitutes which are left free from such regulations as apply to dairy products. Skilled chemists take advantage of the high quality of butter-fat by so treating it, through the substitution or inclusion of cheaper ingredients, as to enable them to impose it on the public—not to supply a reasonable demand, but solely to make a profit out of a product that is not their own and that has real merit. We collect no tariff whatever on the commodities which are being brought into this country and mixed with our dairy products—or if we do, ninety-nine per cent is refunded. We have heard a good deal during the last few weeks about the standing of the two old-line parties in this country on the tariff. It has been stated that stability has been given to the tariff and that both the old parties are protectionist; yet this is the kind of protection that is meted out to those engaged in agriculture. It is not to the credit of the two old parties that this has been allowed. Is there a country under the sun for which nature has done more than it has for Canada from an agricultural standpoint?—an ideal country, outside of the long winters we have, and even these are beneficial in many respects. Yet the condition of affairs to which I refer is allowed to continue; even this session stricter regulations have been enacted regarding agricultural products than those applying to any other commodities. I protest, therefore, against the adoption of any further restrictions on the farmers unless you apply similar restrictions to those not engaged in agriculture, those not producing the basic commodities which are essential in connection with our most important foodstuffs and which are natural to our country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know what my hon. friend is talking about. I think he scents oleo in the air. If he does, all I can say is that last year he and I were on the same platform in that respect, and unless he has changed his view we are still on the same platform. Hence, I take it that he refers not to milk or cream, but to butter or to "manna." Is that what my hon. friend refers to?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Or to the butter-fat content of milk.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have that covered. The bill is not yet distributed, but I will read a paragraph from it; perhaps it will explain the point better. In fact, these details should not be gone into until the House has the bill before it. The bill says:

> Section 6 of the said act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:—
> "No person shall manufacture any butter containing over 16 per centum of water, or less than 80 per centum of milk fat."

If you get 80 per cent of milk fat into butter and 16 per cent of water, you have not much room for anything else. That conforms exactly to the stipulation provided by the Food and Drugs Act, applied, of course, to the content of butter. I was hopeful of getting the benefit of the views of our analyst on this subject before the committee on Agriculture. I do not pretend to know the terms, but I will read what section 1 of the bill says respecting milk fat or butter fat:

> "Milk fat" or "butter fat" is the fat of milk and has a Reichert Meissal number not less than twenty-four and a specific gravity not less than 0.905 at forty degrees centigrade and a Polenski number not to exceed 3.5.

I am not in a position to enlighten anybody with regard to these chemical tests, but I will at least have Dr. Shutt before the Agriculture committee to go into the matter in detail, and if these strange names do not do the trick, we will employ more understandable terms. I am quite with my hon. friend in all he says, and if this does not meet his wishes, he is a member of the Agriculture committee and he will find that we stand together on the requisites of this bill.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Motherwell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 186, to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Before the bill is read the second time I suggest that it be printed, as its merits can only be discussed on the second reading. The explanation given by the minister hardly conveys the meaning of the bill.

PATENTS OF INVENTION

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 20, to amend and consolidate the act relating to patents of invention.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is the effect of the amendments?

Mr. ROBB: They are only of a minor character. One is to correct a clerical error that was made by inserting a phrase in the eighteenth line that should have been inserted in the seventeenth line. Another relates to renumbering the sections. There are other slight amendments in no way materially affecting the bill.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

COPYRIGHT ACT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 24, to amend the Copyright Act, 1921.

Mr. MANION: I understand from the press that these amendments make a complete change in the bill as presented before the Senate. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBB: No. The Senate, I understand, did make some changes in committee which were afterwards referred back, and finally the Senate approved the bill as it left this chamber, with the exception of changing the date on which the act was to come into force. The original bill provided that it should come into force on the first day of July, 1923. The Senate amended that to the first day of January, 1924, unless sooner proclaimed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. That is the only change that was made.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Although the Senate amendment, postponing the date of the coming into force of the act until the first day of January, 1924, may be somewhat of an improvement on the clause which would have brought it into force on the first day of July, 1923, the change might just as well not have been made because there is no possibility of Canada adopting the provisions of the latest Berne Convention by the amended date. A much later date should have been placed in the bill, and in this connection I should like to read a memorandum prepared by counsel on behalf of the authors:

> I observe that the Senate fixes the first of January, 1924, as the date on which the act is to come into force. They might just as well have left the date the first of July, because there is no probability that an arrangement can be arrived at with the United States by the first of January next.
> As you know, Congress does not assemble until December, and it has before it matters of so much greater concern that the Cabinet will not deal with such a comparatively unimportant thing as copyright relations with Canada until more pressing affairs are out of the way.
> If our act comes into force on the 1st of January without a new treaty with the United States, the result will be that works published in the United States after that date will not be protected in Canada.
> After having enjoyed this copyright protection in Canada for thirty years, the United States government will undoubtedly consider it an affront that its citizens have been made copyright outlaws in Canada, and it is not likely that the United States will continue the reciprocal protection to Canadian authors which they now enjoy.
> In consequence, Canadian authors will lose protection in a county they are chiefly concerned in, and as United States publications will be without protection in Canada, and with the Canadian market flooded with cheap piratical reproductions, Canadian authors will lose the benefit of Canadian copyright as well.
> These results will certainly follow if the Copyright Act comes into force before a new treaty is negotiated with the United States.
> In my opinion the new act should not come into force until the first of July, 1924, unless sooner proclaimed. This will give parliament at the next session an opportunity to consider the situation should difficulties develop with the United States in negotiating a copyright treaty. If the government is in earnest in improving the copyright law, it must make sure that all our existing international rights are preserved before changing the law.

I would like to know whether the minister has taken that phase into consideration because if, as pointed out by counsel, these are to be the results, we had better bring the act into force late enough so that we shall be absolutely safe.

Mr. ROBB: The government are quite aware that there has been a difference of opinion as between the authors, the song writers, musical writers and the printing trade regarding copyright, but this measure was considered carefully in the House, sent over to the Senate and considered carefully there. and the judgment of the Senate was that the date of coming into effect of the act should be extended until January 1st, 1924. The government concurred in and are willing to accept that amendment. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that anything would be gained by extending the date still further. It seems to me that it would be in the interest of all those concerned in Canada that the Copyright Act should become law. If it is found necessary at the next session to make further amendments the government will not be debarred from proposing them by any legislation that we may pass now.

Mr. HOEY: The minister is doubtless, by this time, aware that this legislation in its present form is very objectionable to the Authors' Association of Canada. When the bill was before the House and the amendment was introduced by the minister I supported it. I had been suddenly called into the House and laboured under the delusion that that amendment was submitted at the request of the Authors' Association. Since then I have learned that the authors are very much opposed to that amendment, and opposed to the present legislation because of its protectionist features. I think it is very regrettable that we should allow legislation of this kind to pass through the House. I cannot persuade myself that it was carefully considered. I think the majority of us did not understand the significance of the amendment at all. I rise on this occasion to voice my protest against it on these grounds.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—U.S. LABOUR DELEGATES DETAINED

CASE OF ALEXANDER HOWAT

Hon. W S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of this, the first opportunity for several weeks, to bring to the attention of the House the case of Alexander Howat, about whom I asked some questions but whose appeal has been dismissed by the Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization. I do this not merely because of some degree of interest in the case of Howat himself, but on account of the serious precedent involved. The case first came to my notice through a telegram from the secretary of the Miners' Association at Glace Bay, Cape Breton, which reads as follows:

Howat ex-president Kansas Miners and Thomas Myerscough have been detained by immigration authorities McAdam Junction. Howat on his way here to address coal miners meeting soliciting their support for reinstatement of Kansas miners who have been expelled from the U.M.W. of A. Take up matter at once with Immigration authorities whom I am now wiring.

I took the matter up and immediately asked questions concerning the case on the floor of the House. The department finally gave a decision, which decision was appealed against by Mr. Howat. However, the minister finally decided the case against Howat. Now I understand from the American press that Mr. Howat is appealing to the Secretary of State of the United States in regard to the matter. The feeling of the miners themselves, not merely in Glace Bay but in other parts of the country, may be judged from a telegram I shall read, and I may say that I have received some half dozen similar messages from eastern and western Canada in regard to this case. This particular telegram comes from New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and is signed by a committee of the miners. It reads as follows:

At a mass meeting held at Stellarton, N.S. representing two thousand working men of Pictou county the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas district twenty-six U.M.W. of A. held and celebrated May first as a May Day holiday each district celebrating in its own way, and

Whereas the members located at Glace Bay, Cape Breton, and vicinity, in combination with the Sydney steel workers invited Alexander Howat the deposed president of district fourteen, Kansas, to address mass meetings to be held at Glace Bay and at central points in the other sub-districts, and

Whereas said Alexander Howat was refused admission at the border line into Canada as being a dangerous alien character and one Van Bitner; representing John L. Lewis admitted who is also an alien;

Be it resolved that in the opinion of this meeting we consider this act of the Immigration department is not in accord with democratic principle of free liberty loving citizens of Canada but rather in keeping with despotic Russia under the Czar regime.

Be it further resolved that we forward a copy of this resolution to J. S. Woodsworth appealing for him to take the matter up with the Progressives and bring before the House for redress.

Now, as I understand the matter, the case of Howat is this: Several years ago a law was passed in the state of Kansas making a strike a crime. That would undermine the very foundation of trades unionism, and of the right of organized labour to conduct its own affairs. Howat happened at that time to be president of his union, and on account of his position was asked to go ahead and call a strike. He thereby came in conflict with the law of the state of Kansas, and as the trial went forward became in that respect a criminal. Let me call attention to the fact that Howat was exercising his responsibility as the president of the union when he proceeded to call the strike, and had the greater part of the union behind him at that time. Later on there was trouble between different sections of the United Mine Workers in the state of Kansas, and Howat was deposed from his position as president. According to my information he has been carrying on a campaign in different parts of the States and in Canada—the Canadian Workers being united, through the International Federation of Labour, with the American workers—in order to have his position made clear, possibly in order to secure reinstatement.

Now let me consider the grounds upon which Howat was refused admission to Canada. According to the press of that date he was denied admission on the ground that he would become a public charge. I interviewed the Acting Minister of Immigration with regard to this, and he told me that the news item was correct. Now according to the Immigration Act:

No immigrant, passenger or other person unless he is a Canadian citizen, or has Canadian domicile, shall be permitted to enter or land in Canada, or in case of having landed in or entered Canada shall be permitted to remain therein, who belongs to any of the following classes, hereinafter called "prohibited classes"—

From the sub-sections enumerating the classes in question I quote the following:

(j) Persons who in the opinion of the Board of Inquiry or the officer in charge at any port of entry are likely to become a public charge;

The Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization informs me that Howat's appeal was dismissed on the ground that he was likely to become a public charge. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there was no reasonable probability that Howat was likely to become a public charge in Canada. He was coming, on the invitation of the miners of Nova Scotia, to fill a lecture engagement, and there was no probability that he would be left without funds or become stranded in this country and be a charge on the resources of the Dominion. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Immigration and Colonization had no hesitation whatever in telling me that this was only a technical ground. The minister informs me that instructions have been issued that any man from another country, including Great Britain, seeking entry to Canada who has a prison record shall be excluded. That means that in this case the real reason for excluding Howat was not that he was liable to become a public charge, but tht he had served a prison sentence on account of his having come into conflict with the laws of the state of Kansas.

There are several points I should like to bring briefly before the House. In the first place, I would charge the minister with not acting in this case in accordance with the law. The Liberals accused the late government of legislating by order in council. Apparently the present government does not even trouble to go the length of passing an order in council, but the minister himself undertakes to legislate as in this matter. I should like the minister to point out the clause in the act which permits him to exclude Alexander Howat. He has a right to exclude a man who is liable to become a public charge. He has the right to exclude other classes or persons expressly specified in the act, but he has no right to exclude a man simply on the ground that he has had a prison record. He has no right to issue instructions to that effect to his officers throughout this country. If the minister can thus disregard the law, I wonder how he expects other people to observe it.

The minister has, by his action in this case, created a new crime in the case of those seeking admission to Canada, that of a prison sentence. I would suggest that a great many of the men who are honoured in British history are men who, at one time or another, because they have advocated measures of reform were sentenced and had a prison record. In my early days I was brought up to read very carefully Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and I was taught even, in those days that Bunyan had written his Pilgrim's Progress while he was a prisoner. John Bunyan would be excluded according to the ruling of the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart). In discussing the matter with the minister I pointed out that there were some gentlemen to-day sitting in the British House of Commons who, during the war, for various reasons, had served prison sentences, among others Mr. E. D. Morel, one of the men who defeated Winston Churchill, and the Acting Minister of Immigration told me that if Mr. E. D. Morel, M.P. attempted to come to Canada he would be stopped at the border. I think that is an intolerable situation. My point is that the minister has no right to make regulations which would have that effect. In my own city of Winnipeg there are several men who have served prison sentences, William Ivens and John Queen, both members of the provincial legislature. If the American government should take similar action, these men who have been elected and re-elected by the votes of the people of their province, would be excluded from the United States. I take it that, under these circumstances, the Canadian government would have a good right to see to it that Canadian citizens occupying honourable positions in the legislatures of this country would have extended to them the right of entrance into the United States. I shall be very much disappointed indeed if Mr. Howat does not succeed in carrying his case further, and asking whether the Canadian government should exclude a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CARROLL: To what tribunal would Mr. Howat carry his appeal?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I presume it is a matter of international comity.

Mr. MARTELL: Where is international comity decided?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It should be decided in such a place as this. That is why I am bringing it up in this House. I think it is a question for this House to deal with.

Mr. MARTELL: Does the hon. member think the parliament of Canada can determine the rights of all internationals? I always thought parliament only had jurisdiction over its own subjects.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so, but we have no right to exclude people from the country, except on definite grounds, which are stated in this act, and we have excluded this man on grounds other than those stated in the act. According to the best British practice it has rather been the boast through many years, particularly shall I say the boast of the Liberal statesmen of Great Britain, that a great many of the Italian and Hungarian patriots have been enabled to come to Great Britain to place their case before the English people, and because of that they have to no small extent carried on that propaganda which has brought a larger measure of liberty in Italy, Hungary and other countries of Europe. Are we in Canada going to go back on these principles of British liberty? An editorial appeared in our local Journal on May 16, which was a splendid appeal for British liberty. One paragraph of this article reads:

5 p.m.

Britain and Liberty

Because Home Secretary Bridgeman deported certain English-born Irishmen from England to Ireland, a powerful British government is confronted with a crisis. Not only has the Englishman's passion for the liberty of the subject compelled return of the deported men and women; there is actual possibility that those responsible for deportations shall be prosecuted and that the ministry shall be censured in the House.

In what other country could such a thing take place? The men and women were of humble, lowly origin; without political influence; antagonistic to the interests of the Crown; and a generally dangerous nuisance. No matter. Their deportation was viewed as an invasion of the liberty of the subject, as an encroachment upon human rights, and immediately the voice of England rose up in compelling protest.

Of this is the greatness, the genius and the glory of the British race.

I should like to appeal to Britishers in this country that we in Canada maintain the best British traditions in dealing with matters of this character. Fundamentally such a decision as this is an attack upon freedom of speech. Only a few weeks ago the Acting Minister of Immigration rejected at the border James Larkin who was coming here to fill a lecture engagement in the city of Montreal. James Larkin afterwards returned to Great Britain. The question of his entry was taken up on the floor of the British House of Commons, and the Home Secretary took the ground that James Larkin could not be prevented from entering England because he was a British subject. Here again we have the same question arising. British subjects have certain rights the world over; they should have those rights in Canada as well as in other parts of the British dominions. It is only a few weeks since the distinguished French publicist Jean Longuet, a personal friend of Ramsay Macdonald, who has lectured throughout the length and breadth of Great Britain, and in the United States was asked to come to this country to fulfil certain lecture engagements in the cities of Montreal and Toronto. He was stopped at the border, but finally, as a special concession, he was allowed to come across into Canada, to fill two engagements, on condition that he would return immediately to the United States. Again let me say that that procedure, which is being carried out apparently as a set policy by the present administration, is not in keeping with the best British traditions.

It has been said, of course, that this man Howat was coming over here to raise some disturbance, and after his detention for several days, after the May Day celebration, it was pointed out that there had been very strange things said on May Day. As a matter of fact, it has been definitely denied that these extreme statements were ever uttered, either in the eastern part of the country, in Cape Breton, or in the western part of the country at Calgary. Apparently the speeches on that occasion were manufactured by the press, and not made by the men themselves.

Consider the situation. On a general international holiday, May Day, the workers, who form a very considerable portion of the population of this country, desire to celebrate in their own way. In so doing they are simply carrying out the request of the International Federation of Trade Unions. I have here a manifesto issued by that body in Europe, signed by J. H. Thomas, M.P., who cannot be accused of being one of the most radical of the labour members of the British House of Commons. It urges that all over the world the workers will celebrate their international holiday. Howat attempts to come over here to join in these celebrations and he is stopped. As far as the working class is concerned, I would say, in the first instance, that they regard this as an unwarrantable interference with Labour's own private affairs. I am not here to defend Howat, or any one section of the United Mine Workers of America. But, irrespective of its sectional prejudices, Labour contends that labour organizations ought to be able to bring over to this country whatever speakers they wish to select. One man representing one section of the United Mine Workers of America was allowed to come through and address a meeting; another man was stopped at the border. Is it for this government to decide which of the representatives of the unions will be allowed to come to Canada and address meetings? If it is, then it is time that we understood that very clearly. But I suggest that the government is going to undertake a pretty big programme if it is to decide just exactly what kind of policies are to be permitted to be advocated in Canada. Further, we regard this as discriminatory class legislation. I know of no occasion when an international bankers' conference has been prevented from meeting in this country. It is fairly well known to certain members of the committee on Banking and Commerce at the present time that some of the policies of our bankers in this country are actually outlined by bankers on the other side of the border; but we do not have any general objection raised to that, nor does the Minister of Immigration send any instructions to his officials on the border that bankers across the line are to be forbidden admittance to this country because their policies may not be in harmony with the policies of certain people in Canada. Imperialists from Great Britain can without hindrance tour this country and address Canadian clubs from coast to coast on certain public policies; yet the Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) actually tells us that other members of the British House of Commons shall not be allowed to enter Canada for the reason that their policies are not consistent with the policies of those who at present sit on the government benches in this Chamber.

I appeal to the House once more, as I have done before, on behalf of these miners of Nova Scotia. I wish the House could understand a little bit more clearly how those men feel in this matter. They charge that in the past their constituencies have been so gerrymandered that it has been extremely difficult for them to elect representatives to the House of Commons. I am not undertaking to argue the case; I know that this is very freely stated in the eastern part of the country. They charge, further, that there have been unfair election tactics. Again, I refrain from arguing the point; I simply state as a fact that the allegation is freely made among the miners. They say that again and again they have sent deputations to the government asking for the most reasonable things, and these have been denied them. Last year they sent a deputation requesting that a royal commission be appointed to go into the whole question of the production of coal in Cape Breton. That commission was refused. This year they sent another deputation praying that the present government carry out its pledges and provide, for the old people among them, some system of pensions. Again their deputation was sent back empty handed. Under these circumstances, is it very much wonder that these men feel resentful. On their invitation, one of their fellow members comes to talk to them on a holiday, and they find that even the fundamental rights of British subjects are denied them, that they are not allowed to discuss these questions, and their guests are turned back?

I submit that if in reality we are seeking to avoid very serious industrial unrest in this country, if we are really sincere in the desire to bring about reconstruction through constitutional means, then this is the time when we ought to act in the proper spirit. There is no use talking to these men and advising them to use parliamentary methods, while again and again you make it impossible for them so to act. Then when on top of all that they find that they cannot enjoy the fundamental British rights of freedom of discussion, of organization, and so forth, I do not much wonder that there is the very deepest resentment, which sooner or later will manifest itself in ways that may cause apprehension throughout the country. Finally, I would appeal to a government that calls itself Liberal, that the old principles of Liberalism be not trampled under foot. I have no doubt the Acting Minister of Immigration himself thinks that he is acting in the best interests of the country. He says he does not want to stir up trouble; he wants to safeguard the miners from these dangerous demagogues from the United States. I have no doubt he is sincere; but I believe he is mistaken in his policy. I would again submit that he has gone altogether beyond both the letter and the spirit of the law which he is supposed to administer.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Acting Minister of Immigration): No doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Woodsworth) would object to admittance being refused anyone who happened to come within the purview of the law; but surely the people of Canada have a right to say whom they will admit to their midst. The argument my hon. friend uses is, however, directly in contradiction to that principle; apparently, he suggests that no offence which any human being might commit should constitute a ground for refusing to admit him into the country. Further, the hon. gentleman goes on to quote, as a case in point, the matter of the Irish agitators who were sent back from England. The situation is vastly different; Irish agitators are not aliens, they belong to the Empire, and necessarily are treated from a different point of view entirely. But people entering from the United States or any other foreign country are not in that category; and the gentleman in question, Mr. Howatt, spent fifteen months in gaol for an offence, in reference to the justice or injustice of which it is not my business to inquire. In addition to that he is one, so the information goes, who has been denied the privileges of his own organization, and is still denied them. I have no objection to his making application to the Secretary of State and bringing the matter up in due course, and I believe, from the press despatches, it was stated that he intended doing so. So far I have not been informed, either by the Secretary of State of the United States or through our own Department of State, that he has taken any such action; and personally I have no objection to lectures being delivered on behalf of the United Mine Workers of America, or the Bankers' Association, or the Manufacturers' Association, or the Farmers' Association, or any other organization. And that is not the ground on which this individual was refused admittance to Canada; he was not admitted simply for the reason that it was feared he might become a public charge in Canada as he was in Kansas.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the minister say that he was a public charge in Kansas?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Undoubtedly, he was a public charge; he spent fifteen months in gaol.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the minister suggest that that is the meaning of the phrase "a public charge"?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If my hon. friend is of the opinion that a prisoner is not a public charge on the community, I should like him to explain just what the status of such a person is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The phrase "a public charge" has a well-recognized meaning; it implies that a man has become dependent on the public for his upkeep. It is only, indeed, in a very extended sense of the expression, that one would suggest that a person who is in gaol is a public charge. The expression has an altogether different meaning from that which the minister ascribes to it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is the advice I get from the officers who are paid to advise the members of the government on such questions. However, I do not intend to discuss the point further. I think that in all fairness it is reasonable to assume that anyone who commits an offence and is incarcerated in any public gaol in this country is a public charge on the Canadian people. I do not think there can be any question about that. But, further, I have a copy of the Chronicle in which I see a report that the gentleman has been refused the privilege of speaking in his own country. I am not keeping him out on that ground, though, for I am thoroughly in accord with my hon. friend that there should be freedom of speech. That is not at all the ground on which he was refused admittance. His partner came into the country because there was no similar reason for refusing to admit him; and he made his speech. But I have to be guided by the circumstances as I find them, in the case of Larkin, in the case of Howat, and in the case of a prisoner who comes to my mind at the moment, who is in a gaol in Montana. I have had half-a-dozen cases of this character since I became minister. I am perfectly willing to go into the merits of each case, but in a general way where people have served prison sentences I take it that it is not the business of the immigration officers to make an investigation as to why such sentences were imposed, and I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to change that regulation in any particular. If later on it is proven that these men are entitled to come into the country, I have the privilege of admitting them.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and icebreakers, $1,500,000.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): There is a decrease of $100,000 in this item due to the lesser cost of fuel and provisions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the position of the John D. Hazen at the present time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This ice breaker is doing work in the gulf of St. Lawrence just now.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: How many icebreakers have we in active operation at the present time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have the Mikula—that is the Russian name of the John D. Hazen; I do not know whether we ought not to give this icebreaker back its good Canadian name—the Lady Grey and the Montcalm.

Item agreed to.

Investigation into wrecks, $12,300.

Mr. SPENCER: How much of this amount was used last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will get the information for my hon. friend.

Mr. NEILL: I wish under this heading to make some remarks to the House in connection with the wreck of the Alaskan which took place on the British Columbia coast last winter, and also in connection with the investigation into that wreck. I also wish to hang on to that so to speak, under circumstances which I will narrate, a plea for some further measure of protection in the way of life-saving on the coast of British Columbia. It will take some time for me to outline the case thoroughly, but I will be as brief as possible, and perhaps the fact that I did not waste the time of the House in discussing the budget may incline the committee to be indulgent on this occasion.

I am taking the wreck of the Alaskan as a typical case, although this is one of four wrecks that occurred last winter on this coast within a very limited area. There was loss of life in connection with some of the other wrecks, but there was a total loss of life in the case of the Alaskan. This coast line along which all these wrecks occur lies entirely within my district. It is called the "Graveyard of the Pacific," and it is not a mere euphonious expression for magazine articles; it has behind it a very dread reality I remember the first occasion when I walked along this coast. Every mile or two, sometimes every quarter of a mile, I would come on the remains of a wreck. If it was a sandy stretch the wreck was still there and I have a distinct recollection of a 200-ton boat lying battered among trees on the edge of the sandy beach and far above ordinary high water. The rocky points had also taken toll; every place had a name, such as Michigan point and so on, all due to the fact that boats had gone ashore at these points within the memory of men then living, and in every case with loss of life, in many cases with a total loss of life.

The Alaskan was lost on the 2nd January of this year. The boat belonged to a little company of men living in Victoria or Vancouver. She was bought in the preceding November. Her owners ran her on one trip from Victoria to Barkley sound, which is on the west coast of Vancouver island. On the second trip she was lost with all hands. This boat was built thirty-seven years ago in the United States. I may say that even now—at that time still more so—the standards of shipbuilding in the United States are much less exacting than our Canadian standards. Consequently hon. members can judge of the character of a boat built thirty-seven years ago in the United States. It was constructed either of Douglas fir, known to be a soft wood, or else of Oregon pine, a still softer wood. I am quoting now, with one small exception, entirely from the evidence taken at the investigation. I have also used the coroner's inquest held on one of the bodies that came ashore and my personal knowledge of the local geography. This investigation was held under government auspices a few months ago. The Alaskan was a steamer of 13 horse power, and had what is known as a water-tube boiler. Her tonnage was not 150 tons but a few hundred pounds under. They build them like that in order to escape the regulation, because any boat of 150 tons or over has to be inspected annually by the government inspectors as regards her hull. Her machinery must be inspected anyhow. So the hull of this thirty-seven year old boat which was going out into the open Pacific in winter time had never been inspected by any government inspector from the time she was launched. She was bought at the time I am alluding to for $6,000. She was insured for $9,000 forthwith.

On account of the total loss of life I advised the government to have an investigation into the wreck, and this was ordered. Hon. members will recall that I have from time to time asked the government when the report was coming down. The answer given me first was that the report was delayed by the sickness of the stenographer who had taken the evidence, and later on by the sickness of the commissioner. I am not a bit surprised that they were sick. I have read the evidence and the report and their perusal and a comparison of them filled me with nausea. Therefore, I repeat, I am not surprised that anyone would feel inclined to be sick who had any responsibility whatever in the preparation of the report. For the result was a gigantic whitewash. It whitewashed everybody connected with the wreck. The only person not whitewashed was the Almighty, on whom blame was put for sending the storm, although it was a comparatively minor storm because the meteorological report says the morning of the day on which the Alaskan was lost there was only a fresh gale blowing and at night it was nothing more than a strong gale. In their desire to whitewash everybody in sight they even whitewashed a government official who was discharged by the department for neglect of duty in connection with the wreck. He too was covered with this universal coat of whitewash. But while very abundant it was from its very nature extremely thin, and certain very salient and prominent facts stick out which I purpose to bring to the notice of the House.

In the first place I am putting some responsibility on the government—though not by way of blaming the present government or the last government, or even, necessarily, a department; it is probably a condition of affairs that has grown up; the conditions have changed and the regulations have not. I am not blaming anyone in connection with the government, but the government of the day, as regards the future at least, have a certain responsibility.

Now, it arose in this way: The government appointed, I do not know how many years ago, a wreck commissioner to deal with these investigations of wrecks on the Pacific coast. It is an extremely important work, because the decisions sometimes involve hundreds of thousands of dollars in connection with wrecks or collisions. Well, they allotted to this official $1,500 or $1,600, a year I am not sure which, and in case this might not be enough for a really competent man, whose duties would be very little inferior to those of a judge, they said: "If $1,600 is not sufficient, you are at liberty to indulge in private work." The wreck commissioner is necessarily a seafaring man, and a seafaring man is not very likely to be readily capable of adapting himself to some other occupation such as that of a stockbroker or a druggist. His only natural occupation must be in connection with seafaring matters, such as surveying, the testing of compasses, and so on. I am not saying that this man did such work, because I do not know, and I am going to be very conservative in my statements. But I do know that the regulations of the department under which he was employed permit him, if he so wishes, to engage in private work. Now, that is worse than if a judge were given a beggarly salary and told that he might go out and engage in legal work on the side, because a judge might do a great deal of legal work and yet never come in contact with his clients in the court over which he presided. Moreover, if there were any likelihood of that happening, he could get a brother judge to take his case. But this man is sole judge of these cases on the Pacific coast, and more than that, his clientele, if I may use the word, is limited. The number of men engaged in seafaring pursuits on the Pacific coast of British Columbia, that is, those who own boats there, is extremely limited, and if this man is to get employment, as he is invited to do by the government regulations, he must seek it from among the very men on whom he may sit to-morrow in judgment in connection with very important matters indeed. He must be familiar with all these men; he must be on friendly terms with them if he wants to get employment from them, yet he is put in the position of working for them one day and sitting in judgment on them the next. I do not say he ever did any such private work, because, as I have said, I do not know; but I submit that it is an undesirable position for the government regulations to create.

The government will say, no doubt, and say very truly, that the work offering on that coast in this connection is not large enough to justify the payment of a proper salary to a man who should devote his whole attention to it. Well, in that case it would be far better to close the office and either send a man from this coast to deal with the specific cases, or else put them in the hands of the judge in admiralty. There is a Supreme Court judge there who has made a lifelong study of admiralty matters; he sits as admiralty judge when occasion demands, and he has the advantage of being able to judge evidence properly, which no man not of the legal profession has the ability to do; moreover, he would be absolutely independent. Take whichever position you like, whether you send a man from here or whether you put the cases in the hands of the admiralty court there, it is highly desirable that the man who sits in judgment on these cases, who sits alone and has to deal with matters very technical and difficult in their character, should not have affiliations of a business or social or personal character with the men on whom he sits in judgment or the interests involved in the cases which come before him. I think that is absolutely incontrovertible, and so far as the government's responsibility goes, I suggest that they look into that aspect of it.

I do not suggest that this wreck commissioner was corrupt, nor do I intend, having safeguarded myself, so to speak, by that statement, to go on and by hint or innuendo suggest that he was corrupt, because I do not think so; if I did I would say so. But I do suggest that this evidence shows that he was very careless or very incompetent, or both. My opinion is that he was both. The evidence shows—and I am prepared to give the book and page for every one of these statements, but I will not detain the House; I will simply make the statements—that almost from the beginning of the case he was prejudiced in favour of the decision which he ultimately gave. He was partial in the bringing out of the evidence; he did not give the evidence its proper value, and he did not obtain evidence that was very material; evidence that was most vital was practically omitted. I wish to state again that I do not know any of the parties to the dispute. The only person I know in connection with it was a constable who was only a minor witness. I know none of these men personally or by repute other than as recorded in the pages of the sworn evidence taken in the course of the investigation. I will give you a short history of the case and later on I will refer to the lack of material evidence, and I think it will be admitted that what I say in this respect is correct.

I will give you a short history of the first trip, and I will give it to you from the evidence of men who were there, disinterested men who made the trip in their capacities as engineer or fireman, men who were not interested in the company and who had nothing to gain by telling the truth or otherwise. I cannot give you the history of the second trip, except as to its initial stages, because everybody was lost. One of the principal witnesses was a Mr. Wilson, and the commissioner himself comments on the fair and frank way he gave his evidence. Wilson was an engineer; he had a first class Board of Trade certificate from the Old Country, and those of us who are familiar with the Board of Trade regulations in the Old Country know that that means he was a thoroughly competent engineer. He had had thirty years' experience; which shows that he was a thoroughly experienced man. He got a position as engineer to make his first trip from Victoria to Barkley sound. He went down and took a glimpse at the boiler. He asked the captain if the boiler had been inspected, and was answered in the negative, whereupon he said, "I am not going to sea until that boiler is inspected." The captain said, "Well, now, do not make any trouble; we have our charter and we want to go out. The boat is all right; the engine is all right; let us go out." The engineer said, however, "I am not going until I have inspected this boiler," and when he put it like that, they said, "All right; go and look at the boiler." So he took the top off it, or proceeded by whatever method is followed in such cases, and he found that there were four tubes missing, and four plugged—it was a water tube boiler—and that seven more were leaking. They were leaking with a pressure of cold water on the Victoria water system, which means about 80 or 90 pounds pressure. Of course, you need a higher pressure than that to run an engine, but with that pressure he found seven tubes leaking as well as eight that were out of business. He also found that several of the pumps were in bad shape, valves missing and packing gone, and that there were no wrenches with which to fix the pumps; it is recorded here that he had to send up town to buy some wrenches for the purpose. Mind you, this was a boat going out on the open Pacific in mid-winter, yet they had not enough wrenches with which to fix the pumps, and if he had not insisted on this investigation before they started they would have gone out with the pumps not working and with no tools available to make the necessary adjustments or repairs. After they had fixed the boat up—and he tells us they spent three days tinkering on it; they had no machine shop available—as he himself said, "We decided to make the trip." They started out, I understand, about one-thirty in the afternoon, and they had not gone very far "when we found the bilges flooding, and the pumps were choked; so we put into Beachy bay," which is fourteen miles from Victoria. Now these pumps had been tinkered with before they started, and they had proceeded only fourteen miles when this trouble occurred. Fortunately, they found a place where they could put in—it is not generally the case on the west coast that such a place can conveniently or readily be found. They put in at Beachy bay and spent all night fixing up the pumps.

Apparently they were satisfied then, and they started out again the next morning. They had not gone very far, I suppose about forty miles further, when they found there was no water in the boiler, and as you know, you need water to make steam, and if you have no water you cannot go very far. They were liable to drift on the rocks around Pachena Point, and the engineer in his log says that he had to use salt water for keeping up steam, which has about the same effect as if you used salt water for oiling a car in order to get a mile or two more out of her and reach safety. "I am afraid the old kettle won't stand it," the engineer says in his log. They altered their course; instead of going to Kildonan they went to Bamfield, which was the nearest place where they could get water and a sheltered place. The salt water which the engineer had used did enable them to get to Bamfield. They got water there and started off to their destination, which was about ten miles distant. They got there under these conditions, and incidentally I may say they struck the wharf going in and damaged it. "Not enough power" was the reason given. When they raised steam again the engineer had to take the top off the boiler and cut six more tubes out on account of the damage done by the salt water, making ten short out of about fifty. This all took time and in the meantime the boat was being towed around by some local boat so that they could get their cargo of fish on board. After some days they started out with a load and the first thing that happened was that the boat was on fire. The owners at the investigation described it casually as "a little scorching" but the engineer said in his evidence that it was enough to break the glass in the pilot house. That is where you stand to steer; it is the only place where you can steer from, and if the fire was bad enough to break the glass in the pilot house it would not have needed to get a great deal worse before it would have been impossible for them to steer the boat at all. On that occasion it was due to the shifting of the baffle-plates—I do not want to be too technical, but I cannot but be technical just here. I gather from the evidence that these baffle-plates are put on top of the tubes to prevent the heat rushing out too violently into the funnel, something like a damper on a stove. These baffle-plates had got loose and the funnel got so hot that it set fire to the woodwork of the pilot house in the vicinity. They got the fire put out and fixed up the baffle-plates as well as they could. They did not stop to do that, but did it as they went along.

Next they had such a big load on, not only in the interior but also on the deck, that they noticed the deck buckled a bit and the doors jammed. The owner of the boat denied that, but he was not there, and this man who was there says he saw the deck buckled. They went on again and presently they found there was no water in the boiler, and the engineer said in his evidence "I was scared to take a chance by putting more salt water in. I was afraid she would burst or scald someone." So the weather being fine—it was smooth water and a very fine day for the time of year—she drifted around in the straits from eight in the morning till two in the afternoon. Less than half of that time would have sufficed to send her ashore and wreck her if the weather had been at all stormy, but fortunately the weather was smooth. Then a United States cruiser came along and gave her water. Then she started out again between two and three and by four o'clock they were out of water again. They drifted around in the dark until nine o'clock when the C.P.R. steamer the Tees came along and offered her a tow. They hitched on to the bitts, which is an iron frame fastened to the decks and is generally used to fasten the rope to when the boat is moored alongside the wharf. They hitched on to one of the bitts and in ten minutes had pulled it out. Then they pulled out the other one, and as the engineer said "The wood looked to be pretty rotten where it came out." The Tees came back again for another trial and hitched on to the mast. That stood, and finally they reached Victoria with water on the engine room floor. They managed to get to Victoria, which was not their destination, but Vancouver. There they overhauled the pumps. Three had no packing, and then they discovered why they had no water. There was a leaking pipe between the water cistern and the boiler, so they put a new cistern on the deck and that enabled them to get to Vancouver, their destination. They then put her into a repair place for repairs, and they took up this pipe and found that it was a two-inch galvanized iron pipe, and in the language of the engineer "it was pretty well rotten." They had to move the floor to get at this pipe; otherwise it could not be seen. This boat was supposed to be in first-class shape when she left, but this pipe had neither been tested nor examined. The owner gave as a reason in his evidence that he thought some time it must have been frozen, and then of course that would make a leak, and rust would follow after that. But the boat was supposed to be in first class condition and you could not look at this pipe without tearing up a little bit of the deck. This boat went to sea in a condition which I think I can show ultimately resulted in its loss.

The engineer then recommended a new boiler or re-tubing the old one, but his recommendation was not accepted. Then he said, "I am not going back to sea in that boat unless she is re-tubed or a new boiler put in." He was getting good pay and times were bad, but he told one of the assessors at this examination that he would not be a bit surprised considering the condition of the boiler to hear that something had gone wrong in rough weather. He was pressed to say what he thought caused the loss, and he replied that it must either have shipped a sea into the engine room or else a tube burst in the boiler. The sea could only come into the engine room through the doors and shutters, and there were the usual doors to prevent that. So it is more logical to take his other reason as being the correct one, that the tubes had burst.

Mr. MARTELL: Were there no port holes in the engine room?

Mr. NEILL: Port holes?

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend said that a sea could only come in through the doors. My hon. friend knows that there are port holes in every engine room, and the sea could get in through them.

Mr. NEILL: The port holes are very small and are made of very thick glass, and there would not be much danger of a sea breaking them. We are dealing with probabilities, not theories.

Mr. MARTELL: That is a probability.

Mr. NEILL: When the engineer was pressed to say why he thought that a burst tube would be dangerous he gave this explanation. He said, "There were too many tubes out already. If there were any more it would overrun the margin of safety. A few more would be dangerous." He was further pressed and he gave this explanation: If a tube leaks from old age, so to speak, it is only a very small pin-hole leak. It leaks gradually and it will be days or weeks before it becomes dangerous, but on account of salt water being used in the boiler, patches of it would crust small pieces the size, say, of a five-cent piece at certain corners and elbows, and that would prevent water getting at the tube, and then the piece would burn out and the tube would burst and the water in all the tubes would run into the fire box and put out the fire. It was more dangerous on account of having used the salt water. The engineer was pressed to say that things were not as bad as he had said. He was asked, "After these repairs, don't you think she was all right?" The engineer replied, "After the repairs I would not have gone myself," and he did not go. He quit his job rather than go. That completes the history of the first voyage. I might mention that in leaving that wharf she knocked down six more piles. The reason was that she had too much power. On her way to Victoria she went on fire again, but that is part of the second trip. It sounds like a jest, does it not, but it is the solemn truth as revealed by sworn evidence.

That is the history of the first trip of that boat on the strength of statements made by reliable witnesses, the engineer and his assistant, dependable men who had certificates which they were liable to lose if they made a false statement. This testimony is better, in my opinion, than the interested statements of the owners, who sat back in their offices in Victoria and Vancouver and "thought and believed and supposed" for that is the tenor of most of their evidence if you subject it to a close scrutiny. Whatever evidence they had to support them was either from employees or firms that they had business contracts with as I will explain later on. Now, the distance from Victoria to Kildonan is roughly 130 miles so we have this situation: Here is a boat in a first class condition—or supposed to be. After having been further overhauled by her engineer and his assistant. she does not get 14 miles before she has to lie up all night to make repairs on her pumps. The next day she had to use salt water; she struck a wharf; she was towed around while being repaired. She starts out with so heavy a deck load that the deck buckles. Then she went on fire enough to break the glass in the pilot house. She breaks down and drifts in the open strait. She starts off again and again breaks down and drifts for five hours in the dark. She is picked up again and the tow tears out both bitts because the wood is pretty rotten, and at last crawls into Victoria with water on the engine room floor. And this was all in a trip of 130 miles, less than 300 miles on the round trip and most of it in sheltered water. What would have happened, I wonder, if she had gone down as far as Seattle or San Francisco where she would have been exposed during the whole trip to the buffeting of the Pacific ocean? I would like to quote here the view the commissioner takes of the incidents that I have described without a word of exaggeration. Here is how he dismisses all that. Addressing one of the principal owners he says:

> There is no doubt you had completed one voyage and, apart from little accidents it was completed successfully. A. Yes, sir.

Apart from "little accidents," Mr. Chairman, it was completed successfully! If it was not such a dreadful tragedy it would be too comical. It reminds one of the Apostle Paul and the boasting he did in his elderly garrulity, that he had been so many times beaten and put in gaol, that he had been stoned, that he had been shipwrecked three times, and had been in the deep for a day and a half. That, however, was the record of a life time of adventure. This happened in a week only!

Now to go on to the next trip. Unfortunately it was lamentably short because the vessel and crew were lost very soon after they started out. They started out from Vancouver and, as I say, knocked out six piles of the wharf. Seemingly the vessel had too much power. She went on fire on her way to Victoria and her baffle plates again shifted. Now the journey from Victoria to Vancouver is in inside waters therefore the vessel did not encounter any heavy seas calculated to bring about a shaking which would have caused these baffle plates to shift. The plates were fixed in Victoria and the vessel started out at eight p.m., but returned again at two a.m.—"too hot." Finally a man was got from Vancouver to fix the baffle plates. Presumably they were fixed properly because we heard no more about it. The vessel loaded a cargo of box lumber and started off again in absolutely calm weather; the meteorological conditions show that. She was next seen off Pachena Point thirty hours after she had left Victoria. Now Pachena is about seventy miles from Victoria and the vessel was able to do six or seven knots an hour. So that in ordinary fair weather she should have made that distance in about eleven hours. Instead of that she occupied thirty hours. Where was she during the nineteen hours which intervened? We have no record to show that, no one can tell. She must have spent those nineteen hours somewhere between Victoria and Pachena Point. We have no way of knowing what happened. Did she go into Beach bay to fix up her baffle plates, or did more tubes burst and were efforts made to carry out repairs? No one can tell. What we do know is that she delayed somewhere for nineteen hours before she was seen off Pachena Point. The vessel was next seen at 3.30 p.m., by the lighthouse keeper, passed Pachena Point and heading towards cape Beale which was 6 or 7 miles distant and had she rounded that point she would have been in sheltered water. If there was a very strong wind and a heavy sea running from the start of the trip one could understand what had happened. But the meteorological report shows that the wind during the time was only moderate. It was not until afterwards that what might be described as a strong gale sprang up. So that during the nineteen hours referred to the vessel could and should have reached a place of safety long before the wind increased in violence. Anyhow the centre of the gale was some 200 miles north so that she would not have experienced the worst end of it. When first sighted by the lighthouse keeper the vessel was going very slowly but was too close in; she was either steaming or drifting towards shore. Now, if either a steamship or a sailing boat is near the shore in a heavy wind the first precaution to be observed is to get off that shore. It is therefore reasonable to assume that if this vessel was capable of steaming she would have changed her course, she would have steamed away from that shore and reached a place of safety because there was a harbour of refuge only a few miles away. But as the lighthouse keeper says she kept steaming or drifting to the shore.

Now, I think here is one of the most significant facts as to what really caused the loss of this boat. She was watched closely by the lighthouse keeper, or his wife, and during all that time, between then and dark, they saw no sign of steaming; no sign of smoke coming out of the funnel. The vessel was only a mile and a half away. In British Columbia they use bituminous coal and what is called "run of the mine" for steamships. This contains a great deal of slack and I can certify myself that it makes a very strong, black smoke. You can easily see it for quite a distance; I am well within the mark when I say that it is readily discernible at a distance of ten miles. This vessel was only a mile and a half away. It was being watched by somebody whose attention was called to the danger the boat was in and he swears that he saw no sign of smoke coming out of the funnel. Had that boat been in a condition to steam the onlooker would certainly have seen smoke belching out of her funnel. Everybody on board having been lost it is impossible that we shall ever ascertain the facts; but I suggest it is probable that a tube burst in her boiler and the vessel drifted around while her crew were trying to get it fixed up. At any rate with this vessel not steaming within a mile and a half of the rocks and a strong wind blowing towards the shore we can know exactly what was going to happen. If that was not the cause what did happen? There is no other suggestion that is tenable. I may mention that the practice when a vessel becomes disabled at sea is to send up a flare or other signal of distress. The watcher in the lighthouse continued to observe the motions of the boat until after it became dark and observed the crew put up several flares. It shows that the vessel was not abandoned—although someone suggested that she had been—that there were men on board and that they were not able to leave.

Now we have had the evidence before the Commission of Inquiry of some of the government inspectors who I think, came out very well, in regard to their actions in connection with the matter. Inspector Stevens, of Vancouver, speaks as follows and this is a vital point. He was asked if, when this boat was repaired, he should not have been informed of the fact and he said "absolutely." The examination continues:

Q. They should have notified you.—A. Yes. The act says so. I think it is section 591 or 624 where it says that the owners, masters or engineers should report to the steamboat inspector.

Q. They did not comply with that law?—A. If there was any damage to the boiler they should have notified us.

Q. Supposing the ship had been repaired?—A. If she had been repaired, there must have been some damage.

Q. And they should have notified you?—A. Absolutely.

And then he quotes the section of the act. If that notification had been given and if the inspector had come down and glanced over the condition of that boiler, I am safe in saying that the boat would never have gone out till her tubes had been repaired, and the salt water conditions made right. He did not know of her condition and was not supposed to know. The boat had suffered damage and it was their duty to report. I have looked up the act and I know the provisions in regard to it, and I say it was the duty of the owners to give notice. It was not so much because of what had been done in the way of repairs, but it was the safeguard; the inspector would have gone down and examined the boiler and said "That boat must never leave port till it is properly repaired." That was the only safeguard the crew had, and it is for that reason I hold the owners responsible. I think there were four owners and one of them said he was an engineer. Therefore, he should have known what the law was. He said all the necessary things were done. He said in his evidence that the boat had been inspected and overhauled, but it is a fact that this inspector was not notified of these repairs.

Then again Inspector Cullam of Victoria happened to be coming along the street and saw the boat preparing to go out without any lifeboat. He rang up the owners and said "You cannot go out without a lifeboat." The owner approached the captain and tried to excuse it, and said "Do not make a fuss about it, it will be all right next trip, we have a nice little boat; come down and look at it, it will be all right." But Mr. Cullam, with admirable determination said "It is not all right; you do not go out with that dinky little boat, you must get a proper lifeboat." So alert was he that he telephoned the collector of customs and said "Do not let that boat go out until you get a permit from me." He thought they would try to go out in spite of his instructions, but he adhered to his determination and they had to get a proper lifeboat on that occasion.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. NEILL: Earlier in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I said that among the faults I found with the investigation which we are considering was the fact that, as I believe, material evidence had not been adduced that could have been procured. I want to deal with that matter for a moment. The man from whose evidence I have been principally quoting, Wilson, was on the first trip of the boat, but he did not go out on the second. There were also a number of other men who, warned by the experiences which I narrated this afternoon, decided as well to quit the boat. None of these men were called; but there was one man in particular who undoubtedly should have been called, and that was Brock. He was the captain on the first trip; in fact, he owned the boat, having bought it under option from the vendors. He had bought it from them and had endeavoured to sell shares in it to various friends of his, among whom was a practical engineer named Redding. Redding canned the idea promptly, having given one look at the engines; but Brock went on the first trip of the boat, and on his return, Mr. Redding, who gave evidence at the investigation, meeting him, congratulated him on having escaped with his life; and Brock replied: "Yes, I saw the rats leaving the ship in Victoria and thought it was time to quit." Now, that statement might be taken in its literal sense, that Brock actually saw rats leaving the ship; but I take it that what he really meant was that, in view of the condition of the ship and the engines, he thought it was time to leave it, and that was why he did not go on the second trip. But, Sir, I wanted to submit Redding's evidence for this reason: he was asked several questions about the man Brock, who did not appear to be on the horizon at all. Amongst other questions, this one was put to him by one of the assessors:

> My question is, can he—

That is, Redding.

> —say whether Brock is out for the time being while the investigation is on?

That is to say, in other words, was he hiding or keeping out of the way? The answer made by the witness was:

> It is a question I would sooner leave unanswered.

That answer, I think, would naturally suggest to any of us the idea that it was highly desirable to procure the evidence of a man of whom it was at least implied that he might be keeping out of the way until the investigation was over. And the commissioner himself said: "We ought to have Mr. Brock's evidence." But what means did he employ to get Brock? He asked Mr. Wright, one of the owners of the boat, to get him; and if there is any truth in the suggestion that Brock was keeping, or was being kept, out of the way on purpose, Wright was the very man who was interested in seeing that he did not come to court. The commissioner entrusted to him the duty, or rather the business—because it was not his duty—to procure Brock in order that he might give evidence possibly against his interests; and the consequence, which I think was not unnatural, was that Brock did not appear. Nothing appears in the evidence to show why he was not procured, but I am told by a man who was present that the question was brought up on the last day of the investigation. The question was asked where Brock was, or why he did not come to give evidence, and the reply was made that he was at Powell river and had no money to come in. I do not know what the mileage would be, but at any rate it would not cost more than five or six dollars for boat fare from Powell river to Vancouver; and the assertion that Brook had no money to come down from Powell river, and that therefore on that account his evidence was not available, was not, in my opinion, by any means satisfactory. I submit that that fact alone betrays the very strongest, I will not say suspicion—yes, I will say that; "suspicion" is the right word—suspicion of the competency of the court as conducted. It is absolutely inexcusable that the man who was the captain of the boat on the previous trip, in regard to whom the suggestion was made that he was keeping out of the way on purpose, and who was ordered to be brought forward for examination, should fail to appear, solely for the trumpery reason that he had no money to pay his fare. It was not the business of those in charge of the investigation to be satisfied with that bald statement, for the money could have been easily procured to bring him into court; and failure to procure him is unjustifiable and inexcusable from any point of view that can be taken.

There is another point which I would submit to the committee. One of the witnesses swore in the presence of the owner of the boat, or at least one of the owners of the boat, that it was so heavily laden that it buckled with the weight. The owner of the boat denied that, but still the assertion was made. On her first trip from Barkley sound to Vancouver she had a cargo of fish in boxes, no doubt consigned to various people in Vancouver. It would have been easy to ascertain the weight of that cargo, the invoices would have shown the number of boxes and their weight, and from this data they would have had a good idea whether she was overloaded to the extent of buckling her deck. Then again, no attempt was made to follow up that line of inquiry. On her second trip she was loaded with what are called box shooks, that is, fish boxes knocked down, four feet long one foot wide and one inch deep. They were piled up on deck, and the evidence showed there had not been the slightest attempt made to fasten the deck load by any means whatever. Thus you had this boat going out into the heavy sea with a lot of loose lumber on her deck, and every wave that broke overboard would lift two or three of the top shooks and wash them overboard with any member of the crew who might be standing on them. It would have been easy to ascertain from the stevedoring company how she was loaded—whether this cargo was thrown on like a heap of firewood, or whether any attempt was made to secure the deck load from being washed overboard. Even a vessel going out with a deck load of heavy timbers has these properly secured so that they will not be affected by heavy seas. But there was no attempt made to find out how the Alaskan was loaded, whether she was properly loaded or whether she was overloaded—information which could have been easily ascertained from the stevedoring company who loaded her in Victoria.

There is another serious failure on the part of the wreck commissioners; they did not visit the scene of the wreck. Suppose this House burned down to-morrow, and we had two commissioners engaged from Toronto to make an investigation, what would we think of them if, instead of visiting Ottawa and inspecting the scene of the fire, they proceeded to Winnipeg and held their inquiry there? The reason given by the commissioner was that the scene of the wreck was remote and difficult to get at. In reply to this, I may say that there is a well-equipped Canadian Pacific passenger boat which goes three times a month within eleven miles of the spot, and from there to the wreck is a comparatively easy walk over a trail. It would have been a rough walk and in wet weather rather unpleasant, but a woman made the trip the day after the wreck, and there was nothing to prevent any able-bodied men visiting the scene of the wreck, where they would have learned a good deal of very great value in the investigation. I may say that the coroner's inquest which sat upon one of the men's bodies that drifted ashore had no difficulty whatever in visiting the place. If the commissioners had visited the wreck perhaps we would have found in the annex to their report a definite statement as to whether the wreck was that of the Alaskan or not. Doubt is expressed as to whether the wreckage found belonged to the Alaskan or not, but there were reasons for that expression of doubt, as I shall show. But had they visited the scene of the wreck it would have been impossible for them to express any such doubt. The evidence showed there had been no wreck for ten years within ten miles of either side of the wreck found there. We have the small shallow bay there practically covered with this shook lumber—the cargo of the Alaskan—drifting all around; we have a lifeboat found there with the name "Vancouver" and corresponding with the boat purchased by the owners for the Alaskan; we have a number of life belts washed ashore with the name of the Alaskan on them; we have the body of a man, identified as one of the crew, cast ashore at this place. Yet this commission that sat one hundred and fifty miles away found it impossible to say whether or not that was the wreck of the Alaskan. There was also a piece of wreckage thirty feet long and, I think, ten or twelve feet across—I forget the exact measurement—and its condition was such that it was highly desirable not to connect it up with the Alaskan, which perhaps was the reason that this dubiety was expressed. A piece produced by one of the witnesses—a constable, totally disinterested, having no connection with any of the parties—was so rotten that he said he had kicked it off the main piece of the wreck. Those interested tried to make out that it was not part of the wrecked Alaskan, but I think there can be no doubt it was. The coroner's inquest at least had no trouble in finding that this was the wreck. Their verdict in part reads as follows:

That the wreckage of the ss. Alaskan, as examined by them, was very old and rotten.

They had no doubt, having seen the wreckage, whether it was part of the Alaskan or not, and had this commission, as they could easily have done, visited the place they would not have had any doubts either.

There is another matter. A chain was discovered at the wreck about thirty or forty feet long. An attempt was made by the owners of the boat to suggest that it was a piece of old chain that had been lying on the boat deck for casual purposes; but that suggestion was destroyed by the evidence of one of the witnesses who swore it was attached to this piece of wreckage thirty feet long by twelve feet wide found at the spot. Next an attempt was made to suggest that it was a stay chain used for staying the mast, but further investigation proved that a stay chain in that particular place for that particular purpose would not exceed six feet in length. But it was imperative to prove that this chain had nothing to do with the Alaskan, and they next brought somebody into court who swore positively that the chain was not on the boat. On cross-examination, however, it developed that he had not seen the boat for three years, so that weakened his assertion very much. Now, I have here a small piece of that chain, and I will send it over to the members of the government so they can see how worn and weak it is. One end is broken off altogether, and some of the links are about the thickness of a sheet of paper. The constable said that this short piece was a fair sample of the thirty or forty-foot length. Some of the evidence went to suggest that the chain was the steering gear of the boat; but that is not so. From other evidence it appears that this was the limber chain. I am not going into a technical explanation. I need only say that such a chain is used in keeping the openings clear for the water to reach the pump, and if the chain breaks the water is very liable to fill up in the bilges and flood the boat. Whatever purpose this chain was used for, it is a sample of what was considered sufficient for the equipment of that boat. There is a saying that you can judge the unknown by the known. Well, there is something we can look at, at any rate, and so get an idea of the rest of the equipment. There is no question whatever that that was part of the equipment of the Alaskan.

Now, I want to quote briefly a few remarks by the lawyer who represented the relatives of one of the drowned men, the captain of the boat. Here are some of his remarks:

Mr. MacTaggart: I think it is quite clear from the evidence that if there had been any survivors the owners would have been called upon to answer in another court. The evidence shows that.

Further on he says:

In my opinion this investigation should have taken place at Pachena—

That is where the wreck occurred.

—and it could have been ascertained in ten minutes how she broke up and possibly how she was wrecked. If you believe the evidence of the men from the west coast that the large piece they found was a part of the Alaskan and that a piece was kicked off it by their feet, it shows what the condition of this vessel was. Mr. Gordon tells you that there was no other wreckage there and that, therefore, this must have been a part of the wreck of the Alaskan. Unless it is thought that these men came here to perjure themselves, their evidence must be accepted. It is a matter for your consideration. I maintain that that (indicating) is a representative piece of the hull of the Alaskan and, if that is so, it is quite time that there was inspection of the hull for vessels of 150 tons or less.

I quite agree with his remarks in regard to that. I want to quote for a moment the annex to the report. There was a short report saying the wreck was due to a gale, and then the annex goes into more detail. In the annex the question appears:

Was this boat when she left Victoria in good seaworthy condition?

And the answer given is as follows:

From the evidence of reputable persons in the employ of her former owners, the Pacific Salvage Company Limited, of Victoria, of responsible employees of Messrs. Yarrows Limited, shipbuilders, etc., of Esquimalt, B.C., as also other witnesses, the vessel when she left Victoria, B.C. on the 1st January, 1923, was as regards her hull and equipment seaworthy, etc.

You will note the expression: "From the evidence of reputable persons." No doubt they were reputable—I do not suggest these men meant to perjure themselves at all—but who were they? Every man jack of them was interested. They were either the owners of the vessel, or they were the late owners who were in a sense interested, because it was asserted that they had O.K.'d her staunchness to the new purchasers. And the other people, the Yarrows and so on, they were shipbuilders, people who had contracts for the repair of this and similar boats, and who hoped to get more contracts in the future. As I say, they did not go there to perjure themselves, but they certainly went there to give as favourable evidence as possible for the owners. There is keen competition among shipbuilders, and naturally they are not going to injure their clients if they can help it, that is, if they can put things in as favourable a light as possible consistent with truth. You can make truth look a good deal nicer if you want to than if you do not; there is no question about that. The head manager of this salvage company, the late owners, who was trying to do the best he could for his friends, admitted on cross-examination that in all the six or seven years that they had the boat they had never let her go outside—"outside" means into outside waters. They had kept her inside, in smooth waters; that was his experience of the best way to handle that boat. We must compare the evidence of these interested people with the evidence of this engineer, who had no axe to grind; with the evidence of government officials, who were equally trustworthy; and I think I am right in saying that the evidence of these disinterested parties should have been accepted or should at least have been given more weight than the evidence of those who were clearly interested, directly or indirectly.

Then, I refer again to their report, from where I was reading before. It says:

> They found that the whole equipment was seaworthy but manifestly was unsafe to venture on such a voyage in such conditions of weather as existed at the time of her loss.

Now, the dictionary meaning of "seaworthy" is "fit or safe to go to sea;" so it would appear that this boat was fit and safe to go to sea but manifestly was unsafe to go if it went outside the harbour. Well, if a boat is fit to go to sea one must assume that it will be fit to encounter a reasonable degree of weather; I think there is no question about that. But they go on record as saying that the boat was seaworthy but manifestly unsafe to go to sea—there is the plain English of it—unsafe to go away from the inside harbour.

I am well aware that the loss of ships at sea is due either to foundering as the result of a heavy gale—swamping, in fact—or to a breakdown which puts the ship at the mercy of the sea and causes it very soon to go to pieces. This boat did not founder at sea, because she was seen drifting on to the rocks; therefore she met with some mishap; she became disabled. That disablement could not have been connected with her sailing abilities, because she had none; it must therefore, have been connected with her steaming abilities. I suggest that the reason was that her engines became disabled through the fact that one of these tubes to which I have alluded burst and had put out the fire, and there was no more steam available.

Turning again to the report, we find it stated that the condition of the machinery was "very good"—and that in the face of the facts that I have mentioned—and that "the boiler, however, would probably have had to have considerable attention paid to it at her next annual inspection." In the face of all the facts I have laid before the House—that this man gave up a job worth $200 a month rather than risk his life on the boat again; that he warned them that the boiler ought to be retubed; that they had given orders to the marine repair shops to be ready for them on a future ocasion; that a man named McGrath heard the captain say to one of the owners that "she ought to have been fixed up before, but we had not enough money and she will have to run a trip or two more before we can afford to do it"—notwithstanding all these facts, which are in the evidence, you have it solemnly stated that the boat was "very good," but she would probably have to have some overhauling in the near future.

To sum up the situation, we find this little bunch of would-be quick millionaires buying this boat on a shoe-string at $6,000—and insuring her immediately for 50 per cent more; we find them buying this rotten old hull that had not been inspected by the government for thirty-six years. We have them making this trip with all the accidents that the commissioner refers to as "little accidents," but which, perhaps, have a greater significance in view of what took place on the next trip. We find them cautioned and advised by their engineer, who said he would not go to sea; that he would quit rather than take the risk on it again, and also that there was an utter disregard of the regulations, which provided that in a case of that kind they should report these repairs to the inspector of boilers. We find them trying to go out of Victoria harbour without a lifeboat, and when called to question we find them offering an excuse and saying they would put one on on the next trip. We find that one of the principal owners was an engineer, who knew or should have known what the regulations were. But they went out without reporting these repairs; they tried to go out without a lifeboat—in other words, they took a gamble, not with their own money and their own lives, but with the lives of the crew; for that was the stake, that was the issue. Unfortunately the boat was lost; they lost their bet—and who paid for it? Not the men who should have paid, not the men who would have got the benefit if they had won their bet, not the men who would have reaped the profits, but the unfortunate crew. It was they who paid for it; and their widows and children—one of them left six small children—will be paying for it for ten years to come in a life of poverty and, no doubt, insufficient educational facilities. But the owners of the boat—they do not have to pay for it; they will get their $9,000 of insurance where they paid only $6,000 for the boat. They will get their insurance money, which, I think, would be well described as blood money, for that is practically what it comes to. And I note that the price of blood has increased of late years. Judas Iscariot got thirty pieces of silver for betraying innocent blood, but my friends here were going to get, over and above the cost of the boat, three thousand pieces of silver for betraying the lives of eleven men. I notice that Judas Iscariot at least became repentant and tried to undo what he had done by giving back his blood money, but I do not see any sign of that in this case. I do not hear any word of this $3,000 of profit, profit by mens' lives, being handed over to the widows and children. No; they will collect their money and look for another boat to finance on a shoe-string as before, no doubt.

I am not talking simply for the sake of informing the House; I have one or two definite suggestions to make. These men are liable to a heavy fine under the act—I need not quote it; section 591, I think it is—for not reporting these repairs. I maintain that had these repairs been reported the engineer would never in God's world have let that boat go out in the condition she was in. The trivial repairs they did make—the tinkering—had they been reported according to law, these men would have been alive to-day. I suggest to the government, therefore, that in the ordinary course of business they should have these men prosecuted, not in any spirit of revenge—that would be a poor solace to the widows and children—but merely to impress upon them and to impress upon other ship owners inclined to do the like that they must not evade these regulations; that the regulations, apparently trivial, are intended for the preservation of life; that they are very important, and that they must be adhered to. The only way you can impress that on some people is by making them pay out of their own pockets. I suggest it is thoroughly proper and fitting that these men, if they have transgressed in that regard should for the sake of example be prosecuted and fined to the limit of the law. Now these men have been sacrificed. I perhaps was wrong in comparing the shipowners to Judas Iscariot because after all, his action was wilful and these men were not guilty of deliberately sending these men to their deaths. If they had known, I suppose they would not have done it, but they were guilty of this: They were guilty of risking these men's lives for selfish greed. Put it on the highest plane it was careless, selfish greed. They were willing to take a risk with somebody else's life. These men are gone. I do not want to go into any heroics about that, because nothing would be more out of keeping, but it is our duty if we can, to so consider the matter that these men shall not have lost their lives in vain. It might be some consolation to their widows if they knew that the loss of their husbands had drawn the attention of the government to the importance of having boats under 150 tons in burden inspected, and the men who work on this class of boats protected. My suggestion is that the limit under which inspection should not be enforced should be reduced from 150 to say 75 or 50 tons. I want to be moderate in order to get the government to accept the situation. That would mean instead of a crew of eleven men, there would only be perhaps four or five endangering their lives in boats of this age and under these circumstances.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) when he was announcing in the House the other day the policy, and it was a very liberal policy I am glad to say, which he intended to inaugurate in connection with life-saving appliances on the west coast, when he came to this feature of reducing the inspection limit, hesitated and said that the matter was under the consideration of the government. It is for that reason I am bringing the matter up to-night so that the influence of these circumstances may induce the government to decide definitely that they will introduce legislation of that kind. It could be very easily done.

It may be said, and it has been said, that any legislation of that kind would produce a very vigorous and a very strenuous protest. Yes, I have no doubt of it, and who will the protest come from? The very people that you want to get at under such regulations. It will not be the Canadian Pacific and big companies like that which have a reputation as well as money to lose. They would not send boats out in that condition. They would have them inspected whether the government demanded it or not. It is the very fly-by-night men that will buy a rotter boat on a shoe string that will howl at any such legislation being suggested. But let them howl. They are the ones we want to get at.

It may be said that it will cost a lot of money. The cost will be comparatively trivial. Even boats of this kind have to be tied up every year for an inspection of their machinery. They have to be tied up in port for twenty-four hours at least, and while their machinery is being inspected very little extra cost would be entailed in having the hull inspected at the same time. Moreover, the government maintains an efficient force of men to do that work, and it would not require a great many more inspectors, I doubt if it would require any more, to inspect these extra boats. It could be done at the same time the boilers are being inspected.

I want to summarize the lessons which I think this disaster teaches us. It was only a small disaster. There were only eleven lives lost, and we who hardly pick up a paper in our comfortable homes in the winter time without seeing the report of some small boat lost with a dozen lives may think it is trivial. How many men in Quebec and Ontario heard about this wreck? We on the Pacific coast do not hear about the wrecks on the Atlantic coast. It is only eleven lives, but if you multiply that often enough you reach the proportions of a great disaster. A loss of two hundred lives shocks the whole world and makes people seek what they can do to prevent a recurrence of such a disaster. It is equally important that ever-recurring small disasters of this kind should be stopped. I would therefore suggest that the lessons to be learned from this disaster are these: First, that office should be inspected, reorganized or closed altogether along the lines I suggested earlier; these boat owners should be prosecuted for their infraction of the law, which ultimately if not directly, led to this loss, and the standard of these boats to be inspected should be lowered from 150 to 75 or 50 tons. That has all to do with that phase of this question.

I have now only a few remarks to make on general life-saving appliances. It should come more properly on an estimate a little further down, but it is so intermingled with this subject that I might be excused in finishing my remarks for touching upon it now. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries the other day in the House in announcing a liberal policy of improving life-saving appliances outlined the following. He was going to install wireless apparatus at the lighthouses so that they could communicate, without having to trust to a land line which is nearly always down, with a boat that he would have stationed at Bamfield. It would not be very costly because he could use the fishery protection boats in the winter time when they are not being used in the fishery service. He promised to have that boat always in touch with the lighthouses by wireless and always ready to go out—two very important things. Another equally important, was a rather costly thing but one that I think is well worth the money, and that was the installation of a wireless direction finding apparatus, or whatever you call it, at Pachena. That would be well worth the money. I might explain for the benefit of the House—it will have to be explained a little later on as this money will have to be voted, probably in a supplementary estimate—that Pachena is the point at which the big boats coming up the coast, like the Valencia which was lost with fearful loss of life a number of years ago—these ocean going boats come up and strike Vancouver Island about Pachena, and there they should take a sharp right angle to go up the straits to Victoria, but in winter time in foggy weather they have to run by dead reckoning: that is the chart says they should cover a certain distance in a certain time, but unfortunately there are currents around that coast intermittent in character so that a ship running by dead reckoning may be ten or twenty miles out. That is what happened in the case of the Valencia. She came up on dead reckoning and thought she was ten miles from where she actually was, and she struck Vancouver Island and broke up with heavy loss of life. That is the place where a direction-finding machine would be of the greatest possible service, because any boat could there by wireless pick up her exact position from the station. It is one of the best things that could possibly be done.

There is one other thing I wish to urge upon the government in this connection, and that is that they should maintain and improve the trail along that coast. It was cut out many years ago and bridges put in, which are now rotten. The trail is practically useless now, but it would not take a great deal of money, in fact, nothing in proportion to the value to be derived, if the government would have the windfalls removed, the trees that fall across the trail, and repair the bridges. It would not be necessary to have great big bridges. A four-foot bridge big enough for a man and a horse to get over would be sufficient. The necessity for that can be shown by a petition I have from the west coast. It is signed by only fifty people, but that means every person living along that coast. They say:

> From our personal experiences of the wrecks the past winter and those of other years we know that a road along the coast is the sole certain means of getting a line aboard wrecked vessels at any part of the coast. A road means speed, and speed generally is an important factor with distressed ships, and decides whether life can be saved or, as at present, mariners have to take their chance.

The other improvements suggested by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are in the direction of preventing boats going ashore. This deals with the case where a boat unhappily has gone ashore and life has to be rescued. If there is a station at Bamfield within ten or fifteen miles of any point, with a rocket apparatus they could easily throw a line aboard. There would not have been a soul lost off the Valencia if that apparatus had been available at that time, because a line could have been easily thrown aboard. That is why I urge on the government, perhaps this is in connection with the Public Works Department also, to cut this trail out. It is the trail along which the telegraph line runs. It is almost of no use at present because in a storm where you would have wrecks the trees also come down, putting the telegraph out of business.

It may be said that I am taking an ungracious attitude, that half a loaf is better than no bread. That is a proverb and proverbs contain some measure of truth. There is another proverb that the strength of a chain is only equal to its weakest link. Here we have a series of life saving appliances, and if you leave out one item in this series of appliances you are not only going to cut off help from that method of approach but you are endangering the whole business. Occasions will arise when, if one item in this series is lacking, the whole thing will be null and void. It is for that reason that I urge the recommendations upon the government. I am quite conscious of the liberality the government have shown in their promises up to date. If the provisions I ask for are made, sea-faring men from Alaska to San Francisco will give them credit for it.

I only want to go a little further in regard to these measures for life saving and ask for these two things: That the standard of inspection of these boats be altered so that boats of 50 tons be inspected and that these trails be kept up. That is all I have to say on the subject. I hope my appeal has not fallen on deaf ears. While, in a sense, it is my business as the representative of a district in which that particular spot is located to bring this matter to the attention of the House it is no more my business than it is that of any other hon. member. The farmers from the prairies may think they have nothing to do with this subject, but they are as much and as vitally concerned in it as we are on the coast. The men who represent cities like Toronto are also as much interested in it. I need not say that our hon. friends from the Maritime provinces are equally concerned. It is a matter of concern to all of us. It is not a subject of individual interest. There is nothing in it for me politically if these reforms are carried out. The men who sail along that coast, and their wives and families, are not constituents of mine, and this question is of just as much concern to other hon. members as it is to me. It is a matter of national importance and if properly carried out will prove a matter of national credit. But if there is any failure to carry out these reforms to their full extent then I am sure it will be a matter of national reproach in which we shall all have to share.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is unavoidably absent to-night and I would therefore suggest that this item stand. All of us will then have an opportunity of reading what my hon. friend has said before the item is taken up again.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals—Canada Highways Commission: To provide for the organization and payment of staff of the Canada Highways Commission, including A. W. Campbell, C.E., Chief Commissioner of Highways, at $5,000 per annum, and W. R. Symthe, Commissioner of Highways, at $4,000 per annum, $70,000.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): When this item was up before it was threshed out pretty well, but the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) and the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) asked for certain information. I have statements here which give that information pretty fully.

Mr. BOYS: I remember asking the minister for some information and he was kind enough to let me have it in the form of a document. I would like, if possible, to get some of that information upon Hansard. One of the questions I asked was, as to the various kinds of road construction which were in use in the province of Ontario.

Mr. GRAHAM: You have the information now. I gave you the only copy I had. Put it on Hansard.

Mr. BOYS: I thought it was for my personal use.

Mr. GRAHAM: Put it on Hansard. I do not happen to have another copy.

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps the minister did not understand me. Earlier in the day I wrote a note asking if I could retain this statement for my personal use. I thought I could do so but I will be pleased to send it over to the minister. I did not understand it was the only copy he had.

Mr. GRAHAM: You can put it on Hansard and then retain it.

Mr. BOYS: Personally I would be very pleased indeed to do anything I could to save the minister the trouble of reading it. If the committee would consent to its being placed upon Hansard that would give us the information. The statement the minister gave me consists of three pages.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have no objection to that being done if the committee will consent. I may say, Mr. Chairman, this is some information asked for at the last sitting when this subject was under consideration. The Commissioner of Highways has prepared it and it is rather voluminous. I think it would save time if the committee would consent to allow it to go on Hansard.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the minister the unanimous consent of the committee to place on Hansard the statement admitted?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BOYS: Another thing I would like to know is the cost of the various highways in the province of Ontario by counties, the statement being brought down to date. That information was given some time ago but it would be of greater value if it were brought down to date.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have statements here which constitute a veritable library on the subject. I think they will be found to contain all that information. The committee will have to remain pretty late if I commence to read it. Therefore, if it will not be regarded as an imposition I would ask to have these statements also put on Hansard.

Mr. BOYS: Do these statements give the cost of highways by counties up to date?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Each road?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it contains almost everything imaginable, including even the cost by townships.

Mr. BOYS: That will be better still.

The CHAIRMAN: Has the minister the unanimous consent to place on Hansard this information also?

Some Hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The statements referred to by the Minister are as follows:

CANADA HIGHWAYS COMMISSION

TYPES OF ROAD

May 22, 1923.

There are six general types of road being constructed under federal aid judged from a "surface" standpoint.

1st. CEMENT CONCRETE PAVEMENT.—Consists of a slab of Portland cement concrete from 6 inches to 8½ inches thick and having a crown of about 1 inch in ten feet. Transverse expansion joints one-half inch wide are placed every 50 feet. The only base necessary for this type of pavement is a wall consolidated subgrade. Average cost per mile for this pavement 20 feet wide is $35,300.

2nd. BITUMINOUS CONCRETE PAVEMENT.—Consists of an intimate mixture of crushed stone, sand and bitumen laid 2 to 3 inches thick on a prepared base of cement concrete, waterbound macadam or well consolidated gravel. The aggregate is mixed at a high temperature in a special mixer and distributed and rolled while hot. Average costs per mile for this pavement 20 feet wide and 3 inches thick are as follows:—

On 5-inch waterbound macadam base	$33,400
On 7-inch waterbound macadam base	38,300
On 4-inch cement concrete base	43,500
On 6-inch cement concrete base	52,900

TYPES OF ROAD—Concluded

3rd. BITUMINOUS MACADAM PENETRATION.—Consists of crushed stone spread on the road to a depth of 3 or 4 inches, lightly rolled then sprayed with hot bituminous binder, which flows into and penetrates the layer of stone. The whole surface is then sprinkled with small stone and consolidated by rolling, so that the binder fills the interstices between the stones. This pavement is usually laid on a waterbound macadam base. Average costs for 20 feet wide and 4 inches thick are as follows:—

On 5-inch waterbound macadam base	$22,000
On 7-inch waterbound macadam base	26,900
On 8-inch waterbound macadam base	28,200

4th. WATERBOUND MACADAM.—Consists of crushed stone spread on the roadway, filled with crusher screenings and consolidated by watering and rolling. It is usually laid in two courses (except when used as a base for hard top) and varies in total depth from 7 inches to 10 inches according to traffic requirements and condition of subgrade. This type of roadway is frequently finished with a top dressing of road oil and sand or oil and limestone chips, which preserves the surface, prevents ravelling and keeps down dust Average costs per mile are as follows,—

20 ft. x 7″	$14,800
20 ft. x 8″	16,100
20 ft. x 9″	17,400

Oil treatment costs from $800 to $1,300 per mile in addition.

5th. GRAVEL ROADWAY.—Consists of a layer of gravel spread over the roadbed and consolidated by traffic or by rolling. It varies in thickness from 6 to 18 inches, depending on the character of the subgrade and the density of traffic. If the required thickness of gravel is greater than 6 inches it is usually laid in layers of 3 or 4 inches, each layer being consolidated before the next is applied.

The average cost of laying a gravel surface 20 ft. wide and 8 inches thick, based on a 2½ mile haul, is $4,700 per mile.

6th. IMPROVED EARTH.—This type of highway is formed by digging side ditches, throwing the material (such as it is) excavated therefrom onto the travelled way and grading it to a proper crown to shed water. Properly speaking the operation is one of grading and not of surfacing and usually provides a road which is good only in dry weather. If the material excavated from the side ditches happens to be gravel the road is a gravel road.

The cost varies with the size of ditch necessary to provide drainage and the range is from $1,000 to $4,000 per mile.

The above descriptions and costs apply only to the surfacing of roads. The construction of a highway involves other important and often costly operations, which may be described briefly as follows:—

1st. CLEARING.—In constructing a new road through wooded country the first operation is that of cutting down and disposing of the trees and underbrush to the limits of the right of way and grubbing out roots where shallow cuts and fills are to be made.

Clearing costs from $200 to $4,000 per mile, depending on the size and density of the timber.

2nd. GRADING.—This operation consists of forming the roadbed, which is to carry the finished surface. It involves the excavation of cuts and the filling of embankments, the protection of earth work from the action of rivers or lakes, the underdraining of wet places and the digging of ditches. The cost varies with the nature of the country, the nature of the material encountered, the allowable grade and the width of the roadbed to be constructed. The range is from $500 to $30,000 per mile.

3rd. BRIDGES.—This item covers the construction of all structures over 20 feet in clear span. The cost of such bridges may be anything from $500 to $500,000. Federal aid does not apply to such costs.

4th. CULVERTS.—The construction of all structures having a clear span of 20 feet or less, also pipes to carry streams across the roadway and under side entrance roads. Costs vary with the nature of the country, the number and size of streams and the type of culvert adopted. The range is from $500 to $10,000 per mile.

5th. FENCING.—Enclosing the right of way where necessary by fencing costs from $500 to $1,500 per mile.

6th. TREE PLANTING.—The growing shade of trees along the edge of the right of way protects the surface of the road from the extreme heat of the sun's rays in summer. This costs about $250 per mile.

7th. MISCELLANEOUS.—The erection of crossing, danger and direction signs, guard rails, snow fences, etc Such items cost from nothing to $200 per mile.

COST PER MILE

The average cost per mile of the Ottawa-Prescott Highway to date is $24,196.

The most expensive bit of highway in the Province of Ontario, of which we have a record is between Hamilton and Binkleys Corners, a distance of 9,100 feet, paved 30 feet wide, with warrenite bitulithic concrete. This work cost $129,907.70.

HAMILTON-BRANTFORD HIGHWAY—PROJECT NO. 9, ONTARIO—

Length—
Sections—No. 1, Township of Ancaster	11·4 miles
2, Township of Brantford	7·78 "
Total length	19·18 "

CHARACTER OF CONSTRUCTION IN FIRST PROJECT STATEMENT—

Waterbound macadam, base throughout, cement concrete pavement for distance of 2·8 miles east from Brantford. and bithulithic pavement westerly from Hamilton, 1·7 mile.

COST OF WORK UNDER AGREEMENT APPROVED BY ENGINEER, $768,000.00, OR $40,041.71 PER MILE.
FEDERAL AID TO END OF 1921, $238,492.00, BALANCE DUE, $68,708.

DESCRIPTION OF THE WORK DONE UNDER AGREEMENT—

This project is built to the standard widths of 30-foot grade and 20-foot pavement, except the portion of the road westerly from Hamilton 1·7 mile, being the junction to the Hamilton-Kitchener road where the pavement was constructed at a width of thirty feet, and except 2·8 miles east from Brantford where the pavement was constructed to a width of 30 feet. However, in this case, all work over and above the standard 20-foot width was paid for jointly by the City of Brantford and the County of Brant.

SUPPLEMENTARY SURFACING PROJECT (Not under agreement)—

CHARACTER OF SURFACINGS—

Asphaltic concrete on macadam base, easterly part, 9·7 miles, and cement concrete pavement, westerly part, 4·98 miles.

The whole of the road is now completed, the surfacing being asphaltic concrete on macadam base from Hamilton westerly to the boundary between Ancaster and Brantford Townships, 11·4 miles; cement concrete from Ancaster-Brantford Township boundary to the City of Brantford, 7·78 miles.

The estimate of the cost not under agreement as given by the Provinces in its supplementary application for agreement is $723,701.41; this added to the cost of the work under agreement gives a total of $1,382,608.46, or $72,085.94 per mile.

Owing to the fact that this pavement must sustain a traffic equivalent to that found on the principal streets of a modern city, as it is located between two leading industrial cities, it was thought advisable to build the highway in the most substantial manner. The highway is located in undulating territory and, in order to reduce its grades to five per cent, it was necessary to do a great deal of heavy grading, especially over what is known as the Ancaster Mountain. This work is necessarily costly. Then a subway was required under the Toronto-Hamilton-Brantford railway at Station 91 to Station 105.

MEMORANDUM RE:—

HAMILTON TO QUEENSTON ROAD

Length—36·33 miles.

CHARACTER OF CONSTRUCTION IN APPROVED PROJECT STATEMENT:—

Width of grade—30′ throughout.
Cement concrete pavement 20′ wide, 8½″ thick in centre and 6″ at side, from Hamilton easterly 4·13 miles.
Bituminous macadam—20′ wide, 10″ thick 2 miles, Clinton Township.
Waterbound macadam on balance of road.

COST OF WORK UNDER AGREEMENT APPROVED BY ENGINEER:—

$940,516.41=$25,888.15 per mile.

FEDERAL AID EARNED:—

$376,206.56, being 40% of approved cost.

FEDERAL AID PAID: (On account)

$271,298.56,

CHARACTER OF SURFACING LAID UNDER SUPPLEMENTARY PROJECT FOR WHICH THERE IS NO AGREEMENT UNDER THE CANADA HIGHWAYS ACT:—

Bituminous macadam Township of Niagara	3 miles
Bituminous macadam Township of Grantham	2·5 "
Bituminous macadam Township of Louth	5·4 "
Bituminous macadam Township of Clinton	4·1 "
Bituminous macadam Township of North Grimsby	4·3 "

Cement concrete Township of Grantham (between City of St. Catharines and new Welland Canal)	1·25 "
Oiled macadam Township of Niagara	2·8 miles

COST OF ADDITIONAL SURFACING UNDER SUPPLEMENTARY PROJECT STATEMENT—(NOT UNDER AGREEMENT)

$909,535.22

COMBINED COST OF WORK UNDER ORIGINAL AND SUPPLEMENTARY PROJECTS:—

$1,850,051.63, or an average cost of $50,923.75 per mile.

NOTE.—Extract from Engineer's Report to December 31, 1922 on Saskatchewan.

"The actual average cost of the 615 miles of grading completed and the 160 miles which is 80% completed is $2,300 per mile.

The average cost of the 18 miles of one coat gravel surfacing is $1,800 per mile, making a total of $4,100 per mile for a one coat gravel surface.

The average cost of the 39 miles of clay surfacing is $3,100 per mile, making the average cost of a clay surfaced road $5,400.50 per mile."

Mr. CALDWELL: What is the purport of the immense document? Cannot you give us a brief explanation of it?

Mr. GRAHAM: These documents really give the cost of highways by counties, in some instances by townships, in order to afford a comparison of what highways cost throughout the whole province of Ontario.

Mr. BOYS: One other thing. I remember the minister on a previous occasion informed the committee that the cost of planting trees, the cost of acquiring right of way, and I think he said the cost of fencing, do not form any part of the outlay to which his department contributes. I would like to ask him now if his department contributes to anything except the actual road construction?

Mr. GRAHAM: Nothing except the actual road construction. Anything that is on the road bed, I believe, is part of the road bed construction.

Item agreed to.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada—maintenance and operation of, $228,969.

Mr. BAXTER: What I was going to ask I fear has not very much relation to this item. When the railway estimates were up before I asked the minister a question about what we might expect with regard to the place which used to be occupied by the train shed at St. John. Can the minister hold out any hope of the speedy restoration of the train shed or the construction of the union station?

Mr. GRAHAM: I had intended getting some information about that for my railway estimates proper. I have no information concerning that at hand. This merely covers the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. BAXTER: The minister will get it later?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: A year ago when this estimate was before the House I brought to the attention of the minister the statement which was reported to have been made by the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) regarding the Chairman of the Railway Commission. At that time the Minister of Agriculture said that he would read a statement in regard to this matter, but, acting, I have no doubt, on the suggestion of his superior officer, the Prime Minister when the House had re-assembled after dinner he declined to read the statement, and took refuge under the ruling given by the Chairman, I think, that matters that were being discussed before a standing committee should not be discussed in the House till after the committee had reported. That committee has reported, and I think the country would be very glad if the minister would now read that statement to the House. I think we are quite justified in asking the minister to make the statement now, because we had the statement of the Prime Minister himself that the matter of removing Mr. Carvell from the Board of Railway Commissioners, was under consideration by the government. On the 24th June, the right hon. leader of the Opposition, (Mr. Meighen) said:

On the 10th day of June, attention being called by the member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) to certain commitments of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) as regards the removal of the Chairman of the Railway Commission, the Prime Minister stated, as reported on page 2872 of Unrevised Hansard, that the Minister of Agriculture had made certain representations to the government as regards such removal; that the same had been considered, but that no definite conclusion had been reached. May I ask if a definite decision has been reached, and if so, what is it?

Mr. Mackenzie King: No conclusion has been reached The mattter is still being considered.

I see that the Minister of Agriculture has left the House but I should like to know whether that matter is still under consideration and, if so, what decision has been arrived at. It seems to me the people of this country are entitled to an answer.

9 p.m.

Mr. GRAHAM: The act which provided for the appointment of the Board of Railway Commissioners also provided that the chairman could not be removed except by parliament. This government has not the power to remove the chairman if it wished. As far as I am concerned it does not wish. If my hon. friend wishes to move in any direction concerning the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, it is his duty to do so, as much as it is the duty of any other member of this House, and it cannot be done except by parliament. The Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners is in the same position as the Auditor General.

Mr. COOTE: I think the minister is evading the question. If he wants to evade it, he should say so. The Prime Minister stated quite frankly to the House that the matter was under consideration by the cabinet, and I think before this item passes we should have some definite answer from the government. The Minister of Agriculture certainly has pledged himself very strongly, and the Prime Minister certainly stated that the matter was being considered by the cabinet. Surely we are entitled to an answer as to what decision the cabinet has arrived at in this matter, if they have arrived at any. If not, the minister should state frankly that they have not arrived at a decision.

Mr. MARTELL: The minister stated that he was perfectly satisfied with the Chairman of the Railway Commission and that he could only be removed by parliament, and if the hon. member for Macleod wants to have him removed, let him make a motion to that effect, and he will find how far he will get.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to remind the member that the Minister of Agriculture, whom he greatly admires, pledged himself publicly that if he were elected one of the first things he would do would be to put a resolution on the order paper to have the Chairman of the Railway Commission removed, and the Prime Minister came to the support of the Minister of Agriculture last year and said that the minister had made representations to the government and the government were considering them. When he was questioned by the hon. leader of the Opposition he said the matter was still under consideration. That is the last statement the government has made in this House about the matter, and I think I am not asking anything unreasonable when I ask, what is the decision of the government in this matter?

Mr. MARTELL: Let me ask the hon. member whether or not he thinks the Minister of Agriculture, when he made that pledge, did not take too much upon himself? A pledge made in an election is not a pledge for the government. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says he is satisfied with the Chairman of the Railway Commission, and most of us on this side are satisfied. If my hon. friend wants to remove him, let him make a motion in that regard.

Mr. COOTE: I did not hear distinctly the hon. member's question; but I would like to ask the member, is political honour absolutely extinct in his party?

Mr. MARTELL: According to whom it comes from—like the hon. members opposite.

Mr. COOTE: I think the people of this country expect something better from the hon. member for Hants than the statement he has just made. I also desire to point out that the Minister of Agriculture, when he made this statement, had the idea in the back of his head no doubt that if the party which he supported were returned to power he would be made Minister of Agriculture. There was no reservation when he made that statement, and I think if the minister has any sense of political honour he should stand by the declaration he made. But I want to come back to this question, and I ask the minister once more, if he will be good enough to tell us, if he knows, whether the government has come to any final decision in regard to this matter or not.

Mr. GRAHAM: As far as the government is concerned I happen for the time being to be at the head of that department and I may say the government has come to no decision to ask or to suggest the retirement of the chairman of that commission.

Mr. MARTELL: Satisfied with him?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am.

Mr. COOTE: Might I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if he has perused carefully the letter which was received by the Prime Minister from the Vancouver Board of Trade in connection with this matter and given it the consideration which a letter coming from that important body should deserve?

Mr. GRAHAM: I must plead guilty to not having perused the correspondence of the Prime Minister. Now, my hon. friend should not evade the responsibility that is his in this matter. If he wants to move that the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners be removed, if he is of the opinion that this should be done, then do not let him ask anyone else to assume any responsibility in the matter. It is the duty of parliament and not of the government to take action; and as an hon. member of this House he can move that such action be taken. He has a right to move that the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners be removed.

Mr. COOTE: I can see that the government is anxious to shift the responsibility on to other shoulders. One of its own ministers made a certain statement in public and he has not yet gone back on it. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman cannot answer more definitely for his government.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know how much more definite you would like me to be.

Mr. COOTE: I am glad it is still under consideration, at any rate.

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister did not say so.

Mr. COOTE: No, the minister did not say so; nor did he say that it was not under consideration.

Mr. MARTELL: It has been put up to you.

Mr. COOTE: I have no doubt the Minister of Agriculture would be glad to pass the buck to someone else, but he is the responsible person. Have we responsible government in this country? Does a man renounce his election pledges in as few months as that, and still claim to have political honour? It is time that we had some plain speaking in this country with regard to the Railway Commission. The Minister of Agriculture made that statement in Regina, and it appealed very much to his hearers not only in that city but also in western Canada. I do not know how many people in eastern Canada it appealed to; but I was told by a prominent resident of the Maritime provinces a year ago, when talking about this particular question, that the present Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners should be hanged from a gallows as high as Haman's.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is plagiarism.

Mr. COOTE: He may have put it a little strong, but at any rate that is what he said. Now, I want to point out very briefly one or two reasons why the government should give very careful consideration to the representatations made to them by the Minister of Agriculture. The Hon. Mr. Langley, when he appeared before the special Railway Transportation Cost committee a year ago, made this statement:

> The impression is abroad among our farmers that the Board of Railway Commissioners has ceased to be a board of railway commissioners and has become a board of railway company commissioners.

That is a very serious statement, but I do not think it is at all too strong. I want to bring to the attention of the committee a few of the reasons why the people of western Canada feel just as Mr. Langley stated. On August 10, 1920, the Railway Commission commenced a hearing in Ottawa of an application of the railways for an increase in freight rates. That hearing was completed on August 21, and on September 9 there was put into effect the largest increase in rates that has ever been made in Canada,—an increase in the west of 35 per cent and in the east of 40 per cent. Now that was very quick work. There was no dissenting voice on the board, and certainly there was no delay. The increase was timed to catch the 1920 grain crop, and I believe that from my own station there were only seven carloads of grain shipped at the old rate. In my own particular town that increase took, I believe, out of the shippers of that one place a toll to the amount of $35,000. I would ask the government to compare the speedy methods adopted in connection with this increase with the methods in regard to the decrease which was supposed to follow when circumstances would warrant. The officials of the United Farmers of Alberta went to the commission at Calgary on April 18, 1921, and asked permission to place before them their case for a reduction of rates, and at Regina on April 22, the Hon. George Langley and others appeared before the commission as representing the farmers of Saskatchewan. Representatives were also heard at Brandon, and, I think, at Winnipeg. During the summer of 1921 the United States railways cut the wages of their employees 12½ per cent; and the Railway Commission of Canada of their own accord held an investigation to decide whether they could not now reduce these rates again. This investigation was carried on, I think, for a month and a half; but although the wages were reduced as I have said, some time previously,—in July, I think,—it was not until September 13 that Mr. Carvell issued a statement to the effect that all freight rates other than those on which reductions had already been made, should be decreased by 10 per cent from the increases given in 1920. This judgment was concurred in by Commissioner Nantel. Three of the commissioners dissented from the judgment because of the fact that the men had applied for a board of conciliation. I will not detain the House by reading anything in reference to this matter, but the fact remains that because these men had applied for a board three commissioners would not agree to the recommendation for a decrease in the rates which had been brought down by the Hon. Mr. Carvell on September 13. An agreement was arrived at between the Canadian Pacific Railway and their employees on October 8, by which the employees accepted a reduction. But these other gentlemen of the Railway Commission were so busy that they could not come to a decision in the matter at that time, and the reduction of this 10 per cent in the rates was not granted until November 23. Now, it does seem to the farmers of western Canada that the Railway Commission does not show any great desire to deal as quickly with an application for the lowering of rates as it does with any application for an increase. By November 23 the bulk of the grain had probably left the farmers' hands and the railways had got the increased rate.

One other thing I want to refer to, to show why the people of western Canada have lost all faith in the Board of Railway Commissioners as a fair judicial body. I might quote briefly from a report that appeared in the Calgary Herald of an address of the Hon. Mr

Carvell before the Canadian Club. Referring to the increase which had been granted in the railway rates Mr. Carvell is reported as follows:

Mr. Carvell said that the railways had made representations to the Board of Railway Commissioners asking for an increase in rates and he said that it meant that $22,000,000 was required to pay the retroactive wages. The railways were hard put to it to pay this big increase. Three presidents of the railway companies came before the board and stated that if the money was not forthcoming there would be serious consequences and they were asked what they meant, and their reply was, it would mean a general strike of railway workers in Canada if the award was not agreed to.

In the same address Mr. Carvell stated that the demands in many cases were unreasonable. But he gives this threat of a strike as sufficient justification for raising the railway rates. He also stated that the farmer could sell his product in any market while the railway company could do business only on its rails and could not charge one cent more than the board allowed. If the Canadian Pacific Railway could not earn dividends no one would buy its shares, and as far as the McAdoo award was concerned, in four years this would have eaten up all the reserves of the company. He went on to dwell on the fact that the Canadian Pacific railway must have sufficient rates to earn their usual dividends.

At a hearing in Calgary on the following day, Mr. J. E. Brownlee, appearing for the United Farmers of Alberta, stated the farmers' case. He said that the farmers were forced to pay war prices for their needs but received only pre-war prices for their products, and this being the case they would probably cut down production to a considerable extent, and in that event any curtailment of transportation facilities would eventually work a hardship on the railway companies. Chief Commissioner Carvell scoffed at Mr. Brownlee's prediction. He is reported as having said:

Do not worry about the future, he said. I do not believe the farmers' organizations in the West are such half-dead, half-alive affairs as you hint. I do not believe there will be any lessening in production. Have a little more faith.

I should like the members of the government to compare the attitude exhibited by the Chairman of the Commission towards what we call "capital" and his attitude towards the common people, the producers of the country. He says that capital must have its 7 per cent or we cannot get it to build railways. And he holds out the threat of a strike on the part of the employees as justification for an increase in rates. Then when the farmers threaten to curtail production, which is simply their method of striking, he says: "Have a little more faith; do not worry about the future".

Now, we have had a great deal of discussion in this House this session about emigration from this country, and we have been considering the problem of securing immigrants to take the places of those who leave. Well, I want to point out that just so long as we have men occupying high offices in this country—and I think that the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners holds one of the most important posts in the gift of the government—so long, I say, as there are in these high and important positions men who place more value on the dollar than they do on human life, we shall have before us an exceedingly difficult problem to keep people in this country to produce the material for the railways to haul; and it certainly is high time that there was a showdown as to who are to be given the primary consideration in Canada,—the people of the country or the people who are designated in the term "capital". I have no objection to the Canadian Pacific Railway getting dividends, but I do object that the Board of Railway Commissioners should act in a manner so manifestly unfair to one section of this country as the present board is doing. I want to quote from the words of the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners himself in a judgment given by him on September 15, 1920:

Allowing for the undoubted fact that a very large proportion of the traffic moved east and west is on a commodity basis, I am still forced to the conclusion that the rates in western Canada average considerably greater than in the East, possibly around 15 per cent to 18 per cent.

In the face of this remark from the chairman himself, I do not see why the people of western Canada cannot be granted an equalization of rates with the East. I think that the present chairman of the commission, in his refusal to grant such equalization, or at least to grant some redress to the people of the West is condemned by the words from his own mouth. I contend that there is nothing in the Railway Act by which it is intended that the Board of Railway Commissioners should maintain in western Canada rates 15 to 18 per cent higher than those that obtain in eastern Canada. If the Railway Commission want to maintain rates so that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company can continue to pay dividends in the future as they have in the past, their duty is to raise the rates in eastern Canada or lower them in western Canada until both eastern and western rates are on a parity. The people of the West are going to be satisfied with nothing less. The present Chairman of the Railway Commission may be very efficient but unless he can show better judgment in the future than he has done in the past, he cannot convince even honest people in eastern Canada of the fairness of the present condition of affairs.

Before I sit down I want to ask the minister one other question: Does the government think it is fair, although the major part of the Canadian Pacific Railway dividends are earned in western Canada, and rates are from 15 to 18 per cent higher there than in the East, that on a board composed of six commissioners there should not be one representative of western Canada? I hope that when the government give due consideration to the representations of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and possibly decide that the prseent chairman should be removed, they will give to western Canada one representative. I ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) will he be willing to go that far?

Mr. GRAHAM: As I understand, Dr. Rutherford was appointed as a western man to succeed a western man, and he is still a member of the Railway Board. I am not going to discuss the question of rates, it is too intricate, and, besides, I had something to do with perfecting the act under which the Board of Railway Commissioners was created. While this board may have made some mistakes at times—and I suppose even our judges are not entirely free from error—yet on the whole the work of the board has been excellent. Now, my hon. friend has mentioned the difference between eastern and western rates. I do not wish to make any comparisons in that way. It is the duty of the Board of Railway Commissioners to administer the Railway Act for the benefit of the whole Dominion, and I believe they are discharging this duty in a very able manner. Complaints regarding railway rates are not confined to the West; the people in the East complain that the rates from the Maritime provinces are very high and burdensome, and only to-day a question was brought up in the House as to a suggestion, I think, by some member of the government in New Brunswick, that the rates should be substantially reduced, and that unless something was done along this line the situation would be very serious indeed. The freight rate question is one of the disagreeable results of the war. No person can ever expect railway operation to be as cheap as it was before the war. There is a new condition, and rightly so, among the working men of the Dominion, and, indeed, among the working men of the world; consequently, the wages of railway men will never revert to what they were before the war, and I do not think we want them to. The process of getting back to as near normal as possible will be comparatively slow. My hon. friend has said something about capital. Does he realize that he himself is one of the capitalists? The people of Canada own the biggest railway system in the world, every dollar of deficit on which has to be met out of the pockets of the taxpayers. The subject should always be approached with that in view. I appreciate the situation as to the freight rates, and I have sympathy not for the West any more than for the East, because all Canada is paying a very high freight rate and a very high passenger rate. But it will take some time for these rates to get down to normal. The only way we can get them to normal is to get a greater volume of traffic, and the only way to get a greater volume of traffic is to have more people to produce. It ought to be the object of us all to make Canada so far as population is concerned a bigger country, and to induce men to come here—notwithstanding all that has been said—to make for themselves and their families a future. I believe that in the proper solution of that one problem of immigration lies the remedy for most of our difficulties. As I say, I have great sympathy for my hon. friend and for both East and West in this matter. I am strongly in favour of reducing the rates as rapidly as possible so that the people who produce on the land and elsewhere will have a chance to get a greater return for their labours.

Mr. COOTE: The minister says that Dr. Rutherford has been a representative of western Canada. I think it would have been more proper to say that Dr. Rutherford is a representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not of western Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: If my hon. friend thinks that, he ought to move to have him put off.

Mr. COOTE: At the time of his appointment he was in the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was glad to hear the judicial tone of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) with reference both to our railway problem and to our Railway Commission. I could not help but contrast it with the language of his partisans only a few months ago as they rushed behind the flaming threats of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr.

Motherwell). The Railway Commission was the creation of the Laurier government; I have always given them credit for that piece of work. But in order to excite prejudice against the late administration the high railway rates were by his followers ascribed to the government of the day, and the Railway Commission were held up to scorn and ridicule and vituperation in order that votes might be made against that government. In the flurry of that campaign the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Agriculture, also in order to get votes, not only declared but bound himself to move in this House if elected for the removal of the Chairman of the Railway Commission. He understood as everyone did that the deposition of an existing railway commissioner by order in council was not within the power of a government but could only be effected by an address in parliament, in the same way that the position of a judge could be vacated. His words showed that he understood these things; he made the pledge fully understanding the effect of it and knowing the law. He was taken into this government by the Prime Minister knowing that he had made this pledge to his electors. When the matter was brought to the attention of the Prime Minister who so took him into his government and he was asked what his intention was with respect to the pledge made by the Minister of Agriculture, he stated to this House that the minister had presented his position to the government in relation to Mr. Carvell and that the government had it under consideration. These are the words of the Prime Minister of Canada: the government was considering the representations of its own Minister of Agriculture affecting the position of the Chairman of the Railway Board of this country. Several weeks afterwards, toward the end of the session, when the matter was again brought to his attention and he was asked what the result of the consideration by the government had been, he answered that no decision had yet been given as to the disposition of Mr. Carvell; the government had it "under consideration" still.

Now, these words mean just what they say; the government were reviewing Mr. Carvell's position to decide what would be the government's policy about it. No one assumed the government could remove him. We all knew they could not. The Prime Minister knew it; the Minister of Agriculture knew it and had always known it. But the government can have a policy as to something it cannot do by order in council; it can have a policy as to what it recommends parliament to do, and the Prime Minister told this House that the government was considering what its policy was to be.

Now, I just pause to call the attention of the House to the position in which the head of the Liberal government put the Railway Board, put the Chairman of the Railway Board. Knowing that the board and its chairman were exercising judicial functions, were in a judicial position, they proclaimed to the Dominion that through the whole session of parliament they held a sword over the head of the chairman of this judicial commission and that they were considering the question of bringing to parliament a resolution asking parliament to remove him. I am not pleading the cause of Mr. Carvell particularly; I do not suppose that any two contestants in parliament ever clashed more violently than Mr. Carvell when he was a member, and myself. But Mr. Carvell when he accepted the position of Chairman of the Railway Board was entitled to be treated with the respect due to that commission. Until the government believed it was in a position to bring in an address to this House, and were justified in doing so, asking for the removal of Mr. Carvell, it had no right in the world to intimate to parliament and to this country that it stood sword in hand, only meditating whether it would bring the sword down or not. I do not know that we ever heard in parliament language more unbecoming the head of a government than the words of the Prime Minister with respect to Mr. Carvell.

I agree with a great deal that the Minister of Railways says with regard to the Railway Commission. I know the Railway Commission was done a gross injustice. I know the people of western Canada were led to believe that this commission was prejudiced against the people and allied with the railways,—but I know they were led to believe it by hon. gentlemen opposite and their followers and for political purposes. I do not say, nor does the minister, that the commission made no mistakes, but I do believe the commission were animated by one desire and one only, that of doing even-handed justice to all interests in this country. I have confidence, not only in Mr. Carvell, that that is and was his desire, but I have the utmost confidence in the gentleman referred to by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) in this debate. I do not believe that any interest or any previous association could ever deflect the rectitude of Mr. J. G. Rutherford. No better appointment to the Railway Commission was ever made: and because Mr. Rutherford sat in and considered every judgment, considered all these matters affecting rates, and gave his decision thereon—because of that the judgment has added weight in my mind. I know that he came from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Other men have been there who came from other occupations, but once they divest themselves of their previous occupations and associations they become judges and sworn to do right as between all parties in this Dominion. I know of no man who is more likely at every moment of his life to have regard to his public obligations than Mr. Rutherford. And what I say of him I have no reason to deny of any member of that board, though the others I do not pretend to know so well.

It may not be popular to stand for a board which has felt it its duty to raise rates and has been unable to bring rates down to the point they formerly were. Perhaps it would be more of a vote catching scheme —I do not for a minute ascribe this intention to others—it might mean more votes to attack the commission, but if the habit of attacking the commission for their acts day by day is to grow in this House, then the usefulness of that commission is gone. I know the minister agrees. I absolve him from the slightest participation in the campaign that was carried on. I know he had no part in it. I do not believe he had the least sympathy with it, but there are other hon. gentlemen who had part in it, and those who helped to elect this government had a very great part in it, and they have done more to destroy the usefulness of that commission than had been done in the previous eighteen years of its existence.

It is true we have high rates. We have rates out of all proportion to the value of farm products. Of that there is no question at all, and how it is to be cured is a very difficult problem indeed. But while we admit that such is the case it is still more the case right across the border to the south. Right across the border the rates were higher before the war, higher during the war, and they are higher to-day on farm products, and very substantially higher. They are much higher in proportion to the value of farm products than are their farm products higher than ours. Of those facts there can be no dispute. That, of course, does not remove the truth that farming cannot pay as it did, farming cannot be made even a substantial success, until the carriage of goods gets to be on a basis of price closer in accord with the value of the goods themselves. It is very easy to believe that that can be done merely by a stroke of the pen upon the part of those in authority. I venture to say this, that if the stroke of the pen had come, as my hon. friend from Macleod thinks it should have come at the time he complains of, the loss to this country in what would have been precipitated by it would have been far greater, I almost said unspeakably greater than the loss we have had to bear. There are times, there are circumstances when you can effect things, and times when you cannot. I am not here to discuss just how we are going to bring about a lowering of railway rates to the level of the products the railways carry. I am inclined to the view that considerable time is going to elapse before that better time will come, but in the meantime do not let us destroy the good work of years, do not let us bring down the standing of a judicial tribunal until it becomes a mere football between the parties in the House of Commons; do not let us have members of parliament running on platforms to remove this man and that man from the Bench or any judicial position. If they do, let us have a government and a prime minister who will not take them into cabinets thereby placing the seal of the government and of the prime minister upon the commitments of the candidate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not want to get into a discussion on the immigration question because once that starts we do not know when it will end, but before this item passes I should like to say that before we start growing more grain we must have a reduction in the rates on grain or an increase in the price. Those of us who are farming in the West to-day know that it is an absurdity to think of growing more grain unless there is an improvement in conditions in some way or other. I do not like to discuss this rate problem from a western standpoint or an eastern standpoint, but from the Canadian standpoint. I have as much sympathy with the people of the Maritime provinces in their desire for a reduction of rates as I have with my own people in the West. I know conditions in that part of the country, and I know the people there have suffered a great deal. I am told on very good authority that last season no less than a million bushels of potatoes were spoiled in Prince Edward Island largely because there was not a sufficiently low rate to ship them out.

I think when we are discussing the responsibilities of the Railway Commission one of the troubles at least is that the commission has no control over a reduction of rates. I was reading a few days ago a pamphlet published, I think, by Mr. S. J. McLean, one of the Railway Commissioners, in which he stated he was surprised in looking over a number of tariffs to find that at least fifty per cent were apparently reductions in rates. That seems to tell us a good deal. We are demanding reductions on certain basic commodities—lumber, potatoes, grain, cattle and various other things—and yet all the time there are voluntary reductions taking place over which the commission has no control. That I say tells us a good deal. It seems to me there is a good deal of favouritism, that certain interests are getting special privileges in regard to freight rates, and the commission have no control over that whatever. Let me refer to just one product. Bar iron from Sydney, Nova Scotia, goes clean across the continent to Vancouver for sixty cents a hundred. I think that there is no hon. gentleman in this House who will say that the railway can carry that at a profit. It is patent that it must be carried at a distinct loss. That means that a railway company engaged in carrying that product for less than it costs must a short time afterwards come to the Railway Commission and ask for an increase in rates on something else, and that is precisely what is happening to-day.

I cannot agree with any suggestion of doing away with the Railway Commision or crippling its powers. I would rather be inclined to increase its powers. I think that the Commission should have control over the downward revision of rates. Why should a railway have authority to carry some product for less than it costs for some privileged interest, probably with some of its large shareholders interested in the railway, for that is practically what it is? I have been going over a lot of these figures, and I have found some of them illuminating. I have found some things that cannot possibly be justified.

Let me give another commodity. Rice from Vancouver is handled at seventy-five cents a hundred to Calgary, yet that same rice is carried twenty-four hundred miles from there to Montreal for the same price; that means it is carried twenty-four hundred miles free. Now if the railway company is carrying rice for a distributor in Montreal twenty-four hundred miles for nothing it means that our potatoes, our cattle, our grain, and everything else must pay more in order to make up for that loss. That is really one of the problems we are facing to-day, and action is required along that line.

The Railway Commission has a great deal of responsibility, and I am not one of those who would try to increase their difficulties in any way, but I think some of these things should be looked into very carefully. As far as the East and West are concerned we know that the western rates are higher. The Railway Commission admits they are higher, and justifies the increased rate on account of the water competition in the East. That is one of the things that we hope one day will be wiped out. But I think these other discriminations in giving favoured rates to certain industries is one of the first things we should look into.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—Railways and Canals—salaries, including the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals and Government Director of Canadian National Railways at $10,000, $208,970; contingencies, $38,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: The increase in this department is practically due to the increase in the amount paid to the deputy minister. The deputy minister receives $6,000 in that capacity and $2,000 as a director of the Canadian National Railways. I am asking the House to make his salary $10,000 which will include everything. He will not receive any remuneration as a director after this increase becomes effective.

Mr. GOOD: How does the minister justify the increase of $2,000?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is easily justified. The deputy minister is remaining in the department when he could go to a position at nearly double the salary he now receives. He has been in the public service for a great many years. I have induced him to remain in the department because I have to confess to the committee, and to the country as well, that Major Bell's services in the department under present conditions are absolutely indispensable. We have no other man who has such a knowledge as he has of the intricate operations of the different railways composing the National system, or who is so extremely well qualified to act in the dual capacity of deputy minister of the department and director of the National Railways. Frankly I do not know how I could replace Major Bell.

Item agreed to.

Arbitration and awards and costs of litigation, $2,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is an item which is voted every year. Sometimes we use it and sometimes we do not.

Item agreed to.

To supplement pension allowances payable under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum payment, during the current fiscal year, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 as fixed by the said act, $50,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: If any explanation is required, I would like to say the provision made for the men in the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Provident Fund was $20 per month. It has been raised to $30 per month which requires the government to make a little larger contribution than it did before.

Mr. CALDWELL: What pension is granted to men that are retired from the service?

Mr. GRAHAM: This is a fund created under an Act. To this fund the men contribute themselves and the government has always subscribed a certain amount. In this way provision is made for the retirement of the men; it is a regular pension fund.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I ask the minister if any request has been received for pensions in connection with two Prince Edward Island men who were killed on the Prince Edward Island railway last winter? While snow shovelling these men were caught in a very awkward position in a tunnel and both were killed. They left families who were dependent on them, and I understood some recommendations had been made to the department for the granting of pensions to those dependents. I should like to ask the minister if he knows anything about the matter?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think no such recommendation has been made up to the present time. Any recommendations or suggestions of this kind would go to the Canadian National Railway Board. They may be in the hands of the board at the present time, but have not reached the department so far as I have been able to learn.

Mr. CALDWELL: Such recommendations would have to be dealt with by the department would they not? The directors of the National Railways would not have the power to pension these families would they, the recommendation would have to come to parliament?

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine it would at the present time, but we are endeavouring to get a pensions system that will cover all the railways. The Canadian Northern, for example, has no pension system for its men. As to this particular case I will make inquiries. Does my hon. friend know the names of the men?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: I should like my hon. friend to send them to me.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What progress is being made in the unification of the several systems that comprise the National Railways? To-night I received the railway report and there seems to be still a division of our railways into several systems. What headway is really being made in the direction of the unification of all these systems into one—a unification of classification the according of the same treatment to the employees in the matter of retiring allowances and other matters? There are many other things in respect of which there should be unification. You still see the names of the old companies on the railways. I made the suggestion some time ago that the government send out without delay a corps of painters to paint out the names "Grand Trunk," "Canadian Northern," and "Intercolonial". Let the government get to work and unify these systems, and make them national railways in the real sense of the term. I know that cannot be done in a day and I observe that some progress has been made, but has there been sufficient progress, and when will there be a real unification? For instance in reading the report to which I refer I see that more than one firm of auditors is engaged in the work of checking the accounts. Surely such a condition as that ought to be remedied. It has taken a long while to get the annual statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway into the shape in which it is to-day. However, the company have got it in excellent shape now and I think the government ought to try and follow a model of that kind in presenting the railway statement to the people of Canada who are, as the minister said a few moments ago, the shareholders and the only shareholders in this National system. Let us see if we cannot at the next meeting have one report. In the report to which I have already referred, and which was put into the post office to-night for the use of members, there is still a reference to the Grand Trunk as if it were a separate railway. I repeat my question: Will the minister tell us what progress has been made in the work of unification, in the systematizing of the accounting and bookkeeping—in a word the unification of all the factors that go into the making up of the entire system?

Mr. GRAHAM: The report to which my hon. friend refers is for the year ending December 31, 1922. The Grand Trunk only became part of the National Railway system in October of that year so it is impossible to have a consolidation of the accounting of the different lines for the year 1922. The Grand Trunk was run under a separate board altogether. We hope by next year to report on the accounting of the entire system as one body. I may point out to my hon. friend that for certain reasons we will have to be able to tell always how much, for example, the Grand Trunk proper earned as it previously existed. There are financial reasons for that, and I think the same thing applies to the other systems. They will all have to be able to tell what they did as separate entities although the report itself will deal with the system as one. In its consolidated form I think that report when presented will be satisfactory to my hon. friend.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not know whether I am in error or not but I was under the impression that all the lines under the control of the government amounted, speaking roughly, to about 22,000 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM: The number is 22,600.

Mr. BAXTER: This pamphlet to which the hon. minister referred shows something over 17,000 miles. What is the explanation? Is it that the mileage in the United States is not included? What causes the discrepancy?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think the hon. member will find that the Grand Trunk is not included in that.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Where is the account, so far as the annual statement made to parliament is concerned, in connection with lines in the United States owned by the Grand Trunk? This is rather a significant question for us, very far reaching legislation is probably under way and the question of the ownership of certain lines in that country by the people of Canada may come up.

The CHAIRMAN: This item is for the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): When will the minister answer the question regarding Grand Trunk lines in the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM: The account of the Grand Trunk lines in the United States is all in the Grand Trunk report. It will come up next year. I gave the figures for every line in the United States in the statement I made to the House a few weeks ago.

Item agreed to.

Printing and stationery outside service, $7,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is this printing done by the Printing bureau?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. SALES: Where is this service carried on? I want some particulars about it. A few weeks ago I happened to be travelling west on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I found gentlemen travelling across the continent who did not know that the Canadian National Railway existed. They were from England and they never heard of the Canadian National Railway. I want to know what kind of service we have in the Old Country when it is possible for well-to-do individuals, travelling across this continent on business and pleasure, to know nothing whatever of the Canadian National Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: This item is for printing of forms, and the like of that, for our canals and outside service. It has nothing to do with the railways. I think my hon. friend will not have reason to complain of the Canadian National not being known on the continent of Europe, at least, in a few months.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think we will hear something about it very soon. I notice by to-day's paper that the Canadian National has opened very extensive and ex-
10 p.m. pensive quarters in Paris, and spent over $1,000,000, for business. Does the minister know anything about that? Does he think such an expenditure would be justified?

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member has not read the item aright. It has nothing to do with the matters to which he refers. It is not for our railways.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am quite aware of that.

Item agreed to.

MINES DEPARTMENT

Mines and Geological Survey—Mines Branch—for investigation of mineral resources or deposits, of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories. Investigations by, including salaries and all other expenses of, Dominion Fuel Board.	$200,000
For publications: English and French. Purchase of books, laboratory supplies, intruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies..	40,000

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the reason for the increase in that?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of Mines): This is an increase of $55,500 over the vote of 1922-23, accounted for by the item to cover the expenditure of the Dominion Fuel Board and the additional amounts required by the Fuel Testing and Ore Dressing divisions. I will give the items, if it is considered desirable. I may say for the information of the committee, that we had inaugurated a fuel board consisting of representatives from the Department of Mines and the Interior Department, purely for investigational purposes, not to interfere with the Federal Advisory Fuel Committee appointed for the purpose of securing a fuel supply. A proportion of the increase is for the purpose of carrying on this work. The following are some of the items:

I. Division of mineral resources $35,000 made up as follows:
a. Investigation and estimation of bituminous sands of Alberta..	$ 9,000
b. Investigation and estimation of saline lake deposits of Western Canada..	13,000
c. Investigations in mineral technology and obtaining information with respect to the mineral resources and the mining industry..	13,000
II. Division of Fuel Testing including expenses of Dominion Fuel Board $100,000 made up as follows:—
a. Salaries and wages..	$23,500
b. Additional labour when required..	1,000
c. Chemical laboratory supplies..	5,000
d. Machine shop supplies..	2,500
e. New Apparatus..	9,000
f. Investigations..	6,000
g. General investigations including expenses of Dominion Fuel Board..	53,000

I have a rather lengthy explanation that I was prepared to place upon Hansard, in order that we might have it upon record, and save reading it to the committee.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we should know what is being done with this.

Mr. McBRIDE: Could the minister state whether he will be able to investigate the coal possibilities up around Hudson's Hope? There has been a good deal of talk about that country. I was up there in September last, but not having the time to stay there as long as I should have liked, I was able to see only the outskirts. I think it is important that the minister should make a thorough investigation into the possibilities of coal in that district as I intend to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) to look into the question of running a railway line in there. I think it would help him quite a bit if he knew exactly what coal did exist in that locality.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Under this item there is an amount for the Dominion Fuel Board. I think the committee would be very much interested to know whether the minister has anything to report in regard to the coal situation throughout Canada generally. I am aware, of course, that a committee of the Upper House and a committee of this House as well are both dealing with this question; but we have also a Dominion Fuel Board in connection with which we vote a considerable sum of money annually; and if the minister could give any report from that board as to the prospect of fuel and an adequate coal supply for Canada for the next winter, I think it would be of considerable interest to the people of the central portions of the Dominion. It is stated that the coal situation is much better at the present moment than it was this time last year, and the prospect of strikes or difficulties in the coal areas in the United States is more than it was then. If the minister has anything in the way of information that would prove reassuring to the people, I am sure that the committee and the country would be glad to hear it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is in sight no shortage of coal in Quebec or Ontario at the moment.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): But at what price?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is very doubtful whether the Dominion government, or any government for that matter, can control prices. That is a question of supply.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): But that is the vital question.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I hope my hon. friends are not expecting the Dominion government to do impossible things.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): They are.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Well, if they are—

Mr. MACLEAN (York): At least, the opportunity is open to the government to do something.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If hon. gentlemen are expecting the government to control prices they are expecting the impossible. I do not think that even my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) expects that. The question of supply has a certain bearing on prices, I think he will admit. As I pointed out a moment ago to the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), the department is not endeavouring to provide a supply; it simply undertakes to investigate possible sources of supply in the treatment of fuels. An investigation has been carried on having in mind the conditions to be met, because they are most acute. It does seem probable that the supply of anthracite coal will in the future be cut off from Canada, although this is not an immediate possibility. But there is a very considerable supply of bituminous coal to be had from Nova Scotia, and its treatment ought to be encouraged so that the coke may be utilized for domestic and commercial purposes in the province of Quebec. There has been a considerable agitation for the bringing of fuel from Alberta. After a fairly thorough investigation I may say, Mr. Chairman, that that has resolved itself into a question of transportation. If rates can be cut down to the point where the fuel can be delivered in eastern Canada at a reasonable price to meet competition from the other side of the line, it has been established beyond doubt that Alberta coal will meet all demands that may be made upon it. In the meantime the work of the Dominion Fuel Board will be in the direction of research. The work planned includes:

(1) Investigation of the coking of coal for domestic use. Several plants have been erected in the United States for the purpose of coking bituminous coals in by-product recovery coke ovens with a main objective of manufacturing a domestic fuel and a gas suitable for domestic purposes.. Valuable by-products other than gas are recovered in the coking of bituminous coal according to this process namely, ammonia or ammonium sulphate and tar oils. By-product oven coke has met with such success in those cities where householders have been instructed how to burn it, that the Fuel Board considers that this class of fuel may be introduced into Ontario and Quebec as a substitute for anthracite coal (Pennsylvania).

(2) Central heating plants.

The Dominion Fuel Board is concerned not only with the finding of a substitute for anthracite coal but with such economies as can be effected in the use of coals for heating purposes. It appears to the board that the introduction of central heating plants in highly populated centres will result in considerable economies in the use of fuel through the use of lower grade, and hence cheaper, fuel, and through the elimination of the costs entailed in delivering coal to private dwellings and the removal of the ashes from these dwellings. In a central heating plant, the delivery of coal may be made at one point, and all the ashes will be removed from this point. Certain municipalities in the United States and in Europe are heated by central heating plants.

(3) The adaptation of present domestic heaters to other fuels.

In order to solve satisfactorily the problem of the fuel supply of the acute fuel area (the provinces of Ontario and Quebec) it is necessary that householders be assured not only of the required supply of coal, but that they may obtain this coal at the lowest possible cost. It is necessary that an investigation be undertaken with the objective of determining what alterations should or can be made in existing heaters to adapt them for burning bituminous and other coals.

Those are the three principal matters to be investigated. Then the programme provides for an investigation pertaining to the use of pulverized fuel and proceeds:

(4) The burning of pulverized fuels for generating steam for power, heating and other purposes has met with such signal success both in the United States and in Europe that it is necessary that an investigation be undertaken to ascertain whether Canadian fuels can be advantageously used in the pulverized form. The burning of fuels in the pulverized form permits of the use of the lower grade, hence cheaper, coals, and it is probable that an investigation may reveal that the low grade western lignites may be successfully used, for various purposes when pulverized, without heat or other treatment.

Then, the question of freight rates is discussed, but this I will not take up the time of the committee to read. I have already discussed the question briefly. The programme continues:

(6) An investigation on the limitation in Nova Scotia coal resources and the maximum possible annual output.

The possibility of introducing Nova Scotia coals into the provinces of Quebec and Ontario to reduce the imports of domestic and industrial coals from the United States is of such great importance to the solution of the fuel problem existing in the acute fuel area, that it is essential that a detailed investigation be undertaken to determine the available coal resources of Nova Scotia and the maximum possible annual output which can be economically maintained in order that the extent to which Nova Scotia coals can be depended upon to help out the fuel supply of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario may be known.

(7) An investigation of the possibility of securing and using Welsh anthracite for portions of eastern Canada.

Welsh anthracite has been prominently mentioned as a substitute for a portion of the anthracite annually imported into the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. In order to determine to what extent Welsh coal can be depended upon for this purpose it is necessary to investigate the conditions governing the mining of Welsh anthracite, the freight rates from the Welsh coal mines to Canadian ports and the cost of distributing from ports to places of consumption. This investigation will also inquire into the preparation which the Welsh coals should undergo in order to suit them to Canadian conditions, also the probable markets throughout the provinces of Quebec and Ontario for this fuel.

(8) Continuation of the investigation of the possibility of utilizing peat as a partial substitute for coal.

In view of the successful results of the investigation concerning the manufacture of peat fuel which has just been completed by the Peat Committee, appointed jointly by the federal government and the government of the province of Ontario, and the fact that the peat resources of Quebec and Ontario are of large extent and that the bogs which have been examined in detail contain sufficient peat to permit of a large annual production for many years in those two provinces, it is of great importance that this investigation be continued in order to determine logical sites—

Mr. MACLEAN (York): After twenty years experimenting we have no tangible results yet. When will the people of Ontario get cheap peat?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The investigation carried on by the two governments at the Alfred bog has resulted in the perfecting of a machine that will successfully manufacture peat. Some time ago the Ontario government expressed a desire not to continue the experiments any further, as it was now a problem for commercial enterprise.

Mr. BOYS: When the minister says peat has been manufactured, does he mean it can be manufactured to sell at a price which will enable it to compete with coal?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The cost delivered on board car is estimated at $3.50 per ton.

Mr. BOYS: Was the drying process by nature or artificial?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): By nature.

Mr. BOYS: Early in my life I lost all the money I ever had by investing it in a peat industry, so I know something about the subject. I wonder whether any invention has been perfected to dry peat successfully, because that was the trouble in the early days.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Climatic conditions will play a very important part in the tonnage; that is, if we have a very wet summer the drying process will be very slow. We have an engineer in this city who thinks he can perfect a compression process, but his view does not seem to be shared by the engineers of the various countries with whom we have exchanged reports.

Mr. BOYS: What is the nature of the manufactured article which the department is now putting out? Is it to be sold as dried by the sun, or as manufactured under pressure?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, it is spread on the ground and allowed to remain until it is thoroughly dry, and then it is picked up and shipped ready for use.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would suggest to the minister that the practical solution of this fuel problem is by the application of the principle of public ownership, but it must be applied in a big way, just as the power problem was solved in Ontario. For ten or fifteen years now a system has been perfected of erecting batteries of coking ovens in large centres of population and treating coal in such a way that not only the gas but certain valuable by-products are produced. The city of Toronto ought to give leadership in this respect, either in conjunction with the Consumers' Gas Company or by buying out that company and establishing a big coking plant. It has been proved beyond doubt that the most economical and effective method of heating cities like Montreal and Toronto is by means of these big coking plants. The real solution of cheap heating in our larger cities is for the government to give some kind of leadership, or, failing the federal government, for the government of Ontario or the municipal authorities of Toronto to approach this question right here and now and see what can be done. When I went along the Toronto esplanade last week the outstanding feature along that four miles of waterfront was a continuous line of great steel cars carrying from fifty to seventy tons of anthracite coal. This coal was being put into sacks, transferred to big motor trucks and delivered to private houses. I imagine people are paying anything from $15 to $20 a ton for this anthracite, but everybody who has money is getting it, for he fears the government will do nothing, and no one wants to go through the experience endured last winter. I regret to say that the minister in bringing forward his estimates has only promises to make that further investigations will be conducted into the fuel problem. I approve of all he is doing, but he is not doing it quick enough or in a large enough way. Somebody outside ought to get busy. The province of Ontario ought to have another Beck to deal with the coal problem as the power problem was dealt with and solved years ago, that is, by co-operation and the elimination of shareholders' profits, the sole aim of the enterprise being public service. In England many large cities are being heated by central plants where the coal is coked and many valuable by-products are recovered. What can be done in the way of a solution? Investigations and reports are all right in their way, but we want action. How are the people of the cities of Canada to secure a supply of coal for the coming winter at a reasonable price and so avoid the experience of former years, but especially of last year? If the minister has some plan of that kind let him give it to us, so that progress will be made in the direction of relief.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not desire to oppose this vote. I have no doubt the increase is necessary. The people are not worrying about the resources of this country; the resources are there, in any event. The Department of Mines has done very good work in this connection, and the money has been well expended. But what the people of Canada are worrying about is where the next winter's supply of coal is to come from. There has been a great deal of discussion on this subject in both Houses of parliament; two committees have met and considered it, but we seem to be going round in a circle; we are just where we were twelve months ago. It is not a matter of research at all; the deposits are there; the question is how to get the coal out; it is a transportation question solely. I am sorry that the Railway Commission has not stepped in and taken hold of the matter. The rate on Alberta coal to central Ontario has been quoted at $9 per ton in train lots, but there has been no actual demonstration of the feasibility of bringing the coal here in train lots; the only demonstration has been in connection with the carrying of grain to the head of the lakes. It would appear that the head of the National Railways would rather quote a prohibitive figure of $9 and get no business than quote a price of $5 or $6 and get the cream of the business.

Mr. CARROLL: I do not think it is altogether fair for my hon. friend to discuss this matter, in view of the fact that the committee, of which my hon. friend himself is a very active member, will be bringing in a report on this subject in a few days' time.

Mr. CHURCH: I am not criticizing the committee; they have done a lot of good work and have procured a great deal of valuable information. I appreciate the fact that the government has done a great deal to try and reach a solution of the problem. That cannot be done in twenty-four hours, in six months or a year; it is a matter to be worked out in the days that are to come. But the average man is much disappointed, in view of the vast expenditure on the railways and canals of this country, in the failure to arrive at an arrangement which would enable these resources of western Canada and of the Maritime provinces to be brought to Ontario and Quebec. Where is the Railway Commission in this connection? They have not laid down a tariff for the carrying of coal to central Canada from east and west, although the commission was set up for the very purpose of regulating and fixing prices for transportation, especially of our basic products. I am sorry to see our merchant marine being sold, because I believe some of the smaller ships could bring coal from the Maritime provinces right up to the central provinces. In the early days the Canadian Pacific Railway had to carry many basic products at a loss; they did so with recurring deficits, and they struggled in those years until they made the business pay and had a surplus. I suggest that if nothing else can be done some bonus system should be worked out. The bonus system is not new in Canada; the railways were largely subsidized by bonuses. The railways to-day are carrying certain basic products to the head of the lakes at a cut rate and in my opinion they should do so with coal. Something should be done to get the coal out, because according to the coal commissioners of the province the same condition will exist next year and we will be as we were last year—people struggling round the coal offices trying to get half a ton of coal. If we bonused the transportation of this product for one winter or two or three winters we might find it to be best in the long run. The other day the Dominion Coal Company in Nova Scotia sent 30,000 tons of coal over to Holland; that coal was badly needed in central Canada. Let the coal be carried at $5 or $6 a ton and if necessary put an amount in the estimates to cover the difference. Let us have a fair trial of this thing; if there is a deficit one year I venture to say that in two or three years there would be a surplus in the transportation of that basic product, and we would be giving employment to our own workmen and doing something to solve the transportation problem. The government, the Railway Commission—all these different bodies should get together and see whether a price cannot be fixed, even if only as an emergency measure. The Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States had to take action along similar lines. The privately-owned railways over these were quoting prohibitive prices for the transport of coal, and people in places like Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Erie, Pennsylvania, places quite near the coal mines, were paying high rates of transportation. The Interstate Commerce Commission had the various bodies before them and they fixed a rate. That is what the Railway Commission here should do. Formerly 55 per cent of the coal shipments were carried by boat to lake Erie and lake Ontario ports; to-day not three per cent of it is conveyed by water—and why? I do not say there is an arrangement in restraint of trade, but there is a business arrangement under which the rates are fixed and it is decided how the coal shall be carried from the mines in Pennsylvania and elsewhere to lake Erie and lake Ontario ports and solely by rail. It is arranged that all the coal must go through the Niagara district by train to the cities, towns and villages of western Ontario. I say there is no product that is more deserving of bonus than coal is, because it is an actual necessity the same as food. This is the most important problem that the people of Canada have before them at the present time, and I hope that the government will find it possible to take some action in the matter that will afford the necessary relief.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is very gratifying indeed to note that our friends from Toronto are beginning to realize what it means to pay the high freight rates from Alberta down to Ontario. I would remind them that some of us up there have been paying those rates for nearly forty years. Nobody ever suggested that we should get a bonus. As a matter of fact, last year when we were wanting to get what was coming to us under the Crowsnest pass agreement and seeking to have it restored, our friends from Toronto though that a heinous proposition. Coal for the province of Ontario is dependent upon what the people there are prepared to pay for Alberta coal. If they are prepared to pay the freight rate, plus the cost of mining, there is an abundance of coal there for all kinds of time. Our friends are suggesting a freight rate, and I understand the railways have offered a minimum freight rate, the lowest rate they can make without losing money. There is no need of anybody freezing to death next winter if they are prepared to buy this coal from Alberta or any other part of the West, and there is all kinds of it. Do they expect the government to fill all their cellars with coal? For ten years I had in a small way the supervision of the forwarding of coal during the congestion periods in Saskatchewan when the grain rush was on, and I know something of the difficulties associated with the movement of coal by railways during the grain congestion period. There is a certain amount of assistance a government can give in the way of investigational work, but to undertake to supply the domestic requirements of coal for a people, when all they have to do is to make provision for themselves, that is out of the question. There is coal and an abundance of it if they are prepared to pay the price. So far as a bonus is concerned, if our friends down here require a bonus to haul their coal from Alberta, I do not know that I will object to it so much; I sympathize with them on this long haul, but when discussing freight rates again, and the whole Crowsnest agreement is not restored yet—we are paying for these long hauls and have been doing it for forty years, some of us—I would like to see the sympathy reciprocated a little more in the future than it has been in the past.

Mr. McBRIDE: I want to say a word in connection with the peat proposition. Before I came to Canada I had a good deal of experience in connection with peat, and any peat I have seen in Canada I would consider only third-rate quality. Two tons of dried peat are equal to about one ton of coal. I do not say I have seen the best of the peat in Canada but I would think that one ton of coal would equal three tons of it, and unless you can contrive some system of pressing it and making it different to anything I have ever seen the sooner you forget about it the better it will be for all concerned.

It has been said that the ships of the merchant marine could be used for bringing coal up the St. Lawrence river and up into the lakes. It would be small boats that would be used for that purpose, any of them that would be used, and those boats cannot be used successfully for that purpose. They are built for ocean-going purposes, not for canal work, and if you load those boats down they have too great a draft of water.

The question I rose to ask the minister, and I think he was going to answer when the hon. member for South York rose was this: Does he intend to make any investigation this year into the coal deposits at Hudson's Hope? I have been told by men who know a good deal about mining that the best prospects of anthracite coal in Canada are in that district.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): In what province?

Mr. McBRIDE: In British Columbia at Hudson's Hope, in the Peace River country. According to reports that have been made it is the best anthracite coal in the world outside of Welsh coal. I do not say that is so but I would like to know whether it is or not and I would like the minister to say whether he can investigate that coal area this summer.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I personally was interested in the reports as to the quality of the coal my hon. friend speaks of. That country is away to the westward of the Grand Prairie country in the Rocky mountains. As my hon. friend knows, there is an arrangement between this government and the government of British Columbia for geological work, and usually the request as to areas to be investigated comes from the provincial government. Investigation has not been thorough in that area chiefly because it is so far removed from transportation facilities. I know that suggestions have been made for boring and tests of the coal he speaks of, but that would have to be undertaken by the British Columbia government, which owns the natural resources. Our work is simply investigational. We do not pursue our investigations to the point of making tests of the finds. I do not think we have a party in that area this year. I have not a list of the areas to be investigated in British Columbia before me, but I think I am safe in saying that no party will go into that area this year for investigational work. There has been a provincial party in there investigating for oil, and a Dominion party has been engaged the last year making a thorough investigation of the coal deposits.

Mr. BOYS: I note that there is an increase of $55,000 in this item over last year. What portion if any of this vote is set apart in connection with coal or a coal supply?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As I tried to point out in the beginning of the discussion, we do not consider it our duty to provide the supply. What we are endeavouring to do is to investigate the possibilities of using the lower grade bituminous coals that can be procured from Canada and the United States and treating them so that they will take the place of anthracite. Then there is the other vital question, that of freight rates. So far as the Alberta product is concerned that does not need investigation so far as the Mines department is concerned. It is a question of transportation pure and simple. There is no treatment of the Alberta product required. That has been demonstrated both in Toronto and this city so that the problem of using Alberta coal is simply one of transportation, and if the rate can be reduced to a level that will make it possible to bring that coal down here, that problem will be solved.

There seems to be on the part of the committee an intimation that the government should do something to secure a supply of coal. We have a committee, headed by Mr. Magrath, which has been working more or less on the question of distribution. We have not interfered in that field at all, but there is a bituminous field in the United States close to the city of Toronto that we are investigating. Perhaps that coal could be used in central heating plants or be coked, using the by-products, turning the gas, for instance, into the gas mains and utilizing it for heat and light if necessary. The other by-products would also find a ready market in Toronto. I am told that that coal can be delivered in Toronto for around $7 a ton to-day even at the high rates of transportation prevailing, and that it could be made into a product that could be sold reasonably at ten or eleven dollars a ton, and that it would be equal to anthracite. That is a problem of investigation that we are now working on. If the municipality of Toronto or the provincial government desires to undertake distribution or even to set up a coking plant, there is nothing in the world to prevent them.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): That is practical politics.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are making that investigation, and we shall put that information in their hands. But to say that we should assure the people of Toronto of a supply of fuel next winter, that is scarcely the business of the government. I want to make that very clear. There is just one other problem. The Water Powers branch are working in connection with the Fuel Board as Mr. Challies, who is director of the Water Powers branch, is also a member of the Fuel Board.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have you finished reading the memorandum? We shall not know all about it until it is finished.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil) (Reading):

(9) Canada possesses large undeveloped water powers and these have come to be considered by many people as a possible source of electric energy that might be used for heating houses and buildings. It is important that the physical and economic limitations of the use of electric energy for house heating purposes should be thoroughly investigated. The Dominion Fuel Board includes as one of its members the Director of the Water Powers branch, Department of the Interior, and can appropriately undertake a study of the subject.

And then there is (10) the question of house construction in order that better insulation be developed. That, of course, does not apply to buildings already constructed. That is the programme that the fuel committee have laid out for investigation and for which we are asking the sum of $53,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is there any other survey of the water powers going on now independently of that conducted by the Mines department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Water Powers branch are making all the investigations as regards water powers generally in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Would that include the requirements of the National Railways? For instance I am told they are taking into consideration very seriously the development of electrical energy for traction purposes along the Transcontinental railway, and that they are actually negotiating with the provincial governments concerned for some kind of an arrangement as to the utilization of these water powers. Does that come under the Department of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Water Powers branch gathers available data of the possibilities of water powers generally throughout Canada. That work is not confined to any particular province but is carried on in all the provinces of Canada, so that it is possible to furnish data regarding the power to be developed at any given point where development could take place. That is the work of the Water Powers branch.

Mr. CARROLL: I do not think it hurts the various departments of the government to be criticized occasionally by the very faithful followers of the administration. Objection may not, perhaps, be raised to the passage of this vote for ascertaining whether or not we may be able to treat American bituminous coal in the various cities of Ontario in order to get a supply of fuel from this source. I should rather think, however, that the Mines department of this country should exercise its intellect, and employ its knowledge in showing parliament and the country whether or not it is possible to bring the bituminous coal of eastern Canada and the bituminous coal of western Canada into the central cities of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, there to be manufactured into coke and so take the place of the anthracite which we have been importing from the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): May I interrupt the hon. gentleman to say that is exactly what we propose to do. The same treatment will be applied to the bituminous coal of the Maritime provinces as to the bituminous coal of the West. Let me say to my hon. friend that I have no desire to encourage the use of United States fuel at the expense of the Canadian fuel.

Mr. CARROLL: Then I misunderstood the minister. I should rather think the first thing this government, or any Canadian government, would do would be to investigate the possibilities of a Canadian supply. If, as the result of future investigations, they find that they are unable to obtain a supply of fuel in this country, then they might turn their thoughts to the United States. When I spoke as I did a few minutes ago of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) who has been a live wire in our committee and who has taken more interest in the committee on Mines and Minerals—which is now holding sittings for the first time I think in twenty years—than any other member I can now point my finger at, I thought perhaps we had better leave the discussion of this question until the report of that committee was brought down. However, the minister has brought in an estimate with respect to fuel which affords us an opportunity of discussing this question. I still think I must have misunderstood the minister, or he did not make the matter quite plain to me. In his answer to my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) I understood him to say that this $53,000 was for the purpose of treating United States coal in order to obtain a supply of fuel for Canada. Now, this whole matter has been fully investigated by both the Senate committee and the House of Commons committee. I am not suggesting that the minister hold this vote over, but I would ask him to consider very seriously the spending of any money in an investigation looking to the United States for a supply of coal. The very purpose of the inquiry of both committees has been, as I understand it, to ascertain whether or not Canada is to-day in a position to supply the fuel demands of this country. I for one would rather object to spending our money for any other purpose than to ascertain whether we may entertain the hope in the near future of being able to supply the national demands from domestic sources. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this is a most serious question. I agree with my hon. friend, the member for North Toronto, that it is the most serious question that has arisen in Canada for some time. If we had a thousand war ships on the Great Lakes in the event of a war with the United States—which God forbid may ever become a fact—that would avail us nothing under present conditions in Canada, because the United States could cut off our fuel supply in twenty-four hours. In that short period of time we would have to capitulate to every demand that might be made upon us to the great republic to the south. Therefore in that respect the fuel question is of national importance and demands the serious consideration of parliament and the country.

The Minister of Agriculture said a moment ago that we have been labouring under the difficulty of freight rates for years. I would like to show him a few telegrams which were sent a few days ago to our committee by the coal operators of the West. Perhaps the minister has seen those telegrams. When Sir Henry Thornton made his railway rate of $9 a ton for the transportation of fuel from the coal fields of Alberta to the various centres in the East, he suggested that the coal operators, and others interested, might join in cutting down their profits.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. CARROLL: I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture that we got very little encouragement from the coal operators of the West in that respect. They simply said that it was impossible for them to get coal into Ontario at a freight rate of $9 a ton, but they made no comment as to whether or not they would contribute in reducing the cost in order that coal might be brought to the people who needed it. That is one of the things, I think, Sir Henry Thornton intended to bring very forcibly to the coal operators of this country. Therefore, when you talk about freight and lake rates, and similar charges, do not lay the whole blame for existing conditions on the railroads of Canada. If this is becoming a national question, as it undoubtedly is, I think a conference should be held in the immediate future between representatives of the Dominion government and the various local governments so that the whole matter may be gone into in a very searching manner.

No company in this country owns the coal deposits. In the prairie provinces I presume they are owned by the Dominion government. In the Maritime and older provinces they are owned by the local governments, and while I do not wish to make any accusations against operators or persons who are carrying coal, I would say the time has come, Mr. Chairman, when the cards of the various provinces should be laid on the table, and when there should be an open conference with the coal operators of the country, and they should be brought to a realization of the fact that the coal industry of Canada is a national asset, not owned by any company, not owned by any man, but owned by the people at large. I am in hopes that will be one of the things our committee will recommend to the members of this House. I do not wish to criticize the item, but I say, in view of the treatment which has been accorded to Canada in the last year, that I, as a humble member and faithful follower of this government, would suggest that they should go slowly in spending any part of this $53,000 towards advertising American wares in the shape of coal shipped into this country. Perhaps I misunderstood the minister. I know he is just as true a Canadian as I am, and perhaps better, but, in view of all the circumstances, I would think the energies of his department should be directed more closely towards a very sincere investigation of the possibilities of a home supply for Canada than the probabilities of our demand being satisfied from a foreign country.

Mr. MILLAR: I wish to press a certain matter on the minister briefly. I had a conversation with a mining engineer a week ago, and I had intended to get my information in better shape before the item came up; still I think I can give him the kernel of the conversation. This conversation showed the necessity of getting accurate reports in regard to our natural resources. This gentleman did not mention this matter by way of criticism of the department, and yet the conversation developed a weak spot. He stated that on one occasion the engineer representing the department brought in some samples from mines located away out in the extreme north that tested out very good indeed. He and some friends had some interests near at hand, and sent out representatives to get samples of ore, and found the samples tested very poorly. They wondered that there was such a discrepancy and where the fault lay. They sent out a second group of prospectors, with the same result. His explanation was that the samples that had been taken by the representative of the department had been salted, if hon. members are familiar with that term, and he remarked that if one were going to be entirely accurate it was necessary almost to lock up his samples after he had taken them, lest some sharper might drop something into them in order to give an entirely false report. He and his friends had been put to the expense of some thousands of dollars just because the report was not accurate. This shows the necessity of obtaining accurate information.

In regard to coal, it strikes me it would be most difficult—and I would be glad to think it would be possible—to bring Alberta coal to Ontario and sell it for ten or eleven dollars per ton. Some hon. members do not seem to wish to continue this 11 p.m. discussion, but I have not taken very much time and I did not introduce it. The question has been introduced and discussed at considerable length. Some people have thought that the coal we have been discussing is not going to give satisfaction, and that it will slack. I have used this coal entirely for two years. I have found no difficulty with the coal slacking. Sometimes I have had tons left over in the spring of the year, and have used them in the fall and found no difficulty from slacking. It is simply a question of freight rates, as to whether it is going to be possible to bring coal from Alberta to Toronto and sell it for $9 or $10 a ton. I and others in my town paid last winter $13 a ton on the car. Either it is a case of paying very exorbitant freight rates, or else it will be impossible to bring it to Ontario and sell it in Toronto for $10 or $11 a ton. I would be glad to think it could be done, and that we could save the $60,000,000 that goes to the United States annually for coal. I can see one of our difficulties that has not yet been touched on in the debate. Perhaps some hon. gentlemen who have a lot of labour people in their constituencies are a little reluctant about touching on it. One of the great difficulties is the problem presented by labour. I believe a great many in the ranks of labour are not receiving too much. A great many who are serving on railways are not receiving too much, but I am convinced there are a goodly number receiving far too much. Here is the way it works out. I had a talk with a friend last fall who stated he had stayed over in the north country with a repairer of engines who, in the course of conversation had said, "I have been able to count 25 hours a day for the last three months". "Well" my friend "when do you sleep?" "Oh" he said, "you doubt it. I will show you by my book. If I work half an hour I am paid for half a day, and if I work after hours I am paid time and a half." And he went on to say further that the engineer helped him out some. He said, "If an engineer comes in at five in the afternoon the engine is not reported till after six. In that way I get paid time and a half for repairing, but if an engine arrives in the morning, say at five o'clock, that engine is reported at once. It may be too warm so that I cannot repair it at once, but it is reported, and being reported at once I get paid time and a half for repairing it." You may say this is just hearsay but it did not pass through very many mouths—just one—before it reached me. From other sources, from men in the offices, I have gathered the same information. In that way some men are able to draw far more pay than they have a right to.

Mr CARROLL: Do you get your information from railway employees who are drawing the overtime?

Mr. MILLAR: Yes.

Mr. CARROLL: Then, it is perfectly correct?

Mr. MILLAR: A conference was mentioned a few moments ago by the member who has asked me the question. It seems to me something might be done by a conference between labour, capital and representatives of the government. In many cases unemployed workmen are not only anxious but willing to work for a fair wage but they are unable to secure employment because others in the ranks of labour are demanding more than they are entitled to, and are thereby stifling industry. There would be a great deal more employment if these high wages were not demanded. The railways would be able to carry freight for much less and that would give an impetus to mining and make it possible to bring coal from Alberta to Ontario and sell it at a reasonable price. That is one way in which a conference could accomplish a great deal of good. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I would offer the same suggestion put forward by an hon. gentleman from Toronto; I should be sorry to see the ships belonging to the Merchant Marine sold. I think they should be kept, in view of the combine which we have seen on the lakes. I think it might be well to keep them in use.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The minister gave some fragmentary information with respect to the experiments in connection with peat. I did not gather how much it was proposed to expend during the coming year or whether in the minister's opinion the very large amount spent in the past along this line with the comparatively meagre results obtained justifies any further experiments.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I thought I had made it clear that it was the opinion of both governments, who were joint participants in the experiment, that the machinery had been developed up to that point where they could say that the experiment was completed. They were not in the business of manufacturing any large amount of fuel but were simply developing the machinery up to the point where it could be established that it could produce fuel economically. There is no expenditure in connection with that work for the coming year.

Mr. GOULD: We are trying to believe that it is the policy of the government to economise this year, and in this regard I must call the attention of the minister to the fact that he is commencing with Assiniboia. Last year we had a vote for the briquetting plant at Bienfait, which is in the electoral district of Assiniboia; that vote is absent this year. Can the minister give us any information concerning the condition of affairs in that locality to-day?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The briquetting plant at Bienfait has been carried on under the supervision of a separate board and not under the department at all. The endeavour to carbonize coal, I may say, has not been successful. A great deal of money has been spent on the experiment, which I think has proved a failure, that is to say, in the direction in which it has been carried on. We did investigate last winter the use of a carbonizer which was developed at an American university by the American Bureau of Mines, and, to test that carbonizer, they are now building a unit at an expense of $1,600. That is all we propose to do in this direction.

Mr. GOULD: I understand that the appropriation last year was not all expended and that the minister is now going to use the balance of it. I do not wish unduly to delay the passing of the item, but I did think that this was an opportune time to secure some information concerning the plant at Bienfait. I have been receiving reports all along giving much the same information that the minister has submitted to the committee. It seems to me that when we are expending so much money for laboratory and other investigational work, something should be done to see whether the vast deposits of lignite in that district might not be rendered of some use to the people, to provide either energy of some nature or an auxiliary heating power. Has this question been given any consideration at all?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mines—salaries and contingencies, $539,890.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Like other items, this shows a large increase. How is the minister expecting to pay off the national debt this way?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The statutory increases amount to $14,755. The new positions are three; there were 228 last year as against 231 this year. These three new positions are to be filled by officers who will be in the Fuel Testing division, engaged in the very work we have been discussing; that is to say, an engineer grade No. 3, at $2,700, an assistant chemist at $2,100, and a junior chemist at $1,680, making a total of $6,480. Reclassification accounts for $3,792.50. These, together with the statutory increases of $14,755, make up the total increase of $25,027.50.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You can always make up an increase if you employ a sufficient number of new men and do not get any extra services from the men you already have, while their salaries are moving up. The increase of salaries implies that extra services are being obtained for it. Every few days we get an advertisement from the Civil Service Commission wanting to appoint this, that, and the other man at large or comparatively large salaries, for some new positions that are created. If this goes on, where are we going to land? If we look for reductions we find them only in connection with help given by the Dominion to provinces or municipalities, thereby saving the taxpayers' money paid to those authorities. The increases come in the civil government estimates in the various departments one after the other; they are going on apparently recklessly. This relatively is an enormous increase—$25,000. At this rate of increase per year the department is going to reach the dimensions of the Interior department. Why all these chemists? I was only in charge of the Mines department a very short time, and the department ended with fewer chemists while I was there.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am advised that during the period of the war the department was almost denuded of chemists, they being attracted from the service by various commercial enterprises. The same applies to the engineers in this particular department. If there is an excuse for an expenditure in any department of government, I do think it is in the Mines department in which an attempt is made to ascertain the amount of our natural resources and their utilization, and of course chemists play a very important part in any development of this character. The three additional chemists that I am asking for this year will be utilized, as I pointed out a few minutes ago, in carrying on the fuel investigation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was some reduction all right, and there was a very considerable censure upon us for not reducing the staff still more; but the process is now in operation. It is true we need chemists, but I do think if you have a limited number of good, faithful men, and they are made to understand that they must concentrate their work upon purely practical ends, we will get as good results at far less cost to the country. The temptation of the permanent heads to enlarge the operations under them is very great, and the pressure from those heads is always upon the minister to accede to their demands, but I would warn the minister not to be too easily impressed even by the best of deputies—and I think he has one of the best in that department.

Item agreed to.

Dominion of Canada Assay Office—for maintenance of assay office, Vancouver, B.C., $26,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this for the assaying of minerals?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The assay office was created to provide a place where Canadian producers might dispose of their gold.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They took the whole amount voted last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Any Governor General's warrants besides?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

Mr. FIELDING: Number 27.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister intend to go on with more business to-night? What has become of the new clock reforms of the government? We are now twenty minutes after eleven. A lot of business has been put through without any delay except on the part of the faithful supporters of the government behind him.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not complaining at all. I think we have had a very pleasant evening, but it is so pleasant I thought the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) might be permitted to finish up his Bankruptcy Bill to-night.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no chance of that to-night.

Mr. FIELDING: In that case we will have to move that the House do now adjourn.

On motion of Mr. Fielding the House adjourned at 11:20 p.m.

Tuesday, May 29, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PARIS OFFICES

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the press of yesterday an announcement appears that Sir Henry Thornton, on behalf of the Canadian National Railways, has bought a large block of real estate in the city of Paris, France, at a cost approaching two milion dollars. Has the government any information on the subject?

Hon. George P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National Railway board is doing something towards securing suitable quarters for the system in Paris, which, I believe, if brought to a conclusion, would afford accommodation for other departments of government as well. I have not the particulars, I will ask for them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This undoubtedly would be a capital investment, and therefore would require the previous consent of the government. Has the government given its consent to the purchase of real estate in the city of Paris?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. GRAHAM: No, not up to the present time.

SIR HENRY THORNTON

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some days ago it was brought to the attention of the government that Sir Henry Thornton was reported to have become a director of Canada Steamship Lines, Limited, and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) promised an investigation. Has the investigation been made, and is the report correct?

Mr. GRAHAM: The minister did not promise an investigation; no such word was used. Sir Henry Thornton—as did his predecessor—has accepted a place on the board of the Canada Steamship Lines, Limited, for reasons which are apparent to men engaged in the transportation business.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are they?

Mr. GRAHAM: There are traffic arrangements between Canada Steamship Lines, Limited, and the Canadian National Railways, and it is thought expedient that some member of the Canadian National Railway Board should be on the directorate of Canada Steamship Lines, Limited.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should remember that the fact that the Canada Steamship Company was doing business with the Canadian National was urged very strongly by his Prime Minister as a reason why Mr. Hanna should not be on that board rather than as a reason why he should be.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAYS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto) Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the government if it was its intention to continue negotiations with the United States in regard to the St. Lawrence deep waterways. The reply I got was not very satisfactory; it was simply to the effect that the time was not opportune for dealing with the matter. Would it not be possible during the recess for the government to obtain reports as to the engineering and financial features of the project and continue these negotiations? I should like to know how the matter stands.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would not say, Mr. Speaker, that negotiations have been discontinued. A certain question was asked us by the American government, to which we replied. No further communication has been received from Washington, and that is where the matter stands at present. Whenever it is re-opened the government will be pleased to consider any further representations that may be made.

Mr. CHURCH: Have negotiations been broken off altogether?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it would be more correct to say they are being continued to the extent I have indicated. That is assuming the term negotiations may be correctly applied to what has already taken place.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

House again in committee on Bill No. 139, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 13—Composition, extension or scheme of arrangement.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had a good deal of discussion on this section, and the minister rather agreed with some of the arguments made by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) as to the advisability of continuing a scheme which enabled businesses to carry on which otherwise would be ruined.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The original clause has given rise to more abuses than any other part of the act. Many debtors have made offers of composition which were duly approved by the creditors on the condition that the payment of debt should be made in instalments. The debtors retained possession of their assets and continued their business, but failed to pay the instalments and subsequently assigned when there was nothing left for the creditors. After the first reading of this bill a number of commercial associations met in Toronto and they united in recommending, in effect, that this amendment be adopted. I can mention the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Credit Men's Association, Retail Merchants' Association, Wholesale Grocers' Association, Dominion Loan Companies' Association. In view of these representations we do not see how we could reasonably withdraw an amendment which is of so great importance.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend gives me the names of some very estimable organizations that may or may not have really studied this subject. I would be more concerned in knowing what the real troubles are. This whole matter of a voluntary arrangement rests with the creditors; it is for them to say whether or not it shall be entered into. I realize there may be default in the payment of instalments; there are broken promises everywhere, and that is why it is necessary to have a bankruptcy law. But after all, is it not a matter for the creditors to say, whether or not it would be a good thing to enable a particular concern to carry on a little longer?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: An informal arrangement or composition can at any time be made with creditors. The fact is that this amendment was suggested to meet the wish of the creditors, or of the traders who are the creditors of to-morrow. In England there is no such composition or asignment as we have it; such arrangement can be made only after a receiving order or an assignment. And there is good reason for that. Under the English law, when there is an assignment the debtor does not remain in possession of his assets, but in our case he continues in business, disposes of the goods, and in seventy-five cases out of one hundred subsequently assigns, leaving nothing for his creditors. My hon. friend suggests that the present arrangement may be very advantageous both to debtor and to creditors. That may have been the case in one or two instances, but our information is that in a great number of cases it has been to the disadvantage of the creditors, and that is why we offer the amendment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I still do not see the necessity for the amendment. The creditors, after all, have to agree to the whole thing if any order is made in bankruptcy. And there is this to be remembered: so soon as a bankruptcy order is made, just so soon is the firm or partnership in question put in a very difficult position as to carrying on business again. I really do not see why the creditors should want to have the matter taken out of their hands and have it provided that there must be court proceedings before a binding composition can be made.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The amendment was asked for last year, and we thought we should not immediately adopt it; they have asked for it again this year. I do not see why we should not proceed according to that request.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend hears only from a certain number of them. I would remind him again that he is legislating, that parliament is legislating, not the people who are making these representations. If he has evidence that it is a bad thing to allow people to make these arrangements or to let them have the right to make them, that is another matter.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There have been a great number of abuses. The first objection we ever heard to the amendment was made in this House.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—Appointment of trustee.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: In order to meet the objection offered by the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter) we might add after the word "creditors" in the third line of subsection 2 the following words: "at which two-thirds of the proved creditors are represented." That is to say, no removal can take place unless two-thirds of the creditors are represented at the meeting where such a proposal is made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose if my hon. friend takes the same position that he did before, that position being that he has determined upon changing the form of the appointment of the trustees—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That was adopted by the House, I understand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I understood that the main question had not been adopted by the House, that the form was to be changed. This is the section which says that the creditors at the first meeting shall appoint by ordinary resolution any person but the official receiver as trustee for the administration of the estate. So we are dealing with that now. I want to reiterate very briefly the position we have taken, so that there shall be no doubt that the House recognizes what we are doing in doing this. I have had only one complaint from Ontario against the present law, and that complaint had to do with the same company of whom complaints were made in the province of Quebec, a credit association making itself too busy and going around practically trying to push people into bankruptcy. Apart from that I have heard no complaints whatever as to the method in which the appointments work out in Ontario. I have heard of nothing from other provinces, and my friend from St. John tells us that it is working very, very well down there. I do not think the hon. minister has heard of many complaints from anywhere except the province of Quebec, where both of us appointed too many people. My plea to the minister before was this: Would it not be better, rather than changing the whole system that is working well in every province of this Dominion except Quebec, to undo what was done wrong in Quebec and start Quebec aright? I again point out that we shall have delays, we are bound to have delays, that we have gentlemen made official receivers who know absolutely nothing about ordinary commercial business and are very ill-fitted to discharge those duties. Then we have the custodian. I again point out that we have opportunities for three different sets of costs, that we have opportunities for delay, and so far as I have heard there is only one reason why all these things are to be done, and that is because too many trustees were appointed in the province of Quebec. I do not know whether my hon. friend has reasons other than what we have heard in the House, but if he has not, it does appear to me that a great mistake is being made.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The complaints did not come only from Quebec. Some came from the province of Ontario also. But even supposing that such complaints should come only from one province we are here legislating for the whole country, and we are trying to make this a permanent law. As I have had occasion to say before, we have had many bankruptcy laws and all of them have had to be repealed.

My hon. friend says that all the provinces except Quebec are satisfied with the present system. Now if by changing the mode of appointment of the trustees and adopting the system that is in existence in some other countries in place of this one which is not known anywhere in the world except in Canada, we can satisfy one or two provinces and make it so that there will be no more complaints against the system, and have a law of bankruptcy that will be accepted by the whole Dominion, I think we shall have accomplished something. From what I know of the province of Quebec, even if the number of trustees was less than it is to-day, even if it were reduced by fifty per cent or more, I sincerely believe that the system of to-day would never work, and that we should adopt the system that they have in England and the United States, leaving it to the creditors to choose the trustee. After all, they are the most interested parties, and I cannot understand why we should leave it to the debtor to choose the liquidator. It seems to me the creditor should have that choice. In all sincerity I think that we should adopt the system that we now propose, and if we do so, I trust that not only Quebec but all the provinces will accept permanently this bankruptcy law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the matter stands quite in the way my hon. friend puts it. All that the present Bankruptcy Act did, having regard to the point we are now discussing, was to continue what always was the law under assignments. The debtor always made the assignment, and he always made it to whom he wanted to make it.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No.

Mr. JACOBS: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says, "No." If he will wait a moment I think perhaps he will find that I am stating the fact. The debtor makes the assignment. He has to make it. It has to be the debtor because his assignment is a voluntary act. It is not anything that can be forced, and it is idle to say the debtor did not pick the man to whom he made the assignment. He did pick him and as soon as he had done it the creditors at their first meeting put in any assignee they liked. That is why we had all over the province people dickering for proxies, one group pulling in this direction and another pulling in that. That is why we used to have the carpet-bagger assignee, with his bag packed ready to be picked up at any minute to catch the first train at the first symptom, the very first sniff, of trouble—yes, and lawyers doing the same thing. We had all these abuses, and we can have the same thing here because what we are doing here will bring about a result which will put us exactly in that position. When you have an official trustee he ought to be a man of standing, one whom the creditors will accept. In Ontario they have been men of standing that the creditors have accepted. There have been no undignified fights, that I know of, for the purpose of trying to catch this estate for that man or that estate for the other. But my hon. friend makes it inevitable that these troubles shall take place now in the case of any and every assignment. In the one instance you have a select body of men to any one of whom the debtor may assign his bankruptcy papers, with only a remote chance that the creditors at their meeting will change the trustee—a very remote chance, I am instructed at least from Ontario. But under my hon. friend's plan what happens is this: Perforce there has to be an election by the creditors; perforce there has to be this wire-pulling and log-rolling. We do not think that is a good thing. We thought we had got away from that. We are now perpetuating it. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, we thought it was a good thing that we should not only get away from that but keep away from it.

I quite agree with my hon. friend that we must consider the province of Quebec. We have every right to consider their troubles, and we ought to consider them just as much as the troubles of any other five or six provinces, but so far I have not heard anything which would give us the idea that there was a constitutional trouble among the business people of Quebec that did not apply to the other provinces. I always got the idea from what has been said that we have appointed altogether too many men in Quebec, that not only were the good men continued but a lot of unqualified men were put on, and there was a scramble for the work. I did think, therefore, that in the absence of some fundamental distinction which does not exist between the business people of Quebec on the one hand and the business people of the Maritime provinces on the other, if my hon. friend would get a list of authorized receivers for Quebec such as he has appointed in other places where this act is working properly, the difficulties in the province of Quebec would be overcome. Therefore, in the absence of some fine distinction, which does not exist, between the business people of Quebec on the one hand and the business people of the Maritime provinces on the other, if my hon. friend got authorized receivers such as are to be found in other places where the act is working properly these difficulties would be overcome. They ought to be overcome in the case of Quebec just as much as in the case of any other province. But, if it can be done in any other way—and I do not see why it cannot—why should it be done at the expense of throwing out the machinery in every other province where it is working all right?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I understand that all the other provinces are willing to accept the change in this respect; they think it is preferable. I cannot add any further argument to what I have already said. I have given considerable time to the study of these amendments in which I was helped by the officers of my department, and I have acted according to the representations which were sent to us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) suggested a moment ago that this Bankruptcy Act met with general approval throughout Canada except in the province of Quebec. May I suggest that, so far as I can see, neither the amendment proposed by the Minister of Justice nor the Bankruptcy Act itself does suit all the industries in all the provinces. We in the farming industry find neither the act nor these amendments at all adapted to that industry. We find, for example, that the first part of the act dealing with involuntary bankruptcy does not apply to agricultural people; we can only get redress under the voluntary assignment. Then, under the general interpretation that is placed upon the Bankruptcy Act, the intention seems to be that as soon as the debtor makes an assignment in bankruptcy it is possible to secure the documents and the keys, lock up the business, and take care of it in that way. But that cannot be done in the case of a farmer where there are standing crops to be taken care of, stock to be fed, and other matters to be attended to. Another difficulty that arises in connection with insolvent farmers is that practically all the assets of the farmer are already absorbed in the form of mortgages and so on. Usually he will not have anything left. Yet we find the ordinary statement of a trustee in bankruptcy is something to the following effect: "Before we could undertake to handle an assignment in bankruptcy in this matter, we would have to have advanced to us the sum of $50 for the payment of preparation of documents, registration and advertising notices, mailing of notices to creditors, and the drawing of statutory declaration. If you are prepared to forward us this amount we shall, upon hearing from you, send you the papers duly prepared for signature." And may I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the difficulty is that most trustees do not ask $50 but considerably more; I have heard of many cases where they demand as much as $200. I can assure you that there are many hundreds, if not thousands, of the farmers in western Canada who might take advantage of this act but are unable to do so because of this necessary cash payment. I would suggest that perhaps we could get round the difficulty by creating a new part of the act that would apply especially to agriculture. We could introduce a new part to the act without amending the old clauses, a new part intended to meet agricultural conditions, and leave the old clauses applicable to business men. I may say that I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Fream, of Edmonton, Alberta, in which he states:

> I would not like to state how many farmers would take advantage of the act if they were able to raise the deposit required by the trustees, but am satisfied that this figure would run well into the hundreds if not the thousands. The desire to get a new start by making a clean-up through bankruptcy is steadily growing and more requests for information on this question are being received all the time.

I would ask the minister to take into consideration the addition of a new part to the act that would meet agricultural conditions.

[Mr. E. J Garland.]

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It is true that under the present law no one can force a farmer to assign but the farmer has a right to assign; the law is not changed in that regard. It is also a fact that in case of an assignment in future a custodian will be appointed by the receiver who will take charge of the assets of the farm. As to the matter of a deposit, there will be no necessity for such a deposit in future. The farmer will go to the receiver, he will make an assignment, and he will pay for the ordinary stamp which cannot amount to very much. I do not see what more we could do to help the farmer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask the minister if there is not a discrimination against the farmer in the act itself to-day. If I am informed correctly a farmer can only get a clearance after he has paid fifty cents on the dollar, but that does not apply to business men.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is no difference between a farmer and a trader as to that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The real thing in connection with the farmers is this: I do not think the farmers, as a whole, want to use the act as it now stands and I believe they have a reason for their attitude. In so far as the act itself is concerned, the farmer is in a better position than the trader is because the latter can be forced out of business through bankruptcy proceedings and the former cannot.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Some would like to be.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That may be but there is a cheaper way of meeting the situation than that—they can always stop. As the hon. gentleman has said there is no way of forcing them into bankruptcy. There is absolutely no remedy along the lines advanced by the hon. member for Bow River. Still, I am inclined to think that something ought to be done for the farmers on another line under this bankruptcy bill. After all, the farmer is in a different position from that of the ordinary trader. The farmer cannot continue paying anything if he loses his farm and his implements—he cannot do anything at all. If he goes into bankruptcy to-day he loses all equity in his farm, he loses his implements—in fact everything goes. We might well consider the framing of a separate section dealing with farmers which would enable the farmers, on a proper case being made out, —that is a case showing absolute good faith, showing that there was no room for chicanery or anything of that sort—to obtain a discharge as bankrupts and still hold what they would be entitled to hold under the usual provisions as to exemptions from seizure. It may be that that is a very novel idea. I know it is, but in my opinion it is a good idea although it is a novel one. The farmer, after all, is not usually in the same position, as to asking credits, as the man of business; he is really better off without them half the time. A bankruptcy law of this kind would place the farmers in districts of the country where they are to-day loaded down with debts —debts that I do not believe they will get away from for a good many years—in a position where they could no longer be sued; they could get their discharge; and they would still be left with the modicum of property which the exemptions to-day leave to them under ordinary proceedings. And how are the creditors hurt? I do not think the creditors are hurt at all. The creditors to-day have their hands held by the exemption clauses under the sheriff's sales; they cannot get this property anyway. On the other hand it is helping them, because, after all, it is better to have a man that is functioning in the community, a man who is not tied up with debts and costs, and all that sort of thing, going on ad infinitum. It would enable the farmers to get another start without really hurting their creditors at all, because their creditors cannot sell except to the extent that the local laws allow. They are held to the exemptions, and those exemptions, in the Northwest, are sufficient to enable a man to continue working his small farm and leave with him his necessary implements and thus enable him to go ahead. I think if we were to make some provision of that kind, it would prevent a tremendous lot of writs that are issued, particularly in the northwest country every year when there is not a good harvest. At such a time men cannot pay, but each creditor thinks the other creditor is going to get ahead of him. No one is getting anything out of it and everybody is losing. It seems to me this would give these farmers a new start and enable them to go ahead with some hope.

Mr. FORKE: I have no doubt the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) has very good intentions, but I would hesitate a long time before I would take advantage of any such legislation. I think perhaps the hon. member is beginning at the wrong end of the business to help the farmer.

Mr. JACOBS: He wants him to get a decent burial.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not very much confidence in reviving agriculture by amendments to the Bankruptcy Act, but at the same time I am sorry to see the suggestion of the member for West York received in the way it has been by the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke).

Mr. GAUVREAU: A bad reward.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A very bad reward. The fact to-day is—and it is worse now than it has ever been in my knowledge—that what the farmer of the country is able to earn and save is absorbed by the almost infinite processes of the law. There is no reason in the world why a succession of law suits, with accompanying costs, should pile up, score by score, on top of the farmer, when there is no immediate chance of realization, and all in the chase for priority. Our jurisdiction comes because of our bankruptcy powers alone. There should certainly be a process by which some official trustee would acquire the custody of such portion of the farmer's assets as go beyond the exemptions allowed by the provincial law, and at the same time enable the farmer to proceed, claims being merely continued with the trustee, without the necessary deed or process, and if accepted by the farmer as right, then no costs at all attach to it. In the meantime, the farmer is proceeding with his work, being faced with the necessity of paying his debts, but not with the necessity of paying mountains of costs besides. That the idea is practical there is no doubt at all. I have heard most fabulous tales of the numbers of writs issuing in our western courts to-day. Even allowing for a measure of exaggeration—though the number is undoubtedly very large —I do not question for one moment that there are lawyers' costs being piled upon the back of farmers in western Canada to the extent of millions which they cannot avoid, which the lawyers are not responsible for, but which the bankruptcy laws in large degree are responsible for.

Mr. JACOBS: May I suggest that as soon as the assignment is made no writs shall be issued.

Mr MEIGHEN: How can a farmer proceed after assignment? That is the whole trouble. He cannot do a thing. Once he assigns he is done. It is different with a merchant. When a farmer assigns as the hon member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) says, his farm and his implements and the like are gone.

Mr. JACOBS: I think the hon. member is mistaken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, when he is in bankruptcy he cannot proceed.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He cannot proceed under the present law. I have never seen a case, in the practice of law, under the bankruptcy law of a farmer proceeding to operate his land. He cannot retain his land under the present law and go ahead. That is simply what we are pleading for. I do not say that I have studied the matter as thoroughly as I should have in order to frame legislation, but I have surveyed the field sufficiently to convince myself that there is an opportunity for legislation that will remedy the present condition.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We were discussing the appointment of trustees, and not a change in the law to protect the farmers. My hon. friend from West York speaks of exempting for the farmer all that is exempted under the provincial law under an assignment. We have such a thing in the law now. If the hon. member will read clause 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, he will find the following provision:

> The property of the debtor divisible amongst his creditors (in this act referred to as the property of the debtor) shall not comprise the following particulars:
> (i) Property held by the debtor in trust for any other person;
> (ii) Any property which as against the debtor is exempt from execution or seizure under legal process in accordance with the laws of the province within which the property is situate and within which the debtor resides.

So that all the provincial exemptions are there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister will agree that it would be absolutely idle to expect a discharge to be given, in the way in which the act is administered, which would leave the farmer with his farm, and if the minister knows of any case—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Does the hon. member want to exempt the farm?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I want to have it so that farming operations can be continued.

Mr. JACOBS: You might as well exempt the trader and leave him in possession of all the merchandise in his warehouse.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think the hon. member is quite right in that statement. There is the farm, without which the farmer can do nothing. My idea was to leave him with a comparatively small farm so that he could continue farming operations.

Mr. JACOBS: What is he to assign to his creditors if you are going to leave him his farm? There is nothing to assign and no necessity to assign.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It may be it would be idle, as far as the creditors are concerned, but it would not hurt them very much. It may be the farmer is insolvent and unable to pay his debts, he has nothing but land.

Mr. JACOBS: He may have too much land, and that may be the reason for his trouble.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If he had too much land he would lose the excess land, and be left with just enough to continue farming.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: There is no exception in this section 25. It is general. Any property which is exempted in the provincial law is exempted under the Bankruptcy Act.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—Priority of claim.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: We have to read sections 26 and 27 together. I would ask to be allowed to make a change. The principle is the same, but it is a difference in drafting.

The CRAIRMAN: Section 26, as it is proposed to amend it, reads:

> Subsection 1 of section 51 is amended by inserting after the word "firstly" in the fifth line thereof the following words "costs and expenses of the custodian and".

And section 27, as it is proposed to amend it, reads:

> Section 52 of the said act is amended as follows:
> Chapter 17 of the statutes of 1921 is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:
> "52. When a receiving order or an assignment is made against or by any lessee under this act, the same consequences shall ensue as to the rights and priorities of his landlord as would have ensued under the laws of the province in which the debtor has his locality for the purposes of this act if the lessee at the time of such receiving order had been a person entitled to make and had made an abandonment or a voluntary assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors pursuant to the laws of the province; and nothing in this act shall be deemed to suspend, limit or affect the legislative authority of any province to enact any law provided for or regulating the rights and priorities of landlords consequent upon any such abandonment or voluntary assignment; nor shall anything in this act be deemed to interfere or conflict with the operation of any such provincial law heretofore or hereafter enacted in so far as it provides for or regulates the rights and priorities of landlords in such an event."

Mr. JACOBS: I am not very clear as to the meaning of the last clause:

> Nor shall anything in this act be deemed to interfere or conflict with the operation of any such provincial law heretofore or hereafter enacted in so far as it provides for or regulates the rights and priorities of landlords in such an event.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This means that we wish to have the privileges, which are now enjoyed by landlords in any of the provinces, continued under this legislation. We say that the provinces will be free to amend any of their existing legislation.

Mr. JACOBS: It does not seek to make that retroactive.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No retroactivity. This is the principle that is to be found in the law of 1875. We have reason to believe that with this last amendment nearly all the provinces will be satisfied.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Some time ago my hon. friend's chief interest was that of the creditors. I am afraid he is turning sharply right about face this time.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: How?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: His interest is now what the provincial legislature is going to say, not the interest of the creditor at all. This is a clause which is absolutely against the interests of creditors; it is a clause which makes entirely for additional support to landlords, which, in the great majority of cases, they do not require, and in many cases ought not to get.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The landlord is a creditor.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is quite true, but he is a creditor who is so secured that his claim against the estate is not, as a rule, very serious. The trouble with what my hon. friend is doing is that, not only does it secure landlords, but it enables landlords to make extra money, extra penalties, because their tenants go into liquidation. This is going back to the old law of forfeiture, which, I know, is still practised in many countries. It is really taking advantage of the penalties of forfeiture and making them apply to creditors generally. My hon. friend will not try to support this claim on the ground of fairness. On the mere question of equity, we cannot very well contrast the claim of the landlord, who still has his property, with the claim of the creditor, unsecured, who may have advanced goods or may have personal claims which, to a large extent, he loses. Under this amendment, the landlord holds his own, and he also gets something of somebody else's. It seems to me that we are now running violently back; that it is a retrograde step to extend the powers of these forfeitures and premiums on forfeitures —for this is what this amounts to. The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) the other day illustrated how this worked out in Quebec. He showed, in the case of an insolvent in Quebec, that insolvency breaking the lease, the landlord had a claim which ran up to something like sixteen months' rent—I think that was what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. JACOBS: Twenty-eight months was what I really said.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Past due rent accounted for twelve months of that.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not complaining so much about past due rent. There the landlord is not really in a better position than the ordinary creditor. The thing I so strenuously object to is that simply because a man fails, simply because his general creditors are losing money, the landlord receives an extra bonus of sixteen months' rent in advance, to be taken out of the general fund. It is not on the ground of equity that the minister will seek to uphold this clause, there is no equity in it. He will seek to uphold it on the ground that if he does not insert this provision, he will be interfering with provincial rights. Of course, there is an interference, I will not say with provincial rights, because the question is not one of provincial rights when we are dealing with bankruptcy, which is directly given to this House to deal with. We had a question of provincial rights under consideration when we were discussing the Nova Scotia legislation. This is a question of provincial law, not of provincial rights. It is not only the laws of the province of Quebec that are antagonistic to the bankruptcy sections. Under the Ontario law as to voluntary assignments, the landlord has a prior claim for a year's past rent and for three months' rent to come, and other provinces have practically similar provisions. But the minister will say: "Is it not very much beter to have a law that no one is going to attack, and this one has been attacked?" You will always have those who may attack any laws. But if he takes the position as minister of the Crown in charge of the law department of the country, that there is any question about this, he ought to withdraw his whole act, for the whole act offends against provincial law; it is worth nothing except when it does interfere with such law. This act does something which ordinary laws do not do and is in conflict with the laws of debtor and creditor as they are expressed in the statute boks of every province. So, if that stand be taken, and my hon. friend's position is to be logical, the whole act should go. But he will not take that course because, in so many words, bankruptcy comes within the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Now, over and above that, can my hon. friend point out any distinction under section 92 in favour of the landlord, as against the ordinary creditor, founded on provincial law? He knows just as well as I do—yes, better than I do—that the ordinary law here must apply, that all the rights given under section 92 are subject to those conferred by section 91. One cannot argue to-day with any hope of success that there is merit in giving the landlord a sixteen months' bonus at the expense of the ordinary creditors of the insolvent's estate. Yet that is being done. I would ask my hon. friend really to consider the advisability of dropping this section; it has no merit. It is idle to say that we any more offend provincial law in connection with the one item of real estate than we do in connection with any other property.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I do not suppose my hon. friend is satisfied with the law as we have it to-day giving the trustee power to dispose of the property occupied by the insolvent debtor, to sublet it if he likes, without any remedy being left to the landlord once his claim for three months' rent has been satisfied? My hon. friend says he sees no difference between the claim of a landlord and the claim of a merchant, and he pretends that under this amendment the landlord is left in a better position than the ordinary creditor. Well, in every province a privilege is always given to the landlord. Some provinces make the privilege twelve months, others six months, some three months. In England the privilege is six months. It is admitted that this feature of the bankruptcy law which we propose to amend is not satisfactory to the people of Canada. All the provinces have been complaining about it—creditors, landlords and the people generally are all dissatisfied. The provinces have the right to legislate on civil rights in this particular and to say what shall be the privilege allowed to a landlord. We have to amend our law. We have considered the point very carefully and after reading all the representations which came to us we have reached the conclusion that the best suggestion to offer this House is to restore to the landlords the privileges which they enjoyed under provincial laws. This is nothing new; we find it in the law of 1875, as I said before. If any provincial legislation is not satisfactory the people of the province can amend it through their representatives in the legislature. If they find that the privilege given to the landlord is too large they can reduce it; if they find it is not sufficient they can enlarge it.

But I really do not understand why my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) should so strongly oppose the amendment that we offer. There is no doubt that such a privilege is a civil right. My hon. friend says, "Well, the Minister of Justice is going to invoke that civil right question to justify the amendment." I do not need to invoke it. I am told that in a case now pending before one of our superior courts the judge will decide that this law is unconstitutional in so far as it affects the rights of landlords. If this is so, when we have at our disposal a means of giving to the landlords their rights and privileges, that is, by accepting the provincial laws in this respect, why not make the necessary amendment? As I say, it was done before and worked very smoothly, while under the present law we have complaints from all over the Dominion.

After all, Mr. Chairman, this is not of such great importance to creditors. My hon. friend mentioned the case of Quebec, where under certain extraordinary circumstances the privilege might extend to twenty-four or twenty-eight months. Well, to find such a case my hon. friend would probably have to go back one hundred years in the history of that province. We have never heard of a case where the landlord had a privilege for twenty-eight months, or for twenty months, or even for twelve months; it is generally six or nine months, never more. Under the present law the only privilege allowed to the landlord is three months as an ordinary creditor, with no recourse of any kind against the trustee of the estate. We are told by all the provinces that this is not just, and they ask us to change the law. Therefore we propose to change it as indicated by the amendment, that is, by restoring to landlords their rights under the laws of the various provinces. What insuperable objection can my hon. friend urge to the acceptation of the provincial laws? Is it because the privilege under them is too large? As I have said, it is very, very seldom that the privilege would extend to more than six months. You have twelve months in Ontario, you have six months in England, and in most of the provinces you have between nine and twelve months. This is the law which was accepted by the provinces. Why should we change it? Why should we limit it to three months and say that after that period the landlords are deprived of any further claim against the debtor's estate? I submit that such a limitation is not fair, and that the least my hon. friend could do when opposing this amendment is himself to offer a suggestion to overcome the present difficulty. But on the whole, if my hon. friend had to consider the drafting of a substitutive amendment, I really believe that after due reflection he would come to the same conclusion which I have arrived at myself and accept the provincial law. This was done, I repeat, in 1875, and it worked satisfactorily.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Chairman, I have no very good recollection of the law which was passed in 1875, but I have heard that one of the objections to that law, and one which brought about its repeal, was the superior rights which were allowed to the landlord over the other creditors of the insolvent debtor. That was one of the statements made in this House when the act to repeal the act of 1875 was up for consideration. The other great charge was in regard to the expense of winding up estates and the lack of responsibility on the part of trustees who were authorized under the act of 1875. When the present act was brought before parliament I happened to be Solicitor General and had a good deal to do with its passage through the House, and I can tell the hon. Minister of Justice that very careful consideration was given to the clauses in respect to landlords and the rights of landlords before the special committee which drafted the Bankruptcy Act felt satisfied that we were on solid ground. One objection to the law prior to 1920 was that in every province of Canada there was a difference in regard to the rights of landlords: Ontario had one law, Quebec had another; the western provinces had different laws to suit the people or the landlords of those parts of the country. One object to be achieved by the passage of the Dominion act was to get a uniform law so that creditors seeking to collect their claims would know where they stood no matter whether the debtor lived in Nova Scotia or in British Columbia. We wanted a uniform law, and after much consideration, after hearing representations from members of the bar of the various provinces, from chambers of commerce, from bankers' associations, accountants' associations, retail merchants' associations, we drafted the clause practically as it stands in the statute to-day —I think it has been varied since, but not to any considerable extent. We adopted it as a fair clause as between the landlord, the debtor, and the ordinary creditor. It must be borne in mind in considering the rights of landlords in this country that in the English-speaking provinces, where the common law of England was adopted, the law in respect to landlord and tenant was a law made by the landlord, in connection with which the tenants had not one word to say. We adopted that law, made as it was by the landlords of England, when we became a confederation, and the common law of England applies in this respect in all the provinces save in the province of Quebec. It was a one-sided law; it is a one-sided law to-day. It has been very much modified in the Imperial parliament during the last forty or fifty years and has been considerably modified by the various legislatures of the provinces of Canada. But why should a landlord be placed on a higher plane than any ordinary creditor? He is, in the act as it now stands: He is entitled to three months' rent in respect of past-due rent, above all other creditors; he can take that no matter what the estate is. Then he can get three months' future rent ahead of all other creditors; so that his rights are pretty well protected. But as I say, why should a landlord be on a different plane from any other creditor? His building is there; if his tenant leaves or is closed out by bankruptcy, his property remains and he can re-let it. So he is still protected under the present law, a law which has the advantage of being applied precisely in the same way in every province. When this question was before the House earlier in the present session on the resolution of an hon. member opposite calling for its repeal, I think, the Minister of Justice took occasion then to say he believed that a uniform law was essential respecting bankruptcy in Canada. Well, we have uniformity now, but instead of a single clause applying to landlords, instead of having a clause which' I submit with a good deal of confidence, reasonably protects the landlords of Canada, we propose to have nine laws, so that ordinary people dealing interprovincially will not know what their rights are in the various provinces. Chambers of commerce in Great Britain made representations to the committee of this parliament which sat on the question saying that the differences in the various laws of Canada respecting bankruptcy and insolvency very much hindered international trade. Creditors in Great Britain of debtors residing in Canada did not know just what was to become of their claims, on account of the varying laws respecting insolvency in the different parts of Canada. That was a further reason for having uniform law. Uniformity was what was aimed at—on fair and equitable grounds, of course; and we thought we had obtained a reasonably fair and uniform measure. Even before the act was passed intimations came to me as chairman of that committee and as Solicitor General in charge of the bill that the law would not be more than a few months old before it would be held to be unconstitutional in the courts of Quebec and afterwards by the Privy Council. It was not merely on one occasion that these intimations were made to me; two or three times at least the suggestion was offered, and it was always from some source in the province of Quebec that the attack on the Bankruptcy Act came. I have heard this statement repeated since. Now, the Minister of Justice has to-day intimated that a judge in the province of Quebec has held, or is about to hold, that the clause is unconstitutional in respect to the rights of landlords. I doubt very much whether such a judgment would stand; I would like to see it appealed to the highest tribunal in this country and subsequently to the judicial committee of the Privy Council. When we get a final pronouncement on that point it will be time enough to change our law; until then, I submit the present law should stand. It is uniform; it is fair; it is reasonable. Landlords from time immemorial have been noted for grasping everything in sight. The law as between landlord and tenant has never been favourable to the tenant; it has been a one-sided law made by the landlords in their own interest. If we are trying to get a little away from that; if we are trying to make a law fairer as between the parties, fairer as between the creditors, I think upon every reasonable ground we should be assisted in doing so. Other provinces may have objections; other provinces may have sent communications to the Department of Justice objecting to the present landlord and tenant clauses in the Bankruptcy Act. But that does not change my opinion of them; my opinion is that they are fair and reasonable on the one hand and uniform on the other, and I for one would be very slow indeed to change them.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend seems to have a very poor opinion of the landlords. He thinks that the law we have to-day in that respect should be continued. It is strange that he has never been scandalized at the law in his own province, where the privilege is given to the landlord to get twelve months' rent.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have been scandalized, and I made representations to the legislative assembly in respect to it long before this bankruptcy matter came before the House.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I think we may leave it to the legislative assembly to decide that point. My hon. friend says that we will have nine laws and that there will be no more uniformity in the act. But this does not change the uniformity of the act as a whole. There is no change in any essential part of the law; it is only a question of limiting the amount of the landlord's claim. If the landlord has the privilege for twelve months' rent as against three months, it makes a difference in the amount of his claim, but it involves no change in the law. I repeat, when from all the provinces we have complaints with regard to that clause, when we are told that the landlords should be treated more favourably, that the privileges which they enjoy under provincial legislation should be accepted in this Bankruptcy Act, it seems to me that we should give them under our law what they have under the provincial law. My hon. friend says that we have been told by English traders and manufacturers that the fact that we have had many bankruptcy laws in this country was injurious to trade generally. That is true. But what is more important I think, Mr. Chairman, is that we should make our law such that it would be satisfactory to the people of Canada; and, if to-day we can satisfy the provinces by giving to the landlords that privilege which they have been claiming, we will make sure that our law which has been in existence now for over three years will be made permanent. Is this point of such importance, that when it is a question of choosing between a permanent law and a certain privilege, which you are not granting to the landlords but simply continuing to them, you should hesitate? For my part I do not think so. I have had a little experience in legislation; I know something of the mentality of the people of my province and perhaps of the other provinces; and I say without any hesitation that we should grant to the provinces or to those who represent the provinces this privilege which the landlords have always enjoyed.

Mr. Chairman, this is the last amendment I have to offer. I have brought down this bill only for the good of trade generally. I wanted to protect the creditors and protect at the same time the debtors. The House has been kind enough to accept nearly all the amendments which I have offered, and I would ask them to accept this last one. If it does not work properly and to the advantage of creditors and debtors it will be time, another year, to amend it; but I feel sure that if it is accepted to-day it will be kept on the statute books.

Mr. CLARK: May I ask a couple of questions? First of all I would like to know the nature of the complaints in regard to the old section received from the province of British Columbia, and the names of any organizations that have submitted these complaints.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have not the names of any organizations in British Columbia, but from what we heard from traders and manufacturers generally this clause never was satisfactory in any of the provinces.

Mr. CLARK: Do I understand the minister to say that he has received complaints only from individuals in the province of British Columbia, or has he not received any complaints from that province?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have been given to understand, from representations from all the provinces, that we should amend this clause.

Mr. CLARK: If the amended section is passed will the creditors, in the event of the assignor holding a very valuable lease, receive any advantage from that lease? In other words, will the trustee in any circumstances be able, under this amendment, to enter into possession of the property on behalf of the creditors?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: It depends in what province the trustee will be. If it is in the province of Quebec, I know that the trustee will have the right to keep the property and use it to the very end of the lease; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. JACOBS: Does it not all depend on the terms of the lease?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Certainly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think they nearly always call for forfeiture. My hon. friend asked me what I thought would be fair. May I read what a very experienced man in this line of business says on this very point?

> Until the Bankruptcy Act was put in force and the present sections regarding landlords' rights were made effective a debtor might be the owner of a very valuable lease and the return to be recovered from his assets for the benefit of his creditors very largely depend upon the ability of the estate to retain such lease. Leases between landlords and tenants invariably contain clauses that in the event of an assignment the lease shall terminate, and enforcing these rights landlords were able to cancel valuable leases to the detriment of the creditors of a debtor. When the Bankruptcy Act was passed provisions were inserted which allowed the trustee to continue and dispose of the lease under terms which protected the landlord but saved the value of the lease to the creditors. No harm was done to the landlord but the creditors' and debtor's interests were protected.
> It is now proposed to do away with the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act and place creditors back in the position where with a valuable lease belonging to an estate, the landlord will be permitted to cancel the lease. Thus the landlord will reap a benefit from an assignment to which he would not otherwise be entitled, while the return to creditors will be reduced.
> It is difficult to see what good reason can be adduced for granting such an advantage to the landlord at the expense of the other creditors, particularly when the sections presently in force in the Bankruptcy Act do not cause him any monetary or other loss but merely deprive him of an advantage which he would not otherwise be entitled to—except with the making of an assignment by the debtor for the benefit of his creditors.

So my hon. friend will see that it is really a very large question so far as the creditors are concerned. I do not hold with forfeitures. I think one of the chief and best functions of a court is that it can, and generally does, give relief against forfeitures. One of the worst kind of forfeiture is the forfeiture of leases on grounds which are not based on absolute harm and damage to the landlord. This is one of them. We have no room for relief in these proceedings at all. We are relegated to a standing general law, which means that we are relegated to the terms of these leases plus the disabilities of the general law. My hon. friend asks, what do I think is fair? I know there has been trouble with some landlords in Ontario. They were accustomed to have a prior claim for twelve months arrears. That has been cut down to three months and I know cases where these landlords have objected bitterly, and I dare say the minister has received representations on that point. But I do not see why the landlord sleeping on his rights, working up preferred claims against the creditors of an insolvent, should be in a position to demand very much consideration. It does seem to me that the three months of arrears that he now gets is a very reasonable period, and I would leave him just where he is under this act. How is he hurt under the act so long as he acts with fair promptness? And if he does not act with fair promptness why should his delay affect creditors?—they are not to blame. My hon. friend has made out a splendid case for a very bad section, and he asks the House to pass it. We have passed a whole lot of other amendments, and I think he should be willing to make not a fifty-fifty, but a hundred-to-one break on this, and let us hold this one section, which after all will help the small unsecured creditor, and report the rest of his bill.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have great respect for the legislators who will pass this bill. I have also great respect for the provincial legislators. I think we should give some consideration to the legislatures of the different provinces who have given some special privilege to the landlord. I think that by accepting their views, and the laws they have given to the people of each province, we are on the safe side. That is why, if the House is satisfied, I ask for the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): Shall the clause as amended carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Carried on division.

On section 31—Officer to be assigned to duty by Chief Justice.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): The following is added as section 65 (a). It is new:

65 (a) There shall be one official receiver in each bankruptcy district or division who shall have and perform such duties and responsibilities as are prescribed by this act and rules and who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council.

Section as amended agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. JACOBS: I should like to move the following amendment to be known as 32 (a):

32 (a) The said act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 88 (a) thereof:

88 (b) Any notarial copy of any deed, assignment, transfer, composition or retrocession executed in the province of Quebec before a notary public shall be accepted throughout Canada as prima facie evidence of the original deed without the production of such original deed.

Mr. BAXTER: Why not make that apply to the notaries public in all the provinces?

Mr. JACOBS: The notary public in the other provinces is not the same functionary as a notary public in the province of Quebec. In that province, when he affixes the signature to a document it gives it authenticity, that is, makes it prima facie evidence.

Mr. MARTELL: It is the same in the other provinces.

Mr. BAXTER: There is not very much difference between a notary in Quebec and a notary in the Maritime provinces. In my province a notary public certifies to a document and in some cases his certificate is accepted in certain courts in other parts of the Empire although not necessarily in New Brunswick. But his signature is always authenticated by his seal and his act always obtains credit. In marine matters, for example, my hon. friends will realize the efficacy of a notarial protest. There will be no difficulty if my suggestion is carried out. In the province of New Brunswick notaries must be members of the bar, or are subject to certain training and examination. I think that is also true of the other provinces and there can be no good reason why the certificate of one of these notaries cannot be accepted.

Mr. MARTELL: I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken. It is true that in the province of Quebec the legal profession and the notarial profession are separate, that is to say, a man who is a notary is not necessarily a barrister, but in the province of Nova Scotia every man who is a barrister is a notary. At any rate it is true in ninety cases out of a hundred. My hon. friend is seeking to give to notaries public in the province of Quebec rights that would not be given to notaries public in any other province of the Dominion. He can accomplish the whole effect of what he wants by simply obliterating the idea that this should be confined to any particular province. All that my hon. friend (Mr. Baxter) is asking is that the certificate of the notary in other provinces be accepted in the same way as the certificate of the notary public in the province of Quebec. The only difference between us, as I understand it,—although I am not conversant with the law of the province of Quebec —is that a notary in that province is the custodian of the document which he draws, and he gives the certified copy. Now in the province of Nova Scotia—I think the same thing obtains in the province of New Brunswick—we file our documents in the office of the registrar of deeds who records them there. If they have to go outside the province they have to be certified before a notary public. That is all my hon. friend wants as regards the province of Quebec. Why, then, make any exception?

Mr. CLARK: Under the proposed amendment it would be necessary for the notary public in each case to compare the copies with the original. I personally know notaries public, and many of them are not even competent to do that. I would hesitate to see the amendment apply to the provinces generally.

Mr. JACOBS: As I understand, in the other provinces outside of Quebec practically any office boy who is twenty-one years of age may be a notary public.

Mr. CLARK: I know provinces where the provincial government has made a habit of raising a revenue by charging $2.50, or some such small fee, and authorizing a man to become a notary public. We do not want that class of men making evidence for the courts.

Mr. JACOBS: In Quebec it is entirely different.

Mr. MARTELL: I defy my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Clark) to show me any person in the province of Nova Scotia who has been appointed a notary public and has not qualified.

Mr. CLARK: I said nothing about Nova Scotia.

Mr. MARTELL: In the province of Nova Scotia it has always been urged that a barrister should be made a notary public. Now the whole question of a notarial seal is to make it prima facie evidence in a court of justice. I claim it is grossly unfair to give to any one province of the Dominion the right to have the notarial seal of their notaries public accepted in any court of this Dominion, and so make the status of a notary public in that province superior to that of any other notary public. All that is asked by this amendment and all that we are urging on behalf of the English-speaking provinces, is that the seal of a duly constituted notary public shall be accepted as prima facie evidence. That is fair because we have not a notarial profession in the Maritime provinces separate and distinct from the legal profession as is the case in the province of Quebec. That is no reason, however, why legal men should not be regarded as qualified to give a notarial certificate that certain documents are true copies. Even though you have not a distinct notarial profession, why should not his seal be accepted as prima facie evidence in any court in the land? This profession in the province of Quebec is a distinct profession compared with the other provinces of Canada. It is an old French custom, and it is an ideal custom; I am not criticizing it; I admire everything that pertains to the French custom; but I object absolutely to saying that a French notary public seal in the province of Quebec is superior in the courts of this land to my notary public seal as a barrister and notary public in the province of Nova Scotia. If this act is going to be a general act, the minister should be prepared to say that when a notary public, no matter from what province he comes, gives his seal, that seal has a right to the same consideration in every court in this country. That is all I have to say in that regard, and I will oppose the motion of my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), if his seal is going to be better than mine. I am from the province of Nova Scotia, a notary public of that province, appointed on the recommendation of the government of the day led by Mr. G. H. Murray. When he had sufficient confidence in me to make me a notary public, my seal as a notary public of that province should be accepted as equal to the seal of any notary public in the Dominion of Canada.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Perhaps my hon. friend will agree to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes.

Mr. MORIN: I wish to say a word in regard to the comparison that has been made between the notaries public of the province of Quebec and those of other provinces. There is considerable difference between the functions of and the work done by, notaries in different parts of the country. In the English provinces any one, even a shoemaker, can become a notary. He does not need to be a lawyer.

Mr. MARTELL: We do not appoint them in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MORIN: In the province of Quebec only persons who have gone through legal studies, graduates from universities, who have gone through the same studies as a lawyer, are entitled to practise the notarial profession. The great difference between the two systems is that under the English law the document is signed by the parties, and, after being attested or authenticated by the notary, is handed to the parties, and is the original document between the parties, and the one that has to be accepted. In the province of Quebec, under the notarial system, the document is drafted and signed by the parties, but not handed to them; it is kept in the hands of a notary and the parties only get certified copies of it. If the original must, according to law, be deposited with the notary and remain in his hands, it is an impossibility that it be handed to the parties to be utilized in the other provinces or anywhere else. Therefore, on account of the fact that only copies of these notarial documents are accepted and can be forwarded to other provinces, it is only just that they should be accepted in the other provinces and have the same force as the original.

Mr. MARTELL: That is quite true. I am not objecting to the notarial copy taken in Quebec being accepted. I have every admiration for that system. But why not accept the copy of a notarial document from the other provinces, when it is duly certified with the hand and seal of the notary?

Mr. MORIN: We have justices of the peace in the province of Quebec who are entitled to certify.

Mr. MARTELL: Have they seals?

Mr. MORIN: They can have seals, but it adds nothing to their capacity.

Mr. MARTELL: It is the whole thing.

Mr. MORIN: It adds nothing to their capacity, and they can attest documents as well as notaries. We do not ask the privilege for a justice of the peace, we simply ask it for the notaries.

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference to what the hon. member has said, I am not advocating that the notary should give up the original. I am not opposing the provision that his copy should be taken as duly certified. Where documents are filed in the province of Nova Scotia they are recorded in the office of the registrar of deeds, and if the notary wishes to give out a copy he certifies to it, and it is accepted in the courts when it is certified by the notary public. Now with respect to the status of a notary public, I admit that in Quebec the profession of notary public is practically on an equality with the legal profession. In the province of Nova Scotia the majority of notaries are lawyers, and all we are asking for is that when the notaries of the province of Quebec are given the right to certify to documents, we should have equal rights to certify to documents in the province of Nova Scotia, or in any other province.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it not all really covered by the Canada Evidence Act? That is where it ought to be. We have a whole lot of these provisions there. Now the hon. member is bringing in papers and documents into the discussion. Exemplifications and documents are quite common in other provinces, and I should have thought that when you go to an official in the province of Quebec an exemplification from a prothonotary would be the proper thing.

Amendment (Mr. Jacobs) withdrawn.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

ISSUANCE OF FIATS: HOPPE LEASES—FRANCHISE—PRIME MINISTER'S PROPOSED VISIT—CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS DIRECTORS' REPORT

On motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means.

[Mr. Martell.]

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I desire, on this motion, to call the attention of the House to one or two matters: First, the question of granting fiats in connection with claims against the government, as representing the Crown. The other day, when I had opportunity, I asked the Prime Minister to make a statement as to how the public might be made aware of the issuing of these fiats. Sometimes they come to the notice of the public only after a fiat has been issued and the action started in the Exchequer Court. This proceeding is getting rather on the public's nerves, inasmuch as they only hear of the matter incidentally. I think provision should be made for the registration and for a public announcement of the issue of all fiats. It came out the other day—and it took some time to bring it out—that a fiat was issued before the public had heard anything about it in regard to coal leases, the most valuable coal leases in the country. The public should know when a fiat is issued so that parties concerned, individuals or communities, might guard themselves. Fiats are being issued, and the cases go to trial, and the public have no early knowledge of the matter. I think the Minitser of Justice ought to make some arrangement, not a law but some practice, by which the public would be cognizant of the issuing of these fiats. This practice of granting fiats is a very old one; it has prevailed for years; that you cannot sue the Crown without first getting the consent of the Crown to a trial of the issue raised. That law may be all right; but abuses may grow up, and they have grown up, and it is obvious that a number of other actions of the same kind are likely to occur.

Mr. VIEN: Supposing my hon. friend had received notice that a fiat had been granted. what remedy would be in his hands against it?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I want the public to know that a fiat has been issued. At present there is no publicity in the matter.

Mr. VIEN: Is the case not then brought before a public court of justice, in the open?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Yes; but the public is not informed when a fiat is issued, and there is no reason why they should not be informed at once of the issue of a fiat and particularly as to the importance of the interest involved. Take the case of the coal lease, the most valuable coal lease that was ever heard of before in the world, if we can believe the evidence that came out recently. A fiat was issued in that case, and it is now being cancelled by legislation. There is no reason why some record should not be made so as to inform the public thereof.

Mr. MARTELL: Suposing the public receive notice that a fiat has been issued, what right have the public to come in unless they are an interested party? It is simply a case of expense.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The public has a right to know if a fiat is issued especially if it concerns a public right. If anybody is concerned, if a province is concerned, there should be publicity. Also there should be a clearing up of the law and practice in regard to the issuing of fiats.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): It could be announced in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Certainly. The moment a fiat is issued. there should be an announcement to that effect in the Canada Gazette. The minister is the custodian of the King's honour, and these fiats are issued so that the claim may be tried in the courts. I should like the Minister of Justice to bring down—not to-day, but as soon as he can—a list of the fiats that have been issued within the last ten years, with a memorandum showing what has been done in each case; how many fiats are now outstanding that have not yet been tried; and a little statement from the department clearing up this subject which has come up in our legislation, which is being discussed more or less in public, but of which the public are not fully informed.

Mr. MARTELL: Would it not be more in the interest of the public to know why fiats are refused, and to have some way whereby there could be an appeal to some body to say whether the government was right or wrong in issuing a fiat, because if the government does issue a fiat, even if notice is given, who can come in except those parties who are interested in the action?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): My hon. friend is arguing my case that there ought to be publicity to these things. The situation should be cleared up. If the law officers of the Crown would prepare a little memorandum not like a judgment, but giving a good deal of information on the subject, it would be of value. I know of a case in which a certain portion of the community of this country is very much interested, and yet no announcement of the granting of the fiat has been made. Those who are trying to strengthen their claim and to recover against the government are active all the time, but some of the parties who might be interested have no notice. They should have that notice, and I leave it to the minister whether he will bring down in a few days a list of the fiats and what has occurred in connection with each.

Another matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the House at this time is this: Will the government inform the House whether they intend to introduce a measure this session dealing with the franchise? We know we are to have a redistribution measure, but the redistribution of seats in this House is not the important thing to the people of this country. They want to know what is to be the franchise under which the next election is to be held. An election may occur any day in this country; we very nearly saw one last week, but we have only a somewhat ancient Franchise Act, and I see no reason why an announcement should not be made to the country at this session whether, and when, we are to have a Franchise Act. Such an announcement might facilitate the conduct of the business of the session.

Before this House closes, I should like to see a debate as to the proposed visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to England some time this year in connection with imperial matters. We ought to have a full discussion in this House whether there can be made at that conference commitments which would bind this parliament in any way. A discussion of some account has already occurred in England as to commitments that were made by visiting prime ministers over there that involved enormous expenditures, for instance, the Singapore case, although I am not going into that. With all due respect to the Prime Minister, I think he would be in a much better position if before he went overseas we had a discussion in this House as to the views of the people. He is a young Prime Minister and Shakespeare says something about the temptation of "silken dalliance." There is a silken dalliance in the drawing rooms of the duchesses of London, and a Prime Minister may come within, I will not say that temptation, but that presentation. Again I say that it would be highly desirable that we have a discussion in this House on this very question.

Just one other thing to which I wish to draw attention, and I will conclude. I refer to the excellent report that was presented to this House last night by the new Board of National Railway Directors. It is an excellent report, and it discusses several things that are creditable to the board. For one thing, it shows that they are now trying to consolidate all these different lines and systems into one, and they announce a very much needed connection, between the old Canadian Northern and the Transcontinental, at Long Lake. The same kind of work must and ought to be done immediately in Toronto. where there are some very pressing questions in regard to connecting up the different lines. There has been a discussion and many people in Toronto are interested in having a central ticket office for the Canadian National railways in that city. I find also that Montreal seems to be interested in the Canadian National railways having as good a ticket office as the Canadian Pacific has on the opposite corner in Toronto. Why has the National Railways not as good right to have the same accommodation as the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. CHAPLIN: What about the office at Paris?

Mr. MACLEAN (York) I leave that where it was left to-day by the leader of the Opposition. There is no reason why the National railways should not have a ticket office in Toronto, and when they build that office, they should build up a fairly good one, so that the company might have general offices in the same building. Of course Toronto has for a time lost the headquarters of the National railways, but I think Toronto and Ontario some day will be so much convinced of the superiority of public ownership as applied to railways that the government will be very glad to recognize Toronto as the centre—

Mr. FIELDING: Of the universe.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): —of that organization. The Board of Railway Directors are making headway; the road is being co-ordinated, straightened out and greatly improved. Nevertheless, some of the newspapers say that "the new railway chief sees a lean year ahead of the Canadian National railways." I do not see any lean year ahead of the National railways. They are working out; they are being co-ordinated, improved and accepted by the country. I wish to take this opportunity of saying that as a friend of public ownership I am very much pleased with this report, and, following up what I said last night, I believe when the next report comes in it will embody a financial and mileage statement covering all the roads. In that way the people will realize that they have a real national system. As the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) said last night—and it cannot be said too often—the shareholders of the Canadian National Railway System to-day are the people of Canada and are in competition with a company-owned system. And as far as I can gather, the verdict of public opinion in America is that national railways have more in them for service to the people than have the company-owned roads.

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): As we know, under the practice that now obtains, if a person feels that he has a cause of action against the government he applies for a fiat, his application goes to the Department of Justice, where the law officers of the Crown consider it and advise whether or not a fiat should issue. Now, it seems to me most absurd that any department of government should have the right to decide whether or not an action should be permitted to be brought against another department. I am not saying this in derogation of the present government, because I believe it is the best that Canada could have at the present time. And I speak as a partisan; I do not deny that I am a Liberal partisan.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You have to be.

Mr. MARTELL: I do not deny it. I am not a Progressive, I am not a Conservative, I am not a hedger; I am a Liberal. I repeat, no department of government should have the right to say whether or not a person who believes he has a cause of action against the government should be permitted to bring it before the courts of the country. I submit, with all deference to the opinion of a great lawyer like my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), for whom I have a warm regard, and to the opinion of my other legal friends in this House, that it is only fair and just that a person who has a claim against the government should be allowed to bring an action in the proper courts for the enforcement of his claim. As the law stands to-day, an aggrieved person must first file a petition of right, and the officials of the department are called upon to consider the petition and advise whether or not a fiat should be issued.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is it not the Department of Justice?

Mr. MARTELL: That is one of the departments of government which is usually best administered; always the best men are to be found in that department. The department of the government immediately concerned presents its side of the question, and the Department of Justice naturally is inclined to favour another department in reaching a conclusion on the merits. I say that is a wrong principle. If a question of constitutionality arises we do not decide it in this House. For instance, when the Wheat Board legislation was questioned on the ground that it was ultra vires of parliament, it was submitted to the law officers of the Crown for their opinion. If a dispute takes place regarding the relative rights of the federal and the provincial authorities, the dispute is referred to the Supreme Court of Canada under the provisions of the British North America Act, and in case of disagreement we go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Where a humble citizen of this country wishes to bring an action against the Crown I submit he should have the right to go before an independent body, such as the Supreme Court of Canada, to decide whether or not a fiat should issue in order that right may be done. If we are to have the dispensation of justice beyond suspicion there should be no room for contaminating influences in any shape or form. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that as the law stands at the present time it is absolutely not in accordance with the democratic spirit of this country. I do not think this government is capable of any wrong-doing, being a Liberal government, but on the principle of giving everyone the benefit of the doubt, I think this government could not do better than let the question of issuing fiats go before the highest court of judicature of the Dominion for decision. I am strongly of this opinion because I claim—and it is a claim which I shall always advocate—that where a man feels he has a just cause of action against the federal authority he should be at liberty to go before the Supreme Court of Canada or any other independent tribunal in order that it may be determined whether or not in the circumstances a fiat should issue in order that right may be done.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) I may say there is no objection to our giving him the number of fiats granted during the last ten years. If he would be kind enough to put a question on the order paper, he could make it clear to us if he wishes to be informed how many of these fiats were disposed of, how many are still pending, and in what way judgment was given.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): No, I do not want that information. I will put a question on the order paper. If I may be pardoned, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend made an argument on somewhat different lines from my own. I wanted to state that the public should know as to the issue of these fiats and, as my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) says, they should be published in the Canada Gazette.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is another question. There is no mystery about fiats, Mr. Speaker. They are granted for the prosecution of claims against the Crown when it is shown to the satisfaction of the Department of Justice that the person aggrieved has, prima facie, a good cause of action. My hon. friend says that publicity should be given to such fiats. Well, publicity is already given by the fact that every one of these cases has to be tried before the Exchequer Court, one of the supreme tribunals of Canada. I do not see what better publicity we could give than what we have now.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would point out that one party has the advantage. He knows that he has the fiat; he prepares his case, but others who may be interested know nothing about it and have no chance to prepare their case. The general public should have knowledge of it, and by mere publication of the fiat, when issued, in the Canada Gazette, such notice would be given.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Anyone who is interested in the case has the right at any stage to intervene, and his rights are always protected. I do not see what would be the advantage of publishing in the Canada Gazette or in any other paper the granting of the fiat, but if it is the wish of the House that a procedure of that nature be followed, I would personally have no objection to it.

Now, as to the question raised by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) he is of the opinion that if a fiat is refused an appeal should be granted to the applicant. But I may say that very few petitions for fiats are refused. Since I have had the honour of presiding over the Department of Justice I do not think we have refused one. Every time a fiat is refused the government is responsible to the people. The provision to prevent action being taken against the Crown is a necessary protection—

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I do not say it is not.

Sir LOMER GOUIN:—otherwise no one could count the number of actions that would be taken against the Crown. But it is only when there is any reasonable doubt in the matter that a fiat is refused; and it can be said that if a government did refuse it without justification, the people have a method of redress. I do not see how we could justify the method proposed by the hon. member for Hants, namely, that decisions of the Governor in Council on petitions for fiat should be submitted to the judgment of the Exchequer Court or of the Supreme Court. If you are to revise or reverse the decisions of the Governor in Council respecting the granting or refusing of petitions of right, my view is that it would be preferable for the good government of this country to say that in future anyone shall be free to take action against the Crown whenever he wishes. I might change that view after further argument, but just now I think it would be preferable to adhere to the practice that we have always followed.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard all the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin). He will not misunderstand me when I say that I quite approve of the legislation enabling the government to reverse its action of last year and to withdraw the fiat, which, unwittingly or otherwise, it granted to the Hoppe interests. I believe in the fiat system; I do not believe that the Crown should be placed at the mercy of any litigant, foreign or domestic, who merely chooses to enter action and place expense upon the state. The Crown has exercised the right to refuse a fiat in cases where, in the judgment of the law officers of the Crown, there was not a case reasonably actionable, that is to say, where there was not evidence of a reasonable belief of substantial merit; but it has refused also in cases where the applicant's case rested upon purely—not debatable—technical grounds. In the case of the Hoppe application, the fiat never should have been granted, because the grounds were ostensibly and obviously technical. There was a cancellation; they claimed it was not valid because of some technical defect of service or some technical defect of wording. Nothing could have been more purely technical than the whole ground upon which the application rested. In my judgment, the fiat should have been refused from the beginning; indeed, the granting of it was a variation from the established practice in such cases. It appears to have subsequently developed after the fiat was granted—

Mr. MARTELL: Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Suppose he regards the whole thing as technical; the Crown being one of the parties to the litigation, does he think the Crown should have the right to say whether or not an action should be brought against it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly; that is just what I have been asserting. I am quite sure that the Department of Justice and the government would get into interminable difficulties if any other course prevailed. In this case, after the fiat had been, in my judgment, wrongly, granted, it developed that the parties granted the fiat had made some agreement with one Murdock whereby Murdock was to litigate the claim and seek to re-establish the Hoppe interests on the flimsy foundation of these technical allegations. An investigation took place before a Senate committee, where it was brought out that once the interested parties felt sure of the fiat, and after it had been granted—in some instances, indeed before the granting of it—speculative sales took place. Murdock had secured from the Isenberg interests—another name for the Hoppe interests, the two, Isenberg and Hoppe, having been originally associated in the lease,—some agreement whereby he was to take over the litigation. He was to pay the Isenberg interests a considerable sum of money in the event of success; then, after the success, if the leases were sold he was to pay some more, depending upon the amount he obtained for them, until a maximum of, if I remember correctly, a million dollars was reached, beyond which he was not to pay anything to the Isenberg interests. This was the first agreement—all the outcome of the stand taken by the government last session. Shortly after making it—perhaps before, I do not know; very probably contemporaneously with it—Murdock entered into another agreement for the sale of the entire interests, dependent, of course, upon his success in the litigation. This agreement is to a party in Ottawa, Mr. Church, and the sale price is two millions of dollars. This figure, had the transaction gone on—the agreement was actually made and subsisted—would have netted a million dollars to these speculators all out of the government and out of the lands of this country. But not content with that, negotiations proceeded for a third sale. I do not know how far they succeeded, but I do know that the parties were confident of success of a sale to interests in the Old Land for something in the neighbourhood of three million dollars. This is the speculative structure erected on the champertous agreement entered into by Murdock with the Isenberg estate after the government, having adopted an attitude of sympathy last session, finally yielded, reversed the policy of the former government and granted the fiat. Well, what a structure! Sales at a million, then two million, then sales all but concluded, if not finally concluded indeed, at something beyond that! The Isenberg-Hoppe interests were originally cancelled because the parties were in default, and as well in the presence of the fact that the holders of those leases were not acting as holders of leases should act in relation to this country when they were holders of the same, and at a time when we had a right to demand from those in possession of government lands in this country fidelity to the cause of the state. But at all events the legal basis of the cancellations was default, and that default existed there was no doubt whatever. Default had existed in dozens of other cases, and default had been followed by cancellation and by the same form of cancellation as was applied in the case of the Hoppe-Isenberg leases. Default is reported to the minister time after time in the Interior department. Very often, I know, a longer time is given than was given in the Hoppe case, but there is no obligation in the world to give any longer time. It is entirely a question of what is the interest of the state in the circumstances, and the legal basis for cancellation was just as strong in the case of the Hoppe-Isenberg leases as in the case of any of the others.

The government last session brought in legislation to validate the former cancellations, some opinion having been given, based on a court decision, that a cancellation which read that the leases would be cancelled after such a date instead of reading that the leases were cancelled, was not in strict compliance with the technical law, and consequently might be upset on application to the court. The government brought in a bill to validate such cancellations, to validate the services, but through one manoeuvre and another in the Upper House and here a clause was inserted which had the practical effect of enabling the Isenberg interests to escape and of enabling the government to grant a fiat in such a case. Opening the door, of course, led to someone entering, and the Isenberg interests were not slow to enter, and the government granted a fiat. This was followed by the investigation of the Senate with the revelations to which I have just briefly referred, and as a consequence the government comes this session and asks for power to reverse the stand it took.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My right hon. friend has made a statement about the legislation of last session with respect to cancellation. I did not understand that there was any distinction made as between the Hoppe leases and any other leases.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The history was this, to be more detailed. I have not looked into it recently, but I ask my hon. friend to correct me if I am wrong. The bill was introduced first of all in the Senate. That bill contained two clauses. The first clause provided for the validation of the cancellations, a perfectly proper clause. It was a government bill.

The second clause provided for the saving of the right of action in respect of all cancellations not a year old. There was a great deal to be said for that, and no exception was taken to that because all were treated alike. Where there was not a year-old cancellation the right of application for fiat was reserved. Such was the bill as introduced. In the Senate clause 3 was added on the motion of an hon. member there. Clause 3 provided that notwithstanding anything herein contained certain lands should no longer be leased—and the lands were described; they were the Hoppe lands—by the minister and could not be leased unless parliament subsequently passed an act enabling the minister to do so. Parenthetically I might say that the Hoppe lands on my recommendation had been withdrawn by the late government from the regulations of the department, so they could no longer be leased by the minister. They could have been leased, of course, by the Governor in Council. This clause would have provided that they could not be leased except on the authority of a subsequently enacted statute. Such was clause 3, added in the Senate.

Then clause 4 provided for reports to this House of all cancellations within so many days after the opening of the succeeding session. It was a harmless clause.

Clause 5, however, is the one to which I draw special attention. That was the third clause added in the Senate. Clause 5 provided that nothing herein contained should affect any case in which litigation had been commenced, legal proceedings instituted, before, if I remember correctly, the 20th of May, 1922. My date may not be exactly correct. In such form the bill passed the Senate and came to this House. Clauses 1 and 2 passed without question. Clause 3 was supported by hon. gentlemen of the opposition and by, I think, most hon. gentlemen to my left, but was stoutly resisted by the minister on the ground that to subsequently enact that certain lands were without the regulations and beyond the scope of the government's unrestrained power and could only be disposed of by parliament evidenced a lack of trust in himself as minister, and he called on his followers to vote it down. After a tie vote in committee the Chairman gave the casting vote in favour of the minister, and clause 3 was deleted by this House. No objection was taken to clause 4, but a perusal of Hansard will show, and I feel certain this is correct, that it really never was taken up in the committee at all. No words of the members of the committee relate to clause 4, nor does it appear to have been called by the Chair. However, that is immaterial because clause 4 was unobjectionable.

Coming to clause 5, a motion was made by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) to alter that clause, to strike it out and substitute in its place a much more liberal clause, that is to say, a much more wide-open clause. The motion proposed by the hon. member for Brome provided, not that in cases where litigation had been commenced, legal proceedings instituted, but in cases where application by petition of right had been entered prior to a certain date in July, in such cases the provisions of the act should not apply. Clearly, should the motion proposed by the hon. member have passed both Houses, then anyone at all could have come along before that date in July and by commencing proceedings have saved all his rights as against the bill. This did pass the Commons, and in such form the bill went to the Senate, with clauses 1 and 2 passed, clause 3 deleted, clause 4 ignored but appearing in the bill, and clause 5 as amended by the motion of the hon. member for Brome.

In the Senate objection was taken to the amendments of the House of Commons. Objection was taken to the deletion of clause 3. Objection was taken to clause 5, and very strong objection, and as a consequence at the close of the session managers of both Houses were appointed, the government refusing to agree to the Senate amendments, and while the House waited here until after midnight these managers wrestled over the problem, and finally the Prime Minister came to parliament and said that it had been decided to drop clauses 3 and 5. He meant, no doubt—at least I am willing to concede that he meant —to drop the House's alterations in respect of clause 5. What he meant in respect of clause 3 I really do not know, because we had already dropped clause 3 in this House, and the Senate was objecting to our deletion. I am not worrying about clause 3 now, so I do not debate just where the misunderstanding arose in that regard, but I would draw particular attention to clause 5. The effect of the government intimation to this House in respect of clause 5 was that it was to go, there was to be no clause 5 Consequently, I rose in the House myself and complimented the government upon dropping clause 5, fully understanding that the bill was to stand then as introduced by the government in the Senate in the first place. In such form the bill should have passed. Such a bill treated everybody the same, citizens of another country or citizens of our own, and no citizen of another country has any right to ask to be given better access to the courts of this country than we grant the citizens of our own land. Therefore, I complimented the government on its decision to yield to the requisition of the Senate and leave out clauses 3 and 5. But to my amazement when the bill came out clause 5 appeared in the form in which it had originally passed the Senate, not in the form in which it was amended by the motion of the hon. member for Brome. Clause 4 appeared also, and that was inserted in the statutes of last year as one of the laws passed by the parliament of Canada. Coming then under this clause 5, as it appears in the statutes, application was made for the fiat, it evidently being considered that legal proceedings were taken within the time fixed in the original amendment in the Senate, and the fiat was granted by this government.

Mr. VIEN: Did I understand my right hon. friend to say that this fiat was asked under clause 5 of the statute?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No it was not asked under clause 5, but the power to grant it was reserved by clause 5.

Mr. VIEN: I may point out to my right hon. friend that the statute has no clause 5.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would not have because clause 3 was omitted and clause 5 I presume, therefore became clause 4. But the number of the clause does not matter although I can carry the House with me better by calling this clause, clause 5. Very well, on the basis of the granting of the fiat and the attitude of the government that led thereto, all this superstructure of speculation arose, but the government then addressing itself to the subject once more discovered champerty in the first agreement. It was not hard to discover it. There was undoubtedly champerty. There was undoubtedly an agreement to foster that litigation in proportion as the litigation succeeded, and having seen champerty in the agreement the government seized upon that as a reason for bringing in legislation empowering them to withdraw the fiat. Well, if the legislation has no other foundation than to enable the gov rn-ment to get out of the position it put this country in, that is foundation enough. I am glad to see it. Let that fiat be withdrawn. Let us not draw lines between the methods of treatment of various lessees of our public resources. Treat one class the same as the other. The Hoppe lease was four years old and should have come under the very same form of cancellation as the leases of Canadians that had been cancelled four years ago. On that ground a fiat should have been refused. Why the champerty is a cause for refusing it I am not very clear, but inasmuch as without champerty there was ample ground for refusal, certainly the proper thing to do is to carry through the legislation enabling the government at least to safeguard the interests of the country in this respect.

Now, I believe the Minister of the Interior has repented too, and he came to the House the other day with a bill to re-insert clause 3 in the legislation of this country. I do not know just what has reformed his attitude to clause 3. I never regarded clause 3 as any reflection whatever on the respect or confidence the House had in the Minister of the Interior. I told him so during the discussion of last session. Last session, however, his dignity would not stand the enacting of clause 3 at all. But this session, such is the chastening effect of another year of office that he makes clause 3 his own bill and goes into the Senate and says "Protect me against the foes of the country. I have been weak in the past and I have yielded. Make the law such that I can yield no more."

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is not that the effect of the return to clause 3? Surely my hon. friend yielded, when the fiat was granted he was one of the government who yielded. He did not lease the land, it is true. Why? Because he had granted a fiat to enable the old lessee to establish his claim, and while the fiat was out he could not lease the land. Anyway he is right in asking for protection. He is asking for the insertion of clause 3 as a statute of Canada. In that I commend him as well. The only suggestion I have to make to the government is that in future, when excellent suggestions are made from this side of the House, the government accept them in the spirit in which they are made, and at the time at which they are made, and do not let the country suffer and the hope of the speculator be enlivened by your procrastination and delay.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would ask the leader of the Opposition whether he heard the proposal I suggested that the issuing of all fiats should be made public as soon as they are issued, and the same thing in the case of the denial of fiats, and what his opinion is with respect to it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think I can say that I agree with that.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I also said that if the government would provide for the public being made cognizant of the granting or refusal of a fiat, it would save me moving an amendment to that effect on a subsequent motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to and the House went into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TARIFF

Mr. FIELDING: I direct the attention of the committee to the resolution concerning inland revenue. This resolution repeals the additional cigarette tax of last session and also the tax on beet sugar. These two items which, as announced in the budget, we propose to repeal are covered by this resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Another case of repenting.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes; oh, yes.

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Inland Revenue Act, chapter fifty-one of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, as amended by chapter six of the Statutes of 1914, chapter twenty-eight of the statutes of 1918, and chapter twenty-seven of the statutes of 1922, by repealing paragraphs (g) and (h) of section two hundred and seventy-nine thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(h) On cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, six dollars per thousand;

(h) On cigarettes made from raw leaf tobacco or any substitute therefor, weighing more than three pounds per thousand, eleven dollars per thousand.

2. Resolved, that any enactment founded on the preceding resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the twelfth day of May, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.

3. Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Inland Revenue Act, chapter fifty-one of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, as amended by chapter twenty-seven of the statutes of 1922, by repealing section 378 thereof.

4. Resolved, That any enactment founded on the preceding resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is entirely a tobacco section.

Mr. FIELDING: This deals entirely with the cigarette and beet sugar. It repeals the section of last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not only is this not another case of repentance and conversion, as pointed out a moment ago, but it is one of great importance.

Mr. FIELDING: Well, all right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think in this connection we should just place a little emphasis on what the right hon. leader of the Opposition was saying as to the fact that sometimes it is well worth while to take counsel and listen to suggestion. Last year, on this very question of cigarettes, he pointed out—and I remember doing it myself very distinctly—that great loss would occur and that the limit had been reached. I think 50 per cent of the advice was taken, and the proposed increase of $3, making the rate $9, was cut in half, and the new rate made $7.50. The minister has caused a loss of $1,232,000 to the country, because we were right and he was wrong. I think the net loss of inland revenue on the tobacco section, which largely depends upon this item, was at least $1,250,000. Then again, in connection with the sugar beet question, the minister is doing the right thing this time, because he is doing what we told him last year to do. I do not think it has cost us anything in this particular case, because we were not collecting under it. The only thing that would have happened last year, if this provision had been put into effect, would have been an injury to the sugar beet grower, and I congratulate my hon. friend on his change of heart.

Mr. FIELDING: So long as we agree upon the motion, we are not going to quarrel about the figures. The hon. member is somewhat inaccurate in his statement. We collected in 1922 excise duties on this item of $14,710,869, and in 1923 we collected $14,079,062. The difference is much smaller than he suggested. There is no doubt our judgment in that respect was erroneous. We tell the House so and ask it to make the correction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister does not take into account the harm he has done, much of it to Canadian business. If he takes his increase in the raw leaf tobacco he may reduce his figures to what he says, in so far as our revenue is concerned, but if he takes what we objected to, the increase on cigarettes, he will find that he has lost over $1,250,000, as I will have the figures very shortly to show. He has had some increased revenue due to the tax on raw leaf tobacco to reduce his losses to the figures he gives, but he is forgetting all about the harm to the business of Canada, and he has reduced the Canadian tobacco business by over a fifth, just by this provision. What is worse, he has caused a system of bootlegging as between the United States and Canada, an operation which once commenced and got under way, as it has done, will be very hard to stop. That practice is now established, and to stop the practice of bootlegging in regard to cigarettes would be more difficult than in the case of liquor. I think the minister is going to find that the bootlegging business in cigarettes has increased. The current of trade has increased. Men have taken to it as an occupation. They have a return cargo back to this country, after taking no cargo over there. It is going to be hard, if not impossible, to undo the injury the minister did by simply going beyond the limit, destroying or impairing or depleting his revenue, injuring the business and establishing a practice which will be injurious to the whole country for years to come.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid there has always been, and always will be, some degree of smuggling in the case of cigarettes, and I have frankly to admit that under the act of last year the amount of smuggling was increased, but I do not think my hon. friend's description of the dreadful conditions is warranted. I have no doubt we encouraged smuggling to a degree and we have tried to correct it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not exaggerated. The minister has stated himself that in our border cities there was a lot of cigarette smuggling going on. The best evidence that can be procured shows that in the border cities, and most of our cities are near the border, just about one-half of the cigarettes consumed are American cigarettes, and unquestionably those cigarettes are smuggled in, to a very great degree, and the impetus given to it last year brought the business to the size it is at present. With regard to what went on before, while there would be smuggling, it would be the same as in other goods, trifling and negligible as compared with the whole. But now smuggling is the substantial part of the whole importation. I have figures before me to show what revenue had been lost, and the aggregate is a trifle over the figures mentioned by the hon. member for West York, a million and a quarter. However, I shall not read the figures because they are of great length. The minister does not dispute the statement, and I think he appreciates the fact that in this respect it has been a very expensive luxury to have the hon. minister in his position and the present government in power.

Mr. FORKE: Just before the item passes, I cannot help making the remark that when the right hon. leader of the Opposition makes a thrust, he cannot help turning it round and round afterwards.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The thrusts I made last year, which I turned round once or twice, did not have any effect. It took twelve months of remorse and of penalty, which we suffered as well as the government, to get the real results. Now I am trying to have a little more prompt action. I am trying, as it were, to drive things home in such form that in some of these matters something will be saved to the country, and I would like very much, and appreciate very highly, the co-operation of the leader of the Progressive party.

Mr. CALDWELL: It is possible that I have appreciated the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) more than my leader has. I appreciate the fact that he realizes that when you make the duty on an article too high, you cut down the revenue and you also encourage smuggling. I hope he will be as frank at all times as he has been on this question.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: There are one or two other resolutions which we will take up after eight o'clock. We can report them all together.

At six o'cclock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill No. 181 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Dunnett.—Mr. Gordon.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to repeal the act respecting Bounties on manufactures from Manila Fibre in Canada, being chapter five of the statutes of 1903, the act to amend the act respecting the manufacture of binder twine in Canada, being chapter five of the statutes of 1907, and regulations made thereunder.

Mr. FIELDING: This bounty, granted some years ago, Mr. Chairman, has now become inoperative, no bounty having been paid under it for some time, and we think it very desirable to repeal the act.

Mr. CLARK: This has no reference to copper?

Mr. FIELDING: No, it is coming on next.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: Now I desire to direct the attention of the committee to the resolution respecting copper bounties. It is on page 11 of the Ways and Means Resolution printed to-day. At the proper stage I have an amendment to suggest.

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide:

1. That the Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the following bounties on copper bars or rods manufactured in Canada and sold for consumption therein, from copper produced in Canada from ore mined in Canada, during the periods and at the rates following, that is to say:

From the twelfth day of May, 1923, to the thirtieth day of June, 1924, both inclusive, one and one-half cents per pound;

From the first day of July, 1924, to the thirtieth day of June, 1925, both inclusive, one and one-fourth cents per pound;

From the first day of July, 1925, to the thirtieth day of June, 1926, both inclusive, one cent per pound;

From the first day of July, 1926, to the thirtieth day of June, 1927, both inclusive, three-fourths of one cent per pound;

From the first day of July, 1927, to the thirtieth day of June, 1928, both inclusive, one-half of one cent per pound;

2. That the sum to be paid as such bounty shall not exceed two hundred thousand dollars in any one of the said periods;

3. That the said bounty shall not be paid on copper bars or rods exported from Canada;

4. That the Governor in Council may make regulations to carry out the intention of this resolution; and

5. That the Minister of Trade and Commerce shall be charged with the administration of the foregoing provisions.

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Chairman, I should like to call attention to an amendment which I desire to make to the third section providing:

That the said bounty shall not be paid on copper bars or rods exported from Canada.

I move that the following words be added:

nor on copper rods made from copper bars on which a bounty has already been paid.

Mr. CLARK: While I am in sympathy with the principle of giving this industry encouragement, I have to object to the method by which the encouragement is extended. In the first place, I think it should be by way of protective duty rather than by bounty. I do not propose to enlarge upon that at the moment, but I have another objection; and it is that this particular industry should be singled out while other industries equally deserving are excluded. I brought to the attention of the minister some time ago an industry in the city of North Vancouver, namely, the Vancouver Creosoting Company, Limited, which produces creosoted pile for wharves, and railway ties and similar material. Some $500,000 is invested in the plant, which employs large numbers of our citizens, and particularly has made an effort to employ returned men of my province. I do not know what the figures are to-day, but it has had the enviable record of having fifty per cent of its pay-roll consist of returned men. Now, for some reason this industry, which, as I say, requires a plant worth $500,000 to produce its product, has been given no protection. I do not know that there is another plant in this country of just the same nature, but similar plants in Seattle have, at least during the past year, been shipping into British Columbia creosoted pile which has actually been used in the construction of government wharves in our country. One of the reasons why they have been able to do that is, of course, the fact that the goods come in free of customs duty. Another reason is that the Vancouver Creosoting Company has had to pay a sales tax of 3¾ per cent on every gallon of creosote used by it in its industry, whereas the Americans treat their product, ship it into this country free of duty, and do not even pay the sales tax on the creosote. That, I believe, will be cured by the present budget so far as sales tax is concerned, but after all, that phase of it is more or less insignificant and does not affect the future of the industry. Another reason why this company cannot compete with the Americans is that they have imported $200,000 worth of machinery which they are using for the purpose of treating this pile, and on that machinery they have paid an average duty of 18½ per cent. Thus the Americans get their plant and equipment very much cheaper than our own people do, and their cost of manufacture is much less. Furthermore, the people to the south have a much larger market. Our industry has been running at cost in order to try to preserve the capital invested, but I am informed that the American plants are underbidding us and just avoiding liability to dumping act penalties. That, of course, is exactly what the Americans, with their tremendous capital reserves, will do to any industry established in Canada that has absolutely no protection. Now, it is a matter of life or death for this company, and what I submit is that on the principle which the minister has applied to the copper industry, he should apply in connection with this industry. He should put this industry in the same category with the silk industry—which does not exist—with the copper industry, and others on which bounties are to apply; only I say it should be in the way of a reasonable protection. If this is not done our people will continue to flow from British Columbia; our returned soldiers, now employed there, will be thrown out of employment, that plant will have to close its doors, and when it does so our government will pay whatever the Americans demand for the piling they must buy for the piers there. The Americans are now selling it cheaper in our market than they can sell it in their own, and they have this further advantage: the piling is transported from Seattle to Vancouver—a very short distance after all,—on scows which, were it not for this return cargo, would come back from Seattle empty. The transport, therefore, is provided by means of these scows at practically no cost. I note that the minister says in his budget:

> A new industry is promised us for the manufacture of artificial silk. It is represented to us that this industry will employ a large amount of labour and we have every reason to believe that if we can make encouraging terms a great industry will be established.

And I believe a duty of 37½ per cent is to be applied on that promised industry. Now here is an industry which is not promised; it is actually in existence, and $500,000 of our peoples' money is invested in it. I have pointed out as well that it is employing our returned soldiers, who, as we all know, need employment. It is proposed to allow that industry to go out of existence, to allow the capital that has thus been invested to become wasted. I note other words used by the minister in his budget speech, in reference to the British preferential tariff. He says:

> To these reductions we attach two qualifications, the first of which is that they shall not apply in the case of any article where the duty is not above 15 per cent. A duty of 15 per cent will not be regarded as a high one, and it will hardly be expected that we ought to apply these reductions to items which stand at 15 per cent or less.

I say unhesitatingly that a duty of 15 per cent would be reasonable. I think it would be satisfactory to this industry and would not largely increase the price of the product to our people.

In addition to that, the minister has laid great emphasis upon the necessity for revenue. So far as the copper industry is concerned, the bounty is not going to be a revenue producer. On the other hand, if the minister applied that reasonable 15 per cent duty to this industry, we would have revenue produced. On any imports of that material into this country we would get the 15 per cent duty, but though revenue does appeal to me there is something far more important than revenue involved in this particular case. A 15 per cent duty would mean that that plant would be enabled to carry on. It would be given an opportunity of attaining success, and it would be enabled to employ our labour and our returned soldiers who need the employment.

Further than that, if the minister is looking for revenue, this industry has not paid income tax or any taxes to the Dominion government since its existence, but if it is allowed to earn a reasonable profit it will pay some income tax, and there is an opportunity for revenue. The minister in his budget speech also used words to this effect, that it is an axiom with people of all classes in Canada that it is desirable to develop industries based upon our natural resources. Now I know of no natural resources in the province of British Columbia that are greater than our timber. Why should we not encourage our people to develop those resources? Why should we not give some reasonable encouragement, some reasonable protection to such an enterprise? During the war years this was considered a most essential industry. We shipped large quantities of creosoted railway ties to India and other countries, but as hon. members know, railway construction has fallen off and that market no longer exists. A protection which the industry had during the war and until, I think, about a year ago, was the application of the war revenue tax amounting to 7½ per cent. That meant that all American shipments of this material into Canada actually paid in duty 7½ per cent, and there were other similar applications of taxes which brought the total protection of the industry up to a point around 10 per cent.

I see that in his budget speech the Minister of Finance also said:

> An industry based upon the natural resources of the Dominion which wants a helping hand at the beginning and is prepared later to rely on its own strength and character is worthy of consideration. We propose to afford a measure of help to the copper industry of Canada—

What is the difference between these two industries? The copper industry in British Columbia is just as old as the timber industry and much older than this particular industry, which is a brand-new one, a struggling, infant enterprise that wants a helping hand, and in a country where it is recognized by the two great parties certainly that some protection must exist or otherwise our manufacturers go out of business. Then is it not reasonable to give that protection to this industry in its infancy? Is it not reasonable to place these two industries, both of which are based on our natural resources, upon the same footing?

The minister says that there will be inequalities discovered in the tariff which should be corrected. I sincerely hope that this is one of the inequalities which he will discover exists, and that he will take the necessary steps to correct it. I sincerely hope that he will not apply the principle referred to on page 2650 of Hansard, where he says:

> I asked a friend who is a careful observer of these things on what he thought the American people found ground for their present activity. His answer was, "By faith in themselves." It really seems that this is the case. It is a sort of "Coueism." They resolve that things are going to get better, and they believed that they are better.

I hope that that industry will not have to apply that principle. I recognize the merit of applying such a principle, or rather I will put it this way: It is a determination to succeed. Now I believe that that company has that determination. It has struggled and is making every effort to succeed, but I am equally convinced that it cannot succeed unless it is given reasonable encouragement, and I ask the minister seriously to consider giving this particular industry the encouragement he has given to the copper and silk and other industries.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid that readers of my hon. friend's observations will draw from them an entirely erroneous impression. They will receive the impression that this budget has in some way or other assailed the particular industry to which he refers.

Mr. CLARK: Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING: I say that is the inference to be drawn. I do not say he so intends it, because it is obviously not correct. This industry is not a new one. It is not even an infant industry. It has been in operation for many years.

Mr. CLARK: May I ask the minister in what year it was established?

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend will let me finish—this particular industry of creosoting, or rather this particular item, has been on the free list, for that is what it is, for many years. The particular year in which that industry was established I do not know, but it was established evidently, unless it existed before that, when the item was on the free list. Now there are in the tariff a number of items where there is no duty at all, and we have been asked in a number of cases to take them from the free list and make them dutiable. This is one of them. Reluctantly, for we do not want to do any harm to any industry, we have felt disinclined to take the item from the free list that has been there for many years and now make it dutiable. My hon. friend has given us a statement as to that particular industry which if true shows it to be in a deplorable condition, but I hope it is not correct. This item has been on the free list for many years, and we have not felt able to take it from the free list and put it on the dutiable list. That is the whole story.

Mr. CLARK: I can give my hon. friend the year in which this company was established. I think it was in 1919. I may be wrong within two years but no more, and when it was established it had protection through special war taxation to the extent of about 10 per cent, 7½ per cent war revenue tax and some other taxes which brought its protection up to approximately 10 per cent. This is a new industry nevertheless, and I maintain that the same principle should be applied to it. No industry in British Columbia can be called an old industry, much less this one. I think my hon. friend will find that it is the only industry of its kind in the whole Dominion of Canada that is actually operating. There is another on the north arm of Burrard Inlet near Vancouver, which has been closed for several years, in which several hundreds of thousands of dollars have also been invested but it cannot carry on because of this continued state of affairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that I quite appreciate the distinction made by the Minister of Finance. He is anxious that the matter shall be fairly represented. Am I to understand that because this company started doing business under the free list, even although it is handling an output indigenous to the country, it is something he ought not to consider? Because, I think that was the result of his remarks. I do not think this industry is a very old one. The tariff item itself is old. You have the two different classes of tariff. One class covers goods not yet made in the country. But when they are made there is a change from the free list. Why was not the change made in this case? Is this regarded as an industry that cannot be helped, or is the trouble due to the fact that it foolishly continued while the product was in the free list, and cannot now expect help?

Mr. FIELDING: No, I would not like to put it that way. May I pay my hon. friend the compliment of saying that according to the statement of the hon. member for Burrard this industry has been running for some years and my hon. friend, when he had an opportunity of looking after it, did not think it worthy of taking its products from the free list and putting them on the dutiable list. The result is we can be accused of following, shall I call it, his bad example?—no, following his example.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should like to say to my hon. friend that I always take for granted that argument and that answer; we have had it so frequently in connection with tariff matters as well as in connection with other matters. When we argue that there should be a change we are told "You did not do it" and it is considered by hon. gentlemen opposite that should end the matter. In all seriousness I would like to know why on earth hon. gentlemen across the aisles are holding office if they are not to do anything that their predecessors did not do. What are we told by hon. gentlemen? One time we did not do a certain thing and therefore it should not be done now. My hon. friend with just as much accuracy could say "Because I put a duty on cigarettes which was all wrong it should be left there." The status quo prevails; there is not to be any change. Surely that cannot be any reasonable ground for my hon. friend's action. If he adopted that policy throughout he would never do anything except what we ask him to do. My hon. friend only assumes that role because he thinks it pays him to assume it. I do not think he should assume it at all. So far as this particular industry is concerned my hon. friend will also recollect there was a war tax of 7½ per cent which of course came off about three years ago, I think in 1920. But the industry was fairly well looked after down to that date because that act was in effect the whole time this company was operated.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend asked the question "What are we holding office for?" I am afraid it is chiefly because the people of Canada got tired of another set of gentlemen and made up their minds there ought to be a change. If we had made the particular change which my hon. friend is now discussing I am not sure but that he would again have referred to that platform of 1919 and said "Here is a thing that was free when our government were in power and you have actually put a duty on it." That would have been the cry. However we have not given him that opportunity. These products were free in his day and we leave them free now. We may be all wrong, but it is a wrong in which he will have to share the responsibility with us.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not at all afraid of any responsibility but I put this to my hon. friend: Following what he has already said to the hon. member who brought this matter to his attention, is the reason he has not done anything in this particular case because this industry started operations under a free entry tariff, or is it that it is of such a class that the hon. gentleman thinks it does not merit protection?

Mr. FIELDING: The reason is that we are unwilling to take articles from the free list and put them on the dutiable list unless there be a stronger reason than was presented by my hon. friend when he declined to do it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend seems to know what was said to me now when the previous government were in power. I am quite sure he does not.

Mr. HOEY: Will the minister tell us how many firms are producing copper bars or copper rods in the Dominion at the present time?

Mr. FIELDING: None at the moment.

Mr. HOEY: I mean producing the commodities to which this bounty applies?

Mr. FIELDING: The only concern, I think, contemplating this production in a large way is the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company at Trail. That is the only large concern doing it. To be perfectly accurate, they are not doing it at the moment but they expect to do it.

Mr. HOEY: Would the minister mind giving us the name of the president and the directors of that company?

Mr. FIELDING: The gentleman we know best in the matter is Mr. Warren. I think he is president. I could not give the names of the directors. My impression is that it is an association of Canadian Pacific Railway people.

Mr. CLARK: I am not satisfied that this matter has received the consideration it merits, and I rise again to seriously ask the minister to take it under consideration. I would like to feel that as long as this country is going to have a tariff that tariff will be a scientific one, and that it will be based on sound business principles. I would hate to go away from this House with the impression that no protection will be given this industry, and that no article can be taken from the free list and put on the protective list merely because of the remarkable platform of 1919. I am not interested in that. What I am interested in, though, is in being satisfied that no matter what party is in power so long as the tariff is a recognized principle in this country it shall be based on scientific grounds and not upon a platform which the minister himself admits is exploded.

Mr. GOULD: The hon. member for Burrard is very anxious to have more protection granted an infant industry. He wants it to have "the helping hand" to quote an expression we heard during the delivery of the budget. It does seem to me that the mind of the protectionist is absolutely inconsistent. Not very long since, during the budget debate the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion) returned thanks for the reduction of the duty on stumping machines. Again, we had the member for East Elgin (Mr. Stansell) thanking the Minister of Finance because he had reduced the duty on tile. Now we have the hon. member for Burrard advocating a higher rate of protection, while we in this corner of the House, are between the nether stone of East and West. If we ask the members from British Columbia for anything, or if we look at them, what do we find? We find they are asking for protection on apples and lumber, we find huge votes being passed for the construction of their wharves, and we are supposed to be the legitimate prey for them. They are again asking for duties on the implements which they manufacture in the East and which we use in the West. I am glad that the deaf ear is being turned to them, and I hope the parliament of Canada in future will be constituted of men who will turn deaf ears to these species of pleas advanced by these men who ask for duties.

Mr. CLARK: Can the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) see any difference in principle between giving protection to the copper industry and giving protection to the creosoting industry?

Mr. GOULD: I am opposed to subsidizing the copper industry, and I am speaking on absolute principle. I think the hon. member mentioned some $200,000 as being the cost of the machinery of this plant of which he spoke. We might also say that we have minor plants on our farms, for instance, and we are sacrificed, because we do not ask for concessions of that kind. We are not making the specious plea the hon. member is making. We do not ask for protection, and we do not want it, but we want everybody else to stand on his own feet as we do. We believe others can do it, and the government should ask them to try.

Mr. CLARK: What about the wheat board?

Mr. GOULD: It will stand absolutely on its own feet, and it does not propose that it shall cost anyone else one extra cent.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell us who it was that made representations to him asking to have protection granted to this particular industry?

Mr. FIELDING: I think my hon. colleague from British Columbia, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) had a good deal to do with it, but others drew our attention to it. Members of this House brought our attention to this matter. I do not want to single them all out, but several of the hon. members from British Columbia did me the honour of calling on me and making these representations. Quite a number of people were interested.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In regard to the bounty on copper, it is well known to the members of this House that British Columbia is a province rich in minerals. We have a great mining industry. We are mining our ores, putting them through the process of concentration and to some extent carrying on a refining process. That is to say, we make matte copper. Heretofore our matte copper, or our concentrated ores, had been taken to Tacoma, an American refining centre, and refined there, and from that point shipped east, and brought into Canada, for the purpose of manufacturing articles made of copper. All of those articles are on the dutiable list to-day. In order that the manufacture of copper wire, copper rods and so on, may be carried on in Canada a duty has been imposed, but we have heretofore allowed these raw products to go to the large American centres, where copper matte ore is reduced or refined in a larger way than at any other point in the world. We know the value of our copper deposits. We know—at least we are advised by those who are in the industry of mining and producing copper ore—that, with a bonus extended over a period of five years, they will establish a refined copper industry in Canada. That will mean that the people of Canada will use the refined copper from their own ores, and it is also anticipated that we will be able, in the period of four or five years to place our refined copper on the world's markets in competition with American copper. I think the effort is well worth while. Although I have no objection to my hon. friend making his case to-night, it is the first representation I have heard of the situation regarding the creosoting plant. However, the two items are not in the same category at all. They are entirely different, and the discussion of one does not mean that the other is in the same position. Personally, I am satisfied, from the information I have been able to gain by inquiry, that this bonus on the production of copper will do very much along the same lines as was done for the lead and zinc industry in British Columbia some years ago, when this parliament voted a bonus, which resulted in the establishment of very large lead and zinc works in British Columbia; so much so that to-day British Columbia ores are being made into lead and zinc, are holding their own in the world's markets and are the means of bringing millions of dollars to the Dominion.

Mr. GARDINER: I take this opportunity to enter a protest against giving any bounties to this particular industry. I would like to ask this House, fairly and squarely, just where we are going to stop. When are you going to stop putting burdens on the shoulders of the people? Are you going to place burdens on our shoulders that we cannot bear and force us out of the country, or are you going to take some of the burdens off our shoulders and give us an opportunity to exist? I would like to call attention to the fact that the farmers of Canada have to compete against the world. It does not matter what market they compete in, they compete against the world on an open competitive basis. The position simply is that if we farmers desire to continue farming we have to put a great deal of backbone into our work in order to exist, and I would suggest that, instead of granting a bonus to these particular industries, the House ask these industries to put a little more backbone into their particular jobs and see if they cannot carry on without bounties.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Something I was going to say has been said for me by the last speaker, but I want to add my voice in protest against the granting of bounties by the government. One of the principal reasons has been advanced eloquently by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) to-night. Once this government starts—I am not referring to past governments with their records of bounties and tariffs—it means that they are opening the door to pleadings such as we have heard to-night. If you start giving bounties, where are you going to stop? We have heard the argument, if you are giving a bounty to this industry, why not to the other industry, to my industry or to some other industry? That kind of argument will be used continually, and is the government going to be able to stand up against it, once it has opened the door? I have sympathy with the hon. member for Burrard, especially in reference to one of the handicaps which he mentioned as being placed on the industry he is speaking for to-night. One of the handicaps is the high cost of machinery which enters into the work, due to protective tariff. While I sympathize with him, I am perhaps inclined to be a little glad that other people feel the pinch as well as we do. We extend sympathy to him from that point of view also. But I believe, as has been shown by the hon. member for Burrard, that the idea of protecting machinery, thus raising the cost of machinery which is necessary for the development of our natural resources, is the greatest handicap we have in this country. It has been shown by the hon. member himself that that was one of the handicaps, and if he were to make the request that the machinery that that industry used should be admitted free of duty to enable the company to compete with their American rivals, I should be glad to support him.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the remark which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) applied to me as to stumping machines, I should like to say a word. He pointed out that, though we in this section of the House took a protectionist attitude, I congratulated the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) upon putting stumping machines on a lower basis of customs taxes than heretofore. I repeat my congratulations to the Minister of Finance, and I might point out to the hon. member that stumping machines are, among the farm implements that should be put upon the free list. They are, in fact, among the lines of goods asked to be put upon the free list in the farmers' platform; so at least my hon. friend should have hesitated to criticize me on that account. I am pointing out in general to my hon. friend from Assiniboia, who took such a strong attitude regarding bounties, and to some other hon. gentlemen, that ever since I have come into this House I have noticed in the annual estimates, items amounting to about $6,300,000 to assist agriculture. It is in this year. If that item of $6,300,000 for the Department of Agriculture is not a straight bounty to the agricultural interests of this country, I do not know what it is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend from Assiniboia and other hon. gentlemen shake their heads and oppose that view. I know it is of no assistance to me directly; it is certainly of no assistance to the Manufacturers' Association or to any other line of business in this country that I know of, and it is certainly of direct assistance to the agriculturists of this country. Therefore, I would say that it is, if perhaps not a direct, certainly an indirect bounty to the agriculturists, if it does not assist them individually. My hon. friend continues to shake his head. That item deals with the prevention of disease among cattle, with agricultural colleges to educate those who are on the farms, and all the other different items.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Is the prevention of disease amongst cattle, for instance, especially dairy stock, carried on merely in the interest of the farmers, or in the interest of the general health of the people of Canada?

Mr. MANION: I am not criticizing the item in any way; I stand by it; I support it, and I always have supported it. Moreover, in helping the farmer, we are helping the whole of Canada. I agree with the item. But I think my hon. friends are somewhat inconsistent when they criticize the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Clark) when he asks for support for some industry. I am not taking any part in discussing the question of the bounty for which he is asking; but when they criticize him so severely as they do, they are inconsistent in not remembering that amongst the estimates there is an item of $6,300,000 of direct or indirect assistance to the farmers of this country. I do not now hear, and I have never heard any argument to show that that is not a bounty to the farming interests of this country. Before I sit down, I will say further that, with the exception of a few little bounties given by this government and other governments for manufactures, such as the copper industry, I do not know of any other class of people than the farmers who receive a direct bounty of that sort.

Mr. GOULD: In reply to the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion), who argues that an item of $6,300,000 is given to the agriculturists of Canada as a direct benefit to them, let us suppose that we admit that. We have in this country about five million people engaged in agriculture, so that this would amount to about $1.10 apiece. On the other hand, will my hon. friend, who is a gallant gentleman in national defence, admit that the item of twelve or fourteen million dollars for 400,000 men in Canada is a direct gift or money spent directly for the profession of which he is a member? I only point this out to show how erroneous is the basis of his argument.

When the hon. gentleman says that this item of $6,300,000 voted for agriculture is specially beneficial to agriculturists, I do not admit that, because I maintain that every individual in Canada who receives his living or any direct benefit from agriculture, receives his fair proportion of that sum. If the hon. gentleman admits the other argument in connection with the twelve or fourteen million dollars for national defence, I am prepared to admit his argument, because that is not as erroneous an argument as is his.

Mr. MANION: Every country in the world has some form of defence; no country in the world could carry on without having a defence force of some kind, and surely Canada is not to be placed in such a humiliating position as to have no defence force. I deny, however, that any part of the money spent on defence is in the nature of a bonus to any person; it is spent for the benefit of the whole population of Canada. But this item of $6,300,000, so far as I can see—and my hon. friend has not punctured my argument—is a direct bounty to agriculturists, though I take that attitude, I support it.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it not a fact that this item of $6,300,000 is granted for the purpose of assisting the farmers to produce more in this country?

Mr. MANION: Certainly. That is what the copper bounty is for too.

Mr. GARDINER: In order that the farmers may be exploited on all they produce.

Mr. MANION: I do not agree with that at all. I think too much complaint is being made by my hon. friends that they are being exploited. They are not being exploited in any shape or form by anybody in this country.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask the hon. member—

The CHAIRMAN: This debate is getting out of order. The item is in regard to the copper bounty.

Mr. CHURCH: It seems that there is protection for some people in this country and none for others. The farmer is protected on his wheat and dairy products, and many other things.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CHURCH: I am just coming to the point.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman is as far from the point as I was.

[Mr. Gould.]

The CHAIRMAN: Exactly. The Chair agrees with that.

Mr. CHURCH: The resolution before the Chair is for a copper bounty. If the government will look over the industries of Canada and every year assist one or two basic struggling industries that need some protection and that are trying to get on their feet, the government will do a great deal towards building up Canada. There has been a great deal of discussion in regard to the principle on which this bounty is recommended, but it is hard to find an underlying general principle, because the copper industry in Canada is well organized; it is to-day functioning; it is well established and it is already doing a great deal of work in the way of smelting. I think the government is right in its attitude of giving bounties to basic industries that are struggling to get on their feet, and I hope the government will go further in this direction because there are many other industries not included in this particular resolution, which require some direct aid or protection. Copper bars are included. Why not brass? Why not glass, and steel plates? Why not wool? The people of the United States began as Canada did, as an agricultural country and the farmers wanted a home market. The farmer and the city or town man worked together, and the government of the United States encouraged bounties for various industries, with the result that they became the great industrial people they are to-day. I think we could take a leaf out of the book of the United States in that regard. If the government can encourage the farmer and the city man in Canada to work together so as to provide a home market, the government will be doing a great thing, not only for the farmer, but for struggling industries that are trying to get on their feet. For instance, there is the wool industry which is practically not protected at all. There is a 15 per cent duty regulation, but I do not believe it is being enforced. In my opinion, this bounty and direct aid principle should be extended to other basic industries as well as copper and copper bars. If the government will extend this principle to other industries such as those I have mentioned, this will provide work for our workmen and close the doors so that our skilled labourers will not be driven to the United States. What is the use of bringing in immigrants, unskilled labour, whom you have to finance and help until they get on their feet, when you leave the door open for our own skilled labour to go to the United States because of the absence of adequate protection to basic, struggling industries of various kinds?

9 p.m.

Mr. KELLNER: I understood the minister to say that the company which hoped to benefit from this bounty is a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If I am capable of interpreting the ambitions of the people of British Columbia, nothing is more desired by them than a lowering of the freight rates, and in particular the elimination of the mountain rate. Might I suggest to the minister that if he did not give this bounty the Canadian Pacific Railway Company might at least reduce the freight rate on copper in order to enable its subsidiary to compete with copper produced in other countries? I think that would be one way of forcing the Canadian Pacific Railway to meet other countries in open competition.

Mr. BAXTER: If not by vain repetition common to the heathen, yet by constant repetition it seems to me people after a time come to accept as true that which is absolutely false. Now, it is absolutely false to suppose that you can pay one dollar by expending fifty-five cents; in other words, if you are going to bonus some industry by reducing the freight rates somebody has got to pay for the cost of running the railways. This parliament, at the instance of some very good friends of ours who did not constitute the government, last year took six and a half million dollars out of the pockets of the rest of the people of this country. It was not a subsidy, it was not a bonus, it was six and a half million dollars that the rest of Canada had to make up, and some of us in parts of the country that are not getting any benefit from such expenditures are becoming a little tired of the whining.

Mr. MILLAR: I was rather pleased at one stage of this discussion when the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) began to scrap over old times, and I concluded it was all up with the bonus. Being opposed to the bounty on copper and to the increased protection on creosote, I was glad to see the discussion take that course. However, it has veered around several times. Recently I read somewhere what I thought was a very good explanation of the difficulties of Canada at the present time. It was explained in this way: Since confederation we have, by legislation, been interfering with the natural flow of money through normal channels; that is, by giving bonuses and protection we have caused money to flow in other than its natural channels, consequently we have deprived those basic industries of the capital which normally they would have attracted, and for that reason they have become impoverished. The explanation proceeded to show that after doing that to encourage young industries to get a start, we had continued the encouragement so long that we had allowed the pendulum to swing too far in the wrong direction. This proposal is a move in the same direction. What has taken place during the past forty years once an industry was given protection? It always wanted a little more protection, and appeal after appeal was made to parliament for further assistance.

Let me say a word in reply to the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion). He is usually very fair, and therefore I was somewhat surprised at his statement that agriculture had been given a bonus of six and a half million dollars. When we consider the destruction that is possible through a great influx of grasshoppers or the other insect pests that attack wheat, I wonder whether the wholesalers, the retailers, and those engaged in other businesses that are not directly interested in agriculture would not in their own protection desire the expenditure of such a sum of money rather than see the crop swept away. It is a very great stretch of the imagination to describe this expenditure as a direct grant to the agriculturists when we bear in mind the amount of money that is expended by various departments of government in seeking markets for the manufacturing interests and assisting them in various other ways. If these expenditures were put together it would be seen that in comparison the six and a half million dollars spent in encouraging agriculture was a small sum.

Reference has been made to the wheat board—

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that he is not given the same freedom of discussion in this debate as he would enjoy on the budget. Rule 13 prescribes that addresses in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration. By way of comparison the hon. member may refer to other subject matters, but in treating them in detail he is altogether outside the rule.

Mr. MILLAR: I submit to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I suppose it is quite right to draw the line somewhere. I was just going to say that instead of the wheat board costing the country anything, a sum of five hundred thousand dollars accrued to the public treasury from the operations of that board. I hope the minister will seriously consider that added protection by way of bonus to copper and a higher duty on creosote is simply another burden placed on the backs of those who are carrying all they can possibly bear—in fact a little more than they should carry. It is easy to see that some benefit would accrue to Canada if a little protection were given to enable these industries to get started, but when it is remembered that other industries are going out of business I think it is only fair that a halt should be called for the present, at least, until agriculture gets on its feet, and then we hope we shall be able to move forward as a solid Canada. I have nothing whatever against the province of British Columbia. I realize that their interests are a little different from ours, but in every case where it seems to me they are entitled to assistance I am as willing to give the subject just as favourable consideration as I would a similar request from Saskatchewan where I live. I quite appreciate that a few provinces cannot prosper unless their sister provinces are given that consideration to which they are entitled. We must move forward together, and for that reason I am against giving further assistance to these industries.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister told us a few minutes ago that by granting this bounty the industry could in a few years stand on its own feet. That is precisely what Sir John A. Macdonald told this House fifty years ago in regard to all other matters of protection. When I have to choose between two evils I prefer the lesser. If we are to grant protection in a lump sum and so know precisely what we are paying, something may be said in favour of a bounty. In regard to the comparison between this and the so-called bonus to agriculture, I do not consider that one-half of that six million five hundred thousand dollars was of any assistance to agriculture at all. So far as our experimental farms are concerned, I was suggesting to the hon. Minister of Agriculture a few days ago that the only experimental farm of any practical use was that which was made to pay, that is, where you could demonstrate to the farmer that stuff could be grown at a profit. He told me "It is impossible."

Mr. COOTE: How many men are engaged in this particular industry in British Columbia?

[Mr. Millar.]

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think that in this particular branch of the industry there are any at present, but it is the expectation that there will be a considerable number. Copper bars or rods are not, I think, being made at present, but they expect to make them.

Mr. COOTE: It is an entirely new industry?

Mr. FIELDING: This branch of it is new, but the copper industry itself is there. They are producing copper ingots, but I think I am correct in stating that they are not now producing copper bars or rods.

Mr. LUCAS: It might be described as a real infant, I presume.

Mr. WARNER: If it is not out of order I would like to point out that agriculture is an old-established industry, an industry which has itself paid the greater part of the grant that has been given to agriculture, in the products that it has put on the market in Canada. I am willing to be fair and I want everyone else to be fair. We do not want it understood that the copper industry or any other industry which has not been in operation has paid this grant.

Mr. FORKE: I would like to say a word as to what has been said in regard to the bonus to agriculture. Like another hon. member I admit the fairness of the hon. member for Fort William and Rainy River (Mr. Manion), but after all, he is making a mistake when he says that that six and a-half million is a bonus to agriculture. A large amount of that money was paid out for educational purposes—most of it, in fact.

Mr. MANION: To the agriculturists.

Mr. FORKE: To the people of Canada. I admit that when a specific grant is made to an agricultural fair it is a bonus, but I do not think the Dominion government makes any grant of that description; the municipalities and the provinces do. I do not really know of any case where money paid by the Dominion government for the advancement of agriculture can properly be called a bonus; it is a sum of money paid for educational purposes for the benefit of all the people of Canada, not for the particular benefit of any one calling or class of the people. And for fear I should forget it, I want to compliment the member for Strathcona (Mr. Warner) upon the knowledge he has of agriculture. There is a very old story I read in my youth about a man and a woman who started agriculture a very great many years ago, and ever since that time it has been a much honoured occupation. Now, in regard to bonuses, like my friends behind me, I am certainly opposed to protection of any sort. I agree, however, with the statement that has been made that a bonus is, perhaps, the least objectionable of all the methods of protection. There is another item here that will be discussed at length; that item was a kind of temptation to me and I made certain statements in the House regarding it that I will stand by when it comes up for consideration in committee. However, if we admitted that the bonus should be granted in this case we would be admitting a principle that we believe to be wrong, and I cannot see anything for it but to vote against this item if it comes to a vote.

Miss MACPHAIL: I wish to protest against the granting of any further bounties. I believe that the granting of bounties is building up industry on a false foundation. When the bounty is subsequently to be taken away the industry in question will come swooping down upon unoffending members howling like wolves, just as industries that have been built up by protection have kicked up a fuss when it was suggested that that protection be taken away. I do not see that there is any use in building more industries on a false foundation; if they cannot get a footing by having free machinery to start with and getting the benefit of all the legitimate aid we can give them, then let them not come into being at all. As to the six and a half millions that was granted to agriculture, most of it, I think, has been spent for officials and what one might call firewood, that is, the bulletins they send out. If we could all afford farms like the experimental farms it would be very fine indeed; the only ideal farms are the experimental farms and the golf links. I was not in the House this year when the grant was passed; had I been here I would have advised the government, instead of granting this money to agriculture to teach farmers how to farm, to give it to the manufacturers to teach them how to manufacture without bounties.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, it is not carried. I wish to join in the protest of those who have spoken from this corner of the House against the granting of bounties. Every evil that has been attributed to it will sooner or later be realized if the line is not drawn somewhere.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. LEADER: I wish to offer my protest to the resolution and express my anxiety that the committee shall vote on the question. Let us have the vote.

Mr. GOULD: Hon. members stand in their places and say that British Columbia is blessed with a bountiful supply of copper, yet with that bountiful supply and with the factories here in Canada they cannot compete with the United States or any other country which would, of necessity, have to import that product. I would think that an industry having the valuation that is claimed for the copper industry in that province would be ashamed to come to the government asking for this bounty. Either the company is not ashamed, or it believes there is a weakness in the government that would lead it to support their request. That is not a fair condition of things in the public life of Canada, and I do not think it should be tolerated. I do wish to join my protest with those who have objected to the establishing of another industry of this nature at the present time. If the door is opened now, what may we expect next year? We may expect a flood of people coming down—in fact, it has been attempted here to-night—and asking the government for these subsidies and bounties. Who pays these subsidies and bounties? I know who pays them, and there are lots of other members in this corner of the chamber who know only too well who pays them. We shall continue our protest against this procedure, a protest which we will emphasize by all legitimate means.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. HUMPHREY: Before the question is put, in view of the objection that has been raised, I would like to say just a word, as this industry is in my district. I know that hon. members are sincere in the position that they have taken, but possibly they do not realize what the situation is in regard to the copper industry. One or two questions have been asked by hon. members, as a matter of information, in respect to how many men this industry affects and what its progress has been in the past. The actual production of copper is an old industry in Canada; as concerns the converting of the copper into rods and bars it is entirely new industry. An investment of a number of million dollars is involved. Now, let us take the facts as they are, from the point of view of whether it is right or wrong to enable this production of copper bars and rods to be brought about. This industry if established, I know for a fact, would employ in the neighbourhood of at least a thousand more men in the province of British Columbia in refining the copper and turning the copper bars into copper rods and copper wire. Under conditions that have prevailed for the last few years it has been impossible for any industry in this country to produce these copper bars and rods in competition with the United States, and in that period a good many millions of dollars have gone to the United States in consequence. As to the principle of giving protection to the copper industry, I am sure that the people of British Columbia will be only too glad if it is necessary to assist other industries, especially agriculture in the prairie provinces, to look at the question broadly and not from any selfish point of view, and to support the giving of the necessary protection that is asked. Knowing the facts connected with this industry as I do, and knowing how its establishment would affect the province of British Columbia and the whole Dominion, I can wholeheartedly approve and support this resolution.

Mr. EVANS: I wish to add my voice to the protest against this bounty being given to the copper industry. Although bounties are perhaps the least evil under the whole protective system, I do not see why any industry of this kind should need a bounty to-day in Canada. For many years we gave a bounty to the steel industry which cost this country something over twenty million dollars, and the people did not get their steel any cheaper because of that bounty. In fact, it created a monopoly, and the very steel companies we were bonusing and giving bounties to at that time were delivering rails on the other side of the globe at thirteen dollars a ton cheaper than we were paying for them at home. The minister has not told us one word of what he expects this industry to do for this country, and surely there are always two sides to a bargain. Does the company even guarantee that it will employ so many men and make this home market a little bigger than it is? Can the minister show any benefit the people will derive from the giving of this bounty? I just rise to protest as vigourously as I know how against the giving of bounties to any industry.

Resolution agreed to; Yeas, 72; Nays, 48.

Resolution reported.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 187 to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Humphrey.]

ACTS RESPECTING BOUNTIES REPEALED

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 188, to repeal the acts respecting bounties on manufactures from manila fibre in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BOUNTIES ON COPPER BARS OR RODS

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 189, respecting the payment of bounties on copper bars or rods.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Department of the Interior.—Expenses connected with the Dominion observatory at Ottawa, $58,420.

Expenses connected with the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory at Victoria, B.C., $18,500.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain the increase in these two items?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil, Minister of the Interior): The increase in connection with the first item is $2,705. It is accounted for by statutory increases in the salaries of the staff. There is an addition of one official to the staff of the observatory at Victoria with a salary of $2,400.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the minister would tell us why this vote is still carried in this way. I may be met with the criticism that we allowed it to be so carried, but I do not believe the government is going to assume that as a permanent position because it would be a barrier to all progress. Why is it we cannot get all these permanent officials on the civil list?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I agree with my hon. friend that permanent officials should be on the civil list. There is no doubt they should all be placed there, but that has not been done. However, I am looking over the whole of the staff of the Department of the Interior with a view to doing that, because there are a number of officials in permanent positions who are not at present on the civil list, but who should be there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I admit I did not follow that course. I will save my hon. friend that argument.

Mr. FIELDING: I promise not to use it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister will not in this case but I am afraid he will persevere in that argument.

Mr. FIELDING: The occasion arises too often to use it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We started, when we were in office, trying to get some changes made in connection with the whole of these matters. We began reforms which I think my hon. friend considers were right although they had not been carried out previously. For example, I believe he thinks the balance sheet now prepared is a vast improvement on the previous system. Many other reforms were contemplated in connection with the inquiry we instituted. An investigation of that character takes some time. It has been going on for the last eighteen months, ever since hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office. One of the improvements contemplated was to have the estimates prepared in such a way that they would mean something to anybody that was looking at them. I am mentioning this matter now and I brought it up last session. I am glad to see we have one convert in the person of the minister. It does really seem ridiculous that no one can pick up a copy of Canada's Estimates and form the slightest idea of the cost of civil government in this country. That is the situation we have. I had hoped to see the change made this year. I hope that it will be carried out next year beyond all doubt, and that objection will not be taken to doing it because it was not done before. I am going to ask the minister how much of these items is for salaries which should appear in the details of civil government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Out of the $58,420 the sum of $26,685 is for salaries at Ottawa.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And how much of the $18,500 is for the same purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The sum of $11,400, out of the $18,500 is for salaries at Victoria.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: For what purposes is the expenditure which is not for salaries?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will read the items:

Astrophysics—
Material, optical parts, etc., for instruments under construction	$ 500
Repairs and supplies	500
Geographic positions—
Materials for piers, line connections, express, instrument repairs, etc.	$1,000
Latitude and longitude determinations by wire and wireless	3,000
Gravity survey—
Materials for piers, express, instruments, etc.	1,000
Experimental field work with torsion balance	1,500
Field work with pendulums and torsion balance	2,500
Library—
Books, subscriptions to publications, binding, etc.	600
Magnetic Survey—
Materials, express, instruments, repairs, etc.	1,000
Field expenses (two observers in field, with guides, transportation, etc.)	3,000
Seismology—
Material, special parts, etc. for mounting of the new seismographs	500
Photo and other sheets for instruments at Ottawa, Halifax, Saskatoon and Chebucto; repairs and supplies	600
Solar Physics—
Instruments, supplies, etc.	600
Stellar photometry—
Instruments, repairs and supplies	350
Time service—
Time-signal apparatus and supplies; repairs and maintenance of instruments; time for whole of Canada	1,000
Wireless equipment—
Erection of aerial (authorized)	2,960
Apparatus, repairs and supplies	400
Total	$21,010

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does that cover the expenditure for these purposes in connection with both institutions?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The statement I have already given applies to Ottawa. What I am now going to read has reference to Victoria:

Printing, etc.—
Printing publications	$1,800
Books, periodicals, binding	500
Stationery	400
		$2,700
Supplies and maintenance—
Instruments and apparatus	$1,500
Photographic supplies	400
Machine and instrument work	600
Hardware and chemicals	400
Automobile maintenance	600
Postage, customs, freight, telephone	500
Contingencies	400
		4,400

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It looks as though you had for maintenance charges something like $4,400 and for the purchase of instruments and other things $21,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is $21,000 in case of the Observatory at Ottawa.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister is quite right there. A lot of those things are for purchases which will not have to be made each year. Why do we require so much money for next year? We will not be buying instruments every year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. Instruments, of course, have to be purchased, but most of these items are repairs to existing instruments.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could we not have an understanding that something should be done to save the time of the House, and obviate a lot of questions, by showing just what is to be paid for our Civil Service? I think the minister will agree that we ought to be able to tell just what we are paying for the ordinary salaries and the like, in connection with our Civil Service, so that the matter will be clear to us. I would only agree to this course being adopted owing to the fact that these estimates have been prepared in this way for many years, and the chances are that it would be bad for everybody if we had a sudden change which would throw away the basis of comparison. If my suggestion were adopted, the House would know what it was doing, and the Finance Minister, when he was checking up the estimates, would be in a position to see what the department was doing. I would not suggest that these salaries should be taken away entirely from these estimates, and put in civil government, but that there should be, in connection with each one of these items, an extra line which would show how much of these items consisted of salaries, so that we would be able to tell the position exactly.

Mr. FIELDING: Does the hon. member mean the separation of salaries from the other matters, so that the salaries would be shown distinctly? Well, I will consider it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You have already done it. We have done it for many years under civil government. It was never intended that it should be done partially and that the country should be misled. The estimate for civil government was intended to truly represent the cost. I am not blaming anybody. I do not know where it commenced. I could not blame my hon. friend the Minister of Finance because it was done during his long term of service in this country, but in some way or another, or for some purpose or another, lump votes were treated in such a manner as to cover not only expenses in a business sense, entirely apart from salaries, but were made up in such a way as to cover all the other charges. I think the minister will agree that that is not right, that the civil government estimates ought to be complete, and that instead of treating these votes on the wrong basis, which has been adopted in the past, we should carry the totals just as they appear here, with a note explaining that there is included in them a certain amount for salaries and then give the details of the salaries under civil government.

Mr. FIELDING: In order to illustrate the point, take this item in connection with the observatory at Ottawa, $58,420; the hon. member simply wants to divide it into two parts, so much for salaries and the remainder for other services? Is that correct?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, we go half the distance there. Of that $58,000, $26,000 is for salaries. That sum ought to appear in the cost of civil government as admitted by the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: It is pretty hard to define what civil government is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You will find great difficulty in distinguishing between any of these items and other items of civil government. In the department, for example, with which my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Stewart) is perfectly cognizant, you will have people sitting in the same room, doing the same work, some of them included in the cost of civil government, and others included in some lump charge not shown under civil government at all. Our accounts should start out with being honest and complete, but they are not, unless they show what they are supposed to show. My hon. friend will agree with me that the civil government schedules are intended to show the salary costs of this country.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member means that in these items clerical services charged under other heads should hereafter be shown under civil government. I am not saying the hon. member is not right, but the result would be that it would show a large increase in cost of civil government, when in reality there would be no increase at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have it carried in this item as well so there would be a check on it.

Item agreed to.

Topographical Surveys—Topographical and general surveys, traverse of northern rivers and lakes, classification of lands for the settlement and development of Canada, plotting and printing of plans, etc, $520,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is that work being abandoned, to permit of the diminution in the vote?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last year we had a very full discussion upon this question of topographical surveys, and I think in the main I agreed with the trend of the discussion then. One of the complaints was the fact that in three of the departments, at least, topographical work was being carried on, namely the Mines, the Interior and the Defence departments, and it was suggested that it might be well to try to combine the three. We have not succeeded in combining them, but we have a definite understanding that there will no longer be overlapping of work, and I think it would be an admirable thing if we had topographical maps of the whole of Canada, but we have in mind the fact that we must go slowly in this work. I am not prepared to say we could not cut the item still further. We have now no overlapping and uniform work is being carried on all over Canada. However, we have a great deal of pressure from the provinces asking that this work be prosecuted in a much larger way than we are endeavouring to do. I hope to cut it down practically to a minimum. Canada is yet a new country, in comparison with other countries, and topographical work is no doubt valuable. I think it is warranted and we now have the assurance of no overlapping. We are not meeting the demand by any means, but we are giving the survey as fast as we can afford to give it, although perhaps not as fast as they require it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last year—$562,000.

Mr. EVANS: Was there not some overlapping in the classification of lands for settlement? I understood the provinces were doing that.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Dominion survey parties are doing no classification except of Dominion lands. They are doing no classification of natural resources in any of the provinces.

Geodetic Survey of Canada—investigations, reconnaissance, triangulations, precise levelling, geodetic astronomy, etc., $325,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister explain this work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I hope the hon. member will not ask for a scientific explanation. I will give a layman's explanation. Again I am afraid I shall be accused of copying; but on looking over some of the remarks made by previous ministers, that made by my predecessor in this department, now the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) struck me as being very appropriate, when he said that he could not give a better comparison than that of a steel structure for a building. The work of this particular branch of the Department of Surveys is the establishment, at points throughout the country, of permanent centres from which surveys may be carried on. That is one of the duties, combined with many others, of this branch. This is a branch of the surveys that I made some careful inquiry into as well as that of the Topographical Surveys, and I think we are well ahead with this work. We cannot anything like meet the requests of the provinces for this particular kind of work. From Nova Scotia, British Columbia, from the other provinces come requests for more of this work in order that definite points may be set up from which precise surveys may commence and be established. I do not feel like expanding this work; I was rather of the opinion that we might curtail in that direction, but I have not suggested that we do that this year. I should like to know a little more about the work than I do at present. This is, undoubtedly, a very important work. Some aspects of it, as I have said before, I am not critical about, but perhaps the branch has expanded more than there has been necessity for in some of its work.

Mr. EVANS: This is one branch of the service that I cannot quite see the use of. I have read carefully the report of the Geodetic Survey, and so far as I can find out, it has done nothing yet but test geographical positions as determined by the topographical and hydrographic surveys. A number of steel towers have been built at immense cost in the vicinity of Ottawa and at other points in Ontario particularly. I think the work of this branch is an overlapping of the topographical and hydrographic surveys, and that the work could be conducted by the one department. From this report, the only good that I can see in this branch is that it has helped some cities, only a very few, to get their precise levels. One excuse—and this looks as though the branch was hard put to it to find a justification for its existence—was that steel towers helped to locate forest fires. We surely do not need that now. I should like to know more about the work of this branch. I have no technical knowledge, but having read the report I cannot see any particular use for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not disagree with all that my hon. friend has said; but if I understand the Geodetic Survey, it is not of the character that he describes it as having. It is not an overlapping of topographical survey work; it cannot be. It is the foundation of survey work for all others. The Geodetic Survey seeks to establish pivotal points and establishes them, not in relation to points already found by topographical or other surveys, but from astronomical bearings. That is to say, the points established under the geodetic surveys are the points from which triangulation goes out and in relation to which other surveys have their bearings. That is to say, it is basic. Without it the other surveys would not have the certainty that they now possess. I was in hopes that it would not require such a great number of these points to be so ascertained, and that by this time some contraction would be possible. But I believe the points so ascertained by the bearings established by geodetic signs are an essential; they must be found. Otherwise our other surveys would not possess the value that they are intended to possess; indeed, they would be more or less, as I understand the matter, of a confusion. I never heard before that the steel towers erected upon those points became of value for forest protection, and it seems to me that that is pretty far-fetched.

10 p.m.

Mr. EVANS: That is one of the excuses in the report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the service needs an excuse. That is to say, it is a service that we must have, but it should be a contracted service. A great deal has already been done, and I do not think we should look forward to continuing it on the present scale.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If the points are to be established as close as is suggested by the departmental heads, this would doubtless require to be carried on for a considerable number of years at the present appropriation. But I frankly have some doubts whether they are required as close as they are suggested.

Item agreed to.

International boundaries—expenses connected with the survey and demarcation of international boundaries, including $1,000 to J. J. McArthur, as International Boundary Commissioner, $42,940.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is an appropriation that I cannot understand the continuance of year after year. Are we never going to get through with this international boundary? We have been finding the location of this international boundary ever since we were children. As I remember—I do not like to speak too positively—we were virtually through when I was minister, and I have been out of the department now for two years, yes, for three years. I am sure I remember being advised that only a very small amount was required for another year or, at the most, a few months, and we would be through. Now we come back this year with an increase of $7,260 in our efforts to get this international boundary located. Has the boundary been moving? It is getting harder to find all the time.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All I can say to my right hon. friend is that I have exactly the same promise that this is the last year in which we shall require any considerable amount to be voted for this purpose; that the work is completed with the exception of the re-establishment of some of the monuments that have either moved or been destroyed. I am afraid I shall have to admit that last year I had something of the same statement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is taking more money to find lost monuments than it took to locate them there in the first place.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): (reading)

The surveying operations in connection with the demarcation of the international boundary through the different sections from the Arctic ocean to the bay of Fundy, a distance of 4,083 miles, have been completed, and there remain the completion of the reports of the sections, and the engraving and printing of the maps to accompany them. On the reports, two have been submitted to parliament and distributed to the public and 140 maps have been engraved and printed. There remain five reports on all of which a good deal of work has been done, and the completion of 155 maps, all but six of which are ready to be engraved. It is expected that this amount will cover all printing and engraving that can be completed this year. The work of this commission will end when these maps and reports will have been submitted to parliament.

There are two undecided but undisputed points along the boundary which will have to be settled by a convention before this commission can close its operations. A recommendation from the commissioners is before the two governments for the signing of these conventions and also for the appointment of a permanent commission to maintain an effective boundary.

To provide for repairing and renewing monuments and reference marks and reopening the vistas along the 49th Parallel in British Columbia, $5,000.

An inspection along this section of the boundary showed that many of the monuments had been disturbed and that others had deteriorated, and that the vistas opened seventeen years ago had in places so grown over that there is no indication of the line. The customs and immigration officers strongly urge the reopening of the line, particularly in the vicinity of the customs houses.

To provide for repairing and renewing monuments and reference marks on the Quebec-Maine and New Brunswick-Maine boundary lines, $7,500.

On the boundary between the state of Maine and the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick, long stretches of the line are through low and wet land, and many of the monuments have collapsed, and inspection shows that unsuitable material was sometimes used in their construction.

Travelling expenses of the commissioner and engineer, $2,000.

For further investigation of the deeper channel St. Croix river at Milltown, in connection with the undecided nationality of an island, $500.

I do not know what that means particularly.

The commissioners have not succeeded in coming to an agreement as to the deeper channel of the St. Croix river near Milltown, N.B., and the nationality of an island, and further conference and investigations may be necessary.

Allowance to Commissioner J. J. McArthur, $1,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My heart is sinking more than ever. This report indicates that the job is likely to be eternal and the expenditure increased. Furthermore, the recommendation is not being dealt with. I remember it being before the government prior to this administration coming into power. It is apparently lying there still. Why is it not disposed of? Surely we do not have to keep hunting away in the bottom of the lakes for these monuments and trying to ascertain the situation of little islands for all time. I think we may have to have a convention and appoint some permanent body to see that the line is constantly ascertainable, but that body should be composed of officials of the department engaged in other work, some engineers for instance. The way things are going now, it would seem from the report read by the minister that there is a constant evolution of new duties with the probability of a continual increase in this vote—that instead of looking towards the end of it we are opening the vista of new expenditures all the time.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I agree thoroughly with my hon. friend that one or two engineers of the department might very well act on behalf of Canada, and I presume some arrangement could be made with the United States, because they are interested as much as we are in the demarcation of the line. This is something that I intend to take up actively. I do not think we should require further expenditure upon this line except perhaps in regard to the settlement of the difficulty about the island that is referred to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would it not help in carrying forward the policy of the minister to cut out the vote of $1,000 to the present commissioner so it would go to the other engineers?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I should think the matter might very well be closed out before we begin to deal with the present engineers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is his regular salary? Is not this a bonus for keeping the thing open all the time?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The information I get is that as Mr. McArthur succeeded Dr. King this additional gratuity was paid him for the work. It has been continued from year to year while the work has been going on. I may say very frankly that I think one salary should be sufficient for any man, but inasmuch as this matter will be cleared up as far as I am concerned, I think we should be hardly warranted in interfering with what has continued for so many years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think I remember dropping this $1,000. It was restored later on after I left the department. I know I instructed that it should be dropped.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It was not dropped.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know I gave instructions for it to be dropped. It may have got squeezed in, but I do not think so. I know it was restored later on.

Mr. CALDWELL: Did I understand the minister to say that parts of the boundary line between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine had become so obscure that the marks had to be renewed?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I said the marks would have to be renewed.

Mr. CALDWELL: On the line between New Brunswick and Maine?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: Could the minister tell us when they became so obscure? I know it is only a few years ago since a gang of men was put on that boundary, and where the line ran through any forest country a four-foot strip was cleared and concrete monuments were put up on any height of land, so that in following the line you would come to one monument and then get your bearings by the monument on the next bit of rising land. The monuments are built of concrete with a substantial base. I have been over a good deal of that country and they all appeared to be permanent monuments, marked "United States" on one side and "Canada" on the other. I know that some of our people to their sorrow have found that the boundary is too easily defined when they begin to attempt to smuggle something across.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is only in the lower and wet spots apparently that these renewals are to take place. Probably my hon. friend has seen only the monuments that are on the hills. "Long stretches of the line are through low and wet land and many of the monuments have collapsed."

Mr. CALDWELL: What are these monuments made of?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not answer that. I have not seen any of them except those in western Canada.

Mr. CALDWELL: What part of the line are they on?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The notes say between Maine and New Brunswick and Maine and Quebec.

Mr. FORKE: How is the expense of carrying on this work apportioned? Will the United States be granting a similar amount for the same work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The cost of the monuments themselves is divided between the United States and Canada. Each government pays for its own parties.

Mr. CALDWELL: The St. Croix river is the boundary line on the south, and the St. John river on the north. Only a comparative distance is over land, and most of that is through cleared farm lands. I would not think there would be very much expense involved on that portion of the line between New Brunswick and the state of Maine, and I know the monuments there are of a permanent character.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think the minister stated what the salary of the commissioner was.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is $4,500.

Mr. MILLAR: In many departments there are decreases in the amounts appropriated, but here we seem to have more increases than decreases. What inconvenience is involved in the line not being clearly marked? That is, what is the occasion for the urgency which would justify an increase in the vote?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have to have a clearly marked boundary line; if the markings get out of place or become destroyed they have to be re-established. Then, we have a number of people who are desirous of missing the customs officers, some of them anxious to engage in the carrying of liquor back and forth across the line, and it is important that the lines be clearly established.

Mr. FORKE: I cannot see how you come to any arrangement with the United States as to how much will be required to carry on this work. There is an amount of $45,000 here; are we figuring on $45,000 from the United States for its share of the cost?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Each would bear its share of the cost, because both are interested. This is the last year we shall have a substantial expenditure of this character. We have to settle the boundary line in the river, and decide whether this island belongs to Canada or to the United States. My information is that the remainder of the work will be largely completed this year. Of course, there will be some annual expenditure in succeeding years, but it should be comparatively small.

Mr. CALDWELL: How long has the question respecting this island in the St. Croix river been a matter of dispute?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot tell you.

Mr. CALDWELL: It is a pretty old river and a pretty old island.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Can the minister give the committee the exact amount paid by the United States for similar work to this?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot give that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then we do not know how much is being paid by the United States?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, I have not the amount.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have you an agreement with the United States?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the terms of the agreement?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): One-half the cost is contributed by the United States. Of course, they pay their own parties.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But if the minister does not know how much the United States is paying, how does he know they are paying half?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I said I did not know what they were paying their men. There may be differences in the wage scale; I cannot tell my hon. friend as to that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is there really any such agreement as my hon. friend refers to? Is it not a fact that the two countries divide the cost merely of the actual monuments erected?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We cannot look to the United States for any further contribution than that, can we?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. It would be unfair, for example, for the engineering work to be done by one country. That should be divided proportionately.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the minister quite sure that is done? Have you joint parties doing all the work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Arrangements are made for the work to be performed by each country. The parties do not work together.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So that the division of cost between the two countries has relation only to the actual cost of the monuments themselves, which is a comparatively small thing. Now, does the minister not think it would be better to withdraw this increase, instead of going on, piling up costs? I would think he would consider it wise to force this work to cease by doing away with the vote, excepting, of course, such part of it as would be necessary to keep up the monuments. That would be only a small amount.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have gone into this matter fairly thoroughly, and I am told by those who are engaged in the work that this amount is required to complete it so that it will be of value to the people of Canada. When that is done all that remains is just what my hon. friend suggests. A small amount will have to be spent annually to make any necessary repairs, but as these monuments are of a permanent nature the repairs should not require any considerable amount.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Lands and Parks—salaries of the Dominion Lands outside service, $561,380.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Are the details of these salaries given in the civil government details?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No reference at all to them?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Not under civil government details.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the only place where we can get any details of salaries, is it not?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I would ask my hon. friend for the details of these salaries.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my hon. friend want the full list?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like to see it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no increase in the number employed. I have the full list here, and it shows there are 417 employees.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad that the Minister of Finance is still in his seat. Here we have permanent employees to the number of 417 in one department and the details of these salaries do not appear at all in the civil government details.. What is the highest salary paid, and what are the ratings generally?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. Cuttle, Superintendent of Western Land Agencies appears to receive the highest salary, $4,020 a year; his assistant, Mr. Wright, receives $3,090; Mr. Stephenson, Chief Timber Inspector, receives $4,020; Mr. J. W. Martin, Inspector of Agencies, Calgary, $3,300; Mr. Bronsdon, Assistant to the Land Agent Inspector, $2,100.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister says there are no increases.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no increase in the number of employees, but there are certain statutory salary increases as follows: Twenty increases of $15, making $300; thirty-five at $30, making $1,050; twenty at $45, making $900; one hundred and seventy at $60, making $10,200; two at $75, making $150; three at $90, making $270; fifteen at $120, making $1,800, and four at $180, making $720, a total of $15,390. Increases due to reclassification amount to $9,053.60. There is a contingency vote for additional help that may be required of $556.40—total $25,000.

Mr. CHURCH: Referring to the item for the preservation of historic sites, I should like to ask what has been done in that connection in the Niagara district.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is not in order under this item. We are considering the first item under Dominion Lands and Parks, which is the salaries of the Dominion Lands outside service.

Mr. SHAW: I would like the minister to give some indication of the work accomplished by the Dominion Lands and Parks branch for which these salaries are paid, especially with reference to the work done last year as compared with preceding years.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am afraid my hon. friend has asked for almost an impossible explanation. This is largely inspectional work. So far as the Land branch is concerned, no new offices have been opened. The inspectional work carried on from year to year is much the same with the exception that homestead inspection is on the decrease, and there is no doubt that we shall be able to do with fewer homestead inspectors than we have had in the past unless we have an increase in the applications for homesteads. The work is very similar from year to year. As to the parks, they are constantly growing in importance and will require additional votes, I imagine, from year to year if we are to keep them in anything like the shape of the parks of our competitors to the south. We must make them attractive so that people will come to Canada and spend their money here. With regard to the whole vote, with the single exception of homestead inspection, one cannot look for very much in the way of diminished cost of administration. The land offices will have to be maintained until such time as the system in connection with the Dominion lands is changed. That is, if we were to abandon the homestead principle then we could cut off a considerable number of these offices. But until that is done they will have to be maintained, and the inspection, which is the chief cost in connection with this particular item will also have to be kept up.

Mr. SHAW: Is it not a fact that the work done by the Dominion Lands department has been rapidly decreasing during the past several years, but that the staff, apparently, continues to increase?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, there is no increase in the staff.

Mr. SHAW: There certainly is no decrease. What I want to know is, if the work is rapidly decreasing why should not the staff decrease correspondingly?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): To say that the work is decreasing is scarcely a fair statement. It may be true of homesteading. There is no doubt that homesteading is not carried on to the same extent that it was in former years, but there is inspection work to be done in the interest of many of the homesteaders who have not been granted patents. We find that a great deal of the work of the homestead inspector is taken up in connection with disputes as to whether or not the man has done sufficient improvement on his land to earn patent. I do think it is rather an expensive method of dealing with the land; but perhaps more than 50 per cent of the work required of the inspector relates to this very item that I have mentioned, namely, where the patent has not been granted, although the applicant thinks he has earned it four or five years ago, and is yet in dispute.

[Mr. Chairman.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it not a fact that the minister has increased the number of land offices, or sub-land offices, in the West?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, there has been an increase although there was a very substantial diminution five and six years ago, a collecting of them together and a reduction by, I think, about one-half.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): You mean sub-offices?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are some offices as well as sub-offices. Many sub-offices, and some of the offices, were amalgamated but part of that good work has been undone since.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have no knowledge of any office being opened since I took over the department. Medicine Hat has been closed, and one or two other offices. I have no knowledge of any office having been opened. The Wetaskiwin office was moved but it has not resulted in the creation of a new office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The office at Medicine Hat was closed before there was an amalgamation.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The office at Medicine Hat was open when I took office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The offices at Medicine Hat and Lethbridge were amalgamated and the office placed at Medicine Hat.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. the Lethbridge office is open.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the Medicine Hat office was closed.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I beg to differ with my hon. friend. There was a gentleman in occupation of the office at Medicine Hat when I entered the government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will undertake to say one of the two offices was closed, because I closed it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They were both open when I took office; that is all I know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It must have been very shortly before.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot tell how soon it was. All I can say it was open when I took office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think if the minister will look into the matter he will find he is mistaken, because I remember definitely closing the one and putting it into the other, and taking all the abuse that was offered.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As to that, all I know is that the office was in existence at Medicine Hat when I took office. I happen to know that because I am so familiar with the territory. If it were somewhere else I might be less certain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I remember now it was the office at Medicine Hat that was closed, it was not the office at Lethbridge. There might have been a building there but the office was closed without any question.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): You mean—

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Dominion Land office.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That may be true but there was a sub-agency there. Perhaps that is how the disagreement has arisen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I knew my recollection of it was right. There might be a sub-agency open but the land office was closed. It was merged in the office at Lethbridge.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is quite right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has not the minister made that office at Medicine Hat a land office since?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No it is closed. There is a sub-agent there.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How many homestead inspectors are there in the three prairie provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Sixty-four.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Can you give me the number by provinces?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No I am waiting for an answer to my question.

Mr. BANCROFT: While the minister is looking up the information I should like, if it is in order, to ask him about the improvements that are necessary for proving up lands. I have in mind particularly the land in the lake districts of northern Manitoba where many of the homesteaders have to drain their land before it is of any use to break, because if they did break the land without constructing the drains or without doing any ditching they could not work it after it was brought under cultivation. Consequently they have to construct ditches first. Now, I have had several requests, and I have forwarded some of them to the minister, asking that this be considered as part of their improvements—that is that anything in the nature of a permanent ditch be considered as part of their improvements in applying for a patent. I wonder if the minister has considered these applications, and is he favourably disposed towards them with respect to those districts where ditching is necessary?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): May I first give the information for which the hon. member for Bow River has asked. The first answer was not quite correct. The 18 timber inspectors are included with the 64 homestead inspectors that I mentioned. There are 6 homestead inspectors in Manitoba, 20 in Saskatchewan, and 20 in Alberta, making a total of 46 There are 5 timber inspectors in Manitoba, 3 in Saskatchewan, and 7 in Alberta. In the block in British Columbia there are 3 making a total of 18.

In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Bancroft) I may say that I have not come to a decision as to his request to include improvements in the shape of ditching in the regulations governing the amount of improvement to be done to earn the title to a homestead. That work is perhaps legitimate improvement and one worthy of consideration. It is a new request, however, and it will be given full consideration.

Mr. BANCROFT: I might just say that I think the regulations could very well be made so elastic that the homestead inspector could take into consideration any permanent ditches that were constructed. This will only apply to very few districts, but it is a matter of great importance to the people in those districts.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In regard to the 20 inspectors in Saskatchewan, are they paid a straight salary, or paid simply for the number of inspections they make?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are paid a straight salary.

Mr. MILLAR: It seems strange that twenty inspectors can be employed in Saskatchewan all the time. I do not know how many homesteads there are in that province, but one could travel in the southern part for days and could count on the fingers of one hand all of the homesteads he could see. In the north there are considerably more.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed that the department had sixty inspectors in the days when a good deal of homesteading was going on. We are endeavouring to cut down the number of homestead inspectors. Some of them were cut off in Alberta. We have not as many in that province this year as we had a year ago.

Mr. COOTE: What other officials are included in that list? Are forest reserve rangers included?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, this simply applies to Dominion lands. There are no forest rangers in this particular vote.

Mr. KELLNER: Does this apply also to lease inspectors, or are they separate?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The range and lease inspectors come under this vote.

Mr. SHAW: Are all the employees covered by this vote subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act? Are the provisions of that act applicable to all of them, or are those provisions being evaded in any way?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, they apply to all the officials in the list.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister does not appoint them notwithstanding the provisions, the way he does in the Immigration department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think that is a sore point with my hon. friend, but I should like to point out there are occasions when it is necessary to do something of that character. Immigration is more or less of a fluctuating character. For example, we have had the Carlisle and Belfast vacancies in the Old Country since last October. Two men were recently appointed by the Civil Service Commission to fill those vacancies.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: When did the minister apply?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last October.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The last time I inquired the minister was wrong. He had not applied to the commission until some time afterwards.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Where did the right hon. member get that information?

Mr. MEIGHEN: From the commission. I wrote and asked, which I had a right to do.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not disputing the hon. member's right to do that, but I say that at the moment those officials have not gone forward, indeed one of them is just leaving his home in British Columbia to begin to perform his duties. I have no desire to make an appointment, but when you need an official in a hurry some latitude should be permitted. I want to say most emphatically that I have no desire to appoint any civil servant. My experience is all the other way. I am perfectly content to let the Civil Service Commission make all the appointments.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: On that point of homestead inspectors, have any requests come from the Hebrideans who went to my constituency of Red Deer a short time ago, or from the provincial government, regarding settling those men upon homesteads in that part of Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, we had a considerable number of telegrams. I will be very glad to go into the matter with my hon. friend. I have been following the fortunes of the Hebrideans very closely, and they, in common with all other newcomers, got rather bad advice. I think if they had accepted the advice of the Soldiers' Settlement Board and of the Immigration department, no considerable harm would have been done. My recent information is that they are all being settled upon land happily in the vicinity of Red Deer.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. EVANS: I would like to ask regarding the twenty homestead inspectors in Saskatchewan. There cannot be work for more than two at the present time. I do not know what twenty are doing.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not the full knowledge of Saskatchewan that my hon. friend appears to have, but I fancy there is work for more than two. Probably the twenty are not so busily engaged, but I will promise my hon. friend I will find out what they are doing.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: One more question regarding this matter, which is not absolutely under this item but connected with it very closely indeed; was any part of the grant made for these men applied to settle them on the land, or was the whole sum applied in assisting passages, or to put in proper condition the old school in the vicinity of Red Deer? I have been asked a great many questions with regard to how that money was spent, and if any part of it was being used to settle these people on the land.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No money was spent in establishing the settlers on the land. Money has been spent in repairing the school buildings on the Indian farms, and in assisting the families.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has given the number of homestead inspectors in the three provinces as: Manitoba, six; Saskatchewan, twenty; Alberta, twenty. Can he tell me the number of homesteads filed on in the last year in the three provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In all probability we will be dealing wth this matter on another occasion, and I shall endeavour to give that information to my hon. friend. I do not have it with me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In the event of the matter not coming up again, I would ask the minister to send me the information.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will be very glad to give it to the committee, if the hon. member will bring it up.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I may not be here to bring it up, and I would like the minister to send it to me.

Mr. SHAW: The minister has given us his assurance that the provisions of the Civil Service Act have been complied with. I want to point out, for his information, that his department appointed a grazing inspector, who was employed for a period of six months at a salary of $250 a month, and no notice was given the Civil Service Commission, despite the fact the regulations required that notice should be given.

The CHAIRMAN: That does not come under this item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it does.

Mr. SHAW: It has already been suggested that it comes under this item. This man was employed approximately for six months at $250 a month. No notice was given the Civil Service Commission with respect to that appointment at all. I have a fear that there may be other appointments of this character.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know where my hon. friend got this information. Both my hon. friends got information from the Civil Service Commission with respect to this matter. However, I presume it is Mr. Helmer to whom he refers.

Mr. SHAW: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As far as I know, his name was before the Civil Service Commission, at least, for a portion of the time he was employed. He was employed on special work at that time in connection with grazing in the forest reserve, when Mr. Cloakey, the regular range inspector, was not available, to settle a dispute with regard to grazing. It was not anticipated in any way that he should be permanent, or that he should be continued for any considerable length of time.

Mr. SHAW: The point I want to suggest is this, that the regulations of the Civil Service Act are not being complied with. That is not right. If the act is not satisfactory, then repeal it; but no deputy minister should have the privilege, under any circumstances, of violating the law in that regard.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All that I can say to my hon. friend is that there is in the Civil Service Act a provision under which you can for temporary periods employ individuals.

Mr. SHAW: The commission must be notified.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If we have gone beyond the provision in that regard, of course we are guilty of an offence; but so far as I know, we have not been sinners in that particular case, that is in doing it without the knowledge of the Civil Service Commission, nor have I any desire to do that.

Mr. SHAW: I quite appreciate that the minister has no desire to infringe the law; but the law is perfectly clear that notification of appointments of this kind, even for temporary purposes, must be made to the Civil Service Commission. In the case I mentioned no notice was given at all. If a person is employed for a period, I think, of thirty days, a communication must be sent to the Civil Service Commission. This man was employed, I think, for approximately six months, and the Civil Service Commission, according to a written communication I have received, had no notice at all. What I fear is that, perhaps, there may be other appointments and expenditures of this character, certainly without the minister's knowledge, and this is a matter that should be carefully gone into.

Mr. McBRIDE: There are a number of disputes out in British Columbia in connection with grazing leases, and I have asked for an investigator to go out there in order to try to straighten them out. This is the gentleman whom the department says they will send out there if they can get him. I understand he is a very capable man and has rendered good service wherever he has gone. If they can get him to go out to British Columbia, it is not likely they will go to the Civil Service Commission to get him; they will appoint him without doing that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) is a man after the minister's own heart. Just appoint whom you like! The minister has no power to appoint save under emergency circumstances, and that does not mean that because he wants somebody to inspect ranches, he can appoint a man. That clause was intended to cover, say, cases of destruction of property, property that had to be immediately restored, an emergency of that kind. It is that clause which the minister has abused, not only in the Interior department, but in these other departments, and it has been abused pretty consistently. The other week I had a communication from some party in connection, I am practically sure, with the Geodetic Survey, and I simply transmitted it to the Civil Service Commission. I have the letter in my office, and I find that the department has appointed someone to fill a vacancy in that branch without notice to the commission at all. This sort of thing is going on pretty generally. The minister has some officers who are quite capable of doing this, and I cannot acquit the minister quite so readily. It is a strange thing to me that the appointee in Manitoba in one case was the former Liberal organizer. On more than one occasion the appointee in Alberta was a former Liberal candidate, and an appointee in Saskatchewan had somewhat similar experience. This man Helmer I have not heard of before. What is his political experience?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not say except that he was ranch inspector prior to the appointment of Mr. Cloakey. I venture that as a correct statement. At all events he had had experience in this work.

[Mr. Shaw.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was his political experience?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot tell my right hon. friend that.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a secret.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know what his political affiliation was. We are not such hide-bound partisans in Alberta as, perhaps, people are in some other parts of the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. May is a pretty good example.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. May was a Liberal candidate for East Edmonton. There is no doubt about that. Mr. May has been a lifelong Liberal.

Mr. McBRIDE: The right hon. gentleman said that I was a man after the minister's own heart. I should like him to mention one instance in which I have suggested an appointment or brought about one in any way.

Mr. SHAW: With reference to the gentlemen referred to by the minister, I think he is a very competent official. May I say further for the benefit of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride), that when they wanted that gentleman to go out to British Columbia, they made application to the Civil Service Commission and they were given permission for that purpose. This was after the matter had been brought up in the Civil Service committee. What I object to is not the appointment of the particular individual. I am sure that he will give satisfactory service. What I object to is the method by which the appointment is made. Some of the officers of that department are apparently not as careful as they should be in seeing to it that the regulations are obeyed. The people of this country have no assurance that patronage has been eliminated unless all the officials comply with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. That was not done in that case, and I think the officers are entitled to a reprimand for their failure to comply with the provisions.

11 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What has been done with respect to the lease for pulp purposes to the Manitoba Pulp and Paper Company in Manitoba? I understand the minister has added by order in council an immense area to the land which the company obtained previously by tender. Is that correct?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Is that the McArthurs'?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, the Manitoba Pulp and Paper Company. Mr. McArthur is, I believe, the owner.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): He has an addition under lease, under the ordinary provisions of granting leases for this purpose, not of a very large area, as my right hon. friend mentions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About 555,000 acres, I think, was the addition. What does the minister mean by the "ordinary provisions?" I venture to say that there has never been an addition to a pulp lease before, for this is the very first pulp lease that has been granted. It was obtained by tender and given to the highest bidder at a very fair price. Then the minister added, without any tender at all, about as much more as the original allotment. What does the minister mean by saying that this was under the ordinary provisions?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My information is that it was granted under the usual provision by which leases of this character are given to applicants for them. I have no knowledge that anything out of the ordinary, as my right hon. friend speaks of, was done in connection with this particular lease.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have the order in council before me. On the 11th November, on the recommendation of the minister, there was added to the Manitoba Pulp and Paper Company's lease a whole series of townships. I think if the minister collects the acreages together, he will find that the quantity is about 555,000 acres, or about the quantity that this company obtained by tender in its original lease. That is to say, he almost doubled the acreage. In the original lease, before there was any advertisement for tender at all, the utmost precautions were taken to see that a sufficient area was given to enable the pulp industry to be financed, to supply pulp for a large mill, for the length of time that the very best authorities stated would be required. Then advertisements were issued and tenders were called for on the basis of 80 cents per cord for spruce, which is the chief wood and, I think, 40 cents per cord for the others. Tenderers were asked to say how much more they would pay above these standard figures of 80 cents and 40 cents, 80 cents for spruce being really the figure that counted. The company that secured the tender had paid a very considerable bonus, indeed, if my memory is correct, at least twice the eighty cents per cord, making the payment altogether about $2.45. I do not think I am very far out in that figure, if I am out at all. That was a substantial bonus. Now, under this order in council the minister has granted an addition to that berth of virtually the acreage covered by the original lease, and he has granted it without any bonus whatsoever, merely at the upset rate of eighty cents per cord for spruce and forty cents per cord for pulpwood and other species of timber. It looks as if the timber wolf were abroad again. What is the minister's explanation of losing to the country that immense sum of money?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Representations were made to the department that a larger area would have to be granted before the project for the establishing of a mill in this particular locality could be financed. Not only that, but the upset price paid at the particular time the berth was offered appears to be very, very high because pulp was then selling at an extraordinary high price. The additional area was granted to enable the company to get the pulp industry started there, but it does not seem that even with the additional area this is going to be possible. I am informed that so far the financing has not been accomplished, and that it is doubtful if, even with the additional area, the industry can be started in that locality, notwithstanding the fact that the company appear to have a lease of a very desirable water power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The question is not answered yet. The fact is that pulp is at a very high price to-day, as is also paper. I feel pretty sure that this lease was granted in the early part of 1921, and I am not aware that there was any very greatly higher price for pulp then than now. Suffice to say that at the present moment pulp areas are as valuable, if not more so, as they ever were in this Dominion. I do not think the minister can point to the sale of a pulp area within the last six months that is not at a record price—higher than could have been obtained at the time this lease was made. Now, Mr. McArthur tendered. His tender was accepted. It was the highest and it provided for just three times what the minister has granted in this additional area without tender at all. It may be that he has not got it through yet. I do not know what plan of financing he has adopted. I have nothing to say against him personally, not a word, but the interests of the country are not protected under this order in council. It looks as if we are getting back to the old days again. I protest against adding this immense area, almost an empire. I know I am not appreciably in error when I say it is 550,000 acres.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think my hon. friend will find there is not anything like the amount of pulpwood on this area as shown by the cruise, in fact scarcely half that amount. I am speaking from memory, but I shall be glad to get the information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister will get that much less then even at the eighty cents a cord. But I am not so sure. Certainly there is some excellent pulpwood in this district because the utmost care was taken in determining what would be the amount required. It was not intended to add to that pulp area. If it were added to some means should have been taken to get the actual value of the timber and not fix the value at a third, or less than a third, of what was paid in the open market. What is to hinder this new company so planning its mill as to utilize this area that the minister has added at eighty cents per cord and leave the area tendered on practically untouched? Has not the minister in effect simply taken the price procured by the late government and cut it in three parts, leaving two parts to the lessees and retaining only one part for the country?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not think so, because of necessity a mill will have to be established at a point where the lease is held of the water power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But they can use only this timber and never touch the other at all now.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): You mean they may use the timber on the leased area first?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, they will use the cheaper timber off what the minister has given them and leave the rest, so in effect the minister has just cut in three parts what he ought to have got for the timber.

Mr. MILLAR: I should like to ask another question in regard to the matter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is worth a little more attention.

Mr. MILLAR: It is. In order to get some practical results from this discussion I would ask two questions: What is the salary of one of these inspectors? And have we an assurance from the minister that consideration in the very near future will be given to this matter so that the surplus inspectors will be retired and some economy exercised? This does seem to be a very large number of inspectors for the work they have to do.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I gave the committee an assurance that these men would be retired just as fast as possible. We commenced that policy in Alberta last year. I cannot say from memory we retired any in Saskatchewan, but undoubtedly some men will be retired this year.

Mr. MILLAR: Are the inspectors allowed to do other work, or do they devote all their time to inspection?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The only other work they are engaged in is the investigation and collection of seed grain accounts, which are now of course getting down to a fairly low point.

Mr. MILLAR: What salaries do they receive?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): A maximum salary of $1,800.

Mr. MILLAR: And expenses?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. If my hon. friend will let the matter of the lease stand I will get full information for him.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister add to the information a full statement of the amount of pulpwood on this addition covered by the order in council?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I will bring down all the information I have in connection with it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let the item stand.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is not necessary that this item should stand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is really the item the matter comes under.

Mr. CALDWELL: Does this pulp have to be manufactured on the land which is leased, or can the lessees ship it off to other points even outside of Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot give that information now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The regulations provide that all the timber should be converted into pulp in Canada, and that a certain proportion of the pulp should be made into paper, I think one-half.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is just the salary item we are dealing with. I am willing that the matter should be raised again; I will procure the information.

Mr. BIRD: I wish to ask the minister a question that really concerns the scope of his department. I have in mind two sections of good farming land near the railway that is pretty well settled by a good class of settlers, many of them returned soldiers. I am informed that these settlers will have to get out of there if they cannot get some drainage done. It is low land and in a wet season it is almost impossible to cultivate it. I know that strictly speaking this matter is outside the scope of the department, but these men went in there in more optimistic times thinking they could make good, but under present conditions they will likely have to back out. I know another district in which there is a good class of settlers, most of them returned soldiers, but they are under this difficulty—and I think it is a common one throughout the West: a good many of them have relinquished their holdings, their homesteads have gone back to the government, and the accumulated taxes have been automatically cancelled, leaving a heavy burden upon those remaining there. It seems to me that the department ought to have some policy in a matter of this kind. In both these cases the settlers are prepared to go on and make good if they can get the help they need. I think it is a legitimate function of the department to take care of these people who, as I say, in more optimistic times, went out to the edge of things and tried to establish themselves, but who in these harder times, will have to pull up and find other fields if they are not afforded relief.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know whether the Drainage Act of Manitoba is similar to that of Saskatchewan and Alberta, but in cases where Crown lands are affected arrangements are made with both these provinces by the federal authorities for the inclusion of Crown lands in these drainage areas. The problem of drainage, however, is one that is assumed by the provinces. Perhaps my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) could tell me how long it is since the federal authorities ceased their operations in drainage.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We had not ceased when I left the department, in drainage.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I mean, commencing new projects.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We had not ceased then. We may have in 1921.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All I know is that Alberta made an agreement with my right hon. friend when he was minister respecting both irrigation and drainage.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, that is right.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Clearly both governments cannot be engaged in drainage projects. The federal government will carry out the agreement made with the other two provinces; I am not familiar with the legislation of Manitoba dealing with drainage. The federal government is prepared to treat Manitoba on the same basis as Saskatchewan and Alberta, leaving, however, to the provincial government the responsibility of taking care of drainage. If it is true that soldier settlers were placed on some of these low lying lands, that is a regrettable circumstance, because they are bound to have difficulties in wet years until drainage is undertaken.

Mr. BIRD: In the latter part of my statement I said that in certain districts the land was reverting to the government, the taxes were automatically cancelled and the burden was falling upon the handful of settlers left, wtih the result that they were gradually being forced out.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my hon. friend refer to soldier settlers' land that has reverted to the Dominion?

Mr. BIRD: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is true. I submitted that question to the Justice department and have a report from them in which they point out most emphatically that we cannot pay taxes upon Dominion land and that lands reverting to the Dominion, although they have been in the hands of private individuals, are in the same category as though they had always been Crown lands.

Mr. FORKE: Did the minister not go so far as to say that it would need an amendment to the British North America Act?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Well, I cannot say that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In the organized territories the provinces claim they have nothing to do with the matter of drainage, improvements, and so on in the unorganized districts. How, then, is the homesteader to get any of these improvements if he is in an unorganized district? The provincial government really "passes the buck," so that the homesteaders are up against a tough proposition.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no difficulty in Alberta; they have full authority under their act to deal with the matter. My hon. friend says they "passed the buck," but they are the responsible people on the ground, able to give supervision and to know the requirements much better than the federal authorities at this distance from the scene of operations.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The Dominion government still holds the natural resources of the three western provinces and the provincial government does not feel disposed to spend any money in these unorganized districts.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There would be no cost to the provincial government other than the expense of financing the scheme. The land invariably would pay for the drainage. I can scarcely conceive of drainage being undertaken in an area where the lands would not pay for the drainage. If they would not pay for it, it would be a poor proposition to undertake.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The provinces will not get any taxes until these lands are patented.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They will get taxes as soon as the lands are occupied.

Mr. WARD: I think this is a question that should receive serious consideration. There are large areas in western Canada that are unorganized, and in these unorganized areas the question of road building and drainage is a very serious one. Personally I think the responsibility is on the Department of the Interior of this government to see that some measure of relief is given to these districts. I do not think we should pass over this item lightly. These people are doing the best they can to develop these unorganized areas, and it is not their fault that the territory is unorganized. I think this question should be seriously considered by the government.

Mr. CALDWELL: Referring to the cancellation of taxes on land that reverts to the government, while it is a well-known fact that Dominion lands cannot be taxed for any purpose, I submit that not to pay the taxes even on Dominion lands that have been settled by soldier settlers and that have reverted to the government works a very great hardship on the people other than soldier settlers who are living in that district. For instance, the government will settle a number of soldiers in a district where there are other settlers farming on their own hook. It is an organized school district, for people will not go where they cannot get a chance to educate their children. An education is the birthright of every child in Canada these days, but due to the fact that a good many soldier settlers are leaving the land, and I submit that under present conditions a great many more of them will have to leave, the older settlers are unable to keep up the schools.

In my own province this has been working a very great hardship, and even if it should be necessary to amend the British North America Act, there should be some effort made by the government so that the people who have settled in these districts will be able to give their children a common school education. That has been looked upon as a necessity in this country since the days when we replaced the Indians on this North American continent. A good many people are beginning to think that we made a mistake in usurping the rights of the Indians and the bears, and that we should have left the country to them due to this and other causes. I submit that this is working a serious hardship to the school districts. It is a different matter to say that Dominion lands which are wild lands should not be subject to taxes, but it is not wild lands that I am speaking of. The government takes land that has been in organized school districts for years, where people have settled simply because they were organized and where they would have a chance to educate their children, and then when this land reverts to the government these older settlers are unable to maintain the school and a great many schools are closed to-day on this very account. I think it is a more serious situation than the government realizes, and I would like to impress upon them the seriousness of it. Education is one thing we cannot afford to do without, and one thing that the government should not do is to bring about conditions which will prevent people from giving their children an education in this country, and the government's action in this matter is having that effect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We would not need to amend the British North America Act to enable the minister to pay taxes on soldier settler lands after vacation. We would need to amend the budget, and likely would have to amend the government as well.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not had a legal training, but I may say that this matter has been submitted to the Department of Justice, and I quoted from the advice they gave.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Naturally their advice would be that we could not be taxed with it. No one says we can, but we can pay it without having to do it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As a voluntary contribution?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly. We could assume the liability. It could not be forced upon us.

Mr. CALDWELL: To illustrate: A man goes through bankruptcy and pays his creditor, we will say, twenty cents on the dollar, but if he goes into business again and later on accumulates wealth if he is any sort of honest man he is pretty certain to pay off his debts. You cannot compel him to, but you would not regard him as a good citizen if he evaded payment through some technicality in the law. That looks to me the position the government are in under the circumstances I speak of.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far as I personally am concerned I have no particular objection, but I wanted to be sure that I was legally right in the matter, because cases of this kind have been occurring in all parts of Canada. True in the aggregate there are not a very large number of soldier holdings vacant, but a few have been given up scattered throughout the Dominion, and a great deal of complaint has been made with respect to the condition of affairs. The advice I have received is that it was not legally possible for the government to pay claims of this character. I suppose that we could vote a sum of money for this purpose and make a grant to the municipalities in lieu of taxes. There is nothing to prevent that, I suppose, but that is a matter to which I have not given consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would submit that the ruling is right that there need be no taxes paid on any farm on which a soldier settler is settled to-day, because the government has the deed of that farm absolutely, and they are just as much in possession as if the soldier had not one scratch of the pen to the title. The government are in possession until the loan is fully paid. The term is twenty-one years, I think.

Mr. COPP: The soldier has an equity in it under his agreement.

Mr. CALDWELL: He has no equity until his loan is fully paid off.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The courts have held that the occupational interest is taxable.

Mr. CALDWELL: I know cases where a soldier settler has deserted the land and the Settlement Board has turned it over to someone else who is now working it, and they refuse to pay taxes. I know cases of that kind where the Board is receiving a higher rent than the yearly return from the soldier settler would amount to, yet the board or the government refuse to pay the taxes although they are getting more revenue than if the soldier was occupying the land. I submit that that is working a hardship, and a hardship not only in dollars and cents, but in the direction of closing the schools because the other settlers are not able to keep them going. They are not able to get away, or they do not want to abandon their farms, and the result is that it is preventing their children from getting a common school education.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my hon. friend mean to say that lands that are leased are not paying taxes?

Mr. CALDWELL: By the Soldier Settlement Board, yes; and I could give names and the places where the land is located.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I had not heard of that before.

Mr. CALDWELL: I know it to be a fact.

Mr. KNOX: I want to revert for a moment to the drainage area question. Is it not a fact that the lands which are drained carry the expense of that drainage?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. KNOX: In the case of the Moose Range drainage area I find that in the years 1919 and 1920 the expense amounts to the sum of $23,000, yet there has been no drainage accomplished there. What about the expenditure which has been made, I think in connection with survey work? If eventually the lands are drained will that expenditure all be charged up against those lands?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. KNOX: In the meantime what is it charged to?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It will have to be from an appropriation for that purpose, but all expenditure in connection with drainage will be charged to the lands eventually and it will be paid out of the sale of the lands.

Mr. KNOX: I think there is little likelihood at the present time of the drainage project being carried out.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In case the drainage project did not go on, the Reclamation department of this government would have to stand the cost; it would come out of the revenue of Canada.

Mr. BIRD: With regard to the liability for taxes, I appreciate the minister's explanation. It no doubt is the case that the government is not liable for these taxes, but the fact remains that a good many people and very worthy people at that—not only in my constituency, but right through the West —feel they have a grievance, a very keen grievance, against the government, and I think it would bring a good deal of satisfaction to the minds of those settlers if the minister would only indicate that he is going further into this matter. He is up against a negative but then the problem remains, and there is this feeling in the minds of a good many people, and good people. In the case that I have in mind, I do not know anywhere in Manitoba where you could find a group of more promising settlers. If there is a community of promising settlers anywhere in the West it is that community. But they are disheartened and whether they have a grievance against the government or not they feel they have. I think the minister would be doing what we all naturally expect would be the right thing to do if he would indicate that he would go more deeply into this matter and see if some policy could not be formulated whereby these people could be relieved to some extent. It may be that this department has not all the responsibility. It may be that the provincial government might be stimulated to take some interest if this department would. Most of these men are in unorganized territory though, and the provincial government therefore has not that sense of responsibility that would attach to this department here. I know the minister is sympathetic, and I would like him to express himself sympathetically in order that these people might have some satisfaction.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If it is a matter of taxation I, personally, am quite prepared to put the matter up to the government—that is the matter of the taxation on land reverting to the Crown held by soldier settlers. If it is a matter of drainage I can say that I am perfectly willing to go the full length so far as the federal government is concerned in assisting; but I must point out to my hon. friend that I think it is the duty of the provincial government to carry out the scheme. That responsibility certainly does not, in my opinion, rest upon the federal authorities; the work would have to be done by the province. Where Crown lands are affected in the area those Crown lands would be made available and no difficulty would be placed in the way of drainage; but that the federal authorities shall step in and take the responsibility for drainage is a recommendation I can hardly make. I will have to be frank and state that fact to my hon. friend.

[Mr. Bird.]

Mr. FORKE: I should just like to point out to the committee that when the right hon. leader of the Opposition was Minister of the Interior he was memorialized quite frequently in regard to this very subject, but we did not get very much satisfaction that I can remember. It is no new subject because, acting for the Manitoba Union of Municipalities, I think I memorialized every member of the House and all the members of the Senate from Manitoba, and the only reply I ever got was from my predecessor, the member for Brandon. I could not even get an answer from the Minister of the Interior at that time. I do not think my right hon. friend is listening?

Mr MEIGHEN: Yes, I am. I do not know what the subject is. The hon. member did not say whether it related to the drainage undertaking or had to do with the taxation of soldier settlement lands.

Mr. FORKE: Taxation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The taxation of soldier settlement lands? Well, I assure the hon. member that if he wrote the Minister of the Interior, an answer was sent him regardless of whether he ever received it or not. We never arrived really at the time when the question of the payment of taxes on deserted soldier settlement lands came up, not while I was Minister of the Interior—not up to the end of my tenure of office. I can remember that the number of soldiers who had left the lands was virtually nil; these cases have come in since. So I do not think there were representations made to me at that time; I do not remember any being received. I have not argued in this debate that the minister should assume responsibility. I know that a great deal can be said for it, but I have not taken the stand that that burden could safely be assumed by the government. I do not know that I have any final opinion on the question. Consequently I have not taken a stand against the attitude the minister has taken. I have only said that while we are not liable we certainly have the right to pay, and all that is needed is an appropriation of parliament for the purpose. I fancy it would be a pretty large appropriation and it might carry the government into responsibilities in other fields that would be much more serious even than this. Those are the thoughts that have been running in my head. I think the hon. member is wrong in stating that representations were made to me in respect of soldier settlement land because the numbers would be so very few up to the month of July, 1920, of those who would have left. The soldier settlement plan only went into effect in the summer of 1921, one year before, and there would not be soldiers deserting their land before July, 1920. Therefore what my hon. friend has reference to must have been some subject very closely akin.

The CHAIRMAN: The first item is carried.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Chairman, we have now transgressed some forty minutes on the quiet of the night as limited by the government at the opening of parliament.

Mr. GRAHAM: We are working on standard time to-night.

Progress reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is a resolution, No. 33 on to-day's order paper, in the name of the Minister of Railways which will be taken up; the second reading of the bill to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, in the name of the Minister of Agriculture; and the bill to amend the Naturalization Act in the name of the Secretary of State. We propose to take up the estimates of the Department of Customs the first thing to-morrow. If we conclude with them we will continue with the estimates of the Department of the Interior upon which we have been engaged to-night.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The budget resolutions will not be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, not the budget resolutions. In reference to the observation of my right hon. friend as to the lateness of the sitting, the government has hoped all along that it would not be necessary to extend the hour of sitting at night beyond eleven o'clock, but I think there is a feeling on the part of many members of the House that we should begin now to do so with a view to expediting the conclusion of the business of parliament. For that reason it may become necessary to sit later in the evening if we find we do not make much progress during the day.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

Wednesday, May 30, 1923.

The House met at three o'clock.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. GAUVREAU presented the third report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Printing.

COMMITTEES — CHANGES IN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Descoteaux be substituted for that of Mr. Gauvreau on the select standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, and for that of Mr. Trahan on the select standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 190, to amend the Companies Act.

He said: The bill comprises twenty-eight sections, all of which, with the exception of two, are to correct ambiguities and make other changes of minor importance. I would direct the attention of hon. members to sections 22 and 23, which make special provision regarding the paying of dividends of mining companies. These, of course, will be thoroughly examined when we go into committee. Otherwise the changes are merely alterations of wording, as I have said, to correct ambiguities.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PHARMACEUTICAL PREPARATIONS

Mr. LUCAS:

1. Has the government any means of discovering whether or not certain dealers in completely manufactured pharmaceutical preparations fail to indicate the country of origin on their packages?
2. What does the government intend to do in cases where the present law and regulations are being systematically avoided?

Hon. Mr. BELAND: This question has been on the order paper for a long time, and I might say to my hon. friend that I was under the impression that the Department of Customs or the Department of Trade and Commerce would supply the information sought. I find, however, that these departments are not concerned with the matter referred to in the question. I shall make inquiry, and I think perhaps under the regulations of the Health department we can ascertain the country of origin. I promise my hon. friend an answer at the next sitting of the House.

Question stands.

MARGAREE RIVER SALMON FISHERIES ASSOCIATION

Mr. HANSON:

1. When was the Margaree River Salmon Fisheries Association formed, and what are its relations, contractual or otherwise with the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

2. What were the names of the members of the association in 1921?

3. Was any change made in the membership of the association in 1922? If so, at whose instance?

4. Were any persons, members of the association in 1921, deprived of their interests or shares in the Association, or in the proceeds received from the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the year 1922 by reason of any action of the department or any officer thereof, in the year 1922?

5. Has any claim been made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by any persons, for a share of the payment agreed to be made to the association by that department, which has been disallowed? If so, who are the persons and what are the reasons for such disallowance?

6. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries at the instance of any member of parliament, changed the membership of such association?

7. If so, who was such member of parliament?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

The answer to these questions will be contained in the return moved for by Mr. Hocken for Mr. Hanson on the 14th instant.

ST. ANNE-ST. CHARLES TELEGRAPH

Mr. HANSON:

1. What were the revenues from the telegraph line between St. Anne and St. Charles, in the county of Chicoutimi, during the past five years?

2. What were the revenues of the same line between St. Charles and Péribonka during the same period of time?

3. What were the expenses for the maintenance and salaries on each of these sections during the same years?

4. Does the government know that the length of this line there is a telephone system which serves all the parishes and which is in direct communication with all telegraph offices of the district, and that consequently the existence of this telegraph line has become absolutely useless from all standpoints?

5. Is it the intention of the government in these circumstances to discontinue immediately the maintenance of these two sections of telegraph, which have no reason for existing from the standpoint of public interest and economy?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. $323.47.

2. $23.13.

3. Ste. Anne-St. Charles, $4.201.90; St. Charles-Peribonka, $4,774.85.

4 and 5. Yes, and as the telephone system supplies all accommodation required in the district, negotiations are in progress with the view of disposing of this branch line at an early date.

CRUDE OIL BOUNTIES

Mr. FANSHER:

What are the names of the producers of crude oil, in Lambton county, Ontario, who received a bounty on crude oil, and what amount of bounty did each receive during the last fiscal year for which returns are complete?

Hon. Mr. ROBB: List of producers of crude oil, whose wells are located in the county of Lambton in the province of Ontario, and the amount of bounty paid to each during the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1923:

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. COOTE:

1. How many ships owned by the Canadian Merchant Marine are on the Great Lakes?

2. How many of the said ships are being used in the Grain Trade at the present time?

3. Are any or all of them under lease to other firms or persons?

4. If so, to whom?

5. What rate are they charging from (a) Fort William to Bay Ports; (b) Fort William to Port Colborne; (c) Fort William to Buffalo; and (d) between Port Colborne and Montreal?

6. What is the highest rate charged this year on each of the above hauls?

7. What is the lowest rate charged this year on each of the above hauls?

8. What was the highest rate charged in the year 1922 on each of the above hauls?

9. What was the lowest rate charged in the year 1922 on each of the said hauls?

10. What was the highest rate charged in the year 1921 on each of the above hauls?

11. What was the lowest rate charged in the year 1921 on each of the above hauls?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Ten.

2. Six.

3. Yes; two.

4. S.S. T. J. Drummond and J. A. McKee are chartered to the Great Lakes Transportation Company Limited.

5. (a) Fort William to Bay ports, 1923, 4 cents per bushel. (b) Fort William to Port Colborne, 1923, 4 cents per bushel. (c) Fort William to Buffalo, 1923, nothing carried. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine confines its efforts to the carrying of grain between Canadian ports. (d) Between Port Colborne and Montreal, 1923, nothing carried.

6. (a) and (b), 4 cents per bushel.

7. (a) and (b), 4 cents per bushel.

8. (a) and (b), 5 cents per bushel; storage grain 7½ cents per bushel.

9. 4½ cents per bushel, (a) and (b).

10. (a) and (b), 4 cents per bushel; (d) 7 cents per bushel.

11. (a) and (b), 4 cents per bushel; (d), 6½ cents per bushel.

ASSINIBOINE RIVER WORKS

Mr. LEADER:

1. What is the total amount of money expended by the federal government in dyking, excavating, etc., on the Assiniboine river between the cities of Portage la Prairie and Winnipeg?

2. In what years were these expenditures made?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. $33,127.84.

2. Expenditure 1908-09, $5,211.50; 1913-14, $5,117.80; 1914-15, $14,309.74; 1916-17, $2,274.45; 1917-18, $1,598.45; 1919-20, $177.20; 1920-21, $316,25; 1922-23, $4,122.45; total, $33,127.84.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CIVIL SERVANTS IN OTTAWA

Mr. McQUARRIE:

1. How many civil servants employed full time are there in all departments, resident in the city of Ottawa?

2. How many civil servants employed full time are there in all the departments, resident outside the city of Ottawa?

RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant) moved:

For a return showing the names and addresses, by provinces, of the rural mail carriers.

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press this motion. The same principle would apply to it as applied to the one moved yesterday by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) which the House thought it not wise to press for the reasons I then gave to the House.

Mr. GOOD: I do not think the expense involved in answering this question would be considerable, nor could I quite appreciate the objections that were raised yesterday. I might call attention to question No. 5 on to-day's order paper which also involves bringing down a considerable list of civil servants in Ottawa. However, if the government declines to give the list, I shall have to be content.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. GOOD: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not drop it. I say that if the government declines to give the information I shall have to be content with that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then it is dropped.

Mr. GOOD: I understand it is voted down. I did not drop it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion negatived on division.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

BANK RETURNS

Mr. COOTE:

For a copy of all returns made to the minister during the last fiscal year under subsection 2 of section 91 of the Bank Act.

GOVERNMENT GRAIN ELEVATOR SYSTEM

Mr. COOTE:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, memoranda and other documents, passing between the Department of Railways and Canals or the Department of Marine and Fisheries and Messrs. Fennell, Henry and Smith, in regard to the grain elevator system from Fort William to Montreal, during the years 1922 and 1923.

JUDGES' ACT AMENDMENT

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend section six of the Judges Act, as enacted by chapter fifty-six of the statutes of 1920, by providing that the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario shall be as follows—

	Per Annum
(a) The Chief Justice of Ontario	$10,000.00
(b) The Chief Justice of the Second Divisional Court	10,000.00
(c) Eight Justices of Appeal, each	9,000.00
(d) Nine judges of the High Court Division, each	9,000.00

Provided that the judge who at present holds the office of Chief Justice of the Exchequer Division, and the judge who at present holds the office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, shall, each respectively, and irrespective of the Division, Appellate or High Court, to which he may be assigned, continue to receive the salary of $10,000.00 which he is now receiving instead of the salary which he would otherwise receive; but that upon a vacancy occurring in the office of Chief Justice of the Exchequer Division, or in the office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the salary of such Chief Justice shall cease; and provided moreover that, when the two last mentioned offices shall have been abolished, the Chief Justice who may be appointed to preside over the High Court Division shall receive a salary of $10,000.00 per annum, and the number of salaries hereby authorized for the judges of the High Court Division shall thereupon be reduced to eight.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution, has given his consent thereto and commends it to the consideration of the House.

Mr. CALDWELL: Explain.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: By an act of the legislature of Ontario at its last session a second divisional court was created. The judges who are to sit in that second divisional court are already judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario. They will be given new commissions, but they will receive the same salaries that they are now receiving. The number of judges is not changed, and the salaries are not increased.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do I understand that this is just a motion that to-morrow the House will go into committee on the resolution?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): It is now about two weeks since I asked for a statement of the government's remaining legislation. It has not as yet been given. Legislation has been dribbling in day by day—

Mr. BUREAU—In every way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In almost every way and in almost every form.

Mr. BUREAU: Not form, but way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In every way except a good way—

Mr. DUFF: And it is growing better and better.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, there is ample room for improvement. We have received no statement yet as to the balance of legislation the government intends. There are certain subjects as to which intimation has been given of an indefinite character. I think we should know it to-day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As I mentioned to my right hon. friend the other day, the legislation to be brought down depends in part on the reports we receive from the committees. I think the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Reestablishment has legislation, based on the report of the commission that has been investigating matters pertaining to returned soldiers, that he will introduce immediately. Then there will be some legislation introduced based on the report of the Great Lakes inquiry into lake freight rates and possibly other legislation on other reports which may be brought down. I think that, along with the legislation on railway construction that has already been mentioned, includes practically all the important legislation the government will still have to submit.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask, first, what is the nature of the very important legislation that the government intimates they are going to bring down regarding the control of lake freight rates? It seems to me that should be down by this time. We are very close to the end of the session, and the report has been in for several days, or rather I should say for a couple of weeks.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Oh, no, a couple of days.

Mr. BUREAU: Three or four days at the most.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have had the report for a week.

Mr. BUREAU: You are a privileged person, then. There is something wrong about that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I got the report from the government. Secondly, could the Minister of Railways intimate what is the nature of the proposed legislation regarding railway construction?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways): The right hon. gentleman will remember that in the railway statement which I made earlier in the session, I indicated that there would be a construction programme presented to parliament. I think I stated that all the construction likely to take place would probably be paid for out of consolidated revenue. I want not to retract but to intimate, that perhaps that part of my statement may be changed. What the government proposes to do, on the recommendation of the board, is to construct a number of branch lines, the great majority of which have been started and not completed. Many of these branch lines have been graded but the rails have not been laid on them yet. However, we hope to have the legislation down in a few days.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GAUVREAU: May I ask the Minister of Finance if there is to be a superannuation bill for the Civil Service this session? If not, will the Calder Act be continued?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: There is a notice on the order paper for the continuance of the Calder Act.

DISTRIBUTION OF REPORTS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'Appelle): May I ask the government that in future, when ministers make motions in this House for the printing of reports, provision be also made for the distribution of those reports. Yesterday I was searching for a report that I thought would be out, and after going from one office to the other I found that the distribution office did not know whether the report would be distributed from there when it was printed, or what number of copies would be available or to whom they would be sent—no provision whatever of that nature had been made. I wondered, therefore, whether it would not be possible in future when motions are made for the printing of reports to provide also for their distribution.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will endeavour to meet the wishes of my hon. friend as far as may be deemed advisable.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CARROLL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. It really is not a question of personal privilege but a matter which concerns the entire House, the committees of the House, and the country at large. There are standing committees appointed by the House to look into various subjects which may be submitted to them each session. I want to bring to your attention, Sir, the fact that the select standing committee on Agriculture and Colonization held a meeting this morning which was called by the Chair. I happened to learn of that fact—I was not informed of it by the chairman who perhaps was not called upon to advise me—and I went into the committee and saw the somewhat unwholesome and unsavory sight of a gentleman making propaganda on a question which will, in the immediate future, come before the members of this House. You will notice, Sir, there is a resolution standing on the order paper in my name—No. 12—which has reference to the question of oleomargarine—and I can see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) bowing his head when he hears of oleomargarine. Sir, the subject of oleomargarine was never referred this session to the committee on Agriculture, and I do not see by what right, or by what authority, that committee should undertake to discuss the matter and allow the solicitors, the paid solicitors, of any industry, whether it be the dairy industry or any other, to appear before them without notice to other persons who may have an interest in that particular question. I went to the committee and raised objection to the proceedings, but I was told, first by the chairman and then by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Caldwell), who is an all-wise man in this sense, that I had no authority there. I would like to point out to the House that in my humble opinion the committee on Agriculture had no more right to sit and discuss that matter than I had to go there—and I had no right.

Mr. Speaker, we pay certain officials, such as stenographers and secretaries of committees. to do certain work, and no chairman and no minister has the right to call a committee, and to use the services of these officers, in order to make propaganda, whether it be on the question of oleomargarine or a much lesser subject. I wish to point out, Sir, as strongly as I can, that the committee on Agriculture are doing something they have no authority to do. The meeting of this committee was called by the chairman three or four days ago, and however decent a man the chairman may be—and I am making no charge against anybody—the unfortunate part is that it was summoned for no other purpose than the making of propaganda. The chairman of that committee, in my humble estimation, and the gentlemen who supported him, exceeded their powers in allowing the solicitor for the dairy institutions of this country to make a speech of a couple of hours duration in connection with a matter—

Mr. McBRIDE: I take exception to that statement. The gentleman in question made no speech of two hours duration; it occupied less than twenty minutes.

Mr. CARROLL: My hon. friend is one of those who objected when I went to the meeting and said I was trying to make political capital.

Mr. McBRIDE: Certainly, I did.

Mr. CARROLL: I was at the committee for at least twenty minutes listening to this gentleman and I am told he continued his —may I say?—his peroration, long after I left. However, the question of time as between my hon. friend and myself is a very small matter. I say that such representations should not have been allowed to be made at all. I maintain that the committee on Agriculture should not allow itself to be used for the making of propaganda for any industry or any set of men in this country, and I charge that was the object in view when the committee was called together. Now, Mr. Speaker, I did intend bringing this matter up in a somewhat different manner. I was of the opinion that it might be considered a matter of national importance, and that I might be allowed to move the adjournment of the House in order to draw attention to it.

However, on consultation with gentlemen who know more about the procedure than I do, I concluded to bring the matter up on a question of privilege, and I wish to say that this is a matter which I think may be discussed. It is a debatable matter, but it does not pertain to the question of personal privilege. For that reason I brought it up in this way. I do not know that I can use language sufficiently strong to impress upon the members of this House the grievance which I, as a member, and the grievance which I think every hon. member of this House should have on a question of this kind.

Mr. CALDWELL: I rise to a point of order. I should like to have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the hon. member is in order in discussing this matter.

Mr. CARROLL: Is the hon. member not a little late?

Mr. CHAPLIN: On a question of privilege. I think that if the hon. member was not allowed to go into it in committee, it is a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think there is no question with regard to this being a matter affecting the privileges of the members of the House. I do not wish to give a ruling before I have heard the parties, but from what I gather, the whole question is whether a committee has a right to discuss or deal with a matter which has not been regularly referred to that committee. I wish to hear discussion on that point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I submit, with all deference, that the hon. member cannot bring this matter before the House in this form. That an hon. member, as a matter of privilege, can rise in the House to debate the conduct of a committee without any report from that committee is totally at variance with what I have understood to be the practice, and certainly no debate can take place on that matter. How can such a matter be debated—how can both sides be heard? The hon. gentleman may rise and complain of his treatment in this House or in the committee, but having made that statement, he has stated his own position, and the matter is through. But the hon. member has gone far beyond that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Referring to rule 47, I find the following:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

Then, paragraph 479 of Beauchesnes', I find the following:

> May says, page 241, that the proceedings of the House may be interrupted at any moment, save during the process of a division, by a motion based on a matter of privilege, when a matter has recently arisen which directly concerns the privileges of the House, and in that case the House will entertain the motion forthwith. Bourinot, page 303, quotes an ancient authority as saying whether any question is or is not before the House, and even in the midst of another discussion, if a member should rise to complain of a breach of the privileges of the House, they have always instantly heard him'. It seems that the first duty of parliament is to keep its privileges and no rule or standing order should restrain its conduct when it must vindicate its authority.

In the present instance, I understand, the hon. member (Mr. Carroll) has a motion on the order paper relating to oleomargarine, and he now states that a committee to which this matter has not been specially referred, dealt with that question this morning, thereby anticipating his motion to be debated at a later date before the House. This, in my judgment, is contrary to the rules of the House, and the rules to be followed in the committee. If hon. members will refer to Bourinot they will find that the special committees and standing committees can only deal with matters which are specially referred to them. I am informed that Mr. Todd, who is the chief of the committee clerks, and an old authority, having been in the service of this House for over forty years, decided —and I agree with his decision—not to allow the evidence to be reported under such circumstances.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no exception whatever to take to the quotations cited by your honour, nor to Mr. Todd's decision, because both are in conformity with my own view. An hon. member may rise to a question of personal privilege any time if his personal privileges have been interfered with. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carroll) does not so allege. He seeks as a matter of privilege to bring before the House what he claims to be the irregular conduct of the committee. That does not affect the personal privilege of an hon. member at all. Even were he raising a question of privilege, he cannot debate the question, because there can be no reply. I strongly affirm the position taken by the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll) is out of order.

Mr. CALDWELL: Just to correct a possible misapprehension with regard to what happened this morning—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BOIVIN: That is not a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CALDWELL: The hon. member (Mr. Carroll) said he had been denied the privilege of being heard before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member is discussing the point of order which has been raised.

Mr. CALDWELL: The point of order depends on the question under consideration as a point of order. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) said that, because if the fact that the hon. member had been denied admission to the committee he should be heard. The committee met this morning and practically unanimously decided to hear certain men who might give us information on a question which is to come before this House. Whether we were in order in that decision or not, I do not know. The hon. member who raises the question of privilege objected to the committee dealing with the matter. What the committee objected to was the interrupting of a gentleman who had been called before the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question of order has been raised as to the right of the hon. member to rise to a question of privilege on the facts which have been adduced before the House. In my humble judgment I consider that, whether it is a personal privilege or a matter affecting the privileges of the House, the question is properly before the House.

Mr. CARROLL: I think I made it very plain when I rose to the question of privilege that it was not a matter of personal privilege. I am not complaining in that respect. I do not mind that. Perhaps I deserved everything that was said to me in the committee when I went there. But I want to assure my hon. friend from Victoria and Carleton and the chairman that I am not complaining of that. My complaint is on a matter which I would think might perhaps come before the House in other ways. I am finding no fault with the committee. My reason for raising this point is that I think the committee is hearing evidence on something which is not referred to them. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt in the world that the committee on Agriculture might, if they so desired, revise the Bank Act, they may revise the Criminal Code, they may do anything in the world, so long as they do not report their findings to the House. I have said—and I reiterate—that they have no right to use the public offices of this building to discuss matters which were not referred to them. That is my chief objection. They may do anything in the world as long as they do not usurp the function for which they were appointed. I have said that I hope I have brought fairly to the attention of the House a matter which, in my estimation, is one, not only of privilege, but of national public importance.

Mr. W. F. KAY (Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I trust I may be allowed to reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll). The question of privilege which the hon. member raised, as he stated at first, was that he had been refused a hearing before the committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CARROLL: I made no such statement.

Mr. KAY: I wish to say that I myself sent a personal messenger to the hon. member this morning asking him to come to the committee. I have been a member of the committee on Agriculture since coming into the House some twelve years ago. The practice has been almost invariable, that that committee should hear discussions on matters relating to agriculture delivered by prominent agriculturists or by officials of the Department of Agriculture, and to my knowledge those matters had never been referred by the House to that committee. I yesterday received a letter from the secretary of the National Dairy Council of Canada saying that a number of representatives of the dairying interests from the different provinces were in Ottawa and had had an interview with the cabinet, and requesting me as chairman of the committee on Agriculture and Colonization to call the committee together in order to allow them to address the committee. Having in view the procedure which has been followed in that committee for many years, I acquiesced, after, I may say, consulting with Mr. Todd as to the propriety of doing so, and I called the committee together. The notice of the meeting is on the notice board in the lobby, and each member of the committee received the usual notice, at the bottom of which was the order of the day which stated that the committee was called for the purpose of hearing representatives of the National Dairy Council on the question of oleomargarine. On that committee there are not only members who are in favour but members who are against oleomargarine so that I think there was no discrimination against anybody. When the committee met this morning, the question was put to them, and they decided unanimously, at least not by vote but by great enthusiasm, that they desired to hear the representatives who were present before them. I may say that sixty-five members of the committee were present. Not on a question of privilege, but on behalf of the committee and the members of it, I must respectfully draw to your attention, Sir, the exceedingly unparliamentary and almost unmannerly behaviour of the hon. member for South Cape Breton when he entered the committee room this morning.

Mr. CARROLL: I object to the use of unparliamentary language by my hon. friend.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the expression "unmannerly" should be used, and I would ask the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) to withdraw that expression.

Mr. KAY: I will withdraw it at your request, Sir, and I will stand by the word "unparliamentary." The hon. member for South Cape Breton entered the committee room while a speaker was holding the floor, and without addressing the Chair, without addressing the committee in particular, without asking permission to say a few words, the hon. member very abruptly or roughly interrupted the speaker and complained that he had not been advised of the meeting, which statement was false.

Mr. CARROLL: I object to the use of the word "false" by the hon. member.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. gentleman meant to use the word "false."

Mr. KAY: I will say "inaccurate statement."

Mr. CARROLL: I would ask that the hon. member be requested to withdraw the word "false."

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. gentleman has withdrawn the word.

Mr. KAY: I withdraw the word "false" at your request, Mr. Speaker, and I will say "inaccurate," because I sent the clerk of the committee to notify the hon. member of the meeting. His remark was false so far as I was concerned. Whether he received the notice or not I do not know; anyway he came to the meeting shortly afterwards. The hon. member proceeded to protest because he said that it was unfair that one side of the question of oleomargarine should be discussed without the opposite side being notified. He did not take the ground, when he entered the room, that the committee was discussing a question without having authority to do so He took the ground simply that it was unfair that one side of the question should be heard without the other side being notified, and he demanded that the committee rise and adjourn until the other side could be present. I pointed out to the hon. member that as an old member of this House, as chairman of an important committee, he should well know the rules which govern committees and which state that a member of the House who is not a member of a committee has no right to interrupt the proceedings of that committee without first obtaining permission from the Chair and from the committee. After that the hon. member put in a scribbled note, which I found hard to make out. I do not know what it meant. Then he, in a very gruff manner, said that he refused to stay, and he withdrew. I think my course in calling the committee together to hear these gentlemen was quite in accordance with the precedent which had been followed for many years in that committee. As we met merely to hear discussions of interest to the agricultural interests of the country, I think we were not very much out of order.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as one of the co-respondents named by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond, possibly it will be in order for me to say a word.

Mr. BUREAU: Is that in reply, closing the debate?

Mr. CALDWELL: I was a little disappointed that the hon. member for South Cape Breton did not include the cabinet in his objection to getting information on matters that are liable to come before the House. He objected to our committee hearing people who might give us information on a subject that is of vital importance, a matter that, possibly, as members of this House we shall be called upon to decide in the very near future. I think I speak for many members of the committee when I say that we felt we had not sufficient information on the subject to decide it as we should, and we were pleased to hear members of the Dairy Council and anyone else who might appear. A motion was passed, before the committee adjourned this morning, that an opportunity should be given anyone who might wish to do so to prevent the case in favour of oleomargarine. Now, if a committee of this House is going to be denied the privilege of obtaining information on any important question in regard to which certain evidence is considered essential, I presume that the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll) would also object to the cabinet meeting these people and hearing their views on the subject. The cabinet, of course, is far more responsible than any group of members of parliament, but I submit nevertheless that the members of this House are undoubtedly charged with some responsibility. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I though it only proper that I should submit these remarks.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Some time earlier in the session I gave an undertaking to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) that an opportunity would be afforded him before the session was over to debate the resolution which appears in his name on the order paper. Probably this is an opportune time for me to ask the House if it would agree that the hon. member should be allowed to take up his resolution. If it is the wish of the House that this be done, the resolution might be made a special order for consideration to-morrow. In that event, before the House proceeds to the Orders of the Day to-morrow I shall move that the resolution be taken up.

Mr. SPEAKER: In support of the opinion expressed a moment ago with regard to the duties of select and standing committees of this House, I may refer to a motion made on Monday, February 12, 1923. The right hon. the Prime Minister on that day moved:

[Mr. Caldwell.]

That the select standing committees of this House shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred by the House.

It is obvious therefore that only such questions as are referred to the committees may be discussed by them. I am bound to say, of course, in justification of the course followed by the standing committee on Agriculture, that unless exception is taken, as has been taken this afternoon, to the investigation of any matter outside of the scope of the subject submitted to a committee for its consideration, a very wide latitude is generally accorded such a committee as that on agriculture. Strictly speaking, and adhering to the letter of parliamentary procedure and constitutional practice, certainly no committee can deal with a question unless that question is specially referred to it. For this view I have ample authority. I add this rider, however, that very wide latitude is given an important committee such as the committee on Agriculture, when no exception is taken by any hon. member that a resolution standing in his name, which it is intended he shall bring before the House, is being anticipated and prejudged by a discussion or by any evidence brought before that committee. I understand that the incident is closed.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I rise, Mr. Speaker, merely to put myself on record in this matter, because it may be wise at a later date that I should have done so. I submit that the conduct of a committee cannot come before the Speaker of this House for a ruling merely on a complaint of an hon. member of the House; and further, that the conduct of the committee in question has never been before you, Sir, for any ruling. There is a method of bringing the conduct of any committee before parliament, but that method has not been adopted in this instance, merely, on a question of personal privilege. Hon. members have certain rights, and to say that those rights in this case have been exceeded, and exceeded to a considerable extent, is to my mind to express a very obvious truth. That, however, was not what I rose to say. I rose simply to observe that the conduct of the committee was not properly before the House, nor was it, either properly or improperly, before the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: Of course, I have May and Bourinot in my favour. I wish to assure the House that I have the highest opinion of the ability of the right hon. member (Mr. Meighen) and of his knowledge of the rules.

I would however refer the House to Beauchesne's under Rule 47, paragraph 479, which reads in part:

> May says, p. 241, that "the proceedings of the House may be interrupted at any moment, save during the process of a division, by a motion based on a matter of privilege, when a matter has recently arisen which directly concerns the privileges of the House, and in that case, the House will entertain the motion forthwith."

I consider that the grievance, founded or unfounded, which an hon. member may have against the proceedings of a committee constitutes the subject matter of a question of privilege.

Mr. MEIGHEN: With all deference to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I beg to submit that you have not grasped my point. I do not take any exception at all to the quotation from May; what I say is that the mere rising to a question of privilege on the part of an hon. member, even though the subject matter of the question may have arisen in a committee, does not bring before the Speaker of the House for decision the question of the conduct of that committee. It may be quite true that the conduct of the committee was wrong, but I submit with all respect that that question is not before you, Mr. Speaker, for a ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: A question of privilege is in order at any time during a debate when an hon. member declares that the privileges of the House are being infringed upon. The question is not restricted to the individual privileges but to the collective privileges of the House.

Mr. CALDWELL: I understood the Prime Minister to ask the consent of the House to have the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Cape Breton South with regard to oleomargarine brought up for discussion to-morrow. As a member of the special committee which is inquiring into agricultural conditions, I wish to enter my protest to that resolution coming up before the report of that special committee is submitted to the House. We have taken evidence on the question of the manufacture of oleomar-
4 p.m. garine in Canada, and as the report of the committee has not yet been brought down and probably will not be brought down for a few days, I think that a discussion of the hon. member's resolution would only be anticipating that report.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood that the House agreed a moment ago to the suggestion of the Prime Minister that the hon. member's resolution be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the suggestion of the Prime Minister never reached the House in the form of a motion. He merely mentioned the matter and the House proceeded to another subject immediately.

Mr. CALDWELL: No question was put concerning the Prime Minister's suggestion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood that the House had acquiesced in the Prime Minister's proposal; if it did not, then it is important that a definite understanding should be reached in the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To avoid a formal motion, I should be glad if my hon. friend (Mr. Caldwell) could see his way to waiving any objection that he may have towards bringing up the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. CALDWELL: It is a well-known fact, I think, that evidence given before a special committee of the House cannot be discussed in the House before that committee has reported. I am sorry that the chairman of the committee is not in his place.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But the question that forms the subject matter of the resolution which it is proposed to consider to-morrow was not referred to the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL: All questions of any description whatever affecting agricultural conditions in Canada generally were, I take it, referred to the committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does the hon. member suggest that we cannot legislate until that committee has reported?

Mr. CALDWELL: I am not suggesting anything of the kind, but I do say that the particular question which we have been discussing was undoubtedly included in the comprehensive reference to the special committee that has been considering agricultural conditions generally throughout the country. The question which it is proposed to take up to-morrow certainly affects agriculture, and we have taken evidence upon it. I say that the report of the committee is not yet before the House, so that any discussion of that question would necessarily anticipate that report. I stand by my objection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Perhaps the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) will mention something that has not been discussed before that special committee.

MANITOBA GRAND JURIES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. R. A. HOEY (Springfield): A few days ago, I think it was on May 14, the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) put a question to the government with respect to a certain resolution that had been passed by the legislature of Manitoba. The subject matter of that resolution, the Prime Minister will remember, related to the abolition of the grand jury system in that province. I should like to ask the government if it is their intention at this session to bring in legislation in conformity with that demand. I have been in touch with the members from the province of Manitoba; they are exceedingly anxious that the government submit such legislation this session if at all possible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is the intention of the government to bring in such legislation.

Mr. STEVENS: Has a decision been arrived at by the department authorizing the shipment of goods from ports in eastern Canada via the Panama canal to ports in western Canada, even though the vessel carrying such goods should call at an intervening port? When the minister answers that question I have another to put to him.

Mr. BUREAU: I suppose this is the same question that has been asked before, involving the appointment of a customs officer in New York.

Mr. STEVENS: No. Let me make myself clear before the minister answers; I do not want to be discourteous to him. There are three questions; I will put them all and the minister can, if he will, answer them at the same time. There is the question of shipping goods—I will specify, so as to make the point clear—say, steel from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Vancouver, all-water route, by the same vessel; and suppose that vessel calls at an American port en route. Then, there is the question of shipping Canadian goods from Sydney to New York by water, with transfer from a coastal to an ocean-going vessel, thence through the Panama canal to Vancouver, but the goods always being the same. Then there is the third case, the shipping of Canadian goods from eastern Canada, say, from Hamilton, by rail to New York, loading them on a vessel and sending them on in that way to the Pacific coast. Will the minister say just what is the situation in regard to permitting the shipment of goods in these three different ways?

Mr. BUREAU: Number one; a British ship loads rails at Sydney and goes via the Panama canal to Vancouver. There is no breaking of bulk; the cargo remains the same. In that case there is no objection. That is the first question.

Mr. STEVENS: Even if call is made at other ports?

Mr. BUREAU: Even so—if the bulk is there; if the cargo remains in the ship and is not broken, there is no objection. Number two: shipment is made in a British bottom from Sydney to New York, with breaking of bulk and transfer to another ship. In that case, it would be necessary to have a Canadian customs officer to supervise the trans-shipment, to check the goods and send copies of the manifests to the officers of the department in Vancouver. Number three: shipment from Toronto, Hamilton, or Montreal by rail to New York and transfer there to a ship. Here the answer is the same as in the second case, because you break bulk, and that would have to be done under the supervision of a Canadian customs officer, who would also mark and initial the necessary papers. Now, about the appointment of a customs officer at New York, here is a letter that was addressed to me on the 18th of May—and my hon. friends will see that everybody is not of the same mind so far as that goes. It says:

Minister of Customs,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir:

We understand that representations have been made on behalf of Canadian shippers and importers for the appointment of a customs officer at New York, in order to encourage exports to British Columbia via American ports. We have pleasure in advising you that we have arranged to load the steamer Margaret Coughlan from Montreal to Vancouver, via the Panama canal, about the middle of July, and are in communication with the Canadian Manufacturers Association, and a large number of firms in eastern and western Canada, and are quoting them competitive rates in order to secure traffic for an all-Canadian steamship route between the East and the West.

For your further information, we may state that the above steamer is loading a full cargo of lumber from British Columbia to Montreal, and is also accepting shipments of canned salmon for this port.

That is, the port of Montreal, from which this letter is dated.

Under the above circumstances, we do not think that there is any justification for an appointment of the customs officers in New York, as if we can obtain any reasonable amount of support for a direct steamship service, we expect to make the line permanent. In any case, we do not think it to the interest of Canada to encourage shipments via American ports, in view of a direct service being opened up. We may say that we have been requested to make this communication to you by the owners of the above steamers, and also our agents in British Columbia.

Yours very truly,
Thos. Harling & Son.

Mr. STEVENS: Where is that letter from?

Mr. BUREAU: It is from Thomas Harling & Son, Montreal. I do not know the gentlemen.

Mr. FIELDING: It is a well known shipping concern.

Mr. BUREAU: We may well hesitate in this matter when we consider that, taking as a starting point Hamilton, Montreal, or Toronto, the most our Canadian railways would get on the rail haul when shipment is made via the Panama canal would be about 20 per cent of the charges involved. In the case of Toronto, the freight by rail to the seaboard would be about 17 or 18 per cent of the whole. No decision has yet been reached by the department; we are hearing the pros and cons in the matter. I understand it may take some time before there is a definite and permanent line established. It takes goodwill and the encouragement of all people concerned on this side of the border to keep these people going.

Mr. STEVENS: There was a statement made by Mr. M. A. Macdonald in a coast paper only a day or two ago to the effect that he had been in Ottawa last week and that the federal government had definitely arranged to place this officer at New York for the purpose of the trans-shipment of goods. He announced this as the official representative of the government party in Vancouver. He had just spent, I remember, a very pleasant visit here of a week or two in consultation with the hon. minister, and I wanted to get from the minister exactly what had been done so that the public would know.

Mr. BUREAU: If Mr. Macdonald has made any such statement it was not a statement that came from me, nor was it based on anything I might have promised. I said in the House here, and I repeat now, that the matter is still under consideration. I think it was my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) who had a question on the order paper a few days ago inquiring as to the cost of maintaining an officer in New York, and I replied that we could not answer the question then because we were investigating the whole matter. No definite decision has been arrived at yet. I do not say there will not be an officer stationed at New York, but I do not affirm that there will be, either.

Mr. STEVENS: Before we leave this question, the trans-shipment of steel products from, say, Sydney to another vessel at New York for the purpose of transport through the Panama canal would not be affected by the letter which the minister has just read to the committee. That does not affect the rail haul at all. That is all-water haul from a Canadian port in the east to a Canadian port in the west. The only thing is that it is carried in coastal vessels from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to New York, and there trans-shipped to an ocean-going vessel for carriage through the Panama canal to Vancouver. Will the minister not give consideration to that, and grant the privilege?

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend did not give the whole case. He says it would not affect the rail haul to the border. But it would affect it in this way. If a Canadian ship leaves Montreal and lands the goods in Vancouver, and a Canadian ship leaves Sydney and lands the goods in New York, all the Canadian bottom will get will be the transportation of the goods from Sydney to New York whereas if you encourage a Canadian line it will get the transport from Montreal to Vancouver, which makes quite a difference.

Mr. STEVENS: There is a line of steamships registered in Canada, the Dollar Steamship Company, running from Singapore to New York via Vancouver. It runs a regular line of freighters from Singapore to Shanghai and Vancouver, touching at Mexico, passing through the Panama Canal and going on to New York. They do not run up to Sydney because they are large vessels of 10,000 tons, and they cannot get full cargoes but they do get cargoes to New York. They will pick up a part cargo at New York from Sydney and carry it on their return trip to Vancouver; so it is a British bottom that carries the goods all the way through.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend must not lose sight of the fact that they break cargo, and every time the goods are trans-shipped it must be under the supervision of an officer.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly. That is what we want.

Mr. BUREAU: Whether it is a British or a foreign bottom, whether by water or by rail.

Mr. STEVENS: That is exactly what we want, and what I am trying to induce the minister to agree to. We want the appointment of an officer at New York for that purpose.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Can the minister inform us to-day what would be the probable cost of maintaining an officer at New York? I think it is desirable, unless the cost is prohibitive, that that should be done. I do not think the need is obviated by the fact that one steamship company is establishing a line between Montreal and Vancouver, though I am very glad to hear of that, and I hope that another line will be started. I should like to know what the minister thinks would be the cost.

Mr. BUREAU: I have not formed any opinion yet. Our investigation has not gone far enough to enable us to give any data that would satisfy my hon. friend. I have not satisfied myself yet, and I do not like to give figures at random.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is it a small amount or a very large amount?

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend must form his own opinion. He knows what it costs to live in New York, and that you cannot take a common labourer to fill a job of that sort. It requires a man who would command a certain salary, and there are the expenses, of moving down there, living expenses and so forth. My hon. friend is able to form an opinion just as well as I can.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. CLARK: This question has been discussed in the House on several occasions. It came up in the discussion on railway rates. My recollection is that the minister gave as his reason for not stationing a customs officer at New York that it would take away business from the railway companies, more particularly from our own railways. He also mentioned to-day the fact that there was not unanimity on this question, and quoted from a letter from Montreal. There may not be unanimity in Montreal on the question, but I can assure him that there is unanimity in the province of British Columbia, and unanimity on the part of Canadian manufacturers and of all people who are doing business with western ports. The fact is that to-day the business that is going via the Panama canal to the port of New York is business which under no circumstances would go across the continent on our railways. Our business men in British Columbia are to-day being forced to go to the American market to buy manufactured articles which they could buy in Montreal and Toronto just as cheaply as in the American market, but they cannot buy them in Montreal or Toronto owing to the freight rates on these articles being prohibitive. If they pay the freight rate over the railways, by the time these manufactured articles are landed in British Columbia the cost is so great that our people are much better off by buying the article in the United States or Great Britain, shipping it via the Panama canal and paying the duty. They get the articles much cheaper in that way than by buying from the Canadian manufacturer. I advocate the establishment of a customs officer at New York more particularly to enable us to do business with the eastern manufacturers in Canada to the exclusion of the manufacturers in the United States and Great Britain, and also to enable the British Columbia manufacturers, canners and so forth, to ship into eastern Canada markets by water the products which they cannot ship there to-day owing to the prohibitive freight rates on the railways.

Mr. BUREAU: I understand my hon. friend to say that there was unanimity in British Columbia on this question of having an agent, a customs officer appointed at New York.

Mr. CLARK: I might qualify that—unanimity with the exception possibly of a person such as my hon. friend cited who is interested in establishing a steamship line. I am in favour of the establishment of a steamship line myself and will do everything I can to support it. In fact, I will go this far and suggest that if you cannot get a private enterprise to establish such a line you might use some of the ships of the government merchant marine for the purpose of establishing a direct service between Vancouver and Montreal in the summer and between Vancouver and Halifax in the winter time.

Mr. BUREAU: This question has been discussed for a long while and so far no action has been taken upon it. I must tell my hon. friend that I did not say we would not appoint an agent in New York—

Mr. CLARK: I did not say that.

Mr. BUREAU:—any more than I affirmed that we would. The question is being considered. Now the difficulty under which we are labouring is this: The National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway come to you and say, "If you do this you will hurt us. The British Columbia people ask for special rates and at the same time they want to take freight away from us." The railway officials represent that whenever 100 loaded cars are shipped from Vancouver to the East it means that 60 empty cars have to be brought back from the East to the West.

Mr. CLARK: Did I understand the minister to say—

Mr. BUREAU: That if you want 100 cars to be shipped loaded from the West to the East you have got to carry 60 cars empty from the East to the West.

Mr. CLARK: I may inform the minister that same statement was made to me by a very high official of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BUREAU: It was made to me by officials of the Canadian National Railway.

Mr. CLARK: It is an official of the Canadian Pacific Railway that I am referring to. So I went to the Bureau of Statistics and found that the total going into British Columbia from the East and coming from British Columbia to the East is almost equal.

Mr. BUREAU: In what years?

Mr. CLARK: Any year you like.

Mr. BUREAU: Oh, no, last year there was a difference caused by the shipments of grain.

Mr. CLARK: I looked the matter up over a period of about three years and the statement is true that the tonnage coming from the prairie provinces eastward is very much greater than the tonnage going westward. But that is not true of all British Columbia; the tonnage is almost equal going in both directions.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to add my word of support to the remarks which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) made on this matter. It seems to be an absurd policy to ignore the economic effect of the construction and operation of the Panama canal and yet that is virtually what we are doing so long as we keep away from the establishment of this customs office. So long as we have these iniquitous tariff duties let us make the tariff as ineffective as we possibly can so as to get our goods from one Canadian port to another without penalizing the man who sells goods or the one who purchases them. I sincerely hope the minister will take this matter into favourable consideration and that before the year is out it will be possible for the canners of salmon in British Columbia to ship to Montreal or other ports on the Atlantic seaboard and correspondingly possible for the shippers on the Atlantic to ship to the Pacific seaboard via the Panama canal without any such consequences as are now complained of.

Mr. STEVENS: I just want to add one word and I think I can help the minister out of the dilemma he is in somewhat because there are regulations in the Customs Act which give the power to do this without any question. For example take subsection (q) of section 286 of the Customs Act.

Mr. BUREAU: I have got it here.

Mr. STEVENS: The section prescribes that:

> The Governor in Council may, from time to time, and in the manner hereinafter provided, in addition to the other purposes and matters in this act mentioned, make regulations for or relating to the following purposes and matters:—
> Subsection (q) Prescribing the rules and conditions under which goods imported in bond or duty-paid, and products or manufactures of Canada, may be transported from one port or place in Canada to another port or place therein, over any territory or waters outside the limits of Canada: Provided that the goods so transported shall, upon arrival in Canada from any place beyond the limits of Canada, be treated with regard to the liability to, or exemption from, duty, as if the transportation had taken place entirely within the limits of Canada;

Now, that is the old regulation.

Mr. BUREAU: That is the law.

Mr. STEVENS: That is the law, and the regulations have similar provisions as well.

Now, I just want to say two things in reply to the observations made by the minister. First, in reply to the suggestion that this demand was one of long standing and had never been acceded to in the past. I do not want to do more than refer to the fact that that is not argument, although it is used as such by the members of the cabinet.

Mr. BUREAU: No, I did not put it in argument. I simply mentioned it to show the difficulty we were working under.

Mr. STEVENS: Exactly, but I want to explain that it is said the previous government had done nothing and therefore we should not blame the present government. I do not want to blame the present government but I am asking that consideration be given to this fact: The reasons why nothing was done up to about two or three years ago were these. The Panama canal was closed in 1915 owing to a big land slide. During the following years from 1915 to 1920 the tonnage of the world was occupied on the Atlantic and we had very little tonnage on the Pacific in connection with purely war purposes so that there was no possibility, no physical possibility of giving effect to this during those years. Since the year 1920 down to the present time there has been a general release of tonnage all over the world so that there has been ample tonnage available, and it is during that period that this question has been pressed. That, I think, answers the contention as to inactivity in the past.

Now then one other point as regards railway tonnage. I want to say to the railways that they are not getting the tonnage. That is the point, they are not getting it to-day. We are forced to purchase very largely in the states of Washington and California many things that we would buy in eastern Ontario because the long freight haul by railway adds to the cost on the Pacific plus the duty. The result is that Canadians in the West are buying American goods because they get them cheaper. They pay the duty and get them cheaper because of the excessive freight haul; whereas if they could get the privilege of trans-shipping at New York we would buy the eastern manufactured goods, ship them via New York and, with the lower water haul charges, we would get them cheaper than we could import them from the United States. I want to impress upon the minister and these railways that if they would give this point consideration they would find out that what I say is perfectly true and accurate.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Then, as regards the haul by railway. There is an awful lot of goods hauled by railway from the eastern states and sold in western Canada—extreme western Canada, Alberta and British Columbia. That traffic goes over American roads; it does not travel over Canadian roads to-day. Some of it does but the great bulk of it is going over the American railways, so that if this privilege were established at New York it would not interfere, as I say, to any great extent with tonnage. What you would do is stimulate business in eastern Canada and business in western Canada, and anything that will stimulate business must ultimately benefit the transportation systems of the country.

Mr. SHAW: I should like to ask the minister a couple of questions. First, I should like to know the particulars of the increase in the first item, and second, the necessity for that short and very elegant phrase "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act"?

Mr. BUREAU: The increase in the first item is due to these causes. There are statutory increases which amount to $131,175, there is an increase due to reclassification which amounts to $18,215, some 114 additional officers have been appointed necessitating $96,130, and there has been an increase in contingencies caused by an augmentation in overtime pay amounting to $20,765. There are decreases due to promotions and appointments to vacancies at less salary amounting to $18,595, making a net increase $247,690.

As to the expression "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act" the object of that is to enable our men to go on trains and boats on Sundays. Under the Civil Service Act we could not pay them for that work. They are paid by salary and we could not give them any extra remuneration for their overtime. When a train comes in from the United States at ten or eleven o'clock at night, our inspectors go aboard to examine the passengers' baggage. That is the reason we have to do that, apart from the Civil Service Commission. I explained to my hon. friend that the wages paid on Sunday by the department are reimbursed by the various railways and steamship companies that use our service, but they do not appear against the expenditure, because they go to revenue. The expenditure seems greater than it really is. We pay money which we get back, but it is not credited to a special account, and thus a lesser expenditure is shown, because the moneys go to revenue generally. There is an increase in the number of officials in the various ports, Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, and so on, on account of the increase in work, both in customs and excise. There have been various complaints, and I see by the papers that a lot of smuggling is going on. It is impossible to stop smuggling entirely but we determined that we would reduce it to a minimum. The same condition exists in regard to bootlegging and the various excise taxes that have been imposed lately.

Mr. CHURCH: I observe that part of this item is for temporary buildings and rentals. At the request of many of the business men of South Toronto and other parts of that city, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the very inadequate plant for a city of the size of Toronto. This year $50,000,000 net has been collected by the government in customs at the port of Toronto—more than seven times the total vote of $7,000,000 now before the committee. An agreement was made a few years ago, when the old customs house was torn down. At present we have not a customs house suitable for a city of over half a million people. Business is done in that customs house for a population of three quarters of a million, because the business done there includes business coming from the suburban districts, where there is a population of 200,000. We collected from that population of nearly three quarters of a million $50,000,000, in spite of the business being done in those old dilapidated buildings. They tore down the old customs house at the corner of Front and Yonge streets.

A lot was sold by the city of Toronto to the government at a cut rate to encourage the government to give the city the plant they required for the business. If you go into those dilapidated customs buildings throughout the city you will find business men trying to do some business. The minister has a good staff there and they are doing good work. At the same time if new buildings were erected the increased volume of business would produce a revenue which would more than pay the fixed charges on the cost of the building. The city of Toronto sold a large lot on Front street to the government at a cut rate. They did not consider the commercial value of that lot because it was worth three or four times what the government paid for it. We gave them that lot because they guaranteed a proper building capable of accommodating the business in Toronto. It was promised that a suitable building would be erected on the land in one year. Six or seven years have gone by and nothing has been done. The city of Toronto does not seem to get anything anyway. With them it is simply a case of "pay, pay, pay." One of my colleagues from Toronto said that the city got nothing, did not expect anything and would not get it if they did expect it. But you have to consider the business people of that district in the counties of York, Peel and Ontario. They are getting volumes of goods at that port of entry. Toronto stands as the great gateway of Canada. The local business is just $50,000,000 net. But other business is being done there, many villages and towns contribute to it, which would make it more a matter of $70,000,000 than $50,000,000. I hope this tu'penny-ha'penny, short-sighted policy of housing an important port like Toronto in a lot of small buildings which were used for other purposes and abandoned should be discontinued as far as Toronto is concerned.

We are in a similar position regarding post offices. From our post office at the Union station the receipts are nearly five and a half million dollars. I know that the present minister has been very active and has been trying to get increased facilities for the port of Toronto. He has been doing good work considering the poor plant he has to work with but the officials there cannot continue much longer. The condition of affairs for the wholesalers and retailers is intolerable. They are willing to pay for service. The erection of a new building is necessary, and the volume of business which is to be done there will be a paying proposition for the government, as it will pay the fixed charges on the cost of erection. I hope the minister will take this matter up and see if something cannot be done to meet the many protests made by the business men of Toronto. The present plant is utterly inefficient. We have not a plant there at all. The old plant was torn down and we have a number of rented buildings along the water front. The business men are willing to pay for it and we are not asking anything from the government. There will be more business for the government, it will be conducted in a better way and the public will be better satisfied. I think this condition of affairs is local to Toronto. Here we have a city of 600,000 population without any form of customs house except two or three little bits of rented buildings throughout the city. The minister has been very attentive and listens to any complaints the business men make as to the insufficiency of the plant. I hope he will give this matter his active sympathy before the next session of parliament. Could the minister tell me what arrangements are going to be made to tide over the temporary situation in regard to rented buildings? Is it proposed during the next twelve months to give Toronto a proper customs house, instead of having the customs officials located in rented buildings?

Mr. BUREAU: I cannot give any assurance that anything will be done this year. I sympathize with the hon. member's views, and I admit that Toronto has not the facilities it ought to have to transact its business.

Mr. MEWBURN: Nor Hamilton.

Mr. BUREAU: I have not been there, but I have been in Toronto three or four times. I understand they have a better customs house in Hamilton. I admit that it is very difficult for the officers to give 100 per cent efficiency in the quarters where they are located, especially in the long room, and in the examining warehouse. There is the other disadvantage of being compelled to lose time going from one place to the other. You have your express office on the water front and your customs in the railway station, and an office on Wellington street. I am not familiar with the location of all the offices. The examining office is near the Canadian Pacific Railway freight sheds. This is an impediment and a handicap, not only for the people of Toronto, but for the customs officers. They cannot work properly in those quarters, and I am as anxious as my hon. friend to see a proper customs house built in Toronto, but I have been asking myself many a time why the old customs house was torn down.

Mr. CHURCH: Hear, hear.

Mr. BUREAU: I have seen only part of it where the express business is done, and it seems to me, from what is left of it, that it was a first class building, and why it should have been destroyed before the government were ready to put up another building I do not know. This year, however, there is nothing in the estimates. I am in sympathy with the proposition to build a customs house in Toronto. Toronto gave us $45,000,000 revenue. Montreal is in the same position as Toronto. Montreal has the long room in the examining warehouse, and has no proper place for the officers. They are handicapped. They cannot give us full efficiency, but we do not blame them, because they are working with artificial light and in badly ventilated quarters. But I took the premises as I found them, and until the country has enough money to build new premises or to improve on the ones we have now, I do not think I can give any encouragement, at least for this year, to my hon. friend.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. CHURCH: I appreciate the line of argument of the minister; but when during the last fiscal year approximately fifty million dollars was made by the department out of the city of Toronto, surely a portion of that sum should be given back to the people who are paying that money, the business men of Toronto, by giving them increased plant to take care of the increasing business. At the present time a large portion of that sum is being utilized in other parts of the country, and surely the city which does the business and is paying in this huge sum to the department, should receive back some share of it in increased facilities. I think about one-third or, perhaps, forty per cent of that fifty million dollars was pure profit, and I do not see how the business is going to be conducted unless increased facilities are afforded. It will take two or three years to build a new customs house, and by that time the receipts will have increased well on to seventy-five million dollars. I would invite the minister to visit Toronto—we are always glad to see him—in order to see if something cannot be done. I understand the minister is doing the best he can; but at the same time the business men are protesting; they are paying for this, and a large proportion of the fifty million dollars is profit and is being used to give increased facilities in other parts of the country.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member says that he is at a loss to know why the old customs house disappeared. I do not know why he is at a loss. A proper customs house was to have been built; arrangements were made for it; the work was under way; the property was cleared, when the war came on and we stopped expenditures. There is no mystery about the matter at all. Can my hon. friend state how much money he is paying in Toronto now for rents? I do not know whether the other property is rented or is owned by the government. If it is on governmental property, that has a value; it is something that could be made use of and revenue could be brought in from it. The chances are, however, that some rent is still going out. If the minister were to take the value of other properties, whether rented or not, which could be put to other uses, easily sold, for instance, at the present time; if he were to consider the cost those properties mean and on top of that consider the extra cost he admits this means in carrying on business in Toronto, I am sure he would realize that, as a matter of good business, this place should be built at once.

Mr. BUREAU: Sure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then that question is beyond all debate.

Mr. BUREAU: Find the money.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend talks about finding money. That port certainly is producing a great deal of money, and the money from that port is going to buy buildings elsewhere.

Mr. BUREAU: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let us see. Does my hon. friend not think it would be better to have a customs warehouse where he can properly carry on business, something that will help business and help the country, than to buy a corner of King and Yonge streets for over a million dollars, and then put on top of that a building costing two or three million dollars for railway purposes? Does my hon. friend not think it is a good deal better to apply the funds which are got out of customs earnings in the port of Toronto, to giving decent facilities there than, to buy a large hotel in Quebec—I mean France—to look after railway business there? These things are being done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad my hon. friend is uniting both Quebec and France.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I corrected myself. You see my hon. friend's mere presence is enough to remind me of his beautiful province of Quebec and to make it an uppermost subject in my mind. Why should this customs warehouse not be constructed; why should not this expenditure be made when business absolutely requires it, when my hon. friend says that it ought to be done but that the trouble is money. Is this not a little more important than a palatial ticket office at the corner of King and Yonge streets? Is it not more important than having this building in Paris at the present time? What real railway business does the minister think we are going to get out of that building in Paris, which would compare in importance with a proper plant at Toronto for his department?

Mr. HOCKEN: We had a Minister of Public Works for a few months representing this party, or rather Union government. He was Minister of Public Works for a few months on his way from the cool shades of opposition to the chairmanship of the Railway Commission. During the short period that he occupied that position he tore down the very excellent building which we had in Toronto, a building not adequate to the necessities of the case, an old building, but nevertheless infinitely better than anything we have now or anything you can get in the shape of a warehouse. The minister is occupying now for customs purposes a warehouse on Wellington street, and an old baking powder factory for his examining warehouse.

Mr. BUREAU: Was that what it was?

Mr. HOCKEN: Yes, Magic baking powder was made where the warehouse is to-day.

Mr. BUREAU: The magic has gone and the powder also.

Mr. HOCKEN: I was through the warehouse a short time ago, and it is entirely inadequate for its purposes. If the government could see things from the right perspective, we would certainly have had a new customs house in Toronto before we started building a hotel in Paris for the National Railways. The latter may contribute some little amount to the revenues of the National Railways, but even that is doubtful. It is a very speculative enterprise; but the customs needs of Toronto are pressing upon the people there, and every month and every year that we are without these facilities, the increasing business will make that necessity still more pressing. Ordinary business prudence leads a manufacturer to add to his building if he has not sufficient space wherein to carry on his business. It is always an expensive matter to conduct business in inadequate premises, and that is what the minister tells us is being done to-day.

Mr. BUREAU: That is so.

Mr. HOCKEN: I have an idea that a very large part of the interest cost of a new customs warehouse is being spent now through the congestion that is inevitable under present circumstances. If this government had been considering the welfare of its own services, the Minister of Public Works would have brought down an item this year for a new customs house in Toronto. We could stand the post office for another year or two, but certainly a new customs house for Toronto is one of the crying necessities of the business of this country. Moreover, we did a very large business last year and the customs receipts are very large; but with every year that passes, the customs receipts of Toronto will be greater, and if the customs business of Toronto expands in the present limited quarters that are now available, the cost of administering the department will be constantly increasing. I do not suppose it is of any avail to say these things but I think the government is to be condemned for treating the city of Toronto and its customs necessities in the way that it has.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) asked how much we paid in rents in Toronto. I do not know; that is a matter that comes under the Department of Public Works. The hon. member (Mr. Hocken) says that it is a shame to treat Toronto in the way it has been treated. Let me tell him that I do not build custom houses; I simply ask that they be put up, and when there is no money forthcoming they are not built. The city of Toronto has produced this year $45,000,000 and the city of Montreal $78,000,000; but I would point out that the custom house in Montreal is in no better shape than that in Toronto, being indeed, if anything, rather worse, because they are using the examining warehouse as a long room.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is another reason for condemning the government.

Mr. BUREAU: That is a question I am not discussing. But I want to assure my hon. friend that we are not aiming at Toronto, as he seems to think.

Mr. HOCKEN: I did not say that.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member said that it was shameful the way we treated Toronto.

Mr. HOCKEN: I say it is a shameful way to treat any city.

Mr. BUREAU: I simply want to explain that what my hon. friend calls "shameful treatment" has been due entirely to lack of funds. However, I will not discuss the point further, because it is a question that will come up in connection with the Public Works estimates. I am with the hon. member in wishing to see to the comfort of the officials. I will stand by every official of the Department of Customs and Excise in an endeavour to see that he gives efficient service, and undoubtedly these people are handicapped when they have to work in quarters such as they have in Toronto and Montreal. We have no right to have a man work in artificial light from nine in the morning to five in the afternoon, or ask him to do his work in an unventilated place. I have protested against it, and when my hon. friend asks to have a custom house built in Toronto, or any other hon. member begs for a custom house in Montreal, I will stand by him.

Mr. CHURCH: The city of Toronto in 1914 sold to the government a lot for $110,000. To-day that lot is worth well on to half a million. The government has had the benefit of the increment in those nine years. The lot was sold for $110,000, but it was worth more than that at the time it was sold to the government, and a member of the government of that day, the Hon. Mr. Reid, promised to have a building erected on it within twelve months. There is no building on the lot to-day, and I think that every effort should be made to put one up because it would increase the value of the property to the government.

Mr. BUREAU: I have not taken any pledge to carry out the promises of my predecessors, nor do I intend to.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Do the officers of the Excise department who go through the country looking for private stills come under this item?

Mr. BUREAU: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I do not want to have it understood for a moment that I am pleading for the bootleggers or those who operate private stills; I hope the minister will put them all in gaol, because they make rotten stuff.

Mr. BUREAU: There would be few left in certain places if I did that.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In my county, however, some of the officers came to a place called Vita and caught two men with stills. They brought them before Magistrate Willfong in Vita on New Year's Day for trial. The men asked for a postponement of the trial in order that they might obtain counsel. I believe that the officers requested the magistrate not to consider a postponement, but to go on with the trial, and this he did. He found the men guilty and sentenced them to nine and twelve months respectively, and they left their families in that district fairly destitute. I repeat, I am not pleading for the bootlegger, but I think the officers of the department should give every man a fair trial, and when he asks for a postponement in order to obtain counsel that request should be considered. I do not think, in any event, that it is right to try a man in this country on New Year's Day, because that is the day we celebrate.

Mr. BUREAU: I do not know what the facts are, and my hon. friend evidently is not quite conversant with them. Were the officers federal or provincial officers?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: They were Inland Revenue officers.

Mr. BUREAU: There is no longer an Inland Revenue department, but be that as it may, there are some provincial officers who are sworn in as preventive officers empowered to look for stills. I lived in Manitoba a few years, and so far as I know, New Year's was always a dies non; you could not try cases on that day. Now, you cannot put sense into a man's head if he is incapable of it; a man is born with a certain amount of brains and you cannot add to his mental stature. But I should think that a magistrate would exercise common sense and postpone a trial if it appeared that injustice would be done by proceeding with it. I blame the magistrate more than I do the officers in this case, because he is a man of higher education who should not be carried away by too great zeal in 5 p.m. the execution of his duties. If what my hon. friend says has happened, I am sorry. But when things of this kind do occur they should be reported to the department; otherwise people have no right to complain afterwards. I am prepared to stand by my officers when they properly execute their duties, and when they do not I am willing to reprimand, suspend or dismiss them as the necessity of the case might demand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has the minister had any representations with regard to the matter of the New York agent? Has he heard anything from Walkerville and the manufacturers at that point?

Mr. BUREAU: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister has had no complaints?

Mr. BUREAU: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Representations have come from points as far as Windsor that they are losing business because they cannot make use of the Panama canal. I do not know whether or not that is correct, but from what is stated it would seem to be. If these representations are true, and goods can be shipped from a point as far west as Windsor to New York and then trans-shipped by the Panama canal to Vancouver cheaper than they can be sent on the rail haul, then it strikes me that this is a matter that should be looked into by the minister. The business people represent that it is impossible to do business at present and that they are losing business. They say that it is absolutely necessary to have a customs officer appointed in New York. I sympathize a great deal with what my hon. friend says about the railway situation, but I doubt very much whether the railways are making anything at all in view of the statements I have heard from the railway officials themselves. Before the committee last year we had evidence of the railroaders as to the cost of hauling freight to Vancouver, and I doubt very much whether there is any money in the railway business to-day so far as that haul is concerned. It is claimed that the freight cost has been cut to the lowest possible point and that there is practically nothing in the business now. If that is true, and I see no reason to dispute what the railroaders themselves say, would it not be better for them to get a profitable haul even though it may be shorter? In other words, are not the railways losing money by trying, at the present high rate, to carry these commodities right over the continent in competition with the water rates? We all want to help the National Railways; there is no question about that; but I greatly doubt whether my hon. friend is helping them. It does seem to me that if the representations made before that committee are correct, there would be more money for the railways through this shorter haul.

Mr. BUREAU: My hon. friend proceeds on the assumption that I have refused the appointment of a customs officer in New York, but I have not done so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister pointed out earlier in the session that the reason why it had not been done was because it would be a loss in respect to the long railway haul.

Mr. BUREAU: That was the representation made to me.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like him to look into it very carefully to see whether or not there is anything in that allegation.

Mr. BUREAU: I am doing that. There is something in what my hon. friend says, that if we double or treble the traffic to the frontier there will be that much more rail business done. But the representations that have been referred to have not come to me or to the department; there may have been something in the press about it, but there have been no official representations. All the information is being got together, and after we have made a thorough investigation and got all the necessary data, the matter will be submitted to council. I do not like to go ahead without being sure of my ground, but when all the information has been obtained a decision will be taken. I have no personal views on the matter, one way or the other; it is just a question of what will be in the best interests of the country.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister will agree that the most important consideration involved is the maintenance of interprovincial trade. To pass to another part of this item, I notice there is provision for 114 new employees. Are they all appointed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BUREAU: Every one of them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So that no use is being made of the wording of this item except so far as it applies to overtime.

Mr. BUREAU: Only the overtime—unfortunately.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very fortunately, for the service.

Mr. SPENCE: The minister said a little while ago that he was not obliged to carry out the promises of his predecessor, but I say that he should carry out those promises when he sees the necessity for doing so. There should be continuity in government business just as there should be in any other business.

Mr. BUREAU: I said I was not bound by the pledges of my predecessors.

Mr. SPENCE: But the minister knows the necessity for it. I would ask him whether, if it were a matter of his own business, he would continue to do business the way the government are doing it. We are not getting sixty per cent of efficiency from his officers; in Toronto the citizens who are doing business with the customs house are getting a minimum of service at a maximum of cost. We are running from Yonge street clear out to the corner of John and King streets; nobody seems to know where to go to get any customs business done. There is a site available for the erection of a proper customs building, but it is lying idle while large sums are being paid out for rent. The present quarters of the customs officers in Toronto are unsanitary and unsatisfactory in every way. Is that good business? I say it is not. The government should do away with the rotten old buildings they are using in Toronto and get a serviceable, sanitary building where the citizens can carry on their business in a proper manner; but instead of that, money is being spent in the rental of quarters in which the public cannot get service. I say it is an absolute waste of money. I have been around that customs house for thirty-five years and I know the inconveniences that the people are subject to. It is a crime the way the people have to stand for hours on the sidewalk trying to get into these old buildings in order to get their business done. You could now do without hundreds of the men now employed if you had a proper building.

Mr. BUREAU: I think my hon. friend did not understand me when I spoke a moment ago.

Mr. SPENCE: I understand you thoroughly, sir.

Mr. BUREAU: I said I was in favour of building a customs house. What more does the hon. member want me to do? I do not build the customs houses; I do not rent them or furnish them; I do not hang lamps in them. I am in sympathy with my hon. friend, and I do not see what he is getting excited about. I would like to see Toronto have a better customs house, because I would get better service from my officials.

Mr. SPENCE: That is what might be called passing the buck. We all realize that it is the Public Works department that puts up the buildings. That is what the Post Office Department says when a post office is asked for. Now, if the minister makes a real demand on the Department of Public Works for a building, he may get something done. The minister is the man who should be the judge; he should know what he wants, and he should have sufficient prestige with his government to see that he gets it. If I were in his position I would see that I did get it, or I would not be there.

Mr. BUREAU: That suggestion might apply both ways. The friends of my hon. friend were in office not long since; there was a Minister of Public Works and he made a promise in the matter. The former building that was torn down may have been a little cramped, but it was a beautiful building, if I remember it rightly. Now, I am willing to have a new building, but we cannot build these things with wind. We have to have the money, and as soon as we get the money I am satisfied that the Minister of Public Works will be only too glad to get rid of my demands and petitions for customs houses.

Mr. CHURCH: A contract should be a contract, even if it was made by the government. I realize that the putting up of these buildings is not done by the minister's department, but I am speaking of the government as a whole. Here is a contract made for the sale of lands in 1914, the parties to it being the city of Toronto on the one hand and the federal government on the other. The area involved was a large tract of land on the south side of Front street, the purchase price being $110,000—away less than the commercial value of the land. The government were to put up a building there, and as I understand the contract it could be enforced in the Exchequer Court of Canada. But two bodies serving the public do not want to quarrel; they should work together to get a government building that will facilitate the public business. The city is interested in having a good government building there, and they are spending a lot of money in that district; they have put down a new pavement, they have given a new car service, and so on. I hope that during the recess something will be done in this matter, because twenty-six or twenty-seven public bodies have asked the Toronto representatives to urge upon the government the necessity for action. When the department is doing business to the extent of $50,000,000 a year, surely it should do something to save the time of the business men. Millions of dollars worth of time has been wasted every year through the inconvenience the public have suffered in trying to get service from the customs house in Toronto. I say that I hope the government will take the matter up in the recess and see whether something cannot be done.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not wish it to be understood that I am criticising the ability of the Minister of Customs, because I know that he is full of ability and "pep." I assure him that I am not a bit excited about it. I know the conditions around the customs house and the post office; I have spent my life there, and I have a right to speak of conditions as I find them. I believe in calling a spade a spade, and I do think that the government are deserving of criticism for their lack of interest in Toronto. It is a persecution of Toronto; that is what it is all the time.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agriculture—dairying, $230,000.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I think the committee will remember that this item was allowed to stand over at the request of the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy). I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not in his seat, but I was discussing the matter with him yesterday and he said that on the budget or on some other occasion I had dealt pretty fully with the question that he was desirous of taking up. He suggested among other things that he would like to know if the report of Mr. Ruddick and Mr. Wilson who went to Australia and New Zealand to examine into the dairy industry there would be ready for the House this session. Before coming to that, Mr. Chairman, I might deal with some of the activities that we intend to undertake this year partly as a result of the investigations of Mr. Ruddick and partly also as a result of the grading system that was provided for some years ago, but which only came into force on the 1st of April last. Under the Dairy Industry Act of 1921 provision was made for the grading of all cheese and butter for export. That has been let stand over from time to time so that the public would get familiarized with the idea of grading these dairy products. The system was accepted generally throughout the country, but naturally a new departure like this would meet with some opposition. This has gradually disappeared, more especially as the Ontario government was introducing at the same time the principle of purchasing milk for cheese factories on a basis of grade and a basis of butter fat. The two coming together helped each other, though to some extent where there was difficulty it seemed to accentuate the trouble. However, the difficulty has been largely localized, and now that grading has been in force for nearly two months the opposition has disappeared altogether. Just what results will come out of that so far as a more acceptable reception of our butter on the British market is concerned, time alone will tell. We have not had sufficient experience yet to indicate what the results will be, but I have no thought of anything else but that there will be a very decided improvement. The moment you can get quality paid for on a basis of quality there will be some encouragement to the farmers and cheesemakers to produce quality.

The intention is to extend the activities of the Dairy branch in several particulars, one of them as a result of Mr. Ruddick's interim report, and that is with respect to the pasteurizing of milk for the manufacture of cheese. Formerly in Canada pasteurization was confined largely if not entirely to cream for the manufacture of butter, and it was also practised with regard to the whey product in order to ensure against tuberculosis the animals that used whey from cheese factories. We have found, however, that one of the reasons why Australia and New Zealand have been able to surpass Canada in the manufacture of cheese has been the fact that they have also pasteurized the milk that has gone into the manufacture of cheese. There is no question that the pasteurization of cream makes butter very much better. It gives it better keeping qualities, and raises the quality generally. The Australians and New Zealanders have found out that pasteurization has the same effect when applied to milk in the manufacture of cheese. That is one of the things to which we attribute the general excellence of the cheese they have placed on the market, and why they have not only come up to Canadian cheese, but I fear surpassed it in quality. I do not use the word fear in any other sense except that we are not where we were, and it is our business to get back to where we were at the top of the list.

There is a combined cheese and butter factory at the town of Finch between thirty and forty miles south of here. It was erected some seven or eight years ago for demonstration purposes. It was felt by a good many that in order that dairying should accomplish what it ought to accomplish, it should include winter dairying. Cheese factories were confined for the summer months to the manufacture of cheese, and it was thought that a plant that permitted the manufacure of cheese in the summer and butter in the winter would be a more suitable one for the coming dairy day than any other single kind could possibly be, and this factory at Finch was constructed with that idea in mind. It is the intention to enlarge the operations of that factory by a small extension for the purpose of providing for the pasteurization of milk for the manufacture of cheese, and then we will be able to experiment and find out just how much pasteurization will improve the quality and see how far that one change will help us to regain our lost position in relation to the reception of our products in the British market.

We also intend to extend the testing system. In some provinces we have arranged for the testing locally by the provinces on the ground that they can do it more cheaply being right on the spot than we could do it from a common centre like Ottawa.

A growing industry like dairying always has some new activities and new expenses associated with it, necessitating a larger vote. We believe that there is no more complete food for human consumption than milk. It is nearer to being a perfect food than any other product, and we are endeavouring to develop a larger use of milk among our population both young and old. We have a lady, Miss Campbell, who has developed that work in an educational way, and in a very acceptable way, in various parts of the country, and she has an assistant at the present time. Possibly I might leave the matter now to the committee to ask any questions they may have in mind rather than dealing with the subject generally.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is Australia using the tuberculin test in the same way as Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand not.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is depending on pasteurization?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand so.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Will anything be expended out of this appropriation for the establishment of a butter factory, say, in a new district where the people are anxious to go into the business? Could any of this vote be used for that purpose, and if so, in what way?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. It is quite possible that in the near future we may construct another combined factory like the one at Finch, but that will not be decided upon until we know more definitely the results at the Finch factory. I think it is only a matter of time when we shall really want something like that in different parts of Canada. The construction of local factories such as my hon. friend refers to is a matter for the provincial government. I think my hon. friend is familiar with one in his constituency at a point called Fiske. The construction of that was assisted by the provincial department of agriculture in Saskatchewan, but any arrangement for assistance—with that exception,—has been invariably entered into by the provincial government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: When this question was before the committee several months ago I think there was a misunderstanding in regard to a number of items that were being discussed. I would ask the minister if this is the only item left in the estimates undisposed of?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is the last item in the Main Estimates. We have all of the estimates of civil government yet.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I may possibly be out of order in referring to any matter outside of this item but I should certainly like to ask the minister if any of these other items will be opened up for discussion. On the previous occasion referred to there was a misunderstanding and Hansard does not contain what is set forth in the Votes and Proceedings as to what actually took place. There is no reference whatever in Hansard to the item for the enforcement of the Agricultural Instruction Act. No reference whatever is made to that item in Hansard and personally I did not hear the matter discussed in committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no Agricultural Instruction Act, but there is an agricultural instruction grant. The item is No. 50 "Administration of the agricultural instruction grant, $20,000". That has been passed. I may point out that if my hon. friend desires to discuss any question that has been passed my understanding is, he can do that on items of the estimates for civil government. If the committee desires to take up any question on any of these items I have no objection. I understand the usual practice is to do it on the civil government estimates when considerable latitude is allowed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we had better have a clear understanding in that connection. I would like the chairman to endorse the minister's suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot make any ruling in such a case as that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then perhaps we should have the discussion now.

The CHAIRMAN: If the subject is in order it can be discussed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I may say this matter was before the committee on a previous occasion. I attempted to deal with it then but was called to order by the Chair who informed the committee that the item came under the heading of civil government. As a matter of fact it relates to item No. 50 and Hansard does not show that that item was passed or that it was even discussed. No reference whatever is made to the item in Hansard, so far as I can see, although it appears in the Votes and Proceedings as having been passed.

The CHAIRMAN: What appears in Hansard does not govern in these matters. I have some recollection of what the hon. member mentions now. The item was passed by the committee, as the records of the House indicate, and was reported, as is customary, to the Speaker.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I should point out that wherever the item is the same or less than it was before it is carried without discussion. Take, for example, the item of cold storage $6,000. The discussion in connection with that subject took place on the bill relating to that question and there was no discussion in Committee of Supply. The item of $15,000 for the International Institute went through without discussion, also the item of $20,000 for the administration of the agricultural instruction grant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the item is called it appears in Hansard. The Votes and Proceedings must be made from Hansard. I have seen cases where that has not been done, where the Votes and Proceedings do not follow Hansard, and I must say it does look very curious to me. The officers of the House gain their information of what is done in the House from Hansard. That is what Hansard is for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not want my right hon. friend to look across at me. I am not responsible for Hansard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not intend to frighten the minister at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will take more than my right hon. friend to frighten me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I am saying is that we have to be governed by the records of the House, not by something that is made up from other records. I have not searched myself but unless item No. 50 "Administration of the agricultural instruction grant" appears in Hansard there is no authority for any officer of this House to insert in any report the statement that it was brought before the committee at all.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say in answer to the right hon. gentleman that the Clerk Assistant, under the rules of the House, is the clerk of the committee. Every resolution that is passed is taken down by him and sent to Mr. R. P. King, who prepares the Votes and Proceedings. That is the record which governs with respect to all proceedings in committee. My right hon. friend himself called attention to an omission in Hansard in connection with the Hoppe leases, although the occurrence took place and was reported. The Clerk Assistant, as I say, notes the passage of every item, every paragraph of a bill, certifies to its passage and a report is then made to the Chair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is correct that the Assistant Clerk reports what is done but the Assistant Clerk has no right to report a thing unless it has actually taken place and is heard in this House. Now, if a statement is heard in the House it is heard by Hansard. In the case of the Hoppe leases there was no such statement ever heard as appears in the Votes and Proceedings. I never heard it made myself, I have no recollection of hearing it made. Hansard never heard it.

Nevertheless it appears in the Votes and Proceedings. I certainly do not impugn the Assistant Clerk. There is no officer of this House in whom I have greater confidence both as to ability and integrity. But it is quite possible for him to assume that a thing was carried when it was not actually carried. When a matter does not appear in Hansard as having been passed, it is only justice to this House that it should be called again and that discussion should not be shut off simply because of what is contained in another record.

The CHAIRMAN: The proceedings of the House in committee are not only reported, but the Clerk makes a record of them and that record goes into the Votes and Proceedings which are open to every member. There have been complaints. I think the right hon. gentleman himself complained some time ago about Hansard incorrectly reporting him and giving him the credit for an address which he had never uttered, an address which was actually made by another member. The fact is that Hansard is not taken as the record in dealing with resolutions and items which come before the House. What is accepted is the report of the official who is appointed for that purpose under the rules of the House. The record he keeps is the one which is accepted and appears in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we accept the Chairman's statement then there is no record in Hansard at all, and a subject which should come up can be refused consideration. How it will be possible to rule otherwise I do not know. If with no record at all of the Hoppe discussion, no record whatever of the motion being made, and no recollection of it being made by any person in this House, we are going to be debarred from legitimate discussion here the sooner we know it the better.

The CHAIRMAN: I should just like to draw the right hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there is a record of the proceedings of the House signed by me and delivered to the Clerk, and the Clerk also signs the record. Thus there are two persons who are able to say definitely and absolutely that such an item has passed this House. It then appears in the Votes and Proceedings. When my right hon. friend suggested that no one has any recollection of what has taken place that is an error, because there are two officers of this House who have definite and absolute knowledge and have recorded it over their own signature.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There is evidently a misunderstanding regarding the matter. I have a copy of unrevised Hansard of February 23, and the index showing the contents gives the different items passed, and this particular item is not mentioned. In attempting to discuss it before the item could possibly have come up I was called to order by the Chairman. I was then discussing this item referred to, which is omitted from unrevised Hansard, and the Chairman said that it came under the heading of civil government, and a little later on, when the item for agricultural construction was before the committee Mr. Spencer is quoted as asking—

> Is the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture included in this item?

To which the minister replied, "No."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was the $900,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes. And a little further on he again asked a question, and the minister again replied, "No." And I asked the question as to where it appeared, and the minister remarked that it was in the previous vote that had just been passed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I was present and put the question to the minister; I certainly did not hear the vote being called or being passed by the committee, and I was following it closely, as I think the Hansard will show. It passed without my knowledge if it did pass, and it does not show in unrevised Hansard. It is a most significant thing, and I think, in view of the circumstances, the minister might very well permit that item to be discussed under the item which is now before the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have the references here, if the minister would like to see them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On the 23rd February the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), seeking to discuss the salaries and the duties of the Commissioner of Agriculture, addressed the House. When he finished—page 594—the Chairman ruled as follows:

> I would draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that what he is discussing comes under Civil Government. If he seeks to criticize the actions of some of the officers who come under this vote, he will of course be quite in order.

Then, on page 608, I find the following:

Mr. Spencer: The minister has not answered my question in regard to the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture. Is that included in this item?

Mr. Motherwell: No.

Mr. Sutherland: Where does the salary paid the Commissioner of Agriculture come in? I cannot find it under the head of Civil Government.

We were informed by the Chairman that that was the proper place to discuss it, and where it properly came. Then the Minister of Agriculture said:

It was in the previous vote that has just been passed.

That is the way hon. members of the House have been treated.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was calling the attention of the House to the fact that the vote had gone through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We were informed by the Chairman before it went through that it came under civil government, and we were subsequently informed by the Chairman that it did not come under civil government.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member say that was before item No. 50 was passed?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. At page 608 the Chairman's ruling appears. I do not know whether it was item 50 or not, but the item that included it, according to the minister, had just been passed. Either the Chairman was right and it had been passed, or the hon. member should have been allowed to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN: I have the scroll of the assistant clerk of February 23, 1923, which indicates that No. 50 was passed in its consecutive order, after items 44, 46, 47 and 49 had been passed. The Votes and Proceedings of February 23, page 112, indicate that the vote, according to the scroll of the assistant clerk had been passed, which was notice to every member of the committee, whether reported in Hansard or not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Might I draw attention to what I did intimate on that occasion. Objection was taken, as indicated by unrevised Hansard, by the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) at the bottom of page 609, the first column, where I replied to the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton). I spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman, such an appeal I am sure is irresistible. Besides, this is getting too quiet! But I want to assure the committee that I did not try to "put anything over" when they called out "carried". I am not going to stand in the way of discussing any vote.

I think the appeal I referred to was by the hon. member for South Oxford. And that is what I say now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: While the minister said that the plea was irresistible, he refused to move the House to return to the item, knowing that if he refused it could not be brought up again. He was inconsistent inside of two minutes. At pages 594 and 608 this committee was informed that the proper place to discuss the item was under civil government. This committee the same day was informed by the Minister of Agriculture that the item had been passed just immediately before.

The CHAIRMAN: Does civil government stand?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says it is passed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that when the estimates for civil government are under discussion, the salary of any employee of the government, whether included in the item or not, or anything pertaining to his appointment, may be discussed. I have been inquiring about that since then.

The CHAIRMAN: The Chairman must accept the word of the minister as to whether an item comes under civil government unless it is clearly within his own knowledge. I assumed, quite naturally, that this matter did come within the item of civil government. I understand from the minister that the item of civil government has not yet passed, and the item is still open for debate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The fact is that the minister stated that it did come under civil government. This is included in another vote which passed after the chairman had given us the assurance that it came under civil government, and consequently we did not proceed to discuss it. We took his ruling that it came under civil government, and subsequently the minister said we could have discussed it all right under the previous item which had just been passed, we having kept quiet abiding by the ruling of the chair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member is making a mountain out of a mole hill. There is no disposition whatever to shut off discussion. If the committee wants to discuss it the present time is just as good as any other as far as I am concerned, but let us do all things decently and in order. I thought at the time I made the statement that that was the proper procedure. I understood there was sufficient latitude under civil government, whether the name was there or not, to include any civil servant under any outside vote you desired to take him under, even though the vote might have been passed. I am not an authority on these matters, but that is my understanding.

Mr. GRAHAM: You are usually right.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I was not present when the item was called, but I am very much interested in this vote, and I know that the minister has great zeal for the advancement of dairying; so much so that he sent one or two of the officials of his department to New Zealand within the last two months. Has the report from those officials been made to him, and will he have it printed and circulated, so that the members may have it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have an interim report that merely gives a survey of the ground covered, and does not come to any conclusions. It was a preliminary report that I asked for prior to the budget debate. The report which will include certain recommendations is being prepared, and I hope will be ready possibly in the course of a week. I would not like to state that absolutely. You never can tell. Sometimes it takes longer to do these things than we anticipate. But just as soon as possible it will be submitted to the House, and if an order is passed it will be printed and distributed.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Has the minister any plans for the future looking towards putting into effect any recommendations that his officials may make?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. I was sorry that my hon. friend was out. One of them was with respect to the extension of the activities of the Finch factory, which is a combined factory for cheese and butter. We are enlarging that with the idea of providing for the pasteurization of milk for the manufacture of cheese. In the research in Australia and New Zealand, it was found that in those countries invariably the milk was pasteurized, and to that fact was attributed in some measure the high quality of their cheese. We are going to try that out in the Finch factory this summer, and then we shall be in a better position to know to what extent we can advise the construction of other large factories where it is deemed advisable throughout the country, especially in eastern Canada. We are satisfied that one of the reasons why the quality of our cheese has fallen behind is that it is made in a large number of small factories where the out-turn is so small and so varied, and where sometimes conditions are so primitive, that it is impossible to do justice to this industry.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

We want to get a little more information about the Finch factory and pasteurization before we are able to say specifically just what kind of a standard factory would be suitable to conditions in Canada. I do not know whether we can get a standard or not, but we may get an approximate standard that can be varied to suit different localities.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Is the accommodation at Finch insufficient to take care of the milk that is being offered?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For the milk that is being offered now it is sufficient, but we have not accommodation for the pasteurization. That takes a little room itself and a pasteurization plant would have to be erected. Not very much of an extension will be required, but an extension will have to be made. After that we hope to enlarge the activities of the factory and to take on any milk that presents itself, to the full capacity of the factory.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): If the accommodation is sufficient to look after the quantity of milk that is offered, will the minister explain why milk is being refused?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not quite understand my hon. friend. It is sufficient to take on the patrons that are delivering milk, but it is not quite sufficient for all applicants. That is one of the reasons why we are enlarging it. I signed a statement yesterday or the day before intimating to the people in that vicinity that after we got this enlargement made, and beginning with the first of the new year, allcomers' milk would be accepted up to the full capacity of the factory, and regardless of where the milk came from. The factory is not sufficiently large to take care of allcomers, and to decide who was to be given preference and accommodated has been a rather awkward situation to deal with. There is only one policy to pursue, regardless of who is hurt and who is not. This is a demonstration factory to show that it is possible to make a high-class product at a low cost when the out-turn is large, and you cannot do that without hurting some of the little factories in the vicinity. It is about time that some of them were hurt—not wilfully, of course, but in a progressive movement of this nature some of the older institutions have to go by the board.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I approve the minister's plans and I only hope he will carry out his good intentions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I intend to do so.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I know that in another branch of the department the minister is carrying on some work, and I must commend him for that also. That is in respect to grading of our dairy products for export. What progress is the minister making along that line?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will state that very hurriedly because I have already gone over it. As my hon. friend knows, in the introduction of other reforms some objection is always raised. Possibly if we were to introduce a resolution that we were all to go to heaven to-night, somebody would object to it. No matter how admittedly good the grading system is, we had quite a number of, I will say, conscientious objectors to that system. My own view is that we should have had this about a quarter of a century ago, but these reforms sometimes come very slowly. Outside of a few localities the objection has not been serious, especially since the system has been put into actual practice and the benefits of it shown. I think the objection was largely raised because some people wanted to continue the old local activities of grading right near home, in the factory or in the car. There is a general antipathy to seeing your produce, instead of being handled in your own factories, sent down to a large factory at Montreal. You lose sight of it once it goes round the bend on the railway. Once the step is made the difficulty disappears; you wake up the next morning and you do not find very much difference. We hope, of course, to find a difference in the increased recognition of the product on the markets as a result of the grading. When the cheesemaker and the man who provides the raw material find they are paid on the basis of quality, they will have some inducement to furnish quality. I am glad that this commends itself to a practical dairyman like my hon. friend, and that he approves the Finch factory, which is a splendid plant, constructed some seven years ago, I think. I hope that under my administration we shall be able to carry out the expectations of the department in that regard. The factory at Finch is capable of splendid work, and the demonstration will be of exceeding value to the dairy industry of Ontario and, indeed, of the whole of Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I noticed a short time ago that the Civil Service Commission sent out notices stating that ten dairy produce graders were required. Are these employed in connection with this work, and if so, at what points, in Ontario, at least, is the grading being carried on, in addition to Montreal?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When the Dairy Grading Act was passed a couple of years ago, it was decided not to put it into force. At the same time a number of dairy produce graders were appointed, and they started on voluntary grading of dairy produce at the new cold storage plant as soon as it was opened in Montreal. All the co-operative selling agencies as a rule patronize that cold storage plant at Montreal, and during the last year or year and a-half produce contributed voluntarily by the owners has been graded by these dairy graders. By introducing the system gradually in a voluntary way, we have been enabled to extend the usefulness of it and to demonstrate its usefulness to those who have been objecting. The work at Montreal has been substantially extended since 1st April, and in addition to that there are a number of graders in the vicinity of Belleville where there is a cold storage where cheese can be taken care of locally until they desire to export it. They operate from three or four places, taking Belleville as the centre. Wherever there is cold storage accommodation, where the cheese or butter can be kept at a proper temperature, the grading is done. It is not done at the factories because that would be impossible, for it would require an army of graders; it would be impossible to engage a grader for each of some eight hundred cheese factories in Ontario; that is out of the question. Besides, it is considered that such a system would not be satisfactory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Does the minister mean to say that it would require a grader for each factory? Surely a grader could attend to twenty-five, thirty or forty factories. The conditions that would attend the grading at the factories were so obvious to many that, I fancy, the chief objection lay in that direction.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend does not advocate that, surely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the grading were done at the factory the defects in the cheese could be pointed out to the maker. I know that the objection has been very strong in the past when the inspection has been made by the purchaser, at the factory. So far as western Ontario is concerned I do not think there was any serious complaint against the old system, but in eastern Ontario there was vigorous protest against adopting it. The minister says that the grading has been carried on at the cold storage plant at Montreal and also at Belleville. What about western Ontario and other points? The minister might also tell us what has been the success of the plant at Montreal. A very large cold storage plant has been constructed there, and the expense of operating it is very heavy, I should think. Can the minister tell us what the result has been so far, in the way of operating costs? And also what is being done in western Ontario? I should like to know, further, at what points grading is done.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The cold storage plant at Montreal is under the administration of the Harbour board. I had occasion to visit it last fall, when I went through it. It had been open less than a year and was three quarters filled and was doing good business. I suppose that it is now so well patronized as to be full all the time. That, however, is something I cannot speak about definitely; nor do I know what the revenues or the costs have been. As I say, it does not come under my department but under the Harbour board. I must say I admired the institution, and I believe it will fill a long-felt want; I should not be surprised if it were filled to capacity by this time. I gather from what my hon. friend says that he is half-disposed to favour the grading in the cheese factories. As a practical creamery man he must surely know that this would be impracticable. I do not need to enter into the reasons, one outstanding one being that, even taking one grader to two or three factories, you could not engage a large enough staff of them to cover all the factories. And in any case, the grading can be better done in the way proposed. So far as western Ontario is concerned, London is one of the centres, and the work is being done as requirements demand.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock, item 42, page 21 of the Estimates, was under consideration. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. STEVENS: I was not in the chamber when the committee rose. Will the minister state briefly what this item covers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As British Columbia is rapidly becoming a dairy province and has acquired some fame by producing a cow that has made a world record, perhaps a few moments devoted to an explanation of this item may not be out of place, even if I have to indulge in a little repetition. In a general way, dairying is becoming of more importance to agriculture throughout Canada as time goes on. Some years ago it was looked upon as confined entirely to eastern Canada, but as the western provinces have found some form of diversification necessary they have seriously taken up dairying, even in the prairie provinces, where it had not been looked upon with very much favour. In British Columbia, because of the high cost of dairy products, the people have been encouraged to go into it to the full capacity of their pasture and of their feed. This involves additional expense in the way of educational work, cow testing, the new system of grading, and so on. That, in a general way, is what the vote is for: more money and a larger staff are required for the purposes of administration.

Mr. STEVENS: I assume that under this item the expenses of Mr. Duncan Marshall will be paid in connection with his trip to the Old Country. Just what are his duties there at the present time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend will be satisfied, I suggest that as soon as we pass this vote and take up civil government, there will be an opportunity to discuss Mr. Marshall from any aspect that may be deemed in the public interest. He is not paid out of this vote; it would be irregular to enter upon that discussion now, and I think that these proprieties ought to be observed. If that would be agreeable to the committee as a whole, I am sure it will be agreeable to me.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is unnecessarily alarmed; he is exceedingly sensitive. I was going to make a very innocent inquiry, and I think about two minutes would have satisfied me. I have no bone to pick, nor have I any particular criticism to offer; I was a humble seeker of a little further information. But the minister bristles up; he seems to sense a serious attack of something of the kind. Why, I am the last person in the world, he ought to know, to precipitate anything of that kind. But either Mr. Marshall or someone else is in the Old Country picking up some thoroughbred stock with the idea of improving Canadian herds. I myself am interested in farming; I would like to know just what the department is doing, and certainly that comes under this item of dairying. I am not particularly interested in Mr. Marshall's salary; in fact, I think I know what it is; it is reported to be $6,000. So that the minster need not worry about the civil government item so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is probably thinking of Mr. Archibald, who went over there during the winter months and brought back some valuable pure-bred cattle, hogs and sheep. That comes under the experimental farm vote. Now, since my hon. friend is in an amiable frame of mind, and I am myself, if the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) feels similarly disposed, I do not care whether it is on this vote or on another that Duncan Marshall is discussed. I may add, however, that we discussed the subject for something like three-quarters of an hour before six o'clock, and I did not know whether my hon. friend was merely continuing it until the arrival of reinforcements.

Mr. STEVENS: Again my hon. friend is frightfully sensitive on this subject. I have not spoken to any of my colleagues about the matter. It just shows how correct we must be —how our minds must run along the same channel.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, I myself want to fit in with that desirable state of mind.

Mr. STEVENS: It would be very difficult for the minister to fit into the groove he would find here. But it just shows there must be something in the back of his mind, a sort of subconscious sense of guilt which he does not like to admit. There must be a feeling on his part that he did not do exactly the right thing in appointing Mr. Marshall; that perhaps it was his personal desire as well as the interest of Mr. Marshall, that dictated the appointment. The circumstance arouses suspicion even in my mind, which I am sure my hon. friend will admit is usually free from such things. Still, the minister has not answered my question about what Mr. Marshall is doing in the Old Country. That is all I want to know.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I am in order, Mr. Chairman, in replying to such an eminently respectable question put in such a very nice spirit, I shall be delighted to do so. Mr. Marshall has just completed negotiations with respect to the removal of the embargo on breeding cattle, and at the request of the Duke of Devonshire that question has been suspended until the meeting of the Imperial Conference in London this fall. He has been instructed to superintend in the meantime the arrival of a shipment of chilled beef which is being sent by this department from Montreal, and to compare the values of cattle slaughtered on this side and sent over in the form of chilled beef as against cattle slaughtered immediately on arrival in England, and as against another bunch that will be sent over and sold for stockers; that is, he is going to compare values in three different sales, cattle slaughtered on arrival, cattle slaughtered on this side and sent over in the form of chilled beef, and cattle sold for stockers. Mr. Marshall has been asked to remain there and superintend this shipment, to inspect it, and note the condition in which it arrives and how it is received on the market, because it is an entirely new work so far as we are concerned. Something of a similar nature was conducted by the Harris Abattoir Company this year, but what we know ourselves we will know, and we thought it advisable at this time to conduct such an experiment entirely under the supervision of our own experimental farm system, with a representative in Great Britain to report on all the details. That is what he is doing at the present time. The cattle will arrive there in about a week. Previously he had been reporting on the arrivals of the stockers. There has been some difficulty in Great Britain with regard to the classification of our cattle, the British government taking the ground that a lot of these animals ought not to be classified as stockers but as fat cattle, and that they should be slaughtered immediately on arrival. There has also been some difficulty as to what ports are eligible for the slaughter of these cattle on arrival, whether it should be Birkenhead or Glasgow, or both. These are matters that Mr. Marshall is looking after at the present time with the British authorities pending the arrival of this shipment. After that is over he is returning to Canada as there is nothing further to be done in regard to the embargo until the Imperial Conference this fall.

Mr. MARTELL: Does not the minister think it would be advisable to keep a permanent official in England to superintend our shipments of cattle and of chilled beef with a view to protecting the Canadian shipper and his market in Great Britain? I do not think we should take what they say in England. We should have some competent official permanently stationed there who would inspect all cattle on arrival, and I would like to know if the Minister of Agriculture has such a step in contemplation.

The CHAIRMAN: The debate is getting much out of order on this particular item.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If I am not too much out of order, Mr. Chairman, I may say that I have such a step in contemplation, and I propose to recommend to my colleagues the appointment of just such an individual to be located in Great Britain for the purpose of reporting back constantly and correctly on the condition in which our various agricultural products arrive on that market. We have been working on that for some time, but it takes some time to get an appointment through. I started some months ago and I cannot say when we will succeed in terminating our efforts with an appointment, but it has got to a certain stage. It is nobody's fault in particular that the appointment has not gone through more rapidly, except the law under which appointments are made. I have to comply with that law, and we are going as rapidly as the terms of that law will permit. I think my hon friend's suggestion is a very good one, and I may say for the information of the committee that we have not got Mr. Duncan Marshall in mind particularly, and it would not do any good if we had, because the appointment is made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STEVENS: In that case there is not much chance of his appointment, I presume.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know about that. I think I have more faith in the Civil Service Commission than my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: I was going on what my hon. friend himself just intimated, that there was not much chance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is only one primary complaint I have against the Civil Service Commission—and as a matter of fact it is not against them at all, but against the act by which they are governed and must be governed, the act by which we are all governed—and that is the desperate, interminable time it takes to get an appointment through. We only pass through this world once, and we want to live while we are living. We do not want to make these appointments in eternity but to make them in time to have the men to do the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We must all admire the minister's ability to get around the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Commission when he desires to have his own way.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are all like that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The activities of Mr. Duncan Marshall, the Acting Commissioner of Agriculture, were discussed a year ago when this particular item for the dairy industry was before the committee, and some inquiries were made as to his qualifications for the mission which it was then anticipated he would be appointed to fulfil, that of a trip to South America to develop the live stock industry as between Canada and South America. Consequently the activities of Mr. Marshall since that time and down to the present have been in the public eye more or less. At that time I believe he was passing the winter at a seaside resort in Florida, and some inquiries were made upon that occasion with regard to his activities there. I believe the minister intimated that he had been loaned for the time being to the Minister of the Interior to promote immigration to this country, and he was delivering some very effective addresses in Florida during the winter. Early in the present session I made inquiries as to the result of his operations there, and I was informed that no apparent results had been secured, or at least that there had been no immigration from Florida to Canada so far as was known. Mr. Duncan Marshall was in the public eye at that time by reason of the fact that his appointment had been made not by the Civil Service Commission but by order in council. Immediately upon the prorogation of parliament, in fact, the very day that parliament prorogued, Mr. Marshall landed in the constituency that I represent and on that day he addressed a gathering of the Liberals of that constituency, and had a very enjoyable time, I have no doubt. I have no fault to find with Mr. Marshall appearing at a gathering of the Liberals of South Oxford or of any other constituency, but so long as he is being paid by the people of this country to perform certain duties I think it is well that he should attend to those duties and not devote his time to political matters.

There was some misunderstanding when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were before the House upwards of three months ago. From that time down to the present no opportunity has been afforded to discuss this question. Before six o'clock the minister stated that he was quite agreeable to having the item discussed under which Mr. Marshall's salary would be paid. There is no record of that item in Hansard. It apparently slipped by the committee on that occasion without the knowledge of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot permit the hon. member to say that. It appears in the Votes and Proceedings and with two officers of the House certifying to it over their signatures. It did not slip past the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: With all due respect to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the committee by quoting what was quoted before six o'clock, but I was sitting in the House here and other members were in the House and made similar inquiries to the ones I made, and they at least did not know that the item had been passed by the committee, and Hansard does not show that it was passed by the committee. There is no reference to the item in Hansard. The minister recognizing this stated on that occasion that he had no objection to the matter being re-opened and discussed on any item, and immediately before six o'clock he again very graciously consented to the matter being discussed, so I presume that we are at perfect liberty to discuss it on this occasion. Now, Sir, I wish to make a few remarks with regard to Mr. Marshall's operations since that time.

The CHAIRMAN: I rule that Mr. Marshall's operations are not relative to this item. They may be in order in connection with estimates for civil government but they are not relevant to this item. Mr. Marshall is not an officer who is in any way connected with the vote under this item and any discussion with respect to his movements is therefore irrelevant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask the minister if Mr. Marshall is Commissioner of Agriculture generally or only commissioner as respects certain branches of agriculture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He is not Commissioner of Agriculture at all. He is a commissioner to inquire into certain agricultural matters but he is not Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are the agricultural matters that he has to inquire into?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One of them was the Agricultural Instruction Grant. That was primarily the purpose of the appointment. he investigated that subject very fully and made a report on it which was tabled some time ago. The next subject was this: The Fordney tariff was on the point of consummation and it created almost an embargo, as we thought at that time, against our cattle. However, our animals were able to climb over it, high as it was. But at that time, as I say we were confronted, as we thought not only with an American embargo, but we were deprived of the British market, and it was thought that by having a competent stock man like Duncan Marshall available for any of that class of work—either to go to South America or anywhere else—he might be able to help us in solving temporarily at least, these problems until some more permanent solution was found. That is what we had in mind. It was about the blackest outlook that we had for our cattle for the last thirty years, and I could not find then, nor am I able to find yet, a more competent man for that kind of work than Duncan Marshall. Now, as to that I may be mistaken; we all have our opinions about the competency or fitness of men. The fact that he and Dr. Grisdale, accompaning two of my colleagues to England last autumn, succeeded in terminating the embargo should at least be some indication of the value of his work in connection with this line of activity.

Mr. MANION: Did the minister notice that Mr. Drury, as reported in this morning's press, claimed that Manning Doherty terminated the embargo?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is something like the claims that are set up in connection with the winning of the war. As my hon. friend knows a good many countries claim the credit for winning the war. I have said on several occasions here that as far as I was concerned I was willing to distribute any credit that was coming among the public men who were identified with the movement for the elimination of this embargo, and there is some credit coming to Manning Doherty and also to the right hon. leader of the Opposition and his colleagues.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Drury claimed all the credit, I notice.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Drury possibly requires all the arguments he can muster.

Mr. MANION: Oh probably; I will agree with that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have a very warm feeling for Mr. Manning Doherty and maybe there was necessity for provincial activity at that time. A quick, short stroke sometimes does the trick.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister got lost in his own verbosity—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Thank you.

Mr. MEIGHEN:—and did not answer my question. I understand Mr. Marshall was appointed by an order in council. I asked what the objects of the appointment were as stated in that order. I do not presume the Fordney tariff was referred to in it; I doubt very much if the cattle embargo was. I would like a list of the objects of his appointment as set out in the order to find out whether, for example, it includes the handling of dairy stock down in South America.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He did not go there. I tabled that order in council; I do not carry it around with me all the time. I remember the primary object was to have a thorough inquiry and investigation into the workings of the Agricultural Instruction Act, which it was thought at that time would possibly be renewed. There had been suggestions made from time to time as to the best way to amend it and this investigation was the primary object of Mr. Marshall's appointment. Since then he has been busy at various things that have occurred from time to time; and the last activity he has been connected with is the embargo. I have already indicated to the committee the purposes in retaining him there. Possibly it will be another two or three weeks before he will return.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did he go to South America in connection with dairying?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, Mr. Dryden went there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What did he go there for?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is there any possibility of Mr. Duncan Marshall being back in Ontario before the elections take place?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, he is not operating on a time fuse and I do not know. The provincial elections take place on the 25th June, do they not? Well, Mr. Marshall's activities are not timed by the Ontario elections. It was left to my hon. friend to think of that. I may say in answer to the leader of the Opposition that Duncan Marshall did not go to South America. It was Mr. Dryden who went there. It was a long journey on which to send two men. Mr. Marshall was spoken of in that capacity but he was required elsewhere at the time. Mr. Dryden went at the request of some breeders in Ontario who know him well. I understand Mr. Dryden has some knowledge of South American conditions, and has some acquaintances there, and it was thought that he would be a very good man for that purpose. His report has also been tabled.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: As to the work for which Mr. Marshall and Mr. Dryden were employed, I believe the committee were led to understand that in addition to the beef breeds the pure-bred dairy stock were also to be taken under consideration. As the minister does not appear to have the order in council under which Mr. Marshall was appointed, I may as well read it. I think that notwithstanding the efforts that have been made to prevent a discussion it will be clearly shown that the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act is largely connected with dairying in Ontario. This is the order in council in question:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 1st February, 1922, from the Minister of Agriculture, submitting that the Agricultural Instruction Act under which the sum of $1,100,000 annually has been granted to the Provincial Departments of Agriculture for the purpose of aiding agricultural instruction in the provinces expires March 31st, 1923.

The minister states that in view of the extraordinary and exceptional conditions in the agricultural world it is highly desirable that an investigation be made into the advisability of the continuation, discontinuation or emendation of the provisions of this act; the amounts to be paid, and the methods of calculating such amounts in the event of its extension; and the scope of the work of the provinces to be undertaken with the assistance of funds provided thereunder.

It is considered advisable that a commissioner be appointed under section 38c of the Civil Service Act as amended by chapter 22 of the Statutes of 1921, to conduct the investigation indicated above, and to inquire into such other agricultural problems as may be desirable and necessary.

The minister, therefore, recommends that Mr. Duncan Marshall, of Olds, Alberta, be appointed as a commissioner for the above purpose, and to perform such other duties of a cognate nature as may be delegated to him.

The minister further recommends that Mr. Marshall be paid a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum, said salary to be paid from the appropriation provided for the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act and that this appointment date from January 15, 1922.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendations and submit the same for approval.

With reference to this the former leader of the party to my left in the session of 1922 questioned the minister. He said:

Am I to gather from my hon. friend's remarks that this question is not a permanent one?

Mr. Motherwell: It is a temporary appointment.

Mr. Crerar: How long is it expected to last?

Mr. Motherwell: About six months, probably.

Upwards of a year has elapsed since that time and we have had for some time the report of the commissioner who was appointed on that occasion, and his subsequent activities clearly indicate, I think, that he is not acting on behalf of the dairying interests while he is in the Old Country. In fact many of the agricultural journals of this country show Mr. Marshall to be engaged in the very opposite direction. You can scarcely pick up an agricultural paper without finding articles by Mr. Marshall in which he is referring to the conditions which prevail in the Old Country. A few days ago I picked up an agricultural journal in our province, dated May 12, and I found an article appearing there—I do not know how many pages it covers—by Mr. Marshall, with reference to the landing of the first Canadian cattle since the embargo was raised.

The CHAIRMAN: I would like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that it has been stated—and he himself has just stated—that Mr. Marshall is not engaged in dairying; his salary does not come under this item, and the discussion is not relevant to this item, No. 42.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not wish to be persistent, but I thought from the statement of the minister that a general discussion was to be allowed with regard to this matter. However, if the chairman rules to the contrary, and if we are going to have an opportunity under civil government to discuss this item, I do not wish to persist, but I do desire to point out that when these matters regarding dairy produce were being discussed a year ago, and when they were being discussed upwards of three months ago, this question was brought up, and we fully expected to have an opportunity of discussing these matters on the Main Estimates. We are now given to understand that it is desired to have the Main Estimates go through. I was informed on a former occasion that these things did not come under the head of civil government, after being led to believe that they were under civil government. After the vote was passed, I was informed that they did not come under the head of civil government, but that they were covered in the item which had been passed, which does not appear in Hansard.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member will remember that it was stated that, while the vote for Mr. Marshall's salary came under an item that was passed, still the matter could be debated under the item of civil government, because it related to some of the members of the staff of the Agriculture department.

Mr. IRVINE: If Mr. Marshall's salary and expenses do not come under this item, would the chairman tell the committee definitely under which items they do come?

The CHAIRMAN: Well, the vote may be discussed, I understand, under the item of civil government. Mr. Marshall was a temporary official, but notwithstanding the fact that civil government relates to permanent officials, the debate may take place with regard to temporary officials.

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to know about it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It comes under item No. 50.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, passed on the 23rd February.

Mr. IRVINE: If it has been passed, do I understand we have the privilege now to discuss Duncan Marshall under this item?

The CHAIRMAN: Under civil government, comparing it with salaries of other officials, yes, but not under this item.

Mr. IRVINE: When will the item under which Duncan Marshall may be discussed come up?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In a minute.

Mr. BRETHEN: I have here a booklet, "Dairy Produce Act and Regulations Administered by the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch." On page 9, I read:

> The owner of the cheese or butter shall arrange in a suitable place and open all boxes or packages for inspection.

This has to do with the grading of cheese and butter. I would like an explanation of that regulation, in view of these conditions. In our district we have at least two cheese factories from which butter is shipped direct to Scotland; nobody sends to Montreal or any of these grading points, and it would certainly be inconvenient for the owner, or any employee connected with that factory to go to the point of grading. What shall be done under those circumstances?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will depend upon who the consignee is. Very little of this produce is sent on what we call consignment. It has to be purchased first and the consignee sends it to whatever cold storage plant is most convenient to him for the purpose of grading. He cannot grade it without exposing it. This provision, as my hon. friend knows, is just in its second month; I have been asking my staff as to how it is working, and I understand it is working quite smoothly. If my hon. friend knows of any hitch in the matter, I should be very pleased to hear about it. No doubt in the introducing of an entirely new law like this some little difficulties will arise, but we will be very pleased to iron them out. What is the particular difficulty he has in mind?

Mr. BRETHEN: I quite understand that in the working out of a new regulation like this there will be some difficulty. The cheese factories referred to are in Peterborough county and my attention was drawn to this by the owner of one of these factories. I undertsand there is an arrangement by which the season's make is sold direct to a dealer in Scotland at a price in advance of the local price.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No consignee can send cheese or butter without having it previously graded. One of the terms of the act provides that both must be graded. When I was in the cold storage plant last autumn in Montreal the graders were at work there. Obviously each parcel has to be exposed before the graders can get at it, with their stick or auger, and it is closed up after the grading is done.

Mr. BRETHEN: In view of the section which says that the owner or some person appointed by him shall open the boxes, how would you regulate such a condition as I have referred to?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You will have some person there representing you. Suppose you want to send a consignment to Montreal, you must send it to some person who can perform the service for you. This paragraph says that the owner of the cheese or butter shall arrange in a suitable place, and so on. It may be in Montreal, Belleville, London or some other place. It is the privilege of the party owning the cheese to have it examined wherever he likes. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) seemed to be under the impression that we stipulated where the parcels of dairy produce would be examined. That is a matter for the owners of the produce to determine, they notify the government, and wherever the produce is sent we do the grading. If it happens to be in Montreal, we have a staff at Montreal to attend to it, because there is a great deal of produce going there. In other places the graders move about wherever cheese or butter is being sent. We have had that system in vogue in Saskatchewan for many years. Wherever there is a cold storage the produce can be graded. It is necessary to have a cold storage, because you cannot keep butter or cheese to-day without a cold storage plant. We had no difficulty under our system; we were notified by the owners of the butter in the West when they wanted it graded, and we would send a man to do the grading wherever the produce was located, Saskatoon, Battleford, Prince Albert, or Melfort—wherever it was desired. It is the same here. If you cannot go yourself, there is a man who will handle these matters with regard to inspection and then close them up.

Mr. TOLMIE: I would like to know if the minister has in mind any new dairy policy that he intends to bring down at an early date, with a view to improving dairy conditions, increasing our output and getting a better share of the British market in the near future. In 1880, we exported about nineteen million pounds of butter. During the same year the little country of Denmark with three million people exported about twenty-seven million pounds of butter. In 1921, our export had shrunk to nine million pounds and the Danish output had increased to a hundred and ninety-nine million pounds. As all hon. members know, we produce all our grain and concentrates within our own country. Our conditions for producing this grain are, perhaps, second to none, while the Danes import a great deal of concentrates from other countries, particularly from the United States and Canada. Apparently there must be something wrong with the dairy industry in this country with a population of nine million people and millions of acres of land as compared with the very small country of Denmark with a population of only three million. Perhaps some of our oleo friends will say that this is due to our having oleo manufactured in this country since 1918. As a matter of fact, the Danes introduced oleomargarine factories in 1882, and they have been manufacturing oleomargarine in that country ever since that time, with the result that during the past year they ate forty-eight pounds of oleomargaine per capita of their population, while we were carefully protected against oleomargarine prior to 1918. Therefore, that cannot be the cause of the backwardness of the dairy industry in Canada. Is it due to the quality of the product? The Danish cow produces 160 pounds of butter fat per annum as compared with about 125 pounds produced by the Canadian cow. I understand that our products are not received with as great favour as the Danish products in the British market on account of lack of flavour, keeping quality and colour. Is that due to poor grading on this side or to better grading in Denmark? These all appear to be questions that should receive the careful attention of the government at an early date, because this is one branch of agriculture that should be developed to its greatest possibilities. We, I understand, are supplying only a very small proportion of the butter consumed in Great Britain and imported from outside points. Has the minister any new policy in view to meet this situation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Only the importance of the work and the interest that my hon. friend has taken in it, both combined, tempt me to go over some of the same ground that I have gone over now two or three times; but as I said before, possibly it will bear repeating. I have discussed already at some length, at the request of various hon. gentlemen as they have arrived in the committee, certain phases of this subject, but there are a number of matters to which my hon. friend has referred that have not yet been taken up. So I am sure he will excuse me if I confine my remarks to those new problems to which he so properly refers.

One of the works we intend to take up is the establishment of a research laboratory. I do not think I have referred to that before during this session. Some hon. members will remember the excess acidity and bacteria that were found in some of our cheese in the British market. This created quite a stir there, and the cheese was traced back to the factory in which it was made. We were not, however, able to locate the bacteria. That teaches us that we have a great deal to learn about acidity and bacteria in cheese. In that cheese there was evidently some bacteria that was noxious to public health because it caused sickness, and a few incidents like that might seriously affect the standing of our cheese. Fortunately this did not occur because there was only one incident of this kind. We have $20,000 set down for the establishment of that laboratory. Nobody in this House knows better than the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) the importance of research work, either along the lines of veterinary practice, or, as I intimated, in connection with this creamery work.

In order that we may be able to report quickly back to the Department of Agriculture the condition particularly of our dairy products as they arrive in Great Britain, it is proposed, if my colleagues and also the Civil Service Commission are agreeable, to appoint a representative in Great Britain for the purpose of looking after the condition of our dairy products on their arrival there, to see that they get proper recognition and proper advertising, and to report back any defects so that we may remedy them at the earliest possible moment. During the war a certain amount of carelessness was discoverable, not only in Canada but in all other countries, with respect to the condition of farm produce. Because of the urgent demand, everything in the form of fats went. A hog was a hog. To some extent the same conditions applied to butter. During those years the quality of our labour deteriorated, and this had its effect on the quality of our produce. Now we have to pull up. New Zealand and Australia are making remarkable strides towards improvement. The size of their factories, their large turnover, their large herds, render them capable of getting good managers and paying them good salaries, thus enabling them to produce a high class quality. They are able to make this business more or less of a specialty, just as we in this country make a specialty of growing wheat, although that is no reason why we should not diversify our interests. They make a specialty of dairy products; they put their whole thought into the business; they are prepared to submit to almost any kind of governmental supervision or restriction in order that they may get the best results possible. Because of that they have surpassed us in quality, and as regards dairy produce we have encountered competition that we have never before experienced in the history of Canada. We must do our utmost in order to meet that competition. We must develop that Finch factory with which my hon. friend is familiar, enlarge it and make accommodation in it for pasteurizing milk, for that is one of the reasons why they are able to make such high class cheese in Australia and New Zealand. We are extending that factory for that purpose, and at the end of another year we shall be able to know just what will be the value of a larger factory to the dairy industry of Canada as it has proved so advantageous to the dairy industries in our sister dominions.

Another matter is the importance of testing out our cows, the development of the testing system, weeding out the scrubs—that is what this means—weeding out what we familiarly call the boarders. The average man with a bunch, say, of ten or twelve cows, if half of them are poor, will find that it takes the good ones to carry the poor ones, and at the end of the year he will be about where he began. It is only by the use of the scales that you really can realize the difference between a good testing cow and a poor one. That work will be carried on with greater activity than ever, because the very first requisite to successful dairying is to get the proper kind of cows. If you do not do that, all your subsequent activities are of little avail.

I think I have covered most of the questions which my hon. friend raised. There is one more matter to which I might refer, and which I am sure the committee will be interested in. The butter we are making now in eastern Canada is largely produced for home consumption; it is salted to suit home consumption, and that does not suit the taste of the British market. Out in the West we have started a system of grading and manufacturing largely with the object of suiting the British Columbia taste. The British Columbia taste is very much the British taste, and so the farmers and dairymen in the West have been trained to produce a butter that will also meet the requirements of the British market. The three prairie provinces have taken the initial step in the exporting of products direct to the United Kingdom. The butter is graded out there, and an arrangement has been made between the Dominion and the provincial graders whereby the provincial grading is accepted. I believe it is a good grading, because it was established on the same basis as the Dominion grading; and the creameries being larger units with a more uniform turnout, they found last year that the shipments from the West brought five shillings per long hundred more than any eastern butter. By making large export shipments from the West, where we have adopted that grading system, we can relieve the pressure on eastern butter, a great deal of which was shipped formerly, and can send the butter from the West direct to the British market. In this way we can hold our home market for eastern butter and thus maintain our reputation at a high standard. I do not know that it is anybody's fault that butter has fallen away in eastern Canada. The fact is attributable, I believe, partly to war conditions and partly to the circumstance that the quality demanded for home consumption is different from that of the British market.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is it not a fact that the British market demands butter that contains less salt than butter intended for Canadian consumption?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Surely; and the bulk of the New Zealand butter is shipped without any salt at all, or at least with very little.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is not that the main reason why eastern Canadian butter is not in demand in the British market?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is partly the reason.

Mr. CALDWELL: It is not because of the poor quality of eastern Canadian butter, but because it contains too much salt for the British taste.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is due in part also to a dividing of interests between butter and cheese; my hon. friend (Mr. Caldwell), I think, knows what the reason is. It is due to the fact that a lot of cream is over ripe or over fermented, whichever you like, before it gets to many of the central creameries in Ontario, and that tends to injure the whole reputation of the country. We have a cool climate in the West, and while sometimes coolers are not an advantage in midwinter, nevertheless our cool nights are a decided advantage to dairying in that part of the country. Besides that, there is the fact that we have nothing to unlearn. Not long ago we were starting at the bottom of the ladder in dairying and, without anything to unlearn, we adopted proper grading methods at the very outset. It is far easier to start right than to get right after you have been forty years wrong; and that is the condition of affairs in the West. I say that, of course, absolutely without any disparagement of eastern Canada. The dairymen in that part of the country have been satisfying the requirements they have had to meet, and that is all that any dairyman can be expected to do. The export was small while the home demand was large, and there is no kick from the consumers in eastern Canada. But there is an old saying, that what is one man's meat is another man's poison, and butter that suits the taste of eastern Canada is not suitable to the British market.

Mr. CALDWELL: Now you are on safer ground.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Possibly; but we were trained in the West to fill the market of British Columbia in competition with New Zealand, and the taste of British Columbia in this matter is that of the British market. The result is that the British Columbia market is now very largely filled by local supplies, except at certain times of the year. Our aim is to ship co-operatively direct right through to the British market with a view to getting the highest possible return for our produce; and, at least for the time being, until the dairymen can get more assistance, for the further purpose of stemming the downward tendency of our butter in comparison with other countries.

Mr. TOLMIE: What proportion of our export butter is pasteurized?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Nearly all the prairie butter is pasteurized, and that makes a great difference in its keeping qualities. We began out there without any pasteurization. I went up to the manager of the Co-operative Creameries of British Columbia shortly after our activities began, and visited the wholesale dealers in Vancouver, to find out what kind of butter they had. I wanted to know whether the taste of the people was in any way finical, or whether it was just like that of ordinary people. But whatever it was, the idea was to produce an article that would satisfy it. There is no use undertaking to educate people to a different taste; if you can meet their demand that is the wisest thing to do. I discovered that what they wanted was a mildly salted butter, and that is what they have been supplied with. Our produce dealers have all been strongly advised to establish pasteurizing plants in connection with every creamery in the province, and that policy has been put into force. I do not know whether it has been completed yet or not, but in every factory of any size I believe that such a plant has been established, because it is absolutely necessary to preserve the keeping properties of butter. Furthermore, it is necessary in the manufacture of cheese.

9 p.m.

Mr. TOLMIE: Has the cheapness of salt, as compared with the price of butter, anything to do with the super-salting of our butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just a trifle.

Mr. CALDWELL: I rather object to that, because I do not think that the fact that our butter is not in larger demand in the British market is due so much to the poor quality as to the fact that we put a good deal of salt into it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The salt does not cost nearly as much as butter and it does not do any harm to salt it, with weight in view. But under our new act I do not think that anyone will be able to put more than 4 per cent of salt into his butter, so that there will be a limitation in that direction anyhow. On that point, however, I think there is a great difference in the kind of salt that is used. It is very important that the best salt be put into butter, and we have found that the Australians have undoubtedly discovered the right kind of salt that is necessary. That, however, is a commercial question which I think it would be well for us to refrain from discussing.

Mr. MILLAR: In a discussion that occurred some time ago we heard a good deal about hogs contracting cholera from feeding on whey. I want to ask the minister this question: If whey will give disease to hogs, does it follow that the cheese or the butter manufactured from the same milk would be affected?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is an open question. So far as tuberculosis is concerned, it might, but I do not know about cholera.

Mr. MILLAR: I have in mind any disease at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The whey in factories has been pasteurized right along to kill all germs in it so that there might be eliminated any risk of contagion to the animals that fed on it. That is one of the arguments why you might as well pasteurize milk in the first instance as to pasteurize the whey afterwards.

Mr. MILLAR: The minister does not catch the point. If the whey is affected, does it follow that the cheese or butter manufactured from the milk itself is likely to be affected too?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member means, I suppose, if it is unpasteurized?

Mr. MILLAR: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, well, as regards unpasteurized milk, I do not care whether it is from an accredited herd or not, there is always a certain amount of danger to be feared, because you cannot keep continually testing it, and there is a time in the interval between tests when tuberculosis will manifest itself. When the milk is tested, of course, the risk is reduced to the minimum. We sometimes hear of certified milk being advertised. I do not think there is any such thing unless accreditation is supplemented by pasteurization. If you have unpasteurized milk in the case of cheese, or unpasteurized cream in the case of butter, there is danger of the tuberculosis being passed on to the butter. As a matter of fact it is bacterial action in the butter after it is made that conduces to its non-keeping properties. There is no question that there is a certain element of danger of communication of the tuberculosis; the only absolutely safe way, in the case of either milk or cream, is to keep the herds as clean as possible by testing, and to supplement that by pasteurization. The very best authorities in the world hold that view.

Mr. TOLMIE: There is no question about the possibility of butter from tubercular cows, particularly cows with infected udders, being infected with tuberculosis. It seems to be an entirely wrong policy to pasteurize the whey or the buttermilk and feed it to the hogs, and not to employ pasteurization in the case of the butter consumed by the people. That is one important feature of the dairying industry that might be carefully looked into with a view to making progress along these lines. The result would be not only to improve the keeping qualities of our dairy products, but also to protect human beings from the ravages of tuberculosis. It has been shown in our packing houses that in recent years the percentage of hogs infected with tuberculosis has increased from about 10 to 22 per cent in a very short time. It is a fact also that hogs affected with tuberculosis have come to the packing houses in largest numbers from those districts where dairying is carried on and where they are raised on the dairy by-products showing clearly that tuberculosis is transmitted by these products without any difficulty whatever. By carrying on pasteurization we are taking a decided step toward the eradication of tuberculosis, particularly in the hogs of this country.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister made a remark with regard to certified milk. What guarantee does certified milk carry?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It certifies that the cows from which the milk is drawn are free from tuberculosis.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood the minister to say that that was worth nothing if the milk was not pasteurized.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; I said there was no absolute certainty about it, for this reason: The period between tests is usually about six months. We will say there is a herd of five cows; they are all tested and there is no reaction. Six months elapse, and upon testing there is found to be one reactor. From the day in that six months' period when that animal became a reactor, up to the time of the second test, milk has been taken from a tubercular cow. There is not very much chance during that period of clinical symptoms developing, and there is not much chance of infection, but there is some; therefore, I do not think we are safe in looking upon any raw milk as absolutely sure; the only way to make sure is to pasteurize it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister assure us that pasteurization is a guarantee against tuberculosis?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, if it is properly done. Pasteurization, like anything else, can be improperly done.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister mean that it is a 100 per cent guarantee? If so, at what temperature is the pasteurization carried on?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At an average, in this country, of about 150 degrees Fahrenheit. That is looked upon as the correct temperature, provided you maintain it long enough; if it is just flashed on carelessly and then flashed off, there will not be time to permit permeation of the whole of the product. The temperature should be maintained for at least twenty minutes; half an hour is safer. Our representatives who were recently in New Zealand brought back the information that in that country they pasteurize at a much higher temperature than we use—165 degrees or more. If they are right, then we can make assurance doubly sure by getting up to the maximum temperature that can be attained without destroying the food properties of the article. I understand that a temperature of even as high as 200 degrees can be employed.

Mr. TOLMIE: What is the highest temperature that can be applied without seriously flavouring the product?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that is one of the things in connection with which our research men will bring out some further information. But the fact is that in New Zealand they run from 30 to 40 degrees higher than we do, and turn out a much better product. The fact that New Zealand and Australia stand first in the world in the matter of butter is an indication that the flavour of the product is not injured by the high temperature employed in pasteurization.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is it the opinion of the minister's experts that the New Zealand butter for export is of better quality, and better flavour, than good Canadian butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, they are quite satisfied that New Zealand has the "edge" on Canada so far as the quality of butter is concerned.

Mr. TOLMIE: Out in British Columbia we do not admit that. We think the fresh Canadian product, made in our creamery where the cream is carefully graded, is much better in flavour than the New Zealand butter, —and we are constantly in competition with the New Zealand product on the coast.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course, tastes can be cultivated. The British market prefers butter made of sweet cream, and not too highly salted; that is their conception of what is good butter. Now, in New Zealand they pasture their cattle outside the whole year round, and everyone knows that it is easier to make good butter out of stabling season than during stabling season, so that they have an advantage in that respect. After all, it is uniformity the year round that is required, and a constant supply on the market. The question has been asked out in the prairies: "If we all go into dairying, if we all go into butter making, is it going to be the old story that as soon as we have something to sell the prices drop?" I assure the committee that not only do you require a good article on the British market in competition with the world, but you require to have that article on the market the year round. The customer does not want to go to a retailer to-day, ask for Canadian butter and get it, and then find the next day that he cannot be supplied. The people want to know what they are getting and they want to be able to get it when they want it. If we have butter on that market part of the year and none the rest of the year, we shall never get a proper grip on the market. Last year we supplied 2½ per cent of the butter imports of the British people; we send them two and half pounds out of every hundred that they import. Under these circumstances the more butter we make in the lifetime of this generation the better position we will occupy on the British market because of the continuity of supply that we shall keep there.

Mr. BRETHEN: With reference to a statement of the minister a few moments ago regarding the gratifying of the British palate in the matter of butter, I heard a statement with regard to Canadian pork by a noted authority who had just returned from Britain. He said that the reason for the preference for Irish and Danish bacon was also largely a matter of salting. I would like the minister to investigate that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is correct. They are so close to Britain that they can send their products over with very mild salting, and very often with no salting at all. In addition, they do not use saltpetre.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In regard to what the minister has said with regard to the tuberculin test, I should like to ask him what good he thinks this large amount of money that is being spent on the test at the present time is doing to the agricultural portion of this country and to the people at large.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it is doing incalculable good. If there was no check on the disease it would get worse and worse all the time. It is not in the incipient stages that there is very much danger, but only when it reaches the stage when there is a reaction to the test that there is risk to the human family from the milk. Take Great Britain herself, I think her cattle run about forty per cent tubercular. Their proportion is very much higher than ours at all events. Any country that neglects the testing will certainly soon find her animals pretty well honey-combed with tuberculosis, especially where there is so much stabling to be done as in Canada. It is a stable disease just as tuberculosis in the human family is a house disease. While I do not think the last word has been said with respect to the best test obtainable, for I think science will yet discover something better than the tuberculin test, it is the best thing in sight at the present time, and until we get a better I think we should continue using it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I quite agree with the minister that there is an object to be gained, but this hit-and-miss game we are playing at the present time is to my mind of very little use to the country at large. There is no endeavour to make it complete in any one part of the country, and there is consequently no advantage to the man who submits his herds to the tuberculin test, because his milk is mixed with the milk of other men who have not had the test made, and in that way the public has no guarantee that the milk is free from disease. There are only a few people in this country who have been able to get the benefit of these tuberculin tests, and I can see but little good to be derived from the amount of money spent on the test so long as it is not made general. I quite agree that if it was made general we could gain something, but as it is now we are not gaining anything. You might just as well not make the test as let the milk from cows that have been tested be mixed with that of cows that have not been tested, because there is no guarantee at all as to the purity of the milk. There is no protection against tuberculosis in such a system, and the campaign at present being carried on is to my mind of little use to this country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think we are a little beside the mark. Possibly my hon. friend was not in when we were dealing with the vote under the Health of Animals branch. I draw his attention to it in order that we may get some information along the lines he has suggested. We have applied the tuberculin test in three municipalities in Manitoba. We have tested every bovine animal in those three municipalities, and have found that they run about five per cent tubercular. The idea is to get some information as to what it is going to cost. It is going to mean a big cost and when the public is prepared for a campaign of that nature, by undertaking this work we shall have the information as to what it is going to cost. I have pointed out that possibly we shall be able to get public sentiment sufficiently active that the federal and provincial authorities and possibly the larger municipalities will join hands in a campaign such as my hon. friend suggests, but it is going to cost something, and it is well to know the cost before we start out

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I was in when that discussion was on. I should like to know how soon a campaign of that nature will be conducted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know. It will depend on public sentiment.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It should be more than public sentiment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I appreciate the difficulty in proceeding with the testing of all the herds in the country at one time. As the minister states, it would be a very expensive work. It seems remarkable that there should be an effort made to eradicate disease from the pure-bred herds while the dairy herds that are supplying milk for human consumption are not receiving the same attention. In the two or three municipalities referred to in the province of Manitoba you may be able to show what can be done by taking a whole section and subjecting it to this test, but there are undoubtedly great difficulties to be met with by reason of the fact that people are constantly buying and selling and there is a mixture of the healthy animals with those that are not free from the disease.

To my mind one of the greatest dangers that we have to-day is the great increase in tuberculosis in the swine of this country. It is really startling to those who are engaged in the business to realize the prevalence of tuberculosis among swine, and I believe it is very largely the result of their consuming dairy products. If anything can be done by pasteurization of the products to remove this menace I think it should be done.

With regard to New Zealand the minister has stated that the high quality of New Zealand butter is so apparent that it is noticeable to every one. I notice that dairy cattle in New Zealand run out the year round or are practically grazing the year round, and consequently I do not suppose they would be subject to anything like the same degree of tuberculosis as Canadian cattle, which are stabled for six and often eight months in the year, and very often in unsanitary stables which must be conducive to breeding this disease. While you may eradicate the disease from a herd, in order to keep the herd free from disease, it is absolutely essential that sanitary conditions should prevail in the stables, otherwise the disease will break out again and conditions will be nearly as bad as before. It is such a big problem under present conditions that I realize how difficult it is for the minister to proceed with the work as rapidly as he would like, but I think that the herds which are supplying milk for human consumption should receive a little more attention than they are receiving at the present time.

Mr. TOLMIE: With regard to this question of tuberculosis I believe it is generally accepted throughout the world wherever testing of cattle has been carried on, that to adopt a general test of all the herds in a country at one time would be too great a proposition financially and in other ways to be practicable. Therefore, when the accredited herd system was introduced in the United States and then in this country, the idea was first to get tubercular-free herds which would perhaps lead later on to tubercular-free centres, and in that way educate the people of this country to the value of cleaning up our herds from this disease. They have tried the cleaning up of whole states south of the line, first in the state of Massachusetts, then in Illinois, and then in New York but even there they found it not practicable, the expense was too great, and the work was given up. The state of Minnesota, after making an estimate of what it would cost to start and clean up the herds of that state, found it would involve an expenditure of $13,000,000 to make a reasonable start, and I do not think they went very much further with the project.

As to cattle running out in the open air, I do not think that is any guarantee of freedom from tuberculosis, because it has been clearly proven that tuberculosis exists not only in those herds that are housed up, but also in our range cattle. The disease has been discovered among cattle which have never up to the present been under cover and it can easily extend, particularly among range cattle which are fed continually on the same ground and in that way get infection through the digestive tract.

I think the accredited herd system is a very valuable method for beginning this cleaning up of tuberculosis throughout the country, but it would not be a wise policy to rush headlong into any very expensive scheme. You cannot hope to succeed without first thoroughly educating people along the required lines, and inspiring them with confidence in the test and in the value of eliminating this disease from our herds. In connection with that, I would like to refer for one moment to the research work. As I pointed out a few days ago, we might have a tubercular animal that would re-act to the test but would be perfectly safe for years and would not be a centre of contagion; whereas probably another animal that would re-act to the test in the same way would spread contagion freely on all sides. We know enough as to research work to enable us to tell the difference between the animal that is slightly affected and will probably recover under favourable conditions, and the other animal, the spreader of disease, so that the latter can be put out of the way and no further risk encountered from that source. I would like to take this opportunity of impressing upon the minister the importance of carrying on research work in this connection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Could the minister inform the House as to the percentage of those animals which do not show disease after having been condemned for slaughter. There must be a record kept of the animals that are free from the disease, and it would be interesting to show the accuracy of the test. There is a suspicion in the minds of a great many people that the test is not a very reliable one. If it were generally understood that the test was—I will not say infallible, but as nearly so as possible, it would remove a suspicion in the minds of many people.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Reports indicate that the amount of infection runs from the undiscoverable lesion up to the state where the inside of the animal is covered with tubercules the size of a pea. There may also be tubercules in the liver. They are found largely in the viscera. Under healthy conditions the tubercule becomes encysted; it is surrounded with a fleshy growth. It is sealed in there, and nature, under the most healthy conditions, takes care of it. That tubercule will be sufficient to make the animal re-act although it may be in perfect looking health. I do not want to dilate too much on the system but it is the best we have got yet. I think the percentage where the disease is not at all apparent to the naked eye is somewhere between 6 and 8 per cent—I think about 8 per cent. It may be there to an extent sufficient to cause a reaction and yet not sufficient to form into actual pustules or little tubercules.

Mr. BRETHEN: Could the minister tell us how many herds were under the accredited herd system three years ago and how many now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are about 700 herds all over Canada now. I read out the number for each province.

Mr. BRETHEN: Is that fully accredited?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Those are the fully accerdited herds, and then there are about 500 in the various stages.

Mr. BRETHEN: Could you tell us how many there were two or three years ago?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: None three years ago.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—Agriculture—salaries, $717,925; contingencies, $135,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have taken occasion to look into the question of the power of the government to make the appointment of Mr. Duncan Marshall since I was informed to-night by the minister as to the methods they devised to do it in order to get around the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Now I commence with this assertion: The government's appointment of Mr. Duncan Marshall is plainly, obviously and brazenly illegal. They had no power to appoint him whatsoever. I have before me the order in council under which the appointment to-day exists. It was passed on the 7th of February, 1922, not long after the government came into office, just long enough, I presume for the importunities of Mr. Marshall to have reached their full height. The minister recites in his recommendation to council that parliament has set aside $1,100,000 for the purposes of the Agricultural Instruction Act. Then he proceeds to indicate the plan by which that sum can be invaded and turned over, in part, to Mr. Duncan Marshall. Let me quote the language of the order in council:

> The minister states that in view of the extraordinary and exceptional conditions in the agricultural world—

I presume that instability in Europe that required the Minister of Finance's statement as to the vital necessity of stability in our tariff to hold it steady—

> —it is highly desirable that an investigation be made into the advisability of the continuation, discontinuation, or emendation of the provisions of this act; the amounts to be paid, and the methods of calculating such amounts in the event of its extension; and the scope of the work of the provinces to be undertaken with the assistance of funds provided thereunder.
>
> It is considered advisable that a commissioner be appointed under section 38c of the Civil Service Act as amended by chapter 22 of the statutes of 1921, to conduct the investigation indicated above, and to inquire into such other agricultural problems as may be desirable and necessary.
>
> The minister therefore recommends that Mr. Duncan Marshall, of Olds, Alberta, be appointed as a commissioner for the above purpose and to perform such other duties of a cognate nature as may be delegated to him.
> The minister further recommends that Mr. Marshall be paid a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum, said salary to be paid from the appropriation provided for the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act, and that this appointment date from January 15, 1922.

His appointment was to date a little more than five weeks before he was appointed. He had evidently set to work—if you call it work—five weeks before the government hit upon this scheme. I cannot congratulate the government upon either the ingenuity or the plausibility of the scheme they adopted to turn some of the public funds to Mr. Marshall. Here are funds that parliament voted for the carrying out of the Agricultural Instruction Act. After parliament votes that money for that purpose, and that alone, the government comes along and turns $6,000 a year, as well as expenses, away from the object for which parliament voted the money, and says that it is doing it under the authority of section 38 (c) of the Civil Service Act. That section of the Civil Service Act gives no authority to anybody to do anything—none whatsoever—and does not pretend to. This government had not one atom, not one line, not one letter, not one figment more authority after section 38 (c) was passed than it had before. What did that section say? It reads:

Nothing in this act—

That is the Civil Service Act.

—shall affect—

What?

—shall affect the powers of the Governor in Council with respect to the appointment of any commissioner or other member of any royal or other commission or board, or any deputy head.

Nothing shall affect the powers that now exist to appoint a member of a royal commission. If there had been an act before to enable the government to appoint Duncan Marshall under the Agricultural Instruction vote, to be paid any way in the world, those powers were not affected by this act, they were neither added to nor subtracted from, but the power never existed before—never did exist. The government had power under the Inquiries Act to appoint somebody for a specific inquiry within the terms of that act, and this section says that wherever the government has had the power before, this act does not take it from them and give it to the Civil Service Commission. Under this section the government has no added power whatever. It does not purport to give it any added power. The thing is so simple that I really cannot understand the government exercising—I do not know how to describe it—venturing to use this section, or pretending to use this section, to appoint one of their favourites to office. Whatever powers the government had before in respect of the appointment of a royal commission or any member of it were not affected by the Civil Service Act amendment of 1921, but if the government did not have the power before it did not get it under this section. Let me put it in another way. If there was doubt in the mind of anyone that the provisions of the Civil Service Act, as they existed, put into the hands of the Civil Service Commission powers that formerly were the government's powers, to appoint a commissioner under the Inquiries Act, or any other act, this section made it clear that there was no change. The government still has the power and not the Civil Service Commission. But nobody could suggest, to say nothing about arguing, that any appointment could be made under that section. It cannot be made. The government must make its appointment under some other act, and, if at the time that section was passed it had power, under another act, it could use that power and appoint a man. But it did not do that, and why? If it had it under the Inquiries Act, it had it for the purposes of the Inquiries Act, and subject to the restrictions therein embodied. I do not know of any other act under which it could have done it. It could have made an appointment under the Inquiries Act of a royal commission, but it could not do it under this act. I venture to say that, Dnucan Marshall's appointment being based on the provisions of this order in council, he is being paid illegally every dollar he receives, and I say that no matter what the Auditor General has done and without the slightest doubt in my mind. I hope I have made myself clear. If there was power in the government under any act to appoint a commissioner at the time this section was passed, that power the government still has, and the Civil Service Commission did not get that power, but it had to appoint him under the act that existed, and, of course, subject to the provisions of that act. If it had appointed him under the act that existed, he would not be there now. But these hon. gentlemen want to get round that and to make him a salaried officer, so that they affect to do it under the act which gave them no power whatever. That is the extent to which the government has gone to reward a political favourite. I would like the minister, or anybody, to bring down the submission of this order in council, if it ever was submitted, to the Justice department and the ruling of the Justice department upon it. I frequently asked for those things and never got one yet. I venture to say the hon. gentlemen cannot get a ruling from the Justice department that there is any power whatever in the government, under the Civil Service Act of 1921, to appoint any commissioner at all.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am glad that we have got to this—I shall not say fight—but to this question. I am not versed in the law, Mr. Chairman, but I assume that when a party is taken into the employ of the government, and paid regularly, it must be in accordance with some law. I know that the Auditor General is there for a purpose. He is not a figure head; I do not know anybody who could put very much past him, and I certainly am not trying to put anything past him, and there has never been a question of doubt as to the legality of Mr. Marshall's appointment. When the advisability of his appointment was first taken up, I did not know what the custom was. This Civil Service Commission was new to me. I was familiar with one commission in the West, and, I might say I believe in the Civil Service Commission. I believe it is necessary to have one, but I knew something of this from hearsay and from reading in the papers, and after I had made inquiries from my deputy and others as to the propriety of calling upon the Civil Service Commission I did so in connection with this, the first appointment I was interested in. I had an interview with them in their board room and I told them something of the situation. I do not know whether hon. members are familiar with all the intricacies of getting an appointment of this nature made. We first have to establish the position and then send to the Civil Service Commission for its classification. After they arrive at that stage, they send it back, with the signatures of two members of the commission on it, to the minister who is interested, and it is intimated that if the minister agrees with it, he can sign it. That again goes to the government, and after the government put their O.K. on it, it goes back to the department and then to the Civil Service Commission again in order that they may advertise the position. We discussed every phase of this appointment, and everything was agreed upon with the Civil Service Commission, I may say to my right hon. friend. Even the salary was agreed upon, the amount of salary that such a position was worth and that was necessary to secure an appointee who would be capable of carrying on the work satisfactorily. The question of salary had to be decided upon in connection with the classification, before advertising could be done. At that time I was not familiar with how long the advertising would take. It was arranged with the commission, first that such an appointment was necessary, second that the classification should be worth $6,000 per annum, and that was arranged satisfactorily with the commission. Then I found out that it was going to take an interminable time to get the appointment put through, and also that the advertising would take from two to three, and sometimes four weeks to complete. After the advertising there is the usual rating and examination, and I wanted the appointment filled then, not at some indefinite date in the future. I had been told by my deputy that he had experienced delays. He has not very much complaint to make against the Civil Service Commission; the only complaint he makes is in connection with the time it takes to make these appointments, and time means everything, especially in connection with farming operations. What farmer would be anxious to buy a seed drill in the middle of harvest or the fall when he wanted it in the spring? That was exactly the position I was in. I did not want this appointment filled after I was dead; I wanted it filled then. I did not want the appointee to go out cutting wood next winter.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister does not mean that he wanted the position filled after Mr. Duncan Marshall was dead.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let my right hon. friend sit down. I may say further that I do not lay any particular blame at the door of the Civil Service Commission. My judgment was borne out in my subsequent experience as to the length of time required, and again I am blaming, not the commission, but the act that determines the actions of the commission and of the rest of us. As the committee is aware, the regulations with respect to hog grading came into force last October. It took ten solid months from the initial step until we got those ten hog graders appointed. The hogs could have been killed, eaten and gone out of sight altogether in those ten months and a new bunch of hogs could have appeared on the scene, been fattened and made ready for the knife while you were getting your graders appointed. I had made an arrangement with Mr. Arkell; I had told him that I would like to see the ten new members of my family. They were assembled at Toronto, and I met them there. This was the first work of this kind ever undertaken on this continent or anywhere else that I knew of, to grade live hogs for the market, and consequently I wanted to see these new appointees. I did not know one of them from Adam; I had never seen them before; I met them in Toronto; I had an hour's talk with them, and I gave them some instructions in regard to their duties. As I say, it took just ten months from the beginning of the operation to get them appointed, and the hogs they graded were not born at the time I started operations. That is what we have to go through in connection with getting appointments made. I do not want to exaggerate this, or I could tell the committee very much worse instances than that, even in my short experience. It is no wonder that anyone who wants to administer a department properly chafes under such conditions. Let me say again that the blame lies, not with the commission, but with the act by which they have to be governed, and these are some of the results. Having regard to that, having regard to the further fact that the necessity for the appointment was agreed upon by the commission and the salary was agreed upon, I say that the only thing left was the time it would take to get the appointment put through. Is there anybody in the country who will say that Mr. Duncan Marshall is not a proper and qualified man for the position? If he cannot, there is no point to all this discussion. If anyone has a recommendation to make on behalf of someone who will better fill the duties that have devolved upon Mr. Marshall, I shall be delighted to have his name and to give his qualifications my best consideration, because I want the very best men obtainable in the Department of Agriculture. Hon. members from Saskatchewan will, I think, admit that when I was administering the department there, I let nothing stand in the way of getting the best obtainable men in my department, and any success obtained there was obtained through that policy. My desire is to pursue the same policy here; but what is the use of making appointments for a particular purpose, if frequently you cannot get them made until the expiry of the time when you really desire them most? Right at this time we want a most important position filled immediately. This will be worth more to us in the next few weeks than if two or three months elapse before the appointment is made. We have, however, to go through the routine; the hands of the Civil Service Commission are tied, and they have to go through it too. That is one of the reasons why this appointment was not made by the Civil Service Commission. Why was it not? The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) says that it was made illegally. If it was, I must be a wonderful individual who can jam a political friend through all these devious ways and get him appointed in spite of the law. I would be some mover if I could do that. There is a proviso—my right hon. friend has read it himself—by which a commissioner can be appointed. The conditions stipulated are all justified; they are all true.

Just for fear that this might be overlooked, I may say that a few remarks have been made about the qualifications of Mr. Marshall. If there is in Canada any man better qualified for the work he is doing, I want to find him and I will look upon it as a favour if any person will send in the names of men who are better qualified, either as platform men or as live stock authorities, because we want a man of just such qualifications as those of Mr. Marshall. I have in my hand an Old Country paper, the Live Stock Journal, which discusses the embargo situation. This is not what I say about Mr. Duncan Marshall at all, because I might be prejudiced in his favour. This is a journal that has no object in being prejudiced; it is printed in the Old Country, in London, and it is recognized as one of the leading live stock authorities. Under date of May 4—and this was just at the time when there was a good deal of anxiety over there about getting the balance of the embargo off our breeding cattle—this is what it says, at a time by the way when some of the very extreme friends of Mr. Duncan Marshall were trying to make out that he was not exercising his duties properly just at that time. I am not going to read it all unless I am requested to do so, because it is a two-column article. Anyone can call for the paper, and I am not excluding anything derogatory to Mr. Marshall because there is not a line in it of that nature. The article reads in part:

> There is a distinct grievance against Canada in seeking to raise this new point of the admission of breeding cattle. It is to be feared that Dr. J. H. Grisdale, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and the Hon. Duncan Marshall, Canada's Live Stock Commissioner—

By the way, that is still a new title, which he has not received any more than Commissioner of Agriculture.

> —know their business too well for the "amateurs" whom our system of government place at the head of our various departments.

You see, they are playing politics here just as the Opposition do in this House even on a question of agriculture.

> In any case it is thought that they have managed to steal a big march—and an unfair march—on British breeders. Home industries appear to be held as of no account. Surely those who are responsible for this new move have not paused to think of what the result is to be of the dumping of vast numbers of breeding cattle in this country to which—the irony of it all!—every country has to come for stock to help to improve their own cattle.

That is one paragraph. Then the editorial quotes some remarks made by Dr. Grisdale in his report as published in the Canada Gazette:

We quote from Dr. Grisdale's report:—"Inasmuch as it was quite apparent to Mr. Marshall and myself, the advisory part of the Canadian delegation, that there was likely to be a very strong demand for grade females, particularly for milk production, the Canadian representatives were most urgent in their demand for better terms in connection with admission of stock of this kind. Finally, it was stated that the very most the Imperial government could concede was that Canadian breeding stock should be admitted, provided they had passed the tuberculin test within thirty days of embarkation, and that they should be subject to the same conditions of inspection as the stockers (stores) and spayed heifers, but that the three-day quarantine should not apply."

Then the editorial commented:

Truly, it is lamentable with what ease British agricultural interests can be sacrified, and are sacrificed, to suit others! Little wonder Dr. Grisdale states in his report that "there was evident on the part of both the Imperial representatives and the officials taking part in the conference the very greatest desire to meet the wishes of the Canadian representatives . . . I cannot speak too strongly of the evidently sincere desire on the part of the Imperial delegates and officials to meet the recommendations of the Canadians, or modify their own proposed conditions in such a way as to comply, as far as possible, with the changes suggested by the Canadian delegation."

One wonders what further modifications could have been made, or what changes could possibly have been suggested by the Canadian representatives which were not granted by the Imperial representatives, whose compliant dispositions are so warmly commended by Dr. Grisdale. The tuberculin test and a sixpenny inspection, but no quarantine either before or after shipment! Did British magnanimity ever surpass this. And to think it was all done in the interests of an industry to maintain which has necessitated special parliamentary legislation!

Now, here is the highest possible commendation of the two expert delegates that went over with two of my colleagues in connection with this matter, and the fact that those four gentlemen were able to consummate this long drawn out controversy is surely some testimony to the fitness of Mr. Duncan Marshall for this work. I am still open to receive any suggestions as to where we can get a better man.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has not even touched the subject; he got within distance of it once, but the rest of the time he was telling us what a wonderful platform speaker Mr. Duncan Marshall was.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say anything about that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister read something from some foreign paper.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Foreign?

Mr. MEIGHEN: An English paper, as I understand.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is a British journal a foreign paper?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is pretty foreign from here, yes; not foreign in interest or sentiment, although I think the Minister of Marine (Mr. Lapointe) at one time so described it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I never did; that is another mistake.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But all this is utterly foreign to the subject. I may inform the minister (Mr. Motherwell) that, aside entirely from the qualifications or disqualifications of Mr. Duncan Marshall, there is a law in this country, notwithstanding that he gets up and in his own style says, "Surely I can not break the law; I must be a great man if I can break the law." It does not take a great man to break the law; there are other law breakers besides the minister. But we expect better of governments, who are the authorities for the enforcement of law in the country. There is no Auditor General now; this government has deliberately avoided the appointment of an Auditor General for months. While I do not know the condition the Auditor General was in when this matter went through, I am aware that the Auditor General who then was living had been a very sick man for a long time. Consequently this matter has not had the supervision of the proper official that it should have had, and apparently the minister took care not to get an opinion of the Justice department upon it. Anyone reading section 38 would know that it gave no powers to anybody; it simply declared that any powers that heretofore existed to appoint a commissioner were not taken away and given to the Civil Service Commission. If the minister is right, then all that the government has to do to appoint anyone to any job at all is to call him a commissioner. He may be an accountant; he may be a hog grader; he may be a wanderer to Tampa, Florida, for immigrants; he may be anything at all. But if you call him a commissioner then the Civil Service Act is repealed and the minister can appoint him. That is precisely what he has done, but that is not the law of the country; and it is an affront to the intelligence of any person to suggest that it is. Mr. Duncan Marshall has drawn every dollar illegally that he is in possession of to-day out of that vote of $1,100,000, and to-night I call the attention of those who are taking the place of the Auditor General of this country to the cheques that are passing to Mr. Duncan Marshall, and ask that the law be followed by the government in office.

10 p.m.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I was justified in quoting from this editorial because my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) made the statement that this $6,000, had been diverted from the public treasury to be handed out to a political favourite. He makes the statement, in the first place, that the money was illegally paid; and secondly, that it was given to one whose only qualification, at least inferentially, was that he was a political favourite. I wanted to show that the gentleman was a qualified man, and what I have read is I think ample testimony to that fact. I think therefore that I was justified in reading the editorial, which is a very much better authority on these questions than my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the question I am raising.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon; I have here a note which I took of what he said. He declared that the money was given as a reward to a political favourite. But if the political favourite has the qualifications that eminently fit him for the position to which he has been appointed, is it a sufficient ground for his being disqualified because he happens to be on a certain side of politics?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Whether I am right or wrong, I understand that this man is not Commissioner of Agriculture, although he has been so styled. Now, I have here the Scottish Farmer, an agricultural journal printed in Glasgow, and this particular copy is of the issue of January 27 of the present year. Referring to a sale of pure-bred cattle which had taken place in Scotland some time previously, the article states:

> Lawton's champion Shorton bull was not exported by the man from Stranraer, but by the other Marshall —the Hon. Duncan, the man from the Northwest.

It is well known that four months after parliament prorogued Mr. Marshall and Mr. Dryden were in the Old Country attending auction sales of pure-bred shorthorn cattle; that purchases were made by Mr. Dryden, and that the animals were brought to this country. A question was asked when Mr. Marshall's appointment was under discussion in the House a year ago with regard to his action as a breeder of beef cattle. The hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) asked:

> Is not Mr. Duncan Marshall himself a large grower of beef cattle, and will he be prohibited from doing business on his own account while travelling as a representative of the government? He might have an eye for the main chance, and the minister might say whether there will be an express prohibition against his doing business in his own behalf.

The minister stated:

> I understand from the newspaper reports that Mr. Marshall has sold out his live stock and has rented his place. He is therefore completely at liberty to represent the government.

Now, he has evidently been very active in attending the auction sales of pure-bred shorthorn cattle in Scotland and elsewhere since he went over to the Old Country. I believe he has made several trips across the Atlantic since the House prorogued in June last and it is rather significant that we have not been able to deal with the matter up to the present time. In view of the statement made by the minister regarding the appointment and the difficulties experienced in connection with the Civil Service Commission, I took occasion some time ago to place some questions on the order paper as to the salary of these two commissioners, who, we were informed, were expected to go to South America to develop a live stock trade between the countries there and Canada. In answer to that question it was stated that Mr. Marshall's salary and expenses to date amounted to $8,952.08, and that Mr. Dryden had received an advance for expenses of $2,000. I would like to know from the minister when Mr. Dryden's services began and when they ended, and whether he was in the employ of the government when he and Mr. Duncan Marshall, according to Mr. Duncan Marshall's own newspaper reports were attending these sales of pure-bred shorthorn cattle in the old land. And according to the report of the Scottish Farmer, Mr. Marshall was not only attending these sales but was making purchases thereat. Is that a proper position for the Commissioner of Agriculture, representing the Department of Agriculture, to take? Was it a proper course for a man drawing a salary, appointed illegally, as my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has stated, to go into the constituency that I represent and attend a political meeting immediately after the prorogation of parliament last year? Mr. Marshall has been a prominent man in this country for a great many years. I remember when he was a candidate for election nearly twenty years ago in an Ontario constituency, on which occasion he was defeated by a very substantial majority. He went out to western Canada, and if my memory is correct he was defeated in the provincial election there in 1921. He was also, I believe, a candidate in the federal election of the same year and was again defeated by a very large majority, something in the neighbourhood of 2,500; so that the people who know Mr. Duncan Marshall very well have apparently not as high an opinion of him as the Minister of Agriculture would lead this House and the country to believe. I am not going to sit quietly by and see an official paid by the people of this country attend a political gathering when he ought to be attending to the duties for the fulfilment of which he was appointed. I think the minister has not been as careful in supervising his officials as he should have been, if this is the practice in the Department of Agriculture.

I touched upon some matters before six o'clock that I do not wish to repeat, but I want to point out, in connection with Mr. Marshall's attendance at this political meeting to which I have referred, that the press report had the following to say respecting the remarks of the president of the Liberal Association of the constituency on that occasion:

> W. C. Brown, of Tillsonburg, South Oxford, representative on the Ontario Liberal executive, occupied the chair in the absence of M. G. Dean, president of the South Oxford Reform Association, he having suffered an automobile breakdown which delayed him. Mr. Brown, in a brief and eulogistic address, introduced the speaker of the day, Hon. Duncan Marshall, who was asked by Premier King to appear at the picnic on his behalf, as he himself was unable to come.

So he came there with a pretty high recommendation. The Toronto Globe of June 29 reports the meeting and refers to the Commissioner of Agriculture as having addressed the Oxford Grits at a picnic on June 28. There is a special despatch to the Globe to this effect. Now, he is advertised as the Commissioner of Agriculture attending a gathering of that kind, as is intimated by a member of the Liberal executive for the province of Ontario, at the request of the Prime Minister of this country. We are told to-day that he is drawing money illegally in connection with the position he now occupies. Early in the session a year ago, when we were discussing his appointment, we were told that he was putting in his time at a seaside resort in Florida and that he was expected to proceed to South America. He proceeded across the Atlantic, and he has been doing the work I have indicated. He has also been continually writing articles to the press in which he refers to himself as "Hon. Duncan Marshall" well knowing that he is not entitled to that prefix. The Canadian Countryman of May 12 contains a couple of pages from the pen of "Hon. Duncan Marshall." Among other things are photographs taken of the landing of the first cattle from Canada after the embargo was removed. You remember that the press despatch we received on that occasion stated that the first boat was going to land at Glasgow but that it was delayed and landed at some other port. They had the stage all set with a red tape across the gangway and the Hon. Duncan Marshall was going to lead the first Canadian steer and have him breast the tape to show the Hon. Manning Doherty that he was the man who had broken down the embargo. But unfortunately for Mr. Marshall the steer had too much respect for himself to allow any such impression to go abroad; he breasted the tape and he dragged Hon. Duncan, who became entangled in the rope, according to the reports we received. The photograph here has the caption:

> Wm. Henderson and Hon. Duncan Marshall dressed in white market coats, beside the steer as he steps off the gang plank on to Scottish soil.

Mr. Duncan Marshall must have got on his feet in order to enable the man with the camera to take a snap, for it is quite apparent he has been through a trying experience because he is bare-headed, while Mr. Henderson is not. Surely this farce has gone far enough, when an active politician can come here, as he did, immediately following the election and make demands upon the government and get those demands granted. He receives a salary of upwards of two thousand dollars more than he could have received had he been appointed by the Civil Service Commission. That is quite a consideration. The salary to be paid to the Commissioner of Agriculture under the Civil Service Act is $4,000 a year, yet being appointed as he was Mr. Marshall draws the salary of $6,000 a year and expenses. I would ask the committee if they consider that is a proper course for the government to pursue? The fact of Mr. Marshall's receiving the handsome salary he draws to-day may have had something to do with the government's desire to evade the Civil Service Act in making the appointment, because otherwise he would not be receiving that salary. Now if there is need for economy in this country, and there is every need, if Mr. Marshall can render good and valuable service to this country I have no objection to his doing so but, I do object to him acting in the capacity in which he has been acting since his appointment. He should devote his attention to the work for which he was supposed to be appointed, and not devote his time to politics nor associate himself with the purchasing of live stock in the Old Country, which is what he did if what this newspaper report indicates is correct.

I have another paper here of a little earlier date which shows that a large number of cattle had been purchased at a sale by one of those commissioners and imported into this country. These are serious statements to have made against a man occupying any position in the civil service of this country. I hope that the minister will look into this matter and not be misled by the glaring reports which are evidently emanating from the pen of the gentleman himself, because I cannot imagine for a moment that these articles in the magazines and the press of this country are appearing without some remuneration being given for them. As to the correctness of that I have nothing whatever to say.

As to Mr. Duncan Marshall's ability I know nothing. I have never met him but I do know something of his record as a politician in this country, and I know from the fact that he was defeated in his own constituency in the provincial election in 1921, and defeated again in the same year for this parliament by somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2,500 votes, he was not held in the very highest esteem in the province of Alberta.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know whether these statements of my hon. friend deserve very much attention or not, but inasmuch as they have been made and there has been a good deal of sniping on this question all winter, possibly I had better pay a little attention to them.

Mr. Duncan Marshall when he was over there with Mr. Dryden did not purchase any cattle for himself or anybody else. I presume it is correct that he attended some sales, which would be a most natural thing for any live stock man to do. I cannot imagine the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) going over to the Old Country and not attending any popular sale of live stock that was being held. It is one of the most interesting events of the day, a sale of pure-bred cattle or of live stock of almost any kind, and it is just the thing I would expect him to attend. Is that a crime, Mr. Chairman? If it is, I guess Mr. Marshall has committed it. But it is no crime, and it is nonsense to make a complaint about it. Mr. Marshall did not buy cattle for himself or anybody else.

As to the letter to the Canadian Countryman, I saw a number of Mr. Marshall's letters, and among others one that he wrote to the Toronto Globe on the question of hog and bacon grading, and I never saw a better put letter on that question. He reported just where Canadian bacon fell short of Danish bacon, went into the question in minute detail, and I made the remark at the time having in mind one of my hon. friend's observations, that article alone was worth his entire salary for the year. I believe that still, and if he wrote an account for the British and Canadian journals of the landing of the first cargo of Canadian cattle in Great Britain after they had been debarred for thirty-one years, do you not think that was a very good way to let the people of Canada know just what happened in connection with that notable and historic event? Why, only the other day the whole Agricultural committee of this House, every one of whom had the privilege of inviting two friends, went down to the old historic city of Quebec and saw the first cargo of Canadian cattle shipped from that port via the Canadian National Railway all through. That was an historic event and one that we should commemorate. They did not write it up perhaps as picturesquely as Mr. Marshall might have done, but they gave it due publicity, and I think we should have been derelict in our duty if we had not been there.

My deputy and myself and one or two others went down to Montreal and saw the first cargo of Canadian cattle loaded there for shipment via St. John. Our presence was required there because there was a hitch as to whether they could be shipped via the Canadian Pacific, which went through United States territory part of the way, and we decided that it was not advisable to ship via the Canadian Pacific, which passes through part of Maine. We did not want any hitch over some technicality, but apart from that we were desirous of being there to celebrate that notable event. I do not know why we should make one law for ourselves and another for Mr. Duncan Marshall. We do not want him to hide his light under a bushel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No danger.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure my hon. friend has read Mr. Marshall's articles with a great deal of pleasure. Mr. Marshall, it appears, has committed the heinous offence of being defeated twice in politics. Well, Mr. Chairman, if that were a hanging matter a lot of us would be missing here, and if my hon. friend from South Oxford lives long enough it may be he will suffer a defeat himself, and then he will be a little more charitable to those of us who have experienced it not once but several times. That is what we call small potatoes and mighty few in a hill—to make a statement of that kind about a man who had the misfortune to be defeated twice in the same year. My hon. friend should rather have felt charitably and sympathetically disposed towards a once fellow public man. But they have to talk about something, Mr. Chairman, and they have not got much on this yet.

As to Mr. Marshall being down in Florida, I thought I dealt with that last winter. That was an exhibition where the Department of the Interior had an exhibit, and that exhibit was run all through the Conservative regime, and I think through the preceding Liberal regime. The leader of the Opposition was very hilarious over the exhibition in Florida to which we sent an exhibit. I do not think he knew that that same exhibit was being run there while he was Prime Minister of this country. At an exhibition of that kind where you get a large concourse of people in great big auditoriums, it is an advantage to a country to have a man with Mr. Marshall's capacity for filling a building and occupying a platform acceptably. I have been at some of these gatherings with him, and I do not know anybody who can better captivate an American audience than he can. I attended the International Dry Farming Conference at Colorado Springs and Billings with Mr. Marshall, and I can tell my hon. friends that he was the lion of the day with the guests; there is no question about that, and what is more, we have direct information that a number of immigrants came to Canada as a result of Mr. Marshall's address at that meeting in Florida. I saw in the Department of the Interior whole sheets of clippings from American papers reporting that meeting, and if we had had to pay for that advertising space in cash it would have cost us $10,000. That was the speech he made at a place where we have been holding exhibits for ten or twelve years, and yet all kinds of ridicule were heaped upon Mr. Marshall for this globe trotting as if it was the first time we ever had an exhibition in Florida. I do not think the leader of the Opposition knew anything about where our exhibitions were being held. He never dreamed of one being held in Florida or he would never have made the foolish remarks he did with respect to Mr. Marshall's speech there.

The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) says he does not know anything about Mr. Marshall's qualifications. Well, should not that be the chief consideration? Should it have been my first duty to have inquired how many times he was defeated at the elections before I opened negotiations with him, or should I have suggested, as is done in some cases "If you will apply to the Civil Service Commission you will at least have a chance of getting through?" Should I have sent in a blank form to be filled in and returned to Mr. Foran, the Secretary of the Civil Service Commission, or should I have inquired into Mr. Marshall's qualifications to fill the post? I think that his qualifications were the first consideration, and no one has yet challenged his fitness to do the work that has been allotted to him since his appointment—not one challenge has been made. Therefore I think this talk on the part of my hon. friends, while it may be quite justifiable from their standpoint, is done for the purpose of raising a little hurrah so that they may get it featured in a spectacular way in the press in the hope of making the public believe that there is something doing on their part by reason of their stand on this question. That is all this talk is for; there is no challenge as to Mr. Marshall's fitness. It seems to me that if we placed a gentleman at this work who did not know the A.B.C. about politics and was otherwise disqualified the mere fact that he was never in politics would certainly not overshadow his ineligibility. I say again, the first essential consideration is service on the part of Mr. Marshall for the money he gets. I submit that Mr. Marshall is earning his salary as fully and efficiently as any hon. member in this House or any other official in the public service.

Mr. IRVINE: The Minister of Agriculture has said that he has been unable to see any point made in this contention with regard to the appointment of Mr. Duncan Marshall. If I were in the position of Minister of Agriculture I think I should be inclined to take the same attitude. It is better not to see the point; that is convenient for the minister. The leader of the Opposition has made a charge that the appointment of Mr. Duncan Marshall to this unmentionable position—no one seems to be able to name it—was illegal, and that the salary he has been receiving ever since has been illegally given. Not only has the leader of the Opposition made that charge but, I think, he has very successfully proven his case. The only answer the Minister of Agriculture has been able to make to that point was the reading of an article from some English paper. Personally I fail to see the connection between the editorial he read and the charge made by the leader of the Opposition. It is said in this editorial, among other things, that Mr. Marshall was a live stock commissioner. The minister himself denied that. That means that the article was wrong in the first place with regard to the position and suggested, to me at least, that it may have been wrong in many other things with which it dealt. Another thing the article said was that the mission of Mr. Marshall to England was to "steal an unfair march" on the British people. I do not think that is a very high recommendation for Mr. Marshall, if it was a high recommendation that the minister sought to convey through the reading of the editorial. But I am not so much interested in the legal phase of this question, although I can see that a very important principle is involved in it. As to the capacity of Mr. Marshall to do the work, I assume that he ought to be able to do it because the job in this case was made for the man, and the government surely ought to have been able to make a job that would fit the man so that he would be able to do it well. I can quite understand how that could be done. I believe it might be possible for the minister to even create a job that I might be able to fill although he might not be disposed to agree with me on that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No chance.

Mr. IRVINE: But that is not a recommendation for Mr. Marshall. I wish now to enter a brief and emphatic protest against this appointment. I should have done this last year, but I refrained for two reasons. In the first place we were given the assurance that the appointment of Mr. Marshall was temporary, that it would not last more than six months. I, of course, took that assurance seriously; I thought it was true. A year later I find it is not. In the second place I did not protest last year because I happened to be the opponent of Mr. Marshall in the last election, and I know it is difficult for some people to disassociate any attack that I might make in regard to his appointment from political propaganda. I do not suppose that I will be able to avoid that implication by some hon. members even now. But even at the risk of that I want to make a protest against this appointment because it violates principles, and principles which the government have from time to time avowed they were the protagonists of. It has not been made clear, by the Minister of Agriculture, not even to this date, what services Mr. Marshall is giving this country for the salary of $6,000 and, I presume, many times more than $6,000 in expenses. I do not know what his expenses will amount to. I would not be surprised if, since he took his office they might run to as high as $30,000. That we do not know; we have to wait until the minister tries to find out just exactly how much Mr. Marshall has cost the country. But he was appointed at this salary and was given this office shortly after the last election. I think the minister said to-night in reply to someone, that it was "far easier to start right" than it was to get right after forty years of doing wrong. I am sorry that the minister did not himself start right in this regard, because he may have considerable trouble now in getting right. I do not know if it will take him forty years to do it. But Mr. Marshall, as you all know, was a candidate in the last election. He was on the platform with the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the chairman on that occasion when announcing Mr. Marshall referred to him as the next Minister of Agriculture. Of course in the campaign, Mr. Marshall who is an excellent propagandist, made very good use of that prophecy. I do not know whether it could be called a promise. Certainly it was a promise from the chairman's viewpoint and I suppose the chairman had some authority for making the statement. Well, Mr. Marshall, like any other man, might have been defeated in the election. I am certainly not holding that against him in any way. I presume most of us have been defeated and very likely will be defeated again.

Mr. GRAHAM: Some of the best men have been defeated.

Mr. IRVINE: That is not the point. Seemingly Mr. Marshall was very disappointed that he was not made Minister of Agriculture and so after his defeat he speedily hied himself to Ottawa, and I presume got into close contact with the present Minister of Agriculture; I would not be surprised if Mr. Marshall nearly succeeded in convincing the Minister of Agriculture that he (Mr. Marshall) would be a better Minister of Agriculture than the present one, and that if he did not get the appointment , or some similar appointment, there might be trouble. I, of course, have no means of knowing the exact conversation which took place or how things went, but of the fact of his appointment alone in this regard are we sure. He was appointed to this job, I understand, as a kind of consolation prize. The Minister of Agriculture, I think, will admit that Mr. Marshall and he are bosom friends and that they drink out of the same cup, so to speak. That is all right. There is nothing wrong with that, but I think perhaps he would not be so ready to admit to us that their relationship to which I have referred had much to do with this appointment. Mr. Marshall at that time was appointed Commissioner of Agriculture. That position was considered by the former government as being unnecessary—at least, I understand that they did not appoint any one to fill the position, and I believe abandoned the office. Although there has been a great deal of criticism of the late government—and I have no hesitation in saying that I have done my share of the criticizing—yet I think we will have to admit that there were two things at least—there may be more—for which we have to give that government credit. In the first place it took a very decided stand against patronage, and in the second place, I believe that it was fairly efficient in its administration, however wrong it may have been in its policy, from some people's point of view. That government, abolishing patronage, and trying to be efficient, said to themselves "We will not waste the public funds by appointing a man to this position". So the office was there, but they did not fill it because they considered it was unnecessary. When the present government came into power and Mr. Marshall was defeated, he happened to be a bosom friend of the Minister of Agriculture, and patronage was brought back by the appointment of Mr. Marshall to this position. It was an appointment over the head of the Civil Service Commission. The present government while in opposition criticized fearlessly and mercilessly the order in council method which it was alleged was adopted by the former government. Yet when something of this nature occurs the present government do not hesitate to utilize this valuable instrument, the order in council, as a means of gaining their end. Now, by an order in council they appointed Duncan Marshall to a position which was not necessary at a salary of $6,000 per year, and with a probable expense account of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $30,000. That went on, I understand, for some time. He held the position as Commissioner of Agriculture. Then, feeling that they could not long justify this appointment as Commissioner of Agriculture, the government merely dropped the agricultural part of it, and called him a commissioner. But as commissioner, I do not know what commission he has. I believe that one of the phases of Mr. Marshall's commissionership is to make recommendations as to redistribution. I believe that Mr. Marshall came to his old friends in Calgary, looked over the ground, set down the stakes of political gerrymandering divisions, made out his plans, and sent them to some representative of the present government. I do not know whether that is part of the commissionership or not, but if it is I have no doubt the gentleman is earning his salary, and earning it just about as well as anybody in this House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will my hon. friend supply us with some evidence that Mr. Marshall was doing anything in connection with redistribution?

Mr. IRVINE: As the hon. minister himself said to-day in answer to a question that he did not carry the order in council in his pocket, so I do not happen to carry this evidence in my pocket, but if the hon. minister will give me time to do it, I think I can produce the evidence.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No time like the present.

Mr. IRVINE: That is unfortunately true in this particular regard, but if the minister is very anxious to get the evidence and will give me ten days' time, I think I can procure at least enough evidence to justify the statement which I have just made.

The main point I want to make is that this country cannot afford to have two Ministers of Agriculture. If it takes two Liberal statesmen to make one minister then I suggest that they get one salary between them. I think that is a fair proposition. But if one of them is to be discharged I will leave it to the hon. minister himself to say which one of them should be Minister of Agriculture. They are the Siamese twins of agricultural administration, and I would move that they be operated upon and separated. I understand that with such close affiliation, death usually results from an operation. Even if this operation should cause the political death of these gentlemen, Canada might possibly get along. I have no intention, of course, of causing them political death, but I do insist on their separation, because we cannot afford to pay two cabinet ministers for the one service, and if Mr. Duncan Marshall has the ability which the present Minister of Agriculture attributes to him—and I have no doubt he has a great deal of ability—then let him be minister. If he can do it better than the present minister, by all means let us bring him here. I insist however that we cannot afford to have two Ministers of Agriculture, unless they decide to get along on the one salary. If it requires them both to make one Minister of Agriculture let them divide the salary between them, that would be the only alternative to discharging one of them.

With reference to the great qualifications of Mr. Marshall and as to what he has been doing in Britain I have no remarks to make. As I say, the job having been created for him, no doubt he will be able to perform the work. If he cannot handle that job, he will never be able to fill the position. In view then of the fact, first of all, that this appointment was illegal, as was shown by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, and secondly in view of the fact that this is a continuation of patronage which we have been struggling to get away from, and thirdly because it is not necessary and is a waste of public money, I move that this item be reduced by the amount of $5,999. I am leaving one dollar there to send over a cablegram to Mr. Marshall with one word in it—"Fired."

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is, in my opinion, a serious aspect to this question, which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) seems to misapprehend or, for his own purposes, seeks to evade. The case as presented by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is, to my mind, a serious case and one in respect to which the committee is entitled to some explanation from the government. If the Minister of Agriculture does not see fit to give the explanation or is unable to give it, then I must appeal to the law officers of the Crown or the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), sitting in this House at this time, to explain to the committee how it comes about that a man is appointed to the service of the Crown upon what appears, on an examination of the statutes, to be in direct opposition to the letter and spirit of the law, why also that man for the past sixteen or seventeen months has been drawing his salary through the ordinary channels through which salaries are paid, and I presume that the cheques representing that salary have likewise passed through the Auditor General's office. If the statement of the law and the facts are as my right hon. friend has stated them, the committee is entitled to a very clear and definite statement by the government how this matter came about. We find an order in council passed on the 7th February, 1922. The new government, the present government, took office, if I remember rightly, on the last day of the preceding year, so that about five weeks had elapsed before the order in council in question was passed. The order provides for the appointment of a commissioner in these terms:

> It is considered advisable that a commissioner be appointed under section 38C of the Civil Service Act as amended by chapter 22 of the statutes of 1921, to conduct the investigation indicated above and to inquire into such other agricultural problems as may be desirable and necessary.

Then the order enacts:

> That Mr. Duncan Marshall of Olds, Alberta, be appointed as a commissioner for the above purpose. . . and further that Mr. Marshall be paid a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum, said salary to be paid from the appropriation provided for the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act and that this appointmen date from the 15th January, 1922.

The appointment has been made under a statute definitely and clearly stated in the order. It is section 38C of the act of 1921 amending the Civil Service Act. First let me point out to the committee that under the Civil Service Act there is no power to appoint a commissioner. That is clear and definite. Is there under the amendment? This is the amendment cited, section 38C:

> Nothing in this act shall affect the powers of the Governor in Council with respect to the appointment of any commissioner or other member of any royal or other commission or board, or any deputy head.

Meaning in plain, clear language that any power which existed in the Governor in Council to appoint commissioners should be retained by the Governor in Council notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act. The language is clear and express. What power is there in the Governor in Council to appoint a commissioner? What power ever was there? There is no such power under the Civil Service Act. There was power under the Inquiries Act and it is the only power whereby a commissioner can be appointed or a royal commission can be issued. If a commissioner is appointed under that act, that act prescribes the procedure, limits the authority, directs how the investigation shall be conducted. But he is not appointed under that act at all; he is appointed expressly under section 38C of an amendment to the Civil Service Act which confers no right upon the government nor the Governor in Council to appoint a commissioner for any purpose whatever. Mark this also, Mr. Chairman. If the commissioner is appointed under the Inquiries Act, he is paid under that act and according to the terms of that act; but under the order in council in question it is said that he is appointed under section 38C which I have read, and he is to be paid, in violation of the vote of this parliament, from money appropriated for investigations in regard to agriculture. This parliament expressly voted a certain sum of money, $1,100,000, for a specific purpose. The appointment and payment of a commissioner was not one of those purposes, and there is no power under this order in council legally to pay Mr. Duncan Marshall one dollar of salary. How the matter has slipped through the Auditor General's office, I cannot imagine. How it has slipped through the Justice department, I cannot imagine. I appeal to the Minister of Justice to make this matter clear to the committee. What we say is that there has been a misapplication of the agricultural grant in this case; there has been a misappropriation of this money. There has been, under the order in council, a payment of salary that is not warranted under the laws of this country. That is the serious objection that I take, and the minister has not attempted to answer that objection. He deals with Mr. Marshall's qualifications. They may be well and good; they may be in every respect satisfactory. That is not the point which the leader of the Opposition made, nor which the opposition is trying to make. The point we are making is that his appointment is illegal, the payment of his salary is illegal, the use of that money granted for agricultural instruction in payment of Mr. Marshall's salary is a misappropriation of that fund. It is not justifiable; it is illegal, and it should not be paid. Of course, if it has been paid and paid illegally, it can be recovered, and the government will have to take the necessary action in that respect.

The only other criticism in regard to Mr. Marshall which weighed with me was that the government has clearly allowed this commissioner to break another very well recognized law of this country, passed by a resolution of this parliament, that paid servants of the Crown shall not be electioneering agents. The evidence is produced here to-night from the columns of the Toronto Globe that in June of last year, when Duncan Marshall was a paid servant of this government at the rate of $6,000 per annum, he went, as he himself announced to the audience, as the representative of the Prime Minister of this country, to a Liberal gathering in the constituency of South Oxford, and made a political speech in direct contravention of the spirit and letter of the resolution of this parliament that public servants shall not do so. That charge has not been answered; that charge has been absolutely avoided by the Minister of Agriculture. We have had no word from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), whose name is brought into prominence in connection with this matter. These are the two objections we take, and take most pointedly. In regard to one we demand a reasonable explanation. We want to know why the appointment was made, what justification there was for it in law, and why the Auditor General allowed those cheques to be paid if he allowed that.

The next point that should be cleared up is why this servant of the Crown has been enabled to go to political gatherings in South Oxford to represent the Prime Minister of the country, as stated in the extract read from the Toronto Globe, without a rebuke from the government,—a government that talked of appointing a royal commission shortly after election to inquire into the political activities of certain civil servants. Here is a glaring case of a civil servant, whether he be called Commissioner of Agriculture or anything else, who is attending political meetings on behalf of the government. We ask the government now to act on the information they have and displace Mr. Duncan Marshall if he is guilty of the offence charged.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. gentleman would not expect me, I am sure, to deal with the legal aspect of the question. I do know however that the Civil Service Act makes provision for the appointment of a commissioner, and he was appointed. That is all I can say. As regards the duration of the commission, it was anticipated at the time that it would be quite temporary, probably, as I said, six months. But many things have occurred in connection with the Agricultural Instruction Act since that time. The life of the act has expired since then and the question has arisen as to whether the grant itself should be discontinued. It was found that the grant under the Highways Act would also expire next year, but many persons thought that it would be a good idea to defer the discontinuance of the grant until the highways question was under consideration so that both matters could be dealt with together. What with one thing and another, time has passed and Mr. Duncan Marshall has been kept on, but he has given good and faithful service to the Dominion of Canada. My hon. friend (Mr. Irvine) made the straight statement that the job was made for the man. Was that right? I wonder whether he knows that the job had been in existence for years and years.

Mr. SHAW: Was it vacant before?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is at least ten years since the Agricultural Instruction Act was passed, and the position of commissioner was provided for under the terms of the act. The first appointee was the late Mr. C. C. James, whose salary for ten years was $5,000. So far as the salary paid Mr. Duncan Marshall goes, I do not think that any hon. member would suggest for a moment that $6,000 to-day is any more than $5,000 was at that time. So much for that. As to the duration of the commission, I am not going to justify the extension of the period past six months except on the ground that I have stated. I might point out, though, that there have been commissions in Canada which have lasted very much longer than that; I have in mind the Lake of the Woods Commission and the International Waterways Commission; the terms of which were indefinite. There is no finality, shall I say, in regard to the duration of any commission, so far as I know.

Mr. SHAW: But considerable stability, I suppose.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, so long as any commission lasts I trust it will be stable. With reference to the assertion that Mr. Duncan Marshall went to political meetings, I must confess that I have no knowledge of the matter, although the question has been up in this House before. I am confident, however, that if he went to a political meeting he certainly did not make a political speech. I know that whatever speech he might make would be an agricultural address, and until I have evidence to the contrary I shall refuse to believe that he made any speech of a political character, either in Oxford or anywhere else. The onus of proof so far as this question is concerned rests with those who make the charge.

The intimation has also been made that patronage has been brought to bear upon this appointment. Now, what is patronage? As far as I can understand the term, it implies that some useless man is appointed to a position because he happens to be a friend of the government in office. Does that definition hold in this connection? Has anyone challenged the fitness of Mr. Duncan Marshall for this particular position? The term "patronage" has always been associated with the appointment of a misfit, but there has not been a single tittle of evidence to support the suggestion that such is the case in connection with this appointment. Unquestionably, there has been no patronage in the matter.

Mr. IRVINE: Is the minister giving a definition of patronage to suit the occasion, as he made the job to suit the individual who got it?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: By no means. My hon. friend's experience in politics does not go as far back as that of some of the rest of us, and I know very well that the term "patronage" got its significance in the way I have described. Another absolutely unsupported statement is that Mr. Marshall was interested in the redistribution of Alberta. That is wholly without foundation and is therefore valueless as a charge. It is stated, next, that there are two ministers of agriculture. I do not think there are. As a matter of fact, if I had the making of appointments there would be more ex-ministers of agriculture in my department; but inasmuch as I have not I have to take what I can get. The member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) has moved that the salary of Mr. Duncan Marshall be reduced to one dollar. Mr. Marshall's salary is not under consideration; there is no item before the House concerning it; therefore I am afraid my hon. friend's motion is out of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: With reference to the remarks of the minister that no one has challenged Mr. Marshall's ability to perform the work deputed to him, that may be quite true, but we really do not know the extent of the work which he has undertaken. As to the question of patronage and the minister's suggestion that the onus of proof is with those who make the charge, I might point out the significance of a certain incident that occurred in the riding I represent. The position of postmaster became vacant through the death of the incumbent, and the gentleman who acted as chairman at the meeting and to whom I have referred—he was a member of the executive of the Liberal Association for Ontario—was in Ottawa and as a matter of fact, I believe, went back with Mr. Duncan Marshall. This political gathering was held at the point where the vacancy had occurred some time before. A good deal of pressure had been brought to bear to have appointed the man who had been acting as deputy, and after Mr. Marshall's visit to the constituency an active politician was appointed postmaster at this place. He had not been identified with the post office at all, but was a man of sixty-six who had been a farmer all his life; and to aggravate these circumstances, his sight was bad, as was also his hearing. Indeed, I am informed that it was found necessary to enlarge the numbers on the boxes so that he could distinguish them. All this occurred immediately after Mr. Marshall's visit to the constituency where he addressed a gathering of Grits, as the Globe states. Possibly he has been carrying out the instructions of the minister, who no doubt wants a real handy man, an experienced politician who can handle the situation as it should be handled.

11 p.m.

I brought this matter up on the Orders of the Day with reference to the question of a commissioner. I understand from a reading of the act that it is not within the power of the government to appoint a commissioner. I read in the press early in the session a report that a commissioner had been appointed from the constituency I represent to investigate charges of government officials taking part in political matters. When I noticed that in the press, I called the attention of the government to it and asked if the commissioner was being appointed to investigate the case of Duncan Marshall, and I was informed that that was not the case. Now, this commissioner has evidently been appointed to investigate cases of this nature. I have nothing personally to say against the man who was appointed to this postmastership; he is a good citizen and all that, but he had been an active politician all his life. The person who had acted as deputy and had performed the work for several years was turned down and the recommendation of the party executive in the constituency was carried out in defiance of the Civil Service Act. I would ask the minister if he does not consider that is worthy of investigation; or has Mr. Duncan Marshall looked into it and decided that it is not necessary to make any further inquiry? Mr. Brown, chairman of the meeting I have referred to, had been in Ottawa a few days previously, and he informed the audience that Mr. Marshall was there by request of the Prime Minister, who was unable to go there himself.

The minister made some rather sneering remarks regarding the history in connection with the shipment of live cattle from this country. Anyone who knows anything about agriculture in Canada knows that cattle have been shipped from ports in this country across the water for years back. All the embargo affected was store cattle being shipped to inland points and fed there; they could be kept for a certain length of time at the port of landing, and that actually was done. So far as fat cattle are concerned, I do not think the embargo amounted to very much, and in view of the difficulties experienced and the conditions which now prevail I am just a little doubtful whether its removal will be of much benefit to those who desire to ship store cattle. The minister seems to have the idea that we should have sworn testimony here to show that Mr. Duncan Marshall was taking an active part in politics. Well, I have quoted the Toronto Globe; I can quote other papers. I have given the reports that were in the press, and I point to the fact that in the village in which he spoke there was a vacancy in the postmastership and that an appointment was made almost immediately after he was there. The man who was appointed was given the position in defiance of the Civil Service Act; he was sixty-six years of age; he had no special qualifications for the work—and this is going on all over the country. It is all very well to sneer at the Civil Service Commission. If you can get around the Civil Service Commission, as the minister evidently has done with regard to Mr. Duncan Marshall and with regard to the postmastership to which I have referred, I do not know where the end is to be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have nothing to do with the post office.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Apparently the minister has not much to do with a good many things that Mr. Duncan Marshall is doing; I quite agree with that. The very fact that Mr. Marshall was on the ground here almost immediately, and that during the campaign he was referred to by the speakers in that place as the coming minister of agriculture, is rather significant. It is well known that some of those who have been associated with him were here in Ottawa and were urging on the government that Mr. Marshall should have been appointed minister of agriculture, even before my hon. friend the present minister was appointed.

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Chairman, I am not presuming to discuss all aspects of this question; in fact, I have not heard all the discussion. But I think it is only due to Mr. Marshall that I should bear testimony to the very valuable service he rendered in London in his capacity as Commissioner of Agriculture in connection with the conference regarding the cattle embargo. Mr. Marshall was, I do not hesitate to say, one of the most capable men present, and there were numerous officials of the British government there. I am sure that my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) will join with me in saying we appreciated the good service he rendered. He knew his job thoroughly; he was constant in attention to the work, and in every respect he was a most admirable official to advise the government and the commissioners. If there has been any success attending the conference I desire to say that I believe it was in large measure due to the energetic work of Mr. Marshall.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says he did not hear the discussion.

Mr. FIELDING: Not the first part of it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I can understand that, because the objections so far made have not been made against Mr. Marshall's personal character or his qualifications; they have been directed against the absolute disregard of law, against illegal payments and illegal actions by the Auditor General and by this government. It is idle to expect the Minister of Agriculture to know anything about law; he does not, and he was quite right when he said he could not discuss the matter from that point of view. I am going to ask the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) what is the possible justification in law for this appointment. So far no answer has been made one way or the other. He is the hon. gentleman who can tell us whether there is any answer; we do not think there is. Surely we should hear from him.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: My hon. friend wishes me to express my opinion with regard to his view that the appointment of Mr. Marshall was illegal. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture, who had to appoint a commissioner, went to the Civil Service Commissioners, and consulted with them. After such consultation we came to the cabinet and recommended that Mr. Marshall be appointed commissioner, which he had the right to do. That recommendation was accepted. As to the appointment, I do not suppose there can be any discussion; the irregularity, according to my hon. friend, would be in the payment to Mr. Marshall of a salary which was not authorized. This question, I understand, was considered by the Auditor General, who is very careful in such matters and who knows the law. He decided that the appointment was regular and that the salary could be paid out of the item which had been voted by parliament for agricultural purposes, I cannot but accept the opinion of the Auditor General. If this is not satisfactory to my hon. friend, I would have no objection to considering the matter further than I have done after listening to the discussion, but I have not heard any argument which would convince me that anything irregular was done in this matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: May I ask the Minister of Justice whether any authority is given to the government under Section 38C of the act to appoint a commissioner by Order in Council? My hon. friend has the act before him, I think.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No, I have not the act before me, but from the reading I have heard of it I think the Governor in Council has that right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, then, we will have to debate it. I really thought there was nothing to debate; I thought it was perfectly clear that the act meant just what it said. Now, I am going to read it again—and I am referring to the section that is referred to by the order itself. I am not imputing to the government the use of a section which they had not considered; I am dealing with the order exactly as the government itself adopted it, and the section I refer to is this:

> It is considered advisable that a commissioner be appointed under section 38C of the Civil Service Act as amended by chapter 22 of the Statutes of 1921.

And that act reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall affect the powers of the Governor in Council with respect to the appointment of any commissioner or other member of any royal or other commission or board or any deputy head.

I would ask my hon. friend if he thinks that gives power to the government which the government did not have, and I think with this section in front of him he will agree with me that all that that does is to reserve to the government such rights as the government had before the Civil Service Act was passed.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): May I ask the hon. gentleman if Mr. Marshall was appointed a commissioner under the authority of the Governor in Council. I have not heard the debate, but I would just like to know that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Just a commissioner?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A commissioner.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think I can tell my hon. friend the purpose of that section because I had something to do with it. That clause was drafted expressly to declare that the Civil Service Commission should not have the appointment of members constituting a commission. I remember the thing very distinctly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is quite right. In other words, it was to reserve to the government powers that the government before had. They parted with general powers of appointment, but they reserved the appointment of commissioners.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It precluded the appointment of a commissioner or of a commission by the Civil Service Commission.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, it reserved the right to the government, and I think the Minister of Justice when he has that section before him will agree with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean).

I would ask another question, now that we have that cleared out of the way. What were the other powers of the government? Do either of these hon. gentlemen suggest that the government has inherent power to appoint commissioners? On the contrary, do not both agree that the power to appoint commissioners is given the government by acts of this House? Is there any doubt about that? Can there be any question about that? I pause for objection if objection there be. I do not think there can be one. We all know it is not so. We all know that the only right that the government has to appoint commissioners is fixed by the legislation of this House. I will come to that statute in a moment, but digressing for one minute, the hon. Minister of Agriculture says: This is no new job. He says: There was to be a Commissioner of Agriculture before. He is quite right. There is no doubt that the late Mr. James did act as a commissioner in connection with agricultural matters, but not the kind of commissioner that Mr. Duncan Marshall is at all one way or the other. Mr. James was a commissioner working here in the office and advising with the minister and the deputy head, looking after business, and appointed so far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, if his memory is good, is going to agree with this too, that he found he could not get the right under the act to appoint such a commissioner. That was merely a name given to certain definite duties in the office. It was not a commissioner. Commissioner James was never a commissioner under this section, never a commissioner under the Inquiries Act. He was an officer of the Department of Agriculture, a regular officer, regularly maintained, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice found he could not make that appointment because if that appointment were to be made it had to be made through the regular Civil Service Commission routine. So much for that, and again I do not hear any objection. We might just as well clear away the deadwood as we go.

Now I take up the act which gives the government the right to appoint commissioners, and that act is the Inquiries Act, chapter 104 of the revised statutes. There are two parts to that act. There is the Public Inquiries Act, and then there is the Departmental Inquiries Act, and I will take it that in so far as Mr. Duncan Marshall is concerned, although it is immaterial one way or the other, that the section which would apply to his case would be the second part. Now I want to point out to the committee that the powers of such a commissioner are conferred by that statute, and they are defined, and I want to submit that the fact absolutely is that Mr. Marshall has never done one single thing that is called for by that Inquiries Act, not one thing. Why, the subterfuge is too plain, it is too simple. That Inquiries Act was for the purpose of making just what we all understand inquiries to be. It is for the taking of evidence, the examination of witnesses and books and the like, and the making of a report; that is what it is. It is not supposed to cover the case of a man that gets a job at an annual salary in the Department of Agriculture or any other department. Is there any possible question as to that? Because if there is, I wish we could get it now? Is there any possible question as to what the Inquiries Act means, that is, that under that Inquiries Act commissioners may be appointed to inquire into specific matters placed in their hands, examine witnesses and books and report upon the subject matter of that inquiry? I ask my friend is there any other act under which this man could be appointed legally? Is there anything else? If there be, let us discuss it again.

I am going to take another matter up with my friend the Minister of Justice. I am going to ask him whether it is in the power of the government to take moneys voted by this parliament for one purpose and apply them to another. Is there any question as to that? I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who is very familiar with the subject: Does this government claim it is within their power to take moneys voted by this parliament for a specific purpose and apply those moneys to another purpose?

Mr. FIELDING: If there was any doubt about the matter I would ask my friend the Minister of Justice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course, I know my hon. friend is even an older politician than he is a Minister of Finance, but I know he has been Minister of Finance long enough to know that that is not right, that it is illegal, that it is thwarting the will of parliament, that it is an unauthorized use of public money. Does my hon. friend object to that statement as being too strong? I pause again for an answer.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I will answer my hon. friend when he has finished his remarks.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I will take it for granted—

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No, do not take it for granted.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —that we have a right to rely on the votes of this House being something that binds the government and binds the Treasury, and that the moneys voted cannot be misapplied. I am going to rely upon that. Now I point this out, that in so far as the bit we have been able to learn of Mr. Duncan Marshall's activities, none of them can by any stretch of imagination be said to be properly connected with the vote out of which he is paid. Why as to this educational business, the minister has the order in council before him and he will correct me if I am wrong. The aid towards agricultural instruction that is given to the provinces is the thing referred to, imprimis. What on earth have Mr. Marshall's activities in England to do with that question? That is, that in connection with instruction by the provinces aid will be given by the federal authorities. How can it be said that has nothing to do with the question? Of course, my hon. friend knows it cannot be said. It is true the order in council goes on to say the commissioner may look after other matters that may be referred to him. But how can those other matters have anything to do with that vote of $1,100,000. What possible justification is there for the switching of public moneys to meet political contingencies?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, I ask what justification there is for it. I sympathize with the Minister of Agriculture. He had a fight on his hands out in the West, and at one of his meetings he promised the people of Regina that he was going to be the next Minister of Agriculture. At Calgary his great protagonist, Duncan Marshall, was also running his "I am to be the next Minister of Agriculture" campaign. Something had to be done. Hon. gentlemen say they do not know which of these two gentlemen, both of whom were to be Minister of Agriculture, got here first. Well, the Hon. Mr. Motherwell made good his pledges to the people in that one regard; he got the job. Mr. Duncan Marshall consequently could not make his pledge good. Something had to be done for him and something was done. That is the whole reason we have the statutes flouted and public funds misapplied. Perhaps it is not fair to ask the Minister of Justice to finally pass upon this question at the present time, but I think the House has the right to ask that the Minister of Justice, who advises in these matters, shall look into this question and that it shall stand until he has had a chance of so doing.

[Sir Lomer Gouin.]

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have nothing to discuss with respect to Mr. Marshall and I do not intend to enter upon any such discussion; I only wish to answer the question that was put to me by my hon. friend. He wished me to express my opinion upon the legality of the appointment of Mr. Marshall and the payment of his salary. Well, I have before me the order in council which appointed him and this is what it says:

> The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 1st February, 1922, from the Minister of Agriculture, submitting that the Agricultural Instruction Act under which the sum of $1,100,000 annually has been granted to the Provincial Departments of Agriculture for the purpose of aiding agricultural instruction in the provinces expires March 31st, 1923.
>
> The minister states that in view of the extraordinary and exceptional conditions in the agricultural world it is highly desirable that an investigation be made into the advisability of the continuation, discontinuation or emendation of the provisions of this Act; the amounts to be paid, and the methods of calculating such amounts in the event of its extension; and the scope of the work of the provinces to be undertaken with the assistance of funds provided thereunder.
> It is considered advisable that a commissioner be appointed under section 38C of the Civil Service Act as amended by chapter 22 of the Statutes of 1921, to conduct the investigation indicated above, and to inquire into such other agricultural problems as may be desirable and necessary.
>
> The minister, therefore recommends that Mr. Duncan Marshall, of Olds, Alberta, be appointed as a commissioner for the above purpose, and to perform such other duties of a cognate nature as may be delegated to him.
> The minister further recommends that Mr. Marshall be paid a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum, said salary to be paid from the appropriation provided for the administration of the Agricultural Instruction Act and that this appointment date from January 15, 1922.
> The committee concur in the foregoing recommendations and submit the same for approval.

If I refer to chapter 22, of 11 and 12 George V, I find that section 38 C reads as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall affect the powers of the Governor in Council with respect to the appointment of any commissioner—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Quite right.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Well, Mr. Marshall was made a commissioner to study the problem of agriculture, and it was provided that he should be paid out of a fund voted for agriculture. My hon. friend wants me to give my opinion on the legality of the appointment and the payment of the salary. After reading that order in council, reading that section 38 C, and referring to chapter 104 of the revised statutes I say without any hesitation that the appointment is perfectly legal and the payment of the salary to Mr. Marshall regular.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister—I want to be fair to him—answer this question? Will he tell me what power is given—I emphasize the word "given"—what power is given by section 38 C that he has just read?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The power to appoint a commissioner.

Mr. MEIGHEN: To investigate?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I read it so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will read it he will see that he is wrong.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have read it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no question at all about it, there is a reservation but there is no power given. I hope the minister is, with unprejudiced mind listening to what I say. There is no power whatever given by that section, and the minister could not, I will venture to say, bring the authorities of his office to say there is. There is a power reserved to the government, the intention of the act and the wording of the act being that the power is to reside there and is not by this act transferred to the commission. Now let me emphasize this again, and I hope the minister will grasp it. There is no power whatever given to appoint anybody or to do anything. How could the word "affect" be used if there is a power given?

> Nothing in this act shall affect the powers of the Governor in Council with respect to the appointment of any commissioner.

Assuming that there were powers, which there were, this act does not affect those powers. Consequently the Governor in Council is thrown back upon the powers that there were. He is not given any more powers and he must exercise the powers that there were because no further powers are given. If the minister would just reserve this and take a little time to think it out there is no question but that the matter is not even debatable because no powers are given at all. The Governor in Council has to take all the powers there were, and those powers are reserved to the Governor in Council. The act makes quite clear that they are not affected and not transferred to the commission. What powers were there before? There were powers under the Inquiries Act. The government might have exercised those powers, but in the exercise of them they could not have made this appointment. They could not under the Inquiries Act have appointed a commissioner and paid him out of the Agricultural Instruction vote. They had to pay him out of the vote applicable to the purpose. That is where there is a misappropriation of funds. The miscellaneous vote of parliament is applicable for a purpose. They did not want to go to that vote. Perhaps there were no moneys there. The only way they could appoint a commissioner was under the Inquiries Act, under the powers given them prior to the passing of section 38 C of the Civil Service Act. Further, had they appointed under the Inquiries Act, the inquirer would have had the powers given by that act and no other. All the restraints and restrictions of that act would have applied. That is the only kind of a commissioner they could have appointed. The powers to appoint that commissioner were reserved by section 38 C, but no new powers were given. If the minister had had time to go into it, and had given full consideration to the actual meaning of the English words, I think he never would have expressed his opinion as a lawyer that they had the power. I suggest that he consult the officers of the department and bring an official opinion to this House. I confidently say that he cannot get them to give an opinion that any powers whatever are given to the government by section 38 C of the act.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: The hon. member did not ask me to give him the opinion of the officers of my department. He asked me for my opinion and I gave him an answer, taking section 38 C, the Inquiries Act and the order in council in conjunction—I gave my opinion candidly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That what?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That we had the right to make that appointment, and the payments we made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister means that his opinion is that a commissioner could be appointed under the Inquiries Act for the purpose of carrying out the object of that act, but he will not find any one of those objects have any connection with this man's work. He will find he has not called one witness and he will find that he has made absolutely no report, as called for by that section.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is another question, but if you read section 2 of chapter 104 of the revised statutes, you will find that the Governor in Council may, whenever he deems it expedient, cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof. I do not know what Mr. Marshall has done or omitted to do, but as to the legal point which has been raised, I consider that the appointment was regular and that the payment was also regular.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But I think the minister is referring to just exactly what he read, namely the kind of inquiry called for under the Inquiries Act.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I agree with that; there is no question about it, but this is not under this act. There was the power under that to have the inquiry as called for by the act, and that has not been done and is not being done. It was never thought of. The job was thought of and the job is still going on. The minister has not answered what, to my mind, is the most vital thing. Here we have an order in council which, I agree with him, can only be supported under chapter 104. What right or what power is there in the case of a commissioner appointed under that section, to charge the expenses and cost to this agricultural vote?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Because it was an investigation in regard to agricultural matters.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It may possibly be, although I do not think so, that under the Audit Act, which has to do with our appropriations, we could charge to a specific vote the cost of an inquiry which had to do absolutely with that one particular vote. But that is not the case here at all. We have here a concrete vote of $1,100,000 in connection with the Agricultural Instruction Act. It is not pretended that Mr. Duncan Marshall was engaged in England in connection with that matter. It is not pretended that he went down to Florida in connection with that. It is not pretended by the minister in charge of this department that there is a word of truth in the suggestion that he was acting as a commissioner to find out something in connection with the Agricultural Instruction Act. He went to Florida for the purpose of getting immigrants to come to Canada.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is a matter of fact. I was not questioned on the facts. It was on a point of law and it is on that question that I have given my opinion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps I should not press my hon. friend any further on the point.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Before the vote is taken, may I point out that the salary of Mr. Marshall is not taken out of this item, but out of another item?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It has just as much right to be taken out of this as out of the other one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The matter as to where the government may choose an item to misappropriate money is not a matter of concern to this House. The government has no right to take it out of either vote—none whatever.

Mr. BUREAU: There are two items; one is for a grant to the provinces of Canada for the purpose of assisting and encouraging agricultural instruction, grants to be made on a proportionate basis. That is item No. 51.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 14 on page 8 of the estimates is the one under consideration.

Amendment (Mr. Irvine) negatived: Yeas 39; nays 82.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister is confident of his opinion, will he undertake to grant a fiat that this matter may be tested?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: A fiat for what?

Mr. MEIGHEN: A fiat to test the validity of the payment to Duncan Marshall under this appointment by order in council.

Mr. BUREAU: That is childish. Take your medicine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will get the medicine first, and then we shall see who takes it. Will the minister undertake so to do?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I will not undertake that to-night. If I have a petition to that effect, I will consider it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should have considered the matter before he gave his opinion to-night.

Item agreed to.

REPORT

Seventh report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.—Mr. McGiverin.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GOVERNMENT PRINTING

Mr. McMURRAY:

1. What amount of money was paid by the Dominion government for printing, to firms in the city of Winnipeg, during the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
2. What amount was paid by the Dominion government to the Winnipeg Saturday Post, Limited, for printing, during the above mentioned years?
3. Who are the directors and shareholders of Winnipeg Saturday Post, Limited?
4. What amount of money has been paid to firms in the city of Winnipeg by the Canadian National Railways, for printing, during the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
5. What amount of money was paid by the Canadian National Railways for printing, to the Winnipeg Saturday Post, Limited, during the years 1920, 1921 and 1922?
6. Are all contracts for the said printing submitted to tender?
7. If not, what amount is open for tender?
8. Is all printing for use in Manitoba printed by firms in Manitoba?
9. If not, why?

Hon. Mr. MURDOCK: Dropped.

SCHOONER CARRIE L. HIRTLE

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was the schooner Carrie L. Hirtle seized by the Customs authorities during the present year? If so, what were the grounds of the seizure?
2. Was the said schooner ordered to be sold by public tender?
3. If so, were tenders received both at Lunenburg and Ottawa, when did the tenders close, where, and by whom were they opened?
4. How many tenders were received, (a) at Lunenburg; (b) at Ottawa?
5. What are the names of the various tenderers, the amounts of their respective tenders and what tender, if any, was accepted?
6. What steps, if any, were taken to advertise the said tender?
7. Were tenders advertised in the public press? If so, in what newspapers and for what length of time?
8. If not, why were public tenders not called for in the press?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU: I have spoken to the hon. member about this question, and I think we can arrange it without the question being answered.

Question dropped.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS—FIXED CHARGES

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. Have the fixed charges against the Canadian Government Railways been added to the public debt?
2. What is the total capitalization of the Canadian Government Railways to the present date?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Capital expenditures on account of what are known as Canadian Government Railways—Intercolonial, Prince Edward Island, Transcontinental and Eastern Branch lines—are dealt with in the books of the government of Canada in the same way as other public works of the Dominion, consequently, fixed charges are not allocated nor interest charges debited against these railways.

2. Capital investment at December 31, 1922, $414,905,912.47.

THE KING'S BIRTHDAY—ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this House adjourns on Friday, the first of June next, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the fifth of June next.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): May I ask the Prime Minister if the birthday of His Majesty has yet been fixed as a public holiday in Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, for Monday.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): How is it fixed, by proclamation or by statute? I could not ascertain by consulting the calendar whether it was a public holiday or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The date has to be fixed by proclamation. I may quote from the Interpretation Act—the King's birthday is in the list of holidays. The act reads:

The birthday or the day fixed by proclamation for the celebration of the birthday of the reigning sovereign.

The birthday of His Majesty coming on Sunday, the government by proclamation made Monday the day to be observed.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to extend for one year the operation of the Public Service Retirement Act, chapter 67 of the statutes of 1920, as amended by chapter 49 of the statutes of 1921, and by chapter 39 of the statutes of 1922.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA COLONIZATION COMPANY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): It is stated in a press despatch from Winnipeg this morning that the Canada Colonization Company is being re-organized with representation from both the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. The despatch goes on to say that there is an arrangement by which the Canadian National will pay $100,000 for the period of five years. I should like to ask if the government has any information to give us in regard to this arrangement.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING—(Prime Minister): This is a matter, I think, the Minister of the Interior would like to answer, and I would be obliged if my hon. friend would permit it to stand until another day when the hon. minister is in the House.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): A large number of orders for returns have been made by the House that have not yet been complied with by the government. I desire to call attention to some selected from the others because moved by hon. gentlemen of the party behind me. On the 12th February, an order passed for the production of correspondence, and a statement of regulations, conditions, and so forth, entered into between Canada and Great Britain in connection with imports of Canadian cattle into the United Kingdom. That was moved for by myself, and why it is not down I cannot imagine. On the 19th of the same month, on the motion of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. McKillop) an order was made for a return showing the number of appointments to the Civil Service during 1922 and the number of returned men so appointed. This return is not yet down, at least it was not on the 26th of this month. On the 21st February, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Charters) obtained the order of the House for correspondence relating to the overcharging of immigrants at Quebec. The same remark will apply to that. On the 5th March, the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) obtained an order regarding the dismissal of officers and employees of the government from the 1st January, 1922, to date, and the names of the persons now occupying their positions. To this order the like remarks apply. On the 11th April, the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) secured the approval of parliament to an order for the production of orders in council ratifying purchases or sales of property by the Canadian National Railways and the Grand Trunk Railway. This order has not been complied with. On the 16th of the same month, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) had an order passed calling for correspondence regarding the transportation of liquor over the Canadian National Railways. So far as I can ascertain there is default with regard to this order also —there was, at any rate, on the 26th of May. The same hon. member on the same day obtained an order showing the earnings and expenditures of various individual vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. which order is not yet down. On the 25th, of the same month the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) obtained an order for the production of documents regarding the sale of the Toronto Suburban railway to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario or the city of Toronto. That is not complied with. On the 7th, of this month, now more than three weeks ago, on my motion, a very important order passed for a return showing the sales and purchases of real estate properties by the Canadian National Railways and the Grand Trunk Railway since October 4, 1922. No production has been made of these returns. There were three more orders passed on the 7th of this month, the same date—two by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church), and one at the instance of the hon. member for York-Sunbury; and none of them are down yet. Quite a number of orders have since been passed, but I pass them by. Some of the orders of which I have spoken are three and a half months, and more, old, but no attention seems to have been paid to them by the government.

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State): I may explain to my right hon. friend that these returns come from my office and I am continuously urging the officials to get them down as promptly as possible. There have been a very large number of returns called for this session, some of them very voluminous. I thank my right hon. friend for bringing this matter to the attention of the government, and I will notify the officials concerned to hurry the preparation of the returns as quickly as possible.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the number of returns ordered this session is unusually large, I think it is unusually small.

Mr. COPP: I did not say the number was unusually large. I said there was a very large number.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The staff in other years have brought down many more.

DAIRY ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT BILL

On the order: Second reading of Bill No. 186, to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.—Mr. Motherwell.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Owing to certain changes having been made by parliamentary counsel in the drafting of this bill which, while not changing the meaning of the measure, make it different and more difficult to explain, I move that the bill be discharged from the order paper with a view to possible redrafting and resubmission to the House.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Will the minister explain how the bill is more difficult to explain if the meaning is not changed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As drafted by parliamentary counsel portions of the former bill were inserted that were not in the bill submitted to me. That makes the bill appear quite different from what was contemplated, and the intention of the draftsman and counsel would be more difficult to explain.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Perhaps the minister would not object to informing the House in what respect the bill has been changed? I understand it has been arranged for a motion to be moved this afternoon which will prevent this bill from going into effect this session. It depends on the result of the debate which takes place and the motion of my hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll); and the minister ought to explain to the House whether he is a consenting party to having this part of the bill obliterated, and be dependent upon the result of the motion which is to be debated this afternoon.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In compliance with the hon. member's request, I have in my hand the bill as redrafted, and an initialled copy got out by parliamentary counsel. The original draft reads as follows:

2. Section five of the said act is amended by adding at the end of paragraph (b) thereof the words "or less than eighty per centum of milk fat"; and by striking out, in paragraph (c) thereof, in the second line the words "what is generally known as", and in the third line thereof the words "nor add any milk or cream or butter".

The draft incorporated by parliamentary counsel and not to be found in the original act as submitted to my department and by myself to this House reads:

5. No person shall—

(a) manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream;

(b) mix with or incorporate with butter, by any process of heating, soaking, rechurning, reworking, or otherwise, any cream, milk, skim milk, butter milk or water to cause such butter when so treated to contain over sixteen per centum of water, or less than eighty per centum of milk fat;

(c) melt, clarify, refine, rechurn, or otherwise treat butter to produce "process" or "renovated" butter.

The parliamentary counsel takes the position that that makes the section more intelligible. I take the ground Mr. Speaker, that it makes the section less intelligible. However, parliamentary counsel is right in this respect; inasmuch as the Oleomargarine Act of 1919 and subsequent amendments suspend all these provisions of the Dairy Industry Act or amendments thereto, and I think counsel is strictly right. This particular section in the Oleomargarine Act says:

Section 3, Notwithstanding anything contained in The Dairy Industry Act, 1914, chapter 7 of the statutes of 1914, or in any other statute or law, the manufacture in and importation of oleomargarine into Canada—

Which, Mr. Speaker, would cover this law, if we had it as it appears now on the order paper. The section continues:

—shall be permitted until the thirty first day of August, one thousand nine hundred and twenty one; and the offering for sale, the sale, and the having in possession for sale of oleomargarine shall be permitted until the first day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two.

So that if the bill had gone through as it appears now on the order paper it would have been suspended by the provision of the Oleomargarine Act which I have just read. That was the position taken by parliamentary counsel. Notwithstanding that, however, on the face of it the bill as now drafted appears as if we were prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think that under section 436 a motion to discharge must be unanimous. I could not agree to-day, as far as I am concerned. I am prepared to read over what the Minister of Agriculture has said and try my best to understand it, and if it constitutes a reason for the course he wishes to take, I will agree at a future date.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would not expect my hon. friend to understand it, because it is pretty difficult to understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: With regard to the explanation made by the minister I would like to point out that section 2 of the bill is really the suspended section of the Act of 1914, and consequently, if this bill is withdrawn and the motion of my hon. friend from Cape Breton South should carry—

Mr. SPEAKER I must remind the House that the motion is not debatable because it can only be made by unanimous consent. As there is no unanimous consent, no debate can take place. Let me call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to page 541 of Bourinot, where he says:

XX. Bills once introduced, not altered except by authority of the House.

While a bill is in progress in the Commons no alteration whatever can be made in its provisions, except by the authority of the House. If it should be found that the bill has been materially altered since its introduction it would have to be withdrawn. A clerical alteration, however, is admissible. If it be necessary to make any changes in the bill before the second reading, the member in charge of it will ask leave to withdraw the bill and present another instead thereof.

The leave must therefore be unanimous, and as it is not, the motion cannot be made to-day.

OLEOMARGARINE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to move that the House do now proceed to notice of motion No. 9, in the name of the member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll), respecting oleomargarine.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I rise to a point of order and would calle the attention of the House to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules, section 423, which says:

A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, such as the subject matter of a bill on the order paper.

The motion now before the House is one dealing with the subject matter of a bill which stands in the name of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Consequently, I contend, it would be out of order to proceed with this resolution.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to hear the opinion of some of the older members on the point of order, but I feel inclined to declare the point well taken. If the bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Agriculture had been withdrawn, then under rule No. 36, the motion of the member for Cape Breton South could have been debated, but as the bill is still before the House and deals directly with the subject matter of the resolution in the name of the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I think that the point is well taken. Beauchesne's Section 423 under Rule No. 42 says:

A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, such as the subject matter of a bill on the order paper.

The bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. SUTHERLAND: On what date was the bill introduced?

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill was introduced on the 28th May and is still before the House. No action has yet been taken and I conceive the objection arising in the mind of the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). This motion was put on the order paper before this bill, but no action was taken on it. It is still there. It could have been withdrawn any day by the hon. member. On the other hand the bill which deals with the same question, in one of its sections, was duly introduced in the House on the 28th May. Action was therefore taken on this bill, first by its being introduced, then by its first reading, and finally the second reading was fixed for to-day. Therefore it stands for consideration before the House. I find in that bill clause 2, which reads:

Section 5 of the said act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

"5. No person shall—(a) manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream."

That is exactly the subject matter of the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll), and as that bill is not yet withdrawn and is, according to the rules, before the House, the motion cannot be debated to-day because it would be, according to the authority above quoted, "anticipating a matter already appointed for consideration by this House."

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, might I be permitted to say a word before you give your ruling? I imagine the rules of the House are intended to be practical. If the rule was violated by any person, it was not by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll), but by the minister. If the ruling be correct that the introduction of a bill, after notice of a resolution, will prevent the discussion of that resolution, then any resolution introduced in this House can be stopped by some person introducing a bill. It seems to me that the priority in this case should apply to the resolution. I can understand the rule to mean that the bill could not be proceeded with so long as the resolution stood in the way, but I cannot understand the practicability of a rule which would permit any member of parliament to stop a resolution being discussed by merely introducing a bill.

Mr. CARROLL: And then withdrawing it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, he could withdraw it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am pleased indeed to express my opinion, not meaning at all that it is thorough or mature. So far as I understand the resolution, I quite support the inclination of the Chair. The rule has been read, and it provides specifically that no motion may be made that affects the subject matter of a bill appointed for consideration. This bill has been dealt with by the House. Not only has leave to introduce been moved and passed; but a first reading has been moved and passed, and the bill has been appointed by the House for second reading. Consequently no motion, certainly no motion not heretofore dealt with, can be taken up that deals with the subject matter of the bill. The hon. member says that if anyone has broken the rule, it is the minister. Nobody has broken the rule.

Mr. GRAHAM: I mean the spirit of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nor the spirit of it. The minister has introduced the bill; he has had it dealt with; he has had it dealt with at a first reading. There is nothing in the rule which prevents that being done. Supposing what my hon. friend (Mr. Graham) says is right, any hon. member by the mere fact of putting a motion on the order paper can stop legislation; he can stop effective legislation. A motion gets us nowhere save to the conclusion of agreement or disagreement; it does not bring about legislation. An hon. member by placing a motion on the order paper and by holding it there until the end of the session, could prevent the House from moving by way of legislation. The rule takes care that that cannot be done, and consequently I think the point is well taken and should be upheld.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not rise to discuss the ruling at all. I concur in it. I submit this, that the question of oleomargarine must be discussed. Therefore, why cannot we waive the rule so as to let us discuss it and thus settle the matter?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We can discuss it on the bill.

Mr. FIELDING: The bill is wrong. The bill is withdrawn.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Correct the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Owing to the fact that there is certain correspondence between parliamentary counsel and my deputy in connection with this bill, I think the House should be made aware of the contents of this correspondence. It is very short.

Mr. McMASTER: I rise to a point of order, as points of order seem to be raised all the time. It would be nice if we, down in this part of the House, could hear what is going on—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do not sit there.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Come back to your old place on this side, and then you will be able to hear.

Mr. McMASTER: —and perhaps this might be of some use in the public interest.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was asking for permission to read certain correspondence between the parliamentary counsel and my deputy with respect to this bill. After the bill had been sent to the parliamentary counsel in the form in which I have it in my hand—

Mr. SPEAKER: I thought the minister was speaking on the point of order, but I see that he is refering to another phase of the subject. He should have read that correspondence when he moved for the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Perhaps the House could get in line with the discussion, by the minister asking us to endorse what he has already moved, namely, the withdrawal of the bill. Then the discussion could go on.

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): I do not pretend for a moment to know the rules of the House as regards procedure; but it strikes me as a sort of commonsense man, that the objection of the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) is not just what I would expect from a man of my own calibre, that is, a man of common sense. May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a measure that must be preceded by a resolution? I do not pretend to be in the same class as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who will one day introduce a bill and then ask leave of the House to withdraw it—I am not saying that in any carping or criticizing way. But supposing that method were carried on in this House, does the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) think it would get us anywhere?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We did not let him withdraw it.

Mr. CARROLL: No, that is the trouble. My right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) has been criticizing more or less the action of the government in refusing to bring in the question of oleomargarine, and I would say, correctly so, if I were allowed to say that. He has the opportunity to-day, by consenting, by making the consent of the House unanimous, to allowing the Minister of Agriculture to withdraw his bill, of allowing us to go on if Mr. Speaker's ruling is right, and discussing the question of oleomargarine.

Coming back again to the question of the resolution, I think on two or three occasions questions of this kind have come before the House. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), I think it was, on April 14, 1920, made a motion in this House regarding the Water Carriage of Goods Act, and he was told by the Speaker at that time that that motion would have to be preceded by a resolution. At that time there was on the order paper a bill dealing with that very motion much more advanced than is the bill of the Minister of Agriculture.

Then again, a gentleman who is now in the Senate, Mr. McCoig, on May 6, 1920, was balked in proceeding with a bill regarding the standardization of agricultural machinery. There was on the order paper at that time legislation in the form of a tariff resolution.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what would be the result if your ruling in this particular instance were right?—I hasten to assure you, Sir, that I am not criticizing your ruling; but you desire the opinions of hon. members and I am simply giving my own humble view of the situation. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) has asked, I presume, with perfect sincerity, that he be allowed to withdraw his bill, and the House has refused to give its unanimous consent to that withdrawal. Now, Sir, I contend, notwithstanding the quotation you have submitted, that any hon. member may withdraw any bill standing in his name, and is not bound to proceed with it. The Minister of Agriculture says: I desire to withdraw my bill; I am going to bring in another one at some future time and therefore I shall not proceed with the one at present on the order paper. Who is the arbiter on that question? Is it the House, or is it the hon. gentleman who, having introduced the bill, finds that circumstances are such as to suggest the advisability of his withdrawing it? If he does not wish to proceed with his bill, and the House is not willing to give its unanimous consent to its withdrawal, is it contended that any hon. member is precluded from taking up a resolution which was on the order paper in his name long before the date at which the minister's bill appeared thereon? I ask, is it fair or just that an hon. member should be deprived of the opportunity of discussing a resolution, under such circumstances as I have just stated, simply because the Minister of Agriculture saw fit to introduce at a later date, a bill touching largely the same subject?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I would ask the hon. member this: How many times has this resolution been called since it was first placed on the order paper?

Mr. CARROLL: It has never been called except on a single occasion, and at that, it was called at five minutes to six on a Wednesday afternoon, when I naturally refused to proceed with the consideration of it. As a matter of fact, I think that certain hon. members in this House so calculated their time as to have my resolution called at that particular moment. As I say, I naturally refused to go on with a subject of the importance which I attach to this question; certainly I could not have done justice to it in five minutes, and no one could have expected to attempt to take it up on that occasion. I daresay that had it been discussed at all, the good judgment of the House would have favoured the manufacture of oleomargarine. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has said that the minister's bill was appointed for second reading. Well, the minister's judgment was that the second reading should not be gone on with. He said, in so many words: I do not wish to go ahead with my bill; I propose to withdraw it. Under all the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, and with all due deference to what I consider the tenour of your ruling, I submit that it is absolutely unjust that an hon. member should be prohibited—even though prohibition may be advisable in some respects—from exercising what I believe to be his right in this particular instance.

Hon. S. C. MEWBURN (East Hamilton): I think, Mr. Speaker, that we have had too much quibbling over technicalities in this House, involving too great a waste of time. While I bow to your ruling, I feel with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that the House should give its unanimous consent and concede to the hon. member the right to proceed.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Acting Minister of National Defence): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that under the rules the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll) would be quite in order in going on with his motion. Your Honour has cited the following rule:

A motion must not anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, such as the subject matter of a bill on the order paper.

What is the situation here? My hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) placed on the order paper at a certain stage in the session a certain resolution which, at that time, conflicted with no other motion before the House. The resolution when the hon. member placed it on the order paper did not anticipate any bill that had already been appointed for consideration by the House, and the hon. member therefore had the undoubted right at any time when opportunity offered to move the resolution. There is no authority that I can find either in Bourinot or in Beauchesne by which it can be contended that the later introduction of a bill can deprive an hon. member of the right to proceed with a motion which has precedence of it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Priority obtains.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The whole thing turns upon the point as to when the minister's bill was appointed for the consideration of the House. It was not appointed for such consideration prior to the time that my hon. friend's motion appeared on the order paper; therefore, that hon. gentleman had the prior right to proceed with his resolution. I submit, therefore, that hon. gentlemen, viewing the matter in the light of these circumstances, should give their unanimous consent that the hon. gentleman be allowed to discuss his motion.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to add a word, Mr. Speaker, on another point, I would observe, in answer to the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald), that the motion of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) is now in reality only a notice of motion, no motion has been made at all; and the rule applies to a motion. The bill has been appointed for consideration by the words of the Speaker: "When shall the bill be read a second time?"—and the answer thereto: "At the next sitting of the House." That is the appointment for the consideration of the bill by this House, and consequently a motion cannot be made to deal with the subject matter of it. I only wish to say, so far as the question of technicalities goes, that there is no need for any interference with the rules of the House. All that has to be done is for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), representing the government on the subject, to move the second reading of the bill, get into committee ,and move all the amendments he desires. But his present action is merely an effort on his part to shift responsibility from the shoulders of the government. If the minister would move the second reading of the bill, the motion could be discussed, the House could go into committee on the bill, the minister could move whatever amendments he liked, and two discussions might thus be avoided.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have the right also to refuse to do what my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) suggests. Here in my hand is a copy of the bill I introduced, and which I can send across to my right hon. friend if he desires; in it there will not be found a single reference to oleomargarine. I gave an assurance to the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) and also the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) that the bill would not contain anything on that subject, and yet I find another bill on the order paper apparently prohibiting the manufacture of oleomargarine. Why should I not exercise my right to discharge this order and re-draft the bill?

Mr. SPEAKER: That must be by unanimous consent. The Speaker is the servant of the House and at the same time he must be guided by the rules established by custom, by precedent and by law. The House can at any time take upon itself to suspend the rules, but the Speaker being the servant of the House, and being bound by the rules, can only cite them in support of his rulings.

Mr. GOOD: May I ask the minister a question? I understood him to say that the bill he introduced had no reference to oleomargarine. I have here Bill No. 186 which does refer to oleomargarine. Are there two bills under consideration?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The custom is to issue a proof sheet of every bill for submission to the various members interested, and accompanying that draft in this case was a suggestion of parliamentary counsel that it would be re-drafted along certain lines. That re-draft is now on the order paper. I was not aware of that until twelve o'clock last night.

Mr. GOOD: Who inserted this clause that the minister did not want in?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The parliamentary counsel, Mr. Foran, changed the draft of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Having raised the point of order, I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that when the Committee on Agriculture met yesterday the subject of this bill and the resolution were before the committee, and I took exception—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member cannot refer to a matter engaging the attention of a special committee until the report of that committee is before the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I took exception to the irregularity and consequently—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I simply wish to refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll) who claimed that in the event of his motion carrying it would have to be followed by a bill. There is a bill before the House at the present time dealing with the same matter, which the Minister of Agriculture asks to have withdrawn, and which is an exact copy of the suspended clause of the Act of 1914. Consequently, we would gain considerable time by proceeding with the bill rather than with the resolution. I would point out that the resolution lacks only two days of having been on the order paper for three months. Can a private member hold up legislation by a motion remaining on the order paper in this way?

Mr. CARROLL: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I may say I had one opportunity, and one opportunity only, of moving this resolution, as I explained to the House a few minutes ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Therefore—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I think this discussion has lasted long enough. A few moments ago, when the point of order was taken, I intimated that I inclined to the view that the hon. member could not proceed with his motion whilst the same subject matter was regularly on the order paper before the House. I have listened to the remarks made on both sides, and I still hold the same opinion, that if the motion was proceeded with it would "anticipate a matter already appointed for consideration by the House," such as the subject matter of the bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. The case is exactly in point and I am deciding according to parliamentary practice.

Let me remind hon. members that, technical as the objection may at first sight seem to be, and arbitrary as the rules may sometimes appear—and I do not wish to lecture hon. members—these rules are the result of centuries of deliberation. When one studies them every day, as I do, one finds that there is a profound philosophy in, and a raison d'être for, each and every rule governing our parliamentary procedure. They were enacted for the protection of the people and of parliament as well.

Coming back to the point of order, I affirm my ruling that this debate cannot be proceeded with this afternoon because there is on the order paper a matter already appointed for consideration by the House, similar to that contained in the motion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

SUPPLY

MARINE AND FISHERIES

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Ocean and river service—investigation into wrecks, $12,300.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I could not be present the other evening to hear the last part of the speech of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). He has imposed upon himself a great deal of work in connection with the investigation into the wreck of the Alaskan on the Pacific coast, and he is to be commended for the great interest he has taken in this matter. I shall carefully examine and consider the evidence which was brought before the Commissioner of Wrecks and the assessors, and their report thereon together with the remarks of my hon. friend.

4 p.m.

As far as the Commissioner of Wrecks is concerned, I desire to say that his main function is to find out whether the master or other officers are at fault in the loss of their ship. During the course of the investigation there was nothing to show that the unfortunate men who lost their lives in that wreck were in any way responsible for the disaster. However, I promise my hon. friend that if the evidence adduced points to the fact that the owners neglected to comply with any of the laws and regulations governing shipping—for instance, if they failed to report the condition of the machinery of the Alaskan—instructions will be given for the necessary steps to be taken to bring them before the proper tribunal.

With regard to changing the mode of holding these investigations, and the suggestion of my hon. friend that an Admiralty judge could discharge the duties much more satisfactorily, I may say that masters, mates and pilots would be the first to protest against such a change. They claim that these investigations can be much better conducted by men of the craft, men who have had practical experience in seamanship and who know the difficulties which have to be overcome on the high seas. There is much to be said in support of their contention; and the fact that the investigator is a certificated master and has to be assisted by two assessors, also certificated masters, would seem to me to ensure a thorough investigation in all cases. Of course, mistakes may be made. However, the argument of my hon. friend will be fully considered. I think he has made a strong case for reducing the tonnage of vessels subject to inspection so far as the hull is concerned. This matter has been brought to my attention by my hon. friend personally many times, and I am free to admit that I have been rather impressed by the arguments he has put forward to obtain that change. The law we have now has been in force since 1882. Inspection is required for vessels over 150 tons, and of course, all passenger vessels whatever their tonnage must be inspected. There are objections, coming especially from the owners of the smaller boats, which are very numerous, as my hon. friend knows. There may be objections so far as the expense which the change would involve is concerned, but that is of secondary importance. It is my intention that there shall be a full revision of the Shipping Act next year, and this question will be one of those which will engage the attention of the government, and I can assure my hon. friend that his arguments will be given all the consideration they deserve.

As regards the question of clearing up the trail on the west coast and replacing the bridges, I shall be pleased to confer with my colleague the Minister of Public Works and try and get what my hon. friend has asked for in the matter.

So far as the life-saving improvements are concerned, I have already announced what was the intention of the department, and I am pleased to see that my hon. friend has declared himself satisfied with the programme we have in view.

Item agreed to.

Navigation schools, $8,000.

Mr. MARTELL: I should like to bring to the attention of the hon. minister the matter I spoke of last year, the remuneration which is paid to men like Captain Marshall O'Hara who are conducting schools for master mariners. I think I brought to the attention of the minister last year what an excellent officer Captain O'Hara was, and I prayed the minister to be good enough to consider the advisability of giving him an increase in salary. I should like to ask if that has been done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Captain O'Hara is now receiving $1,860 a year, or $155 monthly. Of course, I should be pleased if there was an opportunity to increase his salary. I may say that there are many officers and employees of the department for whom increases are asked, but I find difficulty in increasing the amount of my estimates both in council and in parliament.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not criticizing the hon. minister in regard to that. I know there are many demands for increases of salary, but my impression is this, coming from a race of sea-faring men; "They that go down to the sea in ships, they that do business in great waters", as the Bible says, are not, in my opinion, getting adequate remuneration for services. It is all very well to ask for increases in a department where a great number of those concerned are landlubbers looking after the rights of master mariners and sailors. All I have to ask is that the sailor of this country get adequate return for the work that he gives. I represent a constituency which in days gone by built the largest sailing vessels in the world and produced some of the greatest mariners in the world, and I would like to see more men of that type in the minister's department.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend may be sure that his representations will be fully considered.

Mr. McBRIDE: What salary does Captain Eddy receive, at Vancouver?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Captain Eddy is Supervising Examiner of Masters and Mates and gives lectures as well in the navigation school. His salary, which comes under another item, is $2,580.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where are these schools?

Mr. LAPOINTE: At Halifax, Yarmouth, North Sydney, St. John, Quebec, Kingston, Collingwood, and Vancouver.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is $1,000 given to each?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. Some of them run the year round, and others only for some months each year. The salaries paid vary according to the length of time these men are engaged. In Halifax and Yarmouth the instructors give their whole time; in North Sydney four months; in St. John their whole time; in Quebec four months; and I think it is whole time in Collingwood and Vancouver.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose a study of the principles of navigation and of the chart and compass is carried on at these schools?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is to provide instruction for seafaring men who want to qualify as masters and mates. Afterwards they have to pass their examinations for certificates as officers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this all that they cost Canada—just $8,000?

Mr. LAPOINTE: For these schools, yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I mean the training for masters and mates. This is all the Dominion pays for education of this kind?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the temporary relief of distressed seamen, pay legal expenses and the cost of shipping books and forms, $5,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has some resolution on the order paper about this, too. What is the relationship between the resolution and this vote?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This appropriation is to provide for the relief of destitute or otherwise distressed seamen in foreign countries and bring them home. The resolution on the order paper is applicable only to sailors working on Canadian ships.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I would think the minister could reduce this estimate if previously it has taken care of all of them.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has not always, because I see that in 1921-2 the expenditure was $15,991. We cannot fix a definite amount because it depends on the wrecks that occur and the number of people who may have to be helped out of this appropriation.

Mr. MARTELL: Was it formerly the case that the master of a wrecked vessel when taken to a foreign port could not be sent home at the expense of the Canadian people? The sailors were looked after, but I understand the master mariner could not be sent home at the expense of the Dominion. As I understand it, under the present resolution masters may be treated in the same way as sailors.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know that any distinction was ever made in this respect between masters and seamen.

Mr. MARTELL: I might say, with all deference to the minister, the old rule was that the master of a ship was not in any way helped home. In the old days the sailors were taken charge of and sent home, but a master could not be returned to this country at the expense of Canada. I know that was the case, from facts within my own personal knowledge.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It may have been the practice, but there was nothing in the law to warrant differentiation in treatment as between masters and men.

Mr. MARTELL: Is that practice followed now? It is a bad practice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has not been followed of late.

Mr. McBRIDE: The master of a ship can claim from the owner of the ship the right to be brought home and to be helped in case of sickness, or any other difficulty he gets into. The sailors cannot do that, as I understand it.

Item agreed to.

Removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $5,000.

Mr. KYTE: Does this apply to the wrecks of sunken vessels?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, it is especially for that purpose.

Mr. KYTE: Does the department undertake to remove the wrecks of sunken vessels in navigable waters in all cases, or is the unfortunate owner required to pay the cost of the removal?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We always try to recover from the owners the amount which the department has spent.

Mr. KYTE: I may point out that very often great hardship is worked in such cases. Very frequently men are engaged in the coasting trade when that employment is not very remunerative and when the vessels are without any insurance. In such cases if the master loses his vessel it seems to be an additional hardship to call upon him to pay for the cost of removing the wreck. I have one or two cases in mind, and I am glad to have the assurance of the minister that the department is prepared to pay the cost where the owner cannot afford to do so himself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As a matter of fact, the usual custom is for the department to do the work and recover from the owners. The department has to see that the obstructions are removed as quickly as possible. In such cases we must pay the men we employ and we try to recover from the owners afterwards.

Mr. KYTE: I have in mind now a case where a vessel was lost in the mouth of a river in Prince Edward Island. That wreck is at the bottom, but the department has informed the unfortunate owner that he has to maintain a buoy there as a protection to other vessels that might encounter the obstruction. That is a continuing cost upon the owner that he can very ill afford to pay. I should like very much if the minister would take that case into consideration, and I will bring it to his attention later on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I certainly will.

Mr. HOCKEN: Under this heading I should like to ask the minister if adequate measures are taken for the protection of navigation. This vote provides for the removal of obstructions. But we had lately the case of the wreck of the Marvale. What provisions are made in the shape of wireless equipment and other means to prevent that kind of thing? As I understand it is easily possible now for any vessel to ascertain exactly where it is in a fog. Devices were perfected during the war which enabled ships in the North Sea in a dense fog to tell their exact position. So that the wreck of the Marvale off the coast off Cape Race might easily have been prevented if the proper precautions had been taken. Is there an efficient wireless service there so that a vessel can ascertain its location? If not, I should like to know from the minister if some improvements could not be made in this direction for the protection of shipping in those foggy areas around Cape Race and the shores of Newfoundland.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have no objection to answer my hon. friend now, though the matter will come up later under another item. In the specific case to which my hon. friend has referred if its position had been asked for by the Marvale it could have been given. All the necessary facilities exist for that purpose. There is a direction-finding station at Cape Race quite in the vicinity where this accident occurred. The station was in full operation and we are fully convinced that its direction could have been given to the Marvale.

Mr. HOCKEN: Then, do I understand the minister to indicate that the wreck of the Marvale was a case of neglect on the part of the master?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not say that. What I say is that the facilities for giving the directions to the vessel were there.

Mr. HOCKEN: I see, and he did not take sufficient precautions to ascertain through those facilities where he was.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He never asked the officers in charge of the station.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to call the attention of the minister to an obstruction in Seymour Narrows on the east coast of Vancouver Island. There is a rock there which is something like ten feet below the surface at low water, and there is a strong tide which runs at the rate of nine or ten miles an hour through the strait. The result is that the passage is made very dangerous for vessels passing through. While there is a good width of water on the east side the danger is very much increased because there is a channel on one side, also with a very swift current, which tends to drive the boats over to this rock. It was only a year or two ago—possibly two or three years now—when one of the big American boats—because this is in the direct line of travel from Seattle to Skagway—was coming down and the current carried the stern in and she struck this rock knocking a hole in her bottom. Fortunately, they were able to beach the steamer about a mile and a half or a couple of miles further down, and by that time she had practically sunk, otherwise there would have been a total loss of life. It is calculated it would only cost four or five thousand dollars to blow this rock up. It consists of two pinnacles and it would not cost a great deal to blow them up. This would mean safety of navigation to the vessels taking that route. If this is not done there is going to be a big disaster there some day, because the boats that follow that route may be carried away by this current and driven over on to this rock. I think some of the officials of the department will remember the disaster referred to. I do not recall the name of the boat. Had she not been beached in the way I have described the whole of her passengers would have been lost.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The suggestion of my hon. friend would not come under this item, not even under this department. This item deals only with obstructions caused by wrecks or sunken vessels. The removal of this rock would come under the Department of Public Works, but I shall be pleased to submit the remarks of my hon. friend to my colleague.

Mr. NEILL: I thought perhaps the Minister of Marine and Fisheries might prove more generous than the Minister of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

Inspection of live stock shipments, $3,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume this is the work carried on, according to the Minister of Agriculture, by Mr. Duncan Marshall, and we can discuss that subject. What is meant by inspection of live stock by the Marine department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This item was in the estimates prior to Mr. Duncan Marshall being discussed in the Canadian parliament. This appropriation is for the purpose of defraying costs incurred in the inspection of live stock for shipment in vessels, as provided by chapter 130, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906. Under that act ships carrying live stock cannot clear from port without a government inspection certificate. The additional $500 required for 1923-4 as compared with 1922-23 is to provide for the salary and expenses of an inspector at the port of St. John, N.B.—part time—and for salary increases for two inspectors at the port of Montreal.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It has been suggested to the minister that he should consider combining the work of inspection with the Department of Agriculture. We are told that we are going to have all our live stock shipments inspected by that department. Therefore, we should get rid of overlapping which seems to be unnecessary. Most of the information covered by the certificate is purely formal, and does not amount to anything at all, such as the seaworthiness of the boat and that sort of thing, because all that is looked after particularly in connection with passenger boats; so that the inspection of live stock should be dealt with by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LAPOINTE: With the expansion which agriculture will take under the new regulations, I think the suggestion of my hon. friend might be accepted.

Item agreed to.

To continue subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Are these under the supervision of the Department of Marine?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was spent last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We spent the entire amount: $25,000 to the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company Limited, and the other $10,000 to the Pacific Salvage Company Limited, on the western coast.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that by contract or services rendered?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What work was done by the Quebec company last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The company salvaged $47,766 last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many wrecks did they look after?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Ten wrecks in the Quebec district.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the wrecking contract given as the result of a tender, or how?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was renewed. They are the only people who possess the necessary plant for that purpose. The contract was renewed twice, I understand, for five years, and it was renewed again last year for a similar period.

Item agreed to.

Unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was the amount spent last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was $4,202.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What were the unforeseen items?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is for expenses which could not be anticipated—legal expenses, criminal investigations, advice, assistance of experts, and so forth.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has this item been in for many years?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The same amount?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, $5,000. Last year the expenditure was $4,202 and the previous year it was only $2,186, but the amount asked for was the same.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much the year before?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have only the two years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A fair ratio of increased cost with the change of government.

Item agreed to.

Life-saving service, including rewards for saving life, $90,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Is this under the minister's department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. LEWIS: And it is maintained by the department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. WALLACE: It was brought to my attention that the life-saving station near the end of Long Point, Lake Erie, is not in a position to function properly. I have never been there myself, but I am informed that this station is greatly in need of a power boat equipment. It is located on the inside of the point, on the bay side, where no wrecks ever occur, or could possibly occur, because there is no navigation there. It is at least five miles away from the point where any wreck could occur. They are only equipped with a rowboat, and a power boat is needed. I think it would be an advantage to put the life-saving station on the outside of the point where wrecks are likely to occur. As it is at present, a power boat or tug could leave Port Dover and reach any possible wreck just as quickly as the life-saving crew could reach it by rowing there. I think it would be well if the department would look into this, and see if some improvement could not be made regarding this station.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall be glad to have the officers of the department investigate what my hon. friend has just said, more so because the station to which he refers is one where we are spending most money in Ontario. The maintenance is at a cost of $7,500 a year, and the others are at much smaller amounts. The amount spent last year to the end of March—that does not include the month of April—is $60,635.96. I mean that some accounts had not reached the department in April.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister himself decide who is to obtain money for saving life? That is, are awards made, or are these amounts merely for maintenance of the stations?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is for maintenance of stations on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are any rewards paid?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. The appropriation covers rewards for saving life on the high seas where exceptional bravery is shown and risks taken in rescues. These rewards are made to the crews of Canadian vessels making rescues or the crews of other lines who rescue lives from danger. Of course claims for such rewards are investigated by a branch of the department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much was paid for claims in that channel alone?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid I cannot give my right hon. friend that information now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is an order in council required for approval of a recommendation for the payment of a reward for life-saving, or does the minister dole out the money himself?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If the amount is small, the minister deals with the matter himself. That has always been the practice. But if the amount is a little large, the matter goes through the formality of an order in council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No order in council is then legally necessary. I should like to know about how much is paid in this case, because this is really an extraordinary power.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am informed that it is possible that no money at all was paid last year for any reward of that kind, but I could not say that positively. I will try to get the information for my right hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic Survey and to provide for the maintenance and repairs of hydrographic steamers, $364,080.

Mr. LEWIS: I was wondering whether this is a work that needs to be repeated every year, whether it is maintenance work. Will the work ever be done and this amount decreased?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to provide for the continuation of surveys by ship parties on the Atlantic coast, in the lower St. Lawrence and on the Pacific coast, and by small land parties in harbours and sheltered localities; the maintenance of automatic gauges on the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes and the compilation of charts and other similar work in the nature of aids to safe navigation in Canadian waters. It is new work that is going on. There are a few vessels which are especially engaged in this work under a branch of the department under Mr. Stewart.

Mr. LEWIS: Is the increase due to statutory increases?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The increase of $14,080 is to provide for certain necessary repairs and renewals of plant and equipment. It is also proposed to keep the steamer Acadia in commission for the work of ice-breaking operation on the south-eastern coast of Nova Scotia. That will involve some additional expenditure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On every boat that one sails on, they have to-day apparently the most perfect charts showing, not only every indentation and every rock, but a photograph of the surface of the water. These all seem to be very old, indicating that the variations, shiftings since, have not been very great. I really would think it was not necessary to maintain so expensive a service as this costing between a quarter and half a million dollars a year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Still, we cannot grant all the demands which are made upon the department for new surveys.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You could never do that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are some especially for British Columbia at the present time. A large part of our coast has not been properly surveyed for the safety of navigation so far.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It seems very strange to me. I do not know anything they do not know; I have never heard any complaint that there was any uncertainty as to the character of the coast line or of the floor of the ocean. Is it not just possible that the primary incitement to more expenditure comes from those who get the money, and they utilize others to serve their own ends? That is the case in many parts of the service.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I may give my hon. friend a resumé of the work which it is intended to do this year.

As regards the Pacific coast survey, the main work in hand on the Pacific coast is a survey of the waters off the southwest of Aristazabel and Banks islands in the southeast entrance to Hecate strait, as well as the completion of the surveys of Seaforth channel and Lama passage. The fine weather of the season from about the middle of June to the beginning of September will be used for this work. During the earlier part of the season and the autumn months operations will consist of sounding in the entrances to Victoria and Esquimalt, a re-sweeping of First narrows, Victoria harbour, and surveys of Genoa bay, Perceval narrows, Port Blackney, Laredo channel, Surf and Cumshewa inlets. For this work the steamer Lillooet and the small tug Restless will be available.

As regards the Atlantic coast survey, as soon as the Acadia has finished fitting out she will be stationed off the west coast of Nova Scotia at the approach to the Bay of Fundy and will continue the off-shore sounding started last season, when the work showed considerable necessity for new soundings. Next winter it is proposed that she continue breaking ice for the harbours of the southeast coast of Nova Scotia.

As regards the Lower St. Lawrence surveys, the party on the Cartier will, during the coming season, work in the southwest approach to the channel north of Anticosti island where traffic has greatly increased during the last few years and through which more information, both as regards hydrography and magnetic declination, is urgently required.

As regards the Magdalen island survey, the steamer Bayfield has been thoroughly overhauled during the past winter and will take up again the work of charting the waters in the vicinity of Magdalen islands, which had to be discontinued during 1922 on account of the condition of the steamer.

As regards the St. Lawrence river, it is proposed to undertake an examination of the river from end to end for the purpose of locating recent improvements, buoys, lights and conspicuous marks to furnish necessary information for a revision of the present charts. This is a work that has to continue almost permanently.

Mr. MARTELL: Exactly at what time did the Canadian authorities take over this work from the Imperial authorities? For a great number of years the British authorities kept the cruisers on the Atlantic doing this work and making charts. I do not see them there now? I presume that the Canadian authorities have taken that work over?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I cannot give the exact date when it was done but the Canadian authorities did take it over.

Mr. MARTELL: They have taken over a lot of work in that connection.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I heard, during the minister's explanation, soft, sweet accents from that vessel the Restless. Is there not a history to that vessel?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is not the same Restless that my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought I had struck one of the holes out of which this money went. Apparently there is another Restless?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid I must confess my ignorance of the history of the former Restless.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh. However when we get to the right Restless—the government seems to be restless on both oceans—I shall have a few words to say about it. Whereabouts in the Estimates will this Restless on the Atlantic coast come in?

Mr. MARTELL: Under the Customs estimates.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is not in my department at all; I was getting restless myself.

Item agreed to.

Radiotelegraph service and to provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations and the general administration of radiotelegraphy throughout the Dominion, $454,900.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a mistake in the printed Estimates. An amount of $22,410 ought to be deducted from the total. Certain items that had originally been included in the vote were struck out in council before the estimates were submitted to the House; hence the mistake. The amount therefore ought to be $432,490, which should give a decrease of $7,910 instead of an increase as shown in the estimates as they appear to the committee.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the revenue from licenses last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: On the east coast the revenue for the fiscal year 1921-22 was $16,931.28; for ten months during the fiscal year 1922-23 it was $2,141.34. The Barrington passage station was closed on August 15, 1922. This station had been opened during the war and was no longer necessary. On the west coast the revenue for the fiscal year 1921-22 was $37,065.93, and for ten months during the following year $28,263.51. On the Great Lakes the revenue in 1921-22 was $164.55; for the following year the figures are not yet available.

Mr. LEWIS: I notice there is provision for a building and maintenance for wireless stations. Would not this more properly come under the Public Works department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Part of the government wireless operations, as a matter of fact, is under the Public Works department still, while there is a branch of it in the National Defence department. But the radiotelegraphic service generally is under the Marine department. The idea is rather to concentrate instead of separating, and I think that all branches of the service will be under the Marine department as soon as this can be conveniently accomplished.

Mr. LEWIS: I was referring to the building itself. Why should not this be under the Public Works department, so that we might know how much money was being expended for all buildings? If it were included under the Public Works estimates we could ascertain just how much was being spent for all public buildings, and it would be so much easier to find it all under the estimates of one department.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The building of wireless stations is rather a technical work, and I think my hon. friend will agree that it is better that the technical officers of the Department of Marine, who are specially qualified for this undertaking, should do the work under that department.

Mr. LEWIS: I know that the technical equipment must be installed by the special officers of the Marine department, but I was referring to the building itself. However, would the minister inform the committee where the new buildings will be erected?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The amount includes revotes in the sum of $19,500 for additions and alterations to the government system provided for last year but which it was considered desirable to hold over for a year. These include the installation of continuous wave transmitters at Dead Tree point and Digby island, British Columbia, and the erection of a dwelling house at the Canso direction finding station. In addition to this provision is also made for the erection of a direction finding station at a point to be selected on the west coast; for the erection of a direction finding station at St. Paul's island; for the erection of beacon stations at Belle Isle, and Heath Point, Anticosti; for the conversion of the station at Cape Sable into a direction finding station; for the transfer of Cape Bear station to Charlottetown; of the Cape Lazo station at Powell river, and of the Dead Tree Point station to Queen Charlotte city; and for the installation of continuous wave transmitters at Estevan station and Gonzales hill station. There is a net decrease of $7,910 as compared with 1922-23.

Mr. LEWIS: This includes salaries?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, everything.

Mr. WALLACE: What stations are along the north shore of lake Erie? Is there a station at Port Burwell?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are stations at Port Arthur, Sault Ste. Marie, Midland, Port Burwell, Toronto, Kingston, and Tobermory. These are the stations in Ontario.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister can tell us how much of the vote goes for salaries? That should really be under civil government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have not the information here, I am sorry to say. This includes operators' salaries.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course it does. I should have thought that my hon. friend would at least have the information of the major part of his estimates.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I thought I was well supplied with information, but obviously this is one respect in which I cannot answer my hon. friend's question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can his deputy not turn up the salaries? While my hon. friend's deputy is looking that up—I think he must have the information in that big volume—I should like to know what became of the radiotelegraph bill. I suppose it went through?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When the bill was before us the minister told me I could get particulars of the receipts from licenses when this item was under discussion. Can my friend give me this information now?

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think I gave all that information when the bill was before the House on its second reading.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I was not present, because I was told I could get the information when these estimates were up.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will have a statement prepared and present it after eight o'clock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon friend can tell me what has been done under that bill.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The only arrangement made has been with the province of Manitoba. In fact I said at the time the bill was before the House that it was the case of Manitoba which we wanted to meet. The fee for a receiving station was one dollar. We have increased it to two dollars, half of which will go to the province of Manitoba.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that basis is followed we will have no loss in fees.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. As a matter of fact the number of receiving stations is increasing daily.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh yes. Then there is another matter I intended to bring up when the bill was called, but apparently I was out of the House. Has the minister taken this matter up with the military authorities? We spend a good deal of money on the instruction of signal men, and many people connected with the service are of the view that if these distributing stations were placed in the hands of the men who are being trained in our military camps and the like it would be the most practical way of teaching them. They could do the broadcasting just as well as private individuals and at the same time receive very good instruction. Has that been considered by my hon. friend?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Negotiations are taking place at the present time between the two departments to that end. But even now a large number of military men are employed in this work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the item had better stand until we get the information.

Item 227 stands.

Tidal and current survey, $35,000.

Mr. LEWIS: What is the difference between this item and No. 226?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Provision is made for the enlargement of necessary operations, involving an increase of $5,000 as compared with last year. The work of the tidal and current survey is for the scientific investigation of tides and currents on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, Hudson bay, and the Arctic ocean, and the prediction of tides and the determination of tide levels. This is an appropriation for the operation and maintenance of permanent tidal stations, the equipment of tidal stations during the summer months, the salaries of tidal and current observers and the preparation and publication of tide tables for the two coasts, comprising two complete series and three abridged editions—all for the safety and convenience of navigation. This information is also furnished for harbour construction work.

5 p.m.

Mr. LEWIS: This is permanent work?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Public works, chargeable to capital, Marine Department, River St. Lawrence ship channel—maintenance and operating dredging fleet, $613,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is for the maintenance and operation of the ship channel dredging fleet and for the necessary machinery and plant. The fleet is employed on the improvement of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec and then farther east to Father Point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is the Marine and Fisheries department in charge of this? I see it comes under Public Works?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, but this has been under the Marine department for about twenty years. I remember when it was transferred to the Marine and Fisheries. I think it was under the late Mr. Prefontaine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How long has the vote run at this figure? This is a very, very large amount. It appears we are dredging and changing the floor of the St. Lawrence all the time, and then spending more money to find out how we have changed it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. The amount is less than it was in former years. The item is to carry out the programme for a thirty-five foot channel. There are still many miles of dredging to be done. Dredging operations have been going on for the last twenty years and will continue until the work is completed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the minister give us the expenditure—not the vote—for a few years back?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have here only the expenditure for 1921—$614,619. That is about $1,000 more than the current vote. I think it is about the average.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister cannot give us what was spent the year before?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A minimum of information is being furnished.

Mr. JELLIFF: How much dredging was done last year? I should like to have a record of what this money went for.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do you mean the quantity of dredging or the expenditure?

Mr. JELLIFF: I mean the amount of work done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have the total amount of dredging which has been done so far towards the execution of the programme, the number of cubic yards done and remaining to be done, but I could not give my hon. friend the amount for last year.

Mr. JELLIFF: How much has it cost per cubic yard? Is this all done at the government's expense?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. JELLIFF: There is no contract?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not so far as this work is concerned. It is all done by the government's boats.

Mr. JELLIFF: Has the minister any way of comparing the cost under the present system with the cost under contract by outside parties?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am informed that the officers of the department have figured that out, and that it is much cheaper to do the work ourselves.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could my hon. friend tell me what he pays for wages under this item, and how many men he has employed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have here the names of the masters, junior officers and seamen on every boat and dredge used in connection with that work, and the salary paid to each, but I am sorry I have not got the total amount paid. It will take a long time to read the list if my hon. friend wants it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend can give me some idea of the total cost on the one hand, and the number of new appointees in the last year on the other.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The trouble is these men are constantly changing. They are not permanent but are engaged every spring, and those who are employed now are not in many cases the ones who were employed last year. They go to better vessels if they can find them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it a fact that there has been a clean sweep?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How clean a sweep?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course, everything that was done was clean.

Mr. LEWIS: Can the minister tell us what is the difference between item 229, $613,000 for dredging, and item 164, dredging, Ontario and Quebec, $625,000?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Item 164 is in the Public Works department estimates.

Mr. LEWIS: Is there any overlapping? Are the two departments dredging in the same place?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all. Our work is in the channel. The Public Works department is dredging at the ports and harbours. Our work relates only to providing a clear channel for vessels in the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SHAW: I understand—perhaps the minister will correct me if I am wrong—that there are three dredging services; the dredging of the St. Lawrence ship channel, for which this vote is asked; the dredging service of the Public Works department along the borders of the St. Lawrence river; and thirdly, the dredging service of the Railway department. Will the minister tell us the exact jurisdiction of each, and why it is necessary to have so many dredging services with necessarily heavy overhead costs? Is it not possible to combine all these services into one?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid the only information I can give is as regards my own department. As far as the Public Works department is concerned, the work that is done is along the lines suggested by my hon. friend. As far as the Railway department is concerned, I could not supply the information. Perhaps their dredging is in connection with the canals. I do not know of any dredging done by the railways as a department.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. SHAW: How can the minister's department tell exactly where his jurisdiction begins as compared with the Public Works department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Our work is on the channel of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. SHAW: Is there no danger of conflict between his department and the Public Works department in determining what the channel is?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There has never been any friction between the two departments in that regard. I am only too glad, when somebody applies for some work that does not come under my department, to pass the buck, if I may use the expression.

Mr. SHAW: Then I want to call to the attention of the minister the sworn statement of the Deputy Minister of Public Works, in charge of that department which has to do with dredging the borders of the St. Lawrence river. He suggests, if my memory serves me properly, that the entire St. Lawrence dredging operations could be conducted far more efficiently under the Public Works department than under the two departments as now constituted. That is an argument which I think must commend itself to the minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He believes in his own effectiveness, I see.

Mr. SHAW: Quite right, I think.

Mr. MILLAR: What is the depth of the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is thirty feet the whole distance now, but this work is being done to deepen it to thirty-five feet.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Does the minister know of a new port being opened on the southern shore of the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where is that?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): On the south shore, some place near the Richelieu.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will try to develop the port of Quebec before starting a new one.

Mr. MILLAR: Will this work of dredging the St. Lawrence be permanent when completed, or will the mud wash in again?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is to be made permanent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What does the minister mean by permanent? Surely he does not mean that he is going to have a vote of this kind just for one or two years. Will not dredging have to be done continually in the channel.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to pay for the operation and the maintenance of all the boats, dredges and barges which are used on this dredging work.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But it is a continual work going on year after year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It will go on so long as the programme is not completely executed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What does the minister mean by the programme?

Mr. LAPOINTE: A thirty-five foot channel from Montreal to the sea.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hope the minister will let one who is interested, myself, know when he has found a method of clearing a channel by dredging and maintaining it clear without dredging afterwards.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of course, some dredging will be necessary, but not this considerable work, which will go on until the programme is completed.

Mr. GOULD: Under which department do the dredging operations at Fort William and Port Arthur take place?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Public Works. We have only to do with the St. Lawrence channel.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister considered some union of the dredging forces of the Dominion? There really seems no reason in the world why part should be in one department and part in another. I would think that by doing so, dredges otherwise discarded might be utilized for other services.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The suggestion deserves consideration. I claim that I am a reformer but I do not want to make changes without due thought. This division was probably made for good reasons, but I am quite willing to try and study what reasons influenced those who made the change. These operations were carried on in the same way during the time of the former government and also under different Ministers of Marine. I am quite willing to consider the matter and see whether it is desirable to make a change.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): On this very point, I heard a discussion only this week that we should have in this country at a very early date a Minister of Finance who would find out whether there could not be a consolidation of departments which would result in there being only one department for example, instead of three. We want a concentration of departments under one head, which would effect a great saving. That would apply to a great many departments of this government and that is where the economy is to come in the future. That is what is being argued now in the country and I think there is something in it. This government ought to have what they have in the United States, a special officer to go through the budget and see whether economies can be introduced as respects certain items of the different departments. We are all talking about economy, but if we adhere to the present system we shall never make any progress. The Prime Minister or the Finance Minister ought to get the ministers together and ask this one question: Where can savings be effected by consolidation, co-operation or co-ordination? A substantial reduction in the budget of Canada can be effected in that particular direction. There certainly will be a movement on the part of the people of this country in a very short time, in the direction of closer consideration of the requirements of all the departments in order to determine whether we cannot have economies whether it be by co-ordination or some other means.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As a matter of fact, one department, the Naval Service, has disappeared since last year. Part of it is now under the Department of National Defence and part of it under the Marine and Fisheries department.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not see very much disappearance myself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Formerly it was under the Marine and Fisheries, now it is under the Minister of National Defence. The Minister of National Defence is given another name but the officers are all there. If the getting together of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance would not bring any more results than the much vaunted amalgamation of the Naval Service with the Department of National Defence, I think we might save time in transportation. What might be done would be to bring all dredging, all really public works operations, under the Public Works department. Or, if you wish to consider them as marine matters bring them all under the Marine department. Here we have today dredging operations going on under the Marine department, dredging operations under the Public Works department and I venture to say—I have not the least hesitation in saying—there is more going on under the Railway department, and the same thing obtains in the case of elevators. We have some public elevators operated by the Railway department, others operated by the Department of Trade and Commerce, others operated even by the Marine department, whose head could not keep out of it—I do not mean the present minister—

Mr. GRAHAM: His predecessor.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —and we have others operated by the National Railway Board, and I am not sure that I have completed the list yet. Anyway, they are scattered over the whole service just in proportion to the avidity of the minister and deputy minister of each department. Why that should be I never could understand. The progress of reform was somewhat rapid for years but it was not all accomplished. I venture to suggest to this government that in these days of peace, restfulness and tranquillity—when otherwise ministers are simply softening the cushions of office, watching for commissions to place their friends on, watching for vacancies in the Senate and scanning the mortality on the bench—

An hon. MEMBER: Providence will act there without any effort of ours.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —why could they not devote some attention to moving—even though it be slowly, at least moving—in the direction of real reform in the service. Get all these dredging operations together, get our elevators together, and have unity of control and economy of operation.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend spoke of the naval amalgamation and said that the officers were all there. Surely he knows that is not the case. There is one deputy minister for two services, there were at least two deputies before.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are there still but are called by other names.

Mr. GRAHAM: They are not, pardon, me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Desbarats is there and Sir Eugene Fiset is there. I notice from a return that he is drawing $10,500 a year.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend is playing on words.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not, I am playing on dollars.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend may be an authority on dollars sometimes but not an authority on cents. Sir Eugene Fiset has retired and is entitled to draw his pay until his leave of absence is concluded. Sir Eugene Fiset will not come back, there will be but one deputy minister where formerly there were two.

Mr. MEIGHEN: For the Department of National Defence?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is Mr. Desbarats who will be called Financial Controller. He will enjoy the same salary with the status of a deputy.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what he is.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is he now? He has the status of a deputy and he has the salary, without question. The minister cannot be right. I am not positive unless I know but I am pretty sure I read a return just lately to the effect that the retirement of Sir Eugene Fiset applied to one sphere only not to the two. I am no authority on this but it seems there is a military sphere and there is a civil sphere, and the one he has retired from is the least remunerative and also carries with it quite a pension allowance. The other sphere he still fills and intends to continue in. This is in a return I read very lately. I should not say I was astonished but I noted very carefully in my own mind the large amount that he will be drawing when this so-called retirement takes effect.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend, I hope, will allow me to put him right. Sir Eugene Fiset has retired on a pension which takes effect on the expiration of his leave of absence.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When will that come?

Mr. GRAHAM: At the end of this year, I think; I forget the exact time. Then he will be out of the service and drawing the pension to which he is entitled under the act. The legislation passed provides for one deputy where there were two before. We are getting away from this item I am afraid. If my right hon. friend will remember there was a full discussion of the legislation which was introduced when he learned something with respect to the inability of anybody to mix the navy with the militia to any great extent, and the proposition to retain Mr. Desbarats as deputy of the Naval Service as a separate branch of the Defence department. One of the branches of parliament refused to acquiesce—

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was right, it was not the minister's fault.

Mr. GRAHAM: —and that department will only have one deputy instead of two as heretofore.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will there be a controller or anybody else with the salary of a deputy?

Mr. GRAHAM: The department has a controller who is altogether distinct from the deputy. I think the Department of Defence should have a controller—and I think some of my hon. friend's colleagues approve of that—in charge of all finances, as has the Railway department and other departments. I think, perhaps, that department requires it as much if not more than the others. There will be a controller, but he will not have the status of a deputy minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What salary?

Mr. GRAHAM: He draws $6,000 a year, but he will not have the status of a deputy minister.

Mr. MILLAR: Referring to the St. Lawrence river, what effect will the completion of this drainage have on the price of transporting grain? Recently, considerable grain is going by water to Quebec. I found out last year, or at least during the shipping season of the year, that no grain leaves Quebec by water. I infer that some of the larger boats cannot go from Quebec to Montreal, but after the completion of this work all the boats large and small will be able to reach Montreal, and it may perhaps lower the rate on grain. Is there any reasonable grounds for expecting a lower rate?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think the larger ships will go beyond Quebec. That is my candid opinion.

Mr. MILLAR: With thirty-five feet depth of channel, will there not be more ships going to Montreal than at present?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, certainly more, but with some danger. In many places the channel is narrow and there will always be a certain element of difficulty between Quebec and Montreal. One of the main objects is to try to obtain reduced rates of insurance. When a route is safe for navigation—and this applies below Quebec as well as between Quebec and Montreal—it is hoped, and we even have the assurance, that the rates of marine insurance will be reduced, which will go a long way towards meeting the views of my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLAR: After this work is completed, what will be the reason why the larger boats will not be able to reach Montreal? Will it be because of the width of the channel or the depth of it or what? Will it be because thirty-five feet is not sufficient?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Because the length of the larger boats is great and the width of the channel will not permit them to go through, particularly at certain times of the season, to Montreal without a certain amount of danger.

Mr. SHAW: The triplication of dredging services, as appears to be the fact, leads one to the conclusion that if considerable saving is to be made in the public service, then we must obtain, so far as government services are concerned, some co-ordinating factor. I remember reading a report of Sir George Murray, written some ten years ago, in which he suggests that it would be a great thing to have co-ordination in the public service. Just at this point I want to suggest that the British Treasury Board has been empowered to do that particular work. Our Treasury Board, as I understand it, is not empowered to undertake the work of co-ordination, not by statute in any event. It seems to me that something has to be done along that line, if a saving is to be effected, and I am positive that that is the method which will result in the saving of perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars to this country every year. I think it is along that line that exploration must be made if we are going to have not only an efficient public service in the country, but also an economical public service.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the maintenance and operation of Sorel shipyard, $125,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is where the minister has effected the greatest slaughter, I understand.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He has slain both his thousands and his tens of thousands here, and I notice an extra charge of $35,000. Is that a life-saving allowance to the minister for protecting his favourites?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know what my hon. friend is referring to when he speaks of slaughter. I am a man of peaceful disposition. Everyone agrees on that point. The $35,000 shown as an increase over 1922-23 is simply a transfer from the appropriation for the St. Lawrence ship channel, and does not indicate any enlargement of operations at the shipyard. The transfer was made as a matter of convenience, and to enable certain expenditures to be accounted for directly that were previously accounted for indirectly through the ship channel appropriation. Expenditures for 1921-22 and 1922-23 are included in ship channel expenditures. Hereafter expenditures for the shipyard will be shown separately. As a matter of fact nothing more will be done at Sorel. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How many men have been dismissed from the Sorel yard?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As few as possible. There is no pleasure dismissing officials from the public service. I do not know the number.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister must have had an exceedingly painful year and a half, judging from my own mail which was laden down with tales of woe of the minister's operations in the Sorel yard. He has made it a veritable patronage paradise.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was my good fortune, on acount of the kindness of heart of my colleague, to be away at the time those things occurred. But I am quite willing to take the full responsibility, because I have to. Still being away, it was less hard for me to bear it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who was the actual executioner?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister must know who was in his place when he was away.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) was acting minister, but I have to take full responsibility for everything. He is the best man in the world, and I know he must have suffered very much when he had to perform his duty in that connection.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How many returned men were fired?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No one that I know of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know of any.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister would give particulars. What is the wage bill paid this year?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have that. My memorandum reads as follows:

1. To provide for the payment of the salaries for; Office staff, composed of one director, secretary, typists, assistant director, one accountant and staff of nine bookkeepers, one storekeeper and staff of seven clerks, one mechanical draughtsman and staff of four draughtsmen, one timekeeper and clerk.. ..	$33,600
2. To be applied to the maintenance and payment of salaries of fourteen shop foremen and their clerks..	29,160
3. To be applied for the payment of salaries of five watchmen, one gate-keeper, four firemen, one messenger and six pumpmen.. ..	19,000

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that the whole list?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose we take the first lot, $33,600; how many of those men are new appointees of my hon. friend or of his substitute?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have not the details to give my hon. friend that information.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will ask the minister to let it stand until he can get the details.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am informed that six employees were dismissed. I may say to my right hon. friend that after 1911 the whole staff was changed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister did not take much of a look at the operations of his substitute if he suggests six.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Out of item number one mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think this item should stand until the minister gets some knowledge of it, because the facts in connection with the Sorel shipyard are really startling.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No man was dismissed unless there was good ground for his dismissal along the lines mentioned by the Prime Minister at the beginning of the session.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The certificate of a member showing that he wanted him to go.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That a man has been guilty of offensive partisanship to the knowledge of a member of parliament. If this is not done, there is an investigation, and the report of the commissioner is accepted. Surely my right hon. friend should not complain. We are keeping everywhere men that my right hon. friend's friends put into the service during their regime, and we are being blamed by our own friends for doing that. Surely we should not incur any criticism in this House, when men who were dismissed for nothing after 1912, are still asking for work and we are not giving that work to them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister need never expect that he will do anything that will satisfy those who seek for patronage, nor will I ever find fault with the minister for dismissing where offensive partisanship has been established. The investigations which the minister has carried on, where even he has dared to investigate—and the same applies to other departments—have been farcical to a degree.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have had letters from his own strong supporters who are disgusted with the operations of those investigators. To state to the House that a member says that a man is guilty of partisanship, without producing the certificate or giving any details whatever, is most unfair to anyone in the service. The cases are not one or two or a dozen; they are simply legion. There should certainly be a fair investigation and a fair show given. If there has been active participation in politics, the minister has a perfect right to dismiss, and I could find no fault with him. Instead of that no regard whatever has been had to the circumstances.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, there has.

Mr. MEIGHEN: None at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let my right hon. friend come to my own city where there is an agency of the Marine department, and let him say how many men have been dismissed in that agency, when all those who were dismissed after 1912 are asking for work, when my colleagues here are asking me to replace those men who were dismissed, when they are not put to work and when we are keeping on the others who have not been dismissed. If there is one thing we should not deserve any blame for, it is in connection with the question of dismissals, and I am sure the remarks of my right hon. friend will be read with great interest by the people of the city of Quebec.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I sincerely hope they will. The minister often refers to 1912. We have had the same experience that he has had, but we certainly went far more thoroughly into the cases.

Mr. CANNON: Does my right hon. friend say that seriously?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend makes very exaggerated statements, and other ministers make them too. I shall not be afraid, in the slightest degree, of any fair comparison by any unprejudiced person. The minister must remember that there is this difference: For some years the Civil Service Commission has been established, and appointments have been made by that commission, wholly without regard to politics. That constitutes a somewhat different situation. If, after that is done, the axe of patronage is still to be wielded, the case is hopeless. A government that takes the responsibility, boldly faces the situation, strips patronage from its hands almost entirely,—entirely as regards the service under the commission,—undoubtedly takes a penalty for doing so, and a very severe one, as the hon. member knows the late government did. Once that is done, surely the least a new government can do is to permit appointees to remain in the service, to permit patronage to remain outside, and not to seek to reintroduce it and the old methods and to seek to justify it by something that took place years and years ago. I do not know about Quebec. I gave the minister this credit. As regards his own department, I have not had any substantial complaints from the city of Quebec. They may have thought their case was hopeless.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have requests from my own friends.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They may know the power of the minister and have conceded that despair only was their lot. I do not know, but in other departments from the city and district of Quebec, I have had cases simply by the score. The reason why I rose was that I have had cases from his own department at this point. Undoubtedly, slaughter went on that I do not think was any credit to the government. I am glad the minister himself was not there. It appears that the immediately guilty party, the Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Bureau), has now returned to the House.

Mr. BUREAU: Present.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He had access to the minister's seat for just long enough to create this situation in the town of Sorel.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, and it is a good one. I have nothing to take back on it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, he never takes anything back. He is a master of the patronage axe, and I do not think we could do better now than listen to just what he has accomplished.

Mr. BUREAU: I have accomplished a great deal in the interest of the country. The foreman at Sorel Mr. Lacouture, an appointee of the late government, we retain. He was appointed to replace a Liberal who was fired without inquiry or anything else by the friends of my right hon. friend. He is there still. The dismissals that took place, took place because there were reasons for them. The reasons were that the member came and upon his own responsibility made the statement that acts of partisanship had been committed, stating the particular acts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Verbally?

Mr. BUREAU: In writing, and verbally sometimes. This may have been verbal.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister produce these written statements of the member?

Mr. BUREAU: The verbal ones I could not produce, but there are some I could produce.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think they are mostly verbal.

Mr. BUREAU: I made inquiries. I went to Sorel, and I made inquires of the foreman as to the respective value of the men. Those that went out went out because they were not the proper persons to fill these situations and those who were appointed to the situations were better men than they were. I did this in the interest of the Sorel yard and of the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I really thought I would get a better justification than that—

Mr. BUREAU: There can be none.

Mr. MEIGHEN: —from the ingenuity of the Minister of Customs. What he says in effect is: "I was approached by the member for the district—"

Mr. BUREAU: I did not say that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: "—and the member for the district said that they were partisans."

Mr. BUREAU: They were accused of partisanship.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know the difference. He wanted them to go, and in justice to this great Dominion and to the public service, he fired them.

Mr. BUREAU: In the interest of the Dominion, yes.

Mr. SHAW: I think in view of the interesting dissertation that has taken place, we ought to have from the minister a list of the number dismissed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the names.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does it interest the hon. member too?

Mr. SHAW: Yes, I am interested intensely in this matter of partisanship, and I am anxious to see that the Civil Service Commission operates, not only as regards the Sorel yards, but in every part of the Dominion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know that those men are under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SHAW: I would be willing to put them under the commission and to use my influence to bring that about. One thing the country is disgusted with is the abuse of patronage which has been inflicted on it for many years.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What does my hon. friend think of those people who were dismissed without any reason a few years ago and who want their positions back now? What is his opinion? Must they suffer the injustice permanently, if an injustice was done? Has he kindness in his heart only for those new men who were appointed to take their places?

Mr. SHAW: I have every sympathy with anyone who has suffered injustice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But sympathy is not enough.

Mr. SHAW: I do not see however how the minister can do justice to those who have suffered injustice by doing injustice to others.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, but by redressing the injustice that was done.

Mr. SHAW: You cannot redress an injustice to an individual by dismissing someone else, and thus doing an injustice to him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is that so? If that someone else worked for the dismissal of his predecessor and himself got the position under unfair circumstances, does my hon. friend say that such a man is entitled to that position, while the other who has been ousted should suffer permanently?

Mr. BUREAU: That is bad justice.

Mr. SHAW: I suggest that the minister bring us the list that we may investigate the matter, and if anyone has improperly secured a position then certainly he should not be continued in it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On the minister's argument, he had better bring us the list for 1896. According to the minister, the further back you go the stronger the case becomes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I never went further back than 1912.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because that suits the minister. It just shows the futility of the whole argument; if you keep going back, you might as well go back from one election to another to the birth of patronage.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But those men are all dead.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You can never get rid of patronage on any principle of that kind, and that is what the hon. member (Mr. Shaw) is endeavouring to point out. What the committee wants to know is what justification there is for these dismissals. I think the minister should produce the names together with the certificate of the member, giving such particulars as can be inquired into, so that we may see what is behind it all. Parliament has a right to this.

Mr. CANNON: Before the minister does that he might produce the record in regard to the 12,000 Liberal employees who were dismissed by the friends of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I should like that too.

Mr. CANNON: The right hon. gentleman would like the record in regard to the dismissals in 1911?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. CANNON: It is all very fine for the leader of the Opposition to give us—

Mr. BUREAU: A lecture.

Mr. CANNON: Yes, a lecture—

Mr. LAPOINTE: After all his friends are safe.

Mr. CANNON: It is all very well, I say, for the right hon. gentleman to give us a lecture in 1923. But I want him to go back to 1911.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why not go back to 1896?

Mr. CANNON: If he wants to go back to 1896, I think I am justified in asking him first to go back to 1911 and explain why his friends at that time dismissed 12,000 Liberal employees, without investigation, inquiry or anything else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. CANNON: The leader of the Opposition cannot, now that he is in opposition, maintain a theory which his friends put altogether aside when they were in power. We know how the government of this country was run from 1911 to 1921; there was nothing but patronage, and rank patronage too, everywhere. The Civil Service Commission was a joke and a farce, and that joke and that farce are in evidence everywhere; they were continued under the pretext of abolishing patronage, although enabling hon. gentlemen to appoint their own partisans and supporters throughout the country. The whole Civil Service is filled with Conservative employees, and we contend that if one thing is good for the Tories it is just as good for the Liberals—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And it is worse for the country.

Mr. CANNON: I do not know about that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Oh, yes; the country says so.

Mr. CANNON: I would rather have a friend do my work than an opponent; at least I should have more confidence in him. I was going to say, the last man who should get up in this House and raise the debate which is now going on is the leader of the Opposition, who was the arch-partisan while in power. Nothing he did was inspired by anything else than the party spirit. We all know that. And although to-day he gets up in this Chamber and sings an altogether different tune, I do not think that many people will believe him. So far as we are concerned in Quebec, and for that matter throughout the country, we want our ministers to be ministers of the Crown and to run the country themselves; we do not want the Civil Service to do it. As regards my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Shaw) I think he has a right to be strongly opposed to patronage if he sees fit. Every man is entitled to his own views, and the hon. member may be perfectly sincere. I have absolutely no right to doubt that hon. gentleman's sincerity, as I have to doubt that of the leader of the Opposition; because the hon. member for Calgary has no past as the leader of the Opposition has. But I might ask the hon. gentleman from Calgary to explain how it is, if patronage is such a bad thing, that when the farmers came into power in Ontario, in Manitoba and in Alberta patronage was revived and they knew exactly how to play the game as well as any other party?

Mr. SHAW: I want to tell the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) that I have not the slightest sympathy for anyone who plays the patronage game, I do not care whether it be a Farmers' government, a Conservative government in 1911, or a Liberal government in 1923.

Mr. MICHAUD: In the name of what party is the hon. member speaking?

Mr. SHAW: The sooner an effort is made by every government, no matter what it is, to eliminate patronage entirely from the public service, the better it will be for the country.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I would inform the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Cannon) that our provincial government in Manitoba does not exercise any patronage. I am not opposed to the Liberals placing their own friends in positions if there are vacancies and if those friends happen to be qualified and the positions are properly filled under the Civil Service Act. But I do want to assure the hon. gentleman, speaking in the name of my own province, that we have no patronage in Manitoba.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I want to put a thought or two to the member for Dorchester that he can think over in the dinner hour.

Mr. CANNON: I can think it over right now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member spoilt his speech, so far as it might have any effect on a fair-minded audience, by the assertion that the Civil Service Commission is a farce.

Mr. CANNON: Under the old government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under the late government, yes; that is what the hon. member said. Now, there has been some investigation lately, and there is not a member of this House who would suggest sincerely—

Mr. CANNON: Will you allow me a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. CANNON: If the right hon. gentleman intended that the Civil Service Commission should carry out the law as it stands, how is it that the old commissioners were replaced by friends of his?

Mr. MEIGHEN: To start with, they were not replaced by friends of ours. One member of the three on the commission was appointed by the government that preceded us, the Laurier government. The secretary, who has always been known to be most influential and to take an active part in the commission, was also appointed by the preceding government. All we did was to appoint the other two. I do not know that such a proceeding can be duplicated by the present administration.

Mr. CANNON: Does the right hon. gentleman claim that it is not a matter of patronage to appoint a minister to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was no minister appointed.

Mr. CANNON: What about Doctor Roche?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He had been a minister, it is true.

Mr. CANNON: He could not be both at the same time; if it had been possible, he would have taken both jobs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the hon. member gets anywhere by an assertion of that sort, if it is put before any fair-minded man in the Dominion. Hon. members know the present chairman of the commission, and I do not think that anyone will seriously suggest that the commission has acted partisanly in all the time of its existence, either under the late government or under this government. The member who asserts it is a mere partisan instrument does not contribute much to the establishment of the judicial character of the commission, nor does he contribute much to his own reputation in this House. What he states is simply not the fact. I want to say this, however, I have heard the number dismissed by the previous government stated at different times variously: at one time it is 6,000, at another time 8,000, and to-day 12,000. I have no doubt that in a few years it will have risen to 112,000. But one will be as near the truth as the other. Certainly, there were some dismissals and there was debate upon them. But I believe that any hon. member who reads the debates will see that they were not carried to any great extreme; and there was considered to be, as I think there was in some cases, ample justification for certain dismissals. It is true, however, that there was not at that time in the outside service of Canada any pretence at a commission. No government had dared to take that course, and no member of this House can know, unless he was a member of that government that did, what a government will encounter that does dare to take such a step.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would my hon. friend agree that I should reinstate in my department all the employees dismissed without investigation in 1912?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Dear me! I think if he would replace all those dismissed in 1896 he would not be going back too far.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend say there was an investigation in every case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There was an investigation. There may not have been an investigation by a commissioner under the Inquiries Act in each case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Most of the officers in my department were dismissed without investigation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If we are to go back from one election to the other we get nowhere. There can never be reform if you are going to carry on the principle of vengeance; it cannot be done. The hon. gentleman says I was a partisan of the partisans. I venture to suggest to him that I had to do with the appointment directly of more Liberals than Conservatives. In my own county only one was dismissed. Nor was I a member of the government until the middle of 1913, in fact I was not a member of the Cabinet until 1915. I do not think he was quite justified in pointing to me as the arch-offender in effecting dismissals. Besides, the majority of the appointments I had to do with, which were chiefly to the Bench, were in favour of Liberals.

Mr. JACOBS: During the Union Government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and Liberals were appointed who opposed Union government.

Mr. JACOBS: Who are they?

Mr. MEIGHEN: One of them was the son of a recent hon. member opposite who was opposed to Union government throughout. He was appointed by the previous government a judge of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan.

An hon. MEMBER: The exception proves the rule.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Others I could name one by one. These were much more important offices than the petty ones whose occupants hon. gentlemen opposite have dismissed. Faithful servants, one by one, score by score, have been dismissed. That is not in the interests of those individuals, it is not in the interests of the civil service of Canada. A strong effort has to be made to stand to what we have reached. If we cannot get any farther, let us at least not retrogress. I make that appeal to the government, and I do so particularly on this item because I think it is in relation to it that the chief transgression has taken place.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: We were discussing item 230:

To provide for the maintenance and operating of Sorel shipyard, $125,000.

Mr. LEWIS: The hon. minister said that an amount of $35,000 was transferred to this item and that that accounted for the increase In regard to the item from which it was transferred has that $35,000 been deducted therefrom?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has not. As a matter of fact, it was intended to have a much larger amount for the other item, but council decided to reduce it to make an increase of $35,000 only.

Mr. LEWIS: And that amount was transferred to this item?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not know that item No. 229 carried. I understood it was standing till the minister got certain information.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 227 is to stand, and items 228 and 229 have been carried.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Item 230 stands till the information comes down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend will be surprised at the extent of the misinformation he has received. The number of permanent employees who were dismissed there is very very small indeed. I think I could count them on the fingers of one hand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are mostly on the temporary list, are they not?

Mr LAPOINTE: They are day labourers. They are in no way permanent. More than that, as to those day labourers who perhaps have considered themselves as being dismissed or as to whom my right hon. friend has been informed by somebody to that effect other shifts have been put on for fifteen days or three weeks just to give employment to the unemployed in the city of Sorel. That was done under the supervision of Mr. Lacouture, the Superintendent of the Sorel shipyards, and a supporter of the former government with the co-operation of the charitable associations of Sorel. I do not want to pose as a philanthropist in the matter at all, but really I do not deserve the criticism that is being made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister would let this item stand and bring down the information, if it is of the character he describes, I assure him there will be no delay so far as I am concerned when this item is reached again.

Mr. BUREAU: What is the information my hon. friend wants? The names of the people put out?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. BUREAU: There were three or four only.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The information I ask for will be found in Hansard. I asked for it about a quarter to six this evening—the dismissals, and on whose certificate, and what the nature of the information was.

Mr. BUREAU: I can tell my hon. friend as to one man. One man, Morgan, was dismissed, and dismissed for cause because he was the secretary of the Tory organization during the last fight.

Mr. CARROLL: Bad man.

Mr. BUREAU: Politically, not otherwise, and he was dismissed on the recommendation of Mr. Cardin, the member for that constituency who stated that he was the secretary of the Tory organization and took an active part against him in the last election. I thought that was sufficient ground, and I dismissed him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is one.

Mr. BUREAU: There are two more. I forget their names—

Mr. MEIGHEN: About two hundred more, according to my information.

Mr. BUREAU: —but they were dismissed on the same grounds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If that is the fact there should be no delay when the item is reached again.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have been discussing this for over two hours now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the information is not here.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. BUREAU: I have given one third of the information. There are two more I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh!

Mr. BUREAU: That is all.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have asked the minister to hold this item until we get the information. He admits he has not it here. He cannot get through all his estimates, he is holding one item; why not hold this one? About eight have gone through.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Because we have been discussing this for two hours, and to let the item stand would mean the whole discussion over again.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will discuss it longer still, then.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I really do not deserve the criticism my hon. friend is making. In fact, I am blamed all the time for keeping his friends in office. That is the blame I am receiving, not what he is ascribing to me now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not dispute that, but does he not see the help I am giving him now against that attack?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend is not giving any help to his friends whom I am keeping in office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not looking to my friends. I am looking to the country.

Item 230 stands.

Amount required for the construction of one self-propelling Hopper barge (revote), $54,800.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When was this started?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Last year. It is under construction now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The contract is for $274,000. It was granted to Canadian Vickers, who were the lowest tenderers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How much has been spent?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was $219,200 expended before the close of the year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Two hundred and nineteen thousand dollars had been expended, and the contract is for $224,000—

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, $274,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh. Were there any other tenderers besides Canadian Vickers?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, yes, I have the list here:

The Davie Shipbuilding & Repairing Co. Ltd. Lauzon, Levis, P.Q.	$300,000
Fraser Brace, Limited, Montreal	295,000
Engines by Inglis, Toronto, and boilers by the Robb Engineering Works	310,000
Engine and boilers by J. Englis & Co. Toronto	315,000
The Collingwood Shipbuilding Co., Collingwood	319,000
The Port Arthur Shipbuilding Co. Ltd. Port Arthur, Ont.	322,675
The Halifax Shipyards, Limited, Halifax, N.S.	324,500
The Wallace Shipyards, Limited, Vancouver.	340,000
The Midland Shipbuilding Co., Midland, Ont.	385,250

The tender of Vickers was $274,000, much by far the lowest.

Mr. BOYS: Did I understand the minister to say the contract price was $274,000?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. BOYS: Why was $285,000 required?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That was the estimated cost by the engineers of the department.

Item agreed to.

Agencies—rents and contingencies, $212,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The increase of $2,000 there provides for the statutory increases in salary.

Mr. HANSON: How many agencies are there and where are they located?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are eight agents located as follows: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Montreal, Parry Sound, Victoria and Prince Rupert.

Mr. HANSON: Why is it necessary to maintain a separate agency in the province of Prince Edward Island? That must be a very small territory. It seems to me it could be yoked up with either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That agency covers the northern coast of Nova Scotia and the northern coast of New Brunswick as well as Prince Edward Island and the Magdalen islands.

Mr. HANSON: The New Brunswick agency only covers the Bay of Fundy?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Bay of Fundy and as far as Lockeport in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BOYS: What are the agencies for, what work do they perform?

Mr. LAPOINTE: For placing and maintaining necessary aids to navigation and other work. All the lightkeepers and the vessels employed in placing the buoys are under the control of these agencies.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $650,000.

Mr. LEGER: I should like to ask the minister if the lightkeepers were given any increase in salaries last year?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. I must admit that there have been requests for increases in the salaries of the lightkeepers, and their case is deserving of consideration. The only reason for not yielding to these requests is economy and the disinclination of parliament to increase any expenditure at the present time. I may say that my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Forke) told me that he desired to plead for the lightkeepers when this item came up. The question of increasing salaries is under consideration.

Mr. LEWIS: Are these men under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The most of them are.

Mr. LEWIS: Would they get the customary statutory increase if they were under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a minimum and a maximum salary provided in every class and they are getting it year by year.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Is there any prospect of a reclassification in the near future in response to the demand that was made?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The question is being considered.

Mr. LEGER: These officers are certainly not adequately paid for the work they do. Their duty is to protect navigation and in this work they are engaged from the month of April, you might say, up to the month of October. The salary for part time officers engaged in this work amounts to only about $30 or $35 a month. With very few exceptions the amount they receive is only $30, which is wholly inadequate to maintain themselves and their families. They are located in very lonely and isolated spots and I think they should have a little more salary than they are now paid in order to enjoy a fair living. Inadequate payment is not much of an encouragement to efficient work. It may be said that if these men do not want the positions they can resign, but that would not be a fair answer to their request. Other men would take the jobs at insufficient salaries. I would ask the minister to consider the advisability of making a reclassification of these officers in order that they may be a little better paid in the future.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Did the minister state the average salary paid to lighthouse keepers?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are twenty classes of lightkeepers. In class 1, the minimum is $2,880 and the maximum $3.240. There are 10 lightkeepers in class 1.

Mr. HANSON: What class of lightkeepers would those be?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are in charge of the most important lights. Those are Cape Race, Belle Isle, Bird Rocks, Pelee passage, Estevan point, Pachena, Leonard island, Langara, and Sand Heads. There are 21 lightkeepers in class 2. The salary is from $2,100 to 2,280. There are 56 lightkeepers in class 3, with salaries from $1,560 to $1,740. There are 39 in class 4, with salary from $1,500 to $1,680. There are 13 in class 5 with salary from $1,440 to $1,620. There are 17 in class 6 with salary from $960 to $1,200. There are 32 in class 7 with salary from $840 to $930.

Mr. BUREAU: Dispense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am giving the details.

Mr. BUREAU: There are not going to be any lighthouses on the prairies.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The classes continue until we reach class 19 which relate to the contract lights. In class 19 the minimum is $60 and the maximum $80.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is that per month?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Per annum.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What do they do for that wage?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Those are small wharf lights.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are the keepers supposed to stay there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; they go and light up in the evening and go in the morning to extinguish the lights.

Mr. HANSON: What is the lowest class of full time men and what are they paid?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would be class No. 7, $840 to $930 per year.

[Mr. Leger.]

Mr. HANSON: I had an interview with one of these gentlemen from my own native country when up here last winter, and he told me he got the magnificent salary of $200 a year. He had been on the job for twenty years. He was appointed by the old government prior to 1911. He further told me it was impossible for him to do any outside work, except once in a while, when he did a little fishing. He also told me he could not possibly live on the salary.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He could not.

Mr. HANSON: And I quite agreed with him. I think this case ought to receive special consideration. This man does the classifying of the lights. Is that under the department? I do not suppose the Civil Service Commission do it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was done by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DUFF: Arthur Young and Company.

Mr. BUREAU: No, Griffenhagen.

Mr. HANSON: Possibly the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) thinks he could do it a great deal better himself, but I did not ask him.

Mr. DUFF: I could do it better than the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson).

Mr. HANSON: I take issue on that.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member would take issue on anything.

Mr. LEWIS: Is there an allowance in addition to the salary? This item says, "salary and allowance".

Mr. LAPOINTE: They got a living bonus for the last two years, in common with all other civil servants.

Mr. LEWIS: That covers the allowance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not an allowance.

Mr. HANSON: That is not an allowance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand the minister is a little diffident about increasing the salaries because of possible objection by the House. We might appropriate Duncan Marshall's salary and distribute it amongst these men.

Mr. MILLAR: Is the salary of $840 for seven months' or twelve months' service?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In many cases it is for twelve months' service.

Mr. FORKE: I met some of those men from the lighthouses and discussed the whole situation with them, the wages they were getting, the hours they were putting in, the loneliness of their lives, the disadvantage in not being able to educate their children and a great many things. I think really they ought to get a little more pay than they are getting at the present time. I am just as much for economy as any one, but I would like to begin at the top and come down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad the hon. member takes that view. I know the work that the lighthouse keepers are doing on the St. Lawrence, and I know that in many cases their salaries are not commensurate with the services they give to the country. The employees who deserve the first consideration are the lighthouse keepers.

Mr. HANSON: Could the minister tell us in what class the Gannett Rock light keeper in the Bay of Fundy is placed?

Mr. TOBIN: Could the minister increase the salaries of the lighthouse keepers without going to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BUREAU: No, they have been classified.

An hon. MEMBER: There is no light on Gannett Rock.

Mr. HANSON: Yes, I have been there myself.

Mr. LUCAS: Are any of these lighthouse keepers provided with a house?

Mr. LAPOINTE: All the permanent ones, the full-time men have houses.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to lighthouses, $850,000.

Mr. LEWIS: Has the maintenance any reference to food, or do these men supply their own food?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This increase has reference to fuel, delivery and supply, freight and cartage, for the use of the staff.

Mr. HANSON: Are these purchases by tender or by agents of the department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In every case by tender and contract, except for small merchandise requirements?

Mr. LEWIS: How many lighthouses has the department to keep up?

Mr. HANSON: The minister said supplies were purchased by tender. Is there a public advertisement for these supplies, or is there a selected list in each case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We ask prices from the dealers in every locality.

Mr. HANSON: The minister asks the friends of the government to put in tenders?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. HANSON: I understand there are no public tenders called for in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No more in New Brunswick than elsewhere. We are asking the dealers for prices of articles in the different localities. Tories and Grits are invited to give their prices, and in many cases the friends of my hon. friends get the contract.

Mr. HANSON: Is the minister quite sure of that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, there have been many changes in this country.

Mr. HANSON: That is why the minister is where he is.

Mr. LEGER: I wish to draw the attention of the minister to an item which seems to have been neglected by the agent in the district. I refer to a very important light on the mainland, at Richibucto Cape. I understand the keeper has asked the agent to look after it and get it put in proper shape, but it has not been done. Some complaint was made last year. This place is open from the shore right up to the light and the cattle go in. The agent paid no attention to the complaint and it has not been remedied. Therefore, I call the attention of the minister to it so that he may see that the matter will be attended to in the future.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member is not the only member who is in such a position. There are many others. We are asking for repairs of that kind. This vote formerly was $1,000,000, but it has been decreased to $850,000, and the unwillingness to increase the appropriation is responsible for certain necessary repairs, such as those my hon. friend mentioned, not being done, but I will try to meet his views.

Mr. BOYS: It was only $800,000 in 1920-21.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I mean a few years ago, especially before the war

Mr. HANSON: While this may not be exactly relevant to this item, I should like to get some information in regard to the tugboat Murray Stewart. Last year there was an appropriation of $100,000 in the estimates to replace the Lambton that was lost in lake Superior in a gale with large loss of life. On that occasion the minister, in making an explanation, stated that no decision had been reached whether a boat would be purchased or one would be built. Later on it was discovered that the minister had purchased from one, Mr. Stewart, a gentleman living in Toronto very close to Mr. M. J. Haney, president of the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company, a ship called the Murray Stewart. This vessel, I am instructed, was built at Port Arthur some few years ago. I am informed that her hull was new but her machinery was old, having been transferred from some other vessel; that the purchase price paid by the department was some $80,000. I am further advised that that vessel had been sent down from the Great Lakes to the harbour of St. John, not under charter, but in the hands of agents for sale, and that at any time that boat could have been purchased for $25,000. Later on, after the Lambton was lost, friends of the government, including Mr. M. J. Haney and his friend, Mr. Stewart, of Toronto, had this boat transferred from the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company to Mr. Stewart's name, and they unloaded her on the the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the sum of $80,000. This boat was intended to replace an icebreaker. I understand that she is absolutely useless for that purpose, and that the $80,000 expended for that purpose might just as well have been thrown away; that this spring boats had to be hired to do in Midland harbour the work that she was designed to do. I should like to have some information about this boat other than what has been given in answer to an inquiry made through the order paper.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I must say that this boat was to replace the Lambton, as my hon. friend has said, and an appropriation of $100,000 was voted last year for that purpose. The department was in immediate need of a boat for the work which had to be performed by her. Only three boats which were suitable for that purpose were offered to the department. They were visited and inspected by the engineers of the department.

Mr. HANSON: What are their names?

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I cannot give the names just now.

Mr. HANSON: The deputy will know.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Murray Stewart was recommended to me by the officers of the department as being the one best suited for the purpose. It is a steel tug, length 119 feet, beam 26 feet, gross tonnage 234.46, registered tonnage 92.25, speed 11 knots. It was built in 1918 by the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company, complete except for the engine, which was rebuilt at the time of the construction of the hull. She was purchased for $80,000 from James Frederick Martin Stewart, of Toronto, to replace the Lambton which was lost on lake Superior in the spring of 1922. The boat will also be used to render assistance to ships handling grain in Georgian bay ports at the close of navigation each year. Although she is not intended for an icebreaker, she is much more suited for that work than the one she has replaced.

Mr. HANSON: That may be true, but if she was purchased for an icebreaker she could not perform that duty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: She never was purchased for an icebreaker.

Mr. HANSON: That was the explanation given by the minister last year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: To assist ships in handling grain.

Mr. HANSON: I think I can refer the minister to the pages of Hansard. Is it not a fact that the engines in this boat were second-hand engines taken out of another boat, and that when she was purchased she had no engines?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The engines were in excellent condition, although second-hand.

Mr. HANSON: That, of course, is not answering my question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I said "although second-hand."

Mr. HANSON: I beg pardon. Did the minister see Mr. Haney in regard to the purchase from Mr. Stewart? If he had any correspondence with him, I would be glad if he would produce it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not know the gentlemen. I would not recognize them anywhere if I saw them

Mr. HANSON: The minister surely does not say that he has never met Mr. Haney who laboured for the government down in the Maritime provinces?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry. My hon. friend is better acquainted than I am with him. I do not know him.

Mr. TOBIN: He has a good name, anyway.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is this vessel equipped with wireless?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it is not.

Mr. ARTHURS: Are the other vessels presently on the Great Lakes equipped with wireless??

Mr. LAPOINTE: None of them on the Great Lakes.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why not? The Minister will remember that last fall there was a great difficulty in regard to navigation on lake Superior. Would it not be well to have these vessels equipped with wireless?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The suggestion is one which deserves consideration.

Mr. ARTHURS: More than that, I think it deserves very favourable consideration. I think all these vessels should be equipped with wireless, especially in view of the situation as it was last fall and as it may be any other season on the Great Lakes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is right, but there was no wireless there two or three years ago any more than there is now. I have been trying to keep expenditures down.

Mr. ARTHURS: May I be excused for saying that that is not absolutely in accordance with the facts. The Simcoe was equipped with wireless until she was taken down during the war for service on the ocean.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Lambton was not equipped with wireless.

Mr. HANSON: Coming back to the Murray Stewart, I understand that the minister had this boat thoroughly inspected before he bought it?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Did the minister not have to have substantial repairs made on that vessel this last spring—to the boilers?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Some repairs were made on that boat.

Mr. HANSON: After she had been inspected and purchased and $80,000 paid over?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, the $80,000 represented the price of the boat as she was when we bought her.

Mr. HANSON: I agree. What repairs were put on her and were tenders asked for those repairs?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I may inform my hon. friend that this boat cost over $200,000 to build.

Mr. HANSON: This boat was built by the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company in their own plant. They transferred into her an old engine that had seen years of service, an engine that was in no sense modern. That is one of the reasons why she was not sold when she was down on the Atlantic coast. If she cost $200,000, it must be borne in mind that she was built during the war at the peak of prices, and that is no criterion at all of her value to-day. If the minister doubts that statement he can just consider the merchant marine.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not responsible for the merchant marine.

Mr. HANSON: But you are responsible for this vessel.

Mr. BUREAU: He wants you to broaden out.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Though I have the greatest opinion of my hon. friend I must confess that when it is necessary to purchase another boat for my department I shall rather take the advice of the chief engineers and other experts of the department than that of the hon. member.

Mr. HANSON: Of course, that is a very cheap remark to make.

Mr. BUREAU: But very appropriate.

Mr. HANSON: But it does not make me subside for a moment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, no, I do not want to do that.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to know when this boat was taken over, where the crew came from, what was the cost of getting her to the scene of operations, and how long it took to get her there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend should not be over-inquisitive about this item, and I will tell him why: It was passed days ago. I do not object, of course, to his asking any questions in reference to the item, even although it has been already voted, so long as they are reasonable; but he must not overstep the limit. I am quite willing to give all the information I have by me, but this matter does not come under this item.

Mr. HANSON: If the minister has not the information I cannot expect him to give it. But do I understand that when we give him a blank cheque, as we did last year, we are never to ask any questions with relation to the expenditure of the money so voted?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all.

Mr. HANSON: Well, that is what it amounts to.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. gentleman misinterprets the minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend gave me a blank cheque of $100,000 for the purchase of a boat; I made a good bargain and got one for $80,000, saving $20,000.

Mr. HANSON: You got a second-hand $25,000 boat for $80,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was built in 1918.

Mr. HANSON: The hull was built in 1917.

Mr. BOYS: If the repairs cost over $20,000 it might not be a good bargain. The deputy minister is probably trying to find out what the repairs cost.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I cannot tell my hon. friend how much was paid for repairs. I was not supposed to answer these questions to-night, because the item to which they relate has already been passed.

Mr. BOYS: Of course, if the minister takes that stand then it ends the matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, the matter is not necessarily ended; I am simply giving the reason for my not having any information to offer hon. gentlemen in reply to these questions.

Mr. BOYS: I am not finding fault at all with the minister; I am only asking for information if it can possibly be got.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall be pleased to get the information.

Mr. BOYS: Then I understand that at the moment the minister cannot tell us what was paid for repairs?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. BOYS: I thought the deputy was looking it up.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: So he is, but he has not been able to find it.

Mr. HANSON: Is it not a fact that the boat was intended, among other things, to be used as an ice-breaker, and that she failed to function as such and the department had to hire other boats to do this class of work?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. HANSON: That is my information.

Mr. BUREAU: Misinformed again.

Mr. SIMPSON: Was this boat used for placing the lightkeepers at the respective stations this spring? If not, was she engaged elsewhere, or was she considered unsuitable for the work?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The ice conditions this year were particularly bad. There was so much ice that it was thought advisable to charter a boat to do the work.

Mr. SIMPSON: I take it, then, that this boat was not used because she was not equipped to stand the ice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was so much ice that it was thought dangerous to use her.

Mr. BOYS: Where can we find the item that provided for the cost of repairs to this boat?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It will be found under Dominion Steamers, item 215.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would impress upon the minister the necessity for equipping all boats of the merchant marine with wireless.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall certainly take the suggestion into consideration.

Mr. MANION: What are the regulations governing the closing down of lighthouses in the fall months? Is there a regular date for closing them down, or do they stay open until the navigation companies decide to discontinue operations?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Navigation is supposed to close on December 20, when the lighthouses are closed.

Mr. MANION: Last year, I know, navigation was open on the Great Lakes after the 20th of December, and the lighthouse keepers were not taken off until some time subsequently.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Navigation closes at the date I have stated, and the lighthouse keepers are picked up as soon as weather conditions permit.

Mr. MANION: I know that navigation was open last year a good deal later than it has been in previous years.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The official date is December 20.

Mr. BOYS: I presume it would be easy for the minister to have his deputy turn to the items that make up the total of $1,500,000 referred to in item 215. If he did that we could find out what was required for the repairs of the boat in question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The repairs to the hull and engine for the year were $11,000.

Mr. HANSON: Was there a tender?

Mr. BOYS: Does that include all repairs? The minister says "hull and engine"; perhaps there were other repairs in addition to these.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The whole amount for the Murray Stewart is $11,000. including all repairs, salaries, fuel, steward supplies and repairs to hull and engine.

Mr. HANSON: Were not tenders called for in connection with repairs to the boiler, and were they not rejected because they were too high?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have no recollection.

Mr. HANSON: I wish the minister would look into the question. My information is that the boilers needed a great deal of repairing and tenders were asked for, but the amounts of the tenders were so high that, in view of the fact that the boat had just been bought, she was patched up instead of being repaired properly.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. gentleman's information is wrong.

Mr. HANSON: I do not think it is.

Item agreed to.

Construction of lights and aids to navigation, including regulation of traffic in the Detroit river and such other places as may be found necessary, $500,000.

Mr. BOYS: There is a very substantial increase of $100,000 here, which I presume the minister will explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A great deal of new construction and renewal work has been postponed from year to year for several years past until it cannot reasonably be postponed any longer. It is proposed to enlarge operations and to begin some of the work this year. For this purpose an increase of $100,000 as compared with 1922-23 is provided for. As a matter of fact, we have from time to time deferred the construction of new lights and other aids to navigation on account of not having the necessary funds. I think most members who represent maritime constituencies have had their constituents urge them to ask for new aids to navigation, and they know that this added expenditure is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BOYS: Are there two or three very large new items, or is the increase generally distributed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is generally distributed. Everything is submitted to the lighthouse board, and no new improvement is made without being recommended by the board; the minister comes next.

Mr. HANSON: Is the minister continuing the practice of only authorizing new lights and aids to navigation that have been first recommended by the lighthouse board; or has he adopted the reverse practice of suggesting these improvements to the board?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where the request is made direct to me, it is sent to the Lighthouse Board, they pass upon it, and the minister accepts their decision; otherwise life would be miserable for me.

Mr. BOYS: I think in an item of this size we ought to have a fuller explanation. A hundred thousand dollars is a great deal of money. Where are the increases immediately to be found?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I can give my hon. friend a list of the new work recommended, but it is very long.

Mr. BOYS: I was not asking the minister to take up the time of the committee with a lot of small things. If he would single out a few of the larger items, I think those are all we would be interested in.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Here are the principal items: Fog alarm and light stations, Green island, Nova Scotia, $30,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is that a new light?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. A fog alarm at West Point, Anticosti, $15,000; a lighthouse and dwelling at Entry island (Magdalens), $18,000. On the Great Lakes there is a fog alarm and lighthouse at Trowbridge island, lake Superior, $30,000; another fog alarm at Angus island, lake Superior, $30,000. In British Columbia, among other items, I find a fog alarm and dwelling at Merry island, $18,000; at Quatsina, fog alarms, $9,000.

Mr. BOYS: What have you got in Kempenfelt bay, lake Simcoe?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hope my hon. friend will send me his requests direct.

Mr. BOYS: I would be glad to do so if the minister would promise to accede to them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will be submitted to the proper board. Then there are renewals recommended at Bunker island, Nova Scotia, $15,000; lighthouses at cape Sable, $16,000; a dwelling at Scatarie, $12,000. In New Brunswick, a dwelling at Machias Seal island, $12,000.

Mr. HANSON: The minister ought to go out and visit those places.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hope to do so next summre and to see my hon. friend there. Then at Anticosti a dwelling, $12,000; a light ship at Princess shoal, $25,000; and so on. I hope I have satisfied my hon. friend.

Mr. HANSON: These are all large expenditures. Have they been recommended by the Lighthouse Board?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Every one of them.

Mr. FANSHER: I see this item also covers regulation of traffic in the Detroit river. What is the nature of the regulation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is the most congested channel in the navigable waters of the country, and the department is looking after its regulation.

Mr. HANSON: What supervision is exercised over the bootleggers in that district?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Customs is looking after that.

Mr. BUREAU: That is all right, don't worry.

Mr. FANSHER: Are there too many boats crossing, do I understand?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh yes, there are many.

Mr. HANSON: Are these new lighthouses being built by tender?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In every case where it is possible. The only exceptions are at isolated points where it would not be possible to obtain tenders.

Item agreed to.

Marine signal service, $104,000.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister explain this item?

[Mr Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is to provide for the maintenance and operation of marine signal service stations. These have been established for the purpose of reporting the movements of ships, weather and ice conditions, and dangers to navigation generally. The system extends from St. John and Halifax to Cape Race and Belle Isle, and from the gulf of St. Lawrence through the Great Lakes to Sault Ste. Marie. The increase of $15,000 as compared with last year is to provide for normal expansion, including statutory salary increases, increased telegraph and telephone tolls, stationery and some necessary repairs.

Mr. BOYS: It is increasing quite rapidly. I see in 1920-21 it was only $65,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, it has been increasing. The marine signal service has expanded tremendously, and requests are continually coming in for a still greater expansion of this service. Undoubtedly it is necessary for the safety of navigation.

Item agreed to.

Administration of pilotage, $250,000.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister mind explaining the decrease in this vote?

Mr. LAPOINTE: With pleasure. Last year provision was made for the construction of a pilot boat at Father Point at a cost of $100,000, which expenditure of course will not be required this year. We have, however, to add $6,000 for statutory increases.

Mr. HANSON: Is it the custom of the department to provide boats for the pilots at the different ports? I understand that the port of St. John pilots have always had to provide their own boats. I am rather surprised to learn that in the province of Quebec the government provides these boats.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The pilots on the St. Lawrence river have been supplied with boats by the department from time immemorial—I suppose prior to there being any pilots at St. John.

Mr. HANSON: It would be interesting to know if the minister will extend this accommodation to the pilots on the Atlantic, because I think the St. John pilots would be very glad to have their boats provided for them by the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The suggestion will have my most serious consideration!

Mr. BUREAU: Do the pilots at St. John take off the mail bags from the steamships?

Mr. HANSON: No.

Mr. BUREAU: These boats on the St. Lawrence take the mail from the incoming steamships and deliver it on the dock, to be shipped by the Intercolonial out West to Vancouver.

Mr. HANSON: They pilot the mail boats just the same. We do not have to lighter them down there like they do at Quebec.

Mr. BUREAU: We do not lighter them. This is so as not to stop the ship. It is to give better service to the people of British Columbia. They come to Father Point, drop the pilot or take one on, the mail bags are taken off and landed on Rimouski wharf, and from there they are taken by the Intercolonial and go on to Vancouver.

Item agreed to.

To provide for breaking ice in Thunder bay, lake Superior and other points deemed advisable for the good of navigation, $40,000.

Mr. MANION: I see the item is the same as last year, $40,000, yet I know there was difficulty there this year in regard to breaking the ice. The company that had the work had a contract price, $40,000, was it not?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MANION: The company that did the breaking of the ice last year fell down on the job this spring, and another company was called in. Was that charged up to the contractors who succeeded in getting the contract for the work?

Mr. BUREAU: That was done while I was acting for the minister. The company that had the contract fell down, and we were wired that ships were stuck in the ice, and that it was pressing that we should do something. Another company offered its services, and we thought it was advisable to accept, which we did. The contract price was paid less the amount charged by the other company, which is being held over to pay the company that took over the work.

Mr. MANION: Then it is the intention of the government to charge the cost up to the contracting company.

Mr. BUREAU: I cannot say, I am no longer acting for that department.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a claim pending with regard to that, but no decision has been arrived at yet.

Mr. HANSON: Why did not the minister send the Murray Stewart up there? That is what she was purchased for, we were told last year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: She was not intended for that, but as we are told that she is such a good boat we may use her.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay pensions to pilots—Louis Rob. Demers, Joseph Lapointe, Bartholemi Lachance, Alphonse Asselin, Elzéar Desrosiers, Hubert Raymond, Arbel Bernier, Adelme Pouliot, Edmond LaRochelle, L. E. Morin, A. T. Simard, Joseph Plante, Victor Vézina, Raymond Baquet, Alfred LaRochelle, Théophile Corriveau, Alphonse Pouliot, Emilio Couillard, Trefflé Delisle, David Dumas, Alfred Gaudreau, F. X. Demeules, Adjutor Baillargeon, Joseph Pouliot, Arthur Baillargeon, John A. Irvine, Camille Bernier, Joseph Eugène Lachance, Elzéar Normand, Philéas Lachance, $9,475.

Mr. BAXTER: I have no objection to the item, of course, but will the minister explain why the pensions for these pilots are chargeable to the vote, while if my impression is correct, the pilots in the maritime province ports which have a pilotage service get their pensions out of the funds provided from the pilotage dues from the vessel. If I am in error, I would like the minister to correct me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is right, but this has been voted since 1906 under an agreement between the pilots of the Quebec district and the government. By order in council of December 5, 1906, provision was made for the payment of an annual pension of $300 to every pilot in the district of Quebec who had retired after reaching the age limit of 65 or in special cases 60 years. In addition and by agreement a life pension is paid to a number of pilots who retired voluntarily in the interests of the service prior to 1913. The number receiving such pension is thirty. This appropriation provides for that number in full. It has been voted by parliament since 1906.

Mr. BAXTER: May I ask the minister further whether there has been within a year or two some change in the St. John pilotage in the nature of having it taken over by the government? I cannot express it more exactly than that. I am under the impression there has been some change in the system.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The pilots of St. John have been brought under the Minister of Marine like those of Quebec, Montreal and other important ports. The Minister of Marine has become the pilotage authority. That was recommended by a royal commission some years ago, and I understand the pilots themselves wanted the change.

Mr. BAXTER: I cannot at all object to it, but I want to know if the same result as takes place in the Quebec or Montreal district will eventually take place at St. John, Halifax and other Maritime province ports; that is, when a pilot is pensioned, will he fall on this general fund, or even though the minister takes charge will it remain a purely local matter?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The agreement I spoke of covered the case of the pilots of the Quebec district who were then pilots. None of those who have pased their examinations and have become pilots after that date come under the provisions of that agreement, and when the pilots who are at present being pensioned under that agreement disappear there will be no such pension paid, because the agreement will not apply to the new pilots.

Item agreed to.

Patrol of the Northern waters of Canada, $15,000.

Mr. BANCROFT: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is to provide for the publication of reports of the Canadian Arctic expedition. Approximately one-half of the reports prepared or to be prepared will be published by the close of the fiscal year, 1922-1923, and it is hoped to complete that part of the work of the expedition before the close of the fiscal year 1923-1924. Also it is hoped to complete the binding of 3 or 4 volumes of these reports, for issue to libraries, universities, and so forth, before the close of the ficsal year 1923-1924. The salaries are as follows: Hon. J. C. Patterson, Investigator of titles to British possessions in Arctic seas, $2,400; F. Johansen, Assistant Zoologist, $2,280.

I might give a list of the volumes prepared by the different scientists with regard to the work of the Arctic expedition, in geology, botany, and so forth.

Mr. HANSON: I am not interested in the names of all the volumes, but I would like the minister to tell us who owns Wrangel island.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I should like to know myself.

Item agreed to.

Department of Marine—Meteorological service including Magnetic Observatory, grants of $500 each to Kingston and Montreal Observatories, and allowance of $400 to L. F. Gorman, Observer at Ottawa, $287,629.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The increase in this item is asked for in order to provide for an enlarged distribution of weather bulletins and for printing the Ontario and Quebec section of the Climatology of Canada, the completion of the Magnetic Observatory at Meanook, Alberta, the replacement of the existing Observatory building at Quebec, the old building having been pronounced beyond repair, and $1,000 for miscellaneous expenses. A saving of $4,871 will be effected in salaries, of $4,000 for repairs to stations, and $500 in travelling expenses.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister explain why a special allowance is made to Mr. L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa? Is that a method adopted to give him a larger salary, or what?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand that this vote has been made for twenty years and that the gentleman deserves his salary to the full extent. I agree that it seems peculiar that he should not have been classified with a fixed sum covering the whole amount of his salary, but this has been an annual appropriation for, as I said, the last twenty years.

Mr. HANSON: I have found in the last session or two since I came up here, that when no better reason can be given for doing a certain thing the reason is assigned "Well this has been done forever and ever". I think that is the very weakest kind of reason that can be advanced for doing this, that and the other thing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is good doctrine coming from a Conservative.

Mr. HANSON: I have heard that reason assigned in the committee very often. It is no reason at all to advance. I submit to the minister that to say that because the thing has been done for an innumerable number of years it must be kept up is no proper explanation. If this gentleman is worth the money why not pay him accordingly? If it is a sop for him or a method to get round the Civil Service Act why not say so? I suggest that if the gentleman is worth the money as the minister suggests he should be paid the salary to which he is entitled and not have money voted each year in this way.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I admit that the observations of my hon. friend appeal to me. I think if he remains a few years in opposition he will become a good reformer. However, I will look into the matter and if it is possible to have the gentleman get his salary otherwise than by this item of $400 additional I will see to it that it is done.

Item agreed to.

Steamboat inspection, $119,210.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The appropriation provides for statutory salary increases and for the appointment of two clerk-stenographers, one in the inspector's office at Port Arthur and one in the inspector's office at Kingston, the whole involving an expenditure of $4,400 in excess of last year.

Item agreed to.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fishery protection services, $880,000.

Mr. HANSON: May I ask the minister if any decision has been reached with respect to the use of Canadian Atlantic ports by American fishermen? That is a live question I think, at the moment, and the House is entitled to a statement with respect to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The question is still under consideration and a decision will be arrived at shortly. I will then be pleased to make an announcement.

Mr. HANSON: That is the statement that has been given out to the press every day for about ten days.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid that in most instances the press merely guessed at it.

Mr. HANSON: Well, they are good guessers. The government is doing nothing as usual.

Mr. BUREAU: At the last election they were bad guessers.

Mr. HANSON: Not down in my locality. Perhaps the minister, for the information of the House will state how this question has arisen and what has been the action of the American government as regards the use of their ports?

Mr. LAPOINTE: During the war there was an international commission which investigated all matters concerning the fisheries of both countries, that was one of their recommendations, and it was agreed upon by both governments. The United States ports were opened to Canadian fishing vessels just as the Canadian ports were opened to the American fishing vessels. When the war was over the Americans closed their ports again claiming that the privilege previously enjoyed had been granted under war legislation and that the powers of their War Times Measures Act had expired. On the other hand we kept our ports open to American vessels. Since 1888, under what was called the modus vivendi, American vessels were allowed the use of our ports on payment of a small license fee. Many interests in our country were in favour of granting that privilege to the Americans. Many of our people in the Maritime provinces were selling their fish to Americans.

Mr. HANSON: Did the modus vivendi include a supply of bait as well?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, it did. On the other hand it resulted in placing the Canadian fishermen in a state of inferiority compared to American fishermen, because the latter used our ports for all the purposes mentioned and shipped their fish to the United States in bond and free of duty. Now a very high duty has been imposed on Canadian fish entering the United States under the new Fordney tariff. Consequently there has been a movement on the part of Canadian fishermen to deprive their competitors in the United States of the right which they do not want to grant to our fishermen. Under the conditions as they exist to-day my own opinion is that if we cannot get from the United States privileges similar to those we grant, it is only fair and just that we should treat American fishermen as Canadian fishermen are treated by the United States.

Mr. HANSON: Let me say to the minister that I entirely agree with the concluding part of his observations. You will never gain anything from the American government by lying down and submitting to them; you always want to have something that you can retaliate with in dealing with them. When they closed their ports to our fishermen a mistake was made in not immediately closing our ports to them, regardless of the objection that might be raised by a few supply men in some of the Atlantic ports. If that had been done long ago the United States would have realized that we had a stiff backbone and that we were able to stand up for our own rights. There has been so much delay that the closing of our ports to American fishermen may not have the result my hon. friend anticipates. However, I would say close them at once as far as I am concerned.

Mr. McBRIDE: I would concur in the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Hanson). As a representative from the Pacific coast, I think it is about time that Canada should treat American fishermen in a manner corresponding to the treatment our fishermen receive over there. I think this government should take a very strong stand on the matter. They should close the Canadian ports to American fishermen, and keep them closed until the ports of the United States are opened to the fishermen of this country.

Item agreed to.

Building fishways and clearing rivers, $40,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: When this item was up last year I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that there are two or more dams built across Salmon river in Victoria county with no fishways in them. On that occasion the minister told me the matter had been investigated and it had been found there was not water enough in this river to enable salmon to get up. I made it my business to investigate the question during the recent summer and at a dry period of the season. I was somewhat surprised to find, after the statement of the minister, that this is quite a large river—in fact lumber is driven down it, I believe, for a matter of sixty miles. There is no time in low water when there is not plenty of water for salmon or for boats, and pretty good navigation. The river got its name from the fact that it was teeming with salmon at one time; therefore it was called Salmon river, and is a tributary of the St. John river, not far below Grand Falls. Salmon cannot go up the Grand Falls in the St. John river. That is one of the reasons why the fish should be able to go up the Salmon river to the breeding ground in the northern country. It was one of the most prolific sources of salmon in years gone by, as I learned from residents whom I interviewed there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Are there any salmon there now?

Mr. CALDWELL: I doubt if there are; the dams have stopped them coming up. I would, therefore, urge the minister to have the fishery overseer go there and make an inspection.

Mr. LAPOINTE: How long have the dams been there?

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not know the number of years. I know there has been quite an urge from the settlers that fishways should be put in the dams when they were built. This was not done, and due to that fact the salmon have become almost exterminated on the upper reaches of the river. If fishways were put in, they could go up there and breed.

There is another matter which I called attention to last year, and I would like some information in regard to it. It is the question of the pollution of the rivers by sawdust from the sawmills. The northern end of the St. John river is the boundary line between the United States and Canada, running through Madawaska county on the one side, and the state of Maine on the other. With regard to our own mills on the Canadian side, and in fact on both sides of the river from Grand Falls down, which is Canadian, the regulations are very strict, and well enforced, I believe, by the fisheries overseers to prevent sawdust being dumped into the river, because it is very injurious to the fish. However, there are mills on the American side of the St. John river where the river is a boundary line, and I believe the sawdust from those mills is being dumped in the river. The American authorities are not very particular about it, because the river almost immediately runs into Canada, and the injury is done in Canada. It is a very great injury. Our Canadian sawmill men are compelled to burn their sawdust, or to carry it back on the high ground where it can do no harm. I suggested to the minister that this matter might be referred to the International Joint Commission. I believe there is such a body, is there not? Has this been done? I asked last year that it should be done, but I believe no action has been taken.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It has been submitted to the commission, as my hon. friend suggests, and they said it was not a matter they could deal with. We are trying to negotiate with the Commissioner for the state of Maine with regard to this very matter, and I hope we will be able to get a solution such as would suit my hon. friend.

With reference to the hon. member's question in regard to the Salmon river, in view of what he has just said, I will make it a point to send an engineer there this summer to inquire into the conditions, and if it is necessary, we will compel the owners to put in fishways.

Mr. HANSON: Who bears the expense of building these fishways in the dams? Is it the department or the owners of the dam?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The owners of the dam.

Mr. MILNE: When this matter was up before, I drew the attention of the minister to the fact that there was a little stream up in Manitoba, White Mud river, on which the railway company had a dam near the village of Gladstone. I was assured that the department would look into the matter and see that a fishway was built so that the fish could go up. I understand that during the summer an inspector went up and looked at the dam and the fishway, and from what I can gather nothing has been done. The citizens there tell me no change has been made. I asked some of the officials of the railway company why they did not fix the slide so that the fish could get up, and they assured me that it was built according to the specifications of the Fisheries department, and they did not know what else they could do. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that a fish inspector going up and looking at the slide does not assist the fish one bit in getting over. We have been trying for a long time to get that fishway built so that the fish could go up. For the last ten or twelve years we have been working at it as hard as we could, and we are no further ahead than when we started. It seems to me it is the next thing to a crime to have in the dams fishways which are not suitable and which the fish cannot climb. It deprives the settlers of the opportunity of getting a few fish in the spring. If they could get over the dam there is nothing to hinder them going up into the country 40 or 50 miles. Not only that, but the fish die below the dam. They pile up there until they are sticking out of the water, starve to death, and pollute the stream. In addition to that, the fish do not get up to the shallow waters and the sandy beaches to spawn, as I understand they should. I think this is a matter of great importance. It is too bad to have our people deprived of the food, and it is too bad to have the fish depleted, because they cannot go up the river to spawn.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I thought we had written to my hon. friend long ago explaining where the matter stood. We were waiting for the water to subside before taking final action in the matter. It is still engaging the attention of the department, and I hope we shall be able to do something.

Mr. McBRIDE: We have a fish inspector out in British Columbia whom everybody respects. He simply goes along and when he sees a dam in a creek he gives the owner a certain time to put a passage over it. When the inspector comes back, if the passage is not constructed over the dam as ordered, he blows the whole dam out with dynamite. I do not see why the same regulations should not be enforced in regard to the dam under discussion.

An hon. MEMBER: He is an Irishman.

Mr. McBRIDE: Yes, he is an Irishman, and a good one at that.

Mr. FORKE: We are very peaceable and law-abiding on the prairies and do not attempt any such doings as that. The conditions which the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Milne) describes exist all over the prairie, and on the prairies the railway company at intervals have dammed the streams for the purpose of getting water. I think we brought this matter to the minister's attention last year. I remember some years ago writing to the game guardian in Manitoba complaining that the chutes were so built that the fish could not get up. He inspected them and said that they were built according to law. Well, that did not help the fish. I think the trouble is the chutes are so steep that the pike cannot jump over them as the salmon do. The pike are slower going and are unable to get up, except in high water. I agree with the hon. member for Neepawa that while people who are used to salmon, such as the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell), look with contempt upon a pike, we on the prairie are only too glad to get them, because they are good food. It seems a pity that this condition should exist. I know the streams are being depleted. The fish cannot leave the lakes and go up to spawn, and where there were plenty of fish some years ago there is none to-day. My house is almost on the banks of Pipestone creek, and we used to be able to go out and catch a fish any time we wanted to, but we cannot get any now, and the only reason for this is that they cannot spawn. I think the chutes are too steep and the regulations should be altered. The fish cannot go up except in high water. I think the minister might look into this, because it is important.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like to impress another matter upon the minister. It is not right for a man to put his own fishway in his dam. He should have someone see that the fishway is properly put in.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL: I can realize why a man running a sawmill with water power does not want a fishway in his dam. It wastes water. He is inclined to put in a small chute that will not waste much water. They had better not waste any water at all if they do not make it big enough so that the salmon can go up.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We always provide plans and specifications, and an engineer is sent there to see that the work is well done.

Mr. MARTELL: What evidence is there that any of those fishways were in any way defective? I have heard a great deal about this, and I know from my experience in the department that fishways are constantly put in; but it seems to me that, though every effort should be made to permit fish to pass upstream for spawning, too many restrictions are being put on industry. Requests are made for fishways here and fishways there; or the statement is made that sawdust is getting in a stream here and sawdust is getting in a stream there, and people are compelled to install a fishway, according to plans and specifications supplied by the department, for the purpose of letting one or two fish get up stream, irrespective of the damage this is doing to industry.

Mr. FORKE: We want fair play for the fish.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that sawdust in a stream does not affect the fish?

Mr. MARTELL: I am not suggesting anything of the sort; but with all due respect to my hon. friend, I know as much about fish as he does. I happen to come from a fishing constituency, and I was brought up practically in a fishing boat or vessel. I quite understand that sawdust or other mill refuse, is deleterious to fish life. But when, in order to meet the demands of one or two in a particular community, as regards streams away inland you put injunctions on millers who are making a living by sawing a few boards, you are putting a wrongful injunction upon industry. I remember some years ago when I was an official of the Marine and Fisheries department, word came from the constituency of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau), that, I think it was called the Grace Falls Pulp and Paper Company, were polluting the waters and destroying fish. It appeared that once in nine years a man had caught a fish in that particular place, and immediately an action was begun in the courts of law to punish this company. Technically they were guilty. I was sent down by the department, being an official at that time, to investigate the matter, and I must say to the credit of the minister, although he was not of my political persuasion, that he immediately stopped the prosecution and said that the thing was absolutely absurd. That is what is going to happen again. I do not think people should be compelled to put in fishways or be prevented from letting a small quantity of sawdust get into a stream, when the fish life is not in any way commensurate with the amount of employment given to the people of the community.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am glad the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) is no longer in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I hope the minister has not many officials with the same views on fish life as the hon. member for Hants has.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I should like to have him back in the department.

[Mr. Martell.]

Mr. CALDWELL: I should like him to change his views before he administers the fishery laws. He speaks of penalizing industry in order that people may fish. Our millers do not object at all to comply with the regulations, and where there is one miller, there are hundreds of people who want to fish. The question is one of the greatest good to the greatest number. Our millers do not feel that it is any great hardship to take care of mill refuse.

Mr. MARTELL: I do not want to be misquoted at all.

Mr. CALDWELL: If they did not do so, the fish would be exterminated, and fish is a very nice food.

Mr. FORKE: The only industry we have on the streams I mentioned is the fishing industry, so this cannot do any harm to other industries.

Mr. MARTELL: I am speaking simply of the upper streams where there is very little fish life, and it is absurd to interfere with industry in that connection. If people are polluting streams where the fishing industry is important they should be prevented from doing so, but the law as it stands to-day is absolutely too drastic.

Mr. BUREAU: I want to protest in the name of the fish in my riding.

Mr. HANSON: Is this the item under which the vote is paid for clearing snags out of the river St. John?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Item agreed to.

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries, and the demand for fish, $25,000.

Mr. HANSON: Is this money spent for advertising?

Mr. LAPOINTE: To some extent.

Mr. FORKE: How are the deep sea fisheries developed? This may be a foolish question, but I should like to know.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to provide for the operation and maintenance of a publicity —it is propaganda as my hon. friend said— and marketing division, for the purpose of distributing information in regard to the fish of Canada, its food values, methods of cooking and so forth, all with a view to the creation of a wider demand and greater consumption. Through this division a press bulletin service was carried on. Interesting information regarding fish and the fisheries was prepared and sent to all the newspapers, and it was being widely used. Special illustrated articles regarding the fisheries as well as recipes for cooking fish were supplied to household periodicals. As a result, what would have been equal to 600 columns in 200 newspapers of fisheries matter, appeared in the newspapers last year. There are also arrangements made with the Trade and Commerce department for moving pictures showing how valuable our fisheries are.

Mr. HANSON: They are very good. Under this item I should like to ask the minister if it is the intention to have another roving commission on the Atlantic similiar to the one we had on the Pacific last year, captained by the admiral from Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) and with the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) as forecastle boy. From the press I understand that such a move is under way. How much was the expense of these gentlemen who had this junketing trip to the Pacific coast last year? Has it been paid yet, and is it considered that it was a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act for these gentlemen to receive compensation for their time? I should like to have some information about that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Whether or not it is the intention to have another commission lies in the hands of parliament. Last year a commission was appointed on the unanimous recommendation of parliament, first on the unanimous recommendation of the committee on Marine and Fisheries, and, second, on the unanimous approval of that report by parliament, so there was nothing else to do but to appoint a commission. My hon. friend was responsible for it as much as I was, because he is a member of the House of Commons which approved it unanimously. I think that is a fair position to take. Am I wrong?

Mr. HANSON: I do not think I was in the House at the time. If I did vote for it, I desire to repudiate it right now; but the man who is responsible is the minister, because without his consent this could not have occurred.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The minister is the servant of parliament.

Mr. BUREAU: And a good one at that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If it is in the power of the minister to give or grant, the minister will always grant it. He thinks the combined wisdom of parliament, including my hon. friend, is much greater than his own. That is my reason for saying that.

Mr. HANSON: Is there any intention of having a similar commission roving around the Atlantic during the coming season?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That question is before parliament now. I understand a report of the Marine and Fisheries committee was presented to this House a few days ago; but a motion to approve the report which was made was postponed, and it is still pending. Therefore, my hon. friend will have ample opportunity to give his opinion in the matter.

Mr ROBICHAUD: I am glad to find another friend of the fishing industry in the person of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson).

Mr. MARTELL: He never caught anything more than a minnow in his life.

Mr. BUREAU: That is a direct insult. I would not take it.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: It strikes me that there must be some other factor besides this item. The item reads:

To assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries.

I should like to ask the minister whether the main purpose of this item is to come to the assistance of the industry.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I explained to the hon. member the purpose of the item. There might be many other things that could be done.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Is there anything else that is intended?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: There is something else to which I would direct the attention of the committee, and that is the express rates we have to pay from the fishing districts in the county of Gloucester and in northern New Brunswick to the markets that are available to us. So far as my memory serves me, we have had to pay between 4½ and 4¾ cents a pound for express transportation from the Baie des Chaleurs coast to the Boston market, the rate to the New York market being in proportion while the freight rates from the Baie des Chaleurs coast to the Montreal market is 2 cents a pound, the fish being carried in iced containers. Our fish leaves the Baie des Chaleurs coast and is shipped via Montreal. It arrives in Montreal in the morning at seven o'clock or half past seven and remains there until half past eight at night; that is to say, it is exposed to the heat of the sun for about thirteen hours during the months of July and August, when the market is open to the fishermen. This is a difficulty that could be overcome. The Baie des Chaleurs coast is only twenty hours from Boston. If our produce were shipped via Fredericton, which is only 150 miles distant, it would help matters considerably, provided that proper train connections were established. As it is now we are one day and a half from Fredericton but with proper train connections we could land our fish at that point in about nine hours. It would then leave Fredericton in the afternoon, landing in Boston next morning. At that rate the Baie des Chaleurs coast would be twenty-two hours' run from Boston, so that fish from the coast could be placed in the Boston or New York market as the case might be in twenty-two or twenty-four hours instead of after a delay of fifty-six hours as is now the case. This is one matter that the department might look into.

Some time ago an hon. member from Ontario in the Fisheries committee made the statement that at certain times of the year good fish was almost a luxury in some parts of Ontario and could not be bought at any price, whereas our fishermen in the county of Gloucester had dumped on the American markets millions upon millions of pounds of nice fish which they could not sell to cover the freight and tariff charges entirely. This is one respect in which the department could be of some real advantage to the fishermen of that part of the country. I think that we should have proper rail connections, and there should at the same time be established some kind of intelligence bureau that would keep the Maritime provinces in touch with other sections of the country. Fish, it has been proved, is one of the most valuable foods that can be used; and it has been stated that the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have produced some of the most intelligent men—and I am not speaking of myself for a moment—that this country has seen.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do not be so modest.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: We have contributed able men to the political life not only of Canada but of the Mother Country. For example, the late Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Mr. Bonar Law, is a native of my own province; and I believe that this superiority of intelligence is due to the fact that our people use a lot of fish. I do not wish to depreciate the food products of other parts of the Dominion, but I certainly think that this valuable food produced in the Maritime provinces should be used more extensively in Canada; and although I have nothing whatever but admiration for the good qualities of the women of the West, I do not think that they are quite as skilled in the art of cooking fish as are the ladies of the Maritime provinces. It does not matter what hotel you visit in the Maritime provinces, you will find the fish excellent and well cooked. If the art of cooking fish were more extensively practised throughout this country, more fish would be used. To be serious I would impress upon the minister and the committee this fact: The fishermen of the Maritime provinces are becoming disheartened and are leaving the country for the United States. Family after family have gone and we are losing many of the pioneers of this country. So far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, we are losing the flower of our population. The fishing industry is one of the oldest of our activities in this country. I was astonished on entering the legislature of the state of Massachusetts some time ago to see in front of the speaker's chair, as the emblem of the state, a golden codfish. But so far as my knowledge of the Canadian parliament goes, and judging from the reports I have read of the proceedings in this House during the past twenty years, if a man stood up and ventured to talk about fish he was regarded as a faddist. It was considered an extraordinary thing for any member to broach the subject. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a mistake; we should insist on the value of this industry and, whether or not there are some who may think that the question is not of any great interest, we should talk so much about fish that the government will perforce do something to encourage the industry and thus retain our population within the precinct of this country of ours.

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): Before this resolution is adopted, Mr. Chairman, I want to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine to a few remarks that I wish to make and I hope that he will not press the item through. We have no money to spend in advertising fish. If the Maritime provinces' fish cannot speak for themselves, at least they do so through the voice either of the member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson), or the member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Robichaud). There is no necessity for spending the public funds for that purpose. I appeal to my old friend. What is the sense of disbursing money for a display of moving pictures of fish? I am calling the minister's attention to that fact. It is most unreasonable, at present, owing to the financial state in which the country finds itself. We have no money to spend on moving pictures of fish, even though they be salmon which leap in the British Columbia rivers.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the first objection which I can find to my hon. friend's speech is the adjective "ancien"—old—which he made use of in his expression "my old friend."

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): Friendship persists.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): I hope that my hon. friend shall always be my friend, in the future as well as he was in the past.

Now, it is perhaps to be regretted that, in this committee of which my hon. friend is chairman and over the deliberations of which he presided with such distinction, the fishing industry was not included with that of agriculture.

Mr. CALDWELL: Would the minister kindly speak in Gaelic so we can understand him?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am afraid my hon. friend from Brome would not understand me in Gaelic. I am speaking for his benefit.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): The fishermen of Canada have been complaining for ever so long and more so at present, that a sufficient interest is not taken in their industry, that everybody is interested in other industries, agriculture among others, but that the fisheries of the maritime provinces and British Columbia are neglected. I think that, especially at a time when the fishermen have never been under such hardships, my hon. friend should not be so parsimonious about the small amount put to their credit for the development of their industry.

Mr. McMASTER (Translation): It is rather difficult to swallow moving pictures.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): I do not expect my hon. friend to do so.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the inspection of pickled fish, $25,000.

Mr. BOYS: Why the increase?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Last summer we had to appoint three new inspectors on account of the increased work.

Mr. BOYS: Where are they located?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yarmouth county, Eastern Halifax county and Guysborough.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not quite understand the necessity for the inspection of pickled fish. It seems to me that if properly pickled they would pass any investigation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This appropriation is for the purpose of enforcing the Fish Inspection Act and the regulations made thereunder. The Governor in Council makes regulations prescribing the materials to be used for containers for fish, the size of such containers, how they shall be made and marked, and the quality and weight of the fish packed in them; and for the appointment of inspectors for the enforcement of these regulations and the exaction of penalties for their infraction. The improvement in the fish packed since the passing of this legislation has resulted in a much wider demand for inspection not only from the fishermen but from dealers as well, and this has necessitated an increase in the number of our inspectors.

Item agreed to.

Fish culture, $370,000.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, under this vote I desire to get some information from the minister with respect to a matter in the province of Nova Scotia. On the 11th May I put a question on the order paper respecting the Margaree River Salmon Fisheries Association. Yesterday an answer was brought down, which of course was no answer at all. These are the questions I put on the order paper:

1. When was the Margaree River Salmon Fisheries Association formed, and what are its relations, contractual or otherwise with the Department of Marine and Fisheries?
2. What were the names of the members of the association in 1921?
3. Was any change made in the membership of the association in 1922? If so, at whose instance?
4. Were any persons, members of the association in 1921, deprived of their interests or shares in the association, or in the proceeds received from the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the year 1922 by reason of any action of the department or any officer thereof, in the year 1922?
5. Has any claim been made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by any person, for a share of the payment agreed to be made to the association by that department, which has been disallowed? If so, who are the persons and what are the reasons for such disallowance?
6. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries at the instance of any member of parliament, changed the membership of such association?
7. If so, who was such member of parliament?

The very illuminating answer I got yesterday was as follows:

The answer to these questions will be contained in the return moved for by Mr. Hocken for Mr. Hanson on the 14th instant.

It must be apparent that at this late stage of the session the return would not be brought down before these estimates were under consideration by the House, and I regret very much that the minister has not seen fit to give me the desired information. I have to say that this is one of the most glaring cases that has ever come under my notice of interference on the part of a sitting member of any riding with property rights and vested interests. Briefly, these are the facts: About 1909 a non-incorporated association was formed at Margaree in the county of Inverness for the purpose of supplying parent salmon to the government hatchery which was established in that vicinity about that time. The association originally consisted of a relatively small number of members, but in 1910 the membership was brought up to nineteen and continued at this figure until the summer of 1922. Several of the original members died in the meantime and their places were filled by their widows or elder sons, by agreement in every case.

The association, subject to the direction of the superintendent of the pond, so called,—an official of the Department of Marine and Fisheries—laid the fish trap each year, at the expense of its members; that is to say, the trap was the property of the members of the association, and while they were an unincorporated body, yet there was a contractual relation existing between the members and the department to supply these parent fish. In every case the material has been paid for by members of the association. At the annual meeting of 1922 the year's business was provided for as usual, and a contract was made with one of the members for setting a trap and no question of additional membership was raised. On the 4th of August, 1922, the president of the association, Mr. Severin Arsenault, got orders from the department by wire to have the trap set. At the same time he states he got orders from the hon. member for Inverness in this house (Mr. Chisholm) to exclude from the list of persons to be served with notice to set the trap, the names of five Conservatives and to include five Liberals in their places. Arsenault carried out his instructions, but the Conservatives nevertheless turned up and did their part in the work.

About the same time, namely on August 9th, J. A. Rodd, Superintendent of Fish Culture of the Fisheries branch of the department, wrote to P. D. LeBlanc, superintendent of the pond at Margaree, stating that the department "understands that the present membership of the association is as follows" and proceeded to eliminate the five Conservatives and include the five new Liberals. On learning the names included in this list John C. LeBlanc—one of the Conservatives—wrote to Mr. Rodd protesting and explaining what the situation really was. Mr. Rodd replied on August 31st disclaiming any intention of determining the question of membership but proceeded as follows: "The information before the department showed that the membership for the present year consisted of the persons whose names were communicated to the Superintendent of the Pond"—referring of course to the letter of August 4th to P. D. LeBlanc. J. C. LeBlanc replied to this at length on September 13th pressing for the sources from which the department obtained its "information." The department replied on September 20th in the usual vein, not disclosing its source of information.

On December 18th the secretary-treasurer of the association, Thos. J. LeBlanc, also one of the Conservatives, wrote to the department asking for the cheque in payment of the association's account for the year. In previous years the cheque had, properly, been sent to the secretary-treasurer. He waited a month for a reply which, under date of January 17, 1923, informed him that "a cheque has been issued and forwarded to Severin Arsenault the president for distribution amongst those who are entitled to any portion of it."

Arsenault cashed the cheque and in the distribution left out the five Conservatives and included the five Liberals who had no property interest in the trap whatever.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. HANSON: I think you have something to do with it, if you will allow me to proceed.

Arsenault states he was ordered by the member for Inverness to divide the money among the persons named in a list furnished by the superintendent of the pond, P. D. LeBlanc, and that he acted accordingly. He further stated that there were certain departmental forms or blanks which were sent to the superintendent of the pond filled in with the names of these nineteen Liberals and that he was required to pay to the persons named in these forms.

I want to say to the minister that the whole matter is now before the courts of Nova Scotia, and undoubtedly if these people cannot get any justice from his department they will get it from a court of law. But I want to point out the attempt made by the hon. member for Inverness in the exercise of political patronage to deprive five gentlemen in his own constituency of their proprietary interests in their fish trap. I want to point out to the members of this House that the minister and his department—I do not say perhaps that the minister knew anything about it personally, but certainly his department knew there was a change in the membership and that it was an involuntary change, that it was a change dictated by the hon. member for Inverness, a deliberate attempt to deprive people of their property rights, and that will be demonstrated, I have no doubt, in due course by the courts of Nova Scotia, where I believe they are still administering justice notwithstanding some recent appointments.

Mr. DUFF: Order.

Mr. BUREAU: Do not reflect upon the courts.

Mr. HANSON: I think it was a matter of justice and right for the minister to save these fishermen the necessity of going to law and incurring the expenses of counsel, solicitors' costs and the costs of trial. I think the minister himself should look into this matter and see justice done irrespective of all question of political patronage. If he does not like the way things have been done in the past he is not bound to enter into a contract with this association in future, but after having once entered into a contract with an unincorporated body like this he is bound, I say, to see that the money is properly distributed. Remember this is an unincorporated body, each member of which has a property right. I am sure that will appeal to the minister as a legal man. He is bound to see that the rights of these people are respected whether they enter into another contract with his department or not. That is all I ask for, a plain matter of common justice. And I wish to say this: I think it is a small matter for any member of parliament to attempt to deprive one of his own constituents of some of his property rights by the mere exercise of the power of patronage.

Mr. DUFF: Will the hon. member tell the committee what document he is reading from or where he got his information?

Mr. HANSON: I am not addressing any remarks to the hon. member for Lunenburg, and I say further, when we are asking the ministers a question I do not think we want an answer from the hon. member for Lunenburg.

Mr. DUFF: I did not make an answer, and it is very discourteous to say the least for the hon. member for York-Sunbury when I ask him a civil question as to what document he is reading from to make such an answer as he did. I think the committee has a perfect right to the information I asked for. He read from a document, and if he is a gentleman he will give me a gentlemanly answer.

Mr. HANSON: If the minister wants to know I shall be very glad to supply the information, or to show him the document.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I am much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Hanson) for bringing this matter up. It has been a subject that he has evidently taken a great deal of interest in.

First let me tell him for his information that when he talks about the politics of these men he does not know the first thing about it. There were Liberals and Tories in what he calls the association. There were Liberals and Tories who ceased to be members of that so-called organization, and let me remind him that some of these men that he seems to stand up for to-night were supporters of mine and not supporters of the Tory party.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, the history of this matter. If my hon. friend had just taken the trouble of discussing it with me, as I would have done with him, were the circumstances reversed, he would have been in a much better position to discuss this question intelligently. He evidently does not know the first thing about it.

Some years ago the department in their wisdom thought fit to pass a regulation preventing the setting of salmon nets in the tidal waters of the rivers of Canada, including the Margaree river. At that time there were several people, perhaps twenty-five, setting nets in the Margaree river. They were getting a little revenue from it. When the regulation was passed, the department of course prevented them from setting their nets. About this time a fish pond was opened up there for salmon to supply the hatchery and I suggested to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it would be a good thing for him to give the business of catching these salmon for the pond to some of the men who were deprived of the right of putting their nets in the river. At that time I suggested the names of seventeen men. Afterwards the names of two additional men were added, but that did not at all comprise the number of men that used to operate nets in the river previous to this regulation, preventing the setting of nets in the Margaree. These nineteen men were operating—that is were getting these salmon for the fish pond up until last year. I have no compunction in the world in telling my hon. friend, if it will bring any comfort to his soul, that I suggested myself that a change should be made. I will tell him the reason why. I did not think it was right to continue this thing as an apparent favour to a few people while their neighbours were deprived of it—neighbours who were entitled to consideration. I suggested to the department that they drop five of these men and take up five more, and let me tell my hon. friend that most of the people living in that section, yes, 80 per cent of them are supporters of mine. I did this simply from the standpoint of justice and fairness and did not do it without the knowledge of these men—one and all of them. I said I would recommend that five of these men would be dropped and some more of the remaining 17 would be dropped later, until we were able to give each one of the men who were deprived of net fishing in Margaree by government regulations their turn of this somewhat valuable privilege. I propose to follow up that policy. Notwithstanding the moral lecture my hon. friend has been giving me I propose following it up and seeing to it that all the men who enjoy the right of putting nets in the Margaree river will have a turn at this privilege in so far as the trap is concerned. I am not a lawyer and I cannot understand the mentality of my hon. friend when he attaches any guilt to the department whatsoever. The department said to a certain number of men down there "We want you to get salmon for the pond and we will pay you so much." These men got together and they bought a trap. The fact that the trap was bought and paid for is one matter. It was not paid for by the department. The department had nothing at all to do with it. All the department had to do was to tell their agent down there to see that a proper trap was provided, that is, a trap suitable for the purpose, and to see that the salmon were properly looked after until they found their way into the pond. That is all the department had to do with it. Let me tell my good friend something else: When these five men were going to be added in place of the five that were dropped they went to the five that were dropped and told them "We will pay you the value of your part of the trap, we are prepared to do it any time." The seventeen men were in this position. When the time came I made a recommendation to the department.—I say this right now in the presence of my hon. friend and if he can take any comfort out of it or if he can see anything unmoral in that he can view it according to his own judgment—I suggested to the department to put those five men in place of the five to be dropped. These seventeen who were left in had a trap on their hands and there was only one of two things for them to do: They would either have to operate this trap or buy a new trap because evidently they could not satisfy the other five men for the reason that they expected to enjoy this privilege in perpetuity, they expected it was to be everlasting. They have discovered, however, that it was not going to be done and I will assure my hon. friend it will not be done. I will tell him something more: As a lawyer he, in my judgment, should refrain from discussing a matter that is before the courts, as he says. This, I tell him, is a primary principle of law as I understand it. In the judgment of the court in Nova Scotia my hon. friend may find himself sadly mistaken, and it may be a salutary lesson to him. Now, as to the cheques. The cheques were sent down by the department with instructions to pay the money to those to whom the money was due and a list of these men was sent to the party to whom the list was sent. To whom else should the money be paid? The day the trap was put into the water the agent of the government there told these five men dropped "You have no right here. My instructions are that these nineteen men are to operate these traps." Here comes in my guilt again because I suggested this change. I thought it proper to make a change in order to pass the privilege over to some other men who were entitled to it. The five men dropped had not the privilege of setting a trap in the river—that privilege could only be given to them by the department, which privilege was actually refused to them by the authorized agent of the department.

Mr. HANSON: Does the hon. gentleman think that it is a matter of good conscience to deprive five owners of their property without compensation, or even to attempt to force them to sell out their interests?

Mr. CHISHOLM: I can tell my hon. friend that I am just as conscientious as he is, and that I have just as much regard for a man's privileges or rights as he has. I told him that when these five new men went in they saw the old men whose places they were taking, as my hon. friend says, and told them "We will pay you for your property." The only property they had was one nineteenth of the value of the traps each.

Mr. HANSON: You admit there was a property right then?

Mr. CHISHOLM: There was a property right in the trap but that did not carry anything with it. The department had nothing to do with that.

An hon. MEMBER: I thought there were five to begin with?

Mr. CHISHOLM: There were nineteen in. My hon. friend has not been listening to my observations evidently. These men, that is the seventeen who were formerly in the number who got the salmon and the five new men, got the salmon and delivered them to the proper parties. The money was sent down to the president of what my hon. friend calls the association. I never knew it as an association. I will tell my hon. friend that when the trap was originally bought his humble servant did a good deal by way of encouraging these men to go into this thing, and did something by way of financing to get the trap for them; but so far as the organization as such is concerned I never heard a word about it as an organization. The money was paid to these men whom the department authorized to get the salmon and they are no doubt contented. The other five men now go to court. Would it not be fair and reasonable for my hon. friend, knowing this, to let this matter drop until we get the decision of the court on the legal point, if there is one, determined. So far as justice is concerned I consider that ample justice and more was done to these men. What is more, I will see that more of them will go out in turn if the department will take my recommendation, as they have done in the past, that new men shall go in and that this privilege, which is a very nice privilege shall be spread over the whole community, including the men who, previous to the new regulation, were allowed to put their nets in the river. I trust my explanation will be satisfactory to my hon. friend. I can see a change in his mind right now; I think his countenance indicates that I have made an impression on him, that he sees things differently.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that this debate seems to be out of order under rule 234 of Beauchesne's Rules of Parliamentary Procedure which denies the right of members of the House to refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending. In view of the fact that there was criticism of the conduct of a member of the House that hon. gentleman is perhaps justified, as a matter of privilege, in replying. I doubt the right of hon. members to debate the question in view of the fact that it is sub judice.

Mr. HANSON: I am not rising to dispute your ruling at all, Mr. Chairman; it is probably correct. I do not know anything about the rules of the House. I must confess I have seen the outside of Mr. Beauchesne's book but never the inside.

The CHAIRMAN: If a matter is pending in a court of justice it is not debatable.

Mr. HANSON: I desire to ask the minister if he proposes to respect a contract which the department entered into in the early season of 1922 before this change of the association took place? I can ask him that question surely?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The department has nothing to do with the members of the association in question, and after the remarks I have heard to-night I do not want to have anything to do with them. We are buying the parent fish from which the eggs are taken for our purposes and we are paying a certain amount for them. The money is paid to the president of the association and we let the members decide among themselves how it is to be divided. I do not want to interfere.

Mr. HANSON: May I ask the minister why a change was made in issuing the cheque to the president of the association, whereas in previous years it was sent to the secretary-treasurer?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am informed not during the last few years. The cheque was always sent to the president of the association, and that has been done this year. Again I repeat I do not want to deal with the members of that organization.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the minister just where the pond is situated for which money is being voted in connection with fish culture?

Mr. CHISHOLM: It is situated on the Margaree river.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I mean the pond as to which we are voting this appropriation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are thirty-two hatcheries as follows:

Nova Scotia	4
Prince Edward Island	1
New Brunswick	4
Ontario	8
Manitoba	3
Saskatchewan	1
Alberta	1
British Columbia	10

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Where is the one in Alberta?

Mr. LAPOINTE: At Banff.

Item agreed to.

Marine biological board of Canada, $42,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the duty of this board?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have the following memorandum:

The board was established by Act of Parliament (2 George V, chap. 6) in 1912 and has charge of all biological stations in Canada and the conduct and control of marine biological investigations. While the board is, in the main, a volunteer organization, the members and investigators not being paid, it arranges the investigations so as to throw light on matters connected with the life history of fish, their origin, development, structure, functions, distribution, etc., and reasons for deterioration, etc. Permanent biological stations are maintained at St. Andrews, N.S., and at Departure bay, Nanaimo, B.C., and a small sea-going vessel is also maintained on the Atlantic coast. In addition to the permanent stations, seasonal or temporary stations are established from time to time and at various points as occasion requires.

An increase of $8,000 is provided in comparison with 1922-23 for the purpose of repairing and enlarging the biological station on the west coast.

We intended to have an increase but the Minister of Finance will not let it go through, so that I can strike it out of my book.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How many scientific men are employed in British Columbia?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Professor C. McLean Fraser, University of British Columbia, continued fishery investigations, salmon, halibut, herring and so forth, also conjointly with international (U.S.) committees, researches on pile-borers and ship worms, faunistic studies, and so forth; Mr. Cyril Berkley, assistant at station, biochemical studies on fish and their sea-water environment, bacterial studies; Professor C. H. O'Donoghue, D.Sc., University of Manitoba, marine invertebrates and fourteen other fishery and faunistic problems, fish food, and so forth; Miss Mounce, University of Manitoba, faunistic studies and preparation of biological material for researches; Mr. H. A. Dunlop, University of British Columbia, investigations at Harrison lake hatchery, and spawning grounds, into the biology of the sockeye and other Fraser river salmon, and Mr. G. Foerster, University of British Columbia, Fraser river sockeye investigations on Harrison lake and lower Fraser. These are the scientists working in British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Do I understand these are professors employed in the different universities mentioned who devote a portion of their time to this work in British Columbia?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is to say, they spend their holidays there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If the hon. member calls that a holiday. They are not paid. They are doing voluntary work. Of course, they must not do that during the season of the university work. They are doing it in the summer time.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Are there no permanent employees?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, Professor Fraser is employed permanently.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Not connected with any university.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, with the University of British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: He teaches in the university as well?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRRIE: And devotes some of his time to the work of the department?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, and I might say to my hon. friend that the board is arranging for another permanent man in British Columbia.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It seems to me that this is a very important branch of the public service of Canada, and that we should have on the Pacific and also on the Atlantic coast a permanent board of scientific men who will devote all their time to the work, who will study the habits of the fish, who will be able to advise the minister as to the proper methods to be employed in the hatcheries and otherwise. It seems to me that the minister should make arrangements to go into this subject more extensively. The matter was taken up by the British Columbia Fisheries Commission, I think some reference was made in the report of that commission. I know the commissioners agreed that the work was a very important one.

Mr. MARTELL: The hon. member referred to the British Columbia Fisheries Commission. Does he understand that the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) referred to me as the fo'csle boy, and the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) as the captain of the commission? I would like to ask what my hon. friend's position was. Was he a midshipmite or what?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I do not understand.

Mr. MARTELL: The hon. member never heard the discussion.

Mr. McQUARRIE: No, I did not follow it. It is pretty hard sometimes to keep up with my hon. friend. But I have been interested in the fisheries of British Columbia for many years.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not casting any reflection on the hon. member but one hon. member opposite did cast some reflection on some hon. member. My hon. friend was not in the house.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I did not hear it. I think the hon. member will agree with the remarks I have just made as to the importance of a scientific investigation into our fisheries on the Pacific coast and also on the Atlantic coast. I think he will agree that attention has not been paid to this feature in the past. I know I have found a great deal of difference of opinion as to whether or not the hatcheries are doing any good in British Columbia, as to whether artificial propagation of salmon should be continued or not. It seems to me that is a matter which should be determined by a scientific investigation, and that it is important enough to warrant the department in having a permanent force in British Columbia to at all times study this particular question of hatcheries and other questions pertaining not only to the salmon fisheries but to the other fisheries on the Pacific coast. We have a Chief Inspector of Fisheries who is a very good man. But the Chief Inspector is kept very busy attending the departmental matters such as the issuing of licenses and so forth. The Chief Inspector of Fisheries has no time to devote to the study of fishery questions. He has no time to devote to the study of hatcheries. He has no time to devote to the study of the habits of fish. This requires some man to be on hand all the time who can devote his fullest attention to studying fishery matters. I suggested at one time to the late minister the necessity for having someone out in British Columbia who could co-operate with the Chief Inspector of Fisheries and who could be ready and available at all times for the purpose of making these scientific investigations. I am glad to hear that the minister is making an arrangement to get another scientific man on his staff in British Columbia. I would suggest to him that it will not be sufficient for him to employ university professors during their vacation, but rather, that the department should have on hand some one or, perhaps, two scientific men of experience who will be available at all times on this important work.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I quite agree with the important suggestion of my hon. friend. I may tell him that the Biological Board had a meeting last week, and a programme has been submitted in conjunction with the officers of the department. I think, at a later date, there will be either legislation or an item in the supplementaries which will meet the wishes of my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Marine and Fisheries—salaries and contingencies, $624,340.

Mr. BAXTER: Are the increases only the statutory ones?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As a matter of fact there is a decrease. The increase that appears in the item is caused by the combination of the Department of Marine and that portion of the Naval Service that was transferred to the Department of Marine on the first July last. As a matter of fact, there is a decrease of one in the personnel of the Department of Marine as constituted last year. It is proposed, however, to include for 1923-24 fifteen persons on the headquarters of the Radiotelegraph branch that were paid previously out of the appropriation for radiotelegraph service. The increased expenditure for civil government is caused by the amalgamation of the Marine department as constituted last year with part of the Naval Service department, that part of it which includes the radiotelegraph service, protection of fisheries and many other things.

Mr. BAXTER: If the minister has, as I understand, the radiotelegraph service under his control, will he to-night broadcast his thanks to the House for having got his estimates through very speedily?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will see that that is done with thanks.

Mr. DUFF: Is the first item, $6,000, the salary of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: All I have to say is this, that in my opinion and in the opinion of many men in this country, the Department of Marine and Fisheries is as important as any other department of the government, and more so, as somebody behind me suggests. It seems to me that if the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Deputy Minister of Railways, and the Deputy Minister of Justice can have salaries amounting to $10,000, this important department should also have a deputy who should receive as much money as any one of those deputies. I am sorry the deputy minister is present, because I could say this better if he were not here. But I will say that the government should take steps in the Supplementary Estimates to put the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries upon the same salary basis as the Deputy Minister of Railways and the others I have mentioned. I think, of course, there is room for reorganization in the department, although I am not going to discuss that question now. I have not known the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries very well personally for a number of years, but I have known him by reputation, and he is entitled to $10,000 a year just as much as is the Deputy Minister of Railways and the other deputies.

Item agreed to.

Radiotelegraph service and to provide for the building and maintenance of wireless stations and the general administration of radiotelegraphy throughout the Dominion, $454,900.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This item was discussed this afternoon, and it was suspended until after eight o'clock at the request of the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), who wanted to know the expenditure on salaries and wages in that branch. The expenditures are as follows:

Maintenance and Operation
Technical staff	$40,876 29
Operators	59,126 60
Labour	4,395 91
Construction
Technical staff	4,160 65
Labour	9,626 37
Total	$118,185 82

Mr. CALDWELL: Is this for land service or for government-owned vessels?

Mr. LAPOINTE: For the whole system. For land, for vessels, for the distance-finding stations and for radiotelegraphy throughout the land.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the power of the radio-distributing stations at the present time, the distance of transmission? I know some are able to distribute 300 miles on the lakes, but what is the power of the various transmitters? I just want to find out how far Canada can broadcast?

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are various stations. Some of them are broadcasting for 200 miles, others up to 1,000 miles, and others more than that.

Mr. BUREAU: Vancouver was heard in Australia.

Mr. WHITE: Can the minister give us any idea as to the new constructions that are to be carried on this year?

[Mr. Duff].

Mr. LAPOINTE: I can give them all this afternoon, and the hon. gentleman will find them detailed in Hansard.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the maintenance and operating of Sorel shipyard, $125,000.

Mr. BUREAU: I promised to give my hon. friend (Mr. Shaw) certain names this afternoon. If I remember rightly I gave one of them, W. Morgan, when I came back at eight o'clock. Morgan was dismissed on the declaration of Mr. Cardin, a member of parliament, that he had been using the officers of the department to copy electoral lists. I thought there was ground for his dismissal and I dismissed him, and he is still out. He was replaced temporarily by another man who was recommended and whom I thought was a proper person to take his place. There was also the case of H. Yerjean, stock bookkeeper, to whom the same remark applies. L. E. Trempe, who was employed in the stores, was also dismissed on the same ground. These are the men whom I dismissed. With regard to the charge against me of having dismissed Laforest, foreman caulker, this man was dismissed by the superintendent in order to make room for a more competent man. I had nothing to do with his dismissal.

Mr. BAXTER: In the cases of the dismissals referred to, were the accused given an opportunity of presenting their side of the case?

Mr. BUREAU: I did not make any investigation. The charge was made by the member representing the division. There was a specific charge of a specific offence over the member's signature, and I took that as sufficient evidence of the guilt of the persons.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not want to provoke any long debate on a subject of this kind now, because I shall before the session closes, under another department, have occasion I think to remark upon this system. I am not going to discuss what has been done in the past; I am going to deal only with what is done in the future. I think, however, that it is about time that we came to an end of a system, if there has been such a system, which permits any man to be dismissed on the mere statement of a member of parliament, who is necessarily a partisan. I do not think it is good business; I do not think that a man who is in the employment of all Canada, should be subject to dismissal simply on the statement of another man who is only the representative of a portion of the people in the constituency that has returned him to parliament, a man who in many cases will have his passions inflamed against an official who he may think has done him an injury in the election field. There ought always to be some fair trial. There are cases where a trial would not be necessary, where a man confesses to having been guilty of certain conduct. But I do not think that a man should be tried behind his back; it is neither British nor French to do that.

Item agreed to.

Salaries—amount required to pay H. Tremblay for services as private secretary to the acting minister while acting as such from September 19, 1922 to January 19, 1923, $200.

Mr. BAXTER: What happened to this man after the 19th of January?

Mr. BUREAU: I might explain this. When the minister (Mr. Lapointe) was away and I was acting I had this gentleman as private secretary, and when the minister returned his services were no longer required.

Item agreed to.

River St. Lawrence ship canal—maintenance and operating dredging fleet (Governor General's warrant of October 16, 1922), $80,000.

Mr. BAXTER: I presume the minister will give the committee a statement of what urgency there was to render the Governor General's warrant necessary?

Mr. BUREAU: I might also explain this matter. For the last six or seven years there has been in existence a fleet, valued at some three or four million dollars, pre-war prices, of dredges, scows and tugs on the Richelieu river and the Chenal du Moine. This fleet was in a state of deterioration for want of proper care and attention. I took hold of the department in the month of August, acting for my hon. friend (Mr. Lapointe) who was at Geneva, and I made a personal inspection of the Sorel shipyard and looked over all the ships, dredges and scows that were there. I discovered that one of the dredges had sunk simply from lack of proper care. The rust had corroded the steel and the vessel was down, and when I asked what it would require to salvage this vessel I found that it would cost about $17,000. I took the superintendent of the St. Lawrence channel, together with the foreman of the yards at Sorel, and made a thorough inspection of the boats. I asked them to tell me which of them could be preserved, which ought to be scrapped, and which could be salvaged. Accompanying me was my secretary, and as I say, there were the superintendent of the St. Lawrence channel and the superintendent of the yards. We went over every ship and found that certain hulls would have to be scrapped, while there was a certain percentage of the machinery that could be salvaged. It was found that a shed would be necessary, and that a quantity of paint would be required to prevent the steel work from deteriorating. For this work it was estimated that the sum of $80,000 would be called for. I came back with a detailed statement covering each ship, scow and dredge, and recommended to council that this fleet, which was worth, as I have stated, some three or four million dollars, should be salvaged as far as possible. Under the circumstances it was considered that the special warrant should be issued. That warrant was issued in order that the work might be proceeded with at once. I did this as a matter of sound business, to prevent the further deterioration of this valuable fleet, and it resulted in saving money to the country. That is the whole matter in a nutshell.

Mr. BAXTER: If the minister will kindly apologize to all the members whose conversation he has been interrupting I think the incident may be closed.

Mr. BUREAU: I stopped because I was afraid to interrupt the conversation.

Item agreed to.

Ocean and river service—To provide for the temporary relief of distressed seamen—Further amount required, $4,150.

Mr. LAPOINTE: An amount for this purpose is voted each year. The amount voted last year was not sufficient on account of the unusually large number of seamen whom we had to help back to this country.

Item agreed to.

Public works chargeable to capital—Fisheries—To provide for inspection of canned and pickled fish—Further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I explained this in the previous vote.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—Amount required to pay balance due to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the removal of the span of the bridge over False creek, B.C., at different times since 1918, to permit of the movement of vessels, $8,934.08.

Mr. BAXTER: Is this in consequence of a mistaken idea that at one time prevailed regarding our jurisdiction over False creek? Otherwise, when the Canadian Pacific Railway crossed there why were not the usual terms imposed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The explanation in regard to this was given last year, but I will repeat it. It is as follows:

The Canadian Pacific Railway constructed a bridge across False creek, Vancouver, in 1886. This bridge was replaced by a larger structure in 1898. In 1918 it transpired that the vessels being constructed at the Coughlan Shipyard for the Imperial Munitions Board could not pass to sea without the removal of a span of this bridge. This difficulty was the subject of negotiations between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Department of Public Works at that time. The Canadian Pacific Railway contended that the bridge was properly constructed with the approval of the Public Works department and consequently they were under no obligations to so alter the bridge as to make it possible for vessels of a larger class to pass through. In these circumstances it became necessary for some one to take action, and the undersigned after having discussed the matter fully with the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, entered into negotiations with Mr. Beatty of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the result being the submission of a proposal that if the courts should decide that the bridge was properly constructed and had the approval of the Public Works department, the government would be responsible for the expense of removing the span to enable the vessels being constructed at the Coughlan yards to pass out. On the other hand if the courts should determine that the bridge was improperly constructed and did not have the approval of the Public Works department, the Canadian Pacific Railway would be responsible for any expenditure incurred for the removal of the span. Letters were exchanged between this department and the Canadian Pacific Railway confirming this understanding. In the meantime the matter was referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion and under date of the 20th instant—

That was June of last year.

—that department writes as per copy attached hereto.

The Department of Justice stated that we had absolutely no case against the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In these circumstances there does not appear to be any alternative but to ask for a special vote of parliament to indemnify the Canadian Pacific Railway for the expenses they have incurred in this connection. Last session a sum of $32,000 was placed in Supplementary Estimates 1922-23 to cover expenditure up to end of June 1920, but a statement of expenditure up to 31st October, 1921, shows that the total expenditure incurred in this connection is $40,-934.08, necessitating a further amount of $8,934.08.

Mr. BAXTER: Will this have to be done in the future for vessels to pass through there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Negotiations are being conducted between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Marine and Fisheries and Public Works departments to come to a final arrangement in the matter.

Mr. BAXTER: It would seem to me advisable to put a bridge of a different type there and so cut out these payments.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is the purpose in view.

[Mr. Baxter.]

Mr. McBRIDE: I know this bridge very well, in fact I supplied the material to build the substructure of it in the first place, but I think the bridge should never have been built where it is. There is another bridge practically in the same location that would serve the purpose equally as well, and this bridge is a detriment to navigation. At the same time, as permission was granted for its erection, I think it is up to this government to see that the swing span is widened so that boats can get in and out. It was not an expensive bridge to build in the first place and I think the appropriation in this estimate would practically cover the expense of widening the swing span, at least it should go a long way towards it. I should like to see the government take hold of this without further delay and reach a settlement of the difficulty so that this vote will not come up every year. There is no call for it whatever.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think you are quite right.

Item agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

Railways and Canals—chargeable to income—to increase the amount of loan authorized by vote No. 136, Main Estimates, 1922-23,—additional amount required, $13,099,493.34.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Chairman, this and the following item are very large, but they are urgent. These are last year's estimates. We took the amount to pay a debt and thereby made a large saving on the rate of exchange. This is merely to replace the money that we then paid out. The succeeding vote represents money that we need to pay our debts on account of the merchant marine for last year. It does not enter into our next year's estimates.

Mr. BAXTER: This will not alter last year's result in any way as presented to us by the minister in his railway statement some weeks ago?

Mr. GRAHAM: No, I think the method of book-keeping will show that this does not interfere with that result. The Canadian National Railways paid off some securities which were due and thereby saved a large amount of money on account of the rate of exchange. Now we have to replace the sum.

Item agreed to.

Department of Railways and Canals—to increase the amount of loan authorized by vote No. 139, Main Estimates, 1922-23—additional amount required (including Governor General's Warrant, November 20, 1922—$1,000,000, $1,700,000.

Mr. BAXTER: What is this for?

Mr. DUFF: I am not going to discuss this matter now as I intend when the Main Estimates come up to discuss the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, but I just wish to enter my protest now against any money being spent for this purpose. I intend to discuss this item with others when the Main Estimates come up. I think the government has no right to spend any money on the Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

Mr. BAXTER: I take it that this money has already been spent. What is it for? Deficits?

Mr. GRAHAM: For the deficits in connection with the management of the Government Merchant Marine last year.

Mr. BAXTER: This is not urgent, is it?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, because we owe the bills of the Merchant Marine and we want to pay them.

Mr. BAXTER: It does not matter whether the item goes through to-night or to-morrow, does it?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not suppose it would make any difference.

Mr. BAXTER: Then in the absence of the hon. gentleman who leads on this side I would suggest that the item stand.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not press for the passing of the item to-night only it is the 1st of June to-morrow and to-day is the 31st of May. These are bills that have been contracted, and we must pay them. The passage of this item will not interfere with any discussion on the Merchant Marine or anything of that kind, because I have not had my main estimates before the House at all this year.

Mr. BAXTER: I think perhaps as there will be other items on which we can have a general discussion when the Main Estimates come up, this might pass.

Item agreed to.

Department of Railways and Canals—contingencies—additional amount required, $5,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is for contingencies last year. We were $5,000 short.

Item agreed to.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Department of Trade and Commerce—mail subsidies and steamship subventions—Canada and Newfoundland, steam service or services between, $35,000.

Mr. BAXTER: All the rest of these are through, are they not?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Most of them are.

Item agreed to.

Canada and the West Indies and South America, or both, steam service or services between, $340,666.66.

Mr. SHAW: Could the minister give us the names of the boats engaged in this subsidized service, with the tonnage and passenger capacity of each?

Mr. ROBB: The boats are the Chignecto, 400 feet; the Chaleur, 400 feet; the Caraquet, 400 feet, and the Chaudiere, 370 feet. Three of these vessels were built in Belfast, and one in Middlesborough, one in 1893, one in 1894, and one in 1899. I might say to my hon. friend that these boats are a bit old and a little slow, and we are advertising for a new service extending over two different periods. We are asking for tenders for a five-year period and also for a ten-year period, and when the tenders are in the government will decide which will be most advantageous to Canada. As perhaps my hon. friend knows, this is part of the contract we have with the West India islands under the trade agreement made in 1920.

Mr. SHAW: The minister has not given the information I asked for. I did not ask for the length of the boats. I wanted their tonnage and passenger capacity. I should also like to know their speed. I want to find out whether they comply with the terms of the West India agreement.

Mr. ROBB: I may say frankly that we fear they do not, and that is why we are asking for new tenders. Under the contract we had a certain limit of time within which to provide for the ships, and we are now advertising for four new ships to give a fortnightly service. Perhaps this admission that we do not think these boats comply with the terms of the contract for the West India service will satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. SHAW: I am quite satisfied they do not comply with the terms either as regards tonnage, speed or passenger capacity. I would ask the minister whether there are not any ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine that would comply equally well with the requirements of the West India trade.

Mr. ROBB: No. They are very far from complying with the requirements. There are two services, one on the west side, and another on the east side. The Royal Mail Line are the contractors on the eastern side, and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine have the service on the west side, but they are very far from complying with the requirements of the trade, and our friends in the West India islands are objecting somewhat on that account. The previous government advertised for tenders, and my recollection is that they came in either just before this government assumed office or immediately afterwards. The terms were such that the government did not feel able to accept them. The tenderers asked for a guarantee of 7 per cent upon their investment. We did not think that would be profitable to this country. We preferred knowing exactly what we would have to pay rather than give a guarantee on the investment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask whether the Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels are operating in competition with the other vessels of which the minister spoke?

Mr. ROBB: The Royal Mail Line have complained that the Government Merchant Marine boats call at some ports and pick up some of the best cargoes, but we do not admit that. They are not operating in competition with the Royal Mail Line because as I mentioned a moment ago there are two services, one on the east and one on the west side. The trade agreement of 1920 calls for two distinct services, and the Royal Mail Line are running from St. John and Halifax to Barbados, Trinidad, Bermuda, the Leeward islands and the Windward islands. The merchant marine boats run to the Bahamas. Jamaica and British Honduras, so there is really no competition between the two, although the Royal Mail Line have complained that in some cases the government boats on the return trip pick up some very profitable cargoes. We do not admit that that is a disadvantage to the people of Canada. It is competition that means cheaper products for our people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under the agreement it was provided that the service was to be weekly. The minister has just stated that tenders are being called for for a fortnightly service. How does he expect, therefore, that these new steamers sailing fortnightly will comply with the terms of the West Indies agreement?

Mr. ROBB: The experience we have is that a fortnightly service will be all that the trade will warrant. I do not believe that Canada can pay for a weekly service in view of the business that offers down in those islands.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the minister mean to cut the estimate one-half in view of the fact that we only get one-half the service?

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. ROBB: We cannot disclose what the policy of the department will be until we receive tenders.

Mr. IRVINE: If they have decided to give half the service we ought to decide to give half the amount of money.

Mr. ROBB: The West India islands also contribute to the subsidy that is paid.

Mr. SHAW: How much do they contribute?

Mr. ROBB: Let me read article 13 of the treaty:

> The representatives of the colonies mentioned in article X undertake to recommend to their governments that these governments shall contribute towards such subsidized steamship service, when established in the following amounts annually.
>
Barbados, not less than	£5,000
Bermuda, not less than..	2,000
British Guiana, not less than..	7,500
Leeward Islands, not less than..	2,500
Trinidad, not less than..	7,500
Windward Islands, not less than..	2,500
	£27,000

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has simply given in answer to the hon. member (Mr. Shaw) the amounts that the representatives of the respective colonies undertook to recommend to their governments to pay?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister give us the amounts that have been paid out by the islands?

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that I have that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have they paid anything.

Mr. ROBB: Some of them have and some of them have not.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Could the minister get the exact amounts that have been paid? I think that is rather important.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that I have that information here, but I can get it for my hon. friend. I thought earlier in the evening that this matter would not come up so my deputy is not here. I do not think I can give that information to my hon. friend at the present time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If it will make it easier for the minister we can let the item stand until the deputy is here.

Mr. ROBB: I will be glad to let it stand.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the minister can give the information I am willing to go on.

Mr. ROBB: I have here this memorandum on the western group which may help my hon. friend on the question. Article 15 reads as follows:

Article XV. The government of Canada, subject to the adoption by the governments concerned of the recommendations embodied in Article XVI, undertakes to provide as soon as possible, and in any case not later than the 1st January, 1921, a fortnightly freight, mail and passenger steamship service between Canada, the Bahamas, Jamaica, and British Honduras, on the following lines:

The Canadian Government Merchant Marine, therefore, at the request of the Dominion government, took two of their smaller ships and converted them into passenger and freight vessels, by the addition of cabin accommodation, and put them on this route. It was impossible, however, to provide a fortnightly service, as called for by the agreement, with only two ships. These ships have therefore been sailing every three weeks, from Montreal in the summer, and Halifax in winter. The loss on their operation —I ask my hon. friends to note this—has been heavy, amounting, in the year 1921, to over $400,000, or more than the total subsidy paid by the government to the four steamers of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, which performed a more frequent and extensive service with more suitably fitted boats than the two steamers of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Since that time has the Canadian Government Merchant Marine put on some larger boats?

Mr. ROBB: We have tried to improve the service.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to ask about this treaty, because I really must confess ignorance. The minister stated a little while ago that under the terms of the treaty there had to be a weekly service. Now he states it is only fortnightly. Are the terms of the treaty in this respect elastic or what is the actual condition?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend can obtain a copy of the treaty. It is printed and quite lengthy.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What treaty is that?

Mr. ROBB: The treaty of 1920.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): With Jamaica?

Mr. ROBB: Yes. It is somewhat elastic. It was an agreement made for ten years. The government of Canada have every desire to meet our West India friends. We want that trade for Canada if we can secure it, but we do not want to pay out more for the service than the business will warrant.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are there any ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine that can perform this service at the present time?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): This particular service is now being performed by the vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and by no others.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But not the whole service, just one service?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The service to Jamaica, Bahamas and British Honduras is being performed by the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. The other service, to Bermuda, Trinidad, and British Guiana is being performed under contract by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I understand that. I have here the report of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and it gives particulars of the service to the West Indies. I notice that Sir Henry Thornton in his report claims there has not been freight enough. He says:

The combined passenger and freight steamship operation inaugurated to give service every three weeks to the Bahamas, Jamaica and British Honduras, from the outset, has been unprofitable from a revenue standpoint, and in an endeavour to reduce losses Bermuda was added to the itinerary in June, the Canadian Fisher and the Canadian Forester making Hamilton, Bermuda, an additional port of call.

It looks to me as though all this service could be performed by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. I would like to read for the information of the House the resolution passed by the district council of the province of Quebec, comprising councils No. 5, 8, 9 and 17 of the National Association of Marine in Canada. In part the resolution reads as follows:

Whereas, subsidies have been granted to steamship companies owned and operated outside Canada, particularly to the West Indies, while Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships, owned by the people of Canada, are lying idle and our seamen walking the streets of our towns and cities, swelling the unemployed. Under the West Indies-Canada agreement the Canadian government was to furnish the ships for this West Indies and British Honduras freight and passenger service:

It seems to me to be extraordinary to pay out a very large amount of money in subsidizing other ships while the vessels of our own merchant marine are lying idle. I have a letter here from a seafaring man, a former officer in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and he states that there are ships of 3,400 tons of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine that can very well be utilized on this route. He says that a large number of these ships were tied up in the spring of 1922 that could just as well have been used on this service. I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to that?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): This matter was discussed a year ago when the same estimate was being considered, and the same criticism was offered by some hon. gentlemen that is being offered to-night.

Mr. SHAW: Not nearly so much last year as may be offered to-night. I think the facts were not known then.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There was very considerable criticism last year, I have not heard much to-night. The suggestion is made that this service could be carried on by the vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. I should like to tell hon. members sitting opposite to me that if they knew the conditions attaching to this particular trade, and could hear the views of the gentlemen who understand it they would not suggest that this service could be performed by the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine—I refer to the whole West India service. The larger service is that from the Atlantic ports of Halifax and St. John to Bermuda, Trinidad, Demerara, and British Guiana. That service is being carried on by a company known as the Royal Mail Steam Packet company. I think that is the name of the company.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is not the hon. member perfectly sure that is the name of the company?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think it is the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. Possibly I may have omitted a word from the title but I do not think my hon. friend would mind that particularly because that would not affect the question. I hope he does not think so, I hope his mind is centered on something more substantial. This contract was entered into some ten or fifteen years ago. At that time a trade treaty was entered into between Canada, certain of the British West India Islands, and the government of Great Britain, and a part of that treaty was that a freight and passenger service be installed or established and subsidized by the interested parties. I think the British government pays something on account of that service as well.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the hon. member say that the British government pays part of the subsidy?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think they do, on account of the mail service.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member is not sure.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not too sure. I speak subject to correction. In order to obtain the service—and it was deemed to be important—it was necessary to subsidize it. No private capital would go and perform such a service voluntarily and carry the mail without a subsidy. Persons who are acquainted with the West Indian trade know that the freight bound for Canadian ports is available only at certain seasons; that is, in the crop moving season, when the sugar, coffee and cocoa crops are being moved. But for two or three months in the year the steamers go north with very little freight. Then a very important consideration for those requiring the service was that it should be a regular service, and that was its great value—that every two weeks a ship would leave an Atlantic port for a West Indian port. That is of inestimable value to exporters. If they did not know or were not sure that these steamships left with perfect regularity we could never have developed the trade we have with the British West Indies. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships could not perform that service. They were never built for it, in the first place. Some of these ships run very irregularly to some of the islands, taking their chances of getting a cargo north and south. I have seen some of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships advertised to leave Halifax on a certain day, and they would not leave for nearly a month after, waiting for freight. It is an essential factor in the development of trade to have a regular transportation system, so that the importer and exporter can rely upon the regularity and promptness of that service. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships were not built for such a service. They were not built to carry on a passenger service at all, and we would have to violate the treaty which was entered into with the West Indian islands if we abandoned the service altogether, and declined to carry on the present contract, or a new contract with some other shipping concern. It certainly could not be carried on by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships because they cannot carry passengers, and I do not think it is possible to reconstruct the ships to make them suitable for that purpose. So that I say, in so far as the Bermuda, Trinidad, Demerara and British Guiana service is concerned, it cannot be carried on in conformity with the provision of that convention by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships.

Mr. SHAW: Is it not likewise a fact that the Royal Mail Packet ships cannot, under any circumstances, comply with the terms and requirements of the West India trade agreement?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): In what respect?

Mr. SHAW: Because the minister has already admitted that the ships do not come up to the standard in tonnage, or in speed or in passenger-carrying capacity, and I think they cannot comply with the requirements as to time of service.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax: Even if that were true, it would not prove incorrect the remarks I have made regarding the inability of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine to carry on the service.

Mr. SHAW: I quite agree with that, but you will realize that there may be a partial compliance with the agreement by the merchant marine, but there can only be a partial compliance.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships could not carry on the service at all, wholly or partially or fractionally. It may be true that the Royal Mail boats are not performing the service well within the obligations of that treaty. I am not sure about that. My own impression is that they are, but everybody realizes that the ships they have now in the service are old and inadequate, and the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company themselves have publicly made clear their realization of that fact, and their desire to construct four new steamers, more modern boats, and put them into that service. It is for that reason they would like to have a long term contract with the government and boats specially designed for that service. The boats now in the service were quite old when the treaty was entered into. Nobody, I am sure, realizes more than that company itself that the boats are hardly up to the requirements of the trade, although they may be well within the requirements of the treaty. Now trade has developed and travel has developed, and it is desirable that a better service be given between Canadian ports and the West Indies, and we can never get the service without paying some subsidy. We cannot, I think, continue our trade arrangements with the British West Indies unless we assist that service. We certainly cannot give a regular mail service, which is a very important factor in trade, unless we have boats sailing promptly and at regular intervals from Canadian and West Indian ports.

Mr. IRVINE: Has the hon. member any idea of the amount of trade that is done on this line as far as Canada is concerned?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have not seen the figures lately. Usually I have these figures in my mind and am well acquainted with them, but I do not know them at the present moment. The trade has been very irregular and rather depressed in recent years. I fancy it has been unprofitable to the steamship company. I think during the war they probably lost a very considerable sum; at least they would have, had they not been permitted to raise their rates, but I want to assure my hon. friend, if he thinks our trade connection with the British West Indies is worth anything to this country—and it is—that it can only be kept up by the continuance of this service. Now the Canadian Government Merchant Marine have some boats running to these islands that are served by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. I think myself it is very foolish to have these ships competing with the steamship line which is subsidized, and I do not think they contribute anything to the development of our trade.

Just a word as to the service between Canada, Jamaica and British Honduras. I have not any personal knowledge of this service, except that I have a little knowledge that comes to me from those who are interested in trading between Nova Scotia and these islands. This treaty was entered into in 1920, I think at a time when Canadians and people generally gained a clear vizualization of the future trade not only between Canada and these islands, but the world over, and I fear that rather an extravagant bargain was made in the establishment of this service. It does not appear that there is a possibility of developing a trade that would warrant the cost to this country last year. I am informed by business men who know, whose firms have been trading with those islands for the last fifty, seventy-five or a hundred years, that it is not possible to develop trade with those islands to warrant the service that is being carried on at the present time. I have no particular suggestion to make to the minister about the matter, except that it requires careful consideration. It would be far better to give to some private companies two or three of these Canadian government ships and let them operate the service in the best possible way. It need not be a regular passenger service. I think the passenger service should be cut out altogether. The boats are not suitable for the service and this is costing money. We are carrying passengers, mostly tourists, over this route at a great loss to the country. There would be better satisfaction, and I believe the people of the islands interested would be satisfied if a fair freight service might be given to them, and I think that is possible at a very much less cost than that at which the service is being carried on to-day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman is speaking of the western group just now, is he not?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Jamaica, the Bahamas and British Honduras.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That would be the western group.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Canadian Government Merchant Marine.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It is operating there.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member thinks the service should be cut off?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not say that it should be cut off; but I understand that it was carried on last year at a net loss of $400,000, and I am informed by persons who know the possibilities of trade in those islands, that it is not capable of any great expansion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the same statement not apply to the eastern group that it is unprofitable business at the present time? Why do they want a subsidy if the business pays?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No subsidy is being paid.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am talking about the eastern group now.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No subsidy is being paid by the other group. Our trade has developed with the British West Indies, but our trading with those islands is linked up with the subsidized steamship service. You cannot separate them. We have a trade prefernce with these islands, and one of the conditions of the preference was that this steamship which is a joint passenger, freight and mail service, should be carried on. You cannot drop one without dropping the other. They are linked together.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The preference is an expensive one.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I doubt if any shipping company would undertake to carry on the service without a subsidy.

Mr. LUCAS: For what length of time will that treaty run?

Mr. ROBB: For ten years.

Mr. LUCAS: From what date?

Mr. ROBB: From 1920. I have the information for which my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Shaw) asked as to the trade with those islands. I am speaking now of the British West Indies, and I will not give the figures exactly. In 1922, the total trade was $15,300,000 and in 1923, $18,500,000. I am sure my hon. friends will realize that it is worth something to Canada to have this good customer. We expect, as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has said, that with improved facilities this trade may grow. Perhaps I might put on Hansard, although this will take a little time, the advertisement for tenders, and let me say at this point that if the Canadian Government Merchant Marine or Sir Henry Thornton desires to tender for this service and can give the service and comply with the conditions, surely we will give the preference to our own vessels.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): He cannot tender.

Mr. ROBB: I am not questioning whether he can tender or not.

Mr. DUFF: He cannot tender.

Mr. ROBB: This is the advertisement for tenders:

1. Tenders for a mail, passenger and freight steamship service between Canada, the British West Indies and British Guiana, are invited, and will be received at the office of the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada, until noon of June 15, 1923.

2. Tenders must be submitted on the enclosed form, and should be sent in sealed envelopes, addressed to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada, and marked legibly on the outside "Tenders for steamship service between Canada, the British West Indies and British Guiana", and if submitted through the mails should be registered.

3. Tenders are invited for the performance of one or more of the following services:

(a) Sailing fortnightly from St. John or Halifax, and calling one week on the outward passage at Bermuda, Barbados, Trinidad, and British Guiana, and on the homeward passage at Trinidad, Grenada, St. Vincent, Barbados, St. Lucia, Dominica, Montserrat, Antigua, Nevis, St. Kitts, and Bermuda; and on alternate weeks calling on the outward passage at Bermuda, St. Kitts, Nevil, Antigua, Montserrat, Dominica, St. Lucia, Barbados, St. Vincent, Grenada, Trinidad, and British Guiana, and on the homeward passage at Trinidad, Barbados and Bermuda.

(b) The same service as specified in Clause (a) except that sailings shall be made from St. John and Halifax alternately.

(c) Any other frequency of service, or itinerary, or other variation from the terms of this call for tenders, which tenderers may desire to offer.

4. Tenders are invited for service covering a period of five or ten years, commencing within two weeks after the date of the last sailing from Halifax under the present contract which expires on March 31, 1924.

5. The steamers to be employed should be from 5,000 to 6,000 tons gross, capable of maintaining an ocean speed of 12 knots, and providing accommodation for 100 first class, 30 second class, and 100 steerage or deck passengers, and should be provided with 'tween decks.

6. The tender must state the amount of subsidy required, and the period for which the contract is requested.

7. The contract will provide that there shall be reasonable proportionate allocation of passengers and cargo accommodation between the colonies mentioned in Clause 3 (a).

8. There shall be no unfair differentiation in rates of freight against the smaller colonies as compared with the rates of larger colonies situated at a similar distance from St. John or Halifax, and freight and passenger rates will at all times be subject to the approval of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

9. The steamers should be so constructed that, so far as the traffic warrants, cold storage shall be provided, but alternative tenders may be submitted offering the steamers with or without cold storage.

10. The steamers employed shall at all times, if required, carry such mails as may be offered for that purpose by the postal authorities of Canada, or the West Indian Colonies, and the contractor is to land and embark all mails at terminal points and ports of call at his own expense.

11. The contract will be subject to such general conditions as are incidental to all similar steamship subsidy contracts granted by the Canadian government.

12. Any further information required in regard to this call for tenders may be obtained on application to the undersigned.

13. The minister does not bind himself to accept the lowest or any tender.

The committee will observe that there is an option of five or ten years. These tenders are due, I think, on the fifteenth June of this year, and after the tenders are in and the government have had time to consider them, they are at liberty to accept or reject any of the tenders.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister, I think, has given the committee the impression that the subsidy is justifiable because of the fact that a trade treaty has been entered into, and under it a certain steamship service is required. Is that the case?

Mr. ROBB: That was part of the treaty; but we had a subsidy there before the treaty because it is worth something to the Dominion of Canada to have a customer with whom we do a business amounting to $18,000,000 a year. There is no railway communication down to those islands, and you cannot get the business except by a steamship service. We have a considerable preference in that market for our products, and we ship to those islands large quantities of flour. The Dominion of Canada practically controls the trade in flour of the West Indian islands, because we have a considerable preference on flour. We also ship to those islands large quantities of dairy products and fish. It is largely agricultural products that are shipped down there, and in return they send us back products which we require in this country, such as fruit which we cannot grow here, and sugar. I submit that it is a fair trade between Canada and the West Indian islands.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I had not quite finished my question. I presumed, however, it was because of the treaty and the requirement of the regular sailings that the subsidy was being continued. The tender that has just been read calls for a fortnightly service, but the treaty calls for a weekly service. Even if you get the new and improved boats with the new subsidy under the new tender, you still do not comply with the trade agreement.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Which treaty was that—the first or the second?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The last treaty, the one that is now effective.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend must understand that there are two parties to a bargain. The people who are doing the business down there intimate that it will not pay. I will put on record the memorandum I have as regards the whole business down there:

Under the agreement, the Canadian government, pledged itself to "use its best endeavours"—

That was the pledge.

—to arrange for a mail, passenger and freight service, to come into effect as soon as possible, and in any case within three years, between Canada and the eastern group (see article X).

In order to carry out this part of the agreement, therefore, the government called for tenders for this service on September 20, 1921, receivable up to noon of January 31, 1922. When the last mentioned time arrived, only one tender had been received, and this was from the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, the present contractors. The Canada West Indies Trade agreement contemplates the establishment of a weekly service. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., however, pointed out that there is not sufficient trade on this route to keep up a weekly service, and that any attempt to run such a service would be followed by a heavy loss. They, therefore, propose to put on a fortnightly service. As it would be necessary to build four new ships for this route they wanted a contract for the life of such ships, viz. twenty years, They stated that they could not afford to run the proposed new service for a fixed subsidy while the steamers of the C.G.M.M. were at the same time running in competition with subsidized vessels. The R.M.S.P. had previous to this been making complaints to the effect that the C.G.M.M. ships came into Trinidad, Barbados and Demerara, and took away a large proportion of their most profitable cargo,—

That is, on the homeward voyage. There is not enough business for both services on the homeward voyage, although there is quite enough for both going down. It is in the interests of the Canadian people for us to send all the business we can down there.

Mr. IRVINE: But if they are to take freight down they must bring freight back.

Mr. ROBB (reading):

—that is, sugar and molasses. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company protested against this, stating that while it is admitted that there is sufficient southbound traffic for both lines, yet the northbound cargo is limited in quantity and there is not sufficient for both lines.

I would emphasize the fact that there is a good deal of business going down, but the complaint is that our vessels take away from their freight coming back. I am not debating the question whether they are right or wrong, but that is their complaint.

The R.M.S.P. offered, therefore, to provide a fortnightly service with new steamers of the size and type contemplated by the West Indies Agreement, on condition that the government guaranteed a minimum return of 7½ per cent per annum on the capital value of the said new ships. It may be added here that the present revenue on this service works out at between three and five per cent on the capital value of the four old steamers which the R.M.S.P. are running, after taking the subsidy into account.

We did not accept that contract. We are now submitting tenders which will be opened in June and the government are using their best endeavours to meet the desire of the West India islands because we want to keep those customers of ours, provided, of course, that the service is not too expensive.

Mr. BOYS: Do I understand that the stipulations of the advertisement just read do not comply with the terms of the treaty? If so, what would be the use of securing a contract of that kind? What is the penalty in the event of the treaty being violated?

Mr. ROBB: Our friends in the West Indies are not unreasonable, and I do not think that they are prepared to pay their proportion of the cost if the traffic does not warrant a weekly service. Now, I do not know on whose behalf hon. gentlemen are complaining. We have had a communication with the people there, and I have here a message the Prime Minister transmitted.

Mr. BOYS: I am not complaining at all. I confess at once that I know very little about this matter, but it struck me that it might be idle to call for tenders if the service would not comply with the treaty; I thought we might not get the benefit of it. I should think it would be essential to make sure that the other parties to the treaty would be satisfied with the stipulations in the tender. One would suppose that this would be a condition precedent to the acceptance of any tender. Is it the intention of the department, even if the tenders are thought satisfactory, to accept them without making certain of the satisfaction of the other parties to the treaty? If they were not satisfied, it might involve a variation in the terms of the treaty.

Mr. ROBB: We will certainly not enter into a contract unless it is acceptable to the West Indies.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I suggest that it is hardly fair for the minister to characterize as complaints a very fair criticism of a very questionable looking item.

Mr. DUFF: It is not questionable.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are one or two points that are not clear, if this is to be anything like an intelligent presentation of the case. According to the very statement just now read by the minister, the Canadian Government Marine is in competition with a subsidized line.

Mr. ROBB: That is the complaint.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is the complaint, and I presume it has some foundation. If that is so, then it is the very point that leads some of us to object to the item. I confess that it does seem very strange, to me at least, that there should be a large subsidy like this granted by the government to a steamship line when at the same time we have our own Canadian Government Merchant Marine vessels in competition with that line. I do not wonder that our vessels are losing, where they are in competition with a line subsidized against us by ourselves. That is the main point, and I do not think it has yet been answered. The statement has been made by the minister, I think, and by the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that the Canadian Marine boats are not suitable for this route. Are there any boats belonging to the government that can be made suitable for it?

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know anything about shipping on the east coast, although I do know something about the conditions on the west coast. But I was talking with a captain of one of the Canadian Government boats a few months ago and he informed me that some of these vessels could very readily be converted to meet the needs of that route. He must know what he is talking about because he is on that run himself. He said that very few additions would be necessary to provide a passenger service, and that if there were cold storage facilities these boats could bring back a very profitable return cargo in the form of fruit, and so forth, coming to Canada. Has there been any thorough-going investigation of the possibilities of this route, or has there been any authoritative report on the subject?

Mr. ROBB: I know nothing about steamships myself and I do not pretend to know anything about them. But if the gentlemen who are responsible to the Dominion of Canada for the management of the Government Merchant Marine, and who undoubtedly should know a great deal about vessels, consider that any of the government boats can be so equipped as to meet the requirements of the route without involving too great an expense, I have no doubt they will so inform the government. As I have pointed out, we are asking for tenders.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Have we had any report on the subject?

Mr. ROBB: Tenders will be opened on June 15th. I might repeat that there is no complaint as regards the service going down; there is ample business on the downward trip. The complaint has reference to the upward voyage; they claim that we take away business from the subsidized line. We must remember that while the Canadian Government Marine has made a loss, the people of Canada have had some advantage from the reduced freight.

Mr. CAMPBELL: My information is that last season the Royal Mail Steamship Company raised its rates 25 per cent.

Mr. ROBB: We have no complaint on record.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The department would have to consent to the increase?

Mr. ROBB: We have no complaint of the rates.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The remarks of the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) are quite natural. It is only fair to concede the fact that persons not acquainted with this particular trade should think it strange that we should be paying $350,000 a year for a steamship service while at the same time we have our own government ships operating in these waters. I am not objecting either to the criticism that the policy of subsidizing steamships is in itself wrong. I must confess that I am not very much enamoured of it. However, in this particular case the steamship service is part of a trade convention. We receive preferential treatment in the West India islands on certain conditions, one of them being the maintenance of this service. I do not know whether some of the vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine might not be made suitable for this service, but their conversion would cost millions of dollars. Personally I have no faith in the government operation of ships. I say it is much cheaper and more satisfactory in every respect to pay a subsidy to a privately-owned line than to have the vessels owned and operated by the government, because such operation will always be more expensive. The public will not allow these ships to be operated as carefully and economically as is the case with privately-owned ships. I think therefore that on the whole it is in the interests of the development of Canadian trade to subsidize this private service rather than attempt the conversion of our government vessels at a cost of millions of dollars and then operate them at a cost far in excess, I am sure, of the cost of operation of privately-owned ships.

Mr. McBRIDE: With respect to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, I made the statement on the floor of this House last session that any ship under five thousand tons would never pay operating expenses. There are some twenty-two of these ships under that tonnage. I repeat that statement to-night, and I do so after going over their plans and specifications very carefully. The sooner the government realizes that these ships cannot possibly be made to pay and gets rid of them the better it will be for the taxpayers. A good deal has been said, possibly not in this House, about the late government building those ships. I am not finding fault with that policy, although I did not approve of it at the time, but they were constructed when most people expected shipping would be good for many years to come. Construction took place at a time when wages and building material were at the very top notch. Last year I went into this question very carefully with the late Mr. Kennedy, then Minister of Railways. In fact he asked me to form a company on the Pacific coast to see if we could not operate these ships, but this I refused to do, because I knew they could not be operated at a profit the way their boilers are constructed. I am not going into this in detail, indeed, it would not be in the interests of the people that I should, because I think it will be better for the country that these ships be disposed of and what I might bring out would not add to the chances of the government getting rid of them. If the government can get 20 per cent of the cost of these ships I think they will be getting a good price; and I question whether they will be able to get even that. If you attempt to convert them into passenger ships they will be a still greater burden, because they have not the required power or speed, and we shall only be getting further into debt for something that will never be a paying proposition.

Mr. IRVINE: As it is twelve o'clock and this is a very important item I would ask that it be allowed to stand over.

Mr. GRAHAM: We have been spending hours on this item, and surely we ought to get it through now.

Mr. IRVINE: Then we will spend more hours on it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. IRVINE: Will the minister tell us the profits of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Line for last year?

Mr. ROBB: I think I gave that a few moments ago. I have not the information under my hand just now, but it was about 5 per cent on the investment. It will be found on Hansard.

Mr. IRVINE: It may be on Hansard, but I should like to get it now.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister is not required to give information twice on the same vote.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not sure that he even gave it once.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, I gave the information.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister simply said he thought it was 5 per cent. I think we are entitled to know the exact amount in dollars of the profit or loss, if any, made by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Sir Henry Thornton speaks rather optimistically of the prospects for trade in the West Indies, and I am not entirely convinced that the Canadian Government Merchant Marine cannot handle the business.

Mr. ROBB: He will probably tender for the contract.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have received several pamphlets and letters from practical seamen, one a former officer in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and I am assured by them that these vessels could be used to advantage in this trade. I notice in the Official Journal of the Marine Engineers of Canada, published in St. John, New Brunswick, that a Halifax correspondent writes, in part, as follows:

> We also have to regret that quite a number of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine are still laid up in the Northwest Arm. These if put in commission would give employment to between 250 and 300 men. I was surprised to read a few days ago that the government had made a new contract for two years with the R.M.S.P. Company to supply the West Indies an d Demerara service. Why could not four of the Canadian Government Merchant fleet be fitted for this work, and thus give employment to our own men and put the charter money into the government coffers? We sincerely trust that the new government will remedy these abuses and bring about a better state of affairs.

Now, notwithstanding all that has been said in criticism of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine I note that it made a small profit in both 1919 and 1920.

Mr. ROBB: On the Pacific.

Mr. CAMPBELL: We must remember, of course, that very few steamship companies have made money of late years. Sir Henry Thornton in his report says:

> The steamers, Canadian Fisher and Canadian Forester, in operation on this route, are not suitable for this trade, and it is considered essential, in order to make a success of this branch of the service, that a special type of oil-burning steamers, with increased passenger accommodation, and fitted with proper refrigeration and ventilation facilities to take care of perishable shipments, be provided.

I understand that their specifications come pretty well up to the standard of the other vessels they are competing with, and it does seem to me unreasonable that this amount should be paid out to subsidize vessels operating in competition with the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. If the capital investment in the Merchant Marine is too large, it should be written down the same as the American government did with their fleet. They wrote it down I think to about fifty per cent of the capitalization.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships would have to be reconstructed anyway. The operators would have to come to parliament and ask it to vote the money. Parliament would have to grant it to them, and it has not done so yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I quite understand that, but I think this matter should be taken into consideration before any subsidy is granted. Let the government make definite inquiries from the Railway Board as to what can be done and ascertain what the recommendations are. It seems an extraordinary thing to tie the country up for five or ten years to a subsidized service without knowing what our own ships can do. In this same report on the Merchant Marine, Sir Henry Thornton also draws attention to the fact that these ships, while perhaps not paying as a separate branch, are drawing a large amount of freight and bringing tonnage for the Canadian National railways. That also should be taken into consideration.

Mr. DUFF: At this late hour I do not want to enter into any lengthy discussion. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) in what he read from Sir Henry Thornton's report has upset his own argument. First he read something from a marine paper which deprecated the fact that some of the Government Merchant Marine steamers in the Northwest arm were out of commission, when they might be giving employment to a certain number of men. Then it went on to say that if they were put in commission they could be used on the West India service. Then my hon. friend read from Sir Henry Thornton's report that the present steamers on the route were not fitted for the business, and that the type of steamer required was an oil burner. That just fixed the hon. gentleman's argument. Sir Henry Thornton admits that there are no steamers in the Government Merchant Marine fitted for this West India service, which includes carrying passengers, mail and freight, and that is an absolute fact. We may talk till we are black and blue, and I do not want to take up time to-night because I shall discuss this matter on another occasion, when I shall be able to prove that there is not one steamer of the whole sixty-three in the governmenet fleet that is fitted for carrying passengers, mail and freight. At the present time they are using two or three of these steamers on the Honduras route, and they are carrying practically no freight. At some ports at which they call, at Belize and Jamaica they are landing only five pounds of freight, and these steamers are being run at an expense of three or four thousand dollars a day. My hon. friend is correct about freights being increased, but it was not twenty-five per cent. About two years ago they were increased fifty per cent, and for this reason: The government steamers which are competing with the Royal Mail Packet boats on the same route were getting part of the business which the Royal Mail boats should have had if they were to pay, and when the Royal Mail Company found that the Canadian government boats were taking part of the business, which was not sufficient for them both—both lines were carrying only half cargoes—the manager of the Royal Mail Packet came to Ottawa and placed his statement before the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He showed him that they were losing a large sum of money and the Minister of Trade and Commerce called in Mr. Teakle, the manager of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, and asked him what he thought about it. Mr. Teakle said: "Yes, we are not making any money, and instead of getting $2.40 for a cask of fish and $1.10 for a barrel of flour we should get more." The Minister of Trade and Commerce consequently increased the freight rates both on the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and the Royal Mail Packet line. That is exactly what happened.

The trade agreement with the West India islands calls for a twelve-knot service. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine boats cannot comply with that because their speed is only between eight and nine knots, and inside of two years, although as the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) says, we do not want to say too much about it, owing to poor construction these government boats will need new boilers and engines, as their engines and boilers are practically no good.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the hon. member tell us if the boats that are now being subsidized are all speedy enough to meet the requirements of that trade?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I think they are twelve-knot boats. I am a shipper in Nova Scotia and am using these boats, not every fortnight, but every once in awhile, and we are quite satisfied with these boats so far as trade with the West Indies is concerned, although, of course, a faster boat would be better.

Mr. IRVINE: You are not sure they are up to the standard.

Mr. DUFF: The Royal Mail Packet boats, yes.

Mr. NEILL: I have here a list of the Royal Mail Packet boats on this service and only one of them is a twelve-knot boat. The others were all built thirty years ago, so they are not very modern.

Mr. DUFF: The contract calls for a twelve-knot service, and I say that the Merchant Marine boats cannot give that service.

Mr. IRVINE: Neither could the other boats.

Mr. DUFF: The minister has not to accept the tender of the Royal Mail Company. He can accept anybody's tender that is satisfactory, yours or mine.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): If the Royal Mail Company get the new contract they will have to put on new ships. Their ships were able to comply with the terms of the original contract ten or fifteen years ago, but nobody disputes the fact that these ships now are hardly suitable for the purpose. If they are the successful tenderers these boats will be withdrawn and new boats put on in time.

Mr. IRVINE: Why were they not withdrawn last year?

Mr. ROBB: We could not get anyone else to take the service. Let me repeat what I said before. The previous government in September, before going out of office, advertised for tenders. Those tenders came in in January, 1922. The tenderers wanted a guarantee of 7 per cent on their investment, and the government did not consider that that was a profitable bargain for the Dominion, so the best thing we could do was arrange with our West India customers to accept a continuation of the previous service by the Royal Mail Line, and we arranged with them to continue the service. My hon. friend asked a moment ago as to the earnings of this company. I have a notation here that the present revenue—I do not know whether this is profit; we have no way of determining the profit; that is for the people who are running the service—works out between three and five per cent on the capital value of the four old steamers which the company are running, after taking the subsidy into account.

[Mr. Duff.]

Mr. IRVINE: This seems to be getting more complicated as we go along. The minister has shown us that the ships that had the contract last year from the government did not meet the requirements of the treaty, and yet they got the contract.

Mr. ROBB: It was the former service that was continued. The West India islands are a consenting party to that arrangement. They pay something too.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes, I understand, but you let the contract to this company because you could not get anybody else that could meet the requirements of the treaty.

Mr. ROBB: We had the Royal Mail Company carry on.

Mr. IRVINE: Under these circumstances does not the minister think it would have been reasonable to have let the contract to the government's own ships?

Mr. ROBB: They could not give the service.

Mr. IRVINE: They could not give the service, yet the Royal Mail Company is complaining that the government ships are taking the trade.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has missed the point. There are some islands that the Canadian ships cannot go into at all, and the complaint of the Royal Mail Line is that the Canadian boats go into the profitable islands and skip the others.

Mr. IRVINE: Why should they not?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is not keeping the contract.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There is not much profit in it for the tax payer of Canada.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member for Lunenburg has just said that he could prove to us that there was no ship belonging to the Canadian government that could be refitted to take part in this trade. I say that if he can prove that, now is the time to do it. It is no use proving it at some other time after this estimate has passed. If he has the proof, we ought to have it now.

Mr. ROBB: Let us understand each other. Here is a contract with the West India islands. Does my hon. friend say that we should repudiate that contract and cancel the service?

Mr. DUFF: I can answer the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Irvine) very briefly. The contract calls for a twelve knot service. The Canadian government cannot supply boats which will sail more than nine or ten knots. Consequently I have answered my hon. friend.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think he has. The minister has just said that they had to take boats last year that had not the necessary speed because they could not get any other. How does he know that they will not have to do that again this year?

Mr. DUFF: That is another question.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This treaty has never been lived up to in the past, and the information I have is that the Canadian Government boats,, although not exactly of the type required for this service, are just as good as the boats operating on it to-day. Now, I have that from practical men. I had that from a number of men in the Maritime provinces not very long ago, practical men, who assured me that these vessels were quite fit to be put on to do that work.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Will my hon. friend permit me to ask him why he makes that statement? What is the purpose of this criticism? Why are the facts not properly considered as they are? Who are the people in the Maritime provinces who say these ships could perform that service? Are they men who want a job on a boat, do they want to get on the Civil Service list, or are they men capable of having an opinion on the matter at all? My hon. friend should know, he could easily find out, that there is not a single ship in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine that can carry on the passenger service between Halifax and St. John. That is a part of the present treaty and it was a provision of the old treaty. What is the use therefore in asking to have ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine carry on the service?

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I was asking my hon. friend a question. Will he tell me what it is he wants to know, and what the reason is for this opposition, this persistent inquiry which has, I think, been answered a dozen times?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was simply giving information that is in my possession. I have a letter here on the subject and a good deal of other information. I am not prepared to give the writer's name but he is a practical seaman. Furthermore I have read a resolution passed by this body of the marine engineers of Canada to which surely some weight must be given.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Very little weight as read. It looks to me as a resolution that was passed as a bit of propaganda upon the request of somebody. You can get a resolution passed to-day anywhere and upon any subject if you take the trouble to have it done.

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to point this out. The hon. member for Halifax asks "Who are these men who suggest that our ships can do this work, and are they men who want to get a job sailing?" I ask: Who are the men who want a subsidy? Are they men who want profits? I submit that these men have as good a right to be heard as the gentlemen for whom the hon. member for Halifax seems to be speaking.

Mr. ROBB: We are advertising for tenders and any person can tender for this contract.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not speaking for anybody. The government are asking for tenders from steamship men to perform this service. I do not know who will get the contract. We were very fortunate during the war to have this long standing contract with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, otherwise our West India service would have been interrupted four or five years.

Mr. SHAW: I want to ask my hon. friend a question because I do not wish to misunderstand him. Do I gather that the contract which is proposed to be entered into does not take effect until March of next year, and that we are now concerned with the voting of the subsidy for the current year?

Mr. ROBB For carrying on the service.

Mr. SHAW: The sum of $375,000 for this year?

Mr. ROBB: No $340,000.

Mr. SHAW: The contract for next year is no use in determining what is going to be done this year. That is the question I want to ask my hon. friend? Is not that a fact?

Mr. DUFF: If that is true what is the use of discussing this matter? Even if some of the vessels of the Government Merchant Marine could be fitted up for the service they could not be fitted up this year and it is quite evident we can only get the service performed by the Royal Mail Packet Steamship Company. Therefore we are only wasting time in discussing the matter.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I understand the original contract expired four years ago or possibly more, and that it has been renewed for two years at a time since. Nothing better could be done. I do not think that two years ago ships could have been obtained anywhere to carry on that service in a better way than the vessels of the Royal Mail Packet Steamship Company were doing. Temporary arrangements were made for that and I think it is just as well it was done because we have a clearer realization to-day of probable trade currents between Canada and the West Indies, and in fact between all other countries of the world. In 1920 our idea of the future trade of this country was not very sanely based, otherwise I think the Jamaica contract would have been framed in different terms.

Mr. BAXTER: I would like to ask, as the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) has done, where we are going to get by this discussion? What action is proposed? Is it suggested that we shall vote this amount of money or that we shall reduce it? If we reduce it we cannot get even the service that we have got at the present time, and that service is of very considerable value to the Maritime provinces. More than that it extends at least as far as Montreal. The very importation of sugar into the country is surely of importance, and the fact that that sugar is brought in water-borne through our own ports has, I think, quite an effect in keeping down to some extent the price of sugar. Of course that is something that is determined by the larger market but I think it is one factor. I do not think that anyone in the Maritime provinces would want to give up this link of connection with the British West Indies. I do not think that anyone in any other part of Canada would want to deprive us of any opportunity that we have of doing that business. And the business is not confined to what originates in the Maritime provinces. The rest of Canada has its opportunities just the same as the Maritime provinces have. It has become perfectly clear that the steamers are not adequate according to the subsidy requirements. But if you say to the owners of the steamship "Very well, your steamers are not fit, we will not pay any subsidies" you lose such service as you have got. If you try to replace it by something you produce yourself you cannot, as the hon. member for Lunenburg says, fit them up within the requisite time, nor are the boats structurally capable, that is the boats of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, for passenger service. If hon. gentlemen who talk in this way were a little nearer salt water than they are they would realize that the type of boat for a mere freighter is just as different from one that is built for a combined freight and passenger service as perhaps a yacht is from a battleship.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BAXTER: Well, hon. members may laugh. But where do we get as a result of this discussion? Are we going to drop all assistance, are we going to drop such service as we have now got? If directions could be given to the minister as to what he is to ask for for a future contract, very well let us give him the suggestion and let us not say that there shall be no service. I do not see how we can get the present service for any lesser amount of money. If I thought we could I would impress upon the government to try and save money.

Mr. ROBB: We cannot, we tried.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to protest against the continuation of this subsidy. I listened very intently this evening to the reasons advanced for its continuation and I must confess I have not heard a single good one from hon. gentlemen opposite, not one. They talk of their treaty and they talk of trade. As to the treaty it was fractured to pieces long ago. Not a single boat of the Royal Mail Packet Company's vessels complies with the trade requirements. For instance, the Caraquet is of 4,800 tons and 5,000 tons is required in the agreement. A speed of 12 knots is required in the treaty, and the speed of the Caraquet is 11 knots. Take the Chignecto and by the way it is a fairly old boat; it was built thirty years ago in my own country.

Mr. DUFF: Is the hon. member not aware that these ships are not operating under the terms of the treaty? They are operating under an old arrangement made many years ago.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, quite so. Last year the argument was put up by the hon. member or some of those associated with him that the reason for the continuation of the subsidy to these boats was the treaty.

Mr. DUFF: Oh, no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I beg pardon.

Mr. DUFF: I beg your pardon.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We find the Chignecto has a tonnage of 4,756. It has a speed of eleven knots, not twelve. Then take the Chaudiere, it has a tonnage of 4,019, built 34 years ago in Sunderland, Great Britain, and so on.

Now let me take the passenger accommodation which everybody is talking about so much. It is true the trade treaty calls for a certain passenger accommodation, 100 first class, 30 second class, and 100 steerage and deck passengers, and yet we find all the subsidized boats have only accommodation for 60 first class, 30 second class and 20 third class. So that in every respect they fall below the requirements of the treaty. It may be true that you can get a new line of boats on the service, but even so will it be warranted? I do not think it will be. The treaty is already broken, and, so far as I can see, the advantage to Canada has been little, if anything, and I will tell the committee why in a moment. I am sorry the minister was not able to provide the committee with information requested by one of the members for Calgary, with regard to how much the West Indian government had paid this government as a part of its share of responsibility. It may amuse some of the members of committee to know that outside of that section, which has not been complied with very well up to date, there is another requirement. The agreement says:

> If a subsidized steamship service is arranged for, the government of Canada will endeavour to secure the co-operation of the owners of such steamship service towards the provision of hotels and bungalows in the colonies, the governments of the colonies being prepared on their part to offer such facilities as may be practicable both as regards sites and financial assistance.

The main objection to the Canadian Government Merchant Marine and the Royal Mail Steam Packet appears to be the fact that you cannot equip the merchant marine with passenger accommodation, but, so far as I can see from the agreement, the only type of passenger who wants to go down there will be those who want a lazy holiday and not the business men. The business man with any business instinct would never take the slow boat, not even the 12 knot boat if you had any. He would go to New York, make a rapid trip and get through with his business. The whole subsidy is to provide the wealthy people with opportunities for a lazy voyage. The agreement looks as though it were framed for that purpose. I have the greatest respect for the nautical knowledge of the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff), but I would submit that there are others in the House who know a little about it, not so much perhaps as he does. There are some members from the prairies born and raised for many years in seaport towns, who may presume to know something about the matter, but the hon. member in his criticism of the merchant marine said the engines were no good, the boats were no good and nothing good about them. I think before the committee on transportation in 1921 he said he would like to see them all sunk.

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear—better for the country if they were sunk.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That statement will give the committee an idea of the loyalty of the hon. member to government ownership.

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to quote for his benefiit from the Montreal Daily Star shipping notes, October 10, 1922. This article deals with one Canadian Government Merchant Marine boat with new and untried engines, built by the Canadian Vickers Limited, a Canadian firm. This paper says:

> The ship, with new and untried engines, built by the Canadian Vickers Limited, eventually completed a maiden voyage of 13,000 miles without a single breakdown. This is still considered a wonderful feat for a new vessel.

The hon. member's criticism of the merchant marine on account of inadequate engines has broken down completely, in fact it was broken down long ago. I am a little confused as to the hon. member's attitude at this day. In 1919, I think it was, he said he was rather critical of this very subsidy. I quote from Hansard, page 1284, where he refers to the Royal Mail Steam Company on the eastern route as follows:

> These boats are loaded to the hatches every trip and cannot take all the freight that is offered. A lot of freight is left at Halifax every time the boats leave. If these boats can ply between Halifax, Jamaica and Cuba without a subsidy the Royal Mail Steam Packet boats ought to be able to do likewise.

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I agree with him.

Mr. DUFF: That was before the Canadian Government Merchant Marine boats were put on.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): According to the hon. member's statement, a lot of freight is left at Halifax every time. Now I may say the hon. member for Guysborough at that time was also particularly critical and asked the minister to look into the question and see if we were not allowing matters to drift a little too much, and if each year, before the estimates came before the House, he could find out the standing of the different companies and what they earned during the previous year. There was some criticism of the compagnies earning the subsidies. Then the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), apparently acting as the minister at the time, states at page 1285:

> The matter of granting subsidies to steamship companies, particularly in connection with services to other countries is, I must admit, a very doubtful one.

I very much agree with the hon. member. I am sorry he has also changed his opinion since that time.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I said that to-night.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am very glad. Why not carry it out?

An hon. MEMBER: So say we all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Apparently the hon. members are, shall I say, excusing their consciences by saying "I said that too," but they are making no effort to do what they pretend is right.

Mr. ROBB: Is the hon. member finding fault because we declined to accept a tender asking for 7½ per cent on the investment, or is he finding fault because we are asking for new tenders and reserving the right to accept any or the lowest tender?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Any tender such as the minister has sent out can meet with nothing but utter disapproval from me The tender called for a subsidy.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is the hon. member against the subsidy?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Absolutely opposed to subsidies.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Then that is all there is to say.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, not at all. We might look into the history of this thing a little bit. The hon. member for Lunenburg stated on the 23rd March, 1920, at page 634 of Hansard:

> But I am not under ordinary conditions in favour of bonusing the building of ships or any other industry.

But Mr. Keefer replying to him says:

> The people of the West Indies have never realized that while we have been taking only one third of their total exports in a direct way—

I need not read it all, but he says:

> What is the reason? Lack of transportation, namely, ships—Canadian controlled ships.

Mr. DUFF: Who said that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Keefer.

Mr. DUFF: I thought the hon. member said I said it.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would not knowingly attribute anything to the hon. member he had not said. Looking into the history of the thing, the whole question of the treaty itself came into being at a meeting of the delegates from the West Indies, under the chairmanship of Sir George Foster, with Lieutenant-Colonel Amery present. To any one who has read that evidence carefully, it must be perfectly clear that there was one great guiding hand throughout the whole proceeding, and that was the hand of Colonel Amery. Looking into the reasons why he should be so interested in the matter, we find that, on the 23rd March, 1920, it is stated in Hansard:

> The object of the appointment of that committee is indicated in the following paragraph in the preamble of its report:
> "To consider the probable effect of the shipping position after the war on British trade with the British West Indian colonies, and on intercolonial communications, and to report what, if any, measures should be taken to maintain adequate communication with and between those colonies, and to provide increased port or other facilities for shipping."
>
> A perusal of the report of this committee, which is signed by the chairman, Lieut.-Colonel Amery, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, reveals a most pathetic state of affairs. There are colonies with which trade communications cannot be established and maintained—I speak of communication with Great Britain—by a passenger and mail service without the payment of heavy subsidies. The report shows that the Royal Mail Steamship Company has lost money in endeavouring to maintain a service between England and the West Indies. The statement is made that a net loss of £1,037,853 has been incurred by the West Indian mail service in the period of twenty years between 1896 and 1915.

And so on.

Mr. ROBB: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend's argument. I just want to ask him this. Apparently Colonel Amery was of opinion—I have not read this, but that is what I gather—that the Empire wanted to keep that business with the West Indian islands. It was unprofitable to attempt to carry it on towards Englnad. If Canada did not come in, the United States would have got the business. Is my hon. friend proposing to-night that we shall cut out the business altogether and let it go to the United States?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the minister has no more confidence than that in the people of the British West Indies with their British governors and British connections, I would suggest that he have a little more faith, courage and hope. I want to read the words of a well known and respected former member of this House. As reported in Hansard of 1920 at page 899, Mr. Michael Clark said:

I want to say that there is a party in this House, which is much larger in the country, and behind which there is a swelling tide, which is absolutely at one both on profiteering contracts and on subsidies. We here, to a man, are opposed to subsidies and bounties on principle. We say they are unjust, they are bad political economy, they are wrong, and we oppose them.

Those words, I may say, express my sentiments exactly.

Mr. BOIVIN: Is that gentleman still a member of the same party?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman had better write and ask him. I venture to say that after the budget of this year, he would prefer to belong to this party than to the party of my hon. friend.

Mr. BOIVIN: The hon. member is not sure of that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We have had a brief discussion to-night on the question of contracts made for two years or more ahead. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), as reported on page 2261 of Hansard of April 19, 1921 said:

But I do say that no other line of ships competing against the company—

The Royal Mail Steamship Company—

—which has this contract can do any business. It does not matter how many ships are put on or who are operating them, they cannot get the trade and will operate only at a loss; at the same time they will be doing an injury to the other company.

The hon. member for Halifax is reported as defending private ownership, irrespective of the fact that this country owns a government merchant marine and that the people are taxed to pay the cost of it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think the people of this country are being very heavily taxed to-day, and I would like to see the burden lessened.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The costs have to be paid anyway whether the service is a government-owned one or a privately-owned one.

So far as I can see, in reading the history of this steamship line to the West Indies, the country has had to pay all the way through. It has never paid to keep up that service. The minister refers to the important service, the great trade, the danger of violating the treaty which has already been violated. He has referred to a trade of $18,000,000 a year. I question very much whether he can state many years when the trade has reached $18,000,000. There might have been one year, but not very many. He also throws a little sop to the committee by stating that the trade was mostly in agricultural products. Last year I tried to give to the House some figures showing the falling off in trade, and I gave them in dollars. The hon. senior member for Halifax at once raised the question that tonnage was the proper basis for comparison, and I have endeavoured to secure tonnage in this case. For example, let us take agriculture or some natural resources such as fish, in which the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) will be interested. In 1920, before the treaty that was to develop trade came into operation, we shipped $1,621,419 worth of fish.

Mr. DUFF: Was that shipped by these steamers?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not talking about that. I am talking about the trade treaty, the magnificent increase in trade that has been built up by this treaty.

Mr. DUFF: Which treaty?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The West Indian treaty.

Mr. DUFF: It is not in effect yet.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member should wake up. I would suggest that the hon. member for Lunenburg read the sessional papers of 1921. The hour, perhaps, is fairly late, and it may be his usual custom to go to bed early. In 1920, there was fish exported to the West Indies from Canada to the extent of $1,621,419. In 1922, there was only $1,347,083 worth, or a falling off of about $300,000 worth. In fruits, in 1920, there was $113,177 exported, whereas in 1922 there was only $8,526 exported. The minister was talking about wheat and flour a little while ago. In 1919, we shipped 32,000 bushels of wheat to the West Indies; in 1920, none; in 1921, 2,512 bushels, and in 1922, none.

Mr. ROBB: How much flour?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I will tell the committee in a moment. The value in dollars of that wheat was in 1919, $80,000, in 1920, nil; in 1921, $4,885 and in 1920 it was, of course, nil. The minister made quite a point of the fact that agriculture was being assisted by this treaty. These are the figures with regard to other grains:

1919, 32 bushels exported.
1920, 35 bushels exported.
1922, 92 bushels exported.

An hon. MEMBER: That is increasing.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes. My hon. friends from Ontario will be interested in bran, shorts and middlings. The trade in this showed quite an increase—16,452 hundredweight shipped in 1920, and 21,434 hundredweight shipped in 1922. That is, shipping out of that province what is needed for the development of the dairy industry there.

Now, we come to the question of wheat flour. In 1918, 410,230 barrels were shipped. That increased the next year by about 100,000 barrels. In 1920 the trade fell off to about 52,200 barrels, and to-day the figure is 524,683 barrels or under what it was in 1919.

Mr. PARENT: What was it in 1918?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was 410,230 barrels.

Mr. DUFF: That is pretty good.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In 1919, 573,580 barrels. The treaty came into effect the next year, 1920. Immediately there is a falling off, and you find that in 1922, we have lost about 50,000 barrels. The trade under the treaty is not increasing very fast.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What does that mean? My hon. friend must be talking for a purpose or he should sit down.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am talking for a purpose.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is what I want to know. What is his purpose? If the hon. member is talking for the purpose of informing the committee, and if he can interpret the figures, I hope he will tell me whether or not he ascribes that decline in trade to the treaty? If not to the treaty, to what other cause or causes does he think it is due?

Mr. IRVINE: Change of government.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister a little while ago made a somewhat exaggerated speech about the vast value of the treaty to agriculture. He stated that the great bulk of the export trade to the West Indies consisted of agricultural products. If the member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) would listen intently, I think he would see that I am endeavouring to prove, and I think effectively, that the minister, I will not say did not know what he was talking about, but slightly exaggerated the facts. In 1918, we shipped 215 tons of hay, and that increased by 1923 to the enormous amount of 339 tons; in other words, in five years, and after nearly three years of the operation of a very effective treaty, that was the increase in business in that direction.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. ROBICHAUD: Tell us about potatoes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I doubt very much whether there is any notation here about potatoes; perhaps they did not ship any. No doubt the hon. gentleman is interested in potatoes; I too, as well as he, was interested in fish.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: If the service between the Maritime provinces and the West Indies were discontinued, what does the hon. gentleman think would happen to the farmers of New Brunswick who ship a good deal of potatoes to the West Indies?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): He does not care about that.

An hon. MEMBER: He only wants to block the estimates.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The member for Halifax interjects a remark which I think he must know is both unfair and insulting. I am not endeavouring to hold up the item, nor have I any objection to anyone in Canada trading with any part of the world. I should be only too glad to see my hon. friend's potatoes go to the West Indies or anywhere else.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: With or without a subsidy?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Without any subsidy.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Does the hon. gentleman really mean to suggest that he is discussiing this matter with a view to informing his colleagues or parliament upon the real issue before the committee?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not know whether the hon. member is unduly dense to-night; it may be due to the lateness of the hour.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The member for Halifax is not a bit dense just now. He is sufficiently bright to understand why the hon. gentleman is talking in this fashion.

Mr. SHAW: What does the hon. gentleman think is the reason?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I need not waste time stating it now; I will tell the hon. gentleman in the morning.

Mr. SHAW: Does the hon. member for Halifax think that anyone has given any more information to the committee than has been submitted by the member for Bow River (Mr. Garland)?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The total exports in 1918 were $6,838,563; in 1919, they had increased to $10,200,582. They remained roughly about the same in 1920, but increased slightly in 1921 and fell off by almost three million dollars in 1922. These are the exports about which we have heard so much. If the minister and the member for Halifax care to study these schedules giving the summary of the trade of Canada with the West Indies over a number of years and with individual islands they will discover without much trouble that our trade with Cuba has increased largely during all these years, while on the other hand our trade with the West Indies, since the coming into effect of this magnificent treaty, has actually fallen off. So that with an island to which we have no subsidized steamers running we have a greater trade than we have with the West Indies where our subsidized boats call.

Mr. DUFF: Can the hon. member tell the committee how the products of the Maritime provinces get to Cuba?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not care to answer that question.

Mr. DUFF: No, because you cannot answer it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Frankly, I cannot.

Mr. DUFF: Then the hon. member's whole argument falls, because most of the goods shipped to Cuba go by New York steamers, which is a different proposition altogether from sending them direct from St. John and Halifax.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We have been in good humour up to the present and I hope the hon .member will not be otherwise.

Mr. DUFF: I am in good humour.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The greater part of the export and import trade with the West Indies is still done via the United States.

Mr. BOIVIN: And does the hon. member encourage that?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, sir.

Mr. DUFF: What are you talking about then?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What I say is that I am not willing to subsidize a line of ships to call at islands that do a smaller trade with us than does an island to which we send no subsidized ships. Some hon. gentleman opposite tried to show that there was no competition between the Government Marine and the subsidized line, but that there is such competition I do not think any hon. member will doubt. Both the Government Marine and the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company complain about it; they have both protested against this competition. The Canadian ships which are now running on the West India service claim that there is sufficient southbound traffic for both, but that there is not enough northbound traffic to justify a double service. I have here a statement of Mr. Teakle, who says that there is not sufficient traffic between the West Indies and Canada to maintain three distinct services. The minister did not inform the committee that there is being inaugurated a new service between Montreal and the West Indies by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Surely the Canadian Pacific Railway are not going to put boats on an utterly losing service. There are protests from various associations against this subsidy. An hon. member read resolutions from the National Marine Engineers' Association,. and I have similar resolutions from the International Association of Machinists, the Trades and Labour Council of Montreal, representing 62 or 63 councils, and from other bodies protesting against the continuance of this subsidy; and I submit that the time has come when the people of this country ought not to be asked to pay profits—for that is what it amounts to—to a firm of ships that are owned in England, whose shareholders are in England, and the captains and sailors of which ships are mostly Englishmen, while our Canadian seamen are out of jobs, as even the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) is aware. We have our own marine, and this subsidy should be discontinued and our ships be allowed to run in fair competition with any other line. The treaty should be abrogated because it is of no advantage to Canada. I have gone thoroughly into this matter and I think I have proved to the satisfaction of the committee that the subsidy should be discontinued. I move therefore that the item be reduced by the sum of $300,000.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman quoted some remarks I made in the House in 1919 in opposition to subsidies. In reply I might say that I have never changed my opinion on the subject. If the committee will allow me to be a little personal, I would say that sailing ships in which I am interested are doing business with the West Indies in competition with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. These little ships, of which I am manager, go to Barbados and the other islands with Canadian products and bring back molasses and other commodities. For instance, this week I was home sending the schooner A. W. Chisholm to Trinidad with a cargo of cotton. These ships get no subsidy from this or any other government, they sail on their own bottoms, and if we lose money we grin and bear it. Consequently I agree with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) that we should not pay subsidies if it is possible to avoid it. But a change has taken place since I made my speech in 1919 which makes it essential for us to pay this subsidy, if we are to continue the service to the West Indies. And the change is that the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships are now engaging in the same trade and taking business which the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company should get. If a new contract is entered into by the Minister of Trade and Commerce with a reputable firm which will supply good ships, my opinion is that inside two or three years we will not have to pay any further subsidies because there will be sufficient business developed to enable such a line to be operated without assistance. But at present owing to the stupidity of some one, the Canadian Government Merchant Marine ships having been put in competition with the Royal Steam Packet Company's fleet, both lines are losing money, and as a result this parliament is compelled to vote a subsidy to maintain communication between the West Indies and the Maritime province ports. It would be suicidal to talk of discontinuing the subsidy now, for the shippers of the Maritime provinces would not be able to get their products to the West Indian markets, and consequently our farmers and fishermen would suffer. Therefore while I am opposed to subsidies in principle, I say it is necessary to have this subsidy voted, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. BOYS: When do the existing contracts expire?

Mr. ROBB: The original contract expired four years ago, then it was renewed for another two years.

Mr. BOYS: When is the end of the year?

Mr. ROBB: The previous government advertised for tenders in September, 1921. The only tender we received asked for 7½ per cent upon the investment. We did not accept this tender, but we continued the present arrangement for a further period of two years, which will expire in 1924. We are advertising now for new tenders.

Mr. BOYS: So as a matter of fact this vote is necessary to discharge our obligations under contracts which are still in existence?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Lunenburg suggests that we could not do away with this subsidized service because our trade would then cease. I submit, Mr. Chairman, we have plenty of boats we could put on that service, and the hon. member could increase the business of his own boats.

Mr. DUFF: What are you talking about? Mine are sailing ships.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Certainly, but they carry cargo?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, but these steamers are for passengers and mails.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not interested in the passengers to the West Indies from Canada. They are simply holidaying people, not business people.

Mr. DUFF: How does the hon. gentleman know they are not going down on business?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I was speaking to a lady only the other day who informed me she intended to take a trip to the West Indies. I said, "I hope you are going by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine or by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's boats, because I should like to have your experience of the trip." She replied, "Oh no. No one wants to go to the islands on those slow old boats. I shall go from New York." I have no doubt that business people would take the same route.

Mr. DUFF: Hon. members on this side and on the other side who understand anything about this business must be laughing in their sleeve. Let me tell my hon. friend that every first class passenger who leaves from Halifax or St. John on the Royal Packet steamers for the West Indies are business men or trade agents. The hon. member does not know that or he would not get up and talk in this way. Why are these business men travelling by these slow boats? For this reason, the boats call at Bermuda and other ports and while discharging cargo a business man has time to go ashore and do his business. That is why the passengers are business men, not rich people of leisure. I should like the hon. gentleman to acquaint himself with the facts before talking such utter nonsense.

Mr. BAXTER: I think it is quite obvious to everyone present what the result of this vote is going to be; the subsidy as proposed by the government will undoubtedly be carried. Now, we can, if not profitably or pleasantly, at least endurably, I suppose, stay here until two or three o'clock in the morning, and nobody will be a bit further ahead. The case against the subsidy has been as fully presented as it can be I should think. Those of us who are in favour of the subsidy will have to take the responsibility of voting for it, while those who think that a subsidy is wrong in principle will have the advantage before the country of having stated their view and supported it by their votes. Now, might we not just as well proceed to take the vote as continue a discussion in which no member is going to convince any other member of a single fact?

Mr. IRVINE: Would the hon. member apply that same principle to all other questions? If so we might as well go home.

An hon. MEMBER: It would be a very good idea.

Mr. BAXTER: No, only to the case under consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister a moment ago in answer to a question from the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Boys) stated that the contract was already let, and that therefore the money had to be voted. Am I right?

Mr. ROBB: A contract was given for two years, but there is a clause in all these subsidy contracts that their continuance is subject to the vote of parliament. If parliament does not vote this money the contract ceases. But there is an obligation on the part of the Dominion to carry on this contract until March, 1924. And we are not the only parties to it; our fellow-Britishers in the West Indies are also concerned. We are trying to carry out our part of the contract. If my hon. friends desire to continue the argument all night, well and good. I have been in that game before, and I agree with the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter) that nothing is to be gained by it. I never favoured such tactics when I was opposition whip. If my hon. friends say frankly they do not want to take the vote now, we can adjourn and go home like decent men to-night, but we can stay here until August just as well as they can. But if hon. gentlemen are prepared after reasonable debate of the amendment to vote, I do not object to staying a little while longer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I submit to the committee that we are trying to act conscientiously and carefully? Some of us have gone into this matter with care, and we are trying to do our duty as we see it. There is no intention on anybody's part to hold up or unduly obstruct the business of the House, and I think any such suggestions are rather unkind.

Mr. ROBB: I am glad to have that assurance.

Mr. SHAW: I understood the minister to say that we are obligated so far as this particular item is concerned to the amount of $340,000.

Mr. ROBB: It is $340,600.

Mr. SHAW: Whatever it is. Will the minister state shortly the actual terms of the contract existing between this company and the government under which this liability arises? I want to get particulars as to the nature of the service to be rendered and the tonnage of the boats to be used if any tonnage is provided for, or does the government simply say: You carry on the service fortnightly with these boats that you have got and we will pay you $340,000.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is right. That was the best arrangement we could make at that time. When the late government advertised for tenders for the improved service in order to carry out the contract, the tender that came in was not satisfactory. We considered that a basis of 7½ per cent on the invested capital was too uncertain, so we made an arrangement with the company to continue the service that had existed for many years and we paid them the same subsidy.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not going to make a speech, although I had a great deal of information that I wanted to give to the committee, but since I have been assured by my hon. friend from St. John and by hon. gentlemen opposite that they do not pay any attention to what is said anyway, it is unnecessary to make a speech. I understood the minister to say that he thought it advisable to subsidize an opposition line in order to secure competition which would result in lower freight rates for the Canadian people.

Mr. ROBB: I hope my hon. friend did not understand me to say anything of the kind. I do not remember making any such statement.

Mr. IRVINE: I thought the minister did not remember having said that, but I am quite sure he said it.

Mr. ROBB: Hansard will show.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes, I think it will show he made that statement.

Mr. NEILL: There are two points I would like to mention before the vote is taken. A suggestion was made from the opposite side of the House that if the government took off the government boats and continued this service, in other words, gave a monopoly to the Royal Mail Line, in a very short time the profits presumably of the company would be such that there would be no further subsidy required. I would like to ask the committee if it has ever been on record in the history of Canada that any steamship company ceased to ask for a subsidy or to get it. Did the condition ever arise when a company would come forward and say that it did not require any further assistance? No, they have always asked for it, and they have always got it.

There is another phase of the question. The minister said that when he was calling for these contracts there was only one tenderer. Now if we do away with the opposition of the government boats and practically give a monopoly to this Royal Mail Packet Line, it will not be $340,000 that they will want in two years, but five or six hundred thousand dollars because they will take deliberate, cold-blooded advantage of the fact that they have no competitor in the field. You cannot dig up a competing line in a week or two. The company that has a monopoly stampedes you. I have had some experience out west with that kind of thing. When the contract has nearly expired the people served by this line are naturally very anxious to see it maintained, and the company that has been given a monopoly knows that they have driven off competitors, and they get busy and hold up the government. We may lose money by the continuation of the merchant marine service down there, but we shall save it in the other way by stopping a monopoly, and if there was no opposition that would be the inevitable result.

I have only this to say as regards the vote: There is no question that as the government have entered into the contract parliament will have to vote the money, and judging from the numbers here the government will carry the vote. I hope they will, because I realize they have to carry out this contract. But I think there is a great deal of light to be let into this system of subsidies all over Canada, and I do not think the discussion to-night has been time ill-spent. I intend to support the amendment of the hon. member for Bow River, not that I am in favour of doing away with the vote, but as an expression of sympathy with him and those who support him in the suggestion made from across the floor that they are animated by improper motives, as if they had no right to do so if they chose.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not want the committee to be under the impression that we in this corner of the House are moving this amendment from pique or anything of that kind, nor because we fail to recognize the sacredness of a contract. I submit that it is a protest from the people of Canada whom we are here to represent against the government of Canada entering into contracts that compel the subsequent voting of money by the members of the House.

Amendment negatived.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Graham the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. Friday.

Friday, June 1, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Dominion Lands Act, chapter twenty of the Statutes of 1908, and to provide that the original valuation of the Homestead Inspector may be revised, if necessary; that authority be given for the granting of second homesteads to settlers within a definite district covering the southern portions of the province of Saskatchewan and Alberta; that further provisions regarding the issue of patents in the event of the death or insanity of the entrant, and respecting sections reserved for school lands, and permits to cut timber on Dominion lands, be enacted; and that the Governor in Council may make grants not exceeding in any case the sum of two hundred and forty dollars in cash in satisfaction of claims of half-breeds arising out of the extinguishment of the Indian title.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS BROUGHT DOWN

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I move to return to the order of motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM: I wish to lay on the Table of the House a return to an order moved for by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens)—earning and expenditure of vessels of the Canadian Government Marine; also a return moved for by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) concerning the Canadian Government Merchant Marine; also a return moved for by the hon. member for North Toronto with regard to the sale of the Toronto Suburban railway; also a return moved for by the hon. member for North Toronto concerning the purchase of property by the Canadian National railways at the corner of King and Yonge streets, Toronto.

REDISTRIBUTION

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Acting Minister of National Defence) presented the second report of the Redistribution committee as follows:

The special committee to whom was referred bill No. 15, an Act to readjust the representation of the House of Commons, beg leave to present the following as its second report:

Your committee, in accordance with the resolution adopted at their meeting of the 31st May, ask that it be given leave to have its proceedings printed from day to day for the use of members of the committee and of the House when deemed advisable.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not see in the motion any request that the reports be printed. The motion is only to concur in the report.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): As I understand it, the report recommends that the committee be allowed to print its own proceedings as and when it, the committee, desires, That being the case I take no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand it is in conformity with the report brought down.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION BY MR. CARROLL

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): I wish to give notice that on Tuesday next I shall move the second reading of bill—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must give notice in writing of his motion, or wait until we reach the Orders of the Day.

HARBOUR OF THREE RIVERS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to make provision for the improvement and management of the Harbour of Three Rivers, in the province of Quebec, and to provide:

1. That the Commissioners appointed under this act shall be incorporated under the name of the "Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners".

2. That boundaries of the harbour be defined; harbour commissioners and a harbour master, a deputy harbour master and other officers be appointed; and rules and regulations, and a tariff of rates and dues be made.

3. That the jurisdiction of the commissioners be defined, as well as their powers as to expropriation of lands and the making of by-laws, the collection of rents, and the borrowing of money.

4. That the commissioners shall expend the moneys collected, after payment of the salary of the harbour master and the necessary expenses of maintenance of the harbour, in improving the harbour and its appurtenances, according to plans to be approved by the minister.

5. That regulations as to seizures, penalties, the application of the same, and the general administration of the harbour be established.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION BOARD

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): I should like to draw the attention of the government to a despatch which appears in the Ottawa Evening Journal of May 31st, 1923, which reads as follows:

Would remove Pension Board

Victoria, B.C., May 30.—A resolution moved by Rt. Rev. Dr. Schofield, Bishop of Columbia, and seconded by Alderman E. W. Woodward, secretary of the Trades and Labor Council, calling upon the Dominion government to remove the members of the Canadian Pension Board, was endorsed last night at a meeting of 300 citizens. H. D. Twigg, commandant of the Canadian Legion here, quoted individual cases of alleged harsh treatment by the board, and reviewed the recent report of the Royal Commission which recently investigated the acts of that body.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to my question, I might say that I have the honour to be personally acquainted with the right reverend Dr. Schofield, who is a graduate of my own alma mater and for years was rector of Christ Church in the town of Sydney, and bishop of the Anglican church, or the Church of England, to which I have the honour to belong—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member not to comment, but to simply put his question.

Mr. MARTELL: It is probably necessary for me to preface my remarks. Of course now I cannot do it. I have every respect for Bishop Schofield's opinion, and I want to say for the honour of the Anglican church in the province of Nova Scotia that we represent one-fourth of the population of the province—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MARTELL: Is it the intention of the government to ignore a resolution moved by a Church of England minister in the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government will be pleased to take this resolution under consideration.

CANADA COLONIZATION ASSOCIATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): I have a question on the order paper with reference to the reorganization of the Canada Colonization Association. An article in the press states that the Canadian National Railway Company, as well as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, will be represented in the new association, and that each of these companies will make a grant of some $100,000 annually for a period of five years. I would like to know whether this matter has come to the knowledge of the government, and whether the government approves of representation of the Canadian National on such a board, and of the grant to be made by the Canadian National Railway to an outside organization?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil), (Minister of the Interior): I have seen the despatch, and have discussed the matter of the proposed co-operation of the two railway companies in immigration work. The matters have been discussed informally between our department and the railway company, to prevent overlapping in continental work, in the Scandinavian countries particularly, and work in Great Britain. We have been discussing it for some considerable time. The final meeting with respect to this matter will take place early this month, but no definite arrangement up to date has been arrived at. With respect to the Canada Colonization Association, I understand representations have been made on behalf of the proposed organization by Mr. Brown, the vice-president, but I cannot say how far these negotiations have gone at the moment. However, the moment negotiations are completed with respect to the other matter, as well as with respect to this question, I will be prepared to give the House full information.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PENSIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): Can the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment tell us whether it is his intention to bring in the proposed amendment to the Pensions Act, in compliance with the report of the Ralston commission?

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): The resolution with respect to this matter is on the order paper. The matter cannot be dealt with at all events before next Tuesday, as the House will adjourn till that date. It will be taken up next week.

Mr. MANION: Will the minister be so good as to inform the House two or three days in advance?—because there are very important changes and many hon. members wish to take part in the discussion.

Mr. BELAND: The resolution will be dealt with, of course, in the first place in Committee of the Whole, and the bill should be introduced three or four days later. Ample notice will be given to hon. members in regard to the matter. The bill will be more extensive than the resolution.

Mr. MANION: It is the desire, I am sure, of the minister to bring in this bill at the earliest possible moment, because it is a long time since the report was sent in, and there is a good deal of agitation among the soldiers asking for it to be dealt with as soon as possible. The report says that injustices have been done, and that they should be corrected as soon as possible.

Mr. BELAND: We have expressed our intention of dealing with the matter.

Mr. MANION: Intention—yes.

Mr. BELAND: And the resolution is on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps the hon. member, to save time, would like to move his resolution now.

Mr. BELAND: Yes. In connection with this resolution, I beg to say that His Excellency having been informed of the subject matter contained therein has been pleased to commend it to the attention of the House. I move that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Pension Act, chapter 43 of the statutes of 1919, and the amending Acts, and to provide,—

1. That enactments be made respecting pensions for military services rendered during the war and after the war, which shall be made retroactive to the first day of September, 1919, and all cases in which pension has been refused, reduced, discontinued or underrated by reason of the fact that the proposed legislation was not included in the Pension Act shall be subject to review by the Board of Pension Commissioners, and on such review pension shall be granted, increased or continued as from the date or dates it would have been granted, increased or continued had such proposed legislation been in force when such refusal, reduction or discontinuance or underrating was made effective.

2. That the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice may appoint a District Review Board for each of the nine districts of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and a Federal Appeal Board for Canada, to review appeals from decisions of the Board of Pension Commissioners; and that provision be made for the tenure of office and qualifications of the members of such Boards, and for the payment of their remuneration or salaries out of any unappropriated moneys of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

3. That the Governor in Council may make such rules and regulations as are deemed necessary to carry out and enforce the provisions of the proposed legislation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SHAW: Is it proposed to publish the final report of the Ralston commission for the benefit of the members?

Mr. BELAND: The final report is not in yet. My hon. friend, I assume, refers to the second report.

Mr. SHAW: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: The motion was carried in this House some ten days ago calling for the printing of five hundred copies in English and two hundred copies in French. I am not aware whether it is printed or not, but I suppose if it is printed it will be distributed at an early date.

Motion agreed to.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker according to an English despatch, a very serious view is taken of the developments which have occurred during the last few days in the negotiations between Lord Curzon and the Soviet.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must draw attention to the fact that the hon. member has already spoken on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is another question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It can be done with the consent of the House, but it is not usual for an hon. member to speak twice on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps I might ask a question. The papers would indicate that a situation is developing in the negotiations between Lord Curzon and the Soviet Republic of a rather serious character.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member might well afford to wait for another sitting of the House. I would ask him to put a question regularly on the order paper. He has already put a question on the Orders of the Day being called. The practice is that only one question can be put if it is a matter of public importance. More than one question, according to the authorities, can be put by the leaders of the parties in the House. I must live up to the traditions of parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not exactly claim that we are on all-fours with other parties in this House; but there are two of us here who are not able to speak through any other leaders, and I think we have a right to speak in this way. I submit to the ruling of the Chair: we do not press that viewpoint; but it seems to me in keeping with the best practice in the British House, that a member can ask more than one question.

Mr. SPEAKER: This question has been dealt with on many occasions during this parliament and before. If the hon. member will refer to Bourinot, he will see that on questions before the Orders of the Day are called, only questions of public importance can be raised in order to elicit an answer from the government. Bourinot says that those questions must be distinctly on matters of public importance, and one member should speak only once, otherwise the sittings would be taken up with questions the whole afternoon and the whole evening. Of course, the hon. gentleman has just called to my attention the fact that there is a fourth party, and on that consideration I will allow the question. I regret that I had ignored that fact.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker is very gracious. I think this is a matter of public importance. For the last few weeks we have heard these rumours and, indeed have seen these despatches, as to negotiations being in progress. As I understand the matter, the government is kept informed from day to day of what is proceeding, and in view of the importance of the question, we might well have a statement from the government as to the exact situation, as to how these negotiations have been carried on, and whether there is any danger that there may come a rupture between these two great countries.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): With respect to the particular matter referred to by my hon. friend, I might say that such information as the government receives on European affairs is generally received in advance by the press. There is nothing that has been received within the last day or two which would throw any additional light on what has appeared in the press. The rumours are similar to rumours that have appeared from time to time regarding European transactions. I think we may assume that matters are unsettled, but beyond that the government has no information.

DAIRY ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond): I should have given notice of this before, but I wish now to give notice—

Mr. SPEAKER: In writing?

Mr. CARROLL: No, as a matter of record: That on Tuesday next, at three o'clock or as shortly thereafter as I shall be given the privilege, I shall move the second reading of Bill No. 186, to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.

OLEOMARGARINE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): I should like to call the attention of the government to the fact that members of the House have been circularized with material calculated to prejudice them against the manufacture in and importation into this country of oleomargarine. The communication, except that it has been sent out in an envelope stamped with the stamp of the Department of Agriculture, is anonymous. Is it the government's policy to approve a campaign of that sort, and does the government intend to oppose legislation authorizing the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As to approving any campaign of the sort, I should say that the government would not.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

PUBLIC SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to extend for one year the operation of the Public Service Retirement Act, chapter 67 of the statutes of 1920, as amended by chapter 49 of the statutes of 1921, and by chapter 39 of the statutes of 1922.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: This is a resolution which will hardly provoke any dissent. There are from time to time questions raised whether we should have a general superannuation act. Reserving that for future consideration, I think we all agree that what is commonly called the Calder Act, taking the name of the hon. gentleman who introduced it some years ago, and which expires the 31st July, should be extended for a further year, giving the government an opportunity to consider the advisability of bringing down a general superannuation bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thoroughly agree with the minister as to the value of this act. It is one of many acts which received a great deal of criticism, but which were really necessary. Can the minister give us information as to the number of men and women employees who were retired under the act during the past fiscal year?

Mr. FIELDING: I have not the information at hand, but I shall be glad to give it on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the minister will give a statement with the names and the amounts allowed. The act, of course, will speak for itself as to what principle applies.

Mr. FIELDING: The names will be very numerous. They run into hundreds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In one year?

Mr. FIELDING: I will not say, in one year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I asked just for one year.

Mr. FIELDING: I will get what information I can and give it on the third reading.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think there would be more than a few. Has the government considered the wisdom of simply extending the act?

Mr. FIELDING: Generally?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and then when a superannuation bill comes down, it may contain a clause for the repeal of this act. I must say that I really never understood the idea of extending this act from year to year. I know this was done before, but just why it was done I do not know.

Mr. FIELDING: There has always been in the minds of some ministers, probably of both governments, of introducing a general superannuation bill. I must not speak for my colleagues, but I have repeatedly said that there should be such a bill. My hope is that by another session we may agree upon such a bill, although I do not say that definitely. We extend it from year to year, always in anticipation of a general bill being prepared.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would suggest that the minister change the bill in committee, so that if he has not a general bill next year, he will not need to extend the Calder Act. The Calder Act is certainly very useful. When the minister has a general superannuation act, all he need do is to put in a clause repealing this act.

Mr. FIELDING: This has the same effect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That would be a great deal cheaper.

Resolution reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the resolution be read the second time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the question is put, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to submit the information before he moves the third reading? There would be no time to read the statement on the third reading.

Mr. FIELDING: I will see that the hon. member is personally furnished with the information.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 191 to amend the Public Service Retirement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no objection to the second reading now, but I suggest that the information be submitted in committee.

Mr. FIELDING: I shall have to let the second reading stand, because according to procedure we should have to go into committee immediately if the bill were read the second time. When the bill comes up for second reading I shall be glad to give the information.

Mr. SPEAKER: At the next sitting of the House.

SAINT JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the provisions of chapter 12 of the statutes of 1921, be amended by extending the time for the completion of the Saint John and Quebec Railway between Centreville, in the county of Carleton, and Andover, in the county of Victoria, New Brunswick, from the 31st day of December, 1923, to 31st day of December, 1925.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why is this resolution necessary?

Mr. GRAHAM: It involves a subsidy, and my legal instructions are that as the proposed amendment to the act contemplates the payment of money on the completion of the work a resolution is necessary.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister might tell us how the work stands, how much has been constructed and how much remains to be done.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is a stretch of twenty-six miles on this road on which there has not been any construction. This portion of the line, in fact the entire line, was undertaken under an agreement between the provincial government of New Brunswick and the federal government in 1916. In 1919, an act was passed extending the time for completion to 1921, and in 1921 an act was again passed extending the time until 1923. The purpose of the present resolution is to extend it for a further period until 1925. As a matter of fact no work has been done on this twenty-six miles. I understand that both the people and the legislature of New Brunswick are very anxious that we should extend the time for the completion of the work for another two years. If the matter were merely an extension of time for the charter the bill would no doubt go through the Railway committee in the ordinary course; but it involves a subsidy and this procedure has been followed in connection with the two previous extensions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the status of the company now? Is the road owned by the province?

Mr. GRAHAM: The St. John Railway is owned by the province but operated by the Canadian National Railways under an agreement; the province of New Brunswick has the fixed charges while the Canadian National Railways carry on the operation. I regret to say that no money is being made.

Mr. BAXTER: The company is really an artificial concern; it is the province of New Brunswick. I believe that the railway is still owned in a perfectly nominal way by the company, but it is really the province that is involved.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Is it paying?

Mr. BAXTER: Is any railway paying? This matter is one in regard to which I should like to have some further information if possible. For some time the process which the minister has referred to has been carried on, that is to say, the extending of the charter by provincial legislation and the subsidy by Dominion legislation. Has the minister any definite, concrete proposal from the provincial authorities with regard to the completion of this very much needed portion of the road? Or is the whole matter simply in the uncertain state which the minister implies, pending the dawn of some happy day when the work may be taken up in earnest? I am not going to enter into a discussion of what has been considered on the floor of this house many times as to the routing of the Transcontinental railway through New Brunswick. The Transcontinental railway, so far as it passes through New Brunswick, is a completed fact. The province assumed the burden of building the Valley railway because that railway was needed to do the work that many of us thought ought to have been done by the Transcontinental. Unfortunately, the Transcontinental was connected from Grand Falls to Moncton by practically a straight road through territory which will never produce much traffic, and the St. John valley has been left aside by every government since confederation. At the time of confederation the Intercolonial was built on the extreme northern and eastern side of the province because of a military bugbear. The Transcontinental, for some unknown purpose, was run to Moncton, as if it were possible to create a winter port there; and the route of the St. John valley, one of the most fertile parts of the province and one that requires connection to the greatest extent, was left unserved except in so far as it was served by the purely local Canadian Pacific railway line. The gap which this resolution deals with would enable the St. John Valley railway to be connected with the Transcontinental at a much better junction than now exists. In other words, it would connect at one end with the Transcontinental, which would then be able to use the St. John railway throughout its entire length, instead of stopping halfway at Fredericton as is now the case, and using the line between Fredericton and St. John. I think, despite the fact that we do not want to have any additions to the public debt that can possibly be avoided, it would be well worth while for the government—or, I suppose, it is now the Railway board—to take this matter up in earnest with the idea of lifting the burden off the province of New Brunswick, a burden which that province was compelled to assume because provision had not been made otherwise for this absolutely necessary routing. If this road were completed and made part of the government system the whole burden would be taken off the province. Besides it would then be much easier to reach the port of St. John, as well as the port of Halifax, with western freight, because the gradients would be easier and the distance from Montreal to St. John not any longer than, if as long as, from Montreal to Portland, Maine. To us in the Martime provinces this is a very important question. I notice that in some newspapers, published not very far from the city of Ottawa, we are constantly being reminded that the Maritime provinces should not make requests for lower freight rates or further railway facilities. Apparently we ought to be "good little boys" down there and put up with existing conditions. We, however, inspired by other examples in this House, propose to reiterate our case just as frequently as we can get an opportunity to do so; and perhaps repeated importunity may on some government at some time have the effect that repeated importunity is said to have had upon a certain person very much worse in reputation than the present or any past government. Speaking with all seriousness, I do not think that the million or million and a half that might be involved in completing this work would be at all a burden upon the National Railway system, but such expenditure would remove an encumbrance which the railway system is placing to-day both upon the province and upon the Dominion. That is one way of making the system profitable and improving its facilities, and is above all one of the great means of utilizing a port within the Dominion instead of neglecting it to the advantage of a port lying outside.

Mr. GRAHAM: So far as we are aware, there has been no definite proposition recently for the construction of these twenty-six miles, although the Premier of New Brunswick has written an urgent letter that this act be extended for another two years in the hope that some arrangement may be arrived at before the expiration of that time.

Mr BAXTER: As this is a matter not with a private railway company which is seeking to get its charter extended from time to time, but really with the province, why not put the legislation on the statute books in such a way that it will always be open to be taken advantage of by the province? Why limit the province to two years, why not keep the thing perpetually open?

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine the province itself will renew the charter to this company every two years.

Mr. BAXTER: They might as well renew it for an indefinite period.

Mr. GRAHAM: If the subsidy keeps up with the renewal of the charter it is doing pretty well. Except under special act, no charter is extended for more than two years under the Railway Act, and the subsidy generally follows the extension of time for the completion of the road.

Mr. BAXTER: But the minister realizes that this is not a private railway company. Although it is under the name of the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, it is really the province of New Brunswick and nobody else, and you might just as well deal with the matter under the name of the province.

Mr. GRAHAM: You could not do that.

Mr. BAXTER: Why have the province of New Brunswick secured legislation here every two years to extend the right to get this subsidy? Or why have them go through the farce every year of themselves passing legislation to complete this railway? Why not enact legislation providing that the provincial government may complete this road whenever it sees fit, and that then the federal government will come to its aid to the amount promised? Why load up our statute books every two years with a mere farcical proceeding like this when one government is dealing with another, not with some private railway company which perhaps is trying to get an undue extension of some right which others would like to avail themselves of?

Mr. GRAHAM: Legally it is a private company we are dealing with, although the province of New Brunswick, I suppose, owns the controlling interest.

Mr. BAXTER: It does.

Mr. GRAHAM: That company, by agreement with the province of New Brunswick, might transfer the right to some other company.

Mr. BAXTER: Not without the consent of the province.

Mr. GRAHAM: But without our consent. Then we would be extending for all eternity a subsidy to a private railway company. I think some safeguard ought to be applied to these charters without exception, because parliament is always reasonable in extending the time for completion of the project when reasonable grounds are shown therefor.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Graham thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 191 to authorize an extension of the time for the completion of the Saint John and Quebec Railway between Centreville, in the county of Carleton, and Andover, in the county of Victoria, N.B.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Time for extension of line extended until 1925.

Mr. BAXTER: Has the Canadian National Railway board in any way considered the taking over of this road when completed instead of continuing the present leasing arrangement under which a heavy burden falls on the province each year for what is really a Dominion work?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am afraid there is a great willingness on behalf of all the provinces to hand the Dominion anything that does not look like a paying proposition. I am not going to read the figures showing what it cost the Canadian National Railway to operate this road last year. An agreement was made some years ago between the province and the Dominion as to the construction of this line under which it was agreed that the province should assume responsibility for construction and receive certain aid from the Dominion, and that the Intercolonial Railway should undertake the operation of the road. This operation has been a loss to the Canadian Government system each year, and the road itself has also been a loss to the provincial government. The Canadian National Railway board has made no representations to the government concerning the purchase, but the Premier of New Brunswick has on one occasion urged us very strongly to purchase the road. Up to the present time the Minister of Railways has not been convinced that this is in the interests of the Dominion.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Dominion Lands and Parks, $4,387,030.

Mr. MARTELL: One item under this vote is "Canadian National Parks and Historic Sites, $1,250,980," and in connection with that item I would like to bring to the minister's attention the historic site of Fort Edward, formerly the Indian Fort Pisiquid, in the town of Windsor. Last year, through neglect, the old block house on this site was burned down, and the site generally is being permitted to go to waste. I believe the minister has appointed a caretaker for it, but it is practically a case of locking the barn door after the horse is stolen. This is one of the most ancient forts in Nova Scotia, and I do not believe it should be under the Parks branch; I should like to see it under the Quebec Battlefields Commission if at all possible, because they do things in more proper style and more in accordance with what the people demand. At present the Parks Commission exists absolutely for the purpose of keeping up certain things in the prairie provinces, such as Jasper Park or the buffalo park at Wainwright, and the like. Now, we in Nova Scotia have many historic sites, one of the most interesting of which is right in the shire town of the county which I have the honour to represent. It is a place that was used in days gone by to enable the English soldiers to defend themselves and the people against the attacks of the Indians. I believe that the people of the province of Quebec have a proper sense of sentiment, and that sentiment is equally pronounced in the people of the Maritime provinces. The keeping up of these areas in the western provinces is purely a matter of dollars and cents; it is a matter which is entirely devoid of sentiment. As Sir Ernest Shackleton once said, "You may call it sentiment if you will, but the world sadly needs sentiment." There should be some sentiment as regards these historic sites in Nova Scotia, and I would like to ask the minister if it would not be possible to have the ancient site of Fort Edward placed under the control of the Quebec Battlefields Commission.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I have not very much information with respect to the Quebec Battlefields Commission, but I do know that the Historic Sites Commission have been sitting for some time, and taking into consideration the merits of the various historic sites throughout Canada with a view to preserving them and keeping them in repair.

Mr. MARTELL: Who are the representatives of Nova Scotia on the commission?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): E. Plimsoll Edwards of Halifax.

Mr. MARTELL: I know Dr. Edwards very well indeed; he is one of the most important officials of the Nova Scotia Historical Society. But the way they proceed is to put a brass tablet on some old building and then let it go to pieces. That is what the Nova Scotia Historical Society is doing at the present time—of course, they also have a few papers read. I suggest that a fence be put around the portion of the site containing the remnants of the blockhouse, and the old fort, and that repairs be carried out as far as possible; of course, the minister cannot by modern methods restore an old site to its original condition. I suggest also that the rest of the ground be set aside as a playground for the town where the children could be inspired with something of the sentiment of what their ancestors did. During the late war these grounds were used by the 112th Battalion, which was commanded by an esteemed friend of mine, though a political opponent, Colonel Tremain, and other battalions from various sections of Canada were quartered there. Let us do what we can to inculcate a proper sentiment in the minds of the people rather than a love of dollars and cents, which is all too prevalent to-day in this country.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All I can say in reply to my hon. friend is that the matter he complains of has been discussed by the Historic Sites Commission and they intend to take action to preserve this site and keep it in order.

4 p.m.

Mr. MARTELL: But has the minister considered, or will this committee consider, the advisability of placing this historic site under the Quebec Battlefields Commission? I believe that is its name, but call it what you will, I believe it has more idea of doing what the people of Canada desire than the Historic Sites Commission has. And will the minister also consider the advisability of permitting that portion of the land which is not used for the purposes of the historic site to be set aside as a playground for the children?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know very much about the activities of the Quebec commission. I do know, however, of the work of the commission that has recently been appointed to deal with these sites. There are many historic sites in Canada that the people are desirous of having marked and preserved, and there is a considerable amount of work for this organization. As to the advisability of handing the site he mentions over to the Quebec commission, I cannot give my hon. friend a definite answer as to that at the moment.

Mr. MARTELL: I do not think the Historic Sites Commission are conversant with what these sites represent to the people locally. Fort Edward, or the Indian Fort Pisiquid, which was the Indian name of the shire town of my constituency, is a site of great historic value to every person in Nova Scotia, and particularly the people in the county of Hants. I should like to see adopted, as regards that site, the same rules and regulations as are adopted by the Quebec Battlefields Commission. If the site is not placed under the control of that commission, I should like to see it administered as the Quebec Battlefields Commission administer sites which come under their control. About two and a half acres will be sufficient to enclose the actual historic site, that is, the partly destroyed block house and the old fort as it stands. For many years it has been requested that the land be allocated to the local commission in the town of Windsor, who would be under the control of the representatives of the government there, or of the caretaker, and that the area not fenced in should be used as a playground, for toboggan slides, for camping areas, for the Boy Scouts, and so on. This would result in benefit to the children; it would encourage a proper sentiment, and would help out the Defence department, all at comparatively small expense to the country. I am not asking for anything new. If the right hon. the leader of the Opposition will consult the Minister of Militia of his day he will ascertain that petitions asking for this were received at that time from the town of Windsor—that is, prior to the time this government came into power, and prior to my election for this constituency. Many of the men who are advocating this are political opponents of mine, but I think they are actuated by a desire to see that ample ground should be given to the children of the locality to play in, and where they will be under proper supervision. This fort is right in the heart of the town, the land has an area of twenty-eight acres, and at present it is not used for any purpose. That, I think, is absolutely absurd when this land could be made to serve some useful end. If the children could use this land as a playground under the supervision of the caretaker, the historic associations would tend to inspire them with greater love for their ancestors and their surroundings. Not only that, but the children could there indulge in exercises calculated to develop their physique. If, owing to the influence of red tape, this historic site is retained as it is the children of the neighbourhood will derive no benefit whatever. Let me say, in conclusion, that I intend to keep pressing this matter until I get a definite promise, and not a mere evasive answer, in regard to this particular piece of ground.

Mr. MILLAR: I rather dissent from the expressions uttered by the hon. member and am a little surprised to hear that the province of Nova Scotia enjoys a monopoly in the matter of Canadian sentiment.

Mr. MARTELL: Canadian sentiment? What has it to do with Canadian sentiment?

Mr. MILLAR: I should like to ask my hon. friend if he considers the preservation of the great herds of buffalo at Wainwright park is a mere matter of dollars and cents?

Mr. MARTELL: I may tell my hon. friend that I am not opposing in any way the preservation of the great herds of buffalo at Wainwright park. Do that if you want to, but do not maintain playgrounds out there, which are invaded by tourists, from the mere standpoint of making dollars and cents. We are not asking for such a thing as that. We are asking for the preservation of our historic sites in the province of Nova Scotia. We are asking that this site in the town of Windsor shall be given, under proper supervision, to the town as a place where the children can play.

Mr. BAXTER: I think my hon. friend from Hants is quite right. I sympathize with him in his determination not to be buffaloed in any way out of his historic site.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am sorry the impression should have been created that I was trying to buffalo anybody out of his historic site. If my hon. friend (Mr. Martell) will make it clear that the town of Windsor is prepared to maintain and take care of the land granted to them there would be absolutely no objection so far as I am concerned, provided a sufficient area is fenced off and preserved as an historic site.

Mr. MARTELL: I am satisfied. That is a satisfactory answer.

Mr. GOULD: I notice in connection with the item of Canadian National parks and historical sites an increase of $284,480 for this year. The minister will recall that I have asked that some consideration should be given to the question of improvements in connection with a pleasure resort in my own district. In making this request let me remind the committee that this is the first occasion this session that I have asked for any concession or any privilege from the government. The need of these improvements has been repeatedly urged not only upon the present administration but upon previous governments. Prior to 1911 the desired work was commenced. It was cancelled after the change of government took place in 1911. The need for this work is just as pressing now as it ever was. I am speaking of the Moose mountains in the district of Assiniboia. We have there five lakes of perhaps six or seven hundred acres in extent, and the towns have expended quite a sum of money in endeavouring to make the spot a pleasure resort for the people of the neighbourhood. I may inform the committee that White Bear lake and Fish lake constitute a rendezvous for hundreds, yes thousands, of visitors who come from the United States. I recall a statement by the leader of the Opposition to the effect that our parks in western Canada formed a source of revenue equal to the agricultural area. I quite believe that statement is true. The Moose mountains resort is far removed from any other place of the kind; it might serve as a stepping stone, if the expression is permissible, to tourists as they proceed through the West in connection with the programme for national road construction on which we are engaged at the present time. I am sure it would be a great source of revenue if the resort in question were further developed. I have in my possession at the present time some beautiful pictures that were taken in the western part of Alberta and the Rocky mountains, but I do not think I err in stating that you can get just as good pictures from scenes in the Moose mountains. I do not think it would involve a very large expenditure on the part of the Dominion government to carry out the necessary improvements. If a road were built around the two lakes referred to, White Bear lake and Fish lake, it would enable tourists to reach those lovely valleys and mountains and view scenery of the most beautiful description. I often have the opportunity of visiting those lakes and I can speak from experience of the magnificent scenery which unfolds itself to view. Tourists from British Columbia come to the Moose mountains. In their own province they have scenery of the finest description, but if they leave that and come to the Moose mountains, as they do, it is surely a great tribute to the natural beauties of that district. I earnestly press upon the minister the desirability of giving this matter his best consideration.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend (Mr. Gould) brought this matter to my attention last year and again this year, and we are disposed to do anything we can to make this district, which is very attractive, more accessible to the public. The people in the southern part of Saskatchewan are not over-supplied with recreation grounds of this kind and we think we can do that in order to meet their claims.

Dominion Lands and Parks—Domonion Lands, contingencies, etc., $250,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister tell us what amount has been voted for the last three years? Last year I see the same amount $250,000. What was it the year before, and the year before that?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There are three periods given in the record before me. In 1913-14 the expenditure was $280,000 in round numbers; in 1919-20 it was $252,000; in 1920-21, $249,000; and in 1921-22, $244,000. These are the actual expenditures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not recall at the moment what services are performed under "Dominion Lands, Contingencies."

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is the payment of the expenses of the 18 timber inspectors, the 46 homestead inspectors, the 14 inspectors of land agencies, the range inspectors, and then all the Dominion lands offices in connection with the provinces.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where are the details?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): None are given.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Are they not given in the blue book?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think they will be found in page 327 of the Auditor General's report. I will give my hon. friend the details. They are as follows:

1. Expenses of 46 Homestead appraisers, including purchase renewals and repairs, of travelling outfits, such as teams, buggies, harness, etc..	$ 85,000
2. Expenses of 18 timber inspectors, including as in the above item, purchase, renewals and repairs of travelling outfits, etc..	20,000

3. Expenses of 3 inspectors of ranches..	8,500
4. Expenses of 17 Dominion land and Crown timber agencies and of the offices of the inspectors of Dominion lands and Crown timber agencies. These expenses consist in the payment of telegrams, telephones, commission and postage to sub-agencies, clerical assistance of a temporary nature only, janitor service, etc..	40,000
5. Travelling expenses of outside officials when away on government business, including superintendent of western land agencies, assistant land agency inspectors, travelling auditor, etc..	25,000
6. Printing and stationery. This item is to cover the cost of printed forms used in transacting public business, the purchase and repairs of typewriters and for all stationery required in the Dominion land offices and sub-land offices..	48,000
7. Advertising re sale of timber berths; also to cover accounts in connection with lands open for entry, etc...	10,000
8. Miscellaneous:—Freight and express charges, telegrams, etc. paid at Ottawa, and for unforeseen expenses during 1923-24..	13,500
	$250,000

Item agreed to.

Mr. GARDINER: As to the amount of $42,240, to satisfy the claims of the half breeds in the Mackenzie river district; what is that for?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If the hon. member will wait till we come to that, I have it in detail in the report.

Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $4,000.

Mr. GARDINER: May I ask why this amount is decreased? It was $8,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Formerly, $4,000 was the amount granted to the Canadian Forestry Association. As my hon. friend will see, there is a considerable increase in our forestry vote which we have just passed, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to prevent forest fires—at least it has been in the past few years. I am hoping that the moisture they get in western Canada will make the work less difficult, but we must admit the loss of a tremendous amount of timber. However, comparing the losses of the Dominion forest reserves with that of the provinces, it has not been so severe, because Canada as a whole had a tremendous loss. We were somewhat fortunate, perhaps, in not suffering so much by fire in the three prairie provinces and in the forests in British Columbia. This Forestry Association is doing a very great work. It was instituted by people interested in forestry protection, the manufacturers of lumber and kindred products. For years, as far as I can ascertain, they received a grant of $4,000. They seem to have increased their activities and asked for an increased grant. The Forestry branch of the department is organized, I think, on very good lines and is prepared to do a splendid work in propagating knowledge with respect to forest fires generally. Perhaps we are weak in not having technically trained men to combat forest diseases. If we are weak in one branch, it is that particular branch. I think we should have entomologists to deal with that question, because it is rather a serious one. Outside of that, we have a splendid organization, prepared to disseminate the information we obtain, which we propose to do through the different schools. I feel that, inasmuch as we are prepared to do directly through the department the class of work that was undertaken by the Forestry Association, we might very well revert to the old grant to this association, and expend the money under our supervision, because I think we can do it as cheaply, and perhaps just as well, and in fact I think very much better, than they have been able to do. I am not for a single moment decrying the work this organization has done. They have gone through the country with a car and by lectures interested the people in forest preservation and the prevention of fires, while our work is more of the character of actually extinguishing fires when started. So that on the whole, I think if we revert to the old grant which this association has been receiving, and use the balance for the purpose of carrying on propaganda to educate the children, and adults as well, against carelessness with respect to fires which destroy timber that is valuable, it might be beneficial. I think I am safe in saying that more timber has been destroyed by fire than has been actually cut. That is a serious situation, and we hope in the forestry department to do our utmost to assist in abating this destruction. That is the reason for the reduction in the grant.

Mr. McBRIDE: In regard to forest fires, it has always seemed to me that if this government could pass legislation under which they could conscript the people in the vicinity of the fire, and pay them not more than a dollar a day to fight the fire, our loss through forest fires would be reduced. I have noticed, particularly in haying time in my own district —and I make the statement in this House without hesitation—that more fires are started to get people employment than in any other way. They get bigger wages than the farmers can pay for haying and such work. I have known the men to be taken out of the hay fields to fight fires. The Forestry department would pay a third more than we were able to pay them for making hay. I think if there were a law passed and people conscripted in the district where the fire was and paid as I have already said not more than one dollar a day it would cause everybody to take an interest in keeping the fires down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member's appeal for conscription evoke no response?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We do conscript to fight fires.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is that known to all the hon. gentlemen behind the minister?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not for overseas, for home service.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I take it that my hon. friend is complaining about the wages paid.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not gather that members were aware that the service was compulsory. I was wondering though, knowing the principles of the leader of the government and many of his followers, that they would conscript anybody until the fire was right in their own barn, on the principle that they should not do so—that they should wait until, at least, the house was on fire before conscripting.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If there is an ocean between the fire and the barn, there is no danger for the barn.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some fires can cross oceans. I have known some very recently in the world.

Mr. FORKE: Explain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister, however, will give consideration to that, because I would not like any interference with individual liberty to emanate from this government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The right hon. member is improving.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I hope my right hon. friend is not suggesting that we shall not be able to conscript fire-fighters.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would conscript from anywhere to fight a fire. I believe in putting fires out rather than in discussing the matter. I could not even hear what was being read, but the general item of forest protection is evidently under discussion. There is an increase of $88,000, to which I do not take exception, provided that we are satisfied that the organization the minister has is the best that can be made. Who is the head of it now? Mr. Campbell was head of it, but he was very seriously injured, and I do not know whether he is now at the head of the branch or not.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. Campbell has unfortunately not recovered from his infirmity. For the time being Mr. Finlayson is in charge. My right hon. friend will know Mr. Dwight who was Mr. Campbell's assistant; he is at Toronto University. There has not been a successor appointed to Mr. Campbell.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who is the acting head?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. Finlayson for the moment.

Mr. SHAW: I notice with some regret the reduction in the estimates for the Canadian Forestry Association; but before disapproving the reduction, I should like to know something about the second item, the Empire Forestry Conference, for which an expenditure of $30,000 is proposed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I intend to discuss that too. I am prepared to discuss all together the three items referring to forestry.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Which question am I to answer first? We were discussing the general forestry matter. If hon. gentlemen would discuss one question until we get it exhausted, that would be better.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The item is "Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $4,000."

Mr. MEIGHEN: I raised the point that I had not heard the preceding item carried. I thought the Chairman was reading the long item just preceding. I suggest that we discuss all the forestry items together, for really that is the only way we can discuss them. They are all forestry items: The last one, the grant to the Canadian Forestry Association, and the item mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw), the Empire Forestry Conference.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Forestry Conference is a conference that was started in 1920, the outcome of a meeting in London. It embraces the whole of the overseas dominions as well as Great Britain. It is for the purpose of studying more intimately forestry matters. I believe it was well under way under the regime of the Hon. Sir James Lougheed, and that Canada was offered the conference for 1923. I know that as soon as I came into office the matter came up actively, and I believed it was of sufficient importance to the people of Canada to have representatives from all the overseas dominions come here and hold a conference, because not only will they hold a conference in Canada, but they will travel through Canada and so become more familiar with our forest wealth, and, perhaps, this will dissipate some of the delusions held particularly by overseas people with respect to our timber. Hon. gentlemen will remember that for a considerable period, during the war, notwithstanding the fact that we have splendid spruce timber that can be manufactured for almost any purpose for which that timber is used, a great deal was brought from the United States. I felt it would be good business to bring to Canada these outstanding forestry men from the overseas dominions, and also English people who are interested, and let them see what we have in the way of forest wealth. Moreover, it would give us a better understanding, as well as assisting our officials and others interested in reforestation and kindred subjects, to hold a conference of this kind in Canada.

Mr. FORKE: I suppose the minister is aware of the fact that a large quantity of timber is imported from the United States, for binder tongues, seeder tongues, and nearly all farm implement tongues. We have no timber of that kind suitable for the purpose. I believe it is Georgia pine, red pine I mean.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I know what my hon. friend has in mind, Georgia pine, which is used for the construction of tongues, shafts and that sort of thing. It is a very tough wood. So far as I know, we have nothing to compare with it in Canada.

Mr. FORKE: I think it is pretty poor stuff.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Manufacturers of farm implements must pay more for it than for our Douglas pine. On my farm, when I had a breakdown, I usually substituted by putting in 4 x 4 Douglas fir rather than by buying a new binder pole from the company. We got fairly good satisfaction, with the single exception that the fir, as hon. members know, does not stand the sun very well and will warp considerably. We are giving consideration to matters of that kind in the laboratory of our Forestry branch.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The size of this grant, $30,000, is accounted for by the fact that the conference is to be in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): To pay for the conference, yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know how far the matter proceeded under my successor, but I do not think it would have proceeded very far had I been in the department myself. I think the whole conference matter is overdone. In the Interior department scarcely a week went by that a call for a conference was not worked up and presented to the minister in most plausible form. The salvation of the country was to depend upon the sending of some of the officials of the department here, there and everywhere, chasing after conferences and information. I do not want to stand as one who deprecates the education of our foresters in the very best methods that any country in the world can produce. If there is a country that requires the best forestry service it is Canada. I am not reflecting in the least degree on the efficiency of our forestry organization, because I should have had to give more concentrated attention to it and travel more to examine it than I was able to do to assure myself that it was a thorough organization; but I have no reason to say that it was not; that is all I can say. I should think, however, that the publications of foresters the world over, the scientific works that are available to all members of our forestry service, and the literature that exists on the subject and which is by no means sparse, would be all that was required to bring the latest ideas to the attention of the men of our own force. Why it is necessary for somebody in China to come face to face with somebody in Brazil and be met there by somebody else from Sweden, together with all the fraternity of foresters from every part of the world, to hold a jubilee in order that they might get one another's opinions, I never could understand.

Mr. SHAW: And at great expense.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The fact is that it is not at their own expense, and the temptation is very great for them to hold such conferences. And, inasmuch as there is an object to be attained, human nature is such that they can readily and honestly convince themselves that it is a splendid thing to do and all to the advantage of the country. I do not think that this item should be here and I commit myself to that position even though preparations for the conference may have been under way under Sir James Lougheed. I was not aware myself that they were under way, but I think the minister would have been well advised to let the honour pass by, and let them hold the conference somewhere else. Possibly a representative of the department could attend to see whether we could get any advantage from it before making a large commitment. Speaking generally, not with any special reference to forestry, but with as much reference to twenty or thirty other branches of the service, I offer in all humility this advice to the minister and to the government: Be on guard against propaganda for conferences.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Inasmuch as there is a very strong desire in British Columbia to introduce their timber, of which they have a great deal, into New Zealand, for example, as well as the desire for inter-empire trade, I felt that this particular conference might be of some value in the way of spreading a knowledge of Canada's timber resources. In the main, I agree with the hon. gentleman in what he says in reference to conferences. Frankly, I confess that I am not personally very much enamoured of the results to be obtained from conferences, and perhaps we are going entirely too far with an expenditure of this character. But this matter apparently was settled; the offer had been made to Canada and to some extent had been accepted. I do think that the conference will serve to dissipate a great deal of misapprehension in regard to our forest products, and, further, will undoutedly be of advantage to the people who have to do with our forests. I know of no part of our public resources that stands in greater need of proper methods of preservation than does our forest wealth. We have a vast wealth there if we can only preserve it from fire. The insect danger is not so serious; but fire is unquestionably responsible for losses that run into millions annually. While I can assure the committee that I shall not, while I am in charge of the Department of Interior, come back for large votes for forestry conventions, I do think at the same time that if we cannot adequately combat the fire menace with the present force we shall have to extend it. It would pay the people of Canada greatly to extend the force, because the cost of the Forestry branch is a very small item indeed in comparison with the tremendous losses we suffer annually.

Mr. EVANS: Are we following any systematic plan of reforestation.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. There are stations at the following places: Spruce Woods, Duck Mountain, Riding Mountain, Mute Mountain, in Manitoba; Nisbet, Beaver Hills and Pines in Saskatchewan; Cypress and Cooking Lake in Alberta.

Mr. MILLAR: Has there been any recognition of any sort of the work of Mr. Barnjum for the work he has been doing in this connection? As far as I am able to judge, he appears to be rendering a great patriotic service in drawing the attention of the public to the widespread destruction of our forests by the spruce bud worm and other pests.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the member not aware that in the budget the government promised a royal commission to Mr. Barnjum to look into the question he had raised.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend asks if we are going to give him any remuneration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Any recognition.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I presume he meant in the way of remuneration. Mr. Barnjum gets a great deal of recognition—he is considered an authority on the subject. At the moment he is advocating the prohibition of the export of pulp wood as a means of conserving our forest wealth. Of course, there is conservation on all the Crown lands—no wood goes out of Canada except that which is cut off private lands.

Mr. MILLAR: Mr. Barnjum is drawing the attention of the public to the fact that millions and millions of feet of timber is being lost to Canada annually by the destruction of the spruce bud worm.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend from Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) gave us an address on that subject last session. I had that in mind when I was speaking just now.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think I shall be betraying any confidence when I say that Mr. Barnjum told me he was getting far more pleasure out of spending his money to further forest conservation than he ever got when making it. Would the minister tell us what are the activities of the Dominion government in regard to tree planting in the prairie provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Tree planting stations are established for the purpose of furnishing trees to those requiring them. I think my honourable friend is familiar with the regulations under which trees are distributed?

Mr. FORKE: That is, from the experimental farms?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, from our tree planting stations at Indian Head and Sutherland. There has been no change of methods. I have some knowledge of the way it works out from actual experience, and I think one has only to travel through the Saskatoon district to notice the improvement in that area due to tree planting. Application is made for the trees and they are furnished as far as possible. As far as I know we have been able to supply the demand.

Mr. STEEDSMAN: Could the minister give the committee any information as to the extent or success of reforestation in the Turtle Mountain reserve in Manitoba?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My information is that the trees planted there are doing well. I think I discussed that matter with Mr. Ward, the member, who seems to be very much interested.

Mr. FORKE: No, Mr. Steedsman is the member.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I beg his pardon. He has asked us to extend the area very largely owing to the success of the first experiment.

Mr. MANION: I have heard the statement made on fairly strong authority—at least, by a man who claimed he had knowledge of the fact—that it was the intention of the government to shortly bring in legislation prohibiting the export of pulp wood from private lands, which is going on in some of the provinces to-day. So far as I am concerned, and I have given some thought to the matter, I think it would be very good legislation. I should like to know if there is any intention on the part of the government to deal with it this session.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I can hardly speak with authority in a matter of this kind. Strong representations have been made to the government to prohibit the export of pulp wood, and the matter has been discussed. Considerable opposition to such a proposal is coming from areas in which perhaps most of the pulp wood is cut which is sent across the boundary, that is, from Quebec and New Brunswick.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister seems to have forgotten the government's policy on this subject. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) announced that they would appoint a royal commission to look into the matter. So the government could not possibly make up its mind until it got the report of the commission. What has been the result of the three weeks' deliberations since that policy was announced? Has the government made any progress towards selecting the members of the commission, and what are the chances of Mr. W. T. R. Preston being chosen?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is he applying for a position on the commission?

Mr. MEIGHEN: He always applies.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I heard some announcement of a commission, but further than that I have no knowledge. The matter has not been discussed in council, while I have been present.

Mr. MILLAR: Would the minister be favourably inclined to extending the field of operations of the tree planting stations? I know that requests have been made by those laying out memorial parks—and I suppose other parks—for shrubs and trees, but, as the minister knows, the regulations forbid the distribution of trees for this purpose; those living in towns are not supplied.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I visited the station at Indian Head last year, and I found that most of the trees there have been required by farmers. Inasmuch as farm locations are somewhat isolated on the prairies, I think the first work of the Tree planting division should be to supply all the farmers who require trees for shelter belts around their homes, besides, these trees add very much to the appearance of the whole country. People living in towns have a great deal more protection than those in the rural districts. I would not say that it might not be advisable to extend the distribution of trees for the planting of public playgrounds, but we do not propose to make this extension for the present.

Mr. MILLAR: At present, even though there is a demand for all the trees that are grown at these stations, there are times when they have a surplus of certain varieties, it being hard to gauge the exact number to be grown to meet the needs of the country. I suppose there would be no objection to these surplus trees being used for town parks?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If we had these surpluses I would not be averse to giving them for public parks in urban centres.

Mr. MILLAR: Cemeteries and Parks?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am told on the authority of one of my officers that the town of Davidson in Saskatchewan did get some trees from us for its cemetery.

Mr. SHAW: I concur in the view expressed by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) that this grant of $30,000 to the Empire Forestry Conference might well be dispensed with. These conferences are of doubtful value, and certainly I think a forestry conference may be of little, if any, value. I would much prefer to see the minister, instead of yielding to this departmental pressure, continue the grant to the Canadian Forestry Association. This is a voluntary organization with an advisory council representative of every province. It carries on a very valuable educational work not only among the adult population but among the yonger generation. I presume that the minister has cut down the grant to $4,000 at the request of the association; I do not know. I think, however, that private effort in the direction undertaken by the Forestry Association with grants which it receives from this government and from some of the provincial governments and various private donors has been of a very valuable character, and it is work which I believe cannot be as successfully carried on by any department of government.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Will my hon. friend explain why?

Mr. SHAW: Because the gentlemen engaged in this work are actuated by their desire to render some public service. Nobody is being paid; it is entirely a voluntary undertaking.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The secretary is drawing a very nice salary.

Mr. SHAW: That may be true; you have to pay someone to do that work. But outside of that there is very much work being undertaken that is not paid for at all. For instance, in one of the high schools in Calgary some of the gentlemen who were interested in this organization called a meeting of the parents and children and gave them a very valuable lecture on tree growing, tree preservation and the various methods of fire prevention. It is a voluntary effort, except so far as the central organization is concerned. In addition, they have a very excellent magazine which deals with all problems in connection with forestation. It seems to me that that work can be much better done by this private, voluntary organization than by government with a very heavy establishment, the members of which are all too anxious, perhaps, to magnify the importance of their own individual tasks. Mind you, I am not suggesting that the government's work in this connection is not important; it is a matter of vital importance to this country. But I do not think the government in undertaking this work should discourage any voluntary organization which is equally desirous of promoting the preservation of our forests in Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Both in Alberta and since coming to Ottawa I have discovered that all these organizations which receive grants from the government are in many ways doing work that is government work—or if we are not doing it, we should be. I do not think that officials of the government could go into the public schools and deliver lectures on tree planting, but they could very well send throughout the country a car equipped as the car of the Canadian Forestry Association was equipped, demonstrating proper methods of tree planting, the effects of forest fires and methods of prevention, and so on. We are actually doing that work; we have to perform the service, and we can speak authoritatively about it. As I have said, I do not for a moment wish to decry the work of this organization. But for years they have got along with this particular grant, and the tendency of all organizations receiving these grants—organizations which are outside the control of the government—is to ask for increased amounts year after year. My experience has been that once you encourage a grant of this character—not particularly this one, but any similar grant—you make it about the easiest source of their getting money. I do not know that private individuals with a desire to serve are supporting this organization and that it is doing good work. Of course, the organization was started by people who were directly interested in the preservation of the forests—there is no doubt about that—and their propaganda is undoubtedly of value. But I do think that the grant we are making might very well be continued. Only for two years did they get an increase.

5 p.m. I am quite prepared to stand by the grant given them. The men who supported them in the past will no doubt be quite prepared to support them in the future.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think there is a great deal in what the minister says about grants and subsidies and the evils to follow from continuing the giving of them. Frankly, for my part, I would be glad to see all that form of subsidization cut out. But since you are going to have it; since you are going to subsidize such things, we will say, as the West Indies steam packet company or the Alpine Club—and the latter is one of the most absurd grants, I think, in the estimates—we can surely afford, if we admit the principle, to continue to give a fairly reasonable grant to an association that is doing such splendid work as the Canadian Forestry Association. I am sorry the minister has economized at the expense of this association in particular. Why not economize on the Alpine Club grant and give the money to something more useful?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Alpine Club was always a theme upon which there was a very bitter controversy in our province. I suppose they do valuable work—I am not an expert on the mountain business, but I have no doubt they render some service. But I wish to say again that I do not desire to decry the services of this forestry organization. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) is right when he says that governments might very well curtail grants of this character that go outside their control.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do away with all of them.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am quite prepared to consider it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do not cut a good one and leave the bad one.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a matter of judgment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I may say I approve of both these grants—I mean, the Alpine Club and this one; I do not approve of the $30,000 conference. The Canadian Forestry Association represents men in Canada who are financially interested in the preservation of the forest, and they rightly feel that upon them a special responsibility rests. I presume there is a measure of altruism in their action; they are doing it for the benefit of the country, but they are doing it mainly for their own benefit. They are doing it in order that they may create a sentiment which will reflect itself in a diminished forest desolation, and in that way preserve their own property. In doing so, whether that is the motive that animates them or not does not matter, they do serve the state, because just to the degree that they prevent fires anywhere they ward off danger to government property. Not only do they serve the state in preventing fires that would consume government property, but when they preserve their own property they serve the state, because the state suffers if their property is destroyed. Consequently it seems to me that the work they are doing is a necessary work, and as we are interested in it, it is only right that we should help it; it is only right that we should contribute to any measure to encourage them, because we get to a large degree the benefit of the results of their outlay and their work. The same words really apply to the little vote to the Alpine Club. But in the absence of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) and the other gallant fighter across the way who season in and season out, did brave battle in this House against that $1,000 grant, really I would not want to win the conflict by default this afternoon. I think I should wait until the enemy arrives, and then we can fight it out once more. I notice, however, that their ardour is very much cooled with the change of government.

Mr. GRAHAM: They have climbed higher.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that there is much difference as between the $8,000 and the $4,000; if the association feels that it is receiving adequate recognition at the hands of the government when it gets $4,000, all right. I would not, however, object to a grant of $8,000.

Mr. GARDINER: I wish to draw the minister's attention to a very important feature of this tree planting situation. The minister is aware that we have in the southern parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta what we term the semi-arid belt. During the last year of two there have grown up in that southern area tree planting associations the purpose of which is to induce farmers to plant and care for at least one-half mile of trees. I merely mention this matter because I believe we could in this way alter the conditions in southern Alberta and Saskatchewan; so that it is desirable that as many trees be planted there as possible. I trust that during the coming year the minister will consider carefully this phase of the situation. It is true that on the bare prairies we have planted shelter belts of trees, but these protect only the buildings. It seems to me that if that country is ever going to be saved for any useful purpose to Canada we will have to plant large areas with trees, and if we can encourage the farmers to put, say, half a mile of plantation on their farm, I fancy we will solve the problem that awaits solution in that particular area.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to say a word in endorsement of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gardiner), and in doing so to try and press again upon the government the importance of this forest preservation question. As I find one member of the cabinet has forgotten the government policy on the subject, I really fear that its members as a whole are not very much concentrated at the present time on the subject of forest preservation. It is something very easy to make a mountain of, but as it stands it really is a problem quite difficult of solution. There are many things in my judgment that are needed. We should have a single and well-systematized Dominion organization for fighting forest fires, and this vote is rather a contribution to that end. I believe it is true that the federal organization has succeeded better than the provincial organizations. For myself, I would like to see some arrangement made by which the whole responsibility might be assumed by the federal organization. I would like to see that done, because I am thoroughly convinced the work could be more economically and more efficiently performed under a Dominion-wide organization than it is now, distributed as it is over nine or ten organizations or more.

There must at the same time be a really more effective attack made upon the disease element of the danger. From what I can learn this has grown in peril at a prodigious rate during the last few years, attacking particularly our pine and our spruce. Just how the government is prepared to do battle against this menace I do not know. I would like the minister to explain what is really being done to protect our forests against the spruce bud worm, and against other invasions of pests that have been most marked in the last two, three or four years. Next, being certain that all that we now have in mind is being done in this direction, there are other things, it seems to me, that are equally manifest, perhaps not equally effective, which are obviously the right things to do. First of all, in my judgment there is no excuse whatever for a continuation of the present policy of permitting our raw wood to go out of this country. What there is in the question that should form the subject matter of a royal commission is a mystery to me. It is not something as respects which the basic facts are unknown. Royal commissions are to inquire into facts. The facts are all known. A royal commission appointed to inquire into facts that are known and acknowledged is a mere stand-off and worse. Why does not the government act? I have heard, of course, talk of reprisals. There might be, for example, a duty put on our lumber, an embargo put on American coal, an embargo put on American cotton. Let me repeat what I said the other day. Under present circumstances—we standing on our feet and the United States standing on theirs—I do not fear any reprisal from the United States, none whatever. There are reprisals they might put on that in a very short time would be the very best thing that could happen us; and there is not one that will not bring as much injury, or more, on themselves as it would do to us. So far as any word of mine can affect the government, let me say: Do not worry about reprisals; act in the best interests of the Dominion. The United States will act in their own interests without any incitement on our part. Why raw wood on private lands, any more than on public lands, should be permitted to leave the country at the present rate when our forest reserves are already perilously small, I do not know. The minister says export is only permitted from private lands and not from the forests that are publicly owned. Very well as long as you permit export from private lands you cannot prevent export from public lands. The one channel is utilized for both and any force of inspectors that would prevent the abuse of that channel would be so expensive as to be out of the question. Consequently I hope that this idea of a royal commission will be abandoned and that the government will come to parliament this session with a real policy. Because every session this House meets from this day on the magnitude of the forest preservation problem will grow. Its present condition is of urgent consequence to this country right now. Let me say this—and I do not pretend on this subject to feel quite so sure as I do on the other—it seems to me we should in co-operation with the provinces, try to provide—though it will diminish the immediate saleable value of our forest reserves on our private and public property—some rule whereby there shall be a tree planted for every tree cut. That does not seem to me to be very impracticable; there cannot be arguments brought to bear to show that it is.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think it is quite practicable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If it is practicable, it should be done without the loss of another session of parliament. Furthermore, a general policy that will get results from the suggestion of the hon. member for Medicine Hat would be exceedingly beneficial to this country. It would bring the activities of hundreds of thousands of individual farmers into the great campaign for forest growth and would, at the same time distribute the benefits of that forest growth over all portions of our forest country. Some encouragement I should think could be given to that suggestion. Possibly the provinces should take part. But whether the provinces took part or not,, even if they stood quite aside, this government and people could well afford now to plant the foundation of the future wealth and strength of our country.

Mr. GRAHAM: The question of forest preservation, as has been well said by my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) and the member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gardiner), means much not only to us but our children, our grandchildren and all those who are to come after us. The older provinces have control of their forest lands. The question of preserving this wealth has been discussed in the various provinces which are blessed with forest growth, as long as I have been in public life.

To my mind we are not, either provincially or otherwise, doing all we can for forest preservation. Although a good deal has been done, yet it is a sad commentary on the Dominion of Canada that year by year we have such extensive forest destruction. In the province of Ontario, in which I live, if the forest wealth had been preserved and regrown by a reforestation policy up to the limit of possibility, it would mean, from a financial standpoint, a never-ending source of financial supply. In the province of Ontario the timber sales and the rental of timber areas have been a prolific source of revenue, but instead of replanting being continually working under the operation of the regrowth of a crop, that we have been decimating, we have continued to cut down our forest wealth till it has—I will not say it has all disappeared, but it is receding very rapidly. From the financial standpoint, if from no other, in our provinces, I believe it is absolutely necessary, as my right hon. friend has said, to have every tree that is taken down replaced by another. That is done in some countries. I have been trying to recall where it is done.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Norway.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): France.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is as to the forest, of which I will speak in a moment. Now, as to the more scattered timber throughout our farming areas—where there have been trees in years gone by, their value was not appreciated by the settlers in many cases. The moisture of our farms can be retained by a sufficient quantity of timber growth. In that respect, where we have cleared the timber away altogether, we have lost much in the fertility of our lands, particularly in dry seasons. I think we cannot show too great energy in the protection of the forest wealth we have and for the replacement of the wealth that is gone. I am in hopes that the use of aviation will in a measure assist in the work of protection from fire. It has been used also in the discovering of the pests that are destroying our forests. I am at a loss to know what results have been obtained in connection with the protection of our forests from these pests. Take even our shade trees; this season they are being attacked very severely by one of these pests, I do not know the name of it. I think that this province has done a good deal towards finding out some method of destroying this pest, but so far as I know, to date no genuine protection against its attacks has been provided.

There is a question now as to the export duty, or the prohibition of export. This is one of the difficulties that arises particularly in Ontario and Quebec. The settler goes into our forests in these provinces, and, unlike the settler going to the prairies, he has no land to plough until he clears a certain area. While he is doing that, working out a little home for himself, as our fathers did by clearing away the timber, his only means of living is by selling his pulp wood in the pulp wood areas. Now he objects very strongly to anything that tends to prevent him selling his pulp wood in the market that will give him the biggest price. I have been waited on by several of these men during recent months concerning this matter, and the contention of the settler is that if a prohibition or heavy export duty were imposed, he would be subject to a price dictated by the mill near his own home, and he believes or fears that the price he would receive for the pulp wood on the little clearing that he was preparing for agriculture, would be lessened to a degree that would be injurious. He might be protected in some way, but that is the objection raised in the two older provinces, as presented to me, not on behalf of the large exporter of pulp wood so much as the smaller settler who derives his living for two or three years from the sale of pulp wood while he is clearing his land. But something very radical will take place in this country before long in the protection of our forests, because it has been well pointed out that they are being denuded very rapidly and that in a few years our vast forest domain will be little more than a memory. I hardly know what to propose, because the government is studying the matter. I agree absolutely with everything that has been said with regard to the seriousness of the situation and the necessity of something being done, and I want to draw the attention of the committee to the objection that has been presented to the government concerning the small settler. Perhaps he could be protected in some way, but I cannot just now indicate how. If we in Canada are not going to look out for ourselves, our friends across the line are not going to do it for us. I may have wrong views, but my own opinion is that the Dominion of Canada, with its still vast expanse of timber area as well as other natural resources, ought to have a policy for the pepole of Canada, regardless of what other people do, treating them fairly, of course. But the further we go along in our national life the clearer it becomes to me that the nation that stands for itself at all times is the one that will have the respect of all the other nations of the world, so long as it does it decently and without reprisal to any other nation. I am strongly in favour of anything that will bring about better protection of our forests and lend encouragement to regrowing forests that have been denuded, as well as to tree-planting in those portions of the Dominion of Canada that are naturally without forest cover.

Mr. FORKE: I hardly know what the minister means by a nation standing for itself. I think all the nations are doing that with a vengeance.

Mr. GRAHAM: The right hon. leader of the Opposition spoke about reprisals. I feel as he does, and what I meant was that we should go along the line that we think that is best for the Dominion of Canada. The bugbear of reprisals is magnified in our minds, I think.

Mr. FORKE: What about the big stick?

Mr. GRAHAM: The big stick has never hurt us very much.

Mr. FORKE: No, but we talk about having a stick.

Mr. GRAHAM: I know, having something to dicker with. But if we dicker for our own interests first, we will be acting in accordance with my view of a nation's duty. With our resources in coal at both remote ends of this country, with our resources in timber, in fisheries, and above all our agricultural industry, we are in a position to stand erect, to do what we think is in the interest of the people of Canada, and to take chances on what any other nation will do.

Mr. WARNER: I should like to add a word to this discussion. It was my lot to live for many years in a country that was right on the edge of just as dry a country as any place in Canada that I know of. I have had experience in raising timber in a dry country. Looking over the years that have passed, I know something about the effect in those countries of planting timber, and I want to say just a little regarding planting timber on the open prairie, in the West in particular. I agree with all that the minister (Mr. Graham) has said regarding the preservation of our timber. I know that is needed. The country where I live, when I went in first, was practically all bush and timber, at least all that was not cultivated. Now, there is not much timber left in that country. I do not know how much influence this has had on the climate, and we do not know because the climate varies. We have cycles of dry years and cycles of wet years; but it is my opinion that the clearing away of the timber has brought about more of a dry condition in our country. I know we have more wind in that country, because it is more open.

Coming back to the planting of timber in a prairie country, I think there should be some system, or an understanding of how to plant timber. I have an opportunity of knowing that by seeing what was done in the country where I lived so long. In the beginning the government had a policy to give a quarter section to any man who would plant forty acres of timber and take care of it. He was donated what we call a timber claim for $10, the same price as for taking a homestead. It was learned that enough people would not take up that land, plant forty acres in timber and attend to it, so as to get the results that the government wanted. Therefore the government cut this down, first to twenty acres and finally to ten acres. After they cut it down to ten acres, much more timber was planted in that country than was the case when they gave a man an opportunity of getting the land if he would plant forty acres of timber. That was more than they cared to take care of; it was a greater obligation than they wanted to assume in order to secure a quarter section. When they began to plant the ten acre lots in timber and to take care of them properly was when we began to see the best results. That timber had to be planted a certain distance apart; it had to be planted in a body. The idea was—and I believe it is a good one—that all timber planted should be planted in a body rather than in single rows, and I want to deal for just a moment with the question of planting in rows. I believe in a country where the wind is sweeping the soil and blowing it from one field to another and from one place to another, this can be stopped largely by planting rows of trees in different places. But when you plant one row of trees on one side of a farm, you cannot conserve very much moisture with that one row, because the vegetation there is not heavy enough, the leaves that fall will blow away, and you do not have on top of the ground an accumulation to conserve the moisture as you would have if the trees were planted in a body. The reason for planting timber in a body is to conserve the moisture, and after that the thing will take care of itself with the quantity of rainfall in any part of our western country. Provided timber is planted in a body and gets a start, the leaves falling and the vegetation there will accumulate a certain covering on top of the ground that will hold the moisture. In that way the trees will have better growth, after cultivation is no longer needed, and, provided there is enough timber, the moisture will be conserved to go into the air and regulate the rainfall in that part of the country.

Some forty or fifty years ago in Nebraska, they commenced that kind of planting in a country just as dry as any part of Alberta, indeed as dry as any part of western Canada that I know of, and the rainfall in that country has been increased until we no longer hear of droughts whereas it was quite a common thing, and sometimes for several years at a time, to have drought in that country, thus preventing the normal growth of crops. That timber is holding enough moisture in the country to affect the climate to a considerable extent. I believe, as the minister said, when we remove the timber altogether, from any part of our country, we shall feel the result and the country will become drier. In the northern parts of China particularly that I have read about and studied more or less, they have floods, and they have droughts because their forests have been removed. Their land is rolling, and whenever rain occurs, the water rushes into the valleys and streams, goes away and does not lie in the country so as to put moisture back into the air, conserve the moisture and ensure a normal rainfall.

Rows of trees may be all right; but as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gardiner) was speaking about the matter, this came into my mind. I knew well how they had to plant timber throughout that country under a system of getting enough trees together to hold sufficient moisture there to affect the rainfall. I believe, if in every quarter section in the western country, ten acres could be planted in timber, that would distribute the rainfall, and they would not have those periodical droughts from which they now suffer. I am satisfied of that from what I have read and from the experience I have had in a country similar to our own West.

I want to add just a word and to give the minister a little of the experience that I have had in growing timber. At first when we went into that country, the people did not think very much of raising and cultivating timber. The prairies were burned regularly, and consequently the people had their difficulties from lack of rain. But after they had had their difficulties they began to want to get away from them, and they saw an opportunity to get out—in that way. They were led to take the government land as the government gave it to them and many of them after they had bought the land, planted timber. I did that myself on a prairie farm and I know it is a pleasure; it is easy to raise timber if you know the right way to go about the work.

If the prairie grass were left untouched, in time it would form a very good covering or mulch. I have had occasion to study this problem and I know that in one particular county in which I lived in Nebraska the burning of the grass was rigidly prevented over a period of about ten years. At the end of that time there happened to be a drought, and experiment was made to ascertain the moisture of the land. Holes were dug to the depth of some ten feet where the land had been covered with the prairie grass during that ten years, and there was considerable moisture in that part; whereas on the other hand, wherever the grass had been burnt, the land remained quite dry, without any possibility of vegetation. So that there is no question, in my opinion at least, that it is possible to retain the moisture in the land if, whenever trees are cut down, others are planted to take their places. I have been much concerned in my part of the country to see the timber all cleared away. Every man seems to want to take an axe and cut down some tree, but he never thinks of planting another in its stead, and I believe that this practice is to be condemned.

We should have some sort of policy in Canada that would induce the people, if they are not willing to do it freely, to plant trees wherever they cut down timber. This is absolutely necessary for the preservation of our forests and for the purpose of ensuring moisture in the land. I know that in the part of the country from which I come, if you cut down timber and leave the land alone without burning you are bound to have a forest again. That has been my experience with land I have cleared if it was not broken at once. Whenever I have cut timber and left it for a few years, a thick growth of trees springs up. On the prairies, however, it is different; you must plant trees if you want to retain the plantation. I believe that if bonuses are advisable in any direction at all, there could be nothing in connection with which they would be more applicable and useful than in this particular matter.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince, P.E.I.): There is no doubt about the importance of taking care of our forests which are being so rapidly destroyed not only by fire and insect pests, but by the lumber men and owners themselves. However, my object in rising just now is to ask the minister what proportion of this money for fire prevention is distributed to the different provinces, and whether the province of Prince Edward Island receives anything under this vote? There was a time when the purpose was to cut down the forests as quickly as possible and get the trees out of the way. But that time has long passed, and the people are realizing now the fact that they have destroyed a very valuable asset. The time for undertaking the preservation of what is left of those forests has now arrived, and the people of my province feel that they should receive the same consideration in this matter as the western provinces. I would draw the attention of the government, whether the matter comes directly under this department or under the Department of Agriculutre, to the great destruction that is being caused by insect pests among the shade trees and orchards. I do not think this matter is receiving the attention it deserves. The shade trees are being attacked as well as the orchards, and I am afraid that they will be destroyed completely in the course of a very few years if some very effective methods are not adopted to cope with this menace. I might mention the havoc that has been played among our cherry trees in Prince Edward Island. These trees have been attacked not by the insects that are commonly known to the experts of the Department of Agriculture, but by some pest which has never been discovered, so that the cherry trees of the province have practically all died. Just as the tree blooms the leaves begin to wither, and the cause of this has never been investigated, so far as I know. This involves a serious loss to the province, for these trees are valuable. The minister might inform the committee in what proportion assistance is given to the various provinces for the prevention of fires, and whether anything is given to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) raised a very difficult point of forest administration, namely, that the natural resources of the provinces are owned and administered by the provinces themselves with the exception of the three prairie provinces and the timber belt of British Columbia, which are Crown lands. The vote for fire purposes and indeed for all other purposes under this item is therefore confined to the area owned by the Crown; it does not apply to the provincial forest reserves, which are operated and taken care of by the provinces. So far as insect pests are concerned, however, this is a matter that comes under the Department of Agriculture and has received considerable attention at the hands of the Entomological branch, who have studied the problem altogether irrespective of the locality of any disease.

Item agreed to.

For surveys and investigations of water and power resources and for administration of water powers, etc., $330,000.

Mr. SHAW: Are there any departments of government which undertake duties similar or related to the duties indicated in this vote? What is the attitude of the government with respect to the water-power privileges in the Banff National park?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Water Powers Board is created by order in council and is given certain well-defined duties: it investigates the potentialities of the water-powers of Canada. I am not positive, but I think we have now made arrangements with every province in Canada in connection with this matter. Of course, the provinces that own their natural resources control their water-powers; but in order that we may have a comprehensive idea of the potentialities of the water-powers in Canada it is the work of this board to investigate, to measure, and in every other way to get accurate information as to where powers are located, what amount of power is available, and so forth. This work is being carried on throughout the whole Dominion. With regard to the second question of my hon. friend, nothing has been done. A good many representations have have been made, pro and con, we have heard a delegation from the power representatives, and the matter will be under consideration by the representatives of our own department on Tuesday next. No decision has yet been arrived at.

Mr. SHAW: Is any other department of the government concerned with the administration of water-powers, or does any other department undertake work similar or related to the work of this department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In administration? No.

Mr. SHAW: Then I understand the situation to be that no other department of government is concerned with water-powers at all.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not go so far.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know to what extent my hon. friend means. The Department of Railways and Canals is to some extent interested in water-powers but not in an investigatory capacity.

Mr. SHAW: The vote indicates that this department is interested not only in the surveying and investigation of the water and power resources of the Dominion but in the administration of water-powers as well. I want to know whether or not there are any other departments of government interested in any way in connection with water-powers; and, if so, what are the departments?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Department of Railways and Canals has authority, I believe, to lease water-powers. But it is not concerned in measuring water-powers to the extent of controlling them for the purpose of leasing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: After a survey of a water-power has been made how is the information given to the public?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If any given water-power has been investigated the report is available to the public. That is the object of making the investigation, in order that it may become the property of the public.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask entirely as a matter of information. I notice that some large American firms are getting control of a number of water-powers in the West. We in the city of Winnipeg are faced with that situation at the present time in connection with our supply of water-power from the Winnipeg river. What procedure is taken to secure information in regard to new water-power sites? Is advance information given to any individuals? What is the policy of the government in regard to leasing these powers? In short, how is it that one company can acquire a large number of water-power sites and so more or less control the situation?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I had better explain to my hon. friend that the provincial governments, where they are in possession of their natural resources, own the water-powers. Therefore the investigatory work on our part is merely to co-ordinate information for the whole of Canada, to get a comprehensive idea of the possibilities of water-power throughout the Dominion. We have not a word to say about who shall get control of the power. I think my hon. friend has in mind the situation of Ontario and Manitoba on the Winnipeg river?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We do not control the leasing of those powers. We have the information as to the power available and that sort of thing, which is of course very valuable, but the Ontario government owns and controls the water-powers of the province. At least, the Ontario government maintains that it does own them. Perhaps I am going a step too far.

Mr. FORKE: You are going far enough.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is disputed. However, subject to correction, that is the situation. There is an act on the statute books which is contrary to the contention of the Ontario government, for it describes these powers as being for the general advantage of Canada, which of course would bring them under the control of the Dominion government. Personally I have always assumed that the provinces do own their water-powers.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But in the case of those provinces that have not control over their natural resources the Dominion government becomes trustee, I suppose, of the water-powers. What is the policy of the government as to giving information concerning newly discovered water-powers?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are prepared to give the fullest information if we have investigated any particular water-power. Our work is not intended for the benefit of any private person, it is for the benefit of the public generally. Take, for example, in the province of Manitoba, we have investigated the water-powers on the Nelson river and the Winnipeg river; this information is for the benefit of the public.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Coming down to administration, again as a matter of information, on what conditions can a company secure water-power rights? Does the government simply turn these powers over to the first applicant who can give assurance that he will develop them? Or does the government regard these powers as being essentially for the welfare of the whole people and administer them in a broad way for that purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think I can answer that question by simply saying "Yes." So far as I have come in contact with any application of this character—I do not recollect more than one—the applicants have had to demonstrate the purpose for which the power is to be used, the quantity of power required, and the period for which it will be required, because the privilege is not granted to a private interest outright, it is merely leased for a definite period. That is the method by which control of these powers is maintained by the federal government. I do not know what method is pursued by the provincial governments.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the government prepared to take into consideration the development of water powers where they own the natural resources?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That would entail the operation perhaps of a timber or manufacturing industry in the locality. However, there is another aspect that may loom up in the very near future, and that is the electrification of the railways, in which case undoubtedly, with our publicly-owned railway system, the government should be prepared, in my opinion, to retain the water-powers necessary and develop them for this electrification.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was just with that thought in my mind that I made the suggestion to the minister, because it appears to me that if we are to have water powers available for electrification of the National Railway system, the time for the government to act is now, otherwise they will find all the available water powers under the control of private ownership.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am speaking now strictly of federally controlled power, because after all it will be small in amount in comparison with the total power required for the electrification of our railways throughout the Dominion, as it is only in the three prairie provinces that we have control of the natural resources. No water powers will be leased there except for a definite purpose; that is, we are not going to simply lease water powers to private individuals to enable them to get control.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But have we not already specific instances of that very thing being done?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There may have been in the past; I am speaking for the immediate future and for last year. I would insist that any lease should be contingent upon the supply of power being utilized for the purpose for which it was leased. I do not think we should decline to lease power to any private individual for legitimate development, but on the other hand, I do say that no more power should be leased to the individual than he actually requires for the purpose intended, and that on no account should control pass out of the Dominion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I simply wish to utter a note of warning to the government in this matter. We anticipate within a few years that electrical power will have developed even to the extent of running some of our railways, and if the government does not at once take steps to safeguard these power sites they will find when they require them that they are all in the hands of private owners, who will hold up the government in a manner similar to that of which we have had examples in the past.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the term of years for which these leases of power sites are granted? Is there a specified term, or is it an indeterminate lease?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Regard is had to the use to which the power will be put and the probable duration of the power requirements. In addition, there is provision for the taking back of the power at actual cost at any time. A man may require power for development in connection with his manufacturing concern for, say, twenty-five years. Or take the case that I suppose the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth), is speaking about, power development for Winnipeg—that undoubtedly will be required for all time to come. I am thinking more particularly of mills and establishments of that character; the provision to which I have referred is inserted in all such leases.

Mr. GARDINER: Out in western Canada practically every lease that is issued is transferable. Now, this is a very important point. Does the minister not think the time has arrived when all leases whether grazing leases, coal, timber or power leases, should be made non-transferable so that those who desire to come in and devlop these natural resources will not be held up by speculators for large sums of money?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): With very few exceptions, all classes of leases are made non-transferable; that is, they cannot be transferred without the consent of the minister. In other words, the transfer cannot be a transaction between two private persons, one holding the lease and the other desirous of getting it.

Mr. GARDINER: Does that apply to a situation where a lease has not been developed, or is the minister's consent given only where there has been development?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It applies to every lease. It is a provision of the lease itself.

Mr. GARDINER: I want to enter a protest against the granting of leases in cases where those who received the lease in the first place have done no development work at all, but are simply holding the lease up for the purposes of speculation. I would not have so much objection in cases where there had been development and there was a desire to transfer the lease, but where no development has taken place I maintain that it is a wrong principle to permit the transfer. It is my belief that one of the real reasons why our country has not developed as it should have is because the speculative element have got leases for our natural resources and are holding them up so that those who desire to use those natural resources will have to pay large sums of money for them. I would ask the minister to allow this item to stand until after we come here to-night, because the matter is a very important one.

At six o'clock, the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 167 (from the Senate), for the relief of Christina Julia Hamilton.—Mr. Simpson.

Bill No. 168 (from the Senate), for the relief of Smith Kain.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 169 (from the Senate), for the relief of Gladys Malcolm Mushett.—Mr. Shaw.

Bill No. 170 (from the Senate), for the relief of William Francis Rafferty.—Mr. Irvine.

Bill No. 171 (from the Senate), for the relief of Gladys Teague.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 172 (from the Senate), for the relief of Elizabeth McKinley.—Mr. Chew.

Bill No. 173 (from the Senate), for the relief of Algernon Cecil Aubry Moran.—Mr. Baxter.

Bill No. 174 (from the Senate), for the relief of Emily Adlene McCausland.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 178 (from the Senate), for the relief of Winifred Scatcherd.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 179 (from the Senate), for the relief of Grace Lees Smiley.—Mr. Boys.

Bill No. 181 (from the Senate), for the relief of James Dunnett.—Mr. Gordon.

Bill No. 182 (from the Senate), for the relief of Laura McBrien.—Mr. Sheard.

Bill No. 183 (from the Senate), for the relief of Chester Abbott Redmond.—Mr. Church.

SUPPLY

The House again in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

For surveys and investigations of water and power resources and for administration of water-powers, etc., $330,000.

Mr. GARDINER: When we rose at six o'clock we were discussing the possibilities of leasing the water-powers in the three prairie provinces. I should like to bring before the House some information with regard to the manner in which leases, not particularly water leases, but other leases, have operated in this country. First, I say that it is necessary to put into force such regulations as will conserve these water-powers in western Canada for the use of the people, so that we can utilize them. No doubt we hope in the near future that western Canada will develop more rapidly than in the past, and, because of the fact that our water-powers in that country are strictly limited, it should be necessary to see to it that they are conserved for the use of the people.

I will cite one or two examples of what I mean by conserving the water-powers of Canada, and I am going to present some examples which have occurred recently. About two years ago there were supposed to be in the Fort Norman field large quantities of oil, and people made a rush to that particular portion of the Northwest Territories for the purpose of taking out oil claims in the district. I will tell the House how it worked out in the long run. I will give one example of a man who lived in Edmonton, and perhaps the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) is well acquainted with this case. This man went to Fort Norman, and I believe it took him about two months to go there and return, at a cost of less than $5,000. He staked out his claim at Fort Norman, came back to Edmonton, registered the claim, and a few days after he had registered it he sold it for $310,000, making a profit of $305,000 for approximately two months' work. The position we take is that that man contributed nothing to the well-being of this country. By using the form of lease that we have at the present time he was enabled to make a large sum of money without contributing one iota to the welfare of Canada. We maintain that those conditions of leasing are not in the best interests of Canada.

This statement is applicable also to our water powers. At the present time there is an oil development in southern Alberta. When I was in Calgary a few days prior to coming to Ottawa for the session, I noticed in the streets placards advertising oil leases for sale. Hon. members can well understand that those oil leases were offered for sale by men who were speculating in them, and the House will also understand that an operator must pay the price that these speculators demand before he can start operations with these oil leases. That, Mr. Chairman, is not in the best interests of Canada, and I believe one of the reasons why Canada has not developed as she should have developed is the fact that we have allowed speculators to monopolize our natural resources to the detriment of the country.

I will give the House another example of something that happened in Alberta. Hon. members will remember that Saskatchewan and Alberta came into the confederation in the year 1905. Parliament at that time thought it advisable to retain the natural resources, not only of these two provinces but also of Manitoba. The federal authority, of course, had to deal with these natural resources. Since 1905, in the province of Alberta, over 800 coal fields have been opened up. Coal leases have been sold by speculators ever since the time that coal leases were available. Coal mines have been opened up to such an extent that five times more coal is mined in Alberta than we can profitably utilize under present conditions. About the year 1913 the Canadian Northern completed its branch line from Saskatoon to Calgary, and the line runs through the Drumheller coal fields. On the first coal that we received from Drumheller we had to pay the construction rate, which was a higher rate than we are paying at the present time. At that particular time we could buy screened coal, for from $4.75 to $5.25 per ton. To-day we cannot buy that coal under $7.75. For what reason? Simply because we have in Alberta five times more coal mines opened up than we actually need. There is, I am told, $50,000,000 invested in coal properties in Alberta alone, and, for the small amount required for western Canada, it means that they have to charge a high price for the coal, in order to take care of the overhead that they have invested in these coal mines. I think it would be good policy if the department over which my hon. friend has control at the present time should take cognizance of conditions, and say whether it is necessary to give leases, for instance, for coal mines, and so forth in Alberta. What is the use of allowing people to put good money into properties that will not be a paying proposition, unless they are in a position to charge more for their product than it is actually worth?

I should like to bring another matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior. He will remember that in the year 1909 the southern part of Alberta was opened up for settlement. Up to that time this portion to the south had always been reserved, for some reason or other, but the department decided to open up this particular part of southern Alberta. They sent literature to the United States, sent it all over Canada, and to Great Britain, for the purpose of inducing people to come to that particular section of the country; they advertised that the land was good, that they would have free homesteads, and stated also that you could buy a quarter section of land which was known as the pre-emption, for $3 an acre. We have had hard conditions there, but the people in that district at the present time believe they could make a success of their enterprise if they had some of the rough land that is around there for community grazing purposes. The minister will remember the Alberta members interviewing him more than once last year for the purpose of trying to get some of these areas opened up for community grazing leases. At the time I was in Calgary prior to coming down for the session I saw advertised in many of the windows in places where they were selling land that grazing leases were for sale. For instance, I might give you a particular case.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the question of grazing leases can hardly be debated under the item of water and power resources.

Mr. GARDINER: I submit to your ruling, but I am leading up to the question, inasmuch as I desire to draw to the attention of the minister the effects of past policy in respect to the manner in which leases have been granted. That applies to water-power leases as well as to grazing leases. I cite these cases merely for the purpose of giving the minister an outline of the situation. When I was in Calgary prior to coming down to this session of parliament, I saw grazing leases there for sale, and if I remember well, there were five thousand acres of leased grazing land. The price that the leased land was offered at was $1.10 an acre. Those who had this particular leased land had a lease on it only for grazing purposes; but because of our system of leases, these get into the hands of speculators and become a speculative proposition, instead of one for the development of Canada. I trust that, with the few examples I have given to the minister, he will try to evolve some different system, whereby all leases, including water-power leases, shall be issued only to those who are going to use them, and they shall not be made transferable until such time as they have been fairly well developed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister gave it as his opinion that we should continue to regard water-powers as belonging to the various provinces. I am quite aware of the fact that such has been the general idea in the past. I do not know how the matter stands from a strictly legal point, even according to the old conception; but I should like to suggest that with the developments which have gone on in connection with the use of electrical power, the time has come when we shall have to alter our opinions in this regard. We have been told that the air is free, and yet within very recent years, with the development of aerial navigation, the whole idea has been absolutely changed, and to-day we have certain conventions with regard to aerial navigation. We also have some very definite regulations with regard to the transmission of messages through the air. That just illustrates the changes that are taking place because of changed conditions brought about by these newer inventions. I submit that recent developments in the electrical world have made necessary some change with regard to our ideas in connection with these water-powers.

I do not desire to-night to anticipate to any extent the debate which is likely to take place with regard to the Lake of the Woods, a bill concerning which is now before the House, but I should like to refer to that very briefly just as illustrating this point and the necessity of altering our policy. I think we all recognize to-day that the question of the electrification of railways must come before us in a practical form in the not distant future. Anyone who knows the northern stretches of Canada must realize the immense possibilities of electrifying our railways without any very serious trouble, if we have control of the water-powers that exist almost from coast to coast across Canada. The fact that we have already as a part of the national property, a great railway system, makes it essential that we look a little bit ahead in this matter. We were told the other day in this House that the children of darkness are wiser in their day and generation than the children of light. It would seem as if some of the private exploiters in this country are a great deal wiser than those who are charged with the administration of our public affairs. Perhaps very naturally we are proceeding on the old idea of local administration and private exploitation of these resources. But when we consider that if we are going to electrify our system, that would have to be done, not by the possession of this, that and the other water-power, but by the possession and exploitation of water-powers over a distance of three thousand miles, then we begin to understand the necessity of taking a different line of action from that which we have taken in the past.

In passing, I should like to call attention to another development which must take place in the near future, and that is the use of electricity for heating purposes. I was reading only the other day an article dealing with the report of the American government with regard to super-stations. According to that report, it will be feasible in the not distant future to supply great central stations which will provide for the heating of many of our cities. We are considering doing this in my own city of Winnipeg as supplementary to the coal supply. These things are matters that are not simply in the realm of the ideal or speculative; they are rapidly becoming matters of urgent public importance.

I would urge upon the minister that in making these surveys, he do so, not with the thought of securing information that would be available merely for local enterprises, but rather having in view the development of the whole of our electrical power as one great system. The minister a little while ago suggested that he was afraid that if we began to operate some of these water powers, we might have to go into certain industries, such as the pulp or the lumber industry. I do not know that that is essential, at least not in the immediate future, because we could do as is done in other places, sell this power to those who are going into these industries. That might be an immediate solution; but I would emphasize that we should regard the whole undertaking as one great system. For instance, the Lake of the Woods is fed by a series of streams, having many water powers, and the Lake of the Woods in turn feeds the Winnipeg river which is the source of our power for the city of Winnipeg. On the other hand, there is tributary to the Winnipeg river the English river which is fed by other lakes, sepecially Lac Seul. All these bodies and streams of water, some in Ontario, some in Manitoba and some along the boundary line between Ontario and the United States, form naturally one unified system, and it is impossible to deal with one particular waterfall. If one attempts to exploit one waterfall, there is great danger that other waterfalls may be interfered with. If one raises the levels on certain lakes, as we all know, that may have a very serious effect hundreds of miles away. This has happened in this particular instance and raised questions of international importance, and we have had our International Joint Commission dealing with the problem. The particular dispute that is to come before this House is an interprovincial proposition. I am not going to go into that matter to-night. To me it is a minor matter as to which province controls the situation. The fact is that neither can adequately develop the water powers without having regard to the rights of the other, and the system should be regarded as a unit. Let me offer one particular illustration of how seriously dealing with one part may affect another. In 1922, the town of Sioux Lookout was promised a lease by the Ontario government of the Pelican rapids power site on Lac Seul. This power site is so situated that it can only be of commercial value provided that the water level on Lac Seul is maintained at its normal height, hence the raising of the lake level for regulations and storage purposes destroys Pelican rapids as a power site. The promise of this lease was immediately recognized by Manitoba as a serious menace to the scheme of regulation recommended for adoption, as it sacrificed the development of 160,000 horse power on the English and Winnipeg rivers for a possible 3,000 horse power at Pelican rapids. A net loss of 157,000 horse power to the two provinces.

This illustrates the situation all over the country, and is a matter of urgent public importance, so I suggest that in the making of these surveys we should not regard the problem merely as one of providing for particular private enterprises, but rather should draft a general scheme for the exploitation of water-powers, with their wonderful electrical energy, for the benefit of all the people.

Mr. MILLAR: I want to ask three or four questions touching this matter, but first of all I want the minister to answer this query: What concessions in the way of water-power have been granted to the adjoining republic by this government in northern Manitoba?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There was one on the Saskatchewan river, but it has been cancelled. There was also one on the Nelson river over which there has been considerable controversy, and it too has lapsed. At the moment, therefore, there are really no concessions extant in the north of Manitoba. I might say to my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Gardiner) with respect to the question of grazing leases, that these leases cannot be transferred except with the consent of the minister. Upon the expiry of a lease we notify the provincial government, who undertake the work of community grazing; and this is done in Alberta and Saskatchewan. In Saskatchewan there is a ranch being utilized for this purpose. If the provincial government desires land for community grazing, then the lease is held for that purpose.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that this is not the case. I have had interviews with the officers of the department who inform me that the Justice department interpreted one of the sections of the regulations to give preference to the owner to renew the lease within four years of its expiry.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is true; that applies to the owners. But we have an arrangement with the Alberta government whereby, when a lease expires, we transfer it to the provincial government for community grazing, unless the lessee renews the lease; and this is not very often done. It is news to me to learn that there has been trafficking in grazing leases. I was not aware of the fact, but I take my hon. friend's word for it. Evidently someone must have been endeavouring to dispose of leases in that way. With respect to water-powers, practically 80 per cent of what is stated to be desirable has already been done. The controversy between Manitoba and Ontario is a considerable one and will come up for discussion, no doubt, when the bill proposed by the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) is under consideration. I am not going to touch that question to-night, because I shall probably have something to say about it later on. But that is one of the difficulties we have to contend with.

Mr. MILLAR: In view of the answer given by the minister with regard to water-power concessions cancelled in northern Manitoba, is there any concession granted by this government in Ontario near the boundary of Manitoba? I was talking with a friend a year and a-half ago and he told me there had just been granted a very valuable concession in the way of water-power and pulp wood in northern Manitoba, as I understood. It might have been in Ontario.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The officer informs me that there are none except at Great Falls on the Winnipeg river, to the Manitoba Power Company.

Mr. MILLAR: Is that the one?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, that is the closest one to the Ontario boundary.

Mr. MILLAR: Is that the company whose territory was extended and over which there was a discussion in the House on a former occasion?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. My hon. friend asked me what concession had been granted close to the Ontario boundary. That is the closest one to the boundary.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): What is the meaning of "investigations of water and power resources"? Does that include underground water such as well water?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, that is under the supervision of Mr. Dowling of the Geological branch.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister's department any jurisdiction over the water-powers in Ontario and Quebec? Do I understand that all this money is spent in Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No; I explained that this afternoon. We are making an investigation, measuring the possibilities in every province, and we have an agreement with the provinces to facilitate this work. We do not control the water-powers; we simply investigate and find out the possibilities of water-power throughout Canada as a whole.

Mr. COOTE: Is this government reimbursed by the provinces for that work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Item agreed to.

For the investigation of the fuel and power resources of the Dominion and for the expenses of the Dominion Power Board, $10,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought we had a vote for this board the other day under another item.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is special work that was started before my time. It consists in an investigation of the St. Lawrence river which is carried out by two engineers of the department, Mr. H. A. Matthewson and Mr. A. B. Lamb, who are engaged in a study of the St. Lawrence river power and navigation project. The expenses of the investigation are charged up to this item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have they anything to do with fuel?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know why fuel should have been included in the item; I have been asking that question myself.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, did the minister explain the word "fuel"?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I was asking why that word came in. It should not be there. Mr. Challies himself is on the Fuel Investigation Board for which we passed a vote in the Mines branch. The word "fuel" should be eliminated. This is purely an investigation of the St. Lawrence canal scheme with respect to the power possibilities in the event of the scheme being undertaken.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why not put that item under the preceding one? It covers very much the same work.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think my hon. friend is correct about that, but evidently this is the way the item was started and it has not been changed. If it was to be continued, I agree with him it should all go in the one item.

Mr. COOTE: Has the power board made any investigation of the possible water-power which might be developed in the Highwood river?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The officers are not sure that they made a thorough investigation of the Highwood river, but they suggest the power would be very small judging by the flow—although I see by to-night's paper they are having a considerable flow there these days.

Mr. HOCKEN: Has any report been made by the Dominion Power Board on the St. Lawrence power possibilities?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. A report was made by the International Joint Commission, and in discussing this with Mr. Challies he mentioned that a careful investigation might disclose several inaccuracies in that report, although he was not reflecting upon the report itself. Indeed, that is one of the difficulties we have to contend with, that we have not any definite knowledge of the possibilities of the scheme.

Mr. HOCKEN: I presume this is to check up the report of the International Joint Commission. In this connection, I hope the government will study the project seriously, because it is of very great importance to the province of Ontario that exactly what is possible there in water-power development should be known.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My memory is that this vote was started largely for the purpose of getting data so that Canada's representatives would have something definite to go on in connection with the St. Lawrence scheme when they appeared before the International Joint Commission. I think the vote was a good deal larger formerly.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My recollection is that it was the same.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was a larger vote for the purpose of securing data to be used for that inquiry.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The vote covered the work of the board generally. Is it the power board my hon. friend is speaking about, or the direct investigation of the St. Lawrence possibilities?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Two men are engaged on that work this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What are they doing now?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): When the matter was introduced last year by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) I discussed it with Mr. Challies, and I learned then that we had two men engaged on this work continuously checking the report of the engineers of the International Joint Commission, investigating the backflow that appears to be in evidence here, particularly at what would be the mouth of the canal, and the power possibilities for the purpose my hon. friend has pointed out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can we look forward to an interim report? Because I should like to get the data as soon as possible.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, we could get a report of the situation as it is up-to-date.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In the near future?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. HOCKEN: How long is it going to take to check this up? These men have been at it now for a year. Surely the work ought to be done by now. Is it a continuous job so that these men may be kept on whether there is anything to be done or not?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, I would not say that. It is difficult for a layman to state how much has been accomplished by these men. My hon. friend will agree, however, that accurate information should be had in connection with this project and the power possibilities, because it is a tremendously big undertaking and some day undoubtedly Canada will have to come to a decision about it. I shall be glad to get an interim report in respect to what they have discovered up to date. It should not take more than this year to thoroughly check up the whole thing.

Mr. HOCKEN: I quite agree with the minister that it is very important for us to get accurate information, but I would be somewhat critical of a couple of engineers who have been working at this so long and as yet have made no report. I do not pose as a technical man, but it seems to me two years ought to be sufficient to check up a report of that kind.

Mr. MILLAR: I understand the report of the International Joint Commission dealt only with the water-power on the part of the St. Lawrence which flows between Canada and the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend's information is at fault; the report included both the Canadian and American.

Item agreed to.

For surveys and inspections in connection with the administration of the Irrigation Act, etc., $200,000.

Mr. KELLNER: What irrigation project is this?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No new work in irrigation surveys was undertaken; they are practically completed with the exception of the centre Alberta irrigation scheme, which embraces the area north of the Red Deer river through the constituency of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gardiner) and the Bow river valley. I concluded, however, that the surveys had gone to that point where we could get an indication of the probable cost of the project and that it would not be necessary to continue the lateral surveys. Our vote this year is to pay for the completion of the various projects and meet the cost of the staff in Calgary. We spend $54,945 in Calgary, for the permanent staff and $40,335 for the field staff. The permanent staff at Ottawa, which takes care of both reclamation and irrigation, takes $10,470 and the field surveys and experimental and demonstration work, $68,060. Then, there are the travelling expenses of officers of the staff, amounting to $11,510; equipment at Calgary, instruments, camp equipment, transport, and so on which are required yearly, $4,280; expenses of office at Ottawa, $10,400, total, $200,000 this year for both services.

Mr. KELLNER: Do I understand from the minister that the federal government makes the surveys in all these various projects that are under way in Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, they made all the original surveys.

Mr. KELLNER: What is meant by the words in the item, "administration of the Irrigation act"?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is for field inspection, surveys, etc. There has been some demonstration work; at Brooks in southern Alberta we have a farm on which demonstration work has been carried on, to indicate proper methods of putting the water on the land and generally how best to run an irrigated farm.

Mr. KELLNER: Is that a Dominion government farm?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. KELLNER: I understood they were called experimental farms. I notice you refer to them as demonstration farms.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is an experimental station, but it is under the control of the Irrigation branch for irrigation purposes alone.

Mr. JELLIFF: I hope no one will question for a minute this item of expenditure; it is one of the most important items that appears in this whole list. It is an attempt by the Dominion government to accomplish work in southern Alberta that should have been accomplished before settlers were ever admitted there. When we came into that southern Alberta country in the early years it seemed to us that we had everything that nature could give us to make it a successful farming district. We had as rich soil as could be found anywhere on earth. The settlers who came in there had the necessary capital with which to go to work, and they had implements and equipment. They had intelligence; they had the industry, and they had above all else the glorious sunshine of that country. The people in the northern part of the province apparently do not have as much of the sunshine that we glory in. All these things combined, however, were of little effect, we found as the years went on, without water. Water was king, but an absent king in that southern country.

9 p.m.

Now the government has been aiding us to the limited extent of providing for the necessary general and preliminary survey work to determine the quantity and source of our water supply and to lay out the systems which would help us to bring that water on to the land so that we would have all the elements necessary for a permanent and profitable agriculture. That has been the whole purpose of the government work, and the amount expended to that end is not a drop in the bucket when you think of the importance of placing agriculture in that country on a firm and dependable foundation.

Let me illustrate that: Take one of our wet years—for we have wet years in that country. The district that was covered by a survey board that went over that country in 1921, known as the drought area—that district in 1915 shipped out 41,000,000 bushels of grain. That was a wet year. In the following year, 1916, 37,000,000 bushels were shipped out; the drought period had begun to come on. In the next year, 1917, there was comparatively little moisture in the soil and our shipments dropped to 18,000,000 bushels. The drought continued; in 1918 our shipments dropped to 5,000,000 bushels, and in 1919 to 4,000,000. Not only was the output of our grain affected to that marked extent, but at the same time the forage of that country became depleted; there was no feed for the stock, so that there was a heavy loss in all the branches of stock raising as well as in our grain production. These losses have involved also the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Dominion of Canada, to its railways, to its banks, to all the various commercial factors connected with the business of farming.

The work covered by this vote was an attempt on the part of the Dominion government to help us correct these difficulties due to lack of moisture. We have gone ahead with this minimum of assistance and have developed large irrigation areas. In the first place we had to start with the old A. R. and I. area, comprising about 130,000 acres, and later we developed the Taber area, comprising 17,000 acres.

We have just recently completed the Lethbridge northern irrigation district of 105,000 acres. We have laid out besides a district running south of Macleod and embracing 60,000 acres. We have completed the United Irrigation project of 23,000 acres west of Cardston. All over that country people are at work endeavouring to overcome the difficulties which nature has placed in their way from lack of water or moisture, and this is but a minimum of expenditure on the part of the government in helping us to overcome those difficulties. I hardly believe that a word is necessary from anybody in this House to sanction this expenditure on the part of the federal government. It is not only essential to the welfare of the farmers there, but it is necessary to the upkeep of your transportation agencies, necessary for the success of the merchant, of the banks, and of all business interests throughout that district. Had I known this item was coming up this evening I think I would have talked to you for about an hour and a half or two hours as some of our friends do on this side, but it is so apparent that this expense is entirely wise on the part of the federal government that I scarcely feel it is necessary to add another word.

Mr. KELLNER: I do not wish to criticize the vote at all in view of what my colleague from Lethbridge says but as I understand it these surveys always precede the work. The minister said there are no new projects contemplated or under way. Why is it that surveys need to go on after the work on the undertaking has started?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): When I say that no new work is contemplated or no new works are to be started it does not mean that the works that are being examined are completed. There is completion work to be done on one or two of them. As a matter of fact, I do not know any area in the province of Alberta at the moment that is not surveyed—that is where it would be possible to irrigate. We are simply completing the work that has been undertaken.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the situation with regard to the irrigation project known as the William Pearce, or the Northern Saskatchewan?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I spoke of it a moment ago. However, I will tell my hon. friend that we have a report on that project which would indicate that it is feasible. It will cost in the neighbourhood of $50,000,000 and embraces a considerable area of the province of Saskatchewan north of the Red Deer river. There is still a considerable amount of preliminary survey work to be done. For example none of the laterals have been surveyed, just the main ditch and proving the feasibility of the scheme. In view of the fact that it will involve such a huge expenditure I thought it was premature to expend money on survey work until there was some likelihood of the scheme being gone on with.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do I understand the survey work on that project has ceased?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Except to the extent of proving the scheme feasible and its probable cost.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is no more surveying going on there then?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): None this year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the amount that will be spent in the province of Alberta under this item?

[Mr. Jelliff.]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is practically all spent there. I gave the items a moment ago. They will be in Hansard.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is almost entirely an Alberta project, in fact it was started, as I recollect, some years ago, I forget the exact year, for the purpose of showing the province, what could be done, where the money could be spent to the best advantage, and how these arid lands could be made fertile? The idea always was that we should be in advance of the work of the province. I wanted to find out from my hon. friend whether we are still properly in advance of the province's work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. I do not know of any other project except a small scheme that might be undertaken by private individuals for their own particular benefit as to which we have also been giving advice. In such a case as that it is not a very costly process. One man can take the levels and ascertain whether or not a private individual, or three or four individuals, could have a small scheme of their own. Outside of that the province is well covered.

Item agreed to.

Reclamation of Dominion lands by drainage, (including revote of $36,000), $129,000.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): What is the policy of the department with regard to the reclaiming of these lands? In my own constituency there is quite a number of reclamation projects that have been surveyed. Some have been handed over apparently to private individuals with the understanding that they reclaim the land, while others have simply been surveyed and nothing done. Is it the minister's intention to have these lands reclaimed by the government, for instance the one at Lesser Slave lake, or simply adopt a waiting attitude for the present?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Slave river project, I think, is what my hon. friend has reference to.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): That is one of them.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Slave river is navigable and comes under the jurisdiction of the Public Works department. I cannot give my hon. friend information as to what can be done, although I know that application has been made to the department for surveys to determine the probable cost of straightening the river and lowering the level of the lake.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): There is another at High Prairie west of Dewar. Then there is also one south of Entwistle.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): High Prairie? That is off Slave lake.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There were surveys made by our department there last year.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): What is the intention in regard to those lands? They cannot be homesteaded. Is it intended to reclaim the lands and then sell them?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I might say I have gone over this several times. I do not know what the attitude of the department was in the past with respect to this work but this is our present attitude: We will do the initial survey work and prove the scheme. We are glad to undertake that responsibility and expense just as we do in irrigation work, but when it comes to the actual carrying out of the scheme either the municipality or the province, preferably the province, would have to undertake the supervision of the work because they are close to the scene and will know the value of the work much better than the Dominion government would. There is a good deal to be said about draining areas that are Crown lands prior to settlement. Most of these lands, with the exception of some projects that are under way, such as the Carrot river scheme, are a considerable distance from railway facilities. The sending of people into these new areas where there are no railway facilities does not appear to be good business, when we have such a large amount of land lying within reasonable distance of a railway. If the province cares to undertake projects of that sort we have an arrangement with both Saskatchewan and Alberta to turn the Crown lands that may be involved in any of these schemes over to them, the lands to be sold on a basis similar to the provisions that govern the sale of school lands at a fixed price per acre.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much was spent last year?

Mr. MILLAR: I want to say a word in regard to the matter the minister touched on. It seems to me many of our difficulties particularly the railway difficulty have been brought about by spreading our settlement over too large a territory. A group of people have been encouraged to go into a district, perhaps good enough in itself but far removed from railway facilities, and of course, in a short time they are asking for railways. I was glad to hear him say that it did not look like good business to encourage people to settle in districts far removed from railways. I think the department should incline to the policy of consolidating our settlement, rather than spreading it out.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In answer to the question of the hon. member for West York, the amount spent last year was $170,000. I may say we are cutting down this work and we will not require that much this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What did we get for that money last year? Where is the work going on?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There was work at Waterhen lake in Saskatchewan and in the Carrot river district in Manitoba. Those two projects referred to are still incomplete.

Mr. HUMPHREY: Would the minister say what progress has been made in regard to reclaiming what has been termed the Kootenay flats in the Creston district? It is an international question, I believe. There is an area of 70,000 acres that ought to be reclaimed. What progress has been made in the last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have not done anything on any of these projects. Would it be the work of the provincial government the hon. member refers to? They have the Sumas lake project, and they have the project at Chilliwack.

Mr. HUMPHREY: This project is located in the eastern part of British Columbia, bordering on the state of Idaho. It is an area of 70,000 acres. Half of it is in British Columbia and half in Idaho. There has been a good deal of correspondence in the last ten years, I think.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That would be in the territory controlled by British Columbia. All the area we would be operating in would be the block on each side of the railway.

Mr. HUMPHREY: I believe it has developed into an international question, and the negotiations would have to be carried out by the federal government. Certain negotiations have been in progress for years between the Canadian and United States governments, and, if possible, I would like to find out what progress was made along that line last year. Up to a year ago, I had a copy of the return of the progress made in previous years and I believe it was left to the federal government to carry on the negotiation with the United States government, but, as far as the work that has been done is concerned, it has been between the province of British Columbia and the state of Idaho. I believe they are being held back awaiting certain negotiations to be carried out by the federal government.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This particular branch of the government's service knows nothing about it. I will get any information we may have with respect to any negotiation between our government and the government of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY: I realize that this matter probably does not come directly under this vote, but I was at a loss to know under what vote it did come. I do not think it is under Dominion Lands although the Dominion government has certain jurisdiction.

Mr. KELLNER: Are there any reclamation projects where there is a contract with private individuals, or is the department carrying out all these projects in the way the minister suggested a little while ago?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I did not catch the question. Did the hon. member ask if we were making contracts?

Mr. KELLNER: Yes. I asked if there were any contracts?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, in Saskatchewan.

Mr. KELLNER: None in Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Item agreed to.

Canadian national parks and historic sites, $1,250,980.

Mr. MARTELL: I would like to have something definite from the minister as to whether the department is prepared to have an independent board of managers control, for public purposes, lands which are not used for historic sites but on which historic sites have been erected. Would the minister consider the use of lands given for historic sites as playgrounds, so long as there was no interference with the particular portion used for the historic site? I want something definite on that, right away, on behalf of my town.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If the hon. member will get his municipality to make an application we will be very glad to give them for the use free of charge this particular area or any land we are not utilizing for the definite purpose of placing memorials and whatever may be necessary in connection with those memorials.

[Mr. Humphrey.]

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference, I do not think the municipalities are particularly concerned. We are a public body of citizens making application, the best citizens of the community. Will the minister put these sites in the hands of a committee who will safeguard the matter, under a lease from the minister, on proper terms to be set forth by the minister? In my constituency we have four or five municipalities, East Hants, West Hants, Hantsport and other places seeking incorporation. In cases where there are twenty-eight or twenty-nine acres of land, where an acre or two would embrace all the historic sites, we ask that the public citizens of the town be entitled to have a committee appointed to manage the remaining lands in the interests of children and to provide playgrounds. The site in my town is the best sliding ground for children in the winter time, and in summer it is a fine place for children to play. I do not think any official of the department should have the right to say to the young children who are playing there "Get off the ground" or "Do this" or "Do that", because this is an historic site, and I want to get a direct understanding from the minister that when we make an application to him we will have a right to use the lands that are not absolutely necessary for the historic sites, not leased because we are not prepared to pay anything for them. A poor man like myself could not pay any money for them.

What I want is that the children shall have the right to use this land as a play ground, for a toboggan slide in the winter time, as a place in the summer to put their tents, and in every way for them to be accorded the proper rights for youngsters who want to get out and play. We may all be men, and we are apt, when we ask for things, to stick too much to technical rules. I do not want to recite the old poem of "The Children" and that sort of thing; but on behalf of the citizens of that town, I want to apply to the Minister of the Interior, under whose administration this matter comes, to have the land which is not used specifically for the site allocated under a proper committee for play grounds for the children. I want a definite answer.

Mr. WALLACE: Will the minister inform the committee as to how much of this appropriation is for marking historical sites?

Mr. MARTELL: If my hon. friend will permit me, I should like to have a definite answer from the minister. I do not want to go to the department when parliament has prorogued and to be told that this is the rule, the law; that the other regulation has to be abided by. We are prepared to accept every reasonable regulation, but what we want is something definite. If my hon. friend thinks he is going to put me aside in that way, he is far astray. I want to see fair play for the children. I have youngsters of my own, and I want to see the children of to-day in my town get what I will demand for my youngsters one or two years hence. I want play grounds for them.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Let me say for the information of my hon. friend, that many of the speeches that have been made in this House this evening have been pointed directly at the preservation of these very grounds, the preservation of the property of the Crown for the purposes of the Crown. I have no particular objection to the hon. gentleman or his friends; I think they would be perfectly reliable and responsible. That is not the suggestion at all. But in the past it has come to my notice that grounds of this character, that ought of necessity to be preserved for the public interest, have been secured by private people who have then proceeded to exploit the public. Therefore, there is only one safe course for the department to pursue, and that is to have the municipality behind any application of this sort. Then one knows that the public interest will be preserved in connection with matters of this kind.

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference to the opinion of the minister, there may be a divergence of opinion. Sometimes in small towns there are members of council who have no children or whose families are grown up, and who have absolutely no sympathy with children on that account. We find that in connection with school boards. The men on them are mature; their families are grown up, and they have no regard for the fellow with a young family growing up. I do not think the minister should impose any condition as regards municipalities stating what should or should not be done. As long as the minister is satisfied that the proper portion necessary for historical purposes is conserved, where it is shown by responsible citizens that they are prepared to see that the balance is set aside for playgrounds, that should be done. Nobody is going to exploit the public in a small place like mine; but municipal councils move slowly; often they are actuated by politics, and the children suffer. There are twenty-eight or twenty-nine acres on this site in the town of Windsor. I do not want any municipality or anybody else to control it; I want to go to the minister and to be able to say to him: Here is a place, old Fort Edward in Windsor; you can fence up a couple of acres on which the old block house and other places stood; but let the children have the balance for toboggan slides to play in the winter. We do not call them toboggan slides in country places. It is only in Ottawa where the ministers of the Crown reside that they are called toboggan slides. We in the country places call them ordinary slides; that is all. Then, in the summer time let us have some place where the children can put their tents. I will guarantee to the minister that there will be no politics in the matter; that only the children will be provided for. If the minister will ask me to-day, I will give him the names of three people in my town, two of whom are opponents, one an active opponent of mine, and others who will manage this place because they have children the same as I have. Men with families which are grown up have no right to deny to a man who has youngsters, or who expects one day to enjoy looking at his youngsters around him, the right of having a playground for his children, nor to tie up the matter with a great deal of red tape. If there is anything of that sort, I am going to oppose this item. No municipal control for me.

Mr. WALLACE: I should like to know how much of this appropriation is for the marking of historic sites, and what historic sites the government propose to mark this year.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MARTELL: Before I conclude, I want an answer. If the children are not entitled to be represented here, I am their representative.

Mr. WALLACE: Can the minister inform the committee as to how far advanced the work is on the cairn which is being erected at Port Dover to mark the wintering site of Fathers Dollier and Galinee?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The contract for the cairn is let at Port Dover at a cost of $600, including a wharf, I believe.

Mr. MARTELL: May I ask the minister what I am to expect? I want for Fort Edward, in the town of Windsor, apart from the site which is absolutely necessary for public purposes, a park to be placed under the direction of a proper committee for the use of the children. I am not going to waive that issue, and I want a direct answer. I am not asking that the whole thing be set aside for a few people to get together, say in the city of Halifax or any other place, to recite fancy papers about what Sir John So-and-So said years and years ago. That is all very fine. If they will see what has been done in the town of Windsor at Fort Edward by allowing physical training in the good free air of Nova Scotia, they will realize that that is a great deal better than having Colonel Edwards or some of the historic commiteee come from Ottawa and do a lot of fancy work. I am going to oppose this appropriation unless I get a definite answer.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am sure that I would almost take the word of the hon. gentleman for the preservation of child life in Windsor. All the hon. gentleman need do is for him and his friends to go to the municipality, and surely the municipal authorities will be public-spirited enough to back up a project of this kind. He is not asking for any money from them; he is not asking for any assistance in a financial way. Surely they will be quite willing to join him in the matter. That is all I ask. We ask for no money; we will give them all the ground except the small quantity required for the purposes of the site, to utilize as they see fit, to make toboggan slides or skating rinks, or ski-ing places, or any mortal thing they wish. But as I pointed out to him before, not that I have any objection to him or his associates, I must be definite that we must have the municipality behind all projects of this kind. Let me give the committee an instance in Saskatchewan. After I came into office in this government, I found, with the best intentions in the world, three gentlemen had got possession of the shore line in a certain locality. The municipality had a portion of it. When the municipality wished to extend, they found that these three gentlemen held privileges there, and we had a great deal of difficulty in getting them to surrender to the municipality. It is only because I am more insistent than the hon. gentleman that child life and the playgrounds be protected, that I am asking that the municipality be behind the project.

Mr. MARTELL: With all due deference to the minister, I beg to say that applications were made in the past, and through too much red tape in his department, for which I do not blame him, because it was prior to his administration, the people could not get their request granted. It seems that a few people in Ottawa, who happen to have some high-falutin ideas of what is right and wrong, are going to be allowed to rule the whole country. Now, what is good in Saskatchewan is not necessarily good in Nova Scotia; for example, my hon. friend would not have many supporters in the latter province. Applications have been made time and again from the province of Nova Scotia to have Fort Edward in the town of Windsor converted into a public playground, and we are told to-day that we must go to the municipality. The minister does not know our conditions. We have several municipalities in my county; at least, there are two municipalities, East Hants and West Hants, together with the corporation of the town of Windsor and the corporation of Hantsport. The minister does not know how we run things there, nor have his officials any idea of our conditions. I say this with all respect to the minister. But we do not wish to have a few people in Ottawa think that they can drive things down our throat. Whether the minister gives it or not, I say that there are twenty-eight or twenty-nine acres in the heart of the town of Windsor that can be converted to the purpose proposed; a fence can be placed around the old block house of the fort so that the children might have a playground. I can name persons in the town who are in favour of this scheme. Mr. H. W. Sangster, an opponent of mine who ran in the election, and my hon. friend Dr. Baxter, from St. John, are interested in it. The latter gentleman has been very much interested in the matter, because he has children, as I have also. His children, however, are grown-up while mine are not; and speaking in behalf of those similarly circumstanced, I say that we should not be held down by rigid rules and regulations, drawn up by people sitting in offices in Ottawa, which shall deprive us of this right to which we are entitled. I do not want to see any vote passed to-night that will provide for the appointment of certain officials in Ottawa who do not know anything about our local conditions, to prevent us from having a proper request granted.

Mr. MILLAR: Will the minister explain the very large increase in this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The increase of $284,480 is made up of a variety of items. On August 1, 1923, the Bankhead Mines plant which has supplied electric current for Banff will close down and the department has to install an electric plant. There is an item of $150,000 for this purpose. All these expenditures, I might explain, are charged, rightly or wrongly, to revenue account. There is no capitalized expenditure; the system is "pay as you go." Sanitary conditions at Canmore, a town in the Banff park, are bad on account of polluted wells. It is proposed to expend $17,000 there to meet the situation. The Canadian National Railway is carrying on an extensive campaign to attract tourist business to Jasper Park and the department is co-operating by proceeding with development work which will make Jasper's attractions accessible. The new road programme provides for an increase of $45,750. There is also an item of $5,000 to build a golf course at Jasper. The commercial value of a tourist naturally is increased by lengthening his stay, and experience has shown that a golf course is very effective in this connection. It is expected that 1,000 buffalo will be slaughtered at Buffalo park next winter. An appropriation of $13,000 is being made to provide suitable buildings for the slaughtering operations and the care of the meat. The range at Buffalo park is now not equal to the demand on it in consequence of the increase in the buffalo. It is proposed to expend $6,000 fencing in additional lands now belonging to the park.

The range at Elk Island has also become too limited for the buffalo, elk and moose herds there. An extension of the park into the Cooking Lake Forest Reserve has been arranged for. This will require 22 miles of fencing and, with fireguards, and so forth, will cost about $40,000.

Waterton Lakes park is visited by very large numbers of campers, chiefly Canadians from Alberta. It is proposed to spend $11,500 on a water supply for the townsite and campsites and to improve conditions at the campsites. There are now so many visitors there that it is feared the water in the lake may at any time become contaminated and unfit for drinking.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: At Banff the Canadian Pacific Railway has a most profitable tourist traffic, largely because of its hotel. The fact has sometimes struck me, when I have visited the place, that the park is maintained in no small degree for the benefit of the company, who have been able to erect this large hotel on the line of the railway. What tax is the Canadian Pacific Railway paying for this great privilege?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The administration of a municipality such as Banff is rather difficult, and we have to co-operate largely with the provincial authoritites. So far there has been no power of taxation; we apply the licensing system to the lots which are practically all on the same basis. We have no power to tax but we charge water rates, light rates and so forth. That is a matter in regard to which we shall endeavour to come to an arrangement with the provincial government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggest that since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is exploring new fields of taxation there is one that lies close at hand there. I do not know what the profits are from that great hotel, but I do know that there is a very heavy tourist traffic there, and an immense amount of advertising of the place is carried on throughout the whole world. We have spent an enormous sum on the park, which is maintained largely for the benefit of that hotel. There are similar hotels in the vicinity and a certain number of people travel by motor car to the park. But on the whole this large corporation is the chief beneficiary, and it seems to me we have a perfect right to see that a certain part of the revenue comes back to the state.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have the Banff park in fairly good condition, and I think that in order to direct traffic along the Canadian National line we should begin to make expenditures in the parks through which our own railways run. I do not know that the rates the hotel charges are unreasonable, but even the rates they charge tourists will pay them very handsome profits on the hotel investment. Of course the park is a great attraction for tourists and brings business to the railway.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If they do not get it directly out of the hotel they get it indirectly out of the railway.

Mr. GARDINER: It was stated that the item included a sum for providing an electric light plant at Banff. Was that work let by tender?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The excavation and the general labouring work has been carried on by day labour under the supervision of our own engineers at the park, but all the plant has been purchased by tender.

Mr. MARTELL: Will the minister kindly answer my question as to whether or not if the people desire to have a park for the children at Fort Edward, that they shall have authority to enclose the ground, apart from the historic portion, on making proper representations to the minister without reference to the officials in his department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I promise my hon. friend that if he will have the mayor of Windsor come to me as the official representative of the town the whole matter will be settled in five minutes.

Mr. MARTELL: You will grant us that right?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince, P.E.I.): The estimates we are passing to-night are largely for the western provinces. Sometimes we in the East wonder a little at the large expenditures on this account, but we understand that the natural resources of the three prairie provinces have not yet been handed over to the provincial authorities, and therefore the Dominion government is under obligation to take care of certain works. However, I hope when the time comes for these natural resources to be turned over to the prairie provinces the eastern provinces will receive something in return, if not by way of compensation for our equity in those natural resources, at least something in lieu of the expenditures made by the federal government from time to time.

We have a lot of pretty little sites in the Maritime provinces where public parks could be laid out to which a large tourist traffic might be attracted, thus benefiting both the province itself and the Canadian National Railway. A large number of people of this beautiful city come down in the summer time to our seaside resorts, and I believe that a little government assistance towards the laying out and beautifying of parks, such as has been done in other places, would greatly increase our tourist traffic. I hope the minister in looking over the different provinces will not pass by the "little island province" down by the sea.

Mr. SHAW: I am rather amazed at the suggestion made by the last speaker. If he will examine the Estimates I think he will find that the West has considerable ground for grievance in so far as expenditures in western Canada are concerned as compared with those in eastern Canada. The expenditure in this particular case of $150,000 on an electric lighting plant for the town of Banff is an absolute necessity.

Mr. MARTELL: Why do they not go to the local government?

Mr. SHAW: The minister has already indicated that by reason of the failure of the government to give the people there municipal powers, they cannot themselves function as a municipality at all; they have not the necessary legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. MARTELL: Why do they not go to the local government?

Mr. SHAW: It is not a question of going to the local government. These lands are reserved by the Dominion government as a national park, and the local government have no jurisdiction. But that is not what I want to speak about for the moment. An electric lighting plant is an absolute necessity owing to the fact that the old plant has been closed down. You cannot leave the people in darkness. According to the last census Banff has a population of something over two thousand, and during the tourist season I am sure it must be increased by several thousands more. An adequate lighting plant must be maintained for the convenience of these people. I regret the minister did not see fit to have the work done by tender. I think it would have been desirable to call for tenders, with the stipulation that the all-the-year-round inhabitants of the town of Banff and the neighbourhood should be given an opportunity to do whatever work they could handle. I think that would have been desirable because in the winter time the people are to a large extent isolated from other sections of the country.

The minister has suggested a very interesting problem—the municipal government of these small towns within the park area. As I said before, this land was reserved some thirty or forty years ago for a national park. The communities within the park area have no authority to organize themselves in the regular way. I think the late administration formulated a policy by which a considerable measure of local government was granted to these people, which is desirable, and the policy has been continued by this government. I think the power of the local authorities should be enlarged to the fullest possible extent. I do not know any method of governing people satisfactorily other than by letting them govern themselves. Certainly they should not be governed from Ottawa in connection wtih their local affairs. It is true that under some arrangement—I do not know how it is worked—these people have a right to tax themselves for school purposes. However, I think that in regard to municipal government they should be given the widest possible latitude in order that they may attend effectively to their own local affairs.

There is one other suggestion I want to make. I agree with the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) that we have altogether too much government from Ottawa. Undoubtedly the tendency during the next few years is going to be towards decentralization in government.

Mr. MARTELL: Hear, hear.

Mr. SHAW: I think the Parks Commissioner should be located out in western Canada where the main area of the national parks is situated. Hon. members may be surprised to know that of the national parks and historic sites in Canada, comprising altogether approximately eight thousand square miles, only one hundred and sixty acres are located in eastern Canada, these being composed largely of historic sites such as that indicated by the hon. member for Hants. In the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia considerably over seven thousand nine hundred square miles of our national parks are situated. I see no reason why the Parks Commissioner whose duty it is to superintend these parks should not be located at a convenient spot—probably the town of Banff—where he can admininster these vast areas with the least possible difficulty, instead of being detained down in the city of Ottawa far from his work and unable to keep in immediate touch with it. For that reason it is desirable that the Parks Commissioner should be located there. With regard to the historic sites, I think there is much in what the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell) says. Perhaps the Quebec Battlefields Commission could take them over, or some special commission might be created in eastern Canada to look after these matters which, though very important, are of comparatively minor importance from the point of view of administration. I therefore suggest to the minister, as I have previously suggested in the House, that the Commisisoner of Parks—and I say now, even in his presence, that he is a very competent official, one who is extremely anxious to work out this park situation to the greatest possible advantage to the people of Canada—should be located in a spot which is central and which is close to his work. There is one other matter that I want to draw to the attention of the committee at this time, namely, the completion this year of what is known as the Banff-Windermere highway. This is an event not only of national but of international importance. The completion of this highway, the construction of which was commenced under the late government through an agreement with the province of British Columbia, completes what is known as the circle tour. One may start by motor, on foot, or by carriage if he likes, from the city of Calgary and go to Banff; proceeding thence through the Rocky mountains by way of Vermilion pass, and down to Windermere, thence south almost to the boundary, returning by way of Crowsnest pass, if he so desires, in the southern part of the province, to Macleod, and then north again to Calgary, a distance, I think, of some 567 miles. That route is not only of interest to the people of Alberta and British Columbia; it gives many people an opportunity to traverse this country and get in touch with the great highways of the United States. One can commence, we will say, at the town of Banff, can proceed practically to the Mexican boundary, over the very best of highways, and can then return by an altogether different course through Colorado canyon and the American parks in the northwestern United States, returning thence to the point of commencement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will he ever come back?

Mr. SHAW: I am sure many will. But it is not only that it gives an opportunity for Canadians to travel over this vast area of Canada and the United States, but, what is of infinitely greater importance, it gives a large number of American tourists an opportunity to traverse the Canadian Rockies by way of the circle tour. There have been numerous inquiries—I have no doubt that the Parks branch have also received them without number—as to the time of the completion of that highway.

Mr. MARTELL: How much will that highway cost and in whose constituency is it situated?

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend will be glad to know that a considerable part of it runs through the constituency of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King); part of it runs through the constituency of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), and a comparatively small portion of it runs through the constituency of West Calgary. But I may tell my hon. friend for his information that perhaps before he was born I was familiar with the situation at Banff. I have watched the development of the national park for over thirty years, and I am tremendously interested in the completion of this project. It is a great work; it has been splendidly carried out, and it is going to attract tourists not by hundreds, not by thousands, but by tens of thousands to the great national recreation ground of Canada. I am sure that the result will not only be beneficial to the Canadian people but it will create in the United States a tremendous interest in Canada which will be followed, I hope, by a very large immigration into various parts at least, of our western country. Our national parks—and I include in that not only the Banff National Park but also Jasper Park and others—constitute one of the greatest heritages of Canadians to-day. Some who are familiar with the facts have pointed out that the Rocky mountain districts constitute ten Switzerlands rolled into one. There is not a member of this House who can visualize the possibilities of these parks within, say, the next fifty years; one hesitates even to suggest those possibilities. There is one thing about a park; man may harness and destroy waterfalls and natural attractions of every character, but when parks are preserved the people have the privilege of enjoying them, and they are not destroyed; they remain there. So I say that the opening of the Banff-Windermere highway on the twentieth, I believe, of this month, is a matter of very great national importance. I regret that the House will be sitting at that time; for there are many who urge that one of the first duties of members of parliament should be to travel from one end of this country to the other. I think it should be done; it is in the national interest that it should be done. It would result in the elimination of much of the sectionalism and provincialism with which members are sometimes charged, and I could not possibly think of a better occasion for hon. members to visit western Canada than at this particular time, when they may traverse at least the small circle tour within the confines of Canada. I simply want to say this, Mr. Chairman, because I think hon. members should get some idea of what has been done, of what these parks are, and of what are their possibilities, not only for the present but, I trust, in the not too far distant future.

10 p.m.

Mr. JELLIFF : Is anything provided for the improvement of this route by its being connected up through the Waterton park region?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I know the ground so well that I appreciate what my hon. friend is interested in. It is a matter primarily for the province, and Mr. Greenfield has given his promise that it will be attended to this year.

Mr. JELLIFF: I want to call the attention of the committee to that portion of this tourist route, because it is one of very great interest to my constituency and will in time, I believe, become of very great interest to the people of Canada generally. A great many tourists go through our part of the country every year, especially from the western states of the union. We have a great many things there that might well claim the tourist's attention. We have Waterton Lakes and its park, in the first place, which is as beautiful a bit of scenery, I think, as can be found anywhere in Canada. Then we have other things which lend peculiar interest to that part of the country. One of the things which attracts tourists to that district is the great Mormon temple that has been built during the last few years at Cardston, near the place where I live. That magnificent building probably attracts more of the attention of tourists than any other building in the West; they flock there by the thousands. At the present time the park—the little park surrounding that building—is being beautified by the planting of trees and shrubs and is becoming, I think, one of the nicest spots in the entire West. Besides that we have to show to the people journeying through that part of the country the results of the irrigation projects which are going on there and to which I referred a little while ago. We want people to go through that district and see what can be done by artificial methods of providing water. We want them to see our splendid fields of alfalfa, of timothy, and of forage of all kinds, our well equipped creameries and fine herds of cattle. We have all these things to interest tourists, and to bring money,—ready money—into the western part of Canada. I hope that the minister in providing for these highways—tourist highways especially,—will see that that south-western corner of Alberta is not neglected, for I feel that it has not been sufficiently advertised in Canada, and that it is a part of the Dominion to which the eastern residents of this country might well direct their attention.

The member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) has called attention to something which particularly interests me, and that is the necessity of the East and the West coming together more frequently, thereby causing the various sections of this country to understand one another's problems. Since I came down here last year I have been taken on three trips in eastern Canada through the generosity of different organizations, boards of trade, harbour commissioners, and other bodies of that kind, and it has opened my eyes to many things of importance which the farmer, especially the western farmer is wont to overlook. Now, in turn we want you people of the East, who are interested in your manufacturing enterprises, interested in a different class of enterprises to what we are in the West to return those visits, to come to the West and glean a thorough understanding of our problems. I believe that by such an interchange of visits we shall gradually knit this country more and more into a complete whole and that as a result we shall work together in greater harmony and with a better understanding

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister tells us that he proposes to slaughter a thousand buffalo and that he is going to put up a plant for the purpose. What is going to be done with the carcases?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Many of the animals that are being slaughtered are animals that were purchased when the herd was first started at Wainwright and consequently are of mature age. We intend to make most of the meat into pemmican. But my hon. friend will readily understand there is only a limited demand for the sale of that product. It can be sold in the northern country, and we have some thought of trying to introduce it into the navy where meats have to be stored—in other words it may, perhaps, take the place of corned beef on shipboard.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a land force now.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Not immediately.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend cannot have reference to the Canadian navy because that is always ashore.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have reference to the British navy. As we get to the period when we will slaughter the younger animals the meat will undoubtedly sell very rapidly. The animals are increasing in that park reserve now at the rate of approximately 2,000 a year so that it is beginning to be a serious problem to provide pasturage for feeding. They are also increasing in the Lamont park, where the first buffalo were placed, and in the north. Although we have not accurate figures we think there are in the neighbourhood of 2,000 head at least in the Hay river district on the Mackenzie. We have set aside a park area there, appointed rangers, and propose to take care of these buffalo because they may prove a very important factor in the future in feeding the Indians if that becomes necessary. They are doing very well. They are much larger than when they are kept in a confined area, and seem to be very healthy. Since the Eskimo has been armed he is beginning to shoot the caribou which are so numerous in the north country. Not only that but he is beginning to shoot the seal which heretofore he has always captured. Indeed, I think it was a mistake to arm him because his food supply may become a problem in the very near future. The Indian in the Northwest Territories is not a very energetic individual, in fact he is a very poor hunter, and we must provide for the possibility of having to take care of the Indian, perhaps even in the near future—that is to conserve a food supply for him. We hope this herd of buffalo will increase very rapidly in that country if given reasonable protection. That we propose to do by having herders riding in the area in which those animals are ranging. I may say that we have met one rather serious difficulty that has induced us, perhaps, to slaughter a little more rapidly than we first intended. In the animals we slaughtered this year we found traces of tuberculosis, some of it not serious, some rather serious, some of it in the tongue. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture could explain the operations of this disease very much better than I can but, as hon. gentlemen know sometimes after its inception it heals over. That is the case in connection with the buffalo. We cannot catch them and inoculate them, we cannot treat them the same as we do cattle, and that is rather a serious feature of the situation. We are hoping, however, that it will not be as serious a proposition as it appeared to be after the slaughtering of 160 or 180 head this year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do you blame the cattalo for the introduction of tuberculosis?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Possibly it developed by reason of what I have told my hon. friend. There were animals in which it appeared that were thought to have been cured. The disease developed at the root of the tongue. I cannot describe the origin and progress of this disease in technical terms, I can only speak of it as a layman. These animals must have been infected several years ago. The experiment carried on with the cattalo cannot be blamed for the infection of the herd. The veterinary seems to think that the herd is getting entirely too numerous.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As the minister needs funds very badly he will be very glad to know that buffalo heads are worth quite a sum of money. I understood there had been a sale at auction some time ago, and that prices as high as $500 had been paid for good buffalo heads. Is that correct?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As much as $1,025.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Instead of putting through any vote this year, the minister should have a balance to hand over to the Finance Minister. Here the minister has 1,000 buffalo to slaughter, and he has sold the heads as high as $1,025.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Only three sold.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the hides and pelts are worth something.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The hides are worth something.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is proposed to be done with them?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We propose to offer them for sale. We propose to advertise very extensively in Great Britain. It was proposed that we should have an exhibit at the carnival in Montreal this winter, but we did not carry it out. The intention is to advertise extensively in the United States, both the hides and robes, in order to secure buyers for them. If the herd continues to increase, and we are slaughtering 2,000 a year, the number will remain about normal. If we had 5,000 head in the Buffalo park, I think it would be all we are entitled to have in that enclosure, to keep them healthy. We would need to sell between 1,500 and 2,000 a year, and possibly the price of robes and heads would go down very rapidly, if those large numbers were put on the market, but they have been very valuable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What has become of the electric plant at Calgary, now going out of existence? Why can the government not operate that? They could easily obtain it. It cannot be worth anything to the owners.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The plant was a steam plant, and rather an expensive operation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The department is putting in an hydraulic plant?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. TOLMIE: What percentage of beef do those animals dress at? What percentage of beef is there in the carcase?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed they averaged 700 pounds.

Mr. TOLMIE: Would this include bulls and cows?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All bulls.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are they troubled with actinomycosis, or lumpy jaw?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, no lumpy jaw.

Mr. TOLMIE: Do you follow the ordinary plan in feeding range cattle, of putting the hay on the ground?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. TOLMIE: Unless the ground is frequently changed, that is one of the causes of range cattle becoming infected with tuberculosis. A high piece of ground is selected on account of its dryness, and they continue to feed hay on the same ground. The ground becoming foul, when there is a thaw the hay gets infected from the moist ground, and the animals become infected through the intestinal tract, and that is one reason why these animals living in the open air are affected to a considerable extent with tuberculosis. What results have been derived from the treatment of infected animals?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not give the hon. member that information. The Department of Agriculture is in charge of that.

Mr. PUTNAM: The discussion on the national parks has taken a somewhat wide range, and possibly I may be permitted to detain the House a moment to state that in Truro, my own town,—and if this is out of order I may say I am not asking for anything—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You are rather out of order, if you do not want anything.

Mr. PUTNAM: The irregularity may last a moment. We have a small park there, and it is the most beautiful inland park east of Stanley park in British Columbia. It is in a wooded ravine and gorge in which there are a never-failing brook and falls of dignified proportion and rare beauty called the Joe Howe Falls, after our great orator of earlier days. He had visited those falls frequently and he had committed to print some of his beautifully descriptive language concerning those falls. This park is almost immediately adjoining the depot of the Canadian National Railway, and if any of my hon. friends happen to be down that way, I would bespeak that they try to devote an hour or two, to meandering through the bewitching walks of that park, and when I meet them again I shall not be afraid to repeat my protestation that this is the most beautiful natural park east of Stanley park in British Columbia. It is maintained under a local board of trustees in conjunction with the local municipal authority. In happier financial years a request was unsuccessfully made to the federal government for some grant for the further support and care of this park. During the present need of national economy I am not meantime repeating the request. But I hope that all who may henceforth see Truro will treat themselves to a stroll in this park: and they will agree that I have not told half the truth.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I can remember very well, when we had the park estimates, meeting some pretty vigorous objections to their size and to their character, and the criticism made that every principle of economy was being sacrificed, the depleted treasury being bled and the country's money being wasted. I am going to ask my hon. friend for a little serious consideration of this vote to-night. I want to point out to him that for the year 1921-22, when accusations of this character were made against us, the vote for these parks amounted to $800,000, while the vote for the parks to-day amounts to $1,250,980; that in a short period those expenses which at one time were described as being so high and extravagant, have been increased under this administration over 50 per cent. I am going to ask the minister to let us have the full details of this vote, showing us where this money is going. The parks are not running away. I do not know that in any year any finance minister of Canada had more reason for concern in connection with extravagant expenditure than my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has this year, when he is budgeting for a direct deficit. Can my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior not have a little consideration for the Finance Minister, who, after all, I suppose, is more deeply interested in this question than any of us. We have only one thing given us to-day in connection with the so-called emergency expense payments that have to be made, and that is that plant which has been referred to. That is the only matter of emergency that I have heard of so far, and that one little matter of emergency amounts to $162,000, if I heard my hon. friend correctly. Now what else is there? What else is there to-day of immediate necessity that was not present in the year 1921-22, when we got along with $800,000? There were reasons why money was spent then that do not obtain to-day. The departmental officers will recollect very well that work was entered upon the year after the war for the express purpose of giving employment when employment was so badly needed—I am not sure it was 1920-21 or 1921-22, I think it was the former year—when Governor General's warrants were issued just for the purpose of doing work which, although it was proper work, could have been postponed, were it not for the question of unemployment. Some of the roads were gone on with at that time, having regard to that issue, and bridges were undertaken. None of those matters is pressing my hon. friend to-day. We hear protestations of economy. I would like the minister to show us exactly how those protestations work out, with an increase of over fifty per cent in a two-year period.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In the year the hon. member mentions, the total expenditure was $966,328, instead of the $800,000 mentioned by him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have the appropriation under my hand.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am giving my hon. friend the expenditure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have the appropriation under my hand, and for the year 1921-1922 it was $800,000. As I said, in addition to that appropriation orders in council were passed for the express purpose of meeting the unemployment situation. That is the only reason why the appropriation was increased, and my hon. friend will find, I think, that my statement is correct—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not disputing it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —that the extra amount over the $800,000 represented commitments which were taken up for the purpose of relieving a very pressing need, having regard to the unemployment situation. Apart from that there is the $800,000 appropriation.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Do I understand my hon. friend to ask for the whole of the items?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes. Perhaps it would save time if we were to let the item stand and go on with the other items.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I would rather give my hon. friend the items and be done with it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would suggest to my hon. friend that the quickest thing to do would be to let us have a little memorandum on that without wasting the time of the committee now. The minister has several other items to go through.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have the memorandum here. I will give my hon. friend the total amount spent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not dealing with the total appropriation. What I want to do is to analyze these payments. I want to see why it is that in a two-year period—that is the thing that I am finding hard to believe —in connection with this work which is a very nice thing to have, although many other things are more essential in the country's business, it is necessary to have an increase of over fifty per cent. I cannot do that without an analysis.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know just what my hon. friend wants. Does he want me to give him the expenditures in detail for the two years or for the one year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: For the three years under consideration. Perhaps we would make better headway in this manner. This matter was drawn to my attention by my leader who knows much more about it than I do, and I know he wants to speak on it anyway. Perhaps time will be saved if this item is allowed to stand.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I would be glad, if there is any information I can get, if the hon. member would give me a statement

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will see the officials afterwards and give them a statement so that there need be no delay.

Mr. COOTE: What is the policy of the government regarding the granting of leases of water-powers in national parks?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There has been only one lease granted, that is the grant to the Calgary Power Company. They are making application for increased power, and I announced before six o'clock that the matter had not been settled. The application has been before us for some considerable time. They asked for increased power in lake Minnewanka, and we have definitely refused that. They subsequently asked for power on the Spray lakes; the matter has been given consideration, and it will be given further consideration on Tuesday evening when officials of the department and one or two of the ministers are to hear representations from the power company in connection with the matter.

Mr. EVANS: Is this the company that has made application for permission to construct a dam somewhere near Banff in the national park?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. COOTE: I understand there is no settled policy yet by the government regarding the general matter of granting water-power leases in national parks. I know many people are very much interested in this question, and I think most of them take the view that water-powers in these parks should not be leased to any parties, although one was granted near Banff some years ago. I was just trying to find out, if possible, what the policy of the government was. I sincerely hope, if the government have no settled policy, they will decide that the water-powers in these parks should not be leased. It seems to me that, in the national parks at any rate, these water-powers should be kept for the people. In fact, I hope in most cases, for a good many years to come, it will not be necessary to interfere with the natural beauty. If these water-powers at least in the national parks, are ever to be harnessed, that certainly should be done under the control of the people. I would like to impress upon the committee that I think the people of the country generally are very strongly in support of such a policy.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In the province of Alberta particularly, most of the heads of streams will be in park property or properties of the Crown, and to say definitely that at no time under no consideration will you grant leases for power purposes, will be, perhaps, going a long distance. I agree thoroughly with my hon. friend that the scenic beauty, particularly within the area of national parks used by tourists and others, should be preserved. I may say to my hon. friend who has just spoken in such high terms of the country from which he comes, the Waterton lake area which is a park area, that the people there are very anxious to utilize that for irrigation purposes, and this will be exactly on a par with the application of the power company. There are many aspects to this question. The United States government, however, who have given this matter very considerable attention, have adopted the principle as far as possible to conserve the natural beauty and to refuse applicants for power sites within the boundaries of their parks.

Mr. COOTE: I was hoping the minister would give us the opinion that the policy of the government in that particular case would follow the policy of the United States government. As regards the case he mentions of the Waterton lakes, I think just as many people are opposed to the using of Waterton lakes as an irrigation reservoir as there are who are in favour of that proposition. I do not want to go into that at all. I hope the minister will see that the water-powers in our parks are preserved.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I understand that this item stands.

Mr. McBRIDE: Why does it have to stand?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is not here and he desires to say something in reference to the item.

Mr. McBRIDE: Is there any reason why he should not be here to say it now?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think he has a very valid reason. He had to take the train to-night to attend the funeral of a friend in the East.

Item stands.

Administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, $55,000.

Mr. MARTELL: Who are the officers that administer this act, and what salaries do they receive?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are: Chief Game Officer for the Maritime provinces, R. W. Tufts; Chief Officer, Ontario and Quebec, H. F. Lewis; Chief Officer, western provinces, J. A. Munro.

Mr. TOLMIE: Can the minister give us a brief outline of the work?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All the provinces, except the Maritime provinces, have amended their laws with respect to migratory birds to conform to the federal law, and the provincial officers are assisting to carry out the act. In the Maritime provinces the work is being done by federal officers, apparently for the reason that the provincial laws in that part of the Dominion do not conform to the Dominion regulations. The game guardians in the other provinces are assisting as preventive officers.

Mr. TOLMIE: Is there an international arrangement with the United States?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are the results satisfactory?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am informed that they are very satisfactory.

Mr. MARTELL: The minister has not supplied all the information I asked for. I requested a list of the migratory birds officers and their salaries. Perhaps the minister has not the information now; he may be able to get it later.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The following are the officers together with their salaries:

Hoyes Lloyd	$3,000
Technical Assistant, new position	1,900
Chief Game Officer, Maritime Provinces, R. W. Tufts	1,680
Chief Game Officer, Ontario and Quebec, H. F. Lewis	1,635
Chief Game Officer, western provinces, J. A. Munro	1,635
5 Game Officers, Maritime provinces, J. L. DeVany, P. G. Rowe, H. A. P. Smith, R. T. Christie, C. B. Day	6,290
Part-time Game Officers	500
Special Guardians, bird sanctuaries	300
Jack Miner	300
Total	$17,240

Mr. MARTELL: Do they get a bonus in addition?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know.

Item agreed to.

Engraving, lithographing, printing, and preparation of maps, plans reports and kindred publications of the Dominion, including salaries and necessary materials for same, etc., $120,700.

Mr. COOTE: What is the reason for this increase of $15,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We have not had a sufficient amount to meet the demand for the maps which are now very widely used. We do not send these maps out indiscriminately; we simply supply them on demand; but they are used very largely throughout Canada, the United States and elsewhere and are of immense advantage in advertising our national resources. I believe that they also play an important part in inducing capital to come to Canada. That is why I am asking for the increase.

Mr. COOTE: Does the grant cover all maps issued by the government, or are there some maps issued by other departments.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It does not include the maps of all the departments, but I think I am safe in saying that 95 per cent of the maps that go out from the government service come from the Interior department.

Mr. COOTE: Are these maps furnished free on application to anyone in Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Ordnance lands—salaries and expenses, $14,505.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a considerable increase here.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All the ordnance lands in the Dominion are being turned over to the Interior department for the purpose of listing and ascertaining their values and getting them into shape, if need be, for sale or lease, or for any other similar purpose. Formerly, the lands were scattered around under half a dozen different departments, but now they will be all under the control of this one department, and naturally there must be a larger appropriation for administrative purposes.

Mr. BAXTER: In my own constituency we have some ordnance lands in connection with the Martello tower on the west side of St. John. Have they been taken in?

Mr. STEWART(Argenteuil): Yes; all government lands are being taken over.

Mr. BAXTER: Is there any caretaker there at the present time?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know.

Mr. BAXTER: I should like to know, but I will not press the question to-night.

Mr. STEVENS: Are the salaries of the clerks in other departments who are looking after the lands that should come under this department being transferred to the Department of Interior?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As nearly as I can gather, very little attention has heretofore been paid to these lands, and even in Ottawa I doubt very much whether any department knew what lands came under it. We have discovered that all over the country. I do not think that there has been any clerical staff of any importance maintained in any of the departments looking after this particular work.

Item agreed to.

To satisfy the claims of the half-breeds of the Mackenzie River District, N.W.T., $42,240.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is a new item.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I think the committee would like to have an explanation of this item.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): These claims arise out of the treaty settlement with the Indians of the north. On former occasions hon. members will recall that half-breeds who happened to be on the reserve were given scrip, not being entitled to treaty money. Under the arrangement the late Mr. Conroy made when in the north country he proposed to settle one hundred and fifty half-breed claims by giving them $240 apiece. I am inclined to think that is a good arrangement, for we have always had complaints regarding the transfer of half-breed scrip. I believe my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Kennedy) is still anxious to probe claims arising out of such transfers. On this occasion Mr. Conroy recommended a settlement in cash.

Mr. KENNEDY (West Edmonton): Just a straight cash grant?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, of $240 per head. Thirty-six claims have been submitted for further investigation to ascertain whether they are entitled to consideration. One hundred and forty claims have been settled, representing a cash payment of $33,600, and thirty-six claims outstanding will require another $8,640, making a total of $42,240.

Mr. KENNEDY (West Edmonton): How is it that parties entitled to payment were not settled with in 1900?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I cannot tell my hon. friend, but these matters always entail some considerable time to make sure the men are entitled to consideration.

Item agreed to.

Seed Grain Advances—amount required to meet uncollected portions of advances of seed grain made in the western provinces by the chartered banks to holders of unpatented Dominion Lands under the guarantee of the Dominion government, also including commission payable to banks for collections, fees to secretary treasurers of municipalities and officers of the provincial Departments of Agriculture, clerical assistance, travelling expenses, etc., $160,000.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: How much is outstanding in the three prairie provinces in reference to this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My record goes back to the inception of the relief in 1876. In that time there has been advanced by the federal government $15,685,325.55, there has been collected $11,483,572.34, and there is outstanding $4,201,753.21. Some $300,000 or $400,000 has been collected since these figures were computed.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Do settlers who break up school lands make application to the minister's department for seed grain advances?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That has been rather a vexed question, and I had to deal with it in the province of Alberta. The provincial authorities found, as far as I know, that they could not advance seed grain in such cases; the federal authorities did not think they were entitled to do so either. There is not very much security on school lands for the advance of seed grain. I am now informed that the federal government never makes these advances to purchasers of school lands.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I have a letter under my hand from the reeve of a municipality in my district in regard to school lands that are sold and brought under cultivation by the purchaser and then allowed to revert to the Crown. Possibly a short extract will explain the point I wish to direct attention to. In this letter dated March 27th last the writer says, in part:

> Quite recently a purchaser of school lands in our municipality has turned these lands back to the Crown and received his clearance papers. He owes the municipality in taxes about $400. He had at least two thousand bushels of wheat on these lands this year, and had the council been notified that the lands were reverting back to the Crown we could have collected by distraint. As well as losing the taxes, we are now confronted with the expense of destroying noxious weeds on these lands without any hope of recovery.

The point this gentleman wishes brought to the attention of the department is that the municipality should be notified when school lands revert to the Crown. Would it not be possible for the Department of the Interior to adopt a certain fixed policy so that when any school lands are about to revert to the Crown they would notify the rural municipality? Then in such a case as this letter refers to the municipality might take action in time to recover the taxes. I know of another case in my locality where the taxes amount to $2,800 on a quarter section which reverted to the Crown. These taxes are lost to the municipality. Would it not be possible to notify the municipal officials prior to the cancellation of any contract for school lands?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There would be no objection if it were possible, but we only know of the cancellation when the surrender is sent in. There may be very rare cases in which we have notification of intention to abandon, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the first notification we have is the notice that the purchaser has decided to abandon. By that time any notification to the municipality would not be of very much value.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Does that mean that the owner of the land would notify the department and then immediately leave?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am afraid he does very frequently. In some cases where they are owners of other land in the municipality of course there is a remedy. But where they leave the municipality we seldom get notification of their intention to abandon until they have moved away.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Can a settler grow 2,000 bushels of wheat, get the proceeds from that, tell the department he is leaving, and then leave the land without making a payment?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Of course we would have the right of ordinary action against him.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: But if he is gone, what then?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is the difficulty. If we proceed to seize his crop there would be a hue and a cry—I am assuming now he was in arrears. The usual procedure is to notify the purchaser when payments of principal or interest are due, and we expect these to be forwarded. If they are not forwarded, it is seldom that we take any drastic action against the purchaser. Naturally, if he decided to relinquish he would not leave very many of his assets around on which we might recover.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Is there any local supervision of the owners of these lands at the crop threshing time?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: It is left entirely to the individual to make the payment to the department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

Mr. FORKE: Has the government been making any advance for seed grain during the last few years? Are they continuing that policy in the West?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Last year we did; not this year.

Mr. FORKE: Have you the items there by provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. In 1922 there were 85 advances from Calgary, amounting to $7,214.40; from Grand Prairie, $122.15; 213 from Lethbridge, $15,995.59; 4 from Peace river, $232.85, making a total of $23,564.99 in Alberta. I assume my hon. friend will be satisfied with the totals for the provinces?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Saskatchewan, $44,616.64; Manitoba, $1,180.25, making a total last year of $69,361.88.

Mr. COOTE: How much was collected last year?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): From seed grain alone we collected last year $255,438.75.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A few minutes ago the minister stated that there were arrearages on seed grain amounting to something over $4,000,000. Can he say how much of that is considered collectible?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not say that.

Mr CHAPLIN: Does the minister say that some of the arrearages have been overdue since 1876?

Mr STEWART (Argenteuil): Oh, no, I cannot say to that. There would be some of it not collectible.

Mr. FORKE: That must have been the Selkirk settlers.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It would be very difficult to tell what the ultimate loss will be; for there is no doubt there will be a loss when everything is straightened out. I think an indication of what we may expect is given by the amount we collected last year, $255,438.75.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is, out of a total amount due of $4,201,000?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That amount has been reduced by $300,000 since the figures were computed.

Mr. COOTE: How much of this $160,000 is being used for payment to banks, and how much is for clerical assistance, travelling expenses, and so on, as mentioned in the item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I could not say that.

Mr. COOTE: What I am trying to get at is this: What percentage of the amount goes to pay fees? In some cases it takes more to pay the fees for inspection and the travelling expenses than the main items themselves involve. I do not want to bother the minister, however; if he has not the figures before him I can get them from his department later.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It would be difficult to segregate the amounts—what is paid to the banks, and what are the travelling expenses of the collectors and their salaries. However, we can furnish the hon. member with the information.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In the figures the minister gave a short time ago in regard to advances and collections, did he include the advances made in 1914 for fodder and relief throughout the western provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Does the four million outstanding include all that is outstanding in reference to that fodder and relief?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, that is the total amount.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I have in mind one municipality that has assumed an indebtedness in this connection of some $70,000 or $75,000, and they are still paying interest on that loan in addition to the regular municipal loan. Is it the intention of the department to relieve the local unit of that financial obligation, or is it intended to let them bear the whole burden?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is an arrangement between the federal and the provincial governments under which they will ultimately share in the loss that may accrue. Outside of that, it is not the intention to do what my hon. friend suggests. I am afraid if that were done the municipalities would cease trying to collect.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not advocating that it should be done immediately, but this particular municipality has been paying 8 per cent interest to the bank on about $70,000 since 1914. I was just wondering how long the local unit was going to be required to shoulder the burden.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Well, it is a burden they themselves assumed. A bond issue was undertaken to relieve the municipality—to relieve them not of ultimate payment, but of the burden of constantly renewing a note at the bank.

11 p.m.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Does that mean that the municipality eventually has to pay back all the amount?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Oh, yes.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In the district to which I refer a great many persons who got loans of from $800 to $1,000 or $1,500 have left the municipality. Is it the intention of the department to compel the local unit to pay the full amount of the loan regardless of that condition?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): As I say, the municipalities took that responsibility on themselves. They were responsible for the loan, and I do not see how either the provincial or the federal government could come to their rescue by assuming a liability which is clearly the liability of the municipality.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: This particular unit to which I refer is under the impression that the provincial and Dominion governments are going to assume the liability, and they are waiting for them to take steps to that end.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I have not heard of any steps of that kind being proposed.

Mr. FORKE: I should just like to say that I went through an experience thirty years ago in connection with the handing out of seed grain and because the government guaranteed the payment of debentures individual farmers got it into their heads that the government were advancing the money and went into debt. Consequently the debt is one belonging to the municipality. The same thing has been happening year after year, I know that from personal experience in the province of Manitoba, so that in that province the municipalities will not make advances in connection with seed grain any more. Before I sit down I should like to ask if all this money was advanced upon loan from the Dominion government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. I think the system has prevailed for the past seven or eight years.

Mr. FORKE: What about the 1876 loan? I cannot make that out; it puzzles me, a little.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not know what was done.

Mr. MILLAR: Are the seed grain transactions we are discussing entirely separate and distinct from the purchases made by the Seed Purchasing Commission?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The latter are under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MILLAR: They are not included in this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I understood from the answer given by the minister to the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) that part of this money being voted is for relief given in the year 1914. If that is so I think the matter would stand close investigation. I think it absolutely wrong that municipalities should be shouldered with the debt incurred in the matter of granting relief. It was the result of that campaign because you can term it nothing else. The dried out areas in the West were supposed to be given relief. It was on what was expected to be the eve of an election and the relief extended far beyond the bounds of the dried out areas; it was granted to people who were in no way in need of relief. Considerable relief was given to people in the municipality in which I live, and since that time we have come through much worse periods of stress. With respect to my own municipality all that an individual had to do was to get on the train, go up to a certain town on the line, make his own representations to the so-called relief officer who knew nothing whatever of the circumstances and come away with relief in the shape of an order on the stores in the district for groceries, flour or fuel. Now, why should a municipality be made to bear the expense of that relief?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are not responsible for it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I understood the minister to say that in reply to a question.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They are not sponsible only for the obligations they assumed themselves, not for any obligations assumed by the government to the homesteaders. Obligations were taken on in 1917, 1918 and 1919 by the municipalities themselves. When the government of the province and the government of the Dominion refused to go on with relief, the municipalities issued relief in their own names under municipal officers. That is the relief I was discussing with my hon. friend from Kindersley.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to provide relief by way of necessary supplies of food, clothing, fuel etc., also fodder for animals to needy settlers of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan by co-operation and agreement with the provincial governments or otherwise, and under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council, $125,000.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell us what was spent of the amount voted last year under this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We spent $232,250 out of what was voted last year.

Mr. McBRIDE: If grants have been made for this purpose to other provinces I should like to know why the minister could not extend any assistance to settlers in the Nicola valley in British Columbia. The minister was out there last year and he learned for himself that the Nicola valley was practically cleaned out owing to depredations by grasshoppers. The minister will remember that we applied for some assistance but were turned down. Now, am I to understand that fodder was supplied to other provinces and not to British Columbia?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The assistance only applied to homesteaders or people on Crown lands in any of the western provinces. I do not suppose my hon. friend's representations would come under that category. Some of the settlers would be on lands owned by the province but in most of the cases the lands would be privately owned and under municipal organization, would they not?

Mr. McBRIDE: There are some under the provinces and some in the railway belt. There are quite a number of homesteaders there.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not recollect an application being turned down where it was warranted. This was paid out generally by the provincial government and the Dominion. I cannot recollect any application coming from the homesteaders in the Nicola valley.

Mr. McBRIDE: The minister surely remembers being out there, and that the provincial government were prepared to stand their part of the expense.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We usually leave the matter to them but, of course, we are prepared to co-operate with them.

Mr. McBRIDE: Yes, but if the Dominion government was spending money in other provinces it certainly should have spent some in the Nicola valley.

Mr. GARDINER: I think my hon. friend from British Columbia does not understand the circumstances. In British Columbia the government own and control the lands in that province.

Mr. STEVENS: Not in the railway belt. The Dominion owns the railway belt.

Mr. GARDINER: Then I do not see any reason why the same treatment should not have been extended to settlers on Crown lands there as was extended in the case of other provinces.

Mr. MILLAR: There may be another reason. It is very seldom justifiable to accord relief where there has only been a loss of one crop. In many districts in Saskatchewan and Alberta the settlers lost four crops in succession. I do not know whether the conditions are the same in the valley to which my hon. friend (Mr. McBride) has referred. If so I do not see why they should not have received the same relief. However, that was the situation in the prairie provinces.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Is it not a fact that part of this relief work had to be done through an arrangement with the provincial governments?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart]

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Two of the provincial governments entered into that arrangement whilst other provincial governments did not.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: We could not very well have refused to enter into an arrangement with the province of British Columbia had they so desired it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is what I say. It was a matter in the first place of the provincial government entering into the arrangement we have now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to understand whether this is being done as charity to the farmers out in Alberta or whether it is a case of granting credit and taking a lien?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is a loan.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Last year the appropriation was $325,000 and the minister has said that $232,250 was spent. This year the appropriation is $125,000. I presume the expenditure will be considerably less. Is that an indication of the general prosperity of Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We cannot form any definite opinion of the requests. Of course, they come from the provincial government. They assume the responsibility of making advances and we become responsible for our share of them. So far as I know the Alberta government have done nothing in that line, or very little, and the government of the province of Saskatchewan have been exceedingly careful. I think the estimate of $125,000 will meet the case.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 193 (from the Senate), for the relief of Lillian Beryl Brayman.—Mr. Ryckman.

Bill No. 194 (from the Senate), for the relief of Roland Bergeron.—Mr. Carruthers.

Bill No. 195 (from the Senate), for the relief of Florence Cohn.—Mr. Church.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

BILL No. 186 WITHDRAWN

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That the Order of the House for the second reading of Bill No. 186, an act to amend The Dairy Industry Act, 1914, be discharged and the said bill withdrawn.

He said: On the occasion when this bill was before the House last week I made a fairly full explanation of the reasons why I ask that this motion be carried, and I do not think it calls for any further explanation at this time.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): This bill has rather a checkered history, which I think should be reviewed. The bill was introduced pursuant to a resolution about a week ago. As introduced it provided merely for certain corrections in the Dairy Industry Act of 1914. The corrections were of a minor character, rather numerous in total, but none of them of far-reaching consequence. The minister, on introducing the resolution and carrying it through committee, told the House that there was nothing in the bill respecting oleomargarine at all. He did so in response to a query from the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie): Nor was there in such bill any reference to oleomargarine. The subsection which dealt with that subject in the original act of 1914 was left intact. That was the form in which the resolution went through, and the form in which the bill was introduced and was passed on by this House for a second reading. If there is any rule of parliament that is obvious, and that at the same time is vital, it is that when parliament passes an act, first, second and third reading, or any stage, the act remains as so passed by parliament, until varied by parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my right hon. friend not mistaken in saying "second reading"?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said "first." The bill received only a first reading.

Mr. FIELDING: The right hon. member said "second reading."

Mr. MEIGHEN: If so, I should have said first. The preceding resolution doubtless received its regular readings. The bill was introduced and read a first time only. Having been read a first time, the bill so read was the bill before the House and that was appointed for second reading, and no other bill. Rule 53 of this House provides that bills when read shall be certified by the Clerk of the House in order that the terms of the bill so read may be officially stated and officially known. The time for second reading arrived; the Order of the Day was called by the government on Thursday last, and instead of moving the second reading, the minister rose and stated as follows:

Owing to certain changes having been made by parliamentary counsel in the drafting of this bill which while not changing the meaning of the measure, make it more different and more difficult to explain, I move that the bill be discharged from the order paper with a view of redrafting and resubmisson to the House.

Whereupon I asked the minister:

Will the minister explain how the bill is more difficult to explain if the meaning is not changed?

I invite the attention of the House to the minister's reply. This is an example of vacuous profundity which I do not think has any parallel in the annals of parliament:

As drafted by parliamentary counsel portions of the former bill were inserted that were not in the bill submitted to me.

Does any hon. gentleman know what that means? In the first place, after a bill passes this House a first reading, parliamentary counsel has nothing to do with it. It is the bill as passed that comes up for second reading. In the next place, what should come up for second reading was all that was in the bill as passed. But the minister says that parliamentary counsel put in the bill something that was in it before and that was not submitted to him. I really do not know what was in the minister's mind and I have sought, though sought in vain, to delve to the bottom of it. He proceeded:

That makes the bill appear quite different from what was contemplated, and the intention of the draftsman and counsel would be more difficult to explain.

Subsequently the minister proceeded to read the bill as printed, for the bill as printed differs wholly from the bill as passed. The bill as printed provided a clause excluding oleomargarine from Canada in the plainest possible terms. I have the bill before me, and it says:

Section 5 of the said act is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

This is the new bill:

5. No person shall—(a) manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream.

The minister's explanation of the meaning of this addition, which he says was inserted by parliamentary counsel after the bill was read a first time, is really equally interesting. The minister told the House that the bill had been so changed that, as it stood now, it appeared to authorize the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That should be "prohibit."

Mr. MEIGHEN: It should have read "prohibit"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think you will find that is corrected in the revised Hansard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will read those words:

> Notwithstanding that, however, on the face of it the bill as now drafted appears as if we were authorizing the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.

The minister now says that he should have said "prohibit."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the revised Hansard my hon. friend will find it reads that way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On the next page I find the same thing repeated, so the minister duplicated his mistake. Perhaps, as is suggested from behind me, that is on the principle that two negatives would make an affirmative.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It does not affect the situation, anyway.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It affects the minister. The minister says at page 3456:

> Yet I find another bill on the order paper apparently authorizing the manufacture of oleomargarine.

He used the word "authorized" for "prohibit" twice, in two separate speeches four or five pages apart. I do not know what was wrong with the minister. I could not understand his explanation then.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the reason why I wanted a new bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He made no explanation. He simply either deliberately or otherwise befuddled the House. Why is he withdrawing this bill? What is the object of withdrawing it? The bill before this House is not the printed bill; the bill before this House is the very bill which the minister introduced. Because something else is printed, that does not make it a bill of this House. I was not aware, when the discussion was on in the first place, of the actual facts. I sought to become aware by listening to the minister, but I made no progress.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what I thought.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have learned the facts since. Certainly the minister thought no one would make progress. No human being would make progress listening to him. He had everything upside down. What I argue is this: The House passed the bill a first reading and this is the bill before the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE-KING: My right hon. friend says that the House passed a bill on the first reading. He says that this is the bill which passed the first reading. I have the bill that passed the first reading with the mark on it. This is not the bill to which my right hon. friend refers.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that. The Prime Minister does not get my point. Somebody might get up a bill purporting to be a bill up for second reading on the order paper; but no bill can be up for second reading that is not passed by this House on the first reading. It is the government's business to get the bill passed in the House. The bill passed the House exactly as it passed it for first reading. Because this is a bill printed on a sheet and called Bill 186, that does not make it Bill 186. Bill 186 is Bill 186 as it passed this House on its first reading.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I read the clause of the bill as it passed this House on the first reading?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend will look at the legislation, he will find there are five clauses. Clause 1 there is no question about. Clause 2 in the bill that passed this House on a first reading begins:

> Section 5 of the said act is amended by adding at the end of paragraph (b) thereof the words "or less than 80 percentum of milk fat"; and by striking out in paragraph (c) thereof, in the second line the words "what is generally known as", and in the third line thereof the words "nor add any milk or cream or butter."

That is all there is in the second clause of the bill which passed the first reading in this House. When the second reading was called there appeared on the order paper the bill which I hold in my hand now, section 2 of which reads:

> Section 5 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
>
> 5. No person shall—
> (a) manufacture, import into Canada, or offer, sell or have in his possession for sale, any oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or other substitute for butter, manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than that of milk or cream.

That section was inserted by the law officers of the House after the first bill had gone to them. It was inserted without the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who knew nothing whatever about it and who, as soon as he learned that the clause had been incorporated in the bill, immediately took exception to it and on that ground asked to have the bill withdrawn.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the Prime Minister has stated, up to his assertion that this clause was inserted without the consent of the Minister of Agriculture, or without his knowledge, is exactly what I said myself. The Prime Minister puts it this way: He says that when the bill came up for second reading another bill appeared on the order paper, and he proceeds to quote a clause referring to oleomargarine as section 2 of that bill which repeals section 5 of the act. What I am arguing is that such a bill did not appear on the order paper; what was on the order paper was a motion that Bill 186 should be read the second time. Because another printed bill appeared—not Bill 186 that passed the House, but another bill with an added clause in it—that did not make it Bill 186. Bill 186 is Bill 186 as passed, and consequently that is the government measure yet, the measure they intended to introduce and to have to go through all the stages in this House. Neither parliamentary counsel nor any other officer of the House, with or without the instructions of the minister, can alter a bill as passed by parliament. It is a strange thing to me that parliamentary counsel should do anything of the kind without the authority of the government, or at least the authority of any department of the government. I cannot see how he can, without any authority whatever, add to a bill a clause a hundred times more important than all the rest of the bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is exactly what I have stated—without the authority of any minister of the Crown.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did he have the authority of any officer of the department?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say as to that. The ministry is responsible for the measures it introduces.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The ministry is responsible for the conduct of its officers, and if any officer of any department or of this House took upon himself to alter the records of the House, then it is the business of the government to bring him to book. I cannot believe that parliamentary counsel would insert a clause of this consequence without any authority at all from the department. It may be that the minister did not directly confer it; but whoever did, if he did it without any authority, it is the duty of the government to get the explanation which that officer can give. And beyond the question of the responsibility of the government for the conduct of its officers and of the officers of the House, there is this further fact which I would impress upon hon. members again: the bill before parliament now is not the altered bill, because a bill cannot be altered by an officer; it can be altered only by parliament. The bill now before us is the original bill the government introduced. Now, why does the minister withdraw a bill which he introduced and which, in every speech that he has made since, he has stated to be all right?

Resolution (Mr. Motherwell) agreed to: bill withdrawn.

OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That the notice of motion in the name of Mr. Carroll, respecting a measure to amend the oleomargarine act, have precedence over all other business, except the introduction of bills, questions, and notices of motion for the production of papers, on Wednesday, the 6th June instant.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that this is the closing scene of the drama; we are now at the stage that the government wished to reach. What is the result of it all? The government is afraid to, or it cannot, bring down a policy with relation to the subject of oleomargarine. One minister smiles in delight over the impotency of an administration of which he is a member. This government is going around like one of the birds of the air—I think it is the cuckoo—that lays its eggs in the nests of other birds knowing that those other birds can take care of them, hatch them and rear the young better than it can itself. This is a cuckoo government. It cannot propound or give birth to any policy on oleomargarine, but it hopes in some way or other to escape governmental responsibility by laying this egg in the nest of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll), trusting that fertility may result. Why cannot the government face the situation? Governments have faced greater difficulties.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What is your policy?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Our policy is on the statute books to-day, where it has been for years. We faced the matter as a government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What is your policy now?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let the government bring down its policy.

Mr. BUREAU: Cuckoo!

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is to be thought of a member of the government sitting in his seat helpless to propound what should be a government measure, calling upon the opposition to furnish the administration with a policy? The government, in a word, is simply endeavouring to escape the responsibility that rests upon it by seeking if possible to get over a difficulty along some by-path, led by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Carroll).

Mr. LAPOINTE: Fine!

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence) (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, (1) that it is expedient to amend section seventeen of the Judges Act, as enacted by chapter thirty-eight of the statutes of 1914, and to provide that the salaries of the judges of the Circuit Court of the district of Montreal shall be as follows:—The senior judge of the said court, $8,000 per annum, and three other judges of the said court each $7,000 per annum; and to provide that the provisions of section ten of chapter fifty-six of the statutes of 1920 shall not apply to judges of the Circuit Court;

(2) That section two of the Act to amend the Judges Act, chapted fifty-nine of the statutes of 1919, relating to the salaries of local judges in Admiralty, be repealed.

He said: His Excellency, the Governor General, having been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution, has given his consent thereto and commends it to the consideration of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): On a previous occasion I promised my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) that I would submit a statement regarding any legislation which the government intends to bring down before the close of the session.

The Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment (Mr. Beland) has already given notice of a bill to amend the Pension Act arising out of the recommendations of the royal commission that has been investigating the subject of pensions.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

There are also to be introduced a bill to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act and a short amending bill to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act arising out of the report of the royal commission on lake grain rates, there will be a bill to amend the Shipping Act, giving the government power by order in council to suspend the coasting laws.

A bill concerning a close season for halibut fishing in Pacific waters.

A bill to amend the Fisheries Act to reduce the fee for salmon cannery licenses.

A bill for further advances to the harbour commissioners of Montreal.

A bill to amend the Biological Board Act.

In connection with the Department of Finance there will be a bill to amend the Income Tax Act and bills respecting the Finance Act and the Audit office respectively.

There will also be a bill respecting the guarantee of railway bonds already authorized.

A bill providing for the three-year branch line construction programme, of which mention has been made by the Minister of Railways and Canals.

A bill to amend the Dry Dock Act of 1910

A bill to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act.

A bill to amend the Dairy and Cold Storage Act.

A bill to amend the Public Archives Act. It is proposed to change the name to the Department of Historical and Public Records.

Possibly there will be other legislation based on the reports of the committees to which have been referred the Bank Act, Redistribution, the Civil Service Act and matters pertaining to agriculture. There will also be Supplementary Estimates.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I would suggest the Prime Minister might go back and get another Speech from the Throne.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To oblige my right hon. friend, I would be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker, if any of these measures were of considerable length. Most of them are brief or of relatively slight importance.

MORNING AND SATURDAY SITTINGS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. leader of the government when we may expect to have morning and Saturday sittings? Many of us in the extreme East, and probably most of those from the extreme West, are anxious to get home.

Mr. JACOBS: What about Sundays?

Mr. MARTELL: Sundays are all very well. We have been waiting five or six weeks to get home. When may we expect morning and Saturday sittings?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will depend on the progress we make with the legislation brought down.

ST. JOHN EMPLOYMENT OFFICE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock) to the report that he proposes to discontinue the Dominion-Provincial employment office at St. John. If this report is correct, will he state to the House the reasons for his proposed action?

Hon. JAMES MURDOCK (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there has never been a Dominion-Provincial employment office at St. John. We have now in the hands of the Premier of New Brunswick a copy of the agreement which has been utilized by the premiers of the other provinces for the creation and maintenance of Dominion-Provincial employment offices, and it is the hope of the Labour department that such agreement will be signed by him and that thus, we will have a Dominion-Provincial employment office in St. John and at such other points in New Brunswick as may be desired.

Mr. MacLAREN: Do I not understand there is or has been an office in Moncton, as well as another in St. John, and a third somewhere else in the province?

Mr. MURDOCK: These have been Dominion-municipal employment offices.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think only partly.

Mr. MURDOCK: The agreement has always been between the municipalities and the federal Labour department.

MOOSE MOUNTAIN FOREST RESERVE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. O. R. GOULD (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the government if they have been advised of the serious state of affairs in the Moose Mountain Forest Reserve due to insect pests, and if they are taking active steps to prevent the threatened destruction of this reserve?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Entomological branch of the Department of Agriculture has the matter under consideration and has sent an official to my hon friend's constituency.

IMPERIAL AND ECONOMIC CONFERENCES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, will there be an opportunity for discussion of the matters that are to be placed upon the agenda for the Imperial and Economic conferences?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government will have occasion to ask for the passing of an estimate to make provision for expenses in connection with these conferences, and at that time I should think there would be ample opportunity to discuss matters pertaining thereto. If not, a time can be specially arranged for the purpose if so desired.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the Prime Minister propose to state to the House the lines of policy he intends to follow or the specific proposals he will himself advance on the occasion of these conferences?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be glad to answer any questions that may be asked. I happen to have here the latest information the government has received with respect to what is anticipated to be taken up at the proceedings of the Imperial Conference, and I might give it to the House. The despatch requests that the information be given in a general form, and therefore I will only outline the main features.

As in 1921, the opening meeting will include statements as to the general position on the main issues of Imperial policy. The preliminary statement may be followed by a report on foreign affairs since 1921, and by a consideration of the present problems and future policy. A discussion as to naval, military and air defences. A review of the naval situation resulting from the Washington Conference and arrangements for future co-operation in all branches of defence. At some stage of the proceedings attention will be given to the principles referred to it from the Imperial Economic Conference regarding Imperial air and wireless communications. There will probably be certain economic questions of special importance. Australia suggests the discussion of the marriage of women with foreigners. That I think, Mr.

Speaker, by way of an outline of what is anticipated for the coming conference, contains about all the information the government has thus far received.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister stated that he would answer any questions asked him. I would like him to regard my question now placed before him as a request that he do lay before the House a statement of the lines of policy he purposes following on behalf of this Dominion at these conferences and of any proposition he intends to advance himself. I do not mean at the present moment; but that a time be fixed for his doing so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend will appreciate that it is only possible to do that in so far as the government is aware of the questions to come up for discussion at the conferences. I may say broadly that certainly with respect to anything of importance involving expenditures our attitude will be that it must be subject to future ratification by this parliament.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It always has been.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The House in Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I desire to invite the attention of the committee, Mr. Speaker, to the first resolution to be found on page ii of Votes and Proceedings of Friday, May 11, providing for a 10 per cent discount in regard to goods coming under the preferential tariff when imported direct through our Canadian ports:

1. Resolved, that the Customs Tariff, 1907, be amended by repealing section five, and substituting therefor the following:

5. That the importer of goods entitled to the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff shall be entitled to a discount of ten per centum on the amount of duty computed under such tariff, when such goods are conveyed without transshipment from a port of a country enjoying the benefits of the Britsh Preferential Tariff into a sea or river port of Canada.

Provided, however, that this discount shall not apply to duties on any of the following articles, viz., wines, malt liquors, spirits, spirituous liquors, liquid medicines and articles containing alcohol, sugar, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.

Provided further that this discount shall not apply in the case in which the duty does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or, in the case of a specific duty or a specific and ad valorem duty combined in which the computed rate does not exceed fifteen per centum ad valorem, or to goods admitted into Canada which have the benefit of reductions provided for in the Canada-West Indies Trade Agreement, 1920.

2. Resolved, that the Customs Tariff, 1907, be further amended by adding after section 8A the following as section 8B and 8C:—

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

8B. The Governor in Council may authorize any Minister of the Crown to enter into negotiations with any authorized representative of the government of the United States with a view to the making of a commercial agreement between the two countries on terms that may be deemed mutually beneficial. Any agreement so made shall be subject to the approval of the parliament of Canada.

8C. If the President of the United States, under authority of the United States Tariff Act of 1922, determines to reduce by fifty per cent the duties imposed by such Act on the following articles, that is to say:

Cattle; wheat; wheat flour; oats, barley, potatoes, onions; turnips; hay; fish as enumerated in paragraphs 717, 718, 719 and 720 of the said Tariff Act of 1922, the Governor in Council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on similar articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

Mr. FIELDING: I desire to change a word or two in paragraph 8C. It reads:

If the President of the United States, under authority of the United States Tariff Act of 1922, determines to reduce by fifty per cent—

And so on. The American Tariff Act gives the President power to reduce by fifty per cent. It might be that he would make a reduction not of the full fifty per cent, and to meet that possibiliy I propose to leave out the words "by fifty per cent". The effect will be that if any reduction is made we shall be prepared to make corresponding reductions.

Mr. STEVENS: Before we come to the latter clause I wish to refer to a matter which relates to the first clause you read, Mr. Chairman. I submitted to the minister a situation which was brought to my attention by the Vancouver Board of Trade and asked him to give it his consideration. The point is that quantities of British goods are shipped via the Suez canal and transshipped at Hong Kong en route to the Pacific ports of Canada. The Canadian Pacific liners, for instance, and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine run their vessels from Vancouver and Victoria to Hong Kong. They rarely, except on special trips, run further, but they do proceed between these points regularly and they pick up merchandise which is brought by British vessels to Hong Kong. In that there is no violation of the spirit of this clause, but if the act is interpreted as at present I think the goods could not be shipped in that way and still obtain the benefit of the new provision. Will the minister say whether or not that point has been considered?

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Stevens) was kind enough to show me a communication he received on the subject, and later I received a similar communication. I have given the matter some consideration, but the point raised is a debatable one and for the present I prefer to reserve a definite answer. If on further reflection it would seem desirable to interpret the clause in that way, I think the Governor in Council would have the power to do so. But we should like to give the matter further attention before making a definite reply.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend not think that the Governor in Council has to be given the power to which he refers?

Mr. FIELDING: I think the Governor in Council has the power now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Under what resolution?

Mr. FIELDING: Not under any resolution here, but under the Tariff Act, which provides as follows:

> The Governor in Council may by order in council extend the benefit of the British preferential tariff to any British country not named in paragraph (1) of section 3, and from and after the publication of such order in council in The Canada Gazette the British preferental tariff shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country, subject to the provisions of this act.

I think that is broad enough to give the government power; I am not sure we might not interpret it in that way without any further action. If it be a matter of debate I am persuaded the Governor in Council could so interpret the act at a later date. However, the point is new, and I would like to hear both sides of it before coming to a conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the first paragraph of the resolution, dealing with the British preferential tariff.

Mr. STEVENS: I appreciate any consideration the government may give to the matter, but I would point out that we are passing the resolution and I am apprehensive that we shall not have a later opportunity of discussing the point that I have raised. I am doubtful whether under the Customs Tariff Act that power is given to the Governor in Council. It gives the government power by order in council to apply similar provisions to other countries, but in this case we are dealing with the British colony port of Hong Kong, which is merely a transshipping point. I know this question is new; that is why I brought it to the minister's attention a few days ago. The minister says he is open to argument. Well, the point I wish to impress upon the committee is that such procedure as I have referred to would be no violation of the principle of this clause. The principle of the clause, as I understand it, is that British goods brought to Canadian ports shall have the advantage of this reduction. But when it comes to our western ports the steamship lines do not travel the whole route without transshipment, and that is the point of the matter. If the minister would include the port of Hong Kong in the resolution—or perhaps it should be Singapore—it would cover the whole question and would give to the Pacific coast the advantage of this provision. If that is not done, I suppose two-thirds of the British goods coming to Canada via the Pacific will not come under this proviso. Let me emphasize the point by one further observation. Some of the old established British steamship lines—the Blue Funnel line, the Elder-Dempster line—run what they call the around-the-world route. Their ships start from Great Britain, call at Hong Kong and then go direct through the Panama canal or to the South American ports; but Canadian goods, British Columbia goods, are transshipped at Hong Kong. I think I have made it clear that no violation of the principle of this clause is involved and it seems to me that if a definite stipulation in this regard is not made, the government should take the power to do what the minister declares he will do if he is convinced of the merits of the case.

Mr. FIELDING: If we have not the power to deal with the matter, before the bill is finally through I will have it further investigated. I think we ought to have the power, and if it is not within our power now I will have an amendment considered at a later stage. Hong Kong is a British colony but it does not enjoy the British preference. If it were a preferential tariff colony, the case might be very simple. However, I do not wish to give judgment; the point is of sufficient importance to justify further consideration, and I would like to reserve decision on it. But if we have not power to deal with it by order in council I can give my hon. friend the assurance that power will be taken before this bill is finally through.

Mr. LOGAN: I rise to congratulate the government upon the adoption of this policy which has been very dear to my heart for a good many years. It is now nineteen years, I think, since I first introduced into this House a resolution embodying the principle of this part of our present tariff, and in 1907 I was able to move a resolution in amendment to the budget resolutions also embodying this policy. At that time, Mr. Chairman, it was accepted by the government as a principle, but the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister, stated that it could not very well be brought into force then because it would give a monopoly of transcontinental trade in British preferential goods to the one line of railway then constructed across this continent; but speaking upon this resolution and in moving an amendment thereto he said that it would be brought into force in December, 1911, when the National Transcontinental railway would be completed across this continent. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, in December, 1911, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had ceased to be Prime Minister, and so from that time until the present nothing has been done in the way of amending the British preferential tariff along this line. Last year I moved in this House a resolution embodying this policy, but advocating it be extended to the whole amount of the British preference. I regret that the present budget does not include my contention of last year in its entirety. I believe that the British preference in its entirety should be confined to goods brought into Canada through Canadian sea and river ports. But at last, Mr. Chairman, after long years, the principle has been adopted in the budget, and therefore it is that I feel personally pleased and very grateful to the government. I believe that even the ten per cent increase of British perference which will be allowed upon goods brought through Canadian sea and river ports will be of great benefit to the ports of the Maritime provinces. This is in line with the policy of building up Canadian trade which we have preached in this country since Confederation; it is in line with the policy of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier of building up our Canadian ports; and I only hope that in another year it will not be ten or twenty per cent, but that we shall finally adopt the policy of confining the British preference in its entirety to goods thus brought into Canada.

Mr. GOOD: It seems to me that the policy of the government in this respect is rather unsound. I do not know why we should not have the advantage of the further reduction in the British preference on goods coming through American ports. I cannot sympathize, although I would like to with the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Logan), who has just spoken. Of course, if he looks at the matter solely from the viewpoint of the inhabitants of some Nova Scotia ports, it is another matter, but looking at it from the viewpoint of the Canadian public I think the policy in this particular respect unsound, and I wonder how far it may result in the shipping of goods by the long haul instead of the short haul. The more direct route into the central part of Canada is, I think, from Portland. I understand that there at least the traffic could be made tribute to what are now the Canadian National lines, whereas if the goods come through Halifax or St. John they will go over the Intercolonial railway by a very long route or over the Canadian Pacific from St. John to Montreal. I have not very much to say further, but I would like to express my dissent from the principle involved.

Mr. FORKE: I would like at this particular point to express my appreciation of any preference that has been given to British imports. I think a great many of our difficulties so far as marketing is concerned would be solved to a great extent had we a larger import trade from Great Britain. Great Britain is our principal market for all our surplus products, and if we could in some way purchase what we have to import from the British Isles we would have return cargoes and perhaps could do a more profitable trade.

4 p.m.

In regard to the ten per cent increase in the British preference, while I appreciate the sentiments of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) in respect to encouraging Canadian ports, it seems to me, looking at it from a western standpoint, that that ten per cent of British preference will be altogether blotted out by the increased transportation costs that will result from importing these goods through the Maritime ports and bringing them over the long haul westward. It is all very well this spirit of patriotism and encouraging our own ports, but when that is done at the expense of some other part of the country, it remains to be seen how much patriotism is in the matter after all. If we can find in the West that by the increased transportation cost over the long haul all the increase in the British preference is lost, then perhaps some excuse may be found for us if we are not very enthusiastic over the idea that is propounded in this scheme. It seems to me that if we are ever going to get anywhere both in taking our products to the market and in buying the stuff that we in this country want, the cheapest and the shortest haul will eventually be the one taken. I do not care for this trying to build things up artificially. It seems to me it will never get us anywhere. We must be prepared to do that which is best for all the people irrespective of what part of the country they happen to live in. In looking over the items I notice in the last clause dealing with cattle, wheat, wheat flour, oats, barley, potatoes, onions, turnips, hay and fish:

—as enumerated in paragraphs 717, 718, 719 and 720 of the said Tariff Act of 1922, the Governor in Council may by order in council make such reductions of duties on similar articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

I do not see any reason for that word "similar". I think the clause ought to read:

make such reductions of duties on articles imported into Canada from the United States as may be deemed reasonable by way of compensation for such reductions on Canadian products imported into the United States.

Because in the articles here enumerated we have really no trade with the United States, and to insert the word "similar" takes away the meaning of the whole passage. I would move, Mr. Chairman, that the word "similar" be deleted from the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. gentleman permit us first to dispose of paragraph (1) dealing with the British preferential rate? That has not been disposed of by the committee.

Mr. ROBB: Just to show that this is not altogether a Maritime province question, I may say that one of the ideas in making the British preference applicable to Canadian ports was the hope that we might bring more ships to Canadian ports which would carry back across the water the products of Canada, and in that way divert to our Canadian ports some of the traffic that is now going to United States ports. Hon. members will surely understand that on the east the ports of Montreal and Quebec are nearer the West than the ports of Portland or New York, and on the west coast the port of Vancouver is nearer to the West. I submit it is more desirable that business should come into those ports than into the ports of Washington territory.

Mr. FORKE: Why the necessity for putting in the paragraph? Why the necessity for making that regulation, if that is the proper route for them to take?

Mr. ROBB: With the hope that we will get vessels to carry away the products of our own country, and that we will get the long hauls for our own railways. My hon. friends must share in paying the losses we have been making upon our national railways, and if we can do anything to divert the long haul to our own railways, instead of shipping our wheat down to New York, if we can have more vessel space available at Canadian ports for that wheat, it seems to me that it will help not only the man on the prairies who is growing the wheat, but it will also help the eastern ports. It is not altogether a Maritime question, it is a question affecting all Canada, in the hope that we may get greater revenues for our national railways.

Mr. FORKE: Will wheat go to Montreal, if it is cheaper to go by some other port?

Mr. ROBB: No; that is why we want to make it cheaper. We want more vessels in Montreal, and that will make it cheaper.

Mr. FORKE: It seems to me the trade will go where it has been going most of the time. If you are going to increase the British preference 10 per cent, to bring goods from British ports, the chances are that increase on the cost will be paid by the people who buy the goods. I cannot see it any other way.

Mr. BUREAU: Why?

Mr. ROBB: If they get it back in reduced freights from Canadian ports, they will be benefited.

Mr. BUREAU: The distance is no greater between Montreal and the West than between Portland and the West. Then you have the lake route, or you can have an all-rail route from Montreal, and St. John and Halifax all through the winter time.

Mr. FORKE: Then why is it necessary to pass legislation to bring it about?

Mr. BUREAU: To induce people to do it. The more ships you get in Canadian ports to carry back wheat to the Old Country, the more competition there is, and the lower the rate will be.

Mr. EVANS: I am glad to see the British preference is reduced. It is to Britain that we shall have to look for many years to come for a market, particularly for our agricultural products, and while agricultural products are our chief exports from this country, the one thing to do, it seems to me, is to look for a return cargo, and the easier we make it, the surer we are of getting a return cargo. At the present time it is getting more unreasonable, as time goes on, to expect that our agricultural exports shall bear the cost of the trip both ways. With reference to the endeavour to compel British imports to come into Canadian ports, all I can say is that the trade of this country, and the trade of all countries of the world, has to go in its natural channels, and no legislation can give any advantage to any Canadian port if it is cheaper to ship through other channels. I wish the government could have seen fit to increase the preference without any of these restrictions.

Mr. FORTIER: Of course I agree with the government in the policy of the British preference, because I think it is really an opportunity for the development of our Canadian ports. But the government saw fit to make exceptions in regard to certain articles which are not affected by the British preference. I observe in this resolution the discount shall not apply to duties on certain articles—wines, malt liquors, spirits and so on. But woollen articles are not included. I have in my hand a petition from some of my constituents concerning woollen goods, and of course they protest against the British preference on British woollen goods coming into Canada, and they state that this preference will be of no benefit to the woollen mills in Canada. They also say the commerce, especially of that section of my constituency in which they reside, will be very much affected by it. This petition expresses the opinion that the farmers in that part of my constituency, joining with the industries interested in the woollen mills, are in sympathy with that part of the petition which refers to Canadian woollen goods. I think this special industry in which the farmers are so interested should receive the special consideration of the government, and I cannot help lamenting that this preference is given to British goods.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) was not altogether correct in his remarks. He was quite right when he stated that he had been a constant and ardent advocate on the question of preference to our own ports, but he was quite wrong when he said nothing had been done towards crystallizing that principle in any way. For in the preferential agreement with the West Indies, in 1913 and again in 1920, there are sections covering this very question. Just confining my remarks for a moment to the question of the port, I want to ask my hon. friend the minister why it is right to extend the principle to 10 per cent—there is 10 per cent reduction in duty—while it is wrong to apply it in connection with the main British preference? It appears to me that the position as to each is exactly the same. The duties are the same, the articles are entirely the same. We have a further reduction made as a matter of principle. If that reduction has to be earned by going through Canadian ports, what is the minister's reason for withholding it from the larger question?

Mr. FIELDING: I am not quite sure that I gather the hon. member's question. We are making certain exceptions because the duties are low, is that the point?

[Mr. Evans.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, the point is this: In connection with the present 10 per cent reduction the government are congratulated by the hon. member for Cumberland upon having crystallized into action a principle, that principle being the carrying of Canadian commerce through Canadian channels. What I am trying to find out is this. Why is it that the principle applies only to this 10 per cent reduction and not to the general preference?

Mr. FIELDING: The idea is to bring a gentle pressure to bear upon importers to ship by way of our own ports. We do not want to go so far as to say that they shall be penalized beyond the 10 per cent reduction for going to other ports. This is a gentle pressure to do the thing which we hope they will do anyway, but we do not want to be so drastic.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are not getting the business. It is not coming.

Mr. FIELDING: This has not been tried yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rather thought it had been tried, and if the minister consults the people who are engaged in the transportation business, he will find that they have done their best to get the trade. I was just wondering whether there was not another reason—that, in the opinion of my hon. friend, this provision would result in this 10 per cent not being taken advantage of. If my hon. friend wants to get the business, I cannot see why he starts with something that can be looked upon only as a pin-prick. Is not the real motive or is the real motive—I do not know which it is—that what is given with the one hand in this 10 per cent reduction is taken back with the other by this "Canadian port" provision?

Mr. FIELDING: That is my hon. friend's unhappy way of putting the matter. I cannot put it more simply than I have. It is a gentle pressure to bring the goods through our own ports. We think this will come. If it does not come, experience will be the best teacher for us.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose we shall have to leave the matter in that way for the moment. The principle is wrong—

Mr. FIELDING: What principle is wrong?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The principle of the "Canadian port" is wrong when applied in connection with the lower duty which might bring results. It is right when we have it dealt with in connection with this 10 per cent reduction. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans) pointed out something which I thought would have weighed a good deal with my hon. friend. I confess that the hon. member for Saskatoon, after having made the argument, did not apply it. He pointed out that at present agriculture is carrying the cost both ways on the ocean trip, because we do not have proper return cargoes. I thought he would have been greatly interested, therefore, in seeing that there were return cargoes to our Canadian ports where we could have proper methods of control in connection with grain movements. That, however, may be something which the minister will consider further in making up his mind whether it is possible to make this something real or not.

What does my hon. friend think as regards the position of the woollen mills? In the first instance, I would ask him whether he found any decrease in the cost of woollen articles during the past year?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think there was any decrease. Of course, I would not like to answer that definitely. The question of the cost did not quite enter into our minds in this matter. If my hon. friend means: Are the woollen mills satisfied with this?—frankly, no, they are not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not mean that. I asked my hon. friend if there had been any difference, since his last budget was brought down, in the cost of woollens to the consumer?

Mr. FIELDING: I would not like to answer that. I am not aware that there has been.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is very wise in not answering—

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —because the figures of the Labour bureau, if I read them aright—and I am willing to accept at once any correction that comes from my hon. friend or his expert, if I read them wrongly—show that there has been an actual increase in the cost of woollen goods to the Canadian consumer.

Mr. ROBB: Has there not been an increase in the cost of the raw material—wool?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend answers one question by asking another.

Mr. FIELDING: He is Irish.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am dealing simply with one thing at a time. There has been an increase in cost, notwithstanding the fact that my hon. friend reduced the duty on woollens last year and increased the preference. Does my hon. friend know—and again I am going to accept his figures—if it is a fact in connection with woollens, having regard to the textiles turned out, that the yardage has decreased and importations have increased by about 52 per cent, I think the figures are?

Mr. FIELDING: There has been an increase; I have not the figures at hand. If the cost of woollens has increased in the meantime, might that not be a reason why an effort should be made to reduce the cost by reducing the duty?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The unfortunate thing is that the cost went up with the reduction in the duty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then we will increase the duty in order to reduce the cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I hear an echo from my hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is the logic of the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We might as well deal with things as they turn out. It might be that the taxes on Canadian business, the added burden of production in this country, are the real reasons why we have so much more importation coupled with a higher price. Will my hon. friend dispute this figure that there has been an increase of over 52 per cent in the importations of woollen textiles.

Mr. FIELDING: There has been some increase. I do not quite see the bearing of this on my hon. friend's question as regards reducing the rates of duty.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend desire to increase that importation at the present time by lowering the duty?

Mr. FIELDING: I would like to increase the importation and to increase the manufacture at the same time, in order that all business might be promoted and encouraged.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend know how that can be done?

Mr. FIELDING: That is a matter of opinion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend know that the textile mills in Canada—and we heard from one of them in Quebec to-day—are working on an average only 30 per cent of their time, so that the net result is that Canadian workmen are working 30 per cent of their time, importations are increased accordingly 52 per cent, and the public are paying a higher price? Does my hon. friend want to aggravate that situation?

Mr. FORKE: Would the hon. member increase the duty and have another mill started?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That question, of course, I do not think my hon. friend is very serious about. It is a splendid thing to have a real sense of Scotch humour, but at present I do not know that my hon. friend is doing much more than making a joke. New mills?—of course not; unless something occurs in this country to improve conditions, we shall not need any mills at all. What is the use of talking about putting up new mills when our own mills are not operating more than 30 per cent of their time?

Mr. FORKE: That is just what I was wondering.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the price of knitted woollens since my hon. friend's last budget? Did they go up or down?

Mr. FIELDING: I will let my hon. friend answer if that affords him satisfaction.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No. I look upon this as a serious question.

Mr. FIELDING: Certainly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have thought my hon. friend had studied Canadian conditions with a view of seeing what ought to be done in connection with his fiscal changes. I would have thought he would know conditions; I think he does know, and I again ask him.

Mr. FIELDING: I assure my hon. friend that we have considered all conditions. I never knew a time when an interest touched by the tariff did not become alarmed. Honestly and sincerely, I have no doubt, the woollen mills to-day are disturbed. I hope and believe that with the improved condition of business which is near at hand, their fears will prove to be mistaken. There is no industry which you touch in the tariff which does not represent to you that it is placed in peril. I quite respect the views of these manufacturers. I have been through a similar experience in days gone by. But I am glad to know that in most cases their anticipations of disaster proved unfounded. I hope it will be so in this case.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has been through a similar experience, he says. He did in the previous case what he will do here if he is in power; when in power before he put the woollen duties down to 23 or 23½ per cent. Everything that was predicted at that time happened; everything that was foretold from the opposition benches took place. He destroyed about half the woollen industry of the country, while he did not help the woollen consumer at all. With what result? He came back to parliament a few years afterwards and admitted that he had gone too low and that instead of helping the country he had hurt it. He therefore asked parliament at that time to restore the woollen duties back to 30 per cent, which rate just kept the woollen industries in existence. They have struggled along, but they have not done more than that. There are a great many of them; there is not just one large concern, but a goodly number have been kept in existence under the duty which the hon. gentleman decided to restore after an experience which alone could teach him. I suspect that he is travelling around the circle again at the expense of the people of the country; he will again learn by experience, but the people will suffer. He will realize his mistake after perhaps two or three years, and at a very great cost not only to the Canadian woollen producers, but to the Canadian consumer as well. What happens is this: The outside goods come in and displace the Canadian product; those goods are able to do this through the lower tariff. And this having happened, the Canadian manufacturers are forced to limit their hours of work, while their overhead goes up and their unit costs of production increase; and with each such increase the outsider gets the benefit because he is competing against a crippled industry. That is what the minister himself discovered twenty years ago. Why should he have to be taught it all over again? The reason is just in order that he may do his share of the log-rolling to get his budget through the House.

Mr. FORKE: I hope the minister will be benefited by the advice he is getting.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He will benefit by "experience."

Mr. FORKE: It seems that this tale of the woollen manufacturers is a pitiful one indeed. I would tell my good friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) that one of the tragedies of Mark Twain's life was that people would not take him seriously. Now, I want the hon. gentleman to take me seriously; I am not joking. One of the troubles in connection with this industry is the inability of the people to purchase. There has never been any over-production; so far as I can see, the difficulty has always been in under-consumption. If the people could buy these goods there would be a market for all the woollen goods produced in Canada as well as for woollen imports. I wonder if my hon. friend knows how many people in this cold climate are obliged to go without proper underclothing in winter because of high prices? I do not think that increasing the tariff will help that condition of affairs in any way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I really thought that my hon. friend was joking when he referred to a new mill at the present time. I want to pay this tribute to him, however, that although he jokes he always does so delightfully. He must be joking, too, when he talks about the present situation. Does he think that he improves the purchasing power of the poor people by making woollen goods dearer, as we had them last year, with the Canadian mills not operating? There is no good purpose to be served by talking generalities; the simple fact is that the rates went up materially. I will ask the minister whether that was not true in connection with woollen knitted goods? My information is that it is absolutely correct; I am informed that the prices went up. Is that correct?

Mr. FIELDING: A great many articles went up in price, but I do not see what that has to do with the question of the duties that are to be levied.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am trying to get at the facts.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member knows what the facts are; there is no need for him to ask me.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this correct or not,—

Mr. FIELDING: You say it is correct, and I have not disputed it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this correct—

Mr. FIELDING: Probably not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —that the importation of knitted goods increased in bulk over one hundred per cent—I think it was 104 per cent?

Mr. FIELDING: It may be so; I have not the figures before me. But of what consequence is it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of what consequence is it? Was it not bad enough before, when the home industries were shut down and men were out of work, without having an increase of 104 per cent in the importation of these goods? What harm is it?—the hon. member wants to know. No harm at all; of course not. It is of no consequence, of course, that Canadian workers go without work and that Canadian consumers are to-day paying higher prices than before. I should have thought that there was great harm in all this; I should have thought that my hon. friend, when he was considering the question of reducing duties, would have thought it advisable at least to reduce the duties as they would affect the output of such companies as could well afford to stand the reduction and still keep going. My hon. friend well knows that since his last budget was brought down some of these mills have had to cease entirely. For example, is it a matter of no concern that the York Knitting Mills should have stopped operations?

Mr. EVANS: Can the ex-Minister of Finance tell us why these mills are shut down?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is generally known that the woollen industry, things being as they are in this country, is worked from the top down rather than from the bottom up, as it should be. The woollen industry has to go to Bradford for its tops, there being no place in Canada where our own raw materials could be put into proper shape for our manufacturers.

Mr. EVANS: I thought that was the cheapest place of all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, let us see what happens at Bradford. As I recollect, before the war Bradford converted woollen tops at an average of a penny half-penny; I am not sure of the figure, but I think it was around that sum; and the price of the tops was something around sixpence. Now, there is a combination in Bradford between the man who knits the tops and the man in the other branch of the business; and when Canadians have to pay an advance in the price of tops from 200 to 300 per cent, it is not difficult to see where the trouble lies. With wages in Canada much higher than they were in England, it is not hard, either, to realize the difficulties that our manufacturers have had to face. We have a mill started now; I do not know whether it has actually started, but at all events there is a mill being built at Trenton to-day. If that mill is allowed to get going and is properly operated, if it is not put out of business by sales taxes and cheque taxes, by this thing and the other thing, we ought to be able to get cheap tops in Canada on the one hand, and a decent price for Canadian woollens, on the other. There is no secret to-day as to why the Canadian woollen industry requires protection; the reason that these concerns are going out of business is simply that the protection has been cut down. They are working thirty per cent of their time, while they have to face an increase of one hundred per cent in imports in knitted goods. If the minister is satisfied with such a state of affairs, I do not know that the committee can do anything by detaining him very much longer. He does not seem to be concerned about these tremendous increases in our imports; he does not seem to be moved by any consideration such as, for example, the fact that these businesses are running thirty per cent of time. And as a corollary, it is obvious that it does not in the least affect him that an industrial exodus from this country is now going on,—we need not wonder why.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am assured that the difference will not bring to us any decrease in the price of material. But there is another matter of interest in this: If we close down our woollen mills we are certainly putting our wool at a disadvantage because we are permitting the importation of material manufactured from the wool of southern countries, and it is a well-known fact that this wool will produce a finer fabric than the wool of northern countries. This is a matter of great importance to our agriculturists.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend has given us some interesting theories of political economy. It is quite fairly established by the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) that if you reduce duties you are increasing prices; that is his argument. We reduced the duties on certain goods in the budget a year ago. and the prices of such goods have increased; that is cause and effect, he says. That is a new doctrine altogether, and I give my hon. friend the benefit of it. Let us not misunderstand him. We reduce the duties and thereupon the prices increase; therefore you should not reduce the duties. I remember some years ago in a debate of that kind when a distinguished statesman was advancing the argument that by increasing duties they had reduced prices, a small boy interrupted "If you had only doubled the duties we would have got the goods for nothing." That is the logical result of my hon. friend's argument. My hon. friend distinctly declares that by reducing duties I am increasing prices. I am sure for the sake of his reputation my hon. friend does not wish to be taken seriously.

Mr. FORKE: He is joking.

Mr. FIELDING: I am suddenly discovering that these tariff changes are of vast concern and importance. I understood from the speeches in this House and elsewhere not long ago that the changes made were insignificant. Hon. gentlemen opposite could hardly find words sufficiently small to indicate the insignificance of the duties; but now we are discovering that these insignificant, trifling duties are destroying the industries of the country. So I am getting some new theories of political economy. I let my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance, have his own statistics, I do not question them. He is advancing the view that large importations of woollen goods are injurious to the country. We have admitted for last year an importation of wearing apparel and knitted goods amounting to $472,000—a large sum. I can imagine my hon. friend picturing to the woollen people of the country the awful evil that came to them by the importation of that one year. But if he will turn back to the year 1921, when the country had the good fortune of having the guidance of my hon. friend as Minister of Finance he will find the importation not $472,000 but $890,000. Now then, what happened? If the woollen industry of the country is bad under this importation of $470,000, what must it have been in 1921 under an importation nearly double?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if my hon. friend is dealing with the latest figures? I said I was prepared for correction, I invited it. I want to try and get at the truth in connection with these matters. We too often have general statements made and not enough facts behind them. I stated what I had been told and I asked my hon. friend for the information.

Mr. FIELDING: I have given it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been told that during the latest period in connection with the manufactured articles of textiles there had been an increase of 52 per cent. Now, what period is my hon. friend referring to?

Mr. FIELDING: I am referring to the year 1921 in comparison with the year 1923—one of the last years of my hon. friend's experience in office in the new year in which I had the pleasure to have something to do with public affairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My friend says that instead of being an increase there was a decrease?

Mr. FIELDING: A little more than one-half of what it was in 1921.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says that there is a decrease?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, in knitted goods.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Take stockings, which are knitted articles, during the last period what does my hon. friend say the figures are?

Mr. FIELDING: I have no doubt my hon. friend does not need this information for his argument. He can go on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh yes, I should like to know we are right.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, may I submit to the hon. member for West York and others also the danger of being led into a fallacy when comparing the prices of woollens now with the prices at some time in the past when the general price level may have shifted in the meantime?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was dealing with quantities, not prices.

Mr. GOOD: But I understood the hon. member to say that the price of woollens had gone up, therefore the British preference was of no value. I simply point out the danger he is being led into by comparing the price now with the price in the past without any reference to the general price level.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Quite right.

Mr. COOTE: There has been such a note of pessimism injected into this discussion by my hon. friends to my right that I think it may be helpful to bring to their attention something which may cause them to regard the woollen industry with at least a little optimism. I have before me a short article taken from the Financial Post of recent date in regard to the stocks of two of the leading textile companies of Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not that refer to the Dominion Textiles?

Mr. COOTE: It refers to the Dominion Textile and Penman's.

An hon. MEMBER: They have nothing to do with wool.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is worth reading, though.

Mr. BUREAU: Penman's are all right, their products are all wool.

Mr. COOTE: Even if they manufacture cotton goods this article is pertinent. I was disappointed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) did not in his budget propose a larger increase in the British preference, particularly on cotton goods. I think if there is one thing the people of this country are entitled to it is cheaper cotton goods, because very often they cannot afford to buy woollen goods, but as things stand we are making it exceedingly difficult for them to get even cotton clothing. This article says, in regard to Penman's and Textile:

> Montreal.—Here are two stocks that have shown rather startling increases in their market values during the past year. Penman's which sold at 99 in 1922, is now at 159 and recently touched the highest point in its history.

That does not sound pessimistic.

> The stock is paying 8 per cent this year, including a bonus of 2 per cent paid in February and taking this as the dividend return the yield to the investor at 159 is about 6.30 per cent, not a very high yield for a common stock. Dominion Textile during 1922 sold as low as 133. To-day's market prices are about 68 and allowing for the "three to one split" early in the year—

I hope hon. gentlemen will take note of that.

> —this is the equivalent of 215 for the old stock. Dominion Textile's dividend rate is 12 per cent for the old stock, $4 a share on the new and the yield is 5.90 per cent, which is very low.
> It is obvious, therefore, that the investor who buys either Dominion Textile or Penman's is looking for something beyond the present income return. There is justification for believing that these additional attractions are in the offing for both securities.
> Penman's may follow the example of Dominion Textile and divide its stock into smaller units. There are disadvantages in having a stock selling at too high a price.

I suppose one of the disadvantages, Mr. Chairman, is this: That it makes it a little bit harder, or it takes a little more nerve, to go to the Finance Minister and ask for further protection for that particular industry.

> Penman's at 157 has a somewhat restricted market that would be broadened if, for instance, a new company were formed that gave each shareholder two or three shares of stock perhaps of no par value for each $100 share he now holds. The number of shares available for trading would be increased and an increase in the dividend might be more likely. Now this scheme of dividing up Penman's stock has not been decided upon; but it is just what was done in the case of Dominion Textile and it is what many investors are looking for and it is because so many investors look for something of this kind that the stock has advanced to its present point.

It seems to me that it is time we got some worth while reduction of the tariff on some particular lines, and these are two of the lines on which a reduction is due to the people of Canada.

In the case of Dominion Textile the high price of the stock is based upon the prosperity prevailing in the textile industry which ensures that the company's earnings will again be very satisfactory. For many years Textile has earned a substantial margin over its dividend requirements. Dividends have been increased from time to time with regularity and now $4 per share is being paid on the new stock, equivalent to 12 per cent on the older shares. The present price of the stock discounts an early increase in the dividend, perhaps to $5 a share, which would mean that at 68 the stock would yield over about 7.30 per cent.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, that this is stock which has recently been split up to the extent of three shares for one.

Penman's is in the business of manufacturing knit goods, chiefly woollens.

I give you the authority of the Financial Post against the word of some hon. gentlemen to my right and also to my left who have insisted that Penman's is not a woollen industry. I will repeat that sentence:

Penman's is in the business of manufacturing knit goods, chiefly woollens. It has had a somewhat remarkable earnings record. During the five years ending in 1920 it earned over and above the dividends paid, the full value of the common stock. This went back into the business.

Remember that this is an industry which is chiefly concerned with woollens.

Since 1920 earnings have not been so great, but increased in 1922 over the previous year.

Apparently the little reduction that the Finance Minister made last year did have the effect of increasing the earning power of this woollen industry.

The working capital position is excellent and the company has liquid investments greater than the amount of its bonds outstanding.

Dominion Textile has almost as excellent a record earning during the past five years a total of 116 per cent, out of which dividends, totalling only 45 per cent, were paid. This meant that 71 per cent went back into the business. There has been a steady sure growth to Textile's earnings.

When two stocks are selling at the highest levels in their history and have discounted, marketwise, the possible developments, is that the time for the investor to purchase them? A lot depends upon the general business and investment outlook. Be it said though that both Penman's and Dominion Textile are common stocks that offer a wealth of real assets that have demonstrated an ability to earn a substantial margin above dividends paid. They are both capably managed, the president of each company being the same able executive, Sir Charles Gordon. They are operating in a field that has not been overdone and that is practically controlled by Canadian mills with little competition from foreign firms, to some extent due to the tariff.

That is quite an admission, surely, for the Financial Post.

Therefore granting the solidity of the stocks themselves the question of purchase price remains the problem.

I do not want to weary the committee by reading the rest of it, because it is not particularly interesting so far as the main point is concerned. But before I leave this question there is one other thing I want to point out, namely, the profits that have been made not only by cotton mills, which I think every hon. gentlemen will admit were excessive, but also by woollen mills. It was admitted before a committee of this House, I think in 1919, that a certain woollen industry in the province of Quebec had earned 72 per cent on the capital invested. I would like to read some of the evidence taken before the Drayton tariff commission in 1919, but I do not want to weary the committee by reading too much. I may mention, however, that down in New Brunswick evidence was given before that commission by the Hon. Senator McSweeney, who had asked permission to relate some experiences he had had in connection with the cotton combine, if I may be allowed to use that word. According to him the experience had been very disastrous for some of the shareholders down there. I shall read only the last part of his statement. He said:

The last report of Dominion Textile is a very good one showing net earnings, on a business of $23,000,000 of about $3,500,000. They are now paying ten per cent. But the worst feature of the whole thing in connection with Dominion Textiles was the $5,000,000 of stock given by these gentlemen to themselves. The directors in Dominon Cotton were directors in Dominion Textile, A. F. Gault, Sir Rodolphe Forget, Sir Herbert Holt, and the others, and this stock pays them, according to the investigation held in Ottawa, I think before Pringle, 312 per cent annually. In other words, stock that cost them $10—

Mr. MARLER: Perhaps the hon. member would give us more details. He is offering a bald statement about 312 per cent per annum, about $5,000,000 worth of stock, and so on. It seems to me that he is placing on Hansard statements that are not quite accurate. I am not definitely contradicting him, but what he has stated does not seem to be the case. I take exception to these large figures being placed on Hansard without some reasonable explanation of them.

Mr. COOTE: I was just quoting from the evidence given by the Hon. Senator McSweeney before this commission, that is all.

Mr. MARLER: We are not bound, I suppose, to accept what Senator McSweeney says as absolutely right, any more than we are bound to accept the statement of my hon. friend himself as absolutely right. Why should we take it for granted—why should the whole country take it for granted—that the statement now being placed on our journals by the hon. gentleman are correct? I repeat that I take distinct exception to that proceeding.

Mr. COOTE: Might I be permitted to quote from the Sessional Papers, volume 55, 1919, page 362. Mr. Daniels was being examined before the House of Commons Cost of Living Committee and was asked this question by Mr. Pringle:

Q. For 1918 you earned about 291 per cent?—A. Yes.

I will admit there is a slight discrepancy between the evidence given by Mr. Daniels and the statement made by the Hon. Senator McSweeney, but it is not very great. The Hon. Senator McSweeney says 312 per cent, and the witness says 291 per cent.

Mr. MARLER: Who says 291 per cent?

Mr. COOTE: Mr. F. G. Daniels in his evidence before the Cost of Living Committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. MARLER: He says, 291 per cent on what?

Mr. COOTE: It says:

Q. For 1918 you earned about 291 per cent?—A. Yes.

I could read two or three pages of the evidence to make it more clear, if my hon. friend desires.

Mr. MARLER: I would not like to impose as much as that upon the hon. member.

Mr. COOTE: I would be very glad to do it if the committee would like to have it.

Mr. FORKE: This is old stuff anyway. We all know it is the fact. It has never been refuted.

Mr. COOTE: Now, Mr. Chairman, I will complete the reading of this article:

In other words stock that cost him $10 a share is now in this depressed market worth $1,620 a share. Can you find any gold mine in the world doing better than that?

Mr. MARLER: Stock at $10 a share worth $260 a share?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Worth $1,600.

Mr MARLER: Is my hon. friend (Mr. Coote) aware what condition the Dominion Cotton Mills Company was in when it was originally taken over around 1892 by the Dominion Textile Company?

Mr. EVANS: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. MARLER: A great deal. I will tell my hon. friend in a moment what it has to do with it. The Dominion Cotton Mills at that time was not in a good condition, and it was only by excellent and careful management that the Dominion Textile Company is in the position it is in to-day—no other reason at all.

Mr. COOTE: I would remind my hon. friend that the Financial Post suggests that part of this prosperity may be due to the tariff. I think possibly it is only fair to Senator McSweeney in view of what the hon. member says, that I read his statement.

Mr. MARLER: I think that would hardly be fair. The hon. member has dealt with that.

Mr. LOGAN: It is the late Senator McSweeney. He is dead.

Mr. COOTE: I am glad to be corrected. I was not aware that he was dead. It seemed to me when I read this that it was of some interest. It has never been brought to the attention of the people of this country so far as I was aware, and I thought that the late Senator had made out a case of very harsh treatment by some of the officials of the Dominion Textile Company which our finance ministers past and present seem to be so anxious to protect. If we are going to protect any class of people in this country at the expense of the rest, we should know a little bit about their record and whether they are the right class of people to protect, whether they will use that protection in a proper manner. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude this statement of the late Senator McSweeney. It is not very long and will probably clear up the point my hon. friend (Mr. Marler) has brought to the attention of the committee in regard to the position of some of these mills. This is the statement he made when he appeared before the Drayton tariff commission:

Gentlemen, I did not intend to have anything to say on the cotton question or any other, but as you have nothing to do in particular and I am anxious to give you something to listen to I shall just say a few words. What I have to say will not be very long. My first acquaintance with A. F. Gault, who was at the head of the Dominion Cotton Company, was about 1885 when he was here in Moncton. He bought up the mill here. The stockholders got 17 cents on the dollar. I was one of them. I think the Dominion Cotton Company took in about ten mills at that time, three of which were down in the Maritime provinces. They showed for ten years net earnings of $1,750,000. They had a bonded indebtedness of $1,500,000 which balanced the earnings and left a decent surplus of $250,000, or thereabouts. They then rented their property to the Dominion Textile Company. The Dominion Cotton Company owned the Hochelaga, and other, mills in Montreal and they leased their property to the Dominion Textile Company at a rental of five per cent. The minority stockholders, of whom I was one, unfortunately, objected to that and we fought them through the courts in the province of Quebec. We beat them in three courts there. They took it to the Privy Council direct. We beat them the first time and we lost the second time. The costs amounted to about $10,000. Then they found that they had not such a good thing as they thought and they came to us or we came to them—we met any way—and they agreed to reinstate us in our stock and to pay the costs, which amounted to $10,000. A number of us accepted that offer and we got our stock back. We had lost all the dividends for five or six years. The small body that remained out did not accept that offer but they gave them two shares for one of stock and that made everything clear. They had a mill here and they could not give title to that mill unless they had everything clear. They had a mill in Windsor which is now running as an underwear factory. They had another plant in Halifax. So, you see, in so far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, they closed up the mill here and did the same thing in Windsor. They did not care two straws for us. As Charlie Gordon told me, they were anxious to concentrate their business in Montreal and they have done so.

Then follows the part I read before. He concludes:

Before I get through I will touch on my friend, Patton, another philanthropic gentleman who made a profit of 72 per cent, all told. He was not building his mill for the glory of God, but he was building it for the benefit of the stockholders. Our friends of the cotton mills, I think, enjoy a 25 per cent protection. They had 30 per cent but I think this present government reduced it 5 per cent.

I am afraid he made a mistake there unless he is referring to the preferential tariff. However, it is immaterial. He goes on:

When you gentlemen get back in Ottawa and sit down in your Council Chamber to make the tariff, if you give these gentlemen about 20 per cent of the cost of bringing their goods—buying them, freight carriage, insurance and various other things amounting to from 7½ to 10 per cent—you will give them ample—both the cotton and the woollen people. I do not think I will say very much more; there is not very much more to be said. I did not intend to say anything; I just came in accidentally and I did not bring any papers which might enable me to give you more details. I am very much obliged for your kind attention, and I will now take my seat.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to urge upon the minister the recommendation which the late Hon. Senator McSweeney made in regard to the protection which these industries might both enjoy. He suggests 10 per cent. He thinks that would be ample. I must say that it does appear to the ordinary man and woman in this country that if our cotton mills and woollen mills cannot exist with 10 per cent protection, surely we are protecting inefficiency. As a final word to the Minister of Finance, I am very sorry, and I think the people in this country generally speaking are very sorry, that he did not carry out the tariff plank in the Liberal party's platform, which said that the British preference be increased 50 per cent of the general tariff. I will admit that in many cases the British preference tariff is now very close to the 50 per cent line. I think on many lines of goods it might safely be reduced below that. I believe the late Senator McSweeney stated it very well when he said 10 per cent was ample on, I think, almost everything in the British preference. There may be some things in which they should not reduce the preference to 50 per cent of the general tariff; that is, items on which we are maintaining a revenue tariff, but on all others it seems to me the Finance Minister might have safely carried out this one plank in their platform, and I think it would have met with general approval from the people in this country, if he had carried out that part, at least, of the platform.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. MARLER: If the business people of Canada, those engaged in the various manufacturing industries, found they could not survive without a reduction of the British preference, and the mills had to close up as a consequence, would the hon. member approve of that? In other words, would he prefer to have the tariff reduced and the mills closed?

Mr. COOTE: I submit to this House, and to the hon. member who has asked the question, that I do not think it is a fair question at all.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. COOTE: Because I do not think any man should admit that the cotton industry or the woollen industry could not survive with a 10 per cent tariff. Let me ask my hon. friend this question: If 75 per cent of the people engaged in the agricultural industry, or of the people engaged in the industry of growing wheat, were to come to this House and say "We cannot produce wheat at a profit at the present prices which we receive for our wheat and at the present prices which we must pay for everything we buy which goes into that wheat," would my hon. friend opposite be willing to reduce the tariff to secure a lower cost of living? Apply that principle to the woollen and cotton industry. Would the hon. member agree that those who are engaged in growing wheat should have cheaper cottons and cheaper woollens, so that the prices they are getting for their wheat would allow them to purchase these things? I think that is a fairer question than the one the hon. member propounded to me.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) is very much mistaken in his first observation that increasing the British preference would give us cheaper cotton goods. I did not wish to speak on cotton goods, but I would like to make an observation on that item. During last year the importation of knitted cotton goods from the United Kingdom was very small. We imported only 20,319 pairs of cotton socks and stockings from the United Kingdom, but we imported 544,538 pairs of cotton socks and stockings from the United States; so that the British preference plays very little part in the matter of importation of cotton hosiery.

Mr. COOTE: If the present tariff charge against hosiery from Great Britain were cut in two would we bring any more hose from Great Britain, or would the Canadian manufacturer simply meet the price and go on manufacturing?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am speaking of the importation of cotton hosiery. It would not make any difference in the cost of cotton hosiery if the British preference were increased, because the cotton hosiery does not come from Great Britain, but from the United States. But I rose to point out that in the knitting mill business in the province of Ontario there are employed a very fine class of Canadian citizens, under conditions quite different from the conditions prevailing in the Old Land. The mills in the province of Ontario are conducted under regulations which are advantageous to Canadian workmen and conditions that do not apply in the Old Land, and the Canadian manufacturers of knitted goods in the small towns of Ontario and in my own constituency are paying fifty per cent more wages than the current rate of wages in Scotland and England. We are working under a minimum wage law; we are working under the Workmen's Compensation Act and the Factory Inspection Act, all of which we are strongly in favour of, in order that the work men and working women may be placed under the best working conditions. There are hon. members in this House who came from Great Britain, and who came to this country to find better conditions, and we have them here. The only protection, or the only consideration, that the knitting mills of the province are asking is a tariff which will offset the additional labour costs they are bearing in Ontario. Beyond that they ask for nothing. I will point out to my hon. friends that $100 worth of merchandise represents about $40 worth of labour, or $20 need of protection. That is the actual protection that is needed for labour. Then again there is the duty on machinery and the sales tax on wool which is being removed by the Finance Minister's budget. The knitting mills in Ontario require just that much protection for that purpose, and if hon. members are fair with regard to tariff matters, and with regard to British preference, they must take into consideration this one vital point—do you want your Ontario workmen, or your workman for that matter from any other part of the Dominion, to maintain the conditions under which he is working or do you want him to meet the competitive wages of Great Britain?

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): If the Ontario workmen are enjoying better conditions in their work than the British workmen, would they not to that extent be more efficient?

Mr. MALCOLM: I can answer the question this way, that the efficiency of the workmen in a hosiery mill is not so much a factor as my hon. friend might suggest. It is a business, largely of automatic machinery; the machinery mostly all is imported. The worker's efficiency is regulated entirely by the machinery, and the conditions are identical in Scotland and in Canada, because our knitting mills have installed during the past few years the very best type of Scottish and English equipment. The machinery is exactly the same and the speed of operators, I am told by those who have studied the question, varies but little between the British and Canadian mills. The knitted goods men in this country point out that under last year's tariff there was a large increase in the importation of knitted goods from the Old Land, but I do not think they objected seriously to that. But this year they point out that the importation of hosiery from Great Britain will not arrive in this country at any lower price than last year under the tariff existing last year. One hundred dollars' value in hosiery last year paid $25 duty and $4.69 sales tax, or a total value of $129.69. Under the new tariff it pays for $100 value, $22.50 duty and $7.35 sales tax, a total value of $129.85, or 16 cents additional on $100 value. The domestic manufacturer under the old tariff would receive $100 plus the sales tax $2.25, making a total cost of $102.25 to the retailer. Under this new tariff his value was $100, but he must take credit for the saving of 3¾ per cent on his wool value of $50, making a saving of $1.88. Then he adds a sales tax of 6 per cent, which is $5.89. His total cost is $104.01, or an increase in cost of $1.76. In other words we are not delivering the British article at as low a price as we did last year. In fact, the price is 16 cents more and we are taking out of the Canadian knit goods manufacturer $1.76 or 1¾ per cent. Hon. gentlemen might think that was a very small thing, but on behalf of the small hosiery mills, I should like to say that 10 cents a dozen pairs is considered a good profit for the mill. Ten cents a dozen pairs will give a mill a reasonably large earning. When there is no actual saving to the public by the new tariff condition, there is a good deal to be said in favour of these mills when a load of $1.76 per one hundred dollars is put upon them because in the total aggregate that load amounts practically to the earnings of their mills.

My hon. friend made some statements about earnings of cotton or textile mills. I am not inclined to doubt his statements but on behalf of the smaller industries in Ontario which are vital to the life of many of the small towns, industries which are financed without any watered stock, with the invested capital of men who have made all their own money and who have made it in the industries, I submit to my hon. friends this one consideration, that in applying a reduction of 50 per cent in the British preference, they would succeed in closing or making it impossible to work many of the finest and most hopeful small industries in Ontario, and that they would not give them the protection to which they are entitled owing to the different wages paid and the different standards of living asked for by provincial regulations. This is a point that my hon. friends must consider in dealing with these tariff matters and it is the only viewpoint I take with regard to the question. We talk a good deal about our living conditions in Canada and we hope to attract workmen and other men besides, by these better conditions which we offer them. That is correct. But if on the one hand we press for a certain condition and a certain rate of wages, and on the other we lower the rate of duty so that the payment of that rate of wages will not be permitted, we are leaving our workmen and our manufacturers between the upper and the nether millstones, so that they cannot survive.

Mr. COOTE: If I might use the words of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Marler) my hon. friend, if I understood him correctly, made the bald statement that wages were 50 per cent higher in our Canadian mills than they were in Great Britain. Would he give this committee some statistics to show that that is the case?

Mr. MALCOLM: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) the exact figures; but I can assure him that I will secure them for him and that the statement is quite correct that in the knitting industry in Ontario wages are 50 per cent higher than in the knitting industry in Scotland and England. I think the piece work wage for men in Scotland is about $11 or $12 a week and the day wage is slightly less. I would rather not quote, because I am speaking from memory and I am not quite sure as to the figures. I shall however be glad to procure the figures for my hon. friend this afternoon. I have the figures in my office.

Mr. COOTE: Would my hon. friend be good enough to give the committee also some idea of the difference in the cost of living in England and Canada?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have no doubt the cost of living has a direct bearing on the cost of labour. That does not enter into this argument at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rise in the first instance to congratulate the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm). He has given us a first rate exposition of what ought to be the underlying principles of the budget. He has shown us that the protective feature ought to be and must be considered, that is of course if we are going to continue to function. He has shown us that he has no use whatever for that old bugaboo of a "tariff for revenue" which really never bugabooed at all. He has shown us that we ought to have consideration on the one hand of the cost to the consumer and on the other to the returns to the workmen. He has gone further; he has shown us very clearly what the effect of a muddled view of these things is. He has shown us for example that on the one hand there is less protection to the Canadian workmen, and on the other hand there is greater cost to the Canadian consumer. I was going to say—and I would not have said it nearly as well—something along the same lines in answer to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) when he said, "This is a new doctrine and a new theory—advance tariffs and you get lower rates; cut them and you have higher rates." The whole thing runs together; there is only one issue here—the fiscal policy as a whole. At one time, for example, practically all tin plate utilized in the United States—my hon. friend knows this just as well if not better than I do—was imported, all the costs of transportation paid, all the costs of handling at the ports paid, and then a far higher rate was paid than you can buy tin-plate for to-day in the States. It is also true that by a high tariff costs were temporarily increased largely; but it is also true that it was not so very many years before those people were exporting that tin-plate, and that high tariff has very greatly reduced the cost in that country. It is also, of course, true that if you have enough people who are engaged in active competition one with another, you are getting your prices pretty well regulated in your local market. It is also true that those prices can be proper prices only if you have something like a proper volume of business. If you have not a proper volume of business and are working only 30 per cent of your time, your overhead must go up, just as happened last year with that reduction in the duty. It is also true that the English sellers, selling as they do in this market, take precious good care that the Canadian consumer does not get all the benefit of the Canadian preference, but the benefit of the preference goes to the man who is in the position to collect it, as he is just as soon as local production is down to such a point that local costs have to go up. There is no mystery about the thing. The Minister of Finance is extremely agile in taking one or two disconnected instances and having a "hurrah" on them; he is a perfect adept at that. He is an absolute wizard at the art of misrepresenting an argument; he is a wonderful politician. But just see how the hon. member for North Bruce answers him. Why, he says, under this budget—and he gives the exact figures—while you are reducing protection and, therefore, taking away the work from your own people, you are adding to the cost. It is all very well to have a trifling reduction. and I still say that the reductions in the mass were trifling. But if there is anything in this idea about cutting and slashing tariffs, the object should be to reduce prices. A little niggling reduction here and another one there is not going to do very much except to disturb Canadian industrial conditions; it is not going to reflect itself to any extent in reduced prices to the Canadian consumer. At any rate, that is what we have found. When my hon. friend comes down here and makes a tariff reduction on the one hand and then plusses it with a sales tax much greater on the other hand, what else is to be expected? Everyone knows that every word said by the hon. member (Mr. Malcolm) is absolutely correct; the figures are there and they cannot be disputed. An hon. gentleman opposite shakes his head. If he can discover how a reduction in the cost of living is brought about by a 2½ per cent or 3 per cent, or if you like, a 4 per cent reduction of duty on the one hand, and a sales tax of 6 per cent on the other hand, I cannot see it. The minister is an adept at putting the other fellow in the wrong.

Mr. FIELDING: When he is wrong.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He does it beautifully, and the other fellow need not be wrong at all. Now, I am going to go back to what I said before.

Mr. BUREAU: "Far away from harm."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend from Three Rivers says, "Back to the farm."

Mr. BUREAU: "Far away from harm."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I think that if we did go there we should get more facts than we have got this afternoon. I will take the figures dealing exactly with the matters I submitted to my hon. friend. I find that my memory was somewhat below the actual truth in the matter of yardage. Speaking about the quantity of woollen yardage, I stated the increase and my hon. friend told me that it was absolutely untrue.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not say that; that is very harsh language.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am giving the effect of what the hon. gentleman said. He is never harsh, but I believe in calling a spade a spade. He said that the figure I gave proved that I was absolutely wrong; perhaps I will put it that way. I will give him the figures taken from the monthly reports of the trade of Canada. These figures are prepared from the records of the monthly reports of the trade of Canada for ten months ending January 23, 1923, and a proportional allowance is made to give the figures up to the end of March, the comparison being as at the end of March 1922 and 1923. If I remember rightly, I think I said that the woollen yardage imported into Canada had increased some 52 per cent. For the year ending March, 1922, there were 12,208,523 yards of woollen yardage imported into Canada, and for the year ending March, 1923, 18,793,613 yards, or an approximate increase of 54 per cent. The next matter I took up was hosiery and socks. Speaking from recollection I stated that the increase in quantity in this direction was 104 per cent; I will now give the exact number of dozens of pairs imported. For the year ending March, 1922, there were 257,089 dozen pairs imported into Canada; for the year ending March, 1923, there were 610,372 dozen pairs imported, or an approximate increase, not of 104 per cent, as I thought, but 138 per cent. These are the figures I have, and as I have said, the source from which they come is to be found in the monthly reports of the trade of Canada. I believe they are absolutely correct, and the very shutting down of the mills would show that they are.

Mr. BALDWIN: The hon. member (Sir Henry Drayton) has made many criticisms regarding the closing down of mills and the suspension of operations, and the bearing of these conditions on the prices of woollen goods throughout Canada. I believe that neither the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) nor the woollen industry is to blame for this serious state of affairs. The fact is that within the past few months the great woollen industries of New England have invaded Canada and have purchased every pound of wool that has been available. They bought not only what was in storage throughout the country but what was on the backs of the sheep, for which they contracted. No doubt the mills have had to suspend operations, and we can easily explain the situation by taking as an analogy the wheat industry, for instance. When wheat is high, flour and other wheat products must necessarily be high at the same time. And the same thing holds true in regard to rubber. If a great rubber enterprise is strong enough to go abroad and contract for raw rubber at very low prices, the rubber industry generally must be affected. But not all the rubber concerns can do this and our woollen mills in Canada could not have anticipated such enterprise on the part of industries that had been closed down in the United States for years; they could not have anticipated that these industries would be in a position to come into Canada and forestall them. So that I do not see that anyone can blame the Minister of Finance. My hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) has repeatedly asked the minister the question: "Are you not aware that the prices of woollen goods are increasing? Do you not know that several of the mills have had to close down?" Well, had these mills been able to secure their raw material and circumvent the action of the New England industries, conditions would no doubt have been different to-day. That is the situation as I see it, and I believe I have stated it correctly.

Mr. WHITE: I wish to protest against this change in the British preference; I believe that the continual reduction of the preference from year to year will have but one effect, and that will be disaster. What we are faced with now is a competition between the standards of living of the British workmen and of the Canadian factory hand. The Canadian manufacturer, under the conditions forced upon him by these reductions, is bound to reduce costs. Coming from a constituency in which there are about four factories making woollen and knitted goods, I am naturally more or less interested in this question. I received a letter from one of them this morning stating that there had been a great increase in the importation of knitted and woollen goods from Great Britain since the change in the duty last year, and also pointing out that at the present time all the woollen mills in this country are experiencing the keenest competition they have ever known. As soon as the manufacturer is faced with the necessity of reducing costs, he has, among other things, to reduce wages. If his factory is working only part-time, perhaps four or five days a week, the pay envelope of the worker is very much reduced, and he in turn is forced to decide between remaining where he is or going where he can get a better living. And it does not take long for the Canadian worker to decide when to move over to the United States, particularly under present conditions. Very many members of the House deplore the fact that a number of Canadian workers have gone to the United States in the last six months, and it seems to me that a change in the tariff such as is now proposed accelerates rather than retards this exodus. After we have accomplished that we spend large sums of money inducing immigrants to come to this country and then move through the same circle all over again.

Mr. FORKE: I have a good deal of sympathy with hon. members who have spoken along this line. I should like, however, to ask them: Have they ever taken into consideration the standard of living of the people who are engaged in an industry that has to compete against all the world, that has no protection whatever? The most poorly paid labour in the world can compete with our agriculturists in the production of the staple article which they have to sell in the world's market. That is one primary fact that we must get into our minds to start with. I listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm). He always speaks sanely and moderately, and I have no doubt he is quite sincere in his statements regarding our small woollen manufacturers. I saw an article in the Montreal Gazette the other day which no doubt contains a certain amount of truth, although I cannot vouch for it. It mentions that a box of apples packed by a Perth farmer brought him 40 cents. He placed a ticket in the box asking the purchaser to advise him what price he paid for the contents, and in due time he received a letter from a farmer in Saskatchewan stating that the apples had cost him $2.60. There you have the great spread between 40 cents and $2.60. When the hon. member for North Bruce stated that 10 cents was a fair profit for the manufacturer on a dozen pair of stockings I should like him to have told us the retail price of a pair of such stockings. No doubt the information would be very interesting. I think a great many of our difficulties are due to this unreasonable spread between the price received by the producer and that paid by the consumer.

I should like to see our manufacturers and our farmers get a little closer together in order that they may the better understand each other's problems. I have no ill feeling towards the manufacturers. It seems to be a generally accepted idea that we are fighting the manufacturers. This is not the case. We are fighting a system that we do not think is working out to the best interests of the people. I stated quite recently that the cost of living here is as high as it is in any other part of the world, whereas this ought to be one of the cheapest countries to live in. This is one reason why we cannot compete successfully in manufacturing. A good deal has been said this afternoon about the standard of living in the Old Land. It is forty years since I left Scotland. I knew a great deal about the woollen mills of Galashiels and other centres, having come from the border counties, and I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that at that time the condition of the workers in those mills was just as good as the condition of the farmers on the plains of Manitoba to-day. So when the cost of living is blamed on the farmers I resent it. I question if there is very much difference between the conditions in that woollen district and in our maunfacturing districts to-day except in the cost of living. If a worker in the mills here or a mechanic wants to buy a cottage it costs him a large amount of money, and the cost of his food and clothing is also very high. Consequently, his living expenses being very high, the employer must pay him correspondingly high wages, and therefore is unable to compete successfully with the manufacturers in other parts of the world. We have a vicious system working in a vicious circle, and it seems to me that we are never going to get out of it, for apparently my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton), like Ephraim, is "wedded to his idols."

I want to remove the idea that we are hostile to the manufacturing interests merely for the sake of hostility. I am always glad to see our manufacturers prospering. I should like to see all our manufacturing industries prosper, but if this is to be at the expense of the other sections of the community which, I claim, are engaged in the basic industries of our country, then I demur. I had a gentleman this day seriously proposing to me a minimum price for wheat. He was of opinion that if the farmers of this country could be assured of a price to cover the cost of production Canada would become enormously prosperous in the very near future because such a great impulse would be given to production. This proposal is not so absurd as it may appear at first sight once you look into it. When we remember how often we are told that it is absolutely necessary for our manufacturing industries to be helped along, why should the farmers on the prairie provinces continue to produce wheat at a loss to feed the poor people on the continent of Europe?

Mr. WHITE: Does the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) consider he would have done just as well had he remained working in the woollen mills of Scotland instead of coming to Canada?

Mr. FORKE: I never worked in the woollen mills of Scotland. I can tell my hon. friend the advice I got before I left the Old Land to come to Canada, and that was: Go where there is money. And being of the type that I am it is most likely that I would get it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And you got it?

Mr. FORKE: I am glad to say, Mr. Chairman, that knowing the Old Flag waved over Canada, I decided to become a Canadian. I am here, and I want everyone to understand that I am a Canadian through and through.

Mr. MORRISON: I have been very much interested in the figures quoted by those who have preceded me. The ex-Minister of Finance, (Sir Henry Drayton), pointed out that for the year ending March 1922, we imported 12,208,523 yards of woollen goods, worth $472,000. This amounts to only 6 cents per capita of our population. For the following year ending March 1923, the importation amounted to 18,793,613 yards worth $962,000, or under 10 cents per capita. It looks to me as if the two old parties are vieing with each other and spending much time trying to assure the manufacturers that their interests will be well looked after. Relatively speaking, these importations are trifling. When the manufacturers ask for protection they do not produce their books, they do not get down to business and prove that they really need protection. We are held up as a party that believes in ruining the manufacturing industries. That is altogether wrong. We want to see industries of all kinds prospering in this country, for we realize that it is to the national benefit that industries native to the country should be prosperous. But we want to have a little share in the prosperity. I know there are Canadian industries making big dividends to-day. The secretary-treasurer of one particular industry told me that for twenty-five years they have never earned less than 20 per cent, and in some years even 50 per cent, and the stockholders have never got less than 10 per cent cash dividend; yet that industry is highly protected.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the name?

Mr. MORRISON: I am not going to enter into personalities. Other speakers have not given facts about their business, and I am not going to divulge personal confidences. But this discussion has been carried on this afternoon over relatively small matters, and as far as the tariff is concerned they look to me to be of no importance. The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) said that 72,000 dozen pairs of cotton stockings had been imported from Great Britain in 1922 and 962,000 dozen from the United States. Well, what does that amount to when you come to consider the population? It is one dozen pairs for every seven or eight people in the country. I think we are spending a good deal of time over the woollen and cotton manufacturers that is not getting us anywhere.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know whether we will make very much progress by quoting statistics, though they are sometimes helpful. An irreverent person, possibly, with a sense of humour, has prescribed what he calls the three stages of inveracity: the lie, the blank lie—the word originally was not "blank"—and statistics. I do not want to throw discredit upon statistics, especially those of the Customs department. But here is a very interesting point that is worth mentioning while we are on the subject, especially having regard to the warning of the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) that we must deal with quantities, not values. In the fiscal year 1921 we imported raw wool to the amount of 9,250,000 pounds weight—not dollars. In the fiscal year 1922, we imported 12,500,000 pounds; in the fiscal year 1923, 18,250,000 pounds weight. Now, were we buying this raw wool and throwing it away? It seems to me that that raw wool must have been employed in the making of woollen goods here,—and somebody must have been busy.

Mr. GOOD: I would like to make a few observations on some of the—

[Mr. Morisson.]

Mr. FIELDING: We are dealing with the British preference clause. My hon. friend moved a resolution regarding the reciprocity clause; we will deal with that after six o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall paragraph one carry.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I gathered from the tenor of the remarks of my hon. friend that we are going to equalize the duties under the French treaty as respects the duties on goods imported by Canada from Great Britain.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not make any reference to it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rather gathered that was what we were doing it for.

Mr. FIELDING: That is the effect of it, largely.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend gave us that impression during the discussion of the French treaty; of course, if he says not, I will take his word for it.

Mr. FIELDING: It was referred to, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think that statement is correct.

Mr. FIELDING: I said that we should wait and see.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) has the floor. I thought the hon. member for West York was merely asking a question.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some observations on a few of the remarks that have been made during the last hour and a half. It is quite true that the problems we have been discussing are complicated. One of the causes of difficulty is the problem of distribution; the tariff is another item. I think it is just as well to remember that there may be a number of causes which give rise to a particular situation. Attention has been drawn this afternoon to the present industrial conditions in the United States, and I want to suggest that it is a pertinent question for us to ask ourselves why there has been an improvement in industrial conditions in that country, while there has not been such an improvement here. I am not going to answer that question, but it is a very pertinent one. We may interpret the facts quite differently. We may say it is due to tariff conditions when it may be due to entirely different conditions.

With regard to the standards of living, the hon. member for London (Mr. White) has
